Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 114, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Normally, at this time, the House would proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions of the report stage of the Bill now before the House. However, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 13(5), the recorded divisions will stand deferred until 6 p.m., Monday, May 4, 1987.

Shall I call it four o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

VIOLENCE AND TERRORISM

REMEMBRANCE OF INNOCENT VICTIMS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of designating the period from April 19 to April 24 each year as a period of remembrance in Canada of innocent civilian victims of violence and terrorism.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion M-41 is a deceptively simple motion, but one which I believe warrants the support of the whole House because it tries to achieve several objectives.

In Canada there should be an annual focus in Parliament on those currently the victims of persecution based on race, religion, national origin, or political affiliation, as well as victims of terrorism so that public opinion can be mobilized to protect potential victims. This is particularly relevant today when, as a result of spurious refugee claims, Canadians are claiming the refugee process. We must systematically take the opportunity to highlight situations of genuine persecution which warrant refugee treatment.

Of course, we could designate any time of the year as the period in which to focus on human rights abuses. My motion on the Order Paper suggests that the specific period between April 19 and April 24 be chosen. These dates, in the third week of April, were deliberately chosen because of historical events which took place this century. In my opinion, the decision to designate a national day of remembrance for victims of man's inhumanity to man can best be given historical relevance by directly relating the remembrance day to the horrible events of the recent past.

• (1600)

During the First World War, between one-half and two-thirds of the Armenian population died as a result of measures taken in the Ottoman Empire commencing with the order for the arrest of the first leaders of the Armenian community on April 24, 1915. In the area which is now northeastern Turkey and Soviet Armenia, Armenians reacted with resistance in response to those arrests. The resistance was quickly and forcefully crushed with many reprisals against the community. However, reprisals did not end there. The Armenian population was first put into concentration camps and then forcefully relocated from their home territory, during which time hundreds of thousands died from starvation, from attacks by the civilian population or at the hands of their government guards. The Armenians were the only race during the First World War subject to such proportionately massive losses. Indeed, within a decade, the term genocide was first used specifically to describe the large scale elimination of a people specifically with respect to the Armenian tragedy during the First World War.

It is important to recognize that while this represented the first major genocide in the 20th century, the concept of racially motivated killings unfortunately did not originate at that time nor has it ceased since. Shortly after the First World War, millions of Ukrainians were systematically starved by Stalin. Before the First World War, during the break-up of the Ottoman Empire in the so-called Balkan wars, there were all too many documented instances of entire villages being killed in the most horrible ways imaginable, including many villages of ethnic Turks. We should, of course, condemn these racially motivated killings as well.

During the First World War, the number of Turks who died as a result of starvation and war also reached into the hundreds of thousands. However, what distinguishes the Armenian tragedy from all others in World War I is that the vast majority of the civilian deaths occurred after the people had been rounded up for relocation by the governmental authorities of the Ottoman Empire and were specially under government protection. This should not be forgotten.

The second date mentioned in the motion, that of April 19, was chosen because on April 19, 1943, the Warsaw ghetto uprising commenced. Through the work of Nobel Peace Prize laureate, Elie Wiesel, we now have an annual commemoration of the Holocaust based on this date, although it is frequently celebrated by Jews throughout the world as occurring on the 27th of Nisan, the equivalent date on the Jewish calendar. All of us are aware of the millions of innocent civilians, particularly Jews, who died in the Nazi concentration camps in the most systematic, barbaric attempt at racial annihilation the world has ever seen. In the Holocaust, the European Jewish population suffered the largest proportionate losses of any race in the Second World War.

It is, therefore, appropriate to select the date for annually recognizing human rights violations to civilians close to the dates symbolic of the most tragic events of each world war.

Moreover, these two events are connected in another bizarre way. It has been reported, when Hitler was challenged concerning his plans for the Jews, that he said, "Who now remembers the Armenians?" As a result of these reports, there have periodically been efforts by both the Armenian and Jewish populations to point out that lack of action by the world community to the First World War Armenian killings facilitated the path for Hitler during the Second World War. Some historians challenge the remarks attributed to Hitler as apocryphal. Whether apocryphal or not, the fact is that the world community had indeed largely forgotten the lessons of the First World War and that Hitler proceeded with his systematic racial extermination plans.

Following the Second World War, in reaction to the racially motivated mass killings of civilians, steps were taken both to define genocide and other war crimes and to ensure that sanctuary would, in future, be available for genuine refugees fleeing for their lives by establishing the U.N. High Commission on Refugees and the Geneva Convention on Refugees.

However, in the last two decades we have begun again to see an escalation of persecution and terrorism with victims, based on race, religion, national origin or political conviction, such as the Bahai's in Iran, the Miskito Indians in Nicaragua and Guatemala, and supporters of President Allende in Chile. The Pot Pol regime has killed millions in Kampuchea. We have also seen the starvation and indiscriminate killings of men, women and children in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps in Beirut by both Christians and Shiites, the murders of thousands of Sikhs in India following Mrs. Gandhi's assassination, the murders of Hindu men, women and children travelling on buses in the Punjab, the bombings and shootings of hundreds of bus passengers in Sri Lanka, the bombings of civilians in villages in Afghanistan, terrorist attacks against civilians in Israel, and most pertinent to Canada, the deaths of 329 innocent passengers on Air-India Flight 182.

Some of these events represent state terrorism, others represent terrorism by groups who seek to change the political order. Still others, such as the recent death of a guard at the Turkish Embassy in Ottawa, represent attacks by isolated individuals who believe that terrorism is justified in the name of history. Canada is a world leader in the struggle for human rights. We should, therefore, also be a leader in ensuring that events in which civilians are killed as a result of state terrorism, group terrorism or individual terrorism, are condemned and, where possible, that world-wide remedial steps are taken.

I understand that there will be an amendment to my motion moved during the debate to select the first Monday of the third week of April as the date of remembrance in order to secularize the motion to cover all violence to civilians in all countries. I hope this will lead to a formal annual parliamentary statement.

I wish to indicate that the amendment is acceptable to me provided that it is clearly on the record that the choice of this date is designed to centre the day of remembrance between the specific dates mentioned in my motion.

This is important because there are some people in the world who now attempt to deny that the tragic events in the First World War and the Second World War referred to in my motion happened at all. Indeed, we have all recently seen two trials in Canada concerning the distribution of such hate literature. By passage of this motion, the Parliament of Canada would be stating unequivocally that it recognizes that the First World War Armenian genocide and the Second World War Holocaust are indisputable historical facts.

In summary, through the passage of this motion, I believe that Canada can provide a lead to the world by ensuring that similar events in the future are publicized and that corrective international action is started expeditiously. As such, I view the passage of my motion as both complementary to and a logical extension of the work done by Elie Wiesel in focusing on the Holocaust so that the lessons of the past can be applied to prevent future tragedies.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just a few remarks and then move an amendment. First, though, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) on his motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If I may just interrupt, the seconder for the motion of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. McCrossan) is the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) instead of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), as I mentioned. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: The presence of this motion on the Order Paper today has been a causal event in my life, but it has caused me to reflect on my last few years in Parliament and the extent of knowledge that I have about the degree to which violence and terrorism was a daily fact of life in many countries of the world. It was not very great the day I was first elected to this Chamber. To that extent, I think I share the state of knowledge that exists for a great many Canadians. I might even go so far as to say that such is the case perhaps for most Canadians.

I happen to be a fourth generation Canadian. When I reflect on family history, I think again I am not unlike many Canadians who have moved into the fourth, fifth and sixth generation, but our ancestors came to this country in most, if not all cases, to escape violence, terrorism and persecution. We are a nation whose future to a large extent has been conditioned by that reality. Out of those kinds of experiences comes our special feeling for democracy, for the kinds of things that are important to this Chamber, important to our electoral process and important to our ways of governing ourselves.

I have had the honour to represent this Government for 11 weeks of the 1984 Fall Assembly of the United Nations. There are less than 40 democracies in an assembly of something in excess of 160 countries that are either full members or are represented there.

A true democracy is a very special commodity. I think we have special responsibilities in the world. It is appropriate that as a nation we set aside a day which gives us a focus and reason for coming together. It gives fourth generation Canadians a reason for remembering our history and our roots. What does it give more current first generation Canadians who came to the country as refugees, escaping the persecution and terrorism to which the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough referred? For them those memories are fresh. They have certain knowledge of friends and relatives who still exist in situations where there is real, genuine, and well-founded fear of persecution, of terrorism, and of violence.

• (1610)

I hope we as a nation will applaud the efforts of Parliament to set aside that kind of day. Then, as the future unfolds, hopefully we will put some effort into deciding the kinds of remembrances which would be appropriate on that special day.

We need to be reminded that the price of peace is also vigilance. When it comes to human rights, the need to be vigilant is ever present. There is a tendency in the busyness of our lives and our daily existence to forget that. Anything we as a Parliament and a nation can do to ensure that we do not forget it should be done, so that we remain conscious of it and responsive to it. This would speak well of us as a people and as a nation.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I should like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), the following:

> That the words "the period from April 19 to April 24" be deleted and that the words "the third Monday in April" be substituted in their place.

The effect of this amendment would be to secularize the motion by providing a specific day each year for the remembrance to take place. Therefore the motion, as amended, would read:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of designating the third Monday in April each year as a period of remembrance in Canada of innocent civilian victims of violence and terrorism.

I commend my amendment to the House, and I hope we will see its passage today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Therefore the debate is on the amendment. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. There have been consultations concerning the Hon. Member's motion. I have always been in favour of stating the facts as they are, very clearly, specifically and publicly. A number of consultations took place among Hon. Members and among various groups, including the Canadian Armenian Community, and I am sure other Members consulted with the Canadian community of Jewish faith, there is no doubt. Personally I like this kind of resolution, of motion and of commemoration because a people without memory does not deserve to survive. But I am somewhat embarrassed because the people who are primarily concerned and whom we would like to help have expressed—at least most of them did—their disagreement with the motion as drafted. I for one wish that some day people will be able to remember, but if we want to remember the least we can expect is that all those people for whom we want to remember should be in agreement. This is nothing new for me, Mr. Speaker. In April 1989—I see the Hon. Member listening attentively, my NDP colleague, I have him in mind today when I mention related issues of this story. In April 1989 it will be 25 years since, like many others, I began to familiarize myself with the Armenian community. In fact, it was in April 1964, I think it will be twenty-five years ago in 1989, and this is the twenty-fifth time I have raised this issue. It is one of my year-round concerns, but even more so on April 24.

What worries the Armenian community is this refusal to want to have something that reminds the world and Canadians of those events. If the House can accept the Hon. Member's amendment that does away with the date April 19, that is all right and we agree.

[English]

We agree that one of the great tragedies of the world occurred on April 19, 1943, the day when the Warsaw uprising began. It is commemorated as Holocaust Remembrance Day. Some day—and that day is coming soon—I will talk about my view of the Holocaust, this great world atrocity.

However, contained in the motion of the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) was the date of April 19 and also the date of April 24, the date of the mass arrest of the Armenian leadership in Istanbul, Turkey. It is considered to be—and we cannot change history; we cannot accommodate history—the beginning of the Armenian genocide. The Armenian community would have preferred at least part of the resolution put forward by the Hon. Member, but certainly not the amendment. They also have great reservations about le libellé de la résolution as it read then and as it reads now.

I have talked directly with the Hon. Member who moved the motion. I am trying to be fair to him, but I am also trying to reflect the strong views which have been put forward to me.

I wonder whether we could show Parliament at its best today. It is only an idea. The Hon. Member knows that I have been agonizing about what I will finally do. However, April has passed. We have almost 11 months to wait until next April. We want to remember the Holocaust. I sincerely do. We want to remember the genocide. I sincerely do, as does the Hon. Member. However, some people are already debating the way we are going to do it. I wonder whether that is the correct way to do it.

We could put up as many speakers as possible. We could kill the motion. I hate to use the term "kill the motion" when we are talking about the Holocaust. However, we could speak until six o'clock and it would be sad. I am reluctant as a long-time parliamentarian to do that.

I am pleading directly to my colleague about the people who made representations to us. I have the trust of the Armenian community. They will trust what I am trying to do. My colleague has the trust of the Armenian community of Toronto. They trust what he will do. Those who want to commemorate the the Holocaust trust many of my Liberal colleagues as well.

• (1620)

Yesterday, I offered the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) a chance to get together with me to see if we could discuss our opinions in consultation with those who want to commemorate the Holocaust. The Armenian community of Montreal, which is reluctant, and the Armenian community of Toronto will be divided if they are not satisfied that April 24 has been put aside for non-political reasons.

I know about political reasons. I used to sit on the government side and I know that the Department of External Affairs is very concerned about the question of genocide. If the Hon. Member so signifies, we will ensure that not too many Hon. Members speak so that the motion will not terminate automatically or come to a vote at five o'clock. Perhaps we should suspend the motion so that the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and I and any other Hon. Members who are interested could consult with the people before next April and perhaps come up with something that is acceptable to all.

We should recall that what we really want to do is to remember the Holocaust. There are too many tragedies taking place in the world without having a day to reflect on these immense, unacceptable tragedies that keep repeating themselves.

Many things were said during the election campaign by the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), but I do not want to rehash those remarks. In July, 1984, comments were made in Toronto by the Hon. Member for York—Peel and by Mr. Hannigan in Montreal.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) was immensely interested in this question, but he is in Montreal today because we did not expect this debate to take place today. It was supposed to take place last Monday or next week. As well, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), is in Vancouver, and she too wanted to participate in this debate.

On behalf of all these people, I am trying to agonize openly to see what is the best way we as parliamentarians who have an ultimately better motive can commemorate the Holocaust. I believe the Hon. Member who moved the motion is extraordinarily sincere and he wants to commemorate these people. Equally, he knows of my sincerity.

I have an idea that I will throw out in the last minute and a half of my time. I could talk about what the Armenian community has done for Canada, but we all know about it. I could talk about my involvement and the involvement of many Hon. Members from the government side, the Opposition side and the New Democratic side. We could pass the motion as amended, but I know that it will be debated right away in some of these communities and we will not have achieved our goal.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could signify his agreement to what I am trying to do, which is quite unusual, but between four o'clock and five o'clock we can do what we want. If what I say sounds reasonable, we could agree to say what we have to say and we will hear the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party who will speak in the same vein. I know the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and my colleague from Cape Breton will also wish to speak.

While the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party is speaking, perhaps I could speak to the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough to see if we could, by consent, suspend or withdraw the motion or dispose of it without taking a vote. I will see if the Hon. Member would agree to suspend the motion after those who wish to speak have done so, with my solemn commitment, publicly and openly, that we will go to these communities and come to an agreement so that what we want to commemorate will be commemorated. That means that we want to remember.

[Translation]

However, I want people to remember how this has come about, and not regret that the motion is not worded exactly as they would have liked, because the original purpose cannot be achieved in my opinion with the present wording of the motion.

I think that I have used up all my allotted time. I would like to tell the House that I shall listen to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party and that I shall consult him to ask him whether, before the debate comes to an end, he will point out that he would have said such or such a thing if there had been agreement on the motion, but that, in the absence of such an agreement, he will say something else.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to have the opportunity to represent the New Democratic Party in the debate on the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and its amendment. In considering the justification for the motion, I suppose one can be reflective about the fact that this motion addresses itself to violence and genocide in the 20th century, but I am not too sure why that should necessarily be so.

I know that Thomistic and Aristotelian philosophy, when trying to come to grips with that which distinguishes man from other animals, defined human beings as being rational animals. We could suppose that the 20th century is focused upon rationality because I think many of us consider it to be the rational century, the century during which man has achieved the highest stage yet achieved in his development and the pursuit of the fulfilment of that ancient definition. Today we are dealing with those instances in which man has not done violence merely to fellow man but to himself and his very essence, the times when man has been reduced to the level of the animal, to the most primitive stage of man's evolution.

Humanity is unique as a species. As a biologist, I know it to be rare for a species to attack its own members. There are no wars among most species and there is no terrorism among most species. There is no genocide among any of them.

While we focus upon the 20th century, much of that with which we are concerned today represents a legacy of the 19th century. I stand as a descendant of a people who lost many; slaves who were shipped from Africa to the new world. It is not well known that far more slaves died during slavery than died in the 20th century Holocaust. We might reflect upon the fate of the Indians of South America, of the victims of colonialism throughout the world, of man's inhumanity to man.

• (1630)

I am not sure that I quite understand all of what is implied by my Liberal friend's intervention, but surely it is clear that the Armenian genocide and the Holocaust represent more than significant events in the 20th century. They represent new legacies and illustrate all the more in this rational century just how necessary it is for us to be concerned about the tendency of human beings to lose their character and kill because of race, religion or politics, to kill sporadically, randomly, in the form of terrorism to achieve some purpose which in their minds justifies acting like animals.

As we reflect upon the Armenian genocide, however worthy it is of commemoration, and it is; as we reflect upon the Holocaust, however worthy of commemoration it is, and it is; we must not forget that even as we stand here there may be another bomb being planted among a civilian population somewhere in the world. There may be another slaughter of passengers on a bus in Sri Lanka. There may be more Miskito Indians being slaughtered in Central America. Genocide has not ended. Violence has not ended. When we talk about the reduction of man to animalistic viciousness, let us not forget it is our rationality in the form of technology that all too often makes it possible to contemplate and justify so-called higher purposes violence of a sort that would never be contemplated as being included in the definition contained in this motion, violence in the form of nuclear or chemical warfare.

It is more than worth-while, indeed more than necessary, that there be a commemoration of those two fatal events, one for the Armenians and the other for the Jews. However, that commemoration must not be regarded as limited to those two tragedies. It must be directed to the prevention of any new tragedies. It would do us little good, however we do it, to commemorate these two events and ignore the images on television last night which sound the clarion call of warning to the world that a new genocide is about to be perpetrated upon the people of Mozambique.

Who would see the blood spewing from the mouth of a starving dying child, knowing it is the result of the activity of a regime whose view of mankind is completely contradictory to the view represented in this motion and, failing to act, not know that nothing has been learned from the Armenian genocide and the Jewish Holocaust?

Therefore, if this motion is adopted, in whatever form it might be adopted, and I hope it will be, nothing will be accomplished if it does not communicate to us and every other democratic country in the world that wherever there is racism, wherever there is antipathy on the basis of religion, wherever there is intolerance of differing political views, there is the possibility of new terrorism and new genocide. That is the message I know and understand, indeed the message that is intended to be communicated by the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough and this House when it adopts this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon. As you know, we have always held on Friday afternoons debates that are very interesting for Members who choose to spend their Friday afternoon here rather than elsewhere. We often have an opportunity to share opinions, feelings and hopes on matters of importance to a large number of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues I have received a letter dated April 2, 1987, from Mr. M. Hagopian, Chairman of the National Armenian Committee of Canada.

[English]

The letter Mr. Hagopian sent reads as follows:

> Motion M-41, introduced by Mr. Paul McCrossan, M.P. for York-Scarborough, has been drawn as a non-votable motion.
>
> April 10, 1987, has been tentatively set as a date for consideration of M-41 by the House of Commons.

As my colleague indicated, that date was changed and that explains why a number of my colleagues, particularly the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), who desperately wanted to speak on this motion, are unable to be with us today. It is the fault of no one, just the fact that the date was changed. The letter continues:

> It is our understanding, that Mr. McCrossan's intention is setting a special remembrance period for the victims of all genocides. Hence, the selection of the dates.
>
> April 19, 1943, is the day when the Warsaw uprising began and is commemorated as Holocaust Remembrance Day;
>
> April 24, 1915, is the date of the mass arrests of the Armenian leadership in Istanbul, Turkey, and is considered to be the beginning of the Armenian Genocide.
>
> Of course, the remembrance period would not be exclusively for the victims of the Jewish Holocaust and the Armenian Genocide, since, unfortunately, other genocides were committed in this century as well.
>
> Furthermore, this would be an appropriate time each year for Parliament to focus on the present-day universal problem of persecution based on race, religion, or national origin.

As you would probably conclude from reading this page it appears that Mr. Hagopian was in favour of the motion. However, let me read to you the second page and you will see that there is a problem with the text of the motion as originally presented and, I submit, a further problem with the amendment brought to our attention today should it be passed. He continues:

> However, the language of Mr. McCrossan's motion does not reflect his purpose, and it is vague and ambiguous. M-41 does not address the concerns of the Canadian Armenian community, and some might even consider it to be an affront to the memory of those who perished. Nonetheless, we sincerely believe that Mr. McCrossan is well-intentioned.
>
> In order to directly and clearly address the issue, we suggest that the last words of M-41 "violence and terrorism," be replaced by "genocide and mass extermination," or "war crimes and crimes against humanity".
>
> We strongly urge you to express our views when M-41 is debated in the House. We count on your understanding and support. Your co-operation will be very much appreciated.

• (1640)

There is quite a simple explanation for why Mr. Hagopian wrote such a letter. When I first read the letter I thought it was unusual that a person would initially express support and then reluctance. I referred to documents which I have and others which my colleagues provided to me and found the answer.

On July 23, 1984, during the last election campaign a Member of Parliament of the Progressive Conservative Party promised that a day would be set aside as a day of remembrance for the estimated 1.5 million Armenians killed during the Ottoman massacre of 1915. That was, of course, the Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), a senior member of the then opposition Tory caucus.

I believe that the Armenian community interprets the motion before the House today as an attempt by the Government to fulfil that commitment. However, it does not go nearly far enough to fulfil the original commitment made by that Party. The amendment of the Hon. Member from Calgary removes completely the date of April 24, and I am sure that members of the Armenian community will not be satisfied with the amended motion, if it passes, especially considering they were not entirely satisfied with the original motion.

They did, however, highly praise the Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) who brought the matter to the attention of the House. I believe, as does my colleague from Saint-Denis and Mr. Hagopian, that the Member for York-Scarborough had only good intentions in the original motion.

I was hoping that the amendment of the Member from Calgary would have reflected the proposals of Mr. Hagopian in his letter of April 2, 1987, which he sent to many Members of Parliament. I surveyed a number of my colleagues who all said they had received it, so presumably all Members of this House, including the Member from Calgary who moved the amendment, must have been aware of Mr. Hagopian's concern.

Why was the amendment moved to water down the motion when Mr. Hagopian wanted it strengthened because it did not fulfil the commitment made by the Conservative Party in 1984? I hope all Members of this House will take note of that concern.

We know that the Government is not famous for keeping its promises made during the election campaign of 1984. I do not want to go through the whole litany of promises which it broke. I have done that on sufficient occasions in this House. However, if provoked I would gladly raise them again.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether we are on Private Members' Hour or government business. There seems to be some confusion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member has only one minute left and I am sure he would like to continue.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to be unduly partisan. I gave credit to the Member who presented the motion. However, if properly provoked by the temporary Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) I can be a trifle partisan on occasion. I can say that the Tories are once again trying to weasel out of a promise made to a community of Canada. That promise is now being further watered down by this amendment.

It is quite evident that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said it best when he said: "Sometimes you make commitments on the way to office that do not stand the scrutiny of information or circumstances that become known to you when you are in office". In other words, you say something to get elected, but reality sets in once you are there and you do not fulfil those promises. That is the Tory position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to involve myself in this debate. This is a Private Members' Motion and Members of all political parties have an opportunity to express their views and examine the substance of the motion.

Motion 41 put forward by my colleague from the Conservative Party says:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of designating the period from April 19 to April 24 each year as a period of remembrance in Canada of innocent civilian victims of violence and terrorism.

The amendment changes the time to the third week in May. It is worth noting that parliamentarians have the opportunity to send a very significant signal to individual Canadians who have relatives or friends who have been the victims of such violence and terrorism. On that note I want to congratulate my colleague from the Conservative Party because I think that is his intention.

I specifically want to address my remarks to the Holocaust. Three weeks ago I had the opportunity to speak with some young people from Halifax. We spoke about the issue of the Soviet Jewery and the difficulties with which people in that country are still plagued. It is rather frightening when you study history, view films, listen to commentary of various individuals, and read reports of Parliament to learn what some individuals were confronted with at a very difficult time in our history. These young people impressed me because they wanted, as I am sure the Hon. Member opposite wants, to highlight in a real way the significance of the Holocaust and other acts of violence and terrorism.

• (1650)

While the Hon. Member has his idea, these young people gave me other suggestions. Perhaps from time to time Parliament would put away its partisanship and discuss issues of international importance for a day or two when the Chamber could perhaps adopt a resolution that is agreeable to all Parties and, more important, to those individuals who are directly involved.

In this way Canada as a nation and as a free people could send a signal domestically and internationally that Canada is concerned, remembers, and has the compassion to make sure that the events of the past will never reoccur in the future.

They also suggested that this debate should not only consist of national leaders but also of Members of Parliament from all Parties who could espouse their views and those of their constituents so that Canadians would gain a better appreciation for what I believe is a well-intended motion.

All too often, we have a tendency in the country to forget. I do not say that because I believe anyone wants to forget past events in world history intentionally, but that is what happens as time and the world go on.

I believe that parliamentarians, particularly at the federal level, although I mean no disrespect to provincial parliamentarians, have an obligation to address this issue.

The students also said that while it is important to debate in the House of Commons and pass a resolution, perhaps we must do more. The original suggestion in the Hon. Member's motion was to set aside April 19 to April 24 for this remembrance. That has been amended to the third week of May. My colleague, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has a profound interest in this subject, as I am sure all Members of Parliament do. I know that he would have preferred to be here if it were possible.

Perhaps some national organizations, as referred to by my colleague who spoke before me, may not share or fully appreciate the pith and substance of the motion that the Member is putting forward today. I have a letter that I believe all Members of Parliament received from the Armenian National Committee of Canada. I would like to quote from that letter because they make some interesting observations. It states:

> April 10, 1987, has been tentatively set as a date for consideration of M-41 by the House of Commons.
>
> It is our understanding, that Mr. McCrossan's intention is setting a special remembrance period for the victims of all genocides. Hence, the selection of the dates.
>
> April 19, 1943, is the day when the Warsaw uprising began and is commemorated as Holocaust Remembrance Day;
>
> April 24, 1915, is the date of the mass arrests of the Armenian leadership in Istanbul, Turkey, and is considered to be the beginning of the Armenian Genocide.
>
> Of course, the remembrance period would not be exclusively for the victims of the Jewish Holocaust and the Armenian Genocide, since, unfortunately, other genocides were committed in this century as well. Furthermore, this would be an appropriate time each year for Parliament to focus on the present-day universal problem of persecution based on race, religion, or national origin.

I am not taking issue with the Armenian National Committee of Canada, but I want to say as a parliamentarian that we cannot set aside only one day or have just one debate. It cannot consist of one speech given by a government Minister and responded to by an opposition Member. My hon. colleague opposite has suggested a period of time for reflection on what has taken place.

The letter goes on:

> However, the language of Mr. McCrossan's motion does not reflect his purpose, and it is vague and ambiguous.

I am not sure I necessarily agree with that, but I suggest that this provides an opportunity, particularly for the Hon. Member opposite and my colleague, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides, for consultations with some of these organizations.

I congratulate the Member opposite for introducing this motion and allowing for this debate. I think his motion has a lot of substance which deserves reflection by all Members of Parliament.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the two or three minutes remaining I want to associate myself with the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) who gave his support to the intent of this resolution.

I am not too concerned about the number of days because in the 20th century we have become successful in many areas and can do more than we have ever done in the world.

It is also obvious that we can kill more people than ever before. Mention has been made of the genocide of the Armenians in Turkey and of the Holocaust when six million Jews were killed by the Nazis.

We ought to remember the more recent times, with the deaths of four million people in Cambodia. We should remember the Idi Amin regime in Uganda, the civil war in Nigeria when the people in the Biafra province tried to separate from Nigeria, and the killings taking place in Sri Lanka at the present time.

There is the tragedy in Ireland. We cannot forget the events since World War I in the Soviet Union with the death by starvation of five million or six million Ukrainian people and the purges and wars which took place. It was estimated by the son of one of the leaders of the Communist uprising in 1917 that sixty million people living in the Soviet Union have died since then. So we say that violence and terrorism are a part, tragically, of the 20th century. We accept the proposal of the Hon. Member that we should remember this and honour these people wherever that happens.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the motion shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned.

APPENDIX

FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING ON THE CONSTITUTION

DRAFT STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

April 30, 1987

MEECH LAKE COMMUNIQUÉ

At their meeting today at Meech Lake, the Prime Minister and the ten Premiers agreed to ask officials to transform into a constitutional text the agreement in principle found in the attached document.

First Ministers also agreed to hold a constitutional conference within weeks to approve a formal text intended to allow Quebec to resume its place as a full participant in Canada's constitutional development.

QUEBEC'S DISTINCT SOCIETY

(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canada, centred in but not limited to Quebec, and English-speaking Canada, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) Parliament and the provincial legislatures, in the exercise of their respective powers, are committed to preserving the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a).

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

IMMIGRATION

- Provide under the Constitution that the Government of Canada shall negotiate an immigration agreement appropriate to the needs and circumstances of a province that so requests and that, once concluded, the agreement may be entrenched at the request of the province;

- such agreements must recognize the federal government's power to set national standards and objectives relating to immigration, such as the ability to determine general categories of immigrants, to establish overall levels of immigration and prescribe categories of inadmissible persons;

- under the foregoing provisions, conclude in the first instance an agreement with Quebec that would:

  - incorporate the principles of the Cullen-Couture agreement on the selection abroad and in Canada of independent immigrants, visitors for medical treatment, students and temporary workers, and on the selection of refugees abroad and economic criteria for family reunification and assisted relatives;

  - guarantee that Quebec will receive a number of immigrants, including refugees, within the annual total established by the federal government for all of Canada proportionate to its share of the population of Canada, with the right to exceed that figure by 5% for demographic reasons; and

  - provide an undertaking by Canada to withdraw services (except citizenship services) for the reception and integration (including linguistic and cultural) of all foreign nationals wishing to settle in Quebec where services are to be provided by Quebec, with such withdrawal to be accompanied by reasonable compensation;

- nothing in the foregoing should be construed as preventing the negotiation of similar agreements with other provinces.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

- Entrench the Supreme Court and the requirement that at least three of the nine justices appointed be from the civil bar;

- provide that, where there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court, the federal government shall appoint a person from a list of candidates proposed by the provinces and who is acceptable to the federal government.

SPENDING POWER

- Stipulate that Canada must provide reasonable compensation to any province that does not participate in a future national shared-cost program in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction if that province undertakes its own initiative or programs compatible with national objectives.

AMENDING FORMULA

- Maintain the current general amending formula set out in section 38, which requires the consent of Parliament and at least two-thirds of the provinces representing at least fifty percent of the population;
- guarantee reasonable compensation in all cases where a province opts out of an amendment transferring provincial jurisdiction to Parliament;
- because opting out of constitutional amendments to matters set out in section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is not possible, require the consent of Parliament and all the provinces for such amendments.

SECOND ROUND

- Require that a First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution be held not less than once per year and that the first be held within twelve months of proclamation of this amendment but not later than the end of 1988;
- entrench in the Constitution the following items on the agenda:
  1) Senate reform including:
     - the functions and role of the Senate;
     - the powers of the Senate;
     - the method of selection of Senators;
     - the distribution of Senate seats;
  2) fisheries roles and responsibilities; and
  3) other agreed upon matters;
- entrench in the Constitution the annual First Ministers' Conference on the Economy now held under the terms of the February 1985 Memorandum of Agreement;
- until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished the federal government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 4, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-1512, 332-1516, 332-1517, 332-1522, 332-1523, 332-1524, 332-1532, 332-1535, 332-1538, 332-1539, 332-1568, 332-1653, 332-1655, 332-1701, 332-1712, 332-1722, 332-1727 to 332-1729 inclusive, 332-1731, 332-1758 and 332-1765.

[English]

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITER—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the opportunity, as is my honour and duty, to present several petitions. The first is signed by a number of Canadians from Grande Prairie and Beaverlodge, Alberta.

Whereas in the opinion of your petitioners the Government has inflicted a severe injustice on one of its citizens by wrongfully depriving Mr. Fred Turner of the right to earn a living through the operation of his family business, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to ensure that an independent arbitrator be assigned to this matter to investigate the details of the case, and negotiate an offer from the federal Government to Fred Turner in order to reach a settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I have further petitions from citizens in a number of places in Canada, including Belleville and Cornwall, Ontario, Cranbrook, B.C., and a number of locations in Newfoundland, in which the petitioners call upon the House of Commons to withdraw Bill C-18 and retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation policy, and to retain licensing in order to restrict market-place activity to a positive level functioning in the best interests of the public as a whole, all of which your petitioners humbly pray.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two duly certified petitions this morning. The undersigned do now avail themselves of the ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, namely that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of many people to purchase necessary prescription drugs; that the proposed changes to the Patent Act, set forth in Bill C-22, will affect directly all Canadians who are not covered by Government or private health insurance plans; that the Government's proposals will raise the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans; and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the free trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of the average consumer.

Wherefore, the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

• (1110)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition which I am sure is supported by the Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It is signed by constituents of mine from the City of Yorkton with one exception, that being from the great Town of Springside.

The petition calls upon the Government to change its mind on its patent drug legislation. The petitioners are concerned about the price of prescription drugs increasing after this terrible Conservative Government does what it wants to do.

The petitioners also say that it will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

They are also concerned about the higher cost of prescription drugs in Saskatchewan which would, of course, hurt the Saskatchewan plan and the great friend of the Member for Saskatoon West, the Premier of Saskatchewan, who will be further in debt.

Therefore, I am very honoured to present this petition on behalf of people in God's land, namely, the constituency of Yorkton—Melville.

OPPOSITION TO DISCRIMINATORY SEIZURE OF IMPORTED LITERATURE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition today which has been signed by over 3,500 people with reference to the Canadian Committee against Customs Censorship. These petitioners, who live in all parts of Canada, call upon the Government to end its discrimination against gay and lesbian Canadians through the way in which customs regulations regarding book and magazine imports are enforced.

In particular, the petitions are protesting the recent unfair seizures of gay and lesbian literature which was destined for bookstores in Vancouver and Toronto. They call upon the Government to repeal these discriminatory provisions.

* * *

SUPREME COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act and to amend various other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 98 and 101.

[Text]

RATE OF INTEREST—PSSA, CFSA, RCMPSA

Question No. 98—Mr. Gauthier:

1. For each year in the 1986-2005 period, what is the rate of interest assumed to be earned by the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA), the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) in producing the estimate contained in the 1985-86 Public Accounts that if these accounts were combined with the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Accounts (SRBA) and valued on a fully-funded basis, they would have an actuarial deficit of $4.0 billion as of March 31, 1986?

2. For the same years, what is the new money interest rate assumed to produce the interest rates referred to in Part 1?

3. As of the most recent date for which data is available, what is the annual rate of interest actually being earned by the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA?

4. As of April 1, 1987, what is the estimated balance of the PSSA, CFSA, RCMPSA and SRBA?

5. From 1952 to the present (a) what has been the annual real rate of interest assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

6. For the same years (a) what has been the annual real rate of salary increases resulting from salary revisions assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

7. For the same years (a) what has been the average of retirement assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the PSSA (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

8. As of March 31, 1987, what is the actuarial surplus that would be realized by the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA if the assumption changes mentioned in Parts 5 to 7 had not been made?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): 1. In estimating the financial status of the Public Service, Canadian Forces and RCMP pension plans as of March 31, 1986, the following interest rates were assumed to be earned by the pension accounts for the period 1986-2005:

	Per Cent		Per Cent
1986	10.2	1996	9.0
1987	10.2	1997	8.7
1988	10.2	1998	8.5
1989	10.1	1999	8.3
1990	10.1	2000	8.0
1991	10.0	2001	7.7
1992	9.9	2002	7.2
1993	9.7	2003	6.9
1994	9.5	2004	6.6
1995	9.2	2005	6.3

Note: These assumed interest rates reflect a margin of one percentage point for approximately 20 years and then a gradually diminishing margin until the long term assumed rate is reached. (e.g., actual 1986 rates were 11.2 per cent instead of the 10.2 per cent assumed). The margin is included to make some allowance for such contingencies as unanticipated increases in inflation and salaries or decreases in interest rates.

2. The assumed new money interest rate for the years referred to in Part 1 were:

	Per Cent
1986	10.2
1987	9.7
1988	9.7
1989	9.5
1990	9.1
1991	9.0
1992	8.0
1993	7.0
1994	6.0
1995 – 2005	6.0

3. As of March 31, 1987, the quarterly interest rate earned by the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA is 2.6817 per cent which represents an effective annual rate of 11.2 per cent.

4. Estimated balances as of April 1, 1987

	(000,000,000's)
PSSA –	24.8
CFSA –	16.2
RCMPSA –	2.4
SRBA –	3.4

The answers to Parts 5-8 of Question No. 98 will require further computer programming and testing by the Department of Insurance. The response to those parts is expected to be provided between now and the end of May.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Question No. 101—Mr. McKinnon:

In each of the years 1985 and 1986, did Canadian Armed Forces personnel contribute to unemployment insurance and, if so (a) what was the total amount collected from them (b) did the Government match these contributions (c) what amount was paid out of the U.I.C. fund to unemployed ex-service personnel?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes.

	1985	1986
(a)	$45,700,712	Not yet available.*
(b)	Yes, the government contributed $56,988,788	Not yet available.*
(c)	$39,992,164	$28,165,859

* The Department of National Revenue is presently verifying the employer's contributions to the UI fund during 1986. This audit will be completed in October, 1987, and the data will then be provided to the CEIC.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other House Leaders. I think you will find unanimous consent to change the committee reference of Bill C-42, an Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, to read "Second Reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs" rather than "Second reading and reference to a legislative committee".

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the suggestion of the Parliamentary Secretary. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-42, an Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, be read the second time, and by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to begin the debate on Bill C-42. This Bill is the first of a number of Bills which will implement my new policy on financial institutions.

[Translation]

On December 18 last year, I tabled in the House a document entitled: New Directions for the Financial Sector, and I am very pleased it was so well received, both by the public and the industry.

[English]

During the last two and one-half years the federal Government was faced with a formidable challenge. It had the responsibility of formulating a policy which would, first and foremost, protect public interest and the safety of depositors. Second, we wanted to introduce a policy which would allow our Canadian financial institutions to compete in a rapidly changing global environment. The two great objectives were to protect the system and the depositors while making it a modern, global system.

I wish to begin by acknowledging the contributions of industry, other interested parties, and the public in general for their helpful suggestions and comments since the release of the Government's Green Paper on the regulation of Canadian financial institutions in April, 1985.

In addition to benefiting from our extensive consultations with the provinces and the public, we have greatly benefited from a number of major studies and reports which were prepared over the last few years. These have contributed greatly to the Government's understanding of what needs to be done in order to create a better, sounder and more competitive financial system in Canada.

In particular I commend the important contributions of the reports prepared by Justice Estey, the House, the Senate, committees of the House and the Senate, the Wyman working committee on the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation and others. In fact, this area of legislation is one of the more heavily studied areas on the Government's agenda and we have benefited very much from these studies.

[Translation]

I also wish to express my appreciation to representatives of the financial sector for their suggestions and comments. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the industry is anxious to see us proceed with this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have promised to act quickly. We want to take away much of the uncertainty concerning the implementation of the main proposals I announced on December 18 last.

• (1120)

[English]

Let me speak to the legislative timetable that flows from this paper. I have been concerned from the outset and have said many times that in order to draw the maximum benefit from the proposed changes we would have to move quickly to implement them. We would lose a great deal of this impact if we were to move too slowly.

I have indicated in particular that I intend to introduce the necessary legislation as quickly as possible. This will enable financial institutions to plan ahead for what is recognized to be a period of great change in the industry—both in Canada and internationally.

Bill C-42 is the first of several legislative packages that I will be introducing over the course of the year. This Bill implements a significant part of the policy proposals, those dealing with the structure of the supervisory and deposit insurance system. It also contains measures that will enhance the protection enjoyed by Canada's depositors and insurance policyholders and promote the soundness of our financial system.

It will be followed later this spring by legislation that will reinforce existing supervisory powers and enable all types of financial institutions to own security subsidiaries.

By the summer, I hope to introduce the final package of legislation which will change institutional powers; implement the new ownership policy; establish new rules to control self-dealing and conflict of interest; and will set up the new financial institution restructuring program. That is the third and final piece of legislation that will be introduced later this spring.

Let me outline the Bill before us. The provisions of Bill C-42 primarily involve a realignment of existing regulatory agencies and a reform of the deposit insurance system. One could call this the "office Bill".

The first part of the Bill constitutes a new Act, the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions Act, which merges the Department of Insurance and the Office of the Inspector General of Banks into a consolidated regulatory agency. I expect that this new office will be better equipped to meet the regulatory challenge posed by the blurring of the distinctions between different types of financial institutions. Consolidation is necessary as a result of this blur.

The new office will continue to be funded in the same way as its two predecessors, but will have better access to qualified professional personnel by virtue of its status as a separate employer. These provisions will enable the office to hire and retain the skilled manpower that it needs to properly fulfil its regulatory responsibilities.

The office Bill also contains revised confidentiality provisions and provides for the creation of a committee of the heads of federal regulatory agencies. This will remedy a shortcoming of the existing regulatory structure, which was pointed out by Justice Estey, by facilitating the exchange of information among the new office, the CDIC, the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance.

The second part of the Bill amends the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act in order to: first, clarify the objectives of the CDIC, notably with regard to its obligation to protect the interests of depositors; second, to enhance its ability to meet those objectives; third, to provide a more parallel treatment of federal and provincial member institutions; and fourth, to place CDIC on a more sound financial footing.

In particular, the amendments to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act will enhance CDIC's ability to protect depositors by providing the CDIC with the power to cancel, with ministerial approval, the deposit insurance policies of federal member institutions that violate the provisions of the Act or of CDIC's own by-laws. That power already exists with respect to provincial member institutions. As well, the amendments will levy premium surcharges on member institutions that do not follow standards of sound business or financial practice.

[Translation]

In addition to the power to collect additional premiums, the amendments to the CDIC Act will enable management to take a more flexible approach with respect to the establishment of premium rates. The CDIC management need these new provisions to be able to proceed with the orderly repaymewnt of their accumulated deficit. They will also enable the Governor in Council to set the annual premium rates, subject to a ceiling of one-sixth of 1 per cent of insured deposits.

[English]

As announced in a press release issued last week, I will be recommending to the Governor in Council that the current premium rate of one-tenth of 1 per cent, which has been in effect since May 1, 1985, be retained for the 1987-88 premium year. The retention of the existing rate will not result in an undue burden on deposit-taking institutions and is expected to yield sufficient revenues to amortize the current CDIC deficit over a reasonable period.

The Bill also amends a number of other Acts governing particular types of financial institutions. These include the Bank Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act, insurance companies Acts and others. The changes made to these Acts will share a common purpose and can be grouped into three categories.

First, substantially revised procedures for taking control of the assets of financial institutions, or of the institutions themselves in some cases, are being implemented in order to enhance the ability of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to protect the interests of depositors, policyholders and other creditors.

Second, responsibility for a number of essentially supervisory and administrative matters is to be transferred from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. Third,—

[Translation]

—the transfer from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs (Mr. Andre) to the Minister of Finance of responsibility for various aspects of the incorporation of financial institutions.

[English]

Those are the three groups of miscellaneous amendments.

In conclusion, this Bill represents the first concrete steps taken toward implementing our comprehensive new policy in the area of financial services. More important, it constitutes a major part of the changes that the Government will be introducing to improve the protection enjoyed by Canada's many depositors and policyholders, large and small, and to promote the soundness of our financial system.

My riding of London West is home to the head offices of some of Canada's finest financial institutions, including London Life and Canada Trust, to name just two. Our new policy is welcome news for them, as it is throughout the country.

Given the need for rapid implementation of these measures, I would urge the House to move Bill C-42 quickly into committee.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the appearance of this Bill in the House today. It has been over a year since the House last debated a Bill pertaining to the regulation of Canadian financial institutions. That was Bill C-86, concerning the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Of course, last November we dealt with Bill C-27 which facilitated the Hongkong Bank's takeover of the Bank of British Columbia. But that was not a regulatory Bill, it was more of a clean-up Bill to take care of a situation that had developed beyond the Government's ability to deal with. We have seen several such Bills, which only reinforces the need for the Government to get on with the process of regulatory reform.

We in the Official Opposition support the reform process. We want to see the existing legislation updated so as to have a coherent operating standard for Canadian financial institutions as they are today and as they evolve. The traditional concept of the four pillars has given way to the more recent trend to integration of services. We want Canadian institutions to be a part of the increasing internationalization of financial services and, above all, we want to ensure that the interests of consumers are well protected. The pressure for change has been coming from the industry, not from consumers, who also have their concerns about the over-all stability and solvency of the system.

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member does have some very interesting comments, and I would appreciate it if Members would listen or go behind the curtain or into the lobby so the Hon. Member can carry on.

Miss Nicholson: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the pressure for change has been coming from the industry, not from consumers, who also have their concerns about the over-all stability and solvency of the system as well as about the quality of service, wherever they happen to live. We want to be very sure that the Government has the interests of the consumers as well as the industry in mind when it brings forward its proposals.

Bill C-42, as the Minister has said, is the first of a series of three Bills arising out of the White Paper tabled last December. After two and a half years and two very expensive bank failures, Bill C-42 is the first piece of legislation to come out of a process of reform which began with the previous Liberal Government.

The proposals in Bill C-42 are the least contentious of those put forward in the White Paper. There has been near, if not complete unanimity on the need to strengthen the supervisory system for federally regulated financial institutions and to make some changes in the deposit insurance system. This is essentially what Bill C-42 proposes.

The more contentious issues, such as ownership of financial institutions, expansion of their powers, prevention of self-dealing, and the role of accountants and auditors, have been left for later and there really is no excuse for this.

To begin with, we know what are the Government's intentions. We have had two sets of comprehensive proposals. We have had stacks of reports and submissions from the Commons committee on finance, Senate Banking Committee, Government appointed studies and the Estey Commission of inquiry.

The Government claims its reform process is a priority. Therefore, why after two and one half years are we not seeing action? Bill C-42 is a first step but why does the Minister not accelerate his timetable? The Minister has said that a future Bill will be an amended version of Bills C-8 and C-9. These Bills have been around since the last session. Therefore, why have we not seen it tabled in the House?

It is disconcerting to find in particular that legislation covering all the most controversial aspects of the reform scenario have no firm date for introduction. We have had all too many opportunities to see the Government's reform program go awry over the last two and a half years.

It is not as though anyone is urging the Government to keep the brakes on. On the contrary, it is my impression that the Government has industry-wide support and encouragement to get on with it. If we had all the Bills before us, we would be better able to assess them individually because we would be able to examine the parts and the whole. As it is, Bill C-42 gives us proposals for the regulatory apparatus but we will have to wait until later, possibly much later, to see exactly how this apparatus functions and who regulates what.

However, as I said at the outset, we welcome this Bill and since we are in general agreement with what the Bill proposes and have no desire for a protracted debate, my comments today will be relatively brief.

Bill C-42 corresponds roughly to Chapter 5 of the White Paper issued last December. Part I of the Bill creates a new regulatory body, the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, by amalgamating the existing office of the Inspector General of Banks with the Department of Insurance. This is consistent with what Liberal Members of the Commons finance committee proposed in our minority report which was issued in November 1985 at the time of the finance committee's report on the Green Paper. We were not in agreement with the finance committee's proposal to establish a "mega-regulator", but we did see a need for more regulatory muscle.

I am also pleased to see that Bill C-42 proposes that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation remains separate from the regulatory body. Insuring and regulating are different functions and are probably best kept separate.

The Bill proposes that the new office be funded partly through parliamentary appropriations and partly through assessments levied on the institutions, presumably to be scaled somehow to their size. I will be interested to know how the Government plans to implement this system of levies and how it will decide what a given institution should contribute. Will the institutions themselves have any input? What if they do not agree with their assessment, will there will be any means of appeal or review? There are no answers in the Bill.

In the organization of the new office, the Bill provides for it to be a separate employer under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. This means that the superintendent may hire staff without being bound by the Public Service classification system. This is a proposal I support because it gives the superintendent the leeway to hire the kind of specialized, high calibre staff needed to inspect and monitor our financial institutions.

There is also a need for greater numbers of staff. Hon. Members will recall that at the time of the bank failures there was a certain amount of emphasis placed on the fact that the office of the Inspector General of Banks did not have the numbers of people needed for the standard of supervision required. There has since been an increase in person-year allocation for the OIGB, and with its amalgamation, of course, it will become larger. However, I would like to see some assurance that, in terms of person-years, the new office will be more than the sum of its parts.

The new superintendent is already in place as the present Inspector General of Banks. He is fortunate to enjoy the confidence of the industry as well as the Government. It would have been better if the Government had brought the Bill forward earlier for debate. However, as it is, we will do our part to see it through in reasonable time so that the new superintendent can get on with the job.

The superintendent, under the Bill, acquires new powers. There is some adjustment of the powers held by the Minister and by the superintendent. It might perhaps be said that the Bill leaves the Minister with final approval over the birth and death of an institution while the superintendent makes the decisions about what happens during its life. Put in those terms, it sounds quite cut and dried. The real test of this regime will be when an institution falls into poor health.

The existing legislation allows the regulator to take control of an institution when it can be proved that its assets are not properly accounted for. Bill C-42 would allow the regulator to assume control of an institution for seven days or longer and to make business decisions for the institution if he sees that "there exists any practice or state of affairs which may be materially prejudicial to the interests of the policyholders or creditors". Obviously this is not an action to be taken lightly or often.

I would like some definition of the terms used in this part of the Bill and a clearer idea of some of the circumstances under which the regulator would assume control of an institution. Also, according to the Bill, the regulator is not required to consult the Minister before taking this action, although it certainly would be sensible to do so. At any rate, it is something I would like to see included in the Bill. Regardless of how much good sense the regulator may have, it should be very clear that the Minister is to be kept informed.

• (1140)

The Bill also contains an interesting proposal to form a co-ordinating committee whose members would be the new Superintendent of Financial Institutions, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Chairman of the Board of the CDIC. The proposal is interesting because it actually sets out in legislation the requirements for consultation and the framework, which is this committee. This is most definitely a reaction to the gaps and breakdowns in communication which so complicated and contributed to the bank crises in 1985.

The membership of this committee is identical to that of the CDIC Board of Directors, but the function of the committee is different. The whole purpose of this new committee is to share information and advice. I approve of this goal, obviously, but it is also clear that the success of this committee as a monitoring group and consultative body will depend a great deal upon its terms of reference and the personal willingness of each of its members to make it work.

It is encouraging to note that the superintendent designate, who would chair this committee, has served notice that he intends to interpret the legislation rigorously and will not permit its members to send substitutes to committee meetings, which often happens in the case of CDIC board meetings.

The proposal as it is does not allow for industry representation on this committee, presumably on the assumption that the potential for conflict of interest would outweigh the benefits of input from people with experience and up-to-the-minute knowledge of industry conditions and trends. However, there is no doubt that the regulators need this kind of contribution, whether it is on the co-ordinating committee or a separate professional advisory group.

Bill C-42 also makes a number of substantive proposals concerning deposit insurance. Before discussing them I would like to refer briefly to Bill C-86 which was passed about one year ago and which allowed for up to four private sector representatives on the CDIC Board of Directors. To date, not one has been appointed.

I would also mention that the practice of sending substitutes to board meetings does not sit well with me. It seems only logical that if the regulator's co-ordinating committee prohibits substitution, the CDIC board should do so as well. Substitution at private sector board meetings is unheard of. In this particular area of the public sector it should not be permitted either.

To return to Bill C-42, it proposes an increase in the premiums paid for deposit insurance by financial institutions. The current rate is one-tenth of 1 per cent of insured deposits. The Bill proposes increasing this to a maximum of one-sixth of 1 per cent. At this rate we are told CDIC's $1.2 billion deficit will be retired by 1994, assuming no more institutions fail. The Bill also proposes doubling to $3 billion the CDIC's line of credit from the Government's Consolidated Revenue Fund.

If these proposals are meant as a serious response to the CDIC deficit, then I am not satisfied. I would prefer to see the CDIC handling its deficit quite separately from normal operations. I am quite surprised at the Government's reliance in this scenario on there being no further failures of financial institutions. Even if this new regulatory system were to be successful in staving off any disasters under federal jurisdiction, the CDIC also insures provincially-regulated institutions, which have been particularly vulnerable in the years during and since the recession. So I do not think that the Government is justified in relying on wishful thinking to eliminate the CDIC deficit.

I also note that the proposals concerning CDIC do not in any way acknowledge the fact that the Government itself is partially responsible for the CDIC's deficit. This is a matter I have raised on a number of occasions. CDIC funds have been used more than once to implement decisions that were policy decisions of the Government rather than part of CDIC's mandate, for example, part of the Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out, the $200 million paid to the Hongkong Bank to take over the Bank of British Columbia and, most recently, $275 million to the Province of Alberta to restructure a couple of ailing trust companies. If government funds had been used I suppose it would have added to the deficit. But why is it more acceptable for the Government to transfer part of its deficit to the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Another section of the Bill, Clause 71, proposes that CDIC investment, which was previously limited to the Bank of Canada, now be extended to all member institutions and to financial institutions outside Canada. I would like to know more about this. For example, what are the criteria for investment outside Canada?

There are other proposals concerning the CDIC which can be characterized as incentives to good business practice, or perhaps as having a stick as well as a carrot. It is proposed, for example, that CDIC have the power to terminate insurance coverage, with the approval of the Minister. CDIC has had this power relative to provincially-regulated institutions. Bill C-42 extends it to federally-regulated institutions. This is, of course, a Draconian measure since an institution cannot legally operate without deposit insurance—withdrawal of insurance forces closure.

Another new proposal would allow CDIC to levy a premium penalty on institutions deemed to be carrying out unsafe or unsound business practices. This could be risky. A premium surcharge on an institution would not force it to close its doors, but it could result in a crisis of confidence if it were to become known that CDIC was assessing penalties for substandard operating procedures. Of course, the intent is that it should not be in the public knowledge, but the question must still be addressed.

There is also the question of public knowledge versus industry knowledge. I would like to see a definition here bearing in mind the consumer's right to know in order to make intelligent decisions. I would also like to know how the Government defines "sound business and financial practices", the expression used in the Bill. I would like to have some idea of how it is to be interpreted relative to the risk experience of the different kinds of financial institutions.

These are matters which we can examine more deeply in committee. There is also the question of alternatives to the current system of how CDIC sets premium rates for its member institutions, if they should be risk-related or if there should be separate pools of funds for the different kinds of financial institutions. I look forward to hearing at committee about what work the Government is doing in the whole area of risk assessment.

What we have in some of the provisions in Bill C-42 is essentially a dose of preventive medicine. A number of proposals are there mainly for their value as deterrents and only to be used as a last resort and, in some cases, with concurrence by the Minister.

It is a useful first step in the process of legislating reform in the financial services sector. I regret that it has taken the Government over two and a half years to get to this point. However, I look forward to seeing the remainder of the legislation and hope that there will be no further delays in the Government's timetable.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-42 is the Government's first response in legislative terms to the problems that have been endemic, not just for a year or two and not just after the collapse of the CCB and the Northland Bank but long before that. Thus, I have a real sense that we are closing the stable door awfully late and that the over-all cost to depositors, to the institutions, and directly or indirectly to Canadians as a whole, for a while at any rate, through the tax system, is now approaching some $2 billion. That is a great deal of money to go out the stable door.

I was recalling as the debate began on Bill C-42 how long it has been evident that there are problems in terms of the regulation of financial institutions, an issue which this Bill is intended to address. I had the opportunity to take part in the Ontario committee which reviewed the collapse of Crown Trust and which sought to review the regulation of financial institutions at the provincial level. This occurred in about 1982, a year or so after the collapse of Crown Trust and several other related companies.

• (1150)

At that time, one of the very sad and sorry things we learned as we looked into the operations of the Superintendent of Insurance of Ontario, who had jurisdiction over provincially chartered trust companies, as well as the Ontario Superintendent's interrelationship with the Inspector General of Banks and the Department of Insurance on the federal level, was the degree to which regulation of financial institutions was lax, slow and insensitive to the real problems. These real problems came about because of a change in practice and, I believe, a change in ethical standards on the part of people operating financial institutions.

One of the reasons Crown Trust was so easily raped and pillaged, in my view, was that the people who were there were running it like a crusty old institution for so many years and just did not know how to respond when a bunch of fast-buck operators with no ethics or morals at all sought to clean out the treasury in order to finance the flip that involved the Cadillac-Fairview buildings and Leonard Rosenberg.

The people running the trust company did not know what to do, and it is sad to say, albeit with hindsight, that they did not even know that someone should have taken their ethical principles in hand and simply walked out the door and gone to the newspapers to say that this will not do and explain what was happening before it was too late. That did not occur.

One of the things that sticks out in my mind from that particular episode is that at the time that there were questions about the financial regulation of the various trust companies involved, the discussions between the Department of the Superintendent of Insurance of Ontario and its federal counterparts was a comedy of errors. In their attempt to take effective action to stop these fast-buck artists, they found that whoever was in charge of the matter was off on a French course, or on holidays, or for some other reason had not bothered to inform the Inspector General of what was going on. A pattern like that became very obvious to us at that time.

I believe the previous Government is to be criticized as well as the present Government for not responding to that pattern, by recognizing the very grave risks that were being taken, particularly after the financial turmoil that began to occur in the market with the very sharp rise in interest rates at the beginning of the 1980s. The previous Government did not respond, and then when the new Government came into power it inherited a situation which it should not have had to inherit, but it has tolerated that situation. Then, perhaps in the interest of winning western votes or perhaps as a preconceived notion that when the Liberals had been in power the Government was traditionally opposed and insensitive to the needs of western financial institutions, the present Government galloped to the defence of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank in a manner which we now know led to a loss of more than $1 billion to the public through deposit insurance institutions.

That is all history. I believe it is relevant to discuss that history in discussing Bill C-42, and the other parts of the financial package the Minister has promised that we will see some time in the next month and a half or two months. I think the necessary action must involve all of the elements cited by the Minister and not just an improved pattern of regulation.

It is clear that excessive concentration in the industry is a problem. In our opinion, the Government's proposals on ownership are inadequate. It is clear that there are real problems with self-dealing, particularly in some of the smaller institutions. We do not yet know what will happen about that.

I believe there are clear danger signals in the degree to which the four pillars are being collapsed into one. The White Paper indicates that the Government more or less supports that collapse but it seems to me that we are embarking on a difficult and possibly perilous path. The new Superintendent of Financial Institutions will be charged with bringing together two organizations which did not co-operate very well in the past, and will also be responsible for this committee which will bring together the different players.

The CDIC, the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada will get together formally in order to talk about things from time to time. If I recall, these elements did meet regularly on the Bank of Canada Board, if not elsewhere, but those meetings did not appear to be particularly fruitful. It is useful that the Bill provides for such meetings, but I think there is still the potential for human error and for the regulators to be too trusting, as they were in the past with Crown Trust, the CCB and the Northland Bank.

I took an opportunity to have a quick look at the summary of the Estey Commission inquiry. What a tragedy of errors that was. Auditors did not do the jobs for which they were being paid. I think it is bordering on the criminal that to this day there has been no effective action taken to discipline auditors who failed to notify the public, through annual reports or other means, of the situation that existed, and who consistently over a lengthy period of time tolerated the phoney devices which were being used by those two banks to make it look as though they were profitable and their balance sheets were still in order when that was not so.

The Minister knows the degree to which there was capitalization of interest taking place and the extent to which there were roll-overs upon roll-overs and work-outs upon work-outs, all in an attempt to forestall the evil day when the whole house of cards would come crumbling down. It is sad to say that the Government allowed itself to be sucked in by that.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the then Minister of State for Finance were not perceptive enough to ask a few of the questions that should have been asked by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and by the Inspector General of Banks about the real picture beneath this Potemkin village of finance which had been created to indicate Government support should continue. Of course, it eventually collapsed and at great expense.

The reform in Bill C-42 is a consequence of, among other things, a very rapid change which has taken place in finance, not just in Canada but elsewhere as well. It is also clearly a consequence of the concerns I and many others have been raising about institutional solvency and about the fact that the standard of behaviour for people involved in the financial services industry is changing to the point where we can no longer trust the unwritten gentleman's code that ensured financial institutions remain solvent without pushing to the limit whatever powers they have. That is one of the reasons why the loosening of the statutory restraints is rather difficult to accept. The loosening of those restraints will leave more options available to press to the limit the powers which are being given to the banks, trust companies, insurance companies and the investment industry.

The Government has come up with a legislative compromise in which it is trying to both deregulate and re-regulate the system. This involves a dramatic change in the rules, the most dramatic change we have seen since the collapse of the Home Bank when the Government tried to legislate the four pillar system with which we have become familiar. The fact is that those pillars have become more and more blurred and will be even more blurred now that the Government's proposals are coming into force.

The limitations on commercial lending by trust companies will almost entirely disappear on the one hand and on the other hand, as the Minister said, the banks and other financial institutions will have the power to deal directly in the investment industry. One might argue that that is happening none too soon, given the degree to which, at another level, foreign ownership is being allowed into the investment industry.

• (1200)

One of the unsettling characteristics of what is happening is the emergence of a number of financial conglomerates to bring together under one corporate grouping several different financial institutions. The percentage share of closely held conglomerates with strong commercial links has been steadily advancing over the course of a few short years, and deregulation is likely to encourage this trend.

I recall in the late sixties and early seventies the degree to which the banks were able to move into consumer credit, an area which had previously been controlled by the instalment finance companies that have now effectively fallen back into being a role of minor players in this particular area. The chartered banks still control something like 70 per cent of all deposits. However, clearly their share of the deposit taking market is likely to decrease and decrease quite rapidly over a short period of time.

I recognize that this is occurring elsewhere. Great Britain has had a big bang in which London has been encouraged to abandon most of the restraints on its financial institutions. Similar liberalization has already taken place in the United States. They have opted for deregulation, and the pressure of that deregulation is being felt here. Just a week or two ago we had contact with Dennis Healey, a former Chancellor of the Exchequer in a Labour Government in Britain. His response was: "Watch out, Canada; be very careful about what you are doing".

Since the big bang we have seen enormous six-figure salaries, which in Britain are very big, being paid to teenage gurus and whiz kids. Well, they are not teenagers; they are only in their twenties. There has been an enormous escalation of exactly the kinds of practices of which we in Canada should be very wary.

The fact that there is a move toward globalization in financial transactions should not lead us to go willy-nilly along the directions carved by the United States and by Great Britain.

Just in the time since the White Paper appeared there has been a series of financial scandals on Wall Street in the United States which involved many of the same institutions and transactions that are intended to be governed here. The investment industry and the deposit-taking industry there have emerged with a very serious blot on their reputation. Major investment bankers like Shearson and Lehman have found themselves directly implicated. Hundreds of millions of dollars worth of frauds have been demonstrated to have occurred.

One must ask: "Is this what we are to get in Canada?" If we do so, will the Government of Canada, through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, once again rush to the rescue of deposit-taking institutions? Once again are we to bail out institutions in which foreign depositors invested, presumably in an unregulated way, and then came with their begging cups in hand and saying: "If you do not pay us off, the reputation of the financial industry in Canada will be severely impaired"?

We bought that argument to the tune of $400 million or $500 million of payments to uninsured institutional depositors who had every reason to know better and to have expected that they should not have been compensated if they happened to have made a bad decision.

The concern about deregulation at least has had the impact of persuading the Government not to move to a total big bang. Bank failures pointed to a wide number of problems related to the regulation and supervision of institutions. It became clear that financial difficulty was frequently related to severe errors on the part of managers, to excessive risk-taking, to self-dealing, to conflict of interest, and to the mismatching of assets and liabilities.

Another area to which the Estey Commission report pointed is the failure of directors to exercise due diligence in terms of their role as the directors of banks like the Northland and the CCB. These guys—and gals, I suppose, although they were mainly men—were being waltzed into a view of the world which bore no resemblance to reality at all. They failed to insist that management kept them adequately informed. It is my conviction that many of the directors did not even know the degree to which difficult situations had been put together with cloud-cuckoo-land financial forecasts or the degree to which those two banks, in particular, had basically papered over their deficiencies and therefore demonstrated to the directors that they were solvent at the time the two institutions were essentially bankrupt. It was not until those institutions could no longer raise capital or funds in the market that they were finally brought to book and had to be shut down.

As the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) pointed out, we have had a surfeit of public policy studies of regulation of financial institutions. We have had the Wyman report on the CDIC. We have had the Dupray task force in Ontario. We have had the reports of the Senate and Commons finance committees. The ECC has reported, and many of the recommendations we have now flow from the Estey Commission report.

All these reports concluded—and as I stated earlier we did not need all these reports in order to reach that conclusion—that there was a major systemic weakness in terms of the Government's ability to spot and to identify problems in unhealthy institutions and, further, to do something about those problems once they began to be identified.

I welcome the fact that many of those deficiencies are being addressed in Bill C-42. When it goes to the finance committee we will have a chance to look at them in more detail to establish whether the a's, b's, p's and q's are adequate to the kinds of needs. It is a bit difficult to comment on those right now.

However, I want to comment on one of the elements which the Government has left until later, that is, the question of the domestic ownership policy. The Minister will know that we take grave issue with the Government's decision that it will interfere in no way with the ownership of financial institutions up to the point where they reach an asset base of $15 billion, in the case of chartered banks, and something similar in the case of trust companies and insurance companies. Even then the Government will give five years for the companies to introduce an element of wider spread ownership. That element is to be limited to only 35 per cent.

In other words, an institution which is approaching the $15 billion point now will have a lengthy period of time in which it can get onside. As well it is not clear exactly what the Government would intend to do in terms of policy if an institution did not get onside by the end of five years. We know the kinds of excuses which can be made by an institution to explain why it is not prepared to do it yet.

[Translation]

For example one might suggest that this is not the right time, that the financial markets are not in a good position for the issue of shares to meet the objective of having 35 per cent of the shares of a trust company or a bank in the hands of the owners, except those who have control.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Government's proposed legislation imposes the idea that our banks and the other financial institutions be under very diversified ownership. As a matter of fact, 15 to 20 years might elapse before a new bank will establish itself and reach the level of $15 billion in assets. After that, will the regulations change? If I were responsible for the strategic planning of one such institution I would say that things change. Pressure may be brought to bear on this Minister and this Government, but for us it is not limited to this particular time.

[English]

Effectively a $15 billion rule, with the permission to continue to grow, would mean that a bank could reach $20 billion in assets and only then be subjected to a 35 per cent ownership rule. The idea that we would step in, in order to put some restraint on the large families which control so much of our trust company industry, is simply not there. They will laugh at this particular measure, indicating that it is not particularly effective.

If there is a minority shareholding, it is no guarantee that these large pools of capital will not continue to be used in the abusive way which we have seen before. When I use the word "abusive", I do so in a fairly broad context.

We had a very lengthy debate in the House last week over the plight of Canada's farmers and the problems they are experiencing. What I find unsettling is the double standard which seems to prevail when the banks come to making their loans. If a farmer tries to extend the loan because crop conditions are not good—and it is difficult to make even an operating profit in farming today—then all hell breaks loose. That farmer may well be driven to the wall and beyond, forced to have his equipment auctioned off at a pittance, the livestock sold at far less than market value, winding up with nothing after a lifetime and, in certain cases, many lifetimes in farming the same farm within the same family.

• (1210)

What happens in the financial sector, Mr. Speaker? What happens when Conrad Black or someone of that ilk wants to engage in some kind of corporate takeover? He calls a few friends. In no time at all a line of credit, over half a billion dollars or a billion dollars, is arranged. It is as easy as going to sign for a loan for a new car when you deal in that kind of rarefied atmosphere.

There is something wrong when people get hundreds of millions of dollars in paper entrepreneurship for this kind of paper pushing which, in many cases, is of absolutely no benefit at all to the Canadian economy or which, as we have seen now with the sorry plight of Dome, can have an extremely negative impact on our economy.

These situations create bids that go far beyond the underlying values of the assets being acquired. People can do that, making arguments about synergy and how they are going to recover the full value which the previous owners had failed to recognize, et cetera, et cetera. A lot of that is hogwash, but the banks have bought it again and again, and it is not going to end.

It will not end partially because the Government is not prepared to see widely spread ownership as the rule for any large financial institution. The Government instead is going to see a certain amount of minority holdings as a requirement. It will still leave in place the situation where the directors of these financial institutions will be drawn from a small corporate elite in Canada. The Hon. Member is shaking his head. But that is what we have right now, a small corporate elite who lunch together, perhaps at Winston's, who meet each other, who play together, who winter together in the Caribbean and who feel a commonality of interest and who are ever too ready to help a friend when a few hundreds of millions of dollars is needed to finance some kind of corporate paper-pushing exercise.

On the one hand, you have the emergence in Canada of a situation where many people cannot even go to a bank because they do not have any money to open up a bank account. That is real. You have a situation where increasing numbers of Canadians are homeless and virtually destitute, where poverty is increasing. While some changes which may be useful are being made in this area, not enough is being done to break the degree to which corporate power will continue to direct the financial institutions of Canada, according to the reforms which are being put in place by a Conservative Government.

Perhaps that is not surprising. It is a Conservative Government. It has inherited a mess which was created by the Liberals but, as my leader pointed out during the course of the 1984 election campaign, comparing Liberals and Tories is like comparing Tweedledum and Tweedledee. It is like comparing Visa and MasterCharge.

When it comes to the question of whether or not the Government of Canada should be prepared to try to break up some of these pools of corporate economic power in our financial institutions, the answer we would have had from the Liberals is very similar that which we are getting now from the Progressive Conservatives, namely, they are not prepared to break up those pools of corporate power.

The Minister is waiting anxiously to find out what our opposition is to this Bill. I have told him what our position is likely to be on the Bill with respect to corporate ownership. We have real reservations. This Bill on its own is obviously not enough to deal with problems that also relate to powers, to self-dealing and to ownership. We will come to those later. Yes, we will support this Bill, with a number of reservations along the lines I have been putting forward, because it is clear that we need to have better Governments and better regulation than we have had.

I still remain somewhat skeptical, and I hope the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will impose a sense of public responsibility right through his organization. I regret to say, that sense was not there before. I get angry when I see some of the abuses that have occurred in the area of financial institutions. I get so angry that I want to weep over what has taken place.

I get angry when I find out that a person, a regulator, who had a responsibility for asking questions that go underneath the bland assurances that well-fed corporate executives were giving from the banks and financial institutions, failed to do his or her job. Perhaps it is unfair to pick on regulators. They are civil servants. They are not particularly well paid perhaps compared to some of the people whose activities they are meant to be regulating. They deal in difficult circumstances. Certainly the Inspector General of Banks and his office were grossly underfunded and understaffed in the period of time about which we are talking.

I still cannot help feeling that when these abuses were taking place that surely the regulators should have been kicking and screaming. A whistle-blowing law in Canada would allow regulators to go public with what they know when they find out that inadequate action is taken by the supervisors. Had some whistle-blowing taken place, going back five or six years to Crown Trust, or more recently to the recent failures, I predict that we could have saved the CDIC a large proportion of the very large sums in which it is in deficit right now. We could have saved Canadian depositors, who eventually will pay, and borrowers who will eventually pay, the cost of the premium increases being imposed in this Bill, the great amount they are being asked to pay because of the increases in premiums. Those increases in premiums would not have been necessary. Why? Because the losses would not have occurred in such magnitude. Unfortunately, that did not occur.

I do welcome the fact that under the Bill the powers are to be greatly enlarged. The Bill responds to the Estey Commission report and the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. Between the superintendent and the CDIC there are greater powers for going into the books. They have the power to require that an adverse report on a financial institution shall be put before the directors of that institution within 15 days. If the directors do not act, at least they cannot say "Well, we did not know", which was the case of the CCB and of Northland.

The powers of the Superintendent include the power to temporarily seize assets of a troubled institution to give officials time to respond to specific complaints about the institution's operations, such as a possible inability to handle liabilities or improper accounting of assets on the books.

Before I go conclude, Mr. Speaker, the basic question still remains. Is there the political will and is there the bureaucratic will to use those powers, greatly enhanced, which did not exist before? It is my conviction that, although the powers were limited as far as the Superintendent and the Inspector General were concerned before, in the end, if they did not have the power to act directly, those officers had the power of publicity. They had the power to issue a press release. They should not say simply that, in our opinion we do not feel these institutions are acting according to the rules of sound financial management and, therefore, we are undertaking whatever measures available to bring those institutions into check. It is quite true that there were time delays in certain cases which would prevent them from acting immediately to safeguard what assets might remain. That is a problem. But if the Superintendent or the Inspector General had gone to the president of the CCB or of the Northland and said, "I want you to look at this draft press release. This is what I believe needs to be said in public about your institution. I happen to lack the powers to shut you down today but I intend to make this release public within a day, two days or seven days unless you take the following corrective actions", is it seriously to be believed that those institutions would seek to call the bluff if the Inspector General had shown that kind of determination? I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker.

• (1220)

One has to ask, what about the political level? Was it informed? Not always. However, when they were, would they have backed up that kind of action by the Inspector General? We were told a year and a half ago that the IG had contact with the then Minister of State for Finance. Unfortunately the Minister herself was unwilling or unable, did not have the competence or the experience—I am not sure what. She has emerged politically unscathed from that experience, but she is partly responsible for what went on. She could have said to the IG, "that is a mess out there, you go and stop it." That could have been done without the extra powers which are being given in this case.

If the Superintendent remains unconvinced about the solvency of an institution there can be a hearing with the Minister of Finance, after which the licence can be restricted, or the Superintendent can be directed to take over the institution for an indefinite period. If the poor practices of the institution do not change at that point the Superintendent can begin winding up procedures. It is a much better articulated system than existed before, but we saw the system fail before, even though there really were powers which could have been used to bring those institutions to account. I fear that could occur now as well.

I just want to speak briefly on the question of deposit insurance. The CDIC deficit right now stands at about $1.5 billion. Most of it is attributable, not to insured deposits but to uninsured deposits in the case of the 1985 bank failures. I would like the House to at least consider the question of whether there should not have been and should not now be a certain degree of co-insurance on deposits over a certain amount. I think for deposits up to $25,000, or something like that—a certain sum which reflects what might be held by naive and unsophisticated investors—that 100 per cent insurance makes sense. However, we have seen an escalation of insurance to the point where the entire responsibility for the fiscal management and financial rectitude of an institution rests on the regulator. There is no market pressure there at all.

My Party has trouble from time to time with people suggesting that the market is everything. I have trouble, conversely, as a democratic socialist in a semi-capitalist economy, with suggestions made by the Government which effectively say that there should be no market pressure at all. If you had a 10 per cent or 20 per cent co-insurance feature on deposits over $25,000 or $30,000, let us say up to $100,000 or something like that, and an institution failed, the depositors run the risk of losing up to 10 per cent or 15 per cent of their deposit. It seems to me that that would ensure that high flying financial institutions, behaving the way too many have behaved over the course of the last two years, would have their wings trimmed. People with large sums to invest would be extremely wary about getting an extra half per cent interest from an institution that was not investing prudently, taking unwarranted risks with the money.

In other words, the market itself would prevent those institutions from growing as rapidly as the CCB and the Northland Bank were able to grow. It would prevent the kind of situation where institutions grow like Topsy and where the risk relative to public deposit insurance grows to the levels we have seen.

The Government claimed at the time it had no choice but to bail out those two western banks. It made certain assurances, and I think Governor Bouey may have been partly responsible for that. It may well be that no matter what level of deposits are formally insured, future Governments may also find themselves in that same box. I would hate to see that.

I am lectured to and preached at about the market system from time to time, but when we turn around, as we did at the time of the CCB affair, and say let the market system prevail and make those guys take what they can get when the institution is wound up, we were told no, that is not to be.

I would suggest that if the principle is in place that there be a certain amount of co-insurance on deposits over a modest level, not only will that ensure that depositors whose deposits are 90 per cent insured would look carefully at the quality and character of the institution in which they place their deposits, it will also set a precedent so that uninsured depositors putting commercial deposits into those institutions will also expect that in the event of failure, even if they come with their begging cup, 10 per cent or 15 per cent of their investment will not be returned. They, too, will therefore not abuse the taxpayers of Canada through the CDIC the way those depositors did two years ago with the results we know.

I could go on for some time, but it is the position of the NDP that the problem of financial institution solvency can be resolved only through a combination of clear and effective regulation and supervision of Canada's financial system along with strict domestic ownership limits which ensure that institutions are widely held. We have supported much of what Mr. Justice Estey advocated with respect to regulatory changes but we note that the best federal supervision available will fail if commercial financial cross-ownership is permitted. Because the Conservatives did not introduce 10 per cent ownership limits for all financial institutions, the new regulatory authority that Bill C-42 introduces may find itself with an increasingly impossible job on its hands in the years ahead.

As I have just suggested, we could also put some of that responsibility in the hands of any investors who have more than modest sums to invest so that they, too, keep an eye on the rectitude and solvency and management practices of the institutions in which they put their funds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell).

Mr. Gauthier: Questions and comments?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to bring to the attention of the House that pursuant to Standing Order 55(1), the rest of the speeches will be 20 minutes plus 10 minutes questions and comments.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise and speak on Bill C-42.

Speaking as a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, we spent a great deal of time on this subject over the last two to three years. I first want to commend and compliment the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). I can recall, a few days after he was appointed, consulting with him and asking if he would be moving quickly on the various studies which had already been done. My thought there was that the last thing we needed was another study. I was very impressed with his remarks. He said he would be getting on with the job just as quickly as possible, and he has been true to his word.

I am going to deal with just the supervisory reform and changes to the CDIC. I have full confidence that the other measures concerning ownership and so on will be dealt with shortly. I think it would be useful to refresh our memories a little bit about some of the comments made in the studies. I will just refer to the committee report which begins with supervisory reform.

Recent trends and problems in the Canadian financial system have highlighted the need to improve the federal supervisory system. The failure of seven federally-supervised financial institutions during 1985, two chartered banks, three trust companies and two property and casualty insurance companies raises serious doubts about the adequacy of the supervisory system. Failures of provincial institutions, while not the direct responsibility of federal supervisory authorities, also underline the need for improved supervisory standards across all jurisdictions.

In his testimony before the committee the Superintendent of Insurance cited the numerous reasons for the failure of seven federal trust and mortgage loan companies and four property and casualty companies. These include inadequate capital, over-exposure in real estate, low quality mortgages with questionable appraisals, mismatching between assets and liabilities, abusive self-dealing, the use of unlicensed re-insurers, and the poor quality of management.

In its study of the circumstances leading up to the support package provided to the CCB in March, 1985, the committee also identified a number of serious shortcomings, such as lax regulatory supervision, questionable accounting practices, inadequate disclosure, inadequate performance by outside auditors, and their lack of communication with the office of the Inspector General of Banks.

• (1230)

Technology accounts for another reason for supervisory reform. Computers and communications technology have enabled the financial institutions to effectively leap over traditional domestic and international supervisory boundaries. No longer is it sufficient to limit supervision to the activities of an institution in a limited geographic area. Technology, coupled with increased product deregulation and the blurring of industry boundaries, requires a new approach to supervision, one which recognizes the national and international dimensions of many financial institutions and the need to utilize up-to-date computer-based technology and modernized supervisory approaches to deal with the dramatically different financial scene of the 1980s.

A third area of reform relates to the adequacy of the supervisor's power to deal with problem situations. There is evidence from recent financial institution failures that federal regulators require additional remedial powers to perform more effectively. Also it would appear that they have not fully utilized their existing powers, or done so in a timely manner. Recent events would indicate that the traditional gentlemen's approach to financial supervision is no longer appropriate in an environment of increased risks, frequent and significant economic shifts, and intense competition. A more assertive supervisory approach is required, together with the requisite enforcement powers to get the job done. The traditional reactive mode of supervision must give way to a pro-active mode.

The supervisory process of Canadian banks has been patterned on the British system which relies heavily on institutional self-regulation and the use of outside auditors. Until 1975 the OIGB had under five employees. In contrast to the American supervisory system which employs hundreds of government examiners to perform detailed on-site examinations, the Canadian approach relies on the work of internal inspections and external audits and generally limits its own reviews to an examination of the adequacy of bank management and the controls it has introduced to comply with prudential policies and regulations.

In contrast, the supervision of trust and insurance companies involves detailed on-site examination by federal supervisors and is much closer to the American banking scene. Both the adequacy of banks supervisory methods and responsibility of outside advisers to all financial institutions, including auditors, appraisers, actuaries and lawyers, are in need of review and revision.

The internationalization of the Canadian financial system, in particular the growing importance of foreign markets to Canadian chartered banks, life insurance companies, and some of the larger trust companies, points to the need for careful re-examination of the adequacy of present supervisory practices in the international area.

Finally, the increased blurring of differences between financial industries, particularly among the deposit-taking institutions, and the pressure from all financial industry groups for further product deregulation, reinforces the need to re-examine the suitability and effectiveness of two separate federal supervisory bodies and a separate deposit insurance entity. The shortcomings of the present organization structure were recognized in both the Green Paper and the Wyman report.

It is clear that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) not only read our report in great detail but acted very much along the lines of the recommendations that we made concerning supervision. He also had to contend with and think about other remarks and suggestions, and I would like to quote a couple from the Senate Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. They were rather cautious in their approach to this subject. For instance, they stressed the following points:

> —first, to ensure that primary regulators have adequate technological and human resources to undertake effectively the monitoring and examining role under their existing powers;
>
> —second, to enhance these powers where circumstances warrant; and
>
> —third, to alter their monitoring procedures so that an effective early warning system is put in place and to establish a network of communication and information flow to and from the other partners in the over-all process of regulating consumer protection and institution solvency.

They make further recommendations including No. 16 which says:

> To a considerable degree, the recent problems in the financial sector appear to reflect not so much an inadequate range of regulatory powers as an inadequate exercise of existing powers. To the extent that this is the case, it is important that legislators do not react to recent events by endowing regulators with unnecessary and unwarranted powers.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister chose not to take that particular advice. I think he was correct in that.

Recommendation No. 17 says that increases in regulatory powers should be restricted to those areas where existing powers limit the ability to monitor the soundness and solvency of an institution or to restore problem institutions to financial health. They should not be utilized to supplant management's prerogative to manage and direct as an institution. The most serious weakness of the existing regulatory framework is the lack of procedures or mechanisms to identify problem institutions on a timely basis.

They go on to talk about an early warning system which I believe is a very vital area that is certainly lacking in the existing system.

On a number of occasions we made the point about where these supervisors should be located. We were dismayed to learn that literally all of them are located right here in the capital. The odd financial institution is headquartered here, but most of them are obviously in metropolitan centres like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. In order to have an effective early warning system your men and women should be out in the field where they can pick up on rumours about loans and so on.

I will just touch on another very thorough document which was completed by Justice Estey. He outlined five different alternatives for the structure of bank supervision. No. 3 is worded as follows:

> Establish a super-regulatory agency with jurisdiction over banks, insurance companies, and trust and loan companies as recommended by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The fifth choice which this report puts forth reads as follows:

> Combine the Inspector General's supervisory functions with the CDIC, which, as the insurer of the public's deposits, would determine its exposure to risk by its own supervisory activities.

I believe that the Minister of State for Finance correctly rejected that recommendation with regard to supervisory steps, but it is clear that not only has he consulted widely with the industry, he also did not allow these reports to gather dust. They were read and culled through. I believe he grafted together legislation including the best and brightest ideas from the various studies previously done.

Bill C-42 clearly shows that the Government is committed to strengthening its ability to supervise financial institutions as part of a comprehensive policy of reform in the financial sector. The principal measures in the Bill are the consolidation of the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and the Department of Insurance into a new office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and modifications to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The new office will have full supervisory responsibilities for federal banks and non-bank financial institutions.

I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, of how that sector is growing. In 1967 there were 223 companies. By 1984 that had grown dramatically to 352 institutions.

• (1240)

The CDIC will continue to be a separate entity. This will allow the retention of private sector expertise on the CDIC's board of directors. Moreover, it will preserve the CDIC's established relationship with provincial regulators.

This Bill will also provide detailed grounds on which the Government may take control of a financial institution. The existing provisions do not allow regulators to take timely and decisive action to protect the interests of depositors, policyholders, or general creditors.

Bill C-42 also addresses the issue of CDIC funding by permitting a more flexible mechanism for setting premium rates. As a result of the failure of a number of financial institutions, the CDIC had a deficit of $1.2 billion at the end of 1986.

Bill C-42 reflects the measures outlined in the December, 1986 White Paper, New Directions for the Financial Sector. These measures are based on extensive discussion and consultation. They address concerns raised in the Estey report on the Northland and Commercial banks, the Wyman report on the CDIC, and the reports of the finance committees of the House of Commons and the Senate.

Separate legislation introduced as part of the Government's reform of the financial sector will further enhance existing supervisory powers, permit the Government to review and block large transfers of ownership if necessary. It will improve solvency standards, control self-dealing and conflict of interest, and permit financial institutions to offer a wider variety of service to their clients.

Bill C-42 establishes the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. This office will combine the operations of the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and the Department of Insurance. The office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will be treated as a separate employer under the Public Service Employment Act, thus providing more flexibility in setting classification standards and pay scales that would otherwise be impossible. This will facilitate the recruitment and retention of qualified personnel from the private sector.

The office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will be funded by assessments levied on the financial institutions under its supervision. The precise assessment formula will be set out in regulations and resemble the formula currently used to fund the Department of Insurance. The office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will be able to spend its assessment revenue without the requirement of parliamentary appropriations.

Bill C-42 establishes a committee consisting of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, the Chairman of the CDIC, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and the Deputy Minister of Finance. This will enable an adequate flow of information among regulatory agencies. We noted that this was certainly a problem and an issue in some of the failures that were examined.

Bill C-42 provides detailed grounds on which the Government may take control of a financial institution and will standardize these procedures. This will further protect depositors, policyholders and other creditors when financial institutions appear to be insolvent or fail to comply with regulatory procedures.

Responsibility for major decisions affecting the birth and winding up of financial institutions will be transferred to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Some responsibilities, such as issuing letters patent, will be transferred from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), while others will be transferred from the Governor in Council. Certain responsibilities of an administrative or supervisory nature will be transferred from the Minister of Finance to the new Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

Powers of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will include measures in Bill C-42 that will strengthen the CDIC's ability to protect the interests of depositors and other creditors. The CDIC will have the power to levy premium surcharges on financial institutions which violate CDIC by-laws.

Federally incorporated financial institutions will no longer be automatically insured. They will be required to apply for insurance as is presently the case for provincially-incorporated institutions.

At present, the CDIC may terminate, through a phased process, deposit insurance coverage of a provincial member institution for unsound business or financial practices.

The CDIC will be given the power to initiate a process for termination of insurance coverage for deposits in both federal and provincial institutions. The Minister's authorization will be required before coverage of federally-regulated institutions is terminated. This would apply only to new deposits; existing deposits would continue to be insured.

Let us turn to the financing of the CDIC. This Bill will provide greater flexibility in establishing the premiums that the CDIC charges financial institutions. Effective May 1, 1987, the Governor in Council will be able to charge fees of up to one-sixth of 1 per cent of insured deposits. The rate that is established within this ceiling will reflect the need to reduce the deficit of the Deposit Insurance Fund over a reasonable period of time.

Legislation passed in 1986, which was Bill C-86, temporarily increased premiums from one-thirtieth of 1 per cent to one-tenth of 1 per cent for the period February 1, 1986, to April 30, 1987.

The minimum fee for deposit insurance will be increased from $500 to $5,000. The maximum amount which CDIC may borrow from the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be increased from $1.5 billion to $3 billion.

In closing, I am very supportive of the measures that are contained in Bill C-42. I spent a number of years in the financial services sector before seeking election and I can attest to the soundness of these provisions. They are much needed.

Canadians can be very proud of the record of our financial institutions over the long term. We have a number of world class banks and life insurance companies and these measures today will help not only the smaller institutions but the larger ones remain sound and competitive in a world that is changing so fast.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend who is also a colleague on the finance committee. It concerns the interrelationship between regulation and ownership restrictions. I realize that this is not directly part of the Bill, but it is certainly relevant. Does he believe that it is adequate to require only a minority interest in large financial institutions to be widely held, and whether it is adequate to give five years to banks or financial institutions to achieve that wide ownership of 35 per cent? Is it adequate only to require that kind of distribution of share ownership after institutions reach a level of assets of approximately $15 billion? Will this not simply allow continued concentration in financial markets which has been one of the causes of the problem of over-concentration in the Canadian economy and a concentration of economic power in too few hands?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he indicated, we are colleagues on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. We are not dealing with a theoretical world, but a financial world which has grown in different ways for decades and we cannot simply apply some theoretical measures.

Certain companies in the trust industry have had problems over the years. Some would not be alive and thriving today if one of the major shareholders had not had the financial resources to help that company through a difficult period.

I think there are conditions by which some of these institutions should enjoy stronger ownership, with a higher percentage of ownership from certain people. However, when indeed they do increase to a certain level, then I believe the ownership level should be decreased.

The Hon. Member will recall that the finance committee suggested a graduated scale on ownership so that when the assets hit a certain level the concentrated ownership would start to diminish. We may want to revisit that particular proposal when we deal with the final legislation.

However, in general, I support the measures that were put forth. As the Member delves into the history of the survival and support of some of our trust companies, particularly regional ones which are important, he will see the virtue in the approach.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can pursue this briefly. It seems contradictory that on the one hand the Government ownership proposals will continue to insist that the banks be widely held and impose a limit of 10 per cent on the ownership in any single hand, while at the same time it will permit the trust company to be directed and controlled, not just by one set of interests but by an individual owner. Assets of $15 billion, $20 billion or $25 billion could effectively be under the majority control of only one owner, whether or not 35 per cent of the shares are widely held. Nonetheless, the power of discretion goes into just one set of hands.

• (1250)

Because of the pattern of ownership in the trust companies now, we know that is a very real possibility. It seems to me the Government has a choice. It could take the banking model and apply that to the trust industry or it could do that which it has done, which is to simply go with the flow and accept this degree of monopoly ownership of the second major group of financial institutions in the country. Surely it would have been better to have sought—although it might have taken a bit of time—a broad ownership of those trust companies, so that we achieve that, and begin to achieve that now.

Mr. Attewell: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the tragedies the country went through with the financial institutions in 1985 was the collapse of two regional banks. I, for one, was dismayed, not just because of those two particular banks, but that it likely signalled the end, certainly for a while, of the creation of regional banks. We have a very fine banking system in this country. We have five huge banks. However, I sometimes wonder how well some of the regions are being served, particularly small businesses in many regions. Perhaps a future role for some of these smaller trust companies will be to fill that vacuum.

These companies normally require someone with financial resources or partners, and if some of these smaller trust companies are formed to take up that slack, I think that is a worthwhile thing to do.

We are not a Party which puts forth retroactive legislation. As I said in my first reply, there were certain companies in place whose survival was dependent from time to time on large injections of capital. When we look over the whole scene today, I think we have a relatively healthy and vibrant financial service sector and with measures such as the increased supervision and strength of this new office, and with the other measures which are going to be coming on, we will continue to have a sound system and one of which we can be proud.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to my colleague on the committee on finance. As the Hon. Member knows, during our hearings we had some concern regarding what type of regulations we could put on the institutions and what type of effective mechanisms the regulators could have on the institutions they were regulating. It often seemed to us on the committee that the instrument available to the regulators was either the sledge hammer, taking away the licence, or not being able to do very much about abuses they were seeing. The committee found this to be an unacceptable situation, because it did not allow degrees of punishments and penalties.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on how Bill C-42 would deal with the concern of the committee that the regulators would have various instruments to use with which to enforce the regulations?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to my colleague on the same committee. We worked side by side for a long time on this issue. I think the main power which will ensue from Bill C-42—and I am speaking of the supervisory area—if I could sum it up in one word, is "knowledge". I understand we are going to have more people in that department. I hope they follow the strategy we suggested, with many of them being in the field where they could avail themselves of the rumours on the street.

It is a fact that people know of an institution turning down a loan for certain reasons, such as the criteria not being met. You would be amazed, Mr. Speaker, how the financial institutions people know a month later which institution booked that deal which could have been a lot less than just marginal—perhaps even a very poor deal. But rumours are out there as to what company or institution actually booked what deal.

Therefore, knowledge is going to be power, in terms of knowing early on that interest is being capitalized, that the accounting procedure is being abused, and the knowledge of the rolling over of loans by a renewal procedure that simply covers up the delinquency of different loans. That is the real power, the talent of the people we are going to have and the knowledge they will gain from the hands-on review, and the whole system, if I could put it that way, of being out there in the field really knowing what is going on and not sitting in some ivory tower here in the capital.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). However, since it is very close to 1 p.m., and I do not want him to interrupt his speech, do I have unanimous consent to call it 1 p.m.?

Mr. Gauthier: I was going to take the floor and speak very briefly before 1 p.m. with the intention of continuing later. However, I take your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, I think we should adjourn for lunch now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 12.57 the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

S. O. 21

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT—QUESTIONS ASKED BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was right when he expressed last Friday a number of important concerns about the Meech Lake Agreement on the Constitution. For instance, our Leader asked what would happen to a national program should limitations on spending power become a reality. Medicare is one example that comes to mind. Would we have today medicare across the nation in rich and poor provinces alike if we had had in the early sixties limitations on spending power that the Government and the provincial premiers agreed upon so hastily last week?

What will happen to social programs we are now considering for implementation across Canada such as the day care policy? Will some provinces, if non-participation in national shared-cost programs becomes a reality, be saying: "No, thank you, but give us the money"? Will this money once it reaches a provincial treasury be fully used for the purpose it was originally intended? Will we have as a result provinces with low standards of day care services?

These are just a few questions that come to mind on one subject alone when wondering about the reasons why federal spending powers should be limited. Canadians want to know. They also want to be consulted.

* * *

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE OF FOREST INDUSTRY TO PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, most people envisioning Canada's prairie provinces think of vast expanses of wheat fields and herds of cattle. Some think of our black gold, the coal, oil and gas reserves of Alberta and Saskatchewan, or of the hydroelectric potential of Manitoba. Too few recognize the scope and importance of what one might call our green gold, the forest resources of these provinces.

Five pulp or paper mills, and a host of other primary product-producing manufacturing facilities, produce an array of products, including medium-density fibreboard and oriented strand board panels, laminated beams and roofing shingles. Hundreds of wood-based secondary manufacturing plants further contribute to a strong forest-based industry throughout the region.

Nearly 30,000 jobs across the Prairies can be attributed directly or indirectly to this industry. Furthermore, the value of shipments from the three prairie provinces and the Northwest Territories amounts to $1.5 billion annually.

This week marks National Forest Week in Canada. This week is an opportunity to reflect upon the important contribution of our forests to Canada. The forests of the prairie provinces hold one of the keys to the economic diversification of what is sometimes referred to as the bread basket of the nation.

* * *

MULTICULTURALISM

PARTICIPATION OF ETHNOCULTURAL COMMUNITIES IN CANADIAN SOCIETY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Parliament adopted a policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework 15 years ago last fall. But this policy has never been expressed in an Act such as the Official Languages Act. Successive Ministers responsible for multiculturalism have had pathetically little money to meet the needs of Canada's ethnocultural communities. The Board of Presidents of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council expressed its concern about this and other shortcomings in meetings today with all three Parties.

In this era of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms Canada requires strong leadership to ensure full participation in Canadian society by the members of every ethnocultural community and full participation of each community as a whole. Multicultural policy needs to foster the social and cultural potential of every community and to open Canadian society to the abilities of every member of these communities.

This is a time for action. The Minister needs to do far more than propose a few amendments to the Citizenship Act.

* * *

EXTERNAL AID

CANADIAN FOODGRAINS BANK—ASSISTANCE TO PEOPLE IN NEEDY COUNTRIES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Foodgrains Bank is a philanthropic organization which accepts donations of cash and grain in Canada and distributes grain to needy countries. The organization helps people stay alive through "food for work" programs by paying people grain for working on projects such as road building, reforestation and water storage development.

Through projects such as these people are paid six to eight pounds of grain for a day's work. This not only takes care of their short-term needs; the projects ensure them a better life in the long run.

Not only should the Foodgrains Bank be commended but the farmers of western Canada should be commended as well. In 1986 alone farmers from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta donated over $850,000 worth of grain. This, in turn, was matched on a three-to-one ratio by the Government of Canada.

The Canadian Foodgrains Bank, the farmers of western Canada and the Government of Canada should be congratulated on this achievement.

* * *

[Translation]

EDUCATION

NEED FOR GREATER ACCESS TO HIGHER STUDIES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the quality of our post-secondary education is worsening and becoming ever less accessible to people from underprivileged circles. The increase in tuition fees as well as in living and accommodation costs, the inadequacy of student aid programs, the massive indebtedness, and high unemployment among students are as many factors which make our system ever less accessible.

Ever more student aid is given in the form of loans rather than grants, with the result that students are getting ever deeper into debt. For many students the high cost of studies is often an excuse to quit school after the secondary level. We all agree that when tuition fees go up students from low-income families must obtain adequate financial assistance to make up for cash shortages. In addition, the rules governing the repayment of fees must be changed and the fees reduced so that more students can be accommodated.

We must also ensure that adults, native people, the handicapped and the poor have fair access to higher education. All these measures must be taken if we really want to give a fair chance to any student anxious to complete higher studies regardless of his or her status or social level.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

TRIBUTE TO ORDER OF CANADA RECIPIENT, HARRY GAIREY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last week at Rideau Hall, 74 outstanding Canadians were presented with the Order of Canada. Among the scientists, artists, athletes, charitable workers and former provincial premiers was a 92-year-old black Canadian named Harry Gairey.

Born in Jamaica, Harry came to Canada in 1914. He worked along with Lincoln Alexander's father at one of the only jobs available to blacks in Canada until recently, as a railway porter. He helped to organize the Porters' Union, the Universal Negro Citizenship Association and the Universal Negro Improvement Association. He was a moving force in the development of credit unions and played a significant role in changing Canada's immigration laws.

For many years he has been the official greeter, information centre, compassionate friend and battler against discrimination known to all as the "Black Godfather of Metropolitan Toronto". Last week at Rideau Hall, there was Harry taking his rightful place among the movers and shakers of our society. This is truly what Canada is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, today the Board of Presidents of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council is meeting in Ottawa. One of its concerns is the failure of the Conservative Government to bring forward changes promised over a year ago to the Canadian Human Rights Act to include a requirement for reasonable accommodation.

The Supreme Court of Canada decision in Bhinder was described by the head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission as devastating to those with disabilities and to ethnic and religious minorities, including Sikhs. The Commission submitted a unanimous special report to Parliament in February, 1986, calling upon the Government to require employers to accommodate differences where reasonably possible. The UN Human Rights Commission is now examining a complaint against Canada in this area.

I therefore call upon the Government, along with the Ethnocultural Council and the Human Rights Commission, to stop stalling on these important amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act and to stop betraying its promise to Canada's disabled and ethnic and religious minorities.

* * *

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

TRIBUTE TO ORDER OF CANADA RECIPIENT, ELIZABETH LEFORT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, last week, Elizabeth LeFort, a Cape Breton artist, was made a member of the Order of Canada. She was born in Point Cross, Nova Scotia, in 1914 and is a descendant of a small group of Acadians who escaped from Grand-Pré, Nova Scotia, in 1755. For more than 21 years she has established and maintained an entire gallery of hand-hooked tapestries. Thousands of tourists from all over have come to see her work.

S. O. 21

Elizabeth LeFort has been a strong proponent of Acadian culture for many decades. She adapted the famous Acadian rug-hooking into an art form and for many years maintained an entire gallery of hand-hooked tapestries of scenes prominent in North American history, thereby contributing to the preservation of the Acadian culture and heritage.

She also completed portraits of many world leaders. She completed a portrait of Pope Pius XII, and a portrait of President Eisenhower which was presented by her upon invitation to the President in the White House in 1957. She completed a portrait of Queen Elizabeth which was also personally delivered to the Queen. She completed a portrait of President John F. Kennedy which was personally presented to him in Phoenix, Arizona, in 1961, and she completed portraits of Prime Minister Diefenbaker and Prime Minister Trudeau.

She was born on an Acadian farm in Cape Breton, and as a young girl, she learned this famous art form. She continues to teach this art to future generations. All Nova Scotians are proud of this great artist and want to express their congratulations to her.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

THE LATE RAYMOND BLAIS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, we were saddened to hear about the premature death of Mr. Raymond Blais, the long-time president of Quebec's Mouvement des caisses populaires Desjardins. In that capacity Mr. Blais played a leading role in the socio-economic development of Quebec and Canada through the Desjardins co-operative movement. Under his guidance the Desjardins movement made significant progress in the service of millions of Quebecers and Canadians who deal with the caisses populaires and other financial institutions of the Desjardins group.

In my name and on behalf of the Members of my political Party I should like to extend to Mrs. Blais and her immediate relatives our most sincere condolences on the occasion of this deep bereavement which affects both Quebec and the country as a whole.

• (1410)

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

CALL FOR REPRESENTATION OF TERRITORIES AT FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was welcome news when we heard last Friday that the First Ministers had come to a tentative arrangement for Quebec's participation in the Constitution.

We cannot, however, forget that there are still thousands of Canadians living north of sixty who do not today enjoy the same political rights as their southern neighbours. The Territories must be represented at the forthcoming First Ministers' Constitutional Conference since their goals and desires of becoming equal members of the Canadian partnership are directly affected by the Section 42 amending formula.

With the resolution of the Quebec situation, it is now time to redouble our efforts to bring true provincehood to the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO FIVE-YEAR SUBSIDY SCHEME

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, a lifetime of working as a prairie farmer has trained me to look realistically at hard times and difficult situations.

I watched the Government announce grain price declines last year and again this year of 18 per cent to 20 per cent each year, and I know that farm incomes will be woefully inadequate. The Government will not commit itself to further funds at this point but says that the solution to farm price problems lies in international negotiations.

Ultimately that is the solution which Canadian farmers seek, but realistically how long will such action take? About a year ago Canada raised the question of grain pricing at the OECD meeting and apparently has agreement to have the issue on the agenda of the GATT talks. It has set up and become part of the Cairns Group.

In none of these initiatives do we have any commitment by the Americans or the Europeans, the chief people involved, to take part in the talks. They are not even part of the Cairns Group.

What Canadian farmers need is a commitment like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) gave to dairy producers to be part of a farm subsidy scheme for five years so that our producers know, as their European and American counterparts know, that the Government is behind them.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF POLISH CONSTITUTION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Polish community observed the anniversary of the signing and ratification of the Polish Constitution of May 3, 1791, a day which is cherished by freedom-loving Poles throughout the world.

In Poland celebrations of the event were marked by the arrest of 200 Poles, serving as a reminder that the struggle for liberty and justice continues despite the efforts of those who would deny freedom's call.

Fundamental democratic principles, including freedom of expression and association guaranteed under the Constitution of 1791, have yet to be implemented in Poland. The official visit by our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will provide an opportunity for the Canadian Government to press Polish officials for much needed reform in the area of human rights.

As a free and democratic people, let us join with Canadians of Polish origin in commemorating and honouring the democratic principles embodied in the Constitution of 1791.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL SELF-GOVERNMENT—PREMIERS' HESITATION ON ISSUE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it is remarkable how easily and quickly the First Ministers were able to strike a new constitutional deal on expanding provincial powers. The vague and uncertain concept of Quebec as a distinct society was agreed to. Where were those provincial voices asking what does this really mean? How will this distinctiveness be exercised in practice?

Contrast that, Sir, with the Premiers' reluctance and hesitation on the issue of aboriginal self-government. Here there was precision. Here there were specifics. Nothing was vague or uncertain because the scope of the right to aboriginal self-government was to be achieved through negotiations. Yet a succession of First Ministers' Conferences, held in public, achieved next to nothing.

Contrast that, Sir, with the private tête-à-tête at Meech Lake, which will have the effect of significantly altering the very nature of Canada as we know it today. Thus, there is one approach taken in the name of provincial rights, and there is quite a different one for the recognition of aboriginal rights.

• (1415)

THE CONSTITUTION

RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING—SUPPORT FOR MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, last Friday many Members of the House, including the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), celebrated with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) his success in having all provincial premiers agree to principles for amending our Constitution and for guaranteeing for Quebec, after years of uncertainty, its rightful place in Canada.

I believe that this Accord will also be welcomed by English speaking Quebecers. The Meech Lake Accord calls for recognition of the existence across Canada of linguistic minorities. It notes that they are a fundamental characteristic of our country, and it calls for Parliament and all provincial legislatures to preserve this national characteristic.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada stands prouder.

[English]

All Canadians should be celebrating.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATE OF ISRAEL—FOUNDATION ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today I join in celebrating Israel's 39th anniversary, a state that represents the fulfilment of an age-old dream of the Jewish people for a homeland. From the time Lester Pearson played such an important role in the formation of Israel to the present, Canadian political leaders have consistently supported Israel's existence as an independent and secure state.

I am pleased that all three of our political Parties remain committed to this basic belief. This support is vital at a time of continued external threats to Israel.

No one needs to be reminded that the situation in the Middle East remains volatile. There are deep divisions and seemingly insurmountable obstacles to lasting peace. We must not despair if people of good will continue to work toward the goal of peace.

It is a shocking statistic that of the 150 or so member states of the United Nations, only about 26 are true democracies. Two of them are Canada and Israel. Democracy, liberty and justice are the foundations for the unshakeable commitment that exists between our two countries. Hag Sameach to Israel.

Oral Questions

MULTICULTURALISM

NEED TO STRENGTHEN LEGISLATIVE BASE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, today's meeting with the three political Parties by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council was important from a substantive viewpoint but also from a symbolic one in terms of heightening the awareness and importance of our national multiculturalism policy here in Parliament.

There are many challenges facing the national multiculturalism policy but three stand out. First the need to strengthen the legislative base and the departmental structuring of the Department through a multiculturalism map that was introduced by the former Government and administration, which died on the Order Paper. The present Government has failed to reintroduce it for this Parliament's consideration.

Second, the challenge is for us to define for our younger generation Canadians, the second, third, and fourth generations of various ethnocultural backgrounds, their definition of multiculturalism which will be different from their parents and grandparents' because it must address the social, the economic and the other fabrics that make this country what it is.

Third, we need to keep an open and progressive policy on immigration and refugees. If we can do this as a country, we will be sending a strong signal that Canada is open and has only one class of citizenship, namely, first class citizenship for one and all.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL DAY CARE PROGRAM— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

We on this side of the House are entirely in favour of Quebec becoming a signatory to the Canadian Constitution. However, the Prime Minister knows that setting up national programs like health insurance was possible only because the federal Government had fundamental spending powers.

My question is therefore: Under the new accord concluded by the Prime Minister, would it be possible to have a national day care program guaranteeing equal treatment for all children in both have and have-not provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, absolutely.

[English]

SENATE REFORM ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we hope we can take some encouragement from that response, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister knows that now, after the Accord which was signed at Meech Lake, the unanimous consent of the provinces and Parliament will be necessary for any change to the Senate. In fact, I would suggest to him that Senate reform has been placed in a constitutional strait-jacket.

• (1420)

Does the Prime Minister agree that he has made an elected Senate, such as requested by some of his provincial homologues, particularly Messrs. Getty and Vander Zalm, virtually impossible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Not unless you want to make the assumption, Mr. Speaker, that the First Ministers are incapable of coming together in good faith to resolve matters of this kind. Premier Getty, the strongest proponent of a Triple-E Senate, felt this was very much in keeping with his desires and not something that would hobble his intentions. It was supported by all other First Ministers.

I suppose the question concerning unanimity might very well be the following. By way of illustration, if you are going to create a new province or series of provinces, is that not important enough to warrant the unanimous approval of all other provinces? Can anyone conceive of new provinces being created without the approval of the Province of Ontario or, in my judgment, the Province of Prince Edward Island? Because it changes the structure of federalism and the kind of country we have, I think it is not unreasonable to ask all existing provinces for their approval. This is very much consistent with everything I set out on behalf of my Party on August 6 in Sept-Îles regarding renewed Canadian federalism.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister is not historically correct when it comes to Newfoundland in 1949. Under the present constitutional provisions, seven out of the 10 provinces with 50 per cent of the population and the Parliament of Canada could approve any change in the Senate.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUBMIT PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AGREEMENT TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister make a commitment to submit the tentative constitutional accord reached at Lake Meech to the House of Commons before he calls a meeting with his provincial conterparts to sign the definitive text? And more specifically, does he intend to schedule parliamentary hearings immediately so that we can remove all obstacles to an accord that we are most anxious to see ratified?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, are we going to submit the agreement in principle to the House? We certainly are, and I said as much to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis when he asked the same question last Friday.

Mr. Prud'homme: Before the final text is put before the House.

Mr. Mulroney: As soon as possible . . . absolutely.

I said that too would be done, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. Within the next few days, the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader are to meet with his fellow House Leaders in order to decide when we can first discuss agreement in principle here in the House. I hope all parliamentarians will come to the conclusion that Quebec's agreement with the constitutional accord is an important step in Canada's political evolution, and I hope the proposal will meet with the unanimous approval of all Members of Parliament.

[English]

CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES—EFFECT OF MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and also concerns the agreement reached at the Meech Lake meeting, a meeting, incidentally, to which the elected leaders of the Governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon were not invited.

The agreement makes the rule of unanimity necessary for the creation of new provinces in Canada. This has outraged Northerners in both the Yukon and Northwest Territories who see this as a further restriction of their political aspirations. Other provinces such as Saskatchewan, Alberta or Newfoundland were not so created. Is the Prime Minister aware that what he has done is to give veto power over the North to every province in Canada? Does he believe that is right? Does he think that is fair?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is it the position of the Liberal Opposition that new provinces could be created in this federal system without the approval of, for example, the Province of Ontario or the Province of Quebec? This would involve profound structural changes to the Federation. I would like to hear from the Hon. Member whether that is the position of the Liberal Party. If it is, it represents a remarkable change of policy.

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the view of northerners who met on this subject this weekend is that they should be treated the way other provinces were treated. Will the Prime Minister agree to discuss this matter further with the Premiers with a view to exempting the creation of new provinces from the Meech Lake amending formula before this agreement is ratified into law?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have a great deal of understanding of the predicament of our northern Territories and are working very closely with them. We hope that in the fullness of time all Governments in Canada shall attend First Ministers' Conferences on the basis of equality.

My friend is talking about arrangements with regard to possible future provinces. I sympathize with that and assure him that the Government is sensitive to that.

However, the Meech Lake Agreement was not about the future of possible provinces. It was about the absence of one of the founding provinces of Canada, the absence from a constitutional package that reflected the absence, not only of Quebec, but of a very important part of French-speaking Canada. It was vital to the binding together of the nation that, first and foremost on a priority basis, Quebec be brought back into the constitutional family in a way which would find favour with the other Premiers in all regions of the country.

Once that is completed, we hope with the endorsation of the Official Opposition, we can move on, as we have provided for, to tackle as a united country other constitutional problems such as northern development and northern Territories, which we would do with pleasure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—OBLIGATION TO HOLD ANNUAL CONFERENCES ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions concerning the constitutional accord. The Prime Minister and the provincial premiers have endorsed the suggestion that economic conferences be held annually pursuant to the constitutional agreement, but they did not include aboriginal rights. My question to the Prime Minister is very simple. Would the Prime Minister agree to include in this accord the commitment to hold annual conferences to discuss aboriginal rights?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought it was regrettable that the First Ministers, myself included, missed the opportunity to settle the native issue during the federal-provincial conference held barely a few weeks ago. As far as I am concerned, notwithstanding the fact that this series of constitutional initiatives has come to a close, it does not end our responsibility to seek a fair and equitable settlement to the problem of the aboriginal people in Canada. At the appropriate time I intend to review the process with the Premiers in the hope that, as it should be, we might find a formula which will do justice to the native people of Canada.

[English]

NATIONAL PROGRAMS—WORDING OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, at the last conference which took place on this subject, the native leaders expressed their apprehension that once the Province of Quebec was included, as we all desire it to be, they would be left out in the cold. They certainly have been left out in terms of requirements for future meetings. I think that is very regrettable indeed.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question on the matter of spending authority and areas within the constitutional jurisdictional authority of the provinces. As the Prime Minister knows, the wording in the proposed agreement says that a province will be permitted to opt out of a new national program if its "own initiative or program is compatible with national objectives". This could have the constructive effect of institutionalizing what was done in Canada with the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan. If so, it would be very good indeed. However, since another interpretation could be put on the wording that has been proposed to achieve this goal, is the Government of Canada open to specific amendments on the wording in this as well as other clauses?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have an agreement in principle which, as I have already indicated, in no way prevents the establishment of the kinds of national programs that are desired by my hon. friend and myself.

We are talking about future shared-cost programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction where the compensation takes place provided that the particular province itself erects a program that meets the national objectives that are set out originally. This is a fairly clear-cut statement of purpose that is consistent with strong federal presence and federal leadership at all times, but it is respectful of the rights of the provinces to have slight variations respecting their own requirements.

In responding to the question, Mr. Speaker, may I just take up a comment made by my hon. friend in regard to the aboriginal peoples having been left out in the cold because the Province of Quebec was included. I know the commitment of my hon. friend—

Mr. Broadbent: I didn't say that. I didn't say because Quebec was included.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what I took down. If it is in error, I apologize.

The point I want to make, something with which I do not think my hon. friend would disagree, is that the inclusion of the Province of Quebec is a significant guarantee of progress for the aboriginal peoples in terms of seeking justice for them at the constitutional table. The record of the Province of Quebec in regard to aboriginal rights is pretty exemplary vis-à-vis Canada. I believe that the presence of the Province of Quebec as a full partner around the First Ministers' Conference table called upon to deal with aboriginal questions will be a salutary and positive one and the aboriginal peoples should find encouragement in the progress we have made.

Mr. Broadbent: I entirely agree that the record of the Province of Quebec makes it very desirable that Quebec be there for this occasion. It would have been equally desirable to have institutionalized a requirement of an annual meeting until the aboriginal rights issue has been adequately dealt with.

POSSIBLE CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not indicate clearly the Government's attitude on its acceptance of proposed amendments. My supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerns the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It did not require unanimity when other provinces came into Confederation in the past, and the present amending formula does not require unanimity.

Many people in the North are planning to be able to come in one day on terms that are comparable to other provinces joining Confederation. Therefore, will the Prime Minister undertake to bring in an amendment to the clause pertinent to federal institutions that will at least leave the present amending formula in place, which is desirable to Canadians living in the Northwest Territories and Yukon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend consults the communique in regard to the principles agreed upon, I think he will see that there is an appropriate forum where these matters, particularly the one he just raised, can be properly addressed by First Ministers. It is proposed that we meet on a regular basis to deal with constitutional issues. Those issues pointed out were Senate reform, the fishery, and other matters that were felt appropriate, I believe, in point three.

It is not at all inconceivable that the matter raised by my hon. friend could well be considered at that point in time. It is important that this agenda be set out after all of the partners are back in the fold and that there is a unified constitutional document bringing the country together. I think we could then turn our minds to other matters in a helpful way. I thank my hon. friend for the suggestion.

[Translation]

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—IMPACT ON DAY CARE PROGRAM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Like most of the Members of this House, I am delighted to see Quebec become part of our great Canadian family again, and I say three cheers for the Prime Minister! However, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that some of us are concerned about certain national programs.

Perhaps the Prime Minister could inform the House what impact this agreement will have on a day care program, for instance. Is the Prime Minister satisfied that a program of this kind is still feasible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect to a national day care program, which comes under shared cost schemes, the federal Government intends to proceed exactly as it is proceeding today.

As for what the Minister for National Health and Welfare is doing, he is—we cannot impose this kind of program unilaterally through the Parliament of Canada.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is at this very moment consulting with the provinces with a view to setting up an adequate national program with provincial participation.

Under a new formula, any province that should decide to opt out will receive compensation provided its program is compatible with the national objectives set forth by this House. So I think we can say that national programs in line with our objectives will always be feasible and indeed desirable.

QUALITY OF CHILD CARE SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I don't doubt the Prime Minister when he says the provinces will have an "adequate" program, but I think we need something better than that.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether he has received assurances from the provinces that such a program is feasible, and, as the Prime Minister said himself, if a province should decide to opt out, what will happen to these quality services, what will happen to the services for our children? Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that he has received assurances from the provinces that quality services will be available throughout Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the accord says this:

> That Canada must provide reasonable compensation to any province that does not participate in a future national shared-cost program in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction if that province undertakes its own initiative or program compatible with national objectives.

To receive compensation, the province must have a program that is entirely compatible with national objectives, otherwise, opting out will mean it will have to forego such compensation.

[English]

REQUEST THAT TERRITORIAL LEADERS ATTEND FUTURE MEETINGS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In response to a question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party the Prime Minister left the impression with the House that he would be open to future meetings of First Ministers where the future of the Yukon and Northwest Territories would be examined again. Will the Prime Minister assure the House and the people of those two northern Territories that their elected representatives will be at any meeting which affects their future in terms of becoming provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member's question is about any meeting that involves the rights of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in regard to becoming provinces, I think the answer is clearly in the affirmative. We would not want to have any meeting that involved a change in nationhood that did not involve those people who are affected. I think the answer would be in the affirmative.

REQUEST THAT TERRITORIAL LEADERS ATTEND NEXT CONFERENCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the people of the Northwest Territories and Yukon feel that they were affected by a decision that was made last week. They were not at that meeting. We are specifically asking that those elected representatives be at the next constitutional meeting and that that topic be on the agenda.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, how could the rights of someone be affected—I presume by the tone of the question, in some way negatively, pejoratively—

An Hon. Member: It is a veto formula.

Mr. Mulroney: How could their rights be affected when the object of the exercise on behalf of the Parliament of Canada is to bring together one of the founding elements of the country both in regard to provinces and the founding linguistic cultures of Canada? It is only on this basis, this having been done, that we can then proceed to deal with the questions of other provinces.

• (1440)

Mr. Broadbent: Well, the next meeting.

Mr. Mulroney: My friend, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, says the next meeting—a meeting which would deal with the rights of the Yukon or the Northwest Territories with regard to adhesion as provinces, obviously. However, I think my hon. friends would agree that it is not unreasonable for the federal Government and the provinces to deal with the absence of a founding partner, to bring the country together, to unify the country as strongly as we possible can, and then a unified Canada can turn its attention to working with the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM PAKISTAN

Mr. Speaker: May I direct Hon. Members' attention to the presence in the gallery of members of a Parliamentary Delegation from Pakistan led by Sardar Wazir Ahmad Jogezai, Deputy Speaker of the National Assembly of Pakistan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ICELANDIC AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Ingvi Ingvarrson, Icelandic Ambassador to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN ETHNOCULTURAL COUNCIL

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to Members' attention as well the presence in the gallery of Mr. George Corn, President of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

DETERMINATION OF PROGRAMS' NATIONAL OBJECTIVES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government is setting up a national conference on post-secondary education recognizing, quite rightly, that it is a serious national problem which requires a national solution. The Meech Lake Accord allows provinces to opt out of federal programs if they have a program compatible with national objectives.

Will the Prime Minister tell us who determines national objectives and who determines whether provincial programs meet national objectives? And if they do not meet national objectives, how does the Government of Canada ensure equal access to funding for post-secondary education to all Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, let me say that compensation for opting out in matters of education and culture is not new. This did not come at Meech Lake. This was available under previous arrangements.

With regard to who would set the national objectives, the Parliament of Canada.

REQUEST THAT FIRST MINISTERS DISCUSS YOUTH PROBLEMS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. The Prime Minister has agreed to call the First Ministers together in the future for discussion on a series of topics. Will he give the assurance today that as soon as possible he will call the First Ministers together for a discussion of the serious problems of youth in Canada, including the difficulty they have of getting an education and decent jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a national forum which has been devised and organized by the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Youth in this regard which clearly involves the participation and encouragement of the First Ministers. I have been working on it. I would be happy to discuss it, as we will, at the First Ministers' Conference on the economy which is scheduled for Toronto, having been held in Vancouver last year. I will be happy to raise that matter on behalf of my hon. friend.

WORDING OF MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister on the Constitution as well.

[Translation]

We are all pleased that Quebec is now a member of the Canadian family and I congratulate the Prime Minister.

[English]

I want to ask a question about the Prime Minister's attitude toward constructive changes in the wording, or any amendments to the wording in principle. I realize the agreement is "wording in principle". Is the Prime Minister open to any constructive amendments to the wording of this agreement? There might be some places where we want some clarification so we can indeed have some national programs as they pertain, for example, to the spending power. Is the Prime Minister open to some constructive changes in the wording to clarify some of the principle agreements the provinces came to with the Prime Minister? Is he open to that possibility?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this was a document agreed upon among First Ministers. We, be it the Premier of British Columbia, the Premier of Manitoba, the Premier of Ontario or myself, felt it reflected our understanding. No one contended it was perfect. I have already acknowledged with pleasure that there will be debate in this House and elsewhere. If my hon. friend has some points to raise, I am sure he will do it during that debate.

With regard to the spending power, I can give my hon. friend the assurance that the right, obligation, and authority of the Parliament of Canada to conduct national affairs with respect to spending are uninhibited and unfettered. At all times we can act in the national interest.

POSSIBLE CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Just to clarify the answer, is the Prime Minister in other words saying there is to be no change in wording? Is his mind fairly closed on this? Can he clarify that for us? At the same time, I wonder, in terms of the creation of new provinces, if the Prime Minister himself would be open to going back to the existing amending formula, which is two-thirds of the provinces representing half the Canadian population, and the Parliament of Canada, for the creation of new provinces. Can the Prime Minister answer that double-barrelled question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the formula which was agreed upon by the First Ministers, including the First Ministers who were very strong proponents of the notion of Senate reform, quite frankly it was felt by provincial leaders who expressed themselves very forcefully and very well, such as Premier Vander Zalm and Premier Getty, who have a special interest in this regard, that that kind of fundamental change, in their judgment, should really only come about once all provinces are persuaded of its value and merit.

I thought that was an approach of great leadership by those Premiers, and all the others who spoke to it.

In regard to changes in wording, I would have to ask my hon. friend what he has in mind and what they would be? All the Premiers, including Premier Pawley, Premier Peterson and others, felt, and I think said publicly, that this reflected, in their judgment, an excellent commitment to national unity and, as best we could, an improvement on a strengthened federation.

If my friend has some ideas, I will be happy to listen to them but, by and large, this is what we are going to bring forward into the House of Commons and this is what will be ratified by provincial legislatures.

* * *

EDUCATION

REPAYMENT OF STUDENT LOANS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that post-secondary education students now have to repay their student loans six short months after they leave school, which is tremendous discouragement in those regions of our country where there is very high unemployment and it is very hard to land a job, will the Minister agree to change the rules immediately so that students will not have to start to repay their loans until they can first land a job?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Hon. Member that the matter he raises is a very important and significant matter, particularly for those who are in debt. I raised that matter with the provincial Ministers who, of course, have some responsibility with respect to the matter, generally. We established a committee, from which we will hear, and we will take some action following the meeting in September.

[Translation]

REPAYMENT OF STUDENT LOANS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): If the Minister does not want at this time to make any commitment and help students in this way, is he not at least prepared to announce right now that the reimbursement of loans by students will be determined on the direct basis of their income?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the matter is, of course, important and needs to be addressed properly in joint discussion with the provinces. If the matter is to be dealt with properly then it will require the proper type of machinery. It took a long time for the federal Government to establish such machinery. That machinery will be put in place, and I think we should respect it. When it is completed we will have in place, finally, a regime which will be of benefit to students which will not bring them early debt about which the Hon. Member is concerned.

* * *

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Undoubtedly, the Minister is aware of his Government's failure to appoint citizenship judges last fall when appointees of the previous Government reached the end of their terms. Is the Minister aware that thousands of people in such cities as Calgary await processing of their citizenship applications, meanwhile having lost the right to travel using the passports of their countries of origin?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, yes, I am aware of the problem. We are trying to address it with existing resources.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the existing resources are stretched very thin. How soon does the Minister expect to appoint enough citizenship judges to ensure that people will not be kept waiting months to receive Canadian citizenship during this fortieth anniversary of the Citizenship Act?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the report from Dr. Sutherland is now available. In fact, I received it on Friday afternoon. I hope to make appointments by mid-May.

* * *

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—COMPENSATION ISSUE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It has been almost three years since the Prime Minister promised that an honourable settlement to the issue of Japanese-Canadian redress would be an urgent consideration of his Government. However, after three Conservative Ministers responsible for multiculturalism who dealt with the issue, not only has the substance not been articulated but there is not even in place a formal process for talks to take shape so that an agreement can be reached. This has caused a growing sense of frustration in the community and in the country.

Therefore, when will the Government initiate a full and official process of talks with the NAJC, not an individual meeting here or there but a series of continuous and comprehensive discussions so that a just and honourable settlement may have the opportunity of crystallizing during the life of this Parliament?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, since he was in attendance at the meeting of the standing committee at which I explained this, I began a process of discussion and consultation with members of the Japanese-Canadian community both individually and collectively over a number of weeks to ensure that we would approach the situation properly. Following that process of some three or four weeks ago I sent a letter to the President of the National Association of Japanese-Canadians outlining a proposal from the Government. The National Association of Japanese-Canadians has had the proposal and is considering it with its community. We have in train a meeting over the next 10 days.

GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his response. Can the Minister clarify for the House whether this proposal considers a possible agreement with the Government or whether it addresses the process that will take place during the next few months to arrive at a solution? Since he took over the responsibilities of Minister responsible for multiculturalism, can the Minister inform the House if the Cabinet discussed and considered possible action on the redress issue? Is this proposal a cabinet proposal or is it one from the Minister responsible for multiculturalism?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the letter which I sent on behalf of the Government, it contains aspects regarding the elements of an arrangement or an agreement, as well as elements with respect to the process. I might say, by the way, that both the community and I have agreed that we would respect one another's confidence in order to allow the community to carry out its own discussions. Thus I do not want to go any further than saying what I have already said.

Following the meeting that we now have in train I expect I will have more to say publicly.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET WESTERN FARM LEADERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister regarding his visit to western Canada this week. In light of the current crisis facing western agriculture about which the Prime Minister is well aware, a crisis caused by very low commodity prices and very high debt load, has the Prime Minister sought, or will he be seeking, a meeting with western farm leaders to discuss his Government's plans with respect to how to resolve the farm crisis when he is in the west this week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of spending a great deal of time with farm leaders in western Canada over the last year. I think that I am the Prime Minister, if I may so, who has met most often with leaders of the agricultural community. I say that with pleasure because one comes away from those meetings with a much deeper understanding of the problems.

This trip to western Canada is no different. I will be meeting with them again. We will be working together toward providing solutions for the serious problems confronting agriculture in western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER HOLD FORMAL MEETING

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's commitments during the emergency debate will he give us some assurance that he will meet formally with farm leaders in western Canada and get the benefit of their counsel and advice on how to deal with farm problems during this next week? I am talking about a serious, formal meeting with farm leaders in western Canada.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have met with representatives from all areas of agricultural life in western Canada in a formalized, structured way, and in an informal way. I will continue to do so.

Right now the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is dealing with the sugar-beet problem in western Canada. We dealt with the transportation problem which will be helpful to western farmers. I look forward to an occasion to meet again with western farmers to devise—

Mr. Hovdebo: Then the answer is no? You are not going to meet with them this week.

Mr. Mulroney: No, the answer is yes.

* * *

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

INVITATION TO UNITED NATIONS AMBASSADOR TO ADDRESS CONGRESS OF INTERNATIONAL PHYSICIANS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who probably knows that at the end of the month the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, a group that won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1985, will be holding its seventh world congress. It has paid the country the honour of inviting our Ambassador to the United Nations, Mr. Stephen Lewis, to address that congress. Unfortunately, the Secretary of State for External Affairs rejected the invitation saying that Mr. Lewis' attendance would be considered inappropriate.

Can the Prime Minister tell us why the Canadian Government considers it inappropriate for Ambassador Lewis to attend a prestigious international congress dealing with the crucial issue of nuclear arms control?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last night I spoke with Ambassador Lewis in New York. It was a lengthy conversation. He did not raise this issue with me. However, I would be happy to chat with him again. A far as I am concerned, there was nothing untoward of any kind. We are very active in promoting disarmament. As I said, the Ambassador did not raise it with me in a lengthy conversation last evening, but I will call him again.

REQUEST THAT INVITATION BE ACCEPTED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the offer of the Prime Minister to call Ambassador Lewis again. In his call is the Prime Minister prepared to rescind the decision taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reject Mr. Lewis' attendance and to say to the Ambassador that Canada would be proud and pleased to have him speak on behalf of Canada at one of the most important international conferences on nuclear arms? Is the Prime Minister prepared to reissue the invitation to Ambassador Lewis?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with all of the details. I think my friend can be satisfied that if there was a decision by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I am not aware that there was, and given the record of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this area, it would have been extremely well founded. No one has been a stronger and more vigorous fighter for disarmament than the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I am not acquainted with all of the details raised by my hon. friend. I will be happy to look into the matter and report back to the House.

* * *

[Translation]

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

CANADIANS' ACCESS TO CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications which has just released a White Paper on cultural industries. Why did she merely analyse the problems existing in those industries and restate the analysis already made by groups of artists and by the NDP instead of suggesting concrete steps? What is she going to do to make that industry more accessible to Canadians? What concrete measures is she proposing?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this document represents a positive effort to appraise present conditions of our cultural industries and the problems they are facing. Following that assessment, the Government has already taken important measures to strengthen those cultural industries and I have a list of our actions. If the Hon. Member so wishes, I could pass on that list to her.

• (1500)

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question on this report is directed to the specific section where the Minister shows how European countries, even large European countries, have much stronger measures to protect their cultural industries against foreign domination. What will the Minister do for Canada? Is this simply an academic exercise or is she really considering tough new measures designed to give Canadians better control over their own cultural industries?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I said, that report was an evaluation of the cultural industries and, in the wake of it, we have already taken a number of measures. I would hope that we would have the support of the Hon. Member in this regard.

For instance, we put $165 million into the development of the Canadian feature film industry. We put $25 million into the development of the Canadian sound recording industry. We put $3 million into the public lending rights program and funds were distributed to some 4,500 authors who had been denied this recognition previously. We will be introducing new copyright legislation later this month and, as well, we are preparing film and video distribution legislation to be introduced shortly. I would hope that the Hon. Member could see her way clear to supporting these initiatives.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for Trinity followed by the usual supplementary question, then there will be two government questions and that will end Question Period.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW CANADIAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON—WORK DONE BY SUBCONTRACTOR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of External Affairs and concerns the construction of the new Canadian Embassy in Washington. Since December, Canadian and American unions have been telling the Government that one subcontractor on this project is paying low wages and doing shoddy work that may endanger the health and safety of future occupants of the building. Will the Government arrange for an independent investigation of these serious allegations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister, I will take the question as notice.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ACTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for that answer. Will he also impress upon his colleague the need for a prompt and thorough response since, apart from the health and safety aspect of it, Canada's reputation for respecting labour standards is suffering and there have been threats of economic retaliation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Canada has abided by all existing legislation in the United States concerning the construction of the said embasssy. As for suggestions that the work was botched, meetings were held and indeed all the work has met the standards.

[English]

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. According to a Gallup poll that was released last week, 62 per cent of Canadians believe that our parole system is just too lenient. Would the Minister not agree that many Canadians who are presently calling for a return of the death penalty would not be doing so if the parole system were tightened up? Will the Minister commit himself today to making changes that would tighten up the Canadian parole system?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I became aware of this problem long before the poll appeared in the paper. I have had a number of discussions with the chairman of the National Parole Board. I have instituted new and improved criteria for the selection of members, new and improved and continuing education of board members, and better communication with the public.

I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that we are developing tighter policy guidelines so that more consistent decisions will be made by the board members. I want to assure the Hon. Member as well that the protection of the Canadian public is foremost in our minds when rendering our decisions.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OPENING OF FEDERAL BIOTECHNOLOGY RESEARCH INSTITUTE IN MONTREAL

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Last Friday, the Government officially opened the Biotechnology Research Institute in Montreal. This was a major event in our city because it reinforced Montreal's position and reputation as a centre of excellence in this rapidly developing field of science. Is there any evidence that the Minister's new initiatives are reversing Canada's brain drain?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am very delighted to respond to the Hon. Member's question. I attended the opening of the centre and the enthusiasm there was very infectious. Indeed, particular attention was paid by the NRC to expatriate Canadians in staffing procedures. In fact, 10 eminent Canadian scientists who had worked at Oxford, Harvard, the Scripps Institute in San Diego and MIT have already come back, and there is keen interest shown by some eminent foreign scientists who wish places at the centre, all of which points out that the centre is indeed on its way to becoming a world-class facility.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-42, an Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, be read the second time, and by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the debate this afternoon has to do with Bill C-42 concerning financial institutions and, more particularly, the deposit insurance system.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the invention of the wheel nor the redevelopment of the nicest mouse trap, it is a long-awaited measure which I should imagine has been the subject of negotiations between the Government and the financial institutions for the past two years. It is one of a series of three Bills, we know that. The purpose of the first one—now under consideration, Bill C-42—is to merge financial institutions, those which are responsible for monitoring, the supervisory agencies for these institutions, namely the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and the Department of Insurance.

The powers of the new monitoring organization, to be called the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and those of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will be strengthened. On that point we agree, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, the CDIC—Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation— will be allowed to raise its premium rates and authorized to borrow more from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

• (1510)

The second Bill to follow, Mr. Speaker, is made up of two Bills that had already been introduced in this House and perhaps will be consolidated. They will give regulatory bodies the authority to issue cease and desist orders, and the Minister will have increased authority, the power to approve the takeover of major interests in financial institutions.

Finally, the third Bill—the third aspect of the matter—that should be tabled before summer, will have to deal with the powers of various types of institutions, the ownership system and the regulatory framework.

So, Mr. Speaker, we now have before us Bill C-42, an Act respecting financial institutions, and I would like to summarize for the House the impact of that legislation and put it into perspective.

Concerning regulatory bodies, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-42 proposes to amalgamate the Office of the Inspector General of Banks which, as we know, supervises chartered banks, and the Department of Insurance which supervises federally chartered loans and trust companies and insurance companies.

Those bodies are amalgamated into a single one called the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, the OSFI, and we support that move.

The CIDC, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, will remain independent, but closer coordination will be instituted between all regulatory bodies through the establishment of a new co-ordination committee.

Mr. Speaker, God knows that this House concerned itself with the problems of financial institutions for the past two and half years, since this Government came to power because, should I say in a sudden and dramatic way, major banking institutions were forced either to shut down, join others or even be taken over in order to survive, and in each or almost each of those cases the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation had to insure the costs either through payments to depositors or the advance of funds in order to secure or encourage foreign institutions—and I am thinking for instance of the Hongkong Bank in the matter of the Bank of British Columbia—to buy those institutions facing financial difficulty. As we know, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is an entity that insures loans by Canadians up to $60,000, and in many cases it is absolutely essential that we go on strengthening if not increasing the guarantee, in order that Canadian depositors enjoy greater security and the corporation may guarantee the deposits of Canadians, something we support.

Under Bill C-42, the new superintendent will have increased authority. It will become much easier for him to take the control of a financial institution facing difficulty. Such control in all cases will be for a period of seven days, or more if needed. Further, the superintendent may make decisions on behalf of the institution. Until now, as we know, he could not veto management decisions.

In the future, concerning the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, Bill C-42 proposes to increase from 1/10 of 1 per cent to 1/6 of 1 per cent the ceiling of rates for deposit insurance premiums paid by member institutions. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, it used to be 1/30 of 1 per cent. We recently changed that to 1/10, and now we are going to increase it to 1/6 of 1 per cent. Currently, premiums are based on the 1/10 rate, as I said, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) already announced that rate will be maintained for at least another year.

The CDIC's rates have already been increased in Bill C-86 which was passed in June of last year and I think that such a procedure is consistent with good management practices. In other words, when risks are greater, depositors must assuredly be protected, and since financial institutions have to replenish their coffers, the rates of contribution must be higher. They will therefore amount to one-sixth of 1 per cent in coming years.

Bill C-22 proposes to double the line of credit made available to the CDIC by the Government. This line of credit will increase from $1.5 billion to some $3 billion. The legislation will authorize the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to penalize the institutions whose practices are deemed risky or somewhat unorthodox. It will make it possible for the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to decide whether or not to insure federal institutions, just as it does for provincial institutions. Now, federal institutions are automatically insured from the moment the regulatory agency issues their operating licence.

Finally, Bill C-42 will authorize the CDIC to cancel insurances to federal institutions, as it does already for provincial institutions, subject to the minister's authorization.

Mr. Speaker, the new committee responsible for co-ordinating the activities of monetary organizations, to which I referred a while ago, will be made up of the new Superintendent, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, and the Chairman of the CDIC, meaning the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The purpose of all of this, Mr. Speaker, is to organize better this major sector of our financial institutions by reinforcing if possible the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation on the one hand, and strengthening its terms of reference on the other.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, in order not to delay unduly the consideration of this Bill which, we hope, will not take too much time, I should like to remind the House that Bill C-42 is the result of events which occurred recently, or at least over the past two years. The House will remember the financial assistance which it had to give to the Canadian Commercial Bank in March 1985.

September 1985: Failures of the CCB and the Northland Bank. The House spent a long time dealing with this issue and even had to pass an emergency measure to bail out the banks and make sure that no investor in Canada would be penalized or suffer a major set-back.

December 1985: Compensation of all uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank of Canada and the Northland Bank. The House will remember the billions which had to be paid to compensate those depositors.

End of 1985: The Mercantile Bank, whose financial foundations, at least according to the experts who were advising us, were quite sound, but which experienced cash flow problems because of the confidence crisis in the financial industry. The Mercantile Bank merged with the National Bank. Good initiative. Another banking institution saved.

End of 1985: The Morguard Bank, which again had sound financial foundations, but which experienced cash flow problems, had to merge with the Security Pacific Corporation, an American financial conglomerate. It was the first bank to pass under foreign control because of the lack of confidence in Canadian banks.

October 1985: The Continental Bank, with sound financial foundations, but again with cash flow problems, merged with Lloyds of London. That was the second bank to pass under foreign control.

In April 1986, approval from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to the takeover of Canada Trust, a financial institution, by Imasco, a trade corporation, and we know the whole debate which surrounded the takeover of Canada Trust by Imasco. Could an institution, not necessarily a financial one, take control over an entirely financial one? Need I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the debate was interesting, but lengthy.

In November 1986, not long ago, the Bank of British Columbia which, according to the experts, was practically bankrupt, merged with the Hongkong Bank and was the third to fall under foreign control. At that time, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation offered $200 million to the new buyers to encourage them and maybe sweeten the pill, telling them: "Once more, we, Canadians, must ask you to get us out of the mess." Mr. Speaker, in less than two years, three banks, three financial institutions went under foreign control.

I find that surprising, but what can I say? It has happened, and each time, the CDIC was involved, to help, facilitate or favour the deal. What will happen? Well, of course, as I said earlier in my remarks, the premiums will have to be raised, because there is a limit to giving billions of dollars to banks in difficulty and constantly reaching into general funds.

Therefore, the Government will raise the premium and in so doing, Mr. Speaker, will transfer its own deficit. It is responsible for its own deficit that will be transferred to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. About the deficit, Mr. Speaker, it has sky-rocketed in the last few years. It reached $1.1 billion on December 31, 1986, while on December 31, 1982, the CDIC recorded, I repeat, a $253 million surplus. So, in less that 15 years, we went from a surplus of $253 million to a deficit of $1.1 billion. That is the reason why we have to raise the premiums.

The main reason for the deficit is that the Government asked, or maybe ordered, the CDIC to take initiatives which were beyond its traditional role. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the corporation is only supposed to insure deposits up to a maximum of $60,000, but it was asked by the Government to participate actively in the operations to bail out troubled institutions.

For those who might have forgotten, I should mention that the CDIC provided $75 million to try and save the CCB, the Canadian Commercial Bank, in March of 1985. I repeat, $75 million in 1985. Then it gave $200 million to the Hongkong Bank so that the bank would buy the Bank of British Columbia in November, 1986. That money was used to refund uninsured depositors and even the shareholders got some of it. Not bad! Again, with the help of all depositors.

In February, 1987, $275 million was poured into the province of Alberta, your province, Mr. Speaker, to restructure the North West Trust Company. This is recent.

In each case, the decision was a political one and the costs should have been borne by the Treasury and the Government. We believe that they should have been added to the deficit. But they were not! The Government told the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation: You are going to bear the burden of those debts. It is therefore appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to say that the Government is shifting part of the burden of the deficit onto those institutions which are members of the CDIC and ultimately onto the customers of financial institutions.

I don't have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate examined that matter and recommended in May 1986 that the costs of policy decisions should be borne by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want . . . I could elaborate at length on this matter, but I believe that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will now be entitled to charge an additional contribution. It is a new right which carries important risks with it. Yet it is vital that the Corporation be entitled to charge those additional contributions to those who put at risk the rest of the institutions involved.

We would have preferred, Mr. Speaker, that the CDIC be allowed to establish separate insurance funds for banks and other financial institutions. The Government has not yet accepted that proposal, but we might decide to elaborate further on that point when we deal with the matter in committee. We therefore do not object to the amalgamation of the office of the Inspector General of Banks and the Department of Insurance. Indeed, we believe it is a worthwhile initiative and, as I said at the outset, I do not think this debate requires too much time or energy as we do agree, Mr. Speaker, on that initiative. It is our opinion that the second and third stages of this project will probably be of a more delicate and contentious nature, and we look forward of expressing our views on those when the Government decides to start that debate.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, we welcome the additional powers granted to the reviewing agencies. Although it is not a very bold step in our opinion, it is still a first step. In our view, Bill C-42 is a step in the right direction, and we are proud to support this Government's initiative.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am intrigued by the notion which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had in terms of deposit insurance. Is he suggesting that his Party will bring forth proposals in the committee that would place a different premium for deposit insurance on trust companies as opposed to banks or other financial institutions? Is this what he is suggesting?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: In that respect, Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Government should have allowed the Canada Insurance Deposit Corporation to establish separate insurance funds for the various types of financial institutions. They decided not to follow that route. I think we shall repeat that position in committee and we might suggest amendments or make specific suggestions to the effect that in our opinion, in the case of various financial institutions, since there are different types of risks involved, there should be different insurance funds.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member tell us whether the Liberal Party has changed its policy?

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will recall that the particular provision is part of the House of Commons standing committee report. In that part of the report, certainly Members of the Liberal Party on the standing committee were in favour of making sure there was one kind of premium, that we did not discriminate between banks and trust companies. We realized at that time that if there were separate premiums that, in effect, we would be giving all the advantage to the big banks.

Is it his, or Liberal Party policy to make sure that the big banks have the edge when it comes to lending? They presumably would be the organizations that would pay the smallest premium to CDIC whereas local trust companies and local banks would pay the highest premiums. If that is his policy I am indeed surprised, because that was not the policy that I understood from the Liberal members of the standing committee when we made our report.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, no, this is a policy I am proposing myself, as a Member of this House. I am not speaking on anyone's behalf except my own in this debate, and since at the second reading stage we are discussing the principle of the Bill, I think we do not necessarily have to toe a specific party line.

Personally, I have looked at the statistics, and from what has happened in the past five years, I think we can say there is far more risk involved in the activities of trust companies than in those of banks or insurance companies. Since 1980, about fourteen trust companies have collapsed, compared with two banks and five insurance companies.

Mr. Speaker, I think this confirms there may be a need for separate insurance funds for banks and for other financial institutions. This is a personal opinion. The Hon. Member may not share it, but it happens to be my opinion, and I think that if we look at the risk involved, and if we feel that the risk is greater for certain financial institutions, they should shoulder a larger part of that risk. That is why I have taken this position.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) about the proportion of control, whether an individual or a commercial group should be entitled to have exclusive control over a financial institution or whether proposals made by the Government are adequate. The Government is suggesting that once an institution has total assets worth $15 billion, it must let 35 per cent of its shares be held by another party, which would therefore have a minority interest of 35 per cent. Does the Hon. Member feel that is sufficient or does he believe that the rules that now apply to the big banks, namely that no individual or institution may hold more than 10 per cent of the shares, are a better way to avoid excessive concentration of ownership of these large financial institutions?

Mr. Gauthier: In that respect, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that the Bill, the third phase, the last of the three Bills which I mentioned earlier will probably deal directly with the whole question of powers, the different types of institutions, the system of ownership, and the structure of required monitoring regulations. I, for one, believe that 10 per cent ownership in the case of banks is good and adequate. Admittedly I do have a bit of difficulty in the case of a major trust company which would own, say 65 per cent of the trust company shares and which would be the object of a takeover by a bank, for example. I imagine this will create problems if the same trust company held shares, this is possible because there will be a kind of vertical and horizontal mix-up in all financial institutions as a result of the other Bill to be introduced soon. This will create certain problems for me, but when we do get to that stage I intend to spend some time reading and doing research on this to clear up my own ideas on this question. For the time being Bill C-42 does not deal specifically with that and I will wait to see what the Government will do about two other measures, Bills C-8 and C-9, and perhaps once the debate has been launched on the two new Bills I will have an opportunity to take the matter under serious consideration. I am just reserving judgment for the time being, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since the time the Government first promised to bring forward this legislation and the day we first see it. I am sure most Canadians would find this subject that Parliament is debating extremely boring. In many ways the subject of financial institutions is the most boring you could conceivably talk about. It is full of quite complicated terms and concepts. Yet it surely is one of the most important subjects for Canadians and Parliament.

We are talking about the financial institutions where most Canadians invest their money, through savings accounts and other deposits. The fruits of their labour are kept in trust companies, banks and other institutions. We are also talking about insurance companies which carry policies on the average Canadian's life and home so that they can have some protection against the unforeseen. In many ways the well-being of the country is determined by these financial institutions because they can direct the flow of capital, which in many ways is the blood of the nation. It determines where economic activity will occur, how it occurs, in what kind of industry and so forth. Therefore, what we are speaking about this afternoon is really very important.

The Government that was elected in 1984 was very much committed to the notion of less Government and less regulation. It started its mandate with a desire to remove a lot of the regulations dealing with financial institutions. In fact, the Minister introduced a Green Paper on the deregulation of financial institutions. But, lo and behold, the system was shown not to be over-regulated but under-regulated. As I am sure you will remember, a whole spate of pretty important financial institutions went belly up. Two chartered banks, the Canadian ,Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, both in Alberta, in essence ended up in receivership. In my Province of Saskatchewan Pioneer Trust went bankrupt. A whole slew of other trust companies and insurance companies have gone belly up. In some instances some depositors were hurt, those who had deposits of more than $60,000 in those institutions. In other cases, all the depositors were fully reimbursed despite the fact that deposit insurance covered them up to only $60,000. In fact, in the case of the CCB, millions of dollars were paid by the federal Treasury to other commercial banks because those banks had millions of dollars on short-term deposit at the CCB. That money was there because the CCB was paying a slightly higher interest rate. Those banks, while they knew the risk they were taking, decided to take the risk anyway because it gave them a little bit more of a return. However, it turned out they were not really taking a risk at all because the federal Government was quite prepared to pay them everything they would otherwise have lost.

We ended up in a strange situation. The Canadian Government borrows money from the banks in order to make up its deficit and then pays the bank interest. Here the Canadian Government had to borrow money from the banks at interest to pay back to the banks. Very strange. Somehow or other the banks never seem to lose. Certainly the taxpayers and the public of Canada have lost. Why did we have this situation where all these financial institutions, insurance companies and trust companies were going under? All at once everyone started asking: Where are the regulators? Where are the inspectors?

We thought we had institutions in place to prevent banks, insurance companies and trust companies from going belly up. Where were they? It appeared as though the regulatory agencies were indeed woefully inadequate in dealing with the crisis. You see, our regulators sort of assumed that our banks were controlled by a group of Methodist managers. It wasn't the fear of the Government or the regulators which forced them to be honourable gentlemen in banking, but the fear of God. If they tried to play hanky-panky with the books and other people's deposits, they would answer to God on the day of judgment.

• (1540)

We are now living in a new era. The smart boys on the street do not have the fear of God in them. They run circles around our regulators who do not have the street smarts which some of the financial whiz-kids have. They have found all sorts of loopholes in the regulations and hoodwinked the regulators in many instances.

It was really the fast boys who brought about the collapse of a fair number of our financial institutions such as Pioneer Trust, the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. In fact, when investigations were made into why these institutions went belly-up it was discovered that they were certainly not practising sound financial management. They were playing loose with other people's money, in some instances even to their own advantage. People have used other people's money for their own interest rather than in the interest of the depositors. It became obvious that some reform was needed. Today we have Bill C-42, with which I do not think too many in this House will have major disagreement. The only problem is that it is a little late. We wish this legislation had been brought forward somewhat earlier. Be that as it may, it is an important step in the right direction.

A new financial world is being created. I talked a moment ago about a time when bankers were Methodist ministers who were afraid of the day of judgment. That is no longer the case. We now have fast wheelers and dealers who play loose with other people's money. This is also an age of tremendous technological change. Money moves around the globe in a matter of minutes. In this day and age tremendously large and powerful national and multinational conglomerates have a tremendous amount of economic power because of the capital they control. They can blow away national interests, the rules of nations, and political jurisdictions because of the tremendous power which they have.

In some ways the Government is willing to play along with that. In some ways I understand why the Canadian Government believes it must play the game in order to attract capital into the country and that it must also go along with many of these changes. I am sympathetic with this. However, at the same time we must maintain a sense of Canadian control. We cannot allow a few large corporations to control the life-blood of the country. We cannot allow so much power in the hands of so few.

Sometimes I believe the Government is sending signals that it will allow that to occur as long as a few of the large and powerful conglomerates are so-called Canadian. I believe the Government is not honest with itself if it believes that simply because one or two of the owners of the conglomerate happen to have Canadian citizenship, it can be controlled by the nation state. In many ways their powers extend beyond the nation state within our borders.

The Government seems to be willing to go along with the collapse of the four pillars to allow one-stop financial shopping centres. In all the shopping malls across the country we will see one place where you can buy your insurance, make your deposits, buy bonds, and buy shares. As our colleague in the Liberal Party said in her address this morning, this change is not being driven by consumers demanding new services, it is being driven by the industry. I think she is so correct in that.

When the four pillars begin to collapse we will run into some problems. We increase the dangers of self-dealing and conflicts of interest. One part of the operation is making decisions which affect and influence other parts of the operation. For example, will getting a mortgage on your home be dependent upon getting the insurance which that company is also selling? The potential of abuse increases. The modern technologies, the new type of ethics which exist in financial institutions and out on the street, and the creation of these new one-stop shopping centres all lead to a much greater potential for abuse of other people's moneys.

We need a new regime in terms of regulation. However, there is only so much the Government can regulate. The Government cannot send inspectors to sit beside every desk and watch every transaction. It would be insane for a government to try to do that. You cannot over-regulate the industry. You must hope to put in place some institutional form within which it is not in the interest of those to break the rules and regulations.

That is why we in this Party have been pushing very hard in committee and inside and outside of the House for wide ownership of financial institutions. That would help eliminate some of the causes of abuse. We hasten to add, however, that this is far from the total answer. Pioneer Trust in Regina is an example of a company which was quite widely held and yet experienced abuses in terms of self-dealing. Therefore, we are not saying that wide ownership will wipe out the possibility of self-dealing. We do say, however, that it reduces that possibility. It reduces the opportunity and motivation that some would have to use an institution for their self-interest rather than for the interest of the depositors. That is why we will continue to speak out for wider ownership.

I have another concern which is not directly related to Bill C-42 but is important, that is, the issue of regional financial institutions. Unfortunately, in the 1980s we have seen smaller regional financial institutions being severely weakened and going down the drain. In western Canada we have seen two banks in Alberta and the trust company in Saskatchewan go under. This is sad for us in western Canada as we attempt to get some control over our economic destiny. We need financial institutions in the west that are sensitive to our needs so we will be assured that there will be the necessary capital for the economic development of western Canada.

• (1550)

The unfortunate situation of two banks in Alberta and several trust companies in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, as well as the disappearance of the Bank of British Columbia is a severe blow to western Canadians and our dream of economic development in the west. Hopefully, a better regulatory regime will ensure that smaller financial institutions will be more viable and we will no longer see the type of characters who were involved in the Canadian Commercial Bank and Pioneer Trust. They were partly responsible for the demise of those financial institutions, and we hope that better regulations will ensure that such a situation will not occur again.

It is also true that those in the Maritimes are anxious to develop their own financial institutions that are sensitive to their needs and aspirations.

Therefore, we generally have no objection to Bill C-42 and will support it. There will be an opportunity to examine it more closely in committee where I expect the Government will be open to suggestions for amendments to this legislation by the finance committee. When the Government realized that the Green Paper would not be accepted, it held consultations and sought advice. I believe it is willing to accept some amendments that might improve the Bill and allow for stronger financial institutions in this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that Mr. Michael McKenzie, the designated Superintendent of Financial Institutions, cannot do anything to improve the supervision of financial institutions until this Bill is passed, why are the New Democratic and Liberal Parties continuing to speak to this Bill? We can pass this Bill, get it into committee and act upon it. Is there some other reason for the delay? Surely a Bill that has been approved by all Parties in the House could be moved to committee as quickly as possible. Could the Hon. Member explain why so many Members want to speak?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, my friend and colleague on the finance committee surely must realize that the Canadian public has lost some $1.5 billion because of past errors and omissions in our regulatory regimes. This is an important issue that deserves the attention of Parliament. I am not surprised that there are a fair number of Members who wish to speak to this issue. It is important and directly affects our constituents. Canadians must be assured that the money which they deposit in financial institutions, insurance companies and trust companies is safe and that the institutions are properly regulated by some public body. That is why so many Members are interested in discussing this Bill.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise in this debate because I believe this Bill has the unanimous consent of the House. It reflects the House of Commons finance committee's report and proposes to create one Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions by amalgamating the Office of the Superintendent of Insurance and the Office of the Inspector General of Banks. It will allow for Deputy Superintendents in charge of various areas while making the expertise available in the department to conduct inspections of these institutions that deal in insurance, banking, trusts, securities.

It is difficult to pass Bills through the House of Commons, particularly when there are but 24 days left for government business until the end of June. Bills involving financial institutions and subjects concerning inspector generals and superintendents are not enticing. It is difficult to get them on the Order Paper and proceed with them. If we pass this Bill today we could move ahead with it, hear all the required evidence, and make all the necessary changes. Indeed, I believe some minor changes should be made to the Bill. We could deal with this Bill expeditiously.

This Bill should not be debated for another day because the House will know that there are urgent matters that require attention. The House will be called to sit in July despite the change in rules, because those urgent matters must be dealt with. I find it very strange that a Bill which should have been passed before noon is still being debated. I say to the House: let us get on with it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the sermon we heard from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). If he feels so strongly about the speed with which this Bill should go through the House of Commons, why did he feel it necessary to take up the time of the House to put that view on the record? Why did he not simply let the process of debate continue and thereby speed up the passage which he says he wishes to have so quickly achieved?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is quite simple. I spoke for three minutes, which is a rather short speech for me. I thought it was important to put that view on the record. This Bill has its genesis in the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. It is an important Bill, as all Members who have spoken have said. It should go through the House now so that we can get on to committee to make the refinements it needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have terminated. Debate.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak at second reading of Bill C-42. I did not intend to get involved in the type of debate raised by my colleague, the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). However, I think I will take a few minutes to put his remarks in context.

The Bill we are discussing now was tabled for first reading on March 3, 1987. It is not my fault if the Government House Leader did not ask the Speaker to call second reading of the Bill before today. The opposition Parties are not responsible for that decision, it is the Government's decision.

If the Member for Mississauga South is telling us that it is an urgent matter, I must remind him that the Green Paper was tabled in April, 1985. This is now May 4, 1987 and this is the first day of debate. I do not know how we could be accused of delaying this piece of legislation. The type of remark just made by my colleague may bring us to consider in more detail this legislation because I wonder why the Hon. Member wants us to adopt the legislation so urgently. I suppose I can understand that, but at least the Government could give us a few hours. We have not even spent a day on this Bill. I am the third speaker on my side to address this legislation.

• (1600)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as was said earlier, this is an important piece of legislation, and its purpose is to modify the supervisory agencies responsible for the proper functioning of our financial institutions. How does this Bill propose to achieve this objective? First of all, by modifying the structure of the regulatory agencies.

I believe the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) made a slight mistake a while ago when he said that the Bill was a direct response to the recommendations in the report of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Finance and Economic Affairs. I may remind the Hon. Member that the Committee's report was not unanimous, since a minority report was filed by Opposition Members.

Furthermore, in its proposal to restructure the regulatory agency, Bill C-42 did not follow the recommendation to which the Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs was alluding. In the Bill, the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and the office of the Superintendent of the Department of Insurance would be merged, but not the office of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which was supposed to be part of the mega-agency proposed by the majority of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

I recall saying at the time that the proposition made by the Conservative majority of the House Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs was an elephant whose administration would be very cumbersome indeed. I am glad the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has heeded the remarks of the Official Opposition and drawn a clear line to separate the operations of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, but to regroup under one organization both the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and the Bureau of the Superintendent of Insurance of Canada which has always monitored federal institutions, what we call the federally-chartered trust companies.

Therefore the purpose of this measure is to restructure this control organization very much along the lines recommended by the Liberal Party. Second, this organization will have more powers and for all practical purposes the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, should he see fit and after consulting his council colleagues, will be able to take over the administartion of a financial institution for seven days and impose his instructions and decisions to the institution for reasons which the superintendent would have deemed significant enough to impose the necessary changes and use his right of veto. I think this will improve the controlling organization and I am pleased this has been included.

The second aspect of the Bill on which I will have a few comments, Mr. Speaker, is the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Hon. Members will recall that amendments were made to that legislation, when this Conservative Government decided to increase from 1/30 to 1/10 of 1 per cent the level of premiums paid by financial institutions on insurable deposits.

We now see that this Government, not satisfied with trebling the cost of insurance deposits, chose to increase it once more by raising the rate from 1/10 to 1/6 of 1 per cent. The Government however will keep that flexibility to decide, probably by order in council, what he will do with the premium increase.

The Minister indicated, I think last week in a press release, his intention to maintain premiums at the current level. But how long will it remain there? It will be left entirely to the Minister to increase the rate from 1/10 of 1 per cent to 1/6 of 1 per cent. To my mind, this is a tax that will in effect be determined by order in council, and I would have preferred that when that move is made, it could be debated in the House of Commons and the parties involved had a public opportunity to be heard, and Members in this House were informed of the reasons why the Government chose once more to increase that indirect tax which in the long run will be borne by consumers, because certainly financial institutions will pass the cost on to consumers by changing either the cost of financial services or interest rates.

The other purpose of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is to increase the credit margin of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to $3 billion. This will double its credit margin, and in this case also, I think that considerable power will be given to the Minister under this amendment to the Act. Bill C-42, the legislation we are dealing with, will make it possible for the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to penalize the institutions whose practices are deemed risky or unorthodox. It will also allow the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to decide whether or not to insure federal institutions, just as it does already for provincial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, it will make it possible for the Corporation to cancel the insurance of federal financial institutions, subject to the Minister's authorization.

Mr. Speaker, those three powers which will be given to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will have indirectly the result which the Govermment did not want to obtain directly, namely to create different pools for different types of corporations. Mr. Speaker, if, with the Minister's authorization, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation imposes a surcharge to a financial institution, although we are assured that the information will not be released to the press, information travels so fast nowadays that when the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation makes such a decision, I am afraid that within a few months or weeks, if not days, the public will learn about it and confidence in the financial institution will be jeopardized, which would mean that the Minister would be signing the death warrant of this financial institution, because to develop, a financial institution requires the confidence of its depositors. We know what happened with the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank. When the public became aware of their financial difficulties, depositors withdrew their money. Not only those two banks were directly affected but two other financial institutions that were in a good position in terms of the quality of their assets were also indirectly affected and had cash flow problems beyond their control. Those problems, for all practical purposes, forced the Mercantile and Continental Banks to merge with other financial institutions and to reduce competition in that area. Therefore, I have strong reservations as regards the ability of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to collect premium surcharges, in other words to indirectly create separate pools for financial institutions, without running the risk of destroying those institutions.

Finally, in order to ensure co-ordination between the new organization and the Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Minister decided to create a co-ordination committee consisting of the new Superintendant of Financial Institutions, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Chairman of the Board of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. That is a good proposal, Mr. Speaker. In doing that, we institutionalize through legislation a Committee that was anyway probably meeting on an emergency basis. But the establishment of that co-ordination committee and its obligation to sit as well as the fact that the committee members will not be able to be replaced by their assistants will ensure, through consultation between those different groups, namely the Superintendant of Financial Institutions, the new Superintendant, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Department of Finance and the Chairman of the CDIC, an exchange of financial information that will facilitate, I think, the good management and control of financial institutions.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who spoke previously outlined the importance and the urgency of Bill C-42 and we obviously believe that it is important to change as well as to strenghten controls, given the disastrous experience Canada has had over the last couple of years. First, there was the Canadian Commercial Bank bankruptcy, then that of the Northland Bank. Then there were other financially troubled institutions, one of which merged with Security Pacific Corporation. There was also the case of the Continental Bank which merged with an institution called Lloyds Bank and, of course, the merger of the Bank of British Columbia with the Hongkong Bank. So many downfalls are due in large part of course, I believe, and I said so at the time, to a lack of foresight on the part of a Government whose main concern it was to solve a serious problem in such a way as to fend off any bad news which might have clouded the economic conference which had been presided by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). But we now see what consequences such a hasty and ill advised decision has had on several financial institutions and not only on the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to say that this bill is not—that it would have been easier to deal with it if we had known how the Government intends to structure other financial institutions, how it intends to deal with the problem of relationships between insurance companies and trusts, banks and real estate companies. It would then have been easier for us to determine whether this new legislation, Bill C-42, is geared to deal effectively with the new structures and the new implications they will have for the financial sector as a whole.

I have already had the opportunity to voice my concerns publicly with regard to the leeway which our brokerage firms enjoy at present. As of June 30, they are possible candidates for the big bang, as it has been termed in England at the time of deregulation. And this leeway, this possibility of taking over Canadian investment dealers will be open not only to Canadian institutions but to foreign firms as well. And I understand banks have some concerns about it, and the legislation as we understand it, according to the paper tabled by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), could lead us into a strange situation where a Canadian bank might buy a brokerage firm and have to close down its brokerage operations in the United States, since the U.S. regulations do not allow a brokerage firm to be the property of a bank such as the Royal Bank, the Bank of Commerce or the Savings Bank, in other words, any bank which buys a brokerage firm.

Thus, there would be no reciprocity in the operations between Canada and the United States.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, insofar as a Canadian bank would buy a brokerage firm, as I just mentioned, with things standing as they are, it would have to close down this broker's operations in the United States, whereas if a U.S. company buys 100 per cent of this same Canadian brokerage firm, it could operate in Canada and in the United States without any problem whatsoever in terms of legislation and regulations. I feel we have acted very quickly. Once again, the Government has decided to give this possibility to the Americans, whereas no reciprocity exists for Canadians, and all this is done, it seems to me, outside the context of our free trade discussions with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I have concerns on the matter of our brokerage firms is that brokers act as advisors for their clients, and because they are 100 per cent owned by a bank or a trust company and those banks and trust companies or those insurance companies will apparently have the ability to get into the commercial loans area, We would find ourselves in a situation where a broker—in dealing with an industrialist who wants to issue bonds to repay his medium-term loans to a bank—would be in a bind, in terms of conflict of interests or loyalties between his shareholder, from whom the loan is to be bought, and the issuer who is looking for the best possible terms to refinance his business.

I feel that the potential for conflict of interests is there, and we should look at that in a very particular and special way before we abolish the independence of our brokers.

Others said that if we did not do that, especially as regards the financial industry, if we do not do that, we are preventing our Canadian institutions from playing a role internationally. Yes, well! It is all very well to say that, but as far as I am concerned I find it hard to believe that once the Solomon Brothers, the Merrill Lynches, the Shearson Lehmans and the other big American firms have bought our Dominion Securities and our other brokerage firms, those big American firms who are already established internationally, be it in New York, London, Tokyo or in other European countries, in Paris, that those big international corporations . . . And the same would apply if Nomura bought one of those firms. Certainly those large multinational corporations, I would be very much surprised if they transferred their decision centres from New York or Tokyo or London or Germany to Toronto or Montreal or Vancouver or any other Canadian city to perform the international financing activities involved.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I reserve my final judgment until I see the follow-up on Bill C-42. But I want to express my concerns right now, because it is my feeling that they are destroying a financial system that has served Canadians well and that could lead to difficulties as regards the role of Canadian companies in catering to the financial needs of our businesses and institutions.

They say this kind of deregulation, that Bill C-42 that is part of a three-pronged legislative effort, the two other parts of which are not yet known, will facilitate company integration. My colleague earlier referred to shopping centres as far as financial institutions are concerned. I can visualize that in some cases. I was part of a financial group before coming to this House. We had goals that of course were connected with our operations of that time. But I am asking myself serious questions: Do we do know of anyone in today's world, a Canadian consumer, who one morning rises and tells himself: Today I am doing my financial shopping? And that someone goes to the shopping centre, and buys his insurance, his shares, his bonds, and make his deposits? That is not the way things operate in the financial world. You do not shop for financial services the way you shop for groceries. A degree of caution is in order. Furthermore, I might add that if we want to develop this kind of financial trading centre, my biggest concern is that the great winner, the institutions it will benefit the most are the major financial institutions, that is to say, the major banks that already enjoy a wide network at every street corner in each of our large cities and towns. It will be awfully hard for other institutions to compete, whether they are life insurance or general insurance companies, because the banks have their own network, and insurance agents do not necessarily have the ability to give the expected financial services. Doing away with the so-called four pillars might have unexpected results, concerning first of all the brokers but also the insurance companies and the banks.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the trust companies—

As you are indicating that my time is up, I shall have no time for those final remarks. I suppose that when we study other pieces of legislation, I shall have the opportunity to explain the reasons of my concerns regarding the potential conflicts of interests between trust operations, financial operations in general, insurance, and banking.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I ask my Liberal colleague if he would comment with respect to the question of ownership guidelines within the banking sector. Does he think a Bill such as this would not have provided a regulatory environment which was much more effective in protecting consumers and achieving economic policy goals if it had a much stricter limitation on the share of equity ownership possible within given financial institutions?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, first, I would have preferred to study Bill C-42 along with the other legislation. It would have been easier to evaluate. Perhaps the supervision and control in this legislation is enough, but I do not know what the other legislation will provide.

As far as ownership is concerned, my personal view is that it depends on the size of the company or the financial institution. This is why I agreed in general terms with the proposal made by the finance committee concerning what should be taken into account for ownership. While our views differ on whether for example 100 per cent ownership should be for $10 billion or $15 billion worth of assets, that is a point of view I am prepared to discuss. Generally speaking, the approach we suggested is, I believe, appropriate.

If we abolish completely the four pillars and open up the possibility of a bank owning an insurance company or a trust company or vice versa, I would suggest very strongly that there be no interconnection between financial institutions and industrial organizations. I have nothing against a big financial institution getting bigger, but I have a lot of concern even if only 15 per cent or 30 per cent of such an institution is owned by one party. When the rest of the shares are spread out in the public, it does not take 51 per cent to control a board of directors. I would prefer to see a complete distinction between financial institutions and industrial organizations, and we said so in our minority report which was tabled after the report from the finance committee was tabled.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, what perspective would my colleague put on the level of foreign ownership of a banking or near banking institution that might be permitted? Is this something he would be prepared to maintain within narrow limits, or would a relaxation of those rules be acceptable to him?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I said publicly that I accepted the fact that foreign financial institutions can come to Canada. I have nothing against Schedule B foreign banks. On the contrary, it creates more competition and forces Canadian financial institutions to evolve, to become more competitive and to become more creative. I think it has been a positive step and I have nothing against it. However, if we are to suggest that large banks should be open to foreign sales, we should keep a limitation on total ownership. Up until now there has been a maximum, and I think it should be kept. I have no objection to foreign ownership of smaller financial institutions.

When it comes to investment dealers, I think it is a different game altogether. We should try to keep Canadian control over these institutions and certainly not open the country up as it will be open after June 30. If a foreign organization can buy 50 per cent of a Canadian investment dealer, the foreign company will effectively control the organization and after June 30, 1988, the company will probably buy out the rest of the shares. That is something that has preoccupied me a lot, and I would strongly suggest that the Government look at this possibility before June 30 and give the House a chance to debate it because there is the possibility that we may kill a Canadian financial industry we took so many years to build.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my pleasure in being able to take part in this debate. First I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I recall that when the first proposals for reform in financial institutions were brought before the House, a great many of us had serious doubts about exactly what was being proposed. I believe the Hon. Member has succeeded in putting across a powerful point of view which led to significant changes in the approach taken by the Government, and I congratulate him for that. That does not, of course, mean that I now agree with the Bill which is before us in its entirety, but I think that the personal achievement of the Hon. Member deserves to be recognized.

One of the questions the Hon. Member himself raised not too long ago was why there was an interest in speaking in this debate and putting forth the considerations and concerns of our constituents. Frankly, I must say that the last two and a half years have seen the greatest shake-up in confidence in the Canadian banking sector the country has experienced since the 1920s and the continent has experienced since the 1930s. It is a shake-up which we on this side of the House have found unfortunate and especially devastating because of the nature of the bail-outs of the banks which got themselves into trouble.

• (1630)

However, it is important at this stage in the debate that people across the country and those of us in the House of Commons keep very much in mind what one newspaper has called the "chronicle of carelessness and collapse" which affected the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Certainly it is for that reason that we have before us a Bill which is supposed to establish the solution. Frankly, I am not overly convinced that the solution has been achieved.

This Bill will create a super-bureaucracy. It will tie that super-bureaucracy to a series of inputs from important parts of the financial community. However, I cannot see within it guarantees that give Canadians a greater sense of security in respect of the future of their banking system.

So far we have been fortunate. Our banking system has had two collapses, which of course had not occurred since 1923 when the Home Bank collapsed. These two collapses are combined with the collapses of a number of trust and loan companies. There is a potential for a much more serious crisis in the future banking system because of the tremendous openness which the banking system showed itself to have in respect of foreign loans to the Third World. A great many of those loans at this stage are highly questionable.

I could take Hon. Members through at least six significant foreign debtors in the Third World which have, within the last year, very significantly changed their approach to repayment of their foreign debts. We could talk of Peru. We could talk of Equador. We could talk of the most recent country which has joined in this protest, namely Zambia.

We must recognize that there is before us something which has been unprecedented in the Canadian banking history. There is a threat to the stability of these banks because of the Third World debt crisis and the incapacity of international institutions such as the IMF to solve the debt crisis of the Third World. The consequent reality is that at least a significant number of our large banks are susceptible to the failure of certain Third World countries to pay back interest and to maintain loans which are considered to be performing loans. That capacity is limited increasingly in the Third World and, as a consequence, our banks feel the chill winds of challenge.

All of us would like to believe that the regulatory agency to be created here would somehow be able to solve the problem. Frankly I do not think that the problem is even touched by the creation of this kind of super-bureaucracy. Therefore, if one had a sense that the Government had some kind of broader strategy regarding the future of our financial institutions, it would be very much easier for those of us on this side of the House to rush through a Bill like this one, with the kind of celerity suggested by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

In point of fact, however, that situation does not exist. There are problems with our banking system which have been demonstrated by two catastrophic failures, by very significant expenditure of public funds to bail out the creditors of those two banks, and by the continuing debt crisis in the Third World, which is very much a backdrop threatening our existing banks.

In addition to a lack of strategy in respect of the Third World crisis, there is a lack of strategy in the Government, which I find acceptable, anyway, on the question of ownership in banking. I understand that part of the reason for that lack of strategy is that there is a negotiation taking place with the United States which may open entirely the country to foreign banks from the United States to operate here as if Canada were simply another state of the union. In those circumstances it is extremely difficult for policy makers to shape strategy and to set out what should be future ownership levels within the Canadian banking sector.

Nevertheless, a great deal could be achieved by being quite strict at this stage by putting into effect and carrying forward the 10 per cent limitation on foreign ownership of our large-scale banks. If we were to do that, it would give a great deal more credibility to the capacity of the institution which the Bill aims to create to be able to regulate and control the banking system within the country.

• (1640)

If we look down the road five years from now and see before us a tremendous proliferation of all kinds of U.S. banks right across Canada, a super-bureaucracy will be created as this Bill attempts to do. That super-bureaucracy will become absolutely bogged down in the details of simply trying to keep up with the hundreds of important large-scale banks which will be operating within Canada. That is a very serious gap in the legislation before us at the moment.

It is important that there be a counter vision, if you like, to the very narrow vision which essentially sees the continuation of the status quo, a status quo which will have a slightly larger, more powerful bureaucracy in control of it, which is what this legislation really represents. Banking is very much at the heart of economic policy and economic development for any country. Yet I do not see within this legislation, I do not see within the thinking of the Government in so far as one can assess it, any creative, imaginative new approaches to making use of the banking system in Canada as a tool for profound economic development which can reshape the country and give much more fairness to all the different parts of our community and to all the different elements within our society.

There has to be a much wider perspective brought to bear on the question of banking than is present in the Bill before us at this stage. I think of the development banking which exists in the Netherlands, a development banking system which was established by the Government there. It has been used as an instrument to assist broadly right across the economy industries which find themselves in difficulty, sections of the economy which had to be expanded, and parts of the Dutch economy suffering from regional difficulty or from concentrations of unemployment.

The Netherlands Development Bank is 51 per cent government owned and 49 per cent owned by the private sector. It has proved to be an extremely powerful, very effective, very efficient operator, able to move into some of these troubled sectors and into some of the high-tech sectors of the economy to see to it that funds generated by the Dutch are themselves poured back into the building of the Netherlands instead of siphoned out through a host of foreign banks operating within that jurisdiction. We could have taken a look at that as part of the strategy toward more creative use of the banking sector within Canada.

We could look quite usefully at what has happened in France and the capacity of the French Government to use a number of the larger French banks which were under government control after World War II to build up in different parts of the economy important regional concentrations of employment, of opportunities for young people, for small towns, for parts and regions of France which have faced the kinds of declines and reductions in opportunities that have so recently hit western Canada.

I think that in a broader vision of Canada's banking future there could be something much more important given as a role to credit unions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Get on to the Bill. You are filibustering.

Mr. Langdon: It is quite related to the Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: You can do better than that.

Mr. Langdon: I have to stress that it is quite related to the Bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you speak to the Bill instead of interrupting?

Mr. Langdon: He did, Michael.

One must look at the Bill as an attempt through creation of a super bureaucracy to maintain the existing status quo in banking with the exceptions about which I have spoken. I argue that one has to look at that particular institution which is to be created as simply one part, I would say, of the Government's vision for the banking sector. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I do not see that vision there. It could be there. It could be there through development banks. It could be there through greater public direction in the banking sector. It could be there through much more creative use of credit unions. I regret that perhaps there are fewer credit unions in Mississauga South than there are in Essex County. I do stress that one has to take an initiative like this and ask whether it makes sense. It only makes sense within the context of a broader economic strategy, which seems very much to me to be missing in this Government.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I am a bit upset over the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He seems to think that, after two years of waiting for the Government to bring forward its proposal with respect to its regulation of the banking industry, we should simply push the Bill through in the course of a short space of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member would comment on the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Cassidy: I will provide my friend from Essex—Windsor with an opportunity to comment a bit more fully over that specific question of credit unions which he raised. We have been promised that there will be legislation to accompany this at some point in relation to the field of co-operative banking. The Member who interjected is being quite irrelevant in suggesting that this is purely a provincial matter.

In the Province of Quebec the Desjardins movement, the Caisse Populaire movement, is now a major player in the financial market in Quebec. As we found out in British Columbia where my Party sought to support efforts to ensure that the Vancity Co-op would be able to take over the Bank of British Columbia, an effort which was unfortunately resisted by the Government, Vancity is, if I recall, the second largest deposit-taking institution in all of British Columbia, well ahead of several of the other major chartered banks.

• (1650)

I ask my colleague whether there is a role for credit unions in going beyond personal lending and lending to, let us say, small farmers, to lending for larger enterprises including co-operatives? Is this one area which Government should now be pursuing as part of an integrated strategy for banking?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his comments. Since I began my speech with some words of praise for the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), it is appropriate that the continued role of the Hon. Member be a factor in this debate.

I have to say that the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is absolutely correct. If one looks not just at Vancity but at a number of credit unions in British Columbia, they have been extremely active and effective in doing what to me seems to be at the heart of the banking system, that is, they take community funds, provide security guarantees, and see to it that those funds go back into development and establishment of enterprises and jobs within the community itself.

I have had occasion to meet with entrepreneurs in Vancouver who were able to obtain from the Vancouver City credit union the kind of support they have simply been unable to get from the large-scale banks. That support should be available. I have seen this happen with even greater success and with a much wider range of beneficial effects on the local economy in Nanaimo. There the credit union succeeded in building a whole set of co-operative enterprises across the whole range of the economy, in forestry, fishing, and food processing. As a result it has created a much more solid base to that community in the face of opposition, quite frankly, from the eastern banks.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the NDP can advise us whether its policy is to put the credit unions under the superintendent of financial institutions and have them regulated federally? That seems to be the tenor of their remarks thus far. If they can confirm that, I think the provinces and the credit unions would be very interested.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we have—

Mr. Blenkarn: No policy.

Mr. Langdon: —made it very clear that our policy on this issue is to provide as much support as possible at the federal level to the national component of the credit union system. Therefore, we aim to provide the kind of support offered in this Bill to, for example, a national credit union deposit insurance system but leave the components of the credit union very much under the jurisdiction of their own province. I think that is crucial because credit unions, certainly in my area and I suspect in the area of anyone else in this House, started from the grass roots. They have developed a capacity to serve their community. We want to maintain that capacity.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) spoke earlier about the Third World debt problem and its impact on Canadian banks, some of which are very heavily committed in their loans to the Third World. They are also gradually beginning to increase their loss provisions for those loans. It is quite clear, however, that those provisions are inadequate. At the same time, countries like Brazil and Argentina, after four or five years of the imposition of IMF policies, which were designed, it was hoped, to see those countries out of the bind they are in, are just as deeply in debt as before. That is a very serious problem which I do not believe our regulators have addressed in their assessment of the state of health of Canadian banks. Perhaps my friend could comment on that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it was about a year ago that the joint committee dealing with international relations, in its report, stressed the significance of this issue. It said that it was important for Canada to take some initiative with respect to Third World debt. Yet since that time we have not done anything except stand back and offer mild applause to the Baker proposals in the U.S. To me that is not the exercise of leadership.

I agree with my colleague that this is very much a crisis. I stressed that in my speech and I hope very much that banking strategy does emerge finally from the Government and that it recognizes the centrality of the question and the importance of responding to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am more than anxious to engage in this debate but I note it is one minute to five. If you would like to call it five o'clock and go to Private Members' Business, then I would be prepared to resume at eleven o'clock tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to calling it five o'clock?

Mr. Blenkarn: No.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am more than happy to fully engage the House in debate for the next 45 seconds. Considering that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is such a complimentary parliamentarian, I am sure we will be in a position to offer him a similar courtesy at the appropriate time. I guess we have got used to the courtesies we have received from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

What we are talking about here is legislation which forms only a small part of what has been heralded as a major thrust towards banking reform. Unfortunately, when one asks about banking reform, one has to ask where the policy is. All we are getting is bits and pieces, small particles which do not add up to a whole.

Are you about to get to your feet, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Axworthy: Fine. I will resume my speech tomorrow. I thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for his stupidity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

ORGANIZED CRIME

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Nicholson:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;

2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activities;

4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on the matter of legislation which, in part, suggests that the Government consider a royal commission to look into organized crime. Her motion also suggests that we should study the proceeds of organized crime. It is that aspect of the motion which I would like to address today because it is apparent that Canada is presently deficient in its ability to battle the scourge of organized crime by confiscating the fruits of crime.

It is apparent that criminals here are able to establish an opulent life-style through the profits from illegal activity and then laugh at the judicial system if caught. This exists because, once apprehended and sentenced, their financial empire continues unaffected by the judicial process. They serve their sentences only to be released to enjoy the benefit of their criminality which remains intact and untouched.

This is unfortunate on two counts. First, it brings the entire administration of justice into disrepute and, second, recognizes that traditional methods of sentencing based on deterrence, both specific and general, are woefully inadequate to deal with the modern phenomena of organized crime.

Police officers with experience in the area of organized crime will advise you of the frustration they feel when they have spent months or years on an investigation which has resulted in a substantial sentence handed down by the court. They know that they and society are laughed at when the criminal is released from the penitentiary to enjoy even increased wealth because of the wise investment of his or her criminal profits. There is a new slogan today: Crime definitely pays.

We should not fool ourselves into believing that this type of activity is limited to the drug trade. Its connections in the area of child pornography, prostitution and illegal gambling are well documented. Extortion and murder are merely the marketing skills of drug traffickers. Any consistent attack on this problem requires legislation against drug profits and other related criminal activity.

Today's modern criminal organization has become a "full service" institution. Anything from insurance fraud to arson is available for a price. It is at that monetary level that legislative initiative must be directed. It is the life-blood of the criminal enterprise. If it is cut off, the body that feeds it will die.

There is another aspect of this problem which bears mentioning as well. It is now becoming apparent that these criminal organizations have an impact that is not limited to police and health concerns. There is an economic and political element which is most disturbing. I refer to the recent newspaper articles which detailed the description of such organizations as the Medellin cartel in Colombia. This group is not only the source of much of the drug trade that is generated in the South American country of Colombia, but it also appears that this group is powerful enough to affect the stability and, therefore, the independence of that democracy. It lives by terror and assassination as a means of retaliation for any arrests of its members.

The Government and the judiciary of Colombia have been victims of these attacks, and it is obvious that this group is powerful enough to be a threat to the very continued existence of the Colombian state. All this terror is financed by the cocaine trade, 80 per cent of which comes from North America. Canada, along with other western nations, is financing the destruction of this democracy by enabling domestic criminal organizations to enjoy and enlarge their financial empires.

Organized Crime

The United Kingdom has recently endeavoured to deal with the problem of criminal profits by the passage of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act, 1986, which came into effect on January 12, 1987, and the introduction of Part IV of the Criminal Justice Bill, which received second reading on November 27, 1986.

Both pieces of legislation deal with the confiscation of criminal profits. All drug offences are targeted, as are all other indictable offences which have generated a minimum of £10,000 in profit. The courts are given power to seize and/or restrain criminals' property pending trial and the ability to substitute assets if the criminal assets have been put out of reach of the court's hands. There is also provision for the recognition and enforcement of foreign orders for confiscation of assets that have been traced to the United Kingdom.

On this note it is interesting to recognize that the United States recently amended its confiscation laws to target substituted assets and to develop a scheme of equitable sharing with countries that have been instrumental in assisting in the targeting of assets in that country which have come from offshore criminal activity. This underlines the international aspect of today's criminal activity and the fact of life that the flow of criminal assets ignores all borders. It is as fluid as any of our multinational corporations.

In conclusion, while I believe there is some merit to having a royal commission study the extent of organized crime in Canada, the establishment of such a process should not delay the introduction of an effective legislative apparatus to confiscate the proceeds of crime, a scheme which has the endorsement of the Government and the Attorney General.

The time for action on this point has arrived. Any further delay will distance Canada from the efforts of virtually all other western democracies to limit the growth of these criminal empires. The absence of such legislation in Canada would give us the appearance of a haven for criminals in such activities as compared with our international partners.

I know it is the Minister's priority, and it should be the priority of this House, to introduce as quickly as possible strong, effective legislation to deal with the confiscation of profits of the criminal element.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Mrs. Nicholson) which proposes appointing a royal commission of Inquiry on organized crime in Canada is, I think, at least as far as the intent of the motion is concerned, based on the assumption that organized crime exists in Canada and this despite that memorable cliché that crime does not pay. It has been said time and time again, I learned it when I was in school, and I have even heard it on television as a slogan: crime does not pay. Mr. Speaker, if crime did not pay, there would be no crime. When our policemen tell us proudly that 62 per cent or 50 per cent or 45 per cent of the crimes committed in this country are solved, there are still 50 per cent that are not, and in many cases they have paid very well indeed. The concept that crime does not pay just does not wash, Mr. Speaker.

Of course, when you get caught, it is another story. In any event, what the Hon. Member wanted to point out is that it is absolutely necessary to fight organized crime. Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if the Hon. Member had been here today to defend her Bill, because the Liberal benches are not exactly crowded today. For the last 15 minutes I have not seen a soul. However, Mr. Speaker, the underworld exists—

• (1710)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I had hoped the Hon. Member would not mention the attendance of anyone in or out of the Chamber. They may be behind the curtain or watching the Hon. Member on television.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, your attitude to the Opposition is most charitable.

Mr. Speaker, there is an underworld in Canada. There are people who, as we say in Quebec, would kill their mother to go to the orphan's dance. There are people who will stop at nothing. The end justifies the means, however sordid. The concept of gain, of venality is so ingrained that they stop at nothing to get what they want. They will stop at nothing to organize crime, to make it into a regular system, to institutionalize it. Actually, Mr. Speaker, the underworld, however somber and sordid, has become part of our world as well. Mr. Speaker, many people cannot help admiring the way certain criminals or gangsters pull off a particularly successful coup.

Who could resist making a good bargain at a certain point, Mr. Speaker, buying the little gold watch at an absolutely unbeatable price? Of course, when it has been stolen, there is a problem, but we don't even question that.

This is a good time of the year to talk about income tax. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all try to cheat the income tax system a little now and then. Organized crime exists because the seed of crime is present in all of us.

My colleague also asks for a Royal Commission on organized crime in Canada. Organized crime is organized not only in Canada, but in the United States, in South America, and, why not, in Iran, in Thailand, just about everywhere? This Commission should work in every direction, as brilliantly demonstrated by CECO, the Quebec Commission on Organized crime, by catching a few leaders or a few gangs! Organized crime has its roots a bit everywhere in the world. Therefore, what we need is not a Royal Commission on organized crime in Canada but maybe an international commission of inquiry, but at what cost?

Furthermore, if we want to know the way organized crime operates, how it works, I think it has been known for a long time to our policemen. I think it is not very useful to explain all the tricks those people use to get what they want. I think the problem comes mainly from our Criminal Code, Mr. Speaker.

We live in a society which has a lot of respect for the individual. We have our Charter of Rights. We talk about human rights, but our system that shows enormous respect for those rights treats with the greatest care men and women who are known criminals, underworld figures who come to court dressed up to the nines, who demand the best consideration and have committed a countless and unbelievable number of crimes very difficult to prove. That is a problem. Our policemen have to get almost ironclad evidence confirmed by eyewitnesses. It is extremely difficult to get criminals convicted. Policemen are at their wits' end. They have thick records on some people whose guilt is impossible to prove in court. It is extremely difficult to get a conviction. And our judicial system that is undoubtedly too generous, too permissive, allows those individuals to go scot-free all too easily. Often our whole parole system comes into play, and so on and so forth. Those underworld leaders keep at their job, their line of work. Imagine, we call that a line of work! We say: They work in their field. As you see, it is institutionalized indeed.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, despite my colleague's concerns, I feel the case has been made, it would be a waste of money. What would such a commission cost? Fifteen million dollars? Twenty million dollars? What use would it have? Drafting beautiful and thick reports only to shelve them. For a while, of course, the exercise could upset the underworld and a few heads could roll with additional investigators and endless prosecutions.

I think it would be better for this money to assist our police which, generally speaking, do an excellent work. I wish to commend the Sûreté du Québec, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police well known for their good name. With this money they could set up more specialized teams, increase their communications network, strenghten their international relations and communications, and equip themselves with state of the art tools in an effort to finally capture these underworld kingpins and dismantle organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, we should all work together towards amending our Criminal Code, making it more relevant and seeing that the work of our policemen bring these individuals the sentences they deserve.

I as well as police officers often wonder, Mr. Speaker, about the value of our system which like an huge net, lets bigger fish go through all the time and in greater number. It seems that only the small fish get caught. The sharks are the ones that escape, Mr. Speaker. Such is our system. We compare justice to a huge net where all the fish get trapped but for fear of condemning an innocent we release a few. What I find interesting is the fact that the big sharks manage to go through this net and the small fish, the little guy, the diminutive get caught easily.

I agree with my colleague that the appropriation of the proceeds of organized crime could help us effectively and actively fight this criminal element of our society by providing us the necessary financial and manpower resources to stand up to it in the most direct way.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, that is a tough act to follow, but I will try. I am pleased to participate in the debate on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) that a royal commission be established to investigate organized crime in Canada.

The Hon. Member for Trinity has set out a number of suggested terms of reference for this royal commission into organized crime, and I want to take this opportunity to say a few words about the extent to which we as a society should be examining our system of justice to ensure that, in fact, it reflects the principles of equity and fairness and those principles which should be at the heart of an effective system of justice so that it is not one that primarily targets those who are most vulnerable and weak in our society.

Let me begin by quoting from Jessica Mitford, a well-known author who wrote the following in 1973 in a book entitled Kind and Unusual Punishment:

> Envision, if you can, a prison system populated primarily by the white and well-to-do, convicted of crimes that are peculiar to the affluent: price-fixing, product adulteration, industrial pollution, criminal neglect of industrial safety standards—(knowingly selling unsafe automobiles) violation of the minimum wage laws. That this notion seems like the wildest flight of fancy is already a commentary on the class character of the prison system.
>
> It is axiomatic that as long as privileges of class and colour prevail in a society, this state of affairs will be reflected in its prisons and will determine who coerces whom.

● (1720)

I think those words are accurate and well founded just as were the words of the Chief of Police in suburban Saanich, British Columbia, John Post. He said, and I quote:

> You see very few privileged people in jail, . . . The old saying that there is a law for the rich and a law for poor is alive and well.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) talked about the big fish and the little fish and the fact that the big fish are very seldom caught by the net. I think on that point, if not on all of the points he made, I am in agreement. I think there are many examples of this.

I recently had the honour of being invited to speak as a graduation speaker at the Matsqui Institution campus of Simon Fraser University in British Columbia. Simon Fraser offers a very excellent program on post-secondary education. As I looked around at that captive audience, as it were, I asked myself how many of those prisoners were there because they had broken Canada's laws with respect to the environment, because they had polluted our waters or poisoned our lakes and streams. How many of those prisoners were there as a result of corporate negligence? How many of them were there as corporate executives who, through their negligence, took actions which resulted in the death or serious injury to workers?

We know that some 700 people in 1984 died in the workplace. So when we talk about organized crime and white-collar crime, I think it is important that we not lose sight of how we as a society define crime. I suspect that not many of the prisoners in that particular institution, or in any other institution in Canada, were responsible for manufacturing unsafe or hazardous products. However, corporate executives, in their desire for profit, manufactured flammable children's night-gowns and automobile executives manufactured automobiles they knew were dangerous and a risk to the safety of society.

Finally, when we talk about organized crime and white-collar crime, I think it is important to note as well that there has been quite a significant increase in the level of this type of crime. As long ago as 1980, it was revealed that the level of white-collar crime in Canada was increasing dramatically. Over $1 billion a year, for example, was lost in insurance fraud alone. In 1972, the RCMP had about 2,500 active files on white-collar offences. At the end of 1978, some six years later, there were in excess of 10,000 files. So when we talk about crime and an increase in the level of crime in our society, we must not lose sight of white-collar crime as well and the extent to which our society is still not prepared to tackle that as a serious problem.

There are many examples of this crime, whether it be security-related fraud, embezzlement, pilferage, insurance fraud, computer assisted crime, commercial counterfeiting of parts or, indeed, of money, arson and a whole range of similar crimes. The offence of pollution is a very serious one, yet our society still does not take it seriously enough. It is ironic that back in 1307 the penalty in England for violating air pollution standards was capital punishment. In 1986 the maximum fine a Canadian court could impose for an offence under the Federal Fisheries Act was $50,000. I have not heard the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) suggest that we string up corporate executives who are responsible for pollution, for destroying our environment or responsible, through negligence, for the death of workers. No, the Hon. Member is silent on that particular matter.

What about the corporations which are responsible for selling hazardous and unsafe goods? Canada Packers in 1981 pleaded guilty to selling a contaminated drug which was potentially lethal for pregnant women. Did those corporate executives who were responsible go to jail? Of course not. They were fined the maximum fine under the Food and Drugs Act of $5,000. They were fined $5,000 for selling contaminated drugs which were potentially fatal for pregnant women.

Our society has to re-examine the way in which we define crime. We have to examine as well those who are in fact prosecuted for crimes. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), has put forward a motion with respect to the particular role of organized crime. She has focused on the extent of the involvement of organized crime in a number of areas, including drugs, loan sharking and other illegal activities.

I see my colleague the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) is in the House. I think it is interesting to note that he and some of his colleagues from the Province of Quebec have urged the Government to take action with respect to corporate donations to political Parties in order to eliminate the risk that this may lead to corruption, illegality and wrongdoing, and I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing forward this proposal. I think it is an excellent one and one we should be looking at it in the context of our discussions on white-collar crime.

Surely, as well, we have to ask ourselves how it is that organized crime makes these massive profits. We know that its profit is something in the order of $10 billion a year and of that $10 billion, drugs are the big money makers at more than $9 billion a year. Surely we should ask ourselves whether our approach to drugs in Canada is one which ultimately results in incredible profits for a small number of people at the highest possible level, and if we should not take another look at our drug laws. Are they effectively serving our community or just serving the interests of a very small number involved in organized crime?

Similarly, organized crime is involved in other activities, including prostitution, pornography, theft, counterfeiting and fraud. As a result of the tabling of recent pornography provisions in this House, I suspect we may even see a greater role for organized crime. This Government has failed miserably to make that fundamental distinction between erotica and pornography which is so essential. In not doing so, the Government will drive it underground right into the hands of organized crime.

I suggest that we as a society must re-examine our priorities with respect to criminal law and recognize that there must not be any longer one system of law for the rich and the powerful and another quite different system of law for those who are poor and powerless.

Recently, three corporate officials in Illinois were convicted of murder as a result of the intentional causing of the cyanide poisoning deaths of employees through unsafe work practices. The corporate boardroom surely cannot be exempt from the reach of criminal law, and I would hope that any royal commission which examines the role of organized crime in our society would look very carefully as well at the whole question of white-collar crime during the course of that much needed examination.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am always interested in initiatives proposed by my colleagues here in the House of Commons about criminal matters. I am particularly supportive of the motion which is before us today moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), which deals with a subject of considerable importance in major urban centres as well as in all parts of Canada. It has to do with the fact and presence of organized crime.

• (1730)

Organized crime is not a new phenomenon by any stretch of the imagination. However, occasionally, its existence is denied in Canada, and then usually within weeks of such denial by someone in authority there is some concrete evidence of it. I believe that organized crime is present in Canada. It is simply the existence of even as small a group as two or more individuals consorting together on a continuing basis to participate in illegal activity either directly or indirectly for gain.

To my way of thinking these are illegal activities which are not logically or necessarily related to each other. They are different types of activities such as those involving drugs and prostitution, the fencing of property, loan sharking and the importation and distribution of pornographic material. I have that type of activity in mind when I think of organized crime. I know that such activity occurs in our country.

I wish to focus on one particular part of the mandate proposed for the establishment of a royal commission to investigate organized crime, since it is quite broad. It includes an examination of the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan sharking; the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society; action taken by the Governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity; legislation to enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime; effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

You might find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, if I offer a couple of my own reflections on the subject of organized crime in Canada. It is a business. One of the interesting things that is found in organized crime in Canada is that it tends to resemble in some ways other businesses in one particular sense. Very often it tends to be a branch plant type of operation, as is the automotive industry or the plastics and chemicals industry. We find that such businesses do not appear before FIRA. They do not seek the permission of the Government to take over an existing business or to establish a new enterprise.

It should not be surprising, and it is a fact, that organized crime has a type of branch plant mentality in a great many cases. While in other areas of life we may want to encourage the development of indigenous Canadian businesses, I think in the case of organized crime we are interested in detection, in arrest and in prosecution of the branch plant nature of such operations. More so than with other crimes in Canada which are indigenous we can work in co-operation with other good, effective police forces in other countries to identify the kingpins and the agents who are involved in the operation to bring them to justice.

I want to express some criticism now of the failure of the Government to deal with the area of developing Criminal Code responses to organized crime in Canada. This is basically covered by the third and fourth parts of the Hon. Member's motion, but more particularly in part No. 4. What I think is needed are more tools to fight organized crime. When the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) identified drugs as an epidemic in Canada, I thought what he might do to validate the expression of such a concern is to bring forward a number of new legislative tools for fighting organized crime. The most obvious example, something that we have in Canada in only a very preliminary and modest way in the Criminal Code, is the RICO legislation which is in effect in the United States. RICO is an acronym for Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organization.

In the United States when an organized criminal or kingpin in crime is found, new legislation enables prosecutors to go after not only the criminal assets that are used in a criminal business but other assets that have been purchased with the proceeds of such crime, including other businesses. Perhaps we have all read of the American endeavour to take over by law enforcement agencies bakeries, laundries, airplanes, boats and so on used only very peripherally, if at all, in connection with a criminal operation but purchased with the proceeds of organized crime, and to take over, in particular, bank accounts. In Canada, bank accounts have a sanctity which in some ways is larger and more holy than bank accounts in Switzerland or in the West Indies. I know that bankers in this country are good Canadians who want to comply with the laws of the land and who do comply with our laws. However, I think they could benefit, and it would assist them in preventing organized crime from using banks and exploiting their facilities, if there were an easier way than there is at present in the law to seize a bank account when a certain level of evidence can be given that organized crime is responsible for the money in the account, that it is used in crime or derived from it.

I wish to see this debate move forward. I know there are other Hon. Members who wish to speak. Therefore, I would like at this time to move an amendment to the motion by adding at the end thereof the following:

"and that the Royal Commission report back within six months of its appointment."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's amendment is in order.

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) on debate.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is to be commended for her interest in the extent to which organized criminal conspiracies are at work in Canada today. I am certainly pleased to speak in favour of her motion. The Hon. Member is a Member whom I have come to know over the last two and a half years in the House of Commons through a committee on which we serve. I have a lot of respect for the work that she does here in the House of Commons.

I have considered the remarks and views advanced by Members of the House when the matter was first discussed on March 12 last. Organized crime can be compared to a cancer intruding into the body of Canadian society. As was noted previously, the activities attributed to criminal organizations have taken many forms in the past and can be expected to continue to exploit and prey upon the weak and easily corrupted. I do not believe that any in this House would doubt that the influence of organized criminal activity permeates throughout Canadian society. No part of Canada is immune to its tentacles. The presence of narcotics in the Far North is clear evidence of this. Through such activities as drug trafficking, the leeches of the criminal world are sucking the life-blood from our youth and ruining the lives of their loved ones.

Canadians are a strong and virtuous people. They may be surprised to learn to what extent organized crime has spread through the body of our society. It is indeed unfortunate that so many have been seduced by the lure of wealth and high living as portrayed in such media creations as Miami Vice to believe that they too might consider participating in such endeavours. The glamour is a fantasy. The reality is the suffering of exploited victims, the suffering of families, the suffering of those within the criminal organizations who serve those at the top of the pyramid.

• (1740)

An individual involved in organized crime today is likely to be outfitted in a grey business suit and his or her influence is likely to be as far-reaching as that of an important industrialist. He or she is not likely to be flamboyant and would be largely invisible to his or her fellow Canadian, but that makes his or her power for evil even greater.

The financial cost of organized crime is not limited to the vast illicit profits made through drug trafficking. When these people worm their way into legitimate businesses, the cost is borne by the public. One of the reasons for flourishing criminality is the lack of awareness on the part of the general public. The public is often the innocent accomplice of criminal schemes.

If the purpose of the proposed royal commission would be to highlight the efforts of the police, courts and others dedicated to fighting crime as well as to expose the true dimensions of organized crime so that illegal activities are unmasked, then there might be some positive results from the exercise. It may well be that the general public would learn things that are at present only known by criminal justice officials. Perhaps this information could be relied upon to support the passage of legislation required to combat organized crime in Canada. As well, it might be that a heightened awareness would enable Canadians to do what they can on an individual level to reduce the profitability of organized crime.

I was greatly impressed with what the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) said on March 12 of this year with regard to the number and variety of areas in which the present Government is actually moving, both internationally and on the domestic front, to deal effectively with the threat posed to Canada by organized crime. As was stated during the first reading debate, there is already considerable movement at the federal level with officials of the Department of Justice and the Ministry of the Solicitor General discussing possible initiatives with their provincial counterparts. The task of improving the existing legislation while enhancing the capabilities of law enforcement agencies is well under way, and it is for this reason that I question the need for such a royal commission at this time.

I would like to caution both the Department of Justice and the Ministry of the Solicitor General to waste no time making these changes. I think the Canadian public is growing very impatient. The Archambault report was handed down a matter of four weeks ago and I read it with interest because of the capital punishment debate which is now going on in the House of Commons. The report says in essence that Canadians have lost confidence in the justice and penal systems. The systems have no credibility. Too many people are going to prison for minor crimes but not enough people who commit serious crimes are given sentences that really mean what they say. Too many people are being paroled from prisons when in fact they should probably be receiving longer sentences and serving full sentences. I say in not too light a vein that the justice and penal systems should certainly be reviewed with the greatest of haste.

By way of conclusion, I put forward my belief that all Hon. Members of the House appreciate the great concern over the extent of organized criminal activity in Canada voiced by the Hon. Member for Trinity. Further, we share her desire to see the Canadian criminal justice system rendered into an effective means of addressing this problem. It has been a pleasure for me to speak on today's Private Members' Motion because, as I said a moment ago, I think it relates very much to many other issues we are discussing in the House of Commons at this time and particularly to the whole issue of the justice system which I feel should certainly be reviewed.

[Translation]

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the motion is well intentioned because nobody in Canada is in favour of organized crime. Quite the contrary, all of us would want any kind of crime, not only organized crime but any crime whatever disappear from the life of Canadians, all the more so of course when we are dealing with an organization which implies constant premeditation, therefore a crime we want to fight against with even more dedication. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is sponsoring a motion urging the House and recommending to the Government that a royal commission be appointed to investigate organized crime, a well intentioned motion if I ever heard one. However this raises a number of other problems because speaking of a royal investigation commission, Mr. Speaker, we have had some on other subjects, including at the provincial level. In Quebec, for example, the Commission of Inquiry on Organized Crime or the other one on tainted meat immediately springs to mind, but they did create rather serious problems for society.

A royal commission of inquiry is a very expensive tool. Today I note that the Liberal Member who spoke proposed an amendment to the motion of his colleague so that the royal commission of inquiry would complete its work within six months. I can understand why they would amend their own motion, precisely because they know full well that most of the time a royal commission of inquiry moves very slowly and takes years before producing a report. So in that sense one is justified to wonder whether it is the best way to fight against crime or against organized crime.

The process of that royal Commission is extremely costly and time consuming, as well as highly contentious because it ignores in most cases some of the basic rules of evidence which Canadians take pride in, which are traditional rules in our whole legal system and are used to protect people, to uphold the most basic rights of people, namely that anyone is deemed innocent and that no one can be declared guilty unless he has been deemed innocent in the first place. However, when a Royal Commission inquires into organized crime, for instance, it attracts so much public attention that anyone who is summoned to testify before that commission is indicted by the people without being given an opportunity to defend himself, to take advantage of the rules governing evidence which are provided in the Canadian legislation and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I therefore think, Mr. Speaker, that we should have some second thoughts about this before we decide to support the establishment of such a Royal Inquiry commission.

Moreover, and I read again paragraphe 5 of the motion, the Royal Enquiry Commission, according to the Liberal member, should include in its report observations and recommendations on:

> 5. effective and appropriate punishsment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy;

As you know, Mr. Speaker, such a statement is totally irrelevant in a motion because if there is evidence that people, whether they belong to organized crime or not—this distinction is irrelevant again—have conspired to commit murders, if such evidence is in the hands of our police departments, there is no need for a Royal commission: Let those people be charged right away under the Criminal Code, without waiting six months, a year, or two years before they are charged and taken into custody. It is not clear what the Liberal member is attempting to do with this Royal commission of Inquiry. If she has evidence that people, whether they belong to organized crime or other associations, have conspired to commit murders, let them be indicted and sentenced, but let that happen now, and not in two years time.

Mr. Speaker, as several members mentioned earlier, organized crime derives its profits mostly from the sale of narcotics. It is everybody's secret, as you know, and it is also a well-known fact that criminals are usually engaged in criminal activities because there is some profit to be derived, and when a profit is at hand, criminals get organized to derive even greater profits. However, Mr. Speaker, although we do agree that the problem lies with the sale of narcotics, we should also agree that Canadian police forces have a number of efficient strategies at their disposal to deal with the sale and traffic of narcotics.

Let me just mention off the cuff a few of those instruments that are in the hands of police forces, to show that there is no need for a Royal Inquiry commission to tell us again what is already being done at the present time. Electronic eavesdropping exists and we use it, although it could possibly be used more. All police forces in Canada, even undercover agents, Mr. Speaker can use it. I am a lawyer, and I have seen on many occasions, during proceedings, that entire organizations had been destroyed through the use of undercover RCMP officers! Information obtained from repentant criminals allows also the police to make some good hauls. We could probably improve somewhat the means given to the police. If those who have the legal means to stop drug trafficking had more money, they could increase electronic surveillance, raise the number of officers to be trained as undercover agents and also the number of border guards.

My riding has 200 kilometres of border. Do you know how many RCMP officers there are to cover these 200 kilometres? Only three. How can they be blamed if they let some drug enter Canada! Here is an area where we could act.

One of the things which have been suggested and that the Government will probably propose in the next few weeks or months is to seize the profits from crime. If you do that, you undermine the foundations of organized crime. We could also, Mr. Speaker, and I am in favour of it, increase the sentences. We could raise the minimum prison term to seven years for importation of drugs into Canada, as we have seen that it can be effective.

The importer will know that he will not have a smile from the judge, he will not be given a reprimand, he will not be put on probation, he will not be fined, he will not get a month in jail. If he imports drugs into Canada he will get a seven-year prison term. If we were going to do the same for all drug related crimes, Mr. Speaker, we would see a lowering of the rate of that type of crime.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) mentioned the efforts I have made to abolish contributions to political parties. I thank him for his kind words, but I do not see the connection with organized crime. But even so I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to tell him that I thank him for supporting the efforts that I make. However, I must stress that these efforts were to the effect of preventing not only corporations or associations but unions as well from making contributions to any political group. And God knows how many such contributions the New Democratic Party receives from unions, from labour organizations.

So, rather than bringing up that point in a debate that does not concern that, I suggest the Hon. Member should talk his own party into approving the propositions that I have always advocated.

Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the member for Trinity is based on a very good intention, but the means that she proposes is certainly not the best, at this time, to fight organized crime.

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I know you would like to change the seconder of the motion before we proceed with the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is correct. I notice that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) seconded the main motion, and I recognize that the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is the seconder of the motion of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable interest that I take part in today's debate. Although I am not a lawyer, a criminologist or a former police officer, I take part with great interest in this debate and I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her initiative. I hold this Hon. Member in high esteem, having learned to appreciate her as a member of the public accounts committee of which she is the chairperson and where she does an excellent job.

Moreover, I wish to indicate that as a member of our Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, I received this motion which much interest, just as the other committee members did. There is a wide concensus to allow the House to debate this motion as moved.

Yet, I wish to take this opportunity to indicate that I am against appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime for several reasons, the first of which being that if we held a poll or a referendum from coast to coast to know whether Canadians are in favour of appointing and financing such a Royal commission of Inquiry on organized crime, my impression is that most Canadians would not support it. When we realize the costs . . . the fact is that past Royal commissions have involved enormous costs. Most of the time, these costs amount to several millions of dollars, and for what result, Mr. Speaker? As my friend the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) said a while ago, they unfortunately end up being shelved without any follow-up.

We can easily imagine the reaction of the Canadian public to such an investigation. We would give them the impression that they are not properly protected against organized crime and that nothing is being done in this country.

In my opinion, there are many Hon. Members who think that there is no evidence that organized crime is more widespread than five or 10 years ago. If one thing is sure, Mr. Speaker, it is that our police forces, whether at the federal, provincial or municipal level, are now better organized and have more sophisticated means to fight against organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, regularly in the headlines and in the newspapers we read about the successful raids of our police force and I think we should now take advantage of this occasion to show them how grateful we really are for fighting against organized crime with such dedication.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people could be left with the impression that nothing is being done when in fact it simply is not the case. I believe that our police officers are quite efficient in their fight against organized crime. We will not find the solution there. I see that my time is over. I think that our Criminal Code should be amended and that our courts should come down a lot harder on criminals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry but the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired.

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the Motion is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, May 1, consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 13(5) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on the report stage motions to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereof.

Call in the Members.

• (1820)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the first question is on Motion No. 2. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 10 the following:

""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 93)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Gauthier	McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Baker	Gray (Windsor West)	Murphy
Benjamin	Grondin	Nicholson (Trinity)
Berger	Hopkins	Nystrom
Blackburn (Brant)	Hovdebo	Ouellet
Broadbent	Isabelle	Penner
Cassidy	Kaplan	Riis
de Corneille	Keeper	Robinson
de Jong	Langdon	Rompkey
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)	MacLellan	Rossi
Foster	Manly	Young —35
Garneau	McCurdy

NAYS

Members

Andre	Hawkes	Pietz
Attewell	Hicks	Plourde
Bernier	Hnatyshyn	Price
Bertrand	Holtmann	Ravis
Blenkarn	Horner	Redway
Bourgault	Hudon	Ricard
Brightwell	James	Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Browes	Jardine	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Cadieux	Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Joncas	Scowen
Collins	Kelleher	Siddon
Comeau	Kempling	Sparrow
Crofton	Kindy	Speyer
Crosbie (St. John's West)	King	Stackhouse
Daubney	Ladouceur	Stevens
Desjardins	Lawrence	Stewart
Edwards	Layton	Taylor
Ellis	Lesick	Towers
Epp (Provencher)	Lewis	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Fennell	MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)	Tupper
Ferland	Mailly	Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Fontaine	Malone	Vankoughnet
Forrestall	Mantha	Vézina
Fraleigh	Martin	Vincent
Fretz	Mayer	Warner
Gass	Mazankowski	White
Gérin	McKinnon	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Gervais	McKnight	Winegard
Girard	McMillan	Wise
Gottselig	Minaker	Witer—104
Graham	Mitges
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Moore
Greenaway	Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Grisé	Nickerson
Hamelin	Oberle
Hamilton	O'Neil
Hardey	Paproski

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Patent Act

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, you may find, if you inquire, that there will be a disposition by Members of the House to apply this vote to the remaining motions offered by the Official Opposition. This may also be the case with respect to those offered by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Riis: After a lot of discussion, and some hesitation since we oppose the Bill and would certainly like to have these amendments passed, to facilitate the business of the House we are prepared to co-operate with my hon. colleague, the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), to ensure that this is dealt with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair can take judicial notice of the fact that there has been a great deal of discussion. Is it agreed that the division just taken, as recorded, apply to the other report stage motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 12, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46 and 47 are lost.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, you said they were lost, but they will be recorded in Hansard as having been taken.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 3. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 13 to 18 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"consumption in Canada".

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 28 to 32 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"or production of medicine."

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 3 to 7 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"production of medicine".

The House divided on Motions Nos. 3, 13 and 15 (Mr. Dingwall), which were negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 94)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Gauthier	McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Baker	Gray (Windsor West)	Murphy
Benjamin	Grondin	Nicholson (Trinity)
Berger	Hopkins	Nystrom
Blackburn (Brant)	Hovdebo	Ouellet
Broadbent	Isabelle	Penner
Cassidy	Kaplan	Riis
de Corneille	Keeper	Robinson
de Jong	Langdon	Rompkey
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)	MacLellan	Rossi
Foster	Manly	Young —35
Garneau	McCurdy

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motions lost. The next question is on Motion No. 4. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 18 to 49 at page 11 and lines 1 and 2 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"for sale for consumption in Canada until the expiration of four years after the date of the notice of compliance."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 95)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 5. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 19 to 49 at page 11 and lines 1 and 2 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The prohibition under Subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine four years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of a medicine where that notice of compliance is issued after the coming into force of this section."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 96)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 11. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 8 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a medicine where

(a) on the day of coming into force of this section a notice of compliance has been issued to the patentee and a licence has been granted under section 41 in respect of the medicine but no notice of compliance has been issued to the licensee; or

(b) on the day of coming into force of this section a notice of compliance has been issued to the patentee and a notice of compliance has been issued to a person other than the patentee but no licence has been granted; or

(c) on the day of coming into force of this section, a notice of compliance has been issued to the patentee but no notice of compliance or licence has been issued to a person other than the patentee."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 97)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan

Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 12. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"licence has been issued in respect of the medicine or a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued to a person other than the patentee."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 98)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 14. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 41 to 49 at page 12 and lines 1 to 10 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"41.14 (1) Notwithstanding anything in section 41 or in any licence granted under that section, where a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine gives notice in the form and manner prescribed to the Commissioner, within six months after

(a) the date on which this section comes into force, where the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine is issued after June 27, 1986 and before the date on which this section comes into force, or

(b) the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine, where the notice of compliance is issued after the date on which this section comes into force, that the patentee intends to make the medicine in Canada for the purposes of completely or substantially supplying the Canadian market for that medicine, the Commissioner shall, by order, declare that this subsection applies in respect of the invention, and in such case, while the order remains in effect, no person shall, under a licence granted under section 41 in respect of a patent for an invention pertaining to the medicine, have or exercise any right,

(c) where the invention is a process, to use the invention for the preparation or production of medicine, or

(d) where the invention is other than a process, to make or use the invention for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine for sale for consumption in Canada, until the expiration of 10 years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine.

(2) Every patentee who has given a notice to the Commissioner under subsection (1) shall provide the Commissioner with

(a) in such form and manner and at such times and subject to such conditions as are prescribed, information and documents concerning the medicine-making activity to which the notice relates; and

(b) such additional information or documents with respect to the matter referred to in paragraph (a) as the Commissioner may require, within such time as the Commissioner may specify.

(3) Where, after providing every person against whom an order of the Commissioner under this subsection is proposed to be made with a reasonable opportunity to be heard, the Commissioner finds that a patentee in respect of a medicine

(a) has failed to provide information or documents in accordance with subsection (2),

(b) has not commenced making in Canada the medicine that is the subject of the notice under subsection (1) within two years after the date of the notice of compliance that was first issued in respect of the medicine, or

(c) after the two years referred to in paragraph

(b), is not making in Canada the medicine that is the subject of the notice under subsection (1) so as to completely or substantially supply the Canadian market for the medicine, the Commissioner may, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, the prohibition set out in subsection (1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine and, in any case where paragraph (b) applies, the Commissioner may also by such order direct that the prohibition set out in subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the coming into force of the order."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 99)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 16.

Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 15 at page 13 the following:

"(3) Subsection 41.14(1) does not apply in respect of any licence or application for licence under section 41 where the Commissioner finds that the licence that has been obtained or is sought by a person is necessary to the utilization, for the manufacture and sale of a medicine, of a biological process patented by the person, or for which a patent has been applied, and the process has been invented and developed by the person in Canada to such extent as is prescribed."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division.

(Division No. 100)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy

King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 17. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 17 to 20 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"tion pertaining to a medicine shall provide, every three months, the Board with

(a) in such form and manner and subject to such condi-".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 101)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 18. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 18

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 28 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"ing the medicine in Canada and elsewhere, where such informa-".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 102)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins

Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 19. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 19

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 12 to 14 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) any other patents of the patentee for inventions pertaining to medicine, whether granted".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 103)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 21. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 21

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 17 to 28 at page 14.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 104)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 22. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 22

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 44 to 46 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"price that is excessive, the Board shall take into consideration the following".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 105)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 23. Mr. Orkikow moved:

Motion No. 23

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 48 and 49 at page 14 and lines 1 to 29 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) the costs of making and marketing the medicine; and

(b) the Industry Selling Price as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 106)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 24. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 12 to 29 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"tion;

(d) the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act

(e) the direct costs of making and marketing the medicine; and

(f) such other factors as are prescribed or, in the opinion of the board, are revelant in the circumstances."

Patent Act

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 107)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 25. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Patent Act

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 21 to 23 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"price that is excessive, the Board shall take into consideration the following".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 108)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motions Nos. 26 and 27. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 42 at page 15 the following:

"public as prescribed by regulation, the".

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 47 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) and the public and such minister is entitled to".

The House divided on the motions (Mr. Dingwall), which were negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 109)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski

McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motions lost. The next question is on Motion No. 28. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 5 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"sioner shall forthwith publish the ruling and shall concurrently inform the holder of".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 110)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 30. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 15 to 17 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall provide every three months the Board with

(a) in such form and manner and subject to such condi-".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 111)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass

Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on motion No. 31. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 31

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 6 to 17 at page 18.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 112)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 32. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 21 to 24 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"the order."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 113)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 33. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 33

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 27 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"relates, in which case this part of the hearing is deemed private by the Board or Commissioner but the hearing shall resume in public once the information or documentation is dealt with."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 114)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 34. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 34

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 20 the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (1), all rulings of the Board shall forthwith be made public, in a manner prescribed by regulation."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 115)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong

Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 35. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 26 to 28 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"cine Prices Review Board consisting of 5 members to be appointed by the Governor in Council.

(2) A majority of members shall constitute a quorum of the Board."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 116)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 36. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 36

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 25 to 29 at page 21.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 117)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 37. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Patent Act

Motion No. 37

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 7 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"under section 41.15 or 41.16 and shall".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 118)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper

Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 39. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 20 and 21 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"tion pertaining to a medicine shall, every three months, in such form and manner and".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 119)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 40. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 40

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 30 to 33 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"medicine;

"(c) expenditures made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine; and

(d) expenditures to be made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine to the years 1990 and 1995 respectively."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 120)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy

King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 41. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 41

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 3 to 8 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsections (1) and (2) shall be public unless the Board or Commissioner is satisfied upon representations made by the person who supplied the information, that specific, direct and substantial harm would be caused to the person by the disclosure of the information or documentation."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 121)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 42. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 42:

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 35 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall be set out in such a manner that".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 122)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton

Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 43. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 43

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 6 to 9 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"(7) The Governor in Council shall make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section, the expression "research and development" which shall include the following criteria:

(a) all expenditures made under the requirements for a notice of compliance for phase one and phase two of clinical trials;

(b) all expenditures made for laboratory and preclinical work which lead to a notice of compliance;

but shall not include

(c) all expenditures made under the requirements for a notice of compliance for phase three of clinical trials; and

(d) all expenditures associated with the marketing of the medicine including all direct and indirect marketing schemes by patentees."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 123)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 44. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 44

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 10 to 13 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"41.26(1) The Governor in Council may, at any time but no later than the expiration of four years after section 41.11 comes into force, by order, where he determines".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 124)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 45. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 45

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 25, the following:

"and shall, if the patentees ratio of sales to research and development expenditures does not reach 8 per cent by 1990 and 10 per cent by 1995".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Orlikow), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 125)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Patent Act

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 46. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 46

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 39 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) On the expiration of four years after".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 126)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 47. Mr. Dingwall moved:

Motion No. 47

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 3 to 15 at page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"31. This Bill shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation but not sooner than January 1, 1991."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dingwall), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 127)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz

Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

• (1830)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 128)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Bernier
Bertrand
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Comeau
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Daubney
Desjardins
Edwards
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Gass
Gérin
Gervais
Girard
Gottselig
Graham
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Greenaway
Grisé
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Holtmann
Horner
Hudon
James
Jardine
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Ladouceur
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
Mailly
Malone
Mantha
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McKinnon
McKnight
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Paproski
Pietz
Plourde
Price
Ravis
Redway
Ricard
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Siddon
Sparrow
Speyer
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner
(Ottawa—Carleton)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—104

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Baker
Benjamin
Berger
Blackburn
(Brant)
Broadbent
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Grondin
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
MacLellan
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Nystrom
Ouellet
Penner
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Rossi
Young —35

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 6.36 p.m., this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.36 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 5, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-1529, 332-1543 to 332-1545 inclusive, 332-1565, 332-1566, 332-1619, 332-1620, 332-1647, 332-1648, 332-1660, 332-1663, 332-1674, 332-1686 to 332-1690 inclusive, 332-1762, 332-1789 to 332-1791 inclusive, and 332-1975.

* * *

[English]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH REPORTS OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the sixteenth and seventeenth reports of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association in both official languages.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PRESENTATION OF REVISED FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present the revised first report of the Standing Committee on Transport concerning Bill C-18, an Act respecting National Transportation, which effects certain necessary changes to the first report presented April 27. This touches Clauses 168 and 226.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings].

* * *

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my pleasure to present three petitions, all on the same topic, from various centres in western Canada.

The petitioners are concerned that the proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They believe that these proposed measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They are asking the Government, at this late hour, to change its mind, reject these proposals, and stop the increase of prescription drug prices for Canadians who need those drugs.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present three petitions today on the changes to the Patent Act. The petitioners are from New Brunswick and Manitoba, including a number from communities in my own riding.

In their petition the petitioners explain their concern with the Government's intention to change the Patent Act. They believe it will unfairly hurt those people who require a large number of prescription drugs for health reasons. They also believe that this is yet another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians as a result of the Government's intention to negotiate a free trade agreement.

[Translation]

REQUEST TO CHANGE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS IN BILL C-33

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 26 people who reside in Amos, Landrienne, Saint-Mathieu, Val-d'Or and Saint-Marc-de-Figuery, all in the riding of Abitibi, who contribute to the Public Service Superannuation Fund.

Petitions

Your petitioners point out that employee pensions should continue to be fully indexed; that contributors to the superannuation fund should have the right to make decisions; and that realistic levels of interest should be credited to the account.

Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, your petitioners humbly pray:

That Parliament amend Bill C-33 to include the following provisions:

1. All retirement benefits must be fully protected against inflation;

2. Existing superannuation accounts should be combined into one fund, and the new formula proposed in Bill C-33, namely to credit interest payments to those accounts, should be applied to all contributions;

3. The joint Pension Management Board proposed in Bill C-33 must be given decision-making powers and a mandate to provide for full protection of all pension benefits against inflation.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have seven petitions which I would like to table today from residents of Canada who would like to present their grievance.

They say that, whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs; and whereas the Government's proposals will raise the already high cost of provincial health care programs; and whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, will result in an increase in drug prices, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have 18 petitions which I wish to table today. They are all on a topic of grave concern to Canadians in general, that is, the proposed amendments to the Patent Act.

Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs; and whereas the federal Government's proposal will raise the already high cost of provincial health care programs; and whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, will result in an increase of drug costs and prices, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals with regard to Bill C-22 so that we can protect the elderly, the sick and the poor from high prescription drug costs.

• (1110)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a number of petitions. The first is from citizens of Elliot Lake, Ontario, in which they say that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act are measures that will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health requires purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and that the proposed changes will result in higher cost to provincial government drug plans.

The undersigned, your petitioners, pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have five petitions containing several hundred names. One would hope the Government would finally get the message. The petitioners are from Edmonton, Orleans; Westmount, Quebec; Brandon, Manitoba; Fruitvale, Castlegar, Creston and Nelson, British Columbia; and from people in Ottawa, Hamilton and Selkirk, Ontario.

All these petitioners say that in their opinion transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation and that economic regulatory reform in Bill C-18 will create unnecessary chaos in the transportation industry, leading to unacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as deterioration in the quality, type and frequency of service.

They petition the House to persuade the Government to withdraw Bill C-18 and retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation policy, and to retain licensing in order to restrict market-place activity to a positive level, functioning in the best interest of the public as a whole.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens from western Canada concerning the proposed changes to the Patent Act which will quite obviously affect all Canadians who are protected by private or government medicare programs. The changes are as a direct result of free trade negotiations and will grant continuing monopolies. This petition is in total conformity with the resolution recently passed by the Manitoba Legislature which also condemns the Patent Act on behalf of the people of Manitoba. I think this petition only further strengthens that argument.

CANADA POST—CONTINUED OPERATION OF TABUSINTAC POST OFFICE

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions on behalf of constituents from the community of Tabusintac who humbly pray that their Post Office will remain open and the five-year contracts will continue to be awarded to contractors.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition, together with the required certificate signed by the Clerk of Petitions. It is sponsored by the Calgary Coalition for Life and is submitted by the Mill Woods Evangelical Free Church. The petition is signed by 39 persons, most of whom live in Calgary, Edmonton, Morinville and Villeneuve in the Province of Alberta.

They now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance in the certain assurance that this honourable House will provide a remedy.

The petitioners humbly sheweth that because thousands of unborn babies in Canada are killed for reasons of convenience, for the crime of being unwanted, wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament support Motion M-37 to allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights. In duty-bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions. Your petitioners state that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic and thus less expensive drugs.

They state that the proposed changes in the Patent Act will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by government or private health insurance plans insurance plans, and that the Government's proposals will increase the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans.

Your petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

These petitions are signed by residents of Manitoba, New Brunswick, Quebec, the Burlington area in Ontario, Etobicoke in the Toronto area, Midland, Ontario, and also Fredericton in New Brunswick, and Châteauguay and Lachine in the Montreal area.

I think you will agree that all parts of the country are affected, since people from so many different areas are objecting to this disastrous legislation.

* * *

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DIVULGING OF IN CAMERA COMMITTEE INFORMATION

Mr. Speaker: Several days ago the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) introduced a question of privilege and, under the circumstances, because the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) who was also involved was unable to be here at that time, the matter was adjourned.

It is now appropriate to bring it back to the House. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to conclude statements which I made on April 28 regarding what I consider to be a question of privilege. As recorded at page 5329 of Hansard, I brought before the House a good deal of what I believe represented my case of privilege. I am not going to go over the entire statement. However, I would like to refer to Erskine May's nineteenth edition at page 146, Chapter 10, "Breaches of Privileges and Contempts", as follows:

> The publication or disclosure of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of draft reports of committees before they have been reported to the House will, however, constitute a breach of privilege or a contempt.

• (1120)

Immediately after the presentation to this House of the third report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz), on April 28, I brought the actions of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), to the attention of the House. The Hon. Member came to the House on March 25 and made a statement which is found at page 4540 of Hansard. I would like to go into his statement because I think it is very important and relative to this subject.

The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River who, after concluding a previous day's meeting, which I attended, said to the House:

> —when Canadians elect representatives to speak for their concerns in Ottawa, they do so in the hope that, when appropriate, all parties will work toward constructive ends.

I think that is a wonderful objective.

As the spokesman on aboriginal issues for the New Democratic Party, I have and continue to hold the view that partisan concerns and parochial attitudes do nothing to further the cause of Canada's first people.

He went on to say:

Yesterday the Indian, Inuit and Métis people of Canada were reminded again of that truism. In an anonymous office tower, behind closed doors and safely tucked away from probing microphones, four Members of Parliament abrogated their responsibilities to aboriginal people. In a recorded vote,—

Which was also an in camera session.

—the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr MacDougall), the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) voted to block the report—

I consider that to be a blatant violation of the rules and regulations by which this House governs itself. It is said that ignorance of the law is no excuse, and I point out that I think the Hon. Member has had ample opportunity to find out how the rules are applied.

The Chair must consider the damage which such actions can cause, not only now but in the future, if this is allowed to continue. I base my premise on the fact that it can be very damaging to Members because obviously in camera sessions are held from time to time for very obvious reasons.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for hearing me on my question of privilege. I look forward to debate on this matter.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in responding today to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake, (Mr. Holtmann) I would first like to state that my defence to the Question of Privilege he raises is based on the belief that the vote I reported to the House was, de jure, not taken in an in camera session and that the actions of that Member and other Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, who were present at that meeting, had in essence obviated, annulled and rendered void the original notice of meeting for an in camera session.

I would like to refer to the spirit, and some of the text, of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. This particular topic is not covered in detail in that report. However, it is clear from this report that it is intended that Members of Parliament shall be granted sufficient power and freedom of action to represent fairly their constituents. I cite from page 2:

Private members must once again become instruments through which citizens can contribute to shaping the laws under which they live . . . If the private member is to count for anything, there must be a relationship between what the private member and the institution of Parliament can do and what the electorate thinks or expects can be done.

I would like to quote from the record of the hearings which led up to the meeting which is mentioned in the Question of Privilege of my hon. colleague. I would like to quote in order to demonstrate how the aboriginal leadership of Canada expected and anticipated in appearances before this standing committee, in that series of hearings, that there would be a report made on the question of aboriginal self-government. I quote from the proceedings of March 3:

The Assembly of First Nations would like this committee to prepare a brief but hard-hitting report to Parliament aimed at urging the federal and provincial governments, going into the First Ministers' Conference on March 26 and 27, to recognize our inherent or pre-existing aboriginal treaty rights to self-government.

That is testimony by Gordon Peters, the Ontario Regional Vice Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, and the record shows that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake was present at that hearing.

A week later, Mr. Louis Bruyere, President of the Native Council of Canada, said:

So what can you do? First of all you can send a message, you can take into account what I said and what the ICNI, and AFN, the International Council and other groups you are meeting with say. You can issue a strong report on the matter before the gavel falls on the First Ministers' Conference 1987. You can indicate that Parliament has a independent non-partisan and national and international role in this great endeavour.

A similar request was later made by Mr. John Amagoalik of the Inuit Committee on National Issues. Therefore, I believe that it is quite clear to anyone who attended those sessions, and to anyone reading the record, that the democratically elected leadership of the aboriginal people of Canada expected the committee to act and to act before the First Ministers' Conference in order that the lengthy deliberations of that committee had some value.

You, Mr. Speaker, and I believe all Hon. Members of this House, must realize that if public expectations are not met directly, they must at least be accounted for. As my Party's aboriginal affairs critic, I have to answer telephone calls and letters from aboriginal leaders, from private citizens and from the media, all asking why the committee did not report before the First Ministers' Conference.

The courts of law in this land live by an adage which Parliament should respect, namely, that justice must not only be done but should be seen to be done. How in a democracy can we withhold public information which is essential to the good government principle? I know full well that for reasons of national security, or the protection of witnesses or innocent Canadians, we have a responsibility to protect them, but we also have a responsibility, I believe, to respond in a case where a committee abrogates its responsibility.

The record clearly shows that I did not violate the intent of the in camera session. I and members of my office staff were asked for copies of the draft committee report. Despite the circumstances, we categorically refused these, as we should. However, when a vote is recorded and the public is demanding an explanation, I feel that an explanation has to be forthcoming.

What, after all, did committee members expect when they agreed to a committee recorded vote? Did they believe that a recorded vote, becoming part of the record, is then something which can be consigned into anonymity indefinitely until a committee chooses to make the report? If they truly wanted their opinions to be kept secret they should simply have rejected the notion of a recorded vote or, better still, ask for the original notice for that meeting to have been withdrawn.

This Parliament makes, I believe, a clear distinction between votes and proceedings, and I believe that if the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake examines the exact text of my statement in the House, he will find—although I recognize that he will consider some of the invective to be disagreeable, and I intended it to be disagreeable to him—that what I was reporting was the vote and not the proceedings.

The nineteenth edition of Erskine May, at page 146, refers to proceedings. It does not refer to votes. There is a clear distinction in this Parliament. After all, we do have as part of our parliamentary documentation a publication which we receive every day entitled Votes and Proceedings. If votes, in fact, were proceedings, then there would obviously be no need for them to be differentiated as they have been, obviously, for some length of time.

• (1130)

I believe that I was reporting an abuse of procedure and an abuse of the spirit of the committee system in this Parliament. I would like to point out that five members of the Progressive Conservative Party came to the meeting in question. One of them, the Vice-Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) left before the recorded vote was taken. He left because of a different matter, although he did say before leaving that he had not attended any of the series of hearings in question.

I would say that politically I grew up in a committee system which was not parliamentary but which was in the context of work done in voluntary organizations and in the context of work done at the municipal level. I believe that there are some principles of committee operation and committee function which have not perhaps been codified, not perhaps been adopted by the regulations of this House, but nevertheless some principles which apply to committees, whatever their nature. One of those principles is that members who are unable for whatever reason to attend meetings place some trust and some faith when it comes to key decision-making in those members who are able to attend the meetings.

This committee held six hearings on the subject matter of the proposed report. It saddens me to acknowledge that of a total of 24 attendance opportunities for the members of the committee who voted against the presentation of a report in a recorded vote that only five were taken up. This means an average attendance by the Progressive Conservative Members who stopped the report from coming to the House of less than 25 per cent.

However, I am pleased to report that the opposition Parties in those six hearings had 100 per cent attendance, and I think that is something that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been listening carefully to the Hon. Member. Since this is an important matter I did not want to intervene in case there was some immediate relevance between the issue upon which I have to decide and what the Hon. Member was pursuing.

I believe that the Hon. Member is moving somewhat away from the issue upon which I have to decide and getting on to the question of which Members were at which particular meetings. The Hon. Member will know that there is a convention in this place that there is not to be comment with respect to the attendance of any Member or any Minister at either committee hearings or, in fact, in the House. The reason for that is quite obvious. Hon. Members are called upon to conduct a variety of obligations and responsibilities each day and each week and there are many times when Members are not able to attend to all matters to which they might wish to attend. Of course, the Hon. Member knows that this matter was adjourned over because he was properly involved in another matter and could not be in the Chamber. I point that out because that is of course why we have the rule.

I know the Hon. Member would want to remain within the rules so I would ask him to continue his comments to which the Chair is listening very carefully and which are cogent; but I would ask him to please stay with the basic issue, that issue is whether or not in view of what the Hon. Member did say in the House that that has in one way or another breached the privileges of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) or other members of the committee who were meeting in an in camera meeting. That is the issue which the Chair has before it. I would ask the Hon. Member to continue.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I accept your correction on that point and I thank Your Honour. I would like to extend my thanks to the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) for having this matter held over until today.

The essence then of my case, if I might sum it up, is that by the exercise of the operation of the taking of a recorded vote, the in camera meeting was in essence suspended, the taking and reporting of that recorded vote to the House is not on a level or footing with the reporting of proceedings to the House, which I did not do.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank Hon. Members, both opposite and on this side of the House, for their indulgence in hearing my case.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to ask the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) a question. As I take it, the issue, as the Hon. Member said, in defence, is the distinction that the Hon. Member draws between the recording of a vote and the proceedings of the committee itself. That seems to be the narrow point which the Hon. Member is asking the Chair to consider. Is the Chair correct in that assumption?

Mr. Parry: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is correct. I acknowledge that that is, as Your Honour puts it, a narrow point.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could give some indication to Hon. Members who will want to rise on this matter that it might be helpful to the Chair if, in addition to any other points that Hon. Members think are of help to the Chair, they might also consider that point which the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River has raised and has put most succinctly.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, in order to make sure that I do not misunderstand Your Honour's question, I would like to say that it is evident that my defence also rests on the inconsistency between a recorded vote and an in camera meeting which, obviously, I believe should be resolved in favour of the recorded vote.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River that the Chair has that point. The Chair now recognizes the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on this question of privilege because of my own participation and activity in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Your Honour, I would begin by going to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Section 17, which makes it clear to all Hon. Members that a question of privilege ought rarely to come up in Parliament. That is so, Sir, because a question of privilege is a most serious matter and it should be taken seriously by the House. In addition, Your Honour, it must involve in some way an Hon. Member's capacity to serve the people who have chosen him or her as their representative.

I submit to Your Honour, therefore, that there is no question of privilege here at all. It is spurious and fatuous for the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) to suggest to the House that in some way his capacity to serve his constituency has been impaired or impeded. He himself failed, as I listened carefully, to make that case.

I would like very briefly to survey the facts as I understand them with respect to what took place in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. First, as the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has made clear, the groups who appeared before the committee asked for and expected that there would be a report to the House on the subject of the aboriginal right of self-government before the First Ministers' Conference.

The second point is that there was an all-Party understanding that we would report—not an agreement, not a motion that had been voted upon, but a general understanding. In support of that I refer to what the chairman said at one point:

> It would be possible to have a few notes about our preliminary report before the next week. It will be possible to depose our document probably the next week, about Wednesday or Thursday, probably.

• (1140)

That is a translation from the French, "depose" meaning a presentation to the House.

Third, a considerable amount of work was done by the committee staff in preparing a draft report. Because there was a draft report, a notice went around to all Hon. Members to meet in camera to discuss the substance of that report.

Ordinarily I find in camera meetings to be objectionable. I will come back later to the reason for in camera sessions based on Beauchesne's understanding of them. However, they are justified if you are discussing controversial material and looking at the substance.

Fourth, it became apparent shortly after the meeting began that Members from the government benches, for reasons unknown, and I will not impute motives or make any suggestions about those reasons, decided there should not be a report to Parliament presented by that committee. Following that there was very vigorous debate and the question was put that the committee not report. It was a negative motion. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River and myself vigorously opposed the motion but it was carried. At that point I called for a recorded vote which was duly taken by the clerk of the committee.

It does seem a curious situation to have an in camera meeting for a motion, a vote, and then have a recorded vote. As I reflect on it, Sir, it seems another step should have been taken to take us out of the in camera procedure. However, I think as soon as you have a recorded vote that, de facto, the in camera procedure has ceased to exist.

Subsequent to that meeting the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River and myself, before the news media and representatives of aboriginal groups, publicly expressed our disappointment and displeasure with the decision. A decision had been expected, it was not taken, and I and the Hon. Member expressed our displeasure. Did we in some way publish the proceedings by doing so? I say not at all. We were simply reporting on an expectation which existed in the community.

As a part of that process as well, as you know, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River, under Standing Order 21, revealed the names of those who voted for the motion that the committee not report. I want to repeat that it was a recorded vote even though we were in camera.

However, I entirely agree with the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River that the purpose of that meeting had altered. We had not met for the purpose of deciding whether or not there should be a report to Parliament. We met for the purpose of discussing the substance of the report.

I ask you to consider whether it is a serious matter to reveal the results of a recorded vote. That is what the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake is charging, that it is a serious matter and his privileges have been breached because the results of a recorded vote were made known. I ask you, Sir, how has the Hon. Member's ability to serve effectively as an elected representative been damaged, limited, restricted or injured in any way whatsoever?

The Hon. Member referred to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Section 628 on page 199, where it says that the publication of in camera proceedings would be an offence. I interpret that to mean that if the words on a particular matter in a preliminary report were actually published and disseminated in the community we would have destroyed the purpose of an in camera meeting. I would like to come back to that in a moment, but I would ask you to rule that the revelation of a recorded vote under any circumstances at all is not the same thing as the publication of a committee's proceedings. It just simply cannot be. It would be stretching to absurdity the idea of what is a proceeding and what is a publication of that proceeding.

Beauchesne's makes it clear that the purpose of an in camera meeting is for Members to feel free to negotiate, discuss, deliberate, and compromise without the glare of publicity. In this particular meeting under discussion the negotiations had broken down. Discussion was over. Deliberations had ended. The possibility of a compromise was non-existent. Under those circumstances a vote was taken and I, as a member of that committee, asked that the vote be recorded.

We are publicly elected, we function under public scrutiny in almost all circumstances except those rare occasions when an in camera meeting is necessary. Such a meeting is necessary because once in a while we must negotiate, discuss and deliberate in private. Once we vote on an important issue, say whether or not a report will be presented to Parliament, then I believe the reason for an in camera meeting no longer applies. Our votes and the results of those votes are for the public record and the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River has made a strong and eloquent case in support of that.

Therefore, I conclude that there is not and cannot be in this instance in any way a genuine question of privilege in the charges brought to the House by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake against the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River. I call upon you to dismiss it quickly and summarily.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join briefly in this debate to assist my colleague from Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann). I do not do so with any pleasure. I do it with a certain amount of distaste because I find this matter to be very offensive.

I submit, as has my colleague, that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) breached a trust, a confidentiality which all Members enter into when, as Members of Parliament, we gather together in camera to discuss matters which are better discussed, because it provides better results, in camera. They give a Member the freedom to negotiate, discuss, deliberate, and sometimes compromise without the glare of publicity which might add to the difficulties of agreeing to reports when it is desirable that those proceedings be treated in confidence.

The committee made the decision to negotiate and meet in private. Then, lo and behold, the next day the deliberations of the committee, and I will get to whether or not a vote is a deliberation in a minute, were brought forward in a partisan manner by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River in an effort to embarrass his colleagues.

I think even if you argue that a vote is not part of the proceedings of the House of Commons, one is entitled, since my colleague stands in my opinion convicted by his own words, to look at the words which were used. The question is, in discussing what he alleges was not a part of the proceedings, that is to say a vote, whether or not the words that were used imputed motives and put his colleagues on that committee in an embarrassing position. He entered into private discussions and negotiations with them in the give and take which we all know takes place and which we hope will continue to take place among Members of this House in committee.

• (1150)

First there is the platitude; I have and continue to hold the view that partisan concerns and parochial attitudes do nothing to further the cause of Canada's first people. Then, to swing from the platitude to the innuendo; his colleagues sat, not in an office tower without a microphone, but in one of the many in camera meetings which take place here. By inference or by innuendo his colleagues are thus convicted. By the way, I include my colleagues in the Liberal Party. They are included in that partisan and parochial attitude.

Then he goes on to say that it was an anonymous office. Everyone knows that it was not an anonymous office. If one wants to find out where the in camera meetings of today are being held, one goes to the parliamentary calendar to check and it says "in camera". The word "anonymous" is another innuendo or another inference that this was nefarious.

Then we move on to the allegation that his colleagues on the committee, including my Liberal colleague, abrogated their responsibilities to aboriginal people. What a damning comment to make about a colleague.

He also stated that they voted to block the report. He used the word "block", not make a decision because they did not like what was in it.

Even if you, Mr. Speaker, do not find a case of privilege here, I suggest that it is pretty damning, because what we have in this place is a breach of trust. A breach of privilege causes it go to committee and causes a final decision, if you so find, Mr. Speaker. However, there is one thing that, once we lose it in this place, if not forever, is very, very difficult to regain, and that is the trust of one's colleagues. No matter whether they are in one's Party or not, when one loses that trust, one has lost something—

Mr. Penner: Speak to the question of privilege; don't preach a sermon.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague always has the same answer when he is caught. It is "Speak to the question of privilege". I listened to my colleagues' comments. Perhaps when I bring up the subject of trust he feels a little uneasy too; I can understand that. However, I suggest to my colleague and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that you make the decision on whether or not a question of privilege goes forward to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, but we make the decision on whether or not to trust.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether I could ask for the co-operation of Hon. Members. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) or the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) could answer a question which I should like clarified. Was a report actually written?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I think the record would show that at the in camera session there was a draft for consideration. I think the record would also show, if Hon. Members chose to look at the statements of the committee, that in fact the proposal was that the committee not report at that time. It never suggested that the committee should not report, as was suggested by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Furthermore, it was the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior who asked for a vote. Does that then mean, according to his argument, that he can turn an in camera session completely around—or can any Member of the House—by calling for a recorded vote? To me that is a hypocritical point of view.

Mr. Speaker: This is an important matter, and the Chair treats it as important. Again, in the proper spirit of arguments on points like this one, I do not think there is any particular need to use pejorative words about the motivations or actions of another Member.

The Chair understands very well the importance of this matter, and I think I have the fact pattern quite clear. Obviously it is important when Hon. Members agree to enter into an in camera discussion. The Chair does not consider the matter before us to be a particularly easy one. It will take some very careful consideration. However, if there are other Hon. Members who feel they may have something to assist the Chair, I would be pleased to hear them.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, following on your last comments I wish to intervene for a few seconds. We have a difficulty in House of Commons committees. It is certainly true what Hon. Members on all sides have said, that we have a tradition of in camera meetings. Those in camera meetings are often used to deal with the details of a report and to provide an opportunity for members of the committee to try to reach some compromise. That has been a very useful exercise on a number of occasions. It has enabled us to have various task forces and committees of the House of Commons come out with unanimous reports and other reports which have been very solid.

However, there is a problem which I have noticed on an ongoing basis. Quite often many controversial issues are being settled in in camera meetings. Obviously this was a case where government Members felt one way and the members of the two opposition Parties felt the complete opposite. A recorded vote was taken. It is very important when there is a division in committee. The public has a right to know what is going on. It is all right to try to work toward some resolution in a committee. If it can be achieved, it is wonderful. However, we must not allow the ability of a committee to go in camera to be used to prevent the public from knowing what is going on. If there is a division in committee, I think all committees should move immediately from an in camera session to a public session. That should be the responsibility of the chairperson of the committee. It is something we should address, rather than being concerned about what happened in this particular case.

We should ensure that in future our committees are working in such a way that we have the right to move to in camera when necessary and useful and to move automatically into the public domain when there is obviously a split, in that the public has a right to know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: As the Chair has indicated, this is an important matter.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) and the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) for their joint co-operation in enabling us to hear the entire argument today. I also thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for their interventions. Frankly, the Chair finds them very helpful.

• (1200)

The Chair will reserve on this matter. However, if I can put it this way, the defence of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River is that there is a distinction between the report of a vote and the deliberations that were taking place in camera. I may or may not find that distinction. What is important is that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River has not taken the position that anything that goes on at an in camera meeting, just because one may not agree with it, ought then to be reported. It is important that Hon. Members and the public watching and listening realize that the defence does not reach that far. Certainly the Chair has not taken it to have been meant in that respect.

I thank Hon. Members for their interventions. It is an important matter. It is a vexatious matter because the line between openness and the occasional time when it is appropriate to go into an in camera meeting is sometimes a difficult one to find. I shall do the best on behalf of all the Members to come back with an appropriate response.

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 108.

[Text]

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL

Question No. 108—Mr. Lawrence:

1. On Wednesday, February 18 (budget day) and on Thursday, February 19, 1987, did Radio Canada International broadcast the wrong tape or network feed instead of "The World at Six" newscast at 0000 hours Greenwich mean time (1900 hours eastern standard time) and, if so, who was responsible?

2. Has the person responsible been disciplined and (a) if so, in what way (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Radio Canada International does not tape "The World at Six". The program is fed live by line from Toronto to RCI's Sackville transmitters via an RCI studio in Montreal.

Normally, the feed is carried on the same line every day. On February 18, however, CBC Toronto switched the feed to another line. It advised the Program Distribution and Co-ordination section at the Maison de Radio-Canada in Montreal of the change of line. The Maison, however, failed to notify RCI, whose facilities are housed separately in La Tourelle. It took two minutes and 15 seconds after the start of the program to establish the feed on the new line.

On February 19, the feed from Toronto was delayed, again by two minutes and 15 seconds, due to work disruptions by NABET technicians in Toronto.

2. No disciplinary action was warranted.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 109 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question mentioned by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 109 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

GOVERNMENT REVENUE AND SPENDING

Question No. 109—Mr. Howie:

Patent Act

For the fiscal year 1986, based on the accounting practices currently used by the government on a (a) public accounts (b) national accounts basis, what was the government's (i) spending (ii) revenue (iii) interest cost (iv) gross debt (v) net debt?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make two points concerning this very important legislation for the future of this country. First, I want to restate the five critical reasons this policy is an important priority for the Government. Then I want to separate the facts from the fiction being perpetrated on the Canadian public by Hon. Members opposite.

The principle of intellectual property, significant industrial benefits, improved multilateral relations, consumer protection and the potential for significant and long-term health care benefits are the reasons I am pursuing these legislative changes as aggressively as I can. Each of these may stand alone. But together they represent a powerful and effective policy for Canada. They also represent a policy change long overdue in this country. In fact, it is a policy that will undo much of the damage caused by the former Government's short-sightedness in 1969 when it decided to deal Canada out of the biotechnological revolution.

Intellectual property rights, the right of inventors or creators to enjoy the benefits of their creativity, is not just a right, it is at the heart of the economies of every modern western industrial society.

If I invent a new widget that revolutionizes industry, my invention is protected by law. If I write a new book, nobody is allowed to plagiarize it. If I break new technological ground, I am allowed to protect that technology. If our Government attempted to remove those rights, the opposition Parties would scream foul, and rightly so.

Why is this basic principle of intellectual property rights suddenly so different when it comes to the pharmaceutical industry? Well, it is not. It is just that the opposition Parties want to gain some political mileage by striking fear into the hearts of Canadians through unfounded allegations.

Without adequate patent protection, Mr. Speaker, there is no incentive to invest or create. If we applied the current pharmaceutical patent legislation to all creative thinking in Canada, we would force all our inventors and creators out of the country. We might even lose a few members of the Opposition who think they have a new idea once and a while.

In the case of the pharmaceutical industry, we have seen the results of the 1969 policy; no significant investment in Canada, no research we can call our own and sell to the rest of the world, and no jobs for our bright young researchers in the biomedical industries. So they leave the country. Maybe that is acceptable to some Members, but it is not acceptable to me.

The second point is the industrial benefits of our policy. We have not even passed the legislation in this House and already there has been more than $800 million in new research and plant expansion commitments. That is money taken out of the country before our proposed changes. That is money which the generic money manufacturers did not invest even when they were getting a free ride under the 1969 policy. This $800 million is not an investment in one facility, in one location, in one region. We are talking about more than $200 million in Quebec, upwards of $80 million in British Columbia, at least $70 million in the Maritimes, about $100 million in Alberta and more than $250 million in Ontario. These investments do not include, of course, the aggregate increase in investment over the next few years, which will see every region of Canada benefit.

For instance, of the $400 million earmarked for educational and research institutes, almost $50 million will go to Manitoba. That to me, Mr. Speaker, seems to be a pretty important and substantial contribution to regional development in Canada.

The $800 million in planned investments to which I referred earlier is part of a package worth $1.4 billion over the next 10 years, 10 per cent of sales, up from 4.9 per cent. These funds will not begin to flow until after our legislation becomes law. That means every day of stalling by opponents exacts a price in terms of industrial benefits and health care research. More than that, every day of delay in passing this Bill means it takes that much longer to reach the research and development targets of 8 per cent of sales after four years and 10 per cent after 10 years.

The opposition Parties attack this Government constantly because they feel we are not doing enough for the regions. Here we have a policy which does not rely on government grants, which are favoured by the Liberals, it does not rely on government subsidies and takeovers, which are favoured by the New Democratic Party, but it is the private sector at work, doing what it does best. Why are the Liberals and New Democrats condemning it? That was a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker. They are condemning our policies only because if they did not, they would not have anything to say at all.

The infusion of funds in our universities, teaching hospitals and private research facilities will help build a greater pool of expertise in this important area. The Opposition tells us this Bill is a bad thing. But then we are told that research and development funds are extremely important to the future of Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish the opposition Parties would get their act together. Here we have a policy that puts private sector money to work in our universities and research institutes, a policy that brightens the future for our talented young research scientists here in Canada, and the Opposition is telling us that we are doing the wrong thing.

I have the feeling that these misguided opposition Members would not be happy until the Government announces travel subsidies for our scientists and biotechnologists so they can seek research jobs overseas. That is the approach they are advocating with their opposition to this legislation, and it is wrong.

Members opposite have raised a great hue and cry about how drug prices are going to shoot so high that the elderly and infirm will not be able to look after their own health. Well, I can think of a lot of words to describe this attitude, Mr. Speaker, but most of them would be ruled unparliamentary.

This Bill provides a number of safeguards. The fact that the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board will function under the stewardship of Dr. Eastman is a safeguard. The federal contributions to the provinces is another safeguard. Finally, there is the type of health care system we have in this country. I think we are putting more safety valves in the drug system than it ever had before. Consumers are not going to suffer because of this legislation. They will benefit. This will be especially true in the area of improved health care. New drugs and new therapies will be introduced earlier. The need for hospitalization will be reduced, perhaps even the need for surgery, because we will have new drugs to cure old problems.

It is incomprehensible, Mr. Speaker, how Members opposite can risk trading away these advantages for a couple of percentage points in the current popularity polls. Do they not realize that they are playing with the future health of all Canadians? I am thinking especially of our increasingly aging population who will need these new drugs more than any other group.

Another point that must be emphasized is that through this legislation we have overcome the blight on our international reputation that has existed since 1969. We are signatories to many international agreements protecting intellectual property. We are entering a new round of GATT negotiations where these rights are being put on the table as part of international trade relationships.

[Translation]

Opposition Members know how important international trade is to Canada's economy. They always perform the same routine, never mind the fact that the Liberals did not do anything to improve our export competitiveness when they were at the helm. As a matter of fact they even tried to reduce it when they formed a coalition with the NDP in the course of the last decade.

If we want to attract the capital funds required to be competitive on the international scene, our country must convince foreigners that it is a good place to invest. The Canadian patent system must be geared to that of western countries just so our patents will be protected under international law. This issue does not relate exclusively to the drug industry, for it has an impact on all other sectors and it does enhance or tarnish Canada's reputation on the international scene.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the basic reasons which justify some of the amendments advocated in Bill C-22. Now, if I may, I should like to refer to some of the questions raised by opposition Members in their attempt to defeat a sound policy with a view to polishing their image in public political polls. Again I must emphasize that the Progressive Conservative Government is not trying to implement this policy for the sake of gaining popular support. We are doing this because it is the right way to protect the future of Canada.

• (1210)

[English]

Let me deal with what seems on the surface to be the facts to many thousands of Canadians who have signed petitions opposing our policy. I freely admit that thousands have done so. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) indicated at the beginning of this year that over 20,000 Canadians had signed such petitions. I do not argue with that number, but I should point out that I have many, many thousands of petitions here indicating that we should proceed with the legislation. I have not bothered to waste the time of the House by introducing them. These petitions were sent to me by disgruntled Canadians faced with the so-called information provided by Hon. Members opposite and the facts provided by me.

The Opposition petition was sent far and wide by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). This petition is a marvellous piece of double-speak because it totally ignores what the policy is really about and plays only on raising fears in Canadian consumers. The petition indicates that the policy will directly affect all Canadians not protected by private or government medicare programs, will raise the costs of already high provincial health care programs and will prevent competition, increase drug prices and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary drugs. It says that the policies are another example of the Government's concessions to the United States at the expense of every-day Canadians.

I am not sure what an every-day Canadian is or how he or she differs from an average Canadian, but every premise contained in that petition is absolutely false. It raises fear and concern about the ability of Canadians to protect their own health and that of their families, without any proof. It raises fear over the inability of Canadians to afford the drugs they need, without any proof. It suggests that provincial health care plans will be adversely affected in the face of the protection the federal Government is providing for these plans and in the face of evidence presented before the committee by the head of the drug plan in Saskatchewan indicating that he did not think it would cost them anything. It brings in the ogre of the big, bad United States so the Liberals can wrap their concerns around the Canadian flag, again with nothing to back them up.

If I were not a Member of the House and I did not know what this issue was all about, I would sign a petition like that myself. However, let me quote from letters I have received relating to these very petitions distributed by the Hon. Member opposite and, I am sure, by many of his colleagues. I have answered all the people who have signed these petitions, not in the interests of politics but in the interests of telling the truth. One such letter reads:

> Dear Sir.
>
> Your recent letter regarding amendments to the Patent Act refers to a petition signed by me. I am unaware of reading or signing any such petition and would ask you to forward a copy of the petition, along with my signature, to my attention.

Yes, that is the kind of letter I got in return to the letters I sent out to people who had signed petitions sent around the country by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. Another letter reads as follows:

> I agree wholeheartedly that amendments are necessary to encourage pharmaceutical research in Canada; I trust that you will press on with the passage of this legislation.
>
> To set the record straight, however, I did not sign a petition in opposition to changes in patent protection.

Yes, I received other letters like that. Perhaps the following is the most telling of all, and, to be fair, this one was in response to an NDP petition, not a Liberal petition, though I am sure they come out of the same Gestetner machine somewhere in the Centre Block. This letter reads as follows:

> I received your information letter recently.
>
> Yes, I did sign a petition against the Bill.
>
> However, having read all the information, I am now in favour of it.
>
> Go ahead.

I want to read from a final letter in order to drive just one more nail in the coffin in which the Hon. Member's dead policy lies. This letter is from the Dean of the Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences at the University of British Columbia and is addressed to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond, not to me. It reads in part:

> I am greatly disturbed by your letter addressed to 'Dear Concerned Canadian' which crossed my desk today. I realize that it is a function of the opposition Parties to keep the Government honest and to improve suggested legislation.
>
> Your letter goes beyond that, however, and makes assertions that are totally incorrect and appeal to the emotions of concerned Canadians.

I did not make up the facts, I leave that to members of the Opposition. Indeed, I would be most pleased to provide copies of these letters to Hon. Members opposite as long as they promise to provide me with copies of their correspondence with these individuals.

To add insult to injury, the petitions directed to "Concerned Canadians" contained a letter that accurately described the Hon. Member's Party Leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), as being the proponent of the legislation this Government is attempting to change. He proposed it when he was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1968. The letter did not say, however, that this same right hon. gentleman, when he was chairman of the board of directors of an international pharmaceutical company, Sandoz Canada, on many occasions voiced his opposition to the very legislation he had introduced. I would be delighted to provide a copy of my correspondence if the right hon. gentleman could satisfactorily explain his conversion from advocate to opponent back to advocate.

I am not quite finished with the Liberals. In fact, I could go on at length if my time in this debate were not limited. I have to quote from an article from last May featuring the smiling face and words of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). I do not know if the Hon. member really believed what he was saying or if he was only catering to the media.

This interview appeared in the May edition of Revue pharmaceutique canadienne. The nub of the quotation in the article was that the Hon. Member believed it was time to redress the current policy and provide multinationals channels for more research and development dollars into Canada. In the article, he was quoted as saying the following:

> I may be branded as a heretic amongst Liberals in this country but I happen to believe in intellectual property rights, and I think the patent laws of 1969 went too far in one direction.

I would be pleased to provide a copy of this article to all Members opposite, because the picture really is a good likeness of the Hon. Member and it is such a pleasure to discover such a bright and alert member of the Opposition who so strongly supports our Government's policy in this area.

Let me turn now to the tactics of the NDP. I can understand why they always support the Liberals when the Liberals are in power. They think so much alike and their tactics are so similar.

I have here a copy of a coupon that was circulated to all those attending the recent NDP convention in Montreal. It has a good heading and is obviously the product of a national or multinational advertising agency probably based in Toronto. That is not quite the style of NDPers, but maybe their members will forgive them for this lapse in judgment. The heading reads: "Let's Bust the Tories' Drug Deal". It kind of makes you think we are running illicit drugs—the exact effect the NDP wants in order to raise the fears of average Canadians. It then suggests that our policy will cost Canadians $600 million a year in higher priced prescriptions.

• (1220)

Where is the proof for this contention or the contention that employers will be asking for cuts in union-negotiated drug plans? I have not heard of any astronomical rises in drug costs, nor have I heard of contract negotiations being stalled at the bargaining table because employers want to cut the health protection policies enjoyed by many unions. Like Liberal strategy, this approach simply plays upon the fears of Canadians, fears that are not supported by the facts.

We get a clue to the motivation of the NDP when we read the fine print of the bottom of this NDP advertisement, "Produced by the Canadian Labour Congress". Now, I have nothing against Canadian labour, but I do not think Canadian workers of any stripe will be taken in by such professional advertising tactics. That is what the Liberals and the NDP are trying to do to this legislation. They want to mask the benefits of our policy in scare tactics and rhetoric calculated to appeal to people who do not understand the issue and are willing to accept the narrow-minded thinking of Members opposite.

I am sure many of these adherents would be astonished to learn of the range of thinking on this issue by various members of the Liberal Party. I would not like to pry too deeply into the views of the various members of the NDP because I am sure the same kind of schizophrenic reactions would result.

I am saving the pièce de résistance for last. I have a copy of the resolutions approved by the last national Liberal convention. I know the Liberal Leader is not bound by these resolutions, but they certainly contribute to one side of the debate.

Resolution 13-K-4 supports increased research in the field of biotechnology. That is precisely what this Bill does. I never thought I would support a policy or proposal adopted on the floor of the Liberal convention, but I do. I can only hope that all the Liberals in my riding, if there are any, will vote for me in the next election because of my support.

I have put in place a policy to ensure that Canada moves into the forefront of biotechnological sciences. The results to date have demonstrated that we are going in the right direction. I would like to issue a challenge to the Liberals. Give me a list of all the Liberal delegates who approved Resolution 13-K-4 and I will give you the same list back of people who support the policy which is being debated in the House today.

There is more. Resolution 55-2E—I will never understand how Liberals number their resolutions, maybe it is just to confuse their Leader—encourages private sector participation in research and development. That is precisely what this Bill does.

[Translation]

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the policies inherent in Bill C-22 are aimed at achieving all these objectives which were endorsed by the nation-wide Liberal convention. I simply hope that the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will respond to these questions when he takes the floor.

A few additional comments, Mr. Speaker, the most telling of them all. I get letters, lots of them, but they do not come from the average Canadian as depicted by the NDP, nor from the ordinary Canadian as described by the Liberals. They come from Canadians, and reflect sincere beliefs rather than the product of sensational distortsions or national petitions. They are unsolicited and express support for our efforts.

[English]

One letter is from a family doctor, diagnosed as having acute leukemia, who says that current Canadian drug patent laws provide no incentives for drug companies to research and develop drugs in Canada. The doctor writes:

> In conclusion, please do not oppose the new drug Patent Act for soon-forgotten political points and newspaper coverage . . . . Please remember that to oppose this legislation will deny the hope of new treatment and new cures for patients like myself, for your constituents and perhaps even yourself and your family members.

I would also like to note a January, 1987, article in the Winnipeg Sun describing a national lobby for Patent Act changes coming out of Toronto. This is not a product of multinational corporations. It is a campaign initiated by Doris Campbell, a quadriplegic who has vowed to fight for the new legislation as long as she can wiggle one toe. I should add that at the moment she can only wiggle one toe and communicates by tapping out Morse code messages with that toe. It is for the Doris Campbells of this world that we are going forward with this legislation because Doris believes that the issue is developing cures through research to save Canadian lives.

I apologize for all these quotes from Canadians, Mr. Speaker, but I want to make the point that the Government is pursuing these legislative changes for people, not for votes, which I suggest is the only reason Members opposite have forsaken principle, honesty and humanity to oppose what we are trying to do.

One final note is from the Lutherwood Institute which treats the emotional and psychiatric problems of children. This institute spends a significant amount of money every year on drugs. My correspondent is particularly blunt in his remarks about our proposed legislation. He says:

> While costs to the consumer are always an issue to us, I also recognize the importance of research in developing new and more effective medication for a variety of physical and mental illnesses. As a result, we would encourage you to proceed with the implementation of Bill C-22 in order to encourage the necessary innovation in Canada for the development of prescription drugs.

What can I say, Mr. Speaker? We have principle on our side. The Canadians who are supporting us are not coming forward because we are misrepresenting the issue, they are coming forward because they have a stake in the results of our policy. They desperately need the solutions which we are putting forward. In fact, according to the results of a recent poll by Decima Research, two out of three Canadians support the amendments to the Patent Act which affect prescription drugs. I defy a single Member opposite to come forward with such telling support for his or her position on this issue.

I have one more thing to say, Mr. Speaker, then I will sit down and let rhetoric and political expediency take over the debate. I am very concerned about the processes of the House of Commons which allow 47 new amendments to come forward from opposition Members at report stage of this legislation when these same Members proposed only 11 amendments within committee. I submit to you that these amendments should have been considered and discussed rationally and openly in committee with public submissions to expand the debate on them.

Mr. Orlikow: Then they could not have been discussed here.

Mr. Andre: I get the feeling, and I will not put it any more strongly than that, that these final-hour amendments were nothing more than an attempt to delay this essential legislation.

Mr. McCurdy: What a parade of nonsense.

Mr. Andre: They were a forum for political points that those opposing this legislation did not feel competent to make in committee.

Mr. McCurdy: If ever there was a kangaroo court, it was that committee.

Mr. Andre: However, despite these rather underhanded and unparliamentary tactics of the Opposition—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member may rise on a point of order, but I hope this debate will carry on in calmness.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister did not want to mislead Members of the House or the public, but the facts are that had amendments been moved in the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order, it is debate. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to bring that up when he has the floor.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I hope those who may be observing this debate here or on television will note that when one says something with which socialists disagree they attempt to shout you down. That is the socialist tactic. Whether it is a member of the Government or a visitor, such as the President of the United States, they shout you down if they do not agree with you. That is what socialists believe democracy is all about.

However, despite these rather underhanded and unparliamentary tactics of the Opposition, I know the House will approve of the policy embodied in the legislation and will pass it without undue delay. I will be listening to the subsequent debate with some interest. The technique that will be advanced by the Opposition will be, I am sure, reminiscent of an American politician of some distinction in the early part of this century. I know the Opposition does not like to be identified with American politics, so I do not understand why they adopt American political principles so often. However, the principle we have seen demonstrated in this House over the course of this debate has been to tell it long, tell it often, and sooner or later people will begin to believe it. That is the politics of the early twentieth century.

I have a lot of faith that modern-day Canadians will see through the political agenda of the Opposition and support our Bill because it is good for Canada, good for the health of Canadians, good for research, and good for our young scientists. It will save the consumer money.

• (1230)

The Opposition continually says that this will hurt senior citizens. They know they are not telling the truth because senior citizens are covered by drug plans. It is simply a falsehood to keep repeating that. However, the Opposition believes in the dictum, say it loudly, say if often, and eventually it will be believed. It is the "big lie" technique which they keep repeating.

As the Decima poll showed, Canadians are too sophisticated to fall for that propaganda technique.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond and comment with regard to Bill C-22. In particular, I want to address some of the matters the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) attempted to raise in his speech. The certain facts he has given and situations which he has raised today are totally incomplete.

There are three comments I want to make with regard to the process through which this Bill has gone. On April 15, 1987, the Minister put his time allocation motion to the House and said, as reported at page 5202 of Hansard:

> There were 82 hours of study in the committee, hardly a quick passing glimpse. Sixty-five hours were spent hearing witnesses.

He went on to say:

> Mr. Speaker, 46 different groups were witnesses before the committee . . .

He continued:

> Since the 1984 election there has never been a piece of legislation which has had more discussion in Parliament, outside of Parliament, and in various domains across the country than this piece of legislation. If there is anyone in this House who can suggest that they have not had an opportunity to examine this legislation, that they have not heard about it from the people concerned and received their reactions, they must have been living in some sort of cocoon.

Those comments by the Minister are rather unfortunate but, indeed, very typical of the Minister and Conservative Members who sat on the committee examining Bill C-22.

There were many witnesses for the precise reasons given by the Minister himself. The substance of this Bill is important for Canadians, and for the pharmaceutical sector. It is also important for provincial Governments that will have to pay the lion's share of costs, which taxpayers will ultimately pay. For those reasons, numerous witnesses from across the country wanted to appear before the committee.

Opposition Members in the committee attempted, without success, to deal intelligently and reasonably with members of the Conservative Party. If memory serves me correctly, we were told as a result of a resolution that was passed that only 45 minutes would be given to each witness. We responded by saying that that was not sufficient time since many of the groups, including national organizations, would spend 20 to 25 minutes presenting written briefs. That would only allow 20 minutes for questioning. That is not really sufficient time for a thorough examination of briefs that groups of Canadians had gone to the trouble of preparing, certainly not enough time in order that legislators have an opportunity to examine and thoroughly question the substance of their briefs.

I recall suggesting to government Members of the committee that perhaps we should wait to see how many briefs would be presented and then determine how much time would be required to examine them. Government Members simply indicated that the committee would sit on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. While I accept the role of the majority in the House of Commons, surely one would have thought that due to our minority there would have been some civility and understanding of the demands that are made on the Opposition in terms of committees and their responsibilities in the House and their constituencies.

We were then confronted with a motion that was put forward in the committee by the Conservative Members of Parliament when opposition Members were not present. With some 15 minutes left in the meeting, they adopted a motion whereby they unilaterally decided to cut debate off at the committee stage. It is another example of interference in the process in order to put in place restrictions on opposition Members and those who may be opposed to the substance of the Bill. The restrictions were such that it was very difficult for those groups to present their views before Canada's highest court, the House of Commons. That is the sort of spirit that government Members created in the committee.

Every opposition suggestion, no matter how reasonable, was either voted down or not adhered to by government Members. Yet they wonder why only 11 amendments were introduced at the committee stage. It would not have been possible to receive a thorough examination of a substantive amendment.

The amendments that were put in committee were basically technical or consequential amendments that would not have shook the Government, rocked the House of Commons or upset the President of the United States. Yet the Government rejected all of those amendments, with the exception of one.

We introduced amendments at report stage in order to give Canadians an opportunity to hear the debate and understand where the Parties stood. I would have thought that if one had such a great case to support Bill C-22, government Members would have been keen to take the opportunity to support the thrust of the provisions of Bill C-22. I would have thought that out of 211 Members at least half would rise to present their great case that the Minister talks about. That did not happen. Very few Members spoke to the amendments to Bill C-22 at report stage.

I suggest that we must reflect upon this process very carefully. It is true that we heard from a number of witnesses, but many more wanted to appear. There was a certain amount of time given to witnesses, but not enough. There were 45 minutes given to the Canadian Labour Congress, to the Consumers' Association of Canada, to the Minister of Health in the Province of Manitoba. There were 45 minutes given to the National Anti-Poverty Organization and to the Canadian Auto Workers Union. That is not sufficient time to investigate and probe into the presentations by the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association and the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. That would have been a golden opportunity for Members on all sides to question the authenticity of the remarks contained in their submissions.

The Minister and his predecessors have argued in and out of the House that since Canada must live in the international community our regulatory system with regard to the pharmaceutical industry must be in keeping with other countries of the world, particularly the United States. Therefore, our present system is going to be changed. It will not become exactly the same as the American system, but we are moving in that direction. That was the argument for changing our laws to become internationally competitive, to move to the American system. Let us look at the process of the committee.

• (1240)

Mr. Benjamin: So we can get free trade.

Mr. Dingwall: That is right. It was moved by Members opposite, that if that is the way in which the Government wishes to go, logically, and if one is being honest intellectually, one would want to have individuals and organizations in the United States come before our parliamentary committee to expound upon their views on the system presently in place in the United States.

I think, for instance, of the National Senior Citizens Organization in the United States, of the Chairman of the United States Generic Pharmaceutical Industry, and a Congressman who chairs the subcommittee on health and who is now leading an investigation into the high cost of prescription drugs in the United States, Congressman Waxman, with whom I met. I would have thought we would have tried to have a few Republicans come before the committee just to get an understanding and better appreciation. But no, the process was curtailed. We were prohibited and limited so we could not hear from our colleagues and friends from the United States.

Was that particular motion brought in before our deliberations began? No, it was not. They waited until we heard PMAC. At that time its president was an American citizen. I had no objection, and I am certain my colleagues in the New Democratic Party had no objections as well, to this particular individual coming before our committee and expounding on his views as to why he favours the legislation. However, it was only after the lead spokesperson and organizer for Bill C-22, PMAC, was allowed, that all other individuals who may have been opposed to the Government's Bill were prohibited from coming before the committee and examining Bill C-22.

The process from its early stages—the way in which the Government tried to introduce the Bill in June of 1986—in itself, I think, tells us of the intent and motive of Members opposite. So the process from then until now, with time allocation, closure on this particular Bill, has raised considerable anxiety among Canadians who have called upon opposition Members of Parliament to fight their case in the highest chamber in this land, the House of Commons.

The Minister had the audacity to refer to polls. He said, "I challenge anyone here to refute this poll". The poll to which he referred was conducted by Decima Research. Decima does its work for the Conservative Party of Canada, and it conducted this poll because PMAC, the multinational organization, the lead organization supporting Bill C-22, retained Decima to conduct the research.

One may come from Edmonton, from Nova Scotia, from Newfoundland, but is there any thinking person who did not know what the conclusion of that poll would be? We knew before it was taken. Even those of us who live on that great island of Cape Breton knew what the conclusion would be. It was not anything new that Members of Parliament were being given. The agenda was written; what the questions were going to be and, of course, what the answers were going to be. But that was the Minister's poll. I think it was taken around February 26 to March 4 of 1987.

The Minister said here in the Chamber today, "I challenge anyone to refute the contents of that particular poll". Ministers of the Crown have to be careful. Sometimes they have these periods of amnesia where they conveniently forget. Does the Minister forget the poll which was conducted in January of 1987? I want to read what that poll said, and I am prepared to table it for Members opposite. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), would love to have a copy of this particular poll. I will give the House the highlights of the poll:

> A majority of Canadians oppose the proposed drug patent extension legislation with significant levels of opposition among Canadians from all walks of life.

What are the numbers? In this particular poll 58 per cent of the Canadian people opposed amendments to the Patent Act, while 30 per cent were in favour. Sixty-six per cent of the people in British Columbia were opposed to the amendments to the Patent Act.

I will read the question so I do not confuse Members opposite, particularly the only Minister in the Chamber at this particular time. I am sure she would want to know what the questions was. It says:

> As you may know, the Government recently presented legislation which will give drug companies exclusive patent rights to manufacture and sell the drugs they invented for a longer period of time than they have now. Other companies will not be allowed to produce or sell less expensive copies of most drugs for 10 years. Do you yourself support or oppose this proposed legislation?

I think that is a fair and objective question. In that great Province of Alberta from which some very distinguished Members of Parliament come, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, 62 per cent are opposed to Bill C-22. The people in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, one would think, might be in favour of this legislation, but 69 per cent are opposed to this particular Bill. In Atlantic Canada, 56 per cent are opposed. In Quebec, 54 per cent are opposed and in Ontario, 54 per cent are opposed. That is very revealing information, as I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker.

The anticipated impact of the proposed legislation on the research activities in Canada of drug companies was researched. What do they say with regard to research? Will there be more research or increased profits? In Alberta, and I will concentrate on Alberta for a moment because I am aware of the Speaker's great interest in the concerns and aspirations of the people of that province, 59 per cent believe there would be increased profits for the multinational corporations. In British Columbia, 62 per cent of the people polled believe there will be increased profits. In Atlantic Canada, 55 per cent believe that and 60 per cent in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The percentages of those who believe there will be more research are; 26 per cent in British Columbia, 32 per cent in Alberta, 30 per cent in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, 32 per cent in Ontario, 34 per cent in Quebec and 28 per cent in the Atlantic provinces. So you see, Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very much against what the Government is doing.

What is the anticipated impact of the proposed legislation on drug prices, which was the third questions posed in this particular poll? It was a poll with respect to which the Minister challenged us here in the Chamber today to see if we could refute anything that he had in his possession, namely, the Decima poll. But this is a poll that was taken prior to that. The question asked in the poll was this:

> Do you think we can expect the price of pharmaceutical drugs to increase, decrease or remain the same as a result of the proposed legislation?

● (1250)

Some 72 per cent of those polled believe that prices will increase. The breakdown of that figure across Canada is as follows: Some 78 per cent of those in British Columbia and in Atlantic Canada believe that prices will increase; some 63 per cent of those in Quebec, 73 per cent of those in Ontario, 76 per cent of those in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and 75 per cent of those in Alberta believe that drug prices will increase as a result of amendments to the Patent Act.

The fourth and final question posed in the poll which I am sharing with Members of the House today was:

> In preparing this legislation, do you think the Mulroney government was paying more attention to the interests of multinational drug companies or to the interests of Canadian consumers?

Some 64 per cent of Canadians polled believe that the Government's main interest is that of multinational drug companies as opposed to that of Canadian consumers. The breakdown across Canada is as follows: Some 72 per cent of those in British Columbia, 66 per cent of those in Alberta, 71 per cent of those in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, 60 per cent of those in Atlantic Canada, 59 per cent of those in Quebec and 63 per cent of those polled in Ontario believe that the Government's main interest is in respect of multinational drug companies as opposed to consumers.

The Minister referred to some interesting statistics in his remarks. I would not want to say that he intentionally forgot, because that would be unparliamentary and I would not want to be unparliamentary because Your Honour quite rightly would point out that I was being unparliamentary, but for whatever reason he has forgotten what is in this particular poll commissioned for one of Canada's most respected newspapers and which was carried out by a respectable polling agency.

I now wish to go into a few other areas since it was alleged by some that the 1969 Patent Act had a negative effect in terms of job creation in Canada. The 1969 legislation is the legislation which is in existence today. In his recommendations Eastman dealt with this matter very thoroughly in order to dispel any suggestion that somehow job creation was retarded or prohibited under the 1969 legislation.

In Canada employment in the pharmaceuticals and medicines industry increased by almost 29 per cent between 1967 and 1982. Employment not only increased noticeably in this industry, it increased more rapidly than employment in all manufacturing in Canada. So on the issue of jobs it cannot be said, based on fact, that the existing legislation has in any way taken away from job creation. In fact, the complete opposite is true, which is evident on a review of the statistics from 1967 to 1982.

Employment in manufacturing increased by only 3.4 per cent between 1967 and 1982. The ratio of employment in pharmaceuticals and medicines to employment in all manufacturing increased during this period, rising from 0.74 per cent in 1967 to 0.92 per cent in 1982. Thus we can see that the legislation did not restrict or prohibit the creation of jobs, but rather increased economic opportunities. It provided jobs to those Canadians who wanted to work in this particular field.

Some observers have nevertheless commented that although employment may have increased in the pharmaceuticals and medicines industry from 1967 to 1982, it would have increased even more without the 1969 Act. That is the claim of Members opposite. Their claim does not appear to be supported by the facts. However, employment in pharmaceuticals and medicines in fact increased more rapidly in Canada than it did in the United States over the same period of time.

The data provided thus far demonstrate that the 1969 Act had no adverse impact on employment in the pharmaceuticals industry in Canada. That is very, very clear. But the data tell us nothing about employment in the Province of Quebec. In this respect the Minister has hauled out from time to time a resolution tasked by the National Assembly in the Province of Quebec.

What happened in Quebec? As we know, the pharmaceuticals industry is almost exclusively concentrated in the Toronto and Montreal areas. The data that I have show that between 1953 and 1982 Quebec's share of employment appears to have declined in this industry and gone to Ontario. For example, in 1953 some 48.3 per cent of employment in the industry was in Quebec while the corresponding 1982 figure was 43.3 per cent. It should be emphasized, however, that these percentages fluctuated a great deal from year to year, as shown in the figures that I have here in front of me.

The question which now needs to be asked is whether or not this relative loss of jobs in Quebec is the result of the impact of the 1969 Act concerning pharmaceuticals. It does not appear to be. The employment data in fact indicate that the ratio of employment in Quebec decreased in many industries since the 1960s. In manufacturing alone Quebec's percentage of employment dropped steadily after 1962. In 1962 employment in the manufacturing sector in Quebec was 32.7 per cent while in Ontario it was 48.3 per cent. In 1982 the figure had decreased to 26.5 per cent in Quebec while it was 48.4 per cent in Ontario.

The conclusion must therefore be that the 1969 Act had no adverse effects on employment in the pharmaceuticals and medicines industry in Canada or in the Province of Quebec. I share that information with Members opposite who for whatever reasons would want us to believe that the 1969 Act had a disastrous effect on job creation in Canada when nothing could be further from the truth.

The Minister said that he had received a great many letters from Canadians in support of Bill C-22. Members on this side of the House would have hoped that Members opposite who are receiving such mail by the carload in support of the Bill would have participated more in the debate that preceded today's debate. But that did not take place. The Minister touted some of his—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) for interrupting him, but I waited until one minute before one o'clock since I know that he will resume his very good remarks at three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, after listening carefully to the remarks of the Minister who spoke a short time ago, this is the first opportunity I have had to give notice of a question of privilege, if we find on checking the "blues" that there seems to be one. I believe that I heard the Minister say that the Opposition used under handed and unparliamentary tactics in reference to some 11 amendments in committee and some 40 at report stage. It is not unparliamentary for any Hon. Member in the House to abide by the rules of the House. His remarks are a reflection on the integrity of Members, specifically opposition Members of the committee. More specifically, they reflect on the Chair. The Chair would not allow unparliamentary procedures. I believe the Minister should withdraw his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Now that the Hon. Member has risen on a point of order I hope that he will give written notice of his question of privilege so that this matter can be brought up tomorrow, since the "blues" cannot be used in this respect. If the Hon. Member is willing to do that then I am sure the Speaker will consider the matter.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

DISASTERS

TRAGIC DEATHS OF FISHERMEN OFF EAST AND WEST COASTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, every day on the open waters, far from land, our fishermen have learned to respect the awesome power of Mother Nature. They know that they are often only an accident away from certain tragedy. This year has brought much sorrow to our fishing communities.

In January the fishing vessel Myers III was caught in a sudden storm off Newfoundland's south coast, claiming the lives of five fishermen including four brothers from the Myers family. Then, on the Pacific Coast, the vessel Scotia Cape disappeared with its six crew members. Several days ago there were two accidents in the Gulf of St. Lawrence which claimed the lives of four fishermen. Those fishermen were all trying to make a living in a very tough occupation.

It is often said that our fishermen and other primary producers are the backbone of our economy. Too often they have made the ultimate sacrifice. I am sure I speak for all my colleagues in asking the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and his cabinet colleagues, along with their provincial counterparts, to do everything possible to make our fishing industry safer. I cannot think of a more worthy cause.

S. O. 21

ABORTION

FORTHCOMING VOTE ON PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, Monday, May 11, marks a significant day in the life of this Parliament. It will be the first time in this Parliament that there will be a recorded vote on a Private Members' Motion. Motion M-37 asks Parliament and the provinces to amend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to include unborn children as a protected category.

Abortion is one of the great moral questions of the 20th century. In September, 1984, the people of Canada sent us here to take tough decisions. I believe every Member should state clearly how he or she stands on this issue. I suggest it is unacceptable for Members to avoid making a decision because of procedural difficulties with the motion. We owe more than that to ourselves and our constituents. Therefore, on Monday, May 11, I say to all Members: Stand up and be counted; all of Canada will be watching.

* * *

FORESTRY

BRUNDTLAND REPORT—EFFECT OF DEPLETION OF FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Canada has designated May 4 to May 10 as Forestry Week. In view of the Brundtland report released last week by the World Commission on Environment and Development, I remind the Government of the urgent need not only for increased awareness of the state of Canada's forests, but of the grave predictions regarding the environment of the entire world.

One billion people on this earth are forced to cut more trees than they plant, literally cutting away the lungs of the earth. As this continues deserts spread, the number of species diminishes, and the climate changes. The Brundtland report charges that all those in a position of power to alter this situation must be held accountable for the pollution and loss of resources caused by their decisions.

Each year an area of forest the size of Newfoundland is destroyed. Some 40 per cent of the world's tropical forests are already gone. Each year an area the size of Nova Scotia is turned to desert, increasing the more than one-third of the world which has already suffered desertification. I call on the Government to raise the priority for forestry and agro-forestry projects in the Third World, and on CIDA specifically to put more emphasis on non-exploitive forestry.

[Translation]

THE LATE RAYMOND BLAIS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, May 6, 1987, in the Saint-David church, the family of Mr. Raymond Blais will pay their last respects to this outstanding Canadian. South shore residents will sympathize with Quebecers and Canadians as evidence of their sorrow and their loss.

Raymond Blais devoted his professional life to the co-operative movement, the Mouvement Desjardins. Under the guidance of Raymond Blais the Desjardins co-operative movement crossed world boundaries.

A dreadful illness took away the husband, the father, the friend, the public man loved by everybody.

May his soul rest in peace.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REIMBURSEMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO CERTAIN WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the riding of Rosemont, I met with residents of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve and Mercier, three constituencies represented by Conservative Members, and again I spoke with older workers who are wondering what the Conservative Government is waiting for before proceeding with second reading, committee stage and third reading of the legislative measures aimed at reimbursing unemployment insurance benefits.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this Government and Hon. Members have no idea whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is prepared to proceed immediately with all stages of the Bill with a view to reimbursing the 35,000 Canadian workers, including 13,000 in Quebec. The Liberals are ready.

But, unlike the Conservative Members, we will never agree to discriminate against older workers, men and women who lost their job and will have to find another to become eligible. Never will the Liberals under the Right Hon. John Turner accept such discrimination towards older workers.

* * *

FORESTRY WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF FOREST RESOURCE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the importance of Forestry Week during Tree and Forest Week in Canada. On behalf of 43,000 people who work in the pulp and paper industry in Quebec, 24,000 who work in the lumber industry and 9,000 employed by forestry operations, on behalf of more than 127,000 people whose jobs depend indirectly on the forestry industry in Quebec, on behalf of 120,000 owners of private wood lots in Quebec and on behalf of the 127 communities in Quebec whose economy depends on our forests, on behalf of all Quebec forestry associations and on behalf of Quebec's honorary president of this special week, Mr. Jean Perron from Abitibi—Témiscamingue, on behalf of the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) and on behalf of all Quebec Members in this House, I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is an excellent opportunity to show all Quebecers the importance of our forests for the well-being and quality of life of the people of our province.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PORT OF CHURCHILL DEVELOPMENT BOARD—SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT'S CUT IN FUNDING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Saskatchewan, as a result of the horrendous deficit it has incurred through its own actions, has decided to cut funding to the Port of Churchill Development Board. This is a very short-sighted action.

It is interesting to note that 90 per cent to 95 per cent of the grain handled by the Port of Churchill comes from the Province of Saskatchewan.

I think the Government of Saskatchewan is cutting its own throat and the throat of its farmers by taking this short-sighted action. I call upon the Premier of Saskatchewan to reconsider this stupid and uncalled for action.

* * *

ENERGY

GULF CANADA—BEAUFORT SEA OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the tentative announcement made at the recent Houston World Petroleum Congress that, subject to certain price considerations, Gulf Canada is to start work this year on its 800 million barrel Amauligak oil deposit in the Beaufort Sea area of the Northwest Territories is certainly welcome news.

Congratulations are due to Gulf and its partners, Husky Oil and Norcen Energy, on what could be a $4.5 billion investment which will revitalize the northern oil and gas industry and will increase Canada's oil supplies by some 170,000 barrels per day.

The Government of Canada should now expedite the regulatory process so that this major project might see an early fruition.

S. O. 21

FORESTRY

VALUE OF EXPORTS—IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this is National Forest Week. The social and economic impact of the forest sector in Canada is enormous. We export 22 per cent of the world's total amount of forest products; $16.2 billion worth in 1985.

Three-quarters of a million Canadians are directly or indirectly employed in the forest sector. The forest industry provides the support system for more than 300 one-industry towns in Canada.

Because our forests are so important to the national economy, they cannot and must not be exploited in an anarchistic or mercenary way. To do so would be to endanger the health and equilibrium of the environment and the prosperity of generations to come who will depend upon the forests.

The Government of Canada must do more, not less, in giving active leadership in the cause of forest regeneration, research, and education.

The preservation of some forest lands must always remain a firm policy of this and future Governments. Our national parks heritage is precious to all of us. Some forest lands are the traditional lands of aboriginal peoples, and they must be left unharvested until the question of aboriginal title and unsettled claims is resolved.

Canada cannot be understood without reference to its forests. This imposes a heavy obligation upon all of us—users, conservers, and preservers alike.

* * *

CELTIC AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL GATHERING OF THE CLANS—AN INVITATION TO NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia I extend an invitation to all Scots and would-be Scots to attend the 1987 International Gathering of the Clans, being hosted for a third time in the New Scotland of the New World, Nova Scotia.

The Highlands will be ringing with the sound of the pipes and the fiddle. Commencing with the official opening in Halifax on June 27, a program of Scottish gatherings, festivals, and events will carry on throughout the province until August 8.

Toward the middle of July, the Antigonish Highland Games will get under way. This is the oldest Scottish festival in North America. Also in July, St. Anns will host the annual Gaelic Mod. I am proud to say that these events will both occur in my riding.

The Scottish have a proud heritage, one which was transplanted to New Scotland many generations ago. The family ties that kept the Celtic character intact through the many years are still strong.

Hosting the International Gathering of the Clans is an honour we are proud to accept and an occasion we are all happy to celebrate.

The pipes are calling you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

NEED FOR REFORM

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we must recognize the fact that the Official Languages Act passed by this Parliament in 1969 is no longer sufficient to meet the objectives set when it was first implemented, namely to promote and defend bilingualism in this country.

The latest report by the Commissioner of Official Languages, and appearances before a Joint Committee of the House of Departments and Federal Agencies that blithely infringe the intent of this Act are a clear indication that we must proceed with a thorough reform.

Mr. Speaker, the present Government has a mandate and a duty to correct a situation that arose as a result of the inertia and neglect of the Liberals. In this country, every federal employee should be able to work in the language of his choice, just as every citizen has the right to be served in the language of his choice.

Mr. Speaker, this reform must refresh Canadians' perception of what it means to be a country that is founded on the respect for two cultures. We need reform and we need it fast!

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

SPORTS

EFFECT OF CORPORATE SPONSORSHIP AND FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly obvious that corporate domination of sport in Canada is not the be-all and end-all that some, including the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), would like it to be. This morning we learned that the corporate battle between two breweries has killed the Canadian Grand Prix. We also know that corporate rights to the televising of NHL hockey play off games is preventing many Canadians from being able to follow our national pastime.

In Thunder Bay, for example, we have for years been able to watch the Stanley Cup semi-finals but this year we have been shut out of the Edmonton/Detroit series. The CTV has decided not to televise the play-offs this year, leaving the CBC to cover only one series. Carling O'Keefe, which own the rights to the Edmonton/Detroit series have, over the past few days, set up a special network of TV stations to show the games but they have not made arrangements for the games to be shown in Thunder Bay.

I raise these matters to point out, Mr. Speaker, that when we hand over the funding of sports events, whether they be professional events as in this case, or amateur events as the Minister is trying to encourage, that it is the interests of the corporations to make money, which is the prime consideration, and the interests of the athletes and the fans come second.

* * *

EDUCATION

NEED FOR NATIONAL COUNCIL ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, right now thousands of young people are finishing exams and are in the process of finding or beginning summer jobs, that is, those lucky enough to find jobs.

Since 1984 the Mulroney Government has consistently cut back in funding for jobs for young people, particularly for summer jobs. It has eliminated our First Chance apprenticeship program, which would have helped 100,000 young people every year to bridge the gap between education and experience. It addressed the Catch-22 situation faced by so many young people of "no experience-no job—no job-no experience".

There is a crisis in post-secondary education in this country. Accessibility is limited, quality is declining, and facilities are deteriorating. We believe that we need a national council on post-secondary education to bring together all the players in the field. We must address the financial ability of those who want to attend college and university in Canada. We need that program now, Mr. Speaker, so that our young people can have a decent place in this country of ours.

AGRICULTURE

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT PRODUCTS—PROTECTION FROM IMPORTS ADVOCATED

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government's aim in free trade would ultimately lead to goods being produced in Canada only if those goods could not be produced and transported to Canada more cheaply from somewhere else.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have indicated that they will not guarantee protection from imports for products which are presently under supply management in agriculture. If such a policy is followed in agricultural products, dairy and egg boards would not be able survive.

New Democrats call upon the Government to state categorically that it will protect supply management products from cheaper imports even if it does sign a free trade agreement with the United States.

* * *

[Translation]

YOUTH

ESTABLISHMENT OF GENERAL POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in an interview he gave the newspaper La Presse last March, the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) made it clear that he had given up the idea of establishing a general youth policy. These were the words he used, and I quote:

> The way to help youth is not by adding new programs or spending more money. We have to consider the general context and the Government's over-all strategy.

Mr. Speaker, it is a sorry state of affairs indeed, when the Minister of State for Youth decides to drop the idea of implementing a special youth policy for Canadians. The present infrastructures are definitely inadequate, and the problems facing our young people such as drugs, illiteracy, poverty and AIDS demand the development of real policies.

The Minister has no right to use a drop in the unemployment rate to justify his failure to act at a time when in many areas the unemployment rate has reached alarming proportions.

Mr. Speaker, what are we supposed to think when a Minister of State for Youth publicly refuses to help youth with concrete measures? What are young Canadians supposed to think?

S. O. 21

[English]

SHIPBUILDING

CANADIAN FRIGATE PROGRAM—AWARDING OF SECOND PHASE CONTRACTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the first phase of the Canadian Frigate Program is moving on schedule. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd. has put together a most effective team of management, design and trades people and the team is now ready to proceed with the second phase of this program.

• (1415)

Under the present phase, benefits are shared in the following manner: 23 per cent to New Brunswick, 52 per cent to Quebec, 20 per cent to Ontario and 5 per cent to western Canada.

Under the second phase with six ships being built in Saint John, only 52.6 per cent of the benefits would stay in Atlantic Canada and 47 per cent would be distributed to the other provinces of Canada.

If cost has anything to do with the awarding of this contract, the entire second phase will be awarded to Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd. because it can deliver the best, most cost effective contract to the Canadian taxpayer.

* * *

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

SUPPORT URGED FOR MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS CAMPAIGN

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, today three members of the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped were able to take part in the launching of a campaign here at the House of Commons on behalf of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. The society itself was well represented here at the House of Commons.

I would like to bring to the attention of Members of the House that the Red Carnation Drive which begins this month is aimed at encouraging Members of Parliament, and through them the entire nation, to understand more fully the importance of the research which is required in this field and will be important in limiting the number of disabled and handicapped people. It is aimed as well at bringing to Canadians an understanding of the affliction this disease brings and of the fact that we are all susceptible to becoming in some way disabled or handicapped at any moment in our lifetimes.

On behalf of the committee, I want to express to the House and Canadians our concern that this research and development take place. We should keep in mind this important drive which begins today and continues for the next month.

* * *

PARLIAMENT

DECLARATION OF COMPLETE SMOKE-FREE ZONE SUGGESTED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is time for Parliament to set an example. On Monday evening, April 27, I moved, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White), that smoking during all hearings of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare be forbidden. It was unanimously approved with a few "Ohs" and "Ahs". It just so happened that the committee's witness that night was the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

I have said before and I say again that it is not only conclusive that smoking is a serious health hazard to smokers and non-smokers alike but that Parliament and its precincts should set the best possible example at all times for all of Canada. Question Period may on occasion be the most notable exception to this, but all other practices cannot be.

With new legislation evolving to limit smoking in the federal workplace and in that of federally-regulated businesses, it seems contradictory to me that Parliament itself is not smoke-free. I am proud to say that at least the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has taken this exemplary step.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REFUGEES

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister must recall with pride the fact that less than six months ago Canada was given the Nansen Award by the United Nations for our record in receiving refugees. The Prime Minister must reflect with shame on the statement made this morning on refugees by the Minister of State for Immigration.

Why are the Prime Minister and the Government defaming our reputation as a generous country? Does the Prime Minister wish to trigger restrictions on refugees in other countries? Does he want the global tragedy of refugees to be compounded even further?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are about to put in place a process that will guarantee an open determination to everyone in need of our protection. A real refugee will never be sent back to face death or torture.

We need a process that puts claims through fairly and quickly, and we assure the House that will be done. We must curb the abuse and we must be able to manage our resources effectively.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister that the process and particularly the pre-selection process will be an overwhelming burden for refugees trying to get into our country.

[Translation]

EXAMINATION OF ORIGIN AND REGION FROM WHICH APPLICANT COMES—CONSEQUENCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a second question for the Prime Minister. He is telling us that no "real" refugee will be refused, yet he knows that the pre-selection process is an obstacle intended to make the system, not more equitable, but more effective.

Will the Prime Minister admit that simple examination of the origin and the region from which the applicant comes is an irresponsible solution which does not take very delicate circumstances into account?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we put into place a first step whereby two individuals, one an adjudicator and the other a member of the independent Refugee Determination Board, will examine the individual at the inquiry using four very specific criteria: Does the person have an established refugee status elsewhere? Can he be returned to a safe third country? Did he have the opportunity to make a refugee claim in that country? Could he have received its protection?

It is very, very clear that we must have that process in place. We must be able to curb some of the abuses of the integrity and credibility of our system. The specifics are very clear. If the individual falls into one of the criteria he will be excluded from the system. However, as long as one of the two people think there is a shred of evidence, everyone else will be sent to the Convention Refugee Determination Board for a full oral, non-adversarial hearing, and be given every right to show they fear persecution.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The pre-selection process of which the Minister speaks has no due process of law involved in it whatsoever.

POLICY AFFECTING REFUGEES ARRIVING FROM INTERMEDIATE COUNTRIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my third question to the Minister. Why has he stated that Canada may not receive refugees if they come to this country via a third country? Why should Canada, as a humane country, shift its burden in this world-wide problem to other countries to which refugees may flee or be chased because of war, torture and persecution? Why is the Government, on behalf of our country, not living up to its humane responsibility?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, this year Canada will choose 20,000 refugees under our Refugee and Humanitarian Program. We will contribute over $170 million to help them resettle through aid to international humanitarian agencies and food programs.

The third part of the program ensures that every individual who comes to our shores and our doors will be given a chance to demonstrate that they fear persecution. However, those with manifestly unfounded claims, those who have been asked to leave the country in the last 90 days, and those subject to removal, cannot be allowed to make a refugee claim, because they should be applying under the regular immigration laws of the country.

REFUGEE BOARD PROCEDURES—LISTING OF SAFE COUNTRIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Immigration and is also with regard to the Government's new refugee legislation. The Government has today adopted a Pontius Pilate attitude of washing its hands of genuine refugees and irresponsibly passing the problem to another country. This will only serve to aggravate the world phenomenon and trigger other countries to do likewise in a regressive fashion, in turn bringing more pressure to countries like Canada.

Given that the refugee board should have been independent and non-adversarial, why did the Minister give ultimate discretionary authority to Cabinet to design a list of so-called safe countries which will dictate who will access the system? Why were an immigration adjudicator and a lawyer present at the pre-screening process and the oral hearing which made it an adversarial process between the claimant and the department?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, there are 15 million refugees in the world and 100 million economic migrants. Our help to the real refugees must continue unabated. This is a real world rather than a theoretical world. It requires common sense solutions. We must be realistic, not naive. We need objective criteria, not subjective opinion.

• (1425)

Mr. Marchi: In his speech to immigrants, the Minister said: "If I do not deliver a good policy I will throw away my keys to the limousine". He had better throw away those keys and be ashamed of himself today.

APPEAL SYSTEM PROCESS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister give the system such a shamefully weak appeal procedure, with leave to the Federal Court, which only deals with arguments on legal process and not on the facts and circumstances of the individual? Why could people be deported during the appeal and until it is considered, thus endangering the lives of those individuals and going against the spirit of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights protecting individuals, thus making it unconstitutional?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are introducing a system that has streamlined processing. There are quality oral hearings in front of independent refugee board members. There are appeals by leave to the Federal Court.

This Government does not need to apologize for its contribution or anything we are doing. In the past year we contributed over $53 million to international humanitarian agencies. That is double what the previous Government committed in 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: In addition, we are spending at least double what the previous Government spent to settle, integrate and accommodate these new people in our country.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—LETTER REPORTEDLY SENT TO POTENTIAL COMPETITORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the proposed takeover of Dome Petroleum by the Amoco Corporation. In the past the Minister has assured the House that this deal was not finalized and that there were options other than the takeover by Amoco. The Minister knows that that corporation has had a bad reinvestment record in Canada and has now publicly refused, even if it is able to take over Dome, to sell shares to Canadians.

The Minister is no doubt aware that Amoco has sent threatening letters to companies that potentially would offer a counter bid. Is he aware of the content of those threatening letters from Amoco and, if so, will he tell us what he has done about it, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it was obvious from the very beginning that the various stages of negotiations between Dome, its creditors and potential owners would be a lengthy process that could take several weeks and possibly even several months.

Last week I met with the President of Dome who assured me, after saying so in public, that as the man responsible for Dome he had to consider any bid which would be made to Dome and which, in his opinion, would be better than Amoco's.

I would also emphasize that the Canadian Government is not aware of any other bid, so that I think it would be quite premature to presume how the Canadian Government might respond through Investment Canada.

As to the letter mentioned by the Hon. Member, I am not personally familiar with it. Should anyone feel that it infringes on one's rights, there are courts in Canada to handle this kind of situation.

[English]

INTEREST OF IMPERIAL OIL CORPORATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that he is not aware of any other bid. I thought it was more or less public knowledge that Imperial Oil Corporation was interested in such a possibility.

Presumably the decision to be reached by the Government of Canada will be in the interests of Canada, particularly western Canadians.

Considering that the letter threatened legal action against Imperial Oil if it made a counter bid, and that the Chief Executive Officer of Imperial Oil confirmed with me earlier today that Imperial Oil will not make a counter bid as a result of this letter, will the Minister live up to his Canadian responsibilities and intervene directly in this process to make sure there is open competition for the takeover so that Canadian interests will be served, and not guarantee that Amoco Corporation will simply get it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of this House will be surprised to see how earnestly the NDP is defending the corporate values of Imperial Oil. I think the company has enough lawyers and is sufficiently conversant with the Canadian legal system to decide whether it wants to bring the matter before the courts.

Secondly, I feel that if Imperial Oil wants to make an offer to Dome Petroleum, this kind of letter is certainly not going to prevent it from doing so.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understood the Minister's last sentence, but I got the impression he implied that Imperial Oil did not make the decision because of this letter. If he said so, that is not the case.

• (1430)

[English]

The Minister is indicating on the contrary. All right.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since it is evidently in the public interest of Canada that whoever gets control of Dome Petroleum should be the best company for Canadian interests, Canadian taxpayers and the people of western Canada, and since this letter has now threatened one corporation by telling it legal action will be taken against it—and, because I understand it is now circulated throughout the industry it has presumably scared off other potential takeover bids—will the Minister finally get involved concretely, call all the parties in and make sure the takeover bid which is in the best interest of Canada is the one which succeeds?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is up to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to discuss legal points or give a legal opinion on the subject of the legality of letters exchanged between corporations. I am willing to ask the Department of Justice whether the Canadian Government can intervene in such cases. Personally, I would be very surprised, but I will inquire.

I may remind the Hon. Member that the President of Dome Petroleum stated that he was prepared to consider and evaluate any offer that might be made to Dome Petroleum. If Imperial Oil wants to make an offer, it has to make that offer to Dome Petroleum and not to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is why the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not informed of the content of any offers whatsoever.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: But they can't make an offer. They will be sued.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF JIANGSU, PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of Mr. Yang Yongyi, the Deputy Governor of Jiangsu of the People's Republic of China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DEPUTY SPEAKER OF HOUSE OF LORDS

Mr. Speaker: I wish also to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of Baroness Carolyn Cox, Deputy Speaker of the British House of Lords.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—POSSIBILITY OF OTHER BIDS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On at least one occasion, on April 24, officials from the Minister's Department met with officials of Amoco Canada, Dome Petroleum and Investment Canada, putting an end to the Minister's contention that no proposal has ever been made to the Government. The Minister has obviously seen the agreement. He says the President of Dome would welcome other bids. Does the agreement between Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum allow for other bids to be made?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only refer the Hon. Member to the statements made by the President of Dome Petroleum where the answer is yes.

[English]

HUSKY OIL INTEREST—ROLE OF INVESTMENT CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Foster: He did not say deliberately.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member does not mean that the Minister is intentionally misleading the House.

Mr. MacLellan: No, I certainly would not mean that, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: The recently expressed interest of Husky Oil in Dome Petroleum once again indicates that there are other companies interested in bidding for Dome Petroleum. Will the Minister give us his assurance today that he will not allow Investment Canada to make a decision on the Amoco Canada bid until all bidders have had a reasonable time to make a bid for Dome Petroleum?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, according to the explanations given by the President of Dome Petroleum, the company has made a commitment to Amoco that it would not seek other bids. But should Dome receive a bid deemed to be better than that, Amoco or the person responsible for Dome, the President, must be made aware of it.

[English]

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, after Dome has made a decision on the question of the one which made the best offer, Dome will introduce the proper request through Investment Canada. That is the place where the federal Government will make its judgment. But as long as Dome is in the private sector, it is not up to the federal Minister of Energy to take on behalf of Dome a decision which is not mine to take.

* * *

REFUGEES

PROPOSED LEGISLATION—EFFECT OF PRE-HEARING PROCESS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is about the new refugee policy and it is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration or to his Minister of State. Does the Minister believe that Canada will be living up to its international obligations to refugees when the legislation announced today promises to set up a pre-hearing process which will operate like a kangaroo court at the border, and which will concentrate on finding reasons to dump our refugee problems on other countries rather than on the legitimacy of a refugee claim?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it not only meets our convention obligations but it respects our Charter obligations.

Mr. Cassidy: I would tell the Minister that there is a great deal of dispute about that precise question.

TREATMENT OF APPLICANTS ENTERING CANADA FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): If I can be specific, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware that large numbers of genuine refugees to Canada have been coming from Chile, Guatemala and El Salvador. Many have come to Canada after spending some time in the United States. Will the Minister confirm that these applicants, under the new process, can be turned back at the border and are forced to apply for refugee status in the United States, even though the acceptance rate is only 2 per cent compared to 50 per cent in Canada, and that if they are not accepted into the United States they may be deported back to face torture or death in their home countries when Canada should be accepting them here?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, what I can assure the Hon. Member is that we will protect those in need. Every individual who comes here will get a chance to demonstrate that his personal life, limb, liberty or security is at risk. He will be able to do that in a very fair and open, non-adversarial manner. We will do everything we can to make sure that when he demonstrates that fear he will be landed.

Of course, if he is not able to demonstrate that fear, he will have another appeal by leave to the Federal Court and then he will be asked to leave Canada, as you would expect, in order to meet the criteria that all economic immigrants have to meet in coming to this country.

* * *

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TESTS FOR ADMISSION AND SELECTION OF PERSONNEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Last night, Mr. Speaker, Radio-Canada reported on another RCMP breach of the Official Languages Act in the personnel admission and selection tests they must give applicants.

Last week the Canadian Security Intelligence Service director admitted before the Standing Committee on Official Languages that the Official Languages Act had been breached for two years.

How can the Solicitor General, who is ultimately responsible for all such cases, tolerate this evidence of bad faith on the part of both the RCMP and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I am aware of the problem with respect to the types of questions used in RCMP tests. I have spoken to the RCMP about this matter this morning and have asked for a complete internal review.

• (1440)

With respect to CSIS, as I advised the House before, I am aware of language problems within CSIS. The Security Intelligence Review Committee was commissioned last year to perform a complete investigation of those problems. I expect the report to be on my desk within the next week. I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Members of the House, that I will deal with the report extremely expeditiously.

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL PRESENT REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if the Solicitor General is unable to command respect for the law, and this is not the first time he is made aware of flagrant violations of the Official Languages Act, he ought to resign and let others take responsibility for enforcing the Official Languages Act.

My question to the Solicitor General: Five months ago, last December 18, the President of the Treasury Board said in this House: I am asking the Solicitor General to submit a report to me, to make me a proposition concerning a plan to implement the Official Languages Act, in the RCMP and elsewhere. Has he done that? And where is this report?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that the new Treasury Board application has been completed. I hope to proceed forward with it next week. I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of the House, that they will be very pleased with this new presentation.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION TAKEN BY CRTC CHAIRMAN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. There are real problems which have emerged in the Government's trade approach to the United States. The head of the CRTC has warned of the dangers of free trade and of clauses in the new U.S. Trade Bill that threaten Canada. Given Andre Bureau's prediction of a $90 million loss for Canadians will the Minister clearly state that our country will not surrender either Bill C-58 or the right to cable television advertising substitution in the free trade talks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to note that the Hon. Member is finally discovering that there are threats to Canada-U.S. trade contained in the U.S. Trade Bill. I can only tell the Hon. Member that we have said over and over again in this House that instruments of our cultural policy are not on the negotiating table. I see no reason to pursue this point when it has been made repeatedly in the House.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that at no point in time has the Government been prepared to say specifically that the policies that I have enumerated will not be eliminated. When the Government is prepared to do that I will take its word for it.

CORN PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL HELP IN COUNTERVAIL CASE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister also guarantee that Canadian corn producers will receive financial help for countervail legal struggles equal to the $500,000 that the U.S. Trade Bill aims to give U.S. farm producers who are fighting our producers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has failed to observe that the Ontario corn producers won that countervail. The money is being provided to the Americans who lost it. I do not see how the Hon. Member can compare the two points.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PAYMENT AUTHORIZED TO FORMER INFORMANT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Solicitor General about the $56,000 payment authorized by Order in Council to be made to Warren Hart, an FBI and RCMP informer. Why was this payment made when the McDonald Commission, as set out in volume 3 at page 497, found that his termination, his severance and departure from the RCMP had been properly handled? Will the Solicitor General tell the House what new facts came to the attention of the Government which justified the making of this additional payment?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is another example of selective readings by the Hon. Member. I refer the Hon. Member to the conclusion of the report at page 500 which states that while in Canada for over four years Mr. Hart "performed laudable service for the people of Canada."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: As a result of that my predecessor ordered an internal independent inquiry to see whether or not he should be reimbursed for loss of services and expenses. This independent inquiry determined that he should be paid the amount of $56,000. As a result of that recommendation payment was made.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LAWYER'S REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, laudable services are not the issue if a finding was made that his termination was proper. Was it not made because of a promise made by the Minister of National Revenue when he was a back-bencher that he would take care of Warren Hart? Is the Solicitor General prepared to table the lawyer's report referred to in the media as a basis for the making of this payment? Let us see the report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the report was prepared by a Toronto solicitor, Mr. Letterman. It was the recommendation as a result of a full inquiry by him that this ex gratia payment be made. Pursuant to that recommendation, the payment was made.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PREPARATION OF WHITE PAPER—INFORMATION PROVIDED TO UNITED STATES DEFENCE SECRETARY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence concerning his comments on the upcoming White Paper. Why has the American Defence Secretary been kept "fully involved and informed" about the White Paper when this Parliament has seen nothing concrete and only selected Canadians have been consulted at the invitation of the Minister himself?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Because, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the policy of the NDP, Canada is a full partner in NATO and NORAD and as a consequence has a responsibility to consult its allies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also said that nothing that the Government is doing would surprise the Americans. Does Mr. Weinberger know that the Government is considering spending billions of dollars on nuclear submarines because, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the defence committee just last week: "—in terms of threats to our sovereignty in our North—the larger threats come from our friends, the United States"?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government will be announcing its policy with regard to our Navy in the White Paper. It is quite clear that there will be somebody's navy in our North. It will be either the American, the Russian, or the Canadian Navy. I would be interested to know from the Hon. Member what the position of the New Democratic Party is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE GRAIN PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Thursday night Bill Strath, the President of Prairie Pools Incorporated, sent a letter on behalf of 130,000 prairie grain producers to the Prime Minister demanding that the Government make a commitment for assistance for the 1987 grain crop year. In the uncertainty that permeates every western community at this time will the Prime Minister provide a positive response to these 130,000 grain producers? Will he give a commitment that he will provide a deficiency payment to give at least as great a return to the farmers in this new crop year as they are receiving in the current one?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I will be on my way to western Canada. I will be meeting again with farmers and provincial authorities to consult with them in regard to the ways in which, perhaps, we can be of assistance to farmers who are hurting pretty badly as a result of the drop in commodity prices.

I would point out that an Alberta Wheat Pool spokesman, Doug Brunton, said: "We are pleased in regard to actions taken recently by the federal Government". Brunton praised the federal Government and said: "From an agriculturalist's point of view, the Government is performing rather well".

• (1450)

I think what that means is that farmers realize this is a complex situation but they do have a Government in office disposed to work with them to solve the problems.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LIFTING OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, farmers would like to know exactly what support they are going to receive in the upcoming crop year. Last Friday morning, after this letter was sent, the only response from the Government was to lift the moratorium on FCC foreclosures. The Minister of Agriculture says he is going to foreclose on only 600 this year. Do the Prime Minister and the Government not know that this will cause great uncertainty for the 6,000 farmers in arrears? Will he reinstate the moratorium until proper debt restructuring programs are put in place and end the uncertainty caused by the lifting of the moratorium?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member is quite inaccurate and quite misinformed. He continues to talk about thousands of people who will be affected. The fact of the matter is that 670 farmers were held by the moratorium. At this moment it is estimated that over half of those farmers have already left.

It is interesting to note that a spokesperson for the Alberta Wheat Pool praised the federal Government, "in contrast to opposition MPs who this week blasted the Progressive Conservative Government for being insensitive to western Canada." It is also interesting to see what the Winnipeg Free Press said about the Official Opposition task force. It was summed up as being pathetic, vague, meaningless and—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—LETTER REPORTEDLY SENT BY AMOCO TO IMPERIAL OIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. He now has in his possession a copy of the letter to Imperial Oil from Amoco stating that they have a binding contract with Dome, and that it prohibits providing information in connection with any acquisition proposal. It also prohibits entering into any agreement with respect to an acquisition proposal.

Given the very significant impact this takeover will have on western Canada, indeed Canada as a whole, does the Minister not consider it time to intervene in this takeover to ensure that Canada comes out with a deal that makes sense for this country as opposed to making sense for Amoco?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I said before that I would ask for an analysis by the Department of Justice and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have not had time to do so since Question Period began, and I think it will have to wait until after Question Period. I will get back to the Hon. Member tomorrow.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, given that response, is one to believe that the Minister plans to take action to ensure that there will be more than one player in this takeover? If Amoco is in fact cutting out all other proposals, including Imperial Oil which we learned about today, is he prepared to take action to ensure there will be a number of participants bidding to take over Dome?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the best action plan for now is to request information to act.

* * *

CROWN CORPORATIONS

USE OF POTATOES IMPORTED FROM BELGIUM

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is leaving for western Canada to talk to western Canadian farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: He will find that farmers in Manitoba and Alberta will be saying the same thing as farmers in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. That is, that prices are so low—

Mr. McDermid: What have you got in the pail, George?

Mr. Baker: —that they do not know what they are going to do.

The Government had to pay some farmers in some provinces this past summer to plough potatoes under. In light of that I would like to ask the Prime Minister, or perhaps the Minister of Transport who is more responsible for it, to explain to the Canadian people why on government jets used by cabinet Ministers and the Prime Minister, on Air Canada, a Crown corporation, and on VIA Rail, another Crown corporation as of four months ago, the potatoes used do not come from western Canada or eastern Canada? They are imported from Belgium, and that is not small potatoes to Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is always reluctant to interrupt the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair could not help but observe there seemed to be some prop to the question on the Hon. Member's desk. I know the Hon. Member, when he asks his supplementary as I know he will, will want to stay within the rules.

Mr. Gauthier: Table the potatoes!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, naturally a baker would be concerned about the potato.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With reference to the Canada-France dispute, I remember the hon. gentleman was concerned about French fries. Now it is the Belgian potato and the question is just as half-baked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Luckily I am knowledgeable on the subject. I learned that VIA Rail, under our predecessor Liberal Government, used rice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We at least have moved them on to the potato.

With respect to Air Canada, I am advised that it used 148,000 kilos of Canadian potatoes and 16,000 kilos from Belgium last year. The Belgian potatoes are processed. That is, they are mashed and processed into balls. The hon. gentleman I am sure will be interested in that important piece of information.

With respect to government aircraft, I am advised they purchase locally and take their spuds as they find them.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, getting back to my supplementary question directed to our half-baked Minister of Transport who will soon be known as Mr. Potatohead, and perhaps Bud the Belgian Spud in P.E.I., the price of potatoes to western Canadian farmers is roughly four cents to five cents a pound. To eastern Canadian farmers in our four Atlantic provinces it is just about three cents a pound. These potatoes imported from Belgium are a dollar a pound—five dollars for that small tin I once had on my desk.

Some. Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Will the Minister of Transport investigate this waste of money by Crown corporations, admit now that the Canadian potato is the best in the world—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: —and no airline or railway in this country should be allowed to use potatoes from anywhere but Canada? If they do not like the size of the potatoes they can slice them, mash them, or scallop them. You can do more things than just peel a potato!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is a real "pomme de terrorist", if not a "mashochist".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I certainly intend to advise Mr. Jeanniot and Mr. Hanigan, and anyone else who might be concerned about this important issue, that we want them to purchase Canadian potatoes. I believe some of the problem is in packaging and getting the right quantities. However, if they can find them the size of the Hon. Member's head, I am sure they will be more than willing.

* * *

[Translation]

RAILWAYS

SITUATION AT CHARNY, EASTERN QUEBEC, AND ABITIBI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and concerns the crisis situation in the railway transportation industry in Quebec, and specifically in eastern Quebec, in the Abitibi region and at the Charny yard.

In view of the massive cut-backs at Charny, and the possibility that railway tracks in eastern Quebec and Abitibi will be abandoned, what is the Minister going to do to save the jobs at Charny and maintain the railway tracks in eastern Quebec and Abitibi? What is he going to do?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no new emergency in connection with railway operations in Quebec. As a matter of fact, the changes in personnel which were contemplated or suggested several months ago have been gone into thoroughly with me by the Members who represent the area.

I am glad to see the Hon. Member taking an interest in something other than pornography.

[Translation]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, for local workers it certainly is a crisis when they lose their jobs.

INQUIRY WHEN NEW MINISTER OF STATE FOR (TRANSPORT) WILL BE APPOINTED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. When is the Prime Minister going to appoint a new Minister of State for Transport who will be able to deal more specifically with transportation problems in Quebec, considering that this key position has been vacant for almost three months? When is he going to fill this important position?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): At the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should like to advise the House that I will recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie on two questions, followed by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso and the Hon. Member for York East on single questions.

* * *

[Translation]

PENSIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PREPARED TO INTRODUCE BILL TO INDEX PRIVATE PENSION PLANS UNDER FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Minister is aware that the Government of Ontario has formed a task force to look into the possibility of indexing private pension plans that come under the province's jurisdiction.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he would be prepared to table, as soon as possible, a Bill that would be aimed at indexing private pension plans that come under federal jurisdiction, namely those in the areas of communications, interprovincial transport and financial institutions, to ensure that when employees who are now paying into a private pension plan are retired, they will not become any poorer because of inflation? Is the Minister prepared to follow Ontario's example?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know about the difference of opinion on the indexing of pension plans within the Ontario Liberal Government. A number of cabinet Ministers have expressed different points of view publicly on it, as he is aware.

In respect of our Government, he should be reminded that we made a number of changes which improved the pension system, by not only changing the RRSPs, but also the RRIFs and the PBSAs.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO UNDERTAKE COMPLETE REFORM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is trying to recall the mini-pension reform he carried out. It was not a real pension reform to help people.

Does the Minister intend to proceed and introduce genuine pension reform, first of all, by correcting the unfair treatment of people who are single, separated or divorced and are not entitled to the spouse's allowance; second, by allowing for the indexation of private pension plans under federal jurisdiction; and third, by calling a meeting of the provincial governments to urge the province to index private pension plans as well?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not know what he is speaking about. There have been major changes. I mentioned the RRIFs, the RRSPs, and the PBSAs. We have made changes to the Canada Pension Plan which are as dramatic as the introduction of the CPP in 1966. We also made changes to the spousal allowance.

If originally it was so wrong, why did they not make changes when they were still in government? We made changes. Now, after the changes have been made on the spousal allowance, they say it is discriminatory. If it is discriminatory now, what about when his Party was in office?

* * *

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—AULD COVE WHARF

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister is aware of the deterioration of Atlantic Canada's harbour facilities. The Auld Cove wharf is but one example of inadequate and dangerous facilities.

What assurance can the Minister give that this problem, as typified at the Auld Cove wharf, will be addressed in a long-range plan?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the condition of our small craft harbours and the service they render to fishermen are of extreme importance to myself and to the Government.

That is why, in the Throne Speech of last autumn, a reference was made to the importance of improving the management and long-range planning of our harbour program and of ensuring safety and the adequate provision of services to fishermen.

For that reason we are looking very carefully at all the decay and deterioration which we inherited from the previous Government as a result of its lack of effective management.

We will abide by our commitment to improve the condition of those harbours, including the harbour at Auld Cove, about which I know the Hon. Member is very concerned. An immediate start will be made on repairs to that important harbour in his riding.

* * *

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MAXIMUM SENTENCE FOR MURDER—REQUEST THAT STATUTE BE AMENDED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. At a time when the House is debating the issue of capital punishment, the Minister is aware that the Ontario Court of Appeal has ruled, in the case of a 17-year-old charged under the Young Offenders Act with two counts of first degree murder, that the young offender would be subject to a maximum penalty of only three years of imprisonment.

Does the Minister agree with the defence counsel for the accused young offender who said that a maximum penalty of that sort was just too short, and will he take immediate steps to amend the Young Offenders Act?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and congratulate him on his ongoing interest in matters relating to the Young Offenders Act.

As Hon. Members will know, the responsibility for the Young Offenders Act has only been recently transferred to me. However, I have studied this particular aspect and understand that the Minister of National Defence, when he had responsibility for the Young Offenders Act, in fact made a proposal to his provincial counterparts in the consultation process to mandate transfer hearings in respect of young offenders to adult courts. That was not accepted by the provincial authorities at that time.

Naturally I am supportive of the initiative taken by my predecessor who had responsibility for the particular Act. I will continue to monitor the situation and to discuss the matter with my provincial counterparts. If an appropriate amendment comes forward on the basis of that consultation, we will proceed in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to advise the House that I have received an application for argument on a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and to indicate to him that I will hear it in a few minutes.

If the Hon. Member wishes to proceed this afternoon, I acknowledge that I have notice of the matter.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

CODE OF CONDUCT—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I remind the House that a few days ago a question of privilege was raised in the House by the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) respecting questions which were put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

[Translation]

I am now prepared to rule on the question of privilege raised on April 14 by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). In my opinion, the question raised affects the very nature of Members' rights and immunity.

[English]

I should say that we in this House are protected by absolute privilege in respect of everything we say on the floor of this Chamber. This is a difficult thing for the public to understand, and this is why I want to explain it carefully.

There are only two kinds of institutions in this land to which this awesome and far-reaching privilege extends—Parliament and the legislatures on the one hand and the courts on the other. These institutions enjoy the protection of absolute privilege because of the overriding need to ensure that the truth can be told, that any questions can be asked, and that debate can be free and uninhibited. Absolute privilege ensures that those performing their legitimate functions in these vital institutions of Government shall not be exposed to the possibility of legal action. This is necessary in the national interest and has been considered necessary under our democratic system for hundreds of years. It allows our judicial system and our parliamentary system to operate free of any hindrance.

• (1510)

Such a privilege confers grave responsibilities on those who are protected by it. By that I mean specifically the Hon. Members of this place. The consequences of its abuse can be terrible. Innocent people could be slandered with no redress available to them. Reputations could be destroyed on the basis of false rumour. All Hon. Members are conscious of the care they must exercise in availing themselves of their absolute privilege of freedom of speech. That is why there are long-standing practices and traditions observed in this House to counter the potential for abuse.

The privileges of a Member are violated by any action which might impede him or her in the fulfillment of his or her duties and functions. It is obvious that the unjust damaging of a reputation could constitute such an impediment. The normal course of a Member who felt himself or herself to be defamed would be the same as that available to any other citizen, recourse to the courts under the laws of defamation with the possibility of damages to substitute for the harm that might be done. However, should the alleged defamation take place on the floor of the House, this recourse is not available.

Hon. Members will remember that I commented some time ago that originally when the absolute privilege was extended to Members of Parliament, as applied to the British House of Commons in a different age when things said within that House would probably not be heard throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom, circumstances were very different. Today, as a consequence of television and electronic broadcasting, anything said in this place is said on the street right across this country, and that has to be borne in mind. In these circumstances a Member can be expected to claim a violation of his or her privileges and to argue the case very strongly. I point out that if a statement is made here or an innuendo is passed in here no Member can go to court for correction or damages, even though that statement is said outside this place the moment it is uttered here.

[Translation]

The Chair has a serious responsibility in such cases. The Chair of course does not resolve the question, only the House can do that. However, on the basis of the evidence available, the Chair must determine whether the question has priority over all other business. When the Chair so rules, a motion is moved and usually the question is referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. The Chair has a crucial role to play in this respect.

[English]

In the case before us certain questions were asked which, in the view of the Hon. Minister, conveyed grave implications against his integrity and were, therefore, damaging to his reputation. That is the position which the Minister took. I have carefully examined the questions, together with the interventions which took place following the Hon. Minister's statement, and I confess to be very troubled as a result.

Perhaps, as has been argued, the questions did not directly violate the practice of this House concerning the making of charges and the levelling of accusations. I remind Hon. Members that I listened carefully to the questions and I did allow them. Nevertheless, I am sure all Hon. Members can appreciate the Hon. Minister's concern.

The House heard the Minister's statement. It is a long-standing tradition of this House that an Hon. Member's word is accepted without question. Given all the circumstances in this case, I am sure that the Minister's capacity to function as a Minister and a Member of this House is in no way impaired. I point out to Hon. Members that this is the real issue of privilege, although there are obviously other matters that surround the particular facts in this case, but the Chair has to look very carefully at the exact point of privilege.

With regard to the questions of which the Minister complained, legitimate though they may have been, I have already confessed to being troubled by their content. I would urge all Hon. Members to take the greatest care when framing such questions. Questions concerning conflict of interest guidelines are, of course, legitimate. Members are entitled to use facts they have been able to obtain and verify as the basis for such questions.

I would remind the House, however, that a direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of a substantive motion of which the usual notice is required. This is another long-standing practice designed to avoid judgment by innuendo and to prevent the overextended use of our absolute privilege of freedom of speech. One of my distinguished predecessors, Mr. Speaker Michener, in a ruling of June 19, 1959, which has frequently been quoted in this House stated that this is a practice demanded by simple justice.

I find therefore, again under the circumstances and after the most serious consideration of the evidence before me, that this matter should not take precedence over all other business. I would urge Hon. Members to take great care in this Chamber with respect to the honour of each other.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPLICATION OF MINISTER'S ANSWER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It arises from an answer given by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to a member of the Opposition with respect to Mr. Warren Hart and the awarding of an ex gratia payment of $56,000 to Mr. Hart.

The Solicitor General in his response said that the $56,000 was awarded to Mr. Hart because "for years he did a laudable job" for the Government of Canada. As part of that laudable job, we know from signed testimony by Mr. Warren Hart that he spied on two MPs, myself and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who was the Solicitor General at that time. Mr. Warren Hart also in his sworn testimony stated that he was in the employ of the RCMP security forces. In fact he was spying on an M P and on his own boss in the RCMP.

I believe that the statement by the Solicitor General has a clear implication that somehow or other I am a security threat to this country and, in fact, in some way this places a cloud over my functioning as a Member of Parliament.

I would suggest and remind Hon. Members that when I raised this matter of Mr. Hart spying on an MP, on myself, Mr. Justice Jerome ruled that there was prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege. Then when I put the appropriate question to the House, the Government of the day voted against the matter being examined by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. Here we have the Solicitor General bringing back into this House the ghost of 1976 and admitting and saying that Mr. Hart "for years he did a laudable job" for the Government of Canada.

If you find that there is prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has raised a question of privilege. Are there other Members wishing to rise on this matter?

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, just to supplement the remarks of my hon. colleague, I think it is important to note that while the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) appeared to have quoted from, I believe, page 500 of the report of the McDonald Commission in referring to the laudable nature of the activities of Mr. Hart, certainly the Solicitor General himself appeared to adopt those remarks and that characterization as his own.

• (1520)

I would remind Your Honour that the gentleman in question illegally opened mail, tapped telephones without warrants, possessed stolen merchandise and illegal weapons and bugged conversations of various politicians and Party caucuses.

The question of privilege is a very clear and very important one. If in fact the Solicitor General is suggesting even indirectly that the actions of Mr. Hart were in any way laudable, the implication is clearly that the targeting of a politician, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) as well as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), may have been appropriate. Clearly that is quite unacceptable.

Finally, this is the same Minister who recommended the payment of $56,000 of taxpayers' money, an ex gratia payment, to this individual. At the same time as this payment was recommended, payment was denied to another former member of the RCMP, Mr. Kim Westberg, who performed an outstanding service for his country in a major undercover operation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you, at the very least, to call upon the Solicitor General to set the record straight by indicating that by the payment of this sum of $56,000 or by his silence on the characterization of Warren Hart's actions as laudable, the Minister himself is not imputing that those actions were acceptable.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make it quite clear that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) seems to be somewhat misinformed. I did not make the statement that "while in Canada for over four years he performed laudable service for the people of Canada". That was a conclusion reached by the McDonald Royal Commission after a rather exhaustive discussion of the entire matter. I merely quoted the statement made by that commission in its report.

I would also like to point out that I did not recommend the payment of $56,000. This recommendation was made by a person who had conducted an independent inquiry into this particular matter. He came to the conclusion that this payment should be made, and as a result of that, the payment was so made.

I quite agree with the final statement made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I would not in any way want to suggest or have Hon. Members feel that anything Mr. Hart did with respect to the characters or reputations of these two gentlemen would be condoned by me in any way. I regard both Hon. Members as hon. gentlemen. Indeed, one is my predecessor and I have no reason to consider him anything but an hon. gentleman, and the same is true of the Hon. Member from our northern Ontario community of Nickel Belt.

Mr. Speaker: The point the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has made is an important one. Many Hon. Members who are here now remember the incidents of which the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has reminded us, and they are not necessarily happy memories. I am not surprised at all that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has raised this matter.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) made a suggestion which might resolve the matter, and that suggestion seems to have been picked up very quickly by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). In authorizing the payment of this amount of money to this particular individual upon the recommendation of a committee, the Solicitor General in no way endorses the activity of which the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and no doubt others would complain. In fact, I think those complaints would go well beyond the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

The Chair is indicating that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt would have a good deal of support in this House for the complaint he has brought to the Chair. The point the Chair is making is that the Hon. Member for Burnaby seems to have made a very helpful suggestion. I think the Hon. Solicitor General has made an absolutely unqualified statement indicating that in authorizing this payment, he is in no way and under no circumstances impugning the character, the loyalty or the patriotism of any Hon. Member in this place including the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. As that statement was quite unequivocal, I think it would dispose of the matter at the present time.

I say to the Hon. Member that I believe I express the feelings of a great many Hon. Members in saying that we regret very much that Hon. Members had to be reminded of that unpleasant event.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) had the floor.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue my submission on third reading stage of Bill C-22.

In his opening remarks, the Minister talked about a number of things and I responded by addressing the process of Bill C-22. I responded to the Minister's challenge regarding polls, and I believe that if you check the record, Mr. Speaker, you will find that I concluded just before the break by mentioning the positive effects the 1969 Patent Act had on job creation throughout Canada.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) indicated to the House, though I do not believe he did so intentionally, that somehow opposition Members were merely attempting to promote fear and cause anguish and anger over Bill C-22. Nothing could be further from the truth. The fact is that Canadians who understand and realize only too well the effects of Bill C-22 have been writing to Members of Parliament and, yes, Members of Parliament have been writing to them.

I have here a letter from the Manitoba Women's Institutes dated January 16, 1987, signed by the executive secretary. She says the following in part:

> The Manitoba Women's Institutes position re Bill C-22 is as follows:
>
> 1. We reject the proposed legislation.
>
> 2. We would accept a four year monopoly on a drug developed by a pharmaceutical company providing—
>
> 3. Any royalty monies derived be directed into research within Canada.

This particular representative of the distinguished Manitoba Women's Institutes made that presentation in a letter addressed to the committee studying Bill C-22. I do not believe it fair or reasonable to conclude that such individuals as this are attempting to promote fear, anguish and havoc among Canadians with regard to this Bill. These are legitimate concerns of Canadian taxpayers with regard to this important piece of legislation.

• (1530)

An organization from Vancouver called End Legislated Poverty sent a letter to the clerk of the committee. It is signed by Jean Swanson, the co-ordinator. It reads in part as follows:

> We believe that changes to the Patent Act proposed in Bill C-22 will increase the cost of drugs and jeopardize provincial free drug programs. The universality of the Canadian medicare system is at stake.
>
> To conclude, we believe that the existing Patent Act and the program of compulsory licensing provides balance between the generic and brand name manufacturers and benefits sick Canadians. The Act does not need to be changed. If it is changed in accordance with Bill C-22 low-income Canadians will get poorer and sicker.

The Minister referred to letters which he received. I want to refer him to letters I received which I am sure other members on the standing committee received as well. I have a letter dated December 17, 1986, addressed to the clerk, copies of which were sent to Members of Parliament. It reads in part:

> We are very concerned that the proposed Bill will raise the cost of drugs which are necessary to many people's health and are already too expensive.
>
> Many women we work with don't have the money to pay for drugs now when they or their children are sick. We cannot afford any increases in those costs.

That letter comes from Ellen Woodsworth of Wages for Housework in Vancouver, British Columbia. The letter is dated December 17, 1986. I was not appointed to the legislative committee by my Leader until some time in January of 1987. This is another organization which opposes Bill C-22.

The Second Mile Club of Toronto wrote a letter on February 11, 1986, to the Clerk of the standing committee. They said:

> The members of High Park Branch, Second Mile Club of Toronto, unanimously supported a resolution in support of the stand taken by the Ontario Association of Senior Citizens Organizations representing 18 organizations and about 250,000 seniors in the province protesting the forthcoming Mulroney Government Bill C-22 that the seniors claim will cost Canadians an additional $650,000,000 in drug prices in the next 10 years.

They have attached a list of signatures of some of those individuals. I have no reason to question the authenticity of those names. I suppose I could spend my every waking hour for the next several weeks checking with every individual. That is another organization opposed to this Bill.

During our deliberations at committee stage we heard a number of good presentations. One of the best was that of the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation which came before us and expressed a great deal of concern. They talked about the historical perspective of the Patent Act prior to 1969 and thereafter when legislation was passed by this House. They talked about the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and its profitability as announced by Professor Eastman in his study which was concluded in September, 1985.

I believe that Professor Eastman is recognized by all political parties as an authority on the Canadian pharmaceutical industry. It was he who stated quite categorically that as a result of the 1969 Patent Act Canadians saved millions and millions of dollars. Therefore, the senior citizens in this organization made the case that the profitability of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry is very good indeed. They talked about the impact of compulsory licensing and raised a number of questions about the future cost of drugs.

In addition to talking about the cost of new drugs which will be entering the Canadian market after this legislation is passed they raised the question of what will happen to the drugs which are presently in the system, the generic drugs. Generic companies operating in Canada which are told that the rules of the game have changed, that they will have to wait seven to 10 years before they can reproduce drugs newly manufactured by the multinational corporations, have two options. They cannot reproduce the new drugs coming on to the market and, therefore, can either go under or increase the price of generic drugs on the market today.

If you have discussions with housewives and other individuals who purchase drugs at the drugstore you will learn that that is happening. I do not have the money to conduct a survey to substantiate that that is taking place in every part of the country, but I know that it is taking place in certain parts of the country.

Leslie Batterson, the President of the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, and the Ottawa representatives, Herbert Hanmer and Ross Chapman, made a very impressive presentation of the reasons they oppose Bill C-22. These are average, ordinary Canadians making submissions to Members of Parliament from all three political parties with regard to an important piece of legislation. I suggest to you again respectfully, Sir, that this is not information manufactured or innovated, if you will, by opposition Members of Parliament.

The Ontario Coalition of Senior Citizens' Organizations made a presentation before the committee. Contained in their presentation is the following:

> Proposed changes to the Patent Act contained in Bill C-22 will reduce the availability of low-cost alternative generic drugs and that, without competition, brand-name costs are certain to rise;
>
> Commitments made by multinational firms for investment and job creation in Canada are unenforceable;
>
> Canada will never achieve world class research status in pharmaceuticals without a strong domestic industry, which this Bill prevents; the legislation can't effectively penalize brand name manufacturers who fail to follow pricing guidelines; direct payment costs for drugs will rise; private insurance plans will be forced to increase premiums. provincial taxes will be forced to rise to continue public drug benefit plans; hospital costs will increase with a concurrent effect on provincial medicare premiums; Jobs will be lost through a cut-back in the generic industry and the failure to establish a Canadian fine chemical industry.

• (1540)

All of these statements made by this worthy organization can and have been sufficiently substantiated that I would concur with them.

Provincial taxes will be forced to rise to continue public drug benefit plans. The Government has, in effect, admitted that. Otherwise, why would it provide $100 million for the provinces over a four-year period? If it is simply pulling that figure out of the air, then it represents rather sloppy management and forecasting by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

It is another organization that has a great deal of concern with regard to the purport of Bill C-22. It illustrates that it is not only members of the opposition Parties who are opposed to this legislation. The Nova Scotia Government Employees Union wrote to us. They wanted to appear before the committee and wanted to travel to Nova Scotia. While the Minister can suggest that we have had ample time for this Bill and so on, the number of people who wanted to make presentations and address this matter is remarkable.

In Nova Scotia the President of the Nova Scotia Government Employees Union said: "If this Bill is allowed to pass as it stands, it will have serious effects on people residing in the Province of Nova Scotia". That explains the situation quite succinctly and appropriately.

Other groups that are opposed to Bill C-22 may share my thoughts with regard to the effects on senior citizens, the elderly, the poor, the sick, and those who do not have any private medicare drug plans. Will the Minister tell the Royal Canadian Legion that its 590,000 members have it all wrong? Is he suggesting that all of us are village idiots and that we do not know what we are talking about when it comes to Bill C-22 and the fact that prices will rise? Will the Minister go to every Legion command in this country and tell our veterans and the associate members that they do not know what they are talking about? The Minister does not have the guts to do that because he knows that the prices for prescription drugs in this country will go up.

The President of the Royal Canadian Legion wrote to the Minister in November, 1986. Let me quote from part of that letter as follows:

> We believe the proposed changes will undermine compulsory licensing by granting brand-name companies ten (10) years of patent protection for all new drugs before they can be made available as less expensive generic equivalents.

As this letter clearly suggests, older Canadians are quite concerned. But the Minister says that it is the Opposition's fault because it is trying to cause anguish and fear among Canadians. I do not believe that opposition Members of Parliament will fool the Royal Canadian Legion, particularly its President. The President goes on to say:

> Despite statements that the new legislation will not increase the price of existing brand-name drugs by one cent, we expect that within a very few years the Government's present initiatives will end up costing all Canadians more money. The elderly, the sick and the poor are all bound to suffer financially with any change in federal legislation.

> In addition, we foresee possible cut-backs in existing health services and/or drug subsidy plans in some provinces.
>
> On behalf of our organization, which has a membership in excess of 590,000 I wish to express disapproval to the Government's proposed course of action which may force Canadian taxpayers to pay more than they now do to subsidize the pharmaceutical industry.

In a small province like Nova Scotia, its people and its Government will have to get more money to fund their drug plan. We are a have-not province and it will either have to raise taxes or impose cut-backs. It will have to cut back in the health care sector on such things as jobs in our hospitals. The first to lose their jobs will be the cleaners and those people on the bottom. The doctors, senior Deputy Ministers and Assistant Deputy Ministers in the Department of Health will not lose their jobs, it is the jobs of the working men and women that will be cut in order to raise the money. Of course, the Government has confirmed this as a result of its offer of $100 million on which the provinces can draw on a per capita basis.

The Minister of Health in the Province of Nova Scotia said that it will cost the taxpayers of that province up to an additional $25 million a year.

I agree wholeheartedly with the Royal Canadian Legion of Canada that the price of drugs will rise and will affect citizens throughout Canada. Not only will it affect elderly Canadians who are on a pharmacare program, what will happen to the four million Canadians who do not belong to a pharmacare program? They will not be subsidized and will have to pay through the nose so that multinational corporations can enjoy a larger profit margin. Mr. Stacey of the Royal Canadian Legion wrote to the Minister. It is not just opposition Members of Parliament who are opposed to the Bill.

Another organization that has a great deal of credibility, like the Royal Canadian Legion, is opposed to the legislation. Does the Minister suggest that the United Church of Canada has it all wrong? Are all those who oppose Bill C-22 fearmongers who are trying to perpetrate havoc and anguish among Canadians? Are they all wrong? Is that what the Minister is telling the United Church of Canada?

Let me quote what the United Church of Canada thinks about this legislation:

> The Working Unit has reviewed the proposed changes and has concluded that they threaten the long-term best interests of Canadians. We urge you to abandon the proposals and to reaffirm Canada's commitment to providing security for Canadians who are sick and dependent on affordable drugs.
>
> We are disturbed that this decision is being taken under pressure from external, political and corporate sources. We are also disturbed that the case for the changes to the Drug Patent Act is being made on grounds that give little assurance to Canadians that the values undergirding the country's health care system will be retained.

• (1550)

That letter was sent to the Clerk of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-22, and it was distributed to all Members of Parliament for their benefit. In fact, it was a copy of a letter sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on December 17, 1986.

Is the United Church of Canada wrong? Is the director of the office of the church, Dr. Bonnie M. Greene, a fearmonger? Is she trying to perpetrate havoc in this country? I think not. I think the Minister's charges are totally unfounded and unwarranted and, from my perspective, they are not fair or reasonable at all.

The Cangene Corporation which came before our committee talked about patents. This is an interesting company because it is a Canadian company founded in 1984 by two experienced Canadian industrial genetic engineers. It said, and I quote:

> —patent policy can also serve the purpose of furthering the Government's industrial policy with respect to a particular sector of the economy. This, of course, has been amply demonstrated, not only in the existing Patent Act, but also in the amendments proposed in Bill C-22 as they relate to the pharmaceutical industry. It is also amply demonstrated in that other nations have used variations in fundamental patent policy for the purpose of encouraging development and innovation in particular sectors of the economy.

That was one of the primary purposes of the 1969 Patent Act. Yes, it was to lower prices, but also to use this as a tool to develop our own Canadian pharmaceutical industry. Since that time we have seen the proliferation of generic companies which, I think, have added substantially to the providing of affordable drugs to Canadians from coast to coast.

Cangene was very concerned about the proposed changes to the Canadian Patent Act, and I quote from page 2 of its brief:

> In this brief we will provide a rationale for the role patents should play in the development of a Canadian-owned genetically based pharmaceutical industry, and explain why Canada should not permit or encourage, as a matter of policy, the granting of patents on natural products per se, but rather on the real advance illustrating the invention; namely, the biotechnology process method utilized in the production and manufacture of the natural product already existing in nature.

This is another Canadian company, incorporated under the laws of this country, and doing rather well financially, I might add, which is also opposed to Bill C-22 for all of the reasons I have already stated.

In September of 1986, when the Government was in the process of reintroducing the Bill, it attempted to bring forward on June 30, 1986, a number of national organizations, such as the Canadian Council on Social Development, the Canadian Health Coalition, the Catholic Health Association of Canada, the Federal Superannuates National Association, the Inter Pares/Women's Health Interaction, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, the President of the National Council of Women of Canada, The National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Health Action International-Canada, the President of the Consumers' Association of Canada, the President of the Canadian Labour Congress and the Chair of the Canadian Federation of University Women. They all signed a letter addressed to the Prime Minister requesting that he not proceed with the drug Bill.

All of these agencies are national in scope. Professional people work with these organizations. They have all had an opportunity to review and examine the legislation and thereafter to make their views known. They have let it be known to parliamentarians, to government Members as well as to members of the Opposition, that they are opposed to Bill

C-22 for many of the reasons to which I have already alluded, that is, higher prices, no enforceable guarantees for research and development or jobs, the ineffectiveness of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board and, of course, the human tragedy it will cause to individuals who will not be able to afford drugs because of their high cost.

One of the more interesting submissions we received, and I say "interesting" because we had a good opportunity for questions and answers, was from a company called Green Shield Prepaid Services Inc. This is a Canadian company. It is a non-profit Ontario corporation offering pre-paid extended health services, including pharmaceuticals, dental, hospital, nursing, vision and audio care, prosthetic devices and, more recently, legal service plans. It has been in business for quite some time. It was interesting to hear what it had to say with regard to Bill C-22 and the cost of drugs, and I quote:

> Drug costs are comprised of two elements, namely, the professional fee paid to the pharmacist, and the cost of ingredients. The professional fee, payable by Green Shield under its program, has increased almost in lock-step with the rise in the Consumer Price Index.

There has been a 118.8 per cent increase in fee compared with the Consumer Price Index of 112.4 per cent in the 10-year period from 1976 to 1986. There is only a difference of 4 per cent or 5 per cent. The professional fee went up in concert, if you will, with the Consumer Price Index. The report continues:

> On the other hand, the cost of ingredients has risen significantly in excess of the increase of the CPI for the same 10-year period.

There was a 247.1 per cent increase in ingredient costs as compared to a CPI of 112.4 per cent. It has more than doubled. We have the two costs, the professional fees, which kept in line with the Consumer Price Index, and the ingredient costs, which more than doubled the CPI. That is fairly significant. The report continues:

> These cost increases are comprised in part, of inflationary changes plus the sharply increased cost of new drugs when such drugs are first introduced to the market-place. (For example, a month's supply of Tagamet, when first introduced, cost $27, but drugs newly entering the market-place, today can cost as much as $100 for a month's supply).
>
> Thus the professional fee paid to the pharmacist by Green Shield has been reflective of the market-place in terms of inflation, but the cost of ingredients has risen well in excess of the cost of inflation producing a significant enhancement of revenues of the pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Green Shields is an non-profit organization which has been in the field for a considerable period of time, and that is part of the submission it made to members of the legislative committee examining this particular piece of legislation.

• (1600)

I think we should take note that the objections and concerns being expressed by Canadian organizations are rather substantive, to say the least. The submission concludes:

> We respectfully submit that the changes proposed to Section 41 by Bill C-22 are inappropriate in the interests of Canadians. The costs will be borne by Canadians—the benefits will accrue to the multinational drug manufacturers, companies which are already very profitable by any standard of measurement.

That is precisely what members of the Opposition have been saying in the Chamber, outside the Chamber, on the hustings and in the provinces. This reputable non-profit organization came before the committee and made this substantive conclusion based on its experience in the pharmaceutical industry.

Again, I refute very seriously the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that the opposition to Bill C-22 is merely in the imagination of Members opposite.

One of the many—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe the Hon. Member will be speaking for a few more moments, and I regret to interrupt him, but I would like to bring to the attention of the House the Proceedings on Adjournment Motion tonight.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Film industry—(a) Distribution—Canadian control. (b) Government position; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Parliamentary debate on possible treaty; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Harbourfront—(a) Moratorium on construction projects at Toronto waterfront. (b) Types of projects involved.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, one of the many magazines and booklets that I receive in my office and to which I refer on a fairly regular basis is a magazine entitled Policy Options. This is a publication which is produced in Atlantic Canada and, as Hon. Members might expect, coming from Atlantic Canada I am very careful to examine its contents to make certain that I agree with it. If I do agree with it I want to be in contact with the authors of the articles so that I can better familiarize myself with points that they are trying to make. An individual by the name of Roy Davidson wrote in the December issue of Policy Options an article entitled "The Scope of Patents". In the article he referred to some of the findings of the Eastman Commission of 1985. One of the things he stated was the following:

> The 1985 Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry . . . estimated that savings to Canadians as a consequence of compulsory licensing amount to a minimum of $211 million annually.

That is a significant sum of money. He went on to state:

> Total employment in the industry rose by 29 per cent in Canada between 1967 and 1982, compared with an increase of only 23 per cent in the drug industry in the United States for the same period.

I wish to read some of the author's conclusions into the record because I am sure Hon. Members would like to reflect upon them. The author states:

> The legal grounds for compulsory licensing are straightforward enough. In the first place, the compulsory licensing provisions of the Patent Act are not in contravention of the international Patent Convention to which Canada is a signatory. That Convention principally requires that the advantages extended to Canadians by the Patent Act, also be given to the nationals of other countries that are likewise signatories. The Convention does not require that an unqualified monopoly be conferred on the patent owner.

I wish to make these points because I will be coming to arguments, particularly one on intellectual property in the convention which established that particular matter, in order to refute the Government's claim that somehow Canada is in breach of that particular aspect. The author went on to state:

> In the second place, the idea that compulsory licensing infringes the Canadian Bill of Rights has already been rejected by the courts. The Federal Court has held that title to a Canadian patent for medicinal products is granted subject to the compulsory licensing provisions of the Act. Compulsory licensing, the Court said, does not therefore constitute subsequent interference with title. It is a qualification of the title as and when granted.
>
> The notion that inventors are entitled as a matter of natural justice, not just to monetary rewards, but to complete control over the use of their inventions, is nowhere accepted in practice.

I think Hon. Members should take particular note of the following:

> Various countries have identified particular fields where patents are not granted at all. Some countries give products themselves patent protection, while other countries give patent protection only to the processes by which products are made. Other countries besides Canada make provision for compulsory licensing, but the grounds on which compulsory licences may be granted vary.

He went on in the article to note:

> The United States and Canada grant patents for a period of 17 years from the date of issue. Most member countries in the European Economic Community grant patents for a period of 20 years from the date of filing. So does Japan. The term of patent protection in India is only seven years.

Further in the article he states:

> —South American countries do not generally grant any patent protection at all to drugs, and neither did Italy until quite recently. Japan requires foreign firms to co-venture with domestic firms to market new drug products. Britain and Norway rely on the centralized purchasing power of the state to regulate both price and industrial benefits.
>
> France and Belgium impose price controls on pharmaceutical products. Many countries establish selective or negative lists of drug products as the basis for determining eligibility for reimbursement under government pharmacare plans.

In refuting the Minister's claim that Canada has to keep up with the rest of the world the point has to be made that there are countries that are presently operating pharmaceutical industries which are quite different. Canada was one of the countries which had a unique system which benefited Canadian consumers. I believe, as I think has been confirmed by Eastman in his report, that it has saved us millions of dollars. It has also addressed in a very fundamental way the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and the development of a Canadian pharmaceutical industry.

We should not be apologizing for the behaviour that was set in motion in 1969 with regard to the Patent Act because it has been a great success. It is not in contravention of any international statutes to which Canada is a signatory. It is not in breach of any of the federal statutes here in Canada, whether it be the Bill of Rights or the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We do have a law which is on the books which is working, and working to the benefit of Canadians.

Yet what has the Government chosen to do? Change the law to benefit whom? Multinational corporations.

Finally, the author of this article concludes by saying:

> In summary, the reasons so far given by the Government for changing existing policy on compulsory licensing of patented drugs are not persuasive. The proposed policy cannot be justified by a naive appeal to inalienable property rights that don't in fact exist. The proposed policy is likely to be a costly and relatively ineffective industrial development strategy. The proposed policy weakens, rather than strengthens, Canada's bargaining position in trade negotiations.

The author of this article, Mr. Davidson, is a reputable Canadian. He was educated at the Universities of Alberta and Toronto. He has made his findings after examining quite thoroughly, I would assume, the legislation, as well as the reports that have been written on the pharmaceutical industry. He concludes that this policy that we will adopt by the will of the majority of 211 Conservative Members of Parliament is not in the best interests of Canadians.

• (1610)

Another group to appear before the committee was the Manitoba Coalition on Health and Higher Education. That organization was formed in late 1985 and consists of 34 member groups. The coalition represents 250,000 Manitobans who are committed to ensuring that high quality health care and higher education services are available to all Manitobans, indeed all Canadians. The coalition maintains that these amendments to Bill C-22 will give multinational drug companies a 10-year monopoly on any new drugs developed, and cost the Canadian consumer millions of dollars a year. They will seriously jeopardize the ability of certain segments of the population to purchase medication. They believe that if passed, the amendments will have a serious effect on Canada's ability to provide its people with the quality health care they deserve. For that and other reasons the coalition strongly opposes Bill C-22.

As Members of Parliament surely we would want to listen very carefully to what those people are saying. They have to deal with those affected. They must have some understanding of how the system works and how it will work as a result of this Bill. I cannot understand why the Government, or perhaps I should say the Minister, continues to say it is only opposition Members who are opposed to Bill C-22. We have reputable organizations like the Manitoba Coalition on Health and Higher Education who are opposed to Bill C-22.

I received a letter, as all members on the committee did, from a couple in British Columbia. They sent a copy to their Conservative Member of Parliament. God knows what he did with it. However, it was sent to him and to the Clerk of the committee. It is dated December 28, 1986. It says:

Dear Sir:

My husband and I are both in our 60s and we are writing to express our urgent concern over the proposed change in the drug legislation. We feel this legislation should not be allowed to pass as it will, without a doubt, lead to increased drug prices. We can now purchase a generic drug at one-third to one-half the price of the same brand name drug. If the generic companies are no longer able to copy a brand name drug for at least ten years, people, and particularly the older person, will face an increased burden on their already limited income.

As concerned citizens and voters, we urge you to reconsider this legislation.

Ordinary Canadians, concerned about prices they have to pay for prescription drug prices, are writing Members of Parliament to express their opposition to the thrust of Bill C-22.

The Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada came before our committee and made a very impressive and moving presentation. In listening to that presentation and reading their brief, I thought, for the benefit of Members who did not have an opportunity to be there, including the House Leader of the NDP, I would read into the record—

Mr. Riis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening with rapt attention to my hon. friend's comments on this Bill which, I appreciate, he is speaking against. Since the time on third reading debate is limited to today and another day, tomorrow or some other day, does he plan to continue his comments which, in a sense, preclude his colleagues from speaking, as well as others, in this House? I am as much concerned about his own colleagues who have indicated an interest in speaking. I am just kind of curious about the motive of the Hon. Member with respect to helping us decide how we might approach the debate on this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is not a point of order but maybe the Hon. Member can say whether he plans to share any of this debate which, as you know, will come to an end after two days. I know other Members would like to speak, but it is up to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). The Chair is at your disposal.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, in response to the reasonable request of my colleague, I do have other things I wish to read into the record. I do not think it will take an inordinate amount of time. They are important—

Mr. Riis: Indeed they are.

Mr. Dingwall: —to our deliberations.

The Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada made a presentation to the committee, as I was saying before a point of order was allowed by the Chair, and I would like to read into the record the conclusions and recommendations the presentation made.

Results of the survey indicated that while the majority of their respondents had full or partial assistance in the payment of their drug costs, 24 per cent did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I do not know whether I misinterpreted what the Hon. Member said. Did he say the point of order was allowed by the Chair? I said it was not a point of order and I put the question to the Hon. Member. I do not want to get into an argument between the NDP and the Liberals. It is up to them to decide who is going to be the next speaker and who is not. I do not intend to recess this House again in three, four or five seconds either. You have to decide among yourselves what is going on. The Hon. Member has unlimited time, and I am just suggesting to the Hon. Member that this is a two-day debate and maybe he would like some of his colleagues to take part in the debate. That is all I said and that is the way I interpreted it.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am glad you made that clarification because I had a different interpretation of your remarks. I appreciate your second statement because it does, for me, qualify the interpretation I originally had of your first submission. So I thank you very much for rising in your place and explaining that very important point to me.

Of those paying their own drug costs, 29 per cent paid between $50 and $100 a month, and 18 per cent paid over $100. On an annual basis this represents a direct cost of between $600 and several thousand dollars to each of these people. That is a phenomenal amount of money for those people to have to pay.

Of the 16 most commonly used drugs by respondents, eight had generic or other competition. Savings achieved by the use of cheaper equivalents ranged from 21 per cent to 89 per cent. The proportion of drugs with competition in any future list will decrease if amendments to the Patent Act are passed.

• (1620)

This presentation, which is neither against nor for the legislation, assesses very reasonably the shortcomings in Bill C-22. It should be read in its entirety by all Hon. Members in order that they will have a better and fuller appreciation of what is taking place.

The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops also wrote to the Minister. I believe it was the Bishop of Calgary, Paul J. O'Byrne, who wrote to the Minister expressing his concerns about Bill C-22. I should like to read part of his submission to destroy the very weak argument and comment of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that the opposition to the Bill is in the imagination of opposition Members of Parliament. He wrote the following:

We have followed the debate on this legislation and have noted that the pressure to change Canada's generic drug laws has not come from the people of this country. Indeed, national organizations representing thousands of Canadians from virtually all sectors of society have been unanimous in calling upon your Government not to proceed with the proposed legislation.

We add our voice to that call because we believe that this legislation, if enacted, would have detrimental effects on average Canadians, especially on the elderly and the poor. Thanks in large part to existing drug patent legislation, Canadians enjoy low prescription drug prices and high standards of health care.

The proposed amendments will cost Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars annually in drug price increases. The changes will also have serious implications for health care costs and for the future of medicare in this country.

The letter goes on, but basically it asks the Government to withdraw the Bill for many of the reasons which Members of Parliament, ordinary citizens, and other Canadians have expressed about the effects of Bill C-22.

We on the committee were not only limited to receiving briefs and presentations from individuals who appeared before us. We also received numerous presentations from individuals who could not attend. One such group was from the Province of Quebec, the ACEF-Centre, Association Coopérative D'Économie Familiale du Centre de Montréal. It indicated the following opinion:

—Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act, should be withdrawn.

By making it impossible for pharmaceutical companies to copy drug products quickly, the bill would result in the medium term in the consumer having to pay more for prescription drugs. Indeed, the consumer would end up paying more, either directly at the pharmacy or in taxes or medical insurance premiums.

Furthermore, the ACEF-Centre believes that this bill does not deal directly with the real problems affecting the pharmaceutical industry, namely the over-abundance of similar, useless and even harmful drugs on the market, the lack of research to develop drugs that are truly effective in treating illnesses which are now incurable, the excessively high percentage of funds allocated for advertising purposes, etc.

Another distinguished Canadian organization of professional people opposes the thrust of Bill C-22.

On several occasions the Minister said to the House that he had two resolutions from the Province of Quebec supporting the thrust of Bill C-22. I do not doubt it. However, it is interesting to note that other legislatures or assemblies in different provinces have also had the subject matter of Bill C-22 before them.

I do not wish to downplay the significance and importance of the resolution from the National Assembly of the Province of Quebec, because it is an important one, but equally so I would have thought that a Minister of the Crown would have availed himself of the opportunity to express very clearly what other legislatures have done.

The Minister of Health and Social Services in Prince Edward Island and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General wrote a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in November, 1986, in which they said:

This Government is strongly opposed to any amendments which will result in an increase in the cost of prescription drugs. While this position was conveyed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at the Minister's Conference in Thunder Bay, we feel it is necessary to reiterate it in writing.

To date, we have no guarantee that the proposed amendments will result in any economic benefit to the Province of Prince Edward Island or that the provincial drug bill will not increase because of these amendments.

One of the persons who sent that letter was the Liberal Minister of Health of the Province of Prince Edward Island. As well, the Legislature of Prince Edward Island convened a session and, by unanimous consent, passed a resolution in opposition to Bill C-22, which I should like to read into the record. For whatever reasons, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs failed to make mention of the matter in his deliberations. I am not suggesting that he did not want to give balance to his argument. He just wanted us to hear only one side! I hope to give balance to the argument and to put both sides of it before the House. The resolution reads:

WHEREAS the Government of Canada has introduced amendments to the Patent Act which will inexorably over time result in an increase in the price of prescription drugs;

AND WHEREAS the Province of Prince Edward Island has recently introduced a Drug Cost Assistance Plan which strives to reduce the cost-burden of drugs for senior citizens;

AND WHEREAS increased prescription costs will adversely affect this Plan and indeed all other citizens of our Province who require drugs from time to time;

AND WHEREAS there is no more than a token, non-statutory requirement in the proposed federal scheme for pharmaceutical manufacturers to meet any research and development expenditure commitments;

AND WHEREAS there is no direct economic benefit which will accrue to Prince Edward Island as a result of the proposed amendments;

AND WHEREAS this Government is committed to obtaining prescription drugs at the lowest possible cost to the citizens of Prince Edward Island;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that this Assembly urge the Prime Minister in the strongest possible terms not to proceed with this Bill.

That was Resolution No. 6 regarding the Patent Act dated March 10, 1987, passed by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island. However, the Minister rose and spoke as if they did not even exist, as if the senior citizens, the elderly, and the other people of that province did not count for anything.

I think it is a very important document, just as important as the one from the National Assembly of the Province of Quebec. I hope Hon. Members give due consideration to what the people of both those provinces are saying through their elected representatives.

I have another resolution opposing Bill C-22 which was passed by another legislature. It is of great importance. Again, because of the Minister's refusal to look at both sides of the issue, he did not draw attention to it in his deliberations. I am not suggesting that he did it intentionally, because that would be unparliamentary. However, I have a telex from the Clerk of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly which was addressed to the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to all Members of the House of Commons which reads:

The Manitoba Legislative Assembly has directed me to send you the following resolution which it adopted on Wednesday, April 29, 1987.

The resolution reads:

• (1630)

Whereas the availability of safe pharmaceuticals at reasonable cost is fundamental to the health and well-being of Canadians, and

Whereas Section 41(4) of the Patent Act as amended in 1969 has provided the vehicle whereby Canadian licencees can produce low-priced generic substitutions of brand-name pharmaceuticals to be marketed in Canada, and

Whereas according to the Eastman Commission, these generic substitutions saved Canadians well over $200 million in 1983, and

Whereas these generic substitutions resulted in a saving in hospital, pharmacare and prescription costs for Manitobans amounting to over $14 million in 1986, and

Whereas the drug reimbursement paid out by the provincial Government through its universal pharmacare program has risen from $4.3 million in 1975 to $28 million in 1986, and

Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act which delay the introduction of new generic substitutions will result in even higher hospital, pharmacare and prescription costs, while providing few alternative benefits to Canadians, and

Whereas the cost to Manitobans of the delayed entry of new generic substitutions will be over $2 million in the first year after the changes, and could total $44 million by 1995, and

Whereas the increased costs will be borne directly by consumers both at the counter and through increased costs to our pharmacare program and will especially affect the elderly and those who require continuous medication, and

Whereas the federal Government, in spite of strong representation by the public opposing the amendments, and in the face of constant pressure from the multinational drug companies, continues to insist on amending the Patent Act.

Therefore be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba urge the Government of Canada to withdraw the Bill outlining amendments to the Patent Act which would result in higher cost drugs for all Canadians, and

Be it further resolved that the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly be instructed to send copies of the resolution to the Federal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and all other Members of Parliament.

This is signed by Mr. W.H. Remnant, Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba. The telex number is available if it is to be tabled.

There we have another legislature in this country speaking out against the harmful effects that Bill C-22 will have upon the citizens of that particular province, namely Manitoba.

We hear this cry from other provinces. Ontario sent a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs opposing the proposals of Bill C-22. He offered some possible constructive changes to the Bill, and of course the Minister dismissed them. The additional costs in Ontario will be about $35 million. The Government of Saskatchewan is opposed to Bill C-22. There was a provincial election and money for the farmers. Then Saskatchewan changed its mind. Representatives came to committee and made a presentation. I have to be fair, it was not the Minister responsible in the Province of Saskatchewan, it was the Deputy Minister of Health, I believe. He was the one who, under cross-examination by Members of Parliament, in reading through his brief had about 9 to 11 preconditions and if they were to be met, Saskatchewan would support the Bill. Fortunately, or unfortunately, when I questioned him, he would not, and perhaps in all fairness, could not say that he supported or did not support the Bill as it now stood because he was representing his Minister and was not in a position to exercise that sort of ministerial discretion which we know can only be given to a Minister and not his deputy.

We have seen government representatives, organization representatives, representatives of national organizations, representatives of non-profit corporations and representatives of Canadian corporations. We have had citizens groups, the Legion and people from the Church of Canada. Numerous Canadians from all walks of life, unions and what have you, all rose in opposition to Bill C-22. Some Members may say this is sickening. I do not think the stand, the suggestions, the queries and the concerns of the United Church of Canada are sickening. I do not think that the views of the Royal Canadian Legion of Canada, of their veterans, their associated members and all other members approximating 590,000, on the subject are sickening. I think they are relevant and germane to our deliberations as we proceed with the debate on Bill C-22 and the effects the Bill will have on Canadians from coast to coast.

The Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association, which I must admit is one of the lead organizations, is opposed to Bill C-22. It has a vested interest in being opposed and we should understand that off the bat. If one looks at the Canadian pharmaceutical industry, we want to see multinational corporations in operation as well as our own Canadian generic firms. That is what we want to see, Mr. Speaker.

I have listened attentively and patiently to many claims in committee. I wish to quote briefly what a number of organizations have said on this Bill. First, the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association said this:

> —we do not think there is any real social or economic reason to change the current system of compulsory licensing. It has brought only good to Canada . . . world-class industry must have six separate sectors: pure research, applied research, fine chemicals, brand name manufacturers, generic manufacturers and the new biotechnological companies . . . Bill C-22 will reduce Canada's industry to only two components and will result in whopping big reliance on foreign firms for our drugs.

That is found at pages 3:7 and 3:8 of the brief, if Members find it important enough and wish to check on it.

What does the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada say? It says:

> These companies (the multinationals) have indeed made their announcements (of investments). I think they have also said very clearly that if the Bill is not passed, not all of this investment will go ahead, and I expect you will see evidence.

I am not saying that this is blackmail, but it is pretty close to it. It is either "you pass this legislation or we will not proceed with our investment intentions". As a Canadian parliamentarian and one interested in public policy, I find that to be a very unfortunate statement made by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association.

Let me quote the Canadian Labour Congress. It says:

It is the position of the Congress that the Bill presently being debated is one that is based on political considerations and not on economic ones—

The last thing in the world the ethical manufacturers in this country want is competition.

Let me come now to the Canadian Health Coalition, another reputable national organization which has professionals in its midst and has worked with this subject matter for quite some time. The coalition said:

Our conclusion is that the only ones to benefit from Bill C-22 will be the multinational pharmaceutical companies, while the cost to Canadians, both economically and in terms of their health, will be substantial.

Next is the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, which said:

—we are of the opinion that Bill C-22 and the policies related to it are seriously flawed. We therefore urge the Government to withdraw this legislation.

Now I come to the National Federation of Nurses Union, which said:

Unionized Canadian nurses, as taxpayers, health care consumers, and providers, urge you to withdraw the proposed amendments. The legislation is not the right combination.

Canadian nurses are opposed to Bill C-22. As you know, Mr. Speaker, many of these nurses are the ones who have to give medication which is prescribed, if you will, by physicians in Canada.

Let me read what the Public Service Alliance of Canada had to say:

We reject the premise that Canada will be denied access to needed medication unless Bill C-22 legislates a monopoly for drug manufacturers. We also reject the argument that Canada's drug patent system is unfair to the so-called innovative companies.

• (1640)

Of course, the Minister would lead us to believe that anyone opposed to Bill C-22 is out to lunch. That is not fair. He did not say that, he said that those who are opposed to Bill C-22 are opposition Members of Parliament. I think I have provided in spades today examples of Canadians' and Canadian organizations' opposition to Bill C-22. It is not merely opposition Party Members who are opposed to Bill C-22.

Professor Kell Antoft who came before the committee said the following:

—our experience has shown the branch plant operations are not concerned with basic manufacturing primarily but with repackaging—

We need to reinforce basic research in our universities . . . I do not think this will be done by increasing the profit margins of the drug industry.

—but one can speculate about the plea that they (the multinationals) are unable to support research when the parent company is obviously directing research into what they can do with their excess cash.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, numerous organizations have come forward to express their reservations about Bill C-22.

Before my colleague from the New Democratic Party joins in this debate momentarily, I will conclude by saying that it has been our contention for quite some time that the Liberal Party is very much opposed to Bill C-22. We have adopted and promote the recommendations contained in the Eastman report which provide for a period of exclusivity of four years provided certain moneys are paid into what is known as a pharmaceutical research fund. The Eastman report has been our Party's position from day one, and I want to reiterate that that is our position. We follow the recommendations of the Eastman report very clearly.

I think there is irrefutable evidence that drug prices will rise and will rise dramatically over the next number of years. Senior citizens, the poor and the less fortunate will have to pay the price of the Government's actions. There is very little support in Canada for changing the legislation in the way the Government proposes to change it. We have heard from legislative assemblies in Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and, yes, the Province of Quebec and from numerous organizations opposed to Bill C-22. We have questioned the constitutionality of this Bill and Ministers have responded by saying that there is nothing wrong with it. I suggest that there is.

Industrial benefits will not be equally distributed. There are no guarantees that it will enforce research and development commitments. There are no enforceable guarantees of job creation. I say sincerely that the process has been wrong and has been undermined by government Members of Parliament. The substance of the Bill will have a negative effect on all Canadians and particularly the elderly, the poor and those on fixed incomes. Canadians do not support the thrust of Bill C-22. For those reasons, I am opposed to Bill C-22, and I am certain that after reflection, you too will be opposed to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are debating a Bill brought forward by the Conservative Government. I will not describe it as a Progressive Conservative Government because there is nothing progressive about it.

We are at third reading stage of a Bill which will wipe out the legislation enacted in 1969, legislation which amended the Patent Act as it affected the manufacture and sale of prescription drugs. Prior to 1969 when multinational drug companies controlled the entire prescription drug market, there was virtually no research done and Canadians paid the second highest prices in the world for prescription drugs, drugs which are so important to many people and particularly to the young and seniors.

A whole series of studies were done in 1967 and 1968 which proved the fact that Canadians were paying the second highest prices in the world for drugs. The legislation we enacted in 1969 permitted companies, which came to be described as generic drug companies, to receive licences from companies which had researched and developed prescription drugs after a certain period of time during which the brand name drug companies could get back the investment they made in researching, developing and producing drugs. Generic companies were permitted to produce drugs on payment of royalties to the companies which had originally developed the drugs.

The legislation that was passed in 1969 had a tremendously important effect on Canadians. The drugs produced by generic companies were sold to consumers at the retail level at prices that were usually half or less the prices paid for brand name drugs.

A few years ago when the former Liberal Government was in power, the multinational drug companies, which had always opposed the legislation because they felt it interfered with their very substantial profits, put pressure on the then Government and persuaded the then Minister, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), to appoint Professor Eastman, a professor from the University of Toronto, to study the organization of the industry and its profits and to make recommendations. Those recommendations were not tabled in the House until after the Liberal Government was defeated and the present Conservative Government was in power.

The legislation that is before us bears little resemblance to the recommendations made by Professor Eastman. Professor Eastman found that the companies were making very substantial profits, among the highest profits made by any industry in Canada. Professor Eastman told us that in 1983, the last year for which he had figures, Canadians saved $211 million as a result of the competition to multinational drug companies provided by generic companies. The professor suggested ways in which he felt the law, which had been enacted in 1969, could be amended so that multinational companies would have a little more protection but the consumers would not have to pay exorbitant prices. Those recommendations of Professor Eastman have all been virtually ignored by the Government as demonstrated in this legislation.

• (1650)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very important point of order. After the Speaker recognized that the Dome takeover was important enough to grant an emergency debate in the House of Commons, the Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources decided it was appropriate to summon before it as witnesses the Chairman of Dome and the President of Amoco. We learned moments ago that the committee has decided to reverse that decision and not hold hearings with these two individuals as witnesses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. In view of the fact that this subject matter is not before the Chamber, I do not think I can accept this as a point of order. The Hon. Member could give written notice to the Speaker and raise it as the first item of business tomorrow. However, I cannot permit this particular point of order in the House at this time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I accept your judgment on this. I was only asking to serve notice with regard to a very special section of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. I refer to section—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know exactly which chapter and verse the Member is going to quote. If the Member wishes to serve notice, he should do so to the Speaker and we can carry on with debate today.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate your comments, Mr. Speaker. For clarification, do I take it that you would entertain a motion that the House summon to the bar various witnesses? Are you recommending that a resolution to that effect be put forward tomorrow?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Speaker will have to entertain the point of order and then make a ruling accordingly.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, would the Chair be so kind as to give a clarification? The Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) left the impression in my mind that the Speaker might be in agreement with such a motion. I hope that is not the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I cannot read the Speaker's mind. I cannot make a decision on the point of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), nor can I make one on what the Hon. Minister has just said. The Chair will decide when the Hon. Member submits a written request. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the proposal of the Government as contained in this Bill was greeted with almost unanimous opposition by a host of groups from across the country which wrote to, telephoned, and visited Members of Parliament. Those positions were rejected by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who, in innumerable speeches, claimed that there was little opposition to this Bill and that the people who opposed it did not know what they were talking about and had not looked at the facts.

In debate on this Bill at second reading stage the Minister, who believed that members of the Opposition were holding the Bill up unnecessarily, argued that the Bill should be allowed to go to committee where all the witnesses would be heard and all the evidence would be seen. At almost the first meeting of the committee a government Member moved time allocation.

The result was that only a small fraction of the groups which wanted to testify and register their opinions on the Bill were allowed to do so. The time allocated to each group was limited to 45 minutes. The committee met five times a week and heard three delegations at each meeting. In the nearly 25 years that I have been in this House I have never seen a committee restrict discussion in the way in which this committee did.

When the Bill returned to the House at report stage, a motion was moved that debate at report stage be limited to one day and at third reading stage to two days. This motion, of course, passed as a result of the Government's large majority.

Let us clearly understand the real views of the Government of Canada. I find it very strange, to put it mildly, that the Minister would continue to insist that there is very little opposition to the Bill given the large number of groups from almost every segment of our society which have opposed this Bill and continue to oppose it today.

On April 22 the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops wrote to the Minister. I cannot believe that the Minister believes that this is not a responsible organization. They said in part:

> We have followed the debate on this legislation and have noted that the pressure to change Canada's generic drug laws has not come from the people of this country. Indeed, national organizations representing thousands of Canadians from virtually all sectors of society have been unanimous in calling upon your government not to proceed with the proposed legislation.
>
> We add our voice to that call because we believe that this legislation, if enacted, would have detrimental effects on average Canadians, especially on the elderly and the poor.

We heard from the Canadian Legion and the United Church. I will quote again, as I have done on other occasions, from a letter from Mr. Jack Penner, the President of Keystone Agricultural Producers, who wrote on behalf of that organization to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on November 25, 1986. He said in part as follows:

> —KAP members share the concerns of those who believe that extended patent protections will, by limiting the ability of drug manufacturing companies to produce generic copies by means of royalty payments, raise the prices charged to consumers for pharmaceutical drugs to unwarranted levels. Farmers and their families are, of course, part of the general consuming public, and stand to be seriously affected in any such situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When this debate resumes the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will have seven minutes remaining plus a 10 minute question and comment period.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED EQUAL PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL ELECTED REPRESENTATION

The House resumed from Monday, March 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Taylor:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial governments at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), which seeks to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory.

The motion also urges the Government to initiate intergovernmental discussions to that end at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members will know, Senate reform is getting a great deal of attention these days. The subject was broached last Thursday at the First Ministers meeting at Meech Lake, as part of the discussions on the Quebec constitutional question.

The First Ministers agreed to a second round of constitutional discussions where Senate reform will be analysed in depth. The provisions of the Meech Lake Accord with respect to this second round are as follows: The accord requires that a First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution be held not less than once a year and that the first be held within 12 months of proclamation of the present amendment but not later than the end of 1988; and it provides for entrenchment in the Constitution of the following items on the agenda: Senate reform, including the functions and role of the Senate, the powers of the Senate, the method of selection of Senators, and the distribution of Senate seats. It will also include the roles and responsibilities of fisheries and other agreed upon matters.

Mr. Speaker, it also provides for entrenching in the Constitution the annual First Ministers' Conference on the Economy now held under the terms of the February 1985 Memorandum of Agreement, and finally, the Accord stipulates that until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished, the federal Government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal Government. Once these measures have been ratified, this fact should encourage the federal and provincial governments to reach agreement on the future of the Senate. Furthermore, as a token of its good faith, the federal government has promised to allow provincial governments to participate in the selection of Senators until a reform is implemented. This provision reflects the Government's desire to ensure that the provinces will be able to participate fully in our national political life.

I also support the decision to entrench in the Constitution the annual First Ministers Conference on the economy. As Hon. Members know, the process for holding this annual conference was set in motion in February 1985 at the Regina First Ministers' Conference.

This constitutional commitment should promote two major objectives of this Government: The pursuit of national reconciliation, and the harmonization of federal and provincial policies with due respect for provincial jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to comment briefly on the other principles underlying the Meech Lake Accord.

First, the Accord acknowledges the distinctive character of Quebec within Canada, whose two major linguistic communities, one centred in but not limited to Quebec, and the other concentrated in the rest of the country but also present in Quebec, together constitute a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian federation.

The Accord also aims at providing constitutional protection for a broader version of an immigration agreement concluded with Quebec. Over the years the Government and seven provinces have concluded administrative immigration agreements taking into account their particular concerns.

The most comprehensive such agreement is the Cullen-Couture agreement made with Quebec in 1978. Under this agreement Quebec has extensive powers, based on its own selection criteria, in the choice of foreign immigrants. This agreement has proved to be quite constructive since it was first implemented, and its principles have been found satisfactory.

Pursuant to the Meech Lake Accord, Ottawa will also be able to make similar agreements with the other provinces, based on their own requirements.

In view of its distinct identity, Quebec has a vested interest in the membership of the Supreme Court. Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that Quebec is the only province whose legal system is governed by the civil code instead of by common law, the system in effect in all other provinces and territories.

Quebec's civil code is entrenched in the Constitution and recognized by the Supreme Court Act, a federal Act that specifies that at least three of the nine justices of the Court shall be appointed from the civil bar. To be on the safe side, Quebec wants to have this safeguard entrenched in the Constitution.

The Accord provides for entrenching the Supreme Court, and the requirement that at least three of the nine justices come from Quebec, in the Constitution. Furthermore, the Accord will allow for provincial input regarding appointments to the Supreme Court. Quebec and the other provinces will thus have an important role to play in the appointment of justices selected from the members of their respective bars.

The courts have maintained for a long time that under the Constitution, Parliament can raise taxes in any manner or under any tax system it sees fit but it can also appropriate funds for any purpose whatsoever. In addition to funding the programs and activities that come under its jurisdiction, Parliament may therefore incur certain expenditures for purposes that go beyond its jurisdiction.

I am satisfied that the constitutional amendments arising from this Accord will have the effect of enhancing the legitimacy of our national institutions, with the assurance that any changes in those institutions can be made only with the consent of the majority.

The Senate

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the motion which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) with respect to the Senate of Canada is one which has considerable appeal for me. I take the position now, as I have for a very long period of time, that in a democratic system there really ought not to be any place for an appointed body which makes the claim that it represents either individual citizens, groups of Canadians, sectors of our society or regions of the country.

It is quite true that in a democratic society there are many appointed persons, for example, judges, public servants, presidents of universities and so on. However, in no case of which I am aware is an appointment made in total and complete absence of any system of accountability. It is also true that having a Senate of Canada lacking the obligations of precise and structured means of accountability does not mean that we do not have many hard-working and distinguished Senators. They may impose upon themselves very rigid and demanding sets of standards. We all know that an individual who is his own boss can be the hardest taskmaster possible. In the so-called other place down the hall there are undoubtedly such individuals. On the other hand, it is equally possible that the reverse may be true. However, it is not for me or for any Hon. Member to make these kinds of judgments.

From a report prepared by the Senators themselves, it is clear they are convinced that their role, their work, their importance and their functions can only be legitimized by way of election, be it by direct election or, in my view, a less desirable method of proportional representation where the successful candidates would be drawn from Party lists.

I note that the motion calls for abolition as a prerequisite to the creation of a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada. It would seem to me that immediate abolition would signal the Government's seriousness about Senate reform. Before a new structure can be erected, it is of course necessary to clear the site. The old order changes, making way for the new.

For a long while I was one of those who believed that abolition in and by itself would be sufficient. Today, however, I am better able to see the value of a bicameral Parliament in a federal state such as ours. A second elected Chamber can be, or could be an effective protector of regional interests. A second elected Chamber could act as a check upon the very extensive executive powers which exist in a parliamentary system such as ours.

The Hon. Member for Bow River calls for equal representation from each of the provinces and the Territories. I want to commend him most heartily for having included the Territories. So often the two great Territories of this country are neglected, forgotten and left out. For example, they were absent at the recent Meech Lake meetings at which a very significant accord was arrived at for the future of this country.

At one point the idea of equal representation from each province and territory gave me some difficulty. I contrasted a small province and a very large province in terms of population and it gave me some difficulties. However, having been an active observer at the First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights, I saw the important role played by the territorial Governments there, and I saw the important role played by some of the smaller provinces, for example, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. I also saw that where convincing and effective leadership was expected from the larger provinces they were often found to be wanting.

Professor Geraets of the University of Ottawa envisages in an article he recently wrote, which was published in The Globe and Mail, an enlarged elected Senate with the regions of the country having approximately equal representation. This is a slightly different approach from that advanced by the Hon. Member for Bow River. Professor Geraets sees the regions as being first, Atlantic Canada, second, Quebec, and third, the west. Of interest to me, leaving that aside, is Professor Geraets' suggestion that 10 additional seats ought to be established for the aboriginal people of Canada. That has a considerable amount of appeal for me.

In conclusion, I would like to raise a few questions to which I hope other speakers in this debate will provide the answers. If the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord is ratified, then provincial powers in this country are going to be greatly enhanced and the federal Government will correspondingly be enfeebled. I would like to know if an elected Senate would strengthen further the voice of the regions and the provinces at the centre, or would it find itself in competition with provincial Governments for allegiance and decision-making on matters which are vital to a particular region or province? I note, for example, that in the United States of America, a very powerful Senate has caused—not in all cases but in many—state Governments to be diminished in both their authority and influence.

I ask also what the effects of a powerful elected Senate would be on the authority and functions of this House? It would undoubtedly change us in many ways. However, I still say that if ever an institution stood in need of a major overhaul and renewal, it is this Canadian House of Commons. The parliamentary system in Canada, I argue, suffers from institutional retardation. Our evolution lags well behind that of Westminster and behind the parliamentary system which has evolved in the federal state of Australia.

A reformed Senate, elected, equally representing the regions, and a reinvigorated and renewed House of Commons, I believe, would give Canadians a better kind of representation, and I think they deserve much better than what our institutions allow at the present time.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, before I commence this debate, I would certainly like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Although he may be a senior citizen, I do not know of anyone who is a harder working individual. His energy, integrity and dedication are certainly an inspiration to all of us.

The Hon. Member's motion for an elected, equal and effective Senate has certainly captured the imagination of not only western Canada but of all Canada. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde), mentioned earlier in debate, the Meech Lake Accord is a major step toward that evolution, a Triple-E Senate.

I would like to speak about how we got to the Senate. I would like to refer to a paper prepared by Sean Graham from Calgary. He stated that the Constitution Act of 1867 stated two objectives of the Senate. The first was to bestow power to the less populous provinces so as to protect them from the heavy populated provinces and the second was to act as a chamber of second thought. Obviously, we will have to investigate whether or not the wishes of the founding fathers were fulfilled. I think it is obvious that they were not.

• (1720)

The British North American Act of 1867 dealt with the composition, powers and responsibilities of the Senate. Section 22 states that Canada was to consist of three divisions: Upper Canada, Lower Canada and the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Each division was to have 24 members. Sections 26 and 27 state that any additional members added to the Senate were to be added equally to each division, thereby maintaining equilibrium between the divisions. Section 147 states that in the case of the admission of Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island, each would receive four members in the Senate. In the event that Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, she would be considered part of the maritime region. The BNA Act of 1915 recognized the west as an independent division and granted it 24 Senators.

I would now like to quote Canada's first Prime Minister, John A. Macdonald, who said the following during the Confederation debate:

> There would be no use of an Upper House if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the Lower House. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the Lower House. It must be an independent House, having a free will of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body.

He added further:

> No Ministry can in the future do what they have done in Canada before—they cannot with the view of carrying any measure, or of strengthening the party, attempt to overrule the independent opinion of the Upper House by filling it with a number of its partisans and political supporters . . . The fact of the government being prevented from exceeding a limited number will preserve the independence of the Upper House, and make it, in reality, a separate and distinct chamber, having a legitimate and controlling influence in the legislation of the country.

Let us look at what has happened since those debates in the intervening 120-odd years. I would now like to quote the words of James K. Gray who addressed the Calgary Chamber of Commerce on February 17. He stated:

> In World War I the price of wheat began to mount and the government of day froze the price; cut the top off the boom and extracted from the farmers of Western Canada a disproportionate contribution to the war effort.

He stated further:

> In World War II it happened again! All prices were frozen, but at the time the freeze was introduced farm prices were still at the late-depression levels and the booming world prices, which could have provided an opportunity for our farm operators to clear debt and consolidate their operations, were withheld.

It happened again in peacetime between 1972 and 1985 when the central Government cut the top off the oil and gas boom. National policies on oil and gas reduced the revenues that would have flowed to the producing provinces by $56 billion. That $56 billion would have gone to the producing provinces and the producing companies. Instead, these revenues were passed on to the consumers of Canada and to the federal Treasury. That is what has happened. That is why the people of western Canada are demanding a stronger say in the system.

A number of people have looked at reform of the Senate. I would like to list some of the groups of people who have spoken out in this respect in the last eight years. The Canada West Foundation put out a report entitled Alternatives in 1978. The B.C. Government put out a constitutional report in 1978. There was an Ontario Government advisory committee in 1978 which dealt with the subject, as well as a federal government amendment Bill of 1978. There were the Conservative policy proposals in 1978, as well as an article by the Canadian Bar Association in 1979. The Pépin-Robarts task force called for reform of the Senate. The Canada West Foundation put out a regional representations paper in 1980 on this topic. The Joint Committee of the House of Commons and Senate on Senate Reform published its report in 1984. The Alberta Legislative Committee on Senate Reform issued its report in 1985, and the Macdonald Royal Commission published its report in 1986. There is no doubt that through this debate more and more people are looking at it and saying: "We have a problem. We have had this problem for 120 years. It is time that we addressed it".

What is happening in other parts of the world? In the House of Commons central Canada has 60 per cent of the seats. In terms of equal representation it would only have two parts out of 10. The West and the North have 28 per cent of the seats of the House of Commons, while Atlantic Canada has but 12 per cent. Essentially, then, 60 per cent of the House of Commons represents the population of central Canada in Ontario and Quebec. There are predictions that 50 per cent of Canada's population will be located in Ontario by the year 2000.

In the United States the largest state has two Senators, as does the smallest state. Switzerland has the same balance. In Australia the largest state and the smallest state each has 10 representatives. In Germany the largest state has five Senators while the smallest has three. In Canada the largest has 24 while the smallest has four. We have a built-in imbalance in our system. This leads to alienation. To address this alienation we have to address reform of the Senate. We must move to a Triple E Senate.

I will finish my remarks as I commenced them by congratulating my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River, for bringing forward an excellent and worth-while motion.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate on the motion presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). The Hon. Member is one with whom I at times violently agree and with whom I at times violently disagree. There is no doubt that the Hon. Member is indeed an experienced parliamentarian and that I have no trouble at all with many of his ideas. I enjoy listening to the Hon. Member when he takes a few strips off the CPR and the central banks. I sit and applaud him because I think that many of his arguments and reasons are sound. Indeed, he very often represents the sense of western Canadians. As such, I appreciate the remarks and the comments that he often makes. On this occasion I have very little difficulty in supporting the Hon. Member. The proposal for a Triple-E Senate has a lot going for it.

• (1730)

First we have the notion of an elected Senate. We in the NDP have always considered the appointed Senate to be an obsolete body. Imagine these people, most often appointed for purely political patronage reasons, having a say in the legislative process. That is surely a throwback to medieval times. It has no place in a modern democratic society. It is amazing that we have kept this appointed Senate for as long as we have. However, it has been, I suppose, to the advantage of the various Governments to maintain the status quo.

If we are going to have a second body, it of course should be elected. There should be no question about that. As to an equal Senate, if we are going to have a second legislative body like a Senate, then there is something to be said for it being equal. It should represent the regions of this country. The House of Commons is elected on a proportional basis, and we could have the Senate as a second body of review representing the regional interests.

In a unitary state you can make an argument that such a body is not necessary. In a federal state, however, one with continuous tensions between different regions, cultures, and, very often, points of view, to have an equal Senate allows the legislative process to take into account regional differences. I suggest that an equal Senate would facilitate a smoother functioning of Government in this federal state. I suggest that with an equal Senate it is possible that we will have less regional alienation than now exists.

There is no question that today there is a tremendous amount of alienation in western Canada. I am sure you have heard on many occasions that our fellow Canadians out West do not feel they are really full partners in Confederation. They are and have been treated historically as second cousins. When times are good in the West, our wealth has been taken from us. There was the NEP. The previous speaker mentioned other historic cases such as during wartime where the prices of wheat and other grains were frozen, all to the betterment and advantage of the bulk of our population in central Canada. Having an equal Senate would ensure that those resource grabs will no longer occur. Western Canadians need that reassurance. It is one thing to have resources taken from you in the boom times, but in the down times we have a dickens of a job trying to get some assistance in the West.

The debate last week on the farm crisis is an illustration of the type of battle which has to occur in order to get back some of the wealth we lost in the boom times. When you survey the editorials of the eastern newspapers you find that they go on and on about how it is time that the farmers bit the bullet. They have to accept that we should have fewer farmers. These, Mr. Speaker, are fair weather friends. There are some people in central Canada who are quite willing to see great hunks of our farm population going under in these bad economic times. They are not willing to offer assistance to ensure that those farms remain viable so that when the price of wheat gets back up we will be functioning farm units.

Coming back to the question in front of us, I think an equal Senate would help in that regard. It is not a guarantee, but it is at least a step in the right direction so that all regions in this country are treated on an equal basis.

We then come to the third E, and that is effective. Again I have no problem with an effective Senate. There is work to be done by a second House. There is work to be done which will help contribute to wise legislation and wise governing of the country.

I am not certain about the final outcome of the conference at Meech Lake with respect to Senate reform. My initial reaction is that Senate reform will be frozen. In essence the patronage opportunity which used to belong to the governing Party on the federal level has now been transferred to the governing Parties in the provinces. Really we have replaced federal patronage with provincial patronage. As well, every province will now have a veto on Senate reform. That, I think, will make it extremely difficult to achieve Senate reform in the future. The First Ministers will be discussing Senate reform in the conferences ahead so we will know more about their attitude.

Whether the various provinces will be honest and prepared to see an effective and equal elected Senate remains to be seen. However, at this stage I feel somewhat pessimistic. I am not convinced that all the provinces will agree to Senate reform or forgo their new-found patronage opportunities and instead depend upon an elected Senate. That is why I was particularly surprised that the Premier of Alberta was not more forceful in trying to obtain a new agenda for Senate reform.

I accept and understand that the conference dealt primarily with obtaining some agreement to allow Quebec into the Constitution. I laud both the Government and the Premiers for their efforts and their accomplishments. However, I really had some fear that when it comes to Senate reform the agreement as it now stands will really not allow for genuine Senate reform. Certainly we do not have an elected Senate now. It will now be appointed by the provinces. We do not have an equal Senate because the distribution of Senate appointments remains as skewed as it was before, with central Canada appointing most of the Senators. We certainly do not have an agenda to allow for an effective Senate.

Again I am somewhat fearful that the way things are now we will not see genuine Senate reform in the very near future. Yet, as to the resolution in front of us, I am quite prepared to endorse it and support it and I congratulate the Hon. Member for Bow River for an excellent motion.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate this afternoon on the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon), I have had the opportunity of working with the Hon. Member for Bow River since 1982. I certainly admire his dedication to the House and to his riding, and I appreciate the opportunity to be able to sit with him.

• (1740)

The motion calls for the abolition of the present Senate and its replacement by an elected Senate with equal representation for each province and territory. It also asks that intergovernmental consultations to this end commence at the earliest opportunity. The motion is certainly timely in light of the recent historic agreement reached by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers at Meech Lake, Quebec, on April 30.

Calls for a directly elected Senate of some kind have grown significantly in recent years. In January, 1984, for example, a special joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate recommended a system of direct election which would give smaller provinces proportionately more Senators than populous provinces.

The joint committee also recommended that the Senate consist of 144 Members, with 24 Members each from Ontario and Quebec, 42 from the combined Atlantic provinces, 48 from the West, 4 from the Northwest Territories, and 2 from Yukon.

In March 1985, a Select Special Committee of the Alberta Legislative Assembly endorsed what has popularly become known as a Triple-E Senate, meaning direct election, equal representation by province, and effective powers. As the Alberta special committee argued, Canada needs an effective Upper House in order to protect the diverse interests of Canadians. The recommendations in that report were unanimously endorsed by the Alberta Legislature in May, 1985.

On March 10 of this year, the Alberta Legislature unanimously confirmed its support for the special committee's report.

Others have suggested looking at the Australian Senate as a means of grafting the federal principle on to a parliamentary system of government. Like the Canadian Senate, the Australian Second Chamber was intended to ensure that state interests would be taken into account with the national Government.

Senate reform and a directly elected Senate, in particular, are issues which have acquired considerable public appeal and hold great attraction to a number of political leaders in the west. There is little doubt that direct election represents, in part, a desire for a stronger voice in federal institutions. Similarly, there is some sympathy for the Triple-E proposal, though difficult questions remain about the powers of such a Senate, its relationship to the House of Commons, and its effect on the powers of provincial Governments. As noted by Professors Peter McCormick and David Elton in their March 1987 article for the Canada West Foundation entitled The Western Economy and Canadian Unity, the replacement of an existing Senate with a new elected Senate will raise a wide range of questions of detail which will have to be worked out. Nevertheless, they added:

> If Canada is to maintain and enhance the opportunities for its citizens in an increasingly competitive world, it must create national institutions which are capable of acting in the interests of all Canadians.

Finally, Professors McCormick and Elton impressed upon the First Ministers the need for attention to Senate reform. They said:

> We have only begun the process of the renewal of the Canadian federation, and if the impetus is lost now we may not have the luxury of waiting another century before the problems arise again.

Prior to the First Ministers' meeting at Meech Lake, Premier Getty endorsed the Triple E proposal. In his April 5 speech to the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party Convention, he declared that Canada "can only grow in a healthy way if our regional representation is fair and balanced".

While not in any way downplaying the importance of Senate reform, on April 9 in the House the Prime Minister reminded all First Ministers of their commitment under the August 1986 Edmonton Declaration that the top constitutional priority was the following one:

> —to bring about Quebec's full and active participation in the Canadian federation. There was a consensus among the Premiers that then they will pursue further constitutional discussions on matters raised, which will include, amongst other items, Senate reform, fisheries, property rights, etc.

The Prime Minister went on to say:

> If the matter of Senate reform is reached pursuant to this formula enunciated by the Premiers, the Government of Canada will have a proposal to put forward in regard to Senate reform.

In this same spirit the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) injected an element of caution as we enter the second round of constitutional discussions. Speaking in Camrose, Alberta on April 25, he pointed out that many questions "have to be considered very carefully as we proceed with Senate reform because you cannot change one institution in isolation from the rest". The Minister also affirmed that "we want changes that make Canada work better, that require both commitment and care". He added that this was the approach in which the Government would address the undeniable need for Senate reform.

The Prime Minister and the 10 Premiers took a crucial step in strengthening the federation by reaching an agreement on the top constitutional priority—bringing Quebec into the Constitution. However, the process does not end there. The communiqué issued at Meech Lake on April 30 required the following:

> A First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution be held not less than once per year and that the first be held within 12 months of proclamation of this amendment but not later than the end of 1988.

Among the items on the agenda to be entrenched in the Constitution will be Senate reform, including the functions and role of the Senate, the powers of the Senate, the method of selection of Senators, and the distribution of Senate seats.

Finally, as a demonstration of good faith on the part of the Prime Minister, the communiqué provided:

> —until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished the federal Government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal Government.

I remind Hon. Members that this change to the method of Senate appointments is a variation of numerous proposals in the past aimed at providing a role for the provinces in the selection of Senators. Among these was one put forward by the federal Government in the 1969 discussion paper entitled The Constitution and the People of Canada. The paper suggested:

> The Senate could be partly selected by the federal Government and partly selected by provincial Governments. The method of selection of Senators by the provinces could be by nomination of the provincial Governments.

The Prime Minister announced the following in the House on May 1:

> The Meech Lake Agreement is good for Canada and good for Canadians. It will unblock the constitutional reform process and enable Canadians to turn their attention to other issues such as Senate reform and fisheries.

The tabling and proclamation of the Meech Lake Agreement will conclude the first round of constitutional renewal. Senate reform is very much a part and indeed is at the top of the agenda of the second round.

Though much remains to be done, let us not forget that much has been accomplished. I believe, as the Prime Minister declared in his address at Sept Iles, Quebec on August 6, 1984, that we are on the threshold of a true national renewal.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to debate the motion sponsored by our colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) concerning the reorganization of the Senate. Perhaps it might be useful if I were to put this question in a certain historical context to make it easier to understand. First I would refer to the Charlottetown meeting of the Fathers of Confederation when these outstanding Canadians set up a parliamentary system designed to protect the interests of every region of Canada, and this was the advent of the House of Commons. They also established a Senate, and one of its objectives was to protect the interests of the various components of Canada, especially its minorities.

Over the years Members of the House have heard a number of representations aimed at revamping and modernizing the Senate. So our Government too decided to change and modernize to take the present context into account, and particularly to correct the indecency of the previous Liberal administration which, in 1982, chose to ignore 27 per cent of the population of Canada—in other words, when the 74 Quebec Liberal Members forgot to include their province in the new constitutional agreement. Indeed it is easy to understand why they should display so little interest in anything constitutional: As I look around today I cannot see a single Member of that Party listening to what is being said in the House, proof positive that they could hardly care less about the very essence of Canada.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Government had promised to integrate Quebec in the Canadian Confederation. A few years had elapsed since we took that stand and, recently, thanks to the cooperation of all the provincial premiers, especially Mr. Bourassa from Quebec, our Government has been able to offer Quebec full participation in the Canadian Constitution. All Quebecers are delighted with this historic meeting of April 30, 1987, which will remain for us Quebecers and I am sure for a great many other Canadians as significant a landmark as our Fathers of Confederation's meeting in Charlottetown.

The meeting was a success, Mr. Speaker, thanks to our Prime Minister, who managed to obtain a consensus from ten premiers of 10 Canadian provinces on bringing Quebec back into the constitutional fabric. Today, this country is complete, from coast to coast.

Today, I am more of a Canadian because I feel Canadian through and through as a result of what was achieved by my Prime Minister on April 30, 1987. We corrected the mistake and the omission the Liberals made in 1982. Furthermore, our provincial premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada decided to provide new possibilities for the provinces including a re-evaluation and redefinition of the role of the Senate, and they included in the new Constitution a requirement to consider Senate reform.

They even decided, and this is to take place in 1988, to have a meeting of the 10 premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada on the subject of the functions and role of the Senate, the powers of the Senate, the method of selection of Senators and the distribution of Senate seats. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, to show our goodwill and receptivity to all suggestions by the various provinces that were involved in the Accord reached on April 30, 1987, our Prime Minister has decided that he will not proceed with further appointments to the Senate before receiving a list of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur. We have wiped out the constitutional affront of 1982. We have wiped out Liberal arrogance. We are now Quebecers and Canadians who are proud to be part of Canada. We feel welcome.

Our Prime Minister was the first Prime Minister to formally accept provincial proposals concerning Senate appointments and to take them into account in appointing senators. What a difference with the previous liberal administration!

Think of such a move by René Lévesque to have someone appointed at the time, and imagine the kind of cooperation that would have existed between himself and the former Prime Minister of Canada.

However, Quebecers and Canadians know there are always improvements to be made. They are needed. This is why my position is to respect a decision made by the 10 Premiers and the Prime Minister on April 30, 1987, until the next negotiation meeting on the Senate that will be held before the end of 1988.

I feel certain, Mr. Speaker, that all the First Ministers will be able at that time to reach a consensus leading to a Senate amendment that will be supported by all.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate you recognizing me, knowing however there are only two or three minutes left before 6 p.m., which means I will have to conclude my remarks during the next sitting. In the circumstances, and to prevent my speech from being cut in half and less understood by Canadians, I would ask for unanimous consent for the House to adjourn until the next sitting, so that I may make my speech in one go, 10 full minutes.

• (1750)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

FILM INDUSTRY—DISTRIBUTION—CANADIAN CONTROL. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): I rise now to address a question that I have raised in Question Period with the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) regarding the Government's policy on film distribution. The facts are very well known to us. They are pointed out, I am afraid, in very sad detail in the report of the film industry task force which was published in November, 1985. The Government has had well over a year to consider its response. Its response has been very weak, especially considering the very serious situation that when Canadians go to see films at the cinema and pay their money, the money does not gets plowed back into Canadian film production. Because distribution outlets are overwhelmingly American-owned and because of the vertical integration within the system, the money goes mainly into American production. Only 3 per cent of the films actually seen on the screen are Canadian.

This task force came up with some very strong recommendations for reform. First, that the distribution of films and videos in all media in Canada be by companies owned and controlled by Canadians. Very specifically the Government was asked to make a clear policy statement that Canadian ownership and control over distribution in Canada is essential and to take the appropriate legislative and regulatory measures to ensure that this policy is carried out. Has the Government done it, Mr. Speaker? No, I am afraid not. It would appear from remarks made by the Minister that there is no intention to carry out this recommendation of the task force.

There are two more recommendations for specific action. One is regarding tax incentives and the third is the creation of a Canadian film fund with an annual budget of $60 million. Work on this third recommendation has been undertaken, but the fourth recommendation has also been ignored.

• (1800)

The fourth recommendation is to enact measures which will prevent all vertical integration, distribution and exhibition to the extent such integration limits competition and freedom of trade in Canada. The Government has taken only a very modest step in the direction of fulfilling Recommendation No. 4.

The task force composed of experts in the field concluded that its principal recommendations are relatively few. They form a whole and cannot be separated without threatening to upset the balance of the entire structure and should be applied concurrently. The task force is looking for a comprehensive response on the part of the Government and the Government has not made that comprehensive response.

It has been estimated that the film import licensing proposal of the Minister will reduce American control by only 15 per cent or less. Instead of 97 per cent of the profits going out of the country, roughly 80 per cent of the profits would go out of the country. That is not a very significant change.

I would like to compliment the Minister for taking a step in the right direction and to point out the cowardice of the previous Liberal Government which had these facts available to it over the years. The previous Minister, Francis Fox, certainly had access to that information. Yet he turned tail and did not have the courage to stand up to the American majors who are milking money out of Canada, plowing that money back into American productions and leaving Canadians with little opportunity to see the excellent films that do get produced in Canada and a very small fund of money from which to produce more.

I note that the Minister's paper on cultural industries cites European examples of much more vigorous methods of dealing with film production and distribution. Other countries that do more include Austria, West Germany, France, Italy, The Netherlands, Australia and New Zealand, indeed all the EEC countries. Since the 1920s, these countries have protected the production and distribution of films to ensure that they have viable film industries, something which we do not have here.

Canada is treated as a colony of the United States for purposes of film distribution. It is shameful for Canadians to have to be treated within their own country as an appendage of the United States. Of course, we do not have the funds to develop our own industry.

I am afraid that the Minister's response so far has been the desire to be congratulated on the very modest step she has taken, not to look seriously at all four recommendations made by the task force. She seems to consider her step adequate. In effect, she has even repudiated the first recommendation for a Canadian-ownership and distribution policy, a policy countries larger than ours that need this protection even less have instituted.

Our Minister is not standing up to the American distribution companies and is not putting Canadian policy first. I would call on the House to ask the Minister to put Canadian distribution first so that excellent Canadian programs will be distributed and Canadians will have a chance to see them.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's concerns about the distribution of films in the Canadian film industry. The Government has taken decisive action to foster the development of a healthy Canadian film industry, building on the recommendations of the film industry task force chaired by Steven Roth and Marie Josee Raymond. This means addressing all phases of the industry: production, distribution and exhibition. Our goal is to have a viable film industry so that Canadians can have access to films by Canadians about Canadians.

In a pattern that has hardly changed in the past decade, only about 3 per cent of screen time in Canadian theatres has been devoted to Canadian films. To remedy this abnormal situation, the Government has acted on two complementary fronts. It established a new $30 million feature film fund administered by Telefilm to provide direct financial support of the production and distribution of Canadian feature films.

• (1805)

A stronger distribution sector is needed for two reasons; first, to bring Canadian films to Canadian screens and, second, to participate in financing the production of those films. To be strong, Canadian distribution companies have to be able to do more than distribute Canadian films. They have to be able to distribute more of the films imported into Canada.

To give Canadian distributors an equitable opportunity to distribute imported films, the Government is developing legislation to license the importation of films meant for commercial distribution in Canada. Such legislation will contribute to the establishment of Canada as a distinct market for film distribution. It will further the creation of a healthy production, distribution, exhibition cycle for Canadians and Canadian film and video productions. At present we are consulting with the Canadian film industry, the provinces and, indeed, the American film industry, the distributors of which operate in Canada on this pending legislation.

The American film industry is responsible for bringing more than $200 million in production activity into this country annually, which employs hundreds of Canadians in creative and technical positions.

Our consultations with the American film industry have drawn sympathetic support to the principles and objectives of the proposed legislation. However, we must address their existing presence in Canada with a degree of fairness while allowing Canadians the freedom of choice to see whatever movies they wish to, be they foreign or Canadian. The point of the legislation is to ensure that a significant choice is available in the market of high quality, well-promoted Canadian films to compete with foreign films. I must state that the Canadian film community is very supportive of this move by the Government of Canada.

With this legislation Canada will be treated as a separate country for purposes of the importation and distribution of films. The establishment of Canada as a separate market in North America clearly asserts our foreign identity. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has announced her intention to introduce this legislation and the Government is committed to the continuing development of the indigenous Canadian cultural industries in Canada.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON POSSIBLE TREATY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know when or why you became a member of the Conservative Party. I would like to have a chat with you about that one of these days. However, I became a Member during my university days. Before doing so I went to meetings of all three of our national Parties and I listened very carefully. It was after listening to what was said at those meetings that I decided that my own views and philosophies were best reflected in the pragmatic, socially progressive and fiscally conservative approach of the Progressive Conservative Party.

One of the most appealing corner-stones of the Progressive Conservative Party, in my view, was its Canadian nationalism. It was the Party, as you know, which created Confederation and Canada. It was the Party which established something called national policy, a tariff barrier which stretched from sea to sea and created a Canadian industrial economy.

That, in my mind, was one of the things which clearly distinguished the Progressive Conservative Party from the Liberal Party, as evidenced by the great reciprocity debate of 1911. That tariff barrier policy was established by Sir John A. Macdonald and supported and defended by Prime Ministers Robert Borden, Arthur Meighen and R. B. Bennett. It has been and is, therefore, a corner-stone of Progressive Conservative policy.

I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, can imagine my feelings and the feelings of many other supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party when, in the summer of 1985, the Government decided to embark upon a course of trade negotiations with the United States. I know that your fears, Mr. Speaker, my fears, and those of many other members of our Party were allayed when we realized what was facing us. We realized, first, the importance of trade to Canada. Twenty-seven per cent of our Gross National Product is derived from trade. One job of every three in this country comes from trade. In fact, two jobs of every five in my native Province of Ontario come from trade.

I came to realize the wealth which trade generated and that it helped to create and maintain our social services and cultural institutions. I realized that tariffs, which had been at 30 per cent 40 years ago, had dropped to approximately 9 per cent and even 5 per cent in the case of the United States. In all that time our national wealth had increased some three times and the number of jobs in this country had doubled. At that same time, there were some 300 separate Bills before the United States Congress that are now consolidated into an omnibus trade Bill which, if passed, would seriously affect and damage Canadian trade with the United States and cause jobs to be lost in this country.

• (1810)

The effect of the countervail tariffs of the United States on our softwood lumber products and the effects of the anti-dumping actions of the United States and the escape clause actions under the GATT escape clause provisions on our shakes and shingles all made me realize that we needed some sort of protective mechanism to protect our jobs in this country. The only way we could do it would be to sit down and negotiate with the United States. To do otherwise would be to invite disaster. Canadians would never forgive us if we allowed that to happen.

At the same time, I realize that four times in the past we have successfully negotiated trade agreements with the United States: One in 1935, one in 1938, the Auto Pact and the Defence Production Sharing Agreement.

While my fears, and I know yours, have been allayed, there are other members of our Party and other people in the country who still have great concerns and fears, which I can certainly understand. One of those people is one of my constituents. She is Mrs. Mary MacMillan, who lives on Barbara Crescent. A few weeks ago she visited me to express her concerns about these trade negotiations with the United States. She expressed her fears, and the fears of many others, about the possibility of U.S. domination, a weakening of our economic and cultural sovereignty, and the possibility that these negotiations were irreversible and her inability to take this on trust and faith. She expressed her feeling that we were negotiating our future and our ability to make our own decisions as a country. Of course, she expressed her strong and deep feelings for this country which I know you and I share, Mr. Speaker.

Those feelings largely stem from the fact that we do not know much about the negotiations that are taking place. There is a lot of secrecy in those negotiations, which is understandable, because there must be secrecy in negotiations of this sort. One cannot lay one's cards on the table in a poker game, and we cannot lay them on the table perhaps the way Canadians would prefer so they would know what is going on in negotiations like this.

At the same time, that is why I believe it is very important that all of the facts and all of the terms be made public and put before Parliament, and that there be an opportunity for Parliament to approve it before that agreement is signed. I am not sure that that will allay the concerns of my constituent, Mrs. Mary MacMillan, but it will allay the concerns of many people.

That is why on September 30, 1985, I directed a question to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and asked him if there would be that opportunity to have that information and have Parliament approve the agreement. That is why I repeated, on March 16, 1987, the same question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs made it quite clear that we would get that information, that it would be placed before Parliament and there would be an opportunity to approve it. In his remarks, the Prime Minister seemed to modify that somewhat when he said:

> There shall be no treaty signed until such time as Members of the House of Commons have been apprised of it and have been given an opportunity to speak to it.

Tonight I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will clarify that once and for all, and advise us and all Canadians that before an agreement is signed with the United States we will know all the terms, all of the letters of understanding, and all of the side agreements if there are any, and that the House will have an opportunity to approve it before that agreement is signed.

• (1815)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I agree you are a very understanding and sharing Speaker as remarked upon by my friend, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I must say that this was one of the better speeches I have heard on the trade negotiations and I want to congratulate the Hon. Member.

I understand the concern of the Canadian people in these trade negotiations. It is new territory. It is a large comprehensive trade agreement which is very important to the future of Canada. I might point out that although we are in many ways examining new areas, we are doing what I think is some very imaginative work. I go back to the opposition Parties which keep opposing what we are doing but do not come up with any alternative to the status quo, which we feel is just not right.

The question of provincial involvement, I believe, is one which has to be addressed in the approval system. We are bringing the provinces right along on these trade negotiations. The First Ministers meet regularly. They met recently in March and two meetings are scheduled for June and September. We must realize that the federal Government has jurisdiction over international treaties but there may be within the agreement some necessity for provinces to agree in areas of jurisdiction which will affect them directly.

The provinces have agreed with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to work right along with the federal Government in deciding on a ratification process a little later on.

[Translation]

As to whether Parliament can scrutinize and approve any trade agreement reached with the United States, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) already stated in this House that no agreement will be signed until Hon. Members have been informed of its contents and had an opportunity to comment.

[English]

I can assure the Hon. Member as well that with an agreement will come legislation, obviously, which will have to be brought to the House of Commons. At that time approval will have to be given by this House of Commons.

HARBOURFRONT—MORATORIUM ON CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS AT TORONTO WATERFRONT. (B) TYPES OF PROJECTS INVOLVED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on April 13, I asked a question about the Government's announcement of a moratorium on property development on the Harbourfront site in Toronto. Since the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) was not in the House that day, his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) took notice of my question. I am raising it again today because I think the issue is an important one.

Hon. Members will recall that both the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and the Minister of Public Works had announced that certain development projects at Harbourfront would be halted pending a review of its development policy. The Secretary of State announced there would be a total freeze on projects without City of Toronto building permits. However, the Minister of Public Works announced that some projects would be permitted to go ahead.

These two statements were made on a Friday. One of the Ministers left that day on business outside the country and the other Minister was absent from the House when I asked my question the following Monday. On April 15, two days later, the Minister of Public Works issued a press release which did not resolve the confusion created by the two statements.

There are a number of projects on the Harbourfront property in various stages of development. Whether or not they are going ahead depended on which statement was the real indication of the Government's intent. Some of the projects are commercial developments, including a proposal for a 40-storey office tower. Some are high-rise residential developments and condominiums.

• (1820)

As well, there is a co-operative housing project and two condominium projects on the Bathurst Quay which are meant for seniors and low-income families. Affordable rent and accommodation is badly needed in downtown Toronto. However, from the two statements issued by the Government it was not possible to tell whether these projects would be going ahead or not. It was not possible to tell which of the other projects would be affected by the moratorium.

I also asked for the Government's reasons in calling a moratorium. There was considerable media speculation. It would have been useful to have had a clear statement from the Minister in the House at the time.

Questions have been raised and concerns expressed about how Harbourfront, which is a Crown corporation, is interpreting its development policy. I realize that as a Crown corporation it is expected to act autonomously, but the situation appears to have developed to the point where Harbourfront was going its own way and everyone else was in the dark—the Government of Canada which owns the site and the City of Toronto which, through its official plan, zoning and building by-laws, is supposed to control its building permits, building height, density and so on.

Public concern grew with the construction of a couple of high-rise condominium towers on a relatively small parcel of Harbourfront land, and as the pace of development in general accelerated.

I assume these are some of the reasons why the Government has undertaken a review at this time. It seems that the Government rushed to get the review under way and to announce it to the media. However, no information was given about the terms of the review or the expected date of completion. It seems that the situation had got so far out of hand that the Government was forced to impose a moratorium to get some control over it.

I assume that the review is proceeding. I am sure that the Government will make some sort of announcement in due course by press release, but Torontonians are vitally interested in knowing when the review is to be completed. I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary this evening will inform the House of the actions that the Government proposes to take.

Harbourfront was intended to be a balanced mix of development, open space and cultural activities for Toronto residents and visitors. It is clear that the desired balance is not there. I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will take this opportunity to give some information about the action the Government has taken to date, as well as its intentions for the future with regard to Harbourfront.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I trust the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) as a Torontonian will allow a Bramptonian, a neighbour who uses the facilities of Harbourfront quite often, to reply on behalf of the Minister. I might say, first, that I have a special interest in the Toronto waterfront, having been a former employee of Ontario Place Corporation. I have watched with interest, sometimes with pleasure and sometimes with displeasure, the development of the water-front. It is fair to say that the questions raised by the Hon. Member are those that concern the Government. Thus, a policy review and a suspension of new developments at Harbourfront was announced by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) on April 15.

The purpose of the halt is to respect the review of Harbourfront program, which is currently being carried out by the city, as well as to support the federal policy review. In making the announcement, the Minister stated that clarification of the application of the suspension would be issued within 30 days. The clarification is as follows.

First, all projects which have received building permits and are now under construction may proceed. There are no projects currently under construction which have not received their building permits. Second, Harbourfront Corporation will obtain the advice and comments of the City of Toronto on all projects which have yet to receive the requisite Government of Canada approvals.

• (1825)

Third, for those projects which may still require City of Toronto approvals, further Harbourfront and Government of Canada consideration will also await receipt of the city's advice and comments.

In its review of the Harbourfront program, the City of Toronto established the Harbourfront Review Committee as a mechanism for obtaining input from interested groups and individuals. Advice and comments passed to the Government of Canada by the city will be based in part on this input. In addition, Harbourfront Corporation itself is planning to hold a series of public forums to debate issues surrounding its role and mandate. These public forums will begin in the first week of June at Harbourfront.

I guess it is a matter of opinion as to whether there is a good balance of the various areas which make up our waterfront in Toronto. There are some very exciting cultural activities that go on down there. Within the last few weeks there was a major debate on capital punishment held down there. It is being used by the public. I share the concerns of the Hon. Member, as I think the Government does. We want to ensure that the development that does take place down there is proper, that we have a good mix, and that the public can still go down and participate in the myriad of attractions which take place at Harbourfront.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 6, 1987

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMPENSATION DENIED TO CERTAIN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, there is a shameful incident in the record of Canada's treatment of former prisoners of war that needs to be rectified.

Some 22 former Canadian servicemen, including seven Newfoundlanders, one of whom is now deceased, during the Second World War were held as prisoners in a Vichy France prisoner of war camp in Laghouat, Algeria. One of those prisoners, Mr. Jim Templeton of St. John's, was held for a total 472 days.

• (1405)

In 1976 the Parliament of Canada passed the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act. Since 1976 these 22 Canadians have been unable to receive from their Government compensation as Canadian prisoners of war. The reasons given are confusing. The Government argues that in order to receive compensation one had to be held by a country engaged in activities against the Allies.

Since the Government and, for that matter, the Allies never formerly declared war on Vichy France, these 22 Canadians, including six Newfoundlanders, have never received adequate compensation. I bring this matter to the attention of my colleagues. It was well exposed on CBC's Sunday Morning this weekend past.

I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) will move swiftly to ensure that these gentlemen, some of whom died trying to escape that camp, will finally receive justice and the compensation to which they are entitled as Canadians who served their country in very difficult and extreme circumstances.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

GROWTH OF EMPLOYMENT IN ABITIBI—TÉMISCAMINGUE AND SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN AREAS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Abitibi—Temiscamingue area was ranked first in Quebec for job creation in 1986. A major economic survey of the progress made by the Quebec labour market in 1986 has brought to light findings which are both unexpected and new. Contrary to what usually happens, the major urban centres such as Montreal and Quebec City did not show as much dynamism last year in the area of employment as such remote regions as Abitibi—Temiscamingue and Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean.

In 1986, Montreal and Quebec City lagged far behind outlying regions as far as job creation was concerned: their growth rates were 1.8 per cent and 1.6 per cent respectively, which are far behind those of 9.2 per cent and 7.3 per cent recorded in Abitibi—Temiscamingue and Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean respectively.

A positive fact is that the unemployment rate has come down in most regions. In the Abitibi—Temiscamingue and the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean areas, the decrease in unemployment has reached 2.3 per cent and 1.5 per cent respectively.

On the other hand, the full-time employment growths have exceeded the Quebec average of 2 per cent, reaching 10.9 per cent and 7.4 per cent in the Abitibi—Temiscamingue and the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean regions respectively.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of these accomplishments. Thanks to our businessmen, various groups in the economic sector and the efforts of all federal and provincial elected representatives, the working men and women in the Abitibi—Temiscamingue and Lac-Saint-Jean regions will no longer come last in the Province of Quebec.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—EFFECT OF PROPOSED OIL DRILLING PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in late 1986 Texaco announced it wished to drill some test sites within the Canadian section of Georges Bank. In recent weeks this matter has been made more urgent with the announcement by the U.S. Interior Department of a five-year offshore drilling plan for test wells on the American side of Georges Bank.

Georges Bank is a prime fishing area. Atlantic fishermen recognize the potential environmental damage to this sensitive area which can be wrecked by offshore drilling. They are organizing to ensure that this is not allowed to happen. Nova Scotia New Democrats are supporting the fishermen. Bob Levy, our fisheries critic, presented a resolution to the Nova Scotia Legislature on March 31 which reads:

> Therefore, be it resolved that this Government state categorically that it will press immediately through its representatives on the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Board for a permanent moratorium on any drilling for oil and gas on Georges Bank and that it will work to have the Georges Bank declared a National Marine Park by Environment Canada as soon as possible to allow for commercial fishing but no offshore drilling.

I call upon the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to proclaim a moratorium on offshore drilling in the Georges Bank area until the feasibility of establishing a National Marine Park is thoroughly studied, and to protest American plans to drill in such a sensitive area. Now is the time for the Canadian Government to act.

* * *

NATIONAL FORESTRY WEEK

VALUE OF EXPORTS—IMPORTANCE OF FORESTRY TO ALBERTA

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, from May 3 to May 9 of this year, we are celebrating National Forestry Week in Canada. Forestry is a vital part of our economic and social life and has enormous impact on our lives as Canadians. Canada is the world's leading exporter of forest products, 22 per cent of the world's total, an incredible $16.2 billion worth of products in 1985.

• (1410)

In Alberta, forestry is an important source of employment. There are 1,200 jobs directly generated by the forest industry in Edmonton alone.

This week I am proud to be able to host the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) when he visits the Northern Forestry Centre and the Alberta Forestry Centre. This will be a wonderful opportunity for Edmontonians and Albertans to become more aware of the potential of forestry and its impact on their lives. It is one of the keys to economic diversification in Alberta.

Canada and forestry are synonymous. We all have an obligation to ensure that we protect this natural resource, and that we use it wisely.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT RESEARCH AWARDS PROGRAM

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, victims of the Government's slashing of research and development spending continue to surface long after the dirty deeds are done. The most recent corpses are over 600 students who will find themselves without jobs this summer because of a 25 per cent cut to the budget of the Undergraduate Student Research Awards Program funded by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council.

These awards provided university and industry labs with funds to hire students to do research, to obtain valuable work experience and, hopefully, to go on to graduate study. Everyone except the Government knows that you cannot have more science and technology without people. If we cannot do anything else, we have at least to get young people interested in science.

I call upon the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) to provide funds to NSERC so that it can restore this program to its previous level and provide students with real summer job experience, and get back to providing Canada with the scientific talent that it so desperately needs.

* * *

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENT MONTH

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, to mark the beginning of Environment Month our Conservative Government supports the initiatives taken by the Fondation québécoise en environnement which is sponsoring a wide information and education campaign on the importance of protecting our environment. Ever since it first came into office our Government has always been leading the way in all matters related to environmental protection.

This is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) have assured foundation members that they would make a generous contribution to a special Broadcast entitled "Pour l'avenir du monde, je m'implique", a three-hour environmental presentation to be aired at 6.30 p.m. on May 24 over the Radio-Québec TV network.

Mr. Speaker, once again our Government has unreservedly endorsed the Environment Month campaign theme, "Pour l'avenir du monde, je m'implique". I urge all Quebecers, particularly my constituents of Chambly, to pay special attention to environmental protection during this National Environment Month.

* * *

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BRUNDTLAND REPORT—IMPACT OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as one reads the analyses and the recommendations of the World Commission on Environment and Development headed by Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Brundtland one gets the feeling that much of what we do around here amounts to a form of fiddling while Rome burns, or of having the planet disintegrate around us.

I want to make this point because I think that many who are now concerned about the economy should be concerned about the long-term effects of not paying attention to the environment, both in terms of the intrinsic value of the environment as well as the extent to which our economy is based on a healthy environment. We need to abandon the narrow bookkeeping to which all of us are addicted which pits short-term economic deficits against long-term environmental deficits, which may not be able to be repaid and which, in the end, will be profoundly economic deficits as well as environmental ones.

Might I also suggest, more for the benefit of government back-benchers, that we will not be able to solve a great many of these environmental problems if we are committed to allowing the market-place to be the final arbiter of what is done and not done in the name of economic development.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL BUSINESS WEEK

REGIONS' ACHIEVEMENTS

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since this is National Business Week, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the performance of the regions, and more particularly the region where the riding of Lotbinière is located, with respect to job creation in 1986.

In fact, a major study on labour market developments in Quebec tells us that the Mauricie-Bois-Francs region is one of three that have shown remarkable growth in employment. This area ranks third with an employment growth rate of 6.6 per cent. The in increase in full-time jobs La Mauricie-Bois-Francs was 5.1 per cent, 3 per cent above the provincial average.

This progress is the result of the perseverance, active involvement and know-how of the entrepreneurs in this region, and I think performances like these should be given the attention they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to mention more specifically the progress achieved by entrepreneurs in the eastern part of the riding of Lotbinière, with respect to job creation, and I would urge all those who are active in businesses in my riding to help support this upward trend.

* * *

FINANCE

PRIME MINISTER'S COMMITMENTS TO MONTREALERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the two and a half years that this Government has been in power, it has promised the earth and the moon to the people of Greater Montreal. However, despite the Government's catastrophic failure to help Montreal East in the Gulf refinery question, even after three committees, the de Cotret Committee, the Picard Committee and the CREM Committee for Montreal East were set up and three reports were published, the Government has yet to take any action.

The Government of Quebec is still waiting for this Government to locate the space agency in the Montreal area. Second, it expects a real banking centre, not just a night wicket. I would urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to wake up and follow through on the commitments made by his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the people of Montreal.

* * *

• (1415)

[English]

PORNOGRAPHY

SUPPORT FOR STRENGTHENING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on April 26, 1986, I convened a local public conference for residents of my riding of Don Valley East to discuss and learn about the vile types of pornographic material which are so widely distributed and easily available today.

Sergeant Wendy Leaver of Project P of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force made a thorough presentation depicting violent pornography, much exploiting young children, on video tapes and in magazines.

Almost 100 residents attended this meeting. They were shocked and almost numbed by the devastating, crude and violent scenes depicted. The mood changed to anger when they realized that we have inadequate laws on the books to prevent this type of material from eroding our morals and the very fabric of our society.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is to be commended for presenting tough new legislation which will make it illegal to import, sell or rent materials defined as pornographic, and illegal to possess child pornography. The basic freedom of expression of Canadians will remain protected by defining a limited class of materials to be prohibited as pornography.

I urge all those who see this Bill as a crude and needless intrusion by public authority into private morals at least to take the time to view and read the sickening material which is available today. If the import and distribution are not curbed through tough legislation, the current material will have a cancerous effect on the future of our society.

* * *

EDUCATION

SUPPORT EXPRESSED FOR B.C. TEACHERS' FEDERATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer congratulations to the B.C. Teachers' Federation and teachers of British Columbia for their fight to improve education in British Columbia.

The B.C. Teachers' Federation has, for almost 70 years, been a vigorous supporter of students, teachers, and education in B.C. It has carried on this fight in recent years against one of the worst provincial Governments in Canada.

The NDP caucus wishes to congratulate and support the B.C. Teachers' Federation and B.C. teachers for their struggle against Bill 20 and Bill 19, two pieces of legislation which destroy the rights of teachers and working people in the Province of British Columbia.

* * *

HEALTH

SUPPORT URGED FOR MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS RESEARCH CAMPAIGN

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, multiple sclerosis is a disease which primarily strikes young people in the prime of life. We have known for over 100 years what the symptoms are and, even though 50,000 Canadians are afflicted with it, we still do not know what causes MS. Recent discoveries by scientists such as Dr. Kenneth Warren, a Canadian, have put us on the verge of finally determining the cause of MS.

As honorary chairperson of the Restigouche Chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society, it was my pleasure to participate earlier today with MS officials in presenting a carnation to every Member of this House. The carnation symbolizes the ongoing fight against MS. Despite the significant strides that have been made, the shortage of funds, particularly at this important stage, has been discouraging to many multiple sclerosis researchers.

I urge the Government and all Canadians to make May, 1987, the best fund raising month on record for MS research so that this insidious and costly disease can be eradicated for all time.

* * *

[Translation]

SMALL BUSINESS

NEED TO REDUCE GOVERNMENT RED TAPE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) has in hand a report dealing with the fact that Government red tape, especially at the federal level, is causing small businesses very serious problems.

Since September 1984, this Government has been making a lot of studies—study after study—and we are still awaiting the Government's policy on the development of small businesses which generate the majority of jobs in Canada.

I suggest Mr. Speaker, the time has come to get out of school, to show where they stand, to show leadership and to assure our Canadian entrepreneurs that the time is right for eliminating or dramatically reducing Government red tape, that is causing serious problems for our Canadian entrepreneurs.

• (1420)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN WESTERN PROVINCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question today must be for the Deputy Prime Minister. While the Prime Minister is touring western Canada, he should be reminded that compared with the start of this decade youth unemployment in western Canada has skyrocketed.

The youth unemployment rate is up 50 per cent in Manitoba compared with 1980. It is up 78 per cent in Saskatchewan. It is up 81 per cent in British Columbia. In Alberta, where the Prime Minister visits today, the youth unemployment rate is up 157 per cent from the start of the decade.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister say now when the Government intends to introduce its national youth strategy which the Prime Minister promised the young people of Canada during the election, or does he really think that photo opportunities in western Canada will be a substitute for finding jobs for young people and the youth of the western Canadian provinces?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the national unemployment rate has fallen from 11.7 per cent to 9.6 per cent since we have assumed office. The youth unemployment rate at the same time has fallen from 18.3 per cent to 14.8 per cent.

I must remind the right hon. gentleman that unemployment is down in every region of the country. There still are some pockets where there needs to be some substantial improvement, and western Canada is one of them.

Clearly that is an area we are addressing. It will be addressed under western diversification and indeed under the Atlantic Opportunities Program which we will be announcing shortly.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am very interested to hear that the Deputy Prime Minister feels that Alberta is a pocket. I might say to him that the unemployment rate for young people in Alberta and British Columbia is something about which he and I ought to be jointly more concerned than the reply of the Deputy Prime Minister.

OPENING OF STUDENT EMPLOYMENT CENTRE IN MOOSE JAW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Prime Minister will have a photo opportunity later this week at the opening of the Student Employment Centre in Moose Jaw. I might say that that takes real nerve, because the Government is cutting $2.3 billion from post-secondary education, spending per student is 18 per cent lower than it was a decade ago, and university student employment centres were cut by 30 per cent last year.

Will the Prime Minister use his visit in Moose Jaw to reverse the Government's short-sighted policy in restricting support for post-secondary education and for youth employment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who flies over Alberta, I visit Alberta on a regular basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: If he were to look at the statistics, he would know that under the Challenge '85 program some 101,000 jobs were created and that under Challenge '86 some 93,000 will be created, a substantial improvement over the previous Government's record.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I venture to say that I have been in Alberta almost as often as the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Check it out. Since the last election I have taken 36 trips to western Canada, including 49 communities outside Vancouver. That is a fact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I cannot remember when the Prime Minister was last in western Canada.

An Hon. Member: You have a short memory; he is there today.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, not only are half a million young Canadians unable to find jobs, but close to 200,000 Canadian students will not have summer employment this year.

INQUIRY WHY FUNDS FOR STUDENTS HAVE BEEN REDUCED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My question is this, Mr. Speaker: Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why again this year the Government has reduced student program funding by 15 per cent, particularly with respect to summer employment?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the right hon. gentleman might want to define to the House what he means by "almost as often". I think that would be a rather interesting comparison as to the number of times he has been in Alberta. That is not to say there are not serious problems out there. Our Government is addressing them.

The Right Hon. Member's allegation that funding has been reduced is not correct. Challenge '86 was funded at $180 million and so was Challenge '87. Last year $30 million was provided by the census. It was not part of Challenge '86. It was part of a separate initiative by the Government.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You switched the census and put it back.

Mr. Mazankowski: The right hon. gentleman, if he has such a great interest in western Canada—I have not really heard any constructive suggestions coming from that side of the House. Members over there are great at criticizing and knocking programs that we have brought forward. There is a clear recognition and there is a clear response.

Oral Questions

REFUGEES

SCREENING PROCESS—PREPARATION OF LIST OF SAFE THIRD COUNTRIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. The Government has been wimpish in its bilateral dealings with the strong nations of the world. Yesterday it had to show its macho image by beating up on genuine refugees who are nationless. One of the serious flaws with the legislation is the creation of a safe third country list which will determine who can or cannot enter the system.

Why did the Minister establish two pre-screening officers when they do not have discretionary authority to consider claimants coming from a so-called safe third country? In addition, can the Minister inform Canada and this House whether our allies, the United States, which deports both Guatemalans and El Salvadorans, and Great Britain, which deports Tamils, among others, will be on or off such a list?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the first step is not a pre-screening. It is a first step to a claimant's right to demonstrate whether he has a personal fear of persecution. There are objective criteria that a claimant has to meet, but there is also another safeguard where, even if there is a shred of evidence that the individual has a fear of persecution, he or she will be directed immediately to step two which is the oral hearing in front of independent members of the refugee determination board.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DELETE TWO PROVISIONS FROM PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the political and diplomatic pressure on Cabinet will be overwhelming. How can the Minister guarantee, as he did last night, that no genuine refugee will be turned away? It is a guarantee that he simply cannot give.

Given that the safe third country list is a dangerous concept and does not recognize new world uprisings, and that pre-screening is a barrier to the refugee board, would the Minister agree to scrap these two elements from his legislation and, therefore, allow a refugee claimant to go immediately and directly to the new refugee board? What is the use of having a new system if you cannot get to it?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we must provide a safe haven for those that need one. If the individual already has a legal status in another country, if he has lived there a reasonable length of time and could have sought protection, we will be seeking to ask him to return, assuming that the country has an exemplary record on human rights and assuming the record is excellent in the treatment of refugees of that nationality. As well we will seek advice from credible sources. Our system offers protection to everyone in need.

Let us look at the record of this Government in what we do for the real refugees of the world. We will be bringing 20,000 to Canada this year. That is help to real refugees. If the Hon. Member wants to talk about immigrants, let us boost the immigrant levels, which is what I want to do, and in that component we can have more family members, more independent immigrants, and more refugees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

• (1430)

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE POOLS' REQUEST TO MEET PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The other day, Prairie Pools Inc. sent a telex to the Prime Minister of Canada requesting a formal meeting with the Prime Minister during his western Canadian tour. I spoke to a representative of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool at two o'clock this afternoon and as of then there had been no response from the Prime Minister's Office. Representatives of Prairie Pools had offered to meet the Prime Minister anywhere in any of the three Prairie Provinces. As yet, he is only meeting farmers on one farm and the pools do not have any idea of which farmers he is meeting.

Because of the importance of wheat pools in Canada, will the Deputy Prime Minister return to his office after Question Period, pick up the phone, phone the Prime Minister and ask him to meet with the leaders of Prairie Pools? If he does not do that, he will be content to let the Prime Minister snub the farm leaders of western Canada.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, those kinds of comments and allegations certainly do not do honour or justice to the Hon. Member who has been around here for a long period of time. He knows very well that the Prime Minister has met on various occasions with representatives of the pools and representatives of the farm leadership in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Vancouver. He will be meeting with farmers and with the public at a number of public events.

It is interesting to note that in spite of what NDP Members suggest, the Alberta Wheat Pool, for example, has praised the federal Government and has condemned the Opposition for some of the actions it took last week. A representative of the pool is quoted in the Edmonton Journal of May 1 as saying:

> "From agriculture's point of view, the government has been performing rather well in the last six months . . . " "They gave the deficiency payment; they covered the deficit in the 1985-86 wheat pool accounts without complaint; now the $64-million subsidy—I'm not sure we could ask them to do a whole lot more at this stage."

Mr. Nystrom: Who are you quoting, your cousin?

REQUEST FOR MEETING ON DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, what I want and what Prairie Pools want is an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister. Prairie Pools sent an official telex to the Prime Minister's Office requesting a meeting and offering to make any travel arrangements necessary to meet anywhere across the Prairies. As of yet, the Prime Minister is only going to one farm.

All I want to know is whether or not the Deputy Prime Minister will go to his office to make a simple phone call to the Prime Minister of Canada asking him to meet with the leadership of Prairie Pools about deficiency payments. Is this just another road show on the part of the Conservative Party at the taxpayers' expense? I want answers.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is going into contortions. He wants answers and he will get answers. The Prime Minister has met with representatives of the pools and will meet with them and with other farm leaders on many, many occasions in the future. The Prime Minister has met with more farm leaders on a more frequent basis than any other Prime Minister in the history of Canada.

CTC DECISION ON VARIABLE TRANSPORTATION RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, once again the Deputy Prime Minister dodges the question. He is afraid to meet with the leadership of western Canada and I want to know why he will not make that simple phone call. Since the Prime Minister is refusing to meet with the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, why will the Deputy Prime Minister not take the advice of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and ask the Minister of Transport to overturn the ruling of the CTC on variable rates, a ruling which will destroy rural communities? Will the Deputy Prime Minister at least do that since his Leader does not have the guts and the courtesy to meet with the leaders of Prairie Pools?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: There are obviously strong feelings about the situation on the Prairies and they have been expressed very forcefully in the House over a long emergency debate by Hon. Members of goodwill and concern on all sides of the House. In asking questions on this, I think we should keep that in mind.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration and the frustration of members of the New Democratic Party. In effect, they are attempting to trivialize what the Government has been doing for western Canadian producers.

They are trying to trivialize the $1 billion deficiency pay-out. They are trying to trivialize the $700 million western grain stabilization pay-out. They are trying to trivialize the Minister of Transport's support for reducing freight rates. They are trying to trivialize the fact that we are guaranteeing Canadian Wheat Board losses. In fact, they are trying to trivialize the fact the Prime Minister indeed has a genuine interest in western Canadian agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET PRAIRIE POOLS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister refused to give a commitment to the request of Mr. Bill Strath, President of Prairie Pools Inc. and representative of 130,000 western grain producers, for a deficiency payment. Now we see the Prime Minister's agenda for his tour of the West does not even include a meeting with Prairie Pools, the largest organization of farm producers on the Prairies.

Why does the Prime Minister's schedule not include any provision for a meeting with this most important group? Why is the Deputy Prime Minister stonewalling on the whole question of a deficiency payment when the West is in such a desperate situation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought there was a rule about the repetition of questions. That is the same question that was asked before and I provided an answer.

The fact is that the Prime Minister has met and will meet with representatives of the pools as he will meet with other representatives of farm organizations. A major meeting will be taking place here. The Cairns Group will be meeting and there will be preparatory meetings with the respective farm leaders in regard to that meeting.

The Prime Minister will be meeting with farmers who are active in the business and I think that is a tribute to the Prime Minister who has expressed a genuine desire to talk to the actual farmers who are on the land. The Hon. Member should be complimenting and paying tribute to the Prime Minister rather than condemning him for it.

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Prime Minister and his office have refused repeated requests from Prairie Pools to meet with him on his tour of western Canada. The farmers want a commitment to a deficiency payment for this fall. Will the Prime Minister give this deficiency payment commitment right now? Does he not know that photo opportunities of the Prime Minister along with his Tory caucus eating breakfast, lunch, and dinner will not put seed in the ground or fuel in the diesel tractors of the farmers of the western Prairies? Does the Deputy Prime Minister not know that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Hon. Member opposite. There is a deficiency payment being paid out now. Cheques amounting to $700 million will be in the mail. Another $600 million to $700 million will be paid under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. In fact, $1.3 billion is going into the hands of the western Canadian farmers.

The Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Agriculture, and indeed the Prime Minister have said that they are certainly not turning their backs on the farmers. They have not done so in the past, they will not in the future, and they are not at this time either. The Hon. Member should know and accept that fact.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SALE OF SUBSIDIZED UNITED STATES WHEAT TO SOVIET UNION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. While the Prime Minister is refusing to meet with western farm leaders in the West, incredibly the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board is telling grain farmers that the recent sale of four million tonnes of subsidized United States wheat to the Soviet Union is welcome news. Will the Minister explain why he thinks this sale is good when senior Wheat Board economists, the former Tory Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan, and even Clay Gilson all believe it is a disaster and will further depress the price of grain?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, when this sale was made public, I attempted to point out that, to the extent this would take some pressure off the markets, it had the potential to improve prices. Perhaps the Hon. Member wants to take a look at what has happened in the market since last Thursday. In fact, the market has improved. If the Hon. Member wants to look at soybean prices which have a big impact on Canadian prices of canola, he will see that those prices have improved pretty dramatically over the last two months.

There is some optimism in the market as far as price is concerned. On the sales side, Canada is selling to the Soviet Union under a five-year long-term grain sales agreement and the Soviet Union is buying at a clip that will see it fulfil that commitment under that long-term sales agreement.

• (1440)

PROJECTED INCREASE IN RUSSIAN CROP PRODUCTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, projections of Russian crops show there will be an increase in production this year. Therefore, they will buy less next year. In fact, the increase is equal to their total imports last year.

Does the Minister realize that the Americans are planning similar sales? Will he take some action to counteract a further lowering of prices?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has a very interesting attitude in here. They try to trivialize and take advantage for political purposes of a very difficult and unfortunate situation affecting all Canadian grain producers. That is not our attitude. We work with the farm community so that together we can come up with approaches which go a long way towards dealing with the situation. If the Hon. Member wanted to come forward with some solutions we would be more than happy to look at them to see how they could fit in and be of help.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT AWARD PROGRAM

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I am sure he will agree that we cannot have more science and technology in Canada without scientists. If we do nothing else, we have to get more young people interested in pursuing a career in science. Can the Minister then explain why the Undergraduate Student Award Program administered by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is being cut by 25 per cent this summer? Why is the Conservative Government cutting back on summer jobs which provide science students with valuable research experience?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): I cannot second-guess what the NSERC may have contemplated when the adjustments were made. However, I point out that there was an increase of $10 million in the operating grants program which made research positions available for hundreds of first-time applicants for research grants in our universities.

Mr. Berger: The Council has no choice when the Government continually cuts its budget, after having frozen it last year.

[Translation]

SUMMER JOBS FOR SCIENCE STUDENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister make a commitment to restore this program funding to its previous level? Will he offer science students gainful employment this summer so that Canada will ensure the supply of scientists whom we so desperately need?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will pass the Hon. Member's suggestion on to the Council. Let me point out that there is not a freeze on any of the Council's funding. There is an increase of $1 billion over five years in funding to universities and I wish the Hon. Member would acknowledge that when he attempts to discredit this important program.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET PRAIRIE POOLS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, data on the grain crisis keeps coming in. Just in the last couple of days Unifarm president Ralph Jespersen had a meeting with 10 other farm organizations, including the various Prairie Pools, where they concluded that in addition to the assistance granted in the current crop year an additional $1 billion of special grains assistance, or deficiency payment of about $2 billion, will be required in the coming crop year.

That group, along with the Pools, telexed the Prime Minister's Office seeking to discuss this important issue while he is in western Canada. Therefore, can the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board tell us whether that meeting will take place and what the Government's response will be to the request for an announcement of its intentions on deficiency payments?

Mr. Speaker: In the interests of all Hon. Members, as well as that of the public, there has been reference to repetitious questions and I want to make it very clear that, if it is in the interest of any particular Member or Members to ask a question repeatedly, that is not completely outside the rules. However, I also want to point out that Ministers are not obligated to try continually to answer the same question over and over again.

Mr. Benjamin: They don't try.

Mr. Speaker: I am just pointing out and reminding all Hon. Members that that is the rule. I am also pointing out that there are a lot of Members in the House in Question Period who want to ask questions, and, to the degree repetition takes up time, it is taking up the time of the House.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, in light of the meeting of Unifarm and the other organizations I thought it was a new question.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Minister that a year and a half ago his Government correctly analysed the situation facing Canada's dairy producers, realized they had to have some security, and announced a five-year program for their industry. Does the Government have similar intentions for grain producers, east, west and centre, so they know where they are at for the next three to five years?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and myself sat down with farm leaders on March 5. The Minister scheduled another meeting for the early part of June with farm leaders from right across the country to discuss this very topic. I think it is very helpful to have farm leaders from the various affected parts of the country get together before the meeting so that when we do meet in Ottawa we can have a very useful meeting.

* * *

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST THAT REPORT RECOMMENDING ALLEGEDLY INAPPROPRIATE PAYMENT TO FORMER INFORMANT BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. When the Government refused to help the CIA brainwashing victims in Montreal it had a report which it made public. My question has to do with the decision to give $56,000 to Warren Hart. Here again the Government has a report, this time from Sydney Letterman of Toronto apparently, and I should like to ask the Solicitor General to release this report to give us the reasons for that payment which we consider inappropriate.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): First, Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that I do not consider the payment to Mr. Hart to be in any way inappropriate as it was paid pursuant to the recommendations contained in that report. However, I am happy to advise the hon. gentleman that I have asked my officials to review the report and, subject to the terms and regulations of the Access to Information Act, the Privacy Act, security reasons, and the necessity of having it in two official languages, I hope to be in a position to release the report within approximately two weeks.

REQUEST THAT COMPILER OF REPORT APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister then be prepared to permit Mr. Letterman to appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General to defend that decision and explain what is behind it?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have already advised the hon. gentleman and this House, I expect to be in a position, subject to the conditions mentioned, to release the report within two weeks. I am sure he will be completely satisfied with the reasons for the payment after he has had an opportunity to read the report.

Oral Questions

CO-OPERATIVES

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECRETARIAT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for co-operatives. At a luncheon yesterday the Minister finally gave the Government's response to the Co-operative Development Strategy for Canada published three years ago this month. Would he agree that the elephant of government has laboured long but brought forth only a mouse in the form of his new co-operative secretariat?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): No, I would not agree at all, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member will check with the leaders of the co-operatives presently in town for several meetings with the various co-operative associations, the proposal we announced yesterday was made with the full co-operation of the co-operative people from right across the country. If he is criticizing the Government he is also criticizing the co-op sector which worked very hard with the Government to come forward with that proposal.

• (1450)

EFFORTS TO SEEK CAPITAL FORMATION INCENTIVES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance who might tell us how far the Government is planning to move. The Minister is aware that the credit union sector has been seeking capital formation incentives that would put them on the same footing as the banks and other financial institutions. Is the Minister of Finance now more prepared to take action in this area than he was before yesterday and particularly before the February Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question that he knows has been under discussion for some time now. This is under review on an ongoing basis. At this point it is obviously not a matter that can be discussed in the House because it is outside Budget time. However, I will take his comments as a representation.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister will know that some 22 Canadians, including seven Newfoundlanders, were held as prisoners of war by the Vichy French at Laghouat, Algeria, during the Second World War. These prisoners of war have consistently been denied payments under the 1976 Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act.

Can Jim Templeton of St. John's, who was shot down over North Africa and spent 472 days in the Laghouat prisoner of war camp, and his fellow Canadian prisoners at long last expect the Government of Canada to intervene to ensure that they receive the compensation to which they are entitled as Canadian prisoners of war?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to take notice of that question for my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of Veterans Affairs is looking into the issue at the present time. He certainly has established a track record in defence of the veterans of Canada which is exemplary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I want to assure the Government that I seek not to criticize or comment upon Ministers but to seek compensation for veterans. I ask the question in a non-partisan way.

TERMS GOVERNING PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the 1976 Act for compensation for prisoners states that compensation should only be paid to those who were held by a power conducting activities against the Allies. Since the Allies never formally declared war on Vichy France or recognized Vichy France as a country with which we were at war, these prisoners, for technical reasons, have been denied compensation. Some were shot trying to escape from that camp. Will the Minister bring that fact to the attention of the Cabinet and seek immediate compensation for those Canadians who have served their country and indeed were held under brutal conditions as prisoners of war?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is more by way of representation. I would be pleased to ensure that it is brought to the attention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs who, during his tenure as Minister, has fought long and hard for the veterans of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: He has been extremely dedicated in terms of fighting for their interests and ensuring—

Mr. Gauthier: Never mind the commercial.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just answer the question. It is a serious one.

Mr. Beatty: I wonder if the Liberal Members, including the Leader of the Opposition, would give this the seriousness to which it is entitled.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Don't be a smart-ass about it. Come on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Struck a nerve.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are pompous.

Mr. Tobin: If the Minister of Defence would quit fooling around and give an answer, we would not have that. Snooty boy scout.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House would want this exchange to end on a note of hope for the very Canadian veterans about whom we speak. I would ask the Hon. Minister of Defence to finish his answer.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to do precisely that. As I was saying, the Minister of Veterans Affairs has fought hard for the veterans of Canada. I know that he will do everything that he can for these veterans as well.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF PROPOSED OIL WELL DRILLING ON PORCUPINE CARIBOU HERD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I spent the last few days in Yukon and met with Tony Penikett, the Government Leader, and Norma Kassi, MLA for Old Crow. Yukoners in particular from Old Crow are deeply concerned about the United States proposal to drill in the core calving area for the Porcupine Caribou Herd, known as the 1002 lands.

Since American and Canadian scientists now stand by their estimate that drilling in the area will reduce the herd by 20 per cent to 40 per cent, and since fully one-half of the food consumed by the people of Old Crow is caribou from that herd, will the Minister tell the House what substantive steps he is prepared to take to ensure the protection of the coastal plain which is the maternity ward for this herd of close to 180,000?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member may be mistaken about the figure of 180,000, but I understand the seriousness of his question. The Porcupine Caribou Herd is an important source of food for people in Old Crow. As the member knows, the Alaskan Arctic National Wildlife Refuge has recommended drilling. We have not agreed to that.

The Hon. Member knows that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made representations to the American Government. The signing of the environmental agreement for the protection of that caribou herd will allow Canada to continue to make representations which I know the Hon. Member will support.

However, the American Congress is not and has not made any recommendations or taken any steps. Therefore, it is not a problem we will have to face tomorrow, but a problem in which we are very involved in trying to seek solutions. We will ask the Hon Member to continue to support us.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE RELEVANT INFORMATION TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who is responsible for the Canadian Wildlife Service. Is he prepared to use his good offices to provide to members of the United States Congress and the Alaskan State Legislature accurate, verifiable information about the importance and the fragility of this economic and spiritual bank account to the people of Old Crow who expressed their deep concern to me in the past few days?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's suggestion or representation is a good one. The Government of Canada and, I believe, the people of Canada, are greatly alarmed about proposals from the U.S. administration to exploit the hydrocarbon wealth in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge Area. We are especially concerned about the possible and indeed likely effect of such development on the Porcupine Caribou Herd. If it would be helpful to make the relevant data available to the legislators, as the Hon. Member suggests, the Wildlife Service of my Department has the documentation that would support the premise of the Hon. Member's first question and I will pursue every possible way of disseminating that information.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST YOUTH AND SINGLE PEOPLE IN CERTAIN PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, a spokesperson for a coalition of a dozen or so agencies, including La Ligue des droits et libertés du Québec and the National Association of Women and the Law, accused the federal Government of turning a blind eye to the discriminatory treatment of young people and single persons from certain provinces, including Quebec, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with respect to welfare benefits.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House what his Government intends to do to reverse this unfair treatment of young people and single persons?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is away on government business today. He is aware of the coalition's concerns but has not yet received the details of their proposals or their concerns. He is waiting for representations to him on their behalf which he will study in detail and make the appropriate decision at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO CONVENE HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTERS' MEETING TO ASSIST PROVINCES ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport would he have the kindness to inform his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of the fact that in Quebec, young people under 30 receive $296 less per month and that in British Columbia, young people under 26 receive $56 less per month?

Would the Minister be so kind as to suggest to his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that he call a meeting of all his provincial counterparts to discuss granting assistance to the provinces to eliminate discrimination on the basis of sex or age, since the Coalition has threatened to go to court?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will deal with the matter appropriately at the appropriate time.

* * *

• (1500)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MONTREAL FIRM'S INVOLVEMENT IN SALE OF ARMS TO CONTRA FORCES IN NICARAGUA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I have just received a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in which he rejects at this time my calls for a public inquiry into Propair Inc. and Trans World Arms in Montreal, who are involved in the Contragate affair.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs notes there are two RCMP inquiries going on at this time which cannot be quickly resolved. He writes: "It is also dependent on the speed of co-operation available from foreign jurisdictions." That is deliciously ironic considering the events in Washington.

How long will the Canadian public have to wait? Is the Government not a little embarrassed that we have to wait until an American congressional committee exposes all these matters of vital concern to Canadian foreign policy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —I do not know why the Opposition thinks this is a matter of great merriment and gaiety because we certainly do not. I should point out that this matter has been under investigation for some time by the RCMP. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has repeatedly stated it would be inappropriate to comment on this matter while it is before the RCMP, and there is no point in adding to that answer at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplementary.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General aware that on November 6, 1984, $432,000 was sent to a bank account in the Royal Bank in Montreal from Esther Morales, money through the Saudis and through the Grand Cayman Islands? How long do we have to keep bringing this matter out in the House and then through a congressional committee in Washington before the Canadian Government will make this information available to the Canadian public?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were aware of this long before the Hon. Member and long before it was brought forward in the press. We do not depend for our investigations upon receiving information from the United States. Our police are quite capable of carrying on their own investigations. They are doing a great job and when they have completed the investigation they will report to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that there will be two further questions, one question each from the Hon. Member for Don Valley East and the Hon. Member for Lachine. I am sorry that we have run out of time for other Members. We will try to get off to an earlier start tomorrow.

* * *

WAR CRIMINALS

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 12, 1987, the Minister of Justice responded to the Deschênes Commission report. On March 18 I asked the Minister how soon the Criminal Code would be amended to give Canadian courts jurisdiction to try war crimes or crimes against humanity here in Canada.

Since the Minister assured me in March that he intended to make the amendments a priority issue, could he confirm that the process is on schedule and that the amendments will be in this House before the end of June?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. It is refreshing to hear an intelligent question during Question Period. I appreciate the interest during the course of this whole matter by the Hon. Member and I want to reassure him of the fact that the Government does consider this matter to be a priority item.

I have set an objective of having the legislation before the House prior to the summer recess. I am encouraged by the response of the Opposition and I would hope that when we bring the legislation forward they will give this matter their immediate attention, and conceivably we can pass this matter into law at the earliest possible date.

* * *

SPORTS

VIOLENCE IN HOCKEY

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Most Canadians love with a passion our national sport, hockey. However, more and more Canadians, including two of my constituents who are members of the Minister's Fitness Council, are expressing concern at the debasement of our national sport by violence. Would the Minister advise the House what steps are being taken to reduce violence in sports?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of my hon. friend, particularly in the last few weeks during the NHL play-offs where violence, which has an negative effect on the youth of our country, has increased. As a result of that, I formed the Fair Play Commission last year, the honorary chairman being Wayne Gretzky. It has put into place new rules and regulations within our own jurisdictions and has begun discussions with the National Hockey League to try to improve the violence-related problems within the League, which is not within our jurisdiction.

Shortly after our next meeting which takes place this Friday, we will be proposing some concrete proposals and some concrete steps which will start the educational and informational aspect which will eventually lead to the eradication of excessive violence in sports.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition Nos. 332-1682, 332-1683 to 332-1685 inclusive, 332-1691 to 332-1694 inclusive, 332-1696 to 332-1700 inclusive, 332-1703 to 332-1708 inclusive, 332-1713 to 332-1721 inclusive, 332-1723, 332-1745 to 332-1752 inclusive, 332-1755 to 332-1757 inclusive, 332-1759, 332-1760, 332-1763, 332-1764, 332-1766 to 332-1784 inclusive, 332-1786 to 332-1788 inclusive, 332-1792, 332-1794 to 332-1803 inclusive, 332-1811 to 332-1813 inclusive and 332-1815 to 332-1828 inclusive.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF CANADA

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT, 1986

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), and in conformance with the provisions of Section 45 of the Public Service Employment Act, I wish to table in both Official Languages, and in Braille, the 1986 Annual Report of the Public Service Commission of Canada.

* * *

TAX REFORM

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to re-inform the House and Canadians that I will be tabling the Government's White Paper on tax reform on Thursday June 18.

Last October in this House I said that tax reform would be based on a number of important guidelines. I set out those guidelines clearly for all Canadians to examine and consider. The White Paper I will be tabling next month has been shaped by those guidelines. It has benefited from the views and insights of the provinces and Canadians across the country.

[Translation]

We said we would make the tax system fairer. We will. We will redistribute the tax burden, so that it will be shared more equitably among taxpayers in similar circumstances.

[English]

Tax reform will put the Government's revenue sources into better balance, reducing reliance on personal income taxes and increasing the take-home pay of the overwhelming majority of Canadians. It will also provide the Government with a sounder revenue base; not more revenues but more stable and predictable revenues.

Comprehensive tax reform means making improvements in all three parts of the system, personal, corporate and sales tax. Our White Paper will set out specific proposals in each of these areas. To improve the personal income tax system, we will propose lower rates, fewer rates, fewer special preferences and greater use of tax credits rather than exemptions.

Lower rates will benefit the large majority of taxpayers, not just now but well into the future, as their incomes grow and they get to keep more of each additional dollar. Fewer rates will simplify the tax structure. There are now 10 tax brackets. We intend to reduce them to three.

Fewer special breaks for high income earners will reduce opportunities for them to avoid paying their fair share of tax.

Converting personal exemptions and some deductions to tax credits will make the tax system fairer and more progressive. Moving to a system of credits will be a major change, a socially progressive change, a change to the personal income tax system on which future improvements for low income Canadians can be built.

• (1510)

For the corporate income tax system, our proposal is to broaden the tax base by eliminating many special preferences and reducing others. As a result, many more profitable corporations will pay tax, and government revenues from corporate income tax will increase. Broadening the tax base will enable us to lower corporate rates so that they remain competitive with those of our major trading partners and competitors.

Corporate tax reform will support the nation's ability to attract both Canadian and international investment. It will help ensure that business and investment decisions are based primarily on economic merit and growth potential rather than on tax considerations.

The White Paper will also set out proposals to achieve our goal of replacing the federal sales tax system. The current system is flawed and inadequate. We will replace it with a broad-based, multi-stage sales tax.

There are alternative mechanisms to achieving this such as a federal only, multi-stage sales tax, with or without invoices; or a comparable federal-provincial tax with invoices. They vary only in their application and the manner in which they are implemented.

A federal only tax without invoices, which could be called a business transfer tax or a goods and services tax, is relatively simple, both to administer and to comply with, but only if it is applied uniformly on all goods and services. A federal only value added tax with invoices can be more selectively applied, but would create more compliance and administrative problems in the face of existing provincial retail sales taxes.

A national multi-stage sales tax, in co-operation with the provinces, which could be called the national sales tax, would replace both the federal sales tax and provincial retail sales taxes with a national system. Such an approach offers obvious advantages—a harmonized national tax system, lower administration costs, and less paper burden for businesses. Provincial Governments have indicated some interest in a national sales tax. The concept is clearly worth pursuing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government's proposal for comprehensive tax reform aims to give Canada a fairer, simpler tax system, a system that is more effective in encouraging economic activity, jobs and opportunities for Canadians. This is what we are working toward in developing our proposals—proposals that I will table in this House on June 18.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just announced that he will be tabling his tax reform project on June 18.

First I should like to thank him for sending us a copy of his statement a couple of hours before delivery, for this enabled me to study it.

But June 18, well this time I must tell the Minister that I will try to take his word for it. Fifteen months ago as we recall, on February 26, 1986, the Minister had promised to table in the House a White Paper on the business tranfer tax. As he said himself, he was going to do it in the very near future. But this was back in February 1986. It was only on July 18 that we learned he had changed his mind and would not be tabling this business transfer tax white paper, that he was considering a more comprehensive tax reform which he would unveil in the fall of 1986. Fall 1986 came, nothing happened, except that the Minister announced he would table the white paper at the same time as the 1987 Budget. A few days before the 1987 Budget, on January 30, he told us that he would not table it with the Budget, that it would be put off until spring this year.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could believe the Minister but he has been crying wolf for so long and announcing tax reforms which never did materialize that this time I am taking a chance when I take him at his word.

[English]

Let us hope for the best. We will take the word of the Minister and wait to see what will happen on June 18. We Liberals believe that there has to be a meaningful tax reform package in Canada. We hope that the Minister will deliver on June 18.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, June 18 is a memorable day in Europe's history, because it was on June 18 that General de Gaulle called on the French to resist and take up arms against the German forces which had invaded France. I hope that on June 18, the Minister will not be calling on Canadians to pay even more taxes to this Conservative Government.

An Hon. Member: A farewell to arms!

Mr. Garneau: But not to taxes!

[English]

The Minister said in his statement that Canadians could pay less income tax and have, as he suggested, increased take-home pay. But he did not guarantee that Canadians will have more money in their pockets after having paid his new national multi-stage sales tax. The name is so complicated I wonder how we will be able to pay it.

The Minister suggested that he will lower the personal income tax by abolishing preferences. He is saying that we will have fewer special preferences in our personal income tax. I wonder if those preferences that the Minister talked about eliminating will be the first $1,000 of income from interest and dividends, the investment credit for farmers or the flow-through share deduction for the mining industry. When the Minister says that he will abolish special preferences is he talking about the $1,000 deduction from pension revenue for retired Canadians?

[Translation]

What will happen to the child tax credit and the deduction for child care expenses? Will they be eliminated? Is that the kind of preference to which the Minister was referring in his statement today? The Conservative Government was elected in 1984, and Canadian taxpayers, through their income tax, are paying $22 billion more in 1987 than they were paying in 1984, which represents an additional tax burden of over $1,000 per year and per family, a family with an income of $30,000 and two children, which is not excessive.

Ever since this Government came to power, Canadian taxpayers have been paying considerably more taxes, and when the Minister says he wants to put more justice and equity into the system, is he in fact trying to turn the situation back to what it was before his Government came to power?

[English]

Is it the objective of the Government to bring taxpayers back to the point where they were before the Tory Party took office in 1984? The action of this Tory Government has been to tax, retax and surtax Canadian workers and Canadian families in a way that the richer one is, the less tax increases one has had to pay. Is the Minister now telling us that he will correct his own mistakes and bring more fairness to the tax system? We will wait to see how the Minister will achieve that goal and reverse the unfairness that he himself brought into the tax system.

[Translation]

The Minister is proposing to reduce the number of tax brackets to three, from the present 10. I wonder whether three different tax brackets provide enough room for a progressive personal income tax system. Again, the Minister seems to be indicating that he prefers to protect those on large incomes instead of the average family.

• (1520)

[English]

The Minister said he wants to abolish certain tax shelters. He said there will be fewer special breaks for high income earners. Does that mean he will abolish his regressive $500,000 capital gains exemption? Is he going to abolish the flow-through shares which have been so beneficial to our mining regions? I do not know what he will do. We will have to wait and see how the Minister will achieve that goal and reverse some of the decisions he made in the past.

[Translation]

In another vein, I must tell the Minister that we endorse the idea or approach to replace exemptions by tax credits. However today's statement is not clear enough and we will have to wait and see what happens in that respect.

I would have more remarks to make on corporate taxes, Mr. Speaker, but you are indicating that my time is running short. I should like to comment briefly on the business transfer tax.

[English]

I would like to say a few words about the business transfer tax which will now be called the national multi-stage sales tax, the latest tax grab invented by this Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is going through the back door rather than the front door, to take billions of dollars from the pockets of all Canadians; the old, the young, and every family. If this multi-stage sales tax is applied as the Minister suggested in his remarks, Canadians may or will have to pay sales tax on food, on haircuts, on everything. I wonder how small businesses will get exemptions. If they do not, it will be a nightmare for them to manage the new taxes.

[Translation]

In short, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister that if he implements his tax reform as he suggests it will have a considerable impact on the provinces. Hopefully his proposals will provide enough firm guarantees for the provinces, particularly those which benefit from equalization payments, to be sure that the tax reform will not reduce their revenues.

I should also remind the Minister that he is committed to simplifying the system. Considering the multi-stage tax he is talking about I really wonder whether the services of lawyers and accountants galore might not be needed to meet the requirements of this new invention of the Mulroney Government, a national multi-stage tax.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, appreciate the action of the Minister in giving us an advance copy of his statement. It is a model which I hope will be followed by some of his colleagues in the future.

Behind the bland exterior of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is the Gypsy Rose Lee of tax reform in Canada. Every few months he gets up in the House of Commons to reveal a little more of his intentions with regard to tax reform. As the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) pointed out, he has been doing this for a long time. He shows the same craft of which his namesake was capable—there is always something more to reveal, but now he says he will reveal all on June 18. The lady in question never got quite that far. We will find out whether the Minister can do better.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister says he can. I welcome his statement that he will table specific proposals on tax reform on June 18. I welcome his renewed commitment to certain principles of tax reform, such as ensuring that profitable corporations pay taxes and eliminating exemptions and deductions in the personal income tax system in favour of tax credits, something which would make the system more progressive. We will have to wait and see whether these words translate into actions.

The Minister himself will acknowledge that he has been far from achieving that standard over the course of the two and half years during which he has been Finance Minister, a period of time during which there has been next to no growth in corporate tax revenues in the exchequer while personal tax revenues have risen by close to 50 per cent. In other words, individual Canadians have been paying for the Minister's deficit reduction strategy and corporations have not had to pay at all. The Minister now says, "Trust me, I am going to make the system fair".

I am particularly concerned, as is my Party, about the latest version of the sales tax which the Minister is announcing. I have been through the various proposals which have been made. We now have the manufacturers' sales tax, the MST. We were going to have a value added tax, a VAT, then it became the business transfer tax, the BTT. The Minister now says that we may have a federal-provincial multi-stage sales tax, an FPMSST. That reminds me of LSMFT. It may be turned into an NST because it will bring in the provincial retail sales tax, the PRST. Anyone who can understand all that understands what the Minister will actually propose.

He is dazzling us with his footwork. I suspect that he may come up with yet another set of proposals in June which will be delegated out for consultation with the provinces, and that it is his intention to back away from changing the sales tax prior to the 1989 election. That may be prudent. It may be caution imposed by his colleagues. However, I have a warning for the Minister with regard to what he is intending to do with this new national sales tax.

The Minister speaks of introducing a broad-based multi-stage sales tax. He is not clear on whether there will be any exemptions, but he makes it quite clear that his chosen instrument, the business transfer tax, would have no exemptions at all, that it would be applied uniformly to all goods and services. Is he now proposing that the national sales tax should be applied in the same way? Does that mean that when parents send their children out for daycare, an essential service, they will be paying the Minister's FPMSST on daycare services? Does it mean that a tenant who pays rent and earns a very low income will be paying some kind of federal-provincial sales tax on the service they get in rent? Or does the Minister mean that he still has up his sleeve the intention to have the most essential commodity for survival in life, food, subject to his tax? It is clear that that was the Minister's intention with the business transfer tax.

The Minister is dipping, diving, weaving and bobbing. We do not know exactly what he has to put forward now. However, I want to warn the Minister that if he and his Government intend to try to impose their new national sales tax on food, they will provoke a tax revolt from one end of Canada to the other. New Democrats will be at the front of that tax revolt and we will use everything we can to fight such a measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the business transfer tax proposed by the Minister of Finance would have applied to food, the food Canadian families need to survive. Now that the Minister has come up with an alternative, a national sales tax to be imposed in conjunction with the provinces, Mr. Speaker, I ask him: Does the Minister still intend to extend that tax to food as well? If so he is asking for a taxpayers' revolution, a revolution which the New Democratic Party will support, and we will oppose this kind of tax with every means available to us in the House, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Minister seems to be talking about introducing a duplicate of U.S. tax reform in Canada. There are some good things about that, because there are some elements of the U.S. tax reform which are to be admired, such as the broadening of the corporate tax base, taxing all income equally, and removing wasteful tax preferences. However, there are things we should avoid as well. The Minister should know that Canadians want Canadian tax reform rather than only a clone of what was put into place last year in the United States.

I am particularly concerned that, despite all of the recent evidence which indicates that the Canadian corporate tax system is no more onerous on Canadian companies than are systems in the United States and elsewhere, the Minister talks about a substantial reduction in corporation tax here.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is wrong.

Mr. Cassidy: In the last year or so he has had to down scale his estimates of corporate tax revenues by $1.5 billion. He has failed to take a fair share of taxation from corporations. Canadians are looking for fairness in tax reform which includes ensuring that the corporations pay their fair share, not just individual taxpayers.

Canadians were scrambling to pay their taxes last week. I am proud to say that I got mine in just before April 30. It is timely, therefore, to remind the Minister that when he introduces his tax reform proposals in June the thing which Canadians will be looking for most will be fairness. If he can achieve that by moving from ten brackets to three, more power to him. If, however, he is only trying to copy the American system which failed to achieve the necessary degree of fairness by moving down to three tax brackets, he will have made a very strange error and will have a great deal to contend with in this House. I wish him well. I hope at this time he achieves his goal in terms of making his proposals in time for June 18. It may be a minor miracle if he does so. However, I warn him that when he reveals all, when this Gypsy Rose Lee of tax reforms comes clean, he had better have something good and something fair, or else taxpayers will not go along with him at all.

* * *

• (1530)

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages. The report deals with the selection of a votable item pertaining to the fourth draw which took place on April 15, 1987.

May I note that, pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b), this fourth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the table.

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to table in both official languages the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

The review and recommendations of the committee are consistent with the Orders of Reference dated January 29 and April 27, 1987.

The committee asks the Government to table a comprehensive response to this report, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2).

[English]

The committee is unanimous that a new law should be built upon a reaffirmation of the public character of broadcasting. The law should also reassert the needs for Canadian ownership and control and, more important, the need to provide a basis for strengthened Canadian programming, while taking into account the distinctive character of French and English language broadcasting.

The new Act should direct the CBC to cover the whole range of Canadian programming and each licensed broadcaster or network operator to provide predominantly Canadian programming.

For the first time the Broadcasting Act would affirm that the broadcasting system should serve the needs and interests of both sexes. The Act should direct that the programming offered by the system should reflect the composition of Canadian society.

The committee recommends further that the Act treat cable and satellite-to-cable systems and other distribution undertakings as components of the broadcasting system.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the committee recommends also ways and means to reinforce the role of the CRTC, including a substantial increase and growth in its research activities, as well as better accountability to Parliament.

[Editor's Note: See todays votes and proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a whole stack of petitions on this the last day of debate on Bill C-22. They are from Kamloops, Clearbrook, Prince Rupert, New Westminster, Coquitlam, White Rock, Surrey, Abbotsford, Cultus Lake, Mission, Yarrow, Sooke, Sidney, Victoria, Sparwood, Edmonton, Goose Bay, Stoney Creek, Hamilton, Brantford, St. Isidore, Chatham, Bathurst, and many other places as well.

All of them point out their concerns regarding the Government's intention to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. Basically they say that the increase in drug prices for average Canadian consumers will actually severely restrict the ability of Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present. They are signed by residents of Manitoba towns including, Boissevain, Morden, Portage la Prairie, Oakbank, Selkirk, Gimli, Arnes, and also the cities of Regina and Edmonton.

The petitions say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I also have a substantial number of petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg on the same subject. They say that the proposed measure—and it is the one with which we are dealing today—will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

They also indicate that the proposal of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition, together with the required certificate signed by the Clerk of Petitions. It is sponsored by the Calgary Coalition for Life and is being submitted by Diana Gerlitz of Box 67, De Winton, Alberta, TOL OXO, and is signed by some 23 persons, most of whom live in Okotoks, De Winton, Black Diamond, High River, Airdrie, and Calgary in the Province of Alberta.

They avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance in the certain assurance that this honourable House will provide a remedy. It sheweth that thousands of unborn babies in Canada are killed for reasons of convenience and for the crime of being unwanted. Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that this Parliament will support Motion No. M-37 and will allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

And in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have nine petitions from the Province of Quebec, the Province of Manitoba, and the Province of British Columbia to present. They relate to Bill C-22.

Very briefly, as stated in the petitions, the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. They object to the fact that they will send the price of new drugs sky-rocketing.

In addition, the proposed changes are another example of Canadian government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in the free trade negotiations.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I present to the House a petition from Canadians living in the cities of Medicine Hat, Saskatoon, and Ottawa, who call upon Parliament to reject the proposed amendments to the Patent Act contained in Bill C-22.

Today at 6 p.m. Hon. Members will have their chance to say "no" to higher prices for prescription drugs.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it is not only my duty but my pleasure to present a duly certified petition consisting of 331 names. It is signed by residents of Calgary, representing churches, individuals, and interested groups.

Because of the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian babies each year for reasons of convenience, and for such babies capital punishment exists for the crime of being unwanted, wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Motion No. M-37 and allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

And in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and the honour to present several hundred petitions. These petitions are from the communities of Capreol, Hanmer, Val Therese, Val Caron, Coniston, Sudbury, Dowling, Azilda, Skead, Garson, Windsor, Chelmsford, Noelville, Montreal, Chatham, Tilbury, Wallaceburg, Dresden, Blenheim, Toronto, Downsview, Scarborough, Willowdale, Calgary, and Regina, and there are 700 signatures on petitions from Vancouver.

These petitioners point out that the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

They also point out that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

As well, they point out that the proposals will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. Furthermore, the proposed changes are another example of the sell-out by the Canadian Government to the United States at the expense of average Canadians as they attempt to reach a free trade agreement.

Therefore, they call upon Members of Parliament, who will vote this evening on the question, to reject these proposals which will only serve to increase prescription drug prices in Canada.

• (1540)

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions, 11 in all, from Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, British Columbia and Manitoba, from almost every province of Canada.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the proposals in Bill C-22 which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. They ask each and every one of us to vote against this Draconian piece of legislation brought in by the Government that will affect prices of drugs for the elderly, the sick and those who can least afford it. I am presenting these petitions to Parliament on their behalf.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege at this time to present on behalf of several hundred of my constituents, including people from the Baycrest geriatric centre and other senior citizens their profound concern through a petition which they are addressing to this House of Commons regarding Bill C-22 as we call it. They refer to it as the Bill dealing with proposed changes to the Patent Act.

Along with hundreds of thousands of other petitioners, some of whose petitions I have presented, they call upon this House to reject, in their words, "the proposed legislation regarding the changes to the Patent Act on drugs". I have hundreds of other names from members of the riding.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drugs and prescription drug prices for Canadians. They say "The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your humble and honourable House will therefore provide a remedy."

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present this petition concerning Bill C-22 from residents of several Quebec areas, including Cowansville, Dunham, Rimouski, and especially Baie Comeau. This petition states that the Government's proposed changes to the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs would increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of a great number of them to buy necessary prescription drugs. It mentions other reasons too, Mr. Speaker.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this proposal to increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have quite a number of petitions to present today, the closing day of debate on Bill C-22. All oppose the proposed changes to the Patent Act which will increase the price of drugs for Canadian consumers.

This Bill will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require drugs. It will contribute to higher costs to provincial Government drug plans and it reflects concessions to the United States free trade negotiations. The petitioners all call upon this House to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians through Bill C-22.

I have some 20 petitions from the City of Vancouver representing hundreds of citizens that I would like to present. In addition I have petitions from Surrey, White Rock, Richmond, Campbell River, Qualicum, Parksville, Maple Ridge, Savona, Hedley, Chase, Abbotsford, Clearbrook, Burnaby, New Westminster, Bowser and Courtenay, British Columbia.

As well I have a group of 14 petitions with hundreds of names on each from Manitoba opposing Bill C-22. Many of these people are senior citizens who are very concerned about the impact the Bill will have on their lives.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I too have some 14 individual petitions, signed by over 400 residents in Canada, which have been duly certified as correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 106. These Canadians live in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan and Winnipeg, Manitoba, and the petitions have been signed by groups from Sunny Mountain Day Care Centre in Winnipeg and the Community Health Co-operation Federation in Saskatoon.

The petitioners say that the proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I know you will be interested to hear, Mr. Speaker, that these 400 odd petitions have joined with literally hundreds of thousands of other Canadians to send the Government a message. If the Government is smart, it should listen to the message which is coming through loud and clear.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Anthony Roman (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition which I have received from my constituents of Moccasin Trail in Woodbridge, Ontario. These residents, as have many of my other constituents from North York, request that their mail be delivered directly to their homes.

These Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are dissatisfied with the substitution and placement of supermailboxes instead of door to door delivery of their mail. They humbly pray that this House can help them with their concerns.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a great many petitions here from Canadian residents who are very concerned about the proposed changes to the Patent Act which will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and for provincial medicare plans. They see these proposed changes as another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Petitions

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have certificates as to the propriety of petitions which, as is my duty and honour, I wish to present on behalf of constituents and other residents of northwestern Ontario, primarily from the City of Thunder Bay.

These residents of northwestern Ontario protest that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They say that this Bill will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis and that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans.

They call upon Members of Parliament to seize the opportunity this evening to defeat the drug patent legislation changes when they come before us on third reading, and so keep down the costs of medicine.

I have the privilege to present petitions from residents of various areas in Manitoba, from the City of Winnipeg and from communities north of Winnipeg, Selkirk, Balmoral, Stonewall, Stony Mountain, through toward the northwest, to Warren and other communities, and all the way to The Pas.

These residents of the Province of Manitoba similarly call upon Members of Parliament to act against this proposed action which is another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, responsibility and privilege today to present to this honourable House some seven petitions. They are all duly certified according to the provisions of Standing Order 106.

• (1550)

These petitions are signed by residents of the communities of Winnipeg, Arborg, Laird and Carlton in Saskatchewan, Tourond, Narcisse, Riverton and Dallas in Manitoba as well as Selkirk, Fisher Branch, Hodgson and Koostatak. From that it can be easily determined that the concern over the Government's plans under Bill C-22 to raise the price of prescription drugs is shared right across the country from the largest to the smallest communities.

The petitioners instance these changes in Canada's legislative regime as examples of concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations. They mention their concern that the cost of prescription drugs to provincial drug plans and the ordinary Canadian consumer will inevitably increase unless the Government turns away from its folly of presenting Bill C-22 to the House.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO COMMUNITY BOXES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to avail myself of a long-standing right of Members of Parliament to petition Parliament.

I have two petitions, one which deals with the reduction of services provided by Canada Post Corporation. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved services the highest priority of Canada Post Corporation and to instruct the Government to abandon its policy of installing community boxes.

These petitioners are mainly in the Vancouver area, people who have seen a drastic reduction in postal services.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also have some petitions regarding changes to the Patent Act.

These petitioners as well ask Parliament not to proceed with Bill C-22 which would result in increased drug costs, particularly for the old and the sick. I know that the final vote on Bill C-22 will take place later this afternoon so this is a last-minute plea by Canadians who are asking Parliament not to proceed with the legislation for the sake of the country and particularly for the sake of the elderly and the sick. I hope that their pleas will not be ignored.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I too have a number of petitions to present. They come from people in Toronto, Vancouver and the Roberval riding in the Province of Quebec. All these people humbly call upon the Hon. Members of Parliament to oppose Bill C-22 in its present form.

They beg Parliament to amend this Bill and make sure that it is fair for Canadian consumers.

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have approximately 45 petitions to table today. The petitioners are from various parts of the country including British Columbia, Ontario, parts of Nova Scotia, parts of Quebec, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Newfoundland and, indeed, other areas.

The petitioners are in opposition to Bill C-22 and say that whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs, whereas the federal Government's proposal will raise the cost, already high, of provincial health care programs, and whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in increased drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Conservative Government's concessions in free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of every-day Canadians, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I should say that there are a number of other petitions I would like to introduce but in view of the time, with only an hour or so remaining for debate, I table 45 today.

* * *

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had discussions previously with members of the opposition Parties with respect to the fifth report of the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which reported on May 1, 1987. The substance of that report was a request to extend the deadline for the committee's report on the consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission of the Province of Saskatchewan from May 6, 1987, to May 29, 1987. As I said, there have been discussions with the Parties and I would move at this time:

That the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure presented to the House on Friday, May 1, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, there were consultations with the Parties on the subject and we agree with the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have had no discussions with our House Leader, but I assume the Parliamentary Secretary is telling us that he is moving the motion by agreement with the Official Opposition and the House Leader of the NDP so I do give such consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 102 and 103.

[Text]

LORAN-C NAVIGATION SYSTEM

Question No. 102—Mr. Parry:

1. Has the Department of Transport been conducting a costs/benefits assessment to determine the Department's future plans regarding Loran-C navigation in Canada?

2. Has the Department completed its costs/benefits assessment and (a) if so (i) what are the results of the study (ii) what are the Department's future plans concerning Loran-C (b) if not, when will the assessment be completed?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. (a) No. (b) Unable to determine at this time.

REMOVAL OF RURAL ROUTE SERVICE

Question No. 103—Mr. Parry:

1. In a letter to Members of Parliament dated March 4, 1987, did the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation state that Canada Post will not remove rural route service from any of its customers?

2. Did residents of Pinewood and Rainy River rural routes No. 1 lose their rural route service on June 3, 1986 and, if so, when will this service be reinstated?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Changes were made to the Pinewood and Rainy River rural routes effective June 30, 1986. Rural route service in this area is currently under review.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion No. P-4 for production of papers, in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), has been judged admissible by the Government and the papers are being tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the remaining Notices of Motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. P-4 for the production of papers be deemed to have been adopted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers

[English]

IMMIGRATION

Motion No. P-4—Mr. Heap:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the relevant correspondence, memoranda, agreements and any other documents referred to by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the House of Commons on February 20, 1987, (p. 3647 of Hansard) which outline and give effect to the agreement with the United States in which that country agrees not to deport refugee claimants awaiting an immigration hearing in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1600)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 23 minutes.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have already put on record the opposition to this Bill expressed by the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church not much more than a week ago, and similarly, the views of the Keystone Agricultural Producers, an organization which represents all the farm commodity groups in Manitoba. The Government's proposal has had almost unanimous opposition from the major newspapers in this country as well. Let me quote from an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 12, 1987, a newspaper which does not often agree with the views that I and my colleagues in the NDP have expressed. The editorial says in part:

> Harvey Andre has tried to write a drug-patenting law designed to balance the consumers' interest in competitively-priced drugs, the drug-innovators' interest in preventing competition and the national interest in expanded medical research, but he has not succeeded.
>
> He has tried to explain to Parliament and to the public reasons why Bill C-22 on patent protection for drug innovations should be adopted and there again he has not succeeded.

Then we have an editorial in The Toronto Star on April 13, 1987, which said:

> The amendments have a number of worthwhile objectives:

It says in conclusion:

> Once the Bill becomes law, how long will it take before Canada once again has drug prices among the highest in the world?
>
> And who's going to blow the whistle when the multinational drug companies don't live up to their glowing promises but continue to do their research and development in the U.S., Britain and Europe where their head offices are located? A Prices Review Board with no teeth? A federal government with no spine?

Those are very good questions asked by The Toronto Star.

Then we have an editorial in the Kingston Whig-Standard of January 6, which said in part:

> Not only are the multinationals on the point of winning, but the Mulroney Government is going to give them far more than its own adviser recommends.

It continues:

> —Mr. Andre, who, judging by the way he puts things, appears to care more passionately about the health of Canada's economy.
>
> "As long as people are alive, they're a drain on the health care system," he says—

We certainly do not believe that, Mr. Speaker. The editorial concludes by saying:

> It looks as if the government's action will not only make drugs more expensive, it will do nothing to decrease the pushing of unnecessary drugs. In the end, the consumer pays heavily for this sop to a powerful industry.

Then we have the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of January 10, 1987, which says:

> The Mulroney government's controversial plan to amend the Patent Act to give the pharmaceutical industry a longer period of protection won't go down any easier with doubting consumers with publication this week of handsome profit statements by the major United States drug manufacturers.
>
> As for the government's assertions that drug costs won't go up in Canada after the act is amended, Canadian consumers will be even less convinced after seeing the profit picture in the American industry and hearing how much their American counterparts pay for medications.

Just a week or so ago the major multinational corporations appeared before a U.S. congressional subcommittee dealing with health matters and were confronted with figures showing that their profits had gone up by more than 20 per cent a year in the last few years. It was pointed out that despite those tremendous profits only about one-third of those profits were channelled into research and development. When we see the head offices of the multinational drug companies acting in that way we should know what to expect from their Canadian subsidiaries.

In a January, 1987, issue of Business Week there was an article entitled "For drug makers, these will be the good old days". The article said:

> This should be another record year for the $24 billion pharmaceutical industry . . . new products should boost the industry's profits 15 per cent or so beyond last year's 18 per cent increase, to about $5.6 billion. After tax margins could exceed last year's 12.8 per cent.

How much more is the Government prepared to let the multinational corporations rip off the Canadian public? The article then goes into some detail:

> Merck's sales could jump to $4.4 billion in 1987, up more than 25 per cent from this year's $3.6 billion, analysts estimate . . . Bristol-Myers—sales this year should jump 15 per cent, to about $325 million.

> Meanwhile, Eli Lilly & Co. could have a winner in Prozac, an antidepressant already on sale in Belgium. If FDA approval is granted, analysts say, Lilly's 1987 sales could climb by $300 million, to $3.6 billion.

That is what happens. Drugs are developed in the U.S. or Belgium or Switzerland, brought to Canada, and the Canadian consumer pays through the nose. The Globe and Mail had a similar story in January.

The Reuter article was headed "Pharmaceutical companies seen buying shares, raising dividends". It said:

> Shareholders could be in line for a bonanza from major pharmaceutical companies which, cash-rich from drug sale profits, are buying back their shares and are considering an increase in dividends, analysts say . . . they are sitting on piles of excess cash from their booming business. Some of those funds amount to more than $1 billion (U.S.), which can be a drag on the balance sheet in the current low growth, low interest rate environment.
>
> Industry leader Merck & Co., for example, will have about $1.5 billion in cash at year-end 1986, Bristol-Myers Co. $1.3 billion, Pfizer Inc. $1.4 billion and Eli Lilly & Co. $810 million. Some analysts predict that such cash reserves will double over the next two years.

We are talking about an industry which has already experienced tremendous profits. They do not need this legislation or the encouragement it will give them to make bigger profits, not to invest more in research. As I pointed out earlier in this debate, and in recent months, in the period before 1969, when the present legislation, which the Government is not just amending but is eliminating, was in force, although there were no restrictions on the companies and they had almost unlimited protection of their right to produce drugs which they had researched and developed, there was virtually no research done.

Given the testimony of these companies before the committee that the cost of developing a major new drug from original research to the point where it can be put on the market is in the neighbourhood of $100 million, it is ridiculous and naive to believe that they are going to permit their Canadian subsidiaries to invest that kind of money and effort in Canada to produce a new drug when the market in Canada is so small.

All the evidence indicates that this Bill will increase prices to consumers, and that means to young families with young children, retired people, indeed everyone who uses prescription drugs very frequently. It will substantially increase the profits of drug companies and cost the Canadian public hundreds of millions of dollars. For those reasons we intend to vote against this Bill.

● (1610)

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, yesterday and today the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) mentioned the objections to Bill C-22 of a Manitoba farm group, Keystone Agricultural Producers. Indeed, in the early fall of 1986 the group issued a news-letter to its members stating their concerns about the Bill in light of their battle to lower the price of farm chemicals.

However, in January this year I attended their annual convention in Winnipeg and discussed the issue with several of their members. After a long discussion they came to the conclusion that if they had legislation like Bill C-22 for farm chemicals they would be ecstatic because their problems would be solved. I think the House should know what the real story is as far as Keystone Agricultural Producers is concerned.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have put on the record in the House and in committee the views expressed by Keystone Agricultural Producers as they appear in a letter written to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on November 25, 1986. It is signed by the president of that organization, Jack Penner.

I have talked to the Secretary of Keystone Agriculture Producers several times. If there had been a substantial change in their views and they had retreated from the position they enunciated very clearly and explicitly in their letter, then I say to the Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) that I am sure they would have been in touch with me or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the member, outlining their new position. That has not happened. Therefore, I must assume and I think the member and the Minister have to accept the fact that Keystone Agricultural Producers is still opposed to this, as it was on November 25, 1986.

If the Hon. Member has any real evidence that the official position of Keystone Agricultural Producers has changed, I call on him to put on the record what has happened.

Let me quote from the organization's letter. It is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and states:

> Dear Mr. Andre:
>
> A recent meeting of the General Council of the Keystone Agricultural Producers Inc., Manitoba's principal general agricultural policy organization, unanimously adopted a resolution calling for our organization to vigorously oppose proposed amendments of the Drug Patents Act, which would allow chemical manufacturing companies patent protection of ten to seventeen years on new pharmaceutical drugs.
>
> The KAP's concerns about the proposed amendments are twofold. Firstly, and most obviously, KAP members share the concerns of those who believe that extended patent protections, will, by limiting the ability of drug manufacturing companies to produce generic copies by means of royalty payments, raise the prices charged to consumers for pharmaceutical drugs to unwarranted levels. Farmers and their families are, of course, part of the general consuming public, and stand to be seriously affected in any such situation.
>
> Secondly, since many of the drug manufacturing companies which produce pharmaceutical drugs are the same companies which produce the chemical formulations used by agricultural producers in the production of primary food commodities, it is our belief that any measures which may be taken with respect to pharmaceutical drugs may have significant implications with respect to the production and pricing of pesticides.

The letter concludes:

> Viewed from the perspective outlined above, it is not difficult to understand why an organization such as the KAP would view the amendments you have proposed for the Drug Patents Act as constituting a step in the wrong direction, and we would strongly urge the Government to re-think this ill-advised legislation.

We had a very lengthy and important debate in which more than 100 Members spoke about the problems of western grain producers. Those producers are caught in a situation where they have low prices for the grain they produce while their input costs are increasing. One of those important input costs is fertilizer. It is not surprising that Keystone Agricultural Producers are worried and therefore oppose the Bill. They know that it is not just prescription drugs that will be affected, but farm chemicals and pesticides.

Let me repeat that we are opposed to the Bill. We are joined by organizations such as Keystone Agricultural Producers. I wish the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River would listen to his farm constituents rather than the multinational drug companies, which is what he is doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the debate on third reading of Bill C-22 today. I listened with great interest to what was said yesterday and today.

Quite frankly, I am puzzled by the comment of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) that the 1969 amendments to the Patent Act which allowed for compulsory licensing increased economic opportunities in the pharmaceutical industry.

I was a member of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-22, as was the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. I sat through all but two hours of the 82 hours the committee spent on the Bill and that is certainly not what I heard.

Let me give some examples of what the experts said in the committee. We heard from the Canadian Society for Clinical Investigation which consists of members from across the country. They stated that the amendments in Bill C-22 would protect the fruits of intellectual labour. They went on to say that since 1969, Canada has done very poorly in research and development. In their opinion, Bill C-22 would create the right environment for research and development. In fact, it was that group which made the committee aware that in the past several years advances in psychiatric therapy due to drugs has saved approximately $1 billion a year in hospital care.

We heard from the National Biotechnology Advisory Committee which called the present law a disincentive in the investment climate.

We heard from Doctor Chretien of the Montreal Clinical Research Institute who said that chemists who work for an innovative drug company do not get the same protection as, for example, a scientist who may work for Dupont Corporation who develops a new polymer. He said that pharmaceutical scientists are discriminated against because of the present legislation.

We heard from Doctor Manson, who represents Biomega, a Canadian biotechnology company. According to him, the system is not providing protection to domestic biological companies. He stated that this is a major growth area in human natural products, immunology and diagnostics and that our present system is not providing protection for that industry.

It is also important to note that amendments brought forward by the Government at committee stage have answered many concerns and questions raised by Doctor Manson and others representing Canadian biotechnology companies.

We heard from Doctor Spiro of the University of Toronto, representing the Coalition of Scientists. In his estimation, Bill C-22 will increase both basic and clinical research. The 1969 Bill had a bad affect on medical research, according to Dr. Spiro.

• (1620)

We heard from Dr. Jacques Gagne, a pharmacist—pharmacologist and Dean of the University of Montreal. He was a little more emphatic. He said the 1969 amendments were the worst thing that ever happened to research in pharmacy in Canada. He calls Bill C-22 a major step in the right direction.

We heard also from a Mr. Ian Thompson. He is not an expert or scientist. He has two children with cystic fibrosis. He said the future of his family depends on research and new and better drugs. Who is doing the research in drug therapy? It is certainly not the generic companies. Dr. Chretien, whom I mentioned earlier, said generic companies do zero per cent in research. Their motive is profit only. As Mr. Thompson said, the future of his family depends on research, and therefore, depends on the innovative drug firms.

The Medical Research Council of Canada did not appear before the committee, but I have its report dated February 1987 from which I would like to quote very briefly:

> After the Patent Act was amended in 1969 to provide for compulsory licensing to import, the growth rate of innovative pharmaceutical companies' R and D investment in Canada is said to have declined.
>
> This decline in growth rate has been more than twice as severe as that for the industry worldwide and also about twice as severe as for other industries in Canada.

The report continues:

> The direction which the patent legislation will take if and when the new Act is passed cannot but be favourable to the expansion of medical research in Canada.

The Hon. Member from Cape Breton—East Richmond read a letter yesterday from the Manitoba Women's Institute saying that we were accusing opposition Parties of promoting fear. In quoting from this letter, the Hon. Member stated that the Women's Institute was certainly not promoting fear. I agree, it is not promoting fear but is the victim of this campaign of misinformation. We have the misfortune in Manitoba, I must say, of having a New Democratic Provincial Government and we have been bombarded with misinformation.

I would just very briefly like to list some of the facets of Bill C-22 which should be remembered because I think it ties in with my following remarks. Under Bill C-22 all generic products sold today will continue to be sold. New generic products may be marketed as early as seven years after a brand product is approved for marketing. Today on average it takes nine and a half years for such a process. Why is that? I mentioned a few moments ago that the only motive of the generic drug firms is profit. They do zero research according to some of the top minds in the industry in Canada.

Generic companies are now seeking licences for more than 40 products. Under Bill C-22 every single one of these products can be marketed within the next five years. A very important aspect of Bill C-22 as well is the establishment of the Drug Prices Review Board. Under the Drug Prices Review Board, the prices of all patent drugs will be reviewed annually. The prices of all new products will be compared to the prices of the products with which they compete to ensure consistency with the established market prices. The board as well will have the power to roll back prices if the innovative firms are not keeping their commitments to research and development.

The board will measure annually the impact of the activities on drug prices and these reports will be made public. These aspects are quite clear. The fact that Dr. Eastman will head up the committee and, in his own words, he feels the committee will be beneficial and effective, makes me think that the process will work very well.

The innovative firms at the same time have promised to expand R and D from 4.9 per cent to 8 per cent by 1990 and to 10 per cent by 1995. I have a long list of examples of innovative firms which have pledged millions of dollars, over $800 million, in increased R and D and capital spending.

I would also like to mention briefly, before I get into the Opposition tactics, some indisputable facts about the pharmaceutical industry.

I am a licenced pharmacist in the Province of Manitoba. There are over 5,000 drugs on the market in Canada at the present time. I can pick at random 100 of those products off my shelves in my drug store, and 93 at the present time will have no generic competition. Seven per cent is all that have generic competition at this time. What does that tell us? It tells us that only 7 per cent of the drugs on the market in Canada right now are financially attractive to the generic companies. The other 93 per cent, although they are saving lives across the country, are not rich enough to attract the generic companies. The generic companies are not doing the research. They are copying 7 per cent of the drugs for the sake of pure motive and we are losing our scientists because of it.

I attended a press conference in Winnipeg late last fall which was set up and held by several experts in the field. There were scientists from the University of Manitoba and St. Bonifice Hospital Health Sciences Centre. We heard from research scientists from the Children's Hospital in Winnipeg that two new products had been developed by a scientist who packed his bags and moved to Europe to further develop those drugs because of the present compulsory licensing laws in Canada.

I should also note at this time that we expect, upon passage of Bill C-22, $50 million of increased research and development spending in my home Province of Manitoba.

In light of these facts, what has the New Democratic Party been saying, particularly in Manitoba? For purely political reasons it is preying upon the fears of the sick and elderly. In fact that Party is not just preying on those fears; in my opinion it is creating false fears. I believe it is quite understandable that Canadians have questions about new legislation for any federal Government. However, the misinformation being spread by the New Democratic Party of Manitoba and across the country is reprehensible. It is creating totally false fears in the minds of the very people it pretends to protect. I would like to go through a few examples to prove my point.

My home town, Swan River, Manitoba, is a small town. The local Member of the Legislature from that area is a Cabinet Minister in the NDP Government of Manitoba. He sent a letter to the editor late last fall and I would like to read a few lines because it emphasizes the campaign of misinformation being perpetrated in Manitoba. I quote from a Minister of the Crown in Manitoba:

> Dear Sir:
>
> I wanted to express my concern about Ottawa's intention to ban generic drugs. A federal Bill to prohibit the sale of "generic" drugs—is expected to be introduced during the current session of the Canadian House of Commons.

He continues in his letter to urge that Canadians should write to the Prime Minister. For him to say that generic drugs will be prohibited is ridiculous. It is absolute nonsense. That letter was written by a Minister of the Crown in Manitoba who should be believable.

At the same time I have a letter which was sent out to most Manitobans from New Democratic Members of the legislature from across the province. I have several in my possession and they are word for word; the only difference is the signature. Although the letter does not speak in quite as profound terms as the previous letter, the first line talks about the prospect of higher prices, something that is worrying a lot of people these days. My contention is that worry is being spawned by the New Democratic Party. The letter says that drug prices will increase significantly, and for a full page the letter goes on to create fear in the minds of the elderly, which is shameful. Those are the very people that that Party professes to protect.

As recently as this week, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), while introducing a petition, bootlegged in some editorial comment on Bill C-22. He said that Bill C-22 would hurt the Saskatchewan Drug Plan and smiled when he said it as though that was quite funny. It is interesting that during the hearings of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-22 we heard from the Deputy Minister of the Saskatchewan Health Department and the Executive Director of the Saskatchewan Prescription Drug Plan. I would like to quote from the testimony of Mr. Walter Podiluk, the deputy Minister of Saskatchewan Health Department:

> We present to you the Saskatchewan position, based on our experiences with a drug plan which is the most comprehensive and the most universal of any in Canada . . . At the present time, after some fairly careful examination of the provisions and the features of Bill C-22, we feel it has the potential to control the inflationary spiral of pharmaceutical costs. We feel it also has the potential to create a more stable investment climate and stimulate employment.

Because Saskatchewan recognizes the potential good that can be derived from the Bill, we are prepared to accept the principles and the thrust behind it.

That was from representatives of the Saskatchewan Prescription Drug Plan.

• (1630)

Finally, I wish to refer to one last letter which is the second in a series of letters. It was sent to thousands of Canadians last week or the week before last. It is from the Leader of the New Democratic Party and is dated April 13, 1987. It is a follow-up to a letter sent out on September 30. The letter reads in part:

Dear Friend,

You and your family could soon be paying a small fortune for prescription drugs, just so that big foreign-owned drug companies can increase their profits.

Further in the letter he states that Bill C-22 would mean that:

—all new drugs coming onto the market will be as expensive as the drug companies wish to make them—for 10 years.

That sentence ignores the Drug Prices Review Board which will control the price of all drugs, not just those 7 per cent from drug companies which are rich enough to attract the generics at this time. Further on in the letter he mentions a monopoly for drug companies. Patent experts who appeared before the committee told us that this situation is not a monopoly situation because these products, if not for the innovative firms, would not be in existence in the first place and there would be nothing to copy.

Further on in the letter the Leader of the NDP states that generic drugs save Canadians more than $211 million per year. He does not mention that under Bill C-22 it has been estimated, using the same criteria as that used by Dr. Eastman, that consumers would save not $211 million but anywhere from $226 million to $366 million. He fails to mention that fact.

The best part of the letter is found in the last couple of paragraphs. Beside a political gain I was wondering what the Leader of the NDP had in mind when he sent this letter. He states:

Make a contribution to the New Democrats' campaign for fair drug prices.

Members of the New Democratic Party are using these false fears not just for political gain but as a fund-raising campaign. That is something which is unheard of and totally shameful, in my opinion.

I feel that my contention that Canadians have been misinformed by the NDP is proven by this letter. That includes the Keystone Agricultural Producers about whom the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was speaking just a short while ago. They were misinformed and have sent out a newsletter advising their members to oppose Bill C-22. In my discussions with members of Keystone Agricultural Producers, as well as the President, I found they have softened that view and are now saying that if they had such a system in effect for farm chemicals they would be far better off.

This nonsense that is being spread—and I think spread is a good word because coming from a farming community in Manitoba we spread much of what is being spread by the NDP here—is creating false fears. It is certainly not helping the debate on Bill C-22.

In the opinion of the Canadian Medical Association which represents almost 44,000 doctors Bill C-22 is good for Canada and good for the health care system. Rather than seeing Bill C-22 as a curse, the generic companies should see it as a chance to become involved themselves in research and development and invest their profits. Their profits are well up there. They should invest those profits in the pharmaceutical industry and in pharmaceutical technology. Let us not forget that if a generic company makes a major discovery in pharmaceutical technology, that discovery would be protected for between seven and ten years just as any discovery of an innovative firm would be protected for the same length of time. As a nation we must protect intellectual property rights.

I was in a conversation last fall with a gentleman who phoned me up at home one evening to talk about Bill C-22 and his opposition to it. It so happens that at the present time this same gentleman is writing a book which he hopes to have published in the next couple of months in hard cover. I said to him: "Well, sir, what if the day after you have this book published in hard cover selling for $20, $30, $40, someone down the street publishes the same book in paperback and sells it for $3.95? Would that not be the same as Bill C-22?" I think that is a very apt analogy. It got him thinking twice about Bill C-22 and his opposition to it.

The Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, of which I am a member, publishes a journal monthly. In the October, 1986, edition there is an editorial on the Patent Act changes that we are debating today. It is entitled "A Needed Reform". The article states that the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association has taken a definite stand on the proposed patent reforms. The association supports them because it believes that the amendments will improve the quality of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and ultimately benefit consumers. I share this optimism, the optimism of my colleagues across Canada, in the belief that increased research development will occur under Bill C-22 and will result ultimately in a superior health care system for all Canadians. The four-year review that is built into Bill C-22 will ensure that the innovative drug companies are keeping up their end of the bargain.

I would like to close with a short verse that I read many years ago and happened to come across just a few days ago. It reads:

For the want of a prescription, a sale was lost

For the want of a sale, a profit was lost

For the want of a profit, an investment was lost

For the want of an investment, a research project was lost

For the want of a research project, a new drug was lost

For the want of a new drug, a patient was lost

Innovative drugs help support today's research and tomorrow's breakthroughs which are good for Canada. I urge the House to support Bill C-22.

[Translation]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed, without amendment, Bill S-6, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker, it is both sad and unfortunate that the Conservative Government has failed to consider the recommendations made by the Official Opposition, by my colleague from Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) and my colleague from Cape Breton, who both worked very hard to ensure that this Bill, whose purpose is . . . I think it is important to recall for the benefit of the people watching us, that before 1969, it was the law of the jungle as far as the price of prescription drugs was concerned.

Because there was no competition at the time, and companies doing research enjoyed considerable protection in the form of patents, when their research was successful, on for instance a new drug to alleviate pain, the companies could arbitrarily set a price of $5, $10, $15 or $20 on their products. For 17 years, they held a monopoly, and people who needed this drug to alleviate pain were at the mercy of those who took advantage of the situation at the time, and thought only in terms of profits.

Faced with this situation and this attitude, in 1969 the Liberal Government decided to protect the Canadian consumer, while the Hon. Member who spoke earlier, the Conservative Member, his only concern was the company and research, never mind the price to be paid by the consumer and by the sick who need prescription drugs to alleviate pain or cure their illnesses. Faced with such abuses on the part of the multinationals the previous Government decided to eliminate this patent protection, with the result that the health product market became more competitive. The same medication, the same pill produced the same effects but it did not have the same appearance. Still the person who needed this medication to relieve suffering or cure such and such disease did not have to pay so much.

• (1640)

The Eastman report pointed out that Canadian consumers saved $211 million in 1983. When we say consumers, we have to keep in mind that we are referring to people whose condition is not normal and who need drugs because they are sick.

Even so, with the passage of time and perhaps rightfully so because of the lesson the multinationals drew from having to compete, the Liberal Government agreed to review the situation and appointed the Eastman Commission to find out whether after a few years we ought to maintain the same process and give no protection to companies which carry out research, or whether it is true that research can indeed be very costly and there ought to be a minimum of protection. Instead of giving up under pressure and yielding to blackmail from the multinationals or anybody else, the Government appointed an inquiry commission. After consultations Commissioner Eastman recommended that consumers who are sick need to be protected, this was the first and most important consideration, but at the same time he advocated a certain degree of intellectual protection for companies doing research so as to protect and maintain employment levels in research in Canada and Quebec. The Eastman Commission recommended a four-year protection.

But here again unfortunately—always in keeping with the Conservative approach so perfectly described by the Conservative Member who spoke before me—the poor company was losing a bit of money, it needed help, no matter what. Sick people will have to pay more, but to him it is a minor consideration, it does not really matter.

This legislation and the attitude show the position and attitude of the three national parties. The legislation shows that clearly. In the legislation you have protection—someone, a Prime Minister who is kneeling before the drug multinational corporations, as he knelt before the banking institutions, as he knelt before the Americans. And the drug multinational corporations told him: "Listen, you give us this, and what we need is 10 years without any market competition. Let consumers pay more, that is of minor interest". They said: "We will put up money", but that is taxpayers' money, federal money, $100 million to compensate the provinces, because they are footing the bill for the drugs used by people on Quebec welfare, by hospital patients and others.

Let us not forget how little this Tory Government shies away from getting money on the backs of patients. We remember the 10 percent tax on drugs—hard-nosed as it is, it will not stop at that. This is the second time it is using sickness in Canada—the first time to reduce the Canadian Government deficit that covers the Prime Minister's luxury travels, and now to enrich the multinational corporations.

But you have at the other end the New Democratic Party, and the Hon. Member who just spoke clearly showed that the NDP's intellectual honesty is not Canada's best. As McEnroe would say, it is no great shakes.

So you have clear, specific proof. The NDP opposes any change. And this shows that the NDP does not understand Quebecers at all. And this is where the NDP clearly shows that in spite the fine promises and the fine faces made by the NDP Leader in Montreal, as soon as he gets back to Ottawa, as soon as he crosses the river, he does not even remember what a Quebecer is and what he is asking for.

He does not even know. Some people. There is nobody in the NDP, not even the turncoat for Terrebonne who left the Progressive Conservatives, who transfered in the meantime—he took a seat anywhere, and he landed beside the NDP, because the Rhinoceros Party and the Liberal would not have him. Even he, who is from Quebec, did not dare rise to represent the interests of Quebecers.

And for once in Quebec, you know that in Quebec, the Liberals and the Pequistes are hard-headed. The Parti Civique and the RCN find it hard to agree on anything. They are often bickering, but on the matter of drug patents, dating back from the time when the PQ was in Government and the Provincial Liberals in Opposition, there was a unanimous vote in the National Assembly to urge the federal Government to grant a minimum of patent protection to keep Quebec brains in the Montreal area, to give a certain credibility, honesty that is due to multinationals, but not to do like the Conservatives who bow to blackmail and give everything to the multinationals.

Again, the NDP is unaware of what took place in Quebec. Personally, last year, I took part in the Montreal economic summit, which drew together people of all political stripes: representatives from the Quebec Government and Opposition, and Members of the Liberal, PQ and Conservative parties. Personally, I was there for the Liberal Party at the federal level. There was no NDP representative. There were people from the RCM and Civic parties. The Civic Party was then in power in Montreal. There were union representatives from the CSN. I suppose the NDP does not know about the CSN, for it operates only in Quebec. It is all Chinese to them. The CSD is another union which operates in Quebec. I can understand that the NDP leader would not know about the CSD; although he pays a lightning visit to Montreal once in a while, he does not know about the CSD.

But there were also representatives from the FTQ, which is a member of the Canada Labour Congress. Personally, I am a paying member in good standing of the FTQ. There was also a guy named "Ti-Louis" Laberge who is not afraid to speak out and who is neither a Liberal, nor a PQ nor a Conservative. He was sitting with the others around the table and all of them were on the same wave-length. They were asking that the federal Government introduce a bill providing a minimum of protection for patents. It is a well known fact that the drug manufacturers are concentrated in the greater Montreal region. There are a few in Quebec City and some more in other regions. We have to protect and keep our scientists.

Again, I should like to remind the House that it was not "Ti-Louis" Laberge who stated, even if at one time he did negotiate with the Premier: Just a minute, the multinationals and you are bedfellows; you are giving them all they want. Now, this is a different matter.

Again, this panel included Golden Agers. These people too were unanimous. Then, all of a sudden, the NDP comes along and says: Let's keep things as they are. Let us maintain the status quo. We keep the status quo, Quebecers are not so important. We do not care about Quebecers. Such is the attitude and the behaviour of the NDP with respect to the fair and just claims of the Quebec people. The NDP, and the Leader of the NDP when he wants to defend the automobile industry in his constituency, in his province, often tries to get the support of Quebecers, and he would like them to understand the problems of other regions. But when they try to have the NDP understand their specific needs, because in all their speeches they say that they recognize the specificity of Quebec, when they are asked to say in specific terms how we should go about it, the NDP demonstrates that it is not this or that, that it is not the right way.

• (1650)

Let me go back to the attitude of the present Government. It is unfortunate that the suggestions, the amendments put forward by my colleague the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) were not accepted. He was expressing the fair, just and logical views of the majority of the Canadian people who were asking for a basic principle. I believe that all Members of the House of Commons who represent their constituencies, who represent the Canadian people, know very well that the least organized people in Canada are the sick, that there is no association for them to get together and lobby the governements, and tell them: Hold it, you are hurting us! Those people suffer. They do not have time to get organized. The first duty of every Member of the House of Commons should be to defend the interests of those who are least able to defend themselves. And it should have been the role of Conservative Members to tell the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney): Hold it, Canada is not run by multinationals. Let us reject their blackmail when they say: If you do not give us that Bill with 10 years, we will not make as many investments. If the Prime Minister had shown that he had guts, that he could hold his own, he would have said: Hold it, man, you will take what we will give you. We have been elected by our fellow citizens to defend the interests of the Canadian people from sea to sea, not to be blackmailed by multinationals.

He could have said that a commission, an inquiry carried out with public funds, had enabled experts to say that four years would provide adequate protection for consumers in terms of drug prices. With four years, there would be protection for research and academics who want to work in that field, and the multinationals would continue to make a profit, even without a ten-year monopoly. After all, they did not go bankrupt. Now listen, the multinationals are not in business to please you or me. They do research because they think there is money in it, otherwise they would not bother.

Unfortunately, concessions have been the order of the day. As for the NDP Members, initially they had set up their petitions opposing the measure but felt they could not send their petitions to Quebec. Maybe there was a bit of hypocrisy in this, because they knew perfectly well they would be getting into a hornet's nest. However, I felt they might have realized at some point that if they want to get candidates elected in Quebec, they would have to show a minimum of respect. They should go to Quebecers and ask what their position is. They should ask the PQ and the people who defend the interests of Quebecers from the Montreal area in the National Assembly what kind of distinctions they make. They may be right and they may be wrong. But they did not do that. They tried to cover up the problem so that they ended up defending their own ideological interests but not the interests of Canadians, and especially not the interests of Quebecers. Recently, questions were asked in the various regions, both in the National Assembly and elsewhere, and both parties were always asking the federal Government to proceed quickly. However, I repeat that this is not reflected in the Bill we are being asked to adopt today on third reading, Bill C-22, which unfortunately will have the effect of considerably increasing the price of prescription drugs in the future.

Some Conservative Members will say: The provinces will foot the bill. But from whom are the provinces getting the money? From the taxpayers. Consumers will be paying more taxes to cover the cost to provincial plans of higher priced drugs.

Other Convervative Members suggested: "No, there is no serious problem there, they have private insurance". Well, who is paying for private insurance covering the cost of drugs, the Blue Cross or someone else. The consumers again. The fact is that prices will increase, insurance companies will raise their premiums, insurance companies operate on the basis of a 10 per cent profit on cost, well, they too will be looking for extra profits. But who will be footing the bill? Again, consumers.

And Conservative Members once more forgot about senior citizens. Yes, seniors again. It may be in an underhanded way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who announced today that on June 18, he will be introducing the tax reform . . . Is he going to mislead senior citizens as he once did concerning the de-indexing of old age security? Will Mrs. Solange Denis have to stay at the door to watch for our national "Charlie Brown"?

But they forgot there are four million people in Canada who will have to dig into their pockets. And they are not rich people, but people working at the minimum wage in convenience stores, people who work week-ends. Four million people who may not transfer the cost of drugs to their Provincial Government because they are not on welfare, because they have an income, they work. That includes equal numbers of young people, older ones and seniors.

There are four million people who have no more protection, who do not have Blue Cross, who do not earn enough to pay for the protection of private insurance. On top of that they have to try, out of their meagre earnings, to put as best they can some money aside in case they have to buy drugs if one of their kids gets sick.

And here, with the 10 year protection, we will come back to that, that during 10 years . . . Ah, at the start, during the first year, the multinationals will be kind, they will report, they will say: We are planning a one cent increase. Look how nice we are. Three, four or five years later, when we are not looking anymore, they will go ahead, they will go all out. Hey? After six years they will say: Just in case they change anything we should do like the Conservative MPs, let us grab everything we can before we get beaten.

Why did the Conservative Government not choose to negotiate just like the Eastman Commission would have done? Eastman recommends four years, the companies are trying for 10, so let us settle the matter and call it five years. You have only five years. After five years—Mr. Speaker, I see I have only one minute left—after five years we will review the legislation to see whether it should be maintained. No, Sir, it is the other way around. This is just another way of speaking, we let them buy us off, not for very much because we are not worth very much these days. So we tell the multinationals: You have 10 years. We give them 10 years and then set up a supercommittee to investigate. Imagine, we are not even sure whether research will be done in Germany . . . Imagine how much we will have to pay for this committee which will go traipsing around the world to make an inquiry into a handful of powder . . . Who studied that? Make an investigation. We will have Sherlock Holmes-type investigators coming out of the woodwork. It will cost a fortune and we will be no better off.

After five years the committee will report: Well, maybe we should make some changes. So the multinationals will say: Just a minute, you passed a law, we have 10 years, it was up to you to think about it. Today's Conservative Members will no longer be here in five years, they will all be out, but the people will be left with the problem created by the Conservative Members.

I see some of the Conservative Members are laughing. It is very funny. I can appreciate that some of them may have an interest in this. Perhaps they are shareholders of the multinationals. Personally I am clean, I have no shares in the multinationals. I can understand that a shareholder would be interested and anxious to see the Bill passed, he will be here day and night, hopefully the shares will go up and he will make a bundle. But that is not my interest nor my intention, Mr. Speaker.

We are talking about our constituents. The Conservative Members who are here ought to keep in mind that maybe tomorrow somebody in the family will be sick. You are laughing now, but maybe one of your relatives will take sick tomorrow and you will say that the high cost of drugs is scandalous. How did it happen? People will tell you that you should have been on your toes when you were there. You should not have given in to blackmail from the multinationals. You should not have let them buy you off. It is your responsibility to think about the welfare of Canadian taxpayers first instead of your own.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there is still hope, for the Bill has reached third reading. I am under the impression that Conservative Members have cash registers instead of hearts. There is nothing that can be done about that. But I am still hoping, one never knows . . . Since the Bill will be referred to the Senate, maybe it will be returned here with amendments that will enlighten Conservative Members, and I trust that the NDP Members will remember how unfair and offensive to Quebecers they have been in this debate.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for his eloquent speech in favour of the neediest Canadians. I do not think the House has a better defender of the needy than the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned a category of citizens who will undoubtedly be the most affected by the change proposed by the Government. This category of some 4 million people do not necessarily live on welfare, are not necessarily wage-earners and are not eligible because of their job to medical assistance programs which would provide them with free drugs and they will be faced with prohibitive costs when purchasing medicine.

These Canadian men and women just cannot afford such a burden. But in spite of all this, I think that demonstration of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is quite eloquent and shows that there will be cruel and severe consequences for a great many men and women. Still, the Government tries to justify its odious drug legislation by saying that it will create new jobs. I know that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie represents a riding in the eastern part of Montreal Island, in Quebec, which is severely affected by high unemployment.

Could the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie indicate to the House whether he sees any benefit or positive results for the Island of Montreal as far as job creation is concerned, following the adoption of this Bill which is cruel indeed to Canadian men and women?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for his very important question. The Conservative Government would have us believe that it introduced this legislation, which provides a 10-year protection period, in order to create jobs. The problem is that we cannot be sure that the Bill in its present form will create jobs in Quebec. These jobs are not a sure thing. There may be a couple of jobs in the construction industry since it seems another building is going up. Sure. Suppose they need a carpenter. Today, a carpenter doesn't have that much to do on a construction site. It is mostly iron and steel and concrete. However as far as scientific research and the real brains are concerned, there is absolutely no guarantee.

Knowing the Conservatives, are they going to oblige a company to create jobs in Canada? We saw what happened with Gulf-Ultramar. The Government decided to allow the sale of the Gulf refinery to a foreign company, which then decided to close down the refinery. The jobs were lost. We saw this in the decision regarding Dome Petroleum and Amoco. The Hon. Member is right to be concerned because this Bill means the consumer will have to pay more. According to the Conservatives, this will create more jobs in research, but there is nothing to guarantee and nothing proves that the jobs in research will go to Canada and Quebec. I wouldn't be surprised, in fact, I am sure that the people of Quebec fully expect to be shafted once again, as they were so many times before. They will have to foot the bill but will have nothing to show for it, as we saw in the case of the General Motors plant in Sainte Therese.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, first I want to make a comment, then I will have a question for my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie who poses as the champion of the elderly. He usually does a very good job, but still there is a limit to wanting to protect the poor, the orphan, and the elderly. Demagogy comes easy in this field, and I think my colleague has earned his spurs in that respect. Mr. Manuel Maître, the director or president of the Quebec Federation of Senior Citizens, had this to say when he appeared before the committee, and I quote: It often happens that the senior citizens or groups of senior citizens—because politicians tell them this—say that they are going to pay more if this legislation is adopted.

Mr. Maître said: This is a total falsehood because in Quebec there are presently 4,100 pharmaceutical products for which they can get a refund. Five years ago there were 1,400 in Ontario and 800 in Saskatchewan. Mr. Maître went on to say: What you have there is a complete arsenal, you can poison the whole planet with it. And one of the recommendations of the Quebec Federation of Senior Citizens is to urge the Government to legislate in an attempt to cut down the use of medicated drugs. Physicians are so handy with their prescription pad that senior citizens become sick.

So the only drugs they need now are covered. Well, how can you justify your position when we know that this group of sick and elderly people are covered by health insurance plans?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) that before, on the matter of the de-indexing old age security pensions, she stated clearly and publicly that a Government was under no obligation to honour its promises, its commitments.

And she just showed clearly, and I mentioned earlier in my speech, that indeed the NDP does not understand the Québec Federation of Senior Citizens, who ask for minimum protection. But the aim, what the Hon. Member is asking, is this: Do senior citizens over-use drugs? Physicians and studies suggest they do. But it is not by granting patent protection that the over-use situation will be corrected. Senior citizens will not change on the matter of aspirin if they use too much.

It is therefore my view that the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi took the wrong road to reach her goal. If education is needed to urge people to use less and less drugs, it is not by keeping money with the multinationals that this will be accomplished. The Government could have taken money and put it into education, prevention through the CLSC, the senior citizens' clubs, and I would be highly supportive of such a move.

But what we now have before us is strictly a case of someone kneeling before the multinationals, someone wanting to give extra money to the multinationals. This holds nothing good for consumers as a whole. And above all, it will not protect patients because there are drugs patients have to use to alleviate their pain.

I would therefore urge the Hon. Member, knowing her sense of responsibility, to tell her Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that in order to achieve her goals, in order to prevent people from using drugs unnecessarily, other methods and other steps could be taken. I would be ready to co-operate. But let them reduce the bill, let them provide for a five-year protection and a review of that protection five years down the road. But first, we must protect consumers. And if the Government really wants to save jobs, help our brains, our scientists, our learned people, well, it is not by slashing research funding and so on that this will be accomplished. It is not by simply asking patients to become increasingly ill that jobs will be created for people with brains. Because the Government attitude is getting stupid there.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are three things to consider. If Conservative Members want our scientists and researchers in whatever field to have jobs, well, instead of spending money on the banks and handing out capital gains tax exemptions, instead of letting the Prime Minister transfer a penitentiary to his own riding, instead of all this foolishness, let them take the money and manage it properly, and provide funding for research and create jobs for people and protect the sick. Now, if she wants a program to educate people to be less dependent on prescription drugs, I think that is a very good idea. So let's provide the funding and do whatever is necessary to achieve that goal.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise today in strong support of Bill C-22. As we are quickly coming to a close of this debate, perhaps we should review a little of the history over the past few months. There has been much talk about there not being enough time to debate Bill C-22. Canadians have seen what has happened. We have had days and days when members of the opposition Parties rose and said, "I move that so and so be heard". On one day we voted every half an hour. That is not responsible opposition. It is time members of the Opposition learned that they are here to oppose Bills that are bad but not to oppose every Bill that comes before the House.

• (1710)

This Bill was introduced on November 6, read for the first time on November 7, and debated at second reading stage on November 20, 21, 24, 25 and December 5. From there, the Bill went into committee and that committee sat every day of the week beginning December 8 and going right through until March 5. There was adequate time for members to look into the Bill.

From speaking to some of my colleagues in the Liberal Party, I have learned that they do not believe that there is very much wrong with this Bill. As a matter of fact, looking back in history, this Bill was introduced in the Thirty-second Parliament by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but it was botched up and the Government did not get it through. Now we will vote on this Bill and I urge all members to support it because it is a good one.

I think we should look at the Bill itself. It talks about the protection of intellectual property. Intellectual property is a very important thing. People talk about generic companies not being able to work alongside innovative companies. Generic companies presently produce 7 per cent to 8 per cent of all the pharmaceuticals in Canada. In the United States where there is 17-year patent protection legislation, generics have grown to 25 per cent of the market. I see in the future a generic industry and an innovative industry working side by side in Canada. We have to remember that the last real breakthrough in medicine made in Canada was made in 1921 with the discovery of insulin.

This debate is winding down. What is left to say? It has all been said. I listened to the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party who just spoke actually twist things. I do not say that he was deliberately misleading the House because I do not think he understands. We need research and development in Canada.

At the present time, the ratio of research and development to sales in the pharmaceutical industry is 4.7 per cent. We have been guaranteed by the Bill that by 1990, that ratio will be 8 per cent and by 1995, it will be 10 per cent. The sales of pharmaceuticals presently amount to $2.5 billion to $3 billion. Perhaps by 1995, those sales will have grown, but that is already a great amount of money.

The scientific community has responded. It has said that we are right, Canada cannot survive without research and development. Nordic Laboratories in Montreal have committed $35 million to research and development. Universities and hospitals in Calgary and Edmonton have committed $132.9 million. Universities and hospitals in British Columbia have committed $81.6 million. Astra Pharmaceuticals in my own riding of Mississauga has pledged to spend on research and development. These companies have pledged that they will spend $850 million in research and development over the next 10 years. This means that 3,000 new jobs will be created for university-trained research people. The brain-drain to the United States will stop.

It is absolutely ludicrous that we should protect intellectual property for only four years. A company in my riding, Smith Kline & French, developed a drug to deal with peptic ulcers. That drug saved $135 million in surgery costs. Imagine the savings that drug made to medical costs in Ontario.

The scientific community has responded. Michel Bergeron, Director of the Department of Physiology at the University of Montreal, and others have said:

> We are in full support of the amendments that are in front of the House to support pharmaceutical discoveries.

A professor in the Faculty of Pharmaceutical Science at the University of British Columbia has said:

> You can't have good quality medical care if you don't have good research in the country. These things are tied together.

The Chairman of the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Toronto has said:

> Many critics overlook the fact that the $3 billion in research to be spent by Canada's pharmaceutical industry will lead to new and improved treatments, eliminating or reducing the need for surgery and hospitalization.

The scientific community supports this Bill. Most members of the Liberal Party who think support it as well.

Now members of the New Democratic Party have decided to launch a fund-raising campaign, the Hon. Member for Oshawa's (Mr. Broadbent) campaign for fair drug prices. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you received one of those little cards, but some of the people on my executive in Mississauga received them. They asked me if it could be true that this man wants them to send money so that he could support the downfall of the pharmaceutical industry, and they laughed at him. Believe me, the campaign did not take off the way he thought it would.

I received a copy of a letter that was sent to the Hon. Member for Oshawa by a constituent of mine. I know my constituent would not mind if I quoted from this letter. It was sent to many places including The Toronto Star, The Globe and Mail, and the Consumers' Association. My constituent had this to say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa:

> How dare you misrepresent the drug prices issue to Canadians? As a pharmacologist who understands how new drugs are researched and developed, I am outraged that you should effectively lie to Canadians by omitting any mention in your recent unsolicited letter of the cost and value of drug research for the health of Canadians.
>
> Although basic medical research is also done in universities, it is the "multinational" research-based pharmaceutical companies who spend the money to research, develop and introduce new drug treatments of disease for the sick and needy of all nationalities.
>
> If the costs of new drug development cannot be recovered by the innovative pharmaceutical industry before their profits are siphoned off by copy-cats with no research overheads, then obviously, new drug development becomes uneconomic and will be phased out.
>
> Who will suffer then, Ed Broadbent? Those with cancer, AIDS, muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, Alzheimer's disease, autoimmune diseases, viral and parasitic diseases, severe skin diseases, etc., in fact, those whose conditions would have been treatable if research had remained a valued and economically feasible human endeavour. The situation you would have us support denies drug developers the right to expect to recover their investments of $100 million and ten years of research for each new medicine they introduce.
>
> Canadians support the concept of improvements in health care, as demonstrated by their generosity in giving to the Cancer Society, Muscular Dystrophy Association, Heart Foundation, etc. University researchers are beneficiaries of these donations, but only Ed Broadbent stands to benefit from the diversion of discretionary money to the "Fund for Fair Drug Prices". Canadians stand to lose out in the long run, both in a financial and in a humane sense, because the development of new drug treatments promises the most economical (and sometimes the only) means of treating these difficult diseases.
>
> I am tired of "positions" and half-fact/half-fiction masquerading as truth when presented to the Canadian public. The truth is not a matter of opinion, but of established facts. When facts are omitted from discussion in order to make opinions more tenable, then the New Democratic Party perpetrates a dastardly and callous lie upon the public.

I want you to listen to this, Mr. Speaker:

> I have voted NDP in the past. I guarantee it won't happen again,—

Praise the Lord, someone has seen the light. He said that only because any Party that takes the position on the Patent Act adopted by the NDP is fundamentally opposed to research and development in health care and to all that has motivated this man in his 22 years of study of drug treatment of disease.

• (1720)

We have put in place a Drug Prices Review Board chaired by Dr. Harry Eastman. He is a respected gentleman and has guaranteed a lot of safeguards to ensure there will be no increase in drug prices.

Does the board have any teeth? I can tell you it does. It will have the authority to review all prescription drug prices so as to ensure that those prices are fair after taking into account the Consumer Price Index, the price of that drug in other countries, the direct production and marketing cost of the drug, along with any other factor the board considers relevant. If the board finds the price of a particular drug excessive it can set a price ceiling thereby lowering the price. If a company persists in selling above that price ceiling then the board can order its period of patent protection to be revoked, not just on the product in question but on all of its patented drugs. The board has a very strong case to put before the Canadian public.

We must also remember that for the first time there is a federal agency, and I mentioned this before, with provincial participation which can review the 93 per cent of drug prices not subject to generic competition. Up until now they have not been subject to any kind of downward price pressure.

This is a good Bill. It does a lot of things. It will bring in new research and development. Three thousand new jobs will be created in Canada over the next 10 years. About $850 million in new research and plant expansion projects have already been announced. Of the 3,000 new jobs, over half will be for university-trained people. We are going to end the brain drain. We will have increased innovation.

This Bill will improve the quality of Canadian health care, which is very important. More drug research in Canada will result in new and improved treatments for medical problems and better over-all health care. Some new drugs eliminate the need for hospitalization, and I mentioned the drug produced by Smith Kline French in my riding. Surgery as well as harmful side effects will be reduced and consumers will not only benefit from the earlier introduction of drugs into Canada but there will also be the further saving from reduced hospitalization.

We will also get strengthened generic competition. I honestly believe that the generics are not going to suffer from this situation. We know that when drugs are introduced on the market in Canada the generic companies do not rush to copy every one. As a matter of fact, over the past seven years, of 145 drugs introduced in Canada, one was copied. Application has been made to introduce 41 new drugs on the market. Forty will be brought on in the next four years and one in the next five years. These drugs will assist in fighting disease. We look forward to those generic drugs coming on the market. In the past it has taken 9.9 years for a drug to come on the market. Why should the manufacturer not have 10 years' patent protection?

Aside from strengthened generic competition we will have stronger consumer protection, and that is very important. Bill C-22 does that by ensuring that all drug prices are reviewed. That is all drug prices, not only those for which there is generic competition. If this new policy had been in effect since 1969 it could have saved consumers between $226 million and $366 million by 1983. Those savings would have resulted from both the impact of modified compulsory licensing and the effect of the review board in moderating prices. Those savings compare more than favourably with the $211 million in savings estimated by Dr. Eastman in his report. Moreover, the estimated savings under the existing system do not reflect the addition of $70 million in research funds which would have been invested under Bill C-22.

The opposition Parties are going to have to learn sooner or later that they are here to oppose bad legislation, and rightly so. I respect them for that. If bad legislation is brought in I will assist them in opposing it. However, I will never assist them in opposing good legislation just for the want of opposing something. The NDP and the Liberals have found that their campaign has fizzled. I mean fizzled. People in Canada are ready to give pharmaceutical companies the rights they deserve in order to manufacture drugs and protect Canadian lives. I urge everyone to stand with me half an hour from now and support Bill C-22.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I was rather interested in the speech by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nickerson: You should be, he knows what he is talking about.

Mr. Young: I am not sure about that.

Mr. Siddon: I think he does.

Mr. Young: The Canadian people will make that judgment come the next election.

Mr. Siddon: They sure will.

Mr. Young: I can tell all those Tories who want to say a few words while I am speaking that even under the most generous conditions, even under the most optimistic projections, at least 100 of them are not coming back here after the next election.

Mr. Siddon: Do you want to make a small wager on that?

Mr. Young: I am being extremely charitable in making that prediction.

Mr. Siddon: You are going to eat those words, Neil.

Mr. Young: At a very minimum, 100 Tories are not coming back. I want them to think about that when they are leaping up and down supporting measures which are clearly seen by the Canadian public as not being in their best interest.

In the few remarks I want to make about Bill C-22 I think it is worth examining how that Bill came before this House for debate. It came about in a very unusual way. Numerous studies have been done over the past number of years since 1969, and prior thereto, into the pharmaceutical industry in Canada and indeed in other countries around the world. The latest study that was completed by the now famous Dr. Eastman was recognized as the most exhaustive study that has ever been completed not only on the pharmaceutical industry in Canada but elsewhere. Dr. Eastman concluded in his report that Canada's policy that was adopted in 1969 to amend the Patent Act as far as pharmaceutical products are concerned had been a good policy for Canada and certainly for Canadians. He estimated that in 1983 alone Canadian consumers saved $211 million on drug prices as a result of the present policy, which the Government now wants to change.

• (1730)

I think we all must recognize why Professor Eastman was asked to examine Canada's policy and, indeed, why seven commissions prior to Doctor Eastman's inquiry were formed to look into the pharmaceutical industry. Anyone who wants to be open-minded and look at history will discover that Canada has this present policy because prior to 1969 Canadians were paying among the highest drug prices in the world. Governments commissioned these studies to discover why Canada, of all countries, was paying the highest prices in the world for pharmaceutical products.

Those studies came to certain conclusions. The first was that the pharmaceutical industry, which was primarily controlled by multinational corporations, enjoyed a monopoly in price setting on drug products. All of those studies concluded that the only real answer was to remove patent protection and eliminate that monopoly practice from pharmaceutical products, and inject some kind of competition into that industry. Therefore, they recommended to Governments that patent protection be removed and that some compensation should be paid to the pharmaceutical corporations for their cost of research and development.

The conclusion of all those studies was that the pharmaceutical industries had spent a maximum of 4 per cent of total sales on research and development and therefore, if a generic company wished to copy a brand name product it would be required to compensate the multinational corporation with a 4 per cent royalty for making use of that product.

When government Members describe Canadian generic drug manufacturers as a bunch of thieves, as was suggested by one government Member, they should also be honest and point out that those multinationals are being adequately compensated for the use of their product.

All of those commissions concluded that Canada's present policy is a good one for Canada and Canadians. In fact, the House will be interested to know that nearly every other country in the western world has looked at Canada's present policy and found it to be extremely attractive from the point of view of allowing their consumers to reap an equal benefit to those that Canadians now enjoy. Furthermore, during the U.S. Senate hearings in the last several weeks, I believe, a number of witnesses from the United States appeared before that committee and made the very argument that the United States Government should copy Canada's policy for the benefit of U.S. consumers.

I suspect that Canada is changing this policy not because of any pressure from within but primarily because of external pressures placed upon the Canadian Government. In fact, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) admitted as much already, and blamed his European counterparts for placing that pressure on Canada to amend the Patent Act. There is, however, increasing evidence that the pressure is primarily coming from the United States Government, through U.S.-based pharmaceutical corporations, in the free trade negotiations that are currently taking place between the United States and Canadian Governments.

There is ample evidence to indicate that the purpose of changing our policy is not to benefit Canadians but to benefit primarily U.S.-based multinational pharmaceutical manufacturers. I also suspect that a similar reason that pressure is being applied in Canada is that the multinationals recognize that Canada's policy is attractive to other countries and have decided to put the fight on in Canada before these other countries attempt to adopt our policy.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has compared a drug product to that of a widget, or the author of a book. He asks: "How would you like to invent or produce a widget and find someone the next day copying that widget, producing it under another name, and reaping the benefits from that invention?" I reject that absolutely. First, we know that it cannot possibly happen because copyright laws are quite different from Canada's patent policy.

Second, I totally reject the argument that we can compare health products to widgets. A person who requires medication does not have a choice of medication because the doctor makes that decision.

I also argue that pharmaceutical products and their affordability are an integral part of our health care system. We cannot compare people's health and their ability to receive affordable medication with that of manufacturing a widget, as the Minister likes to argue.

The Government makes another argument which is not too convincing but helps to confuse the debate. It suggests that the NDP should not be so concerned because if this policy is adopted it will not increase prices. However, when the Government introduced this legislation it also stated that it would compensate provincial Governments by some $100 million a year for the next four years for any increase in drug costs that they may have to carry under the various drug plans they have for senior citizens, those on welfare and those who cannot afford to purchase their own medication. If this legislation will not result in increased costs, why does the Government propose to provide the provinces to the tune of $400 million over the next four years to compensate for additional costs? That defies logic.

The fact is that this legislation will increase costs. Why do the multinationals want that kind of freedom in the marketplace if it is not to increase profits? If it is to increase profits, we can be sure that the cost of pharmaceutical products in this country will increase as well.

• (1740)

The other part of the argument the Minister makes is that drug prices will not increase, but if they do increase, Canadian taxpayers should not be too concerned because seniors are covered under most provincial drug plans and the disabled receive assistance under the drug plans as well as, in many cases, single-parent families. Where does the Minister think those Governments receive the funds from? They receive the money through taxes. Someone pays the provincial and federal Governments. They do not go to the bank and say: "Give me a chunk of money". Taxpayers will pay for these increased costs if, indeed, provincial Governments decide that this is the way to go to cover the additional cost to their Treasuries. A number of Governments have already sharpened their pencils. They have come to the same conclusion as we have that there certainly will be higher drug costs in the future.

Mr. McDermid: Crystal ball gazing.

Mr. Young: No, I do not think it is crystal ball gazing because the Minister himself has said that it will cost $400 million over the next four years to provincial Treasuries, and that is why he is proposing to transfer $400 million in additional compensation to the provinces to cover those increased drug costs. The Government has recognized the possibility of drug price increases, and that is why it proposed this additional compensation to the provinces. The provinces have also sharpened their pencils because the $400 million will not be nearly sufficient to cover their additional costs.

What are the provincial Governments going to do? They receive their revenues from the same place as the federal Government, and that is, from the taxpayers. They are going to have to take a look at their drug plans, and those provinces which provide free drug coverage, such as Ontario, will have to decide whether they can continue with those programs. If it is decided to continue with the programs, how are they going to be funded? Will the provinces go back to the taxpayers and increase provincial taxes? If they decide that this would not be a politically astute thing to do, they may decide, since it has become too costly, to charge a deductible for that program. In other words seniors or disabled individuals may have to pay the first $100, $200, $300, $400 or $500 of drug costs before the provincial plan kicks in. The provinces may decide, rather than impose a deductible, to cut back on the program in some other way. The provincial Governments will not have any choice. They will have to come up with the funds for those plans which are fully paid for.

If the provinces do not want to go in either of those two directions, they could take a look at other social programs they provide and cut back on those in order to cover the drug plans. One way or another, provincial taxpayers are going to pay through the nose as a result of Bill C-22.

The previous speaker said the New Democratic Party has been distorting the facts during this debate. He said that somehow or other the New Democratic Party is the villain in this piece rather than the Government. I have a great deal of respect for some of my friends opposite and I am sure they recognize, as I do, that in the heat of debate very often some Members—not all of them, certainly not the Members in the House at the present time—become strangers to the truth. However, just to satisfy those people who may be listening to this debate that indeed the New Democratic Party has not been distorting the facts, I thought I would indicate what a whole number of obviously knowledgeable people across the country are saying about the Government's proposed legislation.

Hon. Members will not be surprised to learn that the Toronto Star consistently opposes what the Government has been doing primarily based on the arguments we have been presenting. One of the headlines of an article on February 19 of this year reads: "Why the drug patent legislation is all wrong". The article goes on to give a very detailed analysis of the legislation and points out quite clearly why this legislation should not be supported either by Members of this House or by the Canadian public.

The Financial Post, which one could hardly call a socialist newspaper, on December 15, 1986, carried a headline which read: "Catch-22 triples in Tory drug Bill".

I will not quote the whole article but it makes a couple of points in refuting the arguments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The article reads, and I quote:

> First, the Minister argues that giving firms the exclusive right to market new drugs for 10 years won't raise the prices of such drugs. But the reason you want the patent in the first place is to give the firm a monopoly so it can charge a monopoly price and make what may look like a monopoly profit, but is really (at least in part) a return to its R and D investment. If prices aren't going to rise, the patent has no value. So why give it?

That is the first Catch-22. The article goes on to say, and I quote:

> Then the Minister argues that under the current system of compulsory licensing, generic firms take 10 years on average to bring their copies of new pharmaceuticals on to the market. But if inventors already have 10 years of effective protection, why do we need a system of 10 year patents?

It terms this as "Catch-44". The articles continues:

> Finally, the Government wants to establish a drug prices review board to ensure that abuses do not take place. But if we want monopoly prices in the first 10 years after a drug's invention (so invention will be encouraged), and if competition from the generics will be available after that, why do we need such a board?

And it terms that "Catch-66". My time has almost expired but I could quote The Globe and Mail whose headline reads: "Patent change may not mean better drugs". I could quote nearly every editorial from any newspaper across this country which has come out in opposition to what the Government is proposing in this legislation.

In conclusion, may I say that while I have heard speakers from the government side urge Members of the House to support this legislation when it comes to its final vote tonight at six o'clock, I will make the opposite plea. If those 100 Tories about whom I spoke about earlier, who are facing certain defeat in the next election, want to save their hides, they should vote against this legislation.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with respect to House Business, I would like to indicate to the House that tomorrow will be designated as an allotted Opposition Day, as will Friday.

On Monday we will be debating a resolution having to do with the Constitutional Accord which was agreed to by First Ministers on April 30 which I filed with the Clerk, namely:

> That this House endorses the Meech Lake statement of principles approved by all First Ministers, April 30, 1987 as a basis for Quebec's participation as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution, and as a basis for the establishment, in a spirit of equality and fairness, of a process for considering further constitutional reforms.

• (1750)

The motion will be in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

On Monday I will be presenting an appropriate order outlining the hours of sitting and the parameters defining the debate. Hopefully, notwithstanding the present position of the opposition Parties, which have expressed a desire not to vote on this particular issue, over the course of the weekend they may reflect on this very important issue. During the course of the debate they may be of a disposition to reconsider their positions. I think it is important to do this in order to have a clear reflection of where the House stands on this very important issue. I think it is important to have a clear expression of opinion by Parliament on this very important issue. I say that only in the manner of making a suggestion. We have had some discussions. There has not been agreement reached with respect to voting on this issue. However, hopefully, members of the Opposition will change their minds as the course of the debate proceeds.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Notwithstanding the points made by the Government House Leader, at the moment are we to proceed with the understanding that an order will be brought in on Monday and for the moment that order will state that we will debate this important item during the day and that if there are speakers still interested in speaking at six o'clock the understanding is that the debate will cease at that time, unless there is some further change in the understanding that the House Leaders have between now and then? Is it the understanding, then, that the debate will cease at 6 p.m. on Monday?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is my understanding.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. We will, of course, have to look at the order. We have already said to the Government House Leader that there are many people on our side of the House who may want to express their views. I cannot say that all those who want to express their views will be able to do so in the ordinary hours of sitting.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to engage in negotiations on the floor of the House. However, I think that if that is a preoccupation of my friend, as always, we are willing to accommodate and provide opportunity for debate. In the interest of being accommodating, those are matters that we might be able to discuss on Monday either prior to or even after the order is submitted.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend a couple of questions with respect to the campaign for fair drug prices, a campaign of the New Democratic Party which went out across almost all of the land. First, I want to comment on a three-page letter signed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party which does not mention one word with respect to research and the importance of it or even the lack of research in Canada.

The New Democratic Party is always talking about honesty and openness and how frank it is with the Canadian people. Could the Hon. Member answer these questions? How much money has been raised on this campaign? How much money was spent to promote the campaign? What has the New Democratic Party done with the money that it raised? Has it gone to promote just the New Democratic Party? How is this money to be spent? Even better, will the New Democratic Party table the books with respect to this campaign which will show how well it did in raising this money?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the same difficulty, I suppose, that some cabinet Ministers find themselves in when they are asked questions on how their Party formulates things or how their caucus does things. Quite frankly, I do not have answers to these questions because I was not involved in that part of the campaign. As the Hon. Member knows, my role in our fight against this legislation was to go out into the country to meet with senior citizens' groups, with members of disabled organizations and disabled people. I went to the Atlantic provinces, for example, and had an excellent meeting with all types of service organizations—

Mr. Horner: And misled them!

Mr. Young: I had an excellent reception in Edmonton, Alberta, and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba—all over the place. I realize that the Hon. Member asks me these questions honestly and that he expects frank answers. All I can suggest to him is that I do not have the information about which he asks, but I would be pleased to try to find it out for him and to provide it to him. I am sure he would be quite interested, as I would, with respect to how effective the campaign was.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member from Mississauga interject the comment that when my friend, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), was travelling across the country and talking to groups he misled them. I note that the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops and organizations such as the Consumers' Association of Canada opposed this Bill when it was first introduced and have opposed it since. Will the Hon. Member for Beaches tell us whether he believes that we are so efficient and so effective that we could mislead the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops and organizations such as the Consumers' Association of Canada?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no hesitation in assuring you and the House that, first, it was neither the Official Opposition nor the New Democratic Party which took off in opposition to this legislation. Senior citizens' organizations in the country were way ahead of the political Parties in terms of expressing their opposition to this legislation. It was they who asked me to sit down with them last July. I will tell Hon. Members that I met with them downstairs in this very same building at their request. As a result of meeting with senior citizens' groups, consumer groups, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and others the real concern was first raised with us. It was we in our role as an opposition Party who lent assistance to their fight against this legislation.

I have no hesitation in saying that I am quite proud of the role this Party has taken and the lead given to opposing this legislation in the House of Commons. I only wish that we had another six months in which to continue our opposition. Unfortunately, the Government decided to close off debate on this legislation and we are now faced with a vote in about nine more minutes, something which I consider to be quite unfortunate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, throughout the debate on this legislation, the Hon. Member has accused the Government of taking sides with the multinationals. I want to ask the Hon. Member what he thinks of the comments made in the course of this debate by eminent persons across Canada, and I would like to name a few from Quebec, because they are more familiar to me. For instance, Dr. Michel Chrétien, Director of the Montreal Clinical Research Institute, Dr. Yves Morin, the famous cardiologist, Mr. Jacques Gagné of the University of Montreal, and all the people who appeared before the Committee, begging the Government to expedite the legislation because no more research was being done in Quebec and all the young scientists and academics were going to the United States or elsewhere. How does he reconcile his position with that of the people I just mentioned, whose purpose in life is not to make money but to improve the health of their fellow citizens?

• (1800)

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to answer that because I also met with those individuals. I do not mind telling you exactly what I told them. I could understand their desire to accept any money that they could find for research because of the way in which the Government had cut back on the amount of moneys targeted for research across the country. By the way, those people were a minority. A large percentage of the people in research fields and universities recognize exactly what the Government is doing and certainly do not support it.

I told them that if they think the answers to their problems in research and development are to be found in this legislation, they are being extremely naive, even though I understand why they could be attracted to the position which they finally took. On close examination of the press releases put out by drug companies promising all kinds of additional expenditures for research and development, if this legislation is passed, you will find that they were not talking about additional moneys for research and development but for clinical research. Anyone who has even a shallow understanding of the field knows there is a vast difference between clinical research and research and development.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I see that it is shortly after six o'clock and I do not have much time for debate. This debate has gone on for quite some time. I heard the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) saying that debate had been closed off. This legislation had 82 hours of consideration in committee before which 46 groups or 120 individuals appeared. One hundred and forty written briefs were received, and by the time I finish speaking there will have been 28 hours of debate in the House. I think that probably all of the salient points will have been touched upon by that time. By this time literally hundreds of points have probably been regurgitated too many times.

I am interested in speaking on this subject because I come from the City of Saskatoon which is unlike the Cities of Montreal and Toronto where the bulk of this research will probably take place. However, Saskatoon has a major university, a major private sector in research and development, and a number of federal and provincial government laboratories. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that people in the university community are very interested in, perhaps for the first time in their lives, working somewhere in Canada at least, if not in western Canada, in research after having received a graduate degree from the university in Saskatoon.

I took the time to meet with the faculty and graduate students at the College of Pharmacy of the University of Saskatchewan about six weeks ago. They were elated that there would be a chance to do something right here in Canada with regard to research. Believe it or not, there are already two companies which are potentially interested in locating in little old Saskatoon which has a population of 180,000, if this legislation passes. That is why I am interested in this legislation.

We all remember a lady by the name of Judy Erola who was in this House in the previous administration. She was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and commissioned Professor Harry Eastman to do a study on the pharmaceutical industry. I read with interest a letter that Judy Erola wrote to the Winnipeg Free Press on April 22. She said: "I believe that many people have fundamentally misinterpreted this Bill".

I appreciate that it is the job of the Opposition to oppose certain pieces of legislation. However, when incorrect or slanted information is going to the public and is picked up by the media, it does not take very long to be misinterpreted right across the country. I believe that is precisely the reason so many people are scared to death of this legislation. They are only looking at the nickels and dimes rather than at the benefits. They are not considering the Drug Prices Review Board which will review 100 per cent of the drugs in the country for the first time in the history of Canada. That is what this legislation is all about. It is not only about research and development, although I think that is very important. We must think about consumers.

A poll was done by Decima Research for the pharmaceutical industry. Twelve hundred people were polled between February 26 and March 4, 1987. The results show that 65 per cent of the people in Canada thought this legislation was good after hearing the main arguments for and against it. It is also interesting to note that 82 per cent of the people polled would support the Bill if the Government ensured that drug price increases would be no greater than the increase in the rate of inflation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Drug Prices Review Board will report to Parliament annually. There will be a policy review every four years and a parliamentary review after 10 years. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is consumer protection built into this legislation.

I would like to conclude by saying that I appreciated having these eight minutes to speak on this very important piece of legislation. As the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Judy Erola, said, if you think about it, Bill C-22 is better protection for all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! It being 6.08 p.m., pursuant to order made Wednesday, April 15, 1987, in accordance with Standing Order 117, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of this Bill.

[English]

Accordingly the question is as follows: Mr. Andre moved that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be now read the third time and passed.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre) which was agreed to on the following division:

• (1810)

(Division No. 129)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Beatty
Bertrand
Binns
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Browes
Caldwell
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clifford Clinch
Coates
Cochrane
Collins
Comeau
Corbett
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Desrosiers
Dick Domm
Dorin
Duplessis
Edwards
Epp (Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Friesen
Gagnon
Gass
Gérin
Girard
Graham
Gustafson
Halliday
Hamilton
Hardey
Hawkes
Hees
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Kelleher
Kempling
Kindy
King
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
Mailly
Malone
Marin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCrossan
McCuish
McDermid
McInnes
McKinnon
McKnight
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Pennock
Peterson
Pietz
Plamondon
Plourde
Ravis
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St. Germain
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scowen
Siddon
Stackhouse
Stevens
Stewart
Taylor
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Tupper
Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)
Valcourt
Warner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Wise
Witer—117

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Angus
Axworthy
Benjamin
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Caccia
Cassidy
de Corneille
de Jong
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Henderson
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Kaplan
Keeper
Langdon
Lapierre
Manly
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nystrom
Orlikow
Ouellet
Parry
Penner
Prud'homme
Riis
Robinson
Rodriguez
Rompkey
Skelly
Toupin
Young —40

• (1830)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.34 p.m., this House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.34 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 7, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-1534, 332-1540 to 332-1542 inclusive, 332-1560, 332-1561, 332-1563, 332-1567, 332-1569, 332-1570, 332-1572, 332-1624, 332-1654, 332-1670, 332-1695, 332-1702, 332-1709 to 332-1711 inclusive, 332-1724 to 332-1726 inclusive, 332-1730, 332-1732, 332-1754 and 332-1947.

* * *

MANAGEMENT AND MEMBERS' SERVICES

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to inform you that the Committee on Management and Members' Services, of which I am chairman, had the privilege of your presence yesterday.

It was indeed a pleasure to have you with us and to be able to ask you a number of questions, and we are happy to say that the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services adopted your items with very little debate, which reflects most honourably on you, Mr. Speaker, and I said that I would take advantage of every opportunity to express publicly our feelings of cordial friendship.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you very much.

[Editor's Note: For above report see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadian citizens from Almonte, Arnprior, Renfrew, Pakenham, Smiths Falls, Lanark, Woodlawn, Dunrobin and Constance Bay, concerning a grievance by Fred Turner of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, against the Government of Canada whereby Mr. Turner lost his authority to operate Turnair because of a minor licence violation. Widespread public attention has been drawn to this case of injustice. The petitioners therefore ask for and seek an independent arbitrator to be assigned to this matter to investigate the details of the case, to review and negotiate the offer from the federal Government with Fred Turner in order to establish an equitable settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present two petitions, the first signed by Canadians from Nepean, Kanata and the City of Ottawa, and the second signed by citizens of Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories, in which they humbly show that the operating records of an airline known as Turnair were seized by the Canadian Transport Commission as evidence in a prosecution of another unlicensed airline and Mr. Turner was a key witness and that the Government cancelled his operating authority for a minor licence violation and the CTC already had the information it needed.

Therefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House to seek that an independent arbitrator be assigned to this matter to investigate the details of the case and to review and negotiate the offer from the federal Government with Fred Turner in order to reach an equitable settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss. The petitioners humbly pray that in the name of natural justice and the equitable treatment of Canadian citizens this matter be dealt with forthwith by the Government.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF TARGET RANGE—SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling several petitions signed by more than 1,000 residents of the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area.

Your petitioners are opposed to the establishment of a target range in their region or anywhere else. They want the money to be invested locally in genuine development programs including job creation, education, health, social services and tourism. Mr. Speaker, they call upon Parliament to oppose the establishment of a target range for CF-18 fighters in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area.

• (1110)

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of my constituency of Burnaby, as well as residents of New Westminster, Coquitlam and Vancouver. These residents call upon the Government even at this late date to recognize that its proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They hope that even though Bill C-22 has passed third reading the Government might finally come to its senses and withdraw these proposals which will have such a devastating impact on seniors, the poor and taxpayers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It just struck me that in late March I raised a point of order with respect to the presentation of petitions concerning Bills which were currently before the House. Today, we have had a host of petitions on Bills which have cleared all three stages of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: They are still before Parliament.

Mr. Lewis: I wonder when we might receive Your Honour's decision with respect to my point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The petition which I am tabling on behalf of these residents, who are so concerned about these proposals, calls upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices. I do not sit in the Senate, and neither does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. In fact, I never want to sit in the Senate. The only opportunity I have to present these petitions which call upon Parliament to reject these proposals is here in this Chamber. I hope that the Government will recognize that Parliament is made up of more than just this House, at least until the Senate is abolished. As long as that is the case, it is entirely in order to call upon Parliament to reject these proposals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Surely, the right of petition, which goes back to 1066, remains inviolable for citizens of Canada. It is a long-standing practice of this House that even though legislation has been passed citizens may still petition Parliament to change it or to repeal it. That has always been the case. These specious points of order of the Parliamentary Secretary are made in order for him to get up, to cry and to complain about something that is a fundamental right of every citizen of Canada and a duty, honour and responsibility of Members of Parliament to present.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is not surprising that the Parliamentary Secretary would rise once again to attempt to restrict discussion on this Bill. I say that because the Government introduced closure at second reading. It introduced closure at committee stage and at report stage. It even introduced closure at third reading. It seems to be part of the same process—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much interrupting the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). His point, of course, is a vigorous one and of much interest to the House, but he is straying from the point of order.

Perhaps I can assist the House by indicating to the Parliamentary Secretary and to all Hon. Members that I will be returning to the Chamber with a ruling on Tuesday.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition dated April 19, 1987—

Mr. Fennell: Why did it take so long to get it here?

Mr. Riis: That is really just a few days ago. The petitioners were anticipating that the Government would not impose closure on the last stage of the debate of Bill C-22. They, too, call upon the Government to recognize that the changes it has made to the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices severely. They will restrict the ability of average Canadian consumers to buy necessary prescription drugs. Unfortunately, as of last night, it is too late, but the petitioners are asking the Government to reject these proposals in the best interests of Canadian prescription drug purchasers.

IMMIGRATION POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty today to present four petitions on behalf of residents of Canada. I do not necessarily support these petitions personally—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: —but the citizens involved are entitled to have their positions presented to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: The first petition urges Parliament to stop all immigration into the country until unemployment has fallen below 250,000; that refugees from El Salvador, Chile and Guatemala be directed to countries of their political persuasions; and that penalties be implemented to deter illegals from entering Canada.

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES IN COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the second petition urges Parliament to demand an end to human rights abuses in Commonwealth countries, especially Tanzania, Zambia, Guyana and Zimbabwe; to press for early elections in those countries that are not democracies; and especially to counsel Zimbabwe that the move to a one-Party state will result in cancellation of all Canadian aid.

CENSORSHIP BY CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the third petition urges Parliament to repeal those sections of the Customs Tariff Act which permit customs officials to act as censors over films, books, magazines or tapes imported by adult Canadians.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON SOVIET ESPIONAGE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the fourth petition urges Parliament to establish a royal commission to investigate the E. Herbert Norman case; to investigate Soviet penetration of Government in Canada; and to report these findings in a full and open manner to the Canadian people.

MAINTENANCE OF POSTAL SERVICES IN WOODLANDS AND LAKE FRANCIS AREA

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of honour this morning to present a petition on behalf of 100 constituents of my riding representing the areas of Woodlands and Lake Francis. They humbly petition the House to protect the postal service in their town. They ask the Government to allow the Post Office to remain open.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition signed by well over 500 people from Kelowna and the surrounding area. It is a petition which I personally support. The petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to pass Motion M-37 which would allow unborn infants to be protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

MEASURE TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-56, an Act to amend certain Acts relating to financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1120)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the House Leaders and the Bill which has just been introduced and read the first time is really a combination of Bill C-8 and Bill C-9, which are presently on the Order Paper. I think you will find that the House would consent to discharging Bill C-8 and Bill C-9 from the Order Paper, under those circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council have the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Bills C-8 and C-9?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill S-6, (from the Senate) to amend the Food and Drugs Act, be read the first time.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 111.

[Text]

ASSISTANCE TO NEW BRUNSWICK APPLE PRODUCERS

Question No. 111—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1986 to date, has any money been paid to apple producers in New Brunswick for crop assistance and, if so, how much?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, $49,158.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—YOUTH—EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion before us concerns one of the most important, if not the most important, groups in our society today.

Let me begin by reading from the report of the Senate committee chaired by the Hon. Jacques Hébert who is well known in this Parliament and in the country for his concern for young people. The report of the Senate states:

The public hearings proved to be a disturbing experience for the committee members, as we were not only confronted with distressing facts and statistics, but also actually met the young Canadians grappling with complicated problems. It would not be an exaggeration to say that by the time the hearings ended, the attitudes of the Committee members had changed. We had realized that the situation for a great number of young people is intolerable and that we must convince the public of this.

Hence, this motion today. Sometimes we talk blithely about young people, about our children and our grandchildren.

Obviously there is an intrinsic worth for the young people in our society. We love them because they are ours and we want to see them have the best possible world.

However, another point must be made. It is that at this stage of Canada's life they have more than simply an intrinsic value to us as young people because Canada is moving from one kind of society to another. With the exception of parts of Ontario and Quebec, Canada has been a resource-based society. We have been harvesting the sea, harvesting the forests and the minerals from our soils, and transporting them sometimes in a raw state and sometimes in a manufactured state.

However, the day when Canada can depend on shipping out raw resources is fast coming to an end. The easy times are over for us in Canada and the tough times are ahead.

We are moving from a resource-based and manufacturing economy to an information economy and an information age in which we will have to depend more than ever on our young people.

While they have an intrinsic value for us, in the information economy toward which we are moving they will be much more important to us in the future.

Let us consider the statistics arising from the Senate report and other research into the state of young people in this country today. Young people are important to the future of Canada, yet 48 per cent of single people under the age of 25 in Canada today live below the poverty line. There are 100,000 young people with children who are living below the poverty line.

Youth unemployment in my Province of Newfoundland is 32 per cent; in Nova Scotia it is 23 per cent; in British Columbia it is 23 per cent; and the unemployment rate for young people in Alberta is 2.5 times what it was in 1980. Last year in Canada only 170,000 students could find summer jobs.

In order to go beyond those statistics and understand the distress that exists with our young people, one only need look at the enormous jump in suicides and attempted suicides among young people in the past number of years to realize that this problem is serious. In 1961, for example, the suicide rate among males between the ages of 20 and 24 was 9 per 100,000. In 1985, it was 30 per 100,000, which is more than three times the level of 1961.

I do not lay these statistics on the table as scare tactics or for rhetorical purposes, but to illustrate graphically that this problem is serious. It requires serious solutions, but what has been done?

It is true that all of this cannot be blamed on the present Government because no one is naive enough to think that this suddenly began in 1984. Certainly, however, the Government has a responsibility to bring in programs that will address this situation. Let us consider what the Government has done. Student debt loads from Newfoundland to British Columbia range from $14,000 to $24,000 upon graduation. Canadian students who depend upon the Canada Student Loans Program and the various provincial loan programs which complement it have debt loads of between $14,000 and $20,000 when they graduate. These young people have less ability to find jobs. They are growing in numbers and experiencing the kind of despair which I just described. It is completely unacceptable.

• (1130)

I say to the Government that the first thing we need is a complete overhaul of the Canada Student Loans Program. Instead of loading a debt burden upon the present generation, who cannot and should not have to bear the burden, we should be moving toward a bursary program. We should be investing in young people instead of loading debt upon their shoulders. We should be injecting money into the system so that they can make a contribution.

Student access is being limited in our universities. We are in danger of becoming a society which offers education to an elite group. There are more and more students in low income brackets who cannot afford and therefore do not have access to colleges and universities. There is a great danger in Canada today that we are offering the services of those institutions only to the elite.

What we have seen consistently over the past few years, in particular, has been a retrenchment in the funds offered for the support of universities and colleges. I am talking particularly about the Established Programs Financing which the Government—and we must lay it directly at its door—has deliberately and knowingly cut back.

I should like to refer to the background of this matter. There was to have been an 8 per cent increase in Established Programs Financing to the provinces. It was an agreement between the federal Government and the provincial Governments. The agreement was unilaterally abrogated by the Government of Canada. Instead, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that there would be an increase of only 6 per cent.

What did it mean? It meant that somehow the provinces had to come up with the shortfall from their own funds. Can one imagine the Province of Newfoundland—and the Premier himself has admitted that it is on the verge of bankruptcy—finding close to an extra $200 million out of its own pocket? Can one imagine it digging down deep into its pocket to find money by 1990 which it does not have in order to make up for the shortfall in Established Programs Financing?

This means that the universities get less money and that post-secondary institutions have less money with which to operate. As a result, what do they do? The only thing available to them is tuition fees. Thus they start raising tuition fees to try to carry on their programs.

What does that mean? It means that only those people who can afford to pay get in. This is what I mean by saying that the policies of the Government are forcing upon the universities and colleges a process whereby we in Canada are becoming a group which offers education only to the elite.

Student access has a second difficulty. The students may try to find some other way of supplementing their income to help put themselves through university. One way of doing it of course is by having a job in the summer-time. However, fewer and fewer students are able to find summer jobs. This is in addition to their Canada student loans, which amount to an unbearable debt load, the tuition they are required to pay and inadequate housing.

We found that all across the country too few students had access to adequate housing, again because the universities and colleges did not have the budgets and no one else was building that housing.

Students, in their attempt to attain their own resources, always depend upon summer jobs. However, what has happened to summer jobs? They have been cut back.

Last year there were adequate funds under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, but this year there has been a 15 per cent decrease. The Government of Canada says that that is mainly because it cut out the census. However, it does not matter from where the money comes or to what the money is applied. A job is a job is a job. If we take away $30 million or 15 per cent from last year's program, it means that many fewer young people in Canada have access to summer jobs. I do not care whether it was for the census or whatever; the fact is that less money is available for young people to find summer jobs this year than there was last year, and the Government must answer for it.

The change in the Canadian Jobs Strategy has also created difficulties for community colleges. The private sector is now given priority in the use of funds under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Across the country from Newfoundland to British Columbia community colleges and CEGEPs have less funds available to them now than they had in the past. For example, we were told by Algonquin College in Ottawa that it received about 50 per cent of the funds than it received last year. Why is this? It is because funds were offered to the private sector.

What did the private sector do? It said that it did not want to do training because it was not very good at it, and returned the funds. As far as I know, many of them were unused. The story we heard from institutions such as Algonquin and the British Columbia Institute of Technology was that they had available to them a little more than 50 per cent of what they had in the past, because of the emphasis on the private sector under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. This is something which the Government must address if it is to provide proper consideration for the funding of our post-secondary institutions.

The closing of student employment centres is also a backward step. I call upon the Government to reinstate them.

My colleague in the Senate, Senator Fairbairn, recently highlighted for us in a very dramatic and effective way another serious problem, that is, the problem of illiteracy. We must remember that we are talking about a society which is moving from a resource-based economy to an information economy; we must always bear that in mind. We are talking about a fundamental change in society. Yet, when we need people who can think better and think smarter than ever before, what do we have? We have one million adult Canadians who cannot read or write at all and four million more who cannot read or write well enough to function adequately in society. Senator Fairbairn referred to them as "our country's hidden shame", and she was right; she put her finger on it.

I see the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) across the way. I know he is working on a program. I count upon him as a gentleman and a politician with a distinguished record to develop a program which will address the problem. As I said, I know he is working on it, and I wish him well. However, I wanted to highlight the issue today as a serious problem.

For example, my own province has the highest illiteracy rate anywhere in Canada. Over 30 per cent of Newfoundlanders over the age of 15 years have less than grade 9 education, and the national figure is 22 per cent. We need a national program to address this serious national problem.

It is not enough, in any of these things, to say that education is a provincial responsibility. It is true, but it does not solve the problem. As the country moves into a new kind of society, we need a national policy to address a serious national problem. I call upon the Government to take the matter very seriously. The tide must be turned.

We must increase the funding we make available to our universities and colleges for research as well. The irony is that Dr. John Polanyi, after he received the Nobel Prize, advised Canadian students and researchers who wanted to follow a career which could come anywhere close to resembling his to move to the United States. What a shocking indictment of the research capabilities of Canadian institutions!

• (1140)

The first thing we need is an increase in funding to universities and colleges, not simply for core programs but for research capabilities as well. Second, we need a fundamental change in the Canada Student Loans Program that will stress not debt loads but an investment in young Canadians and a move from a loan program to a bursary program. Third, we need the reinstatement of the First Chance Program for young people, a guarantee that when young people finish their training and education, they will have available to them, at least in the beginning, a job.

We cannot guarantee them a job for life and no one should be guaranteed a job for life. Every person is independent and has the right to make his own way in this world. However, in the kind of society into which we are moving, I believe we have to bring education beyond simply grade 13 or a Bachelor's degree. I believe we have to tell people that we will start them off and given them the first chance in the market-place. We have to provide adequate funding for summer jobs and we have to have a national program for attack on what Senator Fairbairn called this country's hidden shame, and that is, the problem of illiteracy in Canada. Those are the things that must be done. We on this side call upon the Government to take this matter seriously and to address these very serious problems.

If I may, I would like to conclude by reading from the Senate report on youth. Its concluding paragraphs read as follows:

> Our society appears only too happy that today's youth seem to have an infinite amount of patience and are less demanding than previous generations. But how long will their patience hold out? In other industrialized countries, it seems to have been stretched to the limit. In fact, in several regions of Europe, patience has given way to exasperation and violence.

What we are seeing on Canadian campuses today is the beginning of the re-enactment of the spirit of the sixties. Bob Dylan, where are you? Perhaps Bruce Springsteen, I do not know, will be the new symbol of the eighties. I believe we are starting to see a regeneration of that kind of spirit on campuses now. The report continues:

> Despite the economic recession from which we have barely recovered, Canada is one of the richest countries in the world. We have at our disposal the means by which to help our young people. The public and political will to remedy the situation must be displayed without further delay. Each Canadian community must assume control of its own affairs and put its imagination to work so that we may improve the present and future lives of our young people. Just as in the event of a major national disaster, we as Canadians must concentrate all our energy to solve this serious problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: First, Mr. Speaker, I wish to greet you personally.

From the outset I should like to commend my colleague for a speech whose tone was particularly appropriate to the topic and tell him that I am pleasantly surprised at the approach he took today. Quite frankly I was expecting something else, more like much more partisan remarks on the part of my colleague opposite. I should like to emphasize how grateful I am that he took such a constructive approach.

I should like to say that the issue covers a lot of ground, that in all likelihood we agree with most of what he has brought to our attention today. He pinpoints problems which every one of us has acknowledged as having become ever more significant in recent years. Mr. Speaker, this is why I want to stress the fact that my colleague has raised problems which the Government is likely prepared to view as being identified.

I have two brief questions for him.

First, I should like to ask him what is the position of the Liberal Party of Canada with respect to what they consider to be the most urgent issue now facing young Canadians. He did refer to some of them but I was unable to find in his remarks a clear indication of what the most important problem might be.

Second, perhaps he might tell me who should be included in the eventual quest for solutions to what the Liberal Party of Canada deems to be the most important problem, or again the five points he mentioned in his speech?

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to highlight one particular problem that needs attention because I think that would be over-simplifying what is a complex problem. I would suggest to the Minister what he could do if he wanted to help those who are in the middle of their education and training now. I am not talking about those who are coming into the educational system or those who have gone through it and are still experiencing despair and disillusionment in their difficulty in finding job opportunities because job opportunities are something the Government can and should create for those people. However, if he wanted to help those who are in the middle of their education now, he could deal with what I think is the top priority for Canadian students.

If members of the Canadian Federation of Students were here in this Chamber today, I think they would tell us to change the Canada Student Loans Program so that students will not have to bear that excessive debt burden of between $14,000 and $20,000 on graduation. Basically, we should change the Canada Student Loans Program from a loan program to a bursary program. I think that is what they would ask and that is what I ask on their behalf today.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend a question about his very excellent speech which outlined the nature of the problems facing students. One thing I thought was missing from the Hon. Member's speech was any identification of what the Government has done to solve the problems.

I as well as other Hon. Members have looked high and low through all of the brochures and files and the only thing I could come up with was Hot-100. I gave this booklet to my teenage son the other day so he could look through it and evaluate it because he is the person for whom it was designed. To summarize my son Nils' comment, he said: "Dad, I looked through this and I couldn't find anything in here that was of direct relevance to me as a 17-year-old boy.

Has the Hon. Member looked through Hot-100? What is his view of this initiative which I suppose is the only one the Government has taken in the last two and a half years?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, that is a question that is best addressed and will be addressed to the Minister when he speaks. It will be for him to put on the record what the Government has done or has not done.

Today's motion clearly indicates that this is a serious national problem which requires a serious national response and, in answer to the Hon. Member, so far we have not seen a serious, co-ordinated, comprehensive response from the Government on how it will deal with the problem of youth in Canada in the 1980s. I look forward to the speech of the Minister. Perhaps he can build on the booklet about which we have just been told and tell us exactly what the Government intends to do to address the problems we have identified today.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the reference that was made to members of the Liberal Party preferring a bursary program to the present loan program. That is precisely what the Liberal Party proposed the second to last time it was in opposition under the leadership of Mr. Pearson. He went to the young people of Canada in the early 1960s offering a program of 10,000 scholarships. Once elected, the Government did not deliver the 10,000 scholarships. It delivered the loan program, which it now does not want. The loan program we have was initiated under the federal leadership of the Liberal Party with the co-operation of the various provinces.

• (1150)

The point I would like to make for the record is simply that I take it that the Liberal Opposition is now reverting to the position it held when it was in opposition previously. The fact that it did not deliver on that proposal when it became a Government, may suggest something about the credibility of its policy now.

There was another point made about not providing any job opportunities for young people. Statistics indicate that since 1984 not only has the total of new job opportunities increased dramatically but it has increased for young people. Tragically, the problem of unemployment remains largely a regional problem, and that is really what we should be addressing, not young people across the country, but rather how we can create greater job opportunities for all people in those areas which have not been able to come abreast of other parts of the country.

I would just like to throw one point into the discussion, and I hope some future speaker who has adequate time will take it up, that is, the quality of education and training in Canada should have a priority. If this country is to compete successfully throughout the balance of this century and into the 21st century, it is going to have to compete with a world which is increasingly better educated and equipped. We should be addressing ourselves to the challenge.

How can 25 million people, trying to live and function in the second largest country in the world use its resources, which are always limited however rich they are, to the best advantage? How can they most effectively be used to provide the training, research and development opportunities for young people which will enable them to compete effectively with the rest of the world?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the emphasis in the Member's speech was on conservative rather than progressive, I would suggest. The Hon. Member is debating the past. He is comparing apples and oranges. If he is comparing the 1960s with the 1980s, I do not know where he has been over the past couple of decades. Policies which worked in the 1960s are not the policies we need for the 1980s. We governed in the 1960s, yes, and far be it for me to downplay in any way the Liberal record of the 1960s.

I happen to be very proud of the record of the Pearson Government and the Governments which followed not only because of their policies toward young people but because of their policies toward the elderly and to other workers in society. But that was in the 1960s. This Government is governing in the 1980s, which is an entirely different decade. New approaches are needed for new times.

I suggest that new men are needed to implement the new approaches in new times. What we need today for our young people in the kind of society we live in are new and original ideas. What I said before is that if the Canadian federation of students could stand here today in this Chamber and tell the Government what they wanted, that is their position.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, first, I want to commend my hon. colleague for his motion and for the quality of his speech. As the spokesperson for the Liberal Party on matters relating to post-secondary education, I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware of the numerous studies which have been undertaken in recent years which document very clearly the social, economic and educational disparities between the Indian people of Canada and non-Indian people? Is the Hon. Member aware that more young Indian people today are staying in school or going back to school and are graduating? Yet the Government of the day has decided to cut back on those programs. It has limited the number of places available in these institutions. To compound the problem, it has also restricted the amount of assistance to these institutions, which provide places for young Indian people to get post-secondary education.

What the Government of Canada has done at the present time is to throw out the principles of universal access and opportunity. What I want to know from the spokesperson for the Liberal Party is whether a Liberal Government would in fact restore those principles which were actively in place during the previous administration. Would these principles be restored? At the present time they have been crushed and thousands of young Indian people who are seeking self-determination and independence are losing that opportunity.

Mr. Rompkey: It is always a pleasure to hear from the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). Not only has he had the kind of experience that is very useful to us on this side but he is in every sense a Liberal. He knows as a Liberal that the first thing to do is to reach out to those people who need help the most.

The Hon. Member has put his finger on a dimension I neglected to mention, and that is, the disadvantaged people in this country. The Hon. Member mentioned native people. I can only say to him in response that the record of the Liberal Party in the past is clear. I suggest that the record of the Liberal Party in the future will not fall short of what it was in the past.

Let me build on the Hon. Member's intervention, if I may, and point to other disadvantaged groups. Apart from native people, and the disabled, women in Canada are particularly disadvantaged by what is happening in the educational system today as the result of the cut-backs in university and college funding. One of the first things to go is part-time or continuing education. The frills are cut out. The physical education, the music and continuing education are cut out. Seventy per cent of all part-time students in Canada today are women. Many of them are from single-parent families. The problem is that women in Canada today who need that education more than anyone else because of the disadvantaged position they are in, are less able to fund their own education because a woman in Canada today earns 60 per cent of what a man earns. So there is a compounded disadvantage on the part of women in trying to bring some equality to their own status. Apart from native people, women, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, particularly young women, are particularly disadvantaged by the situation we find ourselves in today. That is the kind of situation we have to address. It is serious and that is why the Government has to do something about it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to congratulate my hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), for providing us with this opportunity today to discuss what has to be one of the most critical issues facing the country. That, of course, is the future of our young people.

I am pleased to respond to the motion of the Hon. Member which reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

I want to begin my remarks by saying that I, like the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador, feel that the Government has in a sense turned its back on young people. I do not understand why it has done that. I want to spend a few moments explaining why I feel the Government has abandoned the young people and why it has failed to provided adequate financial support to develop their educational careers and their family futures.

In the last few weeks I have been touring the high schools in my constituency as well as junior high schools and elementary schools. I have talked to our young people, particularly those in graduating classes. There are hundreds of thousands of young people who are about to leave secondary school to begin their careers in post-secondary education and training. One common theme I have noticed in discussions with individuals and classes of young people is a growing sense of disillusionment and frustration about the fact that their future appears to be very uncertain. There is a fuzziness in terms of where the country is going, what opportunities there are for the future.

• (1200)

When most of us in the House of Commons graduated from high school or post-secondary institutions we had perhaps half a dozen jobs from which to choose. Now there are half a dozen young people competing for the one job available. That becomes woefully obvious when you look at the unemployment figures for young people. Today 500,000 young Canadians fall into the category of the unemployed. This does not include the 20,000 or 30,000 young people who have given up and are not now actively looking for work. They come from communities where the unemployment rate is from 30 per cent to 50 per cent. There is simply no point in going up and down the streets looking for work in an area where the unemployment level is so unbelievably high.

Those figures totally ignore native young people who are not factored into the formal statistics at all. In addition, there are 180,000 young people who have to be described as severely underemployed. They may work for five hours a week at McDonald's or 15 hours a week in a part-time job with no security and no prospects for permanency.

Therefore, the actual unemployment rate for people between the ages of 15 and 24 is 23 per cent to 25 per cent. In other words, almost one-quarter of the young people of Canada are in an almost hopeless situation at the time of life when they ought to be developing themselves creatively and positively. They should be developing careers and starting families. Twenty-five per cent of young Canadian people are, for all intents and purposes, jobless. That is virtually an immoral situation. We should be spending day after day in the House of Commons searching for solutions to this national catastrophe. I think we would all agree that this is a serious crisis situation.

Yet it is the Opposition which calls for a debate to seek solutions for this. It is not the Government or the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) but the Opposition which calls for a special debate to address the plight of young people. That does not bode well in terms of how serious the Government is on this issue. If the Government were serious on this issue it would be doing something.

To be fair, I have to admit that the Government has done something. For example, it eliminated the Katimavik program and promised a new youth program in February of last year. That promise has not yet been kept. The budget for the youth Ministry was totally eliminated. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) slowed the rate of growth of transfer payments, which will result in the loss of $1.5 billion between 1986 and 1991 in post-secondary education. Funds for the International Year of Youth were eliminated and no new funds were allocated to continue this important work.

Yesterday in the House of Commons the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned Challenge '85, '86 and '87. He said that Challenge '85 created 100,000 jobs. One would assume that in 1986 when the unemployment situation was worsening the program would create more jobs. However, the Deputy Prime Minister said that Challenge '86 created only 93,000 jobs. He went on to say that the funding for Challenge '87 will remain the same as last year, which is obviously woefully inadequate. As my friend, the Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), indicated, not only is it inadequate, it is a move to facilitate jobs in the private sector. Although we applaud this, it is at the expense of jobs in the public sector. Non-profit organizations could put young people to work in meaningful ways for the summer.

I have experienced, as I am sure all other Members of Parliament have, the frustration of collecting hundreds and hundreds of Challenge '87 job applications, only to have half of them tossed out because there is no money and to have requests for 10 or 15 young people cut down to three or four young people. It tears my heart out to know that the one program which the federal Government has to assist young people during the summer, which is good as far as it goes, is so woefully inadequate. We could double, triple, or quadruple the funding.

It is important to recognize that we are discussing today the most important natural resource in our country. The Minister of State for Youth laughs when I say that the most important natural resource in this country is our young people. He may think the most important resource is coal, copper, platinum or uranium, but we believe that the most important natural resource is the people of Canada, and particularly the young people. We should invest in the development of that natural resource as we do in no other resource sector.

I know that when the Minister of State for Youth stands up he will say that there is no money to help young people, that all the programs to help young people had to be eliminated. I must remind the Minister that the Government thought it was appropriate to spend $9.5 billion to help the multinational oil companies. The Government thought it was appropriate to spend $1 billion to bail out two banks, which has never before been done on the face of the earth. The Government found it appropriate to spend billions of dollars to provide incentives for corporations to develop in central Canada. However, the Government cannot find the money to provide training, education, and job opportunities for our young people. That is the disgrace of it all.

The most dastardly blow of all was when we all received Hot-100, a quick guide to see what the feds are doing for youth. I challenge anyone to find something in this booklet which is available to really help young people. I have gone through it page by page as have my two sons. When I brought it home they got quite excited because they were not aware that the federal Government was doing anything to help young people and wanted to find out what it was doing. Those two young men went through this book page by page and when they finished they were disappointed. They made phone calls and found that a lot of these so-called programs had no money in them at all.

As an example, it talks about pension programs and a lot of university post-graduate degree programs which help some people. However, for 99.9 per cent of the young people needing assistance there is very little, if anything. I will not say there is absolutely nothing in here because there may be something which I have not found, but I look forward to hearing the Minister of State for Youth outline the programs in here which are in use today.

I looked through the report of Parliament which was an examination of the problems and issues facing Canadian youth between the ages of 15 and 24. There are pages and pages of recommendations, but I could not find any which have been implemented. Of all the recommendations that talk about ways to get young people back to work, none have been implemented. I wonder why Parliament bothered to do this if the Government is simply going to ignore the recommendations.

In talking to young people across the country I have sensed their despondency. Records show that alcoholism, drug abuse, suicides and attempted suicides, and drop-out rates in schools and training programs are worsening. I say that with great reluctance but the facts demonstrate that conclusively. It is now only fair to ask what the solutions are.

• (1210)

My hon. friend from Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador laid out a number of solutions as he saw them. They were good, thoughtful solutions and the Government should take action immediately. I want to propose some other solutions. They flow out of a very extensive task force which the NDP launched in 1985, chaired by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). It travelled across the country from coast to coast. It visited major and minor communities, rural areas, high schools, technical schools, vocational schools and universities. The task force listened to 600 participants and received over 300 briefs. It resulted in a report which laid out all of the recommendations by the NDP in order to assist young people. I want to highlight some of them.

At the top of the list was a program called Youth Prospects which would provide a wide range of opportunities for young people. We felt it was appropriate to set aside ample funding so that young people could receive adequate support in developing their various skills. At a cost of about $6,000 a year they could choose from one of four options. They could undertake two years of job training, which would involve on-the-job training, classroom instruction, or a combination thereof. It would provide them with the necessary skills, expertise and experience to participate directly in the workforce after two years.

We also suggested a two-year entrepreneurialship program. We would provide seed money for young people to go out and develop a new business of one kind or another. This would help develop entrepreneurial skills, expertise and experience to assist them in creating jobs not only for themselves but for other young people as well.

We suggested a two-year program of life skills training. We recognize that a lot of our young people today lack some of the basic skills required to enter the workforce or continue with their education. This would help develop their literacy skills. It would help them to apply for jobs, fill out résumés and a whole host of other valuable life skills which, for a variety of reasons, some young people have not obtained over the years.

A fourth option was to provide, again, around $6,000 a year to assist young people to complete two years of post-secondary education. That could be vocational school, technical school, business school or secretarial school. It could mean one would go on to a college or university. Two years to develop those basic abilities and a sense of confidence which would encourage young people to go on with their training and education.

We suggested that program because at the moment the Government's support for students is in the form of loans more often than not. If you want to complete your post-secondary education you can borrow $6,000, $7,000, or $8,000 year after year. That may be appropriate for a handful of young people, but for those in my constituency, where the unemployment rate is unfortunately in the 20 per cent range, it is simply impossible. They cannot even think about going on to technical school or university where the bill for the year might be $8,000 because they probably will not have even a summer job. We all know that only one out of three students is likely to obtain a summer job and the lion's share will be very low paid.

Mr. Rompkey: In central Canada.

Mr. Riis: Those jobs will also tend to be restricted to central Canada where the economic forecasts are more healthy than in other parts of the country. I think we are all too well aware that of all the jobs created in this country last year, 96 per cent were in central Canada. If you are a young person seeking a summer job in Labrador, British Columbia, or central Alberta, you are going to have a difficult time because economic conditions in those parts of Canada are extremely difficult relative to central Canada.

We asked ourselves, why not provide a youth prospect fund and put dollars in the hands of young people so that if they take two years of job training, two years of entrepreneurial training, two years of life skills training, two years of post-secondary education, they will become a better person, a better citizen, and make Canada a better place? We would be investing this money in the future of our young people and therefore in the future of Canada.

In adding up the cost it would come to an additional $550 million in the first year. Compare that with the billions upon billions of dollars we give large corporations to do all kinds of things with. Compare it with the $1 billion we paid to bail out two banks. Compare it to the other things the Government spends money on. The money would put tens of thousands of young people back into school or in the workplace.

We say that is good. What are all those people going to do when they get their pay cheques? They will spend the money. It will be spent in their communities right across the country. It will help create more jobs. The various Governments will collect sales taxes as this money moves through the system. We calculate that the federal and provincial Governments would get the lion's share of that money back through improved economic conditions and the tax system. We are not talking about spending money, we are talking about investing in the most important natural resource Canada has, its young people.

I suspect that the Minister of State for Youth would really like to help young people. He would like to be doing a lot of things and perhaps implementing the suggestions offered by my friend and myself, steps that could be taken immediately to assist young people. I suspect that he personally would like to do that. However, he has to have the money. When he has no money in his Ministry, when his cabinet colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance, refuse to give him the necessary funds to develop those policies I am sure he would like to develop, it must be very frustrating for him.

In closing I want to say that I do not directly criticize the Minister of State for Youth although I must ask: Where is the money to help young people? I levy my criticism primarily at his cabinet colleagues who, for whatever reason, have decided not to provide the financial support to enable the Minister to invest in Canada's most important natural resource, its young people.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, after the opening speech of the spokesman for the Liberal Party of Canada, I did take a few seconds to point out that his remarks had been rather positive, in the sense that they were not partisan, and I was surprised at this approach.

I was as much pleasantly surprised at the speech of my colleague from the Liberal Party as I am very little surprised at the tone of my colleague from the New Democratic Party. You know, we have become used to hearing the kind of remarks he made today in an extremely partisan context, in fact half-truths, hearsay, omissions. As usual, my colleague's comments are notable for what they fail to deal with, but still I would want to offer him an opportunity to enlighten us about two points which, I presume, reflect the position of his Party.

Here is the first question: I wonder whether he might tell us what he or his Party considers to be the most important problem facing young Canadians in 1987, and probably for years to come.

The second question is also relatively simple, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether he and especially his Party feel that in our search for solutions and our quest for a nation-wide consensus we, as federal Government, should at least make an attempt to include the provinces in this exercise.

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and encouraged to respond in kind to the question. Whenever I have heard the Minister of State for Youth make his presentations he always prefaces them with the same remarks. He says that I have been very partisan in my delivery—

Mr. Charest: You always make the same speeches.

Mr. Riis: —and I make no apologies for being partisan. After all, this is the House of Commons. This is a House with 282 politicians in it. I thought that what we were actually supposed to do here was to make political speeches. The Minister says that he has heard this speech before. Yes, he has. I have given this speech before because I want to do two things.

First, I want to point out the severity and the crisis nature of the problem. Second, I want to offer a range of solutions to the problem so that the Minister of State for Youth might listen and actually do something about them. The last time I did that he did not act. I did it again today, and he has not acted. I hope that I will never have to give this speech again. I hope that this is the last time I will ever be encouraged to stand in the House of Commons and deliver, in a sense, a repeat of former comments. I hope the Minister will take some action after today.

I wish to thank my colleague from Newfoundland for providing us with an opportunity to discuss the issue of youth. I would like to think that the Minister himself would provide such an opportunity. But, no, he remains mute. He never has a question, a statement or an initiative. He has nothing, which is what makes us so frustrated.

The Minister asks what is the number one issue facing young people today. I think that, unquestionably, it has to be the whole set of issues surrounding employment, the need for young people to feel secure in being able to enter the workforce at the appropriate time and to develop the kind of career and job options which will enable them to make the most meaningful contributions to society. I think that is the concern. When I talk to young people they ask: "Will I have a job? Will there be job opportunities when I finish university? Will there be a career for me when I finish my college course?" I think the main issue is in terms of young people being able to find meaningful employment in Canada.

I did not quite understand the Minister's second question. I think it was: Ought we to try to build a consensus between the provinces and the federal Government to deal with youth issues? Indeed, I think whenever possible that type of consensus building must take place, not only between the provinces and the federal Government, but between the provinces, the federal Government and the various organizations which represent young people, whether they be university students, college students, various youth groups, right down to the municipal level. When we consider that cities such as Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver have populations between one million and three million people and large numbers of young people who are jobless and having difficulties pursuing their post-secondary education plans, I think the municipalities have to be involved. I think that a consensus must be built between the federal Government, the provinces, regional Governments and local Governments.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to be fair with my colleague, for he did indicate in his response that he is not sure whether he understood the question correctly.

So just to make sure that his answer is relevant, I would seek leave to repeat my question, with the agreement of my colleagues in the House.

[English]

What I am interested in knowing is the following. If the federal Government is requested to design a national policy for youth, would it not be reasonable for the federal Government to seek provincial co-operation in that regard, especially in the context of the constitutional balance of Canada?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, yes.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) a chance to elaborate on the last line of questioning. I think the Minister has put his finger on an important issue that we really have not addressed thus far, that is to say, how we go about solving the problem. The Minister has responsibilities. Education does come under provincial jurisdiction, that is true. However, I think that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap in his answer to the Minister said that it really goes beyond the provincial Governments and the federal Government which have some real responsibilities and that there are groups in the country which wish to do something and which must be brought into the process to design not just a federal program. The distinction must be made that what we are talking about here is not just a federal program. What we are saying is that the federal Government has some responsibilities. The provincial Governments obviously have jurisdiction. However, there are groups of young people, university professors, teachers and all sorts of other groups which want to see a national—in quotes and underlined—approach to a serious national problem. I think that is what we are after.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member to elaborate in a minute on that point and to build into his reply one further consideration and to point out the important specific responsibilities of the Government of Canada. For example, I refer to the matter of foreign students in Canada.

There has been a drop of 43 per cent in the number of foreign students coming into Canada over the past five years. That is not the case in any other industrialized democracy with which we compete. Foreign students contribute to our economy between $600 million and $700 million per year, which is a straight injection of money into the Canadian economy, not to mention the public relations value they give us abroad in terms of trade and future consideration, as well as in terms of external affairs in the market-place once they graduate from our universities and go on to serve us in other ways. This can only be solved by the Government of Canada. It has the Department of Immigration—and I see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is here in the House. It is intriguing that the Minister of Employment and Immigration in his one department has the capability that we need to address the issue of foreign students in Canada. From talking to many students in Canada I know that all of them believe that we must have the presence of foreign students in our institutions.

Can the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap elaborate on this particular issue further, the issue of a need for a national response? In particular will he focus on the problem of foreign students?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to the question of the Hon. Member. I would like to respond in three ways. First, I agree with the Hon. Member that we are not talking about just a federal program. We are talking about a national program, a national initiative to attempt to resolve the concerns and difficulties facing young people. We are talking about removing impediments and hurdles in order to allow them to get on to develop their lives as they ought to do.

Second, in respect of the whole matter of foreign students, one of the highlights of the task force on youth conducted by the New Democratic Party over the last year included a whole range of recommendations as to the role of the foreign student in our universities, colleges and technical schools, their diminishing roles, and steps that can be taken not only in their best interest but in the best interest of Canada in terms of linking up Canada more closely than ever with a whole set of growing and Third World countries.

I wish to end by referring to the point to which the Minister of State for Youth was getting, although I am not certain where his question was leading. As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia I have a great deal of concern when it comes to post-secondary education. When I look at the operating capital for our college and university system, including technical and vocational schools, I notice that when we look at the final budget, the total allocation of funds in the Province of British Columbia for post-secondary education, we see that its source is Ottawa. In other words, the federal Government is funding post-secondary education in the Province of British Columbia by 100 per cent. As a matter of fact, it is funding the province to the tune of 104 per cent. In other words, all of the money that Ottawa sends British Columbia for post-secondary education goes into post-secondary education and some of it is siphoned off for other uses. Yet the Province of British Columbia does not match one penny of the federal government contribution.

• (1230)

If the Province of British Columbia was doing what Parliament expected of it and what it had promised to do at one time, post-secondary educational opportunities in that province would be significantly enhanced. However, the province is not participating at all, and that is a provincial Government disgrace.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I truly welcome this opportunity today to speak to the House and to address the motion presented by the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party of Canada. I could not agree more with my two hon. colleagues, who gave the impression that we seldom have an opportunity to discuss youth issues in the House.

However, the Government does not decide what kind of questions will be asked during Oral Question Period, and I may say I have spent quite a few hours sitting in my seat and waiting for questions from the Opposition. For reasons they will know better than I do since it is their responsibility and duty to ask the questions, I have waited a long time for questions that never came. From time to time I do get a few, and I relish these moments, and I am particularly pleased today with the opportunity I am given to explain in the House and thus to Canadians what we have been doing for the past few months.

[English]

I think it is noteworthy that my two friends speak very strongly about this issue. The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party says that this is one of the most critical issues facing the country, and he went on to say that youth are the most important natural resource in Canada.

Last night, while returning from consultations in Vancouver, British Columbia, the home province of the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I learned that there would be a debate on youth today. I cancelled a long-standing commitment to be in my own riding in order to be here because I think this debate is important enough to require my attendance today. I am pleased to be here.

I had planned to thank my official critics for their opening remarks, but I regret I cannot do that because it is not the case.

The tone of the speech by the Member from the NDP is particularly appropriate today. I want to share with him my own experience. When I was named to this portfolio in June, 1986, one of the first things I learned was that the debate about youth in this country was very partisan. I and all Members of the House will agree that the issue is political, but in the aftermath of the hunger strike by our colleague in the other place, the debate was very partisan.

Upon closer examination of the issue, and being a young politician myself, I discovered that if we want to be honest with Canadians, especially those young Canadians who suffer from a certain cynicism, according to the experience of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, I guess we must admit that all political parties at all levels have often used the issue of youth as a political vehicle.

I believe we can go even further and suggest that in some cases many politicians have been very paternalistic toward young people. It is an appropriate coincidence today that my colleague from the New Democratic Party said three times that the youth are the most important natural resource of the country. During my speeches all over the country I tell Canadians from all walks of life that politicians have been very paternalistic toward young people.

I tell them, with a smile, that they will often hear politicians say that youth are the future of Canada, as though there were a choice between youth and something else. I do not know to what politicians are referring when they say youth are the future of Canada because, of course, that is what they are. What else could happen?

There is another phrase that I always cite in my speeches throughout the country. I tell Canadians that the ultimate winner is when a politician says: "Youth are the most important natural resource of Canada". I say that to Canadians laughingly because I find it paternalistic and condescending. While I do not think politicians say that in bad faith, that single partisan characteristic of the debate is a major obstacle in identifying problems, developing a consensus, and designing solutions. It is an obstacle to recognizing the fact that the world has changed.

Let me move on to describe what we have done. One of my first objectives upon assuming this portfolio was to determine what was the most important problem facing young Canadian men and women. That is why I put that question to the two opposition Parties. However, I did not hear a clear answer. While the Government has found an answer, those Parties have much work to do.

In our effort to identify the most important problem facing youth, we examined the major studies and reports that have been published in this country over a number of years. I am referring to the Macdonald Commission Report, the Forget Report on Unemployment Insurance, the International Year of Youth Report, the Senate Youth Report, the report from the Province of Newfoundland, and more recently, the report of Ken Dryden, Youth Commissioner for the Province of Ontario. All of those reports, taken together, essentially converge to the same conclusion. It is that the most important problem facing young Canadian men and women today is the transition from school to work, particularly for young people who do not finish high school. That is the Government's conclusion, for the information of those Members opposite.

Having come to that conclusion, we proceeded to determine where Canada was headed. That is a very important consideration because the policy that is developed for young Canadians will not operate in a vacuum. It will have to work within a Canadian context as well as the larger world context.

According to 1984 statistics, Canada is second only to West Germany in our dependence on trade in terms of GNP. Therefore, if we choose to follow that course, as we have in our trade negotiations with the Americans and our negotiations at GATT, the natural consequence is that Canada will have to acquire, develop, and manage new technologies to support its position in the labour markets.

In order to pursue our course as a trading nation, and develop the new technologies to support that position, the last link in the chain is the development of labour market policies and human resources to acquire and develop the new technologies to support our position in the export markets.

Consequently, we went on to determine how the labour market in Canada is presently operating and found that there is a direct relationship between academic training and job security. More than half of those who were unemployed for six months or more had not completed high school. The unemployment rate of those who fail to complete high school is three times that of youth with post-secondary training. In the last year of the recession in 1984, 75 per cent of those who were unemployed did not graduate from high school.

In light of these statistics, we moved on to examine how the labour market has changed through the years. Let me explain how the labour market has evolved from the 1950s to 1987.

• (1240)

In the fifties a young person in Canada could attend high school, drop out before graduation, and find a good job in a resource-based economy or, in a manufacturing economy like that of southern Ontario, find a good job in the automotive industry. If we want to draw a comparison between how the world has changed from the fifties to the eighties, the difference is that there are fewer and fewer jobs in Canada for unskilled labourers. Inasmuch as we can predict the future, there will be fewer and fewer jobs for unskilled labourers notwithstanding the fact that the growth in jobs in Canada is in the service sector.

We then came to what was for me and for the Government the most troubling problem we witnessed in that context. In Canada there is a link between training, holding a job, and the changing labour market. Notwithstanding that, 30 per cent to 40 per cent of young Canadian men and women—and it is something which neither Party opposite raised today—drop out of high school before graduation. That is dramatic. It is a great loss to the country now and it will be an even more important loss to the country in years to come.

Over and above that, it means much personal hardship for some young people who just fail to realize that by dropping out of high school they may be dropping out, to a certain extent, of active participation in the Canadian labour market in years to come.

In that context we then looked at how other countries dealt with the transition from school to work. For example, we looked at the United Kingdom, France, Sweden, Finland, and West Germany, and we found that in many cases the mechanisms in those countries for the transition were more developed and more sophisticated. The apprenticeship programs in West Germany, for example, were much more generic. The student or person entering the program had a specific status which he kept with him throughout the system. The same does not apply in Canada.

We are sensitive to the fact that we cannot just take a system from another country and implement it here. There are historical, sociological, and cultural factors which must be taken into account. However, we can borrow on some of the examples all over the world.

There were systems which were closer to ours. For example, co-op programs are familiar to Canadians. It is something with which they are comfortable and for which I found unanimous approval. It is part of the mechanisms into which we can look.

Having done all that, perhaps my colleagues will understand why we would find, according to the constitutional balance in Canada, which does not necessarily apply in other countries, that education is first and foremost a provincial jurisdiction. It is that to a certain extent, and I say that with reservations. I do not want to speak as a lawyer, but I should like to give an opinion. In terms of educating young people from the entry level to the secondary level, it may be unequivocal provincial jurisdiction. Once they reach the post-secondary level, and we are dealing with adults in training, obviously the federal Government plays an important role.

The obvious conclusion is that if we want to develop a national youth policy in that context, having identified a specific problem and the emerging consensus, we would go to the provinces. Being respectful, and in the spirit of national reconciliation about which we spoke, we would first go to the provinces to ask them whether they agreed that it was the most important problem.

Part of the paternalism and the partisanship surrounding the issue is that although everyone says it is our most important problem and that the youth is our future, no one, until we decided to do it, went to the extent of identifying it and asking other Canadians to join in the consensus. If they agree that it is the most important problem, the natural consequences flow from it.

I should like to report to the House at this point in time that I have visited eight Canadian provinces in less than a month. To give an indication of how much I travelled, the airlines have lost my luggage at least four times. We are doing this as rapidly as possible. Half of everything which goes into the Canadian Jobs Strategy goes to young people between the ages of 15 years and 24 years, approximately. It is a ballpark figure, but on average that is what it will be. In fiscal 1986-87 it will have been approximately $720 million. The issue is not whether it will be a new program. The Hot-100 illustrates that plentifully; there are over 100 programs which apply to young people.

The issue is that we must change the system; that is the real issue.

An Hon. Member: It is about time.

Mr. Charest: Yes, it is about time. It is about time we sat down, if we are sincere and want to go beyond the partisanship of the debate, which is a real impediment to the finding of solutions in society.

Let me reiterate the fact that we have a sincere and real commitment to the issue. It is not enough to say that youth are the future of the country or that they are our most important natural resource.

There could be new programs for specific problems, but a new program with $10 million or $20 million will not change the fundamental problem. What is needed is a change in the system, and it will not happen overnight. However, it is to what the Government is truly and sincerely committed under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the analysis of the Minister, but I am not entirely clear on the impediment of partisan debate.

It seems to me that in what I said and what the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said we very clearly analysed the problems. As a matter of fact, I think the Minister said that in his reply.

However, I am clear on the problem which he identified. He made the link—and I would like him to make it clearer—between lost luggage and the lost generation. What he said to us is that we must change the system and that he has been going about doing that by consulting.

However, where do we go from here? What we are looking for today, and what Canadian youth will be looking for, are some specific answers to how we address their very specific problems.

The Minister asked those of us in the Opposition to provide specific answers. I think we gave them. One was to make a change in the Canada Student Loans Program. That was very specific. It could be done starting today.

I know that there are wider problems. None of us underestimate the difficulties in coming to grips with them. We all know what the Constitution says. We all know what are the impediments.

I want the Minister to go beyond what he said and to tell us the outcome of losing luggage and visiting so many people in so many days in a struggle to come to grips with the problems of this lost generation. What is the linkage between lost luggage and the lost generation? What was the outcome of his travels? What will be some of the approaches? How do we bring in the provinces? How do we bring the various players to a national consensus?

What we have now, compared with the situation when we were the Government of Canada, is a national Government of one stripe and most provincial Governments of the same stripe. In essence it should perhaps be easier now than it was before, at least one would think, to come to grips with the jurisdictional problem. However, I did not hear today even the broad outlines of what will be the approach—bearing in mind and granting what the Minister said—to coming to grips with the problems in the system.

• (1250)

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the Hon. Member's question about the link between lost luggage and a lost generation. On the lost luggage side, I made that remark because I have been travelling a lot recently in this consultation process with the provinces. Airlines have had the opportunity, though not always through any fault of their own but because of tight schedules, to send my luggage to places other than the ones to which I have been going.

On the lost generation side, I hope my hon. colleague is not among those who say that there is a lost generation. I find that a very unusual thing to say. That people would say there is a lost generation is an indication of failure. Man has been on earth for millions of years, and suddenly we are being asked to determine if one generation is better off than the previous one, a very unusual exercise.

Generations inherit problems from previous generations and civilization has the duty to do better than the preceding generation. Another unusual thing about the notion of a lost generation is that the premise of the assertion is that the previous generation found something. I do not know what it found, but I would be curious to find out.

We must recognize that the world has changed. Those who are consumed by the lost generation debate do not realize that the world and its problems have changed and are new. We have to face up to them.

The Hon. Member asked what we are doing to face up to those new problems. Perhaps he may have found by accident part of the answer for which he was looking. I told the Hon. Member what the most important problem is today and will be for the rest of the mandate, and I do not think I will find any disagreement with that.

Having identified the problem, we are trying to develop a consensus, to get the provinces to join with us in saying that this is the most important problem, and then looking at mechanisms to elaborate on training and education options that will be more viable for the 30 per cent or 40 per cent of young people who drop out. We should encourage young people to stay within the system because their training capability and transferable skills will be of paramount importance to their participation in labour markets in the years to come. The federal Government which already plays a very important role in apprenticeship training programs is willing to play an important and a leadership role in developing systems that will make the education and training systems of Canada more pertinent in the minds of the 30 per cent to 40 per cent of young people who drop out.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister makes it particularly difficult to ask hard questions. He is a very decent fellow and he makes a very thoughtful presentation about the problems faced by many young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: That is an important first step. We have to know what the problem is and he has now identified the main problem plus a whole set of other problems. The Government has been in place for two and a half years, going on three years. I hope that this consensus-building which could take generations is not simply an excuse for inaction.

The question I want to put to the Minister is not intended to be a tough one. We all recognize that long-term solutions have to be sought and implemented and that that will take time. In the meantime, we cannot turn our backs on young people. There are steps that can be taken. We can amend the Canada Student Loans Program to provide more access to post-secondary education. We can increase the funding for Challenge '87 so that it will provide more than the inadequate amount it provided last year. We can do a whole set of short-term things.

Would the Minister remind us what precise initiatives he has taken since he has been in his position of Minister of State for Youth? Can he name one thing he is proud of having accomplished? Perhaps what is more important, considering what I believe the answer will be, is what is the first concrete piece of evidence we will see of his personal initiative to assist young people?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Hon. Member of a series of things. If we want to understand the important changes that have taken place in the Ministry for Youth in recent months, we have to go back to 1986 when the Ministry was transferred from the Secretary of State to the Department of Employment and Immigration, acknowledging thus the fact that employment is one of the most important problems facing young Canadians today. This put at the disposal of the Ministry for Youth one of the most important federal government departments with 27,000 people and a great deal of resources. That occurred in the spring of 1986.

Second, there was a designation of a full 25 per cent of the Innovations budget under the Canadian Jobs Strategy for youth-related projects, and we have exceeded that minimum target. The youth council that was requested was granted by the federal Government. The Hon. Member referred to his own Party's task force report on entrepreneurship. A $10 million initiative was provided for that in co-operation with the federal Government, the private sector and the non-profit sector in the form of YMCAs. There are nine centres across Canada, eight of which are exclusively for young people, helping people develop entrepreneurial skills.

Over three years, $10 million will be provided to this very innovative program under which the federal Government allots money on a set price per job basis in each region. Thirty per cent is allotted on the signing up of a young person, another 30 per cent is allotted when the course is terminated, and another 40 per cent is allotted a year after the young person has been in business. That is a very original funding formula of which we are very proud because it is result-driven. This was something that was suggested by a non-profit organization.

Another $2.9 million went to Youth Employment Skills to open four centres in Canada. We announced $180 million for Challenge '87. I know there has been some debate in the House about that because it was $30 million for youth last summer because of the census but there is no census this year.

Approximately 70 per cent of those who benefit from summer student programs under Challenge '87 are post-secondary students. We are happy about that because we know they need the money to go back to school. However, those who suffer the most are those who have dropped out. For that reason, within the Challenge '87 structure, we doubled the budget of the work-orientation workshops component from $4 million to $8 million. That is something of which the Government is very proud. Work-orientation workshops identify potential drop-outs within the school system at the secondary level and offer them training during the summer. We found that 70 per cent of them go back into the school system and that those who choose not to go back at least do so in full knowledge of the consequence of their choice. That is something in which the Government takes a lot of pride.

I know that the Hon. Member's 17-year-old son did not find anything in the Hot-100. He mentioned in particular the reference to the Canada Pension Plan. I am surprised that Hon. Members would feel that we are wasting time by informing young people about the Canada Pension Plan. I believe about 100,000 young people benefit from the Canada Pension Plan. By looking through this book, a young person at le Salon International de la Jeunesse found information on the Canada Pension Plan and is now receiving benefits.

Perhaps this book is of no use to the Hon. Member's son, but it has been of some use to young Canadian men and women and those who work with them who want to know what programs are available for young people. What does the federal Government have to offer, to where does one write, and to whom does one talk? Those are the questions this booklet attempts to answer, and that is its only pretence.

We have announced a national forum on post-secondary education to be held in Saskatoon, which should answer a great deal of the—

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: What about jobs?

Mr. Charest: —concerns expressed by my . . . As far as jobs are concerned, the unemployment rate—

Mr. Malépart: What is the unemployment rate?

Mr. Charest: For the information of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate among young Canadians has gone down by over 4 per cent since our Government assumed power. That, Mr. Speaker, is our greatest accomplishment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being 1 o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

TAX REFORM

IMPORTANCE OF SMALL BUSINESS IN JOB CREATION—ALLEGED FORGETFULNESS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Yesterday, in his statement to the House concerning the tax reform, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) failed completely to address the issue of small businesses, in spite of the fact that Hon. Members have repeatedly emphasized in the House that small businesses are responsible for over 70 per cent of all jobs created in Canada. Yet, in such an important speech, not once did he refer to them. Not a word, Mr. Speaker.

While carrying out its proposed reform of the corporate income tax system, will the Government make sure that small businesses continue to benefit from the present reduced income tax rate structure?

In its reform of the federal sales tax system, is it planning to exempt small businesses from value added taxes, national multi-stage sales taxes and business transfer taxes?

How could an industry which creates so many jobs in Canada . . . If the Government helped each and every small business to create one job, we would end up with 750,000 more new jobs in Canada. The Minister of Finance just does not understand that this industry plays a vital and significant role in the Canadian economy, and he does not even mention it in making such an important speech. That is unbelievable!

* * *

[English]

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE OF FOREST RESOURCES TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, from the time of the first settlement of this country until today forests have played a key role in the survival and growth of the Atlantic provinces. Forests occupy some two-thirds of our total land area. They provide over 50,000 direct and indirect jobs and account for $1.7 billion in exports throughout the region.

[Translation]

Several of our communities depend entirely on our forest resources for their survival.

S. O. 21

Our Government recognized the important role our forest industry plays in this area. Through its Canadian Forestry Service, it contributes $135 million, thereby assuming 60 per cent of the whole forest renewal and improvement costs under federal and provincial agreements. A significant amount is spent improving private woodlots, including those producing Christmas and maple trees.

[English]

We are committed to working with provincial Governments, industry, and small private landowners to improve our knowledge of forest dynamics and management through ongoing programs of research.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF AIRLINE LICENCE—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Fred Turner case exemplifies the best and worst in human behaviour. Mr. Turner displays the patience of Job in his two-month vigil here on Parliament Hill. The understanding and charity he shows towards his adversaries who put him out of business disguise an inner strength and sense of purpose which has kept him going from office to office in search of justice. He seeks only to have an independent arbitrator assigned to evaluate his claim and mediate with the Government—simple natural justice and nothing more.

For over a year my colleagues and I have worked on this issue and allowed Mr. Turner to call upon our resources to put his case forward because we believe it is just. I also wish to commend members of the other two Parties who have taken up his cause, including those who were part of the Government at the time this wrong occurred. They have the courage to admit some responsibility.

Specific mention is due to the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), who had the intestinal fortitude to stand up for Mr. Turner and has offered the resources of his office as well. This is the best in human behaviour. The worst can be seen in the Government that took his business and is now allowing Mr. Turner and his family to suffer.

The Government has released misinformation about the Turner case in the hope of diffusing his arguments and has refused independent examination of the facts so that the true extent of the wrongs will never be known. Cabinet Members have disgraced themselves in the eyes of fair-minded Canadians. Shame on them.

S. O. 21

TAX REFORM

PROPOSED WHITE PAPER—SUPPORT FOR EXPECTED CONTENTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians welcomed the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that a White Paper on a comprehensive tax reform package will be tabled in the House on June 18 of this year. The theme will be greater fairness and equity for individual Canadians.

• (1405)

Most Canadians will have more take-home pay after the changes. The personal income tax rates will decrease, there will be three brackets rather than 10, and less total tax dollars will come from individuals. The tax credit option will be more widely used since it is a fairer method. A tax deduction, on the other hand, is of more value the higher the income. Tax credits will be of direct help to senior citizens and lower-income families.

While corporate tax rates are expected to decrease, there will be a significant increase in the tax dollars from the business sector by shutting down certain preferences. Some business groups are not paying their fair share of taxes. A business transfer tax is also likely, we are told, and I urge the Minister to permit very few exceptions in order to minimize the paperwork and the complexity of the system.

Finally, I hope the provincial sales tax systems can be harmonized with the federal system to increase simplicity and fairness.

* * *

[Translation]

THE FAMILY

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO RECOGNIZE WORK OF ALL MOTHERS AND TO HELP THEM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to remind Hon. Members that across Canada next Sunday, May 10, will be Mothers' Day, a special day dedicated to all mothers, whether they are 20 or 80.

I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Government to move rapidly in helping many Canadian families, recognizing the work of all mothers, whether they work in or outside the home. It would be important that the Government help women who do full-time work at home, by offering them credits or access to a pension fund.

Many other mothers work outside the home, often because of economic necessity. For the latter, it would be important that the Government have quality care services, together with parent holidays and access to part-time, well-paid jobs.

This certainly would help many families worry less, both financially and in terms of their children's welfare.

I want to wish every mother a bright Mothers' Day, on which everyone recognizes their importance in Canadian society.

* * *

[English]

PORNOGRAPHY

SUPPORT FOR LEGISLATION TO CURB ABUSES

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for tabling legislation this week which tackles the problem of pornography head on. For too long women and children have been exploited through violence and degrading pornography. This piece of legislation sends a clear message to those who profit through the exploitation of others. At the same time it continues to respect our freedom of expression.

I reject the comments of those who disagree with this Bill. I suggest that they produce a better definition of pornography. We would be glad to consider all suggestions that might improve the Bill.

Pornography touches all of us and I call upon all those who would like to see this blight removed to speak up now and support the Minister of Justice.

* * *

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

USE OF ALBERTA TELEPHONE LINES TO TRANSMIT ALLEGED RACIST MESSAGE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, racism is being offered to the people of Alberta on telephone lines owned by the province. Every Sunday night the so-called Church of Jesus Christ Christian-Aryan Nations offers a new message to tempt listeners into racist views of the world.

The authorities have allowed this abomination to continue without interruption. The Alberta Government has refused to act and wants to maintain silence on the matter. Complaints by the League for Human Rights of B'nai Brith to the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the Commissioner himself have produced no apparent action.

Is the Government of Canada ignorant of this abuse of our telecommunications system? Has the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) considered action and decided to do nothing? Does the Conservative Party of Canada as well as the Conservative Party of Alberta condone the racism of the Aryan Nations in western Canada? Surely the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would expect speedy action if he were informed of these activities.

TAX REFORM

CRITICISM OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S TAX PROBE REPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, cashing in on the general dissatisfaction with an overly complex and burdensome tax system would seem to be a sure way for opposition Parties to score points. This was evidently the idea behind the NDP tax probe exercise, but it has obviously backfired on them.

Let us hear what tax expert and editor of the Canadian Taxpayer, Arthur Drache, has to say about the latest NDP tax probe report. He says:

> It is a pity that the numerous technical errors leave significant questions as to whether those who drafted the document have the expertise to formulate tax policy.

• (1410)

He goes on to say: "This document is troubling for the shoddiness of its technical input". In short, Mr. Speaker, shoddy work from an incompetent Party.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

TAX REFORM—PROTECTION OF PRESENT BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on the matter of tax reform, I would urge Canadian families and senior citizens to look out and be prepared to fight. Hon. Members will remember that this Government—and I would like to recall the consultation it made in January 1985 with the Blue Paper, when senior citizens and families were misled by the same Minister of Finance who promised to fully reindex Old Age Security pensions, after he had cut them—promised at that point that family allowance cuts would not be used to reduce the deficit, misleading Canadian families once more.

I am warning the Minister of Finance there will be an all-out war if this Government changed senior citizens' tax exemptions, if that is not completely transferred in respect of senior citizens. And also if the exemption for dependent children, if it is transferred for families with children, there will be an all-out war and the Minister will have to recognize his error once again, as he did on the matter of deindexing Old Age Security pensions.

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIMES—CALL FOR EXPANSION OF RESTITUTION PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, Canada's criminal justice system is ignoring the rights of victims of violent crimes. While perpetrators of brutal attacks are freed after serving brief or part of brief sentences, their victims, who are often left physically and mentally scarred for life, are all but forgotten.

I urge the Minister to act quickly in drafting the appropriate legislation which would amend the Criminal Code by expanding the now meagre restitution provisions therein. I also ask the Minister to consider in his amendment the use of victim impact statements in the sentencing of violent criminals. An amendment of this nature could only serve to ensure that penalties for violent crimes are appropriate for the crimes committed and as precedence for due restitution for victims of violent crimes.

In addition, the Government should take steps to increase the power of the justice system in meeting the immediate needs and concerns of crime victims by increasing and enriching available government services for all victims of crime.

* * *

ENERGY

GREATER USE OF GRAIN URGED FOR PRODUCTION OF ETHANOL

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, a year and five days ago the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources put forward its report, which was unanimous, to this House. It concerned a market for surplus Canadian grains which would provide an unparalleled economic opportunity for our farmers and reduce dependence on imports and fossil fuels.

This week the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association is again urging federal and provincial Governments to take a serious look at ethanol production as a means of providing an alternative domestic market for western grains, diversifying the western economy, and developing value-added industries for western agricultural products.

The use of ethanol, an alcohol which can be produced from grain, as a replacement for lead in gasoline, could provide a domestic market for over eight million tonnes of Canadian cereal grain if 10 per cent ethanol were used to provide the octane requirements of Canadian gasoline. A three per cent ethanol and five per cent methanol blend, as currently used in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, would consume almost six per cent of Canada's total cereal production.

A window of opportunity is opening up. Allowable lead levels in Canada disgracefully still stand at 10 times the level allowed in the United States.

The Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association has recommended that the federal Government implement a program to provide the economic climate needed to kick-start the Canadian ethanol industry and provide a better environment for Canadians, including an accelerating lead phase-down program which would effectively eliminate lead in gasolines by 1990, and an environmental ban on the heavy metal octane enhancer, MMT, which has been banned in the United States since 1978.

The operations of the Western Accord and the supposed free market in refined petroleum products are being used to suppress a domestic Canadian industry which could serve the objectives of fairness for the farm economy rather than the objectives of the multinational oil industry.

The Government should not fund the MBTE plants. Instead, we must diversify, distribute jobs, and provide a market for Canadian farm production.

* * *

VOLUNTARY WORKERS

TRIBUTE TO FUND RAISERS FOR WOODSTOCK PROJECT TO AID MENTALLY RETARDED

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, Governments should take note that voluntary community efforts can still raise funds for good causes without the help of tax dollars. Last Sunday afternoon I had the pleasure of opening the new headquarters building for the Woodstock and District Association for the Mentally Retarded. This new building, known as ARC Industries, provides employment facilities for 84 mentally-handicapped people and has a staff of 45. It complements a residence and school which were built some years ago.

• (1415)

The recent project began two years ago. Since then plans have been developed, and funds in the amount of over $750,000 were raised within the community. The single largest donation of $100,000 came from the Rotary Club of Woodstock. The balance was raised with smaller donations from groups and individuals in the area. At the time of the official opening there was only a minuscule $13,000 still owing on the project.

This amazing achievement is testimony to the fact that volunteerism is still alive and that, given a good project and imaginative and dedicated leadership, Canadians will respond to the needs of a community without financial help from Governments.

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF TOURISM INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, "Canada grows with tourism" is the theme of this year's National Tourism Week which will take place May 11 to May 17. I believe the theme is entirely appropriate considering that tourism generates over $22 billion in domestic revenues and provides over 600,000 direct jobs to Canadians. If properly nurtured it could employ over one million Canadians by the year 2000.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, tourism is one of Canada's major assets. Not only does the industry create hundreds of thousands of jobs, but tourism helps promote harmony and goodwill among the various regions of Canada. It is an asset for national unity.

Tourism also plays a leading role in promoting world peace, an objective which all Canadians have at heart.

I would be remiss if I failed to congratulate the Tourism Industry Association of Canada for supporting National Tourism Week, and I urge all Canadian men and women to participate actively in National Tourism Week.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TAX REFORM

FORTHCOMING WHITE PAPER—PREVIOUS GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. After two and a half years middle and low-income Canadians know that they have been the target of more than $22 billion worth of Conservative Government tax grabs. They are paying more sales tax, more excise tax and more income tax.

Yesterday the Minister announced that he would table his tax reform proposals in a White Paper in June. Can the Minister assure the House today that his reform will undo all, not just some, of his own huge tax grabs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons personal income taxes are up is because we have 750,000 more people working and paying taxes, which contributes to personal tax revenues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have made a number of adjustments to the tax system. A number of those changes have resulted in greater fairness in the tax system. We have a minimum tax. We have removed a number of the tax gimmicks that have been used, such as the Scientific Research Tax Credit, carve-outs, and the rules on limited partnerships, all of which have made personal income tax fair play. So, yes, we will address some further problems in tax reform. My friend will be very much aware of these on June 18.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Canadians are paying more taxes because the Minister increased the rates. I do not know how he can call a 33 per cent hike in sales tax fair.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF CONSUMPTION TAX

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister said that he may introduce a new consumption tax which he now calls a national multi-stage sales tax. The Minister knows that when New Zealand brought in its consumption tax the cost of living went up immediately by some 5 per cent. How much does the Minister expect the cost of living for Canadians to increase as a result of his new tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is jumping ahead of herself. We will have a White Paper on June 18. This type of question will be addressed very clearly in the White Paper.

• (1420)

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL SALES TAX INQUIRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, last summer the Minister backed away from the idea of a value added tax in favour of a business transfer tax. We understand that in response to pressure from his cabinet colleagues, yesterday he backed away from the business transfer tax in favour of a national multi-stage sales tax, and said that some of the provinces were interested in it. Which provinces are interested in replacing provincial and federal sales taxes with a regressive new tax on every conceivable consumer item and service?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again, I think the Hon. Member is jumping ahead of herself. We will be publishing a White Paper which will have a core proposal on a comprehensive multi-stage sales tax, as I indicated yesterday. At the last meeting of federal and provincial Ministers of Finance, a number of the provinces encouraged me to keep the option open of having either a federal and provincial tax of that nature, plus two federal only options of a business transfer tax or federal value added tax. These options are available to us, but they all centre around that core proposal of a comprehensive multi-stage tax.

LEVEL OF TAXATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A couple of months ago, in response to a charge that he was the taxingest finance minister in Canadian history, he said:

> What we have been doing here, John—

That is, John Ferguson of Southam News:

> —is to bring the level of taxation back to where it had been in the middle 70s. Previous Ministers of Finance had let go of the tax reins and the level of taxation as a per cent of income had gone down and down—

In bringing the level of taxation up and up, is it necessary to increase the worries of ordinary Canadians that perhaps even their food will be taxed? Will the Government tax even our daily bread? Canadians will never forgive the Government for that trespass.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it very clear that tax reform is not designed to increase the amount of revenues that the Government of Canada would take as a per cent of the national income of the country. That still stands.

Mr. Baker: It is obvious that the Minister is unwilling to say whether there will be a general tax on food.

TAX ON SNACK FOODS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we know that beginning on July 1, the Minister will bring in a tax on snack food. He will put a new tax on popcorn, nuts, ice-cream bars, granola bars, pretzels, cheezies, potato chips, and even popsicles.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Does the Minister of Finance not realize that Canadian children only have so much money for an allowance, only so much for recess time, and can only take in so many empty pop bottles to get a bit of change in their pockets? Will he cancel this sneaky summer snack attack?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can see that the Hon. Member will take off weight this summer.

I ask the Hon. Member to cast his attention back to my statement yesterday. I said that the result of tax reform will be that an overwhelming majority of Canadians will discover that they have more money in their pockets. They will be paying less tax. That is the objective of tax reform and the objective that I have set out very clearly. I think the Hon. Member will find that he will be very pleased with the results of tax reform come June 18.

SALES TAX OPTIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He has committed himself to let Canadians know on June 18 his plans for tax reform. However, he now seems to be trying to fudge that by saying he will put forth three or four options, the value added tax, the business transfer tax, and a new national sales tax imposed in co-operation with the provinces if they agree.

• (1425)

Will the Minister assure the House that the Government will state which of the sales tax options it favours when it issues its June 18 paper? Will he also assure the House that necessities like food will continue to be exempt?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is pre-empting the whole process. We will have a White Paper. In the White Paper there will be a core proposal on how we will move to a comprehensive multi-stage sales tax.

There are three means by which we can operate that tax, three ways by which we can facilitate it, three mechanisms that we can use. I have said that those are open for consultation.

The provinces have indicated that they are interested in discussing one. We will be consulting with the private sector on the other two, as well as on the national sales tax.

There are options open to us on how we proceed, and that is what will flow from the White Paper in June.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER FOOD PRODUCTS WILL BE TAXED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. After four of five answers the Minister has yet to indicate clearly whether food products will be taxed, even though a tax on food will cost the average Canadian family $300 in additional taxes on a basic life necessity. Can the Minister assure us and the House that such a basic necessity as food will not be taxable? Does the Minister quite simply intend to reduce income taxes while at the same time extending the sales tax to something as basic as food and daily bread?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have told the Hon. Member and the other questioner that we are not going to pre-empt the process.

There are options, which I have set out, on the mechanisms we are going to use to implement that tax, some of which have the flexibility for exemptions. I think we must let the process run its course.

When the Hon. Member talks about the regressive nature of sales tax, I ask him to consider whether the current approach to sales tax without a refundable sales tax credit is the right way, or whether one with a refundable sales credit, which helps those with lower incomes finance the cost of sale tax, is a more progressive way of doing things. I think that is something we will be exploring again during the process of consultation.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I always understood that a White Paper was a statement of policy and that if the Government wanted to put forward options, which it has had the chance to do over the last two and a half years, it could come up with a Green Paper or possibly a Yellow Paper if it were scared of the reaction of Canadians to a tax on food.

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister now intending to implement the proposals for personal and corporate taxes for 1988? Is it his real intention to hide behind these options and save the bad news on sales tax until after the 1989 campaign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a White Paper. I have made it clear yesterday, and I have said it again three times. I will say it once again for the Hon. Member—there will be one proposal on a comprehensive multi-stage sales tax. There are three mechanisms which we can use to implement that proposal. That is what we will be discussing with the interested parties following the release of the paper.

As far as the time is concerned, I think the Hon. Member will have to wait. The whole process of timing, consultation, legislation, and implementation will be set out at the time of the White Paper.

* * *

[Translation]

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE COMMITMENT TO RETAIN REDUCED TAX RATES FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday he completely forgot about small business. In his remarks on the tax reform he did not say a word about it. Some 70 per cent of new jobs in Canada are created by small and medium-sized businesses, and if each such company is encouraged to create one more job, unemployment in this country will be drastically reduced. With respect to his tax system proposition as it applies to corporations, is the Minister committed to retain reduced tax rates for small businesses to encourage them to expand and create yet more jobs?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government has never forgotten small business, unlike the Party of which he is a Member. We have never forgotten small business. In every Budget I have introduced in the House there has been something which has helped small business create jobs.

• (1430)

Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to reflect on the 750,000 jobs that have been created, an outstanding job-creation record. One of the reasons for that is that the Government has supported the small business community, and that support will continue.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, small businessmen are fed up with rhetoric from the Minister of Finance. They want action. Whether there will be a business transfer tax, a value added tax or a national multi-stage sales tax, small businesses will pay more. Will the Minister announce today that under the new tax reform, small businesses will be exempted from federal sales taxes so they can create new jobs? Stop kidding and tell people how it is.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to invite the Hon. Member to meetings I have had with members of the small business community—

Mr. Gagliano: I had them too.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He says he did. Once in a while he does. If he would care to join me, he will see that what I am saying is not rhetoric.

My colleague just reminded me that John Bulloch, the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, has referred either to my last Budget or the one before that as being a block-buster Budget, a Budget that would help the small business community create more jobs. That is what the Government stands for.

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance knows only too well that since he has been Minister of Finance we have seen personal income tax rates increase. According to the comment he made yesterday, they will now decrease.

My question is very straightforward. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to say that after his tax reform package has been introduced, Canadians who pay personal taxes, federal taxes and excise taxes will actually be paying less federal tax, or will they be paying more?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand what the Hon. Member means when he says less federal tax. Could he explain that to me? He has made a very general statement.

TAX PAID BY AVERAGE CANADIAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I hope that this is not a supplementary question but I suspect that it is. After the tax reform the Minister has in mind, if an average Canadian were to add up the federal tax, the personal tax, the federal excise tax and the federal sales tax he or she pays, will the amount of money he or she will be paying be more or less than today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I got everything the Hon. Member said, after tax reform the average Canadian—I think I will expand on what he said—a good majority of Canadians will be paying less tax.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PRIME MINISTER'S TOUR OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last night the Conservative Party filled only half the hall in Lethbridge, Alberta, and gave the Prime Minister a very cool reception. Since Tories are not willing to come out to meet the Prime Minister and are giving him a cool reception, will the Deputy Prime Minister change the tour so that ordinary farmers and representatives of farm organizations will have an opportunity to meet with the Prime Minister to tell him of their concerns? Not only will they fill the hall but they will give him a warmer reception.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, given the record of the Hon. Member, one would think he would rely upon better research than the news media for the background of his question. I just spoke to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills who advised me that there were over 600 people at the function. It was an incredibly warm audience. There were eight or nine standing ovations. It was very typical of a southern Alberta warm welcome and the Prime Minister was very warmly received.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it was probably the outdoor temperature, not the warmth of the group.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we are told that the only farm meeting the Prime Minister is having during the entire four-day tour is with the President of the local PC Association and 15 hand-picked farmers in Saskatoon. Can the Deputy Prime Minister say why the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and representatives of other farm organizations like the NFU were not invited to this meeting? On a tour of this length, why is the Prime Minister not meeting with general farm organizations and with farmers, thousands of whom are wondering what his policy will be?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this Prime Minister has met more often and more frequently with farm leaders then any other Prime Minister in the history of Canada. Day after day, this Hon. Member rises to pose questions and I really do not know where he gets his information.

The Hon. Member should know that the Prime Minister will be meeting again with farm leaders either in the last week of May or in the first week of June before he leaves to take the message to the summit meeting on behalf of Canadian agriculture.

This time the Prime Minister wants to do something I like to do, and I am sure all Members in the House like to do and that is not only to meet with farm leaders on a regular and frequent basis but to have the opportunity once in a while to talk to farmers who cannot come to Ottawa on a regular basis. That is exactly what he is doing.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—FARM CREDIT CORPORATION FORECLOSURES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the Deputy Prime Minister knows, the Prime Minister took his travelling road show to Lethbridge last night and was met with less than enthusiasm by staunch Conservative supporters.

Why did the Prime Minister not make two announcements last night, announcements western farmers want to hear now? Why did he not announce that there would be a sufficient deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year and why did he not announce the reversal of the lifting of the moratorium on FCC loans? Why did he not do that rather than give western Canadians another Trudeau-style lecture about Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious why the Prime Minister did not make those announcements when he was in western Canada. The Prime Minister is simply keeping the commitment my colleague, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and I made when we met with farm leaders on March 5. A very strong warning was sent out at that time that indeed we do not need to send out messages that would encourage farmers to do certain things other than to plan their 1987 cropping patterns based on market signals. That was the message that was sent, and I have said that over and over again. If the Hon. Member does not have a copy of that press release, I would be happy to have the one in front of me copied and sent across to him for his information.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION PLAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is obviously ignoring the wheat pools' recent call for a commitment on a deficiency payment now, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister can tell the House why, when the Prime Minister made one of his very rare appearances in western Canada, he did not announce the Government's long-awaited western diversification plan? Why is the Government taking so long to announce its plans? Why is it so slow?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, very simply, if we had announced a plan without consulting with westerners, farmers, the energy sector and other groups as the Prime Minister is now doing, the Hon. Member would have condemned our action. This Government consults. It works with the provinces and the industries.

Mr. Nystrom: With the wheat pools?

Mr. Mazankowski: It works with the wheat pools, and I must take exception, as I am sure the wheat pools will, to the cheap political opportunism in which the Hon. Member is engaged. The members of the pools indicated that, if it was convenient, they would be prepared to meet with the Prime Minister but that they have met with him on various occasions and will be meeting with him again. I wish the Hon. Member would stop using the wheat pools as a cheap political trick. It does him no good and it does the wheat pools no good.

* * *

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

FORD'S PURCHASE OF VERSATILE FARM IMPLEMENT COMPANY—PROTECTION OF WORKERS' JOBS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister will recall that in February the Government announced a $45 million loan to Ford in order to help it purchase the Versatile Farm Implement Company in Winnipeg, based upon the condition that Ford would seek to preserve and guarantee the jobs of the workers.

• (1440)

Can the Minister explain why, as of May 2 when the deal was to be finalized, many of the management and clerical staff of Versatile had yet to be given any form of job guarantee? Ford refuses to provide any kind of assurance to those workers. Does the Government intend, as a condition of its loan, to require Ford to live up to the commitments it made at that time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there were some specific commitments and undertakings that Ford Motor Co. agreed to. I am not aware of any failure on their part but I will certainly undertake to make inquiries and get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

PLANNED CLOSURE OF VERSATILE DEALERSHIPS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister say whether the Minister responsible or the Cabinet has authorized Ford's proposed plan to close down a minimum of 65 Versatile dealerships in western Canada even though that again runs contrary to the commitments made at the time of the loan to preserve the dealer network? As the Minister knows, that network is extraordinarily important and valuable to the farmers of western Canada. Can we get the assurance that the Government will hold Ford to its commitment to maintain those dealerships?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am not aware of the allegations that the Hon. Member has made. However, clearly one of the conditions taken into account during consideration of this transaction was that there should remain a strong dealer organization. I think there was a fairly clear understanding on that part, but again I will make inquiries and get back to the Hon. Member.

* * *

EMERGENCY MEASURES

POTENTIAL FOR CIVIL RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. One item of the Government's mandate was to deal with the Emergency Planning Order which the previous Government left with us and which had a potential for serious civil rights violations. I would like the assurance of the Minister that that item will be taken care of so that the Canadian people do not have to fear any kind of civil rights violations in the future.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have also had long-standing concerns about the Emergency Planning Order issued under the authority of the Royal Prerogative. I do not want to scoop the White Paper but I think my hon. friend will be receiving good news on that very shortly.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It concerns those Canadians, mainly from Newfoundland, who were held in a concentration camp in Algeria during World War II. Those veterans are being denied benefits as prisoners of war due to a technicality, as the Minister knows. The Minister has a reputation for giving veterans the benefit of the doubt if there is any dispute between them and the Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Given that reputation, and since there is absolutely no doubt at all that those Canadians were indeed prisoners of war, will the Minister assure the House and those veterans that they will have their claims approved by his Department?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Beaches for, as usual, putting his question very simply and accurately. The present legislation does not permit us to pay prisoner of war compensation to veterans interned in a neutral country. However, I am very sympathetic to the idea of doing everything possible to deal with deserving cases. With that in mind my officials have been working on a solution to this problem which will be brought forward just as soon as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, just before Question Period I spoke to Mr. Jim Templeton, one of those prisoners, and he tells me they have been waiting since 1976 for the amendments to be brought before the House. I ask the Minister to bring them in not "as soon as possible" but within the next couple of weeks. I can assure him that if he does he will have the full support of this Party in seeing that they are passed speedily by this House.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well aware of what the Department of Veterans Affairs has been able to do to speed up the pension process greatly. I agree with him that this matter has been hanging fire far too long. I must also tell him it is one of those matters that was not brought to my attention earlier. Now that it has been I can assure him that I abhor delay just as much as he does and this matter will be brought forward and dealt with just as soon as it is possible to do so. I cannot do it any quicker than that.

TERMS OF ACT PASSED IN 1976

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. He can take another bow or two and the House will not mind. We are pleased with the tone of his answers today. It is much better than yesterday's answers by the individual sitting in for him.

The 1976 Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act says that compensation can be paid to those Canadian servicemen who were held by a power engaged in activities against the Allies. Would the Minister not agree that Vichy France, which held those 22 Canadians at Laghouat, Algeria, was a power engaged in activities against the allied forces? Therefore, even under the terminology of the 1976 Act, these 22 Canadians ought to qualify for a pension under the Act.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the country concerned has always been considered by this Government as a neutral country during World War II. For that reason it is impossible, I am advised, to pay this compensation. However, as I said to the Hon. Member for Beaches, now that the matter has come to my attention I am very sympathetic.

I cannot say why this matter was not looked after by the previous Government, why it went on as long as it did. I am sorry it did. I quite sympathize with the veterans concerned. I can assure them that this matter will be cleaned up just as soon as I can have it cleaned up.

INTERPRETATION OF ACT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the House should note that General Charles de Gaulle did not consider Vichy France to be a neutral power. It did not stop him from arresting and prosecuting the President of Vichy France and putting to death many of the collaborators in that administration.

I want to join with my friend in the NDP in saying that this Party is prepared to see immediate passage of whatever amendments are required to ensure that these 22 Canadian servicemen, including seven from my province, are compensated. I believe the Government would be correct in interpreting the Act as presently written as saying those servicemen were held by a power engaged in activities against the Allies. I ask him to move as expeditiously as possible.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): All I can say once again is that the particular Government concerned was always considered by the Canadian Government to be a power not engaged in warfare with the Canadian Government. That is that. Having said that, I can assure him that I will do everything possible to see what I consider to have been a wrong done to these veterans over a long period of time is righted as quickly as possible.

* * *

• (1450)

LITERACY

FUNCTIONALLY ILLITERATE ADULTS—NEED FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. A discussion document which the Secretary of State has tells him and Canadians that there are many more functionally illiterate adults in Canada than the estimate we had of 5 million.

The paper says:

> —competitiveness of the Canadian economy in the world market is threatened when a large body of workers do not meet minimal requirements of literacy.

Is it not time that the federal Government got together with the provinces with a real program to attack this very serious situation which will have such adverse effects on all Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Secretary of State, I would like to point out that the question put by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North is a relevant one, and that the Secretary of State is working very hard on this matter. In fact, tomorrow a meeting will be held in Toronto with agencies that are directly concerned with these issues, to try and identify various avenues that could be explored to find a solution to this very serious problem.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET DEADLINE FOR ENDING ILLITERACY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there are small programs in his Department and in those of the Solicitor General and the Secretary of State. He knows that those are only small programs and that the provincial programs are very small as well.

Is it not time that Canada does what some of the underdeveloped countries have done, that is, to set a target of solving the problem in 10 years? That will require a major joint effort by the federal and provincial Governments and funds to do the job. Is it not time to stop talking and start doing something?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am merely repeating what I said earlier. Obviously, all Canadians are aware of the urgency of the matter you are raising and realize that co-operation is essential, not only with the provinces but with all parties concerned. That is the purpose of tomorrow's meeting, and it is a matter the Secretary of State, in co-operation with the Minister of State for Youth, is giving very serious attention, and we expect to be able to provide some answers in the near future.

* * *

[English]

REFUGEES

FIRST STEP IN DETERMINATION PROCEDURE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration and is with regard to the new refugee legislation which Rabbi Gunther Plaut, author of a government commissioned study on refugees, described as paramount to "building a Berlin Wall around Canada".

In answer to my question in the House yesterday the Minister said: "the first step is not a pre-screening. It is a first step to a claimant's right to demonstrate whether he has a personal fear of persecution".

Will the Minister now come clean and acknowledge that this answer was completely false, that a claimant from a safe third country has no right to present his claim, has no opportunity to prove and be judged on his personal fear of persecution, and will be refused entry to the refugee board and sent packing? Will he, for once, give Canadians the straight goods?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Member has read the Bill. In fact, he may not have even bought the newspaper which had a graph which clearly illustrated the steps. I would be happy to send it to him.

It is clear that in the first step the claimant is met by the adjudicator and a member of the independent Refugee Determination Board. They have two tests, the first of which is objective criteria. Does he have refugee status established elsewhere? Is he returnable to a safe third country?

Notwithstanding that, they listen thoughtfully because there is another low threshold discretion which allows them, if they believe there is even a slim chance that the life, limb or liberty of that person is at risk, to refer him to step two within 10 days to begin a hearing before the independent Refugee Determination Board.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should stop right now manipulating and misleading public opinion. He knows that he cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT OF NEW LEGISLATION ON OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister respond to the growing legitimate concerns and criticisms that since Canada is one of the first countries in the world to legislate a safe third country concept it will trigger other nations to do likewise, thereby jeopardizing an international solution to an international problem? What will he tell Canadians when the world's 15 million refugees, facing closed doors and no options, not only seek the back doors of countries but, in the process of their human desperation, tear the doors off the hinges?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I hear Canadians saying that we are finally cleaning up the mess which was left to us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: Genuine refugees will benefit. We will curb the abusers. The frauds are out.

The Member talks of safe countries. The Cabinet will put forward a list at the appropriate time. We will have stringent criteria.

Mr. Marchi: That's nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Weiner: We understand that it is a matter of life and death. We will seek the widest consultation and advice possible from all groups to ensure that we are informed of the human rights records of the country, its record of protecting all refugees and nationals of that kind.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be very careful with every individual and will have an agreement in place before we do anything.

* * *

DISASTERS

SINKING OF FISHING VESSEL SCOTIA CAPE—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Will the Government launch a judicial inquiry into the sinking of the fishing vessel Scotia Cape and the tragic loss of seven lives last January?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Scotia Cape left the Port of Steveston, B.C., on January 28 and did not make radio contact as expected on February 5. As a result of that, the Minister of Transport has initiated a preliminary investigation as is his normal practice. That report has now been received by the Minister of Transport. It will be released and subsequent action will be taken when the Minister has had a chance to consider it carefully.

EFFECT OF FISHING QUOTAS ON VESSEL SAFETY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister have his department launch an inquiry into how the quota system imposed by DFO and the openings and closings of fishing seasons possibly contributed to the loss of 14 lives on the coast of British Columbia last year and the loss of seven lives this year?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, at my request last autumn my department established a fishing vessels safety working group which is looking into the relationship between fishing practices and carrying practices, with regard to both gear and catch, in terms of any influence those practices might have on vessel safety.

I must point out that in the case of the disappearance of the Scotia Cape there was evidence of very extreme weather conditions in the area. Absolutely no evidence has been found to give us any indication of what might have led to that disappearance.

Oral Questions

PORNOGRAPHY

REQUEST THAT BILL BE DIVIDED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Government House Leader. The Government has seen the negative reaction to Bill C-54, the pornography Bill, not only from the Opposition but from all groups in the country which are deeply concerned about the serious issue of pornography. It is obvious that it will take a long time for the Bill to go through the House of Commons and the Senate.

Therefore, would the Government be prepared to divide the Bill so that we can move forward quickly with the tougher measures on which there is agreement; child pornography, violent pornography, and degradation pornography, and put aside for more consideration the portions of the Bill which are so controversial and unacceptable?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the Hon. Member's assertion that this Bill is not a popular piece of legislation. I believe this is the first question about it which has been raised by the Opposition since it was tabled.

In response to his question about dividing the Bill, he may want to discuss that with the Minister, if he has not already done so. I think that would be more appropriate than engaging in negotiations with respect to House business on the floor during Question Period.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PREPARED TO RECONSIDER BILL'S DEFINITION OF PORNOGRAPHY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Would the Government be prepared to reconsider its definition in the Bill of the term "pornography", which really identifies all sexuality as being pornography?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): If the Hon. Member has some definite opinions about the contents of the Bill, he will certainly have an adequate opportunity to express those during the course of the debate or during the hearings. In the meantime, if the Hon. Member has any suggestions, positive or otherwise, he may want to consider discussing them with the Hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that there will be a question and a supplementary from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Don Valley East, and that will conclude Question Period.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last November in 1986 the Deputy Prime Minister outlined the bare bones of a seven point economic recovery program for northern Ontario. On March 31, 1987, the Deputy Prime Minister said that the development of this policy "was in its final stages", and it would be announced "very soon".

Six months after announcing a seven point program, we still have no action. There are over 800,000 people in northern Ontario. One out of every six is unemployed. I want to know when are we going to see a real effort to strengthen and diversify the economy of this long neglected region of the country.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. It has been a long neglected region of the country and this Government is intending to react in a very positive way. That process is ongoing and my answer is the same, it will be very soon.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the people of northern Ontario are not prepared to think in terms of eons and eons for some action. God knows, we waited long enough for action from the Liberal Government, the predecessor to this Government, and we are not prepared to wait that long again.

Some Hon. Members: Right on, John!

STUDY ON SINGLE-INDUSTRY TOWNS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): There are over 100 single-industry towns scattered across northern Ontario. The advisory council to the Department of Employment and Immigration has recently done a study on single-industry towns. It has made some very valuable recommendations with respect to single-industry towns and how to diversify them. Has the Deputy Prime Minister seen this report? And has he integrated the report into the proposed economic packet for northern Ontario for which he says we are going to have to wait until "soon" to get a response?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I genuinely appreciate the enthusiasm of the Hon. Member and I hope that when the package is unveiled he will be just as enthusiastic in his support.

Mr. Rodriguez: When?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, all of these matters are being considered. This issue is under the aegis of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, with a great deal of input from the Hon. Solicitor General, who knows and understands the area very well, I might add.

TAX REFORM

PROPOSED COMMITTEE HEARINGS ON WHITE PAPER

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. Some members of the Opposition who have been asking questions today about tax reform are members of that committee. I think they are trying to instill fear and anxiety in the minds of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Attewell: I understand that the committee will be holding meetings across Canada after June 18 to hear the views of Canadians on the White Paper and ensure that the Minister's objectives of fairness, equity and simplicity are met. Could the Chairman confirm that this process is going to take place?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have instructed the clerk of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to call an in camera meeting to go over the process of having public hearings on tax reform after June 18 and through the late summer and fall. There is a great deal of work which has to be organized and co-ordinated for those hearings to be effective and I will be reporting on that matter to Members as we go along.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) could perhaps advise the Speaker if there is going to be the usual Thursday question.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the question which it is customary for the Opposition to ask on Thursday with respect to the program for the days and weeks to come. I hope the Government has something put together so that we can be busier.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that Friday will be an allotted day. On Monday the House will debate the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) respecting the Constitutional Accord. Tuesday will be an allotted day. On Wednesday, May 13, we will do the report stage of Bill C-37, the softwood lumber Bill and, if possible, we would like to complete third reading on the same day.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, further to the Parliamentary Secretary's statement, I would like to ask him when Bill C-50 will be tabled in the House of Commons for second reading. Will it be next week?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: At the present time, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to answer that question. I am sure that if my colleague wished to discuss it with his House Leader and give us some indication of whether they will need more than one speaker and how much time we would need, we can put that into the hopper in consideration with the other Bills.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INACCURACY IN MINISTER'S ANSWER

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege, for which I gave you notice, relates to inaccurate or improper information which impairs the ability of the House to come to a judgment about matters put before it.

In answering a question in the House yesterday about the Government's proposed refugee determination system, at page 5796 of Hansard, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) intentionally or unintentionally misled the House when he said: "the first step is not a pre-screening. It is a first step to a claimant's right to demonstrate whether he has a personal fear of persecution".

The Minister said that the claimant had the right to demonstrate whether he has a personal fear of persecution, that the first step is not a bar to his right.

I would ask you to note, Mr. Speaker, the use of the word "right", which in common parlance and in law means a power that a person possesses by law that he can assert. I would ask you, Sir, to note also the use of the words "personal fear", which indicate subjective criteria. It indicates that the claimant's personal feelings will prevail or be considered.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that anyone reading this reply would assume that the claimant in all instances can present his case and have it judged on the merits. This is just not so. It is clear from the legislation that many claimants will be barred from presenting their personal cases if they fall into a certain category of claimants, namely, if they came to Canada from a safe third country. This will be an absolute bar to their claim. No discretion will be given to the adjudicator and the refugee board member who presides at the initial hearing. There will be no opportunity to present a case, and the Minister, I would suggest, is wrong to say that the claimant has a right to demonstrate a personal fear—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

Mr. Berger: —or that there is an additional safeguard where a shred of evidence exists.

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I listened for quite a length of time to a claim by the Hon. Member that someone has intentionally or unintentionally misled the House. I am not sure whether it is a point of order or question of privilege, but I do know one thing. It is definitely debate. If we are going to have a point of order, please get to the point. This is like saying that if we rule out innuendo in questions, that would be one thing, but we are getting more innuendo in points of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That's baloney. Just sit down.

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: It is definitely debate. If we are going to have a point, then please get to it. If we are to rule out innuendo in questions, then it would be one thing. We are now getting more innuendo on points of order. This is obviously debate arising out of Question Period, which always take place in this House. I respectfully request that the Hon. Member come to his point and let us get rid of the debate.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member who raises the question of privilege, may I read Clause 48.1 of Bill C-55 to him since he probably has not read it. It would qualify the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary having listened, as I have been doing, to the comments is suggesting that this is more in the line of debate as to what the law is or is not, or what the Minister may or may not have said. I have seen the notice which comes in the form of a question of privilege. The Hon. Member suggests in his notice that something false has been put forward by the Minister in a statement that the Minister made in Question Period yesterday. It may or may not have been so, and it may or may not have been intentional. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks as soon as he properly can, keeping in mind that the question that the Chair has to decide is whether something was put forth, intentionally, in an incorrect way, or whether there is merely an ambiguity or a disagreement between Members as to what the particular proposal might or might not mean. I would ask the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) to keep that in mind and to complete his remarks.

I will hear the Minister as soon as the Hon. Member for Laurier has concluded his remarks. I will invite the Hon. Minister at that time to make any statement that may clarify the situation or may meet any of the comments made by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I will conclude briefly. I was saying at the time that I was prevented from continuing my remarks that there will be no opportunity to present a case in the event that a claimant comes from a safe third country. The Minister has been either intentionally or unintentionally inaccurate in saying that the claimant has a right to demonstrate a personal fear, or that there is an additional safeguard where a shred of evidence exists. I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no right and that no evidence will be relevant if the person comes from a safe third country.

In addition, the Minister has compounded his misleading statements by improperly changing Hansard by materially altering part of the answer that he gave in his answer to my colleague from York West yesterday. I have checked the "blues" and in the House yesterday the Minister clearly said: "... the first step is not a pre-screening". I have also viewed the video that is available to Members of the House of Commons. The Minister very clearly uses the word "not" in his remarks. However, if Your Honour will look at Hansard for yesterday you will find at page 5796 the word "not" has been deleted from Hansard.

I would suggest that what the Minister has clearly set out to do is to confuse the House to prevent it from coming to a reasoned judgment. This is a clear contempt of the House and its procedures. If you find, Mr. Speaker, that I have a prima facie question of privilege, then I am prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is getting very close to making a charge, for which there is, of course, an appropriate way of proceeding. It is not under the present procedure. However, the Chair is certainly prepared to consider this matter on the basis that there is, for whatever reason, something misleading in the response that the Minister made yesterday.

The second question related to it is the suggestion that Hansard has been altered in such a way that that is adding to the confusion. I think we will just leave it at that.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of what the Hon. Member is referring to in Hansard. My response today is the same as yesterday. Step one is not a pre-screening process. I had nothing to do with the word "not" being in or out. I repeat today: It is not a screening process. It is step one.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can help all Hon. Members. The Minister's comment is accepted by the Chair, which disposes of part of the discussion. Perhaps the Minister could address the other part of the problem.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I based my answer on Clause 48.1 of the proposed Bill C-55. It states:

> 48.1 (1) A person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have the claim determined by the Refugee Division if
>
> (a) the claimant has been recognized by any country, other than Canada, as a Convention refugee and has been issued a valid and subsisting travel document by that country pursuant to Article 28 of the Convention;
>
> (b) the claimant came to Canada from a country that has been prescribed as a safe third country for all persons or for persons of a specified class of persons of which the claimant is a member and would be allowed to return to that country, if removed from Canada, or has a right to have the claim determined therein;

Subclause (2) of Clause 48.1 states:

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(a), a person is eligible to have a claim determined by the Refugee Division if, in the opinion of the adjudicator or the member of the Refugee Division considering the claim, the person has a credible basis for a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion in the country that recognized the person as a Convention refugee.

I think that clearly indicates that there is discretion on the part of the two officers who must agree. If one of them felt that there was a shred of doubt, a shred of fear on the part of that individual, then he or she is referred to a full hearing in front of the two-member independent refugee board in a non-adversarial fashion.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. However, I respectfully submit that it confirms the point that I have tried to make. Subclause (2) quoted by the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are now getting into a debate as to what the provisions of a proposed Bill mean. I do not think that that is something I can entertain on a question of privilege.

As I understand it, the Minister has clearly stated that if there was a change in Hansard or if there was a change between what was said by the Minister and what appeared in Hansard then the Minister had nothing to do with it. As far as the Chair is concerned, that is the end of that question.

The second question the Chair has to decide is whether or not what the Minister did say was—and I am using the word brought to me by the notice of privilege—false. That is the point I will have to decide, and I will consider that as carefully as I can.

What I ask Hon. Members to realize is that when an issue comes down to one Member's interpretation or view of what a piece of legislation means as opposed to another Member's, then that is a matter of disagreement, something which happens constantly in this place and would not ordinarily be, in the absence of some intent to mislead, a matter of privilege. I assure the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) that I have his point. I will consider it extremely carefully and report back to the Chamber.

If there are other Members who wish to give any assistance to the Chair, then I will certainly hear them.

• (1520)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—YOUTH—EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rompkey:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion on Canadian youth presented by my colleague, and I would like to read the motion now:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

Mr. Speaker, I think I share the opinion of the three previous speakers, including the Member who spoke for the Liberal Party, the Member who spoke for the NDP and the Minister from the Conservative front bench. It is unfortunately true that the subject of youth is not discussed often enough in the House of Commons.

The Minister mentioned that he had expected some questions, but I would like to say to the Minister that if no questions are being asked about the particular portfolio for which he is responsible, and I may remind him that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed him to defend the interests of youth, it is up to him to raise the issue.

When a Minister says in the House that he is not getting any questions, instead of blaming the Opposition . . . I mean, Opposition Members don't blame others for the fact that they don't ask any questions! Perhaps the Minister should look closer to home and ask himself whether enough is being done for people to sit up and take notice and show an interest in the issues.

Since 1984, I have had a chance to get more involved in issues concerning senior citizens. I would like to remind the Minister, and this is not meant as criticism, of the title, position, salary, and all the benefits involved. He was not appointed to defend free trade. He was not appointed to organize the conference on the Constitution. He was appointed to deal with youth issues on a daily basis. I think that is important, and I speak from my experience with senior citizens. Since the de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions, there has been considerable organizing among this group, and they have managed, in various ways, to force the House of Commons and the various legislatures to address the needs and concerns of the elderly, an approach that has been taken very effectively by our farmers, chambers of commerce, business, small businesses, multinationals and the trade unions.

We simply must—and I deplore that it is the case in this Parliament or the previous Parliament, under the Conservatives, the Liberals, the New Democrats, it does not matter—admit that in the provincial Parliaments as well, regardless of the fact that the NDP, the PQ or the Liberals may have been in office, the sad fact is that the House of Commons or the legislative assemblies devote precious little time to youths and do not show enough concern for them.

Perhaps the explanation lies in the fact that everyone is young, but at one time or another all of us are in transition from youth to middle age and beyond. This may be why I never fail to recall that when the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) was appointed he was then the youngest Minister ever, and the same thing can be said about the new Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) when he was appointed Minister of State for Youth. Next year it will be someone still younger, a never-ending process which makes us suspect that in every Parliament it is always more of the same. Someone will point out that, because it is expected of him or her, an opposition Member is going to rise and move a motion blaming the Government for failing to show concern for young people. The benches are still in the same place, only individual Members have switched sides, and history repeats itself.

I suggest that Hon. Members deserve a word of praise for keeping the debate on a non-partisan basis so far. I would like to tell the Minister that on the basis of statistical data, we could certainly congratulate one another and brag about all the young Canadians who have jobs and all our promising young executives, lawyers and professionals generally. In life, no matter the colour of the Government of the day, there are always young people who function well and progress in their careers; the fact that Parliament is filled with people who were young once and that businesses are managed by administrators who were young once is proof of that.

I suggest there have always been young people who succeed, others who experience difficulties, and still others who fail miserably.

I would like to tell the Minister that it is not a matter of paternalistic attitude. I must admit that there are people who helped me when I was young and I am most grateful to them. I realize now that they might have been somewhat paternalistic in their attitude, but with hindsight, I realize that what they were doing for me was vital. I suggest that the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), our colleagues in the House of Common and all responsible people should play a vigilant and active role in this regard.

The Minister has listed and identified a series of problems. I think that, since September 4, 1984, the Government can be held partly to blame. We have had two Ministers, including one who was a complete failure and who was demoted. The new Minister took over this portfolio under difficult circumstances. The Ministry was moved from under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) to that of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). All these structural changes clearly show again that, while the Government might claim that young people are a great asset, it does not know what to do with them.

The Government does not know under whom the Minister of State should come. Within two and a half years, he has been moved from one Department to another.

What matters is not under whose jurisdiction the Minister of State (Youth) should be, or which seat he should occupy in the House, but to have a person who has at heart the interests of young people and who is aware that his or her task is not going to be easy. The same applies to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of State for the Status of Women. These portfolios are not easy, so that the individuals who accept these responsibilities must work very hard every day, to increase the awareness of their colleagues who are responsible for promoting the interests of other groups in our society. You have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), whose first responsibility at the Cabinet table is to make representations that are genuine representations made by farmers, that are meeting real needs. And the Minister of State (Youth) must ensure that in the course of each discussion, each budget preparation, each Throne Speech, each move, each legislation, youth priorities are included. He cannot rely on his other colleagues. Not because of a lack of competence or whatever, but simply because each one of them has his own responsibilities and youth must be defended, they must be defended more strenuously because of a tendency to forget them.

And when I refer to a tendency to forget, it is true that as the Minister suggests there may be a tendency to refer to them in the course of speeches, but in reality, in actual moves, they become less apparent in terms of action.

The Minister mentioned he identified the problem following studies that were commissioned. They have come to identify that the problem is caused by young people leaving school, the lack of education—the so-called school drop-outs.

I have a feeling they could have recognized that problem during their first year, because it is not new. Everyone knew about it. What people and I would like to hear—and I hope, I even am convinced the Minister will rise to tell us—is what concrete actions are taken. Not free trade that can create more jobs for more people and more people will have jobs, like Hygrade sausages. The more people eat them, the fresher they are, and the fresher they are, the more people eat them. What we want is specific concerns for that age group, the young in need.

Right now, when you look at newspaper reports, after those studies, half of the young transients attempted to commit suicide. This is serious. Even if they can boast of figures, 1,000 more jobs than last year were created, when we look at those headlines, the wording, the situations, there is no reason to be proud and it is dishonest to rejoice over achievements when there are still people in difficult situations.

• (1530)

According to an article on a study being carried out by the department of lowertown community health, thousands of young people, to survive, are involved in drug testing. In order to earn additional income, they agree to serve as guinea pigs for drug manufacturing companies. Confronted with such evidence, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the statistical data with which the Minister tried to impress me, this being the International Year of Migrants, there being 10 thousand migrants in the Greater Montreal area, most of them under 30 years of age, and a great many young people quitting school a few years before getting their diploma, I can understand why, today, instead of speaking to us, the Minister would rather travel around Canada. Yet, so that we may repeat it to the young people of our ridings, I would like the Minister to say: Have hope, for the Government is going to take such and such action. When I raise this issue, the Minister could reply: Challenge '87 or Challenge '86 were a continuation of what Liberals have done. They take a program, leave out the word "Summer", replace it with another, add three of four commas, and change the means of implementation, but the problem remains the same: It is the same scenario, only the package is different.

I think the time has come for the Minister to stop making speeches, recognize at last the need to help young Canadians and explain how the budgetary envelope which was earmarked for them will be spent. It is a fact that . . . I, for one, would fight the federal Government if it wanted to go over the heads of Quebec and the other provinces to impose an education or labour training program; I would stand up in the House to fight a Government which would attempt that, whatever its political stripe. But in order to convince the provinces to invest more to help these young people continue their education instead of giving up and joining the labour force, the federal Government, rather than making cuts in the equalization payments, should make money available to the provinces, to Quebec, to Alberta, to Vancouver, and say: Here is the situation. Now, we have a possible solution to remedy this situation and give an even chance to all young Canadians. We are going to put up the money and work together to try to help not only our young people of today, but those of tomorrow. It is possible that seven or more years ago, the Minister benefited from government-sponsored Summer Employment Programs. Which means, therefore, that what we do for our young people of today maybe useful again tomorrow, or five or 10 years down the line.

There is another aspect which I would like the Minister to ponder. Why do young people quit school so early? In my own working-class riding which includes a poor neighbourhood, it is often because their families are short of money. With respect to certain programs, I know that young people attending school cannot help but notice that some of their classmates come from families which are fairly well-to-do and whose parents can afford to spend a few extra dollars on clothes for their children, or others who are more on the ball and happen to know somebody who will give them part-time jobs so they can afford to go out now and then. These young people know that their parents cannot even give them pocket money. A family on social welfare is a good example. When somebody at school decides to organize a summer camp and proposes to charge $25 or $50 per child, well the two- or three-child family on social welfare finds itself in a rather ackward situation. Think in terms of a young boy or girl aged 16 or 17 who has to tell the teacher: I cannot go because my mother said we have no money.

So instead of telling the truth—indeed truth is hard to tell sometimes—they will come up with every kind of excuses and say: Well, I am not interested, it is not worthwhile. After a while you realize that you cannot keep up with the others, so you just stay away from them. Any secondary school student having a hard time keeping up with his schoolmates because his parents do not have enough money to help him will certainly not be very enthusiastic about enrolling in a junior college. He knows that his parents can barely afford to help him pay for a summer camp or a ski excursion in winter, so he does not expect them to pay his tuition fees and send him to university.

These young people too want to enjoy life a little, so they look around and simply decide to find a job. They hear about a place where help is needed, $4 an hour, minimum wages of course, but $4 an hour or a minimum wage of $200 a week is better than nothing at all. This is how some young people join the labour force, and after a while they lose any ambition to go back to school. Unfortunately we see that every day.

There is another problem which I would like the Minister to monitor very closely. The day before yesterday there was a coalition against discrimination concerning the provincial age limits with respect to social assistance. I think the Minister of State for Youth has a role to play. He knows that in Quebec, although a Liberal administration is now in office, this system was set up under the PQ Government. Young people in Quebec who are on social welfare get $200 less than a 31-years old. The reason why in Quebec right now, and in other provinces for that matter—and I hope the Minister will take upon himself at the next Cabinet meeting the mandate to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to convene his provincial Governments and ask them to eliminate discrimination against the young. Let us look at the impact on a young man or girl who now gets $196 a month—$196 a month! Is there someone here or who is following this debate who can pay rent, buy clothing, buy food with $196 a month? No. But this is what we force them to do. This is what we are telling them, to do.

What is there for them to do?

Prostitution, and it is not for nothing that the Lafontaine Park area is full of young boy and girl prostitutes. Then there is theft. And drugs. And from there, in order to correct all those errors we are making or letting commit now, to solve them they will suggest: Good, let us impose capital punishment because that cannot go on, we will try and scare them. Not so! That is not the solution to help them, and we must start right now. I dare hope the Minister will say whether he intends to speak to his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and ask him to convene the provincial Ministers in charge, including the Quebec Minister, and say: The Canadian Government is paying for 50 per cent of social assistance. But we would like or wish that discrimination to stop. Could you, within a short period of time, amend that so that there is no discrimination against the young, both in Quebec and other provinces that behave the same way.

I would also like the Minister to tell us what are the specific means of action. And I was somewhat expecting today, in view of the debate, that he would take this opportunity to say: Here, the Government would have liked to do something, but in view of the weakness of the previous Minister of State for Youth, and in view of the fact that I am just getting involved with my new responsibilities, which has taken some time, the problems have now been identified. This we know, that we know. Here is what a Government can do, in co-operation with provinces and with municipalities, and I invite opposition Parties to help us, to support us as fast as possible. First, in the short term this measure would be implemented as a way of saying that the No. 1 problem for the vast majority of young people is not employment creation, but training. The solution is in training, and that is where I would put the money . . . Training does not necessarily mean going back to school, because in many cases, young people who dropped out of ninth or tenth grade, even if you gave them the money—Mr. Chairman, I still have two minutes to go—even if you gave them the money, they would not want to go back to school, they dropped out for some good reason. There is a percentage of drop-outs, and I do not think that there is just one solution to bring about a fair and true answer to that problem. Those solutions include providing the necessary funds not only for those who want to go back to school, but also for those who would like to get on-the-job training, especially young people, and to provide funds that would help businesses provide them with that kind of training not just for six months, but for a longer period. The federal or provincial Government, or the federal Governement in co-operation with provincial Governments, would assume a 50 per cent share of the training expenses, but the company would make a commitment to keep that young man or young woman for a year, a year and a half or two years.

• (1540)

These are four or five solutions. What I would like the Minister to tell us now, however, is how we should deal with the problem of our young people. When I talk about the problem of young people, I am not talking about all the young people of Canada. It may be that three-quarters of them do not have any problem. They do not need us, and that is good for them. But our role is not to make legislations that will complicate matters for them. We should in fact make sure that every young man and every young woman in Canada can have the same opportunities as we had, the same opportunities to succeed in life, not in the way that we think is better, but in the way that they would like to choose.

In this respect, we all know that in this time and age, and in former times, many young people managed just by themselves, and get along without any problem. Some of them could rely on their father, and they had no need of anyone else, because their daddy could give them everything they needed. For others, things were different. Governments must provide alternatives and some form of incentive or encouragement to those who need it most; if someone does not need any help, so much the better.

Mr. Speaker, my time is running out. I would like to conclude by congratulating my colleague for bringing up that subject. However, I cannot extend such congratulations to the Minister because I would have liked him to say: "Well! We are going to announce such and such a solution by such a date." I can tell the Minister that, even if Opposition Members don't ask him any questions, he can initiate a debate if he has anything interesting to say, he can introduce programs, he can table corrective Bills. He does not have to wait to be prodded by us. I hope that in his comments or questions we will have precise answers for the good of our young people.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, first of all, my compliments to the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). He tends to be quite forthright in his comments here in the House, but from the tone of today's debate you would think there must be something in the air, since Members have been so moderate in their comments compared with what we have come to expect. I must say I am very pleased.

I would first like to say a few words about the Ministry of State for Youth to put the creation of this ministry into perspective.

The ministry was created on very short notice in January 1984, at a time when youth unemployment was particularly high following the recession.

The Minister's mandate was two fold. It included speaking for youth in Cabinet, although I don't think the Minister was alone in addressing this particular subject.

The second part of the Minister's mandate consisted in co-ordinating the federal Government's activities directed toward youth. A ministry of state tends to represent a particular sector of the economy or a particular group within our society. We have, for instance, the Ministry of State (Forestry) and the Ministry of State for Mining. There is the Ministry of State for Status of Women and the Ministry of State for Youth. A Ministry of State is by definition attached to a senior department, and in this case, it was, I believe, the Department of the Secretary of State, or at least initially. During International Youth Year, a special fund containing $20 million was created and the money distributed over a period of 18 months across Canada, and that was as it should be. After International Youth Year, this temporary program was terminated, as expected, and people were left with the impression, and some wanted to give that impression deliberately, that the ministry had become an empty shell. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Ministry of State for Youth still has the same function. It has always been a ministry of state and it always will, and I have never heard the NDP or the federal Liberals say that we intended to make the Ministry of State (Youth) into something else. If I am mistaken, I wish they would say so today, and I think Canadians should know.

That being said, in the spring of 1986, the Ministry of State for Youth was transferred to the Department of Employment and Immigration, making available all the resources we find within this major department with more than 27,000 employees. My responsibilities include, for instance, the Student Summer Employment Program. I am also responsible for reviewing occupational training programs with the provinces, all of which involves a budget of $145 million annually. So the Ministry of State for Youth has specific responsibilities.

On another subject, Mr. Speaker, I may recall the basic principles that apply to youth employment, and I am referring to labour market conditions and how these affect young workers. The first principle is, that when conditions on the labour market are good and the economy is in good shape, young people have jobs. When the economy declines or is in bad shape, young people are the first to be out of a job, and when the economy recovers, they are the last to be called back. The answer is therefore that if we want young people to be able to enter the labour market, the economy must be in good shape. And I think all Canadians will agree that this Government has been able to deliver the goods in this respect. More than any other group in society, youth is particularly sensitive to the state of the economy, and it is therefore extremely important to allow for this factor.

Second, in 1985 the Government introduced its job strategy which is a tremendous step forward in the way we tend to treat young people, in fact all Canadians, on the labour market.

The job strategy has three fundamental objectives, at least I consider them to be fundamental. First, the emphasis is on training, which has not always been the case in previous programs.

Second, we feel that job creation should be the result of a partnership approach. We must seek other partners if we want to create permanent jobs in our society, and that is why we have also involved the private sector in some of our programs, since after all, most jobs are created in the private sector. However, if we want to go further than that, we have to explain to the private sector that it should include a training element within the job environment, if we want Canada to remain competitive in the years to come.

Third, the job strategy focuses on the long-term unemployed, in recognition of the fact that the problems are greater in this group.

What we must understand today... When we were planning our strategies, as I mentioned earlier, we looked at what was happening in Canada. The Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie said: Job creation is another problem. He is right, in that job creation was foremost in our minds when we decided to go ahead with our trade policy. Our reasoning was as follows: Canada is a country that exports and will create its wealth on the basis of the opportunities it has to do business on international markets. That is why we have embarked on negotiations with the Americans, and we are pursuing our initiative within the GATT system. That is how we see the situation. And having made that choice, we have to develop technologies to maintain our position on international markets. Third, we must develop labour market policies.

• (1550)

In 1987, the difference is that in Canada today, despite the present unemployment rate, we have jobs that cannot be filled because there are no qualified workers to fill them. All young people who will join the labour market in the coming years will need at least such analytic abilities and training as will enable them to remain in the labour force and change jobs—for indeed they will be expected to change jobs—and unless they do have such abilities the labour market will be closed to them, or they will simply have to accept unchallenging work.

The ultimate outcome of all this could very well be that many young people will be facing this kind of situation: employment opportunities might open up for them, but even then they would not be qualified simply because they lack the necessary basic training.

You referred to your generation or our generation and you say: We want the same opportunities. Indeed it is important to keep that in mind and make people understand that anyone belonging to the preceeding generations of the 1950s could quit school without a diploma and, in most cases, land a job in a country where, as a result of World War II, the economic growth was practically limitless until the 1970s. But the situation has changed drastically since then and today we have to come to grips with the new reality.

All such issues being considered, Mr. Speaker, we have to seek new approaches. The initial step has been taken: first identify the youth problem, which is the transition from school benches to labour market. That is the most urgent problem for this Government. Hopefully you will join us within the consensus we now see emerging in Canada. If that is the case, I would like him to say so clearly. This being said, we then turn back to the provinces and tell them: The education system should be enlarged, should be developped to provide more options.

Thirdly, young people should be encouraged to remain within the system, and in that respect, it might prove necessary to harmonize social policies which make it too tempting in some cases for young people to quit, to drop out. If it is too easy for young people to drop out of school and find themselves in a situation where they will somehow manage to survive, we may sometimes be doing them a disservice. However, we should not create a situation— I know I am taking too much time.

Here again, we should not create a situation whereby when they drop out of school, we may not have done everything we could to keep them within the system.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to the Minister. I would have liked him to stop to talk about the social situation. The PQ has indeed attempted, as the Minister just said, to create a social situation that would no longer encourage young people to drop out of school. So they decided to make cuts and to increase poverty. I feel the Minister should instead try to improve the situation and to make things better, while the socialist system system cuts off the heads, starts at the top and brings everything down to the bottom. I feel that we should have positive measures instead to keep young people at school rather than making cuts and hurting people who drop out.

In any case, the Minister has not provided us with the concrete answers I was expecting, as I think that we all agree that in terms of manpower training, we should allow young people to spend as much time as possible getting an education and a specialized training. However, the whole process depends entirely on the amounts that the federal Government is willing to give to the provinces. Suppose you give me a three million dollar budget for my constituency—and this morning, you were boasting about publishing your guide for youth, but I have brought mine which I published four years ago, the Guide des services aux jeunes, the Guide de recherche en emploi, Comment faire le Bureau d'action-jeunesse. So if you give me a three million dollar budget for my constituency, and if there are funds in every constituency to make sure that young people get more education, get more money, more specialized training, more training, we are going to solve part of the problems. However, we should also be concerned with employment creation, because it is not good enough to train those young people. We get young people with plenty of diplomas. So what we may have is just the opposite: Do we take him? He has a degree, but no experience. So he goes back to school, graduates in another field, and files another application. Sorry, you have no experience. So he sits for another degree! So now he is full of degrees up to here, and he is still unemployed, and so he comes to apply for a job. "My dear Sir, you have too many degrees, you know, you deserve more than this". But the guy has nothing, he is on welfare. There are lawyers on welfare, engineers, architects. And there are people in between. Because now, if you go full speed, they are being trained and trained, everyone wants to be over-trained. But the guy will say: I don't hire you, you are much too over-trained, you would steal my job away from me, you would become the boss. You are more qualified than I am. This way everyone will displace Members in this House.

But again, all that is intentions. We know what the problems are. But my view is that what is needed to solve those problems is money.

Unfortunately, this is what I would have liked the Minister to say. I would have liked him to tell us that his Government, apart from speeches, starting from next week, will double education funding, will give provinces, especially for manpower training, a special envelope for high-school dropouts. Well, if we injected the $20 million, and it is my feeling that that would not be too much, $20 million across the land for each province that wants to have a special program for youth to go back, either to school or the work place, specialisation, manpower training, well, I think we would all say hear, hear! We would pass that the same day, in half an hour. It would be a giant step, and we would bring the Senators here so that everything happened right away and everyone would be happy and would go and announce the good news in the constituencies. We would go and check, and we would go and shake the Minister's hand.

But what we have is more speeches, Mr. Speaker, and I would have liked and I dare hope that the Minister will not wait until an opposition Member blames the Government. It is my hope there will be a debate on youth for the reason that the Minister will bring in a policy that we will all be proud to announce and to hail.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the Hon. Minister would like to answer. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to do so, and then recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie in conclusion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to give my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie an opportunity to make a real contribution to the debate today, a contribution that could allow him today, that will allow me, as a Minister, and the whole Government to advance the matter and the debate—to tell us clearly today—whether he agrees with us that the most important problem that must be addressed by young Canadians is the transition between school and the labour market, especially for those who drop out of high school, and whether his party is ready to support that—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in terms of co-operation, identifying the problem, my party will support someone who says there is a problem. Certainly it is transition. There are those who, because they are over-trained, have difficulty being hired for other jobs. In the case of other people, it is because they left too young, and still others because of lack of work experience. We agree, and my Party will be ready to support the Minister if he tables a Bill providing for $20 million funding. I said so and I repeat it, my party will support you within that same day, and if ever there is a Member who opposes, we will arrange it so it moves through. Don't worry about that. But the important thing is not identifying the problems, everyone knows the problems in Canada, this is what the people are fed up with. Everyone says: Agreed, there is such and such a problem. People say: "Is there anyone who is a "doer" and will propose solutions?" When voters put an X beside your name or mine, it is because they think: "He is the one who will solve the problems." However, I have a feeling that some of them might not put an X beside your name next time, because you are not solving the problems. They will select someone else.

You are a lawyer. If a client comes to you and then you go back to him and say: "Do you think I should do this or that," I suspect the client will say: "If you don't know what to do, I'll get myself another lawyer."

The Minister has the job. He gets $40,000 more than I do plus a limousine to do that job. If he needs help, I can provide some, I know how to drive. Senior citizens know he is responsible, and so do those who take early retirement.

Speaking of early retirement, if he wants to help young people he should encourage that, because when a company agrees to retire some employees earlier it does not fire younger people.

So, he should try to influence his senior Minister. He should tell him: "Take it easy, don't go after early retirement too much, because it is my young people you are hurting."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Tests for admission and selection of personnel—Government position. b) Official languages—Request that Solicitor General present report; the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Canada Post Corporation—Delays in mail delivery; the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins)—Children—Program to combat sexual abuse.

• (1600)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—YOUTH—EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rompkey:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today to speak on this motion and to put forward the very impressive gains which the Government has made in addressing the needs of young Canadians. I must congratulate the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) for the job he is doing with this portfolio. Not only by virtue of his age does he have an acute understanding of the problems faced by young Canadians, but also by his own experience.

When speaking of the problems of young Canadians we too frequently tend to isolate them as specific to that group. In doing so we do a disservice to young Canadians because we proceed on a false assumption to adjust their problems. Are the problems faced by a 21-year old unemployed single Canadian that much different than those of a 31-year old single unemployed Canadian or a 41-year old single unemployed Canadian? I think that in some ways the situation of the 21-year old may be far more advantageous because with the passage of time an older worker's ability to gain a job is impaired. My point is simply that, as the Minister has stated, the problems of youth must be addressed within the total economic context of the management of the country.

When we speak of the need for responsible management of Canada's resources, full development of opportunities, and exploitation of our resources we are talking about increasing the wealth and Gross Domestic Product of the country. When we speak of the need for increased and enhanced trade with other countries we are talking about the need to contribute to this country's wealth and the need to create employment for older and younger Canadians. We are talking about increased employment opportunities generally.

Those who refuse to acknowledge that economic policies of general application do not have specific rewards for this sector of our society are incorrect. When a young person grows up in a family in which one or both parents are unemployed, the lack of stable employment, a good income, and opportunity for the parents results in less advantageous social and economic circumstances. That affects the ability of a young Canadian, upon reaching the age of 18 or 20, to make decisions to take full advantage of the opportunities presented to him.

The confidence of such a young Canadian is adversely affected. There can be no doubt about that. Psychologists have done a number of studies which clearly confirm that the socio-economic circumstances in which young people grow up affect their level of ambition, the level of education ultimately achieved, and their aspirations.

When we speak of the national deficit we are not talking of something which is of no particular relevance to young Canadians. As the deficit grows the Government's ability to respond to the special needs of young Canadians decreases. Of that there can be no question. In order to implement specific programs for any group within our society we must have the resources to do so.

With one-quarter of the national Budget going to pay interest on the national debt, we do not have the ability to make the type of response which I am sure all Members want. The Government is making progress in the reduction of the deficit, which is not of recent origin. Nevertheless, in our efforts to address the problems of young Canadians we are moving aggressively to free up resources in order to be able to increase opportunities for young Canadians.

Similarly, when we speak of interest rates we are talking about improving the general economic performance in the country. It is with a stronger and more vibrant economy that young Canadians will find their niche, their opportunities, and the chance to make their own opportunities.

The general economic performance in the country is far better today than it was several years ago. There is no argument about the problem and the need to respond to it. The Government is doing something about it. There can be no serious argument on that either.

Some will say that statistics can be used in a thousand ways. Perhaps that is true, but today I will cite some statistics which clearly measure the success of our initiatives. Since the recession the average unemployment rate for young Canadians has dropped from 19.9 per cent in 1983 to 14.8 per cent in March, 1987. That is an improved situation for thousands and thousands of young Canadians. The decrease in the unemployment rate was possible because of the improved economic and management policies of the Government.

The Government has given young Canadians the opportunity to finance their educations, to put some money in the bank, and perhaps to initiate a business enterprise. We are contributing to their personal development and their level of self-confidence. Youth participation is increasing rapidly as a result.

There are three more young people per 100 in the labour market now than there were in 1982. The situation for students has also improved. In the summer of 1986, 906,000 students were employed compared to 840,000 in 1985 and 715,000 in 1982. The unemployment rate has dropped accordingly. The situation for in-school youth is particularly good. Since January 1985, the employment of in-school youth has increased by 107,000 which indicates that more students both desire employment while in school and successfully obtain it.

A wide range of programs has been implemented under the very able direction of the Minister of State for Youth. Challenge '87 is a sensible program which gives young Canadians the opportunity to gain training while they work during the summer. Not only do they get money in their pocket, they get experience. If anything has been made clear as a result of the changing labour market it is that people who wish to continue to work must be prepared to upgrade and change their skills in order to respond to the changing market needs.

The Government has placed Canada employment centres for students on campuses. On May 15 I had the pleasure of opening two such centres, one in Antigonish and one in Port Hawkesbury in my riding. Through discussions with counsellors in previous years I have learned that these centres are an invaluable contribution to assisting young Canadians find employment. We also have a co-op educational program, which combines theory with practical training aimed at the initiation of students into the world of work. That is a total commitment of close to $5 million.

• (1610)

To address the particular situation of native students, let me say that we have the Native Internship Program at the secondary and post-secondary levels with a total financial commitment in the area of $2.3 million. These are but some of the programs in place responding to the specific needs of young Canadians. There is also the Job Entry program which was brought in as part of the Canadian Job-Strategy program. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, from personal experience that that has resulted in considerable human benefit to my riding.

Many of my constituents have been out of work for a number of years after completion of their formal education. They are now at the point where for a number of reasons they cannot gain employment. The longer they are out of the workforce, the more difficult it is to gain employment. Our Government responded by implementing the Job Entry Program.

As part of that program, people who fall within this group are given training and counselling which included life skills. We take a person who may be demoralized and suffering from a lack of confidence, who knows very little about searching for employment, and we ask that person to participate in a program, for which he or she receives funding, whereby these weaknesses can be addressed for a period of months. As a result of this program there are people in my riding who have found employment. But for this program they would not have had that opportunity.

There are some very sensible and specialized programs to address the needs of young Canadians. The funding for the Challenge '87 program, which is a student employment program, approaches $200 million in 1987 despite the fact that our Government is suffering from rather severe financial pressure. I might add with some satisfaction that the resources under this program have been managed this year to reflect the needs of the regions of this country, the higher unemployment regions, where there is a greater need for this kind of funding. In some parts of southern Ontario, students can gain summer employment without the assistance of a program like this. In a riding such as mine, the incentives provided under the Challenge '87 program are a critically important part of the summer employment program. I congratulate the Minister for ensuring that the program is sensitive to the regional economies.

That is, of course, in keeping with the total Government commitment to enhance opportunities in Canada's regions. Some people say that the Government is totally committed to private sector funding on some theological, philosophical or ideological basis. Nothing could be further from the truth. We look at our partnership with the private sector very pragmatically. It is viewed as the means to achieve the most impressive results for young Canadians. We look at the private sector, and the partnership with it, as an opportunity to create two jobs instead of one. There is nothing ideological about it. It is our experience and our conclusion that the private sector must be involved if we are to maximize the benefits which can accrue to young Canadians.

All of this is taking place within the context of a national reconciliation and ongoing consultation with the responsible provincial Ministers. As all Hon. Members know, we have a situation in this country today where federal-provincial co-operation is far more positive than it has been in recent years. Of course, the recent Constitutional Accord of April 30 is clear evidence of what is possible within a confederation when we have a positive relationship among the Governments which make up that partnership. This kind of co-operation extends to all facets of governing and the winners are all Canadians.

When it comes to designing training programs that co-operation is essential. The federal Government wants and requires the assistance and advice of the provincial Governments. Often they know the labour market situation in their own province better than the federal Government. We want to bring together that expertise. We want the provinces to put in a share of the financial resources which are required. We want them to participate in the decision-making process. All will benefit as a result of this.

What about the students at university? We hear so much about the difficulty experienced by recent graduates in finding employment. That highlights the need for a greater emphasis on training. It is no longer good enough to go to university and receive a Bachelor of Arts degree. Students must be trained as well as educated. As I said earlier, one must be prepared to go through a number of changes in one's training. Training is something which is not restricted to only those in their twenties. Training is something which all of us must be open to consider if we wish to continue to participate in an ongoing way.

There are problems we face in terms of financial management of a country, for example, low interest rates, and there are tremendous problems faced by young Canadians. As our Government moves on its path to economic revitalization, it is moving to address the needs of Canada generally and, within this context, the needs of young Canadians. We cannot separate the special needs of young Canadians. A new plant in my riding will hire someone 20 years old, 30 years old or 40 years old. If a plant is put in a riding such as mine, the unemployment problems of all Canadians will be addressed. Let us give an opportunity to young Canadians to go to work and they will solve a lot of the other problems for themselves. We must give them the opportunity to be self-supporting and to find their own way in our society.

In closing, I would once again like to congratulate the Minister of State for Youth for the exemplary contribution he is making as a member of the Government. In his travels across the country I am sure he has developed a tremendous rapport with young Canadians.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad also to have the opportunity to address this Opposition day motion today. This motion talks of the Government's failure to provide adequate support for the education and learning and for meaningful employment and job opportunities, temporary and permanent, for the youth of today's Canada. In examining that question it would be wise to look first at the over-all situation of the youth of today's Canada.

• (1620)

They are in a position, shall we say, of following and following fairly closely, what futurist John Kettle calls the big generation, the post-war baby boom generation as it is also known. Therefore, they are in a situation quite unlike that of any other generation in history except, of course, in societies or areas devastated by war, disease or famine, in that they are outnumbered by their elders.

This leads, and has led, to some very unfortunate effects in all dimensions of social and economic participation by the young people of today's Canada, the people who we might loosely take as being in that age range from teen-age to the late twenties. Of course, these problems come at a time when problems strike the young person very hard, when lessons are learned, not necessarily either consciously or deliberately, but when the formative years of that person's adult life are being experienced.

I recall how, as one of the leading edge of the baby boom of post-war Britain, I went into a workforce that was not prepared for the massive influx that it was experiencing. Because of that sort of transition I myself experienced unemployment on more than one occasion for periods of some months. I can think back to how devastating that was in my experience. I wonder how it must be for someone today, looking at a situation in which they are not only unemployed but in which they cannot take any comfort from the thought that it is in some way inevitable that they will eventually gain employment, which was a notion I could take some comfort in simply by looking at the statistics. However, the statistics today are far worse. They are statistics to which the Government should pay some attention and with respect to which the Government should offer some remedies.

The situation that we have today, and I will go into more detail in a moment, regarding the unemployment of young people is pretty steep. The odds against the unemployed person getting that first job are high. Those who do so are fortunate and those who lose that first job often have difficulty in getting a second. Today, young people are also subjected to remedies, to nostrums and to platitudes. It is in that context that I would particularly like to take exception to the remarks of the Minister.

I have the feeling that if the Minister really felt that he had a good word to spread, some good news to proclaim, then we would have had a lot more in terms of facts and figures and a lot less philosophy and examination of ideologies than we in fact heard from the Minister. While it is indeed a platitude that the youth of today's Canada are the future of Canada, nevertheless it is an idea that if we were ever to lose grasp of it, if we were ever to let go of it, we would be taking a very serious step in the wrong direction. I feel that it is inappropriate for the Minister to devote so much time and effort to condemning what he sees as platitudes. We acknowledge that they are platitudes, but God forbid that we should ever lose sight of the idea and of the priority which they encapsulate.

The youth of today's Canada are subjected to psychological pressures other than those I have mentioned. There shortcomings are being endlessly identified. They are, after all, treated by the media in the same manner as aircraft—we only hear about the ones that crash. Very few are offering them alternatives or, indeed, even offering to discuss the alternatives that the youth of today may see.

Unemployment among young people in Canada today is endemic. There are approximately 4.5 million Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24. Approximately 500,000 of those fall into the category of unemployed. That does not include some 20,000 or 30,000 who have stopped looking for work or the estimated 180,000 underemployed.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) suggested that the Government should take some credit for the reduction in the official, and I stress the word "official", youth unemployment figures from, I believe it was, 19.7 per cent to 14.3 per cent. However, the very preposition that he used in instancing those figures illustrates the falseness of their use as a claim for credit since, as he said, coming out of the recession—and those are the facts—we naturally expect that unemployment will fall. Unemployment has fallen over-all in Canada. It has certainly not fallen more for youth in percentage terms than it has for the over-all labour force. So, frankly, for the Government to make any claim of credit for a fall in youth unemployment is an illusion that would be even more dangerous if it really believed it.

The topic of discouraged youth is one which is of course very difficult to get a handle on, very difficult to get a grasp of; but there is a belief that there are large numbers of young people who are simply not reporting, in labour force terms. These are young people who have gone back to school or who have taken some other course of training or education, which they do not really have a commitment to, simply because they know that the prospects of getting a job are so poor.

I believe that if we were to add up those youth who are unemployed, underemployed, discouraged or, shall we say, misemployed, we might well find that one-third of Canada's youth fall into that category. Yet what has the Government done? I am afraid that the answer is, precious little. To illustrate my point I will use some examples.

The Katimavik program was eliminated in February, 1986, and there has been nothing to replace it in the intervening 15 months. Some $1.5 billion was lost between 1986 and 1991 for post-secondary education. The budget of the Youth Ministry was eliminated. The funds for International Youth Year were also eliminated and no new funds were allocated for follow-up work. In terms of Challenge '87, some $30 million were set aside, in the sort of shell game that one cannot even run on the street any more, for the census, and the private sector orientation which, unfortunately, has led in many cases to employers simply covering with government dollars the training or additional hiring that they would have done from their own resources were the funds not available. Finally, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has been cut from $2.1 billion to $1.5 billion. The Canadian Jobs Strategy represents the investment that the country is making in terms of job development. It is an investment which, to a large degree, naturally, goes toward young people.

When we take into account the effects of inflation, we have seen the Government spend $3 on job creation for every $5 that was spent in 1984. That is not the sort of record that reflects credit. That is not the sort of record that will provide a hopeful future for today's youth.

We know—indeed it was raised in the House only yesterday—that young Canadians are discriminated against by the welfare systems in a number of provinces. Yet the Department of National Health and Welfare continues to pass funds on under the Canada Assistance Plan.

A statistic revealed just today is very telling in terms of the closing in, the shutting down, of opportunities for young Canadians. The following is a quote from a communiqué of the Public Service Commission of Canada dated with yesterday's date. It states:

> The number of appointments of persons 24 years of age and younger decreased from 1,836 in 1985 to 1,497.

That is a 20 per cent reduction in one year. Further on it states:

> The Public Service Commission considers this to be an area of significant concern and is taking a hard look at its recruitment programs for qualified young Canadians.

That is the picture we are getting in terms of federal government employment.

• (1630)

Katimavik is still unreplaced and the Challenge program is not upgraded to counteract the result of inflation, and indeed has been cut back during the Government's mandate.

Finally, to add insult to injury, there is the Hot-100 as it is called, "A quick guide to what the feds are doing for you". It could as well have been entitled "The federal program—Rag bag" because these programs are presented with absolutely no attempt to target the audience or identify what programs might be relevant for an individual's requirements.

Let me give an example of how the programs are grouped. Listed in the Hot-100 is on-board service training with VIA Rail, as well as post-graduate education travelling programs to the People's Republic of China. That level of consistency typifies the efforts of the Government and the ministry.

If the objective had really been to produce publications and information systems that were useful to the youth of this country, the Government would have done it in a much more targeted fashion.

The New Democratic Party task force on youth was appointed in 1985 and travelled coast to coast. It released its report in February, 1986, and we believe that the youth prospects program as outlined by my colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), would address many of the difficulties that today's youth face in Canada. In particular, we believe they would ease that transition from school to the world of employment that has been found to be so difficult. I know that many Members have spoken about the difficulties they experienced in that transition in the past. It is an important transition to which our effort should be applied.

The elimination of the youth Minister's budget was really a symptom of the problems the Government is failing to deal with in terms of programs to improve the employment and training opportunities for the youth of Canada. Much more serious is the cut-back in Established Programs Financing. Indeed, a news release by the Canadian Association of University Teachers states:

> This legislation, if passed, will have the effect of restricting not only the number of students but also the level of research that can be conducted by university faculty. Universities will again become finishing schools for the rich.

That would be a terrible consequence if, in fact, that turned out to be the case. They state further on in the newsletter:

> Post-secondary institutions, as every government study has shown, are in financial crisis.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers very correctly point to the contrast between Canada and those societies which are putting more funding into post-secondary education, such as California and Japan. The percentage of GNP spent on post-secondary education declined from 1.35 per cent in 1977-78 to 1.24 per cent in 1985.

If the motives of social justice do not provoke concern about the quality of education in Canada, there is the clear message of superior economic performance that is being sacrificed on the altar of deficit reduction. Surely that should be something that the Progressive Conservative Government can understand.

In terms of the education and training components of the youth job prospects program which my colleague described earlier, our task force had a number of recommendations on post-secondary education. There should be stable funding, and funding increases should cover the cost increases. We should look at the possibility of returning to a 10-province standard and ensure the elimination of discriminatory practices against international students. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) made some very telling points on the importance of that question.

The task force recommended an increase in both educational and employment opportunities by providing a longer term funding base and that tuition fees should be kept at approximately the current level. Most important, the task force recommends that the Government recognize the urgent need to provide all students in the secondary school system with both personal life skills and career counselling. Without that, the best system of education and training can produce less than superior results.

We placed a heavy emphasis on the importance of funding, particularly in smaller communities such as in my riding, of community organizations and non-profit organizations to provide services to youth and encourage the programs which increase the involvement and employment of young people in providing those services themselves.

Let me turn to the aboriginal youth, one group of young people in Canada in particular who are severely disadvantaged by the lack of involvement and support by the Government for programs designed to assist youth. They are part of a baby boom in this generation that occurred in the wider society in the last generation. Their numbers have led to an unprecedented crisis in the employment of young native people in this country, particularly on reserves.

Meanwhile, the Government has reduced job creation funds and redirected them to the private sector, which is generally almost absent on Indian reserve lands. To add insult to injury, the Government has cut out the housing labour component which used to be available from Canada Employment and Immigration Centres but is now absent under the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

This generation of aboriginal youth in Canada is the most highly educated ever. There has been almost a geometrical progression in the number who have taken advantage of post-secondary education and the funding assistance which is available to them as a treaty right for that education. We are faced with the unfortunate contrast of declining opportunities for employment, particularly in their home communities, with the burgeoning capacity of those native youth to handle the jobs and challenges that are available.

It appears that the Government has recently introduced a cap on the amount of funding that will be available for post-secondary education of native students. Indeed, some have been refused assistance. That was a regressive policy decision and one that was taken without an examination of the alternatives, except for the long term.

The alternatives for the short term should have been seriously considered and there should have been some consultation with national native organizations to ensure a degree of equity and understanding of what the Government's motives might be in making those cut-backs. That funding should be reinstated because the Government must have a policy of investing in the education of native youth so that they can not only face the challenges and perform in the wider society, but also perform effectively as members and ultimately as leaders in their own communities.

There is no single solution to community-based Indian education, but each community must be given consideration in the design of an education program because the majority of those who pass through that education program will continue to live in the community in which they grew up.

It is in that context that I am scandalized and extremely worried about the direction of the Government when I see some of the examples that are brought to my attention. For example, a school that burned down still has not been replaced after eight years and the students are still in temporary classrooms and accommodations. For the difference of a few tens of thousands of dollars, the takeover of a native education program by the band will be held up, even though the band has emphasized that that was simply the front end and did not represent the continuing operational requirement.

• (1640)

As a whole, the motion speaks of the need for greater government commitment and support to the youth of the country. That need is nowhere more evident than in dealing with the challenges before our aboriginal youth.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on my colleague's speech and in the first place on the issue of our Indian people. I cannot let this day pass without mentioning and acknowledging that our young Indian and native people are facing special problems and that this Government recognizes the fact.

[English]

In the context of native youth, it is important to remind ourselves that to a certain extent the anticipated solutions centered around what was indicated in the Senate youth report as being first and foremost—the problem of self-government. When I assumed the portfolio of Minister of State for Youth, that was the context and the perspective in which the problems of native youth were set. That was the background. In that context we respected the constitutional process. We all know the outcome, and I think we all sincerely regret that that was the background upon which native youth problems were set.

We have now had the outcome of the constitutional conference. I have since met with native people and native representatives. In the consultative process we will deal with the problems facing native youth. We acknowledge that they are a special case. I want the Hon. Member to know that, and I want the House to know that our commitment to native youth is in that vein.

I should like to direct a couple of questions to the Hon. Member. Do the Hon. Member and his Party agree that the most important problem—and I think he has already said it; if that is the case, perhaps he could re-emphasize it—facing young Canadian men and women today is the transition from school to work, particularly for young people who have not finished high school? Also, does the Hon. Member think and does his Party agree that provincial Governments should be involved in the attempt to design solutions and develop a consensus in Canada around these problems? Do they think that they should be included in that exercise or that at least there should be an attempt to include them in the elaboration of solutions?

All of this would take place, of course, in the spirit of respect we have for the constitutional balance and for the national reconciliation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been so successful in bringing forward.

I have another question for the Hon. Member, because the position of opposition Members on Katimavik has not always been clear. Is it the position of the New Democratic Party that if it were in government it would bring back Katimavik? If that is the case, I would be very interested in hearing it from the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister for having given his support to our young native people. I think that under the circumstances, the future of our native youth is more jeopardized than that of any other group in Canada considering that the birth rate is much higher among native people than among average Canadians, considering also that in the context of self-determination and self-direction or self-government as they like to say, but I think that relations between our youth and the authorities or the Government will improve. I hope that they will improve in the next few years and that this first generation of young native people will set those authority concepts in the context of native self-governing communities.

As for the questions which the Hon. Member directed to me on the transition between schooling and work, I am sure that the Minister has read the report published by our Party. Of course, we consider such a transition as the most important step in the maturation process of a young Canadian. Those are the reasons why we have advocated and described in our report a comprehensive and universal program to support such transition.

[English]

In so far as consulting provincial Governments is concerned, it is evident that in the design of programs it is necessary to do it within the context of Canada's federal society. If the Minister wants to be complimented on his efforts in this regard, I give it freely. I think it is entirely appropriate for him to do that.

In so far as Katimavik is concerned, my Party is not concerned that Katimavik be resurrected from the ashes as an article of faith. Rather, it is concerned that it was cancelled without any plans to replace it and without any indication from the Government about what were the deficiencies in Katimavik which led to it being terminated. The program was simply abolished. We did not obtain a clear idea of why, nor did we get anything from the Government which could be seen as a replacement for Katimavik.

When Katimavik was instituted, I was certainly one of those on whose lips the phrase "Barney's brown shirts" fell pretty readily. I was very skeptical of it originally. However, when I consider the work done by the youth in communities in my riding such as Fort Hope, Red Lake, Sioux Lookout, Fort Frances, Dryden, and Muskrat Dam I realize that some excellent things were accomplished by those who participated in the program. Nothing else has come along for the young people of Canada who are seeking work and life experiences to help them choose a career orientation which could replace the type of experience provided by Katimavik.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in the debate. When I heard of the motion of the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) last night, which referred to the abandonment of our youth and the Government's failure to provide meaningful employment and job opportunities, I could not believe that he was speaking about the Conservative Government. Therefore I called the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) and said that I wanted to set the record straight.

The Hon. Member opposite and I shared a profession in education and a dedication to young people. Obviously we are seeing it from two different points of view today. From my point of view, our time in Government has been spent dealing with the issues faced by Canadian youth and showing a great deal of leadership. I will outline that in a few minutes.

I listened to the debate this morning and I could not help but wonder whether we were talking about youths or students in that there is a difference. When we are talking about the youth of Canada, we are not necessarily confining ourselves to students. As I am sure the Hon. Member knows full well, the studies have indicated—and he learned it as an educator many years ago—that 70 per cent of the young people about whom we did not talk this morning are the ones about whom we should be talking. Those 70 per cent who do not go on to receive post-secondary education become a very real factor in dealing with youth. That is compounded by the figures which show that on average, about 250,000 young people leave school each and every year. There are 250,000 youths every year with no kind of high school certification at all. That makes for a real problem and the Government has addressed that problem.

• (1650)

I would like to talk about some of the programs we have developed specifically to deal with the facts we found when we came into Government in 1984. The Canadian Jobs Strategy did not come about by accident. A lot of thinking was done about the problems faced by Canadian society and particularly young people. Several parts of that six-prong program are specifically designed to address youth unemployment problems, and the successes of some of them are legendary.

I believe there has been some mention in this debate of the Job Entry Program. One of the significant parts of this program is the co-operative education program. The Hon. Member opposite should know that giving young people experience in the world of work while still in the formal part of their educational program is very significant and is a high priority. That is exactly what co-operative education has done and its effects have snowballed.

I can recall 10 years ago seeing very little co-operative education in Canadian schools. Now there is not one respectable school board or post-secondary institution that does not have a co-operative education program. Clearly the Government has played a lead in this, not just with talk but with money. The budget has increased in the years we have been in Government and rightly so. Money is well invested when it is invested in keeping young students on the right track, learning about the world of work, so they can enter that world and prosper.

Another feature of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is the Job Development Program and it too has been wonderful. It has helped employers design and develop jobs to fit the marketplace as it evolves, and at the same time has brought on stream young people who can learn the jobs as they develop. We are seeing all kinds of new vocations and we needed a program that would develop those new vocations as the working society changes.

These young people are very fortunate to have a program like Job Development in which to become involved so that they can learn while they are working and while they are young and so that they can be part of a whole new series of job classifications. Again, I think clear leadership has been shown on the part of the Government.

There is another series of programs with which I have had a lot of personal experience and I would like to share a bit of this experience with the Hon. Member opposite. Some of these programs have affected perhaps not his riding but certainly his province. The programs to which I refer have done very well in the Maritimes. These programs are generally classified under the title Innovations. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, Innovations provides the opportunity to develop new solutions to the problems we face. There are two or three such innovations about which I want to talk.

The innovation with which I am most familiar is the Self-Help Centre for Canadian Youth which started in London, Ontario. It was a local solution brought about by people who care about young people. These people came forward and made a submission to the forward-thinking Government under the Innovations plan, had it approved and went to work with the young people of the community. They found out over the past year that young people came in rather large numbers to this centre located in a kiosk in a busy shopping mall. The centre allows them to assess themselves, their abilities and capabilities in the work world, and to find out what they need to measure up. The centre provides help in résumé writing and makes some young people realize that they should return to school for more training and development. The centre provides self-appraisal, something which is very important.

I daresay that as other Innovations programs have developed in other communities around Canada, we have found even more ways to help the youth. One program that has reached Newfoundland is the YMCA's Youth Enterprise Centre located next door to the Hon. Member in St. John's. There are eight such centres across the country established to help young people achieve self-employment by setting up their own businesses and subsequently creating spin-off employment for others. The concept of entrepreneurship and getting young people involved in small business is really what this country is all about. All economists and not simply those on the government side have said that the economic fabric of Canada and the jobs that will be created in the future will stem from small business. We are helping young people learn about this first-hand.

As the Hon. Member opposite knows, this is a kind of on-the-job education that many young people do not receive in the existing school systems. Once a youth enters the real hard world we all face, he needs these kinds of experiences. If the YMCA's Innovations program can provide that in St. John's, Newfoundland, and eight other centres in Canada, I say congratulations.

It does not stop there. These innovations are spreading across the country. Canadians are coming forward in large numbers from all areas of society wanting to help young people help themselves. The Youth Employment Skills Program, the Say Yes Program, was recently announced by the Minister in St. Catharines and has now spread to the West. I was in Winnipeg in March and I know this program has spread there. It is designed specifically to provide disadvantaged young people with a 12-week course in job-search techniques, work adjustment and academic upgrading and is followed by a series of job interviews arranged as a result of a supportive corporate network. All kinds of people from the private sector are getting involved and becoming part of the solution. Again, that is another step forward brought about by a far-reaching, far-thinking Government that developed a philosophically acceptable program like the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

There is always talk about the Challenge '87 program. Earlier in the debate I heard Hon. Members ask what we are doing in the way of summer employment for students. They asked what we are doing to get students on stream, thinking about careers and getting experience in their off-school time which, in the majority of cases, is the summer time. I think the summer employment program we have developed is getting close to being state of the art. It is very responsive to the needs that exist in the various communities across Canada and I think we should be recognized for that.

The fact that last year there were far more jobs in Toronto and southwestern Ontario where I am lucky enough to live than there were students to fill them means that we do not need money from the Government. The private sector has clearly taken over by offering opportunities for young people to get on-the-spot experience. Let us not put money there, let us put money where it is needed.

The way the Minister has addressed regional disparities has been exemplary. The fact that there has been an allocation of 15 per cent more to the Maritimes is great because it is needed there. There must be opportunities for young people there and we have clearly taken that step.

As well, there are kids with tremendous learning difficulties and emotional instability problems. This group of people for whom it is hard to find work exists in our society as it does in every other society. I believe we have worked with them very well. Even our summer programs, for example the innovations in WOW, are outstanding. The Hon. Member knows these people have never been near a workplace before. They shudder, they do not have the inner strength to even know for sure whether they should be there or how to act. They need all kinds of support and development. This program supplies that, and 70 per cent of those people are gaining strength from that experience in the summer. They are not dropping out of school, they are returning as students and that is a tremendous track record. They are not going to be joining the street people. We do not want them there. We want them where they can learn and develop and be part of Canada as it becomes the leading nation of the 21st century. We are well on our way.

• (1700)

Where else do we see leadership? I cannot help but talk about a subject which is very dear to my heart, as I am sure it is to the Hon. Member opposite. He must have gone through this with these young people. Some of these people will get a high school graduation diploma but they want to get out and work with their hands. They want to contribute to society. Yet they need further training to reach certain skill levels and an apprenticeship program will give them that.

A lot has been said about how the apprenticeship program should be reviewed. I am sure the Hon. Member has heard it from his constituents as I have heard it from mine. The program needs a lot of changes because the nature of work is changing. The skills required are changing. So let us give credit where it is due and look at what this Government is doing about this very burning question which we hear from journeymen back home, who is going to replace me? They came to this country from other lands in the 1950s and 1960s thanks again to an initiative by a Conservative Government in 1957 which encouraged them. They came here and built our industry. Who is going to replace them? That is the big question.

Given the regional and educational differences in this country, the time for leadership is now. I am so happy to report that the Minister and our Government have set up a comprehensive review of apprenticeship training arrangements with the provinces and territories and we are committed to producing for 1988 and 1989 a revamped set of arrangements relevant to the modern job market. That is quite a commitment. We are doing something about a major problem.

I want the Hon. Member opposite to know that our caucus committees are hard at work solving the problems dealing with the effectiveness of existing programs and whether they meet skill needs. How do we increase the participation of women, natives and visible minorities? We have all heard about interprovincial mobility. There is 20 per cent mobility in any constituency in any given year so we must have some system of knowing that the skill levels reached in one province or one area will be acceptable and useful in another. Again we should get plaudits for getting this done.

In the appropriate areas of responsibility, the federal, provincial and territorial Governments, the employer and apprentices themselves, are funding this training. It cannot be just the federal Government doing it. We want people to help themselves and we are starting to see that.

Clearly we are seeing federal leadership. People are starting to notice. The young people are feeling better about themselves. They know that through these programs, whether they be in school or anywhere else, they are going to get a feeling for the realities of the world of work. These programs will give them self-confidence and career direction.

The examples I gave earlier about the Job Entry and Job Development Programs are just some of the ways we are reaching out. There is just no question about that. Look at reports like this one, "Innovations help young people finish high school". It says: "If I were offered a job today I would turn it down. I want to first finish the program because I know in the long run I will get a better job." This is a young person speaking in St. John's, Newfoundland. That is how they feel about the programs and opportunities provided by this Government as it reaches out across this land, to every nook and cranny, to help young people.

I think the situation is very clear. We have met the challenge. We are not stopping. I have given a couple of examples of our leadership role and we are nowhere near finished. The Minister has to be applauded by all Members of this House for caring as he goes across Canada and listens to the young people and sets the direction we are going to follow in the future.

This Government, like some of its predecessors, has vision. The Hon. Member opposite should think a bit about this. A former Prime Minister stood in his place here and talked about the road to the North and what it would do for Canada. At that time very few people could really understand the impact of that statement. We look back now and say it opened up the North. Look what this Government is doing with its policy concerning not only Arctic sovereignty but to have people live and work in the North. Look at the opportunities that will arise when that ice-breaker makes its roadway to the North. When we move into the far North that even the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker never even thought of, think of the opportunities.

We heard yesterday from the mayors of large cities about all the interesting innovations they have for their young people to renew the cities and urban areas of Canada. They are crying out to get involved with the young people. They have the ideas and brains to make these things happen. Given the kind of leadership this Government provides I just cannot understand a motion like this, and I hope all Members of the House agree with me today that this Government is clearly unparalleled in what it is doing for young people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that we are looking at the problem from two different points of view. I agree with him on his last point, that certainly the policy of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker with regard to the North was an entirely appropriate and effective policy. If only the present Government would give as much consideration to the North and the regions as that Government gave I think the country would be far better off. I fail to see how an ice-breaker is going to solve the problems of northern Canada.

I wanted to ask the Hon. Member to address the issue of the regions. He talked about the 15 per cent extra for the various regions, but is it not true that there is less money in the summer program this year over all than last year? Is it not true that there is 15 per cent less this year available for summer jobs than there was last year? We are getting 15 per cent more of 15 per cent less. In other words, there is less in the over-all program.

He also talked about the fact that we dealt with students more so than youth. I mentioned this morning that in this country today we have one million Canadians who cannot read and write. We have four million who are functionally illiterate. These are not students in the system. These are Canadians who could make a contribution. That is fundamental. The programs which were spoken about in the previous speech deal with symptoms, with people who are in the stream. We want to get at the fundamental inadequacies, of which illiteracy is one.

• (1710)

The second inadequacy is the systems of education which we have and the funding for them. Does the Member not agree that the $1 billion shortfall which will arise in Established Programs Financing for Canadian universities over the next five years will be a severe handicap for Canadian young people, whether or not they are students?

I would also like him to comment on the effect in his area, which I know is quite different from mine, of the skew in the Canadian Jobs Strategy toward the private sector. I may be hearing a different story than that Member is, but I am hearing from community colleges that as a result of emphasizing the private sector within the Canadian Jobs Strategy they have about 50 per cent of what they used to have to operate their core program. They are losing faculty to the private sector. They are losing courses which they used to operate as a result of the change of policy which came into effect in 1984 with the election of the present Government. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on those points?

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would like to comment on that. I am glad that the Hon. Member agrees with me about a previous Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. I think he missed the point. The roads to the North were of a different type than the roads which the ice-breaker will build. However, they are roadways nonetheless, whether you are turning ice into navigable water or turning tundra into navigable roads. The principle is the same although the technology must be different.

I had the opportunity to spend quite a few days north of 60 during which time I interviewed exactly 200 young people. Of the 200 young people I interviewed 195 came from south of 60, most notably from the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario. These young people were all under the age of 30, and one of the most moving experiences I had on that tour was that in every case they made the point that they were very happy in their work and that they found their role in life as Canadians very satisfying. I find that very interesting.

I do not think that I, in southwestern Ontario, or the Member in Newfoundland, would find that kind of job satisfaction and life satisfaction with being Canadian. Perhaps there is something magical in the North. Perhaps some of the opportunities in the North will open up because of the bold move of the Government to be there, and to want to be there. I think we are to be congratulated on that and I will do it for myself if the Member opposite does not want to.

With regard to the 15 per cent, I think it is only fair. I and my caucus colleagues from Ontario and Quebec have no quarrel with the fact that the private sector in my section of Ontario has been very active and very eager to help young people. They pay more money as a reflection of what they expect in work. Why would students not respond and be a part of that?

Therefore, I have no quarrel with any region of the country, which needs it, receiving 15 per cent more. We just do not need it in my part of Ontario. I am sure my constituents would agree that it is best to use it where young people need it the most. If young people in Newfoundland need it as much as I have been led to believe, I am very happy that they are getting this extra opportunity.

I do not think we should be getting too upset about post-secondary financing when the projections for the next five years average 5.1 per cent for each year. That is clearly above the rate of inflation which the Government has been so good at controlling. There will be increased spending and we need not worry about inflation eating away at gains. These institutions are clearly way out in front, as they should be. We want them to be the very best in the world in order that our young people are served as best as they can be, and that we have nothing but even more success in this country.

I hate to be so aggressive about this today, but this motion really upset me; we have worked hard and the record is clearly in our favour. It is not blemished at all.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put two questions to the Hon. Member. He is proud of the Government's record on youth employment. Despite the Government's claim that during its period in office 750,000 new jobs have been created, the fact is that there are still 1.25 million unemployed, the national unemployment rate is just over 9.5 per cent, and the rate of youth unemployment is almost twice that. Is the Member saying that he is satisfied with that record?

My second question is with reference to the satisfaction of urban municipalities. As I am sure the Member knows, the Conference of Mayors and Municipalities has estimated that to bring their sewer, water, road and power systems up to the standards at which they should be, because they are rapidly running down—

Mr. Fraleigh: Why don't they look after them?

Mr. Orlikow: The Member asks why they do not look after them. Obviously he does not realize that every city is facing very sharp increases in municipal taxes.

They have made a proposal to the federal Government, partly to bring their facilities up to the standards at which they should be, and partly to employ the hundreds and thousands of unemployed, of a program of rebuilding these facilities in which the federal, provincial and municipal Governments should share the cost. The federal Government has said that it cannot afford it. Is the Member satisfied with the answer given to the municipalities by the federal Government?

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, I do not think we will ever be satisfied. If unemployment was zero per cent I still would not think I had done a good enough job. I would be worried whether we had created an opportunity for the next baby to be born to work and fulfill itself. No, I do not think we will ever vary from that. We will stay right on top of it.

However, a 4 per cent decrease is significant and should be recognized. I am not happy with it, but we are moving the right way. We should get some credit for that in that this country is so diverse and the opportunities are not all in the same place at the same time. I look forward to the day when we will see a rush of youth to Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador for work opportunities.

Mr. Rompkey: Not too many. Take it easy.

Mr. Clifford: That is the kind of thing I like to see happening in Canada. I talked about what might happen north of the 60. There will be lots of opportunities yet. We will all keep our noses to the grindstone to help young people help themselves to get jobs and have life satisfaction in being Canadians. No, I am not satisfied, but we are working toward that satisfaction.

With regard to the plight of municipalities it is clear that they must work within the bounds of legislation. They must work with the provinces in which they are domiciled. It is clear that there must be a lot of work done. I applaud them for asking their young people for solutions. I always find that works when we ask some of these well-trained young Canadians. The Hon. Member opposite talked about these pressing social problems in the urbanized areas. I think perhaps if Hon. Members opposite would listen to their young, they might find some new ways of solving those problems. Clearly they have to work it out together within their legislation boundaries and their provinces. Let us see if they cannot come to some solutions first. The Government of Canada cannot solve everyone's problems.

• (1720)

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Official Opposition, I am sometimes asked by my colleagues in the Government why it is that the Opposition is always criticizing. First, the Opposition criticizes because that is the role of the Opposition in a parliamentary system. Second, the Opposition has every responsibility to do so when the majority of the Canadian people no longer support the Government, according to the polls. Our 40 Members are undertaking to express the views and concerns of the Canadian people about their Government. Obviously, the people of Canada are not satisfied with the way in which the Government is conducting its affairs.

I must say it is our responsibility to remind the Government of what it has promised and that it has broken its promises. It is our duty to remind the Government where it has fallen short, where the people are dissatisfied and disillusioned, when people hurt and what their feelings are about the problems they face on a day-by-day basis. It is our duty to speak for the Canadian people. This is an Opposition day and for this reason—

[Translation]

—the subject matter before us today is as follows: consideration of an opposition motion:

> That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of our youth and its failure to provide adequate support for their education and training or meaningful employment and job opportunities, both temporary and permanent.

[English]

That is our subject. It is about our young people. It is a subject which is probably the nearest and dearest to the hearts of the majority of Canadians, whether it is the young people themselves who are concerned about their own future or we as parents or grandparents. Therefore, let us ensure there is no mistake. Our young people are going through a very grave crisis right now. The Government does not seem to understand this and that explains why it is in such disarray and disfavour with the Canadian people. I suggest that the Canadian people are concerned about their young people above all.

Half of our single young people, are living below the poverty level. Unemployment in the Atlantic regions is somewhere between 25 per cent and 30 per cent for our young people. In British Columbia it is about the same. If we can imagine, Mr. Speaker, that one out of four, one out of three, one out of four or one out of five in various parts of our country cannot find work, we can understand the rate of suicide has skyrocketed. In the face of this ethos of pessimism, the problems of unemployment and poverty, no wonder the young people have such a feeling of despair and hopelessness.

We are not talking in a hysterical way about the situation. We are talking about the plight of young Canadians. If only members of the Government would understand that we are talking about Bill, Bob, Mary and Martha—real people. When we talk about statistics, we are talking about real people. We must call the Government's attention to this issue of real people. It must wake up. It must be concerned, not about statistics but about these real people. There are real people living in poverty. There are real people, young people, lined up in the bread lines. Young people are living in poverty. Young people are unemployed and young people, in great numbers, are feeling very despondent. This is reality. We are not trying to dramatize anything. We are trying to make the Government understand that this is real.

We have heard various people from the Government side, and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) as well, lecture us that it is important that in an age of technological and trade competition we need a well-educated society, that our young people must be well trained in the technological sciences and be able to be competitive. I could not agree more with the those observations. However, it seems strange how over and over again we find that the Government tells us one thing, then practises something totally opposite.

Having told us today how important post-secondary education and the new technology is, we learn that in fact the Government has decided to put a cap on the amount of money to be spent on our native Canadian young people who want post-secondary education. The Government is going to put a cap on that amount. It may be a cap the Government feels is high enough, but what about the commitment of all administrations in this country that native peoples, Indians and Inuit, will have the right to have post-secondary education, whether it be in community colleges, universities or whatever? There should be no cap on the amount of money for that, because there is no higher priority for this country in terms of obligation. The young people from those areas and those backgrounds must be unquestioned and unchallenged in their rights. But the Government has apparently decided to place a cap on the amount of money which will be spent on the post-secondary education of those young people.

The Government may have an answer for that, but there are other things which are inconsistent. For example, is it not strange that the Government and the Minister of State for Youth and others have talked to us about the new challenge program for this summer. The Government is going to spend money advertising the importance of hiring young people this summer, the importance of private enterprise, and the fact that we must hire young people. That is a very laudable cause, but it is not very consistent with the way the Government carries out its own practices. We have just learned from the Deputy Minister that the number of Public Service appointments of people aged 24 years and under dropped to 1,497 down from 1,836 in the previous year. Barely four per cent of the 217,000 public servants are under 24 years of age. Imagine the Government lecturing us in this hypocritical fashion about its great concern for young people and cutting down on the young people serving in the Government.

At the same time the Government tells the private sector, "You should hire young people". This is hypocrisy. I know no other word for it. It is an incredibly hypocritical policy. How could the Government demand of the people of Canada that they should hire young people saying, "Do as I say, not as I do", while it cuts back the number of young people in our Public Service?

I would like to refer to something said by representatives of the Public Service Commission. They say that five years from now if the present trend continues we could have very few young people in the Public Service. That is hypocritical. Imagine the Government calling for others to hire young people when it does not do so it itself; when it is cutting down on the number of young people in its own service.

• (1730)

The next point I would like to make is that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed out in the House of Commons the other day that there was a grave problem of unemployment facing our young people. He asked a question of the Government. Quite rightly he was concerned about young people. He pointed out to the Government that the youth unemployment rate is up by 50 per cent in Manitoba this year as compared with 1980. He said that the rate was up 75 per cent in Saskatchewan, 81 per cent in British Columbia and 157 per cent in Alberta as compared to the figures for 1980.

What was the response when the Leader of the Opposition expressed his concern and said to the Government, "Please tell us what you are doing about this?" What response did he get from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)? He answered our Leader by saying that at the same time the youth unemployment rate has fallen from 18.3 per cent, nationally, to 14.8 per cent. Instead of dealing with the problem he told us that the rate has dropped. But dropped from what? He is comparing it with previous statistics of a few years ago in the depths of the recession. Instead of seeing that there is a problem and instead of admitting that in 1980 the situation for young people was very far better than it is today, the Government answered with statistics that tell us how much better it is now by, I think, 3.5 per cent than it was in the depths of the recession. That is hardly the type of answer that will bring any type of satisfaction to Canadian people.

It is small wonder that the Government is in such disfavour with the people of Canada when they see that, indeed, statistics do not lie, but that liars can use statistics. This is not the type of answer of concern and feeling that should have come from the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada when asked about the grave difference in terms of employment between now and the beginning of this decade. At this rate throughout this decade there will be no hope. It is no wonder that there is a sense of despondency and hopelessness among so many young people. There are parts of this country where young people cannot really look forward to finding a job. Therefore they feel as if they are members of a lost generation.

When talking about youth unemployment we must remember that we are talking about human beings, individuals—our children. I am afraid that the Government has not appreciated the gravity of the situation. It has had a laissez-faire attitude, a simple slumping back and letting-things-happen approach. It thinks that if the whole situation with the economy improves statistically, then somehow that will trickle down to the young people. Instead of facing the problem and doing something in terms of programming and encouragement for our people the Government depends on a trickle down idea that somehow or other, eventually, if the economy of the country is good enough, everyone will come out all right.

We know that that is not the case. We know that while the economy is perhaps in good shape in the Golden Horseshoe, the area from which I come, and in certain parts of the country the opposite is the case. The west is hurting. It is hurting in terms of its farms, its energy industry and in so many other areas. The spinoff from the hurting in those areas also affects other industries as well. The west is in serious economic trouble. The same thing can be said about other parts of the country such as northern Ontario and the Atlantic region. So it is not good enough just to let things unwind, to let the universe unfold in that sense. It is important that the Government recognize its responsibilities and work actively on the subject of the problems that face our young people.

However, the Government has a record that is deplorable in this respect. It has closed down the Katimavik program, a program for young people that was achieving many things for them. After all, it was better than nothing. In fact, it was an excellent program. It was doing something for young people, something which the Government did not feel it needed. The Government closed down the First Chance program which worked to give young people the opportunity of finding that first job, after which they could then say, "I have experience", and then get another job and move on, to try to end the cycle of no job, no experience; no experience, no job.

The Government also closed 30 per cent of the employment centres on the campuses of the country. In other words, it cut out the vehicles for finding employment for young people as part of its program. That is hardly an enlightened approach to youth unemployment. It froze the student loan assistance rates. The Government froze funds which were going to research councils which in turn would find their way to the universities and our young people. The Government cut back on the post-secondary educational funding formula. I could go on with a list of the tragic cut-backs that have faced research and students across the country in ever so many ways.

The other day I addressed a question to the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie). I asked him why it was that the Government still has not set up a system to help the young people in the remote parts of our country where the unemployment situation is so high. I was referring to Newfoundland and British Columbia, for example. I asked why the Government had not set up a system which would allow students to repay their loans after they found a job instead of within six months of finishing school. The Secretary of State admitted that the Government was thinking about this approach. He said that the Government was studying it.

But the Government has not moved to help to alleviate the problems facing young people so that they will feel encouraged to go to university. They think now, as do their parents, that they cannot go to university or community college if it means that when they have made loans they will have to start paying them back six months after getting out of school, whether they have a job or not. What the Government needs to do is arrange it so that when a person goes to school they can have the confidence of knowing that they do not have to start paying back their loans until they get a job. The Minister agreed that that would be a good idea, but nothing has been done yet.

I then asked the Minister why the Government did not arrange that when students start to pay back this money it be related to their salaries. A person starting in a first job may start at a very low salary. I asked the Minister about having an arrangement whereby after a student is out of university or college, after having made a loan, that he or she would know that the loan would have to be paid back at a rate based on that first year's salary. This is something that frightens parents. They are frightened about getting themselves into debt. They are frightened about having their kids going to school and within six months of getting out having to put the money up front, whether they have a job or not, having to pay back the money at a rate of interest which is not related at all to salary.

That is another example of the lack of sensitivity that the Government shows to the plight of young people. The Secretary of State admitted when I put this point before him that, indeed, the Government was thinking about it, too. As a result of this debate we hope the Government will stop thinking and start acting.

In the area of post-secondary education we had a task force that travelled across the country to hear about the problems facing those in the post-secondary community. We concluded, with regret, that what we found across the country was a tragic situation. Reading from the text—

[Translation]

> As a direct consequence of under-financing post-secondary educational and research institutions, teaching staff wages are frozen, facilities deteriorate, research activity is curtailed, morale is eroding, on-campus employment centers are closed down, foreign students are lost, scientists leave the country, libraries are undersupplied and laboratories become obsolete. Furthermore, post-secondary educational institutions are cornered into impossible choices to be made between accessibility and quality.

• (1740)

[English]

That is a brief summary of what we learned from 160 interviews with presidents of universities and community colleges throughout Canada, heads of faculty associations, members and leaders of student bodies including undergraduate, graduate and foreign students. The report was monochrome across the country, that the situation for post-secondary education is in crisis.

It is time for us to demand that the Government take steps now to face up to this situation and explore what it can do quickly and effectively to restore to our post-secondary educational community the quality which is required for our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, having listened with interest to the Hon. Member who has just spoken, I find his negative comments rather sad, given that some speakers today have been quite positive in their comments, specially those addressed to the Minister, who made a brilliant presentation.

My colleague seems to indulge in his role as a member of the Opposition. He has wondered out loud himself why the Opposition should always criticize. It is the easy thing to do, as we all know, Mr. Speaker, and all the more so when one is in the Opposition. Lately, I met a colleague who is a member of the Opposition and I had the misfortune of asking how things were going. His answer was that, as always, everything was fine in the Opposition since the Government is always to blame. That sounds easy enough. I have not had the pleasure of first-hand experience, but it seems easy enough. Time will tell.

Mr. Gauthier: Indeed.

Mr. Della Noce: Another thing I did not like about the comments of our colleague is that he does not seem to like private enterprise. He does not understand that some things must be left to private enterprise, and I presume that he himself has no confidence in private enterprise. He is probably not sitting in the right seat, maybe he should move three desks to his left.

I want to say that private enterprise is doing a very good job in this country. In my home province, in Quebec, it is thanks to private enterprise that young people could be saved. I ask the Hon. Member: Why always make taxpayers pay for everything in this country? The Government is always asked to pay. Why not let private enterprise take care of a few things? I have been in the private sector for 20 years. I hired young people in the summer, I gave them work, I taught them a trade. Never did the Government give me a cent, and I did not want it either. I never even asked. But I can tell you one thing, I gave them training, and young people were very proud, at the end of school, to come work for me. And in the small family business I owned, I used to hire three youths every summer, and I was proud to have them working for me because I was doing two things: Not only was I making them work, but I was also teaching them a trade. I see all those youths today, and they are very proud that they worked for me because they got training and today they carry on in the same field. I therefore ask my hon. colleague: Why always ask the Government to pay when private enterprise could do the job? Have you lost confidence in private enterprise? Or have you never had any confidence in private enterprise?

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the Hon. Member that I certainly have a great deal of faith in private enterprise. I am expressing a lack of faith in the Government, not private enterprise.

Perhaps the Hon. Member was not here when I began my speech. I pointed out that the role of the Opposition is, in fact, to speak on behalf of the people of Canada when they wish to express their dissatisfaction with the Government. Since some 75 per cent of the people of Canada are not supporting the Government and are critical of it, according to the polls, then our role is to try to speak on behalf of those 75 per cent. I suggest to him that many of those people who are critical, are dissatisfied with the plight of our young people today. I hope he will take that to heart.

Second, I was pointing out that the Government is hypocritical in asking private enterprise to hire more young people, as the Hon. Member did himself as an entrepreneur. That is great. However, the problem is that there is a state of "Don't do as I do, do as I say" when the Government admits that it has cut back on the number of young people it employs in the Public Service.

I have read the statistics into the record. They are not mine, but those given by Huguette Labelle who was using statistics from the Public Service itself. The projection from the Public Service is that the present direction of the Government will lead to a situation where "very few" young people will be working in the Public Service. Let the Government set the example.

The Government must also set the example as it applies to the handicapped and the disabled. We hear the same kind of double talk from the Government. We are told that 6 per cent of the people employed in the private sector describe themselves in some way or other as disabled or handicapped. We find that only 2 per cent in the Public Service describe themselves as disabled or handicapped. It is another case of "Don't do as I do, do as I say". The Government is not giving as many opportunities for those who are disabled or handicapped as the private sector.

Indeed, I trust the private sector. I only wish that the Government would, itself, behave as well as the private sector.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is my sense as we consider this debate today that there is a tremendous feeling of urgency with which we in the House of Commons should be addressing the problems of young Canadians. The latest unemployment statistics I have show that the unemployment rate for March was 17 per cent, up from 16 per cent in February and an increase from March of last year.

Would the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) agree that in order to create a positive environment with respect to a future for our young people it is necessary to have a set of concrete proposals as opposed to a set of laments about the failures of the Government?

While I agree with those laments about the failure of the Government, do we not need to establish a youth initiatives fund to let young people practise some of that entrepreneurship which has been so praised? Do we not need to give guarantees to the educational system with respect to their basic funding, which was not given by the previous Government or the present Government, so that they can have some sense of security?

• (1750)

Do we not need some training initiatives tied closely to the private sector? Do we not need community initiative funds to give communities the possibility of creating long-term jobs for young people and providing young people with a future? Do we not have to talk about a complete reorientation of our economic policies so that we move toward expansion in our economy and away from constrictions which have marked Governments for the last eight years and have created unemployment rates that are humanly unacceptable both to young people and to society as a whole?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, certainly at this point in time the Government has a very real responsibility to abandon its laissez-faire policy, that is, the trickle down theory that if the economy is doing well it will eventually reach everyone. It should realize that it is not reaching the young people and that strategies are needed to bring about a change in the situation of despair faced by young people. It is incomprehensible that in a country as wealthy as Canada we should have a situation where our young people are facing such stark hopelessness.

Those of us in the House of Commons with families must admit that we are not suffering too badly. However, I wish members of the Government would ensure that Cabinet understands—and they know what is taking place in their ridings—the impact upon young people, the unseen. They should be the voice of the voiceless, not cower in submission and accept this unacceptable policy of the Government.

We had a first chance proposal when we faced the electorate in the last election. In fact the Liberal Government had put the program into effect because we realized that we needed to ensure that the cycle of not being able to obtain a job without experience and vice versa had to be broken. We knew that something had to be done, that some positive, activist steps had to be taken, in order to break the cycle.

I call upon the Government to take this kind of step, to swallow its pride, or at least to have compassion and realize that a passive policy is no longer good enough. We have reached a crisis situation. Waiting for the economy to pick up to get these people employed is not working; something must be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), I think we can start entertaining some serious doubts as to the Opposition's integrity. Hon. Members were referring to a debate that was supposed to rise above political considerations, and I thought this was going to be the most charitable speech we would hear today. I thought it would focus on the problems facing our youth and on the commitments we made and what we accomplished since 1984, and I realized that in the final instance, the speech by the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence, my Liberal colleague, was negative in the extreme. He criticized the Government's failure to act.

Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that when his party was in power, and the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence was talking about compassion, he did nothing, absolutely nothing. He never rose in the House to defend our youth when unemployment rates were as high as 21.3 per cent. Where is his compassion? When he talks about hypocrisy, he ought to know what he is talking about. Mr. Speaker, just what is hypocrisy, morally speaking? It is when the Hon. Member rises in his seat and claims that this Government, that our Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), and never mind that they introduce programs that work, programs that give young people a chance to do something else than paint fences, programs that prove that Canadian young people are not a kind of disease that has to be isolated but a group that should be integrated in society and given its fair share and a chance to show what it can do. Tomorrow, they will be the decision-makers and not those hypocritical critics, Mr. Speaker, who are saying sort of virtuously that the Government did nothing.

Mr. Speaker, during the twenty years they were in power, they forgot to help Canadian youth. They abandoned youth, Mr. Speaker. All the departments did.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence rose to preach a sermon on charity and what our youth policy should be. We have a Minister of Youth who had the courage to rise in his seat today to ask the Opposition whether it had any contribution, any solutions to offer. He said it would be a pleasure to work together with the Opposition. That was unheard of under the Liberals. They thrived on arrogance and refused to listen to the provinces and the Opposition parties. Bad mouthing their neighbour, that is what they were doing, including the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

• (1800)

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that in the name of Canadian youth, a Member such as the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence play small party politics. Mr. Speaker, when we look at the programs, I did not hear him say once that we put in place Challenge '85, '86, '87, we put in place the new Job Development Program, we put the accent on training, because it would be unthinkable for a responsible Government, a Progressive Conservative Government, not to provide training under our programs. It would be unthinkable, Mr. Speaker, to let the young wallow around the place in the hope that some day or other something will happen, there will be a breakthrough somewhere.

Mr. Speaker, we took our responsibilities, and when I hear the Opposition, when I hear the New Democrats suggest the Minister of State for Youth did not do this or that, I find it very hard to accept that they can use such terms, because youth does not merely involve the Minister of State for Youth. It involves all Canadians. It is also the responsibility of each Department. We can see that in the area employment and immigration, we can see that in the area of regional industrial expansion, thanks to lower interest rates that allow the young to start in business, thanks to small business loans at affordable rates. We could ask them where the interest rates were when they were in Government, when home mortgage rates went up to 22 percent, when Canadian people lost their homes, when they could not build to make the Canada of today and the Canada of tomorrow.

And they now dare accuse us of doing nothing for the young! The young also involve the Department of Agriculture. Stable interest rates, long-term dairy policies, capital gains exemption that enables young people to start up in farming, to integrate into the Canadian farming system, because there is in Ottawa a responsible Government that offers them alternatives, that gives them a chance to get involved rather than suggesting: We will put you on hold, wait for you to get older and if we are given the chance to do so, we will make room for you.

Canadian young people are following this debate today in the House of Commons and considering alternatives. The Minister of State for Youth has put forward some alternatives within the context of existing programs that were established in 1984. They asked opposition Members whether they had anything to say and they answered no, we have not. They said, to use the clever words of the Hon. Member for Eglington—Lawrence, that they are here to criticize the Government because that is the duty of the Opposition. That shows, Mr. Speaker, how mature opposition Members are.

Mr. Speaker, that I cannot understand and to conclude, because I know that time is running out, I want to say that a responsible Government is one that makes room for its youth, that says to young people: You are going to get involved, we will give you the tools, we will not do as the Opposition, we will not spoon-feed you in the belief that what we are doing is good for you. We will provide you with the opportunity to be yourselves, to become adults, and to ensure that tomorrow's Canada is the one that you have chosen and not what we have tried to impose upon you.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 12 of Standing Order 82, proceedings on the motion have expired.

• (1805)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—TESTS FOR ADMISSION AND SELECTION OF PERSONNEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL PRESENT REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, again this evening I should like to raise certain questions which were asked in the House concerning official languages and which have yet to be answered.

As recently as May 5, two days ago, I asked the Solicitor General if he could do something to correct a situation within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a situation related to the RCMP aptitude tests which have been shown to be discriminatory towards francophones because the test translated from English was full of errors. As a result of these errors, successful francophone applicants had an average of 60 per cent, whereas the anglophone applicants' average was 70 per cent. So the RCMP hired more anglophones because francophones found it difficult to pass this selection test.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, this may have been due to an erroneous translation, but they kept the test and used it for five years. Since 1981 they knew the test was incorrect but they kept using it anyway, and RCMP officers themselves had to complain publicly before corrective measures were taken.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time in this House and in the Standing Committee on Official Languages that I single out some of the anomalies—and I am being polite—which exist within certain Government services. Faced with the RCMP inertia in taking action and responding satisfactorily to questions put to them, the day before yesterday, following the answer of the Solicitor General, I decided to write a personal letter to the Prime Minister, a letter which I sent to him and which, I hope, he has received and will answer. This letter, Mr. Speaker, is a summary of events since last fall with respect to official languages. I should like to remind the House that what I am saying now I consider as being very serious.

Last October 16 I asked a question in the House as a result of the publication of a document called Pony Express, a RCMP internal document. It was indicated in this document that they intended to reduce the 20 per cent francophone personnel quota to 14 per cent. Answering in the House, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) assured me that this was not Government policy. I believed him.

On October 23, again in the House, I made public the contents of a letter confirming this agreement between the RCMP Commissioner and the Treasury Board official responsible for implementing the official languages policy. Mr. de Cotret, the Minister, responded by saying that it was only a discussion among officials, not a Government decision. Again I believed him.

On Wednesday, December 17, 1986, in the official languages committee, RCMP Commissioner Simmonds confirmed the objective had been lowered from its level of 20 per cent to 14 per cent. He said it might be 12 per cent. The next day, I pursued the matter in the House and asked if it was the RCMP Commissioner or the President of the Treasury Board who was telling the truth and which of them we should believe. About the situation, the Minister replied to me that on October 2, the day before, he had requested the Solicitor General of Canada to present him with an action plan on official languages for the RCMP. And I believed him, Mr. Speaker. I said to myself: "There will be action, the Minister told me there will be a plan. It seems as if the Solicitor General is facing a de facto situation. The RCMP will have to act." I thought things would change. Nothing changed. On January 30, French-speaking RCMP officers publicly denounced the conditions they were in. Even the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP Quebec Division, Mr. J. Julien, was critical. He wrote in a long letter to Commissioner Simmonds that among the French-speaking officers in his division, and I quote:

> The feeling expressed is one of rejection of Francophones by the Anglophone majority and that Francophones' participation in the RCMP is marginal.

It is upsetting.

I questioned the Government twice, on January 30 and February 2. Ministers procrastinated and refused to answer my questions. Then, on February 3, the RCMP appeared before the committee where Mr. Julien confirmed the authenticity of his letter and comments. The RCMP high officials who were present closed ranks and refused to budge on anything.

Faced with all these delays and this ghastly situation, the Solicitor General does nothing. I was rather disappointed the day before yesterday and I told the Minister: If you cannot do your job and enforce the law which has been with us for at least 18 years, resign!

Last Wednesday, before a parliamentary committee, the Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service confessed quite candidly, probably knowing full well that he did not have to hear the consequences of his action, that his organization had never met the requirements of the Official Languages Act in two years, that is ever since its establishment. This also falls under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Both the RCMP and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service do, Mr. Speaker, and nothing is being done.

Yesterday, or the day before, I was told: There is a report forthcoming. I asked the Minister who told me: Yes, I have received and tabled the plan with the Treasury Board. I will act on these matters next week. Tonight, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to confirm whether we can hope for any corrective action, urge the Government to do something and suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the Minister is unable to act, he should be replaced with his Parliamentary Secretary. I know he would do something.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is much too kind. First of all, I must say he has raised a major issue, namely the linguistic duality within Canada and our institutions. I want to congratulate the Standing Committee on Official Languages which, over the past few months, has really tried to remedy the situation, shaking the tree to get rid of the bad apples.

Of course, as minister responsible for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), knows just how important the French issue is within these two services. To raise it as radically as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier did might be somewhat premature, because one should look at the context as it is, and as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and you, Mr. Speaker, know it has not occurred overnight. If the Commissioner of the RCMP and the Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service have felt the need and taken it upon themselves to hire more Anglophones than Francophones, it is because there was something basically wrong which had not been detected and which has been coming to light over the past few months thanks to the tremendous efforts of the Official Languages Committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is a series of facts and circumstances which is coming to light from day to day and which explains why the Solicitor General is truly concerned with the problems resulting from the French fact. To get to a solution, I am sure, because linguistic duality, the French fact, is and always will be entirely acceptable within the Canadian system, is and always will be worth fighting for within our institutions, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and French-speaking members of this House have always done. We must protect bilingualism. The Solicitor General will do so as much as he can and—something that should please the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier—will always maintain a required decent minimum within our agencies.

I also commit myself to support my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier as well as all Members of this House as a democrat, as a Member respectful of Canadian laws, of both our languages, of both our founding peoples who will always be protected. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Solicitor General is well aware of the situation and will act as quickly as possible, even though he has already done so in several cases.

• (1810)

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION—DELAYS IN MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 20, 1987, in this House I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who is also responsible for Canada Post, a question related to frustrations experienced by some of my constituents in dealing with the mail service. The Minister acknowledged the existence of problems and assured me that he is committed to finding some solutions.

I would like to praise the Minister for being very active in the past in seeking constructive and innovative measures in dealing with the situation, such as the appointment of a group to study the feasibility of third-party regulation.

More than anything, though, I strongly support the message conveyed through the Minister's actions that good service and not the reduction of the deficit should be the first priority of Canada Post. Considering the April 1 rate increase as well as the seemingly annual threat of yet another postal strike, I would like to make some comments on the matter.

I cannot stress strongly enough the important role that the Post Office plays in our lives. In my duties as a Member of Parliament I have dealt with problems experienced by Canadians with a variety of services such as those offered by financial institutions. As important as these are, the issues involved are often abstract and remote to most people. Service provided by the Post Office, however, is essential, tangible, and affects all of us in our most basic daily routine.

There are three groups of users of the Post Office on which I would like to concentrate. One is ordinary citizens involved in personal correspondence, the second is religious and charitable organizations, and the last is various business groups. During my term in office I have received hundreds of letters of complaints about personal mail delivery and only one—yes, one—complimenting Canada Post. Granted, Mr. Speaker, this is not a very scientific survey, but common sense suggests that there is something wrong. What is wrong?

According to the Marchment committee, which did a study for the Government last year, the most serious tangible problem is delay of service. Many of my constituents complain that there is no predictable time of day when the mail arrives and, at times, there is none for consecutive days.

The second group of immediate concern to me includes various religious and charitable organizations which require low-cost and efficient mail service to distribute their material. Two publications of the Canadian Church Press, namely The Presbyterian Record and The Canada Lutheran, have been denied second-class postal permits which are absolutely essential for their continued existence. The ground for this decision is that these periodicals are business and not religious. Mr. Speaker, if a church magazine is not religious, what is?

The subject of postal needs brings us to the third group affected by the Canada Post policies. Personal mail is important but it only constitutes about 8 per cent of the entire volume. By comparison, the lack of adequate service and the ever-increasing cost of mail service has a real negative impact on businesses, particularly small businesses.

To help put things into perspective, first-class business mail constituted about 4 billion pieces out of the total of 7.7 billion pieces handled by Canada Post last year. It contained various bills, invoices, tax slips, insurance documents, et cetera, which, given the obvious existence of deadlines and due dates, depend upon reliability of delivery within a reasonable period of time.

At the risk of sounding drastic, Mr. Speaker, promptness in such cases is a major factor in sustaining the economy and certainly the well-being and cash flow of enterprises involved. This is especially true of businesses which operate on performance margins directly related to postal rates.

Therefore, considering the volume of mail involved, even slight rate increases such as the one last month have a significant effect on profit margins. Furthermore, the lack of confidence has prompted many businesses to contact independent couriers for important pieces of mail, something which is an obvious additional burden on the costs.

• (1815)

I am strongly opposed to any rate increase without significant improvement in service, but I also realize that this is done because of the other major problems affecting Canada Post, poor productivity and the resulting deficit. For this the blame should be shared by labour and management. To begin with, the entire negotiating structure seems ridiculous in that there are eight unions and thirty bargaining units within the corporation. Not only does this prevent cohesive and co-ordinated bargaining but considering that unions tend to honour strikes across the country, one deadlock threatens to paralyse the entire system.

Given this, it would be instructive to look at some of the existing contractual provisions. For instance, in the letter carriers' agreement, full-time employees have the first right of refusal in replacing their colleagues who are absent on vacation or through illness. This means that a letter carrier who has completed his or her own shift, which incidentally can often be completed in three or four hours, has the option to pick up his absent colleague's bag. This he will almost invariably do since one of the catches is that substitutes are paid time and a half. Considering that the contract prohibits hiring casual or part-time workers at straight time, there is an obvious incentive to maximize frequency of absence and diminish productivity.

Statistics strongly back up this notion. Last year the non-vacation absenteeism of Canada Post employees was 16.5 days per year, all paid according to contract. By comparison, the average for the rest of the economy, including truly hazardous jobs such as mining and steel manufacturing, was six days.

There is no doubt that part of the blame in this case should be attributed to management, which conceded irresponsible benefits during the last settlement. On the whole, the bargaining climate between unions and management is adversarial to the point of irrational spite. Labour, in particular, tends to assume an "us versus them" attitude and politicize any disagreements.

Obviously, in the short time I have I cannot say all that is wrong with Canada Post, nor can I provide the solution. However, I can offer some ideas. First, I believe that strikes affecting postal service are indefensible. Therefore, I have drafted a Private Member's Motion calling on the Government to make Canada Post an essential public service, thus prohibiting strikes. Aside from assuring Canadians that at least some service will always be available, this should help pre-empt in the future the kind of ridiculous concessions described earlier.

Naturally this is not a solution but only a small step. Beyond it, the entire negotiating atmosphere must be improved and depoliticized. In that sense, the Minister's initiative of setting up a team to study the possibility of a neutral non-government group involvement is a worthy idea. As for improvements in productivity under existing contracts, commitments announced in last fall's corporate plan, such as specific time targets for delivery, are constructive.

I would like to stress that the situation is nothing short of shameful and frustrating but not irreversible given our resources and know-how. Therefore, a commitment to improvement of service should be the number one priority of Canada Post in the immediate future.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will try to respond to the concerns of my colleague and to those of all Canadian citizens.

Perhaps the single most important aspect of Canada Post delivery service is reliability, in other words the regularity with which the flood of mail is forwarded from the pick up point to the point of delivery.

In-depth market surveys indicate that postal service customers want to know how long it takes for first class mail to reach its destination.

The findings of the Marchment task force confirm those of the corporation.

All studies made suggest that postal service users are prepared to accept the following norms, provided they are guaranteed reliable service: two (2) days for delivery within the same city; three (3) days for delivery between major urban centres in the same province; and four (4) days for delivery between major urban centres in various provinces, that is from coast to coast in Canada.

The Corporation has set up a national control centre, which operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to monitor the efficiency of Canada Post by studying every step in the processing of mail, in accordance with the management plan of the Corporation. Canada Post has been introducing, since August 1986, a new color code. This system will enable managers of regional services to exercise a better control on our commitments. Each day of the week has been assigned a separate color and that allows the staff to determine precisely the priorities for processing and delivery.

The Corporation tries to meet its commitments related to processing and delivery of mail. It also emphasize the so-called "return program ". This is a program designed to correct mistakes due to a combination of factors, particularly errors in the postal code used by the sender, employees' mistakes and machine malfunctions. Canada Post has also bought 9,600 extra wire containers for intermodal railway service or for loading and unloading trucks carrying bulk mail, as well as 160,000 letter plastic containers for the safe transportation of mail.

The Corporation has a strategy which makes possible the sorting of all first class mail in 24 hours. That strategy is designed to make optimal use of facilities and machines, by distributing accumulated mail in order to reduce the number of items at rush hours and to increase it during slack periods.

To sum up, the facilities used by the Corporation and its network of means of transportation are being reorganized in order to process increasing amounts of mail on a more reliable and better monitored basis, through better management and a better use of equipment.

• (1820)

[English]

CHILDREN—PROGRAM TO COMBAT SEXUAL ABUSE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, on April 8 in the House I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) if he could advise me what progress he and the Government were making in terms of implementing social and educational initiatives to deal with child sexual abuse. These initiatives had been announced last year and, of course, we are urgently seeking their implementation. We are aware that the problem of sexual abuse of children is an extremely serious one. In fact, it has been estimated that four out of ten females and one out of ten males has been sexually abused before reaching the age of 18.

I have been very pleased to be part of the legislative committee that dealt with Bill C-15 which sets out the legal framework dealing with child sexual abuse, which establishes new offences and penalties and which deals with the ability of children to testify in court. I hope that that Bill will very soon receive third reading and be enacted.

In addition to the legal framework, the Government has promised to take action in other areas as well. It has indicated that it will appoint a special adviser on child sexual abuse. This adviser would have responsibilities to deal with the social and educational issues. He or she would be supported by a committee of regional advisers who would seek out and bring forward ideas and input from the various regions of the country, as well as being representative of the many disciplines which have a strong interest and concern about this issue. I understand that this adviser has not yet been appointed. I urge the Minister and the Government to work as quickly as possible in this respect because I believe that this program needs the leadership which the adviser will be able to bring to it.

At the same time, the Government has also committed $20 million over a period of five years to focus national efforts on combating child sexual abuse. This complements other initiatives. In allocating these funds, I think it is important that the federal Government work closely with the provinces and non-governmental organizations in this effort.

I was pleased to hear that on April 14 the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced approval of $1.3 million in project funding as the first step of this five-year program. He also indicated that there were an additional 65 projects totalling about $3.3 million which were under consideration for the 1987-88 fiscal year. I was particularly pleased to see that of the $1.3 million in projects that were announced, about $350,000 in projects would be going to organizations in British Columbia that have played a leadership role in this field. Indeed, the question of child sexual abuse has been an urgent topic for the school system in British Columbia.

• (1825)

I want to comment on one specific initiative that is being undertaken by the British Columbia School Trustees Association. More than a year ago the association established a task force to advise the provincial Government and school boards on the question of child sexual abuse. Last fall they released an excellent report which deals with this issue in a forward moving and comprehensive manner. This report contained a number of concrete proposals for the provincial ministry of education.

Building on the experience gained from this exercise, and with project funding from Health and Welfare Canada, the British Columbia School Trustees Association will be sponsoring a meeting of national educational associations representing parents, teachers, administrators, trustees and provincial government officials to share information and develop goals concerning child sexual abuse.

I think the school systems of Canada are in an excellent position to effectively respond to the problem of child sexual abuse.

In the short term, efforts can be focused on prevention and raising community awareness of the problem. In the long term, our school system can educate the next generation against interpersonal relationships which encourage child abuse. Our schools can implement programs and follow up with research to ascertain the effectiveness of these programs.

By bringing together concerned parties from right across Canada, the forum organized by the British Columbia School Trustees Association can be likened to a springboard, to help develop a national strategy to deal with this very tragic problem.

This meeting, which is to be funded by the federal Government, will allow the participants to develop a comprehensive role for school systems of Canada which will facilitate implementation of programs at both the local and provincial level. It will help put in place an information sharing process, allowing for communication about the effectiveness of techniques to combat this ill and about the results of research.

It may also lead to joint projects among various jurisdictions so that the lessons learned from a program in one part of Canada can be applied to the efforts of another.

I applaud this initiative for it sets the groundwork for a co-ordination of efforts on a national scale in Canadian schools. I trust that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will continue to approve funding for worth-while projects such as this which complement the legislation introduced by his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and will finally, I hope, start to deal with the root problems that are involved in the issue of child sexual abuse.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) for her dedication to such an important problem as child sexual abuse. I can see that she is very well informed on the subject and I wonder if she does not already know all the answers that the Department or myself would like to give her.

• (1830)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in June 1986, the Government announced what steps it intended to take as a follow up to the recommendations of the Badgley Report dealing with sexual abuse of children and also those of the Fraser Report dealing with pornography and prostitution.

In addition to the changes to the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act which are presently being contemplated, the Government has announced a social and educational program which is to be implemented through the Department of Health and Welfare.

However, the Government has fully recognized that under the Constitution the provinces are responsible for health services and social services in Canada. As part of its strategy, the Government has also appointed a special advisor on childhood who will be reporting directly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

This special advisor shall be assisted by a committe of regional advisors which will promote the exchange of ideas between the various regions of the country and act as a forum for the numerous disciplines involved in the field.

It is expected that the special advisor shall be named shortly.

It is essential that the government appoint the best qualified individual and that no other obligation will prevent that person from taking up that position.

In June last, an announcement was made that the Department of National Health and Welfare will spend $20 million during the next five years to implement social and educational measures in order to provide guidance and define the objective of the national strategy to control sexual violence against children. In order to develop a program making the best use of funds in accordance with the government's commitment, the Department has undertaken consultations with provincial officials and non-governmental organizations. According to the Department, it would not have been worthwhile to develop that program too soon without having sufficient outside input, especially those of individuals and organizations which are primarily responsible for the provision of those services.

Therefore, the Government remains committed to support effectively that important program and it will reconsider responses at governmental level to the problems of sexual abuse of children as the program evolves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1),

The House adjourned at 6.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 8, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MAKE JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE SAFE IN MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, Montreal's Jacques Cartier Bridge was again the scene of serious accidents, including one which resulted in the death of a Montreal south shore woman resident. It so happens that for several months now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has had on his desk the Trafix consultant firm report recommending quite realistic and practicable measures to make that bridge safer.

We Liberal Members of the Montreal region wonder just how much longer it will take before the Conservative Government reacts, just how much time before the Minister of Transport realizes the seriousness of the situation and heeds the advice of the Ports Canada Police Fraternity and of his own advisers who are urging him to take action. He has to assume his responsibilities before more accidents occur.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF FOREST INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as you well know, in British Columbia money really does grow on trees. Over $1 billion annually is generated in taxes and direct revenues from B.C.'s forest industry.

Today is day six of National Forest Week in Canada. As a Member of Parliament representing a forest riding, including Port Alberni, the Forestry Capital of Canada, this week is especially meaningful to the citizens of my home province. This year close to 90 British Columbia communities are joining with other communities across Canada to recognize our most valuable natural resource through community events, fairs and other festivities.

• (1105)

Much like the people of British Columbia, the forests of our province are undoubtedly one of the nation's greatest assets. One out of every three jobs in British Columbia depends on the forest resource for their livelihood. Ten per cent of our national economy is fueled by our forests.

Clearly money does grow on trees. Today, during National Forest Week, we recognize the contribution our forests make to the lives of all Canadians.

* * *

ROAD SAFETY

ACCIDENTAL DEATH OF VANCOUVER TEENAGER AT SELF-SERVICE GAS STATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have before me the coroner's report on the death of Edward Siemens, a Vancouver teenager who was a very great athlete. He and three other teenagers had been travelling in Vancouver late at night. They ran out of gas and manoeuvred their car into a self-service gas station.

The report indicates the power steering was very stiff and they were having difficulty manoeuvring the vehicle past the gas pumps. The right front of the vehicle impacted the gas pump and somehow the hose of number two pump caught the bumper of the car ripping the hose from the pump and breaking the on-off lever. This sudden disruption then caused the gas to be dispensed uncontrollably on to the ground surrounding the gas pump island area.

Mr. Siemens got out of the car. The electrical spark was still on, a fire broke out and engulfed Edward Siemens, and he died.

The report has a lot of good recommendations including larger islands, proper signage, fire extinguishers, two-way intercoms, proper training procedures, electrical shut-off switches and so on, but I want to bring to the attention of the House one particular recommendation, and I quote:

> We recommend a public awareness program as to the dangers of gasoline at self-service gas stations. This program should be province-wide.

I think it should be Canada-wide. I hope we can learn from Edward Siemens' death so we can prevent this kind of tragic death of another teenager or anyone else.

S. O. 21

[Translation]

INTERNATIONAL ASTRONOMY DAY

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES TO AMATEUR AND PROFESSIONAL ASTRONOMERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, May 9, is International Astronomy Day. Amateur and professional astronomers the world over will take this opportunity to participate in special activities designed to make the general public aware of the joys of astronomy.

These activities in Canada will be coordinated by the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada which will mark the day by paying tribute to Mrs. Helen Sawyer Hogg who devoted her life to astronomy and the scientific popularization of this discipline.

The theme of this year's celebrations comes from one of Mrs. Hogg's works entitled The Stars Belong To Everyone. The House is pleased to extend its best wishes to all participants.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

COUNTERVAIL IMPOSED ON IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES CORN—FUNDING OF ACTION BY AMERICAN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Ontario corn producers are suffering tremendous uncertainty as a result of the latest move by the United States to fight the countervail which Canada recently imposed on highly subsidized U.S. corn. The 85 cents per bushel countervail assists Canadian farmers by imposing a price on U.S. corn which is more in line with Canadian prices. The effect of the U.S. Farm Bill has been to depress corn prices severely and artificially thereby unfairly hurting our corn producers. This action by Canada was necessary.

The latest U.S. proposal would provide by law $500,000 to American farm groups who want to fight against the fair and necessary 85-cent Canadian countervail on corn. Whereas Canadian corn producers have paid their own legal bills, we see in this case the real possibility that the United States Treasury will be pitted against the already hurting Canadian corn producers. This U.S. financial assistance to farmers is in itself another subsidy to U.S. producers who are already among the most highly subsidized in the world.

I call upon the Government to protest this action immediately and do whatever it can to block such an unfair U.S. plan.

• (1110)

HISTORIC EVENTS

WORLD WAR II—ANNIVERSARY OF VICTORY DAY, MAY 8, 1945

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, after five years, World War II came to a slow and grinding halt. My war between Nijmegen and Arnhem was literally bogged down. It was on April 27, while on brigade staff, that I delivered the message: "Fire only when fired upon".

On May 5 General Foulkes accepted the surrender of the German forces in Holland. The lights went up. There were no more black-outs. We shook hands. We were still alive.

On May 7, in a brief ceremony at Reimes, General Jodl signed the surrender document, with hostilities to cease the next day. Thus, World War II ended on May 8, 1945.

Canadians will be forever remembered in the Netherlands with these words: "Thank you, Canada, for giving us our freedom".

Canadians lie buried in 74 different countries. May 8, 1945, was Victory Day—freedom so bitterly won.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, while there are some encouraging signs in today's employment figures, the jobless situation in most of Canada remains at an excessively high and totally unacceptable level.

The jobless figure for central British Columbia is 4 per cent higher than it was a year ago, while the jobless numbers for young people remain at virtually immorally high levels.

Youth unemployment in British Columbia has increased by 157 per cent during the 1980s, yet the Government has only provided summer job funds equal to those of last year. With no Expo jobs this summer, the job prospects for students and other young people in British Columbia will obviously be worse.

The federal Government has refused to recognize this critical fact in its funding for Challenge '87. While the Government points out that more than 90 per cent of all new jobs in Canada occur in the greater Toronto area, it should recognize that there is a Canada beyond Toronto in southern Ontario.

The unemployment crisis is continuing in all regions of Canada and is even increasing in the Province of Newfoundland. It is time the Government acknowledged this human tragedy and took immediate steps to bring it to an end.

YOUTH

DECLINE IN UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, judging from the statements yesterday of Hon. Members opposite, and in fact the one just made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), one might think that the Government has been negligent in its programs for youth, particularly our unemployed youth.

If the NDP and the Liberals would drop their partisan blinkers and take the time to examine the facts, they would see how the Government's policies are working. This morning we heard that unemployment is at its lowest level in five years, down to 9.3 per cent nationally.

How have we been able to bring down the unemployment rate by almost 2.5 percentage points? Well, it is mostly because of the sound economic policies of the Government, but also because of our very successful job-creation programs.

In my own riding of Capilano, for instance, the Challenge '87 program will create 187 jobs for students this summer. Over $350,000 in federal money has been committed to help give students valuable job experience. It is only one of many programs which is helping the people in my riding.

This is only one component of our job-creation program. The success of our total effort is there for all to see, as we beat down the unemployment rate and create jobs for all Canadians.

* * *

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

SAFETY OF PORT OF MONTREAL

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, today I met with representatives of Local 375 of the International Longshoremen's Association, who condemned the hazardous situation prevailing in the Port of Montreal, where the accident rate is one of the highest in Quebec. Last year, there were 500 accidents. This was brought to the attention of the former and the present federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), with no results. Deaths like that of Mr. René Leboeuf remain unexplained.

The ILA condemns the unconscionable attitude of Mr. Arnold Masters, President of the Maritime Employers' Association and a member of the Board of Directors of the Port of Montreal, and it is also critical of Mr. Masters' ties with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

Furthermore, the ILA local has complained that negotiations to renew their collective agreement are now at an impasse, that the situation is deteriorating and going from bad to worse.

* * *

STATUS OF WOWEN

IMPROVEMENT OF CONDITIONS

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, the Mulroney Government has made women's economic and social development a priority. The following is proof that it takes its commitment seriously. There are more jobs for women. There are 355,000 more women on the labour market than in September 1984; women's unemployment has dropped 2.3 points since the election; and the number of unemployed women has dropped nearly 100,000, compared with an increase of 243,000 under the Liberal Government. The 1986 Budget is a good deal for women. Advance payments of $300 for the child tax credit were made to families with incomes of $15,000 or less in 1985. We have done more for women in two years than the Liberals did in 20. That is why today, women are glad they elected a Conservative Government.

I want to take this opportunity today to wish our mothers a happy Mother's Day this coming Sunday.

* * *

• (1115)

[English]

INDUSTRY

PROJECT LAY-OFFS IN MARITIME LUMBER MILLS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Maritime Lumber Bureau has issued a chilling estimate that more than half of the 7,300 sawmill workers in the Maritimes will be laid off within a year if the lumber export tax is not removed. The loss of so many jobs will threaten the very survival of a number of communities in the region where lumber mills are the mainstay of the economy. A case in point is Juniper, New Brunswick, whose survival depends on Juniper's continued lumber operations.

[Translation]

According to the study by the Maritime Lumber Bureau, if the Juniper plant closes down, the Government will have to pay more than $10 million annually in social benefits. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will understand how important it is to exempt the Maritime provinces from this tax. Once again, I would urge the Government to take appropriate action.

[English]

ASTRONOMY

ACCESS BY CANADIAN ASTRONOMERS TO NEW TELESCOPE IN HAWAII

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, through a collaborative agreement signed recently between the National Research Council and Britain's Scientific and Engineering Research Council, Canadian astronomers will have access to 25 per cent of the observing time on one of world's best ratio telescopes operating at sub-millimetric wavelengths, a previously inaccessible spectral window on the universe.

This facility, the James Clerk Maxwell Telescope, will start operating this June on the 4,300 metre high summit of Mount Mauna Kea in Hawaii. Mauna Kea is one of the world's best astronomical sites because of its very dry atmosphere and the absence of light pollution. For this reason, a growing number of major telescopes operate there at visible, infrared and millimetric wavelengths, including the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope, a world class facility used by Canadian astronomers working in the visible part of the spectrum.

The National Research Council will also give Canadian astronomers convenient access to the new frontier in astronomy, the unprecedented resolution and spectral coverage of the Hubble Space Telescope. Located far above the earth's atmosphere, the Space Telescope will provide opportunities for dramatic new discoveries when it is put in earth orbit in two years.

The next decades will truly be a rewarding time for Canadian astronomers and scientists.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TAX REFORM

COMPREHENSIVE SALES TAX PROPOSAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There was a time when Canadians knew that there were some rights they could count on: access to our social programs, for one, and, for another, that staple foods, the necessities of life, would not be taxed.

When the present Government came into office and embarked on its deficit-cutting program, Canadians were shocked at its insensitivity. It will be a long, long time before they forget that this is the Government that tried to tamper with senior citizens' pensions.

Now that the Finance Minister has announced his plan to introduce a new comprehensive sales tax on all goods and services, will he tell the House, yes or no, whether or not he is planning a bread and milk tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought that when the Hon. Member started her question about rights and the rights of Canadians, she was going to ask me a question about the unemployment rate and why it is down to its lowest level in five years at 9.3 per cent. Our Government has created 778,000 jobs since it took office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Some of the weak areas that had been under pressure in manufacturing have now turned around. I believe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano, will be very pleased to know, and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question. Make a statement on motions.

Mr. Gauthier: He wants to cover the polls too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Minister who, I am sure, does not need any reminding, that there is an appropriate place to make statements and it follows one of the rubrics in Routine Proceedings. Perhaps the Hon. Minister could concentrate on the question that was asked and answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1120)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Thank you very much for correcting me, Mr. Speaker. I got distracted by this good news.

In response to the Hon. Member's question, I have indicated that there will be a White Paper on tax reform June 18. At that time there will be a comprehensive proposal for tax reform put before the House and that particular question will be answered fully.

NATIONAL SALES TAX OPTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that some provinces are interested in his idea for a national sales tax although he will not say which ones. Will he tell the House what information the provinces have on which to base their interest? Has he made them a concrete proposal or do they too have to wait until June 18?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the course of the better part of the past year the provinces and the federal Government have been meeting extensively on tax reform. Both Ministers and officials have attended these meetings and they have provided a very fruitful, worth-while and constructive degree of consultation between us. It was during the course of these discussions on both personal and corporate income taxes as well as on sales tax reform that there was a consensus at the last meeting. The provinces asked me to keep the option of a national sales tax open. That is what we are doing.

I have made it clear that the Government is committed to a comprehensive-based multi-stage tax as I indicated in my statement of Wednesday. Just how we implement that and what mechanism we will use will be the subject of further consultations with the provinces.

CONSUMPTION TAX INQUIRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, some experts have estimated that layering on a federal sales tax of 7 per cent or 8 per cent to the existing excise taxes and the provincial sales taxes will mean that Canadians will be paying a consumption tax of about 20 per cent. Can the Minister confirm this? If not, is he willing to give us his estimate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is known for her impatience and for her desire to get on with the job and I appreciate that. We want to get on with the job as well, but the answers to those questions cannot come in a piecemeal fashion. That is the purpose of comprehensive tax reform and that is the purpose of the White Paper that we will be bringing down on June 18. If the Hon. Member would just exercise a little bit of patience, I am sure she will be quite satisfied with the answers she receives at that time.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAX RENTS AND HOUSE SALES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

According to the Minister's statement in the House last Wednesday, the new federal sales tax, whatever form it may take, would be applied uniformly to all goods and services.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he intends to tax residential rents and sales?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have to give the Hon. Member the same answers I have just given to his colleague. To answer these questions piecemeal in advance of the White Paper is surely not the appropriate way to reveal to Canadians the full impact, both positive and negative, and all the implications of tax reform. It should be done at one time so people can judge not only in response to one particular question but to the full impact of tax reform and how it affects them and others in whom they may be interested. That is the purpose of the White Paper and I am sure the Hon. Member should be able to wait until June 18 to get that answer.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER POPULAR FOOD PRODUCTS WILL BE EXEMPTED OR TAXED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's statement last Wednesday, it was clear that whatever form the new federal sales tax would take, it would apply uniformly to all goods and services.

Canadians are therefore wondering where the exemption comes in.

My supplementary is as follows:

Whatever the new federal sales tax turns out to be, will popular food products such as pizza, spaghetti, hamburgers, hot dogs and other kinds of snack foods be taxed or tax exempt?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to give him the same answer and I do not want to use up the time of the House repeating it.

• (1125)

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM ON AVERAGE FAMILY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be a little more successful with the Minister. I hope he will be more forthcoming than he has been so far today, indeed the past two days when he has refused to assure Canadians that the Conservative Government will not put a new tax on food.

The Minister is boasting about tax reform. If it is going to be genuine reform then presumably Canadians will not be paying any more after tax reform than they were when the Government was elected in 1984. Will the Minister at least assure the average family that following this so-called tax reform package their taxes will not be any higher than when the Conservative Government was elected in September, 1984?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to pull those numbers out of the top of my head.

Mr. Broadbent: Funny, you could pull others out.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): However, I am sure the Hon. Member will be well satisfied with the results of tax reform. The balance of taxation will be fairer as between different income groups, corporate and personal income tax, and different parts of industry. One of the key objectives of tax reform is to provide a more equitable balance of taxation among all Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Average Canadians want a fairer system but they also know the Government has overtaxed them and they want to pay less taxes, not simply have a fairer system.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE ON TAX LEVELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since becoming Minister of Finance he has inflicted upon the people of Canada three Budgets and one budget statement. Gasoline taxes and the federal sales tax have both been increased three times. There were two major increases in income taxes. Considering the increase in the burden on the average family amounts to several hundred dollars since September, 1984, will the Minister at least guarantee that taxes will not be any higher after reform than when he was elected? Yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I effectively answered that question in response to his first question. If he wishes to check with his colleague, he will know that I said yesterday that a good majority of Canadians will be paying less tax after the impact of both personal and sales taxes. That is a good step forward.

The Hon. Member should also look at the broader picture here and understand what we have done to make the tax system more fair. We brought in a minimum tax. We removed the scientific research tax credit. We made the rules on limited partnerships much fairer and tighter to avoid abuse. We removed the carve-outs. We removed the financing of yachts and hotels, things like that which gave upper-income Canadians and companies some tax breaks that average Canadians were not getting. That is what I mean when I say we are trying to get a fairer tax system. We are well on the road to doing that. We have made some good changes so far. That process will continue into tax reform.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister also gave rich Canadians a $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: Tell the farmers that.

Mr. Broadbent: He left that out of his little list.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER FAMILY WILL PAY MORE TAX THAN IN 1984

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the middle class wants to know whether this family is going to pay less or more after the tax reform than it did in 1984. The Minister ought to answer this question today. Is this going to be a frank and forthright reform of our tax system, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to that most inappropriate preamble. The capital gains tax exemption was directed primarily at farmers and small business people.

Mr. Broadbent: Restrict it to them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is expressing some concern about small business people. I am very proud that this particular initiative has encouraged small business people to create more jobs. Look at the number of new companies which has been created, and each company is creating more jobs. That is why 778,000 jobs have been created since September of 1984. I believe 80 or 85 per cent of the jobs have been created by that community which has been encouraged to do so by the policies of the Government.

• (1130)

POSSIBILITY OF FOOD TAX QUERIED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Millions of Canadians living below the poverty line are worried that their food will be taxed and the Minister is doing nothing to soothe their fears. On the contrary, mixed signals are coming from the other side of the House. Yesterday the chairman of the finance committee said:

> I'm not getting worried about taxing food. I mean if you're going to tax clothing in this cold climate why wouldn't you tax food. If you're going to tax home heating oil, why wouldn't you tax food?

That worries us and that worries millions of Canadians. I would like the Minister to quit his fancy figure skating. Yes or no, will food be taxed? I hope he will say no.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if admonishments are to be made across the floor of the House of Commons, I would admonish the Hon. Member not to quote as selectively as he has just done.

One of the key elements of any sales tax reform, which has been widely recognized as being progressive by the social policy groups of the country, is the inclusion of a low-income refundable sales tax credit which will change the nature of sales tax for the low-income Canadians to whom the Hon. Member has just referred. That is a very progressive element of tax reform and that is one of the reasons I say that the tax reform we will bring in will be seen as fair.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just mentioned that a tax credit might be used to help those in need and on low incomes. Are we to conclude this is an admission there will be a tax on food and that low-income Canadians will get a tax refund? Is that what he meant in his previous answer?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened carefully he would have heard that I said a refundable tax credit. In other words, cash would be put back into the pockets of low-income Canadians to offset the impact of any sales tax proposal.

Mr. Axworthy: What are they to be taxed on?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is asking questions which, I am sure he will understand, can only be answered in the White Paper. He has been in a Government and understands the purpose of a White Paper. The purpose of the White Paper is to set out in broad terms the specific proposals of the Government on tax reform.

Mr. Axworthy: Does it include food?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Exercise some patience, Lloyd. Exercise some patience.

* * *

CHILD CARE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare publicly admitted his disappointment in the recommendations of the Special Committee on Child Care because they will not extend the supply of badly needed child care spaces. He said that over 2.5 million children need care right now.

Does the Minister of Finance agree with child care experts across Canada that the $400 million cost of tax measures which was recommended by the Special Committee on Child Care will not create desperately needed child care services? Will he recommend that this amount of money be spent on quality child care services instead?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there have been a number of proposals on child care. The Government has said that it will be responding. The Prime Minister has initiated a process of discussing these proposals with the provinces. My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has that process well under way. There will be a response from the Government in due course. That is the type of question which will be responded to at that time.

REQUEST THAT GRANTS BE PAID TO PROVINCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the crisis in child care is here now. If, as the Minister says, there are more parents working, their children are in addition to the over two million children which need care. We need immediate action as well as long-term planning.

While waiting for the completion of this long-term process, during which children could grow up, will he allocate the $300 million which is reserved in the Estimates for health and welfare to direct grants to provinces to deal with the child care crisis? Incidentally, this would create over 20,000 new spaces each year.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has initiated a process which—

Ms. Mitchell: The Prime Minister promised child care action.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is chirping over there. We must understand that a process is under way.

Ms. Mitchell: A crisis is under way.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is a federation. The provinces are part of the federation and have direct responsibility to deliver child care. The Hon. Member should understand, particularly in light of the support which her Party has given to the Meech Lake Agreement of last Thursday, that it is important that we allow federal-provincial processes to work. That is what is happening. It is a very productive process.

Ms. Mitchell: In the meantime you can do something about the crisis.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In a very short time there will be reports from the Government of Canada.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday angry farmers picketed the Prime Minister outside North Battleford and demanded a commitment to a deficiency payment for the 1987 crop year. Canadian farmers simply cannot survive on $2.50 a bushel for their best wheat when American farmers are getting over $6 a bushel.

When is the Deputy Prime Minister going to stop stonewalling farmers? When is he going to end the uncertainty? When is he going to make it clear what deficiency payment or assistance will be provided for the 1987 crop year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, certainly not to minimize the very serious problems in agriculture, I do not think that a demonstration by 40 members of the New Democratic Party is something about which one would want to get overly alarmed.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was probably well orchestrated. The fact is that, as has been indicated in this House on many occasions, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board are working very closely with the farm leaders to address not only short-term but long-term plans.

When the Hon. Member suggests that wheat is averaging $2.50 a bushel he is somewhat inaccurate in that for domestic consumption the price is $7. When you consider the impact of the deficiency payment, the covering of the losses in the Pools, the transportation subsidies, and all the other programs, it works out to considerably more than $2.50 a bushel. In the interest of honesty he should state that categorically so that this issue is not confused.

FARM DEBT REVIEW BOARDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the farmers want a commitment about a deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year. I hope the Deputy Prime Minister will give consideration to that.

A week ago today the Government started foreclosures on FCC loans, over 6,000 of which are in arrears by more than two years. The farmers picketing the Prime Minister in North Battleford yesterday and the select 15 who attended his farm meeting in Saskatoon, who supposedly are the hard-core Tory supporters, told the Prime Minister that the Farm Debt Review Boards are biased in favour of the banks.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister willing to bring in new legislation to ensure that the Farm Debt Review Boards help farmers and are not only biased in favour of the banks and helping farmers off the farm? We want to keep the farmers on the farms.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure under what licence and authority the Hon. Member pretends to speak for all farmers. It is interesting to note an article in today's Edmonton Journal about a coalition that is being organized which recommends that the national Government should consider providing less subsidization rather than more subsidization.

Mr. Riis: Did you organize that?

• (1140)

Mr. Mazankowski: In terms of addressing the problem, deficiency support is certainly one element of the cure. However, clearly there are some longer-term steps that have to be taken, such as resolving the international marketing situation on which this Government is taking a strong position and exercising strong leadership.

As far as his comments with respect to the Farm Debt Review Boards are concerned, I think the success rate is very commendable, at some 65 per cent or 66 per cent. If there are some problems and concerns with regard to the manner in which they are functioning, I am sure the Prime Minister would be interested, as I would be interested to know about that. If the Hon. Member has any specific cases or evidence that the Farm Debt Review Boards have been operating in a manner unfair to farmers, I wish he would bring that to the attention of the respective Ministers.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENT—PRIME MINISTER'S TALK WITH FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps some of those New Democrats could have helped fill those empty seats in Lethbridge.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister met some 16 hand-picked Tories in a tool-shed near Saskatoon. Perhaps they should have taken him out to a wood-shed rather than a tool-shed.

In light of the Prime Minister's statement to those 16 hand-picked Tories that: "We must make sure that farmers survive until the trade war is over", does this mean that the Prime Minister is committed to a deficiency payment for the crop year 1987-88? Is it an indication that he means there will be a new deficiency payment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member takes exception to the fact that the Prime Minister is meeting with actual farmers, farmers on the land. Why would he take exception to that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: All seven of them.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps it represents the narrowness and shallowness of the Hon. Member.

The Prime Minister has said time and time again that the Government will not stand idly by and see the farmers go down the tube. We will fight this on various fronts at the international level. We will fight it by reducing input costs, and we will fight it by direct support to the farmers, as we have done, as we are doing, and as we will continue to do.

Mr. Nystrom: This guy sounds more like Allan MacEachen every day with his non-answers.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—ENDING OF LOAN MORATORIUM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, during the Prime Minister's three-day photo opportunity on the Prairies, these hand-picked Tory farmers told him that there was a crisis. In light of that and the fact that he has refused to meet the leaders of the Wheat Pools, is the Prime Minister prepared to reverse the callous decision of the federal Government to end the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans? Is the Prime Minister at least ready to reverse that callous decision in order to help some of the farmers survive?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is not refusing to meet with the representatives of the Pools. He has met with them before and will meet with them again.

Mr. Broadbent: At the next election.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the socialists says: "The next election". He may want to reconsider that because if he is interested in being fair he knows that the Prime Minister has met with all farm leaders, including the leaders of the Pools. My understanding is that he will be meeting them again in May or June.

Mr. Riis: You sound defensive.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not defensive in the least. The fact of the matter is that we have a proud record on agriculture and I am simply trying to correct some erroneous and false statements that are coming from the mouths of the western Members representing the socialists.

The fact is that the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade will be meeting with the OECD, and agriculture will be at the top of the list. That is where we will find the long-term solution.

In the meantime, as I have said, we are providing support on a direct level. We are reducing input costs and we will continue to work hand-in-glove with the farmers to work out a solution that will be seen as reasonable and fair to them as well as to all Canadians.

* * *

SENATE REFORM

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—LIBERAL PARTY PROPOSAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to the agreement reached by the Premiers and the Prime Minister last week, there is an interim arrangement whereby the provinces would put forward nominees to the Senate. As the Deputy Prime Minister may know, western Liberals, in the spirit of Senate reform, have put forward the proposal that those nominees—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You will never make it, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Is there something tickling their interest, Mr. Speaker? They have put forward the proposal that those nominees coming from the provinces should be chosen by an election of the people in each of the provinces. Does the federal Government favour that proposal, provided that those provincial nominees would be selected or chosen by way of general election in each of the provinces? Will the Government guarantee that if that was the case it would automatically accept those nominees as members of the Senate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is making that representation as an official policy of the Liberal Party. If so, he had better get his act together with his Leader because today he is reported as saying that the "accord snuffs out chances of an elected Senate". Those are the words of the Leader of the Liberal Party. Maybe they should get their act together and then come to the House to present their position.

PROPOSAL TO ELECT SENATORS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the same question. Does the Deputy Prime Minister believe that the present accord snuffs out an opportunity for an elected Senate and, if so, will the Government be prepared to accept a proposal that would at least indicate a willingness to begin finding ways out of the conundrum that has been posed, and ensure that in western provinces where people want an elected Senate it could find a way through this particular arrangement where at least that process can begin?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I guess the Hon. Member is asking whether I agree with him or his Leader. The fact is that I agree with the Prime Minister and the First Ministers who signed an accord. Obviously, if the western Premiers signed the accord and were committed to the process of an elected Senate, I would think that they would see this is a step forward, as do we.

* * *

INDUSTRY

MEAT PACKING INDUSTRY IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that there is a crisis in the meat-packing industry in western Canada and that plant after plant has closed in Winnipeg, Manitoba, over the last five years. Considering that the Prime Minister is in Winnipeg at this time, does the Government have any intention to make sure that there is a strong, viable meat-packing industry in the City of Winnipeg?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that there was a crisis in the meat-packing industry in western Canada. I am aware of a number of companies that are actively seeking and proposing to expand meat-packing facilities in western Canada. This is one of the matters that is under consideration by the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion. I think the answer to the Hon. Member's question in terms of western Canada is that the future is bright.

Oral Questions

WINNIPEG MEAT PACKING PLANTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the workers at those plants that are closing down and the farmers who deliver their goods to those plants do not think that it is a great economic situation. Will the Government do anything at all to maintain the meat-packing plants in the City of Winnipeg?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same. I have indicated that the prospect for expansion of the meat-packing industry in western Canada is fairly bright. That is evidenced by the fact that a number of companies are considering expanding their operations there.

I know that the matter raised in the Member's specific question has been considered by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is also my understanding that proposals have been offered to encourage those facilities to stay. However, that is essentially a decision that has to be made by the companies themselves. I know that the socialists like to interfere, with their grand scheme, but there are certain—

Mr. Broadbent: Sterling Lyon used to say that.

Mr. Mazankowski: —there are certain decisions that we believe must be left to the market-place.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATURAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL—CUT-BACK OF STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Several witnesses appearing before the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology recently raised a concern about a cut-back of an NSERC scholarship program that would provide students with a valuable summer work experience in industrial laboratories and universities. Could the Minister tell us this morning why NSERC has decided to deprive students of this valuable work experience, especially at a time when its budget was increased by some $700 million or $800 million?

• (1150)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what my hon. colleague and friend is talking about here is a decision that was made last year by the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council to rearrange its priorities with a view to strengthening its operating grants program which has resulted in the admission of over 400 new researchers into the program. This was a rearrangement of priorities. It is unfortunate that it has to take place from time to time. But there are still quite a number of summer students who will gain the work experience about which the Hon. Member is talking.

* * *

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION LICENSING POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last February the Minister of Communications announced with a great deal of fanfare a new licensing policy which would enable Canadian film distributors to reinvest in the production and promotion of Canadian-made films. In the absence of the Minister of Communications I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Are the pressures that are being brought to bear on Canada by the U.S. Congress and the American film industry giving the Canadian Government second thoughts about this film distribution policy? Is this another scorched-earth undertaking? Why has the Government delayed introducing the Minister's announced legislation which she herself has termed a direct cultural benefit vital to the development of a healthy Canadian film industry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Minister of Communications has met with representatives of the American film industry in an attempt to persuade them that this proposal would not restrict the entry of American films into Canada. Those discussions are ongoing. I think it is a matter of setting the record straight and educating our American friends to this reality. That is the sort of dialogue that is going on at the present time.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister may not be intimidated but I wonder if Cabinet is being intimidated. I want to know when the Government will honour the Minister's commitment made last February to the Canadian film industry. Is the Government going to wilt under this heavy American pressure or will it undertake to introduce this policy before the end of June?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the efforts of the Minister of Communications and the Government—

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, what about yours?

Miss Carney: May I be allowed to finish, Mr. Speaker?

The efforts of the Minister of Communications and the Government have made this policy possible for the first time in 50 years. It is the first time in 50 years that any Canadian Government has tried to open up the film distribution business in Canada to Canadians. I would like to point out that only 3 per cent of the screening time in Canadian theatres is available for Canadian films. That is why the Government is acting on this issue. Legislation will be introduced.

MESSAGE SENT BY MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, let me see if I can pin down precisely what is happening in this case. Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that most members of the Ways and Means Committee of the U.S. Congress and Senator Lloyd Bensten, the head of the U.S. Finance Committee, have written to the Government with respect to this Bill? Have they tied what they have written to whether or not they would support free trade when the issue goes from Canada to the U.S. Congress later this year?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, both the Deputy Prime Minister and myself have indicated that we feel that some Americans have over-reacted to this proposed policy and have blown it all out of proportion. Any adverse impact on the U.S. industry in Canada would be small compared to the continuing profits, and would be infinitesimal compared to the U.S. trade surplus in the trade and cultural goods and services area, which is $1.3 billion per year. We feel that the concern being expressed in the U.S. is understandable. While Americans have had this kind of access to this market, we intend to make sure that the distribution process is more open to Canadians. I do not understand why the NDP is constantly opposing this initiative to protect our cultural industries.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I asked a very straight question about whether, in fact, communications had been received. I am sorry that the Minister has not the heart to give a straight answer. Does the Minister not have a clear sense that this kind of blackmail being exercised at this stage shows us precisely the kinds of dangers that we will see in the future if we get ourselves into a position in which we are so tied to the United States that it can go after every piece of legislation here which it does not like and threaten us with either elimination of the trade treaty or with not signing it?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand how the NDP can suggest that we are so tied that our move in film distribution would tie us further to the Americans. Our whole point is that 97 per cent of the films shown in Canada are not Canadian films. Our effort is to try to untie the distribution process so that Canadians have more access.

In terms of the specific questions about exchange of letters, that is public information. Senator Bensten has written the Prime Minister about his concern. The Prime Minister has responded saying that he feels that this is an issue which should not cause any concern to the Americans.

STATUS OF WOMEN

BLACK WATCH REGIMENT—PARTICIPATION OF FEMALE MEMBERS IN TROOPING THE COLOUR CEREMONY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. This morning an incredible article appeared in The Montreal Gazette indicating that female members of the famous Black Watch Regiment would be excluded from the trooping of the colour when the Queen Mother visits Montreal next month for the regiment's one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary. I understand that, apparently, the female members of the regiment do not wear kilts. I hope that the Minister will not skirt around this issue.

Given the Minister's very good record in promoting equality for women in the Canadian Armed Forces, can he confirm today that, first, the story is not true and, second, that the women members of the regiment will participate in the trooping of the colour?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, both as Solicitor General and as Minister of National Defence I have had the privilege of working with women who are in occupations which were previously reserved for men. In every single instance of which I am aware they have acquitted themselves admirably.

If the male members of the Black Watch are going on parade for the Queen Mother, then the female members will be on parade as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

IMMIGRATION

UNSCRUPULOUS CONSULTANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. It concerns the growing lucrative and illegal industry of unscrupulous immigration consultants. I have raised repeated requests in this House that the Government clamp down on these operators. Instead, we have to rely on a front page investigation in The Toronto Star today which shows that one John Santos has earned at least $600,000, lives in a European villa by the ocean, and owns a $50,000 Mercedes, thanks to the proceeds of his illegal refugee scams. This is typical, and it is going unchallenged.

I would like to ask the Minister this. Rather than continue to turn a blind eye to these operators, rather than legislate against genuine refugees, and rather than slap on visa after visa, will the Minister not move forcefully and immediately to eliminate the source of this cancerous activity rather than simply dealing ineffectively with its symptoms?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions, I have indicated in this House to the Hon. Member for York West that we have had to use the means available in this country to take action against these people. I agree that this is a difficult and unacceptable situation.

I repeat that whenever we are made aware of so-called dishonest actions in whatever area, we refer the cases to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for an investigation and, if necessary, we ask the Minister of Justice to institute legal proceedings.

The RCMP has now completed its investigation and made the necessary representations to the Department of Justice; I suggest we should wait for the result. Should the Department of Justice feel the need to prosecute, it will certainly do so.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, Canadians are getting tired of that same answer. Is it not ironic that the number of refugee scams has intensified with each stringent measure the Government has announced along the way?

REQUEST THAT PROSECUTIONS BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Given that there are elaborate schemes and networks of rings operating in Turkey, Portugal, Lebanon and now even in Brazil, we need two answers; first, we need to send out a strong signal by immediately legally prosecuting these operators and; second, we must avoid stringent legislation such as that announced on Tuesday because it only serves to encourage more people like John Santos who will take advantage of the real life-threatening situation facing refugees, thus forcing them through the back doors of our country and other countries of the world.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West may think whatever he pleases of the legislation tabled on Tuesday. We know what Canadians think of it, and that is quite good enough for us.

Now, if the Hon. Member suggests that we should disregard the normal procedures in this country for legal prosecutions, if he has devised a new set of procedures which would make it possible for us to disregard the recommendations of the Department of Justice and the RCMP, he should come right out and say so.

But as long as I remain Minister of Employment and Immigration, I will continue to use the procedure provided for in this country.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, followed by the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Minister of Finance said he was excited about this month's unemployment figures. Before he breaks out the champagne, I would like to get the impression of the Minister of Employment and Immigration about the situation in Newfoundland where the unemployment rate is 4 per cent higher this year than last year. One thousand additional people found themselves on the unemployment rolls and the youth unemployment rate is 33 per cent. What is the Minister's impression of those figures? And what is he going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats are single-track minded. The unemployment rate went up in only one province this month. I wish the Hon. Member would refer to British Columbia, among other provinces, where unemployment has declined by 1 per cent. In terms of unemployment we have reached a five-year low and the over-all job creation situation in this country has not been so promising in six or seven years.

The Hon. Member should single out a province which we all agree is experiencing economic expansion problems which we have addressed. Among other things, this year we have invested $5 million more than expected in the Atlantic provinces through the employment development program.

I would suggest that Canadians are enthusiastic about our job creation performance, and the figures speak for themselves.

All I can do is urge the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville to look at them.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER VISIT NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the Minister that, having finished his trip out west, the Prime Minister may want to go to Newfoundland and explain how good things are in British Columbia to the unemployed in Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Hon.

Member feels so disappointed because any Friday is always the best time to convey good news to Canadians.

One more comment with which he will agree, I am sure. For the past five months Canada has experienced a steady employment increase in the manufacturing sector. I know my colleague is a specialist and fully appreciates the fact that this entails firm growth in a number of other sectors over the coming months. Even the New Democrats ought to be pleased when the figures are excellent.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DECLINE IN NUMBER OF FOREIGN STUDENTS COMING TO CANADA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and because the Deputy Prime Minister has just left, I address my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that international students studying in Canada contribute about $400 million each year to the Canadian economy, and in view of the fact that differential fees and bureaucratic red tape have discouraged foreign students from coming to Canada to study, why has the Government allowed a 43 per cent drop in the number of international students over the past few years, to the great detriment of our economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed a question which has a number of very precise details about which, I am sure he will understand, I am not fully briefed. However, I will bring that question to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs upon his return from Europe.

ENTRY OF FOREIGN STUDENTS TO WORK PROGRAMS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is being done about the fact that international students are often denied entry into the work co-operation programs, and in the case of those students who are allowed to work, the Government makes them pay pension and unemployment insurance deductions but will not allow them to have the benefits?

[Translation]

Why maintain this unfair practice when obviously it discourages students who would otherwise seriously consider studying in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand that I would like to give a very specific and accurate answer as well as be sure about the figures put forward. If the Hon. Member agrees, I will check with the department and give a more specific answer pretty soon.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF SUPPLEMENTARY 1987 COMMISSION REPORT—NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Section 9 of the Representation Act, 1985, to lay upon the table a certified copy of the 1987 report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of New Brunswick.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INSULT TO SOUTHERN ALBERTA

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has inadvertently, I am sure—probably by listening to the national media—insulted all of southern Alberta and its warm hospitality, and that affects my rights and privileges.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Thacker: I ask him to withdraw the allegation because I can assure the Hon. Member, as his colleague in this House, that over 700 people jammed the ballroom in Lethbridge and overflowed into the corridors outside.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Thacker: One lady even had to be taken out by doctors because of the heat and the crush. I ask the Hon. Member to withdraw because he knows southern Albertans have given warm hospitality to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member has made his point. I am not sure it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): May I just say, Mr. Speaker, that I am the last Member in the House who should question the wisdom of the reporting of the fourth estate.

Privilege—Mr. Weiner

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INACCURACY IN MINISTER'S ANSWER

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, further to the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), I would like to clarify my response to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on page 5796 of Hansard and the misunderstanding over the omission of the word "not".

The first opportunity I had to read Hansard was following the Hon. Member's question of privilege yesterday. I had my staff check the video. What I clearly said was that: "the first step is not a pre-screening". I am advised by a member of my staff that in a review of the "blues" the word "not" was omitted.

I apologize for any inconvenience this matter may have caused the Hon. Member or the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition Nos. 332-1564, 332-1612, 332-1621, 332-1649, 332-1733 to 332-1744 inclusive, 332-1804 to 332-1810 inclusive, 332-1829, 332-1877 to 332-1879 inclusive, 332-1914 to 332-1917 inclusive, 332-1923 to 332-1925 inclusive and 332-2009.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, although it is unfortunately a little late because the Government has used closure on a number of occasions to choke off debate on Bill C-22, the Bill to amend the Patent Act, we are still receiving petitions to present.

• (1210)

It is a pleasure and an honour to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners from the constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap who are of the impression that federal Government proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for average Canadian consumers and will severely restrict their ability to buy necessary prescription drugs.

They ask the Parliament of Canada to reject these proposals. There is still chance that might happen if the Senate were to hear these petitions, evaluate the information before it, and stop this punitive legislation.

* * *

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pat Carney (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

May 6, 1987—The Prime Minister:

That this House endorses the Meech Lake statement of principles approved by all First Ministers, April 30, 1987 as a basis for Quebec's participation as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution, and as a basis for the establishment, in the spirit of equality and fairness, of a process for considering further constitutional reforms.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for failing to recognize the real value of women's work in the workplace, the community and in the home with tangible policies that would ensure adequate incomes, removal of barriers and full opportunities for equal participation in decision making and in the political life of Canada.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party today on the motion which indicates that we indeed condemn the Government for failing to recognize the real value of women's work in the workplace, in the community, and in the home. We feel that it should be recognized with tangible government policies, not just words, which would ensure adequate incomes, the removal of many barriers still remaining, and full opportunities for equal participation in decision-making and in the political life of Canada.

On Sunday, children young and old across Canada will celebrate Mother's Day to show their love and appreciation for the person who in most families still assumes major home-making responsibilities as well as often works in the workplace and contributes in many ways to the community.

A few weeks ago we celebrated secretary's week. It was a week when bosses took their secretaries to lunch and often continued to pay low wages for the rest of the year.

Most women would agree that it is certainly nice to be loved and officially appreciated. We agree that this should be done not only once a year but on a year-round basis. It would be very nice if women had equal opportunities in all areas of their lives, including shared parental responsibilities and adequate income year-round.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has talked about equality quite frequently. His words look good on paper. We approve of the statement made at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver. We also approve of the appointment of two women judges. It was a major step forward.

However, most federal government policies—and it is policies which really count for women—lag far behind. While the policies and the legislation do not meet our expectations, I must say that the actions, the behaviour, and the attitudes of many Tory back-benchers are completely unacceptable. These days many of them seem to be scurrying about, extolling patriarchal values, eating illicit muffins, and trying through committees to move us backward in time as far as equality is concerned.

The Government has stated very strongly that it is for equality. Unfortunately it is being denied in the process. I have participated in two committees which have travelled across the country and spoken with women's groups. My sisters on the other side of the House would agree that we want to be proud that all Members of Parliament are supporting equality and are trying to show appreciation to the many millions of Canadian women who have worked hard for equality over the past 15 years, and even before then. I am referring to the challenge which is under way regarding Secretary of State funding for women's programs. I will return to it later.

The New Democratic Party wants to pay tribute to millions of Canadian women who have worked long and hard to remove barriers for women. There are literally millions of them involved in different organizations across the country. They insist upon equality. Perhaps it is sometimes a little hard for a Government in power to take.

There will be a very strong lobby from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women on Monday. At least, I hope it will be very strong and well-informed as it always is. Women's groups like the NAC lobby constantly for legislative reform.

Women in the women's movement and organizations across the country, including organizations which have existed for many years, such as the Canadian Council of Women, give each other mutual support while they are working toward a change. Literally millions of Canadian women, as I said, are declaring that they will not go backward. They resent having to spend time and energy defending what they now have. They really resent reactionaries.

I know there are many Tory back-benchers who feel very strongly about equality, and I see some of them sitting in the House today. However, having been on two committees, I can tell the House that there are many who are not convinced and are actively working in the other direction.

I should now like to concentrate upon issues of concern to women who work in the workplace, in the home, and in the community. I remind Hon. Members very quickly, in the time available, of the barriers to equality that still exist about which we all know. In fact, in some areas they are increasing. We are concerned that we need effective, tangible government programs and policies to deal with the problems, to come to grips with the increasing and incredible poverty faced by women and the violence they are still facing despite all of us trying to work on the issue. They are faced with many inequalities, including very little participation in decision-making levels of all areas of life in Canada, but particularly in Government.

• (1220)

Very quickly on the economic situation for women, and I know my colleague will be commenting on this in more detail later, I regret to say that it is not improving. Let us have a look at the facts. First, let us consider the wage gap between men and women. Women's wages we know have been lower than men's for some time. It is appalling that the gap is increasing. In 1984, the average wage for women was 65.5 per cent of the average wage for men. Last year it was 64.9 per cent. It is worsening. I was quite shocked to hear that in British Columbia, my province, women are earning 61.6 per cent of men's earnings. That is, women are earning 61-cent dollars, and yet there are so many of them, more than in any other province, who are raising families alone and who are in desperate poverty.

There is no question that we need much stronger equal pay for work of equal value, not only in the Public Service, the federal jurisdiction, but throughout society. We need enforcement of employment equity. We need pay equity legislation nationally as well as provincially.

Women continue to work primarily in low-paying job ghettos. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has done studies on the Canadian Jobs Strategy programs and so has the Canadian Congress on Learning Opportunities for Women. In both studies it found that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is not helping to improve the situation for women. It is just reinforcing the trends that are there. Many of the training programs and job opportunities are in pink-collar jobs. Women are being directed to the low-paying job ghettos, even for re-entry programs. This is not improving the situation. We have to use government programs to open up new opportunities in non-traditional jobs and into jobs that are better paid, something that is not happening through the existing training programs.

We do not have effective affirmative action yet in our federal service. We must have a new look at the employment equity legislation from the point of view of making it mandatory. Women continue to be the major players in part-time jobs. Some people will say that that is fine because they have children and they just want to work part-time. Maybe that is the case sometimes but it is not all the time. There are many women who do not have much choice. Regardless of why they are part-time workers, they surely have the right to decent rates of pay, to benefits, to be able to pay into the Canada Pension Plan and so on. We asked the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, who I am glad to see in the House today, to look at the Canada Labour Code and to bring in reforms that will speed this up and help to cover prorated benefits for part-time workers, 70 per cent of whom are women.

We believe also that women's jobs are being threatened by certain government policies, certainly by privatization, often into non-union job categories by contracting out within groups like Canada Employment where we find more and more of this. As well I will include deregulation. There has not been protection for women. I hope there will be a serious in-depth study of the impact of these government policies.

In my question earlier today I mentioned that working parents have over 2.5 million children who need care. Workers who are parents, both men and women, need improved maternity and parental leave. Here again, I hope the Government, led by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, will make sure that unemployment insurance coverage is improved to cover longer periods of benefits, certainly for maternity. Eventually over a number of years, we would like to allow maternity leave to 41 weeks with increased benefits so that women and men, fathers and mothers, will have a choice during the first year of their child's life to be at home with the infant to help in its development and to enjoy that period. Most people who have to work are unable to do that, unless we have improved parental benefits. We are far behind European countries in that respect.

I want to spend a minute on child care. We know that this is absolutely critical for women in the workforce, for women in the home and for women working in the community in various roles. We need a very flexible, comprehensive, affordable and quality system of child care. That is why we want to have immediate action on the current crisis as well as long-term funding to ensure that children across the country and parents, particularly women, will have good quality child care and will not be worried about the kind of inadequate care or lack of care altogether with which they have to deal today.

I must say with all due respect that I hope the members of the Special Committee on Child Care were not reflecting government positions, but the Conservative Party has not fully accepted the current trends in families. We should not be spending time trying to go back to the old system of families. Changes have taken place. The majority of women are in the workforce and they will continue to be in the future. It is an irreversible trend; it is not positive or negative. It is up to every family to make its own decision. We should not be making people feel guilty. We should not be trying to look back to the past saying let us have incentives for women to stay in the home, to look after their husbands and to do the things that were perhaps a little more characteristic of a patriarchal family system.

If we are going to have adequate support for all workers in the workforce and for parents in the home raising children, we must have a national program for child care. We must have no further delays. We have to get on with an emergency plan right now and with the long-term planning that is under way with the provinces. The provinces will be unlikely to do very much unless there is considerable incentive from the federal Government with bucks to expand child care spaces.

Let me come to women's work in the home. Families are changing. I hope there are chances for more men to be in the home full-time who can consider this their vocation, at least for a certain period of their children's lives. As I say, we have to accept families as they are, not as they perhaps were in our generation or in our parent's generation.

Traditionally mothers have worked long hours as home managers, care givers and experts in many aspects of human relations. I do not think that home-makers and people who perform this very important role get enough recognition. They do not get enough recognition on job résumés when they go to look for a job. We should be making sure that this is recognized. They have very important skills. They have received no pay, little time off and they have no security for later years. Many women will be on their own for various reasons when they reach middle life. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough for women pensioners but for women in their middle years who are left alone and who have not been in the workforce suffer tremendously. They are the quiet hidden poverty group in society.

Women in the home must be recognized for their work. The kind of token $200 per year per child refundable child tax credit proposed by the Special Committee on Child Care is more of an insult than a recognition. We need to have recognition of income levels to have a real choice. Of course, family incomes need to be adequate. We recommended a couple of years ago that the child tax credit be improved substantially and that it cover average income families as well. That would have been a much better way to go. The $400 million for this kind of token tax credit is not at all a good investment. I think most women realize this.

• (1230)

We also pushed hard, as did many women, to have family allowances reindexed as were old age pensions. Unfortunately, the Government did not listen to women and went ahead and deindexed family allowances. We need adequate pensions for all women. There should be adequate pensions for all workers, but particularly for women. Pensions are far from adequate at this time.

I believe it is unfortunate that rather than promoting equality in families, a number of people, including a number of Members of the House of Commons, are trying to promote the old traditional patriarchal family model. We all respect our forefathers and our foremothers, but today's families and young people are moving toward more shared parenting and toward options for both parents to be in the workforce as individuals and to have a chance to really enjoy their children and their home life.

I think it is the responsibility of government Members to lobby for equality, for equal opportunities and for forward-thinking policies. They should try to convince their colleagues that we do not want to go backward. We are going forward, not out of a lack of respect but because society has changed and will continue to change.

I was most disappointed that government members on the Special Committee on Child Care and; more recently, on the Secretary of State Committee looking into funding for women's programs seemed to want to go backward and were very reluctant to recognize the policy positions on equality their own Prime Minister put forward. This is not helping support of women's groups by the Government.

There are barriers for certain groups of women who are particularly disadvantaged, in fact doubly disadvantaged. I do not have a lot of time, but I want to mention single parents. The feminization of poverty continues to escalate and is most prevalent when a mother is left alone to care for children. Families headed by women are almost sure to be poor. After separation or divorce, the purchasing power of women is reduced by 42 per cent while the purchasing power of men goes up by 70 per cent.

I was very sorry to see the results of a study done by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. The advisory council studied three areas; areas in Ontario, Quebec, and B.C., and found that 10 per cent of all families in the Vancouver area are headed by women, most of whom have very low incomes. In the other two provinces, that figure is 8 per cent. Nationally, 60 per cent of all single-parent families headed by women live in poverty.

We would be willing to work with the Government on a major review of the situation of single-parent families. We should look at the entire question of the feminization of poverty and provide comprehensive programs to deal with that.

Many other women are doubly disadvantaged, including women who are battered, native women, immigrant women, women of colour, farm women and northern women. I wish I had time to comment further on them.

Finally, I want to talk about women in the community and in public life. Women contribute many millions of hours of quality time free to the community. We heard from a Quebec group, des Centres de Femmes Du Quebec, that the contribution of volunteer labour in women's centres alone is worth $2 million per year in that province.

We know that women are the ones who contribute to most of the community support services as home-makers, child care workers, librarians, school workers, hospital workers and workers in job-creation programs as well as in information and crisis centres. These women are all paid very low rates of pay. It is particularly disgusting what child care workers who are doing such an important job are paid. We must do much more about recognizing women's work in the community, both volunteer work and grossly underpaid work in essential community services.

I do not need to tell Members of the House of Commons that we are far from achieving equality in decision-making. A total of 38 women have been elected to sit in the House of Commons since 1921. On one occasion, Grace MacInnis was the only woman Member of the House. At the current rate of increase, it will take 842 years before equal numbers of women and men are elected to Parliament.

I believe my female colleagues in the House will agree with me, that the recent First Ministers' meeting was symbolic of the lack of participation of women in the decision-making that affects Canada. There was not one woman present and I am sure it will be many years before a woman sits at that table and makes decisions on behalf of Canada.

I mentioned some of the Government's policies which we feel do not go nearly far enough, and my colleagues will elaborate on that. We must deal with the problems of doubly disadvantaged women. We must look at the question of poverty and we must improve opportunities for women in all levels of society.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) called for the Government to recognize the real value of women who work in the home by providing tangible policies. She made two points in her speech. She said that women's work in the home must be recognized explicitly and that women who work in the home do not have security in their later years.

Will the Hon. Member work toward providing such explicit recognition by supporting changes in the Canada Pension Plan designed to recognize the real value of work done in the home by recognizing it as qualifying income for participation in the Canada Pension Plan? This would provide adequate security for women in retirement.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr Speaker, when I talk about explicit programs, I am not talking about women who are suffering from poverty now and cannot put an adequate amount of food on the table for their kids, waiting until they are 65 before their problems are dealt with. That is a nice, comfortable rationale. People who do not deal with the present like to think that all we need to do is pat women on the head and ask their husbands to pay into a pension plan for them and maybe they will have something a bit better in the future.

We have a comprehensive policy to reform the Canada Pension Plan in order to bring women above the poverty line. Of course there must be major changes and there are different ways of doing this. We want to see what the Government will bring forward and we certainly want to recommend major changes for all women.

Most women are in and out of the workforce and do not have adequate coverage while in the workforce. If they drop out for seven years to have children, they should be building on their Canada Pension Plans during that time.

I would like to stress to my hon. colleague that we are talking about now, we have to deal with poverty and these intolerable inequities now. I really get tired of citing the statistics over and over again. We must deal with the real life situations of so many women who simply do not have adequate incomes today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: First of all, I think the Hon. Member is to be commended for again demonstrating her concern for the status of women.

However, it is too bad she decided to politicize the debate on such an important matter. Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member has given a clear and accurate explanation of the status of women in Canada and how it remains precarious despite all the efforts that have been made and the improvements that have taken place, it always surprises me that she always finishes her comments with a highly politicized statement. I say politicized because a partisan debate tends to ignore the progress that has been made and the very concrete and responsible action taken by this Government of which I am a Member.

I think we should consider that this Government has appointed six women as Ministers, a historic first, women like the Hon. Barbara McDougall, who have made their mark in the world, as they say, with policies like Bill C-42. I don't think we ever had a federal Act before that prohibited systematic discrimination against women.

How can the Hon. Member claim that the Government is to be condemned for failing to recognize the real value of women's work in the workplace?

Bill C-42 proves that this Government—both men and women—has recognized the importance of women in the workplace. And also in the home environment, because even if we expect every woman to be a Joan of Arc and to be active in our great causes, there are women who prefer to stay at home and raise their children. Why should these women be penalized financially just because they want to stay at home?

Our Government is bearing this in mind in its consideration of a daycare program. It wants to give women a real choice. If a woman wants to stay at home, she should not be penalized financially, and she should have access to the kind of daycare that meets her particular needs. On the other hand, if she wants to enter the labour market or if she has to enter the labour market for financial reasons, there again she should have access to the services she requires.

I wish the Hon. Member would consider the fact that women are not all the same, just as men are not all the same. We look at men as individuals, so why would she have us think that women all have the same needs? The only way to solve the problem of poor women is to spend money, but not by enrolling them in training courses nor forcing them to apply for traditional jobs. Again I ask the question: Why would she fail to admit that the Department of Employment and Immigration now have special programs specifically designed for women seeking employment in non-traditional fields? Why would she fail to acknowledge that the statistics released this morning indicate that 75 per cent of jobs created for women, men and young people are permanent, that the number of part-time jobs for women has declined, and that full-time jobs are on the increase? Indeed, we are making progress. Why would she deny that? Why would she deny that our Government is committed and that the status of women is not the exclusive bailiwick of the NDP? It no longer is.

• (1240)

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, for someone who does not want politics to be political that was quite a speech.

Mrs. Mailly: Those are facts.

Ms. Mitchell: I do not know quite where to start, except to say that we are hearing examples of wishful thinking. I know the Hon. Member wants to think that Bill C-42 really gets at the problems of women, but I would like her to show me where it has resulted in substantial improvement for women in either job opportunities or pay equity. Equal pay for work of equal value must be stressed at all levels of society, and we can start with those jobs under federal jurisdiction. It is not now a part of our policies.

I would like to ask the Member to read again the report of the Special Committee on Child Care. In no way do the recommendations of the government majority give women an economic choice. How can you say that when 60 per cent of women in the workforce are there because they have to work? If both parents were not working they would be very poor. How can you say there is an option to remain at home? I am sure some of them would like to be at home while the children are very young, but how is it an economic choice to give them a refundable tax credit of $200 per child per year? That is no economic choice, that is an insult.

I am also curious to know why the Conservative Government is going to give that amount to Mila Mulroney or anyone else with a high income and the same amount to women on welfare when it is deducted from the welfare cheque? A refundable child tax credit is a very expensive way to go for very little benefit. Why not put that money into child care services which would be available for women in the home, men in the home, and parents in the workplace? I think that is most important.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join in this debate. It is most appropriate that it should start just prior to Mother's Day. I take this opportunity to congratulate all mothers, mothers in waiting, and grandmothers, of which I am one and about to be again. Today is a very special day.

Mrs. McDougall: Do aunts get a day, too?

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, absolutely, aunts and everyone else are going to have their day. Women are going to have their day.

It is important to acknowledge that there has been some significant improvement in the role of women since the late 1970s. That improvement needs to be treated with tender care so that it can grow and flourish. It only adds to the society in which we live when partners have an equal opportunity to work together to improve that society.

It would be a shame to expend the effort and energy to educate and train our daughters in the same way we train our sons, with equal pride in the attainments of both, to then not allow equal opportunity and equal choice to both, given equal competence.

Thank God for the differences between men and women and boys and girls. There are reasons why we need special policies to develop the kind of thinking that appreciates each other's role and each other's contribution to the growth and development of the society in which we live. That is the view of what I call the feminist of today, the people who recognize the ability of women to contribute in equal measure at all levels of our society, all to the betterment of that society.

Women have had a very special role in creating that society. Unfortunately, it has not always been willingly, but rather often imposed and to the detriment of their growth, and therefore to the detriment of society as a whole. Nonetheless, it pays to keep this whole situation in historical perspective.

Women in Canada have played an important and influential role in the advancement of social justice, not just for women but for everyone. In Canada the movement for political suffrage was led by social feminists, sometimes called maternal feminists, who believed that women voters would force the Government to improve the quality of life for all Canadians. Attaining the vote was the first step in achieving those social goals.

Those women were appalled by the living conditions of low wage, low rent industrial workers, unschooled children, destitute widows, malnourished pregnant women, and child labour in the factories. It is not to say that men liked that situation; they just did not think along those lines. There was something wrong because the dynamics involved in having women at the legislative end were absent.

• (1250)

When women were enfranchised federally and provincially in the 1920s and 1930s in Canada, although as late as 1945 in Quebec, the statute books blossomed with a host of amendments and new legislation which alleviated old hardships, improved the lot of neglected children, destitute old people, deserted wives, indigent mothers of families, and the physically handicapped, as well as enlarging upon the grounds for divorce and support payments. They gave women the right to handle their own money and their own property.

It was a great indignity that we could do no banking of any significance without our husband's signature on the document. Most men accepted that indignity as a fact of life as if there was nothing wrong with it. There was something wrong with it. We were persons in our own right and had every right to act individually without the constraint of laws which were ineffective and uninterested in our well-being.

The new laws have protected women in industry and prohibited the outrageous exploitation of both male and female workers, especially young people. I will not give a history lesson, but there has certainly been great forward movement since the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. All political Parties can take credit for the forward movement of women's causes throughout the country.

In particular we should pay a special tribute to the women's lobby groups which have kept the women's agenda in the foreground. I was very honoured, as a past president of La Fédération des femmes du Québec, to represent that group of women in our affiliation with the National Action Committee, l'AFEAS, le Cercle de fermières, the National Council of Women and the National Council of Jewish Women. I have left many groups out. All these groups have been sensitive to and worked hard to put on public record the concerns of women as partners in society.

I am not extremely happy about the Tory record. All the right words have been used, all the right language is in place, and all the hyperbole is there. However, there is a lack of commitment in the form of action. Whether we talk about employment equity or employment in the workforce, the bottom line is economic independence and there are choices to be made in that regard. There needs to be some making up for the lack of equality which we have had.

Let us look at the structure of families today. We must not forget that 25 years ago most women did not work outside the home and had an average of four children. Today that structure has changed dramatically. The traditional family where children are living with their biological parents and the father is the sole breadwinner now accounts for less than one of six families.

[Translation]

Single wage earner families make up 29 per cent of all households. According to the November 1985 Statistics Canada figures, 57 per cent of women with pre-school children belong to the labour force. Sixty-seven per cent of gainfully employed women with small children hold full-time jobs, and the majority of women in their most reproductive years are on the labour market. In 1984, 69 per cent of women aged 25 to 34 were working. The different roles assumed by women in our society should be an incentive to implement a series of measures aimed at helping couples discharge their family responsibilities properly.

Among such initiatives, child care services are a priority. In that respect, I would point out that the Throne Speech recognized the need for child care, but instead of announcing specific measures, the Government simply decided to launch into vague discussions with provincial Governments, labour unions and private enterprise. A lot of talk, but little action.

Canadian men and women were expecting much more from this Government in the area of child care, because there is now a genuine crisis. Indeed, only 9 per cent of children who need them have places in child care services.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is totally unacceptable. Thousands of witnesses appeared before the Special Committee on Child Care and I toured British Columbia where I heard with my own ears parents complain they cannot find support services to enter the labour market, help their families, become income earners that can contribute something, improve their families' situation, and prevent them from falling into poverty. I for one find unacceptable that we are constantly awaiting action that is not forthcoming. In British Columbia, as elsewhere in Canada, we heard the same story.

Men and women across Canada expressed their disarray and problems caused by the tremendous difficulty they have finding child care places when they need to work or study.

What Canadians need and expect at this point is action rather than speeches.

[English]

Even prior to the Child Care Task Force which travelled across this land, with which I spent one week in the west, I travelled across the country on two occasions to participate in the Equality for All Task Force. I see a colleague in the House who participated on that task force and is well aware that one of the major concerns of the thousands of witnesses who appeared was the basic building block, represented by child care services, which includes a full range of services. It includes preschool children, part-time and full-time, evening hours, and, as well, the latch-key child up to the age of 14.

There are a variety of needs in this field because of the fact that women have a variety of needs. Women do not fit only one mold. They have a variety of reasons for going into the workforce, the most crying of which is to share with their partners the burden of meeting the budget needs of their families.

There is also the intellectual need of a woman who has had the opportunity of getting a proper education and wishes to have an enriched life by pursuing roles both outside and inside the home.

In addition, people have the right to make a choice. That right will be respected if we really believe in the right of equality for women.

The men and women who spoke to the task force on the need for child care were very eloquent, but we did not need a task force to learn what was needed. Our Party believes that the child care system must be based on the principles of sharing the burden and providing choices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will be able to continue her speech after lunch.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if we look at the National Council of Welfare report we see that the poverty rate for seniors, both men and women, has declined. Unfortunately, poverty is getting worse in respect to the condition of women who are single, elderly and those who are heads of families.

[Translation]

I would like to remind the House that out of 10 women-led single-parent families, six are living below the poverty line, as opposed to most groups in society. The poverty rate has not declined among single mothers in 1985. In fact, in that group, poverty has been on a steady increase for five years. The odds for a single mother to join the have-nots are five times as high as for a married woman. Women account for nearly 60 per cent of the under-privileged in the 16 to 64 age group, although they are only 51 per cent of the population. Out of 10 seniors living in poverty, seven are women. This is shameful, Mr. Speaker. This means those women account for 83 per cent of single, aged, low-revenue people.

Among single-parent families, the gap is still more telling. The probability for a woman-led family to be poor is four times that of a man-led family. Moreover, the wage gap between men and women widened in 1985, which made the headlines in all media not so long ago, on March 13. This is the first time in 18 years that women lost ground in their fight to reduce the salary gap between sexes, as indicated by Statistics Canada. I feel this is cause for concern, and we must look closer at that gap.

• (1410)

[English]

I think a great deal of it has to do with employment equity. The Government has often pointed to employment equity legislation as an example of concrete action which it has taken for the advancement of women. Yes, the language is good, as is the thought. All the groups that appeared before the committee when this legislation was being studied told us that Bill C-62 would be totally ineffective because it has no teeth. The goal of employment equity is to recognize the talents of individuals within the business community. This side of the House wishes to give equal opportunity to those who were discriminated against because of systemic barriers that need to be revised and reviewed.

I said that we have moved forward since 1975, but we have come to a standstill. This Bill and the need for employment equity was very obvious. I am sorry that there are no teeth in it so that we can really oblige companies to move forward.

I sit on the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. We recently tabled in the House our recommendations for a new Broadcasting Act. We recommended that broadcasting licences include an obligation to establish an equal opportunity program in order to increase significantly the number of women and members of minority groups at all levels within each undertaking. Although data regarding the employment of minority groups in broadcasting are inadequate, we know that their members are found only too rarely in influential positions—as artists, journalists, managers and decision makers.

The broadcasting industry is already under the federal employment equity legislation. But the number of problems with that law as it is applied become very obvious when we look at broadcasting. This law applies only to employers with 100 or more employees. In the most crucial of industries where we can see ourselves on the screen and where we can see our values reflected through the mirror of the little window box provided by the television, this Act is of no use in promoting the well-being of women and the portrayal of women. I will tell the Minister why I say that since I think it is serious.

On the basis of 1987 data obtained from the CRTC only 39 of 268 broadcasting corporations and only 15 cable companies out of the 360 existing cable companies in Canada have 100 or more employees. Thus there is no way that the Bill can be applied. That is the dilemma.

For the reasons I have just enunciated we have recommended that the new Broadcasting Act include provisions to increase significantly the number of women in minority groups, which includes women, at all levels of the broadcasting industry. If we want to be role models then we have to see ourselves somewhere. The present legislation breaks down in this regard and does not improve the inequities. Without an enforcement mechanism and a mandatory monitoring system we have a voluntary employment equity Act. I hope that the new Minister will look at this situation to find ways to make the legislation more effective.

I have said that Mediawatch and l'Institut Canadien de l'éducation aux adultes, ACTRA and many other groups that came before the committee asked us to address directly the need for the system to serve the needs of women, as well as men, and to reflect equitably their presence in the population.

In its presentation to our committee Mediawatch stated that men outnumber women two to one in prime time programming on public and private channels, and in children's programming four to one, although women account for over 50 per cent of the population. In addition to being under-represented they are performing a relatively limited number of stereotype roles. It is for these reasons that we want the broadcasting system to serve the interests and needs of both sexes. I certainly hope that the Minister will take this into consideration.

In conclusion, as we shape the forward agenda of the women's movement, and as we look at forward-looking strategies that we all worked on so hard and in which Canada was a true leader at Nairobi, it is important to note that there is no shortage of challenges left or of injustices to be resolved. We have come a long way, but we have not travelled the whole road yet. We need a special emphasis on those policy initiatives that allow and enhance the compatibility of family life and independence for women, that reaffirm the role of the family without abandoning the goals of feminism.

I will now give Hon. Members, from my point of view, a partial political action agenda for the rest of the decade. I think that we must change the attitudes of men and women so that true equality is established and allowed to grow. Attitudes in the media, in advertising stereotypes, in the soaps, in our workplaces and in our schools must also be changed.

Second, there must be changes to ensure employment equity through affirmative action and equal pay for work of equal value. I do not share the current Government's faith in its new employment equity legislation which fails to provide for specific sanctions against employers who refuse to implement a program of employment equity in hiring practises.

Third, there needs to be media attention given to the plight of the poor, single women in our society, both single women as heads of families as well as the single elderly. Seven out of 10 spouseless women aged 70 and over are living in poverty in Canada. That is shameful. We must address, as well, the pension issue. Women work in the community and they work in their homes. They contribute thereby to the economy. We must find a way to acknowledge this so that they do not end up in a poor state in their later years. The value of the work performed, the home work that is performed, including house care, was calculated at 36 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1981 by Statistics Canada on a model that was developed in 1978.

Four, we need redoubled efforts to curb the violence against women and children that pervades our society. Women cannot be fully equal until incest, violent pornography, wife battering and other violence are dealt with, and dealt with sensibly and not radically.

Five, I think it is vital that the funding of women's groups continues, and continues at a level that will allow them to continue their role of advocacy in order to keep the barriers that we need to break down in front of the public eye, and certainly in front of the eyes of legislators. They need to be enabled to assure this equality among people.

Finally, I would like to use a term that is often feared around here, that is, choice in reproductive rights. Let us not be frightened off by this term. Reproductive rights include such issues as pregnancy leave, unemployment insurance benefits and the availability of child care. Child care is especially vital if women, particularly single mothers, are to gain economic independence. It should be apparent that women have an equal right to choose to work, which cannot be exercised in the best interests of their family or their children without providing accessible, affordable and adequate quality child care. No one here need be told how important good child care is to the attainment of women's and family rights.

• (1420)

I think I have presented a list of concerns. I hope that together all of us in this House can meet the challenge for change. It is an ongoing process. We would be happy with the achievement of any one of them, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that women and women's groups will not rest until we have achieved every one of them.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my hon. friend for her very well documented speech and for her involvement in the promotion of women. I suggest that her personal life demonstrates that she is perfectly dedicated and that she assumes her duties beautifully. But I would like her to push her intellectual honesty a little further and recognize what our Government has done to promote employment equity for women.

I am aware that my colleague who is responsible for the Status of Women will rise in a few minutes and make a very well documented speech, but I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to recognize what our Government has accomplished.

Quite recently, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) refused to award a contract to a company which did not meet the criteria as far as employment equity for women is concerned. Her decision was almost a first! It had never happened before and it is something for which the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services should be commended.

In my riding, last week, on the first page of our daily newspaper, there was a picture showing the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) presenting a diploma or an award to a company, an Alcan subsidiary in my area, for recognizing the right to work and the participation of women in non-traditional trades, in this case, welding. And the company president said that his best welder was a woman.

All this to indicate that we are making progress indeed. We know that before we came into office only 10 per cent of women belonged to the Public Service. We are now up to 27 per cent. We know that we had two women ambassadors, we now have 21. I will let my colleague responsible for the status of women give more statistics in this field, but I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Ville Mount Royal whether she would agree that our Government has done a tremendous effort in this respect?

Mrs. Finestone: May I correct my colleague? I am not the Member for Ville Mount Royal, I am the Member for Mount Royal, which includes three cities. O.K. That is for openers.

Certainly I agree, and I think I was very clear about this issue for the benefit of my colleague. Still I would suggest that all Parties have promoted the cause of women. It is neither you nor us. I think that together, especially women MPs, we have made society aware of this and changed the mentality of our male colleagues here in the House. The Minister was able to recognize women's non-traditional work thanks to the women's movements who made this society aware of women's needs. During one of our World Wars, women proved they could be effective at non-traditional jobs, which means they have the capability and should have that choice throughout their years in the labour market. So the credit doesn't go to you as a Government or to us as a government. You have been able to promote the status of women thanks to women like Thérèse Casgrain and others, like the five women who helped define our position as persons in society, with equal rights and privileges. The movement started with them and has gone on to this day, and it will be thanks to historic developments and our own capabilities that we will finally get complete equality in our society. There are competent men and stupid men, and the same applies to women. But we should be treated equally in society. I am not here to praise the achievements of one party over another. I am here to point out where you went wrong. I am here to suggest improvements. As far as the status of women is concerned, there are no partisan considerations. I think we should understand that together we will win this battle, and we will not win by going off in separate groups and deciding who is going to get money and who is not. It should go to the women who stood up for our cause and who were able to get us where we are today.

[English]

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the remarks of my colleague. I think all Hon. Members would agree that there are certainly no stupid women on any side of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: I am glad you agree. I know my colleague's commitment towards equality of women having worked with her on the Equality Rights Subcommittee and the report it brought forward. I think all Parties agree that this is not a particularly partisan issue in terms of the objectives we are trying to achieve. There are some differences, obviously, in the timing and some of the methods we use to achieve our goals, and I think in the debate today we will learn more about that from each other.

There is one thing which has really bothered me. In 1986 a study was done by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women with regard to the aspirations of adolescent women. That study indicated, and do other reports as well, that today's teenage girls still see their lives in very traditional and romanticized terms, and are less likely than boys to make explicit plans for their future paid careers.

I am a mother of a 14 year old and in talking to her and her friends I think it is true that, no matter what we do in terms of moving forward on legislation and with different programs, if we somehow do not reach those young women they will not seek the kind of training and education they need and will end up in that sort of vicious cycle of poverty.

I wonder if my colleague has thought about this issue and if she could share with us any of her ideas as to how the federal Government and provincial Government agencies might deal with that very fundamental root problem in terms of working with women in the future?

Mrs. Finestone: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of sharing many months and many hours of work with my hon. colleague who just raised the question. I would like to suggest that I think my friend and I looked at that question together. With another colleague I have also been looking at the impact on women through media. I think we will have the problem until such time as women start to feel a sense of their own worth and development and until they stop seeing themselves portrayed on probably the most powerful medium in our society today, television, in those kinds of sex stereotyping stories we see on the television screen, whether through advertising or the programs which are shown. That medium must start to change and give value and importance to education, post-secondary education, and show women as full partners having intelligent, equal conversations with their partners.

I think as well that schools should start to develop a curriculum which does not say, "Jane goes out to buy the oranges while John goes to buy the tools in the hardware store". If it could have Jane and John doing the opposite occasionally, the stereotypes could be broken.

It is a long hard row. We have been ingrained but, I hope not restrained, from some creative action. I would like to tell my colleague that I have an 11-year old granddaughter and she is not interested in the stereotype world. I suppose it has something to do with family upbringing and role models. I would prefer to have debates of this kind and not have the kind of partisan elements I have occasionally listened to in this House.

I could give my hon. friend a long list of the accomplishments of those on this side of the House, starting way back with Judy LaMarsh and forward, and my hon. friend could start with Ellen Fairclough and others, but that would not change the situation and the daily living for women in today's society and prepare them for tomorrow. Let us try to keep this on the level which I think will be helpful to the forward movement of women in today's society.

• (1430)

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend and colleague stated that reproductive rights were basic to equality and defined reproductive rights in very broad terms. I agree with her on that, but she did not mention the whole question of choice in relation to access to abortion.

Last month a pregnant 14-year old girl was refused an abortion in a Kamloops hospital. As a result she had to go through a very prolonged forced premature delivery, which I am sure will create tremendous trauma for her for the rest of her life.

Does the Hon. Member have any suggestions about what she feels should be done on the whole question of access under our existing law? Also, what should be done about more effective preventive measures including better contraception so that women really have reproductive rights?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, in a sense I am glad the Hon. Member has asked the question, although I could have done without it. I am pleased to share my point of view.

Those of us who travelled with the Equality for All task force were faced with the question of the right to choice versus the right to life. We heard the hard core views on both sides, and there does not seem to be, in society today, the kind of atmosphere which would enable us to make the choice on one side or the other by opening up the legislation.

It has been my view that a woman has the right to make the choice for herself after having received the best counselling and the best advice possible, after all the options have been made available to her and there is an understanding of all the options, including adoption and the kind of support the state can give a woman who chooses to keep the child herself. If all those support systems are in place—and I will come to the Hon. Member's case in a moment—and if we had the proper kind of education and training to teach respect for one's self and taking responsibility for one's actions, I would say to the Hon. Member that it would not be the kind of problem it is today.

I do not think we can open up the abortion question in today's society. I think we will have to work with what exists in our law presently and apply it in an intelligent way. It will take government will at the provincial level, because that is where health services are determined, to find the answer to how to allow a woman to make her own choice in reproductive rights.

In respect of the case of the 14-year old child, as a director of youth protection I faced much younger children than that, such as a 7-year old and a 13-year old who were pregnant by incest and by rape. Anyone who tells me that we should have the kind of society which does not allow for the humane determination of termination in that instance is out of his or her mind, in my view. First, the child's body has not developed healthfully enough for her to sustain and give a healthy body to the foetus. Second, I do not believe that any family would want to impose that on a child.

In respect of the Hon. Member's question, I hope I have elucidated clearly enough that I would not reopen the issue in the Criminal Code at this point.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise in my place today to discuss the issue because it is a very important one to all of us in Canada. Perhaps what has been missing so far in the debate is that it is important to men as well as to women. Within society we have come a long way over many years, as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) pointed out.

I guess in the beginning women were fighting alone for things which they felt were important for themselves and things they felt were important for society. It gives me great pleasure—and it gives the women in this Party great pleasure—that we now have so many men as our allies. Let us make no mistake about the fact that women, not men, have put the issues of child care, the elderly poor, and so on, on the agenda. Women should take credit for it. Let them also remember that there are many people on their side. As we move forward from here, as we must continue to do and are doing, that is an important building block for how we approach women's issues in the future.

While I am very happy to debate the issue, I am very surprised by the wording of the motion. The fact is that the Government has put in place a number of programs for action on women's issues. The Government's whole strategy contains a comprehensive and pragmatic series of initiatives, I may say among the best ever introduced in Canada.

Let us look at what our achievements have been in 2.5 years. There has been reform of Canada's divorce laws and family enforcement orders, a very important element which women have needed for many years. There has been a repeal of the Indian Act provisions which discriminated against native women for decades. We introduced the first employment equity legislation ever introduced in Canada, opening up a full range of labour market opportunities for women.

[Translation]

The implementation of a National Training and Employment Program which, for the first time, defines participation goals for women, proposes steps to increase the number of pension beneficiaries and makes them more equitable, and the passage of legislation to put an end to the sexual exploitation and the sexual abuse of children.

As suggested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Mr. Speaker, our Government has given top priority to women's concerns. A document entitled Dimensions of Equality: A Federal Government Work Plan for Women clearly demonstrates our commitment to women's concerns. Tabled in November of last year by the Prime Minister at the yearly Conference of the First Ministers in Vancouver, this document describes our Government's biannual action plan to promote women.

[English]

Let me say that the document contains a number of measures. Earlier I pointed out the legislation surrounding divorce and family enforcement orders. Let me point out, in terms of progress for women, that not one of these issues is a new one. These issues have been around, and women have been asking about them for years. We have made an incredibly good start in the first half of our mandate, and we are not finished yet. That is what this book outlines.

Less than six months after its tabling, a number of the initiatives have already been accomplished or are well under way. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) announced that the Canadian Forces would conduct trials with women in combat. A review of sex stereotyping in internal government communications is nearing completion, further to the review of external communications which was completed last year.

Let me just say about the problem of stereotypes that in the earlier Bill introduced on communications there was forward momentum to deal with the problem of sex stereotyping. We all know how important it is to develop, not just role models for children but their own attitudes toward themselves. This will be very important to the women of the future.

Labour Canada conducted an educational seminar for labour representatives on equal pay for work of equal value. The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) funded a national conference which was held in Toronto as a follow-up to the 1985 Nairobi forum and the United Nations World Conference on Women, as well as a successful national conference on immigrant women and visible minority women.

Let me also point out that I think my predecessor in this role, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), the former Minister responsible for the status of women, deserves an enormous amount of credit for the progress made in Nairobi and the document which came out of there.

• (1440)

Progress is also being made in dealing with family violence, with the federal, provincial and territorial governments co-operating in what is a very complex social problem and one which governments cannot resolve alone; but they can provide some attention and some perspective to this very serious problem. A commitment to improvements in family violence legislation was in our Speech from the Throne last fall. In concert with the release on March 30 of the report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Child Care, discussions with the provinces on this priority subject are well under way. Our goal is to reach an agreement on an approved child care system for Canada by this summer.

Let me pursue this a little bit. Child care occupies a pre-eminent position in our Government's agenda. At last November's First Ministers' Conference the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) described adequate child care as one of the most significant factors in ensuring the economic security of women. He went on to say that for many women child care is the key that will open the door to future equality. At the same time he made a government commitment and a personal commitment to improve the accessibility, the affordability and the flexibility to quality child care in Canada. We are well aware that the needs of women vary from a rural setting, to an urban setting from some regions of the country to another.

Let me point out that when I talk about these not being new problems, this one in particular is not a new problem. This is something that was called an urgent problem by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women some 17 years ago. Why did nothing happen for 17 years, Mr. Speaker?

But we have made considerable progress on this.

We are sitting down with the provinces and actually working out a practical solution to these problems for the women of Canada. Child care featured very largely in the First Ministers' Conference last November. A full half day was devoted to women's issues which included training and child care.

Let me say that I am very proud of the Prime Minister and the role he played in putting those items on the agenda. It was the first time women's issues had been on the agenda at a First Ministers' Conference. It was a follow-up to what had happened the year before under the Prime Minister's leadership at the conference when they agreed on a framework for economic equality. Those discussions represented a real breakthrough for the women of this country when the leaders of all our provinces and our Prime Minister were there together publicly discussing their commitment to women.

It has been a hallmark of this Government to include women in all of our decision making processes from First Ministers' Conferences, to budget consultations, to policy development in almost every aspect. We attach the utmost importance to this ongoing dialogue which is carried on by myself and by the Prime Minister with a variety of women's organizations including the National Council of Women, la Fedération des femmes du Quebec, the Canadian Federation of University Women, the Catholic Women's League, the National Action Committee, the Native Women's Association, the National Association of Immigrant Visible Minority Women and REAL Women. I have travelled Canada from one end to the other talking not just to the groups who come to Ottawa to see me but talking to women who are working in their communities, in their local libraries and local schools, working on behalf of women in communities everywhere from Cornerbrook, Newfoundland to Cranbrook, British Columbia. I will continue to do that because it is not just the women who come to Ottawa in an organized way who are to be heard from, it is the women working on the farms in southern Saskatchewan, the women in North Battleford who have opened a new library, the women in southern Ontario who are helping their husbands on the farms, the women in northern Ontario who work in the mines. They are the voices who should be heard in this town and by this Government, and they are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me say as well that we have met with representatives of groups to discuss very specific issues and we will be meeting again with the NAC executive and many of its members on Monday. Many of our members will be there. Complementing this process, a dialogue, of course, has been our determination to bring more women into positions of power and influence.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) talked about this participation of women in roles of leadership and in politics.

[Translation]

During the 1984 election campaign, we had promised, if elected, to increase from 15 per cent to 30 per cent the rate of representation of women in federal agencies, boards and commissions. Only halfway through our mandate, the rate is now 27 per cent. It is only a beginning, but it is quite significant. Deputy Ministers and Assistant Deputy Ministers occupy also key positions in the Public Service. When we came to power, there were only three women appointed at that high level. There are now nine, including the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, as well as the Deputy Minister of Labour, the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Deputy Minister of Supply and Services, and the Deputy Minister of Privatization. The incumbents of these positions of trust can make key contributions and may even further the economic and social advancement of all women.

[English]

I mentioned earlier that the Canadian Forces will be undertaking trials with women in combat. Let me mention as well that my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, has appointed Canada's first woman general, Brigadier-General Sheila Hellstrom. The number of positions in the Armed Forces open to women has risen from 19 per cent in 1971 to 75 per cent today.

Two eminent women now head the Economic Council of Canada and the National Capital Commission. Recently two women were appointed to the Board of Directors of the Bank of Canada. Other government agencies now have numerous women. There are now 10 women occupying senior diplomatic posts as ambassadors and consuls general. Of the 12 people the Prime Minister appointed to the other place, four are women.

In addition to a 22 per cent increase in the number of federally appointed women judges, let me point out and publicly congratulate, Madam Justice Claire L'Heureux-Dubé on her appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada. What this tells us is not that women are getting appointed, but that they are being appointed to the highest and most influential positions in the land.

This is one indication of what we are doing. It is important, and I have pointed this out in this House before, first, because it is a legitimate recognition of the contribution that women have made—finally a recognition of their contribution and their talents. Also, it is important because when men and women sit down at the same table to work toward a common objective then the old stereotypes start to change and fall away along with the old attitudes.

As the Prime Minister said, our aim is to improve and perfect our democratic way of life. If we wish to correct the imbalance which still exists, we must increase further the presence of women in the national decision-making process.

Let us go back to women and their political role. There were only two women Cabinet Ministers in the last Government. There are now five, and I say with all due modesty that I think we do our share. I know this has been of great concern to the other Parties. I think particularly of a Member of the Liberal Party, a former president, who talked about the invisible ceiling for women, a glass ceiling where women can only reach so far and cannot go beyond it. Let me describe where I think women are in our Party.

Women for a long time did face a lot of barriers. They continue to face some. There was a big brick wall; then women started punching out some of those bricks. Enough holes are now in that wall so that it is going to start to fall down. That is the difference in how this Party views the role of women and how the former Government viewed the role of women. We are not only hopeful but we are going to help women get to where they should be.

Let me say, on employment equity, how important this Bill is. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal pointed out that it was not working, and I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver East said the same thing, that employment equity should be mandatory, that there should be quotas on things to regulate every move that business makes.

• (1450)

I have been monitoring this very closely and talking to people in human resources in the private sector who are inundated with requests from businesses and financial institutions anxious to meet the requirements of this Bill. The old stereotypes are changing. Business now knows that it is in its interest that women have an equal opportunity. The future of business will have to embrace the resources represented by women in society.

The number of people who are of an age to leave school is declining very rapidly. In order for business, commerce and universities to be competitive and productive in the future, they will have to draw on a wider range of talent and that includes women. They are starting to recognize that. If we can embrace them in a partnership without simply having the Government making rules, then women will be much better off.

There is a traditional women-as-victims attitude. Yes, women have problems that men to do not have, there is no question about that. However, one cannot transfer what was once a hope and faith in Prince Charming to a hope and faith in the Government. Women are better than that. Women contribute; women have talent; women make their own decisions; women can hold their heads up high along with all the men in Canada, and women working together with men can also help those women who are not in a position to do so.

Our objective is to have men and women start equally. Sometimes men start higher than women so in order for women to start equally we have to help. That does not mean that once women get there they are not every bit as able to contribute as are men. We recognize that.

Let me deal with the poverty statistics for a moment. Between 1982 and 1984, the number of women over age 16 living in households below the National Council of Welfare's poverty line rose by 118,000. This is a matter of real concern to everyone and every political Party. The proportion of women over 16 living in poverty rose from 17.3 per cent to 18.5 per cent, and that occurred during part of the economic recovery. That is serious.

Between 1984 and 1985, the number of women over 16 living in poverty dropped by 69,000. We were able to bring that figure back down to where it started. That is not anywhere like good enough, but we are glad to see that happening. We have given it a nudge in the right direction because of some of the things we have introduced.

Obviously jobs relate directly to poverty. During the first 30 months of this Government's term of office, the number of women with jobs rose by 406,000. During the last 30 months of the previous Government's term, the number of women with jobs throughout the entire period of recovery rose by only 250,000. The difference of 156,000 is greater than the total number of people employed in the whole of Metropolitan London, Ontario, a fine metropolis.

The contrast in the increase in full-time jobs for women between the two periods is even more striking. During the last 30 months of the former Liberal Government's term, the number of women with full-time jobs rose by 128,000 and during the first 30 months of this Government's term, the increase was 327,000, a difference of 199,000 or over two and a half times as many.

It is important that women now have benefits in part-time jobs, that they have benefits in full-time jobs and that they get more full-time jobs. That is why the training programs we introduced have been so important. That is why the child tax credit and the sales tax credit were so important. They helped to move women out of poverty and into more comfortable and prosperous lives. We must all focus on that, particularly for elderly women, and that is why we have introduced so much pension legislation. We know how important that is.

That is the record of the Government in two and a half years. That is why I believe this motion is frivolous and should be defeated.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the Minister responsible for the status of women could call this a frivolous motion. It is a very serious motion, and I hope she knows me and my Party well enough to realize that it was put in all seriousness.

I would like to ask the Minister a question about the Secretary of State women's program which, as she knows, has been in some turmoil of late. I would like to know her view of the purpose of this program and why we have had to spend so much time, money and hours on the road with the SOS Committee defending this program when it is very obvious that the program is essential to carrying out the equality goals of the Government. Does she support the views of some Conservative Members on the committee who have been very difficult, members who have suggested that advocacy groups should not receive government funding, that groups like NAC should not be funded if REAL Women is not eligible for funding?

Second, the Minister mentioned the child care program. What is her position on the recommendation of the special committee on child care regarding the refundable child tax credit which would cost about $300 million and put $200 in the hands of each woman with young children? Would this money not be better spent by increasing child care spaces and improving the quality and flexibility—and I agree with her on that point—of child care across Canada?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member was not quite listening. I did not in any way suggest that she was frivolous or that the issue was frivolous. I said that the motion was frivolous.

If we are to engage in a discussion about women, we have to recognize and celebrate together some of the positive things that have happened. It is a case of whether the glass is half full or half empty. Until the glass is completely full, I would like to talk about it in a positive way. Compared to what has gone before, the progress that has been made is something with which I can certainly face the country very happily.

I believe the women's program has made an important contribution to the ability of women to articulate the things about which they care. Like any program, it is worth reviewing from time to time. We should hear what Canadians think of the program, if the program is working and if needs have changed in the last five or 10 years. The inquiry that is being conducted both by the Secretary of State and by the House of Commons is a perfectly legitimate one. Having said that, I would certainly think it is quite worth while to continue funding some kinds of advocacy programs and I do not in any way disagree with that.

I do believe that there must be some criteria and perhaps it is time the criteria for our objectives changed. I have made no prejudgement on that. I would like to see what comes out of the House of Commons committee's study and the review of the Secretary of State. I would like to see more services for women and not just a continuation of some women's programs.

Once again, we need flexibility in child care. The report of the special committee was a very thoughtful one and attempted to deal with flexibility and the many different ways women need help in looking after children. I agree with the Hon. Member that the definition of family has changed. That means that we should do something for women who want to care for their children at home and something for women who need a structured system. We are taking that into account as we develop government policy because we all know what the options are. They are to fund the supply side, which is additional space, or fund the demand side, which is to give parents money directly. We all have a different view of where to draw the line between the one and the other.

• (1500)

I think the Special Committee on Child Care is to be commended for the work it did and the report it presented. I know this is an issue that the Hon. Member cares about as well. The fact that there is ongoing discussion with the provinces, and the report will be a part of that discussion, means that by the time we come forward with a policy it will be positive and will help the women of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question.

Yesterday, the Public Service Commission tabled its annual report for 1986. We are pleased to note significant improvements in the area of promotion and hiring of women in the Public Service.

A problem which seems to recur year after year is the ratio of women in senior-level positions, the so-called Management Category. We find on page 27 of the report that Government objectives have been lowered or reduced due to budgetary constraints. For the benefit of the Minister I might quote what is said on page 27 of the report:

> In 1986, 42 women at the senior management level minus one took the senior management orientation course, compared to 52 in 1985 and 32 in 1984. This decrease is probably the result of—

According to the Commission—

> —fewer people being sent on management orientation courses due to general government restraints.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, at page 25, a question relating to the appointment of women to senior-level positions. It reads, in part:

> The number of appointments of women to the Management Category will have to be increased in 1987 to meet the government's target of 476 by the end of the first quarter of 1988.

Could the Minister tell us whether she will try and exercise pressure on the Public Service Commission to ensure that the objective of the Government, which is to raise the number of women in senior management in the Public Service of Canada to 476, is indeed met.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, that is an easy question to answer because the answer is obviously yes. What is not clear to me from the Hon. Member's comments is what is the proportion of SMs that took the course and so on. It is not just the number that is significant but the proportion at each level. It is inevitable that what we are going to see is a kind of ebb and flow. There will be more one year than another year. It depends how many people are coming up from one level to the next level. There has to be a progression.

Like the Hon. Member, I take a personal interest in this. I want to see more done around that and I have often spoken about it with my Treasury Board colleagues and the Public Service people. I think this year we will have to see an improvement, but I want to point out as well that part of the evaluation of Deputy Ministers is how well women are doing in their Departments. It is an important part and not something this Government ignores in any way. It is a significant factor in the measurement of how Deputy Ministers perform their duties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A very short question from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, one of the priorities identified by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women at their annual meeting this week is the position taken with respect to a motion before this House on the question of recognition of the foetus in the Constitution. The Minister responsible for the Status of Women has to date remained silent with respect to this motion. I ask her to show some leadership on this matter now by indicating her position on this motion which I believe could constitute a grave threat to freedom of choice of women.

As well, could she please indicate to the House and the people of Canada when the Government intends to move with respect to its commitment to amending the Canadian Human Rights Act to prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation? Those two subjects have been identified by NAC as important subjects to be addressed this week and I would like the Minister to show some leadership on them.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, on the second point, as the Hon. Member knows, that is something that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has been reviewing. I would not want to comment beyond supporting the conclusions he comes to.

On the first issue, I believe, and I have made it clear, that I agree with the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) that I would like to see the law remain as it stands. I recognize that this is a very important issue for women across Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for suggesting this topic to the House today. It is very useful from time to time to have a review of important issues like women's issues.

Over the years women have faced tremendous discrimination in Canada. When I was first elected in 1968 we had but one woman in the House of Commons, Grace MacInnis from the riding of Vancouver—Kingsway. She was one of the champions of the cause of women's issues for many, many years in this House. She was a Member of Parliament, if I am not mistaken, from 1965 until about 1974. She did a very commendable job.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there has long been a lot of discrimination against women in this country as elsewhere—income discrimination, occupation discrimination, discrimination at the political level, and sometimes, before that, statutory discrimination in Canada. But now, in 1987, there is still too much discrimination left, a lot of inequality between men and women. By comparison, according to Statistics Canada, last year, in 1986, women's income in Canada was only 64.9 per cent of men's income. Three years ago, in 1984, women's income was 65.5 per cent of men's revenue. This is a setback rather than progress, Mr. Speaker, as far as the average income of Canadian women is concerned. This is why we need this debate, this is why there are still many women below the poverty line in Canada, and that problem is specific to women in single-parent families.

[English]

I want to spend most of my time this afternoon on the Canadian Jobs Strategy and some of the problems which have been identified in serious studies and comments about that strategy. In 1985, the Government announced a new Canadian Jobs Strategy with several different components. That strategy is now in operation across the country. Since that time we have had a number of problems with that strategy. I want to draw to the attention of the House and the Cabinet in a very serious way, as well as to any officials who may be watching, a very important discussion paper prepared by the Ontario Ministry of Skills Development a short time ago. This paper was prepared on behalf of all provincial Governments for a meeting in Ottawa on January 29 and January 30, 1987. The paper analyses in detail the Canadian Jobs Strategy and makes a number of important points concerning women and the program. The paper was undertaken by the Ontario Government but at the request of the other provinces. It was endorsed by those provinces at the meeting in January.

The observations in this paper are relevant to the motion before us today. I hope members of all three Parties will take these observations to heart and seriously consider them.

• (1510)

One of the most serious comments made in here is with regard to the criteria for eligibility to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. They say that the eligibility criteria to the programs remain too restrictive in many ways. The Ontario Ministry of Skills Development study says:

> Key target groups—for instance the severely employment disadvantaged, women, and individuals in threatened communities—face barriers due to gaps in the design of the CJS.

They go into detail about the job development budget and program and entry and re-entry components of the women's program within the CJS.

In speaking of women specifically the report says:

> The Canadian Jobs Strategy identifies women as a special client group to receive a greater share of training and employment opportunities.

They identify women for this, but the study goes on to say:

> However, the CJF is criticized by women's groups across Canada for its failure to benefit women, and immigrant women in particular.
>
> Statistics Canada's Labour Force Survey reveals that women make up 43 per cent of the labour force in Canada.
>
> Yet, despite the fact that women are a target group under the CJF, federal statistics show that the participation rate of women in the CJS, excluding the Challenge 85 program which provided summer employment for secondary and post-secondary students, was only 34 per cent in 1985-86.

That is very serious, Mr. Speaker. Women make up 43 per cent of the labour force yet only 34 per cent of the people participating in the Canadian Jobs Strategy are women. That is a gap of 9 per cent.

[Translation]

This is something that is so important that 43 per cent of the Canadian labour force were women. But women participation in the Canadian Job's strategy of women program is only 34 per cent.

[English]

That is not good enough. The Minister should take note of that and try to do something about it. The study continues:

> Furthermore, the number of women being served by EIC since the introduction of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is declining.
>
> In addition, the preponderance of projects funded under the CJS have offered women training in traditional, low-paying occupations.

That is a very important point of which we must all take note. So many of the women in the Canadian Jobs Strategy are being trained in traditional low-paying occupations. Of the 767 female participants who received occupational training, fully two-thirds, 512, received training in such traditional areas as clerical, sales and service occupations. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. All Parties should insist that that be changed.

Even more telling is that no training was provided for women in such non-traditional occupations for women as construction, mining, machining, and forestry and transport equipment operating. The table contained in this study of the Ministry of Skills Development shows that in such occupations as mining, oil and gas there is not a single woman of the 3,250 involved being trained in those areas. The same applies to forestry and logging occupations, machining and related occupations, construction trades occupations, transport equipment operating occupations, and material handling and related occupations. Very few women are being trained in other occupations which are non-traditional for women in this country.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is very proud to say that he has six women in his Cabinet. I congratulate him for that. That is pretty good compared to previous Prime Ministers. However, anything is pretty good when it is compared with something which is really bad.

Mr. Fennell: What about your Cabinet?

Mr. Nystrom: The Conservative Member across the way talks about our Cabinet. I have seen NDP Cabinets in western provinces which have very few or no women. I am not proud of that. I am happy that in the last provincial election in Saskatchewan, after not having female New Democratic MLAs for a long time, three were elected. That is good, not only for the NDP and not only for Saskatchewan, but for all women in this country.

All Parties should do whatever they can to ensure that there are more women in politics so that when there is another important Conference of First Ministers there will be some women sitting around the table rather than only 11 middle-aged or older men making important decisions about the future of Canada for all Canadians. That is very important.

This study points out the discrimination in the Canadian Jobs Strategy. There are 311 women being trained in clerical and related occupations, 131 being trained in sales occupations, and 69 being trained in service occupations. However, there are very few women being trained in occupations which are important in terms of making money and decisions. I will give you three examples.

In the managerial, administrative and related occupations class there are only 42 women being trained in all of Canada, while for low-paying clerical jobs they are training 311 women and in sales they are training 131 women. In occupations in natural sciences, engineering and mathematics, which are areas of great contribution to the country and which offer tremendous salaries and job security, they are training only five women. In occupations in social sciences and related fields they are training only 29 women.

Even in teaching and related occupations in which there are a lot of women working, only 63 women are being trained. In occupations in medicine and health 79 women are being trained. I am sure that the great preponderance of them are being trained for the traditional women's jobs in the medical field.

I recommend that Members of the House take a very serious look at this discussion paper on the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which was prepared on behalf of all the provincial Governments in Canada by the Ontario Ministry of Skills Development and was endorsed by all 10 provinces which represent four political Parties. The study condemns the Canadian Jobs Strategy for training women for low-paying jobs and for their low level of participation.

I would now like to refer to a study which was released in February of this year by the Canadian Advisory Council which assessed the impact of the Canadian Jobs Strategy on Women. It draws some conclusions similar to those of the Ontario Government on behalf of the provinces. The key observation was that evidence suggests that the majority of women are receiving training in traditionally female and lower paying occupations.

• (1520)

In addition to this, the Council adds its voice to those who also believe that the criteria for the Canadian Jobs Strategy are too restrictive, particularly as they pertain to women in Canada.

In particular, it points out:

> Many individuals and groups concerned with training for women consider the orientation of women's training toward traditional occupations to be a major problem. A large portion of women currently unemployed (55 per cent) work in sales, service and clerical occupations.

Mr. James: What is the matter with sales?

Mr. Nystrom: They are referring to sales as such jobs as a sales clerk at a Bay store. The problem pointed out in the Ontario study, which is endorsed by all provincial Governments, is that these are traditionally very low paying jobs. An increasing number of these people are being trained for those kinds of jobs rather than jobs that pay better in some of the non-traditional areas. Perhaps the Hon. Member missed some of my earlier comments, so I refer him to the discussion paper by the Ontario Skills Development Ministry from January of this year. It is entitled The Canadian Jobs Strategy: Policy and Implementation.

I want to go to another topic which I believe is important. It was mentioned briefly this morning by the Member for Vancouver East and concerns the whole area of women in part-time work. She said that some women and some men want to work part-time but she knows of many who want a full-time job but cannot find one.

Recently, I found a study conducted by Statistics Canada in December, 1986, which contains figures on involuntary part-time work. These include women who are working part-time because they cannot find a full-time job. I believe we should be raising this issue in the House more often because the statistics are very startling and revealing.

The study noted that over 500,000 people worked in part-time jobs in 1985 because they could not find full-time jobs. In 1986, there were 516,000 who worked in part-time jobs because they could not find full-time jobs. In 1975, the figure was 109,000, which means there has been an increase of 500 per cent in some 12 years.

I know of dozens of people in my riding who are in such a position. There are people in Canora, Kamsack, Yorkton, Melville, Preeceville and Sturgis in my riding who would like to work on a full-time basis but cannot find a full-time job. Therefore, they work on Saturday afternoons in a store or a few evenings a week in a business or as part-time consultants.

Involuntary part-time work is concentrated among women between the ages of 25 and 54 and among young people between the ages of 15 and 24. These two groups make up 81 per cent of the total involuntary part-time workers in Canada.

The data for 1986, according to Statistics Canada, shows very little change in this situation. A woman or young person working in the community, business or the personal service sector, as opposed to manufacturing, is seven times more likely to be an involuntary part-time worker. One can see how the problem has escalated when one considers that in 1975 there were some 74,000 involuntary part-time workers while in 1985 there were 351,000 involuntary part-time workers.

A recent Labour Canada study made the following observation:

> Part-time employees are at a disadvantage on all benefits but the gap is largest for pensions which, not surprisingly, are the most costly for an employer to provide.

In the minute that I have remaining, I want to refer to a number of papers that were written by the Community Coalition on the Canadian Jobs Strategy. They state the following with respect to the eligibility criteria:

> The first aspect I would like to address is the eligibility criteria. Under Job Development the eligibility criteria requires that candidates have been unemployed for 24 of the 30 weeks preceding his/her application for training in order to be considered eligible. Anyone who has been employed during that period is not eligible for training and more important, is not deemed to be severely employment disadvantaged. Such specificity in calculating the term of unemployment completely overlooks the economic and employment reality for many of the unemployed.

They are saying that the criteria are too rigid, which discriminates against women in particular but also discriminates against many men, particularly in regions of the country where unemployment has been a very serious problem. I urge the Government to examine seriously some of the shortfalls in the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

I hope the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), who is an expert in this area and who I assume will be following me in the debate, will seriously review these studies. When she speaks about the accomplishments of the Canadian Jobs Strategy I hope she will also take into consideration some of its shortfalls, particularly for women. If she can do that and perhaps persuade the Minister, this country will be a better place for us all, particularly the women of Canada.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague for putting on the record that informative but rather disturbing analysis of the Canadian Jobs Strategy and training programs. In particular, the Statistics Canada study on part-time work was extremely useful.

I would like him to comment on another subject that I know is very close to his heart. It concerns the agricultural situation in Canada and the impact that the extreme stress and economic hardship of farming is having on women. Does he have any suggestions about what should be done, because I believe that farm women carry far more than the average burden of responsibility since many of them work on the farm as well as perform their usual family and homemaking responsibilities? Indeed, I understand that some women work in town in order to help buy the groceries. Would the Hon. Member comment on that situation?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. I grew up on a small farm near the town of Wynyard, Saskatchewan. I spent my first 18 years there, until I went to university. I, and many Members of the House, such as the Member from the Camrose area, witnessed the tremendous discrimination farm wives experience in the economic and social system of the farm community.

First, many farm women not only look after the house and the children, but also do a lot of work on the farm itself. When I was growing up, these jobs ranged from milking the cows, to hauling the bales, to kicking the rocks. They very often received very little in return and did all this work without income. These women carry out this work without a pension or the ability to qualify for unemployment insurance.

These women represent a group of people in our society who do a tremendous amount of work and make a valuable contribution to this country through their farming skills, parenting skills, and managerial skills, but do not have many of the benefits provided by our society. I have seen case after case in which the land is in the man's name, in which the cheques come in the man's name, in which the man makes contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and to his RRSPs. I have seen cases in which the man has this and the man has that and in which there is very little for the woman.

• (1530)

In addition to that I see tremendous discrimination against farm women when it comes to matters such as child care. Obviously, many farms are a long way from towns, cities and larger villages and women are stuck on the farm with the children and do not have the options that their urban sisters do. I think that is a tremendous discrimination. What makes it worse is that we are now facing an economic crisis such as we have not seen in rural Canada, particularly in the west, since the 1930s. We have all seen the figures with respect to the price of wheat and the price of other farm commodities, which are exceedingly low. Much of the burden this creates must be borne by the farm woman in terms of the additional stress it places on the family.

I was in my riding not last weekend but the weekend before last when I had a chance to meet with three people who run the Yorkton Crisis Centre. This is a crisis centre which has been open for a short time, I believe just two or three years. They came to me with a request for lobbying for more funding. At the moment they receive a very small grant from the federal Government and nothing from the province. They receive small contributions from people in the community and from the city council. They came to me and told me that in the last year in the small community of Yorkton there were over 1,300 people who contacted the crisis centre, either in person by walking through the door or by calling on the telephone.

They told me that many of these people who called were farmers, men and women, who were going through stress because of financial problems. Many of them were farm women who are battered wives or who are having problems in that they feel isolated on the farm and have nowhere to turn. Those statistics alone have shown me what kind of problems farmers face in general but, in particular, the problems that women face because of the role they are playing in our society.

What we should be doing is bringing in adequate pension plans for farm women, as well as adequate pension plans for women who work with their husbands in small businesses. We should bring about recognition of the work that is done, not just in the home, and we have talked about the work done in the homes of urban Canada, but the work done in the homes of rural Canada as well as the work done on the farms by the women who make such a great and tremendous contribution to Canada.

I could name many women who live in the community where I grew up who not only looked after the house and the kids but who actually did more work on the farm than did their husbands. I remember in particular one family, and I will not give their name, where the woman, after having to do all the work in the house and looking after the kids, also had to go out and milk the cows. The man would stand by and watch her because milking cows is women's work.

So these women have made a tremendous contribution, particularly the pioneers who settled the West. I think the time has come for us to recognize that in terms of more progressive legislation in Canada.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate today. As several members have already mentioned, it is appropriate that this debate is taking place on the Friday before Mother's Day, a day when all of us give recognition to our mothers and the contributions they have made to our lives in terms of what we are doing today as Members of Parliament. I am sure that many of us are here because of the encouragement we received from our mothers.

I am also pleased to be speaking in this debate because many of us here are mothers. We think about the future of our daughters. We want to create a better future and better opportunities for them. I hope that my male colleagues who have daughters share my hopes and aspirations.

We hear a great deal from women about their problems. They often have differing opinions with respect to how they feel the Government should respond to these problems. In fact, there are a great many women today who say that they do not want anything special, they just want to be treated the same as their male colleagues. As the Minister responsible for the status of women mentioned earlier, this is a philosophy, and one with which I agree. The problem for so many years has been that women have started behind. What we have to do is to close the gap so that men and women start together at the starting gate. From there they can obviously move ahead based on their own ability and their own possibilities. However, because of traditions and because of many years of attitudes, women have not been equal at the starting gate.

Earlier, in questions I posed to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), I talked about there being among many younger women something which I find disturbing in that they have limited aspirations. They do not see all the choices that are out there for them. They think of their lives in fairly romanticized terms. They think that they will grow up, get married and be looked after for the rest of their lives. We know that is not the reality of life in Canada today, certainly not for all women.

The other difference that exists between men and women is the biological reality of women as the bearers of children and their primary care givers. Fortunately, that, too, is changing in our society and men are playing a greater role. They are accepting responsibility for their children. However, women are the ones who still tend to look after the children, who take them to child care and look after the home to a great extent. In fact, some of my women friends have often said that the best thing they could get on Mother's Day would be to have their spouses look after the arrangements for child care, dentist appointments and lessons for a whole year for them. That would be a great present that some men could give to their wives.

The reality associated with being child care givers is that it limits women's opportunities for participation in the workforce and thus limits their economic equality. I will come back to some of these issues later on in my remarks.

Although I know that there are many women in the country who are tremendously successful and who are reaching high levels of achievement I would like to say to them that I hope they will share with me the responsibility for bringing along our sisters, because not all women are as fortunate as we are and they need role models. They need other women to help them along to achieve the same heights.

I wish to say a few words about women in the political process and in the decision-making process as this forms part of my colleague's motion today. As we have already heard, we have made great progress here at the federal level. As has been mentioned, there have only been 38 female Members of Parliament since 1921. There are now 27 of us in this Parliament, which is obviously a tremendous improvement. However, it is not improvement enough, but it is substantial progress. We hope that this figure will double, and then triple and that ultimately 50 per cent of Members in this House will be women. That will ensure that the views and experiences of women are felt in all our decisions.

It would be interesting, and I have not done this, to look at the debates of both the committees and the House and to consider the participation by female members therein. Although only 10 per cent of the members here are women, I am sure that their contributions in debate are much greater than 10 per cent in terms of all our discussions and deliberations in this House and in committee.

Canada is now being looked to as a very progressive country with respect to the advancement of women in the political process. Only this week the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) told me that she had just come back from meetings in the Far East. While she was in Hong Kong meeting with business people and talking about trade and investment opportunities in Canada, the people with whom she was meeting said to her: "It is very interesting, Madam, that you are the Minister for International Trade for your country. You have a High Commissioner in Hong Kong who is an outstanding woman and who is doing an excellent job. Over the past few months we have also had visits from members of your Government such as your Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), your Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) and your Governor General". As we all know, these people are women. The comment to the Minister for International Trade was: "Don't you have any men in your Government?" Well, we do.

Fortunately, women are achieving so much on the international scene that we are really seeing progress. I know that at some of the international meetings I have attended Canada is the only country that will have women along as senior delegates. I would like to compliment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for their constant vigilance and support in ensuring that women are always part of every delegation and play leading roles. In the appointments to boards and commissions we have made substantial progress.

I say to women who might be watching the proceedings that we want more of you here. We know that there are barriers, financial barriers, barriers that are created by family and political life. There have sometimes been barriers within our Parties. But I know that all three Parties are working hard to increase the number of women candidates and, hopefully, the number of women members at the federal, provincial and municipal levels so that women can play their full part in the political decision-making of this country.

• (1540)

I would like to turn now to the issue of economics because certainly in my mind, and from what we have heard today, the barriers which still stand in the way of women achieving full equality are economic barriers. It is interesting to know what has happened over the past 25 years. I graduated from university in 1961. I was looking at some of the figures today which show some of the changes which have taken place. In 1961, the workforce was comprised of only 27 per cent of women. Today it is 43 per cent. In 1961, the participation rate of women in the workforce from ages 20 years to 64 years was only 31 per cent. Today it is 64 per cent, more than double. In 1961, only 2 per cent of women had university degrees. Fourteen per cent of women now have university degrees as compared to 17 per cent of men. Therefore, there has been a tremendous change in this area over the past 25 years.

Interestingly enough, the average number of births per woman has decreased from 3.9 in 1961 to 1.7 currently. If we take all that information together, I believe it signifies not an evolution but a revolution. There has been a change not only in the role women are playing in the workforce, but a change in their lives, and this has had an impact on families, on consumer patterns and on all aspects of our lives.

One of the unfortunate realities is that there has not been much change in the kinds of jobs women hold. In fact, in 1961, 62 per cent of women working were concentrated in only three occupational groups, clerical, sales and service. Today that has changed to 60 per cent. So there has not been the same kind of progress where women would be entering into a wider variety of occupations and professions that we would like to see. As has been already mentioned in the House, more work must be done to encourage women to enter into some of these non-traditional occupations or into some of the new occupations.

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) addressed a conference I attended recently and talked about the tremendous opportunity there is for women to get involved in the communications revolution. There are all kinds of skills and professions based on the communications revolution. These are jobs which do not need physical prowess as do many of the jobs related to traditional resource industries, and which therefore apply to men. These are jobs based on new kinds of knowledge-based skills. The Minister urged this group of women to get on board now, not to miss out. We may have missed out on the industrial revolution but we should not miss out on the communications revolution.

Communications holds the opportunity for women to play a leadership role, but in order for women to do so, and I come back to one of my earlier comments, women at the young ages of 14, 15 and 16 years, are going to have to make choices about their studies and careers. They should be studying computer science, science, mathematics, and all the skills they can do effectively. They should make those choices so they can take on those challenges ahead of them.

One of the other realities we have also heard about is the root problem that we have not yet achieved economic equality. We have heard over-all that women who work earn only 66 per cent of what men earn. If we take that statistic and break it down by age groups, it becomes even more interesting. It reveals one of the problems about which I would like to speak. Working women under the age of 20 years are earning approximately 76 per cent of the salaries of their male counterparts. Between the ages of 20 years and 24 years, it goes down to 71 per cent. From 24 years to 29 years, there is a dramatic drop down to 56 per cent; from 30 years to 34 years, it is down to 46 per cent; and from 35 years to 39 years, it is down to 42 per cent and stays around 42 per cent to 44 per cent during what are supposedly the high earning years, the years between the ages of 30 and 55 when people can accumulate wealth, pay into pensions and plan for their retirement. It is in that age group that women are really earning less than 50 per cent of what men earn. I think that is a statistic we have to keep in mind as we look at the problems we need to address.

The key to economic self-sufficiency for women, in my mind, is labour force equality. The Government has done an outstanding job in taking some strong measures to work towards the achievement of labour force equality. We know it is not going to happen overnight. We know we have to send the right signals and start to put in place the right programs which can lead us towards that equality. First, we must go right back to the beginning and deal with the issue of education. We must ensure that women have access to the education which will enable them to enter into the workforce in well-paying occupations. This is, I think, the responsibility of all of us, along with our provincial colleagues and our school systems. We must ensure that this is happening at the junior high and high school levels.

Second, as my colleague said earlier, we must give women opportunities for training. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy there have been some excellent measures undertaken for women. I have been involved with some of the job entry/re-entry programs. The job re-entry program has totally focused on women, and the job entry programs in which I have been involved in the north shore in British Columbia have been primarily for women. In fact, the over-all statistics show that under the Challenge '86 program, 51.5 per cent were women, and under the other job entry programs, 68.2 per cent were women. So progress is being made.

When I talk to the women who are in these programs—in fact, I am going to a graduation ceremony again next week, I believe—the question is, once they have done this training and are entering into the workforce, what is going to happen now? One of the problems I still see is that many of the women will still not have a high enough skill level to get jobs which are going to pay enough to really make that much of a difference, to enable them to look after child-care costs and really get ahead. I have made a recommendation to the Minister that in our job training programs we have to look at ensuring that the programs are long enough and the skill level is high enough for the mature woman re-entering the workforce so that she can look forward to getting a job which is going to pay enough to give her that start and provide some opportunities for economic equality.

The next area, of course, is access to employment, because unless women have full access to employment, they are never going to have economic equality. That, of course, is where the employment equity legislation, the first legislation ever introduced by a federal Government in this country, comes into play. I know that many companies are working on plans now. They recognize they are going to have to make changes. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina), under her program, has already refused to sign contracts with companies which do not put in place employment equity programs. Employment equity programs will help to give women that start, that access into the job market, and provide them with fair treatment.

• (1550)

Of course along with that there must be equal pay for equal work. I had thought that it was no longer an issue in the country, but I was surprised to read recently the mid-1984 survey by the Geneva-based Economic Monde Forum, which rated Canada as being twenty-third out of 28 nations on the extent to which equal pay is paid for equal work. I think this means that a lot of work still needs to be done.

Of course the provinces are involved in that area, but we need not think that the challenge is over. We still need initiatives to deal with it.

Turning to child care, it is one of the top issues on the agenda of the Government and on the agenda of women. Until we are able to deal effectively with the issue of child care, women will not have the real freedom to make choices on whether to go into the workforce or will not be able to look forward to a well paying job. They will always have to compromise their potential if they do not have access to appropriate child care.

I was pleased by the efforts not only of the parliamentary task force but of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and his provincial colleagues to address the problem seriously. It will not happen overnight, but it is important to start to put in place the elements which will provide for a fair child care system.

I should now like to turn to pensions. Certainly the older women in the country are facing a problem in this regard. We know that to be poor in the country is to be old and to be a woman. However, we have done a lot on the issue of pensions. We have made amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. We brought in spousal allowance for widows between the ages of 60 years and 64 years. We have amended the Pension Benefits Standards Act.

When we look at women in the workforce now, we recognize that there must be more flexibility and more portability in pensions. I have been working in the workforce for 26 years, and I do not have a pension. Each time I moved from job to job, the pensions were not portable. I think this is true for a lot of women. Because of changes in our family circumstances, we go in and out of the job market at different times in our lives. We need pension systems which accommodate that, in addition to the excellent RRSP legislation that enables women to contribute toward a pension plan.

I realize that my time is limited, but there are many things about which I want to talk, including the elements of further action on which I would like to see all of us working together. I think the Government has done a tremendous job, but the challenge is ahead of us.

That plan of action, first of all, would be to influence the attitude of youth toward economic and social realities and the permanent presence of women in the workforce. Second, the Government should act as a model leader and employer regarding employment equity and increasing appointments to boards ultimately to 52 per cent. It must take action on training needs and on child care. I think it should also take action to develop a better data base relating to the impact of broad fiscal measures on women.

In fact, there has been a suggestion that there should be a gender equality index which will provide Governments with a yardstick to measure the relative progress regarding the attainment of economic equality by women.

We should also reassess our income tax provisions in respect of child care, recognizing the contribution which women make in the home, and of a potential credit for women who work in the home through the income tax system. Some suggestions have been made that if we look at the value of a homemaker as being about $26,000 per year, we might look at a tax credit rather than a spousal deduction paid to women who actually gave rise to the tax benefits.

I think those are some of the issues on the agenda before us. With the commitment which the Government has shown over the past 2.5 years and will show as we proceed through our first, second, third, and fourth terms, I know we will see progress that will ensure that women not only have legal equality, which we basically have now, but that we will achieve the kind of economic equality that we all desire.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her remarks. I think I agreed with most of them, but I should like to make a couple of comments.

I could not help but note that when she talked about credits through the tax system she in effect supported a Liberal proposal rather than the proposal of the special committee on child care, which was for a refundable child care tax credit that would give some $200 per child per year to all women with young children who are in the home, and would not just be targeted to those with lower incomes. Perhaps she could comment on whether she really intended to support the Liberal proposal rather than the Conservative one, which would be quite interesting.

Also, the Hon. Member talked about equal pay for equal work. She did not talk about equal pay for work of equal value, which is a very different concept, as I am sure she must know. I was wondering why she talked about equal pay for equal work. Was it just an error? Most people concerned about the whole question would say that we require a real procedure for pay equity, as it is called now.

I think that we require a real procedure which would provide not only a case by case appeal forum through the Canadian Rights Commission but would build systemic change into the entire federal employer jurisdiction to start with.

I know that Yukon, Manitoba, and Ontario have moved into the area of pay equity Bills themselves. It seems to me that this is something at which we should be looking federally. We should have our own pay equity Bill. It is not implicit in the employment equity Bill. It would be quite different and in turn would require equal pay for work of equal value.

I think a dramatic example would be, since the Hon. Member is so interested in child care, that child care workers, many of whom have two years of post-secondary training to become care givers of young children, a very important job, are paid much less than truck drivers and zoo keepers, as a matter of fact.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, when I talked about equal pay, I meant equal pay. We have legislation throughout Canada which says that it is illegal not to have equal pay. However, I found the survey which indicated that Canada ranked twenty-third out of 28 nations on the extent to which equal pay is paid. I have not had a chance to look into it.

However, as the Hon. Member knows, the equal pay for work of equal value issue is very controversial. I get feedback from all sides on that issue. People fear the role of the state in determining pay levels for different jobs, and I have some difficulty with it, although I support the concept itself.

I am not satisfied that we have a mechanism by which to implement it appropriately and effectively without intruding unnecessarily into the market-place. I think we must do more work on that.

As the Hon. Member knows, federally we have pay equity legislation under the Canadian Human Rights Act. There is more staff and more effort made through the Canadian Human Rights Commission to ensure that it is being implemented in the federal jurisdiction.

In respect of tax credits, I was not actually talking about the child tax credit. The child tax credit concept, as recommended by the parliamentary task force on child care, is an interesting approach. I know the Minister will be looking at it, along with other recommendations, to see whether it is the best way of giving people choices about child care while also ensuring that there are adequate child care spaces. I think we must balance those two things in the system.

I was really talking about another idea. We have been talking about homemakers' pensions or how we value the work of women in the home. Is it through contributing to the Canada Pension Plan? I see a lot of difficulties in that regard, some inequities and some problems, particularly for low income families and just how it would be done. Another idea which I heard discussed was that perhaps we could do it through a tax credit system to the spouse who is staying at home. Again, it is an idea which might be worth looking at, and I put it forward on that basis.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I offer my hon. friend a suggestion. When it comes to equal pay for work of equal value and the argument that it is difficult to assess the relative value of different jobs, let me say that we do that in the corporate sector all the time. It is called "job evaluation studies", where in fact we bring in a team to evaluate every job on the basis of a whole set of criteria and give every job a certain number of points. This job, for example, in a totally unrelated area gets a certain number of points. Then we agree that if you reach so many points in these two jobs you should be receiving equal pay. The concept has been working for years and years in the private sector. I have been part of the teams that have done this in a variety of places in western Canada. The mechanism is there. It is perhaps a matter of applying it on a wider scale.

• (1600)

However, my question is unrelated to that. Having heard the Hon. Member talk earlier about the situation in B.C., I am concerned about the number of young women who are looking for jobs in British Columbia. Recognizing that youth unemployment in her province increased 157 per cent in the 1980s, the situation can only be classed as tragic. This is a tragic crisis situation particularly for young women who have a more difficult time than ever obtaining summer jobs now that students are looking for summer work because so many jobs in the resource sector tend to go to young male students.

Last year we had Expo in B.C. which was presumably to create a lot of summer jobs, which it did. We do not have Expo this year in British Columbia and the situation is worse than it was last summer. Given the crisis situation in B.C., did the Hon. Member accept the notion that the amount of funding for Challenge '87 should be the same this year as it was last year?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member, as I am sure he is aware, that since our Government took office—this is the beginning of April and I know that the figures have gone up substantially since 63,000 jobs have been created in British Columbia—well over two-thirds as many jobs have been created in the 30 months in B.C. since September, 1984 than were created between the 1980 and 1984 elections. The unemployment rate in British Columbia has fallen from 15.1 per cent to 13.6 per cent. Things are obviously moving in the right direction. Within that, however, there are disparities. The problem of youth is one concern.

I have found, just reflecting on my own riding, that unemployment has been up this year, partly as a consequence Expo. A number of people who were working at Expo are now on unemployment insurance until something else, hopefully, will come along. My Challenge '87 is up this year, and we are really looking forward to it. Maybe it is the way we have been able to carve out the jobs.

We have a lot of jobs in the private sector this year, which is participating and helping to pay for part of the program. I am very pleased by the tremendous response I have had from the federal Government, not only through Challenge '87. In the last few weeks I was able to announce $300,000 worth of jobs under Section 38, very important jobs for people on unemployment insurance who will now get back into the workforce, many in training and a lot of them in community organizations. Those programs, on top of the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, a number of job development programs and the job entry and re-entry program, are making a significant impact in my part of the province. I would hope that my hon. colleague will have the same positive results in Kamloops.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask a question of the Hon. Member. Is there time for a further question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the House agree to the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence asking a question and for the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) replying?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to call to the Hon. Member's attention that since 1930, in the United States the concept of equal pay for work of equal value has been in effect. Criteria has been developed and, as my colleague has pointed out, in the private sector the criteria are four in number: skill, responsibility, effort and working conditions, in order to make an assessment of dissimilar jobs. Is the Hon. Member in replying to those who approach her about this matter, expressing sympathy for this kind of equality where women have equal pay for work of equal value?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I guess the way I would see it is that it is not just for women; it is hoped that one is paid the value of the job. The criteria that my colleague mentions are appropriate. I worked in personnel at one time many years ago and did job classification, and that was certainly the basis upon which we did it. If jobs are looked on in this way, the skills required, the education required, sometimes hours or other aspects that may be included, it will not make a difference whether it is men or women who are filling those jobs. I think in most cases that is what is happening.

There are obviously still some areas where that has not worked. We need to address those. I know many of the provinces are taking steps because most of these private companies come under provincial jurisdiction. The Province of Ontario, for example, is taking steps in that respect. It is something that has to be worked out with employers. It is not something you can impose, because it does not work if you do it that way. The public has to have a better understanding about the concept and the implications. That is my approach to dealing with the issue. If we do it in that way, we can be successful.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the subject before the House today is as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for failing to recognize the real value of womens' work in the workplace, the community and in the home with tangible policies that would ensure adequate incomes, removal of barriers and full opportunities for equal participation in decision making and in the political life of Canada.

[English]

That is a serious resolution. I suggest that it is not trivial and it is not in any way something that is put forward simply as an act of partisanship. It is a serious subject. It is not one either which has suddenly been put forward, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about real people, and lest perhaps we get lost with the statistics, certainly of Members of Parliament, and I am sure my colleagues even on the government side, receive letters of complaint and concern from constituents about the problems they face, not the least of which is the kind of letter that I have received from a person who works in the Bank of Montreal, let me read it. I am not selecting that particular bank as being any different from any other bank. This person writes:

> The past year has been one of tremendous change at the Bank of Montreal. As employees, we have experienced the impact of radical organizational change. Some of the adverse consequences of these changes have been:
>
> Bank-initiated terminations;
>
> Reassignments from full-time to part-time jobs;
>
> Reassignments to lower-graded positions;
>
> Relocations to other branches.

In summing up concerns and those of other co-workers; the letter goes on to say:

> —the unequal treatment of men and women in hiring and promotion shockingly insensitive lay-offs and transfers as a result of technological change and growing work loads—.

This is not an isolated letter, and it is not merely about one bank. It is the kind of letter that I receive from people in many different organizations and companies over the kinds of problems they are facing, not of improvements for them in their daily lives but a regression to problems that are increasingly hitting them, sometimes in middle life, which is a very critical time, when, as the last speaker so correctly said, they should be able to expect greater security, greater recompense because they are now in what is supposed to be their higher earning years.

We are talking about real people and about the kind of person who writes the kind of letter I have just read. We are talking about people we see often in schools or in hospitals when we go to institutions such as that and we see large numbers of women, the majority of whom are working in those institutions, working as ordinary workers but very few of them being given the opportunity to hold administrative positions. Even if they do hold administrative positions, they are not necessarily being promoted any further.

We are talking about real people in real institutions, banks, schools or hospitals where women still remain often the main workforce but are not being given the opportunity to move upward. Very often, women still say today that it feels like a man's world. We who are legislators must regard that inequality as a challenge.

• (1610)

I cannot accept the passive attitude that in the long run education will solve all these problems and that progress will eventually take place. I am concerned about the comment of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who has said previously as well that she does not always see the value of forcing these issues through legislation. Rather, she feels we must educate people. Education is certainly important, but when it comes to human rights, there is no reason for people to waste their lives while we let time go by in the hope that education will change opinions and attitudes. It is not fair that people do not now have equal rights, and that should be our objective. We should not leave it for education in some future day. Human rights should be brought into effect now.

We may look at the situation statistically. I tried to cite examples of living people in real situations, people working in banks, schools, hospitals, corporations, factories and plants. However, the statistics must also speak to our thoughts. We must realize that statistics speak of real individuals. Women earn 65 cents for every $1 a man earns. That is a real statistic about real people with real names.

Of all Canadians who are working at the minimum wage, two-thirds are women. Women lose out economically when they leave work to have children because they lose seniority when they re-enter the workforce. We know that that happens to real Canadian citizens. From statistics, we know that 6.7 per cent of the women in the labour force earn more than $30,000, while for men that figure is 28.6 per cent. There are almost five times as many men as women who make more than $30,000. This means that women are not yet included in opportunities for promotion.

Still another fact is that two and a half times as many women as men are forced to work part time because they cannot find full-time work. Seventy-one per cent of all part-time workers in Canada are women. These are the realities faced by real people. These are real statistics about our children, cousins, neighbours, families, friends and people across Canada whom we do not know but about whom we should care.

We know that there is an incredibly high rate of poverty among elderly women. They represent the largest number of people who live under the poverty line. The fact that this is so relates back to just these kinds of economic realities. They cannot earn the kind of incomes they should for the kind of jobs they do and they cannot get the kind of pensions they deserve. Often pensions relate to incomes. Ultimately, that is why the greatest number of people living under the poverty line are elderly women.

One must ask if Government can and should do anything about this. We in the Opposition do not agree with the attitude so often expressed by government Members that these are matters which should be taken care of by the increasingly affluent economy, that if the economy is sufficiently well off, eventually enough people will be hired and the poor will become richer—the trickle-down theory.

During the 1984 election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to develop a definition of part-time employment and to require employers to "include a pro-rated basis in all employment benefits". When he was electioneering, the Prime Minister was prepared to promise government action rather than to let things happen through education and over time. Of course, this has not been the case.

Louise Dulude, President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, has said that the Prime Minister has failed to honour his promises to part-time workers, most of whom are women. She says that she rates the performance of the Government so far as poor.

Lisa Avedon of the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women has said the following:

> This government's philosophy is fine for those at the top of the system. But for those at the bottom, without access to higher education, it's the pits!

In short, the Government has a responsibility. It has a task to perform. We in the Opposition call upon the Government to do more than it is doing to meet the needs and concerns of women.

There has been a failure on the part of the Government to set an example. It calls upon the private sector to do things it is not prepared to do itself. For example, we know of the Government's record in hiring young people. Huguette Labelle of the Public Service Commission, a very respected person and a Deputy Minister, indicated yesterday that the number of Public Service appointments going to people aged 24 and under dropped in the past year. She pointed out that barely 4 per cent of public servants are 24 or under. During the summer, the Government calls upon the private sector to hire young people, to take a chance on young people. Yet the Government itself is setting an example which fails young people and cuts down on the number of jobs for young people in the Public Service. It is saying: "Don't do as I do, do as I say".

I serve on the subcommittee of the House of Commons which deals with the disabled and the handicapped. Similarly, it has been brought to our attention that the private sector has provided 6 per cent of the jobs for the disabled and the handicapped, whereas statistics show that the Government has provided jobs for only 2 per cent of the disabled and the handicapped. The private sector hires three times as many handicapped and disabled people as the Government which, in its pious concern, expresses all this great emotion about the disabled and the handicapped with words. When it comes to delivering, it shows a very bad record.

The same applies to women. We also found out from Huguette Labelle that though the number of women in management jobs increased by 55, the number of appointments will have to be increased significantly in 1987 to meet the Government's target by the end of the first quarter of 1988. The Deputy Minister has expressed grave concern about the fact that the Government is falling short of its target for providing jobs to women in administrative and senior positions. At this rate, she feels it will fail to keep its promise, as it has failed in so many other ways to provide women with the kinds of jobs and the number of jobs they deserve to have. The Government is saying: Do not do as I do, do as I say.

• (1620)

We believe the Government can do certain things, and we call upon it to set an example with its own workforce. Let the Government deliver on the words we heard from government Members as they piously spoke about Mother's Day and their concern about equity for women. Let them provide the jobs in the Public Service that they should. That will be the best proof to the women of this country, in fact to all of us, that there is a determination by the Government to practise what it preaches.

We know there are other things that ought to do be done. We know they can be achieved by the Government. If the Government had the resolve, it could do what other countries have done concerning equal pay for work of equal value. For example, equal pay legislation was phased in from 1969 to 1975 in Australia. Over that time, average weekly earnings of women increased from 62 per cent to 80 per cent of men's earnings. That is a remarkable record. It demonstrates that if Government sets the example and brings in adequate legislation, progress takes place very rapidly. Women have the right to be treated as equals. They are entitled to equal access, equal opportunity and equal pay. If they can do it in Australia, it can be done here.

In Britain equal pay for work of equal value legislation has increased women's earnings by 10 per cent. Here in Canada the Ontario Government introduced a Bill to extend pay equity to over one million women over a three-year period. It is the most powerful and sweeping Bill of its kind in North America, and a Liberal Government brought it in. It will require employers to pay men and women the same salary for work of equal value. This proves, whether it be Australia in the 1960s, Britain in the 1970s, or Ontario in the 1980s, that if a Government wants to do something about it, it can. The challenge is there if the political will is there. The promise was made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign that he would deliver. We are asking him to do just that.

The Government had the opportunity; it was tested, and found wanting. It brought in a Bill, which was a good thing to do in itself, but it was so weak that one organization after another said it was worse than nothing and they would be better off without it. I am of course speaking about Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. It should have been called an Act respecting reporting. It was introduced on June 27, 1986. We opposed it, not because we did not want a Bill, because we did, but we wanted one that would be effective. The Bill introduced was gravely defective. That is why most of the organizations concerned about the issue of equality expressed their disappointment with it.

I would like to give just four reasons why we in the Opposition were disappointed with the Bill. First, its scope was and is too narrow. It does not apply to federal Departments and suppliers as regulated by Treasury Board. In other words, the Government exempted itself from this Bill. When you look at the record of the Government and its failure to deliver on its promises to youth, the handicapped and women, perhaps that explains why the Government decided to exempt itself. Yet at the same time it called upon other organizations to comply.

The second reason is that we felt the Bill did not have enough teeth so that if organizations did not comply there would be some way to make them do what they are supposed to do. The Bill failed on that level especially. Neither did it include contract compliance, except at very high levels. The Bill would apply only to contracts of $200,000 or more. That meant it covered only about 500 of the over 54,000 contracts the Government issues each year. It provided little or no leverage for the Government to use to get companies who buy from the Government to comply. Finally, there is one last tragic fact, that the Bill is in any case a reporting mechanism. It does not provide any immediate relief for or correction of the situation. We will probably have to wait for three years before we have any results which can be firmly measured.

I will close my remarks by saying that while this is a nice time for us to pay lip service to these matters because it will soon be Mother's Day, while it is nice to talk about the wonderful distance we have travelled, we cannot look back and simply pat ourselves on the back because we have finally recognized the fact that women, the disabled, and the minorities are all human beings. We should now resolve that this is not good enough and we have to take very strong steps forward to legislate ways whereby women will receive equal pay for work of equal value.

• (1630)

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), because the status of women is one of my major concerns, and also because I would like to tell Hon. Members a little more about what the Government has done to promote women's employment. I find it hard to understand why the Hon. Member for Vancouver East is presenting a motion of this kind. Since the Government was sworn in three years ago, it has seen the status of women in Canadian society as one of its major concerns. The Hon. Member wants tangible and compassionate policies for women. Mr. Speaker, the Government is doing everything it can to promote appropriate and effective measures.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East also referred to equal participation in decision-making and in political life. These terms are so vague they can mean just about anything, but if it is a matter, as I believe it is, of offering women new opportunities, the best way is to have a paying job, and with the material benefits, the independence and self respect such a job provides.

Mr. Speaker, no previous administration has a record that can compare with what this Government has done to promote women's employment. Employment barriers as a result of systematic discrimination and prejudice have been revealed for what they are and torn down. Never before have Canadian women been present in such large numbers and on the same equal basis, in workshops, board rooms and the corridors of power.

Women would be the first to admit this is true.

Mr. Speaker, since we came to power in 1984, 337,000 women entered the labour market. During the same period, the unemployment rate dropped by 2.3 per cent. In fact, the number of jobs filled by women increased by 427,000, and 80 per cent are full-time jobs.

Let the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) try to denigrate the Government with her motion. Some 427,000 Canadian women who have paying jobs have proved they have confidence in the economy. Their improved employment situation is of course due to economic growth. And I think the Hon. Member will have to acknowledge that it was this Government's policies that contributed to that growth. By creating a climate conducive to investment, the Government made it possible for the private sector to create real, permanent jobs. Thanks to our efforts to reduce the deficit, we have restored the confidence of investors in our economy and lightened the tax burden on future generations.

Mr. Speaker, the workplace is undergoing a spectacular transformation, the increasingly important role of women is a striking example. Today, economic growth is highest in the small business sector, and women are responsible for a considerable share of that growth. Today, one third of Canada's small businesses are owned by women, and this share is increasing rapidly. At this rate, women may own 50 per cent in three years.

Now this is an outstanding change in relation with conditions which existed only a few years ago. Fifteen years ago, only 6 per cent of university graduates in business administration were women. In 1982, that proportion had risen to almost 34 per cent. During the same period, the percentage of women graduates from law schools in Canada had more than quadrupled from 9 per cent to 38 per cent. Women are beginning to carve out a place for themselves in the business world, in the courts, in medicine and in Parliament.

However, those statistics show more than the determination of women to play a full role in the social and economic life of the country. They also indicate the important part played by women in our economic welfare. Indeed, a number of them meet an economic need of our society. However, many other statistics give us a quite different view especially those indicating the problems of single parents who are women. A recent report of the National Council on Welfare shows that families headed by single women are usually five times poorer than families with two parents.

One of the main obstacles facing women on the labour market is due to the fact that they are concentrated in a few sectors and occupations which could be called occupational ghettos, that is in service industries or as salespersons or administrative support staff. As a result of conditions on the labour market today, most entry-level jobs in those areas will be increasingly sought.

This being so, to maintain and improve its position in our competitive world nowadays, Canada has to count on its most valuable assets, that is on our whole human resources.

Over the past two years, the Government has taken two major initiatives to help working women. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide the House with a few details. First of all, there is the Employment Equity Act which was promulgated in June of last year. It applies to all employers under federal jurisdiction which have 100 employees or more, whether they are Crown corporations or private companies in the area of banking, transportation, and so on.

Under this legislation, all obstacles limiting or preventing the employment of women, Indians, members of visible minorities and the handicapped should be canceled and eliminated. Likewise, the employers are responsible for taking special steps to ensure that people belonging to these groups fully participate in the labour market.

The legislation does not impose any quota or stringent restriction or time schedule on employers to meet.

Our Government's objective is development and not dependency. It is making funds available to benefit Canadians and not bureaucracy.

We have also implemented the federal contract program to ensure that all contractors doing business with the federal Government are doing their share to train and preserve a representative and equitably distributed labour force. Moreover, we are trying to persuade all contractors big and small doing business with the federal Government to apply employment equity principles. They know that we are very serious about this.

Those two measures, the Employment Equity Act and the Federal Contract Program will impact on the work life of over a million Canadians. Those two initiatives offer both women and other members of target groups an opportunity to play a more important role on the labour market.

It is not enough to create openings, we must also ensure that those people can benefit.

What about the young for instance who, having dropped out of school, do not have the required skills to get a job? What about people at home and mothers who want to return to the labour market after a number of years, but whose skills no longer meet current requirements? What about women who cannot afford child care in order to get training, or who only can get part-time training?

Previously, no adequate steps were taken to effectively meet the needs of those women. Now, thanks to employment planning, we are tackling that problem and many others still.

Through employment job planning, goals have been set for participation of women and members of other minority groups, and excellent results are reported in that respect. But more importantly, in each program, women have an opportunity to acquire the skills needed to enter the labour market. Under the Canadian job strategy, subsidized training and work experiences are available for young women who have a hard time making the transition from the schooling system to the labour force, women who return to the labour force after just being homemakers for some time, women who have been unemployed for a long time, women whose jobs are threatened by technological change, women in communities who have suffered from economic hardship or long-time unemployment.

The rate of participation of women in the training and work experience project is representative of their percentage of the work force. Flexibility is one of the major assets of the job strategy. Women are encouraged to take part on a part-time or a full-time basis in various activitities and all training and other allowances have been increased to encourage more women to participate.

Moreover, allowances are now granted on the basis of the number of hours spent on those activities, which means that they can be paid to part-time participants.

In the case of women with dependents, the dependents' allowance is a fairer recognition of child care costs. As far as women in rural or isolated communities are concerned, training is more readily available for them as travel, commuting and food allowances have been increased.

Under the Canadian Job Strategy, we have come to grips with all the obstacles faced by women. For instance, the initiatives taken with respect to welfare recipients will benefit women with an urge to become full-time members of the national workforce.

We have been taking a number of steps this year to enable women to choose from a wider range of activities, in other words to help a larger number of women get non-traditional, better paid jobs. We have also been urging employers with greater insistence to promote activities that will make it possible for women to work in positions which were traditionally open to men only. The federal Government is also committed to a number of changes which will help women as their needs and the situation of the labour market change.

We must take a closer look at any question concerning the change in women's career orientation with a view to increasing their numbers in jobs where they are now under-represented. This question and the other one related to professional ghettos, that is limited opportunities for women, are two major concerns. However the Government alone cannot change individual attitudes nor remove social obstacles preventing women from gaining access to training courses or employment in fields traditionally reserved to men.

As I have already pointed out, employment growth forecasts reveal that within a few short years jobs will be concentrated in the service sector where women have always been more numerous. Many of the 10 professions which are expected to expand considerably between now and 1992 are professions traditionally occupied by women. Most of the others do not pay very well. Women who are anxious to sever all connections with professional ghettos may find these forecasts very discouraging. Essential though it may be for women to be able to venture into predominantly male professions, that is not enough. It is therefore imperative that they become skilful enough to change jobs and professions, and that the federal Government promote co-operation between academic circles and the labour market. As my colleague the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) pointed out yesterday, it is holding extensive consultations with provincial representatives in an attempt to draft a national education policy which would make it easier to prepare young Canadians, men and women alike, to join the labour force.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, we cannot act unilaterally. Even with the assistance we provide through our programs, the federal Government alone cannot change individual attitudes and eliminate obstacles which prevent women from being active in the labour force and play their proper role in society. This is a challenge to all of us.

So far, Mr. Speaker, the Government is quite satisfied with the results. Last year under employment planning programs the participation rate of women was 46 per cent, up from 37 per cent under previous programs. In excess of 197,000 women throughout Canada underwent training and participated in employment enhancement activities sponsored under Employment and Immigration Canada programs. However commendable these results may be, Mr. Speaker, the Government remains firmly committed to deal with the serious problems related to the status of women on the labour market. With that in mind, it is more than willing to examine any constructive suggestion likely to advance the cause of women, but it will not consider such vague and shallow opinions as this motion which does not lead anywhere.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by paying tribute to the people who have put the question of women on the agenda of this country. They are the people in all of our communities who are seeing to it that all the various needs and concerns of women are being considered, responded to and taken seriously by those who are in authority in those communities.

I begin by paying tribute to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women which is meeting here in Ottawa this weekend. As usual, it is bringing before Canadians a tremendous range of important subjects, some of which will disagree with what each of us in our political Parties represents. It will bring forward some policies which each of us presently holds but will attempt to present to us both the urgency and the specifics by which that urgency can be fulfilled in trying to create a measure of true equality between men and women in Canada.

It is important to stress that it is, in fact, not these national organizations that are primarily responsible for transforming the nature of political discourse at the local level, but the groups which are developing themselves, bringing women together and giving a force to their cry for change in our communities.

These groups include ones in my community such as the Immigrant Women's Centre, which works so effectively with new immigrants and refugees who enter the Windsor area. They make the case powerfully as a consequence of their detailed experience that there has to be fairness provided for those immigrant women to have equal access to training of immigrants in English or French as their male counterparts.

I also pay tribute to groups like the one in Windsor called Women Working, which has tried to bring the issue of equality in the workplace, both on the job and in training for jobs, and make it a powerful, effective force for thoughtful change throughout our community and Essex County and Windsor.

I also refer to the local day care association which has worked so hard in trying to take this issue before the people of Essex County in Windsor and demonstrate as clearly and powerfully as it can why it is necessary to make urgent changes in this area rather than continue on the path of study after study which has so marked the delay and lack of urgency with which the issue has been treated in the past.

I also refer to groups like the Women's Economic Forum in Windsor which has attempted to draw together professional women and give them a sense of solidarity as they face the very difficult day-to-day struggles which occur on the job to establish equality in promotions and social priorities throughout the community.

• (1650)

I wish to emphasize in tribute my strong regard for the Unemployed Help Centre which is headed by a very intelligent and articulate woman, Pamela Pons-Lauzon. She has been able to assist right across the country to see to it that women have at least equal access to the new job opportunities which we have been trying to create through government programs and which private businesses have also been trying to expand in the Windsor area.

To that group I would add the names of those involved in the various farm groups in our community, as well as the local of the National Farmers Union and the Essex County Federation of Agriculture, who are co-operating with me in conducting a full-scale survey across my constituency to try to identify and then to respond with urgency, concern, and sensitivity to the needs of rural women in southwestern Ontario.

I did not want to finish the debate by simply paying these strongly felt tributes to women's groups in my community. I should say that there are many others which I could add to the list. I want to deal with what I think will be an important economic challenge facing women, not just in my constituency or in the constituency of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), but in the constituencies of all Members of Parliament.

I think it is now clear that we are heading for an agreement of sorts on free trade. It is an agreement the contours of which it is very difficult to identify at this stage because of the secrecy which has surrounded the whole process. However, there are several things which can be said about the potential impact of that free trade agreement if it takes place, when it takes place, with respect to women.

In this respect I draw particularly on material which has been brought together by the National Action Committee, and especially by Marjorie Cohen who is an economist at York University. She has spent a great deal of time looking at this issue. I believe she has raised very important warning signs for the Government, and certainly for women, as they look at their reactions to this potential agreement.

Marjorie Cohen has said that the Canadian Government appears to have ignored the impact that free trade will have on the service sector and on jobs in that sector. That is of great concern to us because it is clear that if one talks about the sector of the economy within which women have often been caught, in which women have often been ghettoized, it has been the service sector in terms of communications, banking, data processing, insurance and transportation. As the National Action Committee has said, there has not been consideration for the impact of free trade on public policy with respect to this sector. Until Canadians have a clear idea of what free trade will mean for workers in such industries, it would be foolhardy to proceed with free trade in services, so says the National Action Committee.

For the two countries which are now talking about such an agreement, the United States and Canada, if this agreement does come to be an agreement that extends to services, then it will be the first agreement with respect to free trade between two countries which will have touched the service sector. That in itself raises many questions. It raises questions of specific and important concern when the service sector in one country, the United States, is very much larger, better developed and, frankly, more cost-effective in many sections of its operations, than is the case in Canada. Therefore it is likely—indeed it is more than likely, it is probable—when one takes the fact that 80 per cent of the jobs that exist in the service sector are held by women, that one will find that a great many of those jobs will be badly disrupted.

Disruption is an easy word. It is a word which sounds intellectually neutral. In fact, disruption means the loss of jobs, transfers to new employment, the necessity to face often difficult training opportunities and often training opportunities which are just not there. This job disruption will be very much the challenge which women within the service sector will have to face.

Of course, it is not just the service sector which will be involved. In the manufacturing sector, as has been indicated by the National Action Committee, women represent almost two-thirds of workers in the most vulnerable of industries, including textiles, clothing, small electrical products, sporting goods, toys and games and leather products. Women in the manufacturing sector are highly concentrated in these vulnerable industries. In fact, these industries represent about 42 per cent of all women manufacturing workers. That is why women have a great concern about what has been happening in the free trade negotiations and why they resent very greatly their lack of involvement in the decision-making processes which have been associated with free trade discussions.

For this reason I hope, even if it is at this last minute, that the Government will finally get its act together. I hope that it will draw further into the discussions which should be taking place with groups such as those that I started out talking about in my speech today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 12 of Standing Order 82, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday, at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 11, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and the honour to present to this House petitions signed by 533 constituents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Those signatures, added to the 7,353 already presented, bring the grand total to 7,886 people who are not happy with the corporate plan of Canada Post Corporation.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by people of the Province of Manitoba, including residents of the City of Winnipeg, Snow Lake, Thompson, and other communities.

In their petition, they call upon the federal Government not to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe that the proposed changes will increase drug prices to Canadian consumers and unnecessarily restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

The petitioners also believe that this attempt to change the law is yet another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, and especially those people whose health needs require the use of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all of the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, having regard to today's business, there have been discussions with the opposition House Leaders on to how we might proceed today, and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to the following motion with respect to the timing for the consideration of the resolution standing in the name of the Right Hon. Prime Minister:

> That, notwithstanding any standing or special order of the House, the House sit as follows today, Monday, May 11, 1987, for the purpose of consideration of the Government Motion, in the name of the Prime Minister, dated May 6, 1987, respecting the Meech Lake Statement of Principles by all First Ministers:
>
> —The House continue to sit, without interruption for lunch break or Private Members' Business, provided that statements by Members will be at 2 p.m. and Question Period from 2.15 to 3 p.m.
>
> —The Speaker will adjourn the House at the regular hour of daily adjournment, without debate on the adjournment, unless otherwise ordered.

• (1110)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I was informed of this proposal just before the House opened. I attempted to send a message to the Government House Leader that while we would agree to have Private Members' Hour used for this debate today, we would prefer that the House sit into the luncheon hour only for the time necessary to complete the speeches by the three Party Leaders. I am sorry I could not get that message to my hon. friend personally beforehand, but this is our position.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our Party I would certainly agree with the proposition of the Government House Leader with the small amendment of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that perhaps we sit through luncheon hour until the three Party Leaders have spoken; if there is time for a short break, take the break; and certainly waive the Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we would probably then have to draft another motion. My understanding is that there were discussions and I thought that it was clearly understood.

We can continue to have further discussions and perhaps bring forth an appropriate motion this day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) moved:

That this House endorses the Meech Lake statement of principles approved by all First Ministers, April 30, 1987 as a basis for Quebec's participation as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution, and as a basis for the establishment, in a spirit of equality and fairness, of a process for considering futher constitutional reforms.—

He said: Mr. Speaker, on May 20, 1980, in a referendum on its political future, Quebec said yes to the rest of Canada. Some seven years later at Meech Lake, the rest of Canada said yes to Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And out of this mutual affirmation of our willingness to live together came a Canadian federation stronger and more united than ever.

That is the essence of the Meech Lake Agreement.

It is about fulfilling the commitment I made on August 6, 1984, at Sept-Îles on behalf of the Party I am privileged to lead. And it is about a new vision of Canada in which, as I said on that occasion, "The Canadian federation is not a test of strength between the different governments".

It is about a country in which the provinces are active participants in national affairs.

It is about a new federalism in which, "we rebuild the bonds of confidence with the provinces," in a vital federal system that is adaptable to the legitimate aspirations of Canadians in every part of our country. It is about a country in which all regions contribute to a stronger nation. And, Mr. Speaker, it is about a country whose soul teems with inexhaustible resources. And it is about Canadians working together in a spirit of co-operation and harmony to fulfill this country's potential.

It is about our past, and about our future, joined together in a uniquely Canadian wilderness setting—Meech Lake.

[English]

One hundred and twenty years ago our forebears established on the northern half of this continent a noble experiment in federalism. Their objectives were clear in the letter of the British North America Act, namely, peace, order, and good government. What a characteristically Canadian statement that is. There is little poetry to it but a strong ring of Canadian common sense.

The articles of Confederation served the nation well, but the task of nation building did not end with Confederation. It continued with each succeeding generation; it continues to this very day, for we were born in colonialism, and only over a century and more have we achieved a full measure of sovereignty.

In Sir John A. Macdonald's lifetime the territorial integrity of the nation was assured by the building of the Great Pacific Railway and the settlement of the west.

In the First World War Canada won the right of representation at the international conference at Versaille. The price was a heavy one, paid in blood at places like Vimy Ridge that are inscribed in the history of valour.

In the Second World War the sons and daughters of Canada sailed from the shores of one of our mother countries, Great Britain, to participate in the liberation of the other, France, and then to all Europe. As long as the notion of bravery exists, the contributions of Canadians shall be remembered and honoured.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In the settlement and industrialization of our nation, in the epic struggles elsewhere of freedom against tyranny, we emerged as a fully independent state in all but name as our Constitution remained at Westminster. For more than 60 years Canadians sought unsuccessfully to reach unanimous agreement on making our Constitution a truly Canadian document.

[Translation]

Succeeding generations of Canadians have sought a more harmonious accommodation between our two principal language communities. Quebec's First Premier after Confederation, Pierre Chauveau, compared Canada to the double staircase of the Château de Chambord's.

"English and French", he said, "we climb by a double flight of stairs toward the destinies reserved for us on this continent, without knowing one another, without meeting each other, without even seeing each other except on the landing of politics."

More recently, Canadians were asking themselves how they could work towards reconciliation, how the legitimate aspirations of Quebec and the other provinces could be fulfilled within our federal framework. That brought us to the referendum of May, 1980, one of the most momentous pages in our history. From 1976 to 1980, we discussed the most fundamental questions of country in the most civilized manner, with the utmost respect for democracy and one another's opinions.

The experience was a difficult one, even painful for many, yet in the end it further awakened us to the blessings of democracy.

Soon after that, Canada repatriated her Constitution. And though it was no longer British law, deep down we all knew it would never be truly Canadian until Quebec had agreed to it. For the Constitution is more than a legal instrument; it enshrines a commitment of our hearts and minds to fundamental principles and aspirations. That's why I resolved to bring Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional family. For that to happen, there had to be changes, a new way of looking at things.

As I said at Sept-Îles: "If Quebec is weakened, then Canada is weakened. If Quebec is strong, then Canada is strong."

[English]

Yet we could not reopen the process, reopen the question, risking the consequences of another failure unless we were assured of some minimal conditions of success.

At Sept Iles I set for the Government the objective of convincing the Quebec National Assembly to give its consent to renewed federalism with honour and enthusiasm. I also stated that I would not undertake a constitutional path with ambiguity and improvisation. Once we had established the principles, we had to establish a process, one in which all partners in Confederation could feel that their interests were well served.

All provinces played an indispensable role in this regard. The Government of Quebec, led by Premier Robert Bourassa, drew up a five-point agenda based on its position paper, maîtriser l'avenir, which had been submitted to and powerfully endorsed by Quebecers in the 1985 provincial election.

• (1120)

All provinces then agreed at Edmonton last summer that this agenda represented a reasonable basis for discussion, and further agreed with our suggestion that we should settle the Quebec question first.

Ministers and officials worked diligently over the autumn and the winter. In March, I concluded that this stage of the process had gone about as far as it could go without the involvement of First Ministers and, accordingly, I invited them to Meech Lake on April 30.

[Translation]

Our task was to reconcile Quebec's distinct needs with the interests of other provinces, and with the national interest. Any agreement had to be good for Quebec, good for the other provinces, and good for Canada. And it is, Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake agreement is all of those things. It is consistent with the principles of Canadian federalism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: And it opens the door to a future in which Canadians are more united, in which we can address other concerns, such as Senate reform and fisheries, in a second round of constitutional negotiations. From a more unified Canada, I am convinced we will achieve a more prosperous Canada.

In that spirit, First Ministers came to Meech Lake on April 30. There were just 11 elected representatives in that room, Mr. Speaker, but they represented the interests of all Canadians. Each represented his own province but all, in my judgment, were motivated by the national interest. The more we discussed, the more it became apparent that we could reach an agreement in principle, an agreement that would meet the test of fairness, an agreement that would stand the test of time, an agreement that would open the door to a new federalism based on reconciliation and mutual respect. To their very great credit, the Premiers were determined that this opportunity should not slip away for they knew another like it would not soon present itself again.

[Translation]

With the positive signals Quebecers have sent us in recent years and through the open-mindedness shown by the other provinces, the distinct nature of Quebec society within our Canadian Confederation is now acknowledged.

The dream of millions of Quebecers is becoming a reality.

The accord also clearly recognizes the existence of a francophone Canada centered in but not limited to Quebec, and an anglophone Canada based in the rest of the country, but also present in Quebec. Our linguistic minorities, wherever they live, can therefore count on the solemn commitment of the Parliament of Canada and every provincial legislature.

At the same time, federal-provincial relations will acquire a new degree of flexibility, making it possible to defuse pointless tensions and turn our Constitution into an inspiring, creative force.

In the area of immigration, federal-provincial agreements can be drawn up with provinces that ask for one. Once signed, they will be fully protected by the Constitution. These agreements should address the specific needs of the provinces that sign them, but the federal Government will remain ultimately responsible for setting national standards and objectives.

We have agreed to entrench the Supreme Court in the Constitution, which I believe Members will agree is appropriate, especially given the pre-eminent role of the High Court in interpreting the Charter.

The current legal requirement that three of the nine justices of the Supreme Court come from Quebec will also be entrenched in the Constitution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And a joint procedure for nominating justices will ensure that they are acceptable both to the province involved and the federal Government, which I believe Members will agree conforms with the true spirit of federalism.

[English]

We agreed that reasonable compensation would be made available to provinces that do not participate in future national shared cost programs, provided they operate a provincial program or initiative compatible with national objectives.

Medicare could very much have been created under this arrangement. The 10 provincial medical programs today vary in a number of respects related to financing of the range of services, but they all meet the national objectives of providing high quality health care to Canadians within a framework of portability, universality and accessibility.

There is every reason to believe that child care can be achieved through the new spending power provision. As Premier Peterson noted in his Canadian Club address last week, this provision in no way inhibits the federal Government from introducing new national programs. The Parliament and the Government of Canada retain the right to act swiftly and strongly in the national interest on behalf of Canadians. That is our responsibility. That is our duty. That is precisely what we have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Which is not to say, Mr. Speaker, that there will not be discussions and dialogue, but this is very much in keeping with the true spirit of federalism.

We reinforced the equality of the provinces by placing all national institutions under the unanimity rule. Unanimity was achieved on unemployment insurance in 1940, old age pensions in 1951, supplementary benefits in 1964 and the Meech Lake Agreement in 1987. So it is difficult, very difficult, to sustain the thesis that unanimity would be a straightjacket.

Consider what the absence of unanimity—the absence of Quebec from the constitutional accord, for example—would mean for Canada if allowed to extend over years and then decades. Consider what the absence of Quebec from the Canadian confederation over decades would mean. Consider the corrosive and debilitating implications of that as one weighs the value of the strengthened unity that comes from the Meech Lake Accord.

As Eugene Forsey, a firm advocate of a strong federal Government and a noted constitutional authority has stated:

> If we want to get results and get Quebec and the other provinces alike satisfied, we have to pay a certain price. And, on the whole, it looks to me that the price that would be paid is not an unreasonable one.

There will be an annual First Ministers' Conference on the economy and other questions that arise in the management of a federation, a proposal already introduced and acted upon by this Government. There will be an annual First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution which will pursue Senate reform, roles and responsibilities in the fishery and other important questions.

Until Senate reform is achieved, there will be a joint federal-provincial procedure for new appointments. This should be taken as a sign of good faith on our part. Make no mistake about it, we are intent on Senate reform, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in Alberta last week, we will be placing a specific proposal for Senate reform on the table at the First Ministers' Conference next year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There remains the important unfinished business of achieving a constitutional amendment on aboriginal self-government. Four First Minister's Conferences have been held in this matter. I have participated actively in two. I understand the challenge and the importance. I know this Parliament has contributed mightily in trying to achieve that vital accord that will bring justice to our native peoples. Regrettably, a consensus has eluded Canadians each time. I say to the aboriginal leadership and to the provinces, the Government of Canada remains prepared to work with you toward this objective, but, as with the Quebec issue, the conditions must be conducive to success for we dare not risk failure another time.

• (1130)

Officials have been working on a draft to be approved by the premiers at our next meeting. I have invited the Premiers to meet here during the first week of June. Assuming a formal agreement is reached, we will then table the appropriate resolution in Parliament at the earliest subsequent opportunity. I would hope that the provinces would do the same. Members of the House of Commons will then have ample opportunity to join in the debate on the resolution.

The Meech Lake Agreement represents a conscious act of nation building by all First Ministers, requiring generosity of spirit and a deep understanding on all sides. By recognizing the distinctiveness Quebec brings to Canada, we affirm our identity as a nation and strengthen our sovereignty as a people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: By adopting new constitutional and institutional arrangements, we will also provide an opportunity for more harmonious relations between the federal and the provincial Governments.

[Translation]

By civilizing the use of the spending power, clarifying roles and responsibilities in immigration, which is an area of joint jurisdiction, and constitutionalizing First Ministers' Conferences, we create opportunities for concerted government action from which all Canadians will benefit.

Joint procedures for Supreme Court and Senate appointments will reinforce the legitimacy of federal institutions.

[English]

I have been heartened by the response of ordinary Canadians to the Meech Lake Accord. People on the street, school children, farmers in the fields of Saskatchewan, strongly support this statement of national unity. That is what this is all about, nation building.

I pay tribute to the First Ministers whose leadership and resolve have strengthened our federation and enriched our citizenship. From every region of Canada, from all political Parties, the First Ministers came to Meech Lake and theirs were the voices of confidence and unity and of belief in the greatness of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Let no one say our national unity is undermined by respecting differences and incorporating them in a common entity in the custody of a central authority.

It would be astounding if the nation that succeeded in resisting disunity felt more threatened by unity.

Together we ventured out on a long and difficult road in search of our political indentity and constitutional sovereignty. Yet we never lost faith in ourselves, we never denied our tradition of tolerance and we never doubted that, somewhere at the end of our quest for democratic dialogue, a fraternal and honourable solution awaited us.

Success is now within our grasp.

I appeal to the civic spirit of every Member of this House so that we may put aside Party politics at this great moment in our history, this hour of strength drawn from our rediscovered solidarity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is what our fellow-citizens expect from us, from one end of this country to another in a great spirit of hope. We will do honour to ourselves not to disappoint them.

[English]

From Macdonald to Laurier, from King to Diefenbaker, from Meighen to Pearson, from Bennett to St. Laurent to Trudeau, the overriding objective of all Canadian Prime Ministers has been a strong and a united Canada. The Meech Lake Agreement contributes to that unity and is a statement as well of a vision of Canada, a vision that is rooted in our love of this country, our pride in its people, our respect for its traditions, our joy at its promise. But that promise shall be realized only in unity, only in the unity that comes from English and French Canadians, east and west, new Canadians and old, together, finally together in a strong and united Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are embarking today upon what is one of the most important discussions or debates any nation can face, the revision of our Constitution. Canadians are familiar with constitutional discussions and with constitutional differences. We have been talking about it in earnest for at least two decades and this is why I welcome the opportunity to restate my views once again this morning.

When the Constitution was patriated in 1982, the agreement contained one tragic flaw. In our attempt to break away from our colonial past, one of our most important and founding provinces was missing in that agreement, Quebec.

[Translation]

Since patriation, Quebec's absence has been deeply felt by all parties, and we have focused all our efforts on finding the fairest and most equitable way to complete this unfinished task.

I am proud to lead a Party that has always been in the forefront of constitutional thinking and debate.

Last year, I was the first to present a set of recommendations for enabling Quebecers to sign the Canadian Constitution with pride and dignity. These proposals were enthusiastically received by the Government of Quebec.

We were thus able to raise this debate above partisan considerations and to create a genuine climate of mutual understanding and generosity, the impact of which has surely contributed to the success of the meeting at Meech Lake.

[English]

I would like at this time to recognize and pay tribute to my caucus and my Party for pursuing this issue with vigour and commitment. Following the election of the Bourassa Government in Quebec, there was a new spirit of co-operation and a political will to participate fully in our confederation. I am very pleased that that spirit has been given some substance in the agreement we are discussing today. I know from my own participation in the Victoria conference in 1971 that the process of constitutional reform is long and difficult.

• (1140)

I also must pause and congratulate all the First Ministers on reaching an agreement on a process which may in fact see Quebec brought into the constitutional agreement.

[Translation]

The question of Quebec's place in the Canadian federation lies at the very the heart of our existence as a nation. The political history buffs among us are aware that ever since the end of the 18th century, attempts have been made to provide for a political structure that would allow Quebecers then referred to as "Canadiens", to protect their rights and safeguard their identity.

The beginnings of parliamentary democracy in our country were difficult, both in Upper and Lower Canada. The 1837 rebellions and the morass in which the Government of Union found itself led the British authorities to conclude that it was utopian to consider imposing or forcing on Canada a uniform system of government.

Clearly, what was needed was a political framework that would leave room for developing views and maintaining identities, while involving all participants in the building and development of a great nation.

Despite the hope that the fears of the past would prove to be unfounded, subsequent events soon showed Quebecers that when the majority spoke, Quebec's appeals could meet a wall of indifference. The Riel affair, the Manitoba schools question, Regulation 17 in Ontario, conscription during the two World Wars and the battles for provincial autonomy are some of the events in this century that were instrumental in convincing Lester B. Pearson, as Prime Minister of Canada, to set up the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. The Laurendeau-Dunton Commission sent out a clear and unmistakable signal: the country would fall apart if there was no thorough reform.

Many of these tensions were of course centred in Quebec, but they existed elsewhere in Canada since the very beginning: regional tensions, mostly in the west but also in the north and the Maritimes, which often complained they were not equal partners.

[English]

The Government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau heard the alarm signal. In Victoria in 1971 we tabled a proposal which remains a model and inspiration for anyone looking for a definition of a political consensus in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of being Minister of Justice at the time. The feeling was one of euphoria. The Official Languages Act had just been passed by the Parliament of Canada. The 10 provinces had given their agreement in principle to a formula that recognized the linguistic duality of this country: bilingualism in Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and even Newfoundland. The amending formula gave veto rights to Quebec and to each of this country's regions.

Despite this very considerable progress, the Government of Quebec finally withdrew its agreement under increasing pressure from public opinion in that province. It was clear that feelings were running so high they could no longer be ignored.

The Parti Québécois rode the waves which were to carry Quebec to its own destiny after severing its links with the rest of the country. Indeed, concerted efforts were made throughout this decade to revamp our institutions and adjust Canada's orientations to the heartfelt aspirations of Quebecers. But the referendum process had already been launched and nothing would be possible until such time as Quebecers would be given an opportunity to have their say about their Canadian partnership.

The majority of Quebecers said yes to Canada, and it is because they sent this signal that the reform process began through the Constitution Act of 1982. The statement of principles which is now on the table of the House raises the fundamental question about the kind of country, the kind of Canada in which we want to live. The question is two-fold. What guarantees of cultural security are offered to Quebec? What is the role of the Canadian and provincial Governments with respect to the linguistic duality of our country?

In other words, what common values do Canadians share, what institutions will interpret them?

Some people believe that Quebec must be a province like the others, for any concession on anything whatsoever opens the door to separatism. They see Canada as a solid block, unable to reflect various aspirations yet party to the same principles of freedom and democracy.

Quebec seeks certain guarantees concerning its distinctive character, its population growth, its presence within federal institutions, its freedom to use as it sees fit its legislative powers as described in the Act of 1867 and, especially, its participation in the Canadian whole.

[English]

Quebecers do not want to lock themselves into a ghetto. History has demonstrated that they are an essential part of the Canadian identity. They represent a unique fact in Canadian life.

[Translation]

History indicates as well that Canada cannot exist without Quebec and that Quebecers must be an integral part of the life and institutions of Canada.

Nor is the Canadian Government's role restricted to that of a passive observer, for it rightfully assumes responsibility for ensuring the presence and expansion of the French fact throughout the country and elsewhere in the world.

It must constantly define this responsibility and adjust it to new conditions and more exacting challenges. Such is the major outline of today's debate on the agreement in principle hammered out at Meech Lake.

Mr. Speaker, the motion under consideration today is premature because we have yet to see the final legal text of the Meech Lake agreement. Even so we take a positive and constructive approach towards any constitutional proposition aimed at making Quebecers full-fledged partners in the Confederation of Canada. Mr. Speaker, this is why we endorse this motion.

[English]

I believe that the motion before us, Your Honour, is somewhat premature since we have yet to see any final wording or precise text. However, we in this Party intend to respond constructively and positively to any constitutional proposal which will make Quebec a full partner in our Confederation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1150)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is why we support this motion. However, in doing so, I want to make it perfectly clear that we do not interpret this motion as a blind endorsement of the statement of principles agreed upon at Meech Lake. We have serious concerns about some aspects of that statement and will certainly have suggestions for improvements, now and when we see the final text.

We view this motion as seeking our agreement to continue, as the motion puts it, a process to bring Quebec into the Constitution. We certainly do and will support any efforts to that effect. It is indeed a good day for Canada and for Quebec. I have always believed that it was essential to the future of this country that Quebec be a major and leading partner in our Confederation and a full-fledged participant in its evolution. I personally support the motion because Quebec's participation will be necessary for any future evolution of the country.

I believe that the constructive work done by my Party contributed substantially to creating the favourable atmosphere in Quebec and throughout the country for this discussion. We have steadfastly refrained from politicizing this question in the House of Commons or across Canada. We have purposely avoided embarrassing the Government on this issue during the course of the negotiations. We knew that the provincial Premiers and the representatives of the Government of Canada were studying the views set forth by Quebec and that the interests of the country take precedence over any partisan views.

The key words in this motion, Mr. Speaker, are that this House accept the statement of principles tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last week "as a basis" for further discussion. In the absence of anything else, we believe that the statement of principles is as good a place to start as any.

At the same time, I view this as a general framework for discussion, not the final solution. As Premier Pawley stated, we must all ensure that the legal wording does not distort either the intentions of the Meech Lake Accord, or indeed the intentions of the Constitution itself.

I also want to emphasize that we will insist upon full committee hearings of the final text which will be produced by the Government of Canada, and a full debate in this House when we see the final results, preferably before the issue goes to the Premiers. Parliament has a right to see this text in final form before it is again negotiated with the Premiers. This is too important an issue for a one-day debate. This is the Constitution of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Of course Hon. Members recall that in 1981 the Trudeau Goverment tabled in this House the final text of the constitutional resolution and this was the topic of a debate. But before receiving the approval of the House the text was analyzed, scrutinized and, let us admit it, improved as a result of the work of a joint committee of the House and of the Senate which sat to give it exceptionally serious consideration over a number of weeks. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the House sees fit to strike a parliamentary committee to review, analyze and improve all its legislation, surely we ought to take as serious an approach towards amendments to the basic law of the land, the Constitution.

[English]

To do less in this case would be to abdicate our responsibilities as legislators. It is critical that what we do for ordinary Bills in this House, that it, clause by clause review in committee, we should certainly do for the most fundamental law in our country, the Constitution of Canada.

We as legislators must be as precise as possible in our language. We must give the courts clear guidance and an indication as to how we want our Constitution interpreted, what principles we want them to adhere to when adjudicating individual cases. We do not want the Supreme Court of Canada to act as a legislator. That is our role. That is why I believe we need clear and precise language in our Constitution. That is why I believe Parliament has a right and a duty to inspect that language at an early opportunity. We must ensure that, as far as is humanly possible, we look at each provision and try to predict the consequences of them.

On balance, what we see in this statement is positive both for Canada and for Quebec. However, it can remain positive only if its spirit and intent are accurately translated into legal terms.

I believe that the purpose of this debate today—which we welcome—will be to provide to the drafters our advice and guidance on what should or should not be in the final resolution. Our Constitution is the foundation on which our federation spells out how certain powers and obligations are shared, which are exclusive to either level of jurisdiction and, in the case of the Charter, which powers are beyond the reach of either level of Government. Constitutional change is not something which should be done in haste, in a single day before the national forum. It is not something which should be entered into without taking full account of all the implications.

With the provision to constitutionalize two yearly meetings of First Ministers, one on the Constitution and one on the economy, are we not creating yet another level of government, one that meets behind closed doors away from the public eye to change the course of Canada without the prior authority, approval, or even inspection of Parliament?

Will this mean, for example, that we will have abandoned a regional role for the Senate, a body which we believe should be elected? We believe an elected Senate could serve the role of representing the regions on an ongoing basis in an open and public manner. We must be fully aware of the choice we are making and what that choice means to the future of our country. Our role, Mr. Speaker, in this House, in the absence of the precise language which the First Ministers may have in mind, is to look at each statement of principle and try to interpret the impact of these statements and to make improvements where possible.

We are talking about a process. We are asking the Government to give us the thinking behind some of these provisions. We need greater detail than we have heard so far. What are some of the ramifications of these provisions? Let us begin at the beginning of the statement of principles.

[Translation]

First, the distinct society. Mr. Speaker, since our convention last November, more than 90 per cent of the Liberal delegates have acknowledged the distinct character of Quebec, with its language, its culture, its specific features such as the use of the Civil Code, and even to a certain extent, its humour, its way of life, is different from other Canadian provinces. We think that is one aspect of the rich heritage left to us by the founding fathers of our great country.

We described, with some inspiration I believe, Quebec as the major, but not exclusive, source of the French language and culture in Canada, for it is the major source of energy, of cultural and linguistic inspiration for our French speaking community.

However, Mr. Speaker, we have also taken great care to recognize in our resolution all the distinctive features of our diversified society, including first the linguistic duality of our country which we hope will not only be maintained, but also reinforced in every region of Canada.

We should add to that—and I am disappointed that the Meech Lake draft agreement does not—the multicultural character of our society, and in particular the respect of the various origins and cultures as well as the various regional specificities which all combine to make the Canadian society.

We also suggested that the contribution of native people in Canada should be included in the opening section of our constitution, and I can only regret the fact that native people were ignored in the Meech Lake statement drafted by the Premiers and the Prime Minister.

We therefore want, Mr. Speaker, to repeat that we recognize the distinct character of Quebec, as well as of all the dynamic entities of our society.

• (1200)

[English]

Our Party has overwhelmingly endorsed the concept of a distinct character for Quebec recognized in our Constitution and we will continue to support that concept. In our November resolution we outlined our firm belief that Quebec is the principal but not the exclusive source of French language and culture in Canada. However, we took great care in recognizing not only the linguistic duality of our country, but also the multicultural nature of our society and the contribution of our aboriginal peoples. We believe this Accord could be greatly improved with the inclusion of both these elements.

We also need to know more precisely what the two phrases "distinct identity" and "distinct society" mean. Our proposal in November was that this reference would appear in the preamble to the Constitution. However, Senator Lowell Murray has stated that those phrases will appear in the body of the Constitution. In my view, that has the potential to change the interpretation of that particular section a great deal. We look forward to hearing the Government's interpretation of that situation.

Already, the Government of Quebec has stated that it will examine the possibility of proposing that the phrasing be strengthened. Others have suggested that it can lead to a constitutional interpretation that language rights of francophone minorities outside Quebec may not be sufficiently protected. It is for these reasons that we believe the language must be clear and precise.

Let me turn to immigration. Again, in our November proposal, we supported the right of Quebec to participate in the selection of immigrants as set out in the Cullen—Couture Agreement. The reason being that we believe Quebec, more than the other provinces, has a special interest in protecting its linguistic character.

Our reading of the Constitution Act of 1982 is that the composition of the Supreme Court, that is, its size and the requirement that three of the nine judges be from Quebec, is already entrenched in the Constitution and can only be changed with the unanimous consent of the provinces. We therefore have no objection to spelling it out in more detail.

I have always believed that appointments to the court should be made after real consultation with national and provincial bar associations and, in the case of the Supreme Court of Canada, the provincial courts. I sincerely hope that the entrenchment of provincial consultation will enhance that process.

With regard to the spending power, the Government is introducing a new concept. It would enshrine in the Constitution the right of every province to reasonable compensation for not participating in a national cost-shared program in a provincial area, provided that the province has its own program which is compatible with national objectives.

Also, the statement of principles now provides that provinces will be reasonably compensated for opting out of any constitutional amendment affecting provincial jurisdiction, not just in areas of education or other cultural matters as is now the case under the Constitution Act of 1982.

We are very concerned that this dilution of the federal spending power could limit the ability of any future Canadian Government to initiate a national program on matters which generally fall within provincial jurisdiction.

We are deeply concerned, despite what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said this morning, that a medicare program might well have been impossible under the arrangement now contemplated. John Robarts, as the Premier of Ontario, was against that program, and under this provision he would have been able to block a national medicare system. We are concerned that the national child care program might now be rendered impossible, as well as a guaranteed annual income. These are priorities for our Party.

Also, we are now assured by the Prime Minister that this Parliament will decide what is meant by a "national objective", but I think it is important that we understand how that process will come about. Will it be a parliamentary process or will it be left to the courts, with the Supreme Court of Canada being the final adjudicator? I suggest that the wording of this section needs to be very clear.

I will now deal with the amending formula. I am troubled by the rigidity in the new arrangement in terms of the unanimity required under the proposed amending process affecting federal institutions. We still believe that the 1971 Victoria formula is the best one, because it offers the necessary flexibility to face changing situations, while ensuring that regional interests and those of Quebec are fully protected.

By reverting to the unanimity rule on changes in the Senate and the addition of new provinces, are we not in effect moving backward rather than forward and ruling out any changes in those areas?

I think we are entitled to ask in the House whether we will ever have Senate reform in practical terms under these provisions. When I asked the Prime Minister last Monday if this provision meant that an elected Senate would now be impossible, he said, as reported at page 5684 of Hansard:

> Not unless you want to make the assumption that the First Ministers are incapable of coming together in good faith to resolve matters of this kind.

I submit that the decades of constitutional impasse that we experienced in this country under that unanimity rule is precisely what we may experience now. We did not then have a workable amending formula. Constitutional reform was impeded because we had an implied unanimity rule. We should be seriously concerned that this particular change will move us backward to that situation prior to 1982.

The Prime Minister has conceded Senate appointments to the provinces until there is Senate reform, but there is no definition of what Senate reform might be. I suspect that some provincial Governments, having gained the power to appoint their own Senators and having guaranteed themselves yearly constitutional meetings with the Prime Minister, will be a lot less likely to move toward an elected Senate.

I am also concerned with the unanimity requirement for the admission of new provinces. While I agree that provinces should indeed have something to say about the admission of new ones, this rule did not apply to current provinces brought in after Confederation, the most recent being the Province of Newfoundland. Therefore, I believe an exception should be made in the case of Yukon and Northwest Territories and they should be governed by the current formula, seven provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population.

I am also very disappointed that the First Ministers did not seize the opportunity to recommit themselves to inserting the inherent rights of our aboriginal peoples into the Constitution. As I said in the House prior to the meeting of First Ministers, and as indicated in our November amendment, we believe that the rights of our aboriginal peoples should be recognized in our Constitution.

Why did the First Ministers also not pursue the inclusion of a recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society? In particular, we must give due recognition to the many origins, creeds, cultures and different regional identities which shape our society. I suggest to the Prime Minister that we now have a unique opportunity to improve greatly and strengthen our Charter of Rights and Freedoms in two particular areas, as outlined in our resolution in November.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we regret the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada did not take advantage of the favourable climate of the Meech Lake meeting to improve the scope of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We believe that he might have asked the provinces to grant official linguistic minorities the control and management of their publicly funded teaching institutions and to remove from the Charter, from the Constitution, the words "where the number so warrants" used in Section 23.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We would also like to take advantage of this opportunity to delete from Section 33 of our Constitution the word "notwithstanding" in order to give every Canadian man and woman throughout the country equal rights which can never be tampered with by any other level of government.

[English]

I would like to remind the House that under the terms of Section 33, the Legislatures in this country, including this Parliament, may limit, if they so choose, freedom of conscience and religion, of thought, belief, opinion, the press, peaceful assembly, association; and restrict the right to life, liberty and the security of the person; deny the right not to be arbitrarily arrested; waive due process of law; waive the right not to be subjected to cruel and unusual punishment and deny equal protection from discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability.

I am sure most Hon. Members would like to see that provision removed, and I urge the Government to make its removal and the changes to Section 23 that I have just mentioned part of the current discussion with the provinces and with Parliament.

I repeat that I believe we have a historic opportunity to bring Quebec into our Constitution. We should take this opportunity to demonstrate to the people of Quebec that we want them in and we want them to play a significant and full partnership role in a better and more progressive Canada. It is what we all want in this country and what we have all been working for in this Parliament.

As I said at our November convention, Quebec on two recent occasions said yes to Canada. Now is an opportunity for this country and the House of Commons to say yes to Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

[Editor's note: Interruption from the Gallery.]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, further to my submission this morning, I think perhaps you will now find unanimous agreement of the House to the following motion with respect to the conduct of today's business:

That, notwithstanding any standing or special order of the House, the House sit as follows today, Monday, May 11, 1987, for the purpose of consideration of the Government motion, in the name of the Prime Minister, dated May 6, 1987, respecting the Meech Lake statement of principles by all First Ministers:

—The House continue to sit on this debate through the time normally provided for Private Members' Business, and that the Speaker adjourn the House at the regular hour of daily adjournment, without debate on the adjournment, unless otherwise ordered.

The motion is presented with a proviso that if the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) extends his speech beyond the normal lunch hour—

Mr. Broadbent: I think we are safe.

Mr. Mazankowski: —he tells me we are safe—he would be given sufficient time to complete his remarks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that this motion responds to comments I made earlier that we will adjourn for lunch at the usual time, unless time during the lunch hour is needed to complete the speech of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), and that the debate will continue through Private Members' Hour and then the House will adjourn, we are ready to agree to this motion.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we also agree. I do not think the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) will speak beyond one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion and I take it there is unanimous consent. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the historic meeting at Meech Lake with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Premiers of all the other provinces, produced what can only be described as a remarkable document. I had the opportunity on that occasion, on behalf of my colleagues, to congratulate the Prime Minister and the Premiers for reaching an agreement, an agreement achieved by all of Canada's political parties representing all the regions of our country, and at this time obtaining the signature of the Province of Quebec, which is something about which all Canadians should rejoice.

I made that statement at that time and I repeated it again to the Prime Minister. I added then on behalf of my colleagues simply the words, which I repeat, that we, of course, want to see the final wording —and the Prime Minister understands that—on some important clauses. However, the purpose, the general principles of what has been achieved, is something which should be endorsed by all Canadians in all regions of our land.

Today, rather than make a celebratory speech at this point, because I hope there will be another occasion before long when we have the final document before us, I have chosen to address a different kind of framework this morning.

I have chosen to try to lay out what I think would be the appropriate framework in which the House should put itself in assesssing a constitutional change and what that will mean or can mean for a nation, and then come quite specifically to some of the concessions in the document we have before us and raise certain areas of problematic concern with I hope will be addressed in a quite persuasive way by those who are now working on the final document.

Free societies are not those which seek unanimity. It is quite the contrary. Free societies are those which institutionalize conflicting opinion, reason and desire. Well functioning free societies are those in which these institutions, once established, contribute to a greater sense of harmony not merely for years but for decades and, indeed, for generations.

[Translation]

The opposing forces out of which harmony may result, in a country like ours, can unite to lay the foundation for durable harmony or they can do the exact opposite. They may succeed in creating no more than a temporary peace, a peace sought perhaps with a great deal of conviction but nevertheless, a peace that raises false hopes.

I believe that here in Canada, we must pay particular attention to this moment in our country's history, which we could call Phase II of the constitutional negotiations of the eighties.

I say this because I believe the Canadian people and our major political groups are all in favour of constitutional peace, which represents a tremendous opportunity for us in the short term. However, there is also a long-term risk involved for this country if we are not extremely careful. On the positive side, the fact is that the vast majority of the people of Quebec and those outside Quebec want the province to participate fully in the Canadian Constitution and to pursue its major role in shaping our national destiny. All the other provinces signed the Constitutional Accord in 1982. Only Quebec was excluded. We all know this situation is undesirable and that it must cease.

During the Referendum, Quebecers said yes to Canada. We now have a responsibility, here in the House of Commons and in all the provinces, to say yes to Quebec. That is the reality today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we all know that the fundamental objective of the Meech Lake meeting was to develop a set of proposals that would satisfy Quebec's aspirations. However, these same proposals had to be acceptable to the other provinces, which have their own claims, and consistent with the need for the federal Government to maintain its power to ensure leadership in its quest for the unification of this country, not only in obtaining an agreement, but in meeting future responsibilities.

Unless I am sadly mistaken, I feel that virtually all political forces and Parties which thoroughly believe in a federal Canada share the same aspirations as the Canadian people. They are anxious for an agreement, as demonstrated at the Meech Lake meeting and here in the House of Commons the very next day.

All the political Parties representing the various Canadian regions have expressed the hope that once properly analyzed, the Meech Lake Agreement will satisfy the requirements of Canada, those of Quebec and those of all other provinces.

• (1220)

[English]

I said a week ago, Mr. Speaker, that my initial response to the document was positive, and it seems that the Meech Lake Agreement does indeed provide the requisite opening to the Province of Quebec. It does meet the concerns of other provinces, and it seems it does indeed maintain a strong unifying role for the federal Government.

In the final analysis, much depends upon the final wording of the text. The present wording, in certain key respects, I say frankly to the Prime Minister—and I suspect that he is aware of it and, as I understand it, many of the provincial Premiers are aware of it—in a number of particular sections, leaves much to be desired.

Today I want to talk about the wording used in two of the most important sections of the Agreement, the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society and the provision on the federal spending authority.

[Translation]

This is a happy moment in our history as we are about to recognize officially the unique character of Quebec society.

I am happy that the three federal political Parties have at last recognized this uniqueness one way or another.

The fact that the language and culture of most Quebecers are French not only enriches the life of that province, but represents a common wealth which all Canadian men and women may share. It is time for this uniqueness to be enshrined in the Canadian Constitution.

It is also important, however, that the vocabulary used be as precise as possible. Every time we add new elements to our Constitution, we are giving our courts a more active role to play.

In all fairness to our judges and the future generations of Canadians, we must give our courts the clearest direction possible. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, they would have to create everything from scratch, and I do believe that the fundamental creative role in a democratic society should be played not by judges, but by politicians.

[English]

I come now to a particular case in point. Paragraph (1)(b) of the Accord notes, and I quote:

—that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

In Clause (3) it stipulates that "the legislature and Government of Quebec" have a role to "preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in Paragraph (1)(b)".

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that nowhere in Paragraph (1)(b) is a definition of "distinct society" to be found. There is simply the assertion that Quebec "constitutes . . . a distinct society".

Surely those advocating the idea of distinctness had in mind the fact of the French-speaking majority and English-speaking minority in that province. Certainly, it is the view of my Party that the distinctness, the uniqueness, if you like, of the Province of Quebec is to be found in the fact that it is the only province in Canada in which the language and the culture of the majority is French, with the minority being English.

However, we differ, it seems to me, on other aspects of the Constitution. All three Parties in this House have now accepted, and accepted positively, this uniqueness, this specific quality of the Province of Quebec.

If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me important that this be spelled out in the document we have before us. I believe it should be set out in Paragraph (1)(b) as part of the definition of the distinct character of the Province of Quebec.

I say this because it is essential that we send to the judges who will be asked to rule on the meaning of Clause (3) some message as to the meaning we had in mind.

If we do not do this, it seems to me to be entirely open to the judges to give paragraph (1) (b) almost any meaning they like. They may or may not refer back to paragraph (1) (a) for guidance, paragraph (1) (a) being that portion of the Accord which describes the linguistic majority being French in Quebec, with the minority being English speaking, and vice versa outside of the Province of Quebec.

Unless we provide some very specific definition with reference to the linguistic groups, those making judgments on the operative clause, Clause (3), will have no basis upon which to reach a decision about the meaning of the distinctiveness of Quebec, in respect of which a mandate is given to the Legislature of Quebec.

If we do not pin it down, the judges may well seize upon any particular definition they wish as to what the uniqueness and distinctiveness of Quebec is all about.

I do not want to be glib. The point is of fundamental importance in terms of constitutional law. We in this House do not want to leave open to the courts the opportunity to go burrowing about, only to find out that, in looking at a perhaps arcane aspect of the history of Quebec, it is some other consideration which they seize upon in giving definition to "distinctiveness" or "uniqueness". Therefore, I think we are obliged, in terms of giving positive force to what we all want to achieve—

[Translation]

Most francophones living in Quebec and most other Canadians living in other provinces accept the fact that this notion should be clearly defined in our Constitution.

[English]

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that clarification would be most usefully made in paragraph (1)(b), so that when a decision is rendered on Clause (3), the operative clause, the judges will at least have a bench-mark in assessing what we intended in saying that Quebec's legislature and Government have the authority to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec.

It is for this reason I believe that the words "in that it is the only province with a French-speaking majority and an English-speaking minority", or words conveying the same idea should be added to the end of paragraph 1(b), so that the clause would then read:

> (b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society in that it is the only province with a French-speaking majority and an English-speaking minority.

I wish to stress, Mr. Speaker, that while they are specific words, what is important to me is not necessarily those specific words; what is important is that the idea contained therein be attached to Clause 1(b) so that the judges—not just the judges who are living with us now, but the judges in generations to come—will have a clear understanding of what we had in mind when we talked about the distinctiveness of the Province of Quebec.

I now turn to the federal spending power section of the Agreement. The wording of this section was intended to ensure the right of the Parliament of Canada to innovate, with its spending authority, new areas of policy with national programs thought to be of advantage to the whole country.

This has happened in the past, as we know very well, with medicare and hospitalization. At the same time, it is thought by modern federalists to be desirable, both from a constitutional distribution of powers point of view and from a recognition of the different circumstances in the different regions of our country, to allow, and indeed to encourage, provincial latitude in building such national programs.

• (1230)

Such can be done. That is, we can have effective programs nation-wide and at the same time have provincial decentralization. What is key is that the programs so established with regional variation are equivalent in their essential elements. If this is what the phrase "compatible with national objectives" means, then that is good and the people who got together at Meech Lake did a fine job.

However, once again it seems to me that the phrase used is subject to a judicial interpretation which could see a provincial program that is "compatible" with one established by the Parliament of Canada but falls short in a number of its details of what was intended by the Parliament of Canada.

If a program with five, six, or seven elements established by the Parliament of Canada, as I see it, is confronted with a province which wants to opt out and still receive compensatory financial assistance, it could provide a program with perhaps two or three elements only and, as we normally use the word, it could be compatible with the national program.

In replying to questions in the House of Commons last week, however, the Prime Minister—and I am pleased to note it—was as unequivocally clear as he was today when he spoke in affirming that it was the Parliament of Canada which would decide what were the national objectives that a province needed to be compatible with and to qualify for compensatory funding for its own program. Last week in the House the Prime Minister said: "with regard to who would set the national objectives, the Parliament of Canada". Again the Prime Minister said that a provincial program had to be "compatible with the national objectives set forth by this House".

I am pleased to see the Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) nodding affirmation and support of the idea once again today.

It is very important for today's Prime Minister to say this about today's agreement. However, I also believe—and I am sure the Prime Minister will not misunderstand—that it is much more important for the same idea to be found in wording in a Constitution which will hopefully be around long after we have long since departed this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In short, it is more important for the future that this principle be included in the Constitution. Therefore, I think the following wording: "as established by the Parliament of Canada", which are the Prime Minister's own words, or their equivalent, should be added at the end of the existing wording in the clause. However, if the whole clause is now being rewritten to achieve this intent, we in this Party will of course find that acceptable.

Once again, the precise wording is not what my colleagues and I are after here. We are in pursuit of clear wording which sends a clear constitutional message to Canadians today and to future generations of Canadians.

I took a little time on two important clauses in the resolution, because I thought at this stage in the proceedings, before we are confronted with a final document, it indeed is important for all participants in the process, including the Government of Canada, the provinces, and the opposition Parties, to make some constructive suggestions, and to put it very bluntly, including wording, at a time when it is perhaps a matter of just a few days before final documents can be circulated and discussed by the Premiers.

Obviously I want to say a few words about some other sections of this important document. I think the proposals on immigration are consistent with what has been done before in the Province of Quebec. It is now proposed to embed that in the Constitution, extending a similar right and principle to the other regions. It is a very constructive move.

Similarly, on the question of the Supreme Court, we in this Party believe that in a federal state there is a legitimate role to be played in the proposing of judges who will ultimately make decisions in interpreting the nature of the Constitution. We will have more things to say about that particular provision, but we certainly think that it is a move in the right direction.

On the question of other meetings, I think on the whole that the suggestion that the Prime Minister meet with the Premiers to talk about the fishery, Senate reform, and the economy are all important steps—it goes without saying. I simply want to add what I said the day after the Meech Lake Accord was reached. All Parties were represented there. I do not know what led to it or what factors were taken into consideration. I simply find it an unfortunate result that the people who came together with such seriousness of purpose, and seemed to achieve so much, left out the scheduling of, or specifically putting in the agreement for, meetings to deal with the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

To say the least, those of us who come from European ancestry or from many other parts of the world owe a great debt to the original people of the country which we now inhabit. I hope, at the next meeting to discuss the final wording of the document, that the Prime Minister and the Premiers will rethink the question of our obligation to the aboriginal peoples and will build into the agreement continuing meetings to discuss various issues—in particular the question of aboriginal self-government and the issue of comprehensive claims—with the aboriginal peoples until an agreement of some kind is reached.

I also want to say something on the question of the Northwest Territories and Yukon on which I had occasion to comment just after the Agreement. I want to say in the House what I said at that time. I think it regrettable that the Premiers and the Government of Canada have now decided to impose conditions on that part of Canada, our North, which were not applied to the other regions of Canada before they became provinces. With a little ingenuity—and it should not take too much—and by looking at the operative clause, the Government of Canada and the provinces should be able to make an exemption and come back to at least the previous amending formula, which simply required seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population to make a decision about the possible bringing in on a provincial status of either the Northwest Territories or Yukon. I say that constructively, hoping that all the Premiers out there are listening to or will be reading this and that the Government of Canada will respond as well.

There is one section which I want to mention briefly, and that is the new amending formula. If there is one part which I think is almost irretrievably bad in this document, it is the new amending formula for federal institutions. Unlike the Prime Minister, I am not optimistic about the flexibility which will be permitted with this clause; in fact, quite the contrary. I do not normally indulge in Utopian politics, so I do not think there is much prospect for changing it. All those people came together and agreed on many other matters of great importance, and I suspect one of the conditions was that there was unanimous agreement and they came up with this formula. I regret to say that we will probably, to put it in pretty ordinary language, be stuck with it. All I can say is, thank God it does not apply to other parts of the Constitution.

However, perhaps there is some possibility of taking another look at the amending formula. I simply say on behalf of my colleagues, I am sure, and I would think on behalf of the majority of the people of Canada if they understood the implications of this very rigid formula, that the Premiers and Prime Minister should take another hard look at the amending formula. However I do not, I say candidly, anticipate that that will be done in this area.

I want to conclude in the way that I opened. It is a tough task to govern a nation, especially one like ours. It is a much greater task for those whose responsibility it is from time to time to charter the framework for future generations. We are embarked on that right now in this House and in the provinces. Although we need an agreement, and as a person who was here a few years ago and felt deeply that the Province of Quebec did not join in, I know I speak for all of us here on both sides when I say that one of the great joys of the accomplishment has been to see that the Government of the Province of Quebec has now decided to support and become a full participant in the constitutional process and, therefore, will reassume her important historical role. That is good.

• (1240)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I do want to say that all of us in this Chamber ought to have the occasion to look at the final wording of this important step in constitutional change. In fact, an extreme effort should be made for a non-partisan approach by us all to achieve the goals and principles which the Prime Minister addressed today, none of which we disagree with but positively support. Let us simply end up with wording in the Constitution which carries out the very good intent that has been expressed in the Meech Lake document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud and privileged to participate in this historic debate. Just before I get into my remarks, may I make some personal references that I believe are appropriate. I think this country owes a great debt of gratitude to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the leadership he has shown in bringing together an accord which at last will bring Quebec into the mainstream of our country through the Constitution. That is not in any way to denigrate the role played by the provincial Premiers, which was also diplomatic, historic and very much in keeping with the sense of what I see in Canada today as a desire that we move together in unity with Quebec as an important part of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say that as a western Canadian. I could not feel prouder about the role that was played by our Prime Minister. I could not feel prouder about the way in which all Premiers participated constructively.

I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and those of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The message they gave was one of support for this proposition. It is a non-partisan issue, as they pointed out, and I believe that firmly. While there may be questions, suggestions and criticisms to approaches taken, I hope the discussion in the House will always be one of which we can be proud, and we can say that we moved Canada forward historically.

I understand there have been discussions between the House leaders of the Parties concerning the disposition of this motion. I think it important for us in this House to speak with a unified voice at the beginning of a very important process. For instance when the Prime Minister was Leader of the Opposition, almost in his first week here in this Chamber I recall, if I am not mistaken, he seconded a motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on behalf of the Liberal Government with respect to the Manitoba language issue. That to me was the essence of non-partisanship. We were able to deal with that motion and have it accepted as part of the decisions of this House. I hope opposition Members will show the same sense of co-operation in this matter, particularly after they have declared themselves in favour and in support of this motion in principle. I do hope the discussions will carry on until six o'clock tonight.

My message today is a simple one. The Meech Lake Agreement constitutes a sound legal blueprint for the constitutional amendments now under consideration and for the further evolution of the Constitution, the fundamental law of this land.

The Meech Lake Agreement was unanimously supported by the 11 First Ministers and thus meets the strictest requirements of our Constitution's amending formula. All of the elements of the Agreement have been carefully examined from a legal and constitutional perspective. As Minister of Justice, I am fully satisfied that they constitute sound positive changes to the Constitution of Canada.

[Translation]

The Meech Lake Agreement is a major accomplishment which is in the best interest of all Canadians and marks the beginning of a new era for a Canadian federalism based on co-operation, harmony and mutual respect. This agreement is the result of an enormous collective effort on the part of the federal and provincial Governments.

[English]

We succeeded because of our willingness to recognize each other's legitimate concerns and to work toward a balanced resolution of those concerns. In this effort, it must be remembered that the First Ministers' meeting at Meech Lake was the culmination of a long process. It began in earnest with the Prime Minister's statement in Sept Iles and with Quebec's clear statement of its constitutional conditions. Months of discussions and legal analysis built on that base.

The final agreement was not a last minute inspiration. It flowed directly from carefully constructed proposals that were well understood by all the participants. Everyone was satisfied that all legitimate interests had been taken into account and sufficiently protected. That is not to say, Mr. Speaker, that every possible application of the principles agreed upon can be clearly predicted with certainty. If that were possible, we would not need courts to help us resolve disputes when differing interpretations arise. Courts do play a central and critical role in federal systems of government. That is why it has been generally recognized for some time that the Supreme Court of Canada should be expressly entrenched in the Constitution. This is another major accomplishment that will be realized when the Meech Lake Agreement is implemented.

The entrenchment of the court will have the effect of clearly giving it constitutional status as the national court of ultimate appeal for Canada. This will highlight its status and function as the final, independent and impartial judicial arbiter of federal-provincial, citizen-state and private disputes of national importance. The Agreement also provides for entrenchment of the current statutory requirement that at least three of the nine justices appointed be from the Quebec bar. This is in continued recognition of Quebec's distinct civil law system. It ensures that the court will always have the necessary expertise to deal with civil law issues, whether they arise as pure matters of Quebec's internal civil law system or as an integral part of a broader public law issue.

[Translation]

Moreover, the agreement provides that, where there is a vacancy at the Supreme Court level, the federal Government will appoint a person which it feels acceptable from a list of candidates proposed by the provinces.

[English]

This joint selection procedure provides for an important measure of provincial involvement which is appropriate for the court of last resort in a federal system. The agreement reached regarding the Supreme Court of Canada entrenches the court along with a new process for selection of candidates. This is in keeping with the nature of the court as an institution that must resolve questions relating to federal and provincial jurisdiction as well as important issues such as aboriginal rights and the scope of the rights and freedoms under the Charter.

• (1250)

In agreeing to share authority over the nomination process for Supreme Court judges, we believe we have acted wisely and in the best interests of the country, the court and indeed the Constitution. This reflects the new spirit of federalism which is visible throughout the Agreement. As a result, we shall strengthen the legitimacy of the court as the body which must adjudicate federal-provincial disputes and interpret the Charter of Rights for all Canadians.

As a western Canadian, I am particularly pleased that there will now be an ongoing opportunity in the constitutional context for a full and frank discussion of issues which are of concern to western Canadians. I am convinced that this process will ensure the institutional equality of all provinces within the Constitution.

In seeking this agreement with the full and essential participation of all the provinces, we all carried out the national will. We were not struggling against one another, we were struggling together to obtain something for our mutual benefit. There were no losers. The nation, with its strengthened constitutional fabric, is clearly the winner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to say a word about the aboriginal peoples of Canada. In 1982, we recognized and affirmed the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. We ensured that constitutional interpretation of the Charter be consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

The Governments committed themselves to promote equal opportunities to strengthen the regions of Canada, but one fundamental characteristic of Canada was not recognized in our Constitution. We had to come to the realization that the distinctiveness Quebec brings to Canada strengthens our identity and indeed our sovereignty. It is time we recognize this. As Victor Hugo once wrote, nothing in this world is so powerful as an idea whose time has come.

The Meech Lake Agreement provides for the recognition of this reality in a context that is perfectly appropriate for the political and legal challenges it is designed to meet. The elements of the provision were carefully drafted in an effort to set out the reality of Canada and of Quebec within Canada without adversely affecting our traditional and fundamental constitutional arrangements. They will form part of the background against which the whole Constitution will be interpreted. It will ultimately be for the courts, and particularly for the Supreme Court of Canada to apply this new clause.

A sense of balance was also brought to bear on the other aspects of the Agreement. It is there in the elements of the agreement on immigration and spending power and indeed on the amending formula. The absence of Quebec from the constitutional process, an absence which very happily will be remedied by the agreement, has been a serious bar to the effective evolution of our Constitution. Constitutionally, we could probably not have effectively reformed the Senate without Quebec. Now we can and we will.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will do it on the basis of an amending formula that recognizes the constitutional equality of all the provinces.

If unanimity was reached at Meech Lake, where six complex issues were on the table, it can and will be reached again. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, unanimity is not a strait-jacket. The Meech Lake Agreement will result in a constitutional requirement for an annual First Ministers' Conference to seek agreement on Senate reform, fisheries and other agreed upon matters. Those tasks should not be more difficult than the ones we are now completing.

While success in our future ventures is not necessarily guaranteed, success need not necessarily surprise us. It is within our capabilities, if we in fact preserve a sense of goodwill and a desire to build an even greater country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this agreement is perfectly consistent with our political traditions. We may use this opportunity to demonstrate how proud we are of it. We are convinced that the Canadian people will clearly understand the benefits of this new system.

[English]

The bold multicultural experiment called Canada continues not only to survive but to succeed. We know that there are many outstanding issues that still require our attention. As I indicated earlier, we have not forgotten nor will we ever forget matters of concern to aboriginal citizens or any of the other fundamentally important matters that will continue to merit our best efforts in the ongoing evolution of our country. Meetings continue to take place to develop a consensus in order to make progress in a constitutional sense in our commitment to these very important issues. It is with a full knowledge of the challenges ahead that I am confident the agreement we have reached will provide the constitutional bedrock for the country's future growth and development.

After the Meech Lake Agreement becomes part of our Constitution, we will have new institutional arrangements to foster greater federal-provincial co-operation and harmony. The challenge Canadian leaders will then face will be how best to make use of those new arrangements to serve the national interest and to ensure the general prosperity of all Canadians in all parts of the country.

I would like to conclude my remarks within the time allotted to me so that there can be full participation in this debate. There are certain areas each of us may wish had been dealt with at this time. However, I think it should not be lost on those of us who come from regions of Canada other than Quebec or Ontario that this Accord is probably the most important step forward in the recognition of regions like western Canada that has been passed in any constitutional amendment since Confederation, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. It recognizes now that we are equals in Confederation.

Under this arrangement, we are equals with respect to important national institutions as opposed to what we would have been under previous proposals put forward, like the one referred to by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It was once proposed that the veto power should only lie with certain provinces, a proposal which in its time was of some attraction to the First Ministers. It had a very serious flaw, however, in that it absolutely left out western Canada. We have remedied that and I think the Prime Minister and the First Ministers should be applauded by all Canadians for recognizing that there are no second-class citizens in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to conclude by once again congratulating all the participants for the way they approached this matter. This is a time for leadership on the part of parliamentarians. I hope that we can work together at this time by supporting and passing this resolution, in whatever way possible agreed to among the House Leaders, in order to give the leadership that is required at this time in history. We must go forward and work in a constructive way with our ideas and suggestions for other constitutional matters and the matters before us at this time.

We welcome the opportunity to discuss these matters, whether it be through an Opposition day motion of which there are some 13 available to the Opposition in this time period, or with our own time. We have demonstrated that we are prepared to make this matter a priority by using a Government day for an important debate. I hope we will find new opportunities to debate this important issue in the House, and I say to all Hon. Members that I am very proud, not only to be a Member of this House but to be a Canadian at this time in history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, it is now one o'clock. Would the House be prepared to adjourn now, with the understanding that the Minister would be subject to the usual 10 minute period for questions and comments?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER BY CHEMICALLY CONTAMINATED MIST

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, University of Toronto researchers estimate that as much as 60 tonnes a year of three chemicals, PCBs, chloroform, and chlorobenzenes, evaporate into the air from Niagara Falls. The total amount of chemicals released could be as high as 175 tonnes a year. According to the researchers, about half the chemicals come out of the mist at the Falls and the rest are released by wave action in the river.

In 1987 the Government reduced the strength of Environment Canada by 106 people. Since September, 1984, Environment Canada has lost $64 million in spending power to inflation.

Can the Government take any initiative to protect the health of Canadians living downwind of the Niagara River?

In November, 1984, the Government cancelled the funds necessary to develop the Guelph-Toronto Toxicology Centre intended to examine the threats posed to health and safety by toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes Basin. We call on the Government to reverse its decision of November, 1984, and give the green light to the establishment of the Guelph-Toronto Toxicology Centre to study this latest toxic threat to human health.

POLICE WEEK

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF POLICEMEN AND WOMEN—CALL FOR PUBLIC SUPPORT

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, in recognition of Police Week I would like to draw the attention of the House to the excellent police services provided to Canadians. We are all extremely fortunate and grateful for the competence, dedication and fairness shown by Canada's policemen and women. At the same time I would like to remind Hon. Members and all Canadians that crime control is everybody's business.

We all have a responsibility and a capacity to assist Canada's police forces in maintaining the peace and combating crime in our communities. While Police Week provides a special opportunity to show our appreciation to Canada's police forces, I am hopeful that each of us and our constituents will take this opportunity to explore with our respective police forces the ways in which we can assist in preserving peace and order in our communities.

* * *

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

OPPOSITION OF NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this past week-end delegates to the 15th annual general meeting of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Canada's largest women's organization representing over 500 groups from coast-to-coast, spoke out strongly against the return of capital punishment. Their resolution notes that capital punishment is legislated murder by the state and is the ultimate in violence.

These same women voice their deep concern at the possibility that the motion shortly to be voted on standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) entrenching the rights of the foetus in the Constitution poses a profound threat to Canadian women. The sponsor of this motion has said that women seeking abortions in Canada whose lives are not threatened, and the doctor who performs the abortion, should be charged with murder and executed. That is shameful.

Let us join with the women of Canada and Members of Parliament like the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) who have shown great courage in this debate in rejecting their earlier position on this issue and the cry for a return to the death penalty.

S. O. 21

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

YOUTH SCIENCE FOUNDATION—SPONSORSHIP OF SCIENCE FAIRS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, during the past month the Youth Science Foundation has sponsored 85 regional science fairs across Canada, including one in Ottawa—Carleton. The innovation and creativity demonstrated by the more than 400,000 young Canadians who participated is most impressive.

The 400 regional winners meet this week at the Canada-Wide Science Fair at Erindale College in Mississauga to compete for national honours. Some of Canada's future scientific leaders will be among the participants.

The Youth Science Foundation seeks to promote an appreciation and understanding of science in every young Canadian. It encourages young people to pursue careers in science and technology. It helps to develop the great potential Canada has through its youth to become an international leader in science and technology.

The Youth Science Foundation is supported in part by the federal Government and is important to all Canadians because of the manner in which it develops the skills of young Canadians.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, education, particularly post-secondary education, is an investment in the future. The link between higher educational attainment and better employment and economic development opportunities is undeniable. Why, then, is the Government cutting back on post-secondary education for those for whom the benefits are needed most and who would reap the greatest results? I refer to the Indian people of Canada.

Study after study has documented the social, economic and educational disparities between Indians and non-Indians in this country. In recent years more and more Indian students have been staying in school and returning to school and they are graduating. Yet the Government has decided to stem this growth in achievement. It has limited its post-secondary program, capped the number of students it will sponsor, and restricted resources to Indian educational institutions.

Under the previous Government the principles of universal access and opportunity prevailed. This Government has crushed those principles and once again deficit reduction is occurring on the backs of those least able to bear it.

S. O. 21

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government always favoured the creation of long-term jobs. Since we came to power, the Canadian economy has been constantly improving. We gave private enterprise the tools needed for its economic recovery. Interest rates went down, major investment projects were set up across the land, and the hope of soon having access to a new, 250-million people market stimulates Canadian entrepreneurs.

Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada's figures for April, 1987 show the unemployment rate is at its lowest in five years. Canadians have elected a Government that is building a strong, healthy economy that will make our native land the land of our children.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE DELEGATES' LETTERS TO PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday delegates wrote many letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) including the following:

> The Government's decision to ignore the long-scheduled lobby of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women reinforces the public perception that anything is more important than the concerns of women in Canada.

Another reads:

> Is this your idea of giving priority to women's issues? Your Government does not respect its commitment to women of all ages.

[Translation]

This lack of respect for and commitment to our representations will not be tolerated.

[English]

Another reads:

> Once again women's voices are silenced. Obviously women across Canada cannot trust you and your Ministers to hear women's concerns.

Still another reads:

> I am nine years old . . . . I feel very sad about the fact that you do not listen to my granny and all the other women that wanted to talk to you tomorrow.

A further letter reads:

> I can no longer believe that you will honour your commitments or promises . . . . A disappointed potential supporter—

Yet another reads:

> NAC represents more than 3 million voting women in Canada—we have the right to be heard and treated with respect.

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

RECOMMENDATION THAT STUDENTS REGISTER AT CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES AS SOON AS POSSIBLE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge students who are looking for summer jobs to apply as soon as possible to Manpower Canada's student centres. Again this year, through Challenge 87, this Government will create 90,000 jobs in Canada, 25,000 of which are in Quebec. That program's goal remains very clear. It is to make easier for young people the transition to the workplace. Those jobs are financially interesting and allow them to get job training and experience. For example, the Department of National Defence will be in a position to offer jobs to 7,000 students in Canada, 1,606 of which in Quebec.

I remind that Manpower Canada's student centres help students find jobs and allow employers to hire workers during the summer season. Last summer, more than 425,000 students across Canada were placed that way.

In conclusion, I wish good luck to all students in their search for a job, and I remind them to apply now!

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—OPPOSITION TO SUNSHINE VILLAGE EXPANSION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) met with representatives of the Canadian Environmental Network. During that meeting many concerned environmentalists called on the Minister to reject proposals by the Sunshine Village ski resort to expand beyond its current lease area inside Banff National Park. I want to reiterate the NDP's opposition to this expansion.

To allow Sunshine's proposed expansion to go ahead would fly in the face of the 1978 decision to establish Sunshine's current lease area and limit further expansion. It would fly in the face of Parks Canada policy and it would fly in the face of In Trust for Tomorrow: A Management Framework for Four Mountain Parks which the Minister published last year.

In addition, any expansion of Sunshine Village would make a mockery of the Minister's proposed amendments to the National Parks Act to limit such areas within national parks. Most important, Sunshine's proposal, particularly plans to increase summer use dramatically, could destroy Sunshine Meadows which Parks Canada has identified as one of the most threatened areas in Banff National Park.

Too often in the past Parks Canada policy has been altered or simply ignored to serve short-term political or economic expediency. How the Minister deals with the Sunshine Village expansion proposal will be an important test of the Minister's personal commitment and that of the Conservative Government to protect and preserve our national parks.

* * *

• (1410)

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, on the very first Canada Day in 1867, the Quebec newspaper La Minerve said: "The new Constitution recognizes the French Canadians as a distinct and separate nationality. We constitute a state within a state. We enjoy the full exercise of our rights and the formal recognition of our national independence".

By recognizing Quebec as a distinct society, by giving it and other provinces a first right of refusal over changes in the House of Commons, Senate and Supreme Court of Canada, by limiting the federal spending power in areas of provincial jurisdiction, and by giving the provinces a formal voice in immigration policy and Supreme Court of Canada appointments, the Meech Lake Accord has acknowledged and confirmed the principles set out in La Minerve in 1867. Those are principles on which Quebec understood that it had entered Confederation in the first place. Those principles have had their opponents in the past and they still have them today, but without those principles there would be no Canada.

* * *

CHILD CARE

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, society has changed dramatically in the past 20 years. Today, less than one in six Canadian families fits the traditional family pattern of the wife at home with the children and the husband out working. Many families are headed by single parents, most of whom are young mothers.

Inadequate child care is not just a woman's issue. It is not just an issue for parents. It is an issue for all of us, including parents, employers, Governments—all Canadians. I believe that all of us have a responsibility and a duty to be part of the solution.

We in the Liberal Party believe that an adequate, affordable, accessible, quality child care system must be based on two principles: sharing the burden, and providing choices for the pre-schooler as well as the latchkey school-aged child.

Our Party has put forward a realistic and responsible solution in the Liberal pocket paper on child care which can be obtained from our office or the office of the Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Liberals view child care as a support to good parenting, not a substitute for it. In our program, the parent's role is paramount. It is time that the federal Government showed some leadership on this issue.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY—GOVERNMENT'S EMPHASIS ON TRAINING FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, once again I want to emphasize to the House the great importance that the Government places on the achievement of economic equality for women. A major step forward in this regard occurred last November at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver. At that time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Premiers endorsed a labour force strategy which has a particular emphasis on training for women. Next month, federal, provincial and territorial Ministers responsible for the status of women will be meeting with Ministers responsible for labour market matters to elaborate on this strategy.

Our Government is also addressing women's employment needs through the Canadian Jobs Strategy. For the first time ever, our national employment and training strategy includes targets for the participation of women and a particular emphasis on women re-entering the job market. These two measures, along with many others introduced by the Government, will go a long way to promote the full participation of women in all sectors of economic activity.

* * *

PORNOGRAPHY

VANCOUVER GROUP'S OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, over the week-end in Vancouver I met with a group called The Coalition on Pornography. It is made up of representatives of the Anglican Church, University Women's Club, Justice Institute, the Junior League, the North Shore Women's Centre, and the Periodical Review Board.

This group was formed to fight pornography and get the Government to bring forward legislation against it. Ironically, they now find themselves fighting the legislation because it goes too far and has, in effect, as its basic premise, that all sex is dirty. I want to bring their representations to the House and urge the Government to bring forward reasonable legislation that combats real pornography but recognizes that sexuality is a part of life in Canada.

[Translation]

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARTICIPATION BY WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, our country has everything to gain from the full participation of women in the various aspects of Canadian society. That is why when we came to power, and because of the urgent need to act, our Government agreed to double from 15 per cent to 30 per cent the number of women on the various federal boards, commissions and offices.

In the Throne Speech of October 1, 1986, we confirmed our intention to increase the participation of women in the various stages of the decision making process. And the figures are there to show that we are living up to our commitment to Canadian women.

Only half-way through our mandate, over 27 per cent of all the Government's discretionary appointees have been women. By appointing a greater number of women to key positions, the Government wants to show the way to the private sector and the Canadian people generally.

* * *

[English]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CHARTERED BANKS OPPOSED TO UNIONIZATION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time that we changed the Canada Labour Code with respect to the certification of employees who wish to become members of a union. Some of the major employers in this country which have made huge profits, namely, the banks, also pay low taxes. They have been very successful in preventing their employees from organizing into unions. Most of these employees are women and receive low salaries despite the fact the banks make high profits and pay low taxes.

• (1415)

When there have been attempts by these workers to organize, the banks have used every means at their disposal to make sure these workers do not become part of a union. Time after time the Canadian Labour Relations Board has ruled against the banks but the end result is that these people do not get to remain in unions. I believe that is one reason these people receive low salaries, which helps to create the spread between male workers and female workers.

It is time the Government conducted an investigation into this matter and ensured we have a labour code which adequately protects the rights of female workers.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

CEREMONIAL ROUTE—ABANDONMENT OF PLAN TO USE COLOURED PAVING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government has shown one more time how it can be weak-kneed when confronted with even a slight bit of controversy. A few days ago the National Capital Commission announced it no longer intended to proceed with the planned coloured repaving of the designated ceremonial route in the Ottawa area. Since the NCC had repeatedly affirmed its commitment to this project in the past, I have concluded that its change of heart was caused by none other than the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) responding to the whining and moaning of a few disgruntled backbench Tory Members of Parliament.

With this kind of weak-kneed approach, our national railways, our government-run airlines and even the construction of our War Memorial would have never proceeded. The Parliament Buildings would probably have never been built. The National Capital area is being very poorly served by the present Tory Government. They shall remember.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TAX REFORM

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TAX WILL NOT BE IMPOSED ON FOOD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, single mothers and, indeed, many Canadian families are having difficulty putting food on the table these days. Over the past week-end, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women at its meetings here in Ottawa expressed grave reservations about the possibility of a national sales tax on food as well as a tax on other necessities.

My question is a simple one. Will the Prime Minister do a very simple thing right now and assure Canadians that there will never be a national sales tax on food?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was absent when the Minister of Finance addressed this matter in the House in the last couple of days. However, in regard to the spirit of tax reform, the idea is a greater degree of fairness for Canadians in the tax system in a very special way, a greater degree of fairness for those on the lower levels of the income scale and a greater degree of relief for them and their parents, including the individuals to whom the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition referred.

The details of this will be spelled out when the White Paper is published on June 18. My right hon. friend, as a former Minister of Finance, will, of course, want to wait for the publication of that document.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will wait, but I have noted that the Prime Minister failed to give me the commitment I sought with respect to a national sales tax on food.

[Translation]

CENTRES FOR BATTERED WOMEN AND THEIR CHILDREN—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women have learned that they can no longer rely on the Prime Minister's word. In the Speech from the Throne, the Government had promised once more to address the immediate and long-term problems of battered women and their children. Instead, existing shelters for battered women throughout Canada have had to close down because of the budgetary cutbacks in spending and the lack of a national social housing program. When is the Prime Minister going to keep his word in this respect?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister is keeping his word. One need only look to the changes made to the Canada Assistance Plan.

While that plan was based on financial need, as he will be aware, the argument we put forward is that persons could have needs other than financial, and the plan has been expanded. There has been close co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces in that respect.

In respect of social housing, the Minister responsible for CMHC has also been looking at this area and has in fact advanced further numbers of spaces for transition homes, and again this has been done in co-operation with the provinces.

The program is well in place. As the Right Hon. Member knows, these programs also have to be bolstered by education and awareness, and we are working on that as well.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me say to the Minister that on Friday last I was in contact with the Downtown East Side Women's Centre, and certainly his programs are not evident at that particular centre, or other centres for battered women in Vancouver. I hope there will be some action on this.

WAGE GAP BETWEEN MEN AND WOMEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My final question is for the Prime Minister.

For the first time in 18 years, the wage gap between men and women in this country has widened.

If the Prime Minister's programs for women are so good, why has the wage gap between men and women in Canada widened?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the figures published on the wage gap were obviously of great concern to us, as well. I should point out that the lag on the statistics is such that they do not reflect the effects of the Employment Equity Bill and the Canadian Jobs Strategy, nor do they reflect the effect of the training program that came out of last fall's First Ministers' Conference.

None of the programs we put in place to address that problem were in motion at the time these figures were published.

It is something that we intend to keep a close eye on, because that is exactly what we are trying to achieve for women in the workforce.

* * *

[Translation]

HUMAN RIGHTS

NEW REPRODUCTION SCIENTIFIC TECHNIQUES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The new reproduction technologies are becoming more and more part of our daily life. Whether in the area of in vitro reproduction, sperm bank creation, ovum transplant or surrogate mothers, the Government should certainly act expeditiously and quickly.

Could the Prime Minister advise the House whether he is prepared to set up a Royal Commission of inquiry on the new reproduction technologies?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, within this Government, and certainly at the Family Conference sponsored by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, this issue has been addressed in some detail. It is something in which the Department of National Health and Welfare is actively engaged.

I do not know that we need a Royal Commission, when we have a department of Government that is working very hard on this topic, a topic that is of great importance to women.

* * *

[Translation]

HEALTH

DISTRIBUTION OF DEPO-PROVERA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My supplementary question is for to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the Minister prepared to confirm the news that his Department reportedly approved last week the distribution throughout Canada of the Depo-Provera drug, in spite of the strong opposition of women's groups because of the drug's secondary effects? Could the Minister tell us whether or not he has approved this drug for distribution?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to dispel another rumour that is going around, namely, that approval for Depo-Provera has taken place.

There has not even been a recommendation in that respect that has come to my desk.

* * *

[Translation]

DAYCARE CENTRES

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE DAY CARE LEGISLATION WILL BE PRESENTED BY JULY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning, during the constitutional debate, the Prime Minister indicated that the Parliament of Canada can set up a daycare program.

Will the Prime Minister guarantee that a Bill for that purpose will be introduced before July?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Premiers, at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver, gave a very direct mandate to their respective Ministers of Health in this regard, and we have been working co-operatively with the provinces on a child care proposal.

• (1425)

We think that work is progressing very well. There is a date in June when we want to put that in the hands of the Prime Minister and the various Premiers. Whether or not it will be legislation or in the form of legislation in June would depend upon those discussions, and I could not commit myself on that point at this time.

PROVISION OF MORE CHILD CARE SPACES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. As the Minister knows, one could deal with this matter either from the point of view of legislation or simply direct federal Government spending to provide increased daycare spaces.

Since the Minister, before the week-end, expressed dissatisfaction with the majority report brought in by a House committee, the majority of whose Members were from his Party, will he now give assurances to the House that when the measure is brought in, hopefully before the end of June, the major amount of money in it will be used to provide additional child care spaces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the reporting of the speech that I made at Guelph on Thursday and the point that I made about the report of the special parliamentary committee, I indicated that the choices that committee had put forward were a very good approach to child care.

I also said that in order to have advanced child care we would also require more spaces. It was in that respect that I thought the report would have to put more emphasis. That is what I said in Guelph on Thursday.

In respect of the configuration of the approach which we will take, that will be announced at the appropriate time. I take the Hon. Member's point as representation. It is not new, nor unique. We are dealing with it as well.

Mr. Broadbent: It is neither new nor unique but long overdue in Canada, and I hope the Government will act on it; that is the point.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since in his earlier answer the Minister alluded to the possibility that there may not be action before the end of June, depending upon what happens in the discussions with the provinces, will he at least give assurances that the federal Government will live up to its commitment to increased child care spaces by taking action, before the end of June, to provide money to increase the number of badly needed spaces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to leave any wrong impression that the provinces are not co-operating. In fact, quite the opposite is taking place. There is very close co-operation in the discussions between the provinces and our federal responsibility.

I accept what the Hon. Member says in terms of the urgency. The Prime Minister has very clearly indicated that. He has put his personal imprimatur on it. It is that mandate that we are following.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

TELEVISION—PARTICIPATION OF WOMEN AT PRODUCTION LEVEL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, broadcasting has the power to shape attitudes, values, and provide role models for our children. However, according to recent statistics, men outnumber women two to one as prominent television characters in prime time programming and four to one in children's programming. Not only are women under-represented, they are often misrepresented on television, performing a limited number of stereotyped roles.

My question is for the Minister of Communications. Will the Minister introduce broadcasting legislation to increase the number of women at the production level as well as on the screens of the Canadian broadcasting system, so that there will be a fairer portrayal on Canadian airwaves?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member fully knows, we are in the midst of reviewing the Broadcasting Act and preparing for the introduction of new legislation. She is one of the hard-working members of the committee. I take her representations at this time as something to be considered as we come forward with a new Broadcasting Act.

I also want to mention that the CRTC has recently put forward guidelines for sex role stereotyping which should also be considered in the revision of the Broadcasting Act.

APPLICATION OF EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT—ROLE OF CRTC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Notwithstanding the important step forward in terms of sex role stereotyping, I would like a stronger statement of commitment, if possible.

Since the current Employment Equity Act lacks an effective enforcement mechanism, will the Minister ensure that employment equity obligations apply to all broadcasting licencees regardless of size and that the CRTC is mandated to supervise and enforce employment equity provisions as a condition of licence?

• (1430)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to see that in a recent rulings of the CRTC it did make compliance with the guidelines on sex role stereotyping one of the conditions of licence when the application comes forward for renewal.

I think there are advances in this field, and I am very pleased with the way in which the broadcasting community is addressing itself to the provisions of the present Employment Equity legislation in order to ensure greater equality in our broadcasting industry for women and for minority groups.

* * *

CHILD CARE

DEVELOPMENT OF SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is for the Minister for National Health and Welfare. It has to do with child care concerns raised by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. The Minister knows that study after study has shown that non-profit child care is consistently of higher quality than commercial child care.

Will the Minister put aside his own market-place ideology and assure the women of Canada that their children will not be used for profit and that new public funds for child care will go to develop non-profit child care services?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member puts forward an argument which she knows does not do any justice to families who decide what type of child care they want, whether it is non-profit, commercial, or informal child care. I am not going to be a Minister who will stand in this House and demand that parents do this or that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I promise the Hon. Member and the House is that when the Government puts forward its proposal there will be a wide range of choices, which I think is an approach more in keeping with what Canadian parents want.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the appropriate use of tax dollars for child care. Appropriate use is not for profit-making child care.

USE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Another related overriding concern of women is the quality of child care, Mr. Speaker. They are very concerned that the Minister may extend or agree to extend Canada Assistance Plan funding. Will the Minister guarantee that the Canada Assistance Plan funding, which is a welfare program—we want child care to be for everybody—will not be extended to fund profit-making child care either now or in the future?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member forgets, for example, that the present Ontario Government recognizes that over 50 per cent of its spaces are in the very types of configuration which she condemns; in Alberta around 70 per cent are and, in Atlantic Canada, which does not have the kind of financial resources that some of the other provinces have, the percentage is also very high. Simply to condemn, then to lose those spaces and to say we have done more for child care is to argue the preposterous. What I am saying to the Hon. Member is what I said in my first answer, that there will be a choice, and she will have to wait for that day.

Oral Questions

PORNOGRAPHY

CONTENT OF BILL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns Bill C-54, the pornography Bill. When the Government began to encounter criticism of the Bill the Minister suggested that he would be flexible and would accept constructive amendments to it. Over the week-end, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Calgary suggested that the Bill could not please everybody and that the Government would move ahead with it.

Was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs speaking for the Government or is the Government prepared to accept constructive amendments to get away from this idea that all sexuality is pornography?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question on this important Bill. I think that I have to take issue with the Hon. Member's generalization about the legislation. His generalization is just the opposite from the actual fact.

If the Member reads the Bill, he will see that we have attempted to bring a balance with respect to this whole question. I do not believe that there is anyone in the House who thinks it is an easy proposition to define these matters. I can tell the Hon. Member that this Bill is light years ahead of present law and it is receiving very substantial support across the country.

His own Party has been calling for strong legislation on pornography and the importation of this type of material into our country. I hope the Member will not change the policy of his own Party in order to carry out the wishes of the editorial board of The Toronto Star.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DIVIDE BILL IN TWO

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister whether he would be prepared—because it is true that the Liberal Party supports such a legislation—to bring forward a Bill dealing with violence, degradation, child pornography and leave aside that encroachment on Canadian life standards; in other words, is he prepared to divide the Bill, to introduce legislation dealing with the parts on which we agree and waive the remainder pending a more thorough study?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what the Hon. Member is saying. He knows what the present state of the law is. The highest courts have determined that depictions as I have set forth in this legislation are currently considered to be obscene under the present law. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that we want to expand and loosen the present standards to allow for pornography to be available in the corner confectionery stores across the country and in various neighbourhoods, I wish he would stand up and say so.

I think it is important to put this in perspective. I appreciate constructive suggestions. I would be prepared to listen to them but, on the other hand, I do not want generalizations which are inaccurate to be the basis of those suggestions.

POSITION OF NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Justice. This past week-end the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Canada's largest women's group, voted overwhelmingly to reject the Government's proposed Bill on pornography. Will the Minister now agree to scrap this dangerous and Victorian legislation? Will the Minister bring forward instead a Bill which clearly distinguishes between violent and exploitive degrading pornography on the one hand and images of consensual adult sexuality on the other, as strongly recommended by the Fraser Commission? Will the Minister not understand that basic distinction, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not take issue with the resolutions that have been passed. People have different points of view. The President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women on the tabling of this legislation I thought had a very supportive statement when she asked this House to move quickly on this important legislation. This legislation, I think, represents a balanced approach. It is in accordance with the values and traditions which the overwhelming majority of Canadians hold respecting acceptable material.

If the Hon. Member has suggestions about the Bill, I would like to hear them, I think at committee stage, but I do not want to take his generalization that we should simply open the doors and have no provisions at all with respect to pornography. I do not think that is a fair position for the New Democratic Party to take, quite frankly.

CARING RELATIONSHIP QUERY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the President of NAC speaks for her organization in overwhelmingly rejecting this legislation.

The Minister has said that images of caring relationships will not be affected by this Bill, and yet the definition of erotica in the Bill includes only nudity and nothing more. Does this mean that for a Tory Government a caring relationship is an exclusively non-sexual relationship? Why has the Government rejected the Fraser Commission's recommendation, that the Government has no right to invade the bedrooms of the nation to tell adults that they cannot view consensual adult sexual activity? Why this puritanical anti-sex approach, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would answer the question if it were a correct proposition. Is the Hon. Member reflecting the position of his Leader? Is this the position of the New Democratic Party on this matter? I think it is important to know where the New Democratic Party stands. If the Hon. Member does not understand that this particular Bill does bring a balance with respect to the whole question of sexuality—

Mr. Cassidy: A Victorian balance.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —that it only attacks hard-core depictions—

Mr. Cassidy: Nonsense.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member wants to throw it wide open, Mr. Speaker, and have all women depicted as love slaves or something of that sort. That is not the position which this Government takes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here comes his Leader. Come back Ed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It took me to bring him back.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Ed, you better phone Svend again and calm him down. Here is a quarter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior.

* * *

• (1440)

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LACK OF SUFFICIENT HOUSES ON RESERVES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is the Minister aware that many Canadian native women who have had their Indian status restored as a result of Bill C-31 are unable to return to their communities because there are not enough houses? Housing construction in Indian communities has nearly been paralysed because of the Minister's refusal to use the Jobs Strategy Program to provide the labour component of the construction of houses.

Is the Minister prepared now to tell the House that he will adjust his policy so that Indian women and their children who want to go home will be able to find houses when they do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by my colleague was drawn to my attention some time ago. Moreover, I have met with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on two or three occasions. However, my colleague should know that funds earmarked for the Canadian employment strategy are distributed in an equitable fashion among various Canadian groups and generally speaking, native people have received sums corresponding to their needs. However, I recognize with him that the training problem and the implementation of the employment strategy represent a special problem in the case of native people since on reserve training and even off reserve training gives rise to a particular problem. This issue is now under consideration and I shall be in a position to give an answer in that respect in the days or weeks to come.

[English]

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—USE OF FUNDS FOR INDIAN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that Indian communities lost $8 million from what they had under the Canada Works Program because of the change in his policy. Will the Minister confirm to the House that his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, made a very specific request, having recognized the gravity of this situation, for a fair share of the Canadian Jobs Strategy funds so that Indian communities can have houses built now when the construction season is getting under way? Will the Minister confirm that he received that request and will he tell the House that he is prepared to respond to that request quickly and positively?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I told my friend that I met with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development two or three times. The requests of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are always fair, but I am not ready today to say when I will be ready to give that answer. It will be a good and a fair answer but we have to take into account that this money has to be expended with fairness for all Canadians.

* * *

TAX REFORM

BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX—OPPOSITION OF NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Prime Minister and it is with reference to his statement that the new sales tax and tax reform will be fair. He knows that the National Action Committee on the Status of Women representing three million Canadians has declared its unequivocal opposition to proposals for a business transfer tax or some other form of sales tax that would impose a tax on essentials such as food because of the impact it would have on working families and on poor families, most of which are headed by women.

Could the Prime Minister clarify the confusion left by the Minister of Finance last week and tell us specifically if the Minister of Finance was reflecting government policy when he said that only low-income families would receive some kind of a sales tax credit to offset this proposed new sales tax on food?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Finance indicated that the Government of Canada would be setting out its views in regard to tax reform in a White Paper on June 18. He indicated the components of that and the philosophy behind it. That philosophy is one of greater fairness, the elimination of tax avoidance, and a greater degree of fairness and assistance for those who are at the lowest level of the income pole. This will be accomplished in a number of ways, all of which will be set out in the White Paper to be presented on June 18. My hon. friend would no doubt want to wait until he sees the integrated package before he asks me to comment on any hypothesis.

SALES TAX CREDIT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that the existing sales tax credit, modest as it is, is given only to families earning less than $17,000 per year and therefore not only excludes large numbers of working families just above the poverty line but also excludes many thousands of families that are actually below the poverty line? Is this the model for the proposed sales tax credit on food? Does this not mean that the Government intends to make working families pay this sales tax on food of $300 per year while many families in poverty will pay the sales tax as well? Is that his policy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There have been reports that the Minister has now decided not to proceed with any reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act despite unanimous recommendations to the contrary made by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. Is that correct? Is it true that the Minister has now dropped any reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the other day my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, said that we do have a reform of $1 billion. I told him that he did not have good information. Today I told my friend that there will be an announcement next Friday on unemployment insurance reform.

MATERNITY AND PARENTAL BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while there were some differences between the Standing Committee report and the Forget report, there were also some major grounds of agreement including what should be done with maternity benefits and parental benefits. Would the Minister not at least legislate in those areas where there is agreement between the two reports?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government has received and will continue to receive a number of reports on a problem as special as unemployment insurance. There is no question of the Government considering only one aspect of a report. We have to define whether the current unemployment insurance system is now meeting the needs of Canadians. And in accordance with the reviews which will be made and reports which we have received, we will table next Friday what the Government intends to do about unemployment insurance.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED SALE OF CADILLAC FAIRVIEW TO UNITED STATES FIRM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Just weeks after the Dome sale was announced, another large Canadian firm, Cadillac Fairview, is now being sold to a U.S. firm, putting malls and office buildings right across the country in U.S. hands. What does the Government intend to do to promote the Canadianization of the economy and to reverse this growing shift to U.S. control of key firms across the economy?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to tell my colleague is that the company concerned did not submit an application to Investment Canada. Besides, when reviewing such applications, we always make sure, before anything else, that Canadian interests are protected, and they have been in those instances, when we take into account the Canadian participation in the management of that corporation; second, the increase in Canadian productivity and third, the technology ownership.

That is how, each time we review such transactions, we look after Canadians' interests.

[English]

REVIEW BY INVESTMENT CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Minister that this firm has even refused to sell public shares to Canadians. I hope that will be part of what his review will look at.

Will the Minister assure Canadians that the Investment Canada review that will take place will permit communities right across the country to have input on this takeover since these changes in ownership will be of such importance to those communities and the country itself?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will only repeat what I said. Every time we have to review such transactions—and since the enactment of the new legislation on Investment Canada, that corporation has reviewed more than 2,200 of them—we have always safeguarded Canadians' interests and we will continue to do so, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

• (1450)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT FARMERS—1987-88 CROP YEAR—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A couple of weeks ago in this House he said if he received a plea for help from western farmers he would respond. Although he did not respond, while in the west last week, to the request by wheat producers and their organizations facing the worst financial crisis since the 1930s, now that he has been to the west and met with some farmers will he respond positively to their pleas for a deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I met with western farmers throughout that area in a very good series of meetings last week. They were obviously concerned about the future because of the drop in commodity prices. They were very grateful for the $1 billion cash infusion which was the largest deficiency payment in the history of Canadian agriculture, designed by this Government. They were concerned about the future and so we resolved to work with them and their organizations, as well as the provinces, to alleviate as best we can any concern regarding next year.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW DEBT RESTRUCTURING INSTRUMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the farmers would be more pleased if they could get a commitment on the floor of this House today. Not only are they receiving the lowest prices since the 1930s in constant dollars, but are also suffering the worst devaluation in land values amounting to about $100,000 for the average economic sized farm.

Since the Prime Minister lifted the moratorium on FCC foreclosures will he make a commitment today to bring in new debt restructuring instruments to assist farmers facing foreclosure? Men and women who have worked for years and years and years now face the loss of their farms because no proper debt restructuring instruments were put in place by the Government to cope with this crisis.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the point raised by my hon. friend I find especially troubling. The thought that anyone who has worked the land with his family should, for whatever reason, lose that land or his right to it is something I find very troubling. I have examined with my colleagues, and will be examining with the provinces, further instruments whereby we can be helpful in that regard. I met specifically with a farmer and his son in Lethbridge, and then other farmers and their families outside Saskatoon, where this particular matter was discussed. I shall be working very closely with them in that regard.

I should tell my hon. friend, because I know he will be happy to hear it, that the farmers, while concerned about next year, are very grateful to this Parliament for the fact that aid to western agriculture, since this Government was sworn in, has increased by 350 per cent. They asked that their gratitude be conveyed to all Members.

LONG-TERM SOLUTIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having come back from western Canada after talking to some of our farmers I hope he now feels more personally the crisis that exists in western Canada. Whether he went to Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, surely the question that came up and again and again was what sort of long-term solutions is the Government working toward. Can the Prime Minister tell us what sort of long-term solutions the Government is prepared to offer to ensure that dozens of farm families will not go bankrupt? What long-term solutions is the Government thinking of and is prepared to offer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only did the farmers raise the question of long-term solutions, they know full well there is no quick fix to the problems inflicted on western agriculture. They know no one in this House is responsible for the decline in commodity prices. They know full well that over the longer haul the answer is not greater and greater deficiency payments. They have increased their productivity and they do not want hand-outs. They want to be treated with dignity and respect and that is exactly what we are trying to do.

They also know, and discussed this very clearly with me, the work begun by this Government which for the first time raised agriculture at the level of the industrialized countries' summit in Tokyo last year.

A follow-up meeting is taking place right now at the OECD where the Minister of Finance and the Minister of International Trade are specifically dealing with international agricultural subsidies. That will be followed by a meeting convened in Canada of the Cairns group. That will be followed by meetings that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I shall have with farm leaders before we take to the Venice Summit this very debilitating issue of the trade war and agricultural subsidies between the U.S. and the ECM. This is killing our western farmers. They do not deserve this kind of treatment and the Government is resolved with them to solve this long-term problem in the economy.

GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, western Canadian farmers recognize that the problem is the trade war between the U.S. and the ECM. They also recognize it will take a few years before that is resolved. They recognize as well, as one farmer is quoted as saying, that all the Government has come up with is short-term band-aid solutions. What they want to know is what thinking, if any, the Government is putting into finding a solution to keep them going and prevent thousands of farm families from going under until an international agreement is reached. Neither the Prime Minister nor his Government has given us any indication that some long-term thinking is being done. Is he prepared to make some definite announcements to Canadian farmers in the very near future if not today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is now asking quite a different question. The first question dealt with the long-term problem and I think we have attempted to deal with that. He is now turning his question to the problem of tomorrow as it affects the ordinary farmer in Saskatchewan. That, too, is absolutely vital.

What have we done? We brought about a reduction in interest rates of four percentage points, each of which saves farmers about $150 million in payments to financial institutions. We helped them reduce input costs. We increased direct support. We arranged for a degree of diversification. We brought about the largest single deficiency payment in the history of Canada.

We shall work with the farmers to make sure that they get through this critical period. As I said in western Canada, and I will tell my hon. friend again, with this Government, when western farmers cry out for support, there is someone here to answer them.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES FARM BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on the answers of the Prime Minister. He said the Government is taking all measures possible to deal with the immediate crisis in the West and the international trade problems.

The U.S. Government in the last two weeks has substantially expanded the U.S. Farm Bill to provide export subsidies to markets traditionally supplied by Canada. The U.S. is proposing further changes which would cause a further drop in prices. If the Government is interested in doing something for the western farmer is it prepared to take immediate action to forestall those actions which will have an even more damaging effect in the next six months on the farm economy of western Canada?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question was whether the Government has intervened with the United States administration with regard to various actions it is taking which are harmful to the interests of Canadian agriculture. The answer is that it certainly has and will continue to do so.

A discussion on precisely that matter occupied a large portion of the lunch convened by the Prime Minister for the President at 24 Sussex Drive in which the Prime Minister made clear, in no uncertain terms, Canada's grave concerns about the implications for Canadian production, and indeed for world trade in agriculture, of the U.S. Farm Bill. I will be carrying that message to San Francisco later this week when I meet with Secretary Shultz again.

CANADIAN ACTION INTERNATIONALLY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He just said that the matter was raised at a luncheon with the President. A week after that luncheon the President of the United States authorized his own administration to expand substantially farm exports in order to challenge Canadian traditional markets in both the Middle East and the Soviet Union. It must have been a hell of a luncheon discussion to get that result.

The point is that the Americans are continuing to move into those markets using their subsidy programs. What further action will we take to stop that kind of invasion of those markets and that use of the Farm Bill?

Has Canada responded to the proposal which was put forward by GATT several months ago for us to put our agricultural negotiating position on the table so that we know clearly what initiatives and priorities we have in agriculture? Are we going to do something deliberate to stop the United States taking that action? Have we put our proposals in front of GATT?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you know my natural modesty. I hesitate to suggest to the Hon. Member that he read the speech I gave to the Canada Grains Council in his own city about a month ago in which I set out quite precisely the five principles which Canada has advanced into the OECD and GATT which, if agreed to by other partners involved in international trade in agriculture, could begin much more quickly than in 10 years' time some movement away from the cycle of subsidy which we are now facing.

We intend to press this issue and the interests of Canadian farmers in international negotiations at every opportunity. We have been doing that and intend to continue to do that.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be a question and a supplementary question from the Hon. Member for Churchill followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Drummond. That will close off Question Period.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

FREE TRADE—IMPACT ON WOMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, during the First Ministers' Conference last year the Prime Minister promised that there would be a full study of the impact of government policies on women. Has the Government undertaken a study to learn what the impact of the Government's free trade position is on women?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the way in which the Government is approaching trade will result in the future of jobs and opportunity in Canada being very positive for women. Women do best in an atmosphere of growth, competition, and productivity. That is where women get real economic opportunities.

Allow me to point out that poor countries do not have a good record with regard to women. We want to ensure that there is prosperity, competition, and productivity in this country.

GOVERNMENT STUDY—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the women of Canada appreciate the rhetoric, but I think they want to know whether the Government is going to live up to its promise to have a full impact study of its economic policy on free trade and how it affects women. Will that be made public?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, no Government has done a better job for women than has this Government. There are 427,000 more women working today than there were on the day of the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: That is because we are looking forward and not to the past. We have employment equity, job training, trade which will expand job opportunities, more women working fulltime, and tax reform coming. All these things will work for the benefit of women in this country.

* * *

[Translation]

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): My question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and deals with the textile industry. Last Friday night, one of our companies, Dominion Textiles, which manages its production in a very modern way, won the Regional Industrial Olympiad. Could the Minister guarantee the House that the textile policy will be followed, to allow the industry to continue and prosper in Canada.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like, first of all, to congratulate that company on behalf of the Canadian Government.

Secondly, you may recall that the textile policy has been in effect since July 30th, 1986 and that its main objectives are to limit imports and to allow for a better control. According to information received from industry representatives, the industry is very pleased with the Government's policy which has led to a consolidation of employment and a streamlining of operations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney:

> That this House endorses the Meech Lake statement of principles approved by all First Ministers, April 30, 1987 as a basis for Quebec's participation as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution, and as a basis for the establishment, in a spirit of equality and fairness, of a process for considering further constitutional reforms.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) had completed his speech. I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to question the Hon. Minister of Justice or comment on his speech. If there are none, we will resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). With officials of his Department, he is preparing the final legal text of constitutional changes agreed upon at the Meech Lake meeting. Could the Minister tell the House when this text will be ready? Could he guarantee the House that we will have an opportunity to debate the proposed resolution before it is submitted for approval to the provincial Premiers?

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my Department has been working, on an urgent priority basis, on the wording which will be submitted to the First Ministers. As the Hon. Member will appreciate, the process will involve discussions among the participants and those First Ministers who must take that step in a constitutional sense to ensure that the wording is satisfactory for First Ministers to take to their respective legislatures. We are working on it on a very urgent basis.

Bilateral discussions are, of course, taking place. We are quite prepared, through participation in this debate, to hear points of view. It is very helpful to hear comments of all Members of Parliament.

With regard to the manner in which this whole proposition can be dealt with, I think that would be best left to discussions between the House Leaders to find the most appropriate methods of dealing with the matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my question really deals with the legal text. Will the Minister give his undertaking today that he will table in the House the legal text before—and I emphasize "before"—it is brought to the Premiers for their approval so that we can discuss the legal text in this House?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand what the Hon. Member is suggesting. The Hon. Member may not have meant that we should somehow ignore the First Ministers with regard to discussions about the text, but that would be the result of his proposal.

I believe there will be opportunities for Hon. Members to study the legal text at the appropriate time. I do not want to suggest for a moment that we are going to ignore the First Ministers. The matter will be discussed with them to ensure that we have something with which we can move, on the same basis as we arrived at the consensus which the Hon. Member, his Leader, and his Party have indicated in this debate that they support absolutely.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his Government have made provision for this House to debate for days, weeks, and perhaps even months, the death penalty. We are debating this proposal for one day. Would the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) care to comment on the strange sense of priority which allows the Government to find a lot of time for the death penalty debate and only one day for debate on this very important measure?

• (1510)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I can give a satisfactory answer to the Hon. Member. I think the position on the capital punishment debate is that Members on the government side are prepared to have this matter go to a vote right now and that the opposition Members want to talk on this for quite a long time. I am not disputing the right of the Hon. Members to have—

Mr. Gauthier: It is supposed to be a free vote.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am just giving my view of life in the House of Commons and why, when Members ask me a question, they sometimes do not mean what they purport to say. I am trying to put this into perspective.

I can tell the Hon. Member, as I said in my remarks, that I think it is important. I believe he would agree with me because he is a man of principle who stands up regardless of pressures, some that are even brought on him by colleagues in his own caucus. He would understand that this is a matter of very important leadership. It has been in the public domain and I do not understand why we cannot have a vote at the end of the day showing that we all support it, because everyone has stated they are in favour of it. It is important to us that the principle is decided.

The Hon. Member knows that the opposition Parties have many opportunities to raise this issue in whatever context they want. Allotted opposition days are always available to them. I believe, in terms of the time that should be made available for this very historic occasion, his House leader should meet with the Government House Leader; I am sure they can come to an understanding about what is appropriate in dealing with these matters.

Personally, I believe the principle is important, one on which we should have a vote to show the unanimity with which we accept Quebec in the Constitution, and the prospect of a continuing role for other provinces in western Canada and Atlantic Canada to bring matters onto the agenda, as well as the two central provinces. I believe this is a wonderful day in Canadian history, and I am glad the Hon. Member's Party is supporting this Agreement.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) a question with respect to an important element of this Accord that has not yet received a great deal of attention, the element with respect to the naming of appointees to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The Supreme Court of Canada is one of the most important institutions in our land now and, of course, has increasing importance in Canada in view of its powers the Charter of Rights and to interpret the provisions of the Constitution itself.

Will the Minister explain why the Government gave away the power of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to choose the best possible man or woman from the provinces or the regions to sit on that court? We strongly support consultation with the provinces before Supreme Court of Canada judges are named, but what will happen in the event that the nominees of the province or a particular region are unacceptable to the Government, yet the particular province insists it wants to maintain that list? How will this deadlock between the provinces and the federal Government be broken?

Finally, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to appoint a particular outstanding man or woman from one of the provinces but that person is not even on the list that has been submitted by the province, the federal Government's hands are tied.

Why has the Government accepted a proposal which could very seriously weaken the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I find that to be an incredible proposition on the part of the New Democratic Party. I must ask the Hon. Member again, as I do on so many occasions, if his question reflects the position of his Leader and Party. If he is speaking as an individual Member, I understand, but if the New Democratic Party is suggesting that Premier Pawley should have no role in terms of the appointments of a Supreme Court judge, I do not accept that proposition.

I suggest that in this country the Government has at least demonstrated the ability to work in a co-operative federalism with a view to having real consultation. I say to the Hon. Member that naturally it is a decision to be made by the federal Government in the final analysis, but to be made on the basis of names put forward. There will be a real sense of participation, partnership, and discussion in the process of appointing judges to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I know the Hon. Member believes that it is important to ensure that all regions of Canada are dealt with equitably. Both of us are from western Canada and he would want to make sure that western Canadian premiers and Governments duly elected by western Canadians can send a strong signal as to the composition of the court and its western representatives.

I do not look at this in a negative sense, but as a positive way in which we can develop and encourage co-operative federalism. I do not anticipate a deadlock situation, quite the contrary.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, after the bafflegab of the Minister, perhaps he could answer the very specific question. What happens if Grant Devine or Bill Vander Zalm submit to the Prime Minister of Canada names of people who are clearly not acceptable to sit on the Supreme Court of Canada, the federal Government returns those names to the Premier but the Premier insists on putting those names forward? What mechanism will there be to break a deadlock between the federal and provincial Governments in the naming of the judges to the highest court of the land? How will that be done?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it is a hypothetical situation. In this case, as in so many cases, my own experience has demonstrated that, by and large, the whole appointment process is one in which it is possible to have sane and legitimate discussions with provincial Premiers and Governments.

I do not think it is appropriate to assume that these matters of national interest begin with the lowest common denominator. I do not believe that is the Canadian way. It is inconceivable to me that the federal Government and the western premiers could not find some consensus with respect to the name of an appointee to represent western Canada. I suggest that it has not happened and will not happen. I believe we will be able to find support for a representative person who has the prime criterion of competence with respect to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I hope that we do not consider this constitutional discussion on a negative basis because constitutional building involves a very substantial element of understanding and trust. Our present Constitution contains many concepts that are not precisely defined, but they have not impeded us from having an outstanding country and one in which we can carry on, to the benefit of Canadians. I simply say to the Hon. Member that that is the attitude I take in this process. I hope the Hon. Member will agree.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the important subject raised by my colleague concerning the procedure that will be followed. We were asking whether we could debate the resolution before it is formally approved by the 11 First Ministers. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) suggested in his answer that somehow this would not be possible because the resolution that would come here will be drafted in consultation with the 11 First Ministers. Surely there is no inconsistency. Once the formal approval is applied to that resolution, it is very difficult for the Government to seriously consider practical suggestions that might be made by our Party or the New Democratic Party.

I hope there will be consultation in the preparation of the final resolution, but will the Minister of Justice undertake that however the final resolution is prepared, before it goes to the level of First Ministers' approval there will be good faith by the Government to present that resolution to us in the Chamber to allow the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), our Members, and Members of the New Democratic Party to make the kinds of suggestions that were given in 1981 when the Opposition participated fully in the constitutional proposals? Will we have a similar opportunity to make constructive suggestions for consideration by the Government before the First Ministers meet and put on the seal of approval on the final package?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, first, I think we should remember that constitutional amendment was created by the 1982 enactment and proclamation. It was a Government, of which the Hon. Member was a distinguished Member, that brought us to the reality that in order to bring about a Constitution, we must have the assent of First Ministers; in certain cases a percentage of the provincial Legislature; and in some cases we must have a unanimous proposition. Right now we have the prospect of a unanimous approach by all Premiers representing all political Parties of our country and the federal Government. I simply say that we have to take these matters in logical step.

• (1520)

The Hon. Member's House Leader can discuss with the Government House Leader and the House Leader for the New Democratic Party the appropriate way to deal with this matter. We must have a starting point. Unless we can come to some arrangement with respect to the wording with the First Ministers, there is nothing very useful for us to discuss. We have to be able to get that agreement.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that we have a proposition which will allow Hon. Members to declare themselves. It is not a question of keeping it from the House. The House will have a chance to declare itself. We have taken the first step to talk on this occasion on a statement of principle, to hear from Hon. Members, particularly from opposition Members, as to where they stand on the issues and to have their suggestions as to what should be included or not included. We are listening and we are going to try to do the very best job we can. I think our record in this area is pretty good. We have had unanimity and I hope we will continue to have the support of the Hon. Member's Party.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that the time for questions and comments has expired. I am in the hands of the House. Is there agreement to extend?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Over the years, Mr. Speaker, this House has certainly been the scene of major debates which, in more ways than one, have highlighted the history of our country. The one we are launching today is one more such debate, for the main concept underlying the Meech Lake constitutional agreement reflects the very heart of the country which Canadian men and women choose to build every day. As the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said in the House of Commons last May 1 after the Meech Lake agreement was announced, and I quote:

> It is a happy day for Canada and for Quebec, particularly for all those who believed that our country would remain united by respecting the diversity of its regions and the equality of its citizens.

At the outset of my remarks I want to tell the House that I intend to support the general thrust of the Meech Lake agreement as endorsed by the 10 Provincial Premiers of Canada. I would also advise the House that, in accordance with the position set forth by the Leader of the Opposition, I will vote in favour of the motion submitted for the consideration of the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Speaker, I would also add that, after consulting most of my colleagues from Quebec and the other provinces, we are looking at a process which, although it may contain certain difficulties, constitutes an orientation which enables us today to support the Meech Lake constitutional evolution. Need I recall that one of the reasons which prompted me to return to active political life, this time at the federal level, was to fight to find a way to make the adjustments required so that Quebec would at last sign the 1982 constitutional agreement? Despite my profound Quebec and francophone roots, and despite the diverging views we might entertain on some of the aspects of the Meech Lake agreement, I trust that nobody will question my dedication to fight for Canadian unity.

When I was a Cabinet Member in the Government of the Province of Quebec, my provincial Liberal colleagues and I fought against the independence movement then advocated by Pierre Bourgault, Gilles Grégoire and, finally, René Lévesque.

I defended Canadian unity in the Quebec National Assembly, in the universities, and in discussions at CEGEPs, at a time when even families were divided on the question of whether Quebec should be part of Canada.

I remember how shattered many Quebecers were, and with them the Bourassa Government's young Cabinet, when they heard our colleague, Pierre Laporte, had been killed. Pierre Laporte, a great Quebecer and a nationalist, lost his life in circumstances that are now history, in the defence of Canadian unity. I remember the tense social climate in the province at the time of the constitutional conference in Victoria, only a few months after Mr. Laporte's murder. When people ask why the Bourassa Government at the time was reluctant to support the Victoria Charter, my answer is this: Remember the political and social climate in Quebec after the October Crisis in 1970.

It would have been easy for me and for so many people of my generation to give in to popular pressure and succumb to the mass movement like so many young Quebecers who were entranced with the idea of political sovereignty for Quebec. Like so many colleagues in the Quebec Liberal Party and the federal Liberal Party, however, I did not give in to those pressures because I believed that the independence option was an illusion and that the greater interests of francophones in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada would be far better served within Canada, within a "renewed" Canada, than by an independence formula that, sooner or later, would have isolated Quebec, both economically and culturally, linguistically and socially. The hopes of Canadian federalists who stood up for national unity in Quebec rested on a "renewed Canada". A new federalism that would meet Quebec's aspirations, that was the message members of the Trudeau Government brought to Quebec in 1980.

That was the concept we defended during the referendum, and because the majority of Quebecers believed in the concept of an evolving federation, they voted no in the referendum. And I say to my anglophone colleagues on both sides of the House that they should never forget this fact, because it is fundamental to the debate we have begun today.

The then Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers who took part in the referendum debate clearly indicated their desire to do everything they could to find a balance that would be acceptable to Quebecers within the Canadian federation, in recognition of the fact that because of its language, its civil code, its history and its traditions, Quebec had a distinct identity within the Canadian federation.

Thanks to the 1982 Constitutional Accord, this country was able to achieve several objectives which I supported at the time and still do. The entrenchment of a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Canadian Constitution and the patriation of the Constitution to make Canada a fully sovereign state, capable of changing the basic laws of our country right here, without having to go to a foreign parliament—these were major, positive steps.

I have always thought, and I still do, that although the 1982 Constitutional Accord did not meet the legitimate aspirations of Quebecers who support national unity, it was because at the negotiating table, a separatist Quebec government was seeking formulas that would support its concept of independence, not the unity or enhanced unity of this country.

The 1982 Constitutional Accord was an unfinished symphony, and to finish it, it was necessary to approach the Quebec question in such a way that the parties concerned would accept the premise that no solution would be possible without recognition of Quebec's distinct identity within the Canadian federation. Quebec would also need the assurance that the rules of the constitutional game would not be changed with respect to the fundamental tenets of the federation, without the consent of the province of Quebec.

Therefore, in addition to the recognition of the distinct character of Quebec, the new constitutional balance was to provide security to Quebec at two different levels; first, at the level of immigration and second, at the level of the amending formula. The Meech Lake Accord positively answers the immigration issue. I do not intend to deal further with this matter on which there seems to be a general consensus. Moreoever, the resolution that was passed by the Liberal Party of Canada at its convention in November, 1986, stated somewhat the same idea which is to entrench in the Canadian Constitution the Cullen-Couture agreement.

As for the amending formula, I readily admit that I would much rather have the Victoria formula than that contained in the Meech Lake Accord. The Leader of the Official Opposition stated this morning some reservations which I share not only with regard to the amending formula but also about the meaning of some words appearing in the Meech Lake Accord. The intent of the legislator should be clearly indicated. Otherwise, the problems which were supposed to be solved could be compounded in the future. For example, there are some sincere and honest concerns about the capacity of the Government of Canada as a result of the Meech Lake Accord to intervene in regional economic development.

• (1530)

I do not think that we can brush aside these concerns simply because they are voiced by people from Atlantic Canada, Manitoba or Quebec. In my opinion, as we deal with this problem, we must bear in mind that the wording should be precise enough so that the text of the Constitution does not say things that are not intended and does not cause unnecessary division. I shall take spending power as an example.

I could go into a fiery plea against the limitation of spending power and argue that Quebec should never have accepted this text, since for the first time in the history of our country, it shall be written in the Canadian Constitution that the Federal Government has the right to intervene in matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. But I do not believe that such is the intent, as some would see it, since the argument of those who are against the limitation of spending power is the exact opposite.

I therefore submit that it should be possible to give a precise wording to what was the intent of the Prime Minister and the Premiers who met at Meech Lake. In my view, it is simply a question of coming to an understanding which will avoid unnecessary disputes in the future.

Coming back to the amending formula, I can say that given the circumstances and taking it for granted that what is essential has been preserved, since Quebec, as the other provinces of Canada, shall have a right of veto with regard to those institutions which are fundamental to the Canadian federation, I feel that the compromise which has been reached is essentially adequate and reasonable and that it deserves to be supported.

That is why, inasmuch as the legal wording that the Government will bring forward at the end of May does translate in a clear and precise fashion the basic principles contained in the Meech Lake Agreement, I shall support the agreement, Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, not only in this House but also in Quebec and all across Canada.

[English]

The Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Speaker, represents a conception of Canada that may depart from the vision of some. I understand the view expressed by my colleague from Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). The kind of Canada he is dreaming of is the one that Sir John A. Macdonald advocated leading up to 1867. It was not possible then, and it is not possible today.

The idea of uniting Canada's two founding peoples, peoples with varying regional and cultural interests, under the umbrella of one all-powerful central Government is an old and long-enduring dream on the part of some. In fact, the dream of a centralized governed Canada started as a pragmatic policy as early as 1822, when the merchant class of Upper Canada suggested that, in order to spread the cost of building the first

St. Lawrence Seaway the Government of the two Canadas, Upper Canada and Lower Canada, merge into one unit.

I point out to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount that that dream was one supported by the Lower Canada English elite, not because they had a stake in the commercial success of Upper Canada, but because they wished to protect their rights through the creation of a country in which they would no longer be a minority and in which, in the long term, they could assimilate the French-speaking population of Lower Canada in 1822.

I understand the opposition to the Accord of such fine Canadians as the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount, who oppose the intent of the Meech Lake Accord on the basis of their view that a strong central Government, a Government speaking for all Canadians in every field of human activity, is best for Canada.

But history tells us that Lord Durham's recommendation of 1839 did not work the way it was expected to, due to the strong resistance of the Quebec French Canadian population to unitary rule. The solution was then found in having the two majority systems of Government applied to the Government of the country under the new union.

The idea expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount, is no different from that expressed by the English-speaking Quebec minority of the early 19th century. It did not work then; it will not work today.

In 1867, Nova Scotia also expressed a desire for a certain degree of regional autonomy. In fact, the first separatist Government to be elected in Canada was in Nova Scotia. Joseph Howe's Government, not Réne Lesvesque's, was the first separatist Government in the history of this country. The Nova Scotia election of 1867, and not the 1976 Quebec provincial election, was the first to put a separatist Government in power, to promote regional interests.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, a 20-minute speech does not permit the recounting of all of the facts of Canadian history. One thing is clear, and it is that this country was built on the idea of the division of power between the provincial and federal levels of Government; it is a country that was built on the idea of two languages, French and English, which were later joined by new languages and new cultures.

According to one argument, the Meech Lake Accord is a step backward from the nation-building project which to date has led to a rich and vibrant society on the northern part of this great continent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, some people are suggesting that the Meech Lake Accord is a step backward as far as setting up a strong and prosperous nation is concerned. It seems to me that this idea is not supported by the experience of our past history. Quite the contrary, I believe that Canada will be a strong nation to the extent that the regional aspirations of the various provinces are met.

There are also those who object to the notion of enshrining Quebec's distinct character in the Canadian Constitution. I can understand that this idea might bother a number of Canadians. I can also understand their concern, but I ask all my colleagues in the House and all other Canadians: How is it possible not to recognize such an evident fact?

As Mr. Richard Rohmer stated in the May 5 edition of the Toronto Sun, and I quote:

[English]

> So, who in English-speaking Canada can quarrel with the proposition that Quebec is, in fact, a distinct society with a distinct identity?

And Mr. Rohmer continued, and again I quote:

> If you've never been to Quebec (outside Montreal—or inside it for that matter) you might have problems putting your mind around or accepting the reality of Quebec's distinctiveness. Put it this way: There are now more than 6 million direct descendants of the 60,000 French in Canada when Gen. Wolfe did his thing on the plains of Abraham.

Mr. Rohmer continued:

> And can you also believe that a substantial percentage of those French descendants (we now call them Francophones) don't speak a word of English! And why should they? They are a distinct, proud race who are as completely Canadian as any other race that has come to this vast nation.

That is what Mr. Rohmer wrote in the Toronto Sun of May 5, 1987—and I agree with him.

The recognition of the distinct character of Quebec is only recognizing a fact of life.

• (1540)

What can one do when confronted with a fact such as Quebec's specificity? One can try to escape from it, but it would not change the reality. In fact, the same people who refused to recognize Quebec's distinct character know so well that it expresses the fact that they refuse to recognize it precisely because they are scared to encourage Quebec's specificity to serve as a basis for Quebec separation. What a lack of confidence in Quebecers' attachment to Canada!

This attachment has been confirmed without a doubt when one examines the referendum results. Why should the rest of Canada doubt Quebec's good will and attachment to Canada, we being the only ones to vote for Canada? Does Quebec not lead the way in respecting the rights of our two founding peoples? Does Quebec refuse to fund schooling for religious minorities? No. Does Quebec refuse the right of English-speaking Canadians to speak their language in the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec or to use the English language to defend themselves in court? No, no, no. The answer to all those questions is no.

Please, let us not use this ill-structured argument to initiate doubts over Quebecers' loyalty to justice, to federalism, to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: Let us, instead, recognize the distinct character of my province within Canada, a society which in turn helps make all our country so different and, I would say, so much richer than our neighbour. Rather than erasing differences, let us benefit from our rich cultural heritage and continue to make this a caring, humane, understanding, and tolerant society, a model for all the world to admire and follow.

[Translation]

I agree that the Meech Lake Accord is not perfect. But it can be seen as an extremely important step in the process begun with the Constitutional Agreement of 1982. This step should make it possible for Quebec to adhere fully to the Canadian Constitution and for the Constitutional process to continue its development and adapt to the constantly changing conditions in both Canadian society and the outside world.

[English]

As Sir Wilfrid Laurier put it: "We are divided into provinces, we are divided into races, and out of these confused elements it is not always the ideal policy from the point of view of pure idealism which ought to prevail but the policy which can appeal on the whole, to all sections of the community".

Canada is a nation of diversity and compromise. This, some might argue, is its weakness. I say that it is its strength.

[Translation]

Personally, I rely on Canadians and trust in the good faith and generosity of the provincial Governments and the Members of this House for many, many years to come. On the basis of common sense, I am willing to wager that Canadian unity will be better served if we respect regional differences and if one level of Government does not try to impose its will on the other.

I, for one, feel that Canada is an arrangement which expresses the will of Canadians to live together. It is also a balancing act which has to be corrected every day and which needs constant protection and adjustment to new conditions. Historian Michel Brunet was right when he said that "All Canadian anti-federalists make the mistake of ignoring the past. If Canada is a difficult country to govern, it is not because it is a federal state; it has developed federal institutions because it is a difficult country to govern."

It is this balancing act which makes it possible for our federal state to adapt its institutions to the needs of the francophone minority today, and later on to the needs and interests of the various Canadian provinces.

[English]

I have only a minute remaining in which to finish my speech. May I have the unanimous consent of the House to continue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, as a newspaper reporter said, the Meech Lake Agreement is neither a miracle nor a mirage but, in my opinion, it is an opportunity. The Agreement includes elements of the resolution passed by the Liberal Party of Canada during its November Convention. There are differences though. Our resolution was more comprehensive than the Meech Lake Accord and I too would have liked to see more provisions included. We have this opportunity today because provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada have tried to meet, as we have tried to do it on this side of the House, the concerns of the Province of Quebec and the demands made by its Premier, Mr. Robert Bourassa. Mr. Bourassa's demands have not come out of a hat. They have been the subject of extensive consultations and have led to the election of that Government in December, 1985. Thanks to the provincial Premiers who tried to act in a positive manner and to the Liberal Party of Canada who tried to make a positive move in its November Convention, it is possible today to have a debate on the Meech Lake Agreement. I think this is an important step. Federalist as he may be, Mr. Bourassa strongly believes that Canadian unity will be best served if the fundamental law of this country recognizes the distinct identity of Quebec whereby its society is entitled to some guarantees in terms of immigration and development of federal institutions in this country.

[English]

The Meech Lake Accord, as I said, represents for me an opportunity which was in no small part assisted by the resolution passed by the Liberal Party of Canada at its November, 1986, convention. I am proud to be part of this House and to share this moment with my colleagues in all political Parties. I believe that the Meech Lake Accord is certainly following the right path, a path for a renewed and united Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to live in this House a very important event for Quebec, an event that transcends Party lines because I think that Quebec's adherence to Canada is for us on this side of the House both a rational and emotional issue. We have worked hard. My colleagues under the Trudeau Government have worked hard to reach that goal. Unfortunately, the political situation in Quebec at the time did not allow them to make that step. Today, we have a Conservative Government, but I will not indulge in partisanship and will not deny the speeches I made in the Quebec National Assembly, during the campaign of 1984 as well as within my Party because the solution in which I believe has been introduced by a Conservative Government.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for the depth of his emotion and the thoughtfulness of his address. I would agree and concur that we are all delighted that a mechanism has been found so that Quebec will become part de facto, as it has already been de jure, of Canada.

In recognizing the distinctive character of Quebec in the larger portrait of Canada, I am looking forward to an active participation. I was certainly very involved in the referendum and, as my hon. colleague knows, I was an Yvette, moved and actively concerned about maintaining Quebec in Canada. From that point of view I am delighted.

I have one concern which I wonder whether my colleague can answer for me. As we look at the linguistic duality, which I hope is the concept behind the Accord, I wonder whether he could advise me whether the linguistic protections will be promoted for the anglophones of Quebec and equally for the francophones hors Québec. This is one matter that is of concern in its many dimensions.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I think in all good faith that the intention was there, but I do not think that it is clearly indicated in the Accord. I wish, as I said in my speech, that the legal text would clarify those things.

I met with some English-speaking Quebecers during the week-end and they indicated that they were anxious about this. To avoid any confusion, the legal text should be very clear and precise so that the problems we think we are solving now will not create other sorts of problems in a few months when the judges of the Supreme Court will have to interpret the Bill. This is why I hope the legal text will be much clearer so that no confusion will exist.

• (1550)

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member and I am looking forward to reading the fine print as well. I bring to your attention, along with my colleague, the fact that the multicultural communities want to know if they are perceived as part of this distinctive characteristic of Quebec. Is that covered in "distinct society" as well as "distinctive character"?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I thought that the 1982 agreement on the Constitution recognized the multicultural aspect of Canada. It is in the body of the Constitution. I think it is well protected there.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to listen to a speech in this House that obviously comes from the heart, coupled with good thoughts from the mind as well. I would simply like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) for what I think is a first rate speech.

The Hon. Member will know I am a Member from Calgary, Alberta. I sat many long hours on the Constitution Committee some years ago and recognized a kind of kindred spirit of feeling among the many minorities in this country, which is a magnificent and very large country.

The French speaking people in the Province of Quebec are in the majority within that province but a minority within Canada. Many of us in western Canada, particularly from my province, feel that far too frequently we are viewed as a minority within the Canadian context, because we come from a province which is so far from the centre of Canada and sometimes there is a tendency to overlook and to forget.

I wanted to make that comment more than anything else but also to ask the Hon. Member if he or the Members from Quebec within his caucus have a sense of just how joyous and how pleased we are from that minority in the Province of Alberta with this undertaking. We think our joy is perhaps equal to that which the Member himself seems to feel. Is there any sense of that existing within his caucus about how pleased we are with this undertaking?

Mr. Garneau: I think it is a loaded question, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly agree and tell this House without any restriction, that in my caucus, and even my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), who expressed a certain reserve about the Accord, everybody agrees it is a good thing that Quebec is back in the Constitution. We understand that in 1982 a certain number of steps had been taken not only for Quebec but for other regions too.

We have to recognize that in 1982—and I note that the Hon. Member is from Calgary—the Constitution was amended and rewritten partly because of the question of natural resources. It was done at the request of the then Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed. It is a symphony that must be adjusted all the time, une symphonie inachevée. Nobody will believe for a moment, when and if the Meech Lake Accord finds its way into legal text, that everyone in this House will vote for it. The task is not finished. We will have to adapt the Constitution to any new situation that may arise, from the environmental point of view defence, or for any other reason. I am sure this will have to be done all the time because the federal system is a living institution. It is like a pendulum that swings from one side to the other. Sometimes the pendulum swings to the provinces and sometimes it swings back to the central Government.

I concluded my speech by saying that this matter should not be based on partisan politics. I want to remind the House that Liberals and Conservatives have been on both sides of the issue since the beginning of Confederation. Sometimes, and for years, the Liberal Party has been the Party of the regions. Why was the problem of Manitoba considered solved? It was because Laurier decided to respect the power of the regions.

The change of attitude was made after the war. During those earlier years the Tories were representing the national policy. It was the idea of John A. Macdonald. Then things switched. The Liberals became more centralized and the Tories became more regionalized. This is not a Party matter. I am pleased and I understand that all regions of Canada will be pleased if we can find good legal wording for the Meech Lake Accord. I would not like to—

[Translation]

—as we say, we should not put the cart before the horse, and find ourselves in a situation where my agreement of today would turn into a disagreement because of nit-picking about the meaning of words.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as this century draws to a close and we, as Canadians are seeking to redefine the values we share and confirm our common identity, we realize that Canada's unity is closely linked to our respect for diversity. And I therefore support the motion of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the master builder of the historic Meech Lake accord.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all Canadians that in a speech at Sept-Îles in August, 1984, the Right Hon. Prime Minister said that the very existence of this country was the result of a commitment by men and women of diverse cultures, languages and religions to resolve their differences, to harmonize their interests and to let the values of respect for others and a firm belief in one's own potential prevail.

Mr. Speaker, are we seeing the dawn of a new beginning in this country? I have often wondered whether my Quebec nationalism would be compatible with a pan-Canadian context and status. I believe that in the final instance, my feelings of pride are not so different from those of my colleagues in the Atlantic provinces, western Canada and Ontario.

It seems to me that today in Canada, in every part of this country, there is a common desire to affirm our various identities, to respect all aspirations and the potential for pursuing the most ambitious ideals.

Like so many fellow Quebecers, Mr. Speaker, I took part in the process that brought us here today with occasional feelings of reluctance, a feeling that we were being asked to give up too much, that there was a general lack of understanding for our position and also that we as Quebecers would not feel at home in this country. We sometimes had the impression that to some politicians, this country was a purely utopian dream that would never come true. Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful to recall that these fears and hesitations are part of this country's history and part of the reality on which we must build for the future.

Confronted with geographical, linguistic and cultural differences, we needed time to find our common ground, our common political aspirations. As a result of frank and forthright efforts at conciliation and the recognition of the basic tenets of a hard-won but ever vital reciprocity, today we are nearing the goal already pursued in 1864 by the Fathers of Confederation.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those representatives, one of those who have not always looked at the situation as we see it today, which gives us a much broader perspective of our country. We have all seen its regional particularities, its linguistic singularities, its cultural identities and, of course, its divisive elements.

Quebecers—surely because of language considerations mostly, but for other reasons as well—have been forced to proclaim, sometimes with infinite patience, their basic rights and their fair demands. In this sharing exercise which makes a great nation, they long harboured the impression that they were losers and they hesitated for a long time. They even went as far as proposing different options, Mr. Speaker, and I would suggest with all the consideration this issue commands that we can now appreciate some of the realities of 1980.

After seven years, Mr. Speaker, history no longer passes judgment on people. History can only confirm the facts and assess realities, and it will be up to those who will follow us to define and weigh these choices of 1980. At that time of deep reflection my own political convictions were torn between my attachment to this country and my pride in and allegiance to the other homeland, a double adherence which typifies each Canadian residing in this country. I know now that at the time many Quebecers were intent on continuing their exhaustive quest and deep interrogation with respect to the prospects for Canada and to the common and reciprocal will to build a home where living together is possible indeed but also pleasant and livable—pleasant in the sense that it pleases each and everyone, livable in the sense that one feels at home, and in the sense that one can fulfil one's personal life aspirations.

When I agreed to come to Ottawa to serve the interests of my region, first and foremost I wanted to echo the sentiments of Quebec within the Canadian confederation. I had to cope with a number of facts which until that time in my life did not have the rallying power they have gained since then.

[English]

I have expanded my horizon from sea to sea. I became an active Member of the House and I am pleased to serve as a member of the Cabinet and to participate in the decision-making processes of the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

I have learnt a lot from all those teachings, but I have nevertheless always felt that I belonged with that society which is now being recognized as a truly distinct one by the whole country.

This sensitivity, this openeness shown by our 1987 Canada, show me that I, as a great Quebec nationalist, can be a full member of this great—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, let us think of those who have come from Quebec to Ottawa since 1867; let us pay tribute to those who, in a sometimes hostile environment, stood up for Quebec in the federal arena; let us think of my present colleagues, honorable members of this House who came from Quebec in 1984 to represent their fellow citizens and defend their basic rights to equality and a fair share. I sympathize with them, and I think of those who work on the same objectives, but in the Province of Quebec. God knows how difficult and painful the exchanges have been over the years between those two political worlds. However, the concept of a united Canada was on its way. But for that concept to become a reality, there had to be a gradual recognition of the possibility for Canada to become a modern country at long last, to become a full-fledged economic, political and cultural entity.

A former Premier of Quebec, Jean Lesage, said: Adapting to one's environment is a basic law of life, it is a necessity for any living organism, and that goes for institutions as well as individuals. To live on, the Canadian Confederation must develop, and to develop, it must be able to reconcile the conditions of a specific point in history with its underlying principles and unswerving spirit.

Mr. Speaker, most of the position of Quebec with respect to Canadian federalism has been repeated consistently and unanimously by almost every premier of that province.

Mr. Speaker, the right to be ourselves, to ensure the permanence of our roots and institutions, to achieve individual and collective self-fulfillment, this right which we see as fundamental through the centuries and through all those men and women who shaped our history, this right is not a passing whim, but the noble and sound reality of Quebec nationalism, a nationalism, Mr. Speaker, which in our province is passed on from generation to generation and which is not, as some people might believe, the offshoot of passing idealisms. This nationalism has never failed even though it has expressed itself in different ways in different eras. This same nationalism, which has made us different from others within a same country, is now reflected in a positive way by this constitutional agreement which recognizes Quebec as a distinct society.

Today we know that when the Prime Minister spoke to the people of this country and the people of Quebec, particularly in terms of national reconciliation, he was thinking of the adhesion of Quebecers to a workable project.

We know also that the Prime Minister was speaking the truth when he expressed his will to have Quebec join the Constitution, and that he will be remembered in our history; beyond partisanship, beyond good and bad times, beyond words, we have to recognize in this man the immense understanding he has always shown in his own cultural duality for the distinct reality of Quebec, and his deep commitment to it.

I have personnally worked for this agreement, this historic agreement, since I belong to a generation which was always there when things were changing. In the course of this extraordinary development, I have managed to define my nationalism, my deep and vital sense of belonging to Quebec. But I have also felt with the same intensity that all my action was aimed at an opening onto "another homeland".

[English]

I have also seen an extraordinary thing happen, and I think all Canadians are aware of it. Over the many years of constitutional equivocation, we often saw the Province of Quebec claiming its role within Confederation and asserting what it maintained were fundamental rights. Quebec spoke of a division of power, of increased powers over immigration, of opting out, and of its own identity.

I am proud to say today that the intense reflection of Quebecers over all those years resulted in an openness from which all the provinces are now benefiting. That is the true spirit of this Confederation. That is the initiative which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saw as necessary in order to lead the country toward what I referred to earlier as modernity.

[Translation]

At Meech Lake, for the first time in Canadian history, the 11 First Ministers reached an agreement that must now be officially worded and signed.

We must not disappoint Canadians, we must make this a matter of honour. And I say, in a strong, unequivocal voice—Quebec's concurrence to the Constitution is possible.

We saw those First Ministers leave Meech Lake with the conviction it was possible. We heard them, back into their provinces, report to the people on an agreement in principle that meets their vision of the country and their genuine aspirations.

It is important that I should put this new agreement into the perspective of a Department of special concern to me—Immigration.

There is in that area an opening warranted by representations and projects, that will enable new Canadians to find substance for their material, and cultural needs. And there is above all an opening under which Quebec can ensure the new Canadians it is receiving can adapt rapidly to the language and culture patterns of French-speaking Quebecers, without thereby losing their own.

• (1610)

[English]

The various communities that live in this country make such a contribution that we must take the necessary steps to guarantee all of them full and complete well-being and development. As you are aware, Canada has a reputation as a generous country that welcomes immigrants. In order to continue this course we must unite our efforts so that nothing is spared in providing a welcome characterized by fairness and sharing. The respect for ethnic groups lies at the very heart of the vitality and dynamism of a country such as ours. To have a sense of this remarkable wealth, of these remarkable riches that come to us from elsewhere and that contribute so tangibly to our personal and collective development is to have at the same time a renewed and reassuring awareness of one's own nationalism.

[Translation]

My experience with the various communities, when I was at the Department of the Secretary of State, led me to a major realization. Quebec's cultural reality can fit into a federalist outlook where, thanks to a conjunction of languages and cultures, the essence can be deepened, the vital element retained and riches obtained. This is how modern nations are built. This is how Canada will be built, within a multiplicity that can respect entities.

I know it is with renewed conviction and enthusiasm that we will take all steps and initiatives needed to ensure nobody is hurt by our constitutional exercises. In this country, reciprocity is a requisite for reconciliation—the latter is not possible without the former. We can now feel that this reciprocity is understood and wanted, strongly flowing from the Meech Lake agreement. All we need do now is to translate this new confederative pact into concrete measures.

I have the impression that this country exists in plenitude, that we can acquire the desire to live in it. I know very many Canadians are making exactly the same reflection as I am making. Some made it before, our great predecessors, the visionaries of our country. To them we owe gratitude. But what interests me even more is that others after us will do the same thing because this country, Mr. Speaker, now seems to me to be headed for an irreversible accomplishment.

In conclusion, here is the part of the Sept-Îles statement I keep in mind: Canada is the challenge of men and women of various cultures, languages and religions to resolve their conflicts, harmonize their interests and actively promote the values of respect for others and surpassing oneself.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec there are injuries to heal, concerns to allay, enthusiasms to rekindle, and links of faith to restore. Canada offers plenty of room for the affirmation of all identities, the respect for all aspirations, and the quest for all ideals.

We are at the dawn of a genuine fresh start if we can substitute the prejudice of the agreement for that of discord. Renewal is the very principle of a democracy, its own way to regain vigour, to purify itself and to take a new expansion.

I have the deep conviction that we are witnessing one of those privileged moments when a whole country opens a new page of history, a page which will be written in a new style of dialogue and exchanges among all the artisans who are building a country.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the provincial Premiers on their open attitude to Quebec at the recent meeting at Meech Lake. This is of course a very important moment in Canadian history, now that we are finally about to recognize Quebec's distinct identity. It is time that formal recognition was given to the fact that the language and culture of the majority in Quebec is French and that the concept of a distinct identity was entrenched in the Canadian Constitution.

However, Quebec's distinct identity must be more clearly defined in the forthcoming constitutional text. In fact, there is no definition, or at least none was given in the agreement in principle. For the sake of present and future generations, we must clarify this concept as much as possible. We cannot afford any confusion in this respect. In fact, I am concerned about a statement by Senator Murray, the Minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations, who said that "distinct society" does not give any more powers to Quebec, and by the Prime Minister himself, who said on English language television that at Meech Lake, Quebec had not gained any powers it did not already have.

The forthcoming constitutional text must be clearer and more precise, because otherwise, it will be a matter for the courts to decide, while in our democratic society, the basic responsibility for drafting laws lies with our elected representatives.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians want constitutional peace, and they want a lasting, not a temporary peace. If the Meech Lake agreement in principle leads to confusion, if the constitutional text does not reflect this need for clarity, we can expect to see many more of those long, drawn-out constitutional debates that have left their scars on this country. The forthcoming constitutional text must be drafted on the basis of long term considerations of a higher order.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the clause concerning the appointment of justices to the Supreme Court of Canada and with the clause concerning immigration.

This last provision will have a vital impact in preserving the French identity of Quebec.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the wording to be used in the legal text will be important. I have, however, some reservations with respect to the federal institutions amending formula, particularly with respect to section 42 which is too rigid in my mind.

From a constitutional point of view, and in order to better acknowledge the various realities of the various regions of Canada, the effort of the Federal Government to decentralize its powers for the benefit of provinces is a welcome one. It is welcome, however, provided Canadian men and women in the various regions of the country will derive similar benefits from this devolution of authority, and I think for instance of medicare. It is most desirable, Mr. Speaker, that provinces be able to develop such programs based on their own specific features. It now seems possible to develop such pan-Canadian programs while at the same time decentralizing them in the provinces; the key word here is that in essence they should be equivalent.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the draft of the legal text to come will be extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude on a positive note, and I will be commenting further once we get the final draft of the constitutional text.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between what has just been said by the New Democratic member and the premise of the question put by the Hon. Member for Burnaby after Question Period. It seems the New Democrats on one side of their mouths support changes to the Supreme Court of Canada, and on the other side they oppose them. May I ask whether that Party accept the change that gives provinces the right to appoint judges to the Supreme Court?

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to try and answer that question, which I feel sure is not partisan, and I will refer to what the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), our Party Leader, stated at noon.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, since the Leader of the New Democratic Party did not express a view about that, I hope he will soon. I also want to ask about the resolution put forward by the New Democratic Party on the question of the adhesion of Quebec in the Canadian Constitution. In its resolution passed at the national policy convention in March, 1987, Quebec is given the right to opt out and receive financial compensation when programs in provincial jurisdiction are transferred to the federal level. No other province is given a similar right in the resolution of the New Democratic Party.

I am more concerned that the resolution of the New Democratic Party does not require that Quebec, upon opting out, provide a compatible program which meets national objectives. From the speech of the Hon. Member—

[Translation]

One can take it the New Democratic Party has now changed its resolution in order to require that, on programs usually coming within provincial purview, Quebec must now have an equivalent program that follows the same objectives, or are they still with the resolution they adopted in March?

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, in that respect, the decentralization of powers, I would perhaps like to make available to him a letter sent by Mr. Broadbent to Mr. Trudeau in 1980, which clearly shows the feeling and belief of our Party concerning decentralization to provinces but, as I said, under certain conditions.

Second, I will finally refer the Hon. Member to our convention held last March in Montreal, during which we came up with a unanimous resolution on the official recognition of the unique nature and the principle of decentralization.

Mr. Speaker, I feel we have been clearly consistent.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, let us take for example a daycare policy, and this is hypothetical, since we all know that Quebec is very progressive, but we have to ask that question to explain the position of the Party.

If all provinces agree unanimously to a daycare policy, the cost of which would be shared between the federal and provincial Governments, except Quebec which refuses to meet national objectives or to agree to a program compatible with national objectives, would the resolution of the New Democratic Party still apply or would they nevertheless give a compensation to a province which is not willing to offer an equivalent program?

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I think, as I said before, that the position of our Party on decentralization is very clear. This kind of question should have been addressed to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

[English]

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased and honoured to take part in this debate on the Meech Lake Agreement. The events of April 30 will long figure prominently in the history of our country.

[Translation]

At last, the Canadian constitutional family was reunited.

[English]

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said to this House on May 1, the Meech Lake Agreement "enhances the Confederation bargain and strengthens, I believe, the federal nature of Canada". He, along with the other First Ministers, deserve our heartfelt congratulations. In particular, the Prime Minister's leadership and negotiating skills were decisive in bringing this question to a successful resolution. It was an act of statesmanship by him and all the First Ministers. The agreement has won many positive and constructive comments from across the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this motion is of great importance to Quebec, naturally, but the commitment of that province to further constitutional reform is also significant.

[English]

No one should be led to believe that the Meech Lake Agreement closes the book on constitutional reform. In fact, a failure at Meech Lake would have spelled continued constitutional blockage. That which has been achieved is only the conclusion of the most recent chapter. There is still a great deal to be done. In particular, we must address the constitutional priorities of special interest to certain provinces and regions. Among the priorities of greatest interest, especially to the west, I believe, is Senate reform. The desire for Senate reform reflects a wish to participate fully in decision-making at the national level. It is based on the belief that each region should feel that it counts.

• (1630)

I want to say a few words about the significance of the Meech Lake Accord for Canada's future constitutional development. Members will recall that in the House of Commons on April 9, the Prime Minister reminded all First Ministers of their commitment under the August, 1986, Edmonton declaration, namely, that the top constitutional priority was to bring about Quebec's full and active participation in the Canadian federation. He went on to quote the declaration which stated that there was a consensus among the Premiers that then they will pursue further constitutional discussions on matters raised, which will include, among other items, Senate reform, fisheries, property rights, and so on.

[Translation]

The agreement reached by the First Ministers on April 30 at Meech Lake, which marks the return of Quebec into the Constitutional fold, is an important step which will strenghten our federation.

[English]

As part of the agreement, they approved an entrenched second round of negotiations aimed at fostering further constitutional development. The Meech Lake Accord requires that a First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution be held not less than once per year and that the first be held within 12 months of the proclamation of the amendment but not later than the end of 1988.

Among the items on the agenda to be considered at these conferences will be Senate reform, including the functions and role of the Senate, the powers of the Senate, the method of selection of Senators, the distribution of Senate seats, and finally, as demonstration of the Prime Minister's good faith and commitment, the agreement provides that until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished the federal Government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal Government.

The provinces thus will have a real say on appointments to the Senate until an agreement is reached on more comprehensive reform. Provincial Governments will also participate in nominations to the Supreme Court of Canada for the first time in our history.

There can be no doubt about the Prime Minister's seriousness about Senate reform. He announced last week in Lethbridge that the Government will put "a specific proposal on the table for Senate reform" when the First Ministers meet for the first time on this issue in 1988. That is encouraging to all of us who believe in genuine Senate reform. As we approach such discussions among the Government's concerned, a range of approaches will no doubt be put forward. There is certainly no shortage of proposals.

Senate reform and a directly elected Senate, in particular, are issues that have acquired much popular appeal. There is little doubt that direct election represents in part a desire for a stronger voice in federal institutions. I believe that it also appeals to our democratic values.

Many Members of Parliament have shown a considerable interest in Senate reform. The Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate, for example, carried out one of the most comprehensive studies on this issue ever done by a public body.

That report was tabled in the House in January, 1984. It called for a directly elected Senate in order to strengthen the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of all Canadians in all parts of the country. The committee believed that these reform proposals would improve what it saw as the Senate's principal role, namely, regional representation.

The joint committee recommended a Senate of 144 Members, with seats distributed among the provinces on the basis of a weighted representation. In other words, smaller provinces would have proportionately more than the others, but every province would not have the same number of seats. Senators were to be elected for a single nine-year term in single member constituencies.

The committee proposed that the Senate have a suspensive veto over ordinary legislation of 120 sitting days, divided into two 60-day periods. A Bill adopted by the House of Commons and rejected by the Senate, therefore, could not be presented for Royal Assent until the House had adopted the Bill a second time, and that second adoption could not take place until at least 60 sitting days had elapsed since the Senate rejected the Bill.

[Translation]

For a Bill of linguistic or cultural importance, a double majority would have been required: first, a majority of Senators and second, a majority of French-speaking Senators.

[English]

Finally, the special joint committee addressed the question of responsible government and the possible impact of reform as it had recommended. Its members expressed the view that a reformed Senate should not be able to undermine Canada's well tried system of responsible government.

Calls for a directly elected Senate have grown. In March, 1985, a special select committee of the Alberta Legislative Assembly endorsed what is now generally referred to as the Triple E Senate. By this, they mean direct election, equal representation by province, and effective powers. As the Alberta special committee argued: "Canada needs an effective Upper House in order to protect the diverse interests of Canadians".

The special committee of Alberta recommended that election be based on the first post-the-post system. The Senate would consist of 64 Senators, six from each province and two from each territory.

Their proposal was based on the view that it is important that the Senate be as independent as possible from the House of Commons while at the same time not unduly hindering the work of the Lower House. The Senate would retain the power to amend any Bill with the provision for the House of Commons to override any amendment or veto that the Senate proposed. Finally, this Triple E Senate would have double majority veto on language matters.

The recommendations of that report were unanimously endorsed by the Alberta Legislature in May, 1985. On March 10 of this year, the Alberta Legislature unanimously registered its support for the concept of a Triple E Senate.

Triple E Senate reform holds great attraction for a number of political leaders in the west. As Hon. Members are aware, Premier Getty is a strong advocate of the Triple E proposal. In his April 5 speech to the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party Convention, he declared that Canada "can only grow in a healthy way if our regional representation is fair and balanced". Following the Meech Lake meeting, Premier Getty repeated that he will be pushing for a Triple E Senate. The former Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, has also come out in support of this idea.

As we proceed seriously to consider Senate reform, we will need to answer some difficult questions, such as what the powers of the reformed House should be, its relationship to the House of Commons, and its effect on the powers of provincial Governments. In this regard, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) recently injected a judicious note of caution. Speaking in Camrose, Alberta, on April 25, he wisely pointed out that many questions "have to be considered very carefully as we proceed with Senate reform because you cannot change one institution in isolation from the rest". He also said: "We want changes that make Canada work better. That requires both commitment and care". This is the approach, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs affirmed, with which the Government will address the undeniable need for Senate reform.

• (1640)

In closing, I want to repeat what the Prime Minister said in this House on May 1, and I quote:

> The Meech Lake agreement is good for Canada and good for Canadians. It will unblock the Constitutional reform process and enable Canadians to turn their attention to other issues such as Senate reform and fisheries.

The tabling and proclamation of this agreement will conclude the first round of Constitutional renewal. Senate reform will be at the top of the agenda for the second round. Let us applaud what has been accomplished. Let us look forward to further reform aimed at strengthening Canada. Is it really too un-Canadian to rejoice and celebrate this day of national renewal?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): There being no questions or comments, we will resume debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): In 1982, Mr. Speaker, I was a Minister in the Trudeau Government at the glorious time of the patriation of our Constitution. This major achievement has contributed to the enhancement of Canada, and I still feel very proud of what we accomplished then. But as others have indicated, it was to a very large extent an incomplete symphony.

[English]

At the time of great rejoicing in 1982 when the Constitution was brought back, we were unable to secure the approval of the Province of Quebec to the constitutional package. The issue was tested in court and it was held that the repatriation was effective nonetheless, that it was binding in all parts of Canada, including within the Province of Quebec. However, a legalistic approach cannot be the beginning and end of a story like that. There is more to it than simply legally concluding that repatriation had been achieved.

I approach this debate, as does my Party, on the premise that it is extremely important that the approval of the Government of the Province of Quebec be achieved for the Constitution of Canada. That is not because it is legally required but because otherwise constitutional growth, national identity, and a sense of Canadianism are adversely affected.

I would like to give some specific examples and show how very important it is that the Meech Lake initiative advance and succeed, although I will suggest some areas in which I hope there will be changes. First, those critics of Canada, not only within the Province of Quebec but elsewhere, can use the fact that Quebec has never approved of the Constitution to attack Canadian identity and Canadian nationality. Separatists can say that this is not a freely arrived at Constitution, gladly and serenely accepted by all the people of Canada, that it is less than that. That type of criticism can be damaging to our country.

There is also the difficulty of achieving further constitutional evolution. We can talk about reforming the Senate, about establishing Indian self-government and about any change, any development in the Constitution such as bringing in new provinces. None of these measures which are on the Constitutional agenda for the future, the changing of powers, the reform of some of our federal institutions, can be achieved well without Quebec's participation.

It is interesting to note the ironic fact that without Quebec's participation in the Constitution, my own Province of Ontario has a veto. How satisfactory is it to the rest of Canada that one province has a veto when provincial constitutional conferences are held and amendments are proposed? The reason is that to approve an amendment under the present Constitution, seven provinces covering 50 per cent of the population have to agree. If all of the other provinces which attend such a conference agree and Ontario disagrees, the amendment cannot be adopted. Therefore, this unfinished business is not simply a matter of an elegant repatriation of a Constitution. It is not simply a wish or hope that the Constitution be accepted and understood in all parts of the country. It is a serious constitutional defect that Quebec not be part of it, and for all of our joy in 1982 in bringing the Constitution forward, there is still unfinished business which must be attended to and which I think must be attended to soon. Not only do I feel that way but all of the Premiers, the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Province of Quebec, agreed that the top priority would be to correct that piece of unfinished business.

The Liberal Party, the main architect of the 1982 Constitutional Accord, made its own attempts within the Party, which culminated in success last November, at arriving at a formula which, in the opinion of our Party—and it was a strongly held opinion—should be the basis for the next stage of evolution of the Constitution, the stage of bringing Quebec on board.

When I look at the Meech Lake Accord and the agreements actually reached by the Government and the provinces, I see it is different from the resolution of the Liberal Party in its convention last November. I feel that it is something of an evolution in the idea of federalism, that it re-enforces the provinces and their powers in a way which goes beyond the resolution which our Party arrived at last November.

I can say I have no dilemma in deciding if it is more important to bring Quebec on board now or if Quebec should come on board under the terms of the Liberal Party's resolution of last November. For me, there is no dilemma; it is an easy matter to resolve. I think it is more important that the Government of Quebec come on board as approving the Constitution now. At the same time, I serve notice, as did my Leader, that we have an agenda for this Parliament and we will try in every way we can to ensure that when the final resolution is brought forward to bring Quebec on board into the constitutional arrangements, it contains some of the elements of our resolution, more than it does now, and that it deals with some of the problems which I intend to raise right now.

• (1650)

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that the only items which appear to have been considered were items raised by the provincial Governments: matters of reinforcing their own authority, of ensuring that the Constitution provided for provincial powers to be exercised and to evolve. Nothing was requested by the federal Government to reinforce the authority of the federal Government in any way at all.

It is fine to offer the provinces changes which make them more comfortable, but I ask the federal Government to put forward items also that would strengthen the federal Government's side of the equation.

After all, if we recognize that there are areas where the provincial Governments should have more authority, so we have always recognized that there are areas where the federal Government should have more authority: for example, strengthening the economic union of Canada.

In our resolution of last November, while recognizing the need of the provinces to evolve with more authority, we also insisted that there be measures to strengthen the economic union of Canada.

There are barriers imposed by the provinces which prevent products from travelling, within an economic union, from one province to another, which prevent or inhibit workers from going from one part of Canada to another to find employment.

I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that, in an evolution toward a strengthening of provincial authority, there would also have been asked by the federal Government, in return, that there be some strengthening of the federal Government's power to achieve the goals which we all want our federal Government to be stronger in carrying out, such as developing the economic union of Canada; looking at questions of free trade with more authority than is currently the case under present constitutional arrangements.

As my Leader has already said, we would prefer to see a formula that would more easily permit the entry of Yukon and Northwest Territories into provincehood than that which will result from the arrangements proposed under the Accord.

I would like to have seen the federal Government recognize, as we did in our resolution of last November, what we call regional entitlements, meaning that when there is a federal program put forward in which a lot of federal money is spent, there ought to be some constitutional responsibility to be certain that that money is spent in a way that benefits all regions of Canada.

One can think of the CF-18 contract, something which was much in the news while we were dealing with our resolution of last November. We had a constitutional provision in our resolution which I think would have helped in that situation. It would have strengthened Canada by ensuring that benefits derived from federal government activities are shared, with some kind of entitlement, among the regions of Canada.

I want to turn now to some of the devolution of authority to the provincial Governments. In expressing my concerns in this regard, it is my hope that this devolution of authority will be addressed and dealt with between now and the time that the Accord becomes final.

My hope is that it will become final and that there will be an agreement bringing Quebec, comfortably, positively and approvingly, into the Constitution.

The opting-out provision is at least vague, and perhaps somewhat troublesome.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in his remarks today that if a medicare program came along, it would surely be adopted, in the same way that it was under the former constitutional arrangements. I have to question that, Mr. Speaker. I would hope so, and I would hope the language will make it clear; but, I remind the Prime Minister of Canada that when the medicare program was put forward, it was strongly objected to by the Province of Ontario.

The federal authority to spend in provincial areas is an important fact, and we, as representatives of an opposition

Party in the House and the voice of federalism in Canada, would want to be certain that it not be unduly constrained. If, for example, we in this Parliament determine that there should be child care, that there should be a guaranteed annual income, we want to be certain that Canada will have the capacity to deliver that program to our constituents in all parts of the country.

I want to express some concerns about the resolution dealing with the distinct society. I do not want to be a nit-picker and argue about whether Quebec is a distinct society or a distinctive society. I do want to express my satisfaction that the bilingual nature of Quebec is recognized and the bilingual nature of Canada. As well, I want to indicate that we will be watching to ensure that minority language rights inside Quebec, and those outside Quebec, are not diminished by this constitutional package, that the anglophone minority in the Province of Quebec can be confident on the ground that the Constitution provides a measure of security in respect of their rights.

I would think that if the Government of Quebec, representing both the anglophones and the francophones, can express concern in the larger Canadian community about the security of the francophones in Canada, it should also understand, as I believe it does, the legitimate need of the anglophone minority in the Province of Quebec also to feel secure. I should like to see some reciprocity in that respect. I should like to see the francophone minority in Manitoba and the francophone minority in Ontario also feel secure constitutionally.

I hope it is not too late for this very important issue, an issue which may be affected by the vague language before us today. I hope it is clarified, and clarified in such a way that it will provide a sense of security and a greater sense of harmony to the minority language communities in provinces where they exist in important numbers, such as Manitoba, Ontario, and the Province of Quebec.

In respect of the changes to the Supreme Court of Canada Act, I commented earlier today about what I see is an equivocation within the New Democratic Party in terms of where they stand on these changes. I should like to say where we stand on it, and that is that we recognize——that the Supreme Court of Canada has the responsibility at an important moment in our history to decide between the claims of the two levels of Government, that is between the federal and provincial jurisdictions. It can be said that the current situation where the federal Government assumes the full responsibility for appointing judges is rather strange. If a Court has to decide between two levels of Government, it is rather strange that just one level of Government should appoint its judges. So far, I feel, as most Canadians do, I believe, that our judges have been appointed in an exemplary fashion. We have had judges who have ruled with complete impartiality between the two levels of Government, but it is certainly—

[Translation]

[English]

I think it is a legitimate question to address: How can we pick judges in such a way that it does not look as if they only had the support, approval and legitimacy of the federal Government choosing them, which is the present arrangement? But to go the other way and turn it all over to the provinces, to say that only the provinces can put forward lists from which judges will be selected, does not solve the problem, to my mind.

I hope the federal Government will address the question of what happens in the event that the provincial list is not satisfactory to the federal Government. Do we then sit back, with vacancies on the court, until it becomes a political issue and is settled in an election? I do not think that that would be very satisfactory. I have expressed our concerns; I have raised the question.

Before the final version comes before us, it is my hope that the legitimate interests of the provincial and federal levels of Government will be recognized, and not in what seems to be quite a one-sided way as in the Agreement now before us.

Next, I should like to turn to the question of the Senate. Our Party is now on record, and we were last November, as favouring an elected Senate.

That does not take us to the proposal put forward—I understand without even being requested by the provinces—at the Meech Lake Conference, a proposal which gives the provinces the right to nominate for appointment to the Senate individuals from their respective regions. I tend to think of that as a Trojan horse. What can happen if these interim arrangements become permanent, as sometimes happens, is that eventually we could have Senators phoning for instructions to head office at their provincial government seat before deciding how they will vote or before voting. In a situation like that we could not only have another provision which limits the power of the federal Government to spend in areas of provincial jurisdiction, but we could also find our hands tied by provincial Governments in doing the things Parliament wants to do within its own areas of jurisdiction.

• (1700)

We could bring forward a Bill to introduce a new program totally within federal competence as an amendment to an existing statute, and we could find our hands tied by Senators phoning head office for their instructions.

I should like to ask that the Senate provision be examined as well. I think it could be improved. As I said, I have no commitment to the present Senate. Our caucus and our Party very strongly favour an evolution of the Senate, but I ask that it be an evolution that is federal and recognizes the regions without the injection of such a strong element of provincial control.

In my final moments I want to put forward two more thoughts. I think this package will benefit from parliamentary input. I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who is listening, will reconsider the position he has taken on the resolution in its final form en route to the final constitutionalization, so that we have another opportunity to deal with it here. Whether it be a parliamentary committee, a joint committee, or a House committee, or whether it be some work on the resolution in the Department of Justice consulting with the provinces, I hope we come back with something more precise and something that reflects the concerns which have been expressed in this place. I hope he will reconsider and not simply bring us back something to rubber-stamp.

[Translation]

It is not enough for the Parliament of Canada to be asked to agree, without being really entitled to make suggestions and comments in this House.

[English]

I do not want to take away from the achievement which is before us. We could not have sat back from 1982 with an offer on the table and have said: "This is it; take it or leave it". That is not the way to build a country. We in the Liberal Party have evolved. We have indicated that we are prepared to look at the positions being taken by Quebec, by a federalist Premier in the person of Robert Bourassa. In the short time he has been in government, he has already indicated a very open spirit, not only toward constitutional reform in his attitude toward the "notwithstanding" clause compared, for example, with the position taken by his predecessor, but toward the legitimate concerns of the anglophone community in Quebec.

We much appreciate what is happening. We are not wedded or welded to a particular form of federalism. We want a strong central Government to speak strongly for the Canadian people. However, we recognize also that negotiation has occurred and that negotiation will continue. We ask the Government, in this negotiation, to take account of the remarks we have made in this place, and to look at the firm and detailed position which the Liberal Party of Canada put forward in its convention last November.

We hope, when the final resolution comes out and it is before us, that it will be possible for us to vote for it. I, for my part, cannot give such a commitment now because of the questions I have raised and because I want to encourage some change between now and the final vote. However, I hope we will have a package, when the process comes to a conclusion, that the Official Opposition will be able to approve.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the Senate, the Hon. Member who has just spoken indicated that the position of his Party now is to have an elected Senate. Of course he is as aware as I am of the problems that there will be with Senate reform under the new arrangements. In particular, members of my Party would like to see the Senate simply abolished, at least in its present form, because we do not feel that it contributes a great deal to Canadian life, except to keep on reminding us about the 19th century as we move into the 21st.

Is the position for an elected Senate a Party position and, therefore, is his Party also in favour of the Triple E proposal which would have the number of Senators from Quebec the same as the number of Senators from Alberta? Is that now the position of his Party?

Could he perhaps explain why it is that his Party failed to take any effective action to try to reform the Senate during the 20-odd years it was in power from 1963 to 1984?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any Canadian could accuse the Liberal Party of Canada of not trying to achieve constitutional evolution. We are accused of being obsessed by constitutional evolution rather than of not doing anything on the Constitution.

I would hope that the NDP would wake up and realize that there is a role for the Senate in Canada. The position which it has taken that the Senate should be abolished is out of tune with what Canadians want, particularly Canadians in western Canada who have spoken so strongly on the Senate.

With regard to the specific provision, we want an elected Senate. I recall discussions within our Party and within our Cabinet as we tried to move toward reform of the Senate. I remember the difficulties we had.

I do not mean to suggest, in my criticism of the interim solution the Government has come up with, that it is an easy problem to solve. We are open to an elected Senate. We are open to a Senate which will be effective. Certainly we are open to changing the present Senate, of which we are as critical as any Party in the House or any other Canadian.

I only want to emphasize the point that I think the interim arrangement has something going for it which might make it permanent. If it becomes permanent, it will be very regrettable because it will diminish the authority of the Parliament of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House of a few statistics I was able to pick up during the Hon. Member's speech, namely that a Special Joint Committee of the Senate was established by this House, with the Senate's concurrence, in 1980. It held sittings from October 6 to October 23, 1980. There were 11 days of debate in this House, for a total of 36 hours, 54 minutes. In comittee, 103 sittings, for 270 hours. I would also remind the House that, once the resolution was tabled in this House, there were from April 2 to April 23 a further 22 days of debate totalling 72 hours and 10 minutes. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell me whether, in his comments, he proposed the establishment of a committee. Is he looking at a committee of this House only or a joint a further House and Senate Committee, since the Senate is seriously involved in that matter?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I believe that present Senators have much to offer in a discussion on the future of our Constitution, and I would be very much in support of Senate involvement. But I would be ready to commend the Governement if they were giving us more than they are proposing right on, that is, I would be happy to have a committee of this House. I would be happy to have a Senate committee, or a joint committee. The important thing to me is that we give ourselves and concerned Canadians an opportunity to come up and discuss more in-depth our Constitution's future and the implications of the Meech Lake proposal. proposal.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. He has expressed the support of the Liberal Party for an elected Senate and for the Triple E proposal, if I heard him correctly.

I do not know how, if every province has the right of veto, provinces like Ontario and Quebec could agree that the smaller provinces should have an equal number of Senators. However, I would really like to ask him the following question.

How does he or his Party see the power of the new Senate? The present Senate, at least theoretically, has almost equal power to the House of Commons, a power which it does not use. How does the Hon. Member see the power and responsibility of a new elected Senate?

• (1710)

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to pretend that Senate reform has been a particular obsession of mine. I do not have the answers to those questions. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have studied the problems that arise when the administration, the executive, is accountable to two Chambers which each have their own election process. That is the situation in Australia. I know the Australian system quite well and I know the problems. I think it has some advantages, but I am not prepared for myself to disclaim or reject any of the possibilities of the Triple E proposal. I would like to consider it, and I know our Party would like to consider it. We hope that such an opportunity for consideration will be available within the parameters of the debate that the Government will allow to Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The time allotted for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie).

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of satisfaction and pride that I rise to participate in today's debate. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all the Premiers deserve our thanks and praise for reaching an agreement that should allow Quebec to return to the constitutional fold.

This is a special moment in our history. The Prime Minister, in particular, is to be applauded for his statesmanship and vision. On May 1, when the Prime Minister reported to this House on the Meech Lake Agreement, he said that it:

> —enhances the confederation bargain and strengthens—the federal nature of Canada.

I fully agree, Mr. Speaker.

What is especially noteworthy about the First Ministers' achievement at Meech Lake is that it is the culmination of past efforts by the Progressive Conservative Party to improve the climate of federal-provincial relations and to enhance the legitimacy of federal institutions. All these reforms—an entrenched First Ministers' Conference on the economy, provincial participation in Supreme Court appointments, and a role for the provinces in Senate appointments—can be traced to commitments by our Party and this Government.

I look back with pride on the record of our Party in this area. In September, 1977, for example, the federal Leader and the Premiers of Ontario, Alberta, New Brunswick and Newfoundland signed the Kingston statement. Among the principles enunciated in that document were the following:

> —federal spending power must be brought within constitutional bounds—by specifying in the Constitution that no federal spending shall take place within areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction without the agreement of the province or provinces directly affected;
>
> A commitment to annual consultation among First Ministers on economic and fiscal policies and goals;
>
> To assure the federal nature of certain Canadian institutions, provincial Governments should be closely and formally involved in appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and a proportion of those to the Senate.

The Kingston statement was followed by a policy paper in 1978 by the Progressive Conservative Party, entitled The Constitution and National Unity. In that document, this Party stressed:

> The need to accommodate regional diversity in Canada through two significant changes: firstly, through direct provincial participation in national institutions and agencies, principally by reform of the Senate . . . and secondly through formal recognition that a federal system requires regular public consultation among responsible Governments, through federal-provincial conferences.

The Government's record on the Quebec constitutional issue is clear. Even before 1984, the Prime Minister and members of this Government were committed to bringing Quebec back into the constitutional family. At Sept-Iles in 1984, the soon-to-be elected Prime Minister set this important objective for a Progressive Conservative Government.

Over the years, the commitment of this Party and this Government has been aimed at improving the climate of federal-provincial relations and ensuring that federal institutions fully reflect the interests of all parts of Canada. It is a commitment to harmony in diversity, to co-operation rather than confrontation, to national renewal and national reconciliation.

From Kingston in 1977, to Sept-Iles in 1984, and to Meech Lake in 1987, our Party has remained consistent in its objectives and steadfast in its ideals. This is, indeed, a memorable occasion.

As Canada contemplates a bilateral trade agreement of historic proportions with the United States of America, the fundamental unity of our nation in a constitutional accord is an important achievement. It is important, too, as an act of national reconciliation as Canadians work to improve their standard of living and quality of life.

The provinces, like the federal Government, would now have a veto power over a limited range of constitutional changes affecting Parliament, the Supreme Court, the creation of new provinces or the extension of present provinces into the Territories. These institutions belong to the Canadian people and are the basic national elements of our Confederation. It seems only fair that they should not be altered without the agreement and concurrence of all the partners to our Confederation.

Through the conciliatory genius of the Prime Minister, and the goodwill of all the First Ministers of the provinces, there is an explicit recognition that French Canada is not confined to Quebec, nor is English Canada confined to the other provinces. While recognizing the reality of the distinctive nature of Quebec, all 11 Governments are committed to the protection of the country's two language communities.

Under this Accord, the federal Government will have to provide reasonable cash compensation to any province that opts out or does not participate in the future cost shared program in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. It is important in considering this concept that we bear in mind that we are talking about an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction which may be part of a national scheme in which a provincial Government may not wish to participate. The exclusivity of the provincial jurisdiction, in my view, justified the willingness and desirability of the federal Government to be bound by rules of behaviour in someone else's house.

Under these circumstances, the federal Government will provide reasonable cash compensation if the opting out province undertakes initiatives or programs of its own that are compatible with national objectives.

A quick look at our Canadian history suggests to us that some of our greatest landmarks in social legislation were accomplished before the Constitution was amended in 1982 and when each province felt it had a veto power, not just over the limited range mentioned in the present Accord, but over every federal program which invaded provincial jurisdiction. Despite this, an important amendment was won, passed in England, which resulted in unemployment insurance. Our health care system, which is a model to the whole world, was put in place composed of hospital care and medicare during the same period.

It might well be argued that the Government closest to the people, the provincial authority, is best qualified to administer a national program and tailor it to the particular needs of Canadians who reside within the provincial jurisdiction. I think it can be argued that this is preferable to rigid uniformity.

All of our great national programs have come into being because there was a national consensus that the Canadian people wanted them put in place. Consultation and co-operation between federal and provincial had always resulted in better laws better administered.

I suggest that it is preferable in federal programs to spell out goals and objectives clearly with the specific means and details being worked out with reference to the particular characteristics that exist in the regions of Canada. For example, the design of a daycare system in our only bilingual Province of New Brunswick must surely be different from the design of a daycare system in Metropolitan Toronto, Vancouver or Whitehorse.

• (1720)

From 1950 to 1975, Canada experienced the greatest period of expansion and development in its history. Canada stands today at the apex of its power and influence, having witnessed in the third quarter of this century some tremendous milestones in human achievement.

We have today the lowest infant mortality rate in our history, more young Canadians in post-secondary educational institutions than ever before, and a life-span that has been extended by 10 years. These achievements are in great measure the result of milestones of social legislation which have been put in place by the will of the Canadian people and the good faith of our leaders, both federal and provincial.

The reality is that following the economic reversals of the mid-1970s, the federal Government has not been able to achieve any major redistribution of wealth without the co-operation and assistance of the provinces. There is, however, much that the federal Government can do and will do to improve the standard of living of Canadians, particularly those who live below the poverty line. However, there is much more that the Government of Canada can do in step with the provinces.

Even though the federal Government spends billions of dollars annually on programs under provincial jurisdiction such as those funded by Established Programs Financing, many legal authorities looked upon this as a move into the grey area of constitutional concern. Parliamentarians may recall the court challenges arising from the federal Government Bill in 1983 that withheld medicare funds from provinces that allowed extra billing or hospital user-fees. The Meech Lake Accord does much to clarify this point.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker was the champion of the underdog and put his indelible mark on Canadian history with a Bill of Rights. Prime Minister Trudeau, by indomitable will and force of intellect, gave Canada a new Constitution. The present Prime Minister, by tireless diplomacy, has completed the act of Confederation and has established a strong and unified Constitution that is evolving and developing and serving the reality of Canada.

This Accord demonstrates once again that when the chips are down, Canadian leaders put Canada first. Our young nation now marches forward into the 21st century, a century that will belong to Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Questions? Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the 10 Premiers for the unanimous agreement reached at Meech Lake.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the Meech Lake Accord, Quebec would be part of the Canadian family as far as the Constitution of Canada is concerned. And as the Prime Minister stated this morning, seven years ago Quebec said yes to Canada, and now it is time for Canada to say yes to Quebec.

[English]

We now have an agreement which is very important in bringing Quebec into this constitutional family of Canada. I believe Canadians outside of Quebec, through their various provincial Premiers, have shown a great openness to Quebec, particularly when they have talked about Quebec being a distinct and different society. They made a considerable move toward bringing Quebec into the Constitution. I now invite Quebec to show the same kind of leadership in trying to bring about solutions to some of the other constitutional problems that face other parts of the country, and I particularly invite Quebec and the other provinces to show the same kind of leadership in bringing our native Indian people into the Constitution of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is ironic in that perhaps the process of change to our Canadian Constitution started on November 15, 1976, with the election to Government of the Parti Québécois and Premier René Lévesque in Quebec. That election was followed by a referendum in Quebec three years and a half later, on May 20, 1980.

[English]

After that referendum, we had a debate in the House and across the country about patriating the Canadian Constitution. We went from that step to what is before us today in the Meech Lake Agreement.

The Constitution of Canada is the fundamental law of this country. It is the foundation on which all other laws are based. The Constitution does not belong to the Governments, to the politicians or to the bureaucrats. The Constitution belongs to the people of Canada.

Today I reaffirm my belief in federalism. It is federalism that makes this country work. In particular, I reaffirm my belief in a system of co-operative federalism, the only way in which a country as diverse as Canada can work at all.

There are two orders of Government in this country and there must continue to be two orders of Government. On the one hand, it is very important to have a strong and central federal Government and we need that strong and central federal Government to equalize things between the various regions and, as much as possible, between the various people of the country, whether they come from a wealthy part or a poorer part of Canada. On the other hand, in addition to a strong and central federal Government, we need strong provincial Governments with their own jurisdictions because of the differing realities in each province and region. Those two orders of Government must be equal partners if Canada is to have a national dream and a national vision toward which we all must work.

I suppose I can say that federalism means both uniting the country and decentralizing it at the same time. To me, federalism means a compromise between a unitary system such as those that exist in Britain or in France on the one hand and independent, sovereign states on the other. Federalism is a compromise. Federalism is co-operation. I think it is very important that we see it in that way.

In addition to that, federalism is more than just co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces and the various other Governments. Federalism is about the two founding peoples who many years ago founded this great country, the English and the French. It is also about the pre-founding people, the native people. There are many different Indian nations that were here a long time before our predecessors came from Europe and other parts of the world.

In addition to that, federalism is about the various cultures that exist in Canada. I suppose you can tell by my name, Mr. Speaker, that I come from neither an anglophone nor a francophone background but that I come from a third group of countries that is neither British nor French.

Our differences should unite us, they should not divide us. It should be the differences that make this country flourish. We all benefit from the fact that we are not one great, gigantic melting pot. In fact, one of the big differences between Canada and the United States is that the United States tends to be very much of a melting pot.

A person from my riding named Alex Kuziak was the first Canadian of Ukrainian ancestry to ever be appointed to a Cabinet anywhere in Canada. He was appointed to the Cabinet of Saskatchewan by Tommy Douglas back in 1948. In 1969, a year after I came to Parliament as a Member, we were debating the Official Languages Act. There was much uncertainty in parts of Canada. It was felt that perhaps too many rights were being given to French-speaking Canadians and it was wondered if there should be equality of languages and if Quebec was getting too much power. I recall Mr. Kuziak rising in a meeting held in Yorkton to say that the one reason there is more tolerance of minority languages, customs and cultures in Canada is the very fact that we do have two big language groups, the French and the English. Because of that, he said, we are also more tolerant of others. That is one of the things that makes this country different from the United States of America.

To begin with, Canada is in some ways very difficult to keep together. We defy geography and the natural north-south trading patterns. We also sit right next door to the most powerful nation in the world and we must protect our sovereignty, culture and economy. Those things make it very difficult to begin with. That is why it is very important that all Canadians pull together to try to form national goals and objectives.

• (1730)

In the few minutes that remain I want to comment specifically on parts of the resolution before us. With regard to Quebec and a distinct society—

[Translation]

—I would like to say yes to the particular society of Quebec, to that distinct society. I have long said that Quebec is different and that the fact has to be recognized in the Constitution. I enthusiastically support this proposition of the 11 First Ministers.

I also want to mention, Mr. Speaker, that Quebec . . . It is not only the fact that Quebec is unique and distinct, but also that it is the main cultural centre for all French-speaking Canadians.

[English]

I also want to say that even though I very deeply respect the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), I think his point of view with respect to Quebec and a distinct society is a point of view of yesterday. It is an idea of yesterday. It is a vision of yesterday. I do not think that is the way Canadians want to go today.

I want to comment about the regrettable fact that our native people are not part of this constitutional Accord at Meech Lake. I know the Prime Minister has had conferences on this issue. I know he and several Premiers have supported enshrining more aboriginal rights in the Constitution. I support him. I would just say it is very unfortunate and regrettable that the people who were here before all of us are not part of the constitutional family when we seek to bring Quebec into the Constitution. I say very clearly that I am not proud of the Premier of my province, Mr. Devine, because he did not agree to the enshrinement of Indian self-government in the Constitution. I am not proud of Premier Don Getty of Alberta or Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia for not agreeing to enshrine more Indian rights in the Constitution of Canada. We should be expressing our feelings to those three Premiers who were the main stumbling blocks to doing just that a few weeks ago. My understanding is that the other Premiers and the Prime Minister were ready to move but the three Premiers from the westernmost provinces said no, no, no, and I believe that is wrong.

[Translation]

Another aspect, Mr. Speaker, is immigration. I agree with the Meech Lake Agreement as far as the question of immigration is concerned. It enshrines in the Constitution more rights for Quebec in that field. The Government of Canada can also negociate with a province an immigration agreement.

[English]

Another point concerns the Senate. Under the Meech Lake Agreement there is talk about the provinces having more input on the appointment of Senators. There is a commitment to enshrine in the Constitution discussions on Senate reform. I believe that the Senate as it exists today should be abolished. It is nothing but a house of patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I do not think there is any place in the 20th century for an unelected legislative body.

Mr. Benjamin: There was not in the 19th century either.

Mr. Nystrom: Not in the 19th century either. Our Party remains open to replacing the Senate with some other institution if it is abolished. I speak only for myself but I certainly remain very open to the possibility of having the Senate in some way reflect the regions in its representation. For example, there might be an equal number of Senators from each province. We have to make sure the Senate is elected.

Another point I am concerned about concerns spending power. This is something a number of us are concerned about. We believe we need to have on the one hand a strong federal Government that can implement national programs like medicare, unemployment insurance and family allowances, and on the other hand, we need to have enough flexibility so that the provinces can represent their own reality and recognize the diversity of this country. I am by no means a constitutional lawyer or expert, but I want to raise a concern about the drafting of the section which deals with spending power. It says that the provinces can undertake their own initiatives or programs with compatible national objectives. After hearing a number of commentaries I am not sure whether the word "compatible" is strong enough to protect the national interest. Perhaps instead of "compatible" we should be looking at "equivalent" provincial programs. There should be minimum standards that must be met. If not, there would be no compensation.

Coming from Saskatchewan I well remember the medicare fight when Woodrow Lloyd was the Premier and the big fight was over establishing medical care in 1962. I remember the tremendous opposition to medicare. The vested interests fought very hard against it. A little bit later on I remember the royal commission headed by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall on this question and the debate when Prime Minister Pearson was in office. Tommy Douglas was the Leader of this Party. John Diefenbaker was the Leader of the Conservative Party. I remember how close we came to not getting national medicare. I am really concerned that we do not enshrine in the Constitution wording which would be so interpreted by the courts as to make it impossible to get those kinds of national programs in the future.

I note that the former Liberal Minister of Finance, Don Macdonald, said he thought we could still obtain national programs with this kind of wording but they would be marginally more difficult. I think we should clarify the wording so that we have national programs with the same standards across the country. If not, you run the danger of having a much better program in Ontario, which is wealthy, than in Newfoundland, which is poor. We could have a much better program in British Columbia or Alberta if the western economy picks up again than we have, for example, in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island because they are much smaller and much poorer. I appeal to the Prime Minister to try to get an agreement to entrench wording which would protect the national interest.

I want to comment on the creation of new provinces. This is one part of the Agreement I do not agree with at all. I do not know why the rules should be different for the creation of new provinces in the Northwest Territories or Yukon than they were when Saskatchewan, Alberta and other provinces were created. In the past there was an agreement between the province concerned and the federal Government. The province came into the federation, and that was it. If the First Ministers are not willing to continue with that as a fall back, as my Leader said today, we certainly accept the existing amending formula where seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population and the Parliament of Canada have to agree. In that way one or two provinces cannot veto Yukon becoming a province. I am not sure if Mr. Vander Zalm, for example, would agree to Yukon becoming a province. I think the existing amending formula would be much fairer for Yukon. I once again appeal to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to look very seriously at that idea.

I am also concerned about the unanimity rule as it concerns national institutions, and I am particularly concerned when it comes to the Senate. I recognize the special problems of Quebec with respect to protecting the French language and culture. However, I am concerned about whether or not we have created a bit of a strait-jacket here for Senate reform. Under the present rules, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta get six Senators, but New Brunswick and Nova Scotia get 10 apiece. We are now going to have a system where the Premiers recommend potential Senators and the federal Government must pick someone from the list acceptable to it. I am not sure whether Richard Hatfield or another Premier of New Brunswick, or the Premier of Nova Scotia, want to give up that power and that number of Senators. I am just not sure those Premiers would be more interested in doing that now than they were three or four weeks ago. I am not sure whether David Peterson of Ontario would like to give up this new-found power of recommending 20 or 24 people as Senators. If that does not happen there will be great discrimination because Saskatchewan and British Columbia have only six Senators each while Ontario and Quebec have 20 or 24 apiece. That is a major problem.

• (1740)

I know other Members would like to say a few words before six o'clock. I will, therefore, conclude by saying that we have, in general, a good agreement in principle. I am concerned about a number of the details, particularly the spending power. I am concerned about the amending formula as it pertains to the creation of new provinces. I am very concerned that the Indian people did not have more rights enshrined in the Constitution. I appeal to the Premier of my province, the Premiers of the other provinces, and the Prime Minister of Canada to do whatever they can to make this a better deal for the country.

I agree that we have a tremendous future and a great country. When we fully patriate the Constitution of Canada we can start working on some of the very serious economic problems, patriate the economy of Canada, and create an economy within which we can wipe out poverty for every Canadian.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague, the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), referred to the position taken by our friend from Saint-Henri—Westmount. He said that he believed that position was outdated in 1987. I agree with that statement. As a neighbour of my good friend from Saint-Henri—Westmount I must say that in my opinion he has exaggerated the possible negative interpretations of the Accord. In any case, I think he was premature in his remarks.

When the Liberal Party passed its resolution in November of 1986 it said that a preamble should be added to the Constitution of Canada to recognize the linguistic duality of Canada and the distinctive character of Quebec as the principal but not exclusive source of the French language and culture of Canada. It seems to me that that is not too far from what we have in the Accord. As we have all said, we will want to see the final wording.

I know my friend has a deep interest in the rights of minorities and he has already referred to native people. Section (1) of the Accord states that:

> The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with
>
> a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canada, centred in but not limited to Quebec, and English-speaking Canada, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada;

Section (2) says:

> Parliament and the provincial legislatures—are committed to preserving the fundamental characteristics of Canada—

Would the Hon. Member not agree with me that that provides adequate protection to the linguistic minorities of the country? It appears to me that it does, and I am one who voted against the agreement in 1982. What is the Hon. Member's opinion on that?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think there is adequate protection for the linguistic minorities. There is reference in the constitutional agreement In the first section with regard to the distinct society, "the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canada, centred in but not limited to Quebec, and English-speaking Canada, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec". It also refers to the role of the National Assembly in Quebec in terms of achieving this distinctiveness. It refers, in addition, to legislatures outside of Quebec and the Parliament of Canada.

I would also remind my friend, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) of Section 23 of the Canada Act which talks about minority languages and education rights within those minority languages. It says that all provinces must provide education in the minority language where numbers warrant. Therefore, I think we are covered pretty well in terms of protecting minority language rights.

As more of an opinion than a fact I would say that one way of protecting the French language from coast-to-coast is to ensure that there is very strong protection of it in Quebec. The French language is a minority language in this country and an even smaller minority in North America. We can protect the French language across Canada by protecting it very solidly in Quebec, ensuring that it is not eroded there. If it is solidly protected there, that can help it flourish right across the country.

The English language is very well protected because it is the most important language in the world today. It is the majority language in North America as it is in this country. One way to protect minority rights is to ensure that we have two secure linguistic bases. If people do not feel insecure about that, both can flourish on each other's turf, so to speak.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) as well as to those who preceded him, particularly his Leader and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). I was very impressed by the clear indication of support which both Leaders have offered with respect to the resolution currently before the House.

With that in mind, would the Hon. Member, on behalf of his Party, be agreeable, in light of the unanimity which seems to prevail, to have this motion deemed adopted, as was the case when we dealt with the Manitoba French-language resolution a few years ago which was sponsored by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)? I think it is in the interest of all Members of the House to have a clear indication from the House. I sense that there is unanimity and ask whether we might consider, before concluding the debate at six o'clock, to agree to have the motion deemed as adopted by the House.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) wants, and I think it is fair from his point of view. However, those of us who were not direct participants in the constitutional debate at Meech Lake would first want to see the final details of the Accord. I, along with others, have raised some questions about the spending power, whether or not there is a possibility of more Indian rights in the Constitution, and the amending formula as it pertains to the creation of new provinces. Therefore, we would like to see more details.

Second, I know that there are some other Members of Parliament who would not want to vote unless they had a chance to speak. Therefore, a one-day debate with a vote at six o'clock is not really fair.

The third and final point that I will make is with regard to the Manitoba case of a few years ago which the Deputy Prime Minister mentioned. I was here and supported that resolution. I remind the Deputy Prime Minister that in the Manitoba case we had details about what was being debated because there was legislation in Manitoba. There were also court decisions on the Manitoba case and we, therefore, had a lot of information to look at. In other words, the i's were dotted and the t's were crossed. In this case we are debating a question in principle and want to see more details before we will be prepared to vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The time for questions having expired, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, usually there is a 10-minute period for questions and comments after each speech. It is my understanding that the 10 minute period would not end before 5.57 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is correct that there is a 10-minute period provided for. The 10 minutes have expired according to my clock.

• (1750)

I saw no other Members rising. I immediately proceeded to debate. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a country of tolerance which is in the process of becoming united again with full respect for its differences.

Mr. Speaker, in the early 1980s I joined the team of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because I believed he could manage to create a new climate of harmony in Canada and make Canadians regain their aspirations for genuine federalism. I believed he would be able to put an end to the sterile squabbles among the various regions of the country.

[English]

I believe that such a change could create a new relationship between Canadians, a more creative, tolerant and generous relationship between Canadians.

[Translation]

Finally I believed that the new climate might bring us to the day when Quebec would regain its place within Canada's constitutional forums. All those who, like myself, responded to the Prime Minister's appeal also believed in this change. Men and women in Quebec put their faith in us because they were convinced we would succeed in making this great change. This faith in the possibility of changing things has never been a blind faith. The man who is now Prime Minister then made a firm commitment to Quebec.

As he said in August 1984, all Quebecers love Quebec and are proud of Canada, but they also love Canada and are proud of Quebec. Their heart is big enough for both allegiances. He said that Canada offers plenty of room for the affirmation of all identities, the respect for all aspirations, and the quest for all ideals.

To heal the wounds of 1982, for wounds had indeed been inflicted to Quebec, he had solemnly pledged to do everything possible to convince the National Assembly to accept the new Constitution with honour and enthusiasm. Well, on April 30, something extraordinary happened, because his commitment to Quebec was not restricted to a single election campaign, or a vague promise to win over part of the nationalist electorate. This commitment is part of his vision of Canada and Canadians based on fairness, equity and generosity.

The Prime Minister has always appealed to the noblest and highest values held by Canadian men and women to defend the rights of minorities, linguistic and otherwise, and to defend the people and the regions of our country. He has always believed that it is through respect for our differences that we shall find new strength to stay together.

It is with enthusiasm that I came to Ottawa to defend the interests, first of Quebec, and also of the rest of Canada, but I came also because our new Prime Minister had promised us to do everything to restore Quebec to its rightful place within Confederation.

Today, Mr. Speaker, this major task is well on its way towards accomplishment.

[English]

The Prime Minister of Canada, the Premier of Quebec, along with the other Premiers have agreed in principle, which will permit the Province of Quebec to join the constitutional family and permit Quebecers to be true Canadians.

[Translation]

This is indeed important: To be a true French Canadian, it is necessary, in my opinion, for me to be a Canadian.

[English]

I am also proud of what has been accomplished at Meech Lake. It is not to be perceived as being a gesture of favour to Quebec, because it was a gesture of favour to all provinces. They have also agreed to include in the Constitution an aspect of utmost importance to our national identity.

[Translation]

The Constitutional Act of 1982 was to a great extent a description of the characteristics which make Canada unique. Yet, there was no mention anywhere in the Constitution of Quebec's distinct society or the existence in Canada of francophone and anglophone communities.

In the absence of these two basic realities, how was our commitment to linguistic minority rights to be interpreted? How else were we to show respect for Quebecers' desire to affirm themselves proudly as full partners in our national design, as partners equal but different through their history and institutions? I suggest that the Prime Minister was well aware that there was an important gap to be filled, and he appealed to the open mind and generosity of his counterparts to ensure a successful conclusion to the Meech Lake exercise. This was a necessary gamble, because solving this problem did not depend entirely on the Government of Canada, but also on the Governments of Quebec and the other provinces.

All the provinces, therefore, had to participate in the development of a new Constitutional consensus which would take into account the legitimate aspirations of Quebecers, but also the basic interests of all other Canadians. The Prime Minister felt also that, to be fair, any agreement would have to take place within the context of a true federalism. The support of all Governments was necessary, the opinion of each had to be taken into account. The country had suffered enough from partisan agreements, behind-the-scene maneuvers, deals negotiated with no real consensus.

[English]

All Premiers were aware of the damages that would result from another failure. No one placed himself into an irrevocable position. Quebec was also just and generous. When it asked that its distinct character be recognized, it did not do so with a desire for isolation. It could have, but it did not. On the contrary, Quebec insisted that its specificity be recognized for a broader reality: one of existence of a francophone Canada, concentrated and not limited to Quebec, and one of an anglophone Canada, concentrated in the rest of the country but present in Quebec.

[Translation]

That is the essence of the agreement, is it not? The recognition of the existence of French-speaking Canada centred in but not limited to Quebec, and that of English-speaking Canada concentrated in the rest of the country but also highly present in Quebec.

Therefore, the First Ministers agreed to enshrine this fundamental characteristic of the federation into the Constitution. That simple recognition has already allowed Quebecers to stand proud, and that is what we achieved on the evening of April 30, to the surprise of everyone.

However, the Lake Meech Agreement is more than that. The First Ministers recognized the importance of our two main language communities for our national identity. It is perhaps because they sensed the delicate balance that they committed themselves to protect that reality.

In the future, the Constitution shall necessarily be interpreted with due regard for the existence of our two linguistic communities and for the fact that Quebec constitutes a distinct society. This is what is fundamental and this is what is important to us.

This agreement, Mr. Speaker, is therefore a victory for all members of official language minorities in Canada. It grants recognition to the two main communities and to their existence in every region of the country, and this is in tune with the reality of Canada and the aspirations of Canadians. I am proud to see, Mr. Speaker, that our Prime Minister and our Premiers have chosen first and foremost to be statesmen rather than power hungry petty politicians: this is fundamental. So I say today that I am proud of you, Brian Mulroney, as a Quebecer, which you are, but also as a Canadian, which you are as well for all of us: I am very proud of you.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being six o'clock, pursuant to order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 12, 1987

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

[English]

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED BREACH OF CODE OF CONDUCT—STATEMENT BY MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has requested that he be granted leave to make a statement at this time, and I recognize the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a matter of privilege.

On April 13, I directed questions to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on whether the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) had violated the Code of Conduct for Ministers by his handling of the sale of an interest in a small investment property in downtown Ottawa. The next day the Minister, who had been away on April 13, raised a matter of privilege, claiming that I had used distorted information and unsubstantiated innuendo in order to damage his reputation.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, you upheld my right to ask the original question, although you warned that Members should be careful not to abuse the absolute right of privilege that they enjoy in this House. I accept your ruling and will heed your caution. After some reflection and consultation, however, I should like to clear up any misunderstanding I may have caused about the Minister's action.

Before raising my question in April, I had reviewed the public documents on file in the Ottawa Registry Office and in the office of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, or ADRG, the official responsible for overseeing the Code of Conduct for Ministers, as well as providing some advance notice of my question to the Minister's office. I tried to reach the Minister by phone, but he was in Toronto and not available.

Had I spoken directly to the ADRG, he might have informed me that the Minister had informed the ADRG before selling his interest in the Ottawa property and had received written assurance from this official that the Minister's transaction was in compliance with the Code of Conduct. This letter was not in the public file relating to the Minister's compliance with the code when I consulted it. Once the Minister had made the letter public on April 14, there could be no question that he had sought to comply with the code and was in compliance with the code with relation to the Ottawa transaction.

With hindsight, it is clear that any question to be raised in this matter should either be with the Code of Conduct itself or with its interpretation by the responsible official, the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. I remain convinced that the Code of Conduct for Ministers needs to be tightened up and made enforceable, and that one area that should be reviewed is that of transactions which might be viewed as commercial. These, however, are matters that should be raised with the Government, not with an individual Minister.

I therefore wish to acknowledge that in connection with the Ottawa transaction, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport did act honourably and did ensure that he was in compliance with the Code of Conduct for Ministers as it now stands. I hope this statement will help to set the record straight, and I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your help in this matter.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for the statement he just made. I take it that somewhere therein there is an apology, and I accept that apology. Therefore, I consider the matter in this regard closed, and I hope that in the process all of us have learned a bit of a lesson.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is appropriate for the Chair to say that of course the whole matter has given the Chair a great deal of difficulty. I think it is also appropriate to say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and to the Minister, on behalf of all Hon. Members, that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is to be commended for having returned to the House and having made a statement, and that the Hon. Minister is to be commended for having accepted it graciously in the best traditions of this place. I thank both Hon. Members.

Tabling of Documents

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition Nos. 332-1662, 332-1861 to 332-1870 inclusive, 332-1899, 332-1900, 332-1920, 332-1935, 332-1948 to 332-1951 inclusive, 332-1965, 332-1984 to 332-1989 inclusive and 332-2053.

* * *

• (1110)

[English]

HEALTH CARE SERVICES

NATIONAL NURSES WEEK

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, for over 300 years, dedicated and competent nurses have been serving Canadians. Nursing has been developing and growing as a profession since the time of Jeanne Mance, who is considered to be the first lay nurse in Canada, in the early years of the 17th century. Nurses have played an active and valuable role in the development of our national health care system.

This year, the Grey Nuns will celebrate 250 years of service in Canada. They, as well as others, continue to distinguish themselves and their profession through their excellence in the provision of high quality health care.

The importance of nursing in our health care system is illustrated by the fact that more than 200,000 nurses who practice in Canada constitute over 50 per cent of Canada's health professionals. The nursing profession touches everyone. Nurses serve the community by caring for all groups of people, from the newborn to the aged, during health and during illness. Their presence is felt in a variety of venues as they provide care in homes, in occupational settings, in clinics, in hospitals, in nursing homes and in all other types of health care institutions.

The contributions of nurses have been recognized internationally for many years with the declaration of May 12, Florence Nightingale's birthday, as International Nurses Day. Canadian nurses, with their colleagues in other countries, have adopted the theme "Occupational Health and Safety" to mark this week.

In recognition of the many contributions of our nurses to our health and well-being, I hereby endorse the Canadian Nurses Association proclamation that each year the second week of May shall be National Nurses Week.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on behalf of my Party and add my comments to those made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). It is a pleasure to recall the work accomplished not only by lay nurses but also by the Grey Nuns whom my family has known for years, since they were active for many years in Northern Ontario.

[English]

Of course, it gives me great pleasure to associate myself and my Party with the remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with respect to National Nurses Week. I think, however, at the same time, I would like to sound a warning bell. One only has to look at newspaper headlines across the country to realize that nursing is in a crisis situation. There is a critical shortage of nurses, for example, in the lower mainland of British Columbia. The hospital bed closures this summer are as a result of a nurse shortage. We see in northern Ontario that elective surgery is being delayed because of the lack of available nurses. We have to look at why we lack nursing personnel.

It is quite true, as was stated by Glenna Cole-Slattery, who is the new Chief Executive Officer of the Ontario Nursing Association that:

> The bottom line is that women do not have to come into nursing anymore—the poor working conditions, pay scales that don't recognize gruelling shift work and special skills, and apathy in government and among administrators are driving people to quit.

If we use Ontario as an example, Mr. Speaker, chances are that two out of three nurses in Ontario who are registered to practice their profession are not practising. We have to address this situation nationally. Alberta is losing nurses in droves and Quebec is facing a nurse shortage. Until we begin to address the root causes for the nurse shortage, that is lack of fulfillment, the burn-out suffered by nurses who are thrown into 10 and 12 hour shifts and who are forced to carry on the very difficult job of having one or two nurses on a ward looking after 20, 30 or 40 patients, then we will continue to see a further erosion and shortage. We will continue seeing nurses being recruited south as we have seen recently.

Recognizing that this is National Nurses Week and applauding the Minister for making the commitment to have the second week of May dedicated to the nursing profession and, of course, in lauding Florence Nightingale, we must also ask why we have a nurse shortage. That is something we have to address seriously in the coming months if we intend to keep the stellar quality of nursing that we have known in Canada.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party caucus and congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for the declaration that he has made in the House today declaring this as National Nurses Week. It is very important that we recognize the professional knowledge of nurses and that we treat them in a much more professional manner, respecting their knowledge of what is happening in hospitals and communities. Nurses should be treated on a more equal footing in all of these matters.

In the House of Commons we must be more accepting of the knowledge nurses have with regard to the actions of Government and how the actions will hurt people in the health care field. I point out that nurses are among a number of groups who came forward and spoke against the Government's plans on Established Programs Financing and on equalization. Obviously, because of their own knowledge of what is happening in communities and the hospitals, nurses understand the implications of government services.

On a more personal matter, I would like to point out that the national headquarters for the nurses union happens to be in Thompson, Manitoba. Cathy Connors from my area is the president. It is one of the few national offices that happens to be located in Thompson, Manitoba. I congratulate the nurses for the foresight in picking a great location for national headquarters because it really is the centre of Canada.

On another matter which is perhaps more serious, and certainly a concern of mine and I know of the Minister's, there is a real problem in getting a full complement of nurses in remote communities, which is a direct responsibility of the Minister. The medical services branch has been unable to have a full commitment of nurses, in the almost eight years that I have been a Member of Parliament, in the native communities in my riding. I do hope the Government in recognizing the value of nurses would especially recognize that in native communities, nurses are not just the first line of service, they are the only line of service of any professional help for the health and life of people in those communities.

I hope the Government will make a commitment this week in recognition of the declaration which the Minister just made to ensure that there is a full complement of nurses in remote communities for our native people.

* * *

BELL CANADA ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, I have the honour to present the Bill to the House with an amendment. May I add the comment that the amendment is a technical one, not related to the substantive provisions of the Bill.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present two petitions signed by several dozen Canadians from places such as Ottawa, Kitchener, Nepean, Perth, Lachine, Dorval, St. Leonard, St. Eustache, Montreal, Yellowknife, Lac la Martre, which is also in the Northwest Territories, in which your petitioners humbly show that the operating records of TurnAir were seized by the Canadian Transport Commission as evidence in a prosecution against an unlicensed airline. Mr. Turner was a key witness for the CTC in that prosecution.

The CTC cancelled the operating authority of Mr. Turner's airline for a minor licence violation, and this led to the repossession of his aircraft and the financial insolvency of his business. The Queen's Privy Council has returned his operating authority and offered $15,000 compensation but did not consult or negotiate with Mr. Turner to assess the true value of his loss.

• (1120)

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray that this House of Commons will have the Government seek to have an independent arbitrator assigned to this matter to investigate the details of the case and to review and negotiate the offer from the federal Government with Fred Turner in order to reach an equitable settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present two certified petitions. The first one comes from some 350 constituents of Willowdale as well as residents of North York and Thornhill who support Bill M-37. The petition calls upon Parliament to amend Section 7 of the Charter of Rights to read: "everyone including a human foetus or unborn human being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice".

The second petition is from some 400 residents of the City of Ottawa and the Towns of Nepean, Kemptville, North Gower, Carleton Place, Pembroke and Arnprior, also supporting Bill M-37 which calls for Parliament to recognize fully the rights of the unborn.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARING BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition signed by more than 100 Canadians, duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. Residents of Aurora, Stratford, St. Thomas, Pickering and Kitchener in southern Ontario as well as residents of the metropolitan area of Toronto and Saskatoon are concerned about legislation the Government has recently introduced that they believe will harm the interests of genuine refugees and of people seeking to come to Canada to claim refugee status. They point out that their petition has the support of members of all Parties, the Council of Churches, the Bar Association, the Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim, and therefore your petitioners will ever pray.

[Translation]

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present in the House a number of petitions from the people in my riding, and more specifically, residents of Haute-Aboujagane, Notre-Dame, Cap-Pelé, Shediac and Moncton.

Your petititioners humbly call on Parliament to make Canada Post drop its plans and deliver the mail to all Canadians, without distinction.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 115.

[Text]

CIDA—EDUCATION PROJECT IN ZIMBABWE

Question No. 115—Mr. Manly:

For each of the years 1983 to 1986, did CIDA budget funds for an educational project in Zimbabwe and, if so (a) in what amount (b) how many co-operants from Canada were employed in Zimbabwe on the project and what was the average salary?

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): CIDA is funding a Secondary Education Assistance Project in Zimbabwe; during the years 1983 to 1986 CIDA spent approximately $5.7 million on the project (implemented by the World University Service of Canada—WUSC).

Between 1983 and 1986 the number of Canadians on the Secondary Education Assistance Project varied between 100 and 150. Their salaries were paid by the government of Zimbabwe according to salary scales established for all secondary school teachers in the country, and the CIDA funds mentioned above paid for allowances and project administration. The average salary was approximately $12,000 (Zimbabwean dollars).

In addition to the above assistance, CIDA began in 1986 to implement a separate Technical/Vocational Education Project through the Ontario International Corporation of Toronto. By the end of last year nine co-operants had begun working under this project; CIDA disbursements for 1986 were $422,000 covering salary top-up, allowances and project administration. The Canadian lecturers and curriculum developers on this project receive the Zimbabwe salary for the positions they occupy; CIDA tops-up that salary to the appropriate Canadian level so as to attract the desired calibre of professional staff. The average total salary paid is $36,000 (Canadian dollars).

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the House aware that under Standing Order 64(3) and (4) it is a requirement that the Government answer certain questions on the Order Paper within the prescribed period of 45 days. However, according to my records, a question that I placed on the Order Paper dated February 20, 1987, bearing the number 82, and another question bearing the number 90 of March 4, 1987, have not yet been answered.

I know, of course, that it is not the Parliamentary Secretary who answers these himself, because obviously he would have done so already. However, I wonder if he could undertake to light a fire under the chair of those responsible to ensure that they observe the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for bringing that to my attention. We will make inquiries and endeavour to have the questions answered as soon as possible.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 63 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The question mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 63 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

TRAVEL TO INDIA AND PAKISTAN

Question No. 63—Miss Nicholson:

1. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs travel to India and Pakistan in December 1985 and, if so, was he accompanied by a delegation of officials, parliamentarians, business people and others?

2. (a) What were the names and roles of the members of the delegation (b) were members of the delegation accompanied by spouses or companions and, if so, which members were so accompanied?

3. (a) What was the itinerary for this trip (b) what was the schedule of official meetings, ceremonies, entertainments and excursions (c) which members of the delegation attended which events?

4. Was there a program of briefings in connection with this trip and, if so (a) what was the schedule of briefings (b) who gave the briefings and what topics were covered (c) who attended which briefings and in what capacity did they attend?

5. Were (a) government (b) commercial aircraft used to transport members of the delegation and, if so, in each case (i) which members for which part or parts of the trip (ii) at what cost?

6. What was the cost of each official function on the delegation's agenda?

7. Were security services provided to the delegation and, if so (a) to what extent (b) at what cost?

8. What were the costs of the (a) ground transporation (b) accommodation (c) meals (d) per diem allowances, in total and for each member of the delegation?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that, because of the Ministerial Statement, Government Orders will be extended by eight minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

That this House condemns the Government's refugee policy for its failing badly to uphold Canada's proud and humane record for refugee assistance and for abandoning our nation's respected international leadership on this tragic, world-wide human dilemma, which will serve to jeopardize a meaningful international solution to what is clearly an international phenomenon;

That this House further deplores the Government's refusal to assure refugee claimants full accessibility to, and a non-adversarial hearing before, an independent refugee board; and

That, therefore, this House urge the Government to establish a fair, accessible and efficient refugee administration system, which would:

(1) guarantee full accessibility to the system for refugee claimants by rejecting any pre-screening stage within the process;

(2) ensure maximum protection and safety for all refugees and a comprehensive and adequate hearing of their claims by abolishing the highly restrictive "safe third country" concept as an integral part of the refugee determination process; and

(3) provide every refugee with the opportunity of an appeal before a competent and independent refugee body that would consider all facts and circumstances of the appellant's claims.

He said: Mr. Speaker, over 100 years ago, the test for Canadian people was whether the ideals and principles on which this nation was founded could be extended to all. Now, some 100 years later, the issues are relatively the same. The scope, however, is world-wide.

As we debate this motion in the House of Commons this morning, discrimination and apartheid prevails in South Africa, serfdom reigns in the mountains of Peru, people are starving in the streets of India and Africa and thousands are displaced, tortured and persecuted in every corner of the world. All of these people are refugees of some kind or another and they all reflect the imperfection of human justice and the inadequacy of human compassion.

• (1130)

In response, Liberal Governments of the past displayed a genuine determination to wipe away, so far as it was in their power to do so, the unnecessary suffering of our fellow human beings around the world. Their record was well respected and recognized in the international community. It was less than six months ago that Canada was awarded the Nansen Medal for its past refugee record. It was less than nine months ago that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) defended his Government's assistance to refugees by stating: "If we err we will always err on the side of compassion and on the side of justice".

Given that backdrop, the refugee legislation presented last week makes a mockery of those two significant statements. The direction and spirit of the new policy is misguided and fundamentally betrays the reasons behind Canada receiving that medal, and betrays the Prime Minister's earlier commitment, particularly when we consider that the UN declared 1987 as the International Year of the Homeless.

The policy, Your Honour, is an inadequate and insensitive culmination of a two and a half year consultation process. Most of the organizations and churches, who have invested their time, energy and talent towards creating a better and humane refugee system, are now vehemently opposed to the major tenets of the Bill. Yes, the ideal refugee system, like the ideal world, does not exist. However, it is irresponsible to design and implement a new refugee determination system in light of very glaring and significant shortcomings.

For the past several months the Government has been waging an unholy war with a strategy which tried to fabricate a crisis that would have Canada invaded by thousands upon thousands of refugees. It tried to manipulate public opinion so as to justify its legislation which will very clearly and obviously be marketed on the principle of curbing abuse. It was hoped, of course, that this would help redress the Tory Government's dismal popularity across the country.

It has been painful for my Party and for me personally to have to witness this strategy firsthand, day after day after day; painful because the world-wide issue of human suffering is too important and sensitive to be dictated because of purely partisan political needs; painful because the problem of refugees is not merely a domestic Canadian challenge only. It is, rather, a challenge for countries of the world to deal constructively, equally and collectively in sharing the burden of assisting those less fortunate than ourselves. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I invite the Government once again to put an end to this strategy.

No political Party or Member of Parliament in this House has a monopoly on virtue. Certainly I do not. It is recognized and accepted by all Members of Parliament, all three political Parties, and every Canadian, that Canada cannot possibly absorb all of the world's homeless. There are some 15 to 20 million refugees around the globe searching for a home. No Member of Parliament, no political Party, and no Canadian wishes to legitimize or reward fraudulent refugee claimants.

However, this does not absolve the Government of responsibility. It cannot wash its hands of refugees, act as a modern-day Pontius Pilate, and turn away genuine claimants from our borders and push them aimlessly adrift. That would act as a trigger for other nations to do likewise, and only serve to aggravate the human crisis facing refugees. It would limit their options and make them all the more desperate. Yet that is what the Government has effectively done by its announced policy statements in Bill C-55.

The policy is not tolerant, it is not fair, wise or compassionate. Instead, it is a policy rooted in inflexibility, rigidity and restrictiveness. The Government's refugee policy is fatally flawed in a number of key areas which I would like to examine and evaluate.

The first difficulty is that the Government has chosen to establish a pre-screening stage at all border points. Two officers would decide, virtually on the spot, whether the claimant has an arguable case to proceed before the new refugee board. In effect this would act as a huge barrier to the refugee board, a wall which would seriously restrict the number of claimants who would receive a fair hearing. Merely looking at the origin of the claimant and the country from which he or she arrived is an irresponsible solution which ignores individual circumstances.

It is therefore absurd for the Ministers responsible for immigration to guarantee, as they have, that no genuine refugee will be turned away under this policy. How can they possibly say that, when those refused during pre-screening will have been denied any meaningful and serious consideration? The Ministers simply cannot have it both ways. Pre-screening is a most disturbing development that undermines the principle of full accessibility which has been advocated by every non-governmental organization, every church organization, and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

As well, as a first reaction to the refugee claimant the implication left by pre-screening is one that views the refugee as a major problem and favours returning the problem to someone and somewhere else. It is, in short, an irresponsible stance. Furthermore, one of the two pre-screening officers will be a member of the refugee board, while the other will be an immigration adjudicator; in other words, an official of the department.

That raises some obvious questions. Why is it necessary for this person, who will be clearly enforcement minded, to be there? Whose interests will he be serving? Why is the Government confusing immigration and refugee matters when one of the crucial exercises was to clearly distinguish between these two very different areas of public policy? If the Ministers were genuinely concerned with the authenticity of refugee claims, why are both officers not members of the refugee board? Regrettably, that immigration adjudicator represents the hand of the immigration department within this all important first step.

The second major shortcoming is that this pre-screening process is based on the concept of a "safe third country", meaning that Cabinet will draft a list of so-called safe countries which will largely dictate who can or cannot access the refugee process. This is also a worrisome and alarming initiative and represents a complete and unfortunate reversal of government philosophy.

Past Liberal Governments had established and respected a B-1 list of non-deportable countries. That was a statement that we as a nation were not prepared to deport people to certain parts of the world because of their poor record on human rights. The emphasis in this equation was clearly in favour of the individual's protection and safety.

Under the Conservative Government not only did they abolish the B-1 list on February 20 of this year, but now the Government is prepared to reverse direction by drafting a list of countries that the Government is fully prepared to deport individuals to. Consequently, if a refugee arriving in Canada had previously stopped in a country on that list, the pre-screening officer would have the person returned to that respective country. Given that criteria under this legislation, there is no discretionary authority provided to the two officers. Thus there is no basis for them to consider the individual's circumstances and the merits of his claim.

In addition, important unanswered questions abound. Where are the safeguards? Where are the legally binding agreements between Canada and those countries on the proposed list? Will Canada give in to fierce political and diplomatic lobbying by other nations wishing to get on Canada's safe country list? Will there be trade-offs? Will there be countries which for complex reasons will be on the list, but should not be, given their human rights violations? Will the power game between countries supersede the life/death situation of individual refugees?

• (1140)

Furthermore, how fast will Canada react to new surges of violence and human rights abuses? How much lag time will occur before people from a place of sudden unrest will be accepted as bona fide refugees? Finally, what in God's name is a third safe country? Is the United States, which freely deports Guatemalans and El Salvadorans, a safe country? Is Great Britain, which deports Tamils, among others, a safe country? Is Guatemala, which is a democracy, a safe country? If they are not, which clearly they are not for these individuals, will Canada have the courage to keep these countries off the safe country list? And why has the Government failed to present a list of third safe countries which could be debated freely by Members of Parliament?

The safe third country concept is riddled with serious and fatal flaws. It is completely unfair and unreliable for the Government to measure and determine a person's claim of persecution according to this concept. In following this path Canada would be one of the first countries to legislate this third safe country concept. As such, it would only serve to encourage other countries to consider adopting similar restrictive responses. This would inevitably lead to a world-wide corridor of closed and locked doors.

Toward this end, has the Government asked itself what will be the cumulative effect and result of all countries undertaking a third safe country concept? Where would the 15 million to 20 million refugees go? What options would they have? What actions would they resort to as an alternative to facing torture or certain death in their native lands? How many rich and unscrupulous immigration consultants like John Santos would such a policy create?

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, to anyone with foresight that such an opting out on a grand scale would undermine any real international solution to this international phenomenon. It would destroy the shared responsibility and commitment which countries have for the plight of refugees. It would jeopardize the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees signed in 1951. If this does happen, as it very well could in the foreseeable future, it would not be a proud achievement for our country to be regarded as the chief architect in dissolving the world's resolve toward combating the problem facing refugees.

My Party and I are asking today that the Government abandon its safe third country concept as the centrepiece of its refugee policy, and furthermore that the Government reject its pre-screening exercise. Doing so would allow claimants to enter the refugee board directly and immediately where their claims could be presented and a decision rendered. Under this scheme the decision-making process would be expeditious, fair and humane, which is precisely what the consultation process has demanded.

By rejecting such a model the Government is compounding the red tape, by adding a needless pre-screening layer of bureaucracy at all border points. It would increase the over-all cost which would be associated with this extensive network across the country and would burden Cabinet by establishing, monitoring, and revising so-called safe country lists which, in the end, may not be in the best interests of the individual refugees. Talk about inefficiencies and inconsistencies!

While the Government claims that the new refugee board is non-adversarial, the facts and legislation prove much different, and this is where the third deficiency lies within the system. The Government's own documentation suggests and proposes that a departmental immigration lawyer will present "pertinent facts" about the claim to the two refugee board members. This will automatically make the hearing highly adversarial and highly controversial.

After all, whose interests will the lawyer be representing? From where would he obtain his information? Would he receive it from the immigration adjudicator involved in the first pre-screening stage? If so, is that proper and is that made known to the refugee claimant? Again, why mix immigration officials with the refugee process? If the refugee board is intended to be a specialized body dealing exclusively with refugee related matters and its officers are competent and knowledgeable in the plight of refugees, why intervene with immigration personnel?

Our clear and unwavering recommendation is to allow the refuge board and its officers to take the proper and fair course with the refugees coming before it and that the department keep its distance unless otherwise requested.

The fourth serious problem with the refugee determination system is its appeal procedure. The Government has proposed that the appeal mechanism be to the Federal Court of Canada, with leave. It could not have selected a worse apparatus since the Federal Court has only the mandate to hear argument on the legal process and points of law and not on the facts and circumstances facing the individual refugee. The Federal Court cannot receive new evidence, reassess the credibility of the claimant by examination, or permit opinions or advice by either the United Nations High Commission on Refugees or non-governmental organizations. It is unrealistic to expect that such reforms in our court system would occur in the foreseeable future. Therefore, under these terms the appeal is shamefully weak and again runs counter to all the individual evidence presented during the extensive consultation process leading up to this piece of legislation.

The Liberal Party's position has always been that, to a large degree, the refugee determination system is only as viable and as strong as its appeal mechanism. The Government's plans for appeal are most inadequate and mean that an error in judgment by the refugee board can be fatal for the claimant. In an attempt to avoid this monumental concern we advocate a separate and independent appeal board whereby mistakes and errors could be avoided or corrected.

To add insult to injury, the Government has also declared that the appellant be deported until the Federal Court has considered the appeal. This is a most unbecoming and inhumane attitude which places the claimant in danger or possible death by forcing their return to their native country while the court decides. By the time it does, it could possibly be too little, too late. Is this the spirit of our justice system? I think not. In addition, there is considerable doubt as to whether this deportation order is constitutional and whether it violates Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which safeguards the security of the individual.

The fifth and final major flaw of this legislation, which I have touched upon previously, is with regard to Canada's international obligations and its respected leadership under Liberal Governments in dealing with the plight of refugees.

By constructing a new refugee determination system founded on a pre-screening stage and on the concept of a third safe country, the Conservative Government, on behalf of our country, is throwing in the white towel and sending a very wrong and dangerous signal to the rest of the world. All countries will move the clock back and justify that, in part, by pointing to Canada. They will adopt the attitude that "if Canada can do it, we can do it", or "if Canada did it, it must be right".

Clearly, if the Conservative Government is serious about facilitating an effective international solution to the refugee dilemma around the world, as were past Governments; if it is serious about protecting Canada from increased fraudulent claims, as were past Governments, then it is incumbent upon the Tory administration to avoid any regressive action which would incite that very mentality.

• (1150)

The Government must therefore resist putting in place a rigid and limited arrangement that would only trigger a crumbling domino reaction around the globe. I regret to say, however, that with its recent legislation the Government has done precisely that.

We have witnessed in various bilateral dealings a Government that has been wimpish with some of the stronger nations of the world. The lumber deal with the United States and the fish deal with France come to mind.

It is regrettable that, in order to prove its macho image, the Government had to pick a fight with refugees; people who are nationless, who are suffering, who are facing torture and seeking refuge and a home. In my opinion and that of my Party, that is not the sign of a compassionate country. It is not the sign of a progressive country or the sign of a courageous country.

We as a society cannot right every wrong, make perfect all the imperfections of the world. But neither can we sit content and idle, and diet while others starve, buy millions of new cars every year while most people of the world go without shoes, purchase and build larger and more expensive homes while other fellow human beings lack basic shelter.

Our problems, having grown to the size of the world, no longer seem our own. Each day we are required to respond to a new crisis, created by people whose names we cannot pronounce, in lands of which we have never heard. Yet most Canadians, I believe, share broad and deep hopes for the world. Their hopes are of a world without war, of a world where peoples now suffering in poverty, persecution and oppression can win a better life for themselves and their children. It is hope of a world where the energies of mankind are dedicated, not to destruction but to building a generous and spacious future for one and all.

In reference to the plight of refugees, while we in the international community have not solved the problem, we are and must be firmly committed to finding solutions. More important, Canada has struggled to finally turn away from those whose hearts are frozen, from those who feel that the poor and oppressed are evil, and from those who feel that every man and woman should fend for himself or herself.

As a Government, as a Parliament, and as a country, let us not repudiate our past, let us not repudiate our heritage, let us not repudiate the tradition we have enjoyed and which has been so well recognized and acknowledged by the international community. Let us not be indifferent to the future by paralyzing the progressive development of our refugee and immigration policies. Let us dare to care, so that the next generation will harvest the fruits of our work and the world can be made better by our compassion.

We serve notice today to the Minister and the Government that this Party will fight for that type of Canada and that type of society.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, the legislation that was introduced recently certainly has streamlined the system and has given an opportunity for a fair and quick response to refugees as they come to our borders and airports in Canada.

The Hon. Member particularly referred to the initial hearing with the adjudicator and the member of the advisory board. I was rather surprised that he would be so critical of those adjudicators in the Public Service who conduct the initial hearing. I am sorry that the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has no faith in the excellent personnel who work in the Immigration Department and have been serving this country abroad and in Canada so admirably in the processing of refugees.

How does the Hon. Member's proposed scheme overcome the current difficulties? What would he streamline or eliminate to make the process work better? Does he believe that he can simply achieve efficiency by saying the system will be efficient? I suggest that his comments were very deficient. How does he propose to deter the abuse that is so obvious in the system today?

Will he answer those very important questions in relation to his comments that I thought did not deal with the issue of trying to make a refugee policy efficient and fair, as I believe the proposed legislation will be?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the member, who I believe sits on the Immigration Committee, has failed to recognize in the last two and one-half years the very fundamental requests that have been coming from the Standing Committee, the Plaut Report, from non-governmental organizations and churches across the country, and Members of the House. They have requested that we make a distinction between immigration and refugee related requests.

While the desire of someone to seek landed immigrant status in this country is legitimate and completely acceptable, it is very different from the forces that drive genuine refugees to flee their countries. Given their choice or opportunity, those refugees would stay in their country of birth. However, those forces of persecution have forced those people to pack their suitcases and seek a new and better world. That has been the central theme of all submissions before our committee.

I cannot understand why an honourable Member, particularly a government Member who may have more access to the levers of power, cannot understand that it is not a criticism of public servants who do a good and honourable job. It is simply a request that within our system and under a new refugee process bureaucrats should deal with immigration and a different group of individuals and experts should deal with refugees.

According to this legislation the Government has, once again, mixed refugees with immigrants and has missed a golden opportunity to distinguish between the two and thereby educate many Canadians about the difference between those two groups arriving on our shores.

If the Government is genuinely concerned about dealing with the refugee claims, I suggest it could have retained its two officers at all border points and could have had as members of refugee boards two people who are competent in refugee and geopolitical events around the world, rather than appointing one immigration officer who is only concerned about immigration control.

• (1200)

The Hon. Member then went on to say what was our policy, in place of that screening process. We have proposed, supported once again by the committee and all the NGOs, to allow those individuals an opportunity to come before the refugee board. That is where the decision would be rendered, not at some discretionary point at the border. This is suggested not because the country is on the so-called "safe country" list. A person would come before the board and state his or her claim, and at least the decision, whether negative or positive, would be seen as fair and humane. That is the important step the Government is precluding.

What the Government is doing is trying to suggest it has improved the new refugee board, that somehow that is the jewel of the legislation. However, very craftily it has then drawn a barrier around the jewel and challenged refugees to try to get to it.

The Hon. Member then went on to ask how do we curb abuse. The Hon. Member should pay close attention to the fact that with every single restrictive measure announced by the Conservative Government, the number of fraudulent schemes and scams has risen. With each step in making the system more rigid and inflexible, refugees are becoming more desperate. When one is facing life and death, and one's back is against the wall, one will resort to anything, and there are careers built up by fraudulent and unscrupulous consultants who earn hundreds of thousands of dollars from individuals who simply wish to escape the tortures they and their families are facing.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to ask a question or make a comment because the presentation of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) was excellent. However, when a Government Member rose to ask a question which somehow inferred we were taking a position against civil servants, I decided to ask the Hon. Member for York West if he would elaborate as to what happened to a civil servant who in fact did come forward with information with respect to abuses which were taking place. This particular individual lost his job. The Government complains that the Liberal Party does not believe in civil servants at the same time as the Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration saw a civil servant fired because he did his job, because he believed so much in his job that he was prepared to come before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for York West to elaborate on that matter.

Mr. Marchi: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is absolutely right. Through the Hon. Member's suggestion, the Government was again trying to have it both ways. It was criticizing me unfairly and inaccurately for trying to taint its Public Service and, at the same time, Ministers responsible for immigration are guilty of, in effect, firing a civil servant who brought valuable information to the attention of the Government that criminal elements were being invited to participate in the refugee determination system.

That officer, together with myself and other Canadians, knew, of course, that that was completely absurd, that the refugee determination system should not be encumbered by such elements. What is the price, under this Conservative Government, for trying to flag an issue? What is the price paid by an officer who is trying to do his or her job? What is the price paid by an officer who tries to educate the Government by bringing to the attention of the standing committee and Hon. Members something which is very wrong, that an invitation to criminal elements was being sent across the country? The price is that that person does not have a job today. But the Government did change its regulations and format. It did recall those letters and sent out a new letter. That action by the Government is an admission that John Quigley was right, yet it still had the temerity to fire him and he is still looking for a job.

When a Government Member says we are tainting the Public Service and then fires an individual civil servant for a job well done, it simply shows he has a "suck and blow and hold your breath at the same time" attitude. Even if that were possible, I am not sure it would be worth the price of turning Tory blue.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this is a useful motion which has been proposed by the Hon. Member for York West. I would like to point to two main parts of the motion on which I wish to dwell. One of the demands in the motion is that the Government should establish a system which would guarantee full accessibility to the system for refugee claimants by rejecting any pre-screening stage within the process. I think this is a most important matter for us to examine at this time.

The Bill before us is a long and complicated Bill which makes many changes, some of which perhaps go beyond what the Minister or the Cabinet were aware they might be doing.

It will not be easy in 20 minutes, in a day or in a week to deal comprehensively with all aspects of the legislation. However, the matter of accessibility, whether people will have a fair chance to get a fair hearing under our system, is I believe the very most important point we have to consider at the outset.

The second demand of this motion really is part of the first, so I will go to the third demand, which is that the Government should initiate a system which will provide every refugee with the opportunity of an appeal before a competent and independent refugee body which would consider all facts and circumstances of the appellant's claim. I am very glad we have the opportunity for this debate as a way of opening up, both to Members of Parliament and to any listening members of the public, some of the main issues before us presented by the Government's Bill C-55. This is a matter on which I have worked hard for five and a half years. It is a matter about which I feel very strongly. I will try to concentrate on reasoning with the arguments and I hope I will not fall into too passionate a rhetoric, which is very easy to do.

This is a very deep issue. It affects immediately tens of thousands of refugees, or potential refugees—real ones—and affects indirectly and very really a very great many other people in Canada besides, both morally and, one might say, in their own personal interest. It affects these people morally because Canada has undertaken solemn international obligations to protect a person who is out of his or her country and unable to return because of fear of persecution on account of political, religious or other such reasons. What this legislation will do, if it is adopted, is to make that mostly a mockery. Therefore, it is very important that the public understand what is being done in the name of the people of Canada who were given the Nansen Medal. That medal was not given to the Government. It was given to the people of Canada. The Government should not dishonour the record of the people of Canada.

This Bill will also injure Canadians in another way, in their more personal interests, by damaging an ancient right which has been enjoyed by British subjects for four centuries in Britain and by Canadians for as long as there have been Canadians under present Canadian and British law. I will come back to that later.

As has been pointed out by a number of people, we have perhaps 15 million refugees in the world. Some of them are refugees because they are fleeing from repressive governments. Some of those countries our Government opposes or condemns. Some of those countries our Government supports, such as the Government of El Salvador to which our Government has made a bilateral loan. I had the opportunity to visit El Salvador last week in order to learn first hand some of the human rights conditions which have forced probably one million of the five million people in that country to seek refuge. One half a million or more people have gone to the United States and a half or million or more have become refugees, displaced persons, within their own tiny country. Yet Canada approves of the Government of El Salvador. It said so after examining its election procedures, and supports it through a grant or loan of $8 million. We therefore have some obligation for refugees who comes to us, especially from a Government which we support.

• (1210)

Others come as a result of hunger and poverty in some countries such as the Philippines, Guatemala or the countries of sub-Sahara Africa where agriculture of the type which supported the people for thousands of years has been destroyed, in large part as a result of the enterprises of countries such as the United States and Canada. These countries ensure that the fertile land is not used to enable those people to eat, but is used to sell us luxuries. Therefore there is hunger. That is the principal reason for hunger in so many countries, countries often with very fertile land such as Guatemala and the Philippines.

Again, there are refugees from those countries because the hunger in those countries also generates violence, violence by the Government that forces the people to live in impossible conditions and violence by the people who resist the repression of the Government. This is not new. It is related to another pattern.

For about 30 years now countries such as Great Britain and those countries of western Europe as well as the United States and Canada have either invited, or at least tolerated, people coming from what we might call the countries of the south to work in our countries, usually as cheap labour. The tide is now being reversed.

When I spoke last week with the Vice-Minister of Planning in El Salvador he was not urging that Salvador send more cheap labour to Canada. He was urging that Canada should invest in factories in El Salvador with our wood, or perhaps cut the parts for jeans here and have them sewn together down there by what he called—and he speaks very good English and has visited this country—cheap labour. We know how Salvadoran labour is cheap labour. They assassinate labour union leaders. So, again, Canada is not an innocent bystander in the situations in the world that produce these refugees. Canada has its own responsibility for the fact that there are such refugees, or our own share of responsibility, with a number of other countries, whether they are East or West. The tide is now being reversed.

That is the context in which we now see a concerted move by the countries of western Europe, including Great Britain, by the United States and now by Canada to restrict the entry of people from what we call the Third World, from former colonial countries, from countries of the South, into our countries of the North. We no longer want them as cheap labour. We are saying to Salvadorans, "Stay in Salvador and struggle to get a $4-a-day job. Do not come to Canada looking for a $4-an-hour job." We have a total perversion of the refugee determination process presented to us.

We have the pre-screening system. There are three screens being put forward by the Government. Two of them are contained in Bill C-55 and one of them is done by regulation. In Bill C-55 one screen is called the safe country. If a Salvadoran comes up to Fort Erie and was living in the United States illegally—no doubt—then we will send him back to the United States because Canada considers that a safe country. We do not know what the United States will do because we do not care to know. When we enquire of the United States, from those who have studied refugee matters in the United States, we find that only 2.7 per cent of Salvadorans who have claimed refugee status in the United States have been recognized as refugees.

Naturally, when the United States supplies the guns and the military advisors with which the Salvadoran people are being killed, the United States is not about to admit that those Salvadorans who escape to the United States are genuine refugees. Until now Canada has had the courage to disagree with the United States. Now, in an indirect way, Canada is going to join the United States in forcing those people to go back to the situation that they quite reasonably fled.

There is another screen. A person will be told, if he comes from a certain country, "Oh, that country does not produce refugees. That country has a good record of human rights. We do not have any refugees from that country. So you could not possibly be a refugee and we won't even listen to your story".

Clause 48.4 of the Bill quite clearly lays down that the only evidence to be considered by this team of an adjudicator and a refugee board member is the track record, that is, Canada's recording of a track record of a country from which the refugee comes, as to human rights and as to whether we have any experience of receiving refugees from there. So if there is a coup in some country the day after this Bill is passed and the supporters of the former government run for their lives and a few of them get to Canada, Canada will say, "We have never received any refugees from your country. Therefore your country is not a refugee-producing country. Therefore you are not a refugee. Good-bye, don't talk to us. We don't want to hear your story". That is what this Bill means. That is the second screen.

The third screen is already in place. This country, this Government, and to some extent the previous Liberal Government—and I am sorry the previous speaker is not here to respond to this—has continued the policy and extended very widely the policy of refusing to admit a person who comes from a well-known refugee-producing country, if it is suspected that by setting foot in Canada he would gain the opportunity to claim refugee status. Chile was the first notable example. Years ago the then Liberal Government put a visa requirement on Chile. This Government has also put a transit visa requirement on Chile, and on all countries for which this Government requires visitors' visas. Therefore, if a person comes from a refugee-producing country this Government hopes to keep that person out of our borders entirely by the visa.

If a person comes from a non-refugee-producing country, this Government hopes to keep him out on the grounds he could not possibly be telling the truth. If he has spent any time in another country which this Government would like to consider safe, without ever defining what is safe, the Government will say, "Go on back there and make a refugee claim. We don't care whether your refugee claim is fairly considered or not".

The problem is that these screens completely destroy the value of having a refugee board or division, and the Government sometimes calls it one and sometimes the other in different documents. There will be very few people who will get the benefit of this fine, just, well-tuned service. Nearly all of them will be stopped at the border. The Government estimate we hear is 50 per cent. Many people in the private sector have an estimate of about 80 per cent that will be stopped at the border.

That is the first and worst part of this legislation. But there is a very serious matter also in relation to the appeal. The appeal system is one that has been condemned by Rabbi Plaut and by all the NGOs who have appeared before us.

• (1220)

Although there was uncertainty in the report of the standing committee a year and a half ago, it is now recognized in fact—and this can be tested—that the members of the standing committee know that there has to be a much more thorough, genuine form of review dealing with the facts of the case than is possible through an appeal to the Federal Court, let alone what this Act provides, that is,appeal to the Federal Court only with leave. The Federal Court has a record in granting leave in about 2 per cent to 5 per cent of the requests.

The appeal system, as provided here, not only denies the standards set up by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, not only denies the tradition of Canadian law, British law, and I guess French law, but it will be peculiarly inappropriate in the case of refugees, because the appeal system will only allow an appeal by leave on questions of law.

Yet, the whole question with a refugee is not a question of law; it is a question of his story, what happened, is he telling the truth, is it really a case of persecution? It is the facts upon which the dispute will have to be based, not the law. It is very ironic to give him the only kind of appeal he cannot use. It does not make any difference to his case, even if he could get to that court.

However, I want to mention how the Minister has perhaps gone further than he intended to go. He has taken away the right of judicial review of all Canadians in this matter. Under this Act, and this includes the whole of immigration, not just refugees, according to Section 83.1 Canadians lose the automatic right to seek judicial review by the Federal Court against what they think is an unjust decision by a government official. I understand that that right dates back to the 16th Century. When Canadians became Canadians we inherited that right from a long way back, that automatic right to review by the court. Now that is to be turned into a right by leave only and, as I say, the Federal Court gives leave to only about 2 per cent to 5 per cent of the requests it gets.

This means that if a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant, not a refugee, who is trying to sponsor a relative from the old country, is turned down, and is turned down again at the Immigration Appeal Board by a procedure which he thinks is unjust, he has practically lost any recourse to the courts. He can only appeal by leave to the Federal Court. He will have very little chance of getting that leave or of getting an examination of his complaint against the officials. It is a very serious attack on the rights of 25 million Canadians.

Of course it is not intended in that way, I would suppose. It is intended only to attack the refugees, to restrict their right to appeal against a possibly unjust decision at some stage of the refugee determination. It restricts their right to an appeal against a government appointed official, which is a right that we believe belongs to everybody in Canada, including a refugee claimant. However, the Government is so eager to take away that right from refugees that it is taking it away from all Canadians so far as they have any concern with immigration matters.

There are two other matters upon which I wish to touch very briefly. One is that the Act now legislates exclusion, as did the Government by its regulations on February 20, of all that have been classed as humanitarian and compassionate considerations. For decades Canada has practised and legislated the principle that there are some people who cannot be narrowly defined as refugees, who cannot show that they are being or will be persecuted individually, who should not be sent back.

When there is civil war in Lebanon with women being shot in Beirut because they went out to buy bread, when people in Iran are being drafted into a war which has already killed a million people, we have refused to force people to return to those countries, at least at the present time. That has been our humanitarian and compassionate program, available under the present Immigration Act. However, it will not be available to a person who comes in, claims refugee status, and cannot prove that he or she is individually liable to persecution but simply says, "I don't want to go back to my home in the middle of a civil war". That person will be deported to civil war because the officials have no opportunity to do anything but consider the person's refugee claim. If the person says, "I am not a refugee, but my house is right in the middle of where they are shooting and I had to get out", according to the Act the officers at the border will have to say,: "Go, get out". He will not get to the refugee board, let alone to the special committee which under the present law reviews cases of humanitarian concern. What we have is a very unfortunate mess in this Act.

I remind the Hon. Minister, Hon. Members, and others interested that a proposal was put forward in January by the Canadian Council of Churches, which is widely supported by many other groups, including the Bar Association, the Jewish Congress, the Labour Congress, the Confederation of National Unions in Quebec, and so on. It is simple. First, two officers of the refugee board who are competent to decide upon all questions relating to refugees are to meet the person as soon as possible. All questions touched in this Act can be decided by those officers. Once they have made a favourable decision, he will be landed. When there is an unfavourable decision, there will be a review by another section of the same competent board just to catch any possible errors. It is recognized in discussion with the Department that that could be completed normally in three months. If the person used the right of appeal to the Federal Court, that could take longer. However, as I say, that not only relates to refugees, it is something which all Canadians claim as a right, the right of appeal to the Federal Court.

There is and has been before the Government for months a fair, quick, and efficient system for recognizing real refugees when they come to Canada. In accordance with our Charter, we have said that they must have an oral hearing before the person who will decide their fate. That hearing must not be on the question of from what country he comes, not on the question of what country he might have stopped in on the way, but on the question of the merits of his claim, that is, what happened to make him run away from his home or why does he think he is being persecuted or would be persecuted. That is what must be orally heard by the refugee board, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, not just the question of from what country he comes.

I ask the Government to withdraw the legislation, to sit down with members of the standing committee and other Members of Parliament, and to work out a revised form of it which would avoid the fatal flaws mentioned in the Liberal motion. I have tried to outline only a few of them in my few minutes.

Mr. Robinson: I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), not only on his excellent speech but for the terrific work he has been doing, since he was elected to the House, on the question of refugee policy in Canada.

My colleague referred to Canada's international obligations in respect of refugees. I know he has seen firsthand the tragic plight of refugees, in particular from Central America, who are seeking to flee tyranny and repression in those jurisdictions. Could he elaborate upon the extent to which Canada's international obligations will in fact be undermined as a result of the adoption of this legislation? To what extent will Canada be failing to meet the commitments it has made in the United Nations and in other international forums in this important area?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, because it is one which is apparently left obscure in the legislation and in the promotional documents that have been issued by the Government in support of its legislation.

Canada's obligation in the law of the United Nations and in law as adopted by Canada is non-refoulement, non-forcible return of a refugee to the country from which he is fleeing. According to law, that refoulement may not be done directly or indirectly.

• (1230)

In other words, when a Salvadoran comes to our border and says he had to get out because of what the police, the army or the death squad were doing around his home, not only is our obligation under international law and under Canadian law, as it stands at present, not to send him back to Salvador, it is also not to send the Salvadoran back to a country that will not guarantee us or guarantee the United Nations not to send him back to Salvador. The United States gives no such guarantee and yet Canada is prepared to send people back to the United States. There are many other countries that give no such guarantee. The Government has not mentioned that aspect of the law in its treatment of this act.

Non-refoulement is the primary obligation. In other words, when a person comes to Canada claiming protection, we do not send him away first and then say we would like some other country to find out whether he is a refugee, washing our hands of him. What we do is, first, find out whether he is a refugee. After we have heard his case, and he has had his appeal, if we decide he is not a refugee, then we are entitled to return him to his country of origin or country of embarkation, whichever will accept him.

What we must not do is to ship him back to a country which might, either without a hearing or with a mickey-mouse hearing, in which the United States has indulged for Salvadorans and Guatemalans, send him back to the very country he had to flee for the sake of his life. Even if we do not know whether he is a refugee, we are not entitled to take that risk with his life. We have to first determine whether or not he is a refugee before we make a decision about whether to deport him. If he is a refugee in our estimation, we do not have to keep him in Canada but we must—if we do not keep him in Canada—find a country which will guarantee not to return him to the country he fled.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question. The current situation is such that Canadian immigration officers at border points have been told to admit Salvadorans and Guatemalans immediately if they are under any kind of removal order from the United States Government. Is the Hon. Member implying there is something in the new legislation that would change that situation? Is there something that he sees that is not readily apparent to me? It seems to me that we might have a reasonable expectation that the current situation in that regard would, indeed, be very likely to continue.

Mr. Heap: That is another very vital question, Mr. Speaker. The way the law is written, and I have read in Hansard the Minister claiming that this is not true and I have been told he said on The Journal that this is not true, but what I read in the law and what several quite experienced immigration lawyers read in the law is that if a Salvadoran comes to Canada from the United States, Canada by this law, if it has designated the United States as a safe country—and one will get you ten that the United States will be regarded as a safe country—the officers must return that Salvadoran to the United States. They do not have discretion. If a person came to Canada, perhaps not through a so-called safe country but from a country considered not a refugee producing country, those officers would have to return him. That can happen.

In 1982, a Guyanese person approached me. He had been refused refugee status by a refugee status advisory committee on the ground that he belonged to the government Party, that he belonged to the dominant race in Guyana. He tried to explain to them that even though he was on the police force he had been expelled from the force because he went to a political meeting of an opposition Party. In that country they do not disagree only in words, they disagree with actions and sometimes with fatal actions. He and his wife had been threatened. All of that was disregarded because at that time Canada refused to admit that Guyana, a former member of the Commonwealth, was a refugee producing country. Since then Canada has admitted that Guyana is a refugee producing country. I believe he was the second person to win such an appeal from Guyana. Under this act, officers would not even let him make the appeal. He would not have a refugee hearing. He would be told, "You are from a non-refugee producing country. Go home".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Immigration (Mr. Weiner).

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to enter into a discussion that has so pre-occupied me, certainly for the last 10 or 11 months. I have had an opportunity to travel our countryside, more particularly in the last 30 days. I have been to Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, London, and Toronto on numerous occasions, Montreal and Ottawa. It was always with an effort to try to get a better feeling of how we are being perceived and what we are doing. One thing became eminently clear. There is a lot of understanding and sympathy for a government that, once and for all, is declaring clearly that it will protect those in need of protection.

We will be guaranteeing a safe haven for everyone who needs one. For those who already have a safe haven, there is less priority and they should be applying as immigrants and meeting the same fair and just criteria that all other intended immigrants have to meet. We have come up with a process that will protect those in need. We have a system that will treat claims fairly in three steps instead of eight.

An opposition Member, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), proudly looks to his Party's record in setting forth an inhumane policy of keeping tens of thousands of people here in the system without knowing what their future might bring them, without knowing whether their refugee determination would be positive or not. Indeed, once they knew what that determination was, in two out of three cases, after the eight steps, they are deemed not bona fide refugees, yet they would still be allowed to stay. That is not a refugee determination policy, that is an open door policy.

We are saying clearly that we are leaving the door open to legitimate refugees, and I want to emphasize that there is a door. We are not going to let anyone take that door off the hinges. We will act in a decisive way to welcome real refugees. We will curb abuse but we will plan and manage our resources effectively.

This heavy flow of phoney refugees has been accelerating in recent years. We know, for instance, that in the early 1980s there were some 1,800 claims a year; last year there were 18,000. In the early part of this year the number was running up to 1,500 a week. That was perceived to be unfair and unjust. That kind of chaotic system cannot be allowed to continue because chaos is unfair. People want fair and just criteria. This is a real world, not a theoretical world. It needs common sense solutions, not naivety. We are putting into place objective criteria, not subjective opinion.

I want to state clearly that we have a process that will give streamlined processing, quality oral hearings in front of independent board members and, as Members have indicated, appeal by leave to the Federal Court. We meet international obligations signed at Geneva. We respect our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We maintain our proud tradition, the proud tradition in evidence when Canada won, justly so, the Nansen Medal, and we will protect the integrity and the credibility of not only of our refugee policy but of our entire immigration system.

There have been some inaccuracies in what has been set forth this morning and it is incumbent upon me to try to clarify some of those.

We have a three-step process. Both members of the Opposition have constantly referred to step one as a pre-screening. Step one of the new process is not a pre-screening. Pre-screening implies that decisions are made before claimants are in the system, before they have access to a member of the refugee board, and there is no consideration of their individual circumstances. We speak of step one as our initial screening, but it is a screening within the system.

• (1240)

The difference is not merely one of semantics. Unlike other countries in which there is pre-screening, every claimant in Canada appears in person before a member of the refugee board. Everyone who comes to a Canadian port of entry will be able to assert a claim to Canada's protection in an oral proceeding before a member of the independent refugee board and an adjudicator. If there is a case against a refugee, he or she will be entitled to be so informed and, with the aid of counsel, to respond.

There has been some discussion of the first step, but I can say clearly that there are two tests inherent in it. The first is the objective criteria: does the person have refugee status elsewhere, can the person be returned to a safe third country, are there manifestly unfounded claims, has the person previously been rejected by Canada recently and is the person subject to deportation order from Canada already. The second test is a very low-threshold test of credibility. The adjudicator and the independent board member listen to the story to see if there is a shred of a chance that this refugee is in fear of life, limb, liberty or security.

Hon. Members have asked if there is or is not discretion in this second test. I have said clearly that the second test is a very real test. Section 48(1-2) of the revised Act permits the referral to step two of some individuals who already hold refugee status in another country provided there is reason to believe that they have a well-founded fear of persecution in the country that has recognized them as refugees.

Similarly, where a claimant is alleged to have arrived from a safe third country, return is not automatic. Both the member of the refugee board and the adjudicator must be satisfied on the evidence produced that the person did come to Canada from a country prescribed by the Governor in Council as safe and that the claimant would, if removed from Canada, be allowed to return to or has a right to have a claim determined there.

That clearly shows that the two individuals involved in the very first step will listen to the representations of the claimant and his counsel in a very honourable way. At the same time, they will listen to other representations that may be made about whether or not the individual has come from a safe country. They will also look at any refugee status that has been established.

My hon. friend is taking issue with the safe country list that will be determined some time in the future. I have stated very clearly that it will be based on very stringent criteria. We are well aware that life and death is at stake here. Indeed, those criteria include the human rights record of the country and its record in protecting all refugees as well as any nationals who can be excluded from the safe third country denomination we may place on the country.

In addition, there will be the widest consultation. We will seek the advice of all credible sources including NGOs, church groups, international humanitarian organizations and our own External Affairs people who serve us with distinction around the world. Indeed, there will be a new documentation centre that will serve this independent refugee board.

All of this is intended to provide us with the kind of up-to-date information Hon. Members want to have to ensure that before one individual can be returned to a country, there would already be an ad hoc arrangement between the countries, an arrangement which in some cases may have to be formalized. We would have to guarantee that the country to which we are sending a person has a record that is as good as ours in the protection of refugees and that that country will indeed not risk our reputation and our international obligations by returning the individual to his country of origin from which he has escaped.

I would have some difficulty with an individual who had fled his own country and was living in a second country in which he may have legal status for a period of time. It would appear to me that if such a person has been in a second country for a reasonable period of time, he would not continue to be a refugee if he were to begin looking around for a new home. He would definitely fall into an economic immigration category. A refugee is a person who finds the first safe haven and tries to make a go of it there with the protection it affords him.

Last week, proposals for a new refugee determination system were tabled. This is a system which reinforces Canada's commitment to refugees who have a well-founded fear of persecution.

[Translation]

The new process includes a number of provisions that guarantee some refugees major rights. These rights are compatible with our obligations under the United Nations Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Above all, the process guarantees that no genuine refugee will be returned to a country where he fears persecution.

[English]

I have repeated throughout that a real refugee will never be sent back to face death or torture. Our system will always be open and will always guarantee that protection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: Canada is and will continue to be a place of safe haven for genuine refugees who need our protection. This system upholds our commitment to these people, a long-standing commitment which is a vital element of a policy which, since World War II, has enabled some 500,000 refugees to settle in Canada.

A good many people have commented on the Bill tabled by the Government. Most of those comments have been made by people with genuine concerns for whatever positions they have supported. Some comments have been favourable while others have raised the spectre of bigotry and prejudice, if not of racism, within our society. Other voices, including those of people who ought to know better, have suggested that these impulses are what motivated the Government to act as it has. Now the Opposition is putting forward a motion suggesting that we have failed to uphold Canada's humanitarian record.

By being firm, we are creating a hospitable environment. We are creating an environment that would allow our generosity to refugees to go unabated. We have heard about the 15 million refugees in the world and there is no limit to the contribution we can make by bringing real refugees to Canada if those resources are found either by Government or the private sector, public or non-governmental organizations or churches. Our generosity is clear through our contributions to international humanitarian agencies and our contributions to those who come to our country and receive fair and quick hearings at which they may tell us their stories. That generosity must go unabated.

On the other side, my officials, my staff and I have had extensive consultations across Canada in order to determine how we can raise immigration limits in the years to come. Recent studies have made clear the benefits immigrants bring to Canada, the jobs they create, the increased demands for goods and the greater tax share that new immigrants and refugees pay, even out of proportion to that paid by longer-standing Canadians. We have heard that in the very first year, new immigrants and refugees earn more than the national average income. These studies are available and have been conducted by universities and our own Department. That kind of data must be spread across Canada.

Some time in the month of June when I rise to tell of immigration levels, I am looking forward, with the consent of the Government and the Cabinet, to seeing those levels rise. If they do rise in a controlled and moderate fashion, we will be able to allow the limits for all categories of immigrants to rise, including independent immigrants, business investors and entrepreneurs and family-class immigrants. There has been considerable discussion over that class of immigrants. Indeed, we may also want to look at refugee limits. By doing that, we will show Canadians that we are being fair and just.

When criteria can be met, people will be welcomed. Let us not continue to send out the signal that if an immigrant does not meet the criteria, he can come through the back door and will be allowed to stay. That kind of unfairness has a very negative connotation and does not help in the management of immigration.

• (1250)

As Minister of State for Immigration I take those kind of charges personally. I can tell you that a second generation Canadian from Montreal, whose origin is Jewish and east European, whose family and himself would probably not be alive today were it not for coming to Canada, does not act out of motives of prejudice or racism, and does not serve in a Government in any way whatsoever influenced by such feelings.

Let there be no doubt that this Government's commitment to Canada's long and honourable tradition of refugee humanitarian assistance is 100 per cent solid. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have played leading roles in the western community, at the UN, in the Commonwealth, and other bodies, in championing human rights. They have been adamant and insistent that no compromise can be made when it comes to the dignity of man. They have argued compellingly that ideology means little to an empty stomach or body wasted through illness and disease.

Our international relief and development aid is among the most generous of all nations, some $2.2 billion in the last fiscal year. Such aid is being directed with ever better management and sensitivity to local needs. It is making a real contribution to the elimination of those root causes which ultimately create the refugee.

As I said before, since 1945 Canada has welcomed over 500,000 refugees. In 1986 the people of Canada were awarded the Nansen Medal by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for this commitment. That was the first time a country was so honoured. However, our work has not ended. We know that. We are but one country and this is a global problem.

The UN's approach to solving the world-wide refugee problem, an approach that Canada fully endorses, is threefold. First, the best option for some is to voluntarily return to their homeland when peace is re-established. A second option is local resettlement; and third, for a very limited number of refugees, resettlement in third countries.

Canada, as a signatory to the Geneva Convention, supports this approach. First, we make generous cash contributions through the Department of External Affairs and CIDA to international humanitarian agencies, including the Red Cross and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, exceeding $50 million in 1986-87. We provide food aid to countries for assistance to refugees, the total value exceeding $16 million.

For those who can only be helped through resettlement, Canada is second only to the U.S. In 1987 we will resettle 12,000 refugees with financial assistance from the federal Government. Voluntary agencies and individuals sponsored 4,000 refugees in 1986. We anticipate 5,000 in 1987.

The Government helps match sponsors and refugees and provides travel loans. Sponsored refugees can access federal language or occupational training. These resettlement efforts are complemented by a federal government fund of $90 million for transportation loans and federal assistance of $110 million to individuals for adjustment assistance and language training in 1986-87. In addition, we provide $4.4 million in grants to immigrant and refugee aid groups for settlement and adaptation in 1986-87. We must also support international efforts in solving the refugee problem while meeting our convention obligations through our refugee determination process. It is designed to help those who arrive looking for protection and who have nowhere else to go.

The Bill that my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), tabled last week proposes a new streamlined refugee determination system to replace the process that has become bogged down. The system we have now cannot respond effectively to genuine refugees who need our protection. This new system guarantees that every refugee claimant will be seen by a member of the refugee board. The proposed system ensures that no genuine refugee will be returned to a country where he or she may face persecution. It also ensures that refugee claims will be processed fairly and quickly. It will now take only months to process a claim, not years.

[Translation]

The Bill provides for the creation of an independent agency: the Immigration and Refugee Board. This agency will consist of two divisions: an Appeal Division, dealing with immigration matters and a Refugee Division which will deal exclusively with claims for refugee status. Members will be selected for their competence in refugee matters.

The new process provides a number of safeguards for the individual, such as the right to counsel. Legal counsel will be provided if necessary. A list of safe third countries will be drawn up by Cabinet and the new Refugee Division will consist of members with special training in refugee matters.

The new Division will also have the resources to expedite the processing of claims, toward the obvious benefit of refugees who need our protection. Of course, all claimants will have the right to appeal to the Federal Court on questions of law.

[English]

It offers fair and thorough consideration of all claims. There will be an informed and independent decision up front to determine the need for a full hearing of the claim. This will be accomplished through the creation of an independent refugee board. Its expert members will see every claimant.

It will also be able to respond effectively to abuse by quickly removing those who do not need Canada's protection. People with refugee status elsewhere and people arriving from safe third countries who had a reasonable opportunity to claim protection will be returned to those countries. People with no arguable basis for their claims will be returned to their country of origin. A unanimous decision is required to remove these people. This means Canada will be able to concentrate on helping those who have no other options in seeking protection.

Those people with an arguable claim or who do not have prior protection will be referred to the refugee board for an oral hearing. At the board their claims will be heard in a non-adversarial oral hearing before a two-member panel. Only one member of the panel must find in favour of the claimant. In other words, split decisions will be in favour of the claimant. Decisions will now be rendered in months, not years, and accepted claimants will have the right to apply for permanent residence.

[Translation]

The provision concerning return to a safe third country will be applied only with the greatest discretion, and only to persons who received refugee status in another country or who are likely to receive it. The provision will be applied on a case-by-case basis, after careful screening of a country's record with respect to certain nationals.

[English]

In designating safe third countries Cabinet will rely on information received from credible sources, as I indicated.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I may point out that this Bill reflects the Government's unswerving commitment to refugees. It represents a balanced approach Canadians can understand and accept, without detracting from the traditional humanitarian approach to refugees taken in our Immigration Program.

The process is fair. It is fair to genuine refugees, to claimants and to Canadians. In the case of genuine refugees, it puts an end to the delay and uncertainty to which they were exposed, and it maintains the intrinsic character of our Immigration Program.

The new process compares favourably, at the international level, with the situation in other countries that receive refugees. It enables us to meet our obligations under the United Nations Convention, to respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Human Rights, and to maintain our traditional humanitarian approach.

[English]

In short, this legislation ensures that Canada's outstanding humanitarian record will continue. It affirms this Government's commitment to protect genuine refugees who need our help. Finally, it demonstrates our resolve to curb abuse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister finished by saying that this refugee legislation, Bill C-55, will continue the proud humanitarian record of our country. He suggests that it enjoys popularity and agreement across the land. If that is the case, can the Minister tell us why Tom Clark from the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees would say:

> Instead of access there is a screen, instead of bringing Canada a notch ahead of European countries, the immigration minister has brought it down to their level. It's despicable.
>
> Michael Schelew, Amnesty International:
>
> It's an about-face on Canada's humanitarian record, that may place people fleeing persecution in jeopardy.
>
> Elie Wiesel, Nobel laureate:
>
> I believe that a society can be measured and judged by its attitude towards strangers . . . I would hope that Canada would like to be measured according to these lofty rules. I say Canada should lead by example.
>
> Lorne Waldman, Canadian Jewish Congress:

• (1300)

> The long-term aim of the immigration department is to eliminate all refugee claims within Canada. The Government has spent millions of dollars and innumerable hours consulting on this problem, and everyone's recommendations have been ignored altogether.
>
> Gunther Plaut said:
>
> It does not do justice to our international obligation to protect refugees. Nazi Germany would qualify as a safe country under Canada's proposed new refugee rules. I don't think I would have been let in. I came in the 1930s from Nazi Germany. The Government is building a Berlin Wall around the country.

Those are quotes from leaders and representatives across the country. The last, Gunther Plaut, was the author of a Government-commissioned study on refugees. I would like the Minister to address those comments.

Why have the abuses, the schemes and scams intensified during his term in Government? The abuses which are happening in Lebanon, Portugal, Turkey and Brazil are happening under his administration as they happened under no previous administration. Why the increase in abuse? If the Minister is very intent on curbing abuse, why is he so lax in prosecuting the individual perpetrators and unscrupulous consultants who are reaping a fortune from the backs of individuals who do not know any better?

Can the Minister explain what a safe third country is? He has avoided that in Question Period and in committee hearings. I urge him now on the floor of the House of Commons to tell Parliament, and through Parliament, Canadians, what the definition of a safe third country is. Does he have the courage to tell us whether the United States is a safe country vis-a-vis Guatemalans and El Salvadorans and whether Great Britain is a safe country vis-a-vis Tamils? Would he place those countries on our so-called safe country list?

Finally, with regard to the pre-screening application, if he is genuinely sincere that this is not a pre-screening, why did he appoint one officer from the refugee board and one immigration adjudicator rather than having both officers at the border point from the refugee board?

In addition, when he talks about increasing immigration is he talking about increasing targets or increasing the actual number of people entering the country? While his targets have been high, the number of people who have come into this country is considerably lower than those targets. I urge him to stop playing politics with targets and to come clean with Canadians by telling us what are the real numbers. It is useless to have lofty targets of 115,000, 120,000, or 125,000 people when only 80,000, 85,000 or 90,000 people will actually be coming into Canada.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I have met and will continue to meet many of the individuals whom my hon. friend has named. I look forward to seeing some of them at the meeting which will take place in Montreal at the end of the month, which the Council of Refugees will host. I continue to work with all groups to explore avenues of being more helpful to the real refugees of the world. Let us not try to exploit the situation. Let us try to manage our resources in order to help them.

The Member talks about the unscrupulous counsellors. That highlights the fact that the citizens of at least three countries in the top six source-producing countries of claimants do not appear to be refugee producing. While we have not blamed the innocent citizens who have come here from Portugal or Turkey, and now from Brazil from where there are three flights a week, it is obviously the system, the eight steps, the guarantee that they will be allowed to stay here, which is encouraging them to come.

Forty thousand claimants came during that five-year period and followed the eight-step process. The determination took years. After that time only 650 were asked to leave. That is a 98.5 per cent chance of staying. If you cannot meet the criteria will you wait your turn like other honour-bound law-abiding citizens, or are you going to try to jump the queue? Are you going to try to buy a ticket? Will there be an unscrupulous counsellor who will try to subvert the credibility of our immigration laws?

We have been acting in a very immediate and spontaneous fashion on the information that these innocent people have been bringing forward. We have provided all the assistance we can. We have gathered that information and turned it over to the RCMP who continue to investigate. As each investigation is complete it is turned over to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). As far as I am concerned, any infringements are now in another jurisdiction. We look forward to action when the investigation is complete.

The Hon. Member for York West wants more information about safe third countries. He wants to discuss hypothetically the list of countries which Cabinet will be providing in the near future, based on very stringent criteria and the advice which will be given. I do not think anyone can be any more sensitive to the unacceptable human rights standards which are prevalent in the world today than is our Secretary of State for External Affairs. He has spoken out with great distinction everywhere he has travelled on how deplorable those human rights conditions are and how that affects our bilateral relations. He tells those countries to clean up their act once and for all.

We continue to maintain that the answer to the refugee problem is not to bring all the refugees to Canada. That is not the priority of the U.N. or of Canada. Our priority is to create a peaceful and humane situation in the countries of origin. We want to enable them to return to their homeland and help them build up their socio-economic conditions. We will do all of those things.

The Member continues to maintain that my first step is some kind of pre-screening. I ask him to reread what I said because it is clear that it is step one. It is filled with discretion. There are two criteria, the first being objective and the second a very low threshold, low standard test. If an individual who makes a claim fears for his life, limb, liberty or security, he will be sent to step two for the beginning of a hearing within 10 days.

With regard to the levels for immigrants, the 125,000 which we indicated for 1987 will be met. I have received a report on the early part of the year and we are running right on schedule. The previous Government closed the door to independent immigrants. We reopened the door on January 1, 1986. It takes time for the independents to start applying again. It takes time to fill up the pipe. All of that is taking place. That is perhaps why last year we only reached 97,000 or 98,000, but we will continue to build the numbers.

We look forward with vision and vigour to the future when more immigrants will be brought to this country to continue to build our society with fairness and opportunity for all. That is what the greatness of this country is all about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I have the consent of the House to proceed with two more short questions or comments before we recess?

Some Hon. Members Agreed.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question relating to a section which the Hon. Minister quoted. Although I listened carefully I was not able to find the section. I would, however, like to comment on his remarks if he could cite that section for me. The Hon. Minister quoted it with regard to the claim that the two representatives at the border will be able to make discretionary decisions on the merits of the claim.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I quoted Section 48(1-2) in commenting on Section 48.1(a). It is clear that that is a notwithstanding clause. In addition, without trying to fine tune this piece of legislation, there is before the House a Bill which Members of Parliament will have an opportunity to examine further at committee. That is what Parliament is all about. That is the democratic system.

I certainly look forward to constructive input. There will be other forums, the House at third reading stage and the Senate. We look forward to the co-operation and help of all Members to get through the Bill in a speedy fashion.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, may I make the comment which I asked for leave to make? Subsection 4 provides what the refugee division shall consider evidence adduced at the inquiry, and it refers to two matters which have nothing to do with the individual case. It is clear from the way it is worded there, where it states "regarding", not "including", that if the two qualifications mentioned in Clause 4(a) and Clause 4(b) are not met, then the two representatives may consider it their duty to hear no other matter. That is the point to which I wish the Minister would respond.

• (1310)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will allow the question by the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and the Minister can reply to both.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, my constituents strongly support an orderly refugee determination process. That is particularly the case if they are in the category of constituents who have family in other countries whom they would like to bring here. They want to make sure that no one is jumping the line and that they have the right to bring in their relatives on an equal basis, with no one getting ahead of them. At the same time they want to make sure there are no genuine refugees who are sent back to a country where their lives will be in peril.

I recall a time in 1979, during the Clark Government, when we were faced with a great number of Vietnamese boat people wanting to come to this country. At that time the Government encouraged the private sector, churches and non-governmental organizations to sponsor these refugees in great numbers.

I have two questions for the Minister. First, will the Government be undertaking a program of advertising and encouragement in order to try to get the church groups and non-governmental organizations, many of whom are raising concerns now about genuine refugees, to sponsor refugees so that we can solve this problem in a way they want to do it, but in an orderly and legitimate fashion?

Second, in addressing the problem of immigration targets as the Minister indicated he will be doing in June, is he prepared to broaden the definition of family class at that time for other immigrants to this country?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, currently there are some 72 agreements with parent organizations and umbrella organizations, all of which are intended to help fund some of the refugees who will be brought to this country. I indicated that some 5,000 will come in under that program.

Indeed, some 20,000 designated refugees and others under the humanitarian programs will come to Canada in 1987. We are constantly looking for ways of maximizing the benefit of the resources we put into this area.

In a world with 15 million refugees, it is very clear that we are trying to help those in most desperate need, and 20,000 out of 15 million is like winning the lottery.

We are working aggressively to indicate to the community that there is no ceiling to the number of refugees who can be brought here, provided they are prepared to pay for and sponsor them after we have helped pick them.

Indeed, we are also looking at other options of managing refugee programs. As part of our consultation on over-all levels, when we allow the numbers to rise—if we can do that with the consent of the House and the Government—obviously we will look at all categories. One area to which we must respond, and will, is the concern for the family. The standing committee asked me to respond and we actually deferred to spring the decision on that. However, we are examining this area within the levels we will bring to the country.

I have said clearly that if we increase the numbers we should do so by allowing all categories to be opened fairly to dependants, business investors, entrepreneurs and, indeed, refugees, if possible, since there are some resource implications. There may be more innovative ways of proceeding. Hopefully it will allow the family class to be expanded somewhat.

I undertand the Hon. Member's comments. I heard those same remarks from families right across the country who indicate the importance of reuniting families much more expeditiously and completely.

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is again trying to fine tune whether, in the first step, the adjudicator and the independent refugee board member have any discretion. I clearly stated in a previous response to a question by the Member for York West that there is that discretion. Indeed, the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) raised a question of privilege, which is now in your good hands, and we continue to maintain that there is that discretion and the ability to test the credibility of the witness. If one of the Members feels that an individual is in danger, there is the ability to refer the individual to the full oral hearing in a non-adversarial way before the independent convention refugee determination board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.16 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.16 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[Translation]

CANADIAN CULTURE

NEED TO PROTECT EXISTENCE OF LA VIE EN ROSE MAGAZINE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, with deep regret we learned last week that La vie en rose magazine would be suspending operations for at least six weeks and that it might even stop publishing for an indefinite period.

Despite the financial support of its readers, both men and women, and of the federal Government last fall, unfortunately La vie en rose has been unable to erase its deficit. We deplore as well the lay-off of a good many of its employees.

We have to be concerned about the possible demise of this feminist and francophone publication, Quebec's equivalent of Ms Magazine in the United States. Almost the only one of its kind in Quebec and Canada, La vie en rose featured different, original and invariably topical viewpoints. Of some concern as well is the fact that its English equivalent, Winnipeg's Horizons, closed its doors last March. The disappearance of these two avant-garde magazines is a considerable loss. These closures do not augur well for other similar publications in Canada. Now and then the message conveyed by La vie en rose may have upset our intellectual comfort, but it did stimulate reflection, the only guarantee of the evolution of our mentalities.

Therefore La vie en rose, like many others, deserves the support of all of us, and again especially that of the federal Government. As the authoritative voice of women's opinion La vie en rose must continue to publish, for its existence can only benefit our cultural mentalities.

* * *

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—RELEASE OF PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE, DANYLO SHUMUK

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 11, 1987, Danylo Shumuk, a former Ukrainian prisoner, was granted permission by Soviet authorities to emigrate to Canada and join his family in Vernon, British Columbia. Having served more years in detention than any other prisoner of conscience, Danylo Shumuk has endured 40 of his 72 years in the prison system of the Soviet Union. During the past five years he served as an "internal exile" in the Soviet Asian Republic of Kazakhstan and the 35 years prior to that in various concentration camps in the Soviet Union.

It has taken the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Canadian Government 10 years to achieve freedom for this innocent man. I would like to add my voice in support of those who continue to pursue the rights of individuals who are victims of oppression, and to condemn those who violate human rights wherever they might occur in the world.

* * *

DISASTERS

SINKING OF NEW BRUNSWICK HERRING BOAT WITH LOSS OF LIVES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, with great regret I bring to the attention of the House the sinking yesterday of a herring boat off the coast of New Brunswick. I know Members of the House will want to express their condolences to the families and friends of crew members who were lost.

Fishing is one of Canada's most dangerous occupations. Those who work upon the sea have a constant awareness that disaster and death are an ever present possibility. With the introduction of new fishing technology, the number of fishermen lost at sea has increased. Fishermen must be given the knowledge and training to look after their own safety.

The Grey Report on occupational health and safety in the Atlantic fishery found the position of all Atlantic provinces to be similar. They would welcome a federal initiative on safety in the fishing industry. They wish to be involved in its development. They see a need to review existing regulations, and recognize education as the key.

I repeat my call to the Government to put in place the best possible fishing vessels' safety program before any more lives are lost.

* * *

[Translation]

STATUS OF WOMEN

TRIBUTE TO BUSINESSWOMEN OF ABITIBI—TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Last Thursday, May 7, Mr. Speaker, Val-d'Or was the site of a unique event in Quebec, the meeting of the five Northwest Quebec regional Chambers of Commerce where the Abitibi-Témiscamingue businesswomen of the year awards were presented.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to salute and pay tribute to Mrs. Gertrude Bradley of Rouyn-Noranda, Mrs. Micheline Tremblay of Amos, Mrs. Murielle Baril of La Sarre, Mrs. Suzanne Langevin of Témiscamingue, and Mrs. Diane Côté-St-Julien of Val-d'Or, the wife of the Hon. Member for Abitibi in this House, who were presented with the businesswomen of the year award in their respective region.

Mr. Speaker, through these award winners we want to commend all Abitibi—Témiscamingue women for their economic, social and cultural contribution, because they all play a significant role in our collective betterment.

It is primarily to their enthusiasm, their competence and their leadership that Abitibi-Témiscamingue happens to be the most dynamic region of Quebec.

To all these women, bravo and thank you!

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIERS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, because of the time factor, I did not have a chance to speak to the subject yesterday, but today, I would like to point out that I am proud, both as a Canadian and a Quebecer, to join my leader and my colleagues in the Liberal Party in congratulating the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers on concluding an agreement that will enable Quebec to come back to the Canadian family.

I particularly appreciated the speech made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). His parliamentary experience, acquired in Quebec and Ottawa, shone through in a speech that was clear and unambiguous, a message where reason and passion were in complete harmony.

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on the excellence of his speech. It is my view that in a debate like the one we had yesterday, there is no room for political partisanship, and that we must acknowledge the efforts of each Member, regardless of his political affiliation.

An opportunity like this one, to enable Quebec to sign the Constitution Act, 1982, is not an everyday occurrence. I hope to have a chance to express my personal views on the subject in this House before the official signing of the Accord by the First Ministers.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPPORT FOR MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, reports of the differences of opinion in the Liberal caucus yesterday indicate a return to name-calling and a portrait of Quebec in two camps. Such is not the case. I believe most Quebecers support the position taken by the editorial board of The Gazette when it said:

> It is a matter of ensuring that the members of one-quarter of the Canadian polity believe their interests are served by their country's fundamental law, and that the rest of the country has cared enough to take these interests into explicit, binding account.

Special attention is given in the Meech Lake Accord to the national characteristic of French and English-speaking minorities in Canada. This is of particular importance to the English-speaking community in Quebec.

The commitment of the federal and Quebec Governments to respect the linguistic characteristics of our community will, I believe, assure fairness and good will in the use of both official languages of Canada.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF CHEQUES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a situation which I think is typical of how the Conservative Government of Canada is approaching services to the people of the country. It is dragging the level of service down to the lowest common denominator instead of trying to improve the situation.

I refer to the direct mail unit for the Canada Employment and Immigration Centre in Thunder Bay which services all of northwestern Ontario. Up until one week ago unemployment insurance cards were key-punched in Thunder Bay and sent electronically to the regional printing centre in Belleville. These cards were then back in the mail the next morning and were in the hands of legitimate UI recipients on Thursday at the earliest.

Thanks to this bureaucratic change those cards are now processed directly to Belleville, meaning great delays for the people of northwestern Ontario. People who normally would receive their cheques on a Thursday or a Friday are now having to wait over the weekend, if not longer, and the situation is getting worse.

I call this decision into question. I also call into question the Government's commitment to the local advisory councils which have strongly recommended against this change. But the Government has refused to listen to them.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

VISIT OF POLISH HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST, LESZEK MOCZULSKI

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Leszek Moczulski, a Polish Solidarity leader, is visiting Ottawa today. His credentials as a human rights activist are impressive and include the formation of the Movement for the Defence of Human and Civil Rights, as well as major contributions to freedom of expression through the underground press in Poland.

In 1980 Moczulski was arrested for his human rights activities and sentenced to seven years in prison. He was released in a general amnesty in 1984. He was then rearrested a year later, along with other Solidarity leaders.

While in prison Moczulski suffered three heart attacks, and following his release in 1986 he was allowed to travel to England for medical treatment. He has paid a high price in freedom's cause. Moczulski's visit provides us with the opportunity to hear firsthand of the repressive conditions in Poland and of the important work carried out by Solidarity in its fight for basic human rights.

S. O. 21

Moczulski's courage and dedication in the face of stern opposition are inspirational, and his words give us pause to reflect on the good fortune we enjoy in this free and democratic nation.

I hope my colleagues will join with me in welcoming Mr. Moczulski to Canada and in expressing our gratitude for his tremendous contribution to the cause of freedom and human rights.

* * *

REVENUE CANADA

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX FROM FISHERMEN—EFFECT OF RULING ON INDEPENDENT FISH BUYERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a problem confronting our independent fish buyers. According to the garnishment provision in Section 224 of the Income Tax Act, fish buyers can be directed by Revenue Canada to collect income tax from certain fishermen.

The fish buyers point out that this process creates costly and time-consuming bookkeeping which hinders a normally quick business transaction. It is a financial burden as well because the buyers must make a percentage payment to the Government even before they are able to deduct payments for any accounts owed to them by fishermen.

• (1410)

There is an additional risk because the buyers alone are responsible if mistakes are made in the collection process. Finally, the process has created unfair competition between buyers. When a fisherman is faced with tax collection from one buyer, he often chooses another buyer instead, to avoid the tax deductions.

It is for these reasons that these fish buyers urge the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to develop an alternative system of tax collection for fishermen. If this cannot be done, at least the Government should provide adequate financial compensation to these fish buyers for their services.

I urge the Minister to resolve the matter in consultation with independent fish buyers. I look forward to his decision.

POLICE WEEK

COMMUNITY-BASED POLICING INITIATIVES

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to recognize Police Week. I am pleased to have this opportunity to recognize the efforts of the Canadian police community and, in particular, to focus attention on the development of community-based policing in Canada.

Community-based policing is not a new idea. In one form or another it has been a key element of the police philosophy for a long time. I am pleased to note that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) is also a strong supporter of community-based policing initiatives.

We must not rest on our laurels, however. There is much more to be done. In coming years we must renew our efforts to ensure that all Canadian communities benefit from what we have learned.

We must look closely at the needs of young people who are at risk of conflict with the law. We must give more attention to crimes of violence, abuse, and exploitation. We must give particular attention to the protection of women, the elderly, ethnic minorities, and our children.

We must work together with our colleagues in municipal and provincial Governments, in police forces, in other federal Departments, and in the non-governmental sector, to develop police and community prevention programs and to assist the business community and private citizens to implement crime prevention strategies.

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—DELAY IN ESTABLISHING NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with Premier Vander Zalm two months ago to seek his support in setting aside South Moresby as a national park reserve. The Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) have chosen this area as the highest priority in Canada for designation as a national park reserve. Premier Vander Zalm recognized this and, in the March 9, 1987 Speech from the Throne, promised to expedite negotiations and to seek a bilateral agreement to develop the enormous tourism potential of the area.

Since that time Conservative Members of Parliament from British Columbia have worked hard to discredit the proposal and to undermine the work of the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment. This activity has fostered bad faith negotiations to the point where B.C. now proposes 10 more years of logging throughout South Moresby and a price tag of over $100 million for what would be left.

Canadians and the Haida nation have a right to know just how duplicitous some B.C. Tory MPs and Social Credit members are when it comes to South Moresby. They publicly preach about the values of preservation and parks while they smugly support clear-cut logging throughout South Moresby.

This week is perhaps the last chance for the Prime Minister to bring order to this political chaos. If Bill Vander Zalm gave the Prime Minister his word and this is the highest priority of the federal Government, it is time for a call from the Prime Minister to Victoria and to those B.C. Tory MPs.

* * *

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF TRAVEL INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "Canada grows with tourism" is the theme of Canada's First National Tourism Week which has been proclaimed from May 11 to May 17.

In making this announcement, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) has emphasized the important role played by the travel industry in the national economy. It is a $20 billion business and creates some 600,000 jobs throughout Canada. Last year Canada welcomed over 16 million visitors, and the potential exists for rapid expansion right across the land.

Therefore, let us all become tourism ambassadors and help those in the hospitality industry to achieve even greater success in the years to come.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

TRIBUTE TO LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, like the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin), I was unable to express my views on the constitutional question. Today, I therefore rise in my seat to congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) on his position and his open attitude to Quebecers, and for having responded favourably to the legitimate claims presented by the Government of Robert Bourassa. Mr. Speaker, after he took this position and made this speech, I think Quebecers will be able to say: John Turner is one of ours, a true Quebecer and a great Canadian.

S. O. 21

[English]

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—LIBERAL PARTY CRITICIZED ON ISSUE

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, former Liberal Finance Minister, Donald Macdonald, once known as the thorniest Grit in the Rosedale garden, launched a scathing attack recently on the Liberal Party for failing to stake out a comprehensible position on free trade.

He specifically lashed out at the Liberal trade critic for whipping up anti-American sentiment with an uninformed, politically motivated campaign against free trade talks with the United States.

• (1415)

In discussing the present Liberal caucus, he stated:

> Some of them don't know anything, and you can't tell them anything.

In Mr. Macdonald's words:

> Manitoba MP Axworthy represents the worst of both worlds. I've debated on platform with Axworthy across the country and I just don't think he's got a sound grasp of the issue and I also think he's engaged in purely political posturing.

Since the brains of the Liberal Party seem to be solidly in favour of a free trade agreement, my advice to the Liberal Caucus is get on the ball or get on the bus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED DISABILITY BENEFITS—PAYMENTS CUT AS RESULT OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS' ACTIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last year the House of Commons passed amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. One of those amendments was to increase quite substantially disability benefits for a number of Canadians who, it was recognized, have been living in abject poverty because of the low benefit structure under the CPP.

Those amendments were the product of negotiations between the federal Government and provincial Governments. The negotiations, I would assume, took place under good faith bargaining. What has happened since those amendments came into effect on January 1 of this year is that provincial Governments have been adjusting their welfare programs in order to grab those benefits that were passed by this House for disabled Canadians. As a result, I have a letter from one woman in British Columbia who, because of what provincial Governments have done, has received a net increase in disability benefits of $4.09 a month rather than the $152 which she would otherwise have received.

It is time that the Government called on provincial Governments and demanded that they pass on the benefits to which disabled Canadians are entitled.

* * *

[Translation]

DISASTERS

DEATHS OF FISHERMEN IN ACADIA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, for the second time in three weeks, the sea has claimed victims. Late Sunday night and early Monday morning, four fishermen from our region saw their ship sink and subsequently drowned. They were fishing herring off the coast of Escuminac, near the mouth of the Miramichi River.

The bodies of Joachim Chevarie, Olivier Frigault and Fernand Ouellette were picked up out of the water, but the body of Joseph Vautour, the captain, has not been found.

I knew Joseph Vautour well. A brave man like all fishermen in my region who must wrest a living from the sea. This tragedy reminds us of the conditions under which fishermen must work to earn a living. Danger is a constant companion.

It is with profound sadness that I offer the bereaved families my condolences and the condolences of those around me. These families will be going through some difficult moments, and I wish them all the courage they will need to overcome this ordeal.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—NATION-WIDE SCHOOL PROGRAM PROPOSED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, to my amazement, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said in Vancouver that any AIDS campaign in high schools is "in their provincial jurisdiction". In reply to that I said in Vancouver that AIDS did not respect provincial boundaries.

Will the Prime Minister not agree that a nation-wide school program is needed because it is a national concern, and not just a concern of 10 provincial education ministries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree completely it is a problem that is national in concern and that it deserves a national commitment by all levels of Government and by all people in Canada who are interested in dealing with a very serious not only medical but social problem which deserves our greatest commitment.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MOBILIZE NATIONAL EDUCATION CAMPAIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of that response and I want to follow it up. The Prime Minister knows that AIDS is not only a national but an international plague. I am deeply disturbed by the prudish attitude of many Canadians. There is a fear that the political backlash is preventing an all-out national attack on AIDS.

I am not interested in academic arguments about what is appropriate on television or in the print media. I am sure we can find the right ethical message. Will the Prime Minister not intervene with the Minister and with all provincial Governments to mobilize a national strategy and campaign for educating Canadians, and particularly younger Canadians, to prevent the spread of AIDS in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand what the Leader of the Opposition means when he refers to the prudish attitude of Canadians.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Some Canadians, I said.

Mr. Mulroney: Some Canadians. I suppose it is always the case in a pluralistic society that some of us are more prudish than others.

In regard to the question he has raised, I agree with my right hon. friend that this is a matter of grave national consequence. I raised it with President Reagan at the summit here because of the international research implications. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I will be attempting to lock in other nations to both research and methods of arresting the spread of this debilitating and killer disease. It is a human problem that deserves the resolve of the nation to try to bring it to a halt.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Prime Minister raised the issue with the President. If he would raise it now with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, we may get somewhere. It is an urgent issue.

[Translation]

ELABORATION OF NATIONAL STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about preventing the spread of AIDS. Some community groups have said quite clearly that the Government of Canada is not setting up a campaign or a national strategy to prevent AIDS and to prevent its spread. Once again, I want to ask the Prime Minister when this national strategy organized by the Department of National Health and Welfare will see the light of day and when this campaign will be launched with the necessary dispatch and in a manner that is visible and concrete?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is not in the House today, has demonstrated great leadership in the social sphere, including the very important question of AIDS, research, and how to fight AIDS. He is working very closely with the provinces who have specific jurisdiction over and a special responsiblity in this area, but I can assure you that the will and the resources required to undertake this great national and provincial offensive against such a serious disease will not be lacking.

* * *

TAX REFORM

IMPACT ON OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is dircted to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns tax reform. Some senior citizens I met on the week-end expressed their concerns about tax reform, because they remember how Old Age Security pensions were deindexed. Could the Prime Minister promise senior citizens that his Government will not take advantage of tax reform to put a surtax on Old Age Security pensions and tamper with the principle of universality?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the object of tax reform is in fact to lower taxes for the vast majority of Canadians and especially for lower-income Canadians. That commitment is clear, and details on how it will be done will be outlined on June 18.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. For the first time I feel like saying in English: Don't touch the senior citizens. Mrs. Denis watches you, Mr. Prime Minister.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES IN FAVOUR OF ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My supplementary for the Minister of State or the Prime Minister is as follows. The Prime Minister is aware that senior citizens are now allowed two tax exemptions, one because of their age, and one in terms of their pension income, which means they save $650 million annually in income tax. Could the Prime Minister promise senior citizens that whatever changes may be made as a result of tax reform, these $650 million will be used to upgrade programs for the elderly and not to reduce the deficit?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I should remind the Hon. Member this Government has brought in major changes to the pension system. That is the first important point. As to his particular concern, tax reform will make clear the position of that age and income group, and it would not be appropriate to reveal that before that time.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There is a story on The Financial Times news service today about the proposed takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco. According to that report part of the secret information in the preliminary deal between the two companies could mean that the takeover could be finalized as early as the next 24 hours. Is the Government aware of the contention that one of the basic points of that agreement, if it is reached in the next 24 hours, is that any counter-bid from any other source could be effectively squelched?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I can only advise the Hon. Member that, according to the knowledge I have, there has been no formal deal presented either to Investment Canada or to Energy, Mines and Resources. Until such time it would be inappropriate to comment further.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister, whoever is answering on this very important matter. The Government has always contended there was a possibility of counter-bids being considered. If this report is accurate and the signing takes place within the next 24 hours, that rules out any other possibility. Is the Government then going to stand back and let bankers in Toronto, financiers in Zurich, and company shareholders alone determine what the public interest should be in this crucial takeover?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the NDP said, "If this report is accurate". That is a very important qualifier. Until such time as all the facts are ascertained it is really inappropriate to comment on sheer speculation.

This decision has to be made by the shareholders of the company. They are in a position to make that decision. When it is made and the proposal is presented to the Government of Canada it will be examined in the normal course as it relates to Investment Canada, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and all the other mechanisms in place for that purpose.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this is not the portfolio of the Deputy Prime Minister but if the report is accurate then the possibility that counter-proposals could be considered by Dome down the road is effectively precluded.

Because the next 24 or 48 hours are crucial will the Government look into this report and, if it is accurate, finally take action and get involved to make sure the public interest is served? The public has already put hundreds of millions of dollars into Dome Petroleum.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Leader of the NDP gets so worked up about a question the basis of which is, "If the report is accurate". He should ascertain for himself whether the reports are accurate. I am sure the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and others, are monitoring the situation. This matter has to be resolved by the company and I am sure that in their wisdom they will take all these things into consideration. In the meantime it is very inappropriate to comment on sheer speculation and hypothesis.

• (1430)

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On May 5 I said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was misleading the House when he said that an agreement between Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum allowed for other bids to be made for Dome. The memorandum of agreement in fact prohibits other companies from making bids under the threat of a suit.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that the Government's hands-off policy with respect to Dome has meant that high-priced lawyers of an American multinational are in fact setting Canada's foreign investment policy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that it is the position of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to get into these things with both hands and both feet. That is not the position of the Government. The fact is that the Government has put in place institutions to protect the public interest and it will be protected through due process. I wish Hon. Members would wait until that due process takes its course.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Government has feet of clay and is not prepared to stick up for the rights of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT INVESTMENT CANADA BE INSTRUCTED NOT TO APPROVE PURCHASE PENDING OTHER OFFERS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Will the Deputy Prime Minister instruct Investment Canada not to approve Amoco Canada's bid for Dome Petroleum until all other reasonable bids have had a chance to come forward, or is he afraid that the American Government will lean on the Canadian Government for interfering, thus reducing substantially what success is left for Canada's free trade agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member should read the comments of his former colleague, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, who had some interesting points to make about the position of the Liberal Party with respect to free trade, before he makes silly statements like that.

When a proposal is presented to Investment Canada it will be examined in due course on the basis of net benefit to Canada. That is clearly established and totally consistent with the investment propositions which have been handled in the past, and this case will be handled in the normal fashion.

[Translation]

DOME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who seems to think that the sale of $6 billion worth of Canadian resources is of no concern to his Government even though they will now be owned by a foreign firm. As a former Financial Times writer I can assure him that the report rests on solid ground. It is clear that the Dome-Amoco agreement in principle has been so drafted as to eliminate any opportunity for another Canadian company to make an offer for Dome. Does the Canadian Government approve such action on the part of Dome, the ultimate result being that it will be impossible to maintain Canadian control since no offer from a Canadian source will be accepted?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I repeat again to the Hon. Member that there is a process which is followed. Investment Canada will examine the proposal when it is received, as will the Department of Finance and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I do not know why the Hon. Member does not have faith in these institutions because they are charged with the responsibility of ensuring that the public interest is fulfilled.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT STUDY OTHER OFFERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister who takes the position that, once the agreement has been signed and delivered into American hands, everything will be under the control of a federal Government agency. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the fact that both Imperial Oil of Canada and TransCanada Pipelines have expressed interest in buying Dome, and is the Government prepared to guarantee that the bids of these two companies will be considered before the agreement is signed and delivered to Amoco?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have read reports, as has the Hon. Member, that there has been interest expressed by Imperial Oil and TransCanada Pipeline. I am sure that that would certainly be of interest to the management and shareholders of Dome. When such decisions are made and a clear transaction is put in place and submitted to the Government of Canada for approval it will be done consistent with the policies of the Government, Investment Canada, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Finance.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF GITKSAN-WET'SUWET'EN'S ABORIGINAL TITLE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to whichever Minister is acting on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A court case began May 11 before Chief Justice McEachern in Smithers, B.C., with regard to the Gitksan-Wet'Suwet'en's aboriginal title issue. The native people need to put forward a strong case on their own behalf and urgently need government approval of funding for the case. Would the Minister indicate when such funding will be available?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been monitoring the situation very closely and has put the case of the need for funding before Cabinet in order that the case could go forward in Smithers yesterday. I can indicate on his behalf to the House that the funding which was approved by Cabinet was finalized today and will be going forward.

* * *

TAX REFORM

EXEMPTION OF FARM MACHINERY FROM SALES TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Last week the Minister of Finance said he was planning a multi-stage national sales tax combining federal and provincial Governments and that it could apply to food.

At this time farm input costs such as fertilizer, equipment, and farm chemicals are exempt from both federal and provincial sales tax. Can the Minister give a commitment today that he will not impose this national sales tax on farm input costs?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, questions of this sort which will continue until June 18 really are not appropriate. All these questions will be answered on June 18. However, in the interim I can say that the federal sales tax reform, which is an integral part of tax reform, has a core proposal of three mechanisms with different bases in them. If the Hon. Member has a preference for a mechanism or a base, I would be happy to hear about it.

FARM COMMUNITY'S CONCERN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I only ask this question because I think it is causing a great deal of concern both in the farm community and among consumers. A national sales tax on farm input costs would not only be a hardship for farmers but would be a hardship on consumers because it would increase the price of food.

Why is the Government leaving the uncertainty as to whether it will increase the price of food by taxing farm input costs as well as by slapping a sales tax on food at the store?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the only uncertainty which is being created is that being created by the Hon. Member by raising this question. In the fullness of time the answers will be revealed. On June 18 we will have all the details which, I am sure, will be appropriate from the Hon. Member's point of view.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUBSIDIES TO INDUSTRIES OR CERTAIN COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday Les Nouvelles TVA had a report concerning an American memorandum on free trade, a copy of which I have here.

Is it true, as the memorandum suggests, that Canada has indicated that henceforth it would not give subsidies to industries or certain companies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not have the opportunity to watch the TVA telecast last night. I have not seen the memorandum mentioned by the Hon. Member, but the Government did not give the indications referred to by the Hon. Member.

• (1440)

[English]

FILM DISTRIBUTION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the memo also says that Canada has agreed to define cultural industries as narrowly as possible. In view of this, will the Prime Minister respond today publicly to the ACTRA telegram to him which says that rumours that the Government will not introduce the film distribution restrictions that were promised are causing serious alarm? Is the Government committed to putting this legislation forward?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member and the House that the report to which he refers in the telegram is not accurate and the Government's intentions with regard to film policy remain unchanged.

* * *

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—POSSIBLE SEVERING OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will recall that in his statement to the United Nations on October 23, 1985, he said that if there was no progress in the dismantling of apartheid our relations with South Africa might have to be severed absolutely. He repeated that commitment last February during his trip to Africa.

Since that time we have learned that the South African Government has continued its civil violence, its raids on border states, and its curtailment of civil freedoms. Yet this morning we learned that the Government has accepted the accreditation of the South African Ambassador to Canada. Would it not be the appropriate time, with the changeover of ambassadors, for the Government to live up to the commitment the Prime Minister made on two separate occasions and to show we are prepared to take the strongest possible actions against the reprehensible actions of the South African Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the timing of the sending and accreditation of an ambassador is determined by the South African Government. The Hon. Member is suggesting that Canada's policy with respect to South Africa should be decided by the timing of the South African Government. No wonder he is held in such high regard by Donald Macdonald.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I would only say to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that the regard of the Catholic Bishops of Canada might be more important to him than the opinions of Mr. Macdonald on this matter.

Mr. McDermid: What did they say?

Mr. Axworthy: You know what they said.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us what they said.

SOUTH AFRICAN AMBASSADOR—PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this important matter, if he can focus his mind on it. Is it not the responsibility of the Government of Canada to determine whether it will accept those accreditations of the South African Government and to determine whether the acceptance of those accreditations themselves is a statement? In that respect, I refer him to the declaration he made last week concerning the continued raids on Zambia when he said that the Canadian Government must take the strongest possible action to condemn those unprovoked actions. Would it not have been the appropriate action to withhold accepting accreditation, showing our intent and our rejection of those types of initiatives?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before coming to the serious question, may I express the hope that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would be able to move fairly quickly to appoint a formal spokesman for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Let me deal with the very serious question of Canadian policy toward South Africa. We have indicated for some time that we intend to continue to try to apply pressure for change upon the Pretoria regime and at the same time maintain lines open that might allow us to take advantage of any inclination for change that might occur there. In our judgment, for the foreseeable future that involves maintaining embassies and diplomatic contact with South Africa.

We are discussing what other actions might be taken to try to bring about an end to the odious regime of apartheid. I discussed it as recently as Sunday during my meeting with the Foreign Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Prime Minister, and I will be discussing it at the international summit in Venice. But we do not think it is time for Canada simply to give up and withdraw, which would be one of the consequences of immediately cutting off our diplomatic and other relations with South Africa.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ACCESS TO FEDERAL COURT—LEAVE TO APPEAL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Why is the Minister trying to deny direct access to the Federal Court by any Canadian who thinks he has been harmed by a wrong decision of one of the Minister's officers? That is the effect of Bill C-55, Clause 83.1(1), which requires a person in that case to ask the Federal Court first for leave to appeal. Why does the Minister, in his haste to reduce the rights of refugees, also reduce the rights of all Canadians?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are putting forward a process that will protect those in need. I have indicated clearly that those who require a safe haven will be granted one. There is somewhat less priority for those who already have one and they should be making applications as independent immigrants.

We will be going from an eight-step process to a three-step process. We have done it with fairness and we are putting forward a system that will do it quickly. There are steps whereby individuals will be heard.

JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this concerns the rights of all Canadians and not only refugees who come to Canada. Considering that the privilege of anyone who believes he has been wronged by an official to go to the Federal Court to have it corrected exists now in the Federal Court and the Federal Court Act, without the limitation of asking for leave, will the Minister not leave the Federal Court jurisdiction untouched even if it should mean giving a refugee the same rights in law as a Canadian?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we had a system that was not working. The heavy flow of phoney claimants was unfair. The chaotic system had to be managed and put in order. We have established that order. We want to curb the abuse and manage our resources effectively. That is what will be done.

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DUMPING OF TOXIC PRODUCTS IN OTTAWA RIVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

The media report that the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, the Department of Transport, and Supply and Services Canada have been accused of breaking the law by dumping toxic refuse or toxic products in the Ottawa River. The federal Government's plea before the court is that provincial legislation does not apply to the federal Government. Does the Minister endorse this position, and what will he do to settle the matter so that federal Departments and agencies respect the law?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is because we are concerned about matters of this kind that the federal Government has brought in, on a draft basis initially, and I hope for first reading in the House before long, a broadly based environmental protection Bill which will include many of the facets called for in the very question he has raised.

Concerning the matter he has brought to the attention of the House, we are working hand-in-glove, as a Department and a Government, with all the relevant provincial and municipal authorities.

Mr. Gauthier: I submit that new laws do not stop the application of the present laws. The Government has to clean up its act.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister take any action today to clean up the Ottawa River which is being polluted by federal government Departments and agencies, in direct conflict with laws of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, part of the over-all effort we are making, which includes tougher laws, is stiffened enforcement and compliance. To the extent that individual sources of pollution are within the federal government's jurisdiction, the heavy hand of the law will be brought down on them just as on any other sources of pollution.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

USE OF DEPO-PROVERA FOR CONTRACEPTIVE PURPOSES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I understand from his officials that the report of the Special Advisory Committee on Depo-Provera has been in the Minister's Department for several months and that it approves use of this drug for contraceptive purposes. Has the Minister had an opportunity to read the report and will he delay making any decision until he meets with the coalition of 62 women's groups who have not been heard and are very concerned about the side effects of this drug?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that this issue has been in my Department for several months. Of course that is correct. That is where the assessment of all drugs for notice of compliance takes place. I have had no recommendation from them yet.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO CONCERNED WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I very much hope that the Minister will read this report, or bring it forward very quickly. When the Minister receives this information will he make it available to the coalition on Depo-Provera so that women who are very, very concerned about their own health with regard to this drug will have this essential information? Will the Minister also meet with them since they were deprived of any chance to meet with the task force when it went across Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member's points are not correct. What she wants this Minister to do is to interfere in the regulatory process. I have met with various groups regarding Depo-Provera and D.E.S. There were also committees then established even beyond the regular process for a notice of compliance so that information could be brought forward as well.

However, the Hon. Member will have to decide once and for all whether she wants to have interference at the political level every time a request is made for a notice of compliance, or whether she wants this Minister to allow officials and the legislation to work, as he will continue to do, and when they have done their work I will get a recommendation and then a decision will be made.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

SCHEDULED RESTART OF NUCLEAR REACTOR IN HANFORD, WASHINGTON

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Minister is aware, the 23-year-old nuclear reactor in Hanford, Washington, near the Canada-U.S. border, is scheduled for restart this summer following a six-month shutdown for safety enhancement purposes. In light of the concerns being expressed by Canadians about the safety of this aging reactor, and a recent U.S. Senate committee recommendation that the reactor be restarted only during a national security crisis, will the Minister tell the House what actions are being taken by the Government of Canada to ensure that Canadians living near Hanford are not threatened in any way by the future operation of this reactor?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I know of his deep interest, and that of other Hon. Members in the House, in the Hanford reactor. We have made representations to the United States. We have received guarantees that the reactor will not be restarted until safety modifications have been concluded. I also expect there will be an undertaking with regard to environmental impact assessments before any restart.

* * *

FILM INDUSTRY

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In February the Minister of Communications announced her new policy to promote the Canadian film distribution industry. Last week she reaffirmed that American pressure would not intimidate her to abandon that policy. On Friday the Minister for International Trade confirmed that the legislation would be introduced.

Is the Prime Minister now backing away from the commitments his Ministers have made to the Canadian film distribution industry? Is he bearing down or bearing under or collapsing under American pressure? Is he being intimidated by the Hollywood producers? If not, why is a Canadian film policy not in this House as legislation now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was that the Prime Minister reportedly has killed legislation that would et cetera—that story is false.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE TABLED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Communications. Can he confirm that the Government has not abandoned its film distribution policy? And will he make a commitment to table this policy before the end of June?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was false in English, it is false in French.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

PRODUCTION OF ETHANOL FROM GRAIN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board who, I am sure, is aware of what is happening in the United States with regard to the growing fuel ethanol industry. He is probably aware of the part ethanol and ethanol-methanol blends could play in helping to alleviate Canada's current agricultural crisis, and also helping to reduce our dependence on imported oil.

Since the Minister is responsible for finding markets for Canadian grain, and since there is an ethanol distillation plant in his own riding, what is he doing to promote this environmentally clean, reasonably priced fuel? And why have we not seen any action from the Government on something which could be a major alternative market for Canadian grain?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an interesting question. It is true that in the last number of years there have been some improvements in the enzymes which convert not only grain but other organic matter into alcohol. We are looking at that and have some work presently under way. However, the Hon. Member will know that the question more accurately, as far as the energy side is concerned, falls under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I will certainly take the energy part of his question as notice and see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is aware of it when he returns to the House.

POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE MARKET FOR GRAIN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, aware of the continuing research, but I would point out to the Minister who is, after all, from Manitoba, that ethanol and ethanol-methanol blends are currently used in Canadian gasoline production streams. Is the Minister prepared to stand up for the Canadian farmers in their search for an alternative market? Or is the market for octane enhancers in Canada going to be sold out to the multinational oil companies?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that the latter part of the Hon. Member's question has any relevance whatsoever. As I have said, it is a question which is now being looked at in light of improvements, mainly in enzymes. The Hon. Member will also know that previously some of the calculations on the production of alcohol as far as cost is concerned were based on a very cheap price for grain. We do not think that is something which will work in the long run. With the improvements made in the enzymes, we think there are some exciting alternatives at which the Government is presently looking.

With regard to what has happened in Manitoba, the Hon. Member should know that it was the previous Conservative provincial Government under Mr. Lyon which created the tax incentive that got the plant going at Minnedosa. If the Hon. Member wants to talk about some action, he should raise that issue with his New Democrat colleagues in Manitoba and see if we can get some co-operation from them.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RAIL CAR FREIGHT SERVICE TO NEWFOUNDLAND—SCHEDULED TERMINATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): The rail car freight service across the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Newfoundland will be terminated by the Government starting July 1, Canada Day. Another spike will be driven into the coffin of the Newfoundland Railway by this Tory Government on July 1.

Will the Minister of Transport tell the House why he ordered Mr. R. E. Lawless, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian National Railways, on March 12, to "terminate this service on July 1" and to "advise your clients of this termination date in order that they can either convert to containers or—"listen to this, Mr. Speaker, "—find alternate means of moving their product". What alternate means does the Minister have in mind to move their product across the Gulf of St. Lawrence—the Goodyear Blimp, or is it the starship Enterprise?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if you were Scotty, I would say to you: "Beam him up".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He is certainly spaced out. It is true that on July 1 the rail car ferry is going to cease crossing the Gulf, but this was as a result of the railway revitalization program commenced by the Liberal Government in 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You should not be afraid to take the credit for the few of the good things you did.

TRANSPORTATION OF FEED GRAIN

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the Canada Day, July 1, official booklet, under Canadiana Quiz No. 20 it is asked: "If it is 12 noon in Whitehorse, Yukon, what time is it in St. John's, Newfoundland?" According to the Government the answer to question No. 20 is 5.30 p.m. If that is true, it would put St. John's, Newfoundland, somewhere between Iceland and Greenland. Perhaps that is why the service is being discontinued. The Government thinks we are afloat in mid-Atlantic.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Does the Minister not realize that on July 1, Canada Day, Newfoundland will be the only province in Canada without this type of freight service? Container rates have sky-rocketed. Is it not silly to have feed grain from a hopper car unloaded somewhere around Montreal and the whole works put into containers just to get it to Newfoundland? Newfoundland farmers do not want their feed grain containerized; they would like to containerize the Minister of Transport, permanently.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, members of the Liberal Party have always had a very healthy interest in the Livestock Feed Board. In 1984 they were all lining up at the trough.

We are concerned about the costs of importing livestock feed into Newfoundland. As a quirk of fate, we do not grow grain there. I am very concerned with this issue. We have just entered into a $4.8 million livestock feed assistance program. The farmers of Newfoundland are looking on me very warmly since that was instituted.

We are meeting again on May 15 with the livestock producers in Newfoundland. We will certainly be assisting by way of subsidy in any increased costs there might be for livestock feed.

While they may containerize me, Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. gentlemen will agree that the hon. gentleman should be certified.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton, followed by a question and a supplementary question by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is an impossible flight to follow.

* * *

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE'S ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. An article by Ross Howard in yesterday's The Globe and Mail indicated that the Security Intelligence Review Committee is concerned with alleged efforts by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to "penetrate and curtail activities of student groups, political fringe groups, environmental coalitions and so-called peace movements that the CSIS believes represent a threat to national security." Will the Solicitor General indicate if these serious allegations against CSIS are true or false?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the allegations contained in an article in The Globe and Mail. I too read the article and immediately contacted the Security Intelligence Review Committee by letter asking it if there was anything in its recent review which it conducted during the past year which would substantiate these allegations. I have been advised in writing that it has conducted its review and that it has found nothing—nothing—that would substantiate the allegations contained in the article in The Globe and Mail.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OVERPAYMENTS TO MAGDALEN ISLANDS FISHERWOMEN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns six fisherwomen in the Magdalen Islands. They have worked on the boats alongside their fishermen spouses. In the off-season they have collected unemployment insurance benefits. They have now received disentitlement notices, not only disentitling them from unemployment insurance but asking them to pay back up to $8,600 each.

Considering the fact that it was the fish plant which issued their pay cheques and their T-4 slips, and in light of the hardship trying to collect $8,600 will cause, is the Minister prepared to assure the House and, more important, these women, that he will write off these over-payments?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the assurance I can give my colleague is that I will indeed look into this case and, if injustice has been done or the law misinterpreted in any way, we will take appropriate action.

FISHERWOMEN—ELIGIBILITY UNDER UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Can the Minister assure the House that these women will be allowed to work as fisherwomen and be eligible for off-season unemployment benefits?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, much as I answered earlier, each unemployment insurance claim is assessed on its own merits. We will examine the situation and decide whether or not they are eligible under the plan. It will depend on whether or not they are eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST TO TABLE CORRESPONDENCE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago in answer to a question asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) referred to an exchange of letters with the Security Intelligence Review Committee. The matter raised in The Globe and Mail was so serious that I wonder if I could ask the Minister to table the letter he sent and the reply he received from the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I did not quote from the letters. However, I am quite prepared to send to Hon. Members copies of the letters in question. I have nothing to hide in this regard.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchi:

That this House condemns the Government's refugee policy for its failing badly to uphold Canada's proud and humane record for refugee assistance and for abandoning our nation's respected international leadership on this tragic, world-wide human dilemma, which will serve to jeopardize a meaningful international solution to what is clearly an international phenomenon;

That this House further deplores the Government's refusal to assure refugee claimants full accessibility to, and a non-adversarial hearing before, an independent refugee board; and

That, therefore, this House urge the Government to establish a fair, accessible and efficient refugee administration system, which would:

(1) guarantee full accessibility to the system for refugee claimants by rejecting any pre-screening stage within the process;

(2) ensure maximum protection and safety for all refugees and a comprehensive and adequate hearing of their claims by abolishing the highly restrictive "safe third country" concept as an integral part of the refugee determination process; and

(3) provide every refugee with the opportunity of an appeal before a competent and independent refugee body that would consider all facts and circumstances of the appellant's claims.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members who are not participating in the debate to please clear the Chamber.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your attempt to have Hon. Members carry on their conversations outside the House so that we continue this discussion on refugee policy.

The motion before the House today asks the House to condemn the Government's refugee policy for its failing badly to uphold Canada's proud and humane record for refugee assistance. It goes on to deplore the Government's refusal to assure refugee claimants, in its new legislation, full accessibility to, and a non-adversarial hearing before, an independent refugee board. In addition, the motion urges the Government to establish a fair, accessible and efficient refugee determination system, and the details are put before the House for the consideration of the Government.

In order to discuss Canadian policy on refugees we must first put Canada into a world context with respect to refugees. As most Hon. Members know, there is a growing tragedy of refugees and misplaced persons throughout the world. This has been due in part to the incidence of regional wars, civil conflicts and revolutions throughout the world.

As of February, 1986, there was on record, since 1945, 120 regional and local wars resulting in 19 million deaths. Many people talk about the last war and they refer to the war in 1945.

As I just pointed out, since 1945 there have been 120 regional and local wars resulting in 19 million deaths. Two-thirds of those deaths were among civilians, and 16 million of them were in the Third World.

• (1510)

In addition to the large number of deaths resulting from regional and local wars, the United Nations estimates that there are between 15 million and 20 million refugees in the world. About three million of them are Afghans and about two million of them are Palestinians. They include refugees from Indo-China, Iran, Central America, and Latin America.

As citizens of the world, not only citizens of Canada, we must ask who will take care of these refugees? Is Canada doing its job, or are we shifting the burden to someone else? Are we doing our share?

As Hon. Members know, Canada signed the 1951 International Convention on Refugees in 1969, according to which convention we agreed to receive refugees as defined by the treaty and our law. In order to do that, we set up the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. While the process might have been very acceptable in 1969 when we passed the legislation, while it might have been adequate in the first place, it was certainly found to be inadequate with the large growing number of refugees throughout the world who were coming to our shores in the early 1980s.

As a result of the growing number of applications, the Government appointed the Plaut Commission to advise on how to deal with the enormous backlog of applications which was developing and how to put in place a new refugee determination process.

I think at one point during 1985 we had over 20,000 applicants waiting from two to three years to have their refugee status determined by the process. Not only was it a major problem for those who were waiting to have their determination as refugees decided, it also unfortunately encouraged a growing number of false refugees.

What was happening was that people were coming into the country and claiming refugee status. Since they had to wait two to three years to have their status determined, often they were marrying Canadians and having children in Canada. In other words, they were becoming well established here. Even if it were found after the two-year period that they were not really refugees, it became very difficult to send them out of the country with all the ties they had developed within that time. However, that process also encouraged more false refugees because they knew once they arrived here and made their application, by the time they were turned down they would also be considered as cases which should be allowed to stay, on compassionate grounds.

As I stated, the former Liberal Government was concerned about the problem. It appointed the Plaut Commission in 1983 to advise on a new refugee determination process and a system to deal with the backlog. Rabbi Plaut reported in April, 1985, to the new Conservative Government. The report was referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. The standing committee studied the report, listened to the evidence of witnesses, and heard from many non-governmental organizations which deal with refugees in Canada. The committee reported in November and December, 1985. It put out two reports. One proposed a new refugee determination process which was based upon the Plaut report, but not quite similar to it. Its second report concerned what to do with the large backlog of refugees. The committee recommended a fast and fair process which I thought was supportable and could have been acceptable to the House of Commons and to many refugee support groups in Canada.

In part the Government responded to these reports in May, 1986, and promised legislation later in 1986. As we know, we did not get that legislation in 1986. We only got it in the last couple of weeks.

During that period of time all the problems to which I have referred galloped along—the growing number of refugee applications and the large number of fraudulent or false claims.

In order to support the measures it put into place on February 20 of this year, prior to the Bill to which many of us have referred, although it is not under debate today, I believe the Government gave a false impression of the refugee situation in Canada. It gave the impression that the numbers of refugees at our doors were much higher than they have been historically and that, consequently, we had to bring in harsh measures, which I believe were unfair, to deal with the situation.

If we look at the facts, I do not think we can justify either the measures of February 20 or the legislation. I should like to refer to some of the situations in past years. While the Government has argued that the type of legislation before us is necessary because of the large backlog in the number of refugee applications, I should put on record the fact that we had much larger refugee movements into Canada in previous years.

In 1982, just a few years ago, we had three special movements into Canada in addition to the regular flow of refugees. The regular flow in that year was 16,908. In addition, we had a special movement of Polish refugees amounting to 9,344; a special movement of Iranian refugees amounting to 2,501; and a special movement of Salvadoran refugees amounting to 3,024. Those special movements add up to 14,869 refugees in addition to the regular quota.

If we look at the period of time from 1976 to 1979, Canada admitted 11,321 Lebanese refugees as a result of the war in their country. In the period following the Vietnamese war in 1978, we admitted 9,060 Vietnamese refugees. Following the overthrow of the Allende Government in Chile, Canada admitted over 7,000 refugees from Chile and Argentina. In 1973 we admitted over 7,000 Ugandan Asians. In 1969 we admitted 11,943 Czechoslovakian refugees. After the Hungarian revolution in 1957 we admitted 37,149 Hungarians.

I put these figures on the record to indicate that the number of refugees we now have applying for status in Canada is not unusual. We have admitted great numbers of refugees into Canada in past years since the Second World War. These people are now in Canada.

• (1520)

Who in this House would maintain that these refugees have caused us any difficulty? Who would complain today of the Hungarians who came in 1957, the Czechs who came in 1969, the Ugandan Asians in 1973, the Chileans in 1979; and we could go on and on—the Vietnamese, the Lebanese and the Poles in 1982? These people have come to Canada and have made a valuable contribution. I do not think anybody regrets the fact that they were admitted as special movements of refugees, or suggests that we would have been better off if we had had special measures which would have prevented them from coming to our shores.

This could be said of all immigrants, but it could also be said of refugees. Refugees and immigrants are, for the most part, great contributors to the country. They are consumers. They buy food and clothing. They need housing, education and health care. Some people maintain that immigrants and refugees take jobs away from us. I argue that they provide jobs for Canadians, not only to the extent that they are consumers but also because many of them are innovative entrepreneurs who put together enterprises and hire many other Canadians.

We have finally had put before us Bill C-55, which is the Government's response to the Plaut report and the reports of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not consider Bill C-55 an adequate response. I support the wording in the resolution before this House today, that that policy must be condemned.

In the first place it must be condemned because, according to the provisions of that Bill, access to the refugee determination process will not be universal. Both the Plaut report and the report of the Standing Committee suggested that any process we put in place should be universal. In other words, it should be accessible to all of those who claim refugee status. If a person comes to Canada claiming to be a refugee, he or she should have a chance to prove his case.

What do we have with Bill C-55? We have provisions whereby once a person claims to be a refugee and is asked from what country he came, if he states that he has come from what is considered a safe country, then he is immediately sent back to that country. He is not given an opportunity to put his case before the refugee determination board, or whatever the new name for it might be. He is not given an opportunity to put all the facts before an independent tribunal to show that he really is a refugee. Because he comes from what is considered to be a safe country, he is immediately sent back without access to a tribunal to hear his case.

Who will define what a safe country is and who will set out a list of these said countries? We do not at present have in the Bill a definition of a safe country. It is simply referred to, and we are told that the Government will provide a list of countries it considers safe, countries to which people can be returned without giving the individual a chance to have his or her case heard. We can speculate on which countries will be included in the list.

I heard a program on the CBC the other night. People from the CBC telephoned individuals working in a refugee movement in the United States. They described the new Canadian legislation to the Americans and asked them whether they considered the United States as a safe country for Guatemalan and Salvadoran refugees. In other words, they said that if Canada listed the United States as a safe country, then as a Salvadoran refugee who had come from the United States would be sent back there. The Americans were asked whether, in that case the United States was safe for Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees? Their answer was no. They said most Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees who come to the United States are not acceptable as refugees in the United States.

We can speculate about which countries the Cabinet will consider safe countries under this legislation. But how will the Government define a safe country?

As we all know, the conditions that give rise to the refugee phenomenon often come about suddenly. There is suddenly a coups d'état in a country; suddenly new repressive measures are put in place and people flee overnight. That happened in the Hungarian revolution of 1957, to which I referred, in the Czech situation in 1969, during the Vietnamese war, in Lebanon and so on. You cannot predict in advance the conditions in countries which will oblige people to flee as refugees. Nor can you predict that these situations will change from day to day, from week to week, or from month to month. As well, what might be a safe country for one group of refugees may not be a safe country for another group. Maybe the United States is a safe country for people fleeing from Poland, but it is not a safe country for people fleeing from Salvador.

We condemn this new process being suggested to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada as one that is not acceptable. It is not acceptable because it does not provide universal access to an independent tribunal so that a person claiming refugee status can have a full and an impartial hearing of his or her claim, after which somebody can say yes, you really are a refugee in accordance with our law and the international treaty, or no, you are not really a refugee. What we are doing is sending certain people away without a hearing because they come from what is called a safe country.

We have other objections to the legislation. We object to the fact that the preliminary panel to hear these refugee applications is not made up of two people from the refugee side of the Department. It is made up of one person from the immigration side and another person from the refugee side. In our resolution we suggest a system somewhat similar to what was suggested in the standing committee's report.

We need in Canada a fair system to deal with refugee applications, a fast system in order to deter and prevent fraudulent refugees, a system that is open to all of those who claim refugee status, a system that would allow a person to apply for refugee status from anywhere, from within Canada or from without, and a system which has a fair appeal process. As I said at the beginning, the refugee problem is a human problem of vast dimensions. We in Canada who are relatively well off should not shirk our responsibility or pass the buck concerning this issue. We did not shirk it before. Certainly we can do something again.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised on his own behalf, and on behalf of many who want it, the concept of open access to an independent convention refugee determination board member. The claimant has that; every person will have the opportunity to demonstrate whether his life, limb or liberty is at risk. The Hon. Member wants to send out some kind of scare in the community that the adjudicator and the member of the independent convention refugee determination board have no discretion.

We have clearly said that the claimant will be put through two tests. The first test involves objective criteria. Does the person have refugee status elsewhere? Can he be returned to a safe third country? Some manifestly unfounded claims will be shown. If a person has recently been rejected from Canada or is presently under a deportation order, those facts must be examined using the same criteria.

• (1530)

The second test is a low-threshold, low-standard credibility test. The individual can demonstrate his fear of going back to where we want to send him. If he has lived a sufficient length of time in a country or has legal status, that will be taken into consideration. If one of those two people with discretion feels that there is a shred of a chance that this man fears for his very life, limb, liberty or security, he will be referred to a hearing within 10 days. To me that is discretion.

The Hon. Member has placed particular emphasis on what a safe third country will mean when the Cabinet sets forward such a list. I have tried to tell Hon. Members that because this is a life and death matter, the criteria will be very stringent. We will examine the human rights record of the countries in question. Before a country will be put on the safe country list, it will have to show a record of refugee protection and of protection of all nationals of any country. There will be the widest consultation and we will seek the best advice possible in addition to the advice of our own officials, those of the Department of External Affairs and the documentation centre that will be set up. We understand how important that is for these individuals.

We have put into place a system that is quick and expeditious but provides for quality hearings before independent board members. I believe that that is fair, no matter what the Hon. Member wants to say about further levels of appeal. Given a poor decision, a reviewing body that does not have a chance to feel and to sense the fear of an individual must be weighed against an open, independent hearing before an independent member of the refugee board.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I thought this period was for questions or short comments, not for alternative speeches. Nevertheless, the Minister said that all those who claim refugee status will be given a fair hearing in this new process. It seems to me that the Minister has not read the Bill. Clause 48.1 which appears on page 13 of the Bill indicates that a person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have the claim determined by the refugee division if the claimant came to Canada from a country that has been described as a safe third country. There is in the legislation a barrier against a whole group of people who claim to be refugees if they came from what is considered to be a safe third country. They do not even get a chance to put the facts of their cases before the refugee process.

The preliminary panel will ask such an individual if he claims to be a refugee, and he will say yes. The panel will ask him from which country he has just come, and if he says he has just come from the United States, that is it, too bad. The United States is on the list of safe countries, so back he goes to the United States. The fact that he is from Salvador and not from Poland or from Vietnam and not from Czechoslovakia does not matter. The United States is on the list of safe countries so the refugee does not have one more word to say.

If that is the case, how can the Minister say that he is putting in place a process under which a refugee applicant will have every opportunity to put before the refugee determination board all the facts with respect to his particular case? It is true that if he does not come from a safe country and if some of the other conditions are met, then he has a chance to demonstrate his case. We as members of the Liberal Party are saying that that process does not afford universal access. If we are to be fair to refugees, we should have a fast, efficient and fair system but one that is universal so everyone who claims to be a refugee would have a chance to put all the facts before the board, and that is not the case right now.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, my colleague spoke very passionately about the situation that exists in the world and listed a number of very disconcerting facts and figures concerning upheavals throughout the world. As I see it, another problem with the concept of a safe third country is the time the Government will take to react to new uprisings, to new human rights abuses, to new geopolitical circumstances that could arise literally overnight.

I wonder what the Hon. Member thinks about the lag time it would take for a government bureaucracy to change its list so that people would not be sent back to a hot spot that would otherwise be on the safe country list. Has the Hon. Member any thoughts on that particular controversy and the practical problems that will be created for bona fide refugees escaping areas of persecution without being recognized because the safe country list has not been modified?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was a member of Cabinet for seven years and I know how slowly these things move. The Hon. Minister must be aware of that as well. This legislation was promised in May, 1986, and it took until May, 1987 to get it before the House. It went through the various cabinet committees and back and forth to interdepartmental committees, I suppose.

No matter how good the intentions of the Minister are, and I know the Minister is of good faith, things do change in the world. I cited the examples of the Hungarian and Czechoslovakian revolutions and the Polish Solidarity situation, all things which led to sudden and vast movements of refugees. We cannot always predict where these things will happen and which country will be safe and which will not. As well, some countries are safe for some but not for others and the legislation does not provide for that.

In committee, we asked the Minister if he would give a definition of a safe third country before we voted on the Bill so that we would be able to better judge the proposed legislation. I think he said he would try to do that. I cannot recall his exact words now, but they were not altogether negative and may have even been positive. In any case, we still insist on having a definition, as do most Canadian refugee support groups.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise this afternoon. I would like to begin by clearing up some of the confusion that exists in the community. Last Thursday, I took the unusual step of asking to be replaced on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration because I believed that at a meeting held on April 14, my role as the administrator of that committee had been compromised and that that role needed to be re-established because of the important work of the committee. People have asked whether or not I resigned for other reasons relating to the refugee Bill or to unemployment insurance matters. I simply want to assure the House and the community that the action I took was exactly as described and for the reasons described.

If there has been a bonus for me personally as it affects my role in relation to this Bill, it is that it has given me a bit more time to work on it. I do not have to do other things that were indeed time-consuming and perhaps less important in my own mind than refugee legislation for the future.

I must confess that I have a certain feeling of unease with regard to this debate. That unease begins with the fact that this is an Opposition Day motion. A motion on an Opposition Day tends to cause us to draw Party lines. When we are dealing with a matter of life and death, and that is truly what we do when we debate the subject of refugees, we are attempting to help this nation define its own sense of morality concerning those unfortunate people who have become refugees in our modern world. I would hope that we do not continue to discuss this situation and the legislation itself from the perspective of partisan politics. It is not necessary for all Members of this House to agree on what might be the best process, just as it is not necessary for all Members to agree on the capital punishment debate. However, when we are dealing with morality, we hear the knowledge and opinion of those who serve this House and those who elect them. The refugee issue is a moral issue.

• (1540)

I was particularly disturbed, I guess, by the pro forma words of introduction to this resolution. It starts: "That this House condemns the Government's refugee policy—". I wonder if all Members really know what is being condemned. There is a sense in some quarters in this country that Progressive Conservatives feel less strongly about the issue of refugees, that perhaps they are less humanitarian in orientation. Some quarters are perhaps too moral and others perhaps not moral enough. Yet I think it is sometimes wise to stand back from our stereotypes and look at performance.

In my adult lifetime there have been three Progressive Conservative Prime Ministers of this country. The first one I knew was the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. He was Prime Minister in 1959 when the UN declared the Year of the Refugee. Under his leadership and that of his Government this country opened its doors to some especially disadvantaged refugees. That Government put in place a government-sponsored program that would help the socially or medically handicapped refugee. There were under private sector sponsorship special programs for refugees suffering from tuberculosis. That was a leadership role in the world community motivated by the finest of instincts, that of providing help to those in the world community who needed it the most.

In more recent times the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister of this country for a very brief period of time. Of all the public policies initiated by his Government perhaps the best remembered and longest lasting in its impact on this nation was the leadership provided when the world was faced with the boat people crisis in southeast Asia. This country led the world with its quickness, sureness and openness in making its contribution to solving that crisis in a far off corner of the world.

What about the present Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government, in office for two years and eight months? In the last year of the previous Government we brought 14,000 people to this country under refugee landings and designated classes. By 1986, the second full year of this Government, that had increased 40 per cent to 19,000 people.

I think those actions, more clearly and eloquently than anything else I can say, speak to the policy of this Government and its commitment to refugees. It is a better record, I suggest, than that of the previous Government. On each and every occasion where we have had a change in Government in this country, Progressive Conservative Prime Ministers and their Cabinets have made a more open, more generous and more secure commitment to refugees. That may be because so many of the members of our caucus and our Cabinet can trace their own roots back to a refugee movement at some time in the not too distant past.

What is a refugee? Sometimes we tend to throw terms around without pausing to consider who we have in mind. As I approach legislative and policy-making tasks in this Chamber I find it helpful to focus on perhaps one single human being who to some extent typifies the subject matter of a given policy. I learned a long time ago that when Government acts, it advantages some people in society and disadvantages others. Who is it we wish to advantage through our refugee policy? At the head of my list are those who are being persecuted, who face torture or death if they remain in their country of origin. They had no choice, they had to flee. In most cases they had to leave behind their family, their worldly possessions, their educational credentials and their work experience. They had to leave all that behind and flee. If in doing so they end up on or within the borders of Canada, then morally we have no choice. We must accept their petition. They must have a chance to be heard, to tell their story. They must have a chance to persuade us that they are genuine refugees.

These are not people who, for the most part, if given freedom of choice, would choose to come to Canada and make their life here. When we talk about a refugee, we are generally talking about someone who loves his or her country of origin. They would like nothing more in life than to be able to stay in that country, make their lives, raise their families, build their careers and make their contribution there. Circumstances have forced them out. Disagreements with their Government, or accidents of birth reflected in their skin colour or their religion. Those things are viewed by some in some countries as inappropriate qualities, as excuses to persecute, torture and execute. If any of us in this Chamber faced those circumstances we also would attempt to flee.

Having fled, what happens then? Do we spend a lifetime in a refugee camp, or do we attempt to find a country where we can start again, raise a family and make a contribution? Those are the kind of people all of us should have in mind when we talk about refugees and look at Bill C-55.

• (1550)

When someone arrives in Canada today he is given an examination under oath by an immigration officer who is not trained in refugee matters but in immigration law, policing if you like. There is an independent body which reviews the transcripts of those hearings. If you take the time and trouble to review those transcripts you will see that those interviews were not always conducted with great skill. The transcripts are not always helpful in deciding whether or not a case is that of a true refugee. Nevertheless, the law requires that the transcripts be read and a recommendation be made to the Minister of Immigration.

It is only at the third major stage of the immigration appeal board that the claimants have the right to appear in person and tell their own story to a decision-maker. That body hears appeals on all kinds of immigration matters; deportation hearings, family class immigration, and so on. Refugee cases are only a part of the workload. These are not expert people who devote their full time to the consideration of refugee matters.

The next level of appeal is before the Federal Court of Canada, and those people are not experts either. We have no body in this country today which is expert in refugee matters and sits down face to face with a refugee claimant and reaches a decision about whether or not the claim to the protection of Canada is justifiable.

We must have such a body as quickly as possible and put in place as securely as possible. To do otherwise is to continue the present system which is backward and punishes the true refugee. People who arrive at our border after having gone through a period of imprisonment, torture or persecution take their place in line with thousands of bogus claimants.

When the Government took office, it was taking three or four years to decide whether someone was a refugee. After having come out of a dungeon and being tortured, people arrive on the shores of freedom and it takes three to four years to make a decision on whether they deserve the protection of this country. That is inhumane and insane. That is the system today. We must all work together with the resources of Canada to do something more sane, sensible and better for refugees.

Those of us who have studied this matter in committee know that there are a variety of opinions on it. We understand that this is an extremely difficult area of law. It was naive of anyone in this country to assume that legislation brought into the House would be letter-perfect in all the fine print. I suggest that it was beyond the capability of the drafters to produce such a document. People skilled in legal drafting are not necessarily skilled in the subject matter in which they are drafting.

That is why the process of debate exists in the Parliament of Canada. That is why in committee we call witnesses and ask the best brains and most knowledgeable groups in the country to help us understand where the fine print is in accord with the principles and where it is not so that we can change the fine print where it is necessary to do so.

We have come a long way since the parliamentary committee reported in November, 1985. The Bill before us entitles every single claimant to a personal appearance before a member of the board within a week of arrival. Surely that is beneficial to legitimate refugee claimants. If that is a hardship for the bogus claimant, so be it. That is probably good because we do not want the resources of this nation going to the bogus claimant. Our resources should go to the legitimate refugee claimant. Any true refugee will have no fear of an appearance before a member of that expert body who is steeped in refugee matters, has a feel for them and knowledge of them.

We must ensure that the Minister's expression of intent appears in the fine print. If it is not now there, let us put it there, but let us have that initial decision-making. It is analogous to all parts of Canadian law. The preliminary hearing to decide whether the matter should proceed to trial is a well-known and honourable tradition in the British judicial system. That is all we have at stage one. We want to determine whether there is any reason at all to suspect that an individual needs the protection of Canada. If there is the slightest suspicion that they might, they go to stage two for a full oral hearing before a two-person panel.

Surely that is as it should be. If we want to give effect to our humanitarian traditions and act morally in relation to these people, let us put some resources into that stage, let us have a high-quality oral hearing and an appeal. Contained within this legislation is the principle of a lot of Canadians who will work part-time as jurists to help us make this decision. Within that mechanism is a need for quality control. We cannot have a decision made in Halifax on the same basis as one made in Vancouver or downtown Toronto. Inherent in that knowledge of administrative systems is the notion that decisions made by panels will have to be examined by someone, in whole or in part.

I say to the NGO community, as I said before, that in any decent piece of legislation we need the certitude that a mistake made by a panel can be corrected when need be. That is not synonymous with a formalized review, a 100 per cent appeal of every decision made. If we care about the persecuted who come to our shores, we need a high quality system and the certitude that on the rare occasions when we make a mistake we will have the power to correct it.

I say to Members of this House from all three Parties and to the community at large that this is a time for co-operation. The resources are inherent in the legislation. If it needs fixing and we have the wisdom to fix it, let us do so. Let us not get stuck as we did with the previous law. Let us not have a system which blocks but, rather, one which does the job. That system is inherent in the nature of this Bill. Let us work together to produce as good a Bill as our collective wisdom can provide.

• (1600)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, at the outset, let me say that I and, I believe, all Members appreciated the tenor of the Hon. Member's very deeply felt concerns on the question of refugee legislation. I might add that while I regret that he has resigned as chairman, and perhaps I differed with him on the issue over which he resigned, it should be on the record that as Chairman of the Standing Committee reviewing the refugee determination legislation he was at the forefront of some very progressive thinking. I hope that some of the things he and the committee represent will come to bear on the Government and the Cabinet.

The Member said that we will never have an ideal refugee system, just as we will never have an ideal society. I concur with those remarks and in fact suggested the very same thing in my speech. However, we must also realize that it goes beyond suggesting that the bureaucracy cannot draft everything in an ideal context. We must also focus our attention on the political will that will dictate what the bureaucracy drafts.

We have gone through a two and a half year consultation period, listening to some of the major tenets that were put forward by a number of non-governmental organizations, church organizations and our own committee. There were a number of common denominators in many of those recommendations, one of which was full accessibility to a proper oral hearing on the merits of those claims by a proper refugee decision-making body.

The Minister stated that the provision in this Bill does not represent a pre-screening stage at the various border points. I disagree with him very strongly, as do a number of NGOs, I believe. If there is a pre-screening process that is rooted in a safe third country concept, both of which were hotly denied and rejected by the consultation process, one must wonder why the Government put those in place. While we will never have a system that is completely flawless, I think it is also irresponsible that the Government would put those in place after a consultation period of two and a half years.

The Hon. Member was involved in the process and the committee was very much opposed to any pre-screening apparatus. Therefore, what does the Member think of that pre-screening stage and its being rooted in a third safe country concept, problems which he heard articulated earlier?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to respond to the Hon. Member. I see the pre-screening process as being in accordance with the committee's assertion that there should be universal access to a decision-making body that is the country's sole expert body on refugee matters. The Minister asserted time and time again in the House that it is Cabinet's will that every claimant be given face-to-face access to that body, in a hearing atmosphere where questions can be asked and information exchanged. There will not be the necessity at that point to document the case fully but simply to ensure that the presentation is sufficient to persuade the officer that there may indeed be a refugee situation involved. Once that conclusion is reached, the person proceeds to a two-person oral hearing where the decision is made on whether the person is a refugee. That is in accordance with the committee's report.

The Hon. Member raised the issue of the safe third country concept. The presence of a list is a notion that I have heard through a lot of testimony and conversations I have had both formally and informally. Let me use the analogy of the Post Office. When it decides that it wants a postal rate increase, it asserts to Cabinet that it wants the rate to be a certain amount. Cabinet can agree or disagree with the rate, but cannot change it.

I have a certain sense of comfort in having a single expert body in this country that becomes the definitive recommending group. I suggest that the committee would want to look very carefully at that part of the Bill. The one body in this country that will acquire the expertise, have the research resources and have the concern will be the Convention Refugee Determination Board. I would have confidence if it decided that a certain country was safe for nationals of another country.

The voters need a monitoring system and it is probably wise to provide for Cabinet approval. We need to study this area more closely to make sure that in the use of that list, discretion still remains with the officer, because situations change overnight in this field and discretion must exist. However, the list itself must be one in which the board has confidence. If not, we are running some risk of having the wrong kind of morality. That is my view of how to deal with the third country concept.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on my regard for the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). He and others know of my respect for him.

However, I will ask him to take a further look at pages 13 and 14 of the Bill, particularly Clause 48.1(1), which states:

> A person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have the claim determined by the Refugee Division if . . .

It goes to list (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e). Clause 48.1(1)(b) states:

> . . . the claimant came to Canada from a country that has been prescribed as a safe third country—

This morning, the Minister seemed to think that (b), like (a), is somehow qualified or modified by 48.1(2), but that is not so. That applies only to 48.1(1)(a). It makes an exception for somebody who is found to be a refugee in another country and now thinks he has to flee that country as well. Although that person comes from a country that we call safe, he would have his claim determined as a refugee from that country. Section 48.1(1)(b) is not given any kind of qualification or exemption as is in 48.1(2).

On page 14 of the Bill, Clause 48.1(4) states:

> In determining whether a claimant has a credible basis for the claim to be a Convention refugee, the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Division shall consider any evidence adduced at the inquiry or hearing regarding—

In other words, that is all they can consider. According to 48.1(4)(a), they can look at the record that Canada makes with respect to human rights of the country that the claimant left, or outside of which the claimant remains, by reason of fear or persecution, in other words, whether the country has a good or bad human rights record.

Clause 48.1(4)(b) states:

> The disposition—

That is by Canada:

> —under this Act or the regulations of claims to be Convention refugees made by other persons who alleged fear of persecution . . .

In other words, whether Canada found any refugees from that country before. That is the only criterion they can consider under that subclause. They are not allowed to consider the explanation of an individual. They can only consider the record of the country, its human rights record, and the experience of whether there have been previous refugees from that country.

As the Hon. Member said, the situation can change overnight, but the person is out of luck in that case. There have been no refugees from France, so if the Fascists took over France and Mitterand had to run to Canada, he would not be a refugee because we never had any refugees from France before.

• (1610)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising some of the clauses on pages 13 and 14 because those are clauses which concern a great many people across the country. In my eight years in Parliament, I have heard Ministers stand in the House and indicate Cabinet's intention by saying: "There is a sense of solidarity in Cabinet. This is our intention". I have been to legislative committees and other kinds of committees from time to time where when one looked at the fine print and found, there was a discrepancy between Cabinet's intention and the exact wording which came out of a process of drafting, and so on.

I was with the Hon. Member when we looked at the most recent amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board. We were able to achieve some very substantial and important amendments which I think have been helpful to the functioning of that board. I have heard with clarity in more than one Question Period and in the speeches today that it is the intention of Cabinet that the Members present at that first stage hearing will having discretionary powers. If the fine print in some way obviates that discretionary power, makes it impossible to exercise, we not only have to find that this is a problem but we have an obligation to suggest a solution which gets the job done.

Standing here in this Chamber today, not being a lawyer, I cannot find the solution. However, I hope that there are a lot of people around the country looking for the problems and then going to the next stage and asking: "Is there a solution to that problem?" I think in many cases, and in this case in particular, it is possible to find the problem and it is relatively easy to correct it.

By hindsight we will know if we were successful but I think that is the commitment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Disasters—Anniversary of Chernobyl nuclear accident—impact on Canada—(b) Request for information; the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell)—Status of Women—Harassment of woman firefighter—(b) Request for payment of compensation: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—National Defence—possible effect of closure of ports to nuclear powered ships.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S. O. 82—REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchi:

That this House condemns the Government's refugee policy for its failing badly to uphold Canada's proud and humane record for refugee assistance and for abandoning our nation's respected international leadership on this tragic, world-wide human dilemma, which will serve to jeopardize a meaningful international solution to what is clearly an international phenomenon;

That this House further deplores the Government's refusal to assure refugee claimants full accessibility to, and a non-adversarial hearing before, an independent refugee board, and

That, therefore, this House urge the Government to establish a fair, accessible and efficient refugee administration system which would:

(1) guarantee full accessibility to the system for refugee claimants by rejecting any pre-screening stage within the process;

(2) ensure maximum protection and safety for all refugees and a comprehensive and adequate hearing of their claims by abolishing the highly restrictive "safe third country" concept as an integral part of the refugee determination process; and

(3) provide every refugee with the opportunity of an appeal before a competent and independent refugee body that would consider all facts and circumstances of the appellant's claims.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in addressing this motion today, I would like to start by expressing the feeling of indebtedness felt by myself and my Party to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) in bringing forth this very important question of significant, compelling and, indeed, urgent interest to all Canadians. Bill C-55 has been tabled for first reading on May 5 and we will all come to debate it in due course. However, I think it is good that we have the opportunity today to, in a sense, pre-debate the Bill by raising some of the questions to which those who have looked at it find no answers, and also to enable Members of the House to put on the record and before Canadians some of the concerns which groups who are active, involved and committed to the plight of refugees have expressed .

After all, we are debating something that relates to what I think we could describe as a Canadian tradition of great worth. I do not say it is a great tradition because, after all, it has not been a consistent theme. Without going into some of the faults and errors of the past, because I would not like them to be misinterpreted in some way as a partisan comment, I think we would have to say that the more recent history of Canada's attitude and actions towards refugees within the world community has merited some accolades, most significant of which has been the Nansen Medal.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who has a record of commitment to this particular question throughout his years of service in this House, went to some length in talking about the proud record of Canadian policy and hospitality, the welcoming of those who have had to leave their countries through no fault of their own but because they had the normal aspirations of freedom loving people everywhere. They were not able to exercise those aspirations within the confines of the countries in which they were brought up.

It is a proud and diverse record. Today Canada is home to the first generation of refugees from Chile, the fascist dictatorship of General Pinochet, from South Africa's apartheid regime, from the frightful oppression of the B'hai in Iran and the equally frightful oppression of those who supported opposition Parties. Canada is host to refugees from the lawlessness and murder in Guatemala and El Salvador, and from the genocide in what was previously known as Cambodia. It is also host to people who fled oppression in Vietnam, from Laos, and to people of Ukrainian, Hungarian and, more recently, Polish origin, who originally came to this country as refugees.

When I hear talk of Canada's refugee determination system having been abused, I become very uncomfortable because while it is perfectly true that there may be those who have abused the system in the past, I think we would have to say that this country as a whole has never been abused by refugees, as I am aware of Canadian history. Even if there have been some who have, so to speak, beaten the system in order to gain entry to the country, I do not think it could be said that after having done so, they abused Canada.

It should be a mark of pride for all Canadians to be awarded the Nansen Medal which, I would stress, did not go to the Government of Canada but to the people of Canada. It should be a mark of pride which we as Canadians should maintain in the face of some of the confusion which exists and which, I regret to say, is at times promulgated regarding the situation of refugees and particularly in terms of refugees as juxtaposed with immigrants.

There have been some nostrums peddled in this country which are false and which have gained some credibility. They are deserving and, and indeed, demanding of refutation in this House. I will go into the details later. We have seen in recent years a wilful confusion at times and at other times an innocent confusion between the situation of refugees and immigrants. We have seen allegations, almost universally disproven or unsubstantiated, about the possible effects of refugees on employment in Canada. That was very well refuted in the speech of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. We have seen refugees used as a proxy target, as strawmen, by those who frankly are concerned to promote and promulgate racist theories, attitudes and practices. We have also seen a very legitimate concern, one which I think history and our experience very adequately answers, regarding the country's ability to absorb newcomers.

As one of those absorbed newcomers myself, I can hark back—although not from personal experience, obviously—to the year 1910 when approximately 400,000 immigrants, many of whom under today's system would be categorized as refugees, came to a country of some seven million or eight million people. We only have to go to our prairie and western provinces today to see the success of these people and their descendants who have grown into a very lively, vital and integral part of Canadian society and, indeed, our Canadian identity.

• (1620)

Government policy has been outlined recently in the Government's response to petitions which some Members have presented in the House concerning Canada's refugee policy. It is worth quoting the Government's response to the petitions and recalling to Hon. Members on the government side and to Ministers what was said. I quote directly from the answer which states:

> There are three components to Canada's refugee policy. First, there is the assistance which is provided through the United Nations High Commission for Refugees that includes aid to refugees, technical assistance to the UNHCR, and diplomatic initiatives to deal with the root causes of refugee situations.

Parenthetically, that is obviously not the subject of today's motion.

> Second, there is the program of government and private sponsorship of refugees abroad who can best be helped by resettlement in this country. Third, there is the protection, which we guaranteed when we signed the Geneva Convention and Protocol, against the return of any refugee on Canadian soil to a territory where he would fear persecution on the basis of his race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

I quote further an element of trumpeting which the Government provided in its response:

> While Canada has established excellent standards of refugee status determination, it is recognized that there is a need to streamline our procedures which have broken down in the face of increasing volumes. There is a need to overhaul the way we deal with people who arrive spontaneously at our borders. To this end, the Government will be bringing legislation before the House shortly.

That, of course, refers to the legislation which the Government has brought forward in Bill C-55.

Because Canada has undertaken solemn international obligations to protect a person who is out of his or her country and unable to return because of fear of persecution on account of political, religious, or the other reasons mentioned, I think that it would behove the Government to consult the UNHCR which is, in a sense, the custodian of the Geneva Convention and Protocol. Let us be sure that within the forum of those who have also signed this Protocol any measures that Canada brings in to change its policy and procedures are determined to be in compliance with the Protocol. I do not think there could be any greater disgrace within the international community than having a country whose citizens won the Nansen Medal see its Government undertake a change in policy which might essentially nullify the validity and the commitment of the signature on that Protocol and Convention.

I do not think there is argument within the House that the system proposed in the present legislation is more simple than the one it replaces. What we have to discuss is, of course, is it more fair? Indeed, is it as fair as we as Canadian legislators can make it under the circumstances?

The proposed system contrasts the eight steps of the existing system with a three-step process. It would be hard to argue that that is a more complex process than what is in place at the moment. But we have to determine if there are improvements that can be made in the interests of fairness. Having a simple system is simply not good enough for a country that can take some legitimate pride in its past record.

I would now like to deal with some of the problems that we perceive with Bill C-55 as presently drafted. Obviously, we do so not in an attack on the Government but in an attempt to have the Government address these concerns and modify the legislation accordingly.

We feel that there is an aura of inaccessibility about the procedures that are proposed. Instead of ensuring that everyone who arrives in Canada claiming to be a refugee gets his or her claim heard, there is some sense that the return to another country might be what they should expect if they want a realistic assessment of their prospects. The use of technicalities in some artificial categories, such as the safe third country category, also brings into question the intent of the Bill.

The initial screening, which can only be appealed from out of the country, proposes a bureaucratic barrier which, in the past, has jeopardized the safety of some refugee claimants. It has led to frustration and an enormous expense and effort on the part of refugee claimants for a consideration that we do not feel really warrants that sort of stress being put on refugee claimants.

Apparently, the second stage oral hearing can be appealed, but only to the Federal Court and only on matters of law as opposed to matters of fact. That is a grave deficiency because, surely, in a refugee determination process it is the facts of the case of the individual refugee claimant which should govern.

Where are the provisions for humanitarian or compassionate consideration such as those found in the current legislation? About 12 per cent of the current cases that do not meet the technical situation, the technical definitions, are situations in which compassionate people such as cabinet Ministers are willing to allow refugee claimants to stay in the country. I think that is something that the Government has to consider.

I would like to talk, and I hope at not too great a length, about the concept of safe third country, because I feel that in some ways it is a dangerous one and, in many ways, a very sensitive one. First, we know that the definition of safe third country is something that, on the enactment of the Bill, will be expropriated by senior bureaucrats in the Department of Immigration. We know that the individual adjudicator or member of the board will not have control over the definition of what is a safe third country. He or she will not have control over the designation of a safe third country. Therefore, it is a concept that will be bureaucratized and centrally controlled. One would assume, because such is the habit of bureaucracies, that it will be applied rigidly.

Obviously, this concept would require some form of return agreement with other countries, otherwise there would be no right to send refugee claimants back. I think that one of the situations that concerns us the most is that of the Salvadorans and Guatemalans who have taken refuge in the United States and who now, because of increasing crack-downs in that country on migrant workers and those who do not have legal status, are seeking to come to Canada.

The United States declares and proclaims that the Governments of El Salvador and Guatemala are democratic, humanitarian and able to defend human rights within their countries. It is not my purpose to inveigh against the Governments of either of those countries where we know there are honest, dedicated and committed people trying their best to preserve an orderly democratic system of government. However, they do so in the face of militarism and in the face of an entrenched elite that is not willing to give up its power and that is willing to use extra-legal, military and terrorist means to maintain that power, even in the face of the best intentions of the Governments of those countries.

So that if we are considering the case of a Salvadoran refugee under the new legislation and this person is told: "Well, the United States is a safe third country", and Canada sends that person back to the United States, we would be somewhat in the situation, as a country, of a Pontius Pilate. We would not deport a person ourselves but we would send him back to another country that we could be perfectly sure would deport him.

This phenomenon, this risk of what we might call onward deportation, of deporting refugee claimants for onward deportation back to their own countries, is a serious issue that I certainly hope a government Member will address. I certainly hope a government speaker will address the issue. I also hope that it will be adequately addressed in the legislation as it is finally passed in the House after we have had an opportunity to process appropriate amendments through committee.

• (1630)

Obviously there is an element of politicization in terms of the safe third country concept. Obviously Canada, in the application of that concept, will be subjected to potential political or diplomatic pressures regarding the application, the definition, and the designation. After all, what will be the situation if one of our major trading partners involved in a trade deal or, shall we say, a major purchase of Canadian wheat or Canadian aircraft was told ever so subtly by government representatives that the commercial interchange was dependent upon Canada not designating their country as being an unsafe third country or not saying that their country was a country which could produce refugees? I think it would not strain the imagination or recollection of most Hon. Members of the House to determine and identify some of the potential examples.

We have some major criticisms of the screening process. The no credible basis for claim is something that is not defined. It is new legal language and lacks a specific definition. The obvious example would be somebody coming as a refugee from a country which has not in the past been known to produce refugees. Therefore, it is a definition which would put in jeopardy some of those potential immigrants.

In conclusion, we cannot allow the confusion to continue between immigrants and refugees, understanding the distinction as an important part of understanding the concerns which our Party and members of all Parties want to put forward today. After all, spectres are being raised, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) did so unwittingly when he talked about thousands of bogus claimants in the queue.

I believe that Canada has only deported 600 or 700 people as bogus refugee claimants. We cannot confuse the immigrant strain who, after all, are generally queued up at Canadian consulates and delegations overseas with the refugee strain who, if they are queued, are queued at points of entry into the country.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your tolerance and consideration in hearing the problems today. They are problems which we want to see the Government address, so that the country will have a refugee determination system of which we can all be proud.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his comments and to ask him about a particular point.

He referred to the total absence in the Bill of any possibility of providing the kind of humanitarian consideration currently provided in the legislation which the Bill is supposed to amend. In the decisions that will be made at the first stage, if they found that a person had no credible basis of claim or that a person came from a so-called safe country, the person would then be returned according to the Act. Of course that could include many people such as Iranians and others whom we do not now force to return to their home country.

Would the Hon. Member enlarge a little on that point? Since I know he has a world-wide concern and he has made reference to it, would he enlarge upon the difficulty of seeing where there is any fair treatment for such people within the present proposals, given the screenings?

First, they cannot even arrive here if they come from a country from which we require a visa or a transit visa. If they are refugees, they will probably be denied it. I know that the Canadian Government has specifically named Chile as a country to be impacted upon for having sent refugees here under transit visas.

Second, if they come from a country which does not produce refugees, they will be excluded in Section 48(a). The third example would be those who passed through and stayed in a safe country.

Could the Hon. Member comment upon how he thinks people would get the kind of humanitarian considerations we have been giving them now?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), not only for his question but for his outstanding commitment to this issue over a number of years.

In reply I should like to return to the Government's response to petitions and instance some examples which would fall through what we might say is the safety net of the Geneva Convention. I believe these examples provide compelling reasons for there to be included in the Act provision for ministerial discretion on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. I should like to quote again from the Government's response to petitions as follows:

> —there is the protection, which we guaranteed when we signed the Geneva Convention and Protocol, against the return of any refugee on Canadian soil to a territory where he would fear persecution on the basis of his race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

Let us look at three examples. I choose the examples of a Lebanese woman, of an Iranian young man, and of a Chinese woman. Let us consider that an 18-year old Iranian arrives in Canada and claims to be a refugee because in his own country he would be conscripted into the army, or one of the irregular fighting units prevalent in the Iran-Iraq war, and sent to the front where there are mortality rates in individual units of 50 per cent to 70 per cent and where the rates run higher in the case of young boys in their early teens who are used as human minesweepers and sent into Iraqi minefields to be blown up in order to clear a path for the troops. I do not see that the present legislation would allow in an Iranian who was attempting to avoid conscription for a war in which he would essentially be used as a completely disposable fighting individual in the cause which they are pursuing against Iraq.

Let us take the example of a Chinese woman who flees to Canada because she is in her second pregnancy and the Government of that country not only frowns on but takes some concrete and somewhat repressive measures against people who choose to expand their families. Where is there provision in the legislation which would allow that woman to be granted refugee status in Canada?

Finally, let us consider the situation of a woman in Beirut who, after all, wants to get away from the fighting. We saw a report in our newspapers a couple of months ago of a Beiruti who was willing to sell his eight children to anyone who would take them to a safe country. It is an indication of the level of desperation in some people trying to escape what is essentially a war zone. Could the person claim that he was being individually persecuted on any of the grounds of the Geneva Convention? He could not, but the fact is that the bullet from a Kalashnikov makes no such distinction. When a person is in peril of his life because he is in a war zone then obviously he has to be treated as a refugee and obviously he should be treated as a refugee in making application to Canada.

• (1640)

These would be examples that I feel, Mr. Speaker, the legislation must address. We must have measures in Bill C-55 to allow people to qualify and be treated as legitimate refugees, admissible to Canada on those grounds.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this debate this afternoon. I have enjoyed very much the comments of my colleagues who have preceded me. This is a very important subject and it is one that has seen many issues raised on which we have had a good dialogue. I would like to commend all my colleagues who have participated and who will participate in the debate.

Proposals for a new refugee determination system have been tabled in Parliament. They establish a system which reinforces Canada's commitment to genuine refugees in fear of persecution. The new system has a number of features which provides significant rights to refugees. These rights are consistent with our obligations under the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and with the Canadian Charter of Rights. The system, above all, ensures that no genuine refugee will be returned to a country where he or she is in danger of persecution.

Canada is, and will continue to be, a place of safe haven for genuine refugees who need our protection. This system upholds our commitment, a long-standing commitment, which is a vital element of a policy which, since World War II, has enabled some 500,000 refugees to settle in Canada. The Government has tried to put in place a fair and compassionate structure that will admit genuine refugees and screen out those who make fraudulent claims.

The proposals for this new system represent substantial improvements over the existing one in a number of ways. I would like to touch on just a few, if I may. For example, arguable cases can be referred for determination within a few days, and decisions on refugee status can be made within months rather than years, as is now too often the case. I think this cures a very serious shortcoming in the existing system.

The new system provides a number of safeguards for the individual, including the right to legal counsel. This is very important. Legal aid will be provided where necessary. A safe third country list will be established by Cabinet, and Cabinet has indicated that it will give very careful consideration concerning that list. I think some of our colleagues who have participated in the debate today, notably the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and the response from the Minister highlight and underscore the importance which this provision has and the importance of our giving very careful consideration to the legal interpretations so that we can make a very valuable contribution in committee.

A new refugee board will be made up of members with specialized training in refugee matters. The new refugee board will also have the resources to deal with claims quickly for the benefit of refugees who need our protection. Of course, every claimant will have the right to appeal by leave to the Federal Court on questions of law. This new system will support a fair immigration program of moderate controlled growth that will benefit all Canadians. While we continue to have an open immigration policy and need the talents and skills that new immigrants will bring, we want to be able to manage our system in a way that better serves all refugees and all Canadians.

The new legislation will also allow us to focus our resources on overseas selection of refugees. There are some 10 million to 12 million people still in refugee camps throughout the world. That is a matter we should keep before us when considering important resolutions like this one and important Bills like the one tabled in the House.

This year Canada will welcome some 125,000 new immigrants. This figure is up from the target of 115,000 in 1986 and up from the 85,000 to 90,000 people who were admitted in 1985. The figure is also up from the 84,000 people admitted in the year we took office. It should be noted that our Government has taken giant strides forward in this area and we have had the courage to grapple with some very serious problems.

In every respect this new legislation is intended to protect the rights of genuine refugees so that anyone needing Canada's protection will not be turned away. This new system preserves the integrity of our over-all program, which includes mechanisms to discourage queue jumpers and to deal effectively and swiftly with people who circumvent the normal legal channels. It also serves better genuine refugees and those applying to join our Canadian family. New Canadians have made a great contribution to Canada, and under this legislation we are confident they will continue to do so.

An important aspect of immigration which I believe we all support and on which I would like to touch in passing is that of family reunification. These proposals do not compromise our commitment to family reunification. On the contrary, I feel that a managed and controlled immigration policy allows us to direct resources to family reunification in greater measure.

New Canadians contribute to every phase of Canadian life. We need new Canadians. We want them and we welcome them. I am hoping that this new system we are trying to put in place will speed their entry into Canada and discourage any of those who would impede their entry by making fraudulent claims or by trying to get ahead of the process and short-circuit the system. That is the purpose of the new measures, and that purpose is a worthy one which deserves our support. I believe that all of us want to see our country continuing to grow. We want to share the good things which Canada has to offer with all new Canadians. The more we are able to accommodate, the better and the happier we will all be. Thank you for allowing me to intervene in the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my friend and colleague. I happen to be in his Province of New Brunswick a couple of months ago where I met with refugee organizations. One major recommendation that I brought back was one very evident one in the recommendations of the major non-governmental organizations, the churches and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. It was that of trying to protect the accessibility to the system, the philosophy that it would be very counter-productive to try to establish a new and improved system which would ensure accessibility is not available to the great number of refugees who come to our shores.

The legislation has a pre-screening stage at the very start whereby two officers would be making a determination virtually on the spot at our various border points. That has triggered within groups in New Brunswick, as well as in other parts of the country, a backlash against the whole question of protecting accessibility. What does the Member think of the pre-screening stage and then of the problems in which that stage is rooted in a third safe country concept when we are having difficulty, based on the answers we have been given, in defining what is a safe third country? How will that list be put together? Will diplomatic and political pressures precede any individual refugee claimant? How will that list get changed with the new uprisings that will inevitably surface throughout different parts of the world?

Mr. Howie: I thank the Hon. Member for his questions, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to note that he was in New Brunswick and his performance in Parliament has improved immeasurably since he was there. I hope he returns soon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howie: With respect to the list of safe countries, that question was answered earlier by the Minister of State for Immigration in response to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. He indicated that it would be a valid and an honest list completed with great care. He said that the intention in producing the list was to improve the administrative process the Hon. Member and I want to see improved, as do the people from New Brunswick who made representations. The purpose of the list is not to impair the entrance of new immigrants; neither is that the purpose of the refugee board. This is intended to speed up the process the people from New Brunswick want speeded up.

• (1650)

Under the Hon. Member's Government which preceded this one, this same procedure took years. Our Government is attempting to put in place a system that will take days and at the most months. I am sure we would all want to support such a system and I would welcome the Hon. Member's support.

The question about the legislation tabled by the Government which was raised by the highly respected Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East is a matter of legal interpretation. I thought the answer of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) was very good. My own interpretation, and I undertake to check it very thoroughly, is that the board has discretion and if a refugee coming from another country is in real danger of persecution, he would not be sent back to that same country. This is a matter of debate and it is a matter that I feel should be resolved in committee through the best legal interpretation available to us. I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I treat today's debate as one of the most important debates in which I have participated in this session of Parliament. I think there is no issue that demands more concern on the part of Members of Parliament than an issue that quite literally deals with life and death matters.

It has been said that one of the highest tests of a nation is how it treats its least well off citizens, the poor, the disabled and the disadvantaged. I propose an equally high test, which is how a nation treats those who are not its own citizens but find themselves in desperate circumstances, needing compassion and help from those able to provide it. That is what we are debating today. Is this nation living up to its fullest and best potential in helping those least able to help themselves? The clear answer is no.

What disturbs me most is that the legislation that has been introduced by the Government is a major alteration in an evolutionary pattern that began in 1951 with the signing of the Geneva Convention. After that, a series of steps were taken by successive Governments to improve, enlarge and enhance the capacity of the Canadian Government to respond to the refugee issue. We heard many horrific tales about great swarms of people trying to beat down the doors of Canada. I listened to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) exploit those numbers by trying to raise the fear that there would be a great flood of people.

In the last 30 years, Canada has accepted over 400,000 refugees. We have accepted more refugees per capita than any other country in the world. During that period of time, we began to lead the world in the way we dealt with refugee problems. Our record was not unblemished but it was always improving. It was always taking that extra step based upon a compassionate appeal, not upon an enforcement appeal.

What is so disturbing to those of us who have been personally and directly involved in refugee matters for many years is that this Government is breaking that tradition. This Government has turned its back on that tradition. It does not show the most compassion possible and is now following the pack. It is not attempting to build a consensus for a greater reception and treatment of refugees. Instead, it is turning the screws and saying that we must exploit our worst biases. That is the problem.

It was not always so. When I inherited the post of Minister of Employment and Immigration, a good series of initiatives had been taken by the Government of the former Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), on Indo-Chinese refugees. A sponsorship program for private citizens had been offered and we doubled that program and accepted well over 100,000 Indo-Chinese refugees between 1978 and 1982, perhaps the most exemplary record of any country in the world.

We tend to forget that Canada's refugee-determination procedure is quite new. It only really began in 1978 with the passage of the new Act. It was up to successive Governments to build around that legislation a policy, a program and an administration that would give life to the spirit of the legislation.

If Members would read the debates that occurred in this House for close to two years during the enactment of that legislation, they would find it very instructive because they would understand that the key to making an effective refugee policy work is bringing Canadians on side, working with the churches, working with non-governmental organizations, and providing leadership that would bring out the best in Canadians. Through that partnership, we are able to show an incredible amount of generosity and openness.

Rather than trying to build a consensus for a more open, tolerant and compassionate refugee policy, this Government, for reasons which are hard to understand, has turned in the other direction. Instead, it is trying to show leadership against refugees.

Time and again, I have heard the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration say that a genuine refugee would never be turned away. If that is the case, why is the safe country clause in the legislation? Because the Minister is in the House, I would like to pose an interesting proposition to him. Will the United States of America be considered a safe country? I presume it will be. It is a close ally and a democratic country. It meets all the so-called criteria on which one would judge a safe country.

Let me deal with some interesting statistics from last year. In the United States, the chance of a refugee claimant from El Salvador or Guatemala being accepted was about 2 per cent. For those from Poland, it was 49 per cent, and for those from Iran, it was 66 per cent. What is clear is that the refugee determination procedure in the United States is infused with the political and ideological objectives of the Reagan administration. For one who comes from Central America, the United States is not a safe country.

I can say from personal experience, having been in refugee camps in El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala to witness what is going on there, that when those people are sent back to their countries, which is what happens under the so-called safe country policy, they are condemned to prison, to intimidation and to threat. That is the conundrum the Government has created with this legislation. It is attempting to tell Canadians not to worry about refugees because it has a list of safe countries.

Can anyone tell me that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will tell his friend, the President, that the United States is not a safe country for refugees? Of course he will not say that. We know, however, from the facts, that it is not a safe country for refugees from Central America.

• (1700)

That is not new information. The Mennonite Central Committee and the coalition of church groups have told the Government time and time again that if it attempts that kind of pre-screening it is going to get itself involved in that kind of a dilemma.

What also bothers me a great deal is the attempt to suggest that somehow the Government was left with a mess and things were not being looked after. The Government knows that that was not the case. In 1981, we brought in new refugee guidelines. We set up the Refugee Status Advisory Committee as an independent organization. We established a task force to look at streamlining the refugee determination process. We established the Plaut Commission which came up with a series of recommendations. In other words, as the problem began to grow we responded. Those recommendations were on the table the day the Government took office. Two and a half years later it has rejected the proposals put forward by those independent groups and come up with its own made-in-the-department solution which emphasizes keeping people out, not providing the best way of bringing them in. All the Government had to do was to implement those proposals. However, because it was something the Liberal Government did, the Conservatives would not touch it. They wasted two and a half years, rejected the findings of a committee with a majority of Conservative Members, and now they have the nerve to say they inherited the problem. Of course there was a big problem, but a response was made.

Let me provide another small piece of history which may be constructive to this debate. At the beginning of 1982, in full recognition of a growing problem, that being the number of people who were trying to gain admission not only to Canada but to West Germany, the U.S., France, and all the other countries concerned at that time, the Government of Canada initiated a series of discussions beginning with the U.S. We then broadened it to include the Europeans, the Japanese and others in a series of international meetings designed to come up with an international approach to dealing with the refugee problem. We recognized that when one country closed its doors, that would create a problem for another country. So we started laying the groundwork for an agreement that would provide for a co-ordinated approach to the UNHCR. Each country could then follow the same pattern and we would make sure of an effective and co-ordinated allocation of responsibility.

What happened to that initiative? Why was it dropped? Recognizing that the UNHCR was not getting the necessary political motivation and that this country was being looked to for leadership, surely that initiative should have been followed through and built upon. Yet the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that his Government inherited the mess. What he inherited was a series of solutions which his Government rejected and discarded. I am surprised that even to this day there has been no attempt to resurrect that kind of international policy-making approach to the problem of refugees.

This past week-end I was at a round table discussion on Central America. It brought together people from Latin America, Central America, the U.S. and Europe to talk about how to deal with the incredibly tragic circumstances in Central America. It was both rewarding and instructive to hear the diplomats and political leaders of the various countries concerned repeating that Canada had a major role to play in that region. It was not a passive role, it was a major role. One of the errors they pointed to specifically was that of refugee policy. They pointed to the past initiatives we had taken for rescuing political prisoners from El Salvador and bringing them to Canada. We initiated a sanctuary program whereby someone who was being deported by the American authorities to Central America would be picked up and brought to Canada with the co-operation of church and refugee organizations. We were told that this kind of initiative established our reputation as well as trust and confidence in us in dealing with the most intractable problems in Central America.

Now we are erasing that and turning the clock back. Other countries were looking to us for leadership. They said we could make a valuable contribution in one of the trouble spots of the world. Yet, because of the initiatives taken in closing our borders last May and in this new legislation, we are foreclosing our options and refusing the opportunity to continue the initiative.

We have to ask ourselves why. It is not a partisan issue. No one is going to score any political points. Or are they? Is this something involving that kind of cynicism where you can pander to a bias out there and say, boy, we are getting tough?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Even by your standards that is low and unacceptable.

Mr. Axworthy: I hear a comment from the lowest of the low. We have to consider the source.

What is the reason for this? If the Minister has an alternative reason, let us hear it. No rational reason has been given. No historical reason has been given. Clearly there are alternatives which are far more acceptable even to Conservative Members. One has to ask, why is the Government doing it? That is why we brought this legislation forward today. It is to try to focus the attention of Canadians on the fact that this is the wrong answer, the wrong approach.

There are other ways of handling the problem and streamlining the process. You can do it in a way that you do not strip people of their rights and liberties and turn your back on all those who look to this country for leadership and sanctuary.

That is why my colleague in his opening remarks said it is time Members opposite began to look at their conscience. They should begin considering how this legislation can be changed. It would not take much to turn it around. It would not take much to turn the legislation into something that is positive and useful. The first step would be to listen to the groups deeply involved in the process. The Mennonite Central Committee and other church organizations, those who are working in the refugee camps, the non-governmental organizations, are all desperately opposed to this legislation. Surely that should tell the Government something. It should understand that if all those who have committed their lives and resources to work for and represent refugees are saying we are doing the wrong thing, it is about time the Government opened its ears and listened.

The proposals are not that difficult to deal with. The pre-screening process is certainly the first and foremost thing that has to be changed. By doing that, the Government would begin to show some good faith It would begin to show that you can bring in a determination procedure which recognizes rights and does not close doors. It comes to grips with problems as they need to be addressed. In that way the Government would bring on board that great well-spring of compassion and interest which exists in so many of the organizations and individuals involved across this country. That is the same kind of good will that was tapped when we brought in the Hungarians and Ugandans, the Chileans and Indo-Chinese, and the Poles, when they were all having their problems. When we brought in tens of thousands of refugees Canadians were prepared to accept them. Those people have become very much a part of the Canadian community. They have become resettled. They have found a home here and are making an important contribution to Canada. We did ourselves proud by managing that problem.

• (1710)

When the Government studies the evolution that has taken place since World War II, and particularly in the last 10 years during which Canada provided a standard of leadership and responsibility, it will recognize that what it has now done is wrong. Simply by admitting it is wrong and turning to a different course it can win the applause of everyone involved and begin to provide leadership so that those who are homeless can find a home.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, whenever I listen to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) I think back to the time when he was a Minister in the former Government. I think back to when he was responsible for employment and immigration. I listen to him with great care and I think of what he did when he was responsible for that portfolio. I have found some facts and figures which show that when the Hon. Member was the Minister of Employment and Immigration in 1981, we brought into this country just short of 15,000 refugees. In 1986, the Government brought almost 19,000 refugees into this country. In 1981-82, when the Hon. Member was the Minister, his Government spent $26,748,000 on international humanitarian assistance. In 1985-86, the last fiscal year for which we have figures, the Government spent $53,300,000 on international humanitarian assistance. In 1982, the Member's Government spent $30,435,000 on settlement for refugees. In 1986, the Government spent almost $50 million on settlement for refugees.

There seems to be quite a difference between the money spent on settlement when the Member was a Minister in the former Government and the dollars which were spent by the present Government in the most recent years for which figures are available. There has been quite a substantial increase in the amounts spent. There has been quite a substantial increase in the amounts spent on international humanitarian assistance as well. There has also been quite a substantial increase in the number of refugee landings in this country from the time when the Member was a Minister in charge of these matters.

This makes me wonder just how sincere the Member is and whether he is speaking from his heart or whether he is not only, as suggested by his former colleague, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, engaged purely in political posturing. Is that what the Hon. Member is doing today? The figures from the time when the Member was a Minister do not stack up very well against those of today. Is he engaged in purely political posturing?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, every time I hear the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) ask a question I am reminded of the time when he was the Mayor of the Municipality of Metro Toronto and came to me, as Minister of Employment and Immigration, asking for assistance in setting up a youth employment program which the previous Government did. I am glad to say that the program became a highly successful model for the youth job corps.

The Member seemed to have an awful lot more common sense at that time than he seems to exhibit now. I was very pleased to work in partnership and co-operation with him at that time in establishing major programs in his municipality.

The Member asks about sincerity. He saw examples of that sincerity when he asked for assistance with the problem he was facing. One of the problems which he faced in his municipality at that time related to visible minorities. Many of those who had come into his municipality through immigration programs did not have opportunities for retraining and employment. The pilot program which we designed was established to meet that problem. Unfortunately, many of the programs which we initiated have been erased under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I suppose if we were guilty of anything, it was of being too softhearted with various mayors of municipalities at that time.

With regard to the statistics which the Member quoted, we must factor into the equation the difference of seven years. Over that time there has been inflation, which changes figures. Only about 2,000 or 3,000 people applied for refugee determination in that year. It was only natural that the available money was spent to meet that need. We are saying that as the numbers grow, the resources have to be increased.

Over the last two years, the Department has not been living up to those expectations. It has not even been applying the instruments which are available under the present Immigration Act and its regulations. The backlog has been allowed to grow because the proper assessments and judgments have not been made and people who are not legitimate refugees have not been asked to leave. The Government has been stalling. It has been dragging its feet on this issue. We must ask whether it is doing so in order to create the impression that there is a backlog.

Members talk about the problem of people coming from Portugal and Brazil. Why was there not some sort of visa control? We used such provisions from time to time. We did so when we were faced with the question of the Sikhs in 1982 who were making manifestly unfounded claims. The Government has not been taking such measures.

I come back to the basic point that I do not think the Government has been trying to manage the issue or deal with the problem even under the present initiatives. We saw the problems on the horizon three or four years ago and responded by starting the oral hearings and putting the guidelines in place. Only three years after the legislation had been passed we did a major revision of refugee policy, put new measures in place, and started a major examination of the determination procedures.

It is now four years since those measures were put in place, and we are hearing a series of proposals which totally contradict the wisdom of those independent task forces. That is the real issue at stake.

• (1720)

If we are talking about political posturing, rather than trying to make those political posturing points, if the Hon. Member would take his powers of eloquence and persuasion that he used upon me when I got youth programs for him and used them on his Ministers and the Government to make alterations in the refugee program, he, I and everyone else in the country would be much happier.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, who obviously spoke with passion and deep-felt emotion about the issue.

It has become very evident that the Government will try to market its new product, Bill C-55, to the clientele, the Canadian population, on the basis of curbing abuse. There are two curious aspects to that marketing scheme.

First, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry correctly articulated the point that Canada will be one of the first countries to legislate the third safe country concept which will encourage other countries to do likewise and thereby set up, in the Member's words, a pinball or domino effect in which there will be an international corridor of locked and jammed doors, only aggravating the desperate situation of individual refugees.

On the other hand, during this administration there has been an increase in the number of schemes and, perhaps scams, perpetrated by unscrupulous lawyers attempting to get refugees into the country through the front or back door. We can look, for example, at Lebanon, Turkey, Portugal and Brazil as well as other countries on the horizon.

This shows that inflexibility and rigidity is not the answer to curbing abuse. There is an interesting correlation, that the more severe and restrictive the policy, the greater desperation and fewer options are present for refugees throughout the world.

One comes to the conclusion that Canada is not doing itself any favours, nor doing any favours for the international community, in trying to come to grips with what is an international phenomenon that ultimately requires an international solution. Will the Hon. Member comment on those elements that I believe are very crucial in this debate and which should be brought to the attention of all Canadians?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer as succinctly as I can in the few minutes remaining. First, I believe the Hon. Member has pointed to a very important axiom. As I learned in the three and a half years during which I was responsible for that Department, the more one tries to restrict, the more there will be new channels found to get around those restrictions. Attempting to close the door simply means that cracks will be found in other places.

I predict that one of the consequences of the present Government's action will be to encourage and stimulate a much broader occurrence in illegal refugee immigration activities as people find other ways of moving around the system. Rather than ensuring that all those who apply are given the proper opportunity for a fair hearing and then dispatched quickly as recommended by various reports, we will see a much higher incident of illegal entry into this country.

Second, as I alluded to in my opening remarks, I am not rising to say to the Minister of State for Immigration that this is an easy problem. It is a profound, deeply complex problem. One of the answers that must be found is on the international level. It is clear that the United Nations High Commission for Refugees needs the assistance of member countries to give a new policy direction and response to this issue. That is something we began in 1982-83 when we convened those meetings of other host countries to discuss whether we could not find ways of sharing the responsibility since we had the great privilege of having great opportunities that many other people did not enjoy.

I can report that progress was being made toward finding some resolution among the various host countries on how to co-ordinate action and ensure there was a common approach that was based on the idea of an open door, and even letting many of the countries of origin deal with the problems beginning to emerge.

I do not know why that initiative was stifled when the new Government came to power. It would be worthwhile finding out why that very important development of a new international response to the growing refugee crisis was erased and why we retracted our leadership.

I say to the Minister, in closing, that it is not too late to resurrect that kind of initiative and begin putting it into effect. I think the intent of my colleague's motion and our interest in being here to speak to it is to encourage the Government to do that very thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion before the House today, a motion with which I certainly cannot agree. I would like to give the House an overview of the Bill tabled by the Government, which provides for a new process for determining refugee status in Canada. I am firmly convinced that this Bill strikes the right balance between justice for refugees and an efficient immigration program.

The present Government wants moderate and controlled increases in immigration levels. In 1985, the total number of landed immigrants was 85,000, and this number increased to 100,000 in 1986. In 1987, this figure is expected to be between 115,000 and 125,000. As was stated by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner), Canada's refugee program is based on a threefold approach, in accordance with the United Nations policy relating to refugees.

The first component consists of a refugee assistance program with a budget of over $170 million in 1986-87.

[English]

