> In the case of Canada Post, the federal Treasury has never had to finance more than 12 percent of the corporation's budget since it has become a Crown corporation, on October 16, 1981. In fact, the Government's share has gone from 10,3 percent in 1982-83 to 6,2 percent in 1985-86. The Federal Government contribution increased up until fiscal 1984-85—the 12 percent high previously mentioned—after which it decreased, as we know. However, in the face of such satisfactory performance on the part of a Crown corporation, the Federal Government is acting as if Canada Post should bring in the same kind of dividends as are to be expected from the sale of beer, wine or lottery tickets. In a country as vast as ours, the postal service must be considered an essential service and, as such, it should be managed in strict conformity with the committments undertaken by Government under the enabling legislation.

We therefore have, Mr. Speaker, in the March 25 editorial of the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit dealing with Canada Post Corporation, a clear indication of the type of Canadian postal service corporation which Canadians would like to see.

Mr. Speaker, with the Government's authorization, the Canada Post Corporation has reduced service not only in cities, but also in rural areas, that is to say, in both larger and smaller centres. Of course, everybody has heard about the closing of post offices in rural areas. Travelling from coast to coast in Canada, I have had the opportunity to hear just how concerned Canadians are about the Government's intention to get rid of these small post offices which were the very soul of villages.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to describe how we, as Liberals, see post offices in rural areas. And I quote:

"In small towns and villages, the post office remains the establishment most frequently visited by local people. It easily becomes an information centre for the whole community. That is where people go to get information on such matters as social services and obtain income tax returns, as well as scholarship and job application forms. Postmasters often serve as resource people. The federal Government is present everywhere in Canada, and the post office remains a familiar place which brings the Government down to the dimension of man. The post office is a universal meeting place. It creates links in the community. It is a unifying force which gives the community and each and every one of its members a feeling of belonging."

This is how we see post offices in rural areas, in small villages, Mr. Speaker. I was quoting from a statement made by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the former Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are quite concerned about what is going to happen to their post offices. They are also quite concerned about what is going to happen to their postal services. Every morning when they open their newspapers, in whatever language it is printed, they read about threats of strikes. Instead of acting as a mediator and trying to calm apprehensions, the Government throws oil on the fire and says: We have to be tough, we have to be rough, we have to crush the workers because we must carry out this plan which calls for the elimination of nearly 8,000 jobs.

• (1600)

Well, as I was saying at the very beginning, Mr. Speaker, for a corporate plan to be applicable, accepted and successfully carried out, you need the co-operation of both the administrators and employees. For the time being, the Canada Post Corporation has not obtained this co-operation. Quite the contrary. Together with the Government, it has sought confrontation by presenting its corporate plan without consultation. It has also taken action which is contrary to the spirit of co-operation on which the postal service was based at the time of its creation. When we were in Government, we, Liberals, had promised to have labour representatives on the board of the Canada Post Corporation for the very purpose of creating the spirit of co-operation needed for a harmonious work relationship, to fulfil the mandate of ensuring a better postal service, reducing the deficit and maintaining a fair climate of labour relations.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be aware that we shall never have a good postal service if confrontation between labour and management does not stop. Up till this morning, on this opposition day, the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation had the opportunity to give a clear signal to both parties by saying: "Let's sit down, please. Let's talk. Let's settle the problems. Let's see how it could be done. We could delay the privatization plan." That is the recommendation of the Marchment report which the Minister quoted this morning, but only the parts that suited him. Indeed, he did not say for example that the Marchment report recommends to wait till 1990 before considering the privatization of Canada Post, for it is only at the project stage, Mr. Speaker. He wants to privatize all retail outlets. He wants to install superboxes so that mail can be delivered by private contractors. Now do you think the Corporation's 60,000 employees will say: "Yes, Mr. Minister, because you want to reduce the deficit, we will do that at once!" It will have to be worked out through the negotiation process, with common sense and a lot of time. It took the Americans 14 years to work it out. But here, with only 25 million people, in a country as diverse and as vast as Canada, we want results within five years, Mr. Speaker.

It shows how unrealistic this Convervative Government is. Ever since they took office the small guy has had to pay while the rich always get more.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, today we condemn the Government for creating a situation that could lead to violent confrontation. Why violent? Let me explain. I have in front of me a press release issued by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

[English]

In its press release this morning, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business asked Gallup to conduct a poll to see whether or not Canadians wanted a postal strike. I am not surprised by the results.

Everybody in Canada wants the mail delivered. They do not care about a strike or the deficit; they want mail delivered. That is what is important, and the Government does not understand it.

The Government is using the confrontational method because it wants to reduce the deficit. The Canada Post Corporation was doing okay until the Minister of Finance said: "You have to balance your books in fiscal 1988".

It took 14 years for them to balance their books in the United States, and they want it done in Canada in five years.

I see you indicating, Mr. Speaker, that my time is expiring. Mr. John Bulloch said in the press release this morning that Canadians simply want the mail to get through and that they do not want to be used as pawns in a show-down with the forces, the forces being the Government, Canada Post management, and the union.

Canadians want their mail delivered. They want door-to-door service. They want to keep the rural post office as an identity, as a symbol of Canadian unity. I ask the Government and the Minister responsible for Canada Post to stop this confrontational attitude undertaken a few months ago, sit down with management and labour and come up with a plan acceptable to Canadians, workers and management.

• (1610)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to my colleague, the critic for the Post Office, who I think speaks knowledgeably and passionately about this issue. He has been at the forefront in trying to bring some sense into the Post Office.

When he talks about having the mail delivered not only door-to-door but as a unified service across the country I think he is hitting a significant nail right on the head, the same one that Canadians from coast-to-coast want the Government to understand.

What about a community with a postman, a postwoman or a postperson who delivers mail on one side of the street and then crosses over and does not? What kind of citizenship is this? There is only one kind of citizenship and that is first class citizenship.

But what about the person in the a subdivision who asks why the Government rationalizes not delivering door-to-door because of financing when that new subdivision gets an entirely new infrastructure from other levels of Government, new schools, new churches, new recreation facilities and new transportation arteries? Why is the Post Office different? Perhaps the buck is being passed to the municipalities. The Government is saying that the municipalities are not telling us in advance when these new subdivisions are being created. Therefore, the Post Office has no way of budgeting for them. I would like the comments of the Hon. Member, who has been very much involved in terms of the inequities this creates within a community and between communities vis-à-vis the concept of the supermailbox and whether it is economically efficient. Or is it almost the same when you consider the cost of having to maintain those supermailboxes vis-à-vis the fixing and the replacing of them?

Mr. Gagliano: I want to thank my colleague for the question, Mr. Speaker. In the past we had green boxes. Whether there was a lack of co-operation or a problem in management, the Post Office was unable to absorb all the new communities that sprang up so rapidly. Past policy was to have green boxes so people could receive their mail at the corner of the street on a temporary basis until the Post Office could organize the delivery route and install door to door delivery.

Some Members go around saying that the supermailbox is Liberal policy. I invite anyone to come to my riding of St. Léonard. It was built in the last 15 or 20 years. The only streets without door-to-door delivery are those built in late 1984, 1985 and 1986. My own house was built in 1983-84. I have home delivery. Two streets away people do not. I took a walk this week-end and I found not far from my house supermailboxes on a continuation of an existing street. Because the continuation of the street was built in 1985, people who live on that continuation do not have door-to-door delivery. That is the kind of discrimination that Canadians do not want to take. They are right. They pay the same taxes whether municipal, provincial or federal. Everyone pays 36 cents for a stamp. If one has to register a letter, one pays the same price whether or not one has home delivery. We are creating second-class citizens.

We have a deficit problem and we should face it rationally. Management and unions should sit down to try to improve performance in the Post Office, but not by way of confrontation. We must leave confrontation to the 1970s because we know the results of it. Canada Post Corporation was created in 1981 to avoid the confrontation which the Conservative Government and the new management of Canada Post is creating right now.

Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question, but I shall comment first.

I am a Member with a rural area in Ontario. I have not had one post office closed where there was a need for one. Let me clarify that. Literally no post office has been closed in my riding where there has been a call for the existing rural postal delivery service.

I have been here through several Liberal Governments. I had far more complaints during those times than today. It seems we have a real scare tactic campaign today. Petitions are being organized, with which I will deal a little later.

Many rural Canadians are receiving their mail today delivered by the rural carrier who has been there for many, many years. The Liberal Opposition is trying to stir up discontent among Canadians. I think this is a disservice. I do not know who is distributing petitions, but they are out there and they are organized.

Is this a deliberate attempt to scare rural Canadians? If it is, this is a disservice on the part of both opposition Parties. If they are concerned about Canadians, especially seniors, they should help them to understand the current situation which was put in place by the former Liberal Government. Opposition Parties should not be trying to make political points by distorting things. Let us call the facts for what they are.

I eagerly await the Hon. Member's reply to my question.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member in his own riding has no closures of post offices. I would recommend that the Hon. Member read the postal plan because he will see there is a plan to close 5,000 post offices. The Opposition is not playing with scare tactics; Canadians are scared.

I have here different letters and statements from rural Canadian organizations and mayors. For example, there is one here from the Mayor of Trinity Bay who writes:

• (1620)

> The few businesses we have and on which we depend for our financial survival, have been kept here by services like the post office. Centralization for the sake of economy should not go to such extremes as to threaten the existence of small communities . . . We earnestly request that you look at ways to maintain the post office even if you must share with others some of the more costly aspects of the service. Sharing, where we live, is another word for survival and we know what it is all about. For God's sake do not help to destroy us!

That letter was sent to Donald Lander, President of Canada Post, on February 2, 1987.

Another letter reads as follows:

> Since there are no banks situated in the community, we are required to deal with banks in Red Rock or Nipigon, both approximately 25 miles to the east or in Thunder Bay, 45 miles to the west. Most banking transactions are carried out by mail due to the travelling distances and costs involved with personal attendance. Money orders are purchased with all cash coming into the municipal offices.
> Quite often, especially during tax collection periods, there may be thousands of dollars collected weekly which must be mailed to the bank . . . The loss of the rural post office would be a great inconvenience. I would be required to travel great distances to the nearest post office to purchase postage supplies and pick up registered mail.

That letter was written by Mrs. Helena Tamminen, Secretary-Treasurer, Township of Dorion, Ontario, and sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on December 22, 1986. These are letters not from members of the Opposition but from concerned citizens and local elected officials. Perhaps the Hon. Member should take a tour of Canada to see that people are really scared of the business plan that his Government has approved.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—CANADA POST—POSTAL SERVICE—LABOUR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That this House condemn the government for allowing the deterioration of Canada's postal service by undermining the principle of fair and equal services to all Canadians through the substitution of "super mail boxes" for door to door service and by the closure of rural post offices, and by exacerbating already disintegrating labour-management relations within Canada Post by removing labour representation from the Corporation's Board and by other confrontational actions, thereby increasing the threats of postal service disruptions or even shut-downs.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at this point in the debate introduced by the Opposition, a debate of course that is of concern to all Canadian citizens, that may concern them because as the Hon. Member stated a few minutes ago, they want to sow fear in the hearts of people for political gains.

What I would like to do at this point, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps make a historical review of the Canada Post Corporation, or the Canadian postal service.

The postal service as we know it today started in the mid-19th century. It was established to meet the needs in terms of exchange of information felt by the business and industrial world and by that increasing part of the public that could read and write.

Since then, tremendous changes happened and the postal service is just as essential today as it was before the invention of the telephone, the computer, the airplane and the communications satellite. But if it is to survive, it will have as any other service to adapt to a changing, modern world.

When the postal service was inaugurated in Canada during the 1850s, most Canadians were living in rural areas, on the farm and in small towns. Today, although rural Canada remains an important component, the great majority of Canadians live in major cities or suburbs.

At the beginning of the postal service, manpower was inexpensive. People worked long hours for a small salary, which meant businesses could allow a high labour content while selling their goods and services at competitive prices. People had no automobiles and public transportation did not exist. In order to pick up or mail their letters, they had to either walk or harness.

Today, they drive to the stores, the supermarkets, or they drop their mail in mail boxes at their jobs. That postal service really did not change. But such is not the case of other service industries.

Nowadays, people won the right to a much better salary for significantly reduced work hours, so that productivity must be increased if costs are to be controlled.

The Canada Post Corporation has a mandate to bring the Canadian postal service into the world of the 21st Century.

This means to alter traditional procedures for the provision of a postal service and we know that any such change is not easy. However, the Corporation has undertaken to abide with a fundamental principle in the modernization and adjustment of postal services in Canada. It is to make sure that all Canadians wherever they live enjoy a reliable and cheap postal service. Methods will perhaps change. It is possible that partnership arrangements with private sector which are as old as postal services themselves will be further altered. However, the postal service,thanks to imaginative solutions, will always meet the needs of future generations of Canadians.

It should be noted that the Corporation has promised to give a 90-day notice of any change made to the rural service. The new plan of Canada Post will mean a better postal service for all Canadians.

When the Marchment Committee asked Canadians what they wanted more especially from their postal services, they clearly answered: reliability. The Corporation is improving its operations and modernizing its facilities so that Canadians may expect a reliable mail delivery service.Each year, there are 150,000 new addresses in Canada as more people are settling in new homes or are launching a new business. The Corporation will act quickly to provide a practical and economic service to those new addresses. It will put an end to the long file at the counters of the general delivery service where people have to pick up their mail and will remove the green community boxes which are rightly despised.

It will be much easier to buy stamps and other postal items. The Corporation will make use of the skills of the retail industry namely cornerstores, general stores, drugstores, and supermarkets, to sell stamps and to provide other postal services where people do their shopping and at times that are convenient to them. Furthermore, the number of outlets selling stamps and providing other postal services will increase by about 50 p. 100 within the next 10 years. That means that people will know where to go after 5 or 6 p.m. to buy stamps.

Canada Post will limit rate increases. In the future, the cost of mailing a letter will vary only according to inflation. There will be no more sudden and dramatic increases in the price of stamps. People will benefit from these improvements in the postal service without any tax increase.

Canada Post will be financially sound as any other business which offers a good service. In this way, people will not have to pay twice, first at the post office, and second through their income tax. There will be no more postal deficit to be added to the national debt which our children and grandchildren will have to pay back.

At this time the corporation has some 12,000 sales outlets where one can buy stamps and other postal products and services. This number is broken down as follows: 6,000 post offices manned by employees of the Corporation, 2,000 auxiliary offices operated by large and small businesses, and 4,000 agencies that sell stamps. The Corporation will increase the accessibility of its services. Therefore, the total number of outlets will increase by 50 per cent over a period of 10 years with better access to these outlets.

Nowadays, it happens quite frequently that post offices are not located in shopping areas. Several post offices were centrally located when they were built initially a few generations ago, but now due to shifts in population, businesses have moved somewhere else. Most of the time, post offices are open when it is the least convenient for working people to get there, and they are closed during the business hours of other retail stores. Existing post offices are also more likely to be located where parking is difficult than where there are lots of free parking spaces. Those are some of the reasons why the Corporation will more and more place retail sales into the hands of the private sector, of business people who are already serving the public by selling groceries, stationery items, drugs and all kinds of other products. Postal items could be sold in stores where people are going already.

Those businesses are already located where people make their provisions and are open longer hours than most post offices. In addition, they are usually located where it is easy to park a car as in shopping centers. Those measures are also based on sound management principles. The wages of those stores' employees are comparable to those of private sector businesses and the Corporation can increase the number or the quality of its retail outlets without having to build new postal offices facilities. We know that, in the end, those costs are borne by postal service users.

Improved service plans in rural areas of Canada undoubtedly mean that several forms of relationship with customers, some of which were established more than a century ago, will change gradually. So that those changes will be well understood by members of the communities concerned and that those people will be heard in the process, as I said earlier, Canada Post will give a 90-day notice of any change it is contemplating. That period will be used to consult people and their elected representatives before any change is implemented.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation is improving rural service in several ways. One is to provide the supermailbox to its customers, which means that in small municipalities, people will no longer have to go to the Post Office nor to stand in line for the general delivery at limited business hours. They will just have to go to their supermailbox which will generally be closer to their homes, and to remove their parcels and their mail whenever it suits them. According to a recent poll, 94 per cent of the people who tried the supermailbox are very pleased. This supermailbox gives them the same degree of safety and of convenience as a rented postal box with a lock. The supermailbox however is free of charge. In addition to collecting your mail and your parcels, you can mail your letters in the supermailbox.

The Corporation would also increase the number of outlets where the people who live in rural areas will be able to buy stamps and other services. Their number will increase from 5,000 now to 7,000 within 10 years. These measures are part of a global plan aimed at improving access to the services offered by the Corporation through increased co-operation with the private sector. By increasing the number of those outlets in rural Canada, the Corporation will take advantage of the resources of local business people and entrepreneurs instead of using offices it would have to build or operate itself.

In many cases this will mean longer business hours and a more convenient location. At the present time, several post offices are open only from 30 to 40 hours a week. Private sector outlets are normally open much longer. These outlets of postal products and services operated by the private sector will be located where people go shopping, which will exempt them from having to stop in several places.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it must be reminded that that 90 days, advance notice will allow consultations with people and their representatives before those changes become effective.

The transition will not affect significantly those concerned. It will be spread over a long period of time so that the impact on employees could be alleviated through promotions, resignations and retirements.

It is to be reminded also that new business and employment opportunities will arise in Canadian rural communities from further co-operation with the private sector. Needless to say that those opportunities will be available as well to Canada Post employees. And they could also take advantage of new possibilities within the Corporation itself as new positions will be created to control private retail sale outlets.

Postal service expansion plans for a viable universal mail service at Canada Post are more important to rural Canadians than to their urban counterparts. Competitor operations, such as private couriers, have revolved around larger urban centres where there is more mail. Unlike Canada Post, those businesses are not required to provide a universal service to those little or less populated rural areas.

In the next decade, and possibly the following years, Canada Post will proceed with a comprehensive survey of the market for every future outlet. In fact, a market survey is mostly an analysis of preferences, of consumer requirements and needs, and such analyses are common practice in the private sector. They will determine what sites and services from coast to coast are suited to consumer needs and whether or not postal products and services should be made available on a given site. Before any decision is made, Canada Post will consider factors such as demand, clients, community preferences, parking lots as well as other existing retail sale outlets in the vicinity.

All these factors will help it choose the most practical place to locate these products and services. It must determine where customers work, and shop, and at what time they prefer to buy postal products. The goal of the Corporation is to increase and improve the quantity and the quality of its services to the benefit of the user.

Market surveys have been undertaken in nine medium-sized communities in Canada. The results will determine where and how postal services will be offered. The Canada Post Corporation will carefully study each location to make sure that customers will be better served. And if it wants to remain competitive, it must make it easier for its customers to buy its products and services. Post offices are more costly to operate in terms of salaries as well as in terms of capital expenditures and operating expenses required by this type of large obsolete buildings.

Franchising is an important feature in the new plan. Businesses will buy from Canada Post the right to sell postal products in a given area. They will also buy their stamps and other products at wholesale prices as for any other merchandise purchased for resale.

What is new is the relationships between the Corporation and private sector businesses which will be more similar to those between travel or car rental agencies and their franchisers. More services will be offered, working hours will be longer and will include evenings and week-ends, and sales outlets will be more conveniently located. The image of the Canada Post Corporation will be consistent and clearly posted. Sales outlets will be much more attractive and will project a lively commercial image from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Corporation has already implemented a pilot project in Metropolitan Toronto and has announced another one for Winnipeg where it has to leave its rented accommodation. According to Canada Post, customer reaction was very encouraging. In both cities, all retail clerks affected by these new measures were or will be reassigned to local postal operations.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post considers the welfare of its employees as an important part of its plan. As its business volume increases, it will be more capable of integrating its employees. But the goal of the Corporation is to increase and improve the quality and the quantity of its services to the benefit of users. It is very important that this service be centered on user's needs.

• (1640)

Mr. Gagliano: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one comment. The Hon. Member referred to a Canada Post policy calling for the closing of post offices. She referred to the famous 90 days, and I would like to emphasize now that in reality, Canada Post had difficulty in enforcing this regulation, and I am under the impression that it never took it seriously, until quite recently. The Standing Committee on Government Operations which addressed this problem came out with a unanimous report which is so strong that it conveyed to the Canada Post Corporation the message that it should truly have a consultation process and a recommendation that individual post offices should be closed only when, after consultation, all the people involved agreed. However, when the people involved say that a post office should remain open, it should not be closed. In a way, this would be a veto given to the public. On the basis of the representations made to us, we did not feel that the Canada Post Corporation was properly applying the regulations. The Minister had announced following the tabling of the corporate plan . . .

Mr. Speaker, I have a question. The Hon. Member referred repeatedly to the fact that there would be more post offices, that this would give private enterprise an opportunity to develop postal services in their own corporations and commercial environment. So, instead of having a post office close at 6 p.m., there could be, for instance, on Thursdays and Fridays when stores are open until 9 p.m., so-called "extended" hours.

I would like the Hon. Member to tell us what she thinks of this point, on which even the Minister himself touched this morning. Now, in urban centres, there are small post offices located in drugstores, for instance. As a matter of fact, there is one in the building where I have my riding office and I can tell you that if I go down there to try and buy stamps or have a letter registered after 4.30 p.m., the door is closed. It closes even before the central post office which is located a little further away.

The Government would like to have us believe that, by turning over post offices to the private sector, we would have access to the post office almost 24 hours a day, but such is not the case. For the time being, at least, as she said, that is the way the Government would like it to be, but I think that this would mean a counter where stamps are sold, not a real post office where one could send a registered letter or a package.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on this.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I understand my hon. friend's concerns. He represents a riding just as I do. What we both want is for our fellow citizens to be well served.

Through this privatization of a new service, the purpose of which is to reduce administrative costs, it is clear that the little post office in the drug store which closes at 4 p.m. or 4.30 p.m. was not given a full franchise. It is because not so far away, there is another post office.

We say that when the post office as it now exists closes for any reason, including the fact that the postmaster has retired, we would transfer the services to the private sector, either in a convenience store, a drug store or a supermarket.

Because he will get paid a commission on the stamps he sells and the service he provides, the owner will be eager to stay open as long as possible during his business hours, and we all know how long convenience stores remain open. I think that people generally will benefit, because, after 5 p.m., instead of having to wait till the next day to buy stamps or do any other business, they will be able to obtain service up to 6 p.m., 7 p.m. or 8 p.m.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my honourable friend. It refers to the privatization of post offices in urban areas, as well as the franchising policy. I would like her comments on three points.

First, is she aware that before this franchising policy, the Corporation had opened new offices, under new management, open longer hours? I mention this because these public post offices provided the same services as the private post offices. And one of the arguments in favour of this policy of privatization are the extended hours and greater access to the public. We could do the same with public post offices.

My second point is this: What is your reaction to the fact that by franchising post offices, the Government or Canada Post are going to lose revenues because it will only be possible to privatize profitable post offices as no businessman would accept to operate a post office which is losing money? This policy will translate into a loss of revenue for Canada Post and will have an impact on the deficit.

Also, I would like to know her opinion about the salaries of the people working in post offices. These people are now being paid $12 an hour while after privatization, they will be paid the minimum wage of $4.55 which, in a City like Toronto, is the poverty threshold. Will such a policy not reduce people to poverty?

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, on the first question, the public post office versus the private post office, as far as customer or people service in concerned, certainly people will prefer . . . In fact, when you have a location in a small community, whether rural or semi-urban, where service is available for 12, 15 hours a day, people cannot help being satisfied, and they will have the same service.

Mr. Keeper: But that is possible also with the public post office.

Mrs. Bertrand: Perhaps I did not understand correctly your first question, but anyway I will try to answer the second and third questions.

You say there will be a loss of income. Look, businessmen who need the service always go there, postal service will always be required. So they will have a choice. If they only want to buy stamps, they can always go to the convenience store or private services, but if they need something more involved like overseas mail, which perhaps the convenient store could not handle, there will always be the post office available to them. So, the income is there. I do not see how income will decline at the Canada Post Corporation.

Third, you refer to salaries. Well, it will be private enterprise, or private enterprise wages. There will be a fair balance just the same, if in the same service location an employee, whether assigned to paper supplies or produce, perhaps, if he is in a store and that right next to it . . . So, employees in the same business will have competitive wages. I do not see why an employee assigned to the postal service would earn less than somebody else in the same store. After all, it is private enterprise.

As you know, all that privatization is aimed at saving Canada Post's money. Who is paying for that deficit? It is always the individual, always the taxpayer. Often, people come to my office and tell me: If the Government gave us such or such a service, we could have a subsidy for this or that. My first reaction, all I tell them initially is this: Look, if you are prepared to pay more taxes, O.K., we will give it to you. But each time you receive a service or a grant, it is with your tax money. We get it from your pocket. At that point people realize that it is really their tax money we are managing, and they may then be perhaps more reasonable in their representations, their expectations.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, for the third time in the last few months this House is debating the condition of postal service in Canada. Today we are indebted to the Official Opposition for moving the motion condemning the Government for allowing the deterioration of Canada's postal service by undermining the principle of fair and equal service to all Canadians.

As a Member who represents a largely rural riding, there are certain points about postal service that concern me more than others. Today I want to address the closure of rural post offices and the closure of rural postal delivery routes, which I notice is not mentioned in the motion but which I am sure is implied by it. I also want to mention the situation of confrontational actions within the postal service, initiated by the board of Canada Post and initiated and covertly supported by the Government.

The situation with rural areas is one that I believe is comparable to the introduction of the supermailbox in suburban areas, but one where the potential consequences of the actions that have been taken are indeed for more serious in the case of the rural and smaller communities.

We have seen a history of actions taken by the Government that are intended to diminish and downgrade postal service and put Canada Post, both the unions and the corporation itself, in the position of being a scapegoat for other failures, including those of the Government.

We have seen the Government defended by its members on the Standing Committee on Government Operations. We have seen the committee adjourned for lack of a quorum when some members departed.

The Minister responsible for Canada Post was replaced in February of this year after a storm of protest. We have heard some favourable comments from the new Minister which, unfortunately, have not been translated into any action to improve the conditions under which postal service is delivered in Canada.

The new Minister said that no closure of a rural post office or change in postal service will be undertaken. The Government said that postal service was more important than balancing the Budget by next year. However, we have not seen actions taken to put flesh on these skeletal commitments.

The committee's proposal that there should be consultation with local committees has apparently been discarded or at least devalued by the Minister saying that the final decision to close rural post offices or make other changes in rural mail service will be made by Canada Post. I respectfully submit that this response missed the point. I believe it is understood that the final decisions always lay with Canada Post. The problem was that Canada Post was not taking adequate notice of the users of the postal service or the representations of their elected representatives and their spokespeople.

I believe that it is incumbent upon Canada Post to consider very seriously the input that it receives when carrying out its responsibility to make the final decision with respect to the location.

The second report of the Government Operations Committee states: "Your committee is appalled by the heavy-handed approach taken by Canada Post in the past in its attempts to close certain rural offices. In many instances, consultation was totally lacking. It is your committee's view that rural communities deserve better treatment".

The committee went on to say: "Your committee realizes that demographic and other changes occurring in rural regions may occasionally result in the need for a post office closure or a change in postal service".

The committee recommended that in the future a minimum of 90 days' notice be given regarding each and every anticipated closure to allow for consultation to take place.

I understand that the Post Office has taken notice of that recommendation, apparently not through any good offices of the Government, but on the analysis that this was indeed the sensible, politic thing to do, as well as a fair and reasonable step to take within the context of a democratic society.

Of course, the values of information and consultation are dear to all Members of the House. They are values that cannot be translated into concrete effects unless Canada Post is willing to consider fully the information, the opinions, the wishes and the aspirations that are communicated to it by the users of the postal service.

I want to talk briefly about the situation of Canada Post being called upon to balance its budget. This objective was obviously placed on Canada Post unilaterally because there appeared to have been no consultations between the Government and Canada Post as to what might be a realistic, workable and viable business plan to enable Canada Post to reach that objective of full revenue dependency.

Of course, our system provides the Government with the right to impose such a decision, but such a right should be exercised with much more care than the Government evidently did in this case. Instead, it imposed this arbitrary deadline on Canada Post. In response to that deadline, Canada Post came up with a plan which some could scarcely describe as other than arbitrary, as is reflected in some of its objectives. Canada Post indicated that over 10 years it would close, amalgamate or privatize all of the 5,221 rural post offices. It proposed to eliminate rural lot line delivery to 100,000 customers.

Our Party believes that this plan is one that could not be considered by Canadians as providing a fair solution to the problem of the postal service paying for itself and making the appropriate changes to the postal service in order to meet the Government's deficit reduction objectives.

Privatizing 3,500 rural post offices would not be the answer. Replacing the post office with a stamp outlet in a pharmacy or a corner store will not compensate a community for the loss of such an essential institution as the post office, nor will it replace the service that the post office provides. Mail sorting would cease in rural communities. It would be further centralized. Jobs would be lost. Many secondary services which are presently operated would be obviously curtailed.

Moreover, a tradition would die. I believe that I was the first person to mention in the House that in some communities the post office is the only institution that flies the Canadian flag. I did so not to set up some form of sympathy-seeking image but simply to record in the House what I have observed in some places to be the fact.

The post office in many remote and rural communities is central to the ideal and the identity the residents of those communities, in their often widely dispersed outlying areas, feel in their identity as Canadians. In many ways the post office is the only tangible contact that some of them have with their Government. Thus it was that there was some resistance in rural communities to the idea of the post office even becoming a Crown corporation because it would mean that the link between the people and the Government would essentially be severed by the turning of Canada Post into a Crown corporation.

Some of the consequences that I have seen in my riding are obviously detracting from that relationship that should exist between every Canadian and the federal Government. I saw rural routes discontinued in Dinorwic, in Pine Wood and in Rainy River, routes eliminated and people having to travel considerable distances to pick up their mail. Indeed, I have seen lifetime customers taken off the delivery, people who had received their mail at a particular location in a box for decades no longer being able to get it there but having to travel to town, and in one case up to 70 kilometres on a round trip to pick up the mail.

These are not the only people who feel disenfranchised and left out because of Canada Post's efforts to reduce its deficits. Remote fly-in communities in my constituency, almost all Indian reserve communities, want to operate for themselves the local post offices which have been controlled for many years by companies such as the Hudson Bay Company which have their roots outside the community. This is something that the Post Office should look at now that the Hudson Bay Company has sold many of the stores which operate these post offices. Is it an appropriate time to look at a post office that is controlled by the community and where the economic benefits, the economic opportunity of operating the post office, in communities where there is very little in the way of economic benefit, can go to the permanent residents of the community?

In some communities delivery service is so erratic as to be appalling. It is a matter of pure conjecture and speculation as to whether the mail-bag will get off the plane on the day that it is supposed to get off the plane. The principle of fair and equal service that is mentioned in the Opposition Day motion is indeed a principle that in many communities in my riding is honoured more in the breach that in the observance.

For example, we have the case of communities that are totally unserved by Canada Post. These are communities where there is no mail delivery, communities such as Lac la Croix, Poplar Hill, Slate Falls, and MacDowell Lake. These are communities in which the only way of getting mail in is through the courtesy or generosity of a small airline, or even a private aircraft owner, who will pick up a bag of mail at the post office at his or her own expense of time and cost and bring it into the community on a sporadic basis, on the basis of when the opportunity to fly to the community occurs. That surely is not fair and equal service. There are other instances in which fair and equal service as a principle has been totally undermined.

In the case of a house in Fort Frances that stands on one corner of an intersection, the owner must go to the post office to pick up his mail while at the same time on the other three corners of that intersection the home owners benefit from door-to-door delivery. That is an example which I am sure we could furnish the details of to the Minister if the Minister cared to take an interest.

Faced with the Government's inaction on this issue, what are Canadians doing? Last December, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attending a major meeting in the small community of Esprit-Saint, near Rimouski. In this community of some 600 people from what I was told, there was a meeting of over 800 people. It was the largest audience, not including my party's conventions, I have ever addressed as guest speaker. The meeting was also attended by the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) whom I now see in the House. It was during that meeting that the group "Dignité rurale du Canada" was formed to convince the Government not to make the cuts suggested in the corporate plan of the Canada Post.

Mr. Gilles Raymond, from Esprit-Saint, was elected president of this organization, which is seeking a fair and equitable treatment for rural regions. It should be emphasized that this meeting had the support of representatives from other Canadian provinces, including Ontario, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and British Columbia.

This organization, born in a Quebec village, now extends from coast to coast. For "Dignité rurale du Canada", the cuts contemplated in the plan threaten the very foundations of rural life in Canada.

As was noted by Mr. Raymond at a recent press conference, rural residents have the reputation of being stubborn and will never accept second class citizen treatment. And that is what is a stake in the Canada Post plan. Now that "Dignité rurale du Canada" includes representatives from all over this country, from all kinds of groups and organizations, from postal service users to postmasters and postal unions, it will speak with a booming voice throughout rural Canada, and we shall hear a lot from these people over the next few months.

[English]

I am happy not only to have been at the founding convention but to have seen the progress that Rural Dignity of Canada is making in bringing these important matters of postal service to the attention of the House of Commons and to the attention of the people of Canada.

Before I conclude I would like to turn briefly to some of the confrontational actions which are instanced in the opposition motion. We have had recruitment, the attempted recruitment of part-timers for a salary of $4.50 per hour on the understanding that they are to be willing to cross a picket line. We have had the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), whose rhetoric very rarely stays below the level of the inflammatory, say that maybe the military could deliver the post in the event of a strike—a great contribution, one must admit, to labour-management harmony.

We have seen Canada Post stripped of representatives of labour on its board. While I do not say that Canada Post or the Government is entirely responsible for any confrontations which might occur—and I recognize that these things have a dynamic of their own—frankly we must acknowledge that the combative attitude of the Government and the obscurantist rhetoric which it allows some of its members to use cannot do anything but exacerbate the situation. Some of the roll-backs which have been demanded are obviously intended to provoke.

In today's edition of The Toronto Sun we have a report about security frisks which they are planning to introduce. Obviously this is something which could have been done in consultation with the unions, had management possessed the willingness to do so and if they had not had as part of their agenda the provocation of unions by unrealistic bargaining demands and the sort of pinpricking and harrassment to which they have subjected the unions.

I realize that I am almost out of time. I would have liked to have taken time to offer some recommendations to the Government, bearing in mind that it is, after all, every Member's responsibility to offer good advice and counsel even when it has obviously fallen on deaf ears so far.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in debate on a truly Canadian problem, a truly major concern to all Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on the motion put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). It concerns the continued deterioration of Canada postal service by undermining the principle of fair and equal services to all Canadians through the substitution of "super-mailboxes" for door-to-door service and by the closure of rural post offices.

I should like to stop there and emphasize "the closure of rural post offices". I will return to that particular aspect of the motion a little later.

The motion continues as follows: "by exacerbating already disintegrating labour-management relations within Canada Post by removing labour representation from the Corporation's Board and by other confrontational actions, thereby increasing the threats of postal service disruptions or even shut-downs".

Indeed the subject matter is an important one. I believe the contents of the opposition Motion adequately represent the concerns of many Canadians with regard to this particular subject matter.

It should be noted that there have been numerous discussions about this particular Crown corporation. We have had the minority report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations which examined the 1986-87 to 1990-91 Canada Post corporate plan. In examining the corporate plan it becomes obvious to many, but particularly to those of us who have the great privilege of representing small rural communities throughout Canada, that there is a desire and an intention on behalf of the Government of Canada to prejudice, even more so than it already has, the aspirations of Canadians who live in small, rural, remote communities.

In less than 15 years from now we will be in the year 2000. I think in recent years there has been a trend toward a greater concentration of Canadians in urban areas as opposed to rural communities. Notwithstanding that particular fact of Canadian life, it is important for those individuals and for Members of Parliament who represent urban constituencies to understand and appreciate rural Canadian life.

I should like to name a few of these communities in my constituency such as Donkin, South Bar, New Victoria, Gabarouse, Sydney Forks, East Bay, St. Peter's, Louisburg, Dominion, Glace Bay, and Waterford. It is true that they do not have a CN Tower. It is true that they do not have a dome. Hon. Members opposite laugh, but it is rural Canadian life. One of its pillars has been the institution of post offices. I know that Tories have—

Mr. Kempling: One every two and a half miles.

Mr. Dingwall: I know the Tories do not have the same sort of appreciation for rural community life as Hon. Members on this side. I understand that. However, I guess I fail to understand and appreciate those who expound the theory and philosophy that they understand rural Canada when they, both individually, as Members who have come to this great Parliament and have taken their oath to represent their constituencies to the best of their ability, and collectively, support government measures which at best—and I know you would concur, Mr. Speaker—are Draconian and do everything to retard the economic viability and the esprit de corps—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In the Post Office?

Mr. Dingwall: —in rural communities across the country. I had great admiration for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I guess I still do, but he should know, as one who comes from a constituency in western Canada, that the institution of post offices is important to rural life. It is a meeting place for members of the community to visit with others, to exchange information, to obtain information, and of course to receive their mail. This may mean the winning of a particular grant or honorarium from Government, whether national or provincial. It may be a letter from a loved one out of the country. It may be a variety of communications. Nevertheless, they have played a very important part in Canadian life.

When I listen to Hon. Members opposite talk about the closure of post offices, I find it rather frustrating to hear them, with great fanfare and smiles on their faces, say that they can close post offices without concern for the people who live in those communities. Let it be said that the symbolism that that represents to Canadian rural life is extremely important. I would think Hon. Members opposite would not want to see Canadian symbolism vis-à-vis the auspices of our postal stations across the country deteriorate if they believe as I do—and I am certain they do—in terms of Canadian unity.

The question which rural communities ask Members of Parliament, the question with which I have been confronted as a Member of Parliament is a simple one. If we lose our post offices today, what will we lose tomorrow?

Mr. Malone: The Liberals.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member opposite wishes to "humourize" this important subject. He will have an opportunity to do so as the debate progresses. Perhaps it will be before all of us realize that it is the next election when they will have to answer for their sins. There will be many sins for which they will have to answer.

• (1720)

If we lose the Post Office, what do we lose next? That is the question, Mr. Speaker. The community I represent called Marion Bridge is made up of a cross-section of different individuals of different political persuasion, young and old, the unemployed and those who run small businesses who happen to live in that rural part of Cape Breton known as Marion Bridge. They were appalled to hear that the Government is contemplating closing their particular facility. They asked "What will we lose next?" Of course, the answer that government Members give is that that is not important, the ramifications, the linkages, are not important. I suggest that those ramifications are important. A rural post office whether in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, Westmoreland—Kent, St. Léonard—a more urban area than mine—but wherever those post offices close, there are linkages. All Members of Parliament ought to be very concerned about that. Of course, the chairman of the Alberta Conservative caucus agrees with me, at least I am led to believe he does. In February, 1987 he is alleged to have said—I hope I am quoting his correctly because I would not want to steal the Hon. Member's thunder—"Canada Post discriminates. It is an unfair organization, bigotted, biased against rural people". If you were going to close post offices in rural Canada, I think the Hon. Member's statement has a great deal of merit.

I hope in the ensuing weeks and months that there will be a clearly defined statement by the Government with regard to all rural post offices in Canada, not just the select that happen to be represented by Members on the government side. I know my colleagues from the great island are in support of that.

What are the consequences for small towns and villages as a result of the closure of the rural post office? The former Minister responsible for Canada Post, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) said, "In villages and small towns across Canada, the Post Office remains one of the most frequently visited places by citizens of the community. The Post Office has, over the years, become a much needed resource centre. Members of the community know where to go in order to obtain information on a variety of subjects. The federal Government is everywhere in Canada. The Post Office is still the most familiar place which brings information to people. The Post Office is a meeting place, a meeting place for all and creates a bond between members of the community. It is a unified force which gives one the feeling of belonging".

Mr. O'Neil: Are you sure that was not a church?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: That was said by the Hon. Member for Papineau, former Minister responsible for Canada Post. I think that underlines quite adequately the importance of rural post offices. I do not want to talk from a partisan perspective.

Mr. Lewis: David, come on.

Mr. Dingwall: I do not want to conclude my remarks in a partisan way. I want to congratulate Canada Post for seeing the sins of some of its decisions. It was to close the post office in Marion Bridge in my constituency but we are now told that we do not have this as a Governor in Council. We are told that the Government is not going to close that particular post office. How many post offices in rural Canada is the Government going to close.

I think Members of Parliament ought to give continued serious consideration as has my colleague, our critic in this area, to the effect of the closure of rural post offices. I want to be among the many to congratulate him for his persistent and continued fight on behalf of those many Canadians who live in rural Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Who are the other ones?

Mr. Keeper: He has converted the Liberal Party.

Mr. Dingwall: The situation in which we find ourselves is that Canadians from differert walks of life have now stated their views on the importance of a Canada Post Corporation. I know on the other side of the coin there are problems in Canada Post. We know of the delays, if you will, in delivering the mail. We realize that the deficit of that Corporation is a concern to all Canadians. I think we also realize that that particular Crown corporation, when you compare it with others, is not as bad a performer as some government Members would lead us to believe. For instance, what was Canada Post created for? To gather and distribute mail, not to make profits for the federal Government as we know is the case with provincial liquor control boards and lottery commissions. That is not to suggest that governments, regardless of their political persuasion should not attempt to try to balance the cost and revenues. Should the citizens who I happen to represent in rural parts of my constituency always be the victims of such government cut-backs? Why can it not be other areas of government activity if that is the way the Government wishes to proceed?

Given the size of the operating budget, Canada Post is probably the public service which costs the Government the smallest amount of money, having given Canada Post only $184 milion in fiscal 1985-86 or 6.2 per cent of the Corporation's total budget. The Government has to recognize that no other Crown corporation of comparable size—60,000 employees—has in modern history achieved a comparable performance. I make that statement, not suggesting that the Government is entirely wrong for trying to balance the books. But I think it has to be said, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of Crown corporations which do not perform as adequately as Canada Post. For the sake of comparison, one could look at the performance of other Crown corporations such as CN or CBC. Our Public Broadcasting Corporation has an operating budget of $1.1 billion. The public purse contributes $881 million to that particular Crown corporation. The rest of the money is raised through advertising contracts let out by the Corporation.

One can argue, and argue effectively, that perhaps the goals and aspirations of the CBC, as opposed to the goals and aspirations of Canada Post, are different. They are serving different purposes, et cetera. I wish to make the point for for Members on both sides that when you look at the effectiveness of this Crown corporation it has not been as bad as Members opposite would lead us to believe.

In the case of Canada Post Corporation, the Government has never had to finance more than 12 per cent of the organization's budget since it became a Crown corporation on October 16, 1981. In fact, the federal contribution went from 10.3 per cent in 1982-83 to 6.2 per cent in 1985-86. There were increases in the federal contribution until the fiscal year 1984-85, the famous 12 per cent indicated earlier, and then the decrease with which we are now familiar.

That is the corporate side. In the several minutes I have remaining, I would like to touch on the human side of Canada Post. I talked about the importance of rural post offices to this country. I say very sincerely that they are important to the economic life in various communities. What is also important is the human aspect of post office closures and what those closures are doing to labour relations and morale in the post offices.

I have spoken to a number of union members who work at post offices in some of the major and not so major centres. I have not found a great desire on their part to go out on strike. Rather, I found that they have a desire to raise their families and to have job security. I do not find anything inherently wrong with that, but, as my colleague has pointed out as well, I do see signs of a Government that seems to want to seek out a confrontation with Canada Post. I hope that is not the case. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is shaking his head. I do not know if he is saying yes or no.

Mr. Lewis: Not the case.

Mr. Dingwall: He said it is not the case. I hope that is so.

We must remember that if there is a confrontation, the management of the corporation must assume its responsibility because it is a function of management that it set the example for the rank and file to follow.

I say to the Government that it is wrong to close rural post offices across Canada because of their importance to rural Canadian life. I would hope that the Government would curtail this confrontational attitude which seems to have besieged Canada Post Corporation and which I believe is affecting negatively the esprit de corps within the corporation as well as the effectiveness of the delivery of mail.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, on the question of rural mail delivery and post offices, two assurances have been given by the Minister responsible. First, he has assured us that no rural routes will be cut, but because of the organized attempt at scare tactics in much of this debate and in media discussion, that message is not getting through. Second, the Minister has made it clear that post offices in rural Canada will not be closed in an arbitrary manner. In cases of attrition, a post office might be re-evaluated with a view to improving the service to the people in the area. That in a nutshell is very much the position as I understand it put forward by the Minister on the important question of postal service.

What is reprehensible is that there have been organized attempts by special interest groups to instil in the Canadian public a fear that postal services will be cut off, that rural routes will be cut off any day and that post offices will be closed any day. The people fear that they will simply wake up some morning and there will be no mail delivery. Of course, that is far from the truth. It is a product of the imagination of special interest groups and serves no constructive purpose.

Canadians who are genuinely interested in mail service and in ensuring the continued high level of mail service deserve to know the facts. They deserve to be treated in an honest manner by all groups interested in participating in the debate on Canada's postal service.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made some comments that are worth exploring a little further. Quite frankly, if one could accept the Hon. Member's thesis in its entirety, one would then logically say that perhaps the rural post offices that have been closed will be reinstated. Second, one would ask who has caused this fear. He has indicated that it has been special interest groups.

Let us look at special interest groups. Say, perhaps, a letter carrier, an individual who runs a very small post office in a community or a contractor who delivers mail sees rural post offices being closed. Is there anything inherently wrong with those who may be affected or are likely to be affected seeking out others who may share a similar view and a similar purpose? Is there anything wrong with them coming together to discuss the importance of a particular rural post office and the delivery of the mail? I do not find anything inherently wrong with those sorts of interest groups.

Representatives of many interest groups have come to see me. Perhaps some of them were of different political persuasions, but nevertheless, they were concerned about the importance of rural post offices to their communities. I do not fault them one bit for that and I do not think Members of Parliament would want to fault them for it either intentionally or unintentionally.

In conclusion, it is nice to hear members of the Government say that members of the Opposition are only using fear tactics. If that were the case, I do not think union representatives, municipal leaders and farm federations would be demanding that the Government change the provisions of its corporate plan or, more recently, change some of the actions it has taken.

Rural post offices are very important. I believe that because of the fight members of the Opposition have put up over the last number of weeks and months, we have given this issue such a high profile that we have been able to force the Government to back-track on some of its decisions. I hope that will carry on into the weeks and months ahead as we progress into a new session of Parliament or indeed our next Government.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is full of poppycock, the whole can. He knows full well that he did not have anything to do with turning around the management plan of Canada Post. It was Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament in caucus who brought the matter of Canada Post's management plan to the attention of the Government, and it was members of the government Party who called for the review and brought the review forward. The Hon. Member is now trying to hitch-hike.

Almost the major part of his speech was devoted to trying to scare the glue off the stamps by pretending that every rural post office would close. He knows full well that he is factually wrong and this is nothing but rumours in the media. Therefore, will he stand in his place and give us the list of post offices in rural communities which he knows have been closed? Tell us what post offices have been closed.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have obviously struck a nerve. The normally sleepy—that is not fair. He is a dreamy Member of Parliament. I do not know why he would want viciously to question the intentions of the people of a community such as Marion Bridge, for one, which happens to have a Conservative MLA.

Mr. Lewis: There are a lot of them in your part of the country.

Mr. Dingwall: Not for long. You guys are seeing to that.

While the Hon. Member has this holier than thou attitude let us just for a moment assess the people of that particular community. As a Tory perhaps he will have the guts to go to Marion Bridge in Cape Breton before a public meeting and tell those people they have it all wrong if they believe their post office is going to close. The Hon. Member and his Government have been closing rural post offices.

Mr. Lewis: Name one.

Mr. Dingwall: The Government is talking about attrition in the Post Office. What happens when a person reaches 65 years of age? What does that add to the effectiveness of the delivery of mail? You would have to be completely and utterly stupid to conclude, as the Hon. Member has just concluded, that it would not have any appreciable effect on the delivery of mail.

The Hon. Member says with great fanfare that the Opposition is using fear tactics. He likes to emphasize that term. Perhaps he should answer the mail of senior citizens who wait patiently for their cheques, whether it be an income supplement or a cheque they may get from their provincial or municipal Government. There are literally hundreds of them who have written to me regarding that. They are fearful not because of what the Opposition or the media has said. They are fearful because of the Government's actions to date in closing post offices and the effect this is having on their lives.

The Hon. Member ought to come clean and tell it like it is. The Government is trying to close down rural post offices in those constituencies represented by Liberal and NDP Members of Parliament. That is what you are trying to do.

Mr. Benjamin: I'll be darned!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to enter the debate. I have listened with great interest to my hon. friend who just spoke. When we challenged him to name one post office closed by our Government he was unable to do so.

The motion condemns the Government for allowing deterioration of the postal service. It cites a host of misleading statements about postal service and management relations. I think it became very evident as the debate progressed that Hon. Members opposite have completely failed to prove their case, and I am pleased to have this opportunity to set the record straight. The House will know that the Liberal Party was the Government of the day when the majority of Canada Post problems really began. The Post Office came out of the 1960s and 1970s with a host of challenges. Its reputation for maintaining anything resembling a regular service was damaged by recurring strikes resulting from the Liberal Party's inability to handle labour negotiations. The rate of absenteeism was allowed by the Liberal Party during that time to go up to double the norm. The situation became more complex because the Liberals allowed the bargaining unit to be divided into some 30 separate parts. Settlements were costly and eroded the fundamental rights of management that were needed. That is why our Party argued for a Crown corporation to deliver the mail, and when the previous Government saw the light and brought in the Canada Post Act, our Party supported it. However, that did not mean we could cure the problems of the Post Office immediately.

First we had the 6 and 5 program of the Liberal Party. That put a halt to negotiations with the postal unions during the early part of the corporation's mandate. Two years passed without any meaningful bargaining between the parties. Under our Government there has been one agreement reached with all the bargaining units covering some 48,000 employees. That was the longest period of labour stability in the Post Office since 1968 when the unions were given the right to collective bargaining.

The opposition Parties are trying to suggest that there is going to be a postal strike. It is unfortunate, as was suggested earlier, that they are using scare tactics by saying we intend to force a strike. We are negotiating in good faith and progress has been made. Yet we realize there is a need for fundamental changes in the contract to deal with such issues as productivity, the efficient use of manpower and equipment, reduction of absenteeism, flexibility in operations, and a move towards competitive wage levels.

One thing we are trying to do, as opposed to the previous Government, is to focus the negotiations at the table and take them away from the media and the political arena. Under our Government the negotiations are being conducted by seasoned negotiators. The issue is not being politicized because, as far as we are concerned, it is an operational question, not a political question. We believe it is in the best interests of Canadians to let the Canada Post management and the unions negotiate their collective agreements with each other without political interference. Working together will bring about a reasonable settlement and a respectable and viable postal service. We believe the parties themselves can best set those parameters. We feel confident the Parties can reach a fair, effective and equitable collective agreement. We know that our side is bargaining in good faith and we feel that is happening on the other side, too.

I want to talk now for a minute about what Canada Post is supposed to be providing to Canadians, that is, a reliable, efficient and predictable postal service which will enable Canadians to receive properly prepared mail at a reasonable cost. We do not say that we will be doing it in exactly the same way as it has been done in the past. This is a big and sparsely populated country. The services vary according to the population density and the local conditions. For example, a downtown area may have the density to justify door-to-door delivery of mail by letter carrier. There is just not the density to justify the same service in smaller towns or rural areas. This does not mean that the people living there are second-class citizens. It means that the commitment to deliver the mail is met in different ways.

I represent the Town of Penetanguishene of 5,000 people, all of whom go to the post office to get their mail. They did so under the Liberals and are doing so under the Conservatives. That is no great hardship. There is, however, some criticism to be made of the previous Liberal administration because the post office is at the bottom of the hill. However, they go to get their mail.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we will continue to have a variety of ways of delivering the mail. To my colleagues from the big city who expect everything handed to them on a platter I say that that is too bad. In Penetanguishene they go to the post office and pick up their mail. We live in an era in which people are more mobile. The convenience store is the norm. I do not have any difficulty with people going somewhere to get their mail.

I want to talk for a minute about the supermailbox. Canada Post introduced the supermailbox to allow customers to receive mail and also to send it. It is suggested, and I agree, that the supermailbox is a big improvement over the green group mailboxes. When we say that we are going to eliminate the ugly green boxes over the next three years and replace them with the supermailbox, I am sure we will have the support of everybody in this House. I see my colleague, the critic for the NDP, smiling and nodding agreement. I am pleased to have his support on that. The corporation adds some 130,000 addresses each year as new homes and businesses are created. This is the best way of dealing with the problem. That is why Canada Post is developing new concepts and community mail centres.

I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, a letter which will be circulated to all Members of Parliament. It is dated May 15, 1987, and I have just had it translated. It is addressed to the Hon. Harvie Andre, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It says:

> Dear Harvie:
> Please record me as a strong supporter of Canada Post's super mail box program. I am completely opposed to any further increases in the price of stamps to provide universal door-to-door mail delivery. That money can be better spent on social programs or tax reductions.
> In my opinion super mail boxes should be provided, everywhere there is not door-to-door delivery, immediately! All green group boxes should be replaced immediately! They are a disgrace!
> In this day and age door-to-door delivery is as inefficient and impractical as door-to-door delivery of bread and milk. This is a day and age when more and more people are out of their homes each day. They pass by potential super mail box locations regularly. In fact, many of my constituents have never had door-to-door delivery. It is an unnecessary luxury, not an essential service.
> Therefore, count me as a super mail box supporter. In addition, when all the super mail boxes are installed for those who presently do not have any service, please write me another letter and I will support a complete conversion to super mail boxes for everyone.

That is where I stand on the question of supermailboxes.

I want to talk about some other things with regard to our present mail system.

Mr. Benjamin: Doug, can I have the last three minutes?

Mr. Lewis: The material I have is very important and, as you can see, I am driven to speak.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, old buddy.

Mr. Lewis: I want to talk about the present postal system. We believe that it does not meet the needs of the public. The post offices were built long ago to meet the demographic patterns of the day, those of another era. That is why in many cases the post office is not located where people do the rest of their shopping. There is no place to park and it is not open at the same convenient hours as stores.

We believe that Canada Post should use the convenience and expertise of private retail businesses to make its services and products more available to Canadians. Under the administration of the Liberal Party you could buy postage stamps only at the post office. Through franchising we will make it as easy for Canadians to buy stamps as it is to buy cigarettes and lottery tickets. I do not know why the NDP does not support that concept of supplying a service to Canadians.

My hon. colleague shakes his head when I suggest that we will make it easy for Canadians to buy stamps. Why not? What is the matter with the storeowner who sells a lottery ticket also selling a stamp? What is the big mystery about stamps? Why can Canadians not buy them anywhere they want? The New Democratic Party does not want people to be able to buy stamps anywhere.

Let it be shown on the record that the Conservative Party wants to make it easy for Canadians to buy stamps. We believe it is a commodity which one should be able to purchase anywhere. That is the reason behind our policy for franchising Post Office operations. We want to make it easy to buy stamps, register letters and send parcels. It is a tragedy that the NDP is against this.

There has been some suggestion that we are amalgamating post offices and eliminating obvious redundancies. That is not a new matter. It has happened in the past and will happen in the future. We want to make the system more efficient. In the future we will not be building buildings and hiring people to provide access. We will instead use the modern tool of today, the supermailbox. We will consult with people when we amalgamate post offices, as my hon. colleague suggested. We are committed to a reliable service. We are committed to delivering the mail.

The vast majority of the mail is delivered on time. However, the percentage of failures spread over the number of people affected can certainly make it look as though there were some problems. We admit that this service is not as reliable as we want it to be and was not as reliable as we wanted it to be in the past. Our administration is reviewing the system and procedures.

I regret that my time is up because there is so much more I wanted to say about the remarkable record of the Government in dealing with Canada Post. I did want to have an opportunity to answer questions from my hon. colleague, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Adjournment Debate

NATIONAL REVENUE—ADMINISTRATION OF FARM FUEL TAX REBATE PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) on April 7, 1987, regarding the administration of the farm fuel tax rebate. At that time the Minister of National Revenue assured the House that he and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had been discussing the possibility of improvement to the administrative efficiency of the program. He sought ways in which the program could be made even more beneficial.

The program is already very beneficial to the producers. It is not, however, particularly beneficial to the many bulk fuel dealers who are forced to carry the delivery costs of this program. The farm fuel tax relief program reduces the burden of farm input costs. It is one of the ways by which the Government is helping Canadian farmers fight the cost price squeeze. The rebates on farm gasoline and diesel fuel effectively offset the federal sales and excise tax on these products. These rebates have saved Canadian farmers more than $100 million in 1986-87.

The problem with the farm fuel tax relief program is not with the treatment of the consumer, but with the application of the program to bulk fuel dealers. There are essentially two kinds of bulk fuel dealers. There is the commission agent who holds his inventory on consignment. Thus, the inventory he holds is free of any sales tax. There is the independent who purchases his fuel from a manufacturer and pays sales tax on the purchased fuel. His inventory is tax paid.

All dealers can sell fuel to the primary producers free of tax. However, the crux of the matter is that the independent bulk fuel dealers have to apply to the federal Government to secure a refund of the sales tax which they have already paid on their inventory at the time of purchase from the refiner. The independent has to secure a refund, but the commission agent does not. In other words, the independent bulk fuel dealer must carry some of the Government's cost of delivering this program while the commission agent does not have to do so.

What is the cost to the independent dealer? It is the interest foregone for various periods on almost $29 million in tax rebates between December 1, 1984 and December 31, 1986. It should be noted that the independent dealer has no choice but to claim rebates on behalf of their customers. While this is an elective provision of the program in theory, the real world gives the independent fuel dealer no other choice. If he does not collect the rebate on behalf of his customer, he loses the customer.

It is worth noting that any delay between the time of sale by the independent bulk fuel dealer to his customers and the time he actually receives reimbursement of that tax upon application to the federal Government is an inappropriate cost to the dealer to deliver the federal Government program. Furthermore, any delay puts the independent dealer at a competitive disadvantage to the commission agent. In other words, the Government program, which should treat all dealers the same way, in fact treats one group more favourably than the other. I remind the House that most dealers are one person or at least one family operations.

I endorse the recommendation of over a year ago of either a provision for a cash advance or a float to dealers; or the payment of interest to dealers on the tax rebate owing by the Government.

It is worth noting that the turnaround time on refunds has improved from the 60 days that it was at the beginning of the program to about 40 days, as I am told by dealers. However, I am told by bulk fuel dealers that they often have to apply for the current month's refund when they have not as yet received the previous month's refund. I submit that this is too much of a cost for those independent bulk fuel dealers to bear.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government as you know has been financially helping Canadian farmers through a number of important programs. This is done among others through the Canadian Special Grains Program under the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

As far as consumer taxes are concerned, the fuel tax rebate is one of the most significant. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that it was implemented soon after the Conservative Government was elected in 1984. It enables farmers and other primary producers to recoup the federal sales tax levied on fuels used for production purposes.

Practically all compensation programs entail certain management costs for the beneficiaries and the suppliers. Under the present system, it is not easy to provide help to one selected group of final users when the tax is levied on manufacturers' sales. In those circumstances, a rebate application must be filled to obtain the benefit of the program. Farmers can fill their applications themselves. The application may also be submitted either by the retailer who sells fuel to farmers eligible to the rebate, or the refinery itself.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that many farm fuel retailers enjoy extended payment terms to refiners. I have also learned that currently, Revenue Canada is sending rebate cheques to retailers 22 to 25 days after duly completed forms are received. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it may happen that a retailer receive his tax rebate before he pays his fuel supplier, and perhaps even before his farmer client pays for the fuel.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, all applications are not processed as rapidly because of delays due to clerical errors or because the user's status has to be checked. However, I am convinced that most of them are processed within a very short time.

If the Hon. Member is aware of cases where retailers experienced undue delays, I would ask him to inform Revenue Canada in order that the latter may take the necessary steps. I believe the Minister of Revenue to date obtained good results as to sending rebates to retailers.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, the cash advances recommended by the Hon. Member do not seem to be warranted for the time being.

AIRPORTS—PROVISION OF FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES—DEPARTMENT'S REGULATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, this evening my question on the Adjournment Debate is related to a matter of grave concern to many people. First, it concerns the travelling public.

My question relates to safety and the way in which our fire-fighters and those who work to deal with crashes of aircraft cope with emergencies at our airports. My question tonight relates to the way in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has evaded his responsibilities in dealing with the protection of the public when it travels in aircraft and the protection of flight crews which have the responsibility to fly aircraft into our airports—in fact, it relates to the safety of all concerned.

The Minister was asked by myself on March 31 about this matter. At that time I brought to his attention the fact that the Government is trying to save a measly $1 million by cutting back from seven to five the required number of people who should be on hand to carry out fire-fighting, safety and crash emergency work.

A further point I made was that the number of personnel hours has actually been reduced and that, in fact, some of our airports have acted at times, from midnight until 8 a.m. on one occasion in the case of Regina airport, with no fire-fighters at all at the site while very large planes arrived. This lack of concern about the well-being of the public is absolutely scandalous.

I should like to ask again the question which the Minister evaded. Why is he trying to save $1 million by cutting back on safety? In fact the Canadian Association of Airline Pilots brought to his attention that they do not even feel safe in landing airplanes in Canadian airports in light of the developments resulting from a change in air transport safety policy by the Minister. He has cut back the number of dollars available to bring in people when crews are short staffed because of illness or whatever. There is no money to bring in people under those circumstances.

We also see that the handicapped are gravely endangered by the new policy. We hear pious words from the Government about its concern in the area of transportation for the handicapped. In fact, some dollars have been put into the effort. On the other hand, they have been nullified and the lives of the handicapped are endangered.

The minimum number of people required to put out a fire is five people with five trucks. We know perfectly well that four trucks and one person being used to direct is not adequate. The job of fire-fighters is not only to put out the fire or to make a passageway so that people can escape from the airplane. We also know that they have an obligation to go on board the airplane if necessary to save passengers. For example, if the crew inside is overcome, it is the task of fire-fighters to save the people on board. We know perfectly well that four trucks with four drivers and one person directing is an impossible situation.

Contrary to what the Minister tried to lead us to believe, the task is not merely to clear a passageway. One primary task of fire-fighters is to go aboard airplanes to save lives. We certainly know that handicapped people need extra help. Also we know that the trucks have rescue equipment with which to save people, not merely put out fires. The purpose of rescue squads is to save lives. One would in fact think that it would be the primary concern.

The reply of the Minister of Transport was totally inadequate. In fact, he played with words in order to confuse us rather than be forthcoming about the fact that his changes in the regulations have greatly endangered the public, the people who are flying airplanes, and in fact fire-fighters themselves, by reducing their ability to call in people when someone has reported sick to bring their staff up to full strength or to call in people to fill in for other part-time workers.

About half the time we find airports manned by the minimum number according to the statistics given by CALPA. Sometimes they do not even have the required number because of problems such as illness or other reasons.

I would suggest that the Minister was playing with words when he suggested that there was no reduction in staff because there are 657 full-time employees. However, all provisions for on-call staff are obliterated. Most airports work with a minimum number now. Therefore, with no on-call staff available, there is in fact a reduction in staff.

This morning Transport Canada staged a mock airport disaster at Pearson International Airport. Thousands of dollars were spent on videos to show how a disaster would be taken care of. First, there were some hitches. Second, and contrary to what the Minister of Transport said, what actually happened was that the Mississauga fire-fighters were at the airport standing by, on hand, whereas in reality it takes from 15 minutes to half an hour for auxiliary fire-fighters from Mississauga to reach the Pearson International Airport. It was a fraud, and the Minister of Transport should own up to it.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). It provides me with an opportunity to speak on this very important issue. This Government has repeatedly stated that safety is our highest priority. That position has not and will not change.

• (1815)

Fire protection standards at Canadian international airports are based on the recommended practices of the International Civil Aviation Organization, otherwise known as ICAO, which has been accepted by international airports throughout the world. Canada is one of the few countries in the world that applies these same high standards at domestic airports across the country. The average number of fire-fighters at Canadian airports is 25 per cent higher than the United States average. Twice as much per passenger is spent on fire-fighting and rescue services at Canadian airports as in the United States.

If the criteria for provision of fire protection services currently used in Australia were applied in Canada, then only 41 airports would qualify for fire-fighting service as compared to the more than 100 airports currently receiving this service.

The primary role of crash fire rescue, CFR, is to prevent, control or extinguish fire involving or adjacent to an aircraft for the purpose of protecting the aircraft fuselage and providing an escape area for its occupants. Once the primary task is done, the CFR crew assist in the evacuation of occupants from the aircraft.

CFR services are only part of the over-all response to an aircraft accident. Support personnel are necessary to mount an effective response to a major accident in order to provide the evacuation of passengers and medical treatment to the injured.

Each support team has specific assigned roles and is comprised of airport-based personnel and externally based emergency services.

Mr. de Corneille: Not true.

Mr. Towers: The prime function of CFR services continues to be preventing, controlling and extinguishing fire situations. I would point out to the Hon. Member opposite that this is not the case in the United States and other countries where fire-fighters are required to perform other duties, such as the rescue component, security and paramedic and ambulance services.

The important role played by, for example, airline flight crews, ground crews, airport fire-fighters, other airport workers, fire and police services in adjacent communities, ambulance services and medical staff in responding to an airport emergency, cannot be overstated. Mobilization of this extensive support network is necessary to mount an effective response to a major accident. Canadian airport personnel devote a great deal of time and effort to the development and testing of emergency plans at airports in order to ensure a full and effective response should an accident occur.

In recent years, the older equipment has been replaced with modern equipment and fire trucks that can be operated to capacity by one person. This gives more flexibility in deploying the full fire-fighting team. We now have 74 new crash vehicles on order to meet replacement needs and additional new requirements at airports. There will be increases and decreases in staff and equipment at airports from time to time as changes occur in airline services and as new technology and equipment becomes available.

I am pleased to confirm the good work being done by members of the airport fire-fighting teams in providing CFR services to the travelling public. This valuable service is being performed in a consistently excellent manner, bringing credit to those involved.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS—DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 of this year I asked the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie) the following question:

> Is the Minister aware that thousands of people in such cities as Calgary await processing of their citizenship applications, meanwhile having lost the right to travel using the passports of their countries of origin?

The Secretary of State of Canada replied:

> yes, I am aware of the problem. We are trying to address it with existing resources.

I then followed with the question:

> How soon does the Minister expect to appoint enough citizenship judges to ensure that people will not be kept waiting months to receive Canadian citizenship during this fortieth anniversary of the Citizenship Act?

To that question, the Secretary of State responded:

> the report from Dr. Sutherland is now available. In fact, I received it on Friday afternoon. I hope to make appointments by mid-May.

The matter of having enough citizenship court judges to ensure that persons who wish to become Canadian citizens can do so expeditiously is an important matter to every person involved in the process. As I suggested in one of my questions, it involves the specific hardship faced by those persons who have applied for Canadian citizenship and have to wait many months, living in uncertainty because they have lost their right to travel on the passports of the countries from which they came. If anything were to require their return, if compassionate circumstances were to arise, they might find themselves in very real difficulty. That human aspect of the situation calls on the Government to deal expeditiously with this matter.

I would like to suggest that the problem that has arisen is symptomatic of other difficulties the Government has created and that the failure in this area is typical of the slowness of action in other areas, such as the revision of the Official Languages Act and the presentation of amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which have been promised for many, many months and for which we continue to wait. It is symptomatic of the failure of the Department headed by Captain Canada, as he himself likes to be called when speaking to students, to focus on the shortcomings in the appointments of Citizenship Court judges by the Secretary of State. I say this with all the more energy because this is after all the fortieth anniversary of the Citizenship Act.

The Secretary of State found occasion to recognize that anniversary in the House, and on that day I responded to him. As well, he found another occasion to announce the Prime Minister's declaration of the week of April 12 to 18 as the first annual Citizenship Week. With these realities before us, what can we say about the failure to ensure that the system of Citizenship Court judges is adequate to the need in the growing cities of Canada?

Citizenship Courts themselves are an essential experience for those who want to become Canadians. It should be a good experience. Yet, because of the delays that have arisen for some who will soon be fellow citizens, they are experiencing just the opposite of the kind of good government they should experience. This experience of inefficiency was forcefully presented to me in Calgary where 4,000 persons have applied and some have waited for as long as eight months. This really underscores the urgency of this matter.

I do not suppose all of these potential Canadians realize that the problem has to do with the patronage system which prevails in the Canadian Government. They do not realize that in the past months, the persons who were appointed by the previous Government have come to the end of their terms and this Government, through the well established system of patronage that exists, has allowed appointments to lapse without acting expeditiously to appoint new persons. This, of course, leaves us wondering about the patronage system which operates through the Prime Minister's Office and the Cabinet. This is, in fact, a little lesson in the nuts and bolts of the Canadian political system that is being experienced by these soon to be fellow citizens.

Since the last weeks of 1986, there has been a further difficulty in that some of the persons who had been appointed, and specifically two judges, came into controversy because of the kinds of questions they asked and the kinds of conversations they carried on with applicants for Canadian citizenship. I recognize that that has probably complicated things for Captain Canada and, I suppose, has justified some investigation of the situation.

Clearly, the process of examining applicants for Canadian citizenship should be carried out in a careful, impartial and dispassionate manner. I always appreciate the opportunity to take part in Citizenship Courts in Thunder Bay. In this way they present Canadian life and Canadian Government in the best possible way.

I want to note that the Secretary of State of Canada was quoted last month in The Globe and Mail as saying that good government makes good politics. All we have to do is practice good government. I could not agree more. Applicants for Canadian citizenship are waiting for just that kind of demonstration. We have not had any judges appointed since the middle of May. In fact, there has been only one renewal and one new appointment over the last five months.

If I were to provide some further advice to the Minister concerning Citizenship Court judges, I would commend to him a phrase he himself used, something that was said by one of our Fathers of Confederation, Thomas Darcy McGee. He said more than 100 years ago that we should lift ourselves to the level of our destinies, rise above all low limitations and narrow circumscriptions, cultivate that true catholicity of spirit which embraces all creeds, all classes and all races, in order to make of our boundless province, so rich in known and unknown resources, a great new northern nation. That is the spirit in which Citizenship Court judges should be acting, and I trust that the Minister will shortly be appointing judges who can fulfil their functions in just that spirit.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State understands quite well the concern expressed by my colleague the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) about the appointment of citizenship judges. He even shares this concern and has already taken steps to address the problem.

On the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of Canadian Citizenship to which my honourable friend referred a while ago, the Minister devoted quite a lot of time and attention to the whole issue of citizenship and, in particular, to the significance of the privileges and responsibilities which this status involves. The Minister will table shortly for discussion purposes a major document on the citizenship issue. The purpose of all this is to update our Citizenship Act and strenghten it to emphasize the rights as well as the challenges attached to our status as Canadian citizens.

This new direction in the legislation must take into account a number of related issues. We have made every effort to improve the whole system involved in granting citizenship, which implies that we have also had to review the citizenship judge appointment process.

Last January, the Minister entrusted the Chief Citizenship Judge, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilcock, with a mandate to review this process. In turn, Judge Wilcock asked Carleton University Professor Sharon Sutherland to review the Citizenship Court system and submit a report.

This report has just been submitted to the Minister who will soon take further action. To us, this question seemed too important to be dealt with in a hurry, before we had the study and recommendations of Professor Sutherland. Now that the Minister has had time to review this report, he wants to move swiftly. He expects to be able to proceed with new appointments of Citizenship Court judges very shortly.

Last week, a judge of the Edmonton Citizenship Court held hearings in Calgary. Hearings pertaining to applications received at the end of January and beginning of February are being scheduled, and this delay of some four months is reasonable when one considers that the normal time frame is four to six months. I want to assure the House that urgent requests from people who need a Canadian passport to travel abroad, for example, are processed in priority.

As I mentioned, if there is a temporary backlog in a court, judges from other courts come and help their colleagues. The problems encountered these last few months are due to the thorough review undertaken by the Minister, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that a more effective and more efficient system will result from it for the benefit of the thousands of individuals who will wish to join our great country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND
President of the French Republic to Both Houses of Parliament in the House of Commons Chamber, Ottawa
Monday, May 25, 1987

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate, and Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please.

Mr. President, on behalf of all Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, we welcome you to the Parliament of Canada.

• (1510)

[English]

We are honoured to have you in our midst.

I now invite the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. President, it is a profoundly moving occasion for me to introduce you to the Members of our House of Commons and Senate. Your presence in this Chamber marks a highpoint in relations between our two countries.

The visit you embark upon today is without doubt inspired by friendship. Yet we know it must be viewed equally in a broader context, one that embraces both continuity and change.

Your purpose in coming here was to affirm the enduring ties that bind us: language and culture, our allegiance to the values of freedom and democracy, and the solidarity that has drawn us closer in times of crisis.

From the trenches of Picardy in one war, to the beaches of Normandy in the next, thousands of Canadians have made the ultimate sacrifice for liberty.

As they are remembered in the hearts of their fellow citizens in Canada, so is their memory honoured in France, from Vimy Ridge to Beny-sur-Mer. One is a famed memorial, and the other a simple country cemetery where French and English-speaking Canadians, officers and enlisted men, without distinction as to language or rank, have found a final resting place together.

Nowhere is our nation more united, Mr. President, that in such small corners of yours. In rendering homage at our National Cenotaph this morning, you have not only honoured all Canadians, but also the memory of those brave souls.

The durability of France, the constancy and creativity she represents, are personified today in one of her most distinguished sons, a great President who has our respect and admiration and whom we welcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Yet at the same time, your official visit comes amid the irreversible tide that sweeps all shores and demands a new perspective.

[English]

Our country has taken decisive steps in the course of an intensive but necessary evolution which has made us more aware of our own identity.

We have summoned the national resolve and the clarity of purpose to face the vital challenges of our time. We resolved them in our own country, among ourselves, as we should, in the full exercise of our sovereignty. In so doing, we have found the way to a new national consensus. Today, Canada is following that path with determination, fully aware of our responsibility toward the future.

Twenty years after General de Gaulle's visit, you will find, Mr. President, a Canada at peace with itself, aware of its diversity and resolved to recognize it with respect, tolerance and generosity. In the week ahead you will cross a country that spans a continent, a nation confident of its role and eager to contribute its share to world peace and justice.

For the first time a President of the French Republic will officially travel across Canada to the heartland of the Prairies and then on to a great metropolitan area in Toronto. For the first time he will bear France's greetings to Canadians of Acadian descent after renewing the special cordial ties between his country and Quebec.

Today we turn a new page in the history of the relationship between France and Canada. We cannot change the past, but we can shape our future. What matters is the chapter we write together. It holds great promise for political rapprochement, industrial co-operation and increased trade.

Mr. President, on behalf of all Canadians may I tell you that your presence here today will contribute enormously to the renewal of that relationship.

[Translation]

Another way to fulfil these hopes is by achieving francophone solidarity. History will credit you as the artisan of the Paris Summit, where heads of state and government from some 40 countries, and all five continents, gathered last year.

The agreement we reached with the Governments of Quebec and New Brunswick, as you know, removed the final obstacle to building a new solidarity within the French-speaking community. The Government of Canada eagerly joined this worthy venture.

The interests of Canada as a whole, embracing both French and English cultures, demand that we foster our participation in La Francophonie and the Commonwealth. This double window on the world makes Canada the meeting-place of two of the great currents of international relations.

As a manifestation of our commitment to La Francophonie, it was our desire that Quebec City be the site of the second Summit this coming September. Let no one overlook the significance of holding the Summit on the banks of the St. Lawrence. It is a clear and serene recognition of Canada's, and Quebec's, role in the francophone family.

We desire to fulfil this vocation as equals, following an approach focused on modern and concrete objectives.

Other, equally pressing considerations, warrant and require closer ties with France.

These stem from Europe's importance in international politics and economics. As an inexhaustible reservoir of human resources and skills, and as an enlarged community, Europe plays a pre-eminent role in world affairs.

How could anyone overlook the unified domestic market of 320 million consumers the Europe of the 90s will become? And how could anyone not see that France lies at the very heart of the grand design of Europe?

[English]

That is another reason why we are working to develop even closer ties with your country.

But our co-operation must be nourished with substance, and must develop around initiatives that touch the basic interests of our two nations. We must expand the scope of our bilateral activities, involving scientists, for example, and business leaders. Above all, we must never relent in the persistence of our efforts. For we are only at the beginning of the road, which is as long as the successes awaiting us can be far-reaching.

And there shall be problems, perhaps some serious problems, along the way. The issue of fishing quotas and the fixing of the boundary line for the offshore limits around St. Pierre and Miquelon constitute a test of our political maturity and ability to resolve our differences through the promotion of our mutual interests. France must surely be aware of the difficult nature of this controversy, and of the seriousness of the issues it raises for our fishermen in Atlantic Canada, as well as for Canadian sovereignty. I know, Mr. President, you share my view that this matter be resolved fairly.

[Translation]

Your stay among us comes at a moment in history when the dynamics of the situation and our own aims have converged. We have before us a wide field of responsibilities. We have before us opportunities which history, and our own peoples, will not permit to slip away.

The time has come not only for awareness, but for action; not only to renew promises, but to fulfil them; not only to evoke our roots, but to make them bear fruit.

We Canadians cherish our unique heritage from France, her elan, her culture, her humanism. We cherish her as one of our two mother countries.

Loyal as they are to the values of the past, we are also mindful of the realities of tomorrow. That is why Canadians choose to go forward together, with you, with France.

Mr. President, I speak on behalf of all Canadians in saying how happy and delighted we are to have you among us.

All week long, Mrs. Mitterrand and you will receive the special welcome we reserve for our fondest friend. At every stop, you will be reminded that Canada is, for France, a land of friendship and brotherhood.

Members of the House, distinguished Senators, I am honoured to present to you the President of the French Republic, Mr. François Mitterrand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. François Mitterrand (President of the Republic of France): Speakers of the House and the Senate, Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen. I am moved by the tribute I have just received on behalf of France and I am honoured by this most cordial welcome to your Parliament.

After meeting this morning with Her Excellency the Governor General and with the Prime Minister, I now have the privilege of speaking to you, ladies and gentlemen, the elected representatives of Canada and guardians of the institutions that have made your country one of great democracies of the world.

Actually, I was a parliamentarian in my country for 35 years, in the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. Since 1981, however, when I was elected President of the Republic, I have had to leave all that behind me. I do not have the right to enter the very precincts where I worked for so many years and where, in fact, I seldom received such a unanimous welcome. Sometimes there are feelings of regret, and when visiting one of our friends, as I am doing today, I like to compensate. I take a personal pleasure, as well as pride, in representing my country before assemblies like yours, and I want to thank you once again.

Perhaps I may comment, first of all, that Canada's political structures, that your country's economic and social framework and the positions you defend at the international level, reflect a focus on common ideals.

France and Canada share the conviction that they cannot conceive of a future without pluralism, without alternating majorities, the unrestricted expression of divergent views, and the rule of a majority that respects minorities.

On behalf of the French people, I would like to transmit to you, and through you to every man, woman and child in this country, the feelings of friendship of our country for yours. The message that France sends you is one of friendship and solidarity. And I could repeat, word for word, what was said by the Prime Minister, and I thank him for saying them. Because of the kind of society we have chosen, and notwithstanding differences that are grounded in our respective history, geography and customs, dialogue is second nature to us.

Indeed, our past has made the relationship between Canada and France a rather special one. Since the beginning of modern history and the time of the great explorers, the French have played a major role in the life of your country. The descendants of those who came here originally, who today number several million, represent over one quarter of the population and occupy a unique and inimitable position alongside their English-speaking compatriots. We see communities that are dynamic and enterprising, faithful to their traditions but also very much of this modern day and age and this continent. Unique and, at the same time, universal, they contribute to the rich diversity of this great country of yours. Canada's bicultural dimension brings joy to the heart of every Frenchman, and to my own, I can assure you, and perhaps I may also say a few words, although there would be so much to say, about the sacrifices made by your fathers and brothers in two World Wars. Whatever their origins and wherever they had their homes, whatever opposing sides they may have taken in the past, they were now fighting on the same side, with us. Would victory and freedom have been possible without the presence of these young men from all over the world, and particularly from Canada?

Prime Minister, you mentioned several historic places where the memory, suffering and death of so many are mourned, and where tragedy is still present in the hearts of so many mourners. It was the price we had to pay for freedom.

Ladies and gentlemen, we owe so much to your soldiers, and I would like to take this opportunity, at this solemn moment, to address these words to your compatriots who are listening to us now.

If I may, I would like to comment on some of the major issues of the day. My choice will be rather arbitrary, because otherwise there would be too much to say, and too little time to say it.

The world is in a crisis. Some people would say it always is. In any case, we have the feeling that the crisis we are experiencing today may be worse than at other times in our history. Our problems are similar. We have to fight unemployment. We have to create a new environment to create new jobs and to prepare our countries for the next century. We must intensify all forms of intellectual creativity, we must intensify research and increase the capabilities of our intellects from childhood onward, so that we will finally have the means to master the secrets of the material world and thus enhance the human condition. We have to modernize our production equipment. We have to make our economies more competitive, since we are largely dependant on external trade. We have every interest in further developing trade between our countries. One imagines that Canada's natural tendency would probably be to trade mainly with the United States of America, while ours would be to trade with our Common Market neighbours. Nevertheless, I think that considering the modest level of our trade relationship, our two countries could do far more and far better. I hope that during this visit, we will be able to explore some possibilities for the future.

In fact, various agreements concluded in recent years have provided for increased co-operation in space, oceanology, oceanography and biotechnology, all of which involve new procedures that will stimulate industrial innovation. In January, we agreed to facilitate relations between our small business groups. Although relations between our scientists, industrialists and business people are little developed, there has been definite progress, both bilaterally—I am thinking of the SPOT satellite—and in connection with multilateral projects, and I refer to the European Eureka project. When our interests clash, on occasion, as on the fisheries issue, I believe that with a little common sense, concern for the law and the political will to settle disputes, we should be able to resolve these problems.

Ladies and gentlemen, at this point I would like to comment briefly on the world economic situation. The problems have been identified, and a response is of the essence. Prime Minister, in two weeks or so, we will be meeting again in Venice, where we shall have to deal with some of the problems that are of international concern.

I want to stress the urgency of some of the decisions to be made, and on an occasion that would seem entirely appropriate for discussing, in full recognition of the sovereignty and equality of our respective countries, the major problems we share, I would like to take this opportunity to outline four principles.

The first of these directions would be for countries with a trade surplus to use whatever leeway they have to boost their own growth and stimulate the growth of other countries.

The second direction would be to promote the recovery of the international monetary system by taking steps to stabilize exchange rates with respect to mutually agreed reference zones, to lower interest rates and to better co-ordinate efforts to control market speculation.

Thirdly, we should try to remove protectionist barriers in every area, since protectionism is present everywhere, in the services, industrial and agricultural sectors. I know that discussions are under way with your neighbour, the United States of America, a special free trade agreement within the framework of GATT and along common rules. I wish you the best of success, granted that we have accepted common rules that apply to you as to ourselves. However, let us be open on this. Let us quit fighting over deadlocks between Europe and the American continent or Third World countries. Let us admit that protectionism is found in each and every country, and that what may be left for us to do is to compare and identify where protectionism is openly allowed in legislation or regulation, where it hides in hypocritical fashion behind the customs and traditions, where it takes the form of imperialist action, or simply where it so often appears by way of laisser-faire when leaders responsible for managing the world should in fact strive to reach an agreement for the well-being of all nations.

I have mentioned those three directions, but what I have is foremost in my mind at the present time is the fourth one. It is a concern with the future of the Third World, of developing countries, and especially with the problem of indebtedness. One may consider postponing the date of payment, extending repayment schedules for the most indebted countries. One could think of designing more generous procedures in the Club of Paris. But in my opinion, at the present time, we should mostly consider, without excluding any other solution, recycling on a multilateral basis part of the financial surpluses of those countries which do have surpluses. We should think of Japan, we might after all think of Germany too. Whoever reaches that stage, enjoys a fairly prosperous economy, should become very clearly aware of a new stage of responsibility. We would then increase the means of the international monetary fund. We would increase the capital of the World Bank and help those countries of the Third World which are among the poorest get through this tragedy which will eventually hurt the whole world.

I frequently tell my fellow citizens that there are probably two major war threats for the next century: The atomic bomb or nuclear war with unending confrontations leading to a competition that may reach a paroxysmal stage, but also the widening of the gap between rich and poor countries. Both our countries, though, are among the few which have decided to assign a significant percentage of their national product to the co-operation with the least developed countries.

I am aware of the increasing share of the Canadian revenue which is set aside every year throughout the world, through private initiatives or through the actions of public agencies, to fight under-development, and I thank you for that. I thank you, for that cause has been a deep, longstanding concern of mine.

As for France, it has significantly increased its assistance, especially in the past six years, and is intending to reach as quickly as possible, as recommended by international institutions, the figure of .7 per cent of its Gross National Product to be used for development assistance.

But what is the reality we are facing today? Southern countries or so-called southern countries are hurt more than others by the slowing down of international growth, by the dramatic fall in the prices of raw materials, and by the burden of their debt.

Is it normal that the poor countries should be forced to refund every year more than the new amounts getting in? Can they ask their populations to produce more and more all the time while receiving an ever smaller share of the product of their work?

Remember when a procedure was set up in the early 1980s, when some countries in the Middle East had considerable surplus capital. Let us do it again, let us follow that procedure. Since the end of the Second World War, those circumstances have occurred several times. I hope your country as well as mine are willing to take a leadership role in this vast initiative which will lead responsible, industrial, advanced nations to understand that there lies the answer for themselves as well as for others to the great question mark of our time.

Of course, ladies and gentlemen, the future of our planet does not only depend on the capabilities of states to ensure an adequate economic growth for the world. That will not solve all the needs of mankind. That future depends even more immediately on their capacity to preserve peace.

I made some comments on the organization of markets, on the fight against monetary disorder, on the necessary assistance to the development of poor countries. But I would like to say a few words about peace.

Having been invaded three times in 75 years, France is very much aware of the drama this represents, I can assure you. I referred to the help of Canadian soldiers. I lived through World War II myself, and I was born during World War I. How could my generation not be essentially marked by this nearly cyclical return to confrontations which, in the case of Europe alone, were the signal of a tragic civil war from which we are barely beginning to recover!

Shortly after the second conflict my country became a signatory to the Charter of the United Nations and its underlying principles. As a permanent member of the Security Council, France never hesitated to support the international organization. She helped it fulfil its duties, she denounced encroachments upon the rights of nations and individuals, she contributed as required to the peacekeeping operations. On behalf of the United Nations, France is still present on sites where the strongest passions clash.

The fact remains that the ratio of military strength, especially between the two most powerful nations, has led to massive stocks of weapons and a dangerous imbalance.

Despite efforts, the disarmament negotiations have not made it possible to limit, let alone reduce the massive strategic arsenals of the United States of America and of the Soviet Union.

The so-called ABM treaty, to this day the only major arms control agreement still in force, is the object of vigourous debates which make us fear it may be weakened and even disappear.

Only the negotiations on so-called intermediate nuclear weapons, which do not cross the Atlantic but can reach all European countries, now show some signs of progress. And I say loudly from this podium that France hopes they will be successful. Let us not forget, incidentally, that the object of disarmament is to increase rather than to decrease security, to maintain rather than to compromise balances.

Our hope is that an intermediate nuclear weapons agreement is only one step towards disarmament, a step linked with the strategic disarmament on one hand—some 11,000 nuclear warheads in the Soviet Union, 12,000 to 13,000 in the United States of America—a step linked with the strategic disarmanent on one hand and, on the other, with the disarmament of conventional forces, chemical weapons, or any other kind of weapon of whatever range which may lead to confrontation. All this within the limits of control, of flawless verification, that is to say of full respect for previous commitments.

France, as you know, is not party to the ongoing negotiations. She was not asked to sit at the disarmament negotiation table. Had she been asked, she would have refused. Indeed, as long as the two major powers remain at the stage where they are now, with the number of nuclear warheads I just mentioned, before asking others, particularly Great Britain or France which do have weapons, of course, but barely one hundred or two hundreds, great progress would have to be accomplished. Such is the theme I developed before the United Nations in 1983. But my country, like her neighbours, simply has to be concerned over a conflict or over the ongoing disarmament negotiations. And if we aim to preserve our independent strategy of nuclear deterrent, upon which we believe our security rests, we want to add our efforts to those of others to reduce tensions.

Ladies and gentlemen, France lies only a few hundred kilometres from the world on the other side of this Europe cut in half, from Teheran to Yalta. With her immediate neighbours she founded a community, six at first, a specifically continental group, then nine, ten, twelve. This Europe, we would like it to be able to organize its economy, 320 million people, a wider market than that of the United States of America, much wider than that of the Soviet Union, a body of technical and scientific competence, larger than Japan's, a historical capacity not to dominate—for henceforth such words cannot apply to the world's future—but to guarantee the presence of each of the states and nations of which it is made up.

Such is our first choice, our first will, our first objective. We want to build Europe and we are dedicated to this end. We are confronted with many obstacles. I was a young parliamentarian in 1948, nearly 40 years ago, attending the first European Congress, three years after the end of World War II, a congress chaired by Churchill. The Germans were there, and in each of our families grief, sorrow, separation and suffering still marked our mind when they had not marked our body. And yet a few of us were seeking reconciliation, to begin by France-Germany reconciliation, to help the other nations of Europe. Building Europe as we are doing today is not to dream nor to project onto an unknown horizon the too well known difficulties we are experiencing today. Europe is our main objective, but not the only one. The other, as I have already said, is to contribute to world harmony, to make sure that France, a country which maintained a presence for so long in Africa and elsewhere, as it still does, but differently, uses every opportunity to bring cultures closer together. Hence the importance of La Francophonie.

By the way, I am coming back shortly to your country to take part in the second Francophone Summit, in Quebec City, next September. You will have seen much of me within two seasons, but I am not complaining and I am not expecting to return the following year to Ottawa, where the Seven will meet again according to the agreed schedule, under a somewhat systematic moira which makes us meet year after year, always to face the very same problems, but in different locations.

Europe, the francophone brotherhood, universal enlightenment through peace and development, all these issues bring me to say that I could not conclude these remarks before your Parliament without raising with you the issue of human rights. In doing so, according to a theme which I have often developed in my own country, I shall borrow a quote which was also used by Hemingway in the title of one of his major works, For whom the bell tolls: When a freedom somewhere in the world is lost, when the right of a man is denied, when a life is unfairly broken, the bell tolls not only for that individual, but also for all of us. The struggle for freedom which you may lead, together with a great many others, in your daily actions is consistent with the major battles which have been fought for centuries to liberate man and every individual in the states where freedom would be secured. That may also be part of learning about democracy; in view of the present state of the world and current trends, we have every reason to fear for freedom. How good it makes me feel to be able to say that in a forum of free men and women! It is certainly the secret reason behind this deep understanding which unites us, above and beyond our conflicts and quarrels. We are part of that family. I am well aware of the problems you have to face in your own country, as you certainly are of those which are spreading in mine.

I am not forgetting the special duties of my country—I will stress them tomorrow and the day after—to that part of Canada which once belonged to France and which, to this day, continues to reflect its culture, language and tastes. I send very warm greetings to all the men and women who are listening to me and who have lived and are still living that experience, but I fully realize that a country as great as yours needs to collect all its varied components to stand up and act.

The ideals which I have tried to define are in line with those expressed by the Prime Minister and make up our heritage—and when I say our heritage, I mean yours and mine.

Let us be proud of this heritage. Let us not try to impose it, but let us try to convince. If Canada and France are seen by the world to be taking together simple but necessary action, as they did in the past and as they will even more in the future, along the path which we have chosen, then a visit such as this will have its place in our destiny, one which our conscience dictates, one where friendship and brotherhood prevail, one which will see Canada and France as two countries and nations increasingly associated in their daily progression and able to propose to the world a few remedies to the ills of the world, a world which is concerned and dying, but also a world which is born in each of your regions, provinces, states, everywhere from east to west, and from north to south, a huge country where the future is being born. There are, at times, a few men and women lost in the immensity . . . but there are cities, large centres, an industry, a growing agriculture, there is hope everywhere and a capacity to overcome obstacles. Yes, you have a lot going for you, ladies and gentlemen. Let me tell you simply this, without trying to lecture anyone: Know how to harvest your grain and make your flour.

A country like France, an older country, which has suffered a lot and will suffer again, has also unlimited potential and opportunities, because everything remains to be done for the coming century. That is why I often ask my fellow citizens to unite, not to ignore their own differences—everyone is entitled to his or her preferences, and I have mine—but to unite every time it is necessary to stand for the country or for mankind.

Well, I said everything I wanted to tell you, ladies and gentlemen, I would have liked, not to speak much longer, but to participate in a much broader exchange. I was very gratified by the warm welcome from the Prime Minister whose speech was well structured and, moreover, delivered in two languages. How pleasant it would have been, with you . . . Naturally, there is an opposition and a majority and I know both, ladies and gentlemen. I do not know which side is best. Depending on the circumstances in which I was involved, opposition or majority appeared to be better. But there is nothing worse than speaking for others. You are a sovereign country . . . How pleasant it would have been to be able to talk with you, with each of you, to become a parliamentarian again for a short while, lose probably this magnificient unanimity . . . But let us not lose it, ladies and gentlemen. I am through. Thank you for your warm welcome. Long live Canada! Long live France!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Madam, we would very much have appreciated hearing more, because in this federal Chamber French is familiar to us and even custumary in the legal sense of the word, but it is a very rare occasion indeed to hear in this place a voice from France that is of recognized literary value, especially if it is that of the President. We were aware of that dual capacity in which you spoke, and we were assured that the clarity and the contents of your comments would testify to it in this exclusive place where we are highly honoured by your visit. I thank you on behalf of my Senate colleagues.

We wish that your stay among us be surrounded by an atmosphere of cordiality, because our relationship with your country could not be bound in formality. Our countries are unique, but so are our bonds, and this perhaps is what makes them more delicate on occasion.

Approximately one third of Canadians are culturally linked to France. Those indestructible bonds forged in the past have unfortunately not been paralleled in the economic field for reasons history tries to explain. As you yourself often suggested, we must on both sides strive to recreate those flows between our two worlds, and the impetus at least has been given. We know very well that in the area of international trade, you must reckon with a number of partners since you succeeded in that bold Common Market experience. Of course, that did not happen without many difficult adjustments. For our part, we would also like to offer you an enlarged market of continental scope.

As you know, we are negotiating with our neighbours down south, and the outcome is still uncertain. In the event of success, our language duality would be an asset for you to gain access to a North American market.

To come back to cultural exchanges, would you allow us, Mr. Speaker, in your quest of a multimillenial past, to visit with you the Solutré Rock in a lay pilgrimage? As I suspect that you do not miss the opportunity to enjoy the gifts of nature offered by Pouilly on the one hand and Fuissé on the other, you could count on us to also partake in that pleasure.

With the near bicentennial of your Revolution, I would like to recognize before the statesman you are what Canada owes France.

[English]

The outbreak of the French Revolution and the fear that disturbances would spread to Canada encouraged the British Government to institute a more liberal form of government in the colony. The Constitution Act of 1791 divided Canada into two colonies, Upper and Lower Canada, and provided each with an elected legislature. Although the Constitution was cautious in the democratic powers it conferred, it represented the first step in Canada's path to nationhood and eventual independence. In those days, toasts were drunk to the French Revolution at a banquet held to celebrate the coming into effect of that Constitution.

[Translation]

Mr. President, for your 1789 Revolution, for our cultural heritage, for the example set by your Pan-European economic expansion, for your eloquence here, may we express our deep gratitude.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. President, we are especially honoured to welcome the President of the Republic of France, not only as the leader of a great nation, but as a special friend of Canada.

Your visit marks an historic moment in the life of our Parliament. It is a reflection of the lasting friendship and special relationship binding our countries.

[Translation]

France is not only the ancestral homeland of million of Canadians, it is also a sacred land where our soldiers died to make on two occasions right and freedom triumphant.

The cultural heritage left by France in Canada is an essential constituent of our nation.

Our attachment to the strength and influence of the French language and culture in the world has been clearly shown in the Francophonie Summit as a privileged tool.

The action of parliamentarians complements government measures as could point to you our colleagues in this chamber who actively take part in the proceedings of the International French-speaking Parliamentary Association.

The Canada-France Interparliamentary Association and France/Canada friendship groups include women and men who are eager to contribute to the strenghtening of bonds in all areas of activity.

[English]

Your visit to Canada, Mr. President, provides us with an unique opportunity to celebrate the deep friendship shared between France and Canada. It also serves as a means for us to explore ways of expanding our relations, particularly with respect to economic and trade matters and to seek common ground to respond to the challenges facing our two nations.

On behalf of my colleagues, I wish to reiterate how pleased and honoured we are in welcoming you and Mrs. Mitterrand in this House. We ask you to convey our fraternal greetings to parliamentarians of your country and to all fellow citizens.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I now adjourn this meeting.

EXTERNAL AID

FOOD AID NOT ANSWER TO WORLD HUNGER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the western Premiers recommended that Canada reduce its growing stockpiles of grain by sending the surplus to feed the hungry peoples of our world.

It hurts the food producers of western Canada to see the food they have grown going to waste while other people in the world go hungry. In our world half a billion people live in a state of constant hunger and 40 million people, half of them children, die of hunger every year.

In spite of the humanitarian desire to share our surplus with Third World peoples, we need to realize that food aid does not provide the answer to world hunger. Except in cases of extreme emergency, food aid can do more harm than good by distorting the price paid for food and destroying the incentive for local agriculture.

Canada already provides a very large percentage of its development assistance in the form of food aid, larger than that of any other nation. CIDA is already a major customer of the Canadian Wheat Board.

• (1405)

The solution to Canada's agricultural problems is urgently needed but this solution cannot be found in a proposal that destroys food production in Africa, Asia or South America. These nations need development assistance, not food aid.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS WHO WORK FOR LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGIONAL CYSTIC FIBROSIS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Last Saturday, May 23, Mr. Speaker, Alma in my riding was the site of a rocking chair endurance contest sponsored by the Lac-Saint-Jean Regional Cystic Fibrosis Association.

I was glad to join the "rockers" and make my modest contribution to help finance research which gives every child victim a ray of hope for the future.

I would be remiss if I failed to mention the participation of Mrs. Diane Hébert who epitomizes genuine determination and whose presence was undoubtedly a major factor behind the outstanding success of this event which proved rewarding beyond expectations.

I conclude by emphasizing the good work accomplished by all volunteers who have been actively supporting this association for a number of years.

EFFECT OF PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my opposition to and anger at the comments made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with regard to the effects of Bill C-22. In a recent speech in Montreal, the Prime Minister misled the people of Quebec by indicating to them that there would be untold benefits as a result of the passage of Bill C-22. What the Prime Minister failed to say is what benefits will be bestowed upon the people of Manitoba. Particularly, will those in Brandon, Manitoba, see any benefits for research and development as a result of Bill C-22? Will Nova Scotians receive any benefits for research and technology as a result of Bill C-22? The answer is an unequivocal no.

The benefits of Bill C-22 will not be distributed across Canada in an equitable way. The people of Canada are once again being hosed by a Government that wishes to cater to the multinational corporations centered in New York, Philadelphia and elsewhere. I call upon the Government to change this most regressive piece of legislation.

THE LATE HUGH CAMPBELL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that this House records the recent death of Air Marshal Hugh Campbell, former Chief of Air Staff and a man of long and distinguished service in the Canadian military who did much to develop the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Air Marshal Campbell earned his wings at Camp Borden in 1930, and served in the United Kingdom and the Middle East during World War II, rising to the rank of Air Vice Marshal when appointed to the Air Council. After the War, he was much involved with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In northern Canada, Hugh Campbell will be remembered as an appointed Member of the Northwest Territories Council who worked himself out of a job as he promoted elected and democratic government for northerners. We extend our thanks for a lifetime of service, and our condolences to family and friends.

IMMIGRATION

PHONEY REFUGEE CLAIMANTS FROM PORTUGAL—DELAY IN INVESTIGATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government shields rich, powerful crooks by attacking the poor and weak. Two years ago immigration officials knew that crooks were bringing phoney refugee claimants from Portugal by means of the "persecuted Jehovah's Witness scam". Not until January, 1986, did the RCMP investigate and not until July, 1986, after thousands of duped Portuguese paid thousands of dollars each to crooks, did the Government impose a visa requirement on Portuguese visitors.

At that time the Hon. Minister promised, privately to me and publicly: "We're going to lay charges and we're going to make them stick, if I have to hire the lawyers myself." One year later, no RCMP investigators have gone to Lisbon and no charges have been laid. The Government has rewarded rich crooks by stalling the investigation.

But to cover up this shameful action, the Government attacks real refugees. Men, women and children fleeing brutal police states in Chile and El Salvador are called "liars, phoneys" and "economic migrants" so as to shield the rich crooks. What a disgrace to Canada this Tory Government is.

PUBLIC WORKS

EXPROPRIATED PEOPLE OF MIRABEL—DESIRE THAT SURPLUS LAND IN 8,000 ACRE BUFFER ZONE BE RESTORED TO ORIGINAL OWNERS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, ever mindful of its commitments, our Government signed a draft agreement with Mirabel's expropriated people on March 25, 1985, a historic date. Since then the land resale process has been going on as expected, and today I fully support and endorse the expropriated owners' request that the Montreal International Airport North Terminal buffer zone be reduced to 8,000 acres and the surplus land be restored to the original owners.

Mr. Speaker, whereas the 8,000 acres are more than enough to meet current and future needs of the airport over the next 50 years; whereas this surplus land was needlessly expropriated, thus playing havoc with the lives of hundreds of families and uprooting entire villages; and whereas the expropriation deprived Quebec and Mirabel residents of a major agricultural output, I earnestly hope, Mr. Speaker, that the surplus land of this 8,000-acre buffer zone will be resold at the earliest opportunity.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION TO CUT BENEFITS TO OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, last week, I met with the leaders of the Quebec coalition that is opposed to the Conservative Government's decision to cut unemployment insurance benefits for elderly workers. These people, from Conservative ridings in Montreal West and on the South Shore, were extremely disappointed about the way this dossier was handled by Conservative Members.

These people have been fighthing for a year and a half. Six months ago, the Government promised it would reimburse them. About a month and a half ago, the Government admitted it had made a mistake and had to reimburse these people, but since then, nothing has happened. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Conservative Members in this place . . . and I repeat what I was told: "We have lost the battle, but we will win the war at the next election. We are going to beat all those Conservative Members in Quebec."

THE LATE PAUL RIMSTEAD

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the passing of Canada's quintessential King of joie de vivre within the sporting world. Paul Rimstead, renowned newspaper columnist and television personality, died in Florida yesterday.

A long-time resident in my constituency, Paul won the respect of fellow writers and the people he wrote about. His years with the now defunct Canadian magazine, The Toronto Telegram and The Toronto Sun proved he could always get the story behind the story. CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SHORTAGE OF DECENT HOUSING—NEED TO ADDRESS SITUATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, this is the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. In Canada, despite our wealth, between 20,000 and 30,000 people are without a place to sleep at night. Yet CMHC, the federal agency charged with housing policy, estimates it accounts for only 1 per cent of total federal government expenditures. It is obvious the Government's commitment is totally inadequate.

In addition to those who must resort to sleeping in public places and those who find shelter on a short-term basis with churches and other charitable organizations, we must be aware of the hidden homeless in Canada. Because of high housing costs and the shortage of decent housing, many people, for example young couples, are forced to share living accommodation with parents, relatives and others.

We need imaginative policies and an increase in resources to meet the challenge of decent and adequate housing for all Canadians. The federal Government, through CMHC, should take the responsibility and address the crisis. I call upon the Minister to show the political will to deal realistically with this shameful situation.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROMOTION OF LAURENTIDES REGION

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the Laurentian region will be advertised throughout the world, thanks to an extensive industrial promotion campaign launched recently by members from the region, together with the regional industrial commissioners and the Corporation de développement des Laurentides.

This campaign, launched under the theme Laurentides Plus, with the slogan: More than an environment, an industrial site, will make our region better known, not only in Canada but also abroad where there are major markets for our goods.

The campaign includes a Laurentides Plus poster, which will be sent to more than 50 Canadian embassies, high commissioners' offices and consulates throughout the world.

I am convinced that the Government's assistance will have a major impact on the economy of the Laurentian region.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

MEETING OF CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION AT QUEBEC CITY—IMPACT

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association, I had the honour last week-end to be a Canadian delegate to the spring session which took place in the lovely city of Quebec.

In the course of discussions at the Economic Commission on May 22, 1987, Professor Rodrigue Tremblay of the University of Montreal made a speech, which I found very apt, relating to international trade negotiations in which Canada is an active participant.

In discussing free trade, Professor Tremblay pointed out that Canada and the United States were setting an example to countries presently negotiating the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade agreements. The Canada-U.S. talks have shown that economic barriers between countries can be abolished, as they were in Europe in 1958.

The spring NATO session, the discussions on the economy and the responsibilities of Canadian delegates within the various commissions all reminded me, Mr. Speaker, of the major role that Canada can play on the international scene.

By taking the initiative for the Canada-U.S. talks and by taking an active part in the new Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, our Government has shown the kind of priority it sets on reducing trade barriers and its concern for giving Canadians better opportunities for selling their products on international markets.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

LACK OF UNIVERSAL COVERAGE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Western Grain Stabilization Act has been a very worth-while safety net for farmers for many years. The amendments instituted by the Government made it somewhat more sensitive to the economics of the farm community, one of the weaknesses of the program is that it lacks universality for all western grain farmers. About 75 per cent of farmers are covered by the program.

The Minister is considering amendments to the Act. When he brings forth those amendments would he consider making the Western Grain Stabilization Act more universal by giving assistance to the 25 per cent of farmers who are not presently involved?

NARCOTICS

USE OF COCAINE—GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE CAMPAIGN WELCOMED

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as a parent I would like to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for initiating his campaign against drug abuse. The critics say there is no crisis but I think the fact that over 200,000 Canadians were using cocaine in 1985 more than proves that something needs to be done about drug abuse in our country. The Government's five-year $210 million program emphasizes public education, research, and rehabilitation. I think it will certainly help some people who now have addictions and will help prevent others from becoming drug abusers.

Those of us who are blessed with the opportunity and responsibility of being parents recognize all too often how ill-prepared we are for some of the challenges which parenting presents. The worry that a family member may become addicted to drugs or alcohol is one of the most fearsome challenges facing parents today.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, the public education aspect of this program will be extremely valuable in helping parents and educators put across the message that using drugs is not "cool". The program will also be a big help to families of drug abusers who fear that their love alone may not be enough to help someone with a serious drug problem, a problem with which they have neither experience nor understanding.

WESTERN PREMIERS' CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning the Premiers at the Western Premiers Conference issued a communique calling on the Government of Canada to make an early announcement of an increased and substantial deficiency payment to western farmers due to declining prices and income. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the House that we should not be recommending exactly the kind of thing that the western Premiers are calling for.

Will the Prime Minister make it clear now whether or not his Government will make a commitment to a deficiency payment as was requested by the four western Premiers at their conference in Saskatchewan?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that the Government has stood behind the western farmers. We have in the past, and we will again in the future. We recognize the contribution of the agricultural community to the well-being of the nation and I have indicated on many occasions that we clearly established our bona fides in this regard. This Government understands the problems and the commitment of farmers and shall stand behind farmers.

I also indicated yesterday that there was a very important international dimension to the problem, which dealt with the crippling trade subsidy war in agricultural subsidies between the European Community and the United States of America. This is very much a debilitating problem for Canadian farmers because this kind of highly subsidized traffic is in the process of artificially taking part and parcel of traditional Canadian markets unfairly.

It is this particular practice which, if allowed to extend, could fatally wound free traders in agriculture like Canada. That is why at the Cairns Group, at the OECD and at the Summit, we have elevated agriculture and the very significant real problems of agricultural subsidies to an international forum so that we can hopefully bring a degree of sanity to this very grave problem of agricultural subsidies. If it is not solved, the Canadian farmer will pay an unfair price. We must make sure that the farmer is not called upon to pay that kind of unfair price.

AGENDA FOR VIENNA SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, President Fanfani of Italy is reported to have told the Prime Minister that the grain trade wars would probably not even be on the agenda of the Venice Summit in June. How can the Prime Minister raise expectations that he can solve this problem for our grain farmers, which will put thousands of them off the farms this year, if it is not even on the agenda of the Summit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to the President of the Council, Mr. Fanfani, is false. There was no such statement made.

In fact, I, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Finance, repeatedly with him and others, yesterday raised the question that it is the resolve of Canada to make sure that agriculture and agricultural subsidies were very much dealt with at the Summit. We did it in Tokyo and we will do it again in Venice. That is very much in keeping with the international posture of this nation, to recognize that there is a domestic component to the problem and a solution, but without an international solution the problem will persist. That is why it is so important that we be vigilant at the international fora which is precisely the area where Canada is providing the leadership which must come on behalf of Canadian farmers.

SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER'S POSITION—SIZE OF FRENCH WHEAT SUBSIDY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Premier Devine of Saskatchewan said following the conference in Regina that he would be pointing out to President Mitterrand that French farmers are guaranteed some $9 or $10 a bushel for their wheat, whereas Canada's farmers so far are only guaranteed $2.50 a bushel and that we must not let those farmers down. Will the Prime Minister be a little more precise and give a commitment now that our farmers will receive at least the same returns from the market-place and from a deficiency payment this fall as they did in the past crop year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, farm revenues are up in that area this year because of the very major historic deficiency payment that this Government granted to western farmers which, incidentally, is in the process of being received right now, with $700 million in new money going into the pockets of western farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I know that agriculture is not a priority for the Liberal Party, but I would ask that you please listen to the answer because it is important to Canadian farmers.

I am pleased to learn that Premier Devine will maintain his vigorous action on behalf of western farmers by raising this disparity in subsidies with President Mitterrand. The dollar figures that my hon. friend mentioned demonstrate very eloquently the dimensions of the problem. The problem is that the apparently bottomless pit of the European treasuries, when placed against that of the American treasury, provides subsidies which countries like Canada, and other fair traders, cannot reasonably meet, and creates an absolutely artificial situation. So the argument put forward by Premier Devine is consistent with every single action this Government has taken, namely, that we must rid ourselves of these artificial subsidies because, in the long run, they cripple Canadian farmers by depriving Canadian farmers, who are fair traders, of a fair share of world markets.

AID TO FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the statement made by the western Premiers. I should say we are certainly pleased that Premier Devine is going to raise the matter with the French President. However, we are more interested in what the Canadian Government is going to do. We did not hear the French President commit himself on Monday to providing direct assistance to western Canadian farmers. It is the responsibility of this Government.

Is the Prime Minister saying in his statement yesterday that, because of the international dimension of the problem, his Government is refusing to provide any further direct assistance to western Canadian farmers by way of a deficiency payment? Or will the Prime Minister commit now to saying that in the forthcoming crop year the Government is prepared to stand by the Canadian farmers and not allow them to be pushed out of the market by the Europeans or the Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was a member of the Ministry—and he is from western Canada—which in 1984-85 provided federal assistance to grain and oilseed producers of $1.185 billion. This Government has provided to the same farmers an amount of $3.750 billion. That is a 350 per cent increase in terms of aid to western agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Are the farmers better off?

Mr. Mulroney: There is the Newfoundland farmer being heard from.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I think my answers yesterday and in other circumstances indicate very clearly that we are doing what a responsible national Government must do, which is to fight this at both levels, namely, provide the farmers with required domestic support, which is incontrovertible—the figures indicate an increase of some 350 per cent of federal assistance to western farmers from the time we were sworn in, approximately—second, a very vigorous international program at the OECD with the Cairns Group, with the Summit leaders, to ensure that the ultimate solution is one which benefits Canadian farmers.

Canadian farmers know better than most people in this House of Commons, and most bureaucrats, the international dimension of the problem. They know full well that the international commodity pricing problem was not created on the floor of this House of Commons and that it requires an international solution. They approve the initiatives of this Government to bring about an international solution to a problem which is crippling their growth.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to the Prime Minister that in his answers he forgot a couple of important facts.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Axworthy: He forgot that in 1984 the average price of grain was $170 a tonne, not $110 as it is now. In 1984, 30 per cent of Canadian farmers were not facing bankruptcy. That is the difference between now and then.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I want to ask the Prime Minister the question again. No one argues at all with the need to find an international solution, but what about the domestic solution, not a domestic solution in the past, a domestic solution now? Is the Prime Minister once again saying that he is refusing to respond to the western Premiers and the western farmers and will not provide a deficiency payment? Or will he say today that he will provide the solution wanted by western farmers and keep them in business for the forthcoming crop year?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the question. The answer is clearly in the action that we have taken, as well as in the responses to questions asked yesterday on this specific point in which we indicated that, on the one hand, we are very directly involved in assisting western farmers at this particular point in time while, on the other hand, we are very desirous of working internationally to bring about a solution.

Two weeks ago I had meetings with leading members of farm groups and farmers in western Canada. A few days ago with the Minister for International Trade, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Agriculture, I met with leaders of the Cairns Group with regard to the international dimension. On Friday, in just a few days, I will meet again with western agricultural leaders here in Ottawa to refine our national strategy in regard to the presentations at the Summit.

Apart from assistance nationally, and a complex, but we think effective, program internationally, there is also a fundamental other ingredient which has to enter this mix. It is attitudinal. It has to deal with our desire to help farmers and family farms.

With respect to the contrast in attitudes, I ask my hon. friend from western Canada to consider this. When the call came to this Government to assist western farmers we said: "Yes". When it came in the past the response from someone else was: "Why should I sell your wheat?" That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

DOME PETROLEUM—CITICORP'S REPORTED REJECTION OF AMOCO CANADA DEAL—REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question that concerns western Canadians in particular, but also all Canadians. It has to do with the fate of Dome Petroleum. It is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

As the Minister knows, Citicorp is Dome Petroleum's largest creditor. It has just announced that it is turning down the proposed takeover by Amoco. Yesterday the Minister refused to make it clear whether the Government of Canada would now permit Petro-Canada to become involved with other companies to make a counter-bid.

Given the seriousness of this matter for western Canada immediately, but for the energy needs of all Canadians ultimately, will the Minister not only give his okay for Petro-Canada to become involved but ask it to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question refers to another development in the situation with respect to Dome. It is another stage in the process.

As far as Petro-Canada is concerned, yesterday I was quite clear in my answer to this question.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ASK PETRO-CANADA TO INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that he was asked the question not once but several times yesterday. He refused to answer then, just as he is refusing now.

Since it has already appeared in print in the financial papers of Canada that Petro-Canada is interested in making a bid, along with certain other companies, to further Canadian interests, will the Minister live up to his national responsibilities now and ask Petro-Canada to get in there and do the job it was intended to do for Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government has set certain procedures for dealing with the difficult situation at Dome, and the points raised by the Opposition today were raised two or three months ago by people with an interest in the matter.

Just because the New Democratic Party now realizes that Petro-Canada exists is no reason for insisting on instant results. We answered the question yesterday, and if the Leader of the Opposition did not understand the answer, he should read it over.

[English]

ABILITY OF PETRO-CANADA TO UNDERTAKE PURCHASE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that he did not reply yesterday. He knows that he is being evasive today. I wish to ask him this.

Has anyone from Petro-Canada told the Minister that they have the financial resources at their disposal now that would enable them to get involved without getting one penny of additional revenue from the Government of Canada? If the Government has been so informed why has it not acted in terms of its responsibility and told Petro-Canada to get moving?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is not up to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to respond daily to what the Leader of the Opposition is pleased to speculate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERJURY TRIAL OF FORMER UNITED STATES OFFICIAL—REPORT THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It involves the perjury trial in the United States of former Deputy Chief of Staff Michael Deaver.

We know that the Canadian Government has instructed our Ambassador, Allan Gotlieb, not to honour a subpoena to testify at Mr. Deaver's trial. At the very least will the Secretary of State for External Affairs instruct Mr. Gotlieb to appear before the External Affairs Committee to explain fully Canada's role in this rather unfortunate affair?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question was raised by members of the committee, and I have replied. There is a letter on record with which the Hon. Member may want to acquaint himself.

With respect to the decision regarding the United States, it would be a substantial breach of Canadian sovereignty for us to depart from the protections of the Geneva Convention and allow a Canadian diplomat to appear before United States courts. Not only would that affect our sovereignty with regard to the United States but it would affect our position as a trading nation in which Canadian diplomats are involved in commercial confidences in dealing with Japan, India, and Germany. I ask the Hon. Member this. Does he also want to betray Canadian sovereignty in the case of Japan, India, and Germany? Does he want us to give away all of the protections that make this a sovereign country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect that was not an answer to my question.

I submit to the Minister that it would be a breach of his responsibility not to allow Mr. Gotlieb to appear before the External Affairs Committee to explain the Canadian Government's involvement in this affair in view of the facts which seem to suggest Canadian complicity in the matter, and in view of the facts which seem to suggest that the Canadian Government aided and abetted Mr. Deaver in the breach of American law. Will he allow Mr. Gotlieb to appear? If not, why not? What is he hiding?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member very carefully used the language "seem to suggest". He knows that the facts are the opposite to what he is trying to convey in the House of Commons.

The charge against Mr. Deaver is a charge of perjury. The charge has nothing at all to do—nothing at all—with any activity he undertook with regard to his contractual relations with Canada. I think the Hon. Member knows that. Certainly people who have been following the case know that. That was the substance of the discussion with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, and others, in the standing committee.

I made it clear that if there was a breach of Canadian law, or any suggestion of a breach of Canadian law, then of course we would be prepared to consider the appearance of the Ambassador before the Canadian parliamentary committee. There has not been. The Hon. Member owes a duty to the truth not to leave false suggestions on the floor of the House of Commons.

Oral Questions

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM—POSSIBLE ROLE FOR PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerning the Dome matter. I will give him a chance not to be a lame-duck Minister of Energy, a canard boiteux—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: With respect to Petro-Canada's involvement will the Minister tell the House whether Petro-Canada can become involved in bidding for Dome on a commercial basis? Is the answer yes or no?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, there was some distraction. Could the Hon. Member repeat the first part of his question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Waddell: There is just a little quacking back there.

Mr. Speaker, my question is a simple one, so that we are all clear. Can Petro-Canada bid on Dome on a commercial basis? Is the answer yes or no?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I must say the question itself is rather shaky.

[English]

I still prefer, if it is possible to say lame duck than a dead duck.

[Translation]

As for Petro-Canada's position, it is public knowledge. It may not be what the socialist Party would like it to be. It may not be in line with the philosophy or ideology of the socialist Party, but it is the position of a Government that was elected by a majority of Canadians. This Government has given Petro-Canada a business mandate, and that is how Petro-Canada should act, Mr. Speaker. The socialist Party knows that perfectly well, although it may not appreciate the fact.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister, and I challenge him to have the courage to answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: A majority of Canadians clearly want a Canadian solution to this question. They want Petro-Canada to act. Why is the Government acting like a bunch of wimps, standing back and letting Amoco get the deal? Why is the Government not putting a deal together or helping to put a deal together?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the socialist Party has a short memory. In fact, it helped create the situation in which Dome now finds itself. It should at least remember that.

Furthermore, that party tends to forget that in the first round of bids for Dome, there was a bid by a Canadian company, TransCanada PipeLines. We had a solution presented by a Canadian group, but that is no reason for obliging Dome to accept it. What the Government has been saying from the outset, and we shall not depart from this policy, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not up to the Department of Finance to bail out Dome.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the Government House Leader.

After one year the Government finally decided to reimburse some of the pre-retired pensioners whose unemployment benefits were savagely cut by the Government on January 5, 1986, and on April 1, 1987, the Government introduced Bill C-50.

Since there are thousands of pensioners who are anxiously awaiting reimbursement of benefits and the Government has not yet moved on Bill C-50, would the Minister consider reimbursing these individuals by administrative action?

The Government cut their benefits by administrative action; the Minister can reimburse them by administrative action. Why does he not do that immediately?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has spoken with his critics, informing them that he wants a speedy passage of the Bill. The critics have responded, and a possible arrangement will be ironed out among the three House Leaders.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE REGULATORY ACTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government could immediately reimburse these thousands of pensioners by administrative action. It made the cuts by administrative action, by regulation, and it could reimburse by regulation.

What it is doing is holding these pensioners hostage in order to get through other provisions of the Bill which are unacceptable.

Will the Minister reimburse these people by regulation and do it today?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister needs the approval of Parliament, from what I understand, to reimburse retroactively the early retirees since this money is to be taken from the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

BANKS AND BANKING

BRAZIL'S DEFAULT ON FOREIGN DEBT INTEREST PAYMENTS—EFFECT ON CANADIAN BANK CUSTOMERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Canadian banks may suffer revenue losses of an estimated $446 million this year due to Brazil defaulting on its foreign debt interest payments.

Many analysts fear that banks will increase personal service charges and personal loan rates to make up these losses.

Could the Minister monitor these charges to ascertain if Canadian customers will be paying the shot for Brazilian defaulters?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend, I assure him that we will monitor the charges. However, I might tell him that since the competitors of the banks—the trust companies, the insurance companies, and others—will now be increasingly into consumer lending and commercial lending as a result of our policy in December, there will be increased competition.

Because they do not have foreign loan exposures, it means that there will be enormous pressure on the banks not to increase those service charges.

The role of the federal Government is not to have rules regulating levels but proper disclosure. I can assure the Hon. Member that not only will we monitor this but we will make sure that the rules of disclosure are adhered to.

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS FOR 1987-88 CROP YEAR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It also involves the crisis in world grain markets.

We recognize that the Venice Summit and the GATT meetings may help resolve the grain crisis over the next few years. However, in the meantime, Canadian grain farmers are asking for assistance in the short term.

Why is the Prime Minister unwilling or unable to make it clear to Canadian grain farmers all across Canada that there will be deficiency payments for the 1987-88 crop year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is simply a repetition of questions that we not only received today but questions that we have been receiving from across the way for quite some time.

Members opposite have been ranting and raving—and they were doing so after we met with farm leaders—that we should play some leadership role and suggest to Canadian farmers what their cropping pattern should be this year, 1987.

That is exactly what farmers did not want us to do. Really, it is humiliating to farmers to suggest—and this is the type of suggestions we have been receiving from across the way—that farmers do not know best to read the market signals or that farmers do not know best what cropping patterns they should follow in 1987. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Hovdebo: We are not asking for the details of the payments. We are asking for the payments, the Government's assurance that the payments will be made.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, western Premiers have asked for $1.6 billion. Across Canada that comes to a ball-park figure of $2.2 billion at that rate.

Why is the Government unwilling to be committed to even the idea that it will pay some kind of deficiency payments for the 1987-88 crop year? It has never given us that assurance.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure why the Opposition has so many problems with this, because as we talk with Canadian farmers that is not first and foremost on their minds.

What we are seeing today and what we have seen over the last number of weeks is an attempt to force us into making a commitment for the next crop year, and indeed the present crop year is not completed and will not be completed until the end of July.

We met with farm leaders on March 5. The Prime Minister indicated that this Friday we will meet with farm leaders again. I had some discussions with farm leaders during the Cairns meeting, and the message which I got from them loud and clear was the fact that they wanted a bit more time to have a series of meetings among themselves—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT STUDY BILL TO REIMBURSE ELDERLY WORKERS INSTEAD OF DISCUSSING DEATH PENALTY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or to the Prime Minister.

We all know that as far as the elderly are concerned, this Government's record has been very negative. Remember the de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions, the unemployment insurance question, the New Horizons program, the discrimination against people who are single, separated or divorced.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I seem to have hit several sore spots.

Mr. Speaker, my question, if there is anyone capable of answering and if the Prime Minister has the courage to rise in the House and defend the interests of the elderly, my question is as follows: It was one year and four months ago today that the elderly asked that justice be done in the case of elderly workers. More than eight weeks ago, the Government moved a motion for first reading of a Bill that would reimburse elderly workers. Could the Prime Minister inform the House why he did not ask his Government to schedule a debate on this matter eight weeks ago instead of talking about the death penalty? Why not discuss the Bill to reimburse elderly workers instead of having a debate on the death penalty?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, in my answer I said quite clearly that the Minister has consulted with his colleagues, and I think that after these discussions we can expect matters to progress, with the co-operation of the leaders of all parties in this House.

BILL C-50—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not understand a thing and is merely parroting what the Minister told him. We want to know the facts. Eight weeks ago, the Government admitted it was wrong, that there had been a mistake and that there had been injustice in dealing with elderly workers. There are 210 of you and you cannot even decide which Bills will be brought before the House. What we want to know and what the Deputy Prime Minister should tell us is: Is he prepared to introduce the second reading stage, tomorrow or Monday at the latest, of Bill C-50? Is he prepared to have this Bill passed and to split the Bill so that the reimbursement provisions can be adopted immediately? Yes or no?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to bring in the Bill. We are also hoping that we can get some co-operation from the Opposition. If the Opposition is agreed to pass it in one day, I am sure those arrangements could be made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Deputy Prime Minister has answered. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

VIA RAIL

ACQUISITION OF NEW PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would he not agree that when his Government asked Bombardier and UTDC to form a partnership to sell new passenger rail cars to VIA that a commitment was made both to the companies and to the workers? Because of that commitment and the fact that the new cars would pay for themselves in seven years, would he be prepared to go back to Cabinet and really fight to get the necessary funds to buy this new equipment for VIA? Would the Minister do that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no commitment has been made or was made to the consortium that there would be any purchase unless the price and terms and conditions were found to be satisfactory. Unfortunately, that did not turn out to be the case.

The Government has considered carefully what can be done for VIA Rail in light of everything the Government must do for every nook and cranny of Canada and for every service across Canada in transportation and outside transportation. The maximum we can do for VIA Rail in the next period, five years I think it is, is to put forward $2.5 billion, and since that amount would not also permit the purchase of these passenger cars at the price suggested, I am afraid that has had to be deferred.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET CANCAR WORKERS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will be in Thunder Bay this Friday to open National Transportation Week. The workers at CanCar have asked for an opportunity to meet with him to indicate the impact of this decision on their livelihood.

Is the Minister of Transport prepared to meet with them, or is he going to give them the same kind of cold shoulder that he gave to the Tory MLA representing the same area, that is, refuse to meet with them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have never, as far as I know, given anyone a cold shoulder. My shoulder is always receptive to any head that wishes to lay itself upon it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I always suspected that, John.

Mr. Axworthy: Remember what happened to Gary Hart.

Mr. Crosbie: That, of course, is within the bounds of the legislation proposed by my hon. colleague, the Minister of Justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WAR CRIMINALS

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am going to resist the shoulder of the Minister of Transport. In the absence of the Minister of Justice, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Last December the Government received the Deschênes Commission's report dealing with war criminals in Canada. The Government indicated that it would accept the recommendation that the Criminal Code be amended so that war criminals found in Canada could be prosecuted here.

Recently the Ukrainian community added its voice to many others wanting this legislation brought forward as quickly as possible because the time clock is running, not only for people who might be accused, but for witnesses as well.

Why the delay, Mr. Speaker? Will this legislation be brought forward soon? In any event, will the Government commit itself to bringing the legislation forward by the end of June?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am acting for the Minister of Justice today and I am proud to say that the appointment of the Deschênes Commission was an initiative of the Prime Minister and myself when I was the Minister of Justice. For 40 years—and for most of those years there was another administration, I will not mention its name because it would be invidious—no action was taken at all.

We appointed the Deschênes Commission, and the Minister of Justice is now acting to see that the recommendations are carried out in so far as they can be. I will pass on to him the hon. gentleman's anxiety in connection with the matters that he mentions. The Member can be assured that the Deschênes Commission report is getting very, very active attention and will continue to.

RODAL REPORT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to praise the Government if any substantive action had, in fact, been taken.

One of the things the Deschênes Commission recommended was that the Rodal Report, which deals with how war criminals here in Canada got here in the first place, be given the widest possible circulation, but the Government has been sitting on it since it received it in December.

When will that report be made public? Will the Government make a commitment to make public that report which Deschênes recommended be made public? What good is the Commission if none of the recommendations are going to be taken?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Justice is making sure that every step of the process along the way is proceeded with very carefully in the interests of fairness to everyone who may be involved.

I will pass on the Member's anxiety with respect to the circulation of that report, and I am sure the Minister will give him an answer when he returns to the House. He is in a meeting today with the country's Ministers of Justice, Mr. Speaker, otherwise he would be in this House as he loves every moment of his attendance here.

TELEVISION

DEMAND FOR STEREO TELEVISION PROGRAMMING

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Consumers in Canada today are buying stereo capable television at the rate of two to one. As the number of stereo televisions increase, Canadians are demanding stereo television programming using this state-of-the-art technology.

Will the Minister urge the CRTC and our broadcasters to ensure that Canadians have access to this new age of television programming, or will we remain in the monolithic age?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Canada has always prided itself on being on the leading edge of technology in our broadcasting system. I am sure we will continue to remain so. In fact, the broadcasting industry has to realize that in order to remain competitive it must continue to implement leading edge technology, including capability in stereo systems.

I would like to inform the Hon. Member that at present there are discussions taking place between the CRTC and the broadcasting industry in order to ensure that Canadians continue to receive the best possible service.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE PLAN—GLUE SNIFFING—SALE OF SOLVENTS TO MINORS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is he aware that in Winnipeg we had a by-law dealing with solvent abuse, in particular, glue sniffing, which by-law made a positive contribution in reducing the amount of solvent abuse in our city. This law was thrown out by the courts and said to be within federal jurisdiction.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to bring in legislation regulating the sale of solvents to minors as part of his national drug plan?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to participate in the drug strategy and to see reports in the press this morning saying that some young people, at least in Montreal, have congratulated the federal Government on its effort and have approved of the effort.

• (1500)

My hon. colleague has brought up a precise question about the regulation of solvents. I will be happy to bring it up with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and maybe also with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is simply not enough to answer by saying that it will be referred to another Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister would face up to this issue since he made drug abuse a national priority.

In Winnipeg we had legislation that was effective and that was reducing solvent abuse but now it is under federal jurisdiction. Is the Prime Minister prepared to take legislative action in order to reduce the amount of damage solvent abuse is doing to kids, permanent damage to neurological systems and to brains, and even causing death?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last autumn when I spoke in Vancouver and indicated that, in my judgment, the drug abuse problem had reached epidemic proportions, some trendy types in this country thought that was cute and exaggerated, and so conveyed that message. This Government and this Party felt that drug abuse of this kind—

Ms. Copps: Ronnie felt.

Mr. Mulroney: Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East speaking on this from her seat?

We felt that this kind of abuse required a national comprehensive program which we have put together.

My hon. friend raises another point which we will certainly take note of and which I will discuss with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but fundamentally our commitment is to the real—

Mr. Marchi: Yes, sir, Mr. President.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals do not find that the problem of drug abuse is serious. That is a typical reaction. What happens to ordinary Canadians does not interest them, but when it damages families, I guarantee you it interests us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA

INDEPENDENT MUSEUMS—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS GIVEN FIRM DIRECTIONS CONCERNING APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Recently the Government announced the dismantling of National Museums of Canada, alleging administrative problems. Among these problems, the Commissioner of Official Languages singled out the non-application of the Official Languages Act. I have here a rather thick report containing 30 recommendations on the way to implement an official languages policy within the National Museums of Canada. Since the Minister says she wants to solve these problems, can she confirm that she will give or has given firm directions to the new independent museums, namely that they must abide by the law, that they must implement an official languages program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member, and my answer is yes.

INQUIRY WHETHER EACH MUSEUM DIRECTOR WILL BE HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR APPLYING AND IMPLEMENTING PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since each museum will now be independent, can the Minister tell us whether each museum director will be held responsible for applying and implementing a program, at the earliest opportunity, so that the public may be given services in the language of its choice, that people who work in museums may do so in the language of their choice, and that both official languages be equitably represented in national museums?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): During the transition period, Mr. Speaker, new Secretary General Edwards will continue the work of his predecessor. But in future, once the legislation has been passed, each museum director will have that responsibility.

REFUGEES

CASE OF FRANCESCO PIPERNO SENTENCED FOR TERRORISM BY ITALIAN COURT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. On Thursday, May 21, 1987, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North asked about Francesco Piperno who was sentenced to 10 years in prison for helping establish an armed group responsible for the murder of former Italian Premier Aldo Moro. Can the Minister assure the House that Mr. Piperno, a convicted terrorist, will not under any circumstances be considered eligible for staying in Canada under the conditions issued by the Immigration Department memorandum of April 14, 1987, for criminally inadmissible applicants?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Piperno was refused admission to Canada in June, 1982. He claimed refugee status and his claim was rejected in December, 1983. Since our decision, Mr. Piperno of course has been using all legal avenues available to him to have our decision overturned. The case is presently before the Immigration Appeal Board and it is inappropriate to comment. Of course this is symptomatic of the clogged, cumbersome, complicated system that was left to us by the previous Government.

Mr. Kindy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The last question will be from the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville. One question only, please, because we are over time.

Points of Order

CORPORATE

ACTIVITIES OF WINDSOR ORGANIZATION PURPORTEDLY ACTING AS OMBUDSMAN FOR MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question will be addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he could be summoned from behind the curtain. In Windsor there is an outfit operating that describes itself as the ombudsman for the Minister of National Revenue. This outfit fraudulently uses Department of National Revenue letterhead, issues press releases as authorized by and issued on behalf of the office of the Minister of National Revenue, and is involved in other fraudulent activities claimed to be on behalf of the Minister of National Revenue. Why has the Government allowed this situation to exist for two and a half years without an effective response?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard of this. If the Hon. Member will let me know, we will look into it.

RECOGNITION FOR PURPOSE OF ASKING SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was rising to ask a supplementary question and you called the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) who was behind the curtain and was not standing. I really do not appreciate that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair realizes that the Hon. Member was in fact seeking the floor for a supplementary question. There were other Hon. Members as well who the Chair saw rising and those were government Members hoping to put some questions, but as I indicated to the House, we were getting a little over time.

Under the admittedly informal arrangements and co-operation that exists between the Parties and the Chair, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) was the next delegated Hon. Member to put a question and I noticed that the question was certainly put immediately after the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville was recognized. I also want to note that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville went along with the Chair's request to limit his usual two questions to just one question. With respect to the Hon. Member's point, I regret that I was not able to work him into this Question Period and I will try to do better on another occasion.

Privilege—Mr. Young

ALLEGED USE OF IMPROPER PARTY TITLES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to take under consideration whether or not it is proper for a Minister of the Crown to address the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) by any other terminology. I have noticed an increasing tendency, specifically from the cabinet benches, to use names other than proper Party names in the House.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who made the point that it is considered offensive by members of the New Democratic Party to use the term "socialist". I have to say that we did not realize they found this offensive. I will certainly make it well known that they do.

• (1510)

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that once Members have an opportunity to read the "blues" they will see I never said any such thing. I asked the Speaker to consider the use of terms to describe political Parties in this House other than the correct titles. That is all I asked you to do.

Ms. Jewett: The Neanderthal Tories.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) did not say the word he was referring to, but I heard very clearly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) refer to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) as the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps he is jumping the gun but I personally do not object to it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is pleased to note that the complaint raised by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) concerns the courtesies in this House. At times Hon. Members seeking to attract the attention of other Hon. Members sometimes use less complimentary terms in referring to their respective Parties. However, there is some legitimacy in the point the Hon. Member for Beaches makes. Those courtesies are expected, respected, and help to maintain order. I ask all Hon. Members to remember, in referring directly to the Leader of a Party, that it is probably more courteous to express the name of the Party in exact terms. I also ask members of the Opposition to extend those courtesies when referring to the government Party.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't call us Tories, call us Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker: The point is taken and I think we can move on to another matter.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED CONFLICTING INFORMATION

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has a short question of privilege.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I believe is a question of privilege and I have given notice to you and the Minister involved.

I believe I and other Members of this House, particularly those in the Opposition but also government back-benchers, have to be sure the information we take from this House or committee is a clear reflection of why the Government makes a decision and what that decision is. If a Member is provided with two different versions or interpretations by the same Minister on the same day, then I believe that individual's ability to function as a Member of Parliament is somewhat compromised; in this case, perhaps my privilege has been violated.

I would like to read to you two short excerpts from the Standing Committee on Transport and the House last Thursday. This is the nub of my concern. Reading first from the committee, and to give you the context I will start with the question I put to the Minister:

> Do you have any indication whatsoever that the increase in the price per car—or to what extent the increase in the price per car—was due to design changes after the initial proposal was sent by VIA to the consortium?
> MR. CROSBIE: No, I do not. I do not have that information. It has been suggested that there was a premium because this Trans Consortium was formed. You know that there might have been a saving if the tenders had been called and they were both bidding against one and another. And that is possible that there was a cost premium there, but I do not have any figure for what you are discussing there.
> MR. ANGUS: Your department has not analysed the bid and the negotiated agreement as it relates to the—because I mean you yourself have said we are not doing it because we cannot afford it. The price is higher than we anticipated.
> MR. CROSBIE: Well, as I understand, there is a certain price tender per car which was too much and that price was substantially reduced after a series of discussions and negotiation. So the consortium reduced the price some hundreds of thousands of dollars per car as a result of discussions and negotiations after their original price was put in. But it still left it well in excess of three million dollars per car.
> MR. ANGUS: Just a final question. Mr. Minister, would you conclude then, that the final price per car was realistic, separate from the issue whether the money was available, but that the Government and VIA were not getting taken to the cleaners by the Trans Consortium because of a lack of competition?

Here is the key element in the Minister's response:

> MR. CROSBIE: I do not think Trans Consortium were attempting to take anyone to the cleaners. Naturally if you are bidding against one and another you are going to do everything you can to be competitive and shave prices. So probably the effect of inviting them both to work and tender together on it would result in a higher cost, but I do not think they were attempting to take anyone to the cleaners.

Later that day in the House, in response to my question, the Minister said:

> The hon. gentleman should ask the companies which he mentioned whether they were keeping that problem in mind when they submitted their prices to do this work. The cars came in at hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of what had originally been estimated.

The hon. gentleman might well ask them why they did not sharpen their pencils and come in with a price which we might have found sustainable rather than one $100 million in excess of what was originally envisaged.

The concern I have is that because the Minister provided me with two different answers I am unable to accurately reflect to my constituents, people whose employment is dependent upon that contract, the real reason for the decision. Is it because of the financial system of the company or is it because of a decision of the Government?

I would ask you, Sir, if you could examine those two answers in full. I should point out that the answer in the House is on page 6294 of Hansard. I do not have the final Hansard transcript of the Standing Committee on Transport. I only have the unedited copy which was made available to me immediately after the sitting. I would ask you to review them and see whether or not a Member's rights have been violated because of a difference in information given.

I have no dispute with the Minister or any other Minister when they say the Government is not doing something for the following reasons. However, when we get two different sets of reasons I think it is important that we have an idea as to whether that is an appropriate approach for this House and committee. I respectfully ask you to review that and I look forward to your decision.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am quite confident that if you can find a question of privilege in what the Hon. Member has put before you, you will be more than suited to getting through the eye of a needle. In the first place you have to look at the context of both—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the Hon. Minister is not referring to the Speaker as a camel.

Mr. Crosbie: No. Mr. Speaker, you would have to look at the questions in both cases. In his question asked here in the House the hon. gentleman was trying to blame the Government for a future loss of employment for those people who work for UTDC in Thunder Bay because the Government is not purchasing these cars. I was simply pointing out that surely their employer has to share any responsibility in that direction. The Government cannot be expected to base its decision purely on the employment creation any particular decision will provide.

In the next five years, with $2.5 billion in public funds, we are going to provide jobs at VIA Rail in the area of 8,000 or 10,000. I cannot remember exactly. We will provide thousands of other jobs in the supply and service industries. We have simply had to make a decision as to where the available money can best be spent. We had to decide whether we could afford to buy 130 of these particular new cars at a price in excess of $3 million. The answer was that we cannot. We will be providing great employment through the refurbishing of 200 older cars. If I remember the figure right, that will provide something like 8,000 man-years of employment.

There was nothing incorrect in either of my statements. I believe that both of the companies which the hon. gentleman mentioned were acting in good faith. However, the price they came up with plus other factors did not permit us to proceed.

I will be seeing some of the Hon. Member's constituents when I visit Thunder Bay on Friday. I would much prefer to be going there having been responsible for their receiving this contract, but I hope they will get other contracts. We will do whatever we can to assist.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Minister has highlighted the fact that this is really more a matter for debate than a question of privilege. The Hon. Member has highlighted a problem in his community. That is what we are all here for, but I submit that there is no prima facie case of a breach of privilege. There is no proof that his ability to function as a Member of Parliament has been impeded. I believe the Hon. Member has clarified the situation. In conclusion, I submit that no question of privilege has been brought before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on whether he believes that the situation is now more clear to him in terms of his obligations to report back to his constituents.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, in terms of process I think the answer would have to be no. Obviously the information given by the Minister today is an accurate reflection of his feelings and his approach. However, in the broader sense there is perhaps a need for a review. Perhaps that is something which, in the generic sense, can be referred to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure for consideration of the responsibilities of Members vis-a-vis Government for the passing on of information. I will accept whatever judgment you may make either now or at some other time.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members will know, whenever I think it is necessary I reserve judgment. However, in this case I think I can make a ruling at this time.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan is pursuing a matter of very great importance, not only nationally but particularly in the Hon. Member's riding. As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, that is very much respected in this place and it is expected.

It seems to the Speaker that the difficulty arises from the fact that things said by the Minister in committee may have been interpreted as being somewhat different than things he said when addressing the same issue in the House.

The difficulty the Chair is in, of course, is that strictly speaking the Chair ought not to be inquiring into what goes on in a committee. I have tried to be very careful not to transgress that rule. Speaking hypothetically is never too wise in this place, but if the Chair believed that there had been any deliberate attempt to leave one impression in a committee and another in the House we might all be in some difficulty in addressing this matter. However, I do not take anything the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan has said as an indication that there was any deliberate attempt by the Minister to do that. I listened carefully to what the Minister said in this place. While I think there is a difference of view as to what was said in one place as compared to what was said here, I do not think it goes so far as to be a charge of any deliberate attempt to mislead.

Of course, in making this ruling I am more than prepared to assure the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan that I constantly bring more difficult situations to the chairman of the appropriate committee in an informal way in order that the committee, which is constantly surveying our rules, is made aware of them.

I hope that that response satisfies the Hon. Member. I want to tell him again that every Member of this House recognizes the importance of the issue, not just nationally, as I said, but especially in the Hon. Member's riding, and respects the concern of the Hon. Member for it. I want to thank the Hon. Minister for remaining for a few minutes in order to help the Chair settle this matter.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to petitions Nos. 332-2439, 332-2440 and 332-2449 to 332-2451, inclusive.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who point out that the low-level flight training of pilots from the NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador, disrupts the way of life of many of the native people there and is also a provocative and aggressive war fighting action that tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from about 200 residents of Toronto and several other cities pointing out that there are many people who are forced by the troubles of the world to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada, that Canada in the past has had a reasonably good refugee status determination system and standards, that the standing committee of Parliament has proposed one better able to deal with the problems which were created by overload, and that this has very, very widespread public support from leading bodies in our country. Therefore, they ask Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament will enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great pleasure for me to present a petition signed by 306 residents of Grande Prairie, Alberta, who request that the Government of Canada support my motion, Motion M-37, to allow the rights of unborn babies to be enshrined in the Constitution and protected under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from British Columbia who are calling upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 to allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING UNCORROBORATED EVIDENCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned about changes to the Criminal Code regarding young people.

They are, therefore, asking Parliament to amend the Criminal Code to provide that the "corroboration not required" provision in Section 246.4 of the Criminal Code apply to all sexual offences and not only those offences currently listed in Section 246.4.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to table in the House today a petition received from a number of people from different parts of my constituency in support of Motion M-37, the motion to enshrine in the Charter of Rights protection of the rights of the unborn.

[Translation]

This does not happen to me very often, but I have just received from Saskatchewan a petition written in French which humbly prays and calls upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn children protection under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The petition is signed by Saskatchewan residents of Ferland, Gravelbourg, Regina, McCord, Kincaid, Saskatoon and two or three other towns and villages.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 94 and 113.

[Text]

INCURSIONS OF SOVIET MILITARY AIRCRAFT INTO BEAUFORT SEA AREA

Question No. 94—Mr. Nickerson:

Since December 1, 1986, did Soviet military aircraft make incursions into the Beaufort Sea area and, if so (a) how many (b) on what dates (c) what type of aircraft were involved?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): In general, the TU85 BEAR H which can be used as a Cruise missile launch platform, routinely flies training missions in the North Atlantic, off the north slope of Alaska and also over the Beaufort Sea. In all cases, other than below, these aircraft have remained over international waters.

It is a matter of public record that the Soviets effected an incursion into the Beaufort Sea on February 17, 1987, using BEAR H long range bombers. These were intercepted and identified by North American Aerospace Defence (NORAD) aircraft.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pat Carney (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, on April 8, I announced the Government's intention to introduce an amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act to permit the monitoring of all steel exports and imports. Members will recall the importance I placed then on maintaining open access to the U.S. steel market. A major element in our program involves obtaining more accurate data on exports and imports of both carbon steel and specialty steel. This is intended to ensure that Canada is not used as a back door to the U.S. market for offshore suppliers. Monitoring will provide a better appreciation of the complexities of our steel trade, not only with the United States, but with all countries.

As Members know, there are continuing pressures in the United States for Canada to reduce its share of the U.S. steel market. We believe that Canadian steel is fairly traded and that trade restrictive measures at the U.S. or any other border are not warranted. We expect the United States administration to continue resisting pressures from the U.S. industry and Congress to deal fairly with steel imports from Canada.

It is our view that the monitoring program, which will be implemented as a result of the amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act, will be very useful both to the Government and to the industry in resisting American pressures against Canadian imports.

One of the major characteristics of trade in steel between Canada and the United States is its integrated and mutually beneficial nature. We do not restrict access of American steel into our country. In fact, steel imports from the United States average about 5 per cent of the Canadian market and about one-quarter of our total steel imports. For every dollar of steel Canadian primary producers export to the United States, they import about $1.30 worth of equipment and materials from the United States.

Carbon steel has been subject to monitoring under the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act since September, 1986. This arrangement was introduced on the basis of a recommendation from the Canadian Import Tribunal. It has been successful in producing very useful and timely information on carbon steel imports into Canada. However, with respect to steel exports, there is currently no provision in the Export and Import Permits Act that would let the Government introduce a similar program for exports. This amendment will overcome this problem. Furthermore, to ensure that we have a comprehensive program in place for imports and exports of all steel and reflecting the industry's desire for full coverage, the amendment will enable the Government to monitor imports of specialty steel.

This amendment provides for monitoring for a period of up to three years and is specific to the steel situation. It does not affect other products, nor does it alter the existing criteria under which any other goods may be placed under the import and export controls.

This amendment provides only for the collection of information and both import and export permits will be freely issued. It is not a measure to introduce controls.

The amendment requires us to provide Parliament with an annual statistical summary of information as soon as possible after the end of each calendar year. We believe that this information will generate a better appreciation of the complexities in the steel trade. We will, of course, publish regular monthly reports for the trade. These will normally be issued within a matter of days following the end of each month.

Once the monitoring program is in place and the data on trade flows are available, it will provide a very accurate and precise picture of our trade in steel products with the United States and other countries. This, we believe, will help to ensure that our access to the U.S. market will remain open and that it will dispel any misunderstanding about the nature of Canadian steel exports.

In the period since I announced the monitoring program, we have consulted with all segments of the industry and told them of the general thrust of the monitoring program. We have been assured of the full support of the industry in this initiative. Many industry suggestions will be reflected in the administrative guidelines I will be announcing.

I am well aware of the views of some exporters that controls are inevitable. They may think that it will be to their long-term advantage to raise their level of exports in the immediate future, in the belief that they will eventually gain a higher quota. I do not expect that such controls will become a reality, but let me be very clear that increased exports will not be rewarded, and exporters should be aware of this.

We have continued to work toward maintaining free access to the United States. Consultations have been held between the parliamentary and congressional steel caucuses under the capable leadership of the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). The parliamentary steel caucus has held several meetings with its U.S. counterpart and, as a result of such meetings, we believe that a better understanding has been reached.

Mr. de Jong: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member, with good reason, applauds. In addition, Canadian officials have been meeting on a quarterly basis with their U.S. counterparts. Canada and the U.S. steel industry and labour representatives have frequent contact through trade associations, unions and other organizations. These continuing contacts are particularly important in identifying the issues and avoiding conflict, which is in all our interests.

Hon. Members will appreciate that other important initiatives have been taken by the Government in support of our steel policy. For instance, in late August of 1985, country of origin marking requirements were introduced for imported steel pipes and tubes. As I mentioned, an import monitoring system for carbon steel became effective in September, 1986, and in the February, 1987 Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the withdrawal of the general preferential tariff on steel imports.

Clearly it is essential for both Government and the private sector to have the best possible data available on steel trade as soon as possible. This amendment will permit the collection of such data and allow us to disseminate it quickly.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as we have previously indicated, it would be the intention of the Official Opposition to support this initiative which was brought forward by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and to expedite, as quickly as possible, its passage in this House.

We certainly accept the argument that this particular measure can provide some response to the various pressures which have been put forward by members of the U.S. steel industry and, perhaps more particularly, by certain members of the U.S. Congress who have suggested that Canada has become a staging ground for trans-shipments of steel from countries which are presently subject to the U.S. voluntary restraint program. I think we have been quite insistent all along that that should not be a major factor in affecting the flow of steel between the two countries.

I think the argument has certainly been made clear over time that the increase in the percentage of the steel market occupied by Canadian exports is as much due to the increased demand by U.S. steel manufacturers themselves for Canadian product because of their own labour or market conditions.

I certainly join with the Minister in supporting the work which has been done by Members of Parliament in the steel caucus representing the three Parties. I believe they have undertaken a very important educational program and have been a large contributor to the level of discussion which has taken place.

I would want to use a few moments during my remarks, however, to look at this legislation and raise some questions and perhaps some cautions about what it suggests. First, there have been certain remarks made by the Minister publicly; in fact she made a statement today which does provide a certain slight jar to the hearing. In an interview which was given and reported in The Globe and Mail just after the announcement of the Bill there was a suggestion that this was an evolutionary process.

The question, of course, is what are we evolving toward? Is this seen as a first or another step toward more of a control system being imposed by the United States? When the Minister provided a caution today to Canadian manufacturers, who attempt to inflate their exports into the United States, that that would not be considered, does that mean that something further is on the books? I do not want to draw direct conclusions but I think it would be important for the Minister, perhaps at report stage, as we move through today, to clarify that we are seeing these amendments to the Export Import Act as a terminal step and not necessarily as one of a series of steps which will be taken; that we are simply softening the ground.

I also want to point out that the procedure which has gone on in coming to grips with the dispute and discussion between the two countries, does demonstrate the utility and effectiveness of looking at trade between the two countries in a sectoral fashion. One of the interesting and important historical experiences of Canada-U.S. trade has been that we have worked out trade problems on a sectoral basis. Of course, the most obvious example has been the automobile industry where we have a managed trade arrangement which has been certainly beneficial to both sides.

There have been a number of similar cases over the years in which trade disputes have arisen on both sides of the border. By way of different scale and spectrum of trade arrangements, whether by changes in legislation or by rules, understandings or various accords, we have been able to resolve those differences at a reasonably minimal price to the limits of own Parliamentary, political and governmental ways of doing things.

I would suggest to the Minister, who has often admonished Members of this House that the only answer to trade disputes with the United States is a broad comprehensive free trade agreement, that in fact the legislation she is introducing today is another way of doing it. It is an alternative. It does demonstrate that we can resolve these matters, that we can come to grips with these matters on a sectoral basis, on a product by product basis. That has worked in the past and is clearly working in this situation.

I would simply suggest that one of the reasons we find it easier to support this Bill is that it does support one of our own contentions; that is, when it comes to the matter of resolving trade disputes and responding to protectionists measures there are ways of doing it which does not involve the heavy price which would be encountered in a comprehensive, all inclusive, free trade arrangement. When Government spokespersons, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on down, say there is no alternative, I suggest to the Minister that we are glad to see that the Government does not always believe its own rhetoric and is prepared to adopt different ways of coming to grips with these measures. I think that is certainly important as we continue the ongoing trade discussions with the United States.

I would suggest that with more diligence and application, similar kinds of results and positive constructions could be put upon other areas where trade disputes also occur. One does not have to resort to the "all or nothing" approach, which is presently the position adopted by the Government opposite.

I would also like to suggest that we hope this is not necessarily the end of the discussion, as far as the Government is concerned, relating to the broader issue of the steel industry in Canada. I recognize that the Minister who introduced this legislation is speaking only from a trade aspect and that her colleagues in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and others who have economic portfolios such as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), should be looking at the broader issues of the steel industry. We recognize that there is a big issue out there which is not addressed by this legislation; the production capacity for steel in the world far exceeds the consumption. The modernization that is taking place in a variety of countries such as Brazil, Taiwan, other Pacific Rim countries, and even some European countries, will continue to place pressure on traditional steel companies.

On the trade side, what that really means is that coming to grips with this issue by way of the GATT negotiations will be very crucial. It also suggests that there has to be some clear understanding, at least by way of industrial guidelines, as to where the steel industry in Canada will be seeking its markets, and to what extent we will be able to continue in our modernization programs, our research and development and in improvement of our technology.

One of the most important features to be emphasized in this whole examination is the reason the Canadian steel industry is running into some static from the Americans. It is that we are better steel producers in key areas. We have modernized our plants and we have improved the technology. That has compared very favourably with the traditional and somewhat obsolete steel plants in the United States.

I can recall reading the comments of one economic observer back in the late seventies when United States Steel was responding to a number of pressures on the stock market to inflate its stock value so that it would not be taken over and have to go through all the shenanigans of takeover and acquisition. He said it was exceedingly strange that U.S. Steel, which is the largest U.S. producer, was spending hundreds of millions of dollars on the acquisition of Marathon Oil as opposed to putting its money into improving its steel products.

I think that is a lesson that is only now being learned in the U.S. steel industry. Its industry is allowed to use its capital to invest in a number of industries totally incidental to its own product, something which does not improve a product, that does not come to grips with the need to rationalize and to improve the industry which is now suffering that type of competition.

Fortunately, our own steel producers did not respond to that. That is one of the reasons it is important to maintain Canadian ownership of our industries. I think there is a clear record which demonstrates that through Canadian ownership we make much better choices in this key manufacturing sector than many foreign operators have done.

I hope that along the way we will be able to see a more clear-cut steel policy. That does not mean intervention or necessarily that we will be throwing money at the problem. I am not suggesting that. But I do believe that the kind of co-operation that has been evidenced in coming to grips with this specific problem might continue. There could be a broader application of that co-operative sense in the steel industry, certainly with respect to where it fits into the large Canadian picture and where in fact government regulation and efforts must be used.

We must recognize that we do have continuing problems in our own industry. There are major lay-offs taking place at Algoma that must be faced. Workers are being deeply affected by that. So far there has been very little done in the way of adjustment programs to assist those workers.

There is an ongoing problem with Sysco in Cape Breton. It is an industry of major importance to the East Coast and to the Cape Breton region. We understand that there may be a certain countervail applied to it in the United States in terms of steel rails. Where does that fit into the question of procurement?

I again raise the question, under a free trade agreement in which we apply the concept of national treatment to procurement, will the type of privileged position that has been offered up to now to Sysco to sell steel rail to Canadian National and others no longer be acceptable? It could no longer apply under the principles of national treatment. The Minister mentioned in her speech that that would be the guideline that would be applied under a free trade arrangement. We would have to accept a national treatment concept.

I see that my friend from Regina is in the Chamber. He clearly has the interest of IPSCO at heart. Over the years IPSCO has received subsidies, support and preferences from the Government of Saskatchewan and from the federal Government. In terms of the new subsidy legislation that is coming in there cannot be subsidies directed to specific industries. That type of preferential program for parts of the steel industry will no longer be available. Therefore the concept that we have had up until now, that the steel industry is a national steel industry and that it deserves attention on both the East Coast and in western Canada, will be in some jeopardy.

I must say that none of those questions have been answered. We have not received any detailed elaboration in terms of the future of the steel industry, particularly with respect to those parts of it that I have just mentioned. If a signature is put to paper within three, four or five months by the chief trade negotiators on both sides, then clearly the steel industry in Canada will be facing quite substantial and serious questions. I am not referring to those which are in specialized areas, but certainly the ones that I have mentioned, as well as others. They will no longer be able to face that.

I see that the Hon. Member for Burlington, who has been the chairman of the steel caucus, is in the Chamber. I know that he and I have shared some differences of opinion about trade over time. I suggest this might be an issue that the steel caucus will want to look at. I think it is a matter of some concern to members of my Party which deal with this matter.

I am not attempting to talk out the clock, Mr. Speaker. It is not often that we get an opportunity to talk about the steel industry in this Chamber. I wish to use this opportunity to raise the type of questions that I have raised and to point out that there are lessons to be learned, that there are issues that we must address.

We will certainly support the Government in this very specific piece of legislation. We certainly look forward to its passage before the end of the day. We want to ensure that many other questions which we have will be answered. We hope that we can use this debate to have an exchange on these questions so that we can determine whether this measure has a broader meaning than simply the specific issue it is designed to meet.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate on Bill C-57. As has been mentioned by the Minister and by the spokesperson for the Liberal Party, this Bill will receive all-Party support. I think everyone is in favour of it. I know that everyone in the steel industry is in favour of it. Those in management and in labour have been asking for this type of legislation for some time.

As has been explained in the remarks of the Minister and in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the Canadian steel industry is facing some problems, particularly with respect to its exports to the United States. The protectionist mood in the United States, coupled with the serious problems that the American steel industry is facing on the whole, has created ongoing pressures within the United States to restrict the importation of steel, including Canadian steel.

As has been pointed out, the voluntary restraint agreement that the United States has with a series of steel-producing countries restricts the amount of steel that those countries can export into the American market. It has been alleged that some of those countries get around the voluntary restraint agreement by shipping their steel through Canada and having it enter into the American market as Canadian steel. Of course this legislation will, hopefully, if not prevent then at least be able to verify that this is happening and the degree to which it is occurring.

I think it is certainly in the interests of Canadian steel producers, Canadian steelworkers and Members of Parliament from all political Parties, to make certain that the steel that is being exported into the United States is Canadian steel. We are certainly in support of anything that would help prevent steel from VRA countries entering into the United States as Canadian steel.

• (1600)

The Minister was quite right in pointing out that the Canadian relationship with the United States is quite different, especially when it comes to steel. The Minister also pointed out in terms of steel products that for every dollar we export into the American market, the Americans export $1.30 in steel products to Canada.

One could refer to many examples in this area. For example, IPSCO, which is in my district, imports most of its scrap from the United States. Many steel mills in eastern Canada use American coal. Our relationship with the United States in terms of steel is indeed a special one. It is not the same as the relationships which Brazil, Japan, and Germany have with the United States. It is a special relationship, and I think it deserves special attention and consideration by the United States.

I would tend to think that the area of adequate information and statistics has been weak on both sides of the border. The American ability to determine how much they actually export into Canada, particularly with the deregulation of the transportation industry, has resulted in some statistics which have not been all that valid. I think the Americans are recognizing this and are boning up their ability to collect data at the border. Certainly the Bill would enable Canada to develop better statistics so we would have a more accurate picture of what we are exporting into the United States.

Let us not be fooled. If some producers wish to circumvent the legislation or the intent of the legislation, they can still do so.

Miss Carney: At their peril.

Mr. de Jong: Yes, but there is no clause in the legislation which would punish those producers.

What is also missing in the legislation is the demand that the originating mill be listed. I know that in some circumstances, particularly in this day and age of bartering and swaps, this would be difficult. However, I think it would be helpful to have in the legislation that the application and the permit must show the mill where the steel products originate. As I mentioned, this might be difficult in some circumstances.

I was made aware by the chairman of the steel caucus, the Hon. Member for Burlington, that he spoke with Japanese steel makers who told him of an incident in which they had traded with another country for coffee. The Brazilians were interested in getting its coffee off the market, so they traded steel. The steel was swapped. It had several different owners. By the time it reached its destination, one could not really tell its origin. I recognize that in some circumstances it will be difficult to determine the originating mill.

If we are to have adequate data, we must make an attempt to determine what country produced the steel products we are importing and exporting. Only in that way could we verify what countries or what particular mills are trying to get around their voluntary restraint agreements with the United States. Only in that way would we be able to demonstrate that particular mills and countries are using Canada as a means of laundering their steel.

The world situation in steel is quite bleak. There is tremendous over-production and over capacity for steel and steel products. In years ahead we will see that the world-wide industry will have to be rationalized. We just do not know who will be the winners and the losers. We must make certain that Canadian steel workers and mills are left in the game. When the industry gets itself straightened out and when the dust settles, we must ensure that there is a viable steel industry in Canada.

Of course there is a major problem with the steel industry in the United States. That is not to say that all American steel mills have antiquated and obsolete equipment; there are some quite efficient steel mills, particularly along their West Coast. They are not huge mills. They are smaller and have more up to date equipment. They are technologically more advanced. They produce steel at a very cost efficient price. However, large, traditional steel producers, particularly those in the east, did not think ahead. It was a case of greed. They took all the profits and either used them to acquire other interests or to disburse it to shareholders. What they did not do was reinvest in new plant and equipment.

The result today is that some of the major steel producers in the United States are quite sick and are on the brink of going bankrupt. If some of them go bankrupt, it would be catastrophic, not only to local communities, steel workers, and the pension plans of retired steel workers, but to the economies of the States in which they are located. It would also shake up some of the secondary suppliers, many of whom are Canadian concerns. All of us who are interested in the question of steel share a concern that some of the major players in the United States are on the brink of filing for bankruptcy.

I should like to conclude my remarks by mentioning the steel caucus of which I am a member and of which the Hon. Member for Burlington has been the chairman. The steel caucus is an example of how Parliament and parliamentarians can work. We do not attempt to score political points at the expense of each other. We have a common interest: the viability of the Canadian steel industry in its total sense—not only management or the shareholders, but the steel workers. Our mutual concern allows us to work in a co-operative manner and on behalf of our country and its steel industry. It allows us to lobby on behalf of Canada in the United States and to help engender and bring forth beneficial public policy. It is an example of how Parliament can and should work in many other areas. It is not a matter of ideological differences between political Parties. Members of Parliament work together toward the common good, coming to common sense solutions rather than playing politics at the expense of common sense solutions and the common good. I wish to express to you, Mr. Speaker, that the steel caucus is one example; I think it is an excellent example of how parliamentarians can take a different track and work together toward common sense solutions. As Members of Parliament we can be proud of the steel caucus and the very capable leadership given by the chairman, the Hon. Member for Burlington.

Mr. de Jong: I do not wish to take up much more time on Bill C-57. It has the support of our caucus and Members. We are concerned with one or two things that we would like to address when the Bill gets to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find unanimous consent for this Bill to be sent to Committee of the Whole House rather than a legislative committee. I understand there is a willingness to dispose of all three stages of the Bill this afternoon. I would also advise the House that the Minister during clause by clause study will have officials in the House to answer any questions which Members of the Opposition may have.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no objection to the statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary, but I want to ensure that what he has proposed takes place after second reading has concluded. I think there are still some people in the House who would like to continue with second reading.

Mr. Lewis: Obviously, yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we concur with this arrangement. We will be pleased to see this Bill pass all stages today.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to thank the Official Opposition, particularly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and the Member from the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), for their co-operation in the passage of this Bill. The Member from Regina East made reference to the steel caucus that I happen to be fortunate enough to chair, and I might say that the caucus is made up of a fine group of people. Indeed, we are non-political. We work on behalf of the steel industry and I applaud them for their assistance and good counsel when difficult issues arise.

This legislation before us today was requested firstly by the steel industry and secondly by the steelworkers of Canada. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and her officials had long and serious discussions with the various elements of the steel trade in Canada, not only with the industry and the United Steelworkers of America, but also with those in the steel service centres, in secondary production and those in the steel fabricating end of the industry. All agreed that this legislation should come forward. We have tried to deal with how to get a handle on the monitoring of steel exported from Canada for some time, but with little or no success and so we have moved to this monitoring stage.

I would like to review briefly why we had to come to this stage. The American industry has experienced some difficulties. In 1984, the U.S. Department of Commerce became aware that about 26 per cent of the American steel market was dominated by imported steel. An effort was made to put quotas and restrictions on the importers and the exporters of steel in the American market. Much of that steel was being dumped onto the American market. Canada was exempted from a voluntary restraint agreement quota at that time. We were not and have not, to the best of my knowledge, ever dumped steel on the American market. Odd cases have gone before the International Trade Commission, and there have been anti-dumping investigations here and there, but by and large the process that we have in place, and that the Americans have in place, has taken care of any distortions that may have appeared on the price side of the steel business.

Initially the steel manufacturers complained that the price of steel was being unfairly depressed in the American marketplace because imported steel was coming in at low and dumped prices. The administration moved to what it called the VRA, the voluntary restraint agreement, which was signed with about 19 countries. For a portion of the apparent American market they were not to countervail or anti-dump and were to abide by the voluntary restraint agreement. Canada, not being a part of that arrangement, did not have a commitment. Our traditional share of the American market at that time was about 3 per cent. Our primary producers being very responsible people said they would endeavour to maintain our share of the American market at about 3 per cent. They have done that fairly well until recently.

In any commercial arrangement, people after a while find avenues of escape. What we have found, and the Americans have concurred with us, is that there have been some purchasers of steel in the U.S., other than producers, who have been buying steel from countries which have signed a VRA with the Americans. When the steel quota assigned to a particular country runs out they have shipped steel into a facility here in Canada, into a warehouse, a bonding house or something of that nature. Then the steel is trans-shipped into the United States and is counted as Canadian steel, which is clearly unfair to our producers. Our difficulty is that we do not know the dimension, the dynamics, the size, the amount involved, but we know that happens.

My colleague from Regina East has also made mention of steel found in counter-trade. Counter-trade is a practice that is becoming more and more important in the world. Some Third World countries which have put steel exporting facilities and steel production facilities together have found that they could trade semi-finished steel, billets or raw steel to other countries in exchange for other commodities required. That steel is floating around in warehouses in the Third World waiting for a place to park. Some of it could find its way into Canada. If so, it would be transformed in some way and would enter the American market and counted as Canadian steel. Therefore, we had to move to see how we could get a handle on how much was involved and if we could ensure that it was not counted as Canadian steel.

We had discussions in Washington last week with officials of the American Iron and Steel Institute and with the executives of the congressional steel caucus on the monitoring Bill. I can say that we were well received. Officials from the Departments of International Trade and External Affairs did an outstanding job in presenting the monitoring Bill and the regulations behind it to the officials.

I must say that the Americans were very impressed with the speed with which we were able to move with legislation as compared to the speed of their process, bearing in mind that the United States is a larger country with more people and more complex issues. They were openly complimentary about the way we could talk about a problem and then, in a very short period of time, put together a program and tell them what it was.

The Americans feel that what we are doing will be effective. For the first time, it will provide clear information about the origin of steel entering the American market. I think that will help our companies tremendously.

The other point we tried to make is that our mill-to-mill shipments should be exempt from any agreed to or voluntary quota in the American market. In fact, when we ship steel from our mills to their mills, we are helping their steel industry. As Hon. Members are aware, there have been shutdowns, strikes and bankruptcies in the American steel industry and when we make mill-to-mill shipments, we act almost like a just-in-time supplier.

Many people know what steel is, but they do not know the politics of steel. It is a very political business. Canada is the largest customer of the United States steel industry. As the Minister pointed out, we buy about 500,000 tonnes, worth something in the neighbourhood of $450 million per year to the Americans. As well, the United States is our largest customer. It is a relationship that is unparalleled. There are no two other countries in the world trading in a commodity like steel with the relationship we have with the United States of America.

Canada buys 90 per cent of its metallurgical coal from Tennessee, Virginia and Pennsylvania. As well, about 45 per cent of the pellets used in Canada are bought from American mines. In fact, we own some of the coal and iron ore mines. The Canadian steel industry owns several steel facilities in the United States, facilities which employ about 12,000 Americans. Truly we have a relationship that is unparalleled and unequalled in the world.

When we go there, one of our great difficulties in the hustle and bustle of Washington is getting our colleagues to recognize our relationship. We tell them we are not Brazil, Taiwan or Korea, we are Canada. We spend $1.30 in the American market for every dollar we ship in and we are the United States' largest customer. We trade facilities back and forth. We send steel to the United States for a process that is not done in Canada and indeed we receive American steel for heat treating because there is no comparable facility in the United States. Our arrangement is very unique, and our objective in this legislation is to see that that relationship continues and is not diminished in any way.

What happens in most commercial relationships is that a VRA is put on in an attempt to have a measure of control over a situation, but then people find a way to circumvent the VRA. That has happened here and that is what we are trying to correct. We want to know the country of origin of steel going into the United States. For all we know, some of the American steel that comes into Canada and is processed here and then returned to the United States may be going into the United States as Canadian steel. We do not know that but we will find out through this monitoring process.

In the years since 1984, when the VRA system was put in place by the American Government, the number of companies shipping steel into the United States has increased. I was absolutely flabbergasted when I learned that there are approximately 700 companies shipping steel into the United States. There are 14 primary producers in Canada but there are 700 companies shipping steel into the United States. Of those companies, 350 have emerged in the last couple of years.

We must realize that there are a great many people involved in this trade and we simply do not know the depth of it. We do not know if some of these companies are operating out of a telephone booth, out of a steel warehouse or out of a mill that transforms steel. We simply do not know the dimensions of it and the monitoring Bill will allow the Minister for International Trade to monitor the situation. When my colleagues in the steel caucus and our officials go to the United States to talk to the American administration and the Congressional authorities, we will be able to do so armed with some good, hard information that will help us make our case.

We have much to gain by putting this legislation in place. When it was originally brought forward by the Minister, her officials, her Parliamentary Secretary and others sat down with opposition Members and told them the story. Opposition Members listened to what we wanted to do and they agreed. I think that is a fine example of how Parliament can work when serious matters that have to be dealt with in an expeditious way come before it.

I look forward to hearing other comments. I understand the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) will make some comments on this matter and I look forward to hearing what she has to say. Then I look forward to going through the other stages of this Bill and to its final passage. I am told that the Senate will handle it in the same fashion. This is a good example of how we can do things when they have to be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, a number of Hon. Members have outlined the situation facing the Canadian steel industry and have indicated why this Bill is before us today. We in the Opposition will support the Bill. If the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) were present, he would certainly have said that he himself has been asking for this legislation in the form of questions in the House. We are pleased to see that the Government has taken the initiative which was launched by Canadian steel producers as well as the labour movement.

Indeed, this is a very good example of how dealing with trade on a sectoral basis is working. The steel industry is a good example of how Canada and the United States have historically been able to hammer out solutions to cross-border problems that vex both countries.

One thing we have not touched on is the reason for the malaise in the American steel industry. While I know U.S. Senator Heinz is motivated to bring forth protectionist legislation merely to ward off competition from a number of countries, Canada among them, one reason is that the plants in the U.S. have not been modernized. They have not received the support from Government that we have. I might say that past Liberal Governments have been in a position to permit modernization of the steel industry so that Dofasco and Stelco, the two major steel companies in Canada, both in my riding, have among the most modern plants in the world. The companies, in concert with workers and Government, moved very early on to modernize their facilities.

A second issue relates to the fact we in Canada have had the export edge. This is because of the inflated value of the American dollar. Unfortunately, some of the measures being considered in the U.S. Congress to deal with the so-called steel import problem are really tied to that fact. That in turn, because of our close proximity as well as our first-class product, has given us an edge in the American market.

The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) pointed out that we have 14 major steel producers in Canada. The major players have worked very closely to try to develop a good working relationship with the U.S. so that we would not be forced to accept a voluntary restraint agreement. We know that people like Don Belch and Bob Varah of Stelco and Dofasco have been working together, going to Washington on a regular basis. Any time I phone Stelco it usually turns out that Mr. Belch is working in Washington to try to convince the Americans of what we in Canada already know, that is, that we are fair trading partners, we are not dumping steel. In the isolated cases of alleged steel dumping which have been brought to the attention of the Americans, we have actually seen a situation where some of these maverick companies, those which are jobbing steel from third countries via Canada into the U.S. because the importing of steel from those countries is limited, have set up subsidiary companies in Canada which they use to divert steel from third countries through Canada into the U.S. We have seen that in the case of a couple of concrete floor manufacturers in the U.S. who import steel rod from other countries via Canada. In fact, the American entrepreneur is subverting his own legislation and the Canadian steel industry is taking the brunt of criticism for the alleged increase in the amount of steel imports into the U.S.

I think the other issue that was lightly touched on by the Hon. Member for Burlington is the fact that for every dollar we sell to the U.S. we consume $1.30 in imported product to make steel. We should emphasize that point. When the U.S. Congress is dealing with the increase in steel imports they also must realize they are benefiting directly through the sale of goods to Canada to the tune of $1.30 for every dollar we sell to the U.S.

I know that a number of editorialists and a number of Americans have pointed to what I would characterize as a small blip in the U.S. import market in the early part of this year. The reason for that blip has been articulated by other Members, but when USX went on strike I spoke to steel producers in Hamilton who told me they were being begged to sell our first quality steel to the U.S. Of course they chose not to fill the orders because they did not want to create a situation where Canadian imports increased so much as to encourage any further protectionist action by the U.S.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Canadian steel industry, through the Canadian Steel Producers Association as well as the steelworkers and their tripartite approach with the Government, has literally bent over backwards to inhibit any thinking in the U.S. Congress that Canada is not a fair trading partner, we continue to be assaulted by claims of dumping. One of the elements of discussion raised in the House over the last number of months has been the allegation of dumping of Canadian steel being considered by the U.S. Department of Commerce.

When you look at the telex which deals with the allegations you see they are being levelled at companies which are not even producing the particular type of steel about which the allegations are made. In fact, there has been absolutely no substance at all to American claims about dumping by Stelco and Algoma Steel, for example. These companies are prepared to go to the U.S. Department of Commerce and fight their case. They will win. We have done it in the past and we will continue to do it. Yet at the same time we are tying up valuable dollars and the valuable time of some of our top people who go back and forth to the U.S. constantly lobbying on issues which have been won time and time again. If we adopted a sectoral approach to making sure that Canadian steel producers are able to sell our top quality products in the U.S. without being aggravated at every turn by congressional protectionist measures, it would receive the support of all Canadians.

I remember that a couple of years ago, when the Government was in the process of launching its free trade initiative, a secret document was leaked to the press. It dealt with what kind of strategies the Opposition should be approached with. That document suggested that Members who represented steel-producing ridings, like myself, were particularly vulnerable and must de facto support a trade agreement because in effect the steel industry would be a potential beneficiary. Our response is that time and time again we have shown, through our producers and our labour movement, that we are prepared to deal with the questions of U.S. protectionism as they are raised on an ongoing basis.

I think this legislation is another attempt by Parliament, with the assistance and support of the trade unions as well as the management of most of our steel companies, to deal with the problem and head it off at the pass. It will work to show the Americans we are very serious about maintaining the quota of exports to the U.S. at around the 3.5 per cent or 3.7 per cent level. I think 3.7 per cent is the level which certainly Mr. Varah has publicly stated we were prepared to live with. As long as we show this good faith in Parliament as well as in the steel industry we should be in a position to convince the Americans that we mean fair business but we intend to protect our share of the steel market.

My concern in the long term is that the American Government will see weakness in the Canadian position. It will see weakness in our position as it did when the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) went to Washington on the softwood lumber deal. The Minister said, "We are prepared to saw off and make you an offer, and if that offer does not work, it is our final offer". Yet she subsequently came back with a second final offer and so on.

If the American Congress perceives a weakness in the position of the Canadian Government, if it sees blood, it is going to go for the jugular. If it goes for the jugular and is successful in introducing protectionist measures as they affect the Canadian steel industry, we run the risk of losing tens of thousands of Canadian jobs.

I certainly support the measure that is being introduced today by the Government. I think it is long overdue and I think it will send a signal to the United States that the Canadian steel industry is very serious about being a fair trading partner and that we are prepared to put our reputation on the line, prepared to say that we do not want steel to be diverted from third countries through Canada merely to subvert the voluntary restraint agreement, that by God we do not want any more possibility for export control curbs from Canada to the United States and we do not want a VRA imposed on Canada.

We have heard the President say that Canada's steel industry will continue to be able to trade with the United States, but we have also seen him circle the wagons when need be. In introducing this legislation in Parliament and in getting the support of the steel producers and the labour movement, the Minister for International Trade must send that message to Washington in the strongest possible terms. If we can do it through the steel caucus or through debate here in the Houses of Parliament, that is terrific.

However, it must be done. We have to tell Washington that these export control curbs are being put in place so that we can prove once and for all that we are fair trading partners and are not dumping our steel into the United States.

We can pass this legislation with a clean conscience, but we must ensure that the Americans, including Senator Heinz, get the message loud and clear. Far too much Canadian time and energy is currently being spent fighting phantom legal battles in Washington following allegations of dumping such as those recently put before the Department of Commerce. Enough Canadian steel producers have shown that we are prepared to play ball. We have to protect our option because as the American dollar reaches a more reasonable level the world strata of steel sales could change. It is important that we recognize that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say it is a good thing that the support for this Bill is unanimous, because it gives the Canadian Government a strong position from which to tell Americans that we have already gone far enough to prove we are fair and equitable producers, that we are not about to sell steel from other countries across Canada, to try and circumvent U.S. regulations. Our conscience is pretty clear on that, and we would like to pass this Bill to convince Americans they should not react by passing a lot of new protectionist legislation in the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, I think that with this Bill, with the unanimous support of producers and workers, opposition Parties and the Government, we can send a fairly strong message to the Minister for International Trade. We can give him the strength to tell the Americans we do not want to be subject to so-called voluntary restrictions. I think we should not give Americans the impression that we are weak-kneed on this point, which was the case in the softwood lumber affair, where we had a weak Minister, a Minister who promised, who made a final offer and who in the final instance made a second and a third final offer. We do not want the same thing to happen in the steel industry because thousands of jobs would be lost if the Americans decided to impose a restrictive, so-called voluntary agreement, which is a contradiction in terms since restrictions are never voluntary. We are prepared to support the Government, but we want it to speak with a strong voice. We are concerned, and not just about this Bill, but generally speaking, that the policy set forth by the Government so far in our free trade talks gives the Americans the impression that we are not speaking from strength but from weakness. We must speak with a strong voice to protect jobs in the steel industry and in other sectors. And that is why we in the Liberal Party are prepared to support this Bill.

[English]

I would like to conclude by asking the Minister to consider the possibility of introducing further legislation containing a real steel policy. In essence, this is fire-fighting at an early stage, but it is not dealing with the situation at Sysco and in other regions of the country where the steel industry is essentially being deindustrialized. We are lucky in the City of Hamilton that in the first fiscal quarter of 1987 The Steel Company of Canada showed a profit. Dofasco did not show a profit for the reason that it is writing off some of its modernization improvements, but it had a pre-tax profit. We are doing very well in Hamilton and are fair trading partners.

Mr. Siddon: Thanks to a good Government.

Ms. Copps: The Minister says "thanks to a good Government". It is actually thanks to a great workforce in the City of Hamilton. Our workers, both at The Steel Company of Canada and at Dofasco, are producing the best quality product in the world thanks to previous Liberal Governments which permitted them to have the most state of the art equipment available. They have a one-track rolling process which allows our steel to be as competitive as any found in any country, even when pitted against the low salaries paid in Korea, Brazil, and some other countries.

We are the number one steel-producing community in the world. Hamilton East is the number one steel riding in Canada. That is because past Liberal Governments had the foresight to recognize that we had to modernize and upgrade the industry and not allow the type of deterioration of plants that we have seen in the United States. That is why Pittsburgh is in the mess in which it is at the moment. American Governments did not have the same foresight as the Canadian Government. In addition, we have the best workforce in the world, so it is natural that we should be doing well.

However, there are other parts of the country which are not doing that well. I think about Sydney, Regina, and other areas of the country which need help. I do not think this particular measure goes far enough toward actually introducing a steel policy which will deal with the deindustrialization which is occurring in some of the less fortunate areas of the country in the steel industry.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague, other members of the Official Opposition, and Members on the government side in speaking in support of this legislation which is quite clearly not intended to establish a steel policy however needful we might be of the development of such a policy. We have before us a piece of legislation which will complete the cycle of the monitoring system initiated as a result of last year's report of the Canadian Import Tribunal with regard to carbon steel which established the requirement for import permits. This legislation would impose a requirement for export permits.

There has been a great deal said about the state of the steel industry world-wide and the conditions which have evolved over the last little while. This topic was dealt with in quite considerable detail in the report of the Canadian Import Tribunal which points out that changes in the kinds of material used in manufacture, the entry of Third World countries into the field of steel production, the development of an overcapacity matched by the use of subsidies and import controls in many nations historically involved in the export of steel have created a situation which has posed, poses, and will pose a danger to our steel industry and the steel industry of the United States.

It has been indicated that the reaction of Senator Heinz to the state of affairs in Pennsylvania is not very different from the kind of reaction expressed by those who speak on behalf of those who depend upon the steel industry of Sydney, for example. The threatened imposition of a 2.4 per cent quota on Canadian steel imported into the United States raises the question about the level playing field and the issues of the relative rate of importation of steel into our respective countries. This flies in the face of the agreement reached previously with 18 countries importing steel to the United States to restrain their imports to the United States voluntarily. Canada was omitted from that requirement because it was found not to be engaging in unfair trading practices with respect to steel.

While Canada has restrained itself during this, in an attempt to maintain its 3 per cent traditional level of steel import, we nevertheless face a challenge with respect to steel as we have faced with respect to other items.

It has been noted that the American steel industry has not kept pace with the need for technological change and greater efficiency. The Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) ascribed the failure of the American steel industry to the absence of federal aid to the industry in that country. However, I believe the record will show that many of the large corporations in the United States greedily distributed the profits to shareholders rather than reinvesting in the modernization of the steel industry. Therefore, the fault cannot be exclusively laid at the door of the Government, but must partly be attributed to those who own and operate steel companies.

While the Liberal Government in the past provided some help to the steel industry in Canada, I believe it is evident that the Canadian steel industry had more foresight and therefore did not require the same level of subsidy as other countries in order to modernize and maintain a level of competitiveness. That has allowed it even to exceed the quotas that have been imposed by general agreement because those in the United States who purchase steel recognize the quality of steel that is produced here.

A voluntary restraint agreement was reached with a number of nations that previously not only imported steel but potentially exceeded the levels of importation in the United States. It now seems clear that with Canada's situation becoming somewhat different, they were possibly trying to take advantage of Canada's unique position by trans-shipping cheap steel to the United States after transforming and processing it to a substantial extent to allow such steel to gain access to the United States.

It is important to adopt this legislation so that there is a clear understanding and clear information about the transshipment of steel or the exceeding of the traditional levels of importation of steel in the United States from Canada. It will provide for discussion and agreement with the United States on the basis of sound information. This is very appropriate legislation and I hope it will demonstrate that Canada has honestly pursued its voluntary restraints.

While the major exporters of steel have respected restraint, there is some evidence that smaller corporations—some of which may be subsidiaries of American companies—have abused the understanding and taken advantage of a situation that is at least partly created by the Americans who come here and try to sneak steel in from those smaller producers. This legislation will enable us to ascertain whether that is true. We will be able to determine whether the suspicions of people like Senator Heinz are supported by that data. This legislation will give us a basis to argue strongly on Canada's behalf that the same situation not be created with steel as was created with respect to softwood lumber.

The imposition of the import permit in September, 1986, caused considerable concern about steel importation by those associated with the automobile industry where "on-time" delivery and the efficient and rapid transfer of products across the border is very important. I want to congratulate the Government for having found ways to facilitate that rapid processing of permits in order to allay the fears that most manufacturers had about the effect of the permits in terms of automobile production.

Since steel products in the automobile industry go both ways and "on-time" delivery is still as important, I hope the Government will be as forthcoming as it was then in ensuring that the imposition of an export permit requirement will not constitute an impediment to commerce in the export and import of steel in the automobile industry.

On behalf of my Party I am pleased to join with my colleague in support of this legislation and seek its rapid passage and implementation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Addition to Export Control List or Import Control List

• (1700)

Mr. Axworthy: With respect to Clause 1, I want to refer the Minister to a very central question. We know that the purpose of the legislation, particularly in this clause, is to determine whether there is trans-shipment taking place and to ensure that countries are not avoiding or evading the VRA imposed by the United States Government. One of the key questions is how much reprocessing must take place in a Canadian mill using certain foreign steel components before it is considered to be Canadian. Under this clause we have the right to put it on the prohibited list. I suppose the key question is, if we are going to be applying certificates, can the Minister tell us how we are going to determine whether or not it is in fact covered by this particular section?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I could tell the House that the Government is not attempting in this Bill to establish criteria for a substantial transformation or rules of origin on steel. We believe the existing procedures, including auditing, will enable us to identify non-Canadian steel exported to the U.S. We are confident that through close co-operation between the Canadian and U.S. customs authorities, appropriate steps will be taken to ensure that Canada is not used as a back door for foreign steel into the U.S. market.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure the Minister quite answered my question. I think we are dealing in an area where perhaps she is prepared to elaborate. I understand Senator John Heinz, who was visiting here in Ottawa, is currently threatening to introduce a new Steel Bill in the United States Senate which would be incorporated in its new Trade Bill. He indicated that one of the problems they face is that Canadian steel for export is in fact a reprocessed steel, transformed from other products. I suppose the question is, if there is nothing in this Bill which captures that, then what will be the response from the United States and our response to that particular issue which has been raised by the United States Senators in discussing their own Trade Bill?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Hon. Member is sufficiently aware of the fact that it is up to the Americans to ensure that American law is being kept in this case. We do not intend to run around the border being the policemen for American law. We will co-operate. We will collect statistics. We will transmit those statistics. However, the issue the Hon. Member raises deals with the requirements set by the Americans in their market. I am sure that, given his stand on sovereignty issues in the past, the Hon. Member would not expect us to be the policemen in enforcing American law.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Minister is certainly right that I would not want the Canadian Government to be involved in setting those standards. One reason I am asking the question is to determine under this section, where the Minister has the right to place certain products on the prohibited list, what those products will in fact incorporate and whether they will take into account that there are various ranges of reprocessing which takes place between using certain steel products and the level of transformation which can be from 5 per cent to 50 per cent, 60 per cent or 70 per cent. I am asking whether we are intending to apply any test of that kind to determine whether or not they would be put on the list. That is the question I am asking.

Miss Carney: I have answered that by saying that after looking at this issue and studying it, and seeing whether it would be appropriate, we have decided it is not useful to establish criteria for substantial transformation or the rules of origin issue.

The purpose of this is to monitor steel, and we will be auditing the process so that those companies which in any way indicate they are cheating on the process or incorrectly identifying the origins of steel will be identified.

Mr. de Jong: If I could just follow through on that answer, Mr. Chairman, I think the industry itself has expressed its concern to the Government that if the monitoring process itself is not strong enough, it is wondering if the Government is prepared for further action.

In some ways it is perhaps a hypothetical question at this stage. I am sure the Minister will say: "Well, we are taking this step and then we will see what happens", but I am asking the Minister in essence to put on the record what her thinking is. At what stage would the Government consider taking some other measures?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that he is pushing or pressing for other measures. Other measures, of course, would get us into controls and voluntary restraints, and this House has worked hard to ensure that this measure is workable and will be productive. Beyond that I think we are very much into a hypothetical question. I am not going to say: "When this process fails, I will consider other things or other steps". I am saying that this process will work, that it will meet the needs for which it was designed.

Mr. de Jong: I have another concern. Does the Government feel it has the power in Clause 1 to be able to get the data it is seeking? Does the Minister believe she will get in all cases the mill of origin and the country of origin for steel imports and exports?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is, of course, yes. We have had a lot of consultation with the industry and with the union. We are advised that we will get the information we require in this process because it has been worked out with a lot of consultation from the affected parties. The other measure, which I mentioned earlier in answer to the question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), is that we are going to be auditing. We are going to have people in the field examining how this system is working. They will be reporting back to us on a continual basis.

Mr. de Jong: Will the Minister also have a program in place that the Government will be able to follow with respect to, let us say, steel coming into the country being either reprocessed, altered or not altered at all, so that the Government will be able to follow it through and see how it comes into the country, what happens to it and when and how it gets exported?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I believe I have already answered that by saying that this is the kind of information we are seeking. This process has been designed in consultation with the industry and the union. We are advised that we will get this information as we require it. The auditing process, I think, is a good back-up to ensure we do. If we find that there is some technical way by which we can improve it, of course, we will.

Mr. Axworthy: Can the Minister elaborate on the auditing process that will be introduced? Will it take the form of inspection or will it be just a paper examination? What kind of inspection or enforcement system will be put in place?

Miss Carney: The audit about which we have talked here will be carried out by the auditing services of the Department of Supply and Services. It will conform to the normal practices of the Department.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to change the focus slightly and ask the Minister if she can tell the House whether this information-gathering system is satisfactory to her counterparts in the United States with whom she has discussed it. Can we assume that the implementation of an information-gathering system, as the Minister has described it, will meet the objections of the Steel Institute, the Commerce Department and the steel Senators?

The reason I raise this question is for a very specific reason. As the Minister knows the Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested that he will be introducing in the Senate the inclusion of a specific trade Bill directed at Canada which would be incorporated into the large omnibus trade Bill which is now on the floor of the Senate. Can the Minister report whether in fact the implementation of this particular measure will succeed, in her estimation, in satisfying those various critics and forestalling those initiatives?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, we have had many discussions on this issue with the U.S. Cabinet Ministers involved. It has been raised by my American counterparts on numerous occasions, including just recently at the OECD. They have indicated to me that they are pleased that we have responded to this bilateral irritant in a positive way. Of course, we are happy that we have done this in a made-in-Canada way since a global problem is involved.

At the administration level in the U.S., they are quite prepared to see if this brings forward the type of information for which we are looking. There have been many discussions between officials, and the same type of positive response has been forthcoming.

The Hon. Member for Burlington recently returned from talks with the steel caucus. He has advised me that there is great interest in seeing if this can work.

The information that we will be collecting has not been collected before. We are looking to the fact that that information will give us some idea of what the trends are and what is happening both on the import and the export side.

If the Hon. Member is asking whether this will resolve once and for all our problems in the steel trade with the United States, I can say that this is not likely, but it is a good positive step. Everyone is interested in seeing it work. Because of the co-operation that we have had from members of the Opposition on this issue I assume that the Hon. Member is similarly disposed.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, on the latter point raised by the Hon. Minister, hopefully the Americans will accept our statistics. Once these amendments have been put through, we will have a much better source of statistics than will the Americans. We will also have better statistics with respect to American imports than what the Americans have concerning their exports of steel to Canada. Hopefully, the Americans will accept our statistics.

I have one other question which deals with Subclause (3) of Clause 1 which requires the Minister to table the statistical summaries in Parliament as soon as possible at the end of each calendar year. Can the Minister tell us whether or not the Government might be in a position to issue statistics on a more regular basis? The nature of the steel trade right now is that each month's figures are now looked at, and that can affect and influence what is happening in Congress. We often hear that Congressmen are reacting to figures that they received a month prior or the month prior to that. It would certainly be useful if we could have more regular statistics.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is a member of the parliamentary steel caucus. He is well aware of the fact that the present steel statistics that are published by the Americans are very often out of whack, to use a colloquial expression. One of the difficulties we face is that by the time the corrected figures are announced, figures which are usually lower than the initial ones, there is a public perception that we are flooding the American market with Canadian steel exports. So everyone in this House and anyone who has been party to this matter would agree that we have had a statistical problem. That is one of the reasons we are suggesting this amendment. It is so that we can collect statistics which will be better. Yes, they will be better than the ones produced by the Americans. That is why we will be transmitting them to and sharing them with the Americans. That is also why we will be publishing them on a monthly basis for the trade, which addresses the Hon. Member's point about when they would be available.

I want to underline that while there will be a monthly publication as soon as possible, there will only be one annual report to Parliament. I think that is perhaps where the Hon. Member may have been confused.

I also want to say that we have suggested to the Americans the setting up of a steel commission which would tackle such problems as the co-ordination of statistics and possibly look in a global fashion at the steel market from a North American perspective. The Americans have expressed interest in such a proposal. However, they have some concerns that it might violate their anti-trust laws. They are presently looking at it and will get back to us on it. That would deal with the problem identified by the Hon. Member.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 2—Import and Export Permits

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, as I understand Clause 2 it is that the Minister shall issue, upon application, the permits. I have just one concern in this respect. It is to do with the speed with which these permits will be issued. Will there be any problem at all? When an application is made, what sort of timeframe are we looking at in terms of the issuance of the permit?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, as I said in my speech, this is not a control program. We would strongly oppose any suggestion that it is a control program. Export and import permits will be freely available on request.

My officials advise me that they will be available from 44 or 48 computerized terminals across the country. So they will be available on an automatic computerized system. I think it will be done as expeditiously as possible.

• (1720)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I take from the Minister's answer that it would be almost automatic. The application is made, the paperwork is put through, and in a matter of days, at most, the permit would be issued, if not sooner.

Under what circumstance would the Minister deny a permit? If a company seeking a permit has a record of falsifying data and for some reason does not want to disclose fully the information requested, would the Minister deny a permit under such circumstances?

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, in order to respond further to the Hon. Member's question, these terminals are in customs brokers' offices or External Affairs offices, but they are readily available to the trade. We have taken great care to ensure that the terminals and access to the system are where people need them to be.

In terms of refusing permits, a permit would be refused if the information was falsified. I think the system is set up so that if the data is incomplete it is rejected. However, I am not familiar with the squeaks and bugs in the computer system. I would be glad to get more information on the technical operation of the computer system to the Hon. Member if he would desire.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may obtain some clarification from the Minister on the statement she made and on what apparently she has indicated on other occasions in the House that the provisions of Bill C-57, particularly Clause 2, are not intended to be control measures but are designed for the purpose of information gathering.

I want to indicate to the Minister the nature of my concern. This very day in media reports in the City of Halifax, there was an indication that the proposal to assist Sydney Steel Corporation might result in adverse consequences in that it would be suggested or the allegation would be made, in relation to international trade, particularly with the United States of America, that the Sydney Steel Corporation was being improperly subsidized, and that in turn this would result in or create difficulties in the United States in respect of the fair aspects of trading.

Because the new provisions require the issuance of an export permit in circumstances, I would like to ask the Minister whether there would be any intention at present or in the future that Sydney Steel would be placed in any jeopardy in relation to its trading with the United States because of any assistance it might receive.

On the face of it, the consideration may go beyond the provisions now before the House, but the fact of the matter is that the claim has been made that Sydney Steel, notwithstanding the minute amount of trading it does in steel transactions with the United States, might be creating difficulties in relation to free trade generally and steel trading particularly.

May I point out to the Minister, although I am sure she is aware, that the amount of trading Sydney Steel does with the United States is infinitesimal. In terms of general trading, I think it amounts to less than half of 1 per cent of the amount of steel exported to the United States. Yet it is claimed by some people, particularly other interested parties in the Province of Ontario—and it has even been suggested that it might be coming from Algoma Steel—that any assistance to Sydney Steel could result in serious consequences in terms of our international trade relations in general and steel trading in particular.

If the Minister could clarify that matter in relation to this Bill, I would be indebted to her.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, the matters which the Hon. Member raised go far beyond Bill C-57. I do not feel this is the appropriate forum to comment on them.

This legislation has no relation to the issue he raises. The only comment I could make is that the American industry has available to it American trade remedy law. If they feel that there are unfair trade practices, they have recourse under American law. Presumably the tests of that would be not only subsidy but injury.

However, the steel Bill about which we are talking here is to protect our status as a fair trader in steel. It does not deal with the issues the Hon. Member has raised.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Carney (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, provides a great deal of assistance to the steel industry. Since 1984, when the United States decided that it would cut back on imports of steel from offshore, the industry has been in tremendous turmoil and great uncertainty.

The problem before us now in steel, with the mentality and attitude of the United States Congress, is the kind of problem with which we will be dealing in the future. The United States Congress, if not the administration, is clearly moving toward an approach of managed trade. I do not believe that that is necessarily the view of the administration of the United States, but it is clearly the view of Congress. Since last November, when the Democrats took charge of the Congress, they have been in the driver's seat and have shown on two recent Bills relating to the water Act and the highways Act that they are clearly in charge in the United States Government.

The Bill really results from the exercise to establish voluntary restraint agreements in 1984. The U.S. administration and the Congress wished to back out from millions and millions of tonnes of steel coming into the U.S. market and from established voluntary restraint agreements with a couple of dozen countries. Some countries were trying to get several million tonnes of steel into the United States. The most obvious access to that tremendous U.S. market was Canada. We have always been fair traders with the United States. Algoma in Sault Ste. Marie buys all of its coal from the U.S. Much of the iron ore, a great deal of supplies and equipment are bought in the United States. The industry is very integrated. The steel caucus of the House of Commons has done a great deal to build an understanding and a liaison with Congressmen in the U.S., who have been going through a terrible time facing the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs in the steel industry. Clearly, when those voluntary restraint agreements were put in place in 1984 and early 1985, our share of the market was something around 3 per cent. In the first quarter of 1987, our share jumped dramatically. The pressure was on to prevent that.

There are Bills in the Congress. One is Senator Heinz' Bill which will limit Canada, Taiwan and other countries not under the voluntary restraint agreement to their share of the U.S. market. Hopefully, the legislation before us today to monitor exports to the United States will not only identify which steel is coming from fabricators and processors and which is coming from the basic steel producers, such as Algoma, Dofasco and Stelco, but it will also identify steel coming from Japan, South Korea and Brazil being fabricated, even to a modest extent in Canada, and then being trans-shipped to the United States.

If we find that large volumes of steel are from countries under voluntary restraint agreements with the United States, steel being trans-shipped through Canada will be identified and it will be included in their quotas going into the U.S. As a result, we will be able to secure and stabilize jobs for the basic steel producers, which is extremely important. We are hoping that the oil and gas industry will pick up. Companies like Algoma Steel have had a tremendous market in the United States for seamless steel tubing used in the oil and gas drilling exploration industry. They will not be subject to the kinds of quota impositions which Senator Heinz's Bill would be providing.

The Bill before us today will identify where the steel is coming from and where it is going to in the United States. When we create a tonne of steel and sell it to the United States from a fabricator or processor, we get about an hour's work on a tonne of steel. When we create it from iron ore or coal we get about eight hours' work.

We may be facing this same situation on other fronts. Clearly we will if the Government's move toward a free trade agreement were to be established. Regardless of that, our largest customer for many commodities is the United States. If the U.S. Congress moves to a have a managed trade system on other commodities this kind of monitoring service may be required.

Although Algoma Steel showed a profit in the first quarter—other companies have been more profitable—I do not think anyone believes that the steel industry is out of the woods yet. In the United States in the last four or five years over 300,000 jobs have been lost in the steel industry. We have lost many in Algoma Steel. We want to look to the day when there will be an opportunity for things to pick up in the oil and gas industry and so be able to sell steel to the U.S. If this action being taken through Bill C-57, were not taken we could not be sure when a Bill would come through the Senate or the House of Representatives to roll us back to some unreasonable percentage of our historical share of the U.S. market. The steel industry faces a long period of difficulty because of new commodities and products coming onto the market-place today.

If we are to work on a sectoral basis as we have with the Auto Pact, this can be done with steel. This industry is highly integrated. We buy American material and equipment and sell our finished product to them, and vice-versa. It is really a North American integrated industry. Percentages like Canada's 4.7 per cent of the American market send people like Senator Heinz into orbit. Often we find that the big steel manufacturing companies in the U.S. are buying semi-finished steel from Canadian companies. That kind of information will be revealed. It is very hard for the American steel industry to be complaining about Canadian imports when Americans are buying semi-finished material from our steel mills because the industry is highly integrated. There is movement back and forth.

I want to mention that the steel caucus of the House of Commons and the steel caucus in the United States made up of people in the Congress and House of Representatives have done a lot to assist in the understanding and provision of co-operation between the two countries on this issue. I hope the passage of this Bill well lead to an even greater understanding of the Canadian position so that we will not have this vital industry hampered by unreasonable protectionist methods in the United States. If it does, countries importing steel which are under voluntary restraint agreements will be affected. They will be caught by the mechanism, and the Draconian effect that protectionist methods would have on our integrated steel operations will not occur.

With those few comments, I would like to indicate my support for this legislation. I think it will be very important to the Canadian steel industry.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DESIGNATION OF ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday before the House adjourned, we were unable to rise to indicate officially to the House that today would be an allotted day for the New Democratic Party. This arrangement was agreed to at the House Leaders' meeting which took place yesterday afternoon and the New Democratic Party has filed an appropriate motion for debate. Therefore, when Orders of the Day are called, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to consider the motion on the Notice Paper standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) as the motion for the allotted day.

Mr. Speaker: Is there such agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

ILLICIT TRAFFICKING—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), announced the National Drug Strategy which sets a uniquely Canadian course in dealing with the problems posed by drug abuse and illicit trafficking. It recognizes the excellent work done by the RCMP, by Customs and Excise and by other law enforcement agencies in preventing the importation and trafficking of drugs.

In general, the programs of the strategy are directed at solving domestic problems in Canada. However, illicit trafficking is an international industry and it is clear that Canada cannot solve our drug abuse and trafficking problems in isolation.

Many of the drugs consumed in Canada such as cocaine and heroin are brought into our country illegally by well organized trafficking networks based overseas. In 1985, the RCMP and Customs seized 62 kilograms of heroin, 109 kilograms of cocaine and 19,000 kilograms of hashish. These are the last statistics available for 1985 and they probably understate the dimensions of the problem today.

Furthermore, Canadian territory often serves as a transit point for narcotics being sent by these trafficking networks to other countries. In addition to that, illicit psychoactive substances are produced in Canada to feed the terrible addictions of citizens of other countries. Clearly we must act to stem this traffic, not only because Canadians are its victims but also because we have a role to play as responsible citizens of the world.

[Translation]

Drug abuse is not a new phenomenon, but its extent is indeed. As early as in 1909 Canada participated actively in drafting an international convention on the control of opium trafficking. And today still we continue to play a major role within such United Nations bodies as the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. Yesterday, as a matter of fact, Canada was re-elected to this important commission which in past years had concentrated its efforts specially on the problem of supply reduction.

Along with other countries Canada played a part in the introduction of a new element in the approach taken by the Commission, namely the reduction of demand. We are also trying to take into account certain other elements such as the new complexity of international networks of traffickers.

[English]

Their tentacles now stretching around the world, these networks have refined their procedures for moving their product. Some utilize couriers who, travelling by air, carry the drugs strapped to their bodies. Other shipments are disguised as cargoes of innocuous commodities. The profits earned by this illicit enterprise are protected by a variety of methods, the use of shell companies and other means. The money earned from drug trafficking is sent to offshore havens.

These problems can only be faced effectively through international co-operation so the UN Commission is preparing a new international convention on illicit trafficking. The origin of this convention is a resolution of the UN General Assembly co-sponsored by Canada and adopted in December, 1984. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), served as a member of the Canadian delegation to the UN and announced Canada's co-sponsorship of that important international initiative. This new convention can become a powerful tool for law enforcement agencies around the world to use against traffickers. Canada places a high priority on successful completion of the new convention.

The Government is working internationally on three other fronts. The UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control sponsors projects which assist producer countries to develop and finance programs that will help farmers move away from drug production, help improve local standards of living, and help train local police to deal with the extremely well-organized drug traffickers. Canada has made substantial contributions to this body's general fund as well as giving two grants of $1 million apiece to UNFDAC projects in Thailand and Pakistan to develop alternative crops for farmers. That is a new policy direction for CIDA established in 1986. As well, we will continue to consider on a case-by-case basis requests from narcotics-producing countries for development assistance.

Second, our contribution to UNFDAC will be raised to $500,000 this year and $1 million by 1991 to demonstrate our commitment to international co-operation.

Third, we are expanding the consular awareness program of the Department of External Affairs to make Canadian travellers more aware of the dangers of drug purchase, drug possession, drug trafficking, and drug use abroad. Sir, more Canadians are in prison overseas for drug offences than for any other crime.

A UN sponsored international conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking will take place in Vienna from June 17 to June 26. Our delegates to this conference will be led by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In order to reflect truly the international approach of this Government to the issue of drug abuse the delegation will also include representatives from the provinces and the voluntary sector.

[Translation]

Canada played a significant role in drafting the 1971 convention on psychotropic substances. When in Vienna the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) will be tabling the accession instruments which will make it possible to enforce this convention here in Canada.

The Government acknowledges that wide-ranging efforts will be made in Canada to fight drug abuse and traffic. We also believe that if we choose to ignore the international aspects we will be doing so at our own risk. The part of our national drug strategy which relates to the international aspects attests to our intention to co-operate with other countries to reduce drug production, traffic and abuse both in Canada and abroad.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think today's announcement is another example of the Government's position on the drug question, much ado about nothing. I refer specifically to the Minister's announcement that we will be increasing the amount of money we give to the UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control. In the past it was the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who was responsible for funding our contribution to UNFDAC, which is indeed doing very important work as outlined by the Minister. At the beginning of this year that Department refused to continue paying that funding because they said it was a problem for the Department of External Affairs. The Department of External Affairs said it would not pay for our contribution, which at that point was just under $400,000, because it was a health and welfare problem. We played financial ping-pong on this issue for several months until finally, this week, we get word from the Government that, yes, its contribution to UNFDAC will continue and will indeed be increased. It is now, presumably, covered by the Department of External Affairs.

We were trying to get information as late as last week about whether the Government had taken up its responsibility to contribute to UNFDAC, but we could not get an answer from the Minister. We could not get an answer from External Affairs. We could not get an answer from Health and Welfare. As is typical of this Government, they were passing the buck. Health and Welfare said it was an international problem which should be funded through External Affairs. We now finally see that the Government is going to move in this area and for that we are grateful, but there is one area of the UN convention where the Government has unfortunately chosen not to act.

We heard the Minister talk today about the difficulty in stemming the increase in the flow of illicit drugs into Canada. Indeed, over the course of the last several months the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare heard from the RCMP and those involved in the interdiction of international trafficking, that indeed stemming the inflow of drugs into any country is practically impossible. We have to attack it from the demand as well as the supply end. However, there is one area where the Government could have acted and it would have followed up on the UN convention which is being developed. It could even have followed the example of the U.S., which it is prone to do, concerning what happens to drug profits. What happens to the money laundered through legitimate sources, including some Canadian banks, whether it be here in Canada or offshore?

We have heard questions in the House over the last number of months about why the Canadian Government did not introduce legislation to permit the seizure of assets gained through illegal methods. In order to stop the drug trade you have to make it less profitable. It is fine for the Minister to stand in the House and talk about illegal drugs coming into the country. We know that. We know that if we stem the tide of drugs coming in to Nova Scotia from offshore it may indeed spring up in another area of the country. However, if the Government had the political courage to introduce legislation to force Canadian banks to give up money received through illegal drug trafficking, if it had the political courage to say to Canadian banks that they could not receive laundered money, then we would start getting to the root of the problem.

Unfortunately, the Government has not had the courage to do that. In fact, notwithstanding the UN convention which is being developed, Canada again has blinkers on. Canada is going to be the last to get on board, just as it was the last to get on board this year with the UNFDAC contribution.

[Translation]

Nevertheless, I am glad to see that the Government is going to do something about the matter of psychotropic drugs. I think Canada was a leader in 1971, when the UN International Convention was drafted, but when it was signed in 1976, Canada was not a signatory. I think that we, that the previous Liberal Government should have signed the Convention to try and control the question of psychotropic drugs.

However, I want to warn the Minister that psychotropic drugs are not just the drugs that come to Canada.

• (1120)

We should log the Government's action in the area of psychotropic drugs. I wish that the previous Liberal Government had signed the convention which we were instrumental in beginning to develop in 1971, but it did not, and the Government is rectifying that.

I would like the Minister to be aware that the question of psychotropic substances is not only dealt with in the illegal drugs which are coming into the country, but also in drugs that are being made in Canada. I refer to recent press reports which show that in Montreal legal drugs are being garnered through the Canadian health system and sold as quaaludes, illegal drugs, in the United States. It is a very serious problem.

We also need to have answers on the question of designer drugs. I hope that when the Government introduces specific legislation following the UN Convention on Psychotropic Substances it will include the area of designer drugs.

[Translation]

The most important thing is, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government—if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)—is truly prepared to act, to fight against drugs, it will have to introduce, through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), certain amendments that will enable the federal Government to seize funds now in Canadian banks, whether here in Canada or abroad, and I am referring to profits made from drug trafficking.

[English]

If we are unprepared to seize assets garnered by illegal drug trade which are currently on deposit in Canadian banks, then all the money we are giving to UNFDAC, all of the work we are doing here, and the measures which have been announced by the Minister will be for naught. As long as there is a profit to be made from the drug trade and as long as there are Canadians who continue to use legal and illegal drugs, there will continue to be a problem. We must attack it from the demand side. In terms of the supply side we must definitely introduce legislation to permit us to seize assets from Canadian banks. Without that legislation all this talk is only puffery.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before specifically addressing the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) I would like to weigh the attack on drug abuse in terms of attacks on the supply versus the demand side. In examining the new drug strategy within the context of the demand side we must call attention to the fact that although a great deal of emphasis continues to be placed upon illicit drugs, street drugs, and over-the-counter prescription drugs, the same factors operate in impelling the use of the most dangerous and widely used drug, namely alcohol.

In addressing the issue of demand it is clear that essentially the same factors operate in the overuse of alcohol as in the overuse of over-the-counter drugs, marijuana, and other street drugs which are frequently abused. Having said that, it is certainly clear that immense tragedy is caused through the use of drugs which are exchanged internationally, whether drugs derived from opium, such as cocaine, or some of the new synthetic drugs which are subject to abuse.

The program announced by the Government is impressive on first sight. We are told that $210 million will be spent over the next five years. However, we must put that and the entire program in perspective. In the first year only $20 million is to be spent. When you really think about it, $210 million is not an awful lot of money considering the immensity of the problem that we are attempting to attack.

Furthermore, we have a concern about the distribution of that money and its focus with respect to the essentials of the problem. I rose in this House the other day to express concern about the fact that this program was announced without reference to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare which is engaged in an examination of the issue of alcohol and drug abuse. I was pleased to hear from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that the recommendations of that committee will be taken into account as the National Drug Strategy develops its specifics. I hope that that promise will be met. I hope we will have an opportunity to scrutinize this program with a fine tooth comb to ensure its effectiveness.

In terms of the record of the past Liberal Government and what has happened heretofore, we welcome the program announced this morning by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In many respects it is long past due. The accession to the international Convention on Psychotropic Substances which was approved in 1971 pleases us immensely. Canada's contribution heretofore to the UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control amounted to $300,000. This will be raised to $500,000, and we of course welcome that. We welcome the somewhat more tenuous promise that this will be raised to $1 million by 1991. However, we must put this in perspective as well. Italy, for example, is contributing something in the order of $300 million for the same purpose.

We know that these funds are designed to help bring about economic changes which will take farmers in the Third World away from drug production and divert them to the cultivation of more useful crops. This entails economic changes which will enable those Third World countries to adapt to new circumstances. When we analyse that situation we see that the Third World is once again being exploited to its disadvantage. Considerably more effort must be exerted to make it possible for Third World countries and ordinary farmers there to prosper without being involved in the cultivation of drugs which do harm in those countries as well as in Canada.

I am under the impression that this program will not divert funds from CIDA which are allocated for essentially the same purpose. I would be very disturbed if funds were diverted from CIDA to accomplish the same purpose.

Expanding consular awareness of the dangers of being involved in drug usage in foreign countries when travelling is laudable, although I am not so sure of how significant it is. One would have to measure that against the failure to address the issue of AIDS with alacrity. I think that is a far more serious problem. Although I recognize that while travellers will not become addicts through a 10 day or two-week exploration of these agents in foreign countries, it is true that they may find themselves in serious difficulty.

We must address the issue of laundered money and the attempt to control it. We understand that there will be legislation introduced in the House tomorrow to address the problem of money being diverted through financial institutions into legitimate concerns which hides the existence of moneys earned through the illicit drug trade. However, I cannot possibly understand how a Government which wants to be taken seriously on the issue of laundering money earned through the illicit drug trade would fail to address the need for the reporting of funds deposited or internationally exchanged. This is done very effectively in the United States and ensures that they will have the means of detecting the fact that this money is gained from the illicit drug trade and the use of that money for other purposes, which subsequently makes it impossible to track down. If the Government is serious, then it will immediately introduce legislation comparable to that in the United States which has been so potent in dealing with the problem of laundered money derived from the sale of illicit drugs.

In this report, the committee has tried to set forth the objectives and directions of our official development assistance program for the next several years. We suggest a change of focus to human development and human resource development. We urge a greater emphasis on human rights. We urge, in the strongest possible terms, a major decentralization to the field. In fact, "out of Ottawa to the field" is a thought that runs throughout the whole report.

We make new proposals about tied aid. We support an increased role for the non-governmental organizations, institutions and business. We think that, on the whole, we have responded to the concerns expressed to us by Canadians and people in other countries.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—TAX REFORM—OPPOSITION TO FOOD TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That this House oppose any imposition of a federal tax on food and urge the Government to reject any such tax as part of its tax reform package.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that this debate is necessary today. It would not have been necessary had the Government been more clear about its intentions when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his statement on tax reform on May 6.

As it is, the Government is continuing to play games with the Canadian consumers and families with average incomes across the country about whether it will carry through with its intention to put a 6 per cent or 8 per cent sales tax on the family grocery bill for every Canadian family. That is the issue and the reason that I and my Party are asking members of all Parties to join with the New Democrats in making it very clear that the House should oppose any imposition of a federal tax on food and urge the Government to reject any such tax as part of its tax reform package.

The reason for scheduling the debate now is simple. When the Minister of Finance outlined his plans and gave the House a preview of what he would be exposing on June 18, I warned him that he would be facing a tax revolt from New Democrats and Canadians from coast to coast if the Government carried out its intention to impose a business transfer tax that included food. We want there to be no mistake about this issue and that is why today's debate is so important.

Let me outline exactly what is at stake. For the past two years the Minister of Finance and the Government have been inching toward a comprehensive package of tax reform. The Finance Minister indicates that he wants to bring personal and corporate tax rates down in Canada to around the levels that are now being levied in the United States after its recent tax reform.

There are two ways in which he wants to gain the revenues to accomplish that. As we understand it, he intends to broaden the tax base by eliminating tax loopholes and unproductive tax deductions and exemptions. The Americans succeeded in lowering their tax rates in that way, broadening the base at the same time.

The Canadian tax system has a heavier burden to bear than in the United States, mainly because we have a more comprehensive and adequate structure of social services, particularly medicare. Canadians would not want it any different.

However, as the Finance Minister comes to grips with this particular problem it appears that he is now intending to take a major amount of new revenues from the sale tax system.

He has indicated for some time that he wishes to reform Canada's antiquated sales tax system, the federal manufacturers' sales tax. The NDP agrees that that tax is long overdue for reform. In its present form, it tends to give a tax break to importers bringing goods into Canadian markets and, at the same time, tends to discriminate against Canadian exporters who lose an edge when competing against other countries which more effectively rebate sales taxes from their exports.

The motivation which has led the Minister to embrace the concept of sales tax reform is the prospect of major increases in federal revenues which would then allow him to cut the personal and corporate tax rates. In this way he hopes to emerge as the hero who saved the fortunes of the Conservative Party and enabled it to return as a minority Government rather than simply becoming a one-term Government and a brief blip in the political history of this country, despite their enormous victory in 1984.

The Minister of Finance, and I have said this before, has been playing a shell game with Canadian taxpayers. He is trying to come up a hero by saying: "Look at what I have done", in terms of reducing the personal tax rates when he makes his announcements on the evening of June 18. At the same time he is not prepared to have Canadians look at what they will be paying in additional taxes or what the inflationary impact will be of the broadening and increasing of the sales tax system as is apparently being contemplated by the Government.

The present manufacturers' sales tax covers only about 32 per cent of Canada's economy, that is, that two-thirds of the goods and services which are sold every year, or the value-added in the economy, are exempt from this tax. This means that the tax discriminates against manufactured goods in favour of services and that it is unduly high because there are so many areas not covered. In other words, the present revenue of about $16 billion from the sales tax could be achieved with a rate of only 6 per cent or so, if all goods and services were taxed rather than only some.

A 1 per cent rate in the proposed business transfer tax would give the Government a revenue of about $2.6 billion. What is happening is that I think the Minister of Finance has allowed himself to be seduced. He has been seduced not in the sense that might embarrass him politically, as has happened recently in the United States, but he has been seduced in the sense that it could be very adverse politically. He has been seduced by the technocrats in the Department of Finance who themselves are convinced that, for technical reasons, what Canada should have is a business transfer tax, which applies as much to people's weekly grocery bill at Safeway, Loblaws, the IGA or at their independent food store, as to the purchase of a car or a lawyer's service. They want to apply it to such things as people's payments for day care. I am not sure if they want to apply it to dentists' bills. We have not seen what the exemptions might be. However, clearly, the fewer the exemptions the happier the advisers to the Minister are going to be.

The Government has carefully worded a statement on this particular subject which was designed to be uninformative. I accuse the Minister of Finance of being the Gypsy Rose Lee of tax reform. I am reminded of those fan dancers who used to flourish back in the 1920s and 1930s. Every time they were about to expose all by throwing a fan into the air, they would tactfully put another fan just in front of the naughty bits. That is what the Minister of Finance has been doing with respect to his proposals for the sales tax.

The Minister of Finance is talking about the creation of a "broad-based, multi-stage sales tax". Who on earth could be opposed to that? Who in fact could understand exactly what that means. When we asked more detailed questions, we were put off. We were told: "No, the Government is not backing off from its intentions to reform the sales tax. It is only laying out three optional ways by which the sales tax can be collected". Lo and behold, when we look at it more carefully, the plans of the tax experts in the Department of Finance to tax food, are still there front and centre. It is still to be repudiated by the Government.

As the Minister of Finance put it, his first option remains the business transfer tax. He calls it a "federal tax only without invoices". He calls it a "goods and services tax". He says: "It is relatively simple both to administer and to comply with but only if it is applied uniformly on all goods and services". There is no mistaking what that means. It means that sales tax would be applied on food as well as on every other article of service which businesses and consumers purchase.

This also means that this tax is misnamed if it is being called a "business transfer tax". It is a consumer tax. It is a tax which will be paid by consumers. It is not a business tax. It is not a substitute for adequate increases in corporation or profit taxes. People will save a few dollars on their personal income tax, but will end up paying hundreds of dollars more in sales tax and will be worse off rather than better.

I grant that other options are being considered. A federal-provincial sales tax is one suggestion. The Government has also been talking about a value-added tax along the European model which would permit more discrimination between different types of goods being taxed. However, there are a lot of hurdles in the way of these two particular proposals. Not all the provinces have jumped for joy at the prospect of a joint tax. One of the reasons for that, of course, is that they feel it is important that they be able to carry out some measure of provincial fiscal policy by means of the exemptions in the areas in which they tax in the sales tax field.

In Quebec I believe it is still the case that soft goods, furniture, for example, are not taxed by a sales tax system because of the fact that those goods are important to Quebecers and it is a way in which the Quebec Government benefits an important local industry and its consumers in the process. That would probably not be permitted under a joint federal-provincial sales tax.

I think it could be very embarrassing as well if the federal-provincial sales tax were to range between a rate of, say, 6 per cent or 7 per cent in Alberta, if Alberta continued not to have any provincial sales tax, and as much as 14 per cent or 15 per cent in Newfoundland. I think a combined invisible tax like that could easily lead to a great deal of illegal but still threatening tax evasion.

The other prospect is the value-added tax. That, of course, has been resisted very strongly by small businesses which fear the paper work and which also fear the prospect of being made into a million strong army of tax collectors for the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government. In other words, from what we can see, the Government is still intent on this food tax despite the reaction from coast to coast that this is not a tax which Canadians are prepared to support.

What is the impact of the Government's proposal? We estimated, based on a very conservative average of $5,000 in expenditures on food for an average family in a year, that the proposed tax would cost about $300 per family. This was assuming a 6 per cent tax rate. In the last three weeks I have had a chance to look at some of the work of the experts in the accounting industry and elsewhere. They are now talking about an 8 per cent tax rate for the business transfer tax. Right away the levy is up to about $400 in additional tax which will be paid on food by the average family.

The experts indicate more and more that the Government is going to be looking not for a tax-neutral prospect but for increased revenues from the sales tax, which revenues currently total about $16 billion. That might mean that the rate could easily come in as high as 9 per cent or 10 per cent rather than 8 per cent. From the food industry, that is, farmers, producers, retailers and ultimately consumers, it is estimated that the tax proposed by the Government, or this particular option available to the Government, would result in a $4 billion tax levy on one of the absolute essentials of life for Canadians.

It is hard to avoid paying for rent or housing costs. Nevertheless, one could at least argue that many Canadians do have some options if they find they have difficulty meeting housing costs. If they happen to have a home of their own, they could take in a lodger. They may not like it. It is not the Canadian way these days, but that is one way. They could also move into a smaller apartment. That is not desirable, but it is a possibility.

Mr. Orlikow: If they can find one.

Mr. Cassidy: If they can find one, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) points out. If a family is hit by the rising cost of living and find they cannot afford new clothing, perhaps they can get by with a little less clothing in a particular year. For families living in poverty that is barely possible. It is possible, although not desirable, with respect to families with working incomes. However, we cannot take $100 a week grocery bill, and that is low for a lot of Canadian families, and suddenly cut that down to $50 or $25. We cannot go without food. We cannot ask a family to do that. We cannot say to a family: "Your kids are going to have to live on macaroni and cheese for now and for the next year because of a sales tax which is being imposed by the Minister of Finance".

So what can the Government do? So the Government can give the capital gains tax exemption to high-rollers and people who tend to work on Conservative campaigns. I do not know if that is what will be dealt with in tax reform, but it is the type of choice we are likely to face.

• (1150)

There is a very real prospect of the Government imposing this tax unless we in Parliament and Canadians can get the message through to the Government that this is not an acceptable tax.

Mr. Gustafson: You're dreaming!

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Members suggests that I am dreaming. If I am, then I ask him why the Minister of Finance has, in response to many questions here in the House of Commons, not indicated absolutely clearly that this is no longer an option being considered by the Government. If the Government wanted to be free from charges that it was intending or considering this particular tax, then the way out was very easy and clear. Members of the Government could simply say to me: "Mike, stop getting worried. Tell your Party to stop getting worried. We are not going to do it". I hope that perhaps the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), who I believe will speak in this debate, or perhaps the Minister of Finance, will get up in the House today to reassure us that that will be the case. If that were the result of this particular debate, then I would feel that the time of the House had been well spent on this Opposition Day motion in opposing the food tax and getting the Government to make it clear that it is no longer considering this particular measure.

The Government has suggested that the way around the problem created by taxing food is to provide a sales tax credit in order to take the burden off those families which would be most affected. We will of course have to wait until June 18 to see what the Government has in mind. But the performance up until now leaves my Party, myself and many Canadians very uneasy.

The Government says: "Look what we did. We innovated. We brought in a refundable sales tax credit of $50 per adult and $25 per child. That is directed at families earning under $15,000 per year. Are we not wonderful?" That measure does not compensate poor families for the regressive impact of the sales tax that is currently being applied. It does not compensate them for more than a portion of the increases in sales tax that have been levied by the Progressive Conservatives since coming to power just under three years ago.

In addition, the refundable sales tax credit does nothing to compensate the average Canadian family for the fact that the Conservatives have increased their tax burden by something in the order of $1,500 per year since they came to power in 1984. When the Conservatives came to power they said: "There is waste and inefficiency in Government. We will root it out". What they did instead was to bring in enormous tax increases which have been levied almost entirely on personal taxpayers and on people paying sales tax, not on corporations. In fact, we estimate that between 1984 and 1990 the increase in sales taxes on the average Canadian family alone will amount to some $20 billion on a cumulative basis.

What is significant is that the sales tax credit that is applied now does not apply to people earning over $20,000 per year. It does not apply to a family whose principal earner works at GM in Oshawa or Chrysler. It does not apply to a farmer struggling to get by and still having some income from a farm in western Canada. It does not apply to a clerk or a secretary raising a couple of kids and living in Vancouver where there are very heavy housing prices. It does not apply to a fisherman and his family on the coast of Nova Scotia or Newfoundland if their income is over $20,000 per year. It only applies to people earning less than $15,000 per year.

The poverty line in a major Canadian city is about $20,000 for a family of four. So many families in poverty are not benefiting at all from the sales tax credit. But government spokespeople have inadvertently, perhaps, let it out on many occasions that they only see this tax credit, which might amount to $300 per year, going to people earning less than $15,000 per year. Therefore all those families having trouble meeting mortgage payments of $600 a month, and all those families having trouble meeting rent for a home of $700 per month, as well as meeting the costs of transportation, food and maybe getting skates for the kids so that they can go to figure skating or play hockey, will be meeting a burden of $400 per year or more in increased sales tax with no compensation through the tax credit at all.

An Hon. Member: Wait and see.

Mr. Cassidy: I have been waiting for assurance but we have seen nothing. What I have seen from the Conservatives is that they have raised the burden of sales tax and the tax burden on the average Canadian family by $1,500 per year. They have already begun to extend the sales tax to food. They have taxed candy. They have taxed potato chips. They have levied a tax on kids. They have taxed snacks. They have taxed soft drinks at a time when we are trying to encourage people to get away from drinking by taking alternatives. They have raised the excise taxes on gasoline, alcohol and tobacco.

My time is very close to being up. I would point out that the Government is wrong when its experts say that it is more progressive to give this tax credit than it is to exempt food from tax. Their own figures, which were given to me by the Department of Finance, indicate that a family earning $15,000 per year spends 20 per cent of its income on food. I think that it is probably more. A family living on $60,000 per year spends less than 9 per cent of its income on food. Therefore a tax on food will hit the low income family much harder than it will hit the family earning much more money.

I point out that in Japan there is a taxpayers' revolt despite the fact that the proposed valued-added tax in Japan will not hit food, I point out that the value-added, or business transfer, tax may begin small but that the Government will be tempted to raise it the way it has been raised in Britain, France and other countries where it is now up to levels of 15 per cent or 16 per cent. If 8 per cent on food is intolerable, 15 per cent would be absolutely unconscionable. The Government has done little to maintain or gain public confidence, which is why New Democrats—

[Translation]

This is why the New Democratic Party—my Party—agrees with Canadian men and women who openly tell the Government: Time has come for you to assure us that no tax will be levied against food, that the business transfer tax will never apply to food, that each week the average Canadian family will not be forced to pay this tax which would cost $400 a year.

[English]

Mr. Hockin: I have a brief question for the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to what he had to say. I was searching for his proposal for sales tax reform. It is easy to criticize whatever models are put in front of one with respect to sales tax reform, especially to take one of the models and speak against it for an extended period of time. But what is the Hon. Member's proposal for sales tax reform?

With respect to the food tax I want to ask the Hon. Member how adamant he is about what he said. If he does not believe in taxing food, then I would like to pin him down very categorically on that. Does he believe that we should continue our two-price approach to wheat? That is my first question.

My second question is the following. What if it were proven to him—and I am not too sure it could be proven—that it was progressive, that is, a heavier tax proportionately on the wealthy, if certain foods were taxed? Would the Hon. Member then favour a food tax in that situation?

He has given us his figures which indicate that any type of food tax would be regressive. What if there were figures and certain food products were taxed in such a way that it was progressive, that is, if we taxed the wealthy much more than the poor, then what would the Hon. Member have to say? This does not mean that the Government is contemplating a food tax. But I would like to know where the Hon. Member stands.

Would he be in favour of such a tax if it were progressive as opposed to regressive? What is his stand on the two-price wheat policy, which is tied to food? What is his proposal for tax reform?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am impressed by the fact that the Minister should have jumped on the first opportunity to ask questions to the New Democratic Party. Yet I am deeply disappointed that at the same time the Minister did not make a statement on the Government intentions.

Since the Minister will have to leave the House during the debate, I would begin by asking him whether or not the Government intends to tax the increases. The Minister's question is as follows: Would we be supportive if it could be proven that this tax is progressive?

Well, Mr. Speaker, my answer is simply that, according to the figures given the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs by the Department of Finance officials whom I have just quoted, the 1982 report on family expenditures reveals that a family with an annual income of $60,000 spends about $5,000 a year on food. This is probably a conservative estimate, but the figures were provided by his Department. It accounts for about 9 per cent of the income of a family earning $60,000 a year. In the case of a family with an annual income ranging from $15,000 to $20,000, the corresponding figure is $3,000, or $60 a week. This represents 20 per cent of the annual earnings of a family with an income of $15,000.

In other words, a family averaging $15,000 a year spends proportionately twice as much on food as does a family with an annual income of $60,000.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in light of the remarks of the Department of Finance officials, it goes to show to what extent a tax on food can be regressive: it hits a family earning $15,000 twice as hard as another one with an income of $60,000, and this despite the fact that it is much easier for the latter to bear taxes for federal Government services.

I would suggest that if the Government wants to levy progressive taxes against high income families, then let us get them through an income tax system because, as I see it, the Minister's proposal is unlikely to produce a progressive sales tax system.

The two-price system for wheat, Mr. Speaker, does of course influence somewhat the price of bread and other wheat-derived products in Canada. That I admit. However, Mr. Speaker, it also represents a direct benefit for a major sector of our economy, namely, the farmers across this country.

That is why we support the system. The Minister asks whether the New Democratic Party is opposed to any taxes being levied either directly or indirectly on food. That, of course, would be unrealistic. For instance, farmers buy gas for their tractors. There are other items they buy for their production process, on which they pay some kind of sales tax or excise tax. Fine. And these taxes are part of the price we ultimately pay for the end product.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the tax burden on food today is perhaps 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent, certainly not more than that. And now the Minister and his Government want to increase that burden to as much as 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent. We don't know exactly how much. There is a big difference, Mr. Speaker, between a minor tax that indirectly enters into the price of a product and a tax deliberately levied by the Government.

So what is the NDP saying?

[English]

We are saying that we should not rely more on indirect taxes. We are saying you should not tax food. We are saying, yes, you should reform the manufacturers' sales tax. We accept the need to broaden the base, Mr. Speaker. We are suggesting that with all of the brain power in the Department of Finance the Department should have been able to do better than what it has done so far. Is the Minister in favour of taxing food? Yes or no? What is the position of the Government?

Mr. Darling: Wait and see.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will have two more questions. First, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and then the Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: I am glad to see the New Democratic Party join the Liberals in opposing the food tax. However, I would like to ask the Hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) whether he agrees with the action taken last year by the socialist Government—I know that he and his leader are very much attuned to international socialism—whether he agrees with the action taken by the Government of New Zealand, a so-called socialist government, which last year imposed a 10 per cent tax on food.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. The answer is obvious, and it is clear form the speech I just made, that I am opposed to these taxes in our particular situation here in Canada. So I am opposed to this tax, even if certain socialist governments have imposed a tax on food. I don't know exactly what kind of tax was imposed by the socialists or rather the Labour government in New Zealand. I would have to look into that. But it did impose this tax, and I am against it. The question we have to deal with now is: Is the Government in favour of this tax, yes or no? Why these delaying tactics and refusal to assure Canadian consumers that food will not be taxed?

[English]

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments and the statements of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I think we are a bit pre-emptive with this discussion today. We might as well be discussing what the weather is going to be like on the weekend. We should wait until June 18 before we get into actual details and discussion on tax reform in this House.

Be that as it may, I seem to interpret from the Member's comments that he is in support of tax reform but not in support of the food tax. If that is the case, I was surprised that he did not mention the New Democrats' travelling road show across the country some months ago, of which I believe he was a part. I trust New Democrats did not talk just to the interest groups but to average Canadians. Did the average Canadians to whom they spoke support the over-all concept of tax reform?

There being a hidden tax in this country, that being the deficit with which we are all faced, how would he as Finance Minister in a New Democratic Party Government of Canada deal with that hidden tax which costs Canadian families thousands of dollars a year? Would he bring in tax reform or would he change the manufacturers' sales tax? Would he cut the cost of government? How would he deal, as we have to deal, with that hidden tax of the Canadian deficit?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the questions from the Hon. Member. I would point out that when we went across the country with Tax Probe 86—and I am glad the Member has taken note of that because I think we did do a good job in talking to a broad range of Canadians—what people said most of all was, "Yes, as taxpayers we are prepared to pay our share of federal taxes." We did not find a widespread tax revolt with people saying, "No, the tax burden is so awful, let us cut it by half". It was not a Proposition 13 type of mentality such as that found in the State of California. What we found instead though was people saying, "When we pay our taxes, we want to know that the tax system is really being just and fair".

One of the things which the Hon. Member's Government has done, which I think has done more than any other single measure to undermine people's confidence in the justice and fairness of the tax system, was to give a half a million dollar exemption on capital gains. We know that 90 per cent of that benefit will go to people in the top 1 per cent or 2 per cent of the income range, to high-flyers speculating in art, land, and whatever else. That is where most of the benefit of that measure has gone. That is why that kind of measure has to be taken away.

An NDP Government would be committed to tax reform along the kinds of principles that I have outlined in a number of speeches both in the House of Commons and elsewhere. We do want to maintain a substantial reliance on direct taxation. We believe that the corporate share of the tax burden in Canada has been allowed to go down too far, both by Liberal and Conservative Governments.

We deplore the degree to which this Government, now in office since 1984, has loaded billions of dollars of additional tax burden on to average Canadians while putting peanut-sized tax demands on the corporate sector. Those are some of the guidelines and principles that we would follow. We believe that if we can get the economy of Canada going, that in itself would reduce government expenditures, increase revenues and make a major contribution to bringing down the deficit, which I think most people feel is, in the long term, unduly high.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks, I should like to tell the Hon. Member that the whole question of sales tax on food and other matters will be properly discussed on June 18. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has made that clear, and I ask the Hon. Member to wait until then. He can certainly warn the Government, if that is what he wants to do, and prod the Government not to do things; that is an historic role of the Opposition. However, it is also an historic role of the Opposition—and I want to make this point very clear before I begin my remarks—to present credible alternatives.

In my view the role of the Opposition is to check the Government, to prod the Government, and to be a responsible alternative. What we are hearing this morning is a little of the first and the second and none of the third.

In order for the country to be properly informed in a debate about tax reform, it seems to me that we should have contesting alternatives in the Chamber, not simply negative criticisms of attempts to be constructive in reforming our tax system.

I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate today and to deal with some of the broad questions on tax reform. The Hon. Member said that he was concerned that the Minister of Finance has not been as informative as he would like. Let me summarize where the Government is, up until now, and set the stage for June 18.

In responding to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), I should note at the start that the timing of his motion is a little strange. In just three weeks from today the Minister of Finance will be presenting to the House and to the country the Government's proposals for tax reform. That is really the time to have this debate, but for some peculiar reason we are having it today. I could have understood why we are having it today if, as I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre had a whole set of alternative proposals to bring to us from his task force and wanted to put them before the House to allow us to criticize and examine them. However, that is not the case. Instead, we hear nothing about that; we just hear warnings about particular fears he has about what might be announced on June 18.

It is bizarre that we are having the debate today but, now that we are having it, let me proceed. The Minister of Finance has already made it clear that important and broad-reaching changes to our tax system will be proposed. He has indicated the general nature of some of the approaches of tax reform. It is clear from this that the White Paper will contain major reforms.

The Hon. Member opposite is clearly impatient. I have already heard his impatience this morning. He is not prepared to wait until June 18 to see exactly what will be proposed, but he will have to wait. Moreover, he has presented a motion with a strangely narrow focus. It ignores the whole broad range of tax issues which have a bearing on the fairness and balance of our tax system.

It is often said that it is good politics to concentrate on one issue and criticize it. I am not too sure that that is what the Canadian public is expecting—just criticism on one aspect of tax reform. I think it is looking for comprehensive reform and it is looking to all Parties not to have a strangely narrow focus but to have a comprehensive focus.

Perhaps it is not so surprising that the motion is couched narrowly, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has made the broad directions of tax reform quite clear. It is apparent from what he has said already that a fairer tax system is emerging.

The tax burden will be redistributed, to be shared more equitably among taxpayers in similar circumstances. The Minister has stated that the Government's revenue sources will be better balanced with less reliance on personal income taxes and higher take-home pay for the great majority of Canadians.

I have heard the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) speak on tax reform in the House. His principle seems to be close to but not nearly as specific as that of the Government. However, these principles are supported by Canadians—that we should redistribute the burden, share it more equitably, make the system simpler, and have less reliance on personal income taxes than we have had in the past.

[Translation]

The Minister has stated that the income tax system for individuals will be improved as a result of reduced tax rates, fewer income tax brackets, fewer special privileges which mainly benefit high income taxpayers and an increased use of tax credits as opposed to tax exemptions, a change that will help very substantially those in the lowest income bracket.

In addition, the switch to a tax credit system may be seen as a progressive social change, because doing so, we can use the personal income tax system to continue to improve the situation of low-income Canadians.

[English]

The Minister of Finance has left no doubt about his intentions in this regard. They are changes that will be widely welcomed by Canadians, so it should not be surprising that an opposition motion attacking the Government is silent on all these very positive measures. It is silent, too, on the Minister's stated intention to change the corporate tax system. The corporate tax base will be broadened by eliminating many special preferences and reducing others.

The Hon. Member spoke briefly about corporate tax, but he did not say very much about it. The corporate tax base will be broadened by eliminating many special preferences and reducing others. Many more profitable corporations will pay tax. The resulting increase in revenues will permit a reduction in corporate tax rates, so that they remain competitive with those of our major trading partners. Nothing could be more clear about where we are heading with tax reform, which is to lower the rates and broaden the base.

We have not heard much about what Hon. Members opposite would do to bring about improvements which are so badly needed in our sales tax system. The flaws in the sales tax system have been known for many years and documented in a whole series of studies. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member presented our case when he said that two-thirds of the goods and services in Canada are not taxed, and that we must have a reform of the federal sales tax. I listened closely, and I could not get what his reform of federal sales tax would be. In fact, I asked him direct questions on this and I still could not get the answer.

We have a sales tax which discriminates against our own producers in favour of foreign competitors. This is unbelievable. Any foreigner who looks at our federal sales tax system finds it hard to believe that we would have such a system.

Due to a different tax base, the effective rate of taxes on average is one-third higher on Canadian products. What would Hon. Members opposite do about that? Not only that, but the tax discriminates against similar products made by competing manufacturers within a particular industry. It even discriminates within an industry, as well as discriminating against our exporters.

About one-half of the total sales tax collected is derived from tax on business inputs. The result is an indirect charge on exported goods estimated at about 1 per cent of the sales value of exports, burdening Canadian producers with a competitive disadvantage in world markets. Moreover, the federal sales tax is too narrowly based, as I have said. With such a narrow base, tax rates have been forced to rise for fiscal purposes. The result has been to distort efficient operations in our economy.

Mr. Cassidy: What about food? Is food in or out?

Mr. Hockin: You will find out on June 18.

Mr. Cassidy: Why not now?

Mr. Hockin: Hon. Members opposite are well aware of the sorry state of our sales tax structure. What would they do about it? The Hon. Member wants to know only about one thing—the taxation of food. He knows that the answer to that, and the alternatives Canadian people are invited to look at with regard to that will come on June 18.

What we are not told by the motion—and I do not expect we will hear any suggested answers from them in this debate—is what they would do about federal sales tax reform.

The Minister of Finance has indicated the Government's approach. His White Paper in three weeks will set out proposals to replace the flawed and inadequate federal sales tax. Its replacement will be a broadly based, multi-stage sales tax in which the wide coverage will permit a lower sales tax rate.

Mr. Cassidy: Including food, eh?

Mr. Hockin: The question of what is to be included in the sales tax base is one of the important issues to be addressed in the process of sales tax reform.

Mr. Cassidy: Make up your mind. Are you in or out?

Mr. Hockin: You will know. We want to hear the considered views of interested groups and individual Canadians before taking a decision.

We have heard some of the Hon. Member's views. We ask for some more details, but we do not get them. The composition of the tax base will also be a major item in our discussions with provincial Governments as we explore the alternative mechanisms which could be used in implementing a national multi-stage sales tax.

• (1220)

There is one important element in our tax system that has particular bearing on this whole question and I refer to the refundable sales tax credit which was introduced by the Government in the February 1986 Budget. The credit is $50 for adults and $25 for dependent children and will be refundable in full for families with net incomes of up to $15,000. All Parties have acknowledged the progressive nature of this credit. Obviously the credit will have an important bearing in our discussions on the sales tax base.

Mr. Cassidy: No, all Parties have had real problems with it.

Mr. Hockin: You don't agree with refundable sales tax credit? That has not been the position of the Hon. Member's Party. It has praised the concept and we have made it a reality.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, we have praised the concept but not the implementation by your Party.

Mr. Hockin: This Government made it a reality, and whatever changes will be made to the sales tax must be considered and judged in the over-all context of the tax reform package that will be tabled on June 18.

As I have already mentioned, the Minister of Finance has made it clear that important changes to personal income tax will have a major effect on providing fair tax treatment for lower-income Canadians. Of all the fears I have heard from the Hon. Member opposite, he has totally neglected to mention how the Minister of Finance has made it clear that lower-income Canadians will find their taxes much lower. That was not part of his speech in any way. I can only urge Hon. Members and Canadians generally to judge what we do on its over-all effect on creating a better and fairer federal tax system for Canada.

I would also like to remind the House that the goal of a better and fairer tax system is not a newly adopted policy of the Government. It has been a major priority ever since the Government took office in 1984. In his agenda paper of the fall of 1984, the Minister of Finance identified the tax system itself as an obstacle to the country's economic growth. I do not know if Canadians realize how important that statement is. There are many obstacles to growth in Canada, but who would have dreamed that the tax system itself was one of those obstacles? It is, and the Minister recognized reform of the tax system as an important aspect of economic renewal.

Since then, in a deliberate and measured way, the Government has introduced a number of important improvements to the tax system. With his first Budget, the Minister of Finance tabled a discussion paper outlining directions for reforming the corporate income tax system and the first phase of those reforms was carried forward in the February, 1986, Budget. We are already in the process of reform and of broadening the tax base to permit a reduction in corporate tax rates. The second phase of corporate tax reform will be launched in the June 18 White Paper.

What has happened already in the area of personal income tax? The tax base has been broadened by the Government by eliminating a number of tax-avoidance and deferral techniques. Not once do we hear anything about that from the Opposition. There are a number of major steps that have already been taken to reduce tax preferences in the corporate sector and in the personal income sector. We have eliminated a number of tax-avoidance and deferral techniques—

Mr. Cassidy: And created new ones.

Mr. Hockin: I would be very happy to go through examples of those during Question Period. What we have created that is new is a minimum tax to ensure that high-income earners cannot avoid paying any tax. We never hear about that either. As well, the first steps were taken toward finding a replacement for the inadequate federal sales tax. A review was undertaken of selected social and tax transfer programs.

There is much to be said about how far the Government has already gone on tax reform before the statement of June 18. It soon became apparent, however, that if we were to achieve our goals of tax reform, we would have to undertake a major restructuring of personal income tax as well. That led to the announcement last July of the Government's intention to proceed with comprehensive tax reform. The goals and guidelines of tax reform were set out by the Minister of Finance in the Blue Book he tabled in the House on October 23.

Fairness is the key measure of tax reform. The tax system must ensure a fair sharing of the tax burden. People in similar circumstances are not now treated equally. They will be treated equally after tax reform. High-income earners and profitable corporations should pay their fair share of taxes and similar products should bear the same rate of sales tax. The previous Government felt that it could not act on any of these but we will act on them.

The tax system should also be simpler so Canadians may understand it and comply with it. I recall that two or three months ago, I met with the Chinese Minister of Trade who asked me what the books were that were sitting in the corner of the Department of Finance boardroom. I said that they were interpretation bulletins and the Statutes of the Canadian Income Tax Act, comprising about 3,000 pages. I asked how big the Chinese income tax document was, and he said that it was six pages. I do not think we will ever be able to get that much simplicity, but Canadians want a simpler system, a system that will allow them to understand and to do their income tax returns themselves. That is a major motive behind the reforms we will be bringing in on June 18.

Another important objective has been to achieve a better balance of federal revenue sources with less reliance on personal income tax. We also seek greater stability and certainty in federal revenues. There are other important concerns which help shape tax reform, including the need to encourage economic growth and to remove distortions in business decision-making created by tax incentives, the need to reinforce international competitiveness and the need to reflect Canada's social and economic priorities.

We have been concerned that any tax changes should be implemented with appropriate provisions for transition to the new tax system. I think it is important that we signal that now. Throughout we have consulted broadly with Canadians in developing the proposals we have submitted to the House. Consultation is important. The last time there was a major effort at tax reform in the MacEachen Budget, there was not appropriate consultation. The Government was caught unawares time and time again and in a humiliating way had to change at least 49 major parts of that Budget.

We have been consulting. In fact, in order to minimize surprises, we have also brought forward papers for debate and discussion. The Hon. Member could not have introduced this motion and debated it in the way he has if the subject had not been raised by the Government. He wants to talk only about food, but all the other aspects that he does not discuss have been in the public domain. Canadians understand them and that will help in the understanding of tax reform when we table our major document on June 18.

I am confident that the White Paper will be judged a success in meeting those guidelines. I think the consultations we have already undertaken will have been very helpful. I was told that in New Zealand, there was a government information office on the sales tax system and it was able to be closed before the tax was even brought in because the people of New Zealand were so well informed about what the Government was doing.

I think consultation has helped set the stage for the Canadian people to sympathize with and understand what we intend to do. In particular, I am sure that impartial judges will conclude that tax reform meets its central objective, which is to reduce tax rates. This is the best possible incentive for growth, investment and job creation. Lower income tax rates will mean larger take-home pay for the great majority of Canadians. Tax avoidance is minimized through lower rates. Incentives are put in place through lower rates. Lower rates are key to all of these reforms.

By way of conclusion, let me say that these lower tax rates will be brought about by reducing or eliminating a wide range of tax preferences which have been of benefit primarily to corporations and upper-income earners. That is how we will find the revenue to lower rates and what will emerge will be a tax system that will levy less total tax on the large majority of individual taxpayers and achieve this through a greater measure of fairness in the system as a whole.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister cites the example of the imposition by the Labour Government of the 10 per cent tax in New Zealand, can he tell us what effect that had on working families and particularly on the Consumer Price Index in New Zealand?

Mr. Hockin: My only reference to New Zealand was the effort made there to inform citizens of what the reforms were so that confusion would be minimized. I am not a close student of those reforms and I could not give the Hon. Member the answer she seeks.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister has looked at the New Zealand system or he would not know about the information system. If he went beyond that he might be aware that in the three months following the imposition of a 10 per cent across the board tax, including on food, imposed by the Labour Government the inflation rate increased by 8.9 per cent. Can he explain how an increase in inflation of 8.9 per cent over three months would be of benefit to low and middle-income Canadians?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have to reiterate that I cannot vouch for figures. However, let me tell her that the kind of tax reform we are proposing will broaden the base and lower the rate. For example, say you are a taxi driver and you buy an automobile. What is the tax, 12 per cent? If, through tax reform, that rate is lowered to 6 per cent or 7 per cent this Government has lowered the cost of that automobile for the owner. By broadening the base and lowering the rate you will have less inflation in many cases, not more.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, because the sales tax is levied at the wholesale level, it does not hit taxpayers quite as hard as perhaps some people think. The figures we have indicate that the average rate at the consumer level comes out to about 7.2 per cent. He should beware suggesting there will be a huge drop in taxes if the tax is reduced to 6 per cent or 7 per cent in the form of a business transfer tax.

He also asks where the NDP stands. In July, 1986, we said in our tax probe report that our analysis has led us to conclude that the current federal sales tax is so unfair, unaccountable, and administratively complex that it should be abolished. That is pretty clear. We then talked about alternatives.

The Minister suggested that we should talk about the whole range of tax reform in this debate. We will discuss that after June 18. My Party was focusing on the very specific issue, which he danced around, that food is such an essential necessity of life we believe it should not be taxed. Does he believe food should be taxed, yes or no? I would like him to give the answer on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I guess it depends on what kind of food, what level of income, and so on. That question is to be canvassed further on June 18. The Hon. Member says he is not in favour of taxing food but he believes in the two-price policy for wheat, for example. I am sure he believes in marketing boards as well. Those things mean that agricultural products are somewhat more expensive than they would otherwise be. He has never suggested a solution to that problem.

Because of the cost of food, this Government brought in a refundable sales tax credit. We have a child tax credit. We have put these credits in place in order to compensate for the regressive nature of some of the things that have to be done. Yet we never get a proposal that goes even that far from Members opposite in order to help low-income Canadians.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Minister indicated he felt we should be addressing the tax reform question in a broader context. He also made reference to the fact that there are hidden taxes on food resulting from the supply management system and the two price wheat system. I understand that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has done a comparative study and claims to have found that Canadian consumers, as a result of the factors I mentioned, pay a tax in effect of 25 per cent to 50 per cent for milk, 10 per cent to 24 per cent for butter and cheese, and less than 10 per cent but still something in excess of 1 per cent obviously—

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you eliminate medicare and cut taxes that way, too?

Mr. Redway: —for a host of other foods such as sugar, poultry, beef, pork and several other grains.

Mr. Cassidy: Turn this into a Ronald Reagan paradise, that is what you are trying to say.

Mr. Redway: I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) could just calm down and let other people speak calmly. The whole point of the House of Commons, as I understand it, is to have a rational, calm debate. I am disappointed and disturbed that the Hon. Member feels we should have a shouting match, screaming and shouting from his seat.

In light of this report, in light of the things the Hon. Minister has been saying this morning, will he tell me, the House and the Canadian people if the White Paper on tax reform is going to address these problems in a broader way than just the question of tax credits?

Mr. Cassidy: Do you want to eliminate unions as well as marketing boards?

Mr. Redway: Here we go again. We are hearing the NDP Member for Ottawa Centre trying to shout down anyone else who wants to say something in this House. It is disappointing to me and, I am sure, the Canadian people.

Could the Hon. Minister tell us—

Mr. Cassidy: Retrograde Conservatives.

Mr. Redway: There he goes again. The NDP does not want anyone else in this country to say anything.

Can the Hon. Minister tell this House if the Government's tax reform package will address these problems? If so, will it do it in a way that goes beyond the tax credit approach he has been talking about? To date at least those tax credits have been fairly modest in relationship to the taxes paid by the Canadian public on food.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for raising that question. It is rather awkward because he is asking me to reveal what is going to be in the June 18 document. I think he will understand that I cannot answer that directly, but I could make a couple of comments.

To deal with the imbalance in our tax system, to make it fair, is to come to terms with some of these hidden expenses for low-income Canadians about which he expresses justifiable concern. The child tax credit is designed to help a poor family purchase food for their children. It is quite generous. The refundable sales tax credit is an important innovation of this Government. To remove hundreds of thousands of Canadians from the tax rolls also a major objective of tax reform, and that will help produce more income so these people can buy the products about which the Hon. Member expresses concern.

I have to make a broader point. If you can create 778,000 jobs, that is an enormous contribution to the solution of the problem of which he speaks. It produces income for people who had very little.

The Hon. Member raises an important point about the subsidy system in Canada. The Government has brought in credits and created jobs. It will create a fair system. That is our answer to the very good question he raises. Perhaps there will be more specifics on June 18. Liberal and NDP Members opposite, especially the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre are silent on the kind of questions the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) raises.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has talked about a fairer tax system since the election campaign of 1984. It is now 1987 and we have seen taxes for the average family increase by $1,500 a year. There has been an increase in indirect taxes through increases in the sales tax rate and charges for government services. A $500,000 exemption on capital gains has been implemented which benefits the wealthy. We know that over 200 Canadians who had incomes of over $200,000 paid no income tax at all. We know that the biggest corporations have been able to avoid paying any corporation tax at all. As an example, when Gulf Canada was purchased, there was a $500 million tax avoidance through the Little Egypt Bump.

Therefore, we are pretty skeptical about the promises for a fairer tax system. We will watch him very carefully because so far we have seen very little evidence of a move toward a fairer tax system. We have seen higher taxes for ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I know it is the duty of the Opposition to express skepticism. However, to express skepticism in the midst of concrete actions in the opposite direction is less understandable. Let us look at the tax fairness measures which we have implemented to date. The proof is in what we have done since 1984.

We ended the scientific research tax credit abuse which was terribly expensive. We eliminated tax shelters based on investment in yachts, recreational vehicles and similar properties. We eliminated the Registered Home Ownership Savings Program. We brought about the elimination of income splitting among family members by using interest-free loans in order to minimize tax. We imposed a minimum tax on high income individuals, which is something the Hon. Member called for.

From July to December, 1985, actions were taken to stop the so-called carve-out transactions in the oil and gas sector and to prevent the use of trusts through market securities issued in such a way that income and capital returns to investors were distributed tax free. We ended the use of partnership and corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions through the so-called partnership step-up rules. The list goes on. All of these measures are evidence that reform is under way.

In addition, the Government is committed to replacing exemptions with credits. This is a very, very progressive move. In the 1987 Budget the Government indicated that it would do this. In addition, through the federal sales tax credit and the child tax credit we have already given concrete evidence that we are moving in this direction.

Exemptions favour those in the higher tax brackets, and I do not know why Hon. Members do not mention this. Each $1,000 of exemption is worth $60 in federal sales tax saving to a lower income individual in the 6 per cent tax bracket, while it is worth $340 to a person in the top 34 per cent tax bracket. Credits provide the same amount of tax reduction to taxpayers at all income levels. That is why it is so important to move to a credit system. Finally, moving to credits will mean more benefits for lower income taxpayers and less for those at higher income levels.

I do not ask the Opposition to cease being skeptical. That is the job of the Opposition. However, I do ask Members to look at these concrete, progressive moves which show that we are moving massively in the direction of fairness, more so than any previous Government in my memory.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe my ears. I cannot believe that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said in his speech that the tax credit which is currently given to families is used to buy food. That tax credit was originally instituted by previous Liberal Governments to help those poor families that could not afford to buy clothing, furniture, or some of the big ticket items. It was certainly never intended to pay for food.

That mentality of the Minister is an indication of what we can expect on June 18. We already hear the Minister saying "sales tax credit to pay for food". Shame on the Government, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance who claim that they will bring in tax reform. They will bring in tax reform all right. Just ask low-income Canadians including senior citizens living below the poverty line on pensions what kind of tax they are now paying as a result of the Government's so-called reforms instituted in the November Economic Statement in a cumulative way.

Does the Minister really think the Canadian people are that stupid? Does he really think they cannot read the taxes they are now paying in the low and middle-income brackets as a result of the changes made by the Government which favour the rich? We heard the Minister expound on how fair tax credits were as compared with exemptions. He did not mention the $.5 million capital gains exemption which he and his friends on Bay Street have offered to the top 2 per cent of the population which can afford to earn such capital gains.

In the last two and a half years the Government has wreaked a tax expense havoc on the poor and middle-income families which has been unprecedented in Canadian history. We now see the ultimate blow in the form of a tax on food. We heard the Minister of State for Finance talk about what happened when the wonderful socialist Government in New Zealand imposed a 10 per cent tax on food. Yes, in the short-term they saw their take-home pay increase because their income tax had been reduced. However, they also saw prices increase dramatically.

In the first three months following the imposition of a 10 per cent tax on food the Consumer Price Index increased by 8.9 per cent. The Minister said that he could not foresee an increase in the CPI. That is because he has not studied the issue. He has not looked at what has happened in other jurisdictions. It is quite clear that there will be an increase in inflation. It is quite clear that a tax on bread and milk will hit those who can least afford to pay.

We could not pin the Minister down today on exactly what the Government intends to do on June 18, but we heard a bit of the line, the Dalton Camp line, which is probably being crafted now in the Office of the Prime Minister. God forbid that the Government should get itself in the same kind of a mess with the food tax as it got itself in on its attempt to cut back on senior citizens' pensions. I am sure the Government will have a finely honed, finely crafted line, part of which we heard today from the Minister of State for Finance.

He said that the Government will broaden the base. A food tax will certainly broaden the base. Instead of taxing luxury items and other specific items as is currently the case under federal sales tax legislation, we will be taxing milk, bread, and other food when we already know from looking at the figures for the last 20 years that Canadians are already paying more to eat and survive than for lodging.

A recent article in Maclean's magazine gives a fairly good picture of how hard Canadians are already being hit for the cost of food. Between 1961 and 1986 Canadians have increased the amount of money they pay for food up to 25 per cent. The amount they pay for shelter has increased by 19 per cent and the amount they pay for taxes has increased by over 33.5 per cent on average. We can see that the amount spent for food has increased tremendously, and yet the Government is going to add a double-whammy if it introduces a tax on food on June 18. Will the Government that was elected with the largest majority in our history receive the support of Canadians to tax food? No. Nearly two out of every three Canadians oppose the Government's proposal to extend federal sales tax to cover food and services.

Food is not the only item. Food is a very basic item, but will we see the Government introduce a tax on day care? Will we see it introduce a tax on other essential services at the same time that it claims it will introduce these other beneficial measures for working families?

The Government claims that it will broaden the tax base and introduce a fairer system. Yet it is really introducing a tax grab for the federal Treasury. The Government likely receives its advice from Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, who suggested just last week that it will be cheaper for the federal Government to tax food and provide a tax credit than not to tax food at all. Deloitte, Haskins and Sells are making preliminary calculations which suggest that it will be cheaper for the Government to tax food. The federal Government will be in a position to collect $20 billion if it comes forward with the business transfer tax of 8 per cent. Its tax credits, which it will potentially give only to families earning below $15,000—far below the poverty line in most communities in Canada—would only amount to $3 billion. Therefore, the net gain to the federal Treasury is $17 billion.

While the Government talks about tax fairness, it will literally be taking food out of the mouths of babes if it introduces this food tax that is being suggested in the June 18 financial statement by the Minister.

Mr. Redway: Nonsense.

Ms. Copps: The Member says nonsense. He may recall one of his Conservative cohorts in the Ontario Legislature, Frank Miller. He was an erstwhile gentleman who certainly had a very quick tenure as Premier of Ontario. One reason why Mr. Miller went down to defeat, apart from the fact that we had an extremely able Premier to take his place, was that as Treasurer in Ontario he introduced a tax on candy, ice cream and chocolate bars for children, as well as a tax on tampons. I received hundreds of letters from irate consumers, including parents and children, who asked why this man, whom they did not know before this infamous tax, was imposing a tax on candy and tampons. He told me in the Ontario Legislature that tampons were a non-essential item and that is why they should be taxed. We know that the Treasurer ultimately had to eat his words.

When he went to the electorate in the election, people told him what they thought about his tax on candy and tampons. The federal Government should learn from that message that was sent in very strong terms to the then Premier of the Province of Ontario.

There are certain elements in Canadian life that are absolutely essential, one of which is food. If the Minister of Finance really believes he can sell Canadians the notion that while imposing a tax across the board on food consumers will receive a somewhat bigger cheque at the end of the year, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance is not the one doing the shopping in his household. He will not be able to convince the senior citizens who, for the first time, are paying taxes as a result of the regressive tax policies of the Government. It is also obvious that the Minister of State for Finance does not balance the budget in his household.

Canadians pay for their food on a weekly basis and must pay for it with cash. I doubt that Canadians will be able to go to any of the major grocery stores and say that they will pay the balance of their food bill when they receive their sales tax credit from the Minister in 1989. The Member from Newfoundland is smiling. He knows that his constituents will not be happy with a Government that introduces a tax on food while suggesting they will get a bigger cheque at the end of the year.

The figures from Deloitte, Haskins and Sells are self-explanatory and indicate that the imposition of a food tax, including the tax credit that may be given, may still result in a net benefit to the federal Treasury of a billion dollars more than what it would be without the food tax. It represents $1 billion to the federal Government out of the food bill of ordinary Canadians. When I look at the figures, I am practically speechless.

Mr. Jelinek: That would be a first.

Ms. Copps: We make reasonably good salaries as Members of Parliament and I dare say there is not a Member of Parliament who is struggling to pay the food bill. However, we know according to the latest national figures, that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians, including almost a million Canadian children, living in poverty. Most of those children come from one-parent homes led by mothers. These families cannot afford to pay a tax on food, nor can middle-income families afford a tax on food as a result of the cumulative tax policy since 1984, as part of the so-called tax reform package introduced by that great reformer. Leonard Shifrin, a social policy analyst, called the Minister the "great deceiver", which I believe is a perfect name.

A family of four with both parents working, earning $35,000 a year, which represents a fairly average family in certain areas of the country, will be paying over the life of the tax reform package an extra $3,452 through increases in income taxes as well as losses through the cut-back in family allowances.

These average families are gouged by almost 10 per cent of their gross income in a tax period of three to four years. The Minister will then return to the House on June 18 and say that he will offer them a tax break and broaden the base. That was the catch phrase used by the Minister of State this morning which, in simple English, means taxing everything that Canadians use. It may even include such areas of service as daycare and medicare. The enormity of the tax grab on middle and lower-income Canadians as a result of the Government's potential initiatives on June 18 is so devastating that I cannot even begin to describe it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister of State himself revealed the kind of attitude he has towards poorer people when he said, among other things: We, the Government, pay the sales tax, we pay the sales tax credit to poorer families so they will be able to eat. But when the tax credits were introduced by former Liberal Government a few years ago, it was not for food, it was to give families an opportunity to buy various things such as clothes and big ticket items. This is why we came up with the tax credit, not to pay for food. Indeed we can already guess that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) with his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have begun to toy with the idea of taxing food.

We can only recall the situation in New Zealand where a socialist Government imposed a 10 per cent tax. Even the New Democratic Party . . . Here in Canada we have precious little opportunity to examine the Government performance because it does not perform all that much. However, we have the example of New Zealand, and I was rather surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who strongly criticized the Conservative Government, reply to my question about what he thought of the action taken by the Socialist Government in New Zealand: "That is not the same. Canada is different".

The Socialist Government in New Zealand imposed a 10 per cent tax on food products, which caused an 8.9 per cent, or nearly 9 per cent increase in the cost of living over the next three-month period. And who is affected by a higher cost of living index? The poor, the old, the underprivileged. Someone with a $100,000 income will not lose any sleep if the cost of living index goes up by 7 per cent or 8 per cent. However, someone who spends the larger part of his income on food and housing does.

During the last 20 years, the percentage of average income paid by Canadians on food alone has increased to 25 per cent. Food has become even more expensive than housing in Canada. We already spend 25 per cent of our average income to eat. The so-called tax reform of the Minister, which will supposedly be clarified on June 18, will involve additional taxes, and a tax on food products is even being considered.

A former Ontario Premier tried it before. He imposed a tax on candy, or a kiddy tax, such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has himself imposed this year. The Premier even put a tax on tampons, thus suggesting to Ontario women that such things are not essential. This caused so much protest that he was defeated during the 1985 election.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance should look at what happened in Ontario and realize that Canadians are opposed to any tax on food products. It is all very well for the Minister of State to claim that this will extend the tax base. Naturally it will. At this time, the federal tax covers what could be termed luxury products, items which are not essential to daily life.

However, the tax on food products and the possible tax on day-care, in view of the need for such services, represent taxes on the necessities of life. There are no two ways about it. People have to eat. There are Canadians who have to rely on a steady diet of macaroni, and sometimes even cat food. There occasionally are articles in newspapers describing the plight of the poor. Their life is already very hard. If we look at the so-called tax reforms brought in after the 1984 Budget, we find, for instance, that a family with a $15,000 annual income, which is certainly not astronomical, has already lost a total of $1,844 in the three years this Government has been in power. This represents both benefits that have been cut back and additional taxes that now have to be paid. Such a family has lost $1,844. It is fair for a family of four with an income of $15,000 to have to pay additional taxes and lose benefits for a total of $1,844? I do not think so.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canadians are stupid enough to swallow the arguments of the Minister of State for Finance who says that this will be fair and equitable because everyone will pay. This is truly a Reaganite tax reform, which is not surprising as the Prime Minister is always hopping into bed with the President of the United States. This is the same type of reform we saw in the United States and which cost the poor very dearly while fattening the bank accounts of the wealthy.

Mr. Speaker, this is why we are against this tax, and I think that the Government should listen to us and refrain from introducing it on June 18.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that she was practically speechless as a result of some of the comments made by the Minister. I have to admit that I was struck dumb by some of the comments made by the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member had the nerve and the gall to indicate that between 1961 and 1986 the cost of food increased by some 25 per cent. You and I are well aware, Mr. Speaker, who formed the Government for virtually all of that time. You and I, Sir, are also well aware of the double-digit inflation that ravaged this country while the former Government, of which the Hon. Member is a supporter, was in office. I do not see how the Hon. Member has the nerve and the gall to stand in this House and tell us that she is ashamed of the fact that the price of food rose by 25 per cent when it was her Government that in fact was responsible.

The Hon. Member went on to talk about what is in the White Paper on tax reform. It not only surprised but shocked me that she apparently has inside information as to what is in the White Paper on tax reform. She implied there were all sorts of things such as taxing food and daycare and everything else under the sun. That was very interesting. As you and I know, Mr. Speaker, that is just fear-mongering. She is deliberately trying to spread fear and concern among the low-income earners and senior citizens when she does not have a shred of evidence on which to base her allegations. She indicated as well that DeLoitte Haskins and Sells were writing the White Paper on tax reform. There is not one shred of evidence to indicate that fact. All of the statements she made indicating what was in the White Paper on tax reform cannot be backed up by one shred of evidence. What she has been doing here today is fear-mongering.

The Hon. Member did say one thing which really interested me and I would like to get her response on the record. It has to do with the scorn she heaped on the half million dollar capital gains exemption brought in by this Government as part of a package of economic recovery. It has in fact lowered the rate of unemployment from what it was when the former Liberal Government was in power. It has brought about an unemployment rate in my own community of close to what is traditionally called by economists "full employment". It admittedly has not done the job across the country the Government would have liked but things are certainly moving much closer to that position than when the Liberal Government was in power.

Can the Hon. Member tell us if it is the official policy of her Party, if and when it ever forms a government, to immediately repeal the capital gains tax exemption which is now in effect?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Hon. Member has been for the last two and a half years. If he had been here in the House where he was supposed to be, he would know that my Leader has already called upon the Government to repeal that half million dollar capital gains write-off with the exception of the farmers. That has been on the record as clear as the nose on my face since the Government introduced that measure. Of course, we will repeal it. The Government should repeal it because it is a discriminatory exemption which permits the top two per cent of the population to get a tax grab at the expense of low and middle income earners.

It has been suggested that the Hon. Member has a social conscience. Even his name suggests he might be a red Tory. But I cannot believe the Hon. Member would actually defend the position of the Government that the half million dollar capital gains write-off for the top two per cent of the population should be supported. If we were to look at the figures we would see that a single parent with two children who is earning less than $20,000 per year, who is living below the poverty line as a result of this Government's tax grabs alone, not counting the cut-back in family allowances, will be paying an extra $438 in taxes after the February, 1987, Budget. That is a cumulative increase of $487.

Does the Hon. Member really believe that we should be giving a $500,000 capital gains tax write-off to the top 2 per cent of people who are earning $100,000 and $200,000 while at the same time we are increasing the taxes of those who are living below the poverty line? If he does believe that, then I wish he would answer my mail.

I received a letter recently from a constituent in my riding who is a senior citizen living below the poverty line. He receives the old age pension and a very small income, which puts him below the poverty line. He could not understand why he was asked to pay taxes. He thought that it was a mistake. It is not a mistake. The Government over the last two and a half years in its so-called tax reform package has managed to tax heaviest those who can least afford to pay.

I do not know where the Hon. Member was when I spoke about Deloitte Haskins and Sells. If he had been here he would know that I was referring to an article in the "Report on Business" in The Globe and Mail which is usually where the Minister of State for Finance gets all of his ideas. The "Report on Business" in The Globe and Mail last week gave the Government an analysis of what would happen if it were to introduce a food tax. It was that particular article to which I was referring. It was that particular article which pointed out quite clearly that the Government's move to impose potentially a tax on food is not for the benefit of the consumers. According to the figures of Deloitte Haskins and Sells, if the Government imposes a tax on food and then bumps back a tax credit to those living on $15,000 per year or less, it will still end up with a net benefit of an extra $1 billion for the federal Treasury. The Government is doing this so that it can have a tax grab, probably in pursuit of that Holy Grail of deficit reduction.

The interesting thing is that this same Government which is pursuing this Reagan-like policy of deficit reduction has only to look south of the border to find that the selfsame President of the United States who campaigned on a policy of tax reform coupled with deficit reduction has now managed to augur the largest deficit in the history of the United States. If we are following that example, then God forbid the situation which will be created when we do have a chance after the next election to get rid of that $500,000 capital gains tax exemption.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question. She has criticized the tax measures brought in by the Conservative Government. However, the Liberals formed the Government for 50 of the last 60 years. We know that they drafted the tax legislation. We know that in the last year in which they were in power, 200 people who had incomes over $250,000 per year paid no income tax at all. We know that many corporations, at least the most profitable ones, paid no corporation tax. We know that the new purchasers of Gulf were able to obtain a tax avoidance of $500 million on that one transaction alone.

I ask the Hon. Member what assurances we have, if we ever have another Liberal Government, that it will not continue the type of policies it had before which were so beneficial to wealthy individuals and wealthy corporations.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the Hon. Member is running on the platform of previous Liberal Governments. He uses the corporate welfare bum slogan. We remember that very well from the 1960s. I think the socialist Party ran with that slogan, and it did so reasonably well. What the Hon. Member fails to recognize is that what we are dealing with right now, something which I pointed out in my speech, is that as a result of specific tax grabs by the Conservative Government since September of 1984 we have seen a cumulative tax grab on families anywhere from $400 in the case of those living at $19,000 per year to literally thousands of dollars on ordinary, average Canadian families.

The socialist Government of New Zealand, a Government with which the Hon. Member likes to associate himself, as does his Leader and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), introduced a 10 per cent tax on food in its own tax grab. Obviously, we cannot compare the record of previous NDP Governments in Canada because there have been so few of them. The NDP Government of New Zealand has taxed that sacrosanct area which the NDP in Canada claims is untouchable. When I asked the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre about it, he did not completely dissociate himself from it. He did not say that the tax in New Zealand is wrong. He said that we have a different situation in Canada.

It is easy for this particular Hon. Member and his Party to hearken back to past political campaigns. Let us face it, we took our lumps in 1984. We paid the price by losing dozens of good Members from across the country because people wanted a change. They voted to put the present Government in place because its members claimed they were going to bring in all these great changes. Almost three years have elapsed. Frankly, we in the Liberal Party are just a little bit sick and tired of the Government trotting out past Liberal excesses which cost us. We have paid for them. There are about 70-odd Conservative back-benchers from Quebec and a bunch from my area sitting around saying nothing to pay for our excesses. What the Canadian people want to know now is what the Government is going to do specifically as it relates to tax reform.

In terms of the NDP, I only ask its members to look over to their socialist friends in New Zealand. Why did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre not have the guts to stand in his place and blast the Government of New Zealand for its 10 per cent tax on food in the same way as he is blasting the federal Government for potentially introducing a similar tax here in Canada?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that members of her Party have paid the price for Liberal excesses by sitting in Opposition for three years. The Canadian people are paying a terrible price for the accumulated deficit that was built up. They left us with a debt of over $200 billion. The Canadian people are still paying the price. The present generation and the next generation will be paying the price because of the huge accumulation of debt that was built up by the previous Government. It is the Canadian people who are paying the price, not the Liberal Party by having to sit out of office for a few years.

The way the Liberal Party should pay the price is to think of alternatives. What would its members do to decrease the deficit? What would they do to reform the tax system? That is how they should pay the price. They cannot pay the price by nit-picking and coming up with some hypothetical criticisms. The price must be paid by doing some hard thinking about what are the alternatives. The Hon. Member is an intelligent Member. She can give leadership in this area. I ask her to tell the House what her alternatives are.

With respect to the federal sales tax, I have in my hand two articles which deal with firms in Canada which have been put out of business because of the federal sales tax. Central Tobacco Manufacturing says that the controversial tax is forcing it to stop production locally and to import products instead from its plant in Plattsburg, New York. This is from an article dated December 17, 1986. The Bic pen people laid off 12 of 73 people. They claim that it is because of our federal sales taxes which the previous Government put in place and which we are trying to dismantle.

What is the Hon. Member's proposal with respect to a federal sales tax system? If we do not reform the federal sales tax system we will have more of this. It is a silent killer of jobs, to quote one of the presidents of these companies.

When the Hon. Member talks about lower income Canadians can she disagree with me when I say that 778,000 people are paying tax today who did not pay tax before because they now have jobs? The creation of jobs has been a monumental contribution by the Government in the last two and a half years. That is a major answer to what lower income Canadians are worried about. Will the Hon. Member acknowledge that that has happened?

I want the Hon. Member's proposals with respect to federal sales tax reform, the ones that she would put forward. I would also like to know broadly what the Hon. Member's specific alternatives are. The Hon. Member is intelligent enough to share that with the House if the Party has done that thinking.

Ms. Copps: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the Hon. Member would be satisfied with the current level of unemployment among Canadians. We are almost four years out of the recession and we now see that the unemployment rate, according to this Conservative Government, is still hovering around 9 per cent. If that is progress for Conservatives, I think it is a shame that this Government, having elected the largest majority in the history of Canada, cannot set a goal for itself to do a heck of a lot better. Nine per cent is not suitable.

The Minister of State for Finance has just given a bit of a peek into what we can expect to see on June 18. He suggests that current sales tax measures are a silent killer of jobs and small businesses. If the Minister introduces a VAT or if he introduces a business transfer tax which includes food, then obviously the paper work will not be there but it will be a killer of income for all Canadians. If he introduces exemptions, then most small businesses will find themselves faced with more paper work than what they have under the current system.

Mr. Hockin: What are you going to do?

Ms. Copps: I dare say that the Minister would not only see the kinds of losses of jobs at Bic, but if he includes a tax on food, all of those small grocery stores and small business people currently involved in the sale of food—agriculture and the production of food accounts for about 20 per cent; I think one in five jobs in Canada is related to the food industry—will also have to become federal tax collectors and they will be echoing the kinds of sentiments just expressed by the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Hockin: You would leave the system the way it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House agrees, we will call it one o'clock. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will start his speech after Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.22 p.m. the House took recess.

HISTORIC EVENTS

REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA—ANNIVERSARY OF ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the sixty-ninth anniversary of the establishment of the Republic of Armenia, I should like to quote the Acting Chairman of the Armenian National Council, who stated on August 1, 1918:

> Yes, our Republic is small and its bounds are narrow. It is deprived of its best lands, and there is not enough room for all the people. It seems as if conditions are lacking for its independent existence. But I feel that the boundaries of a state cannot remain inflexible forever. I believe that our borders will spread with the iron force of life, with defence of our just and indisputable rights concerning the occupied lands, and with a new treaty of friendship with Turkey and its allied governments . . . We have chosen the path of mutual agreement and peace, and we would like to believe that we are not mistaken in this.

This statement, made 69 years ago by the Speaker of the Legislature of the Independent Republic of Armenia, still reflects the aspirations of the Armenian people.

Every Member of the House is invited to meet with representatives of them tonight at five o'clock.

ABORTION

SUPPORT FOR UNBORN CHILDREN'S RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, abortion has been the subject of debate in the House for several months as Hon. Members state their positions on Motion M-37, the Private Member's Motion of the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

A great many of my constituents have written to me on the matter and have voiced their support for the motion. Residents of my riding are concerned about the number of abortions performed in our province. According to Statistics Canada, 6,544 unborn children were killed in Alberta in 1985.

Furthermore, the Alberta Medical Association has stated that 14 per cent of women having abortions in Alberta, or over 900 women, are in fact having a second or third abortion.

I agree with the concerns of my constituents. I have never hesitated to state that abortion is the killing of an innocent human being. I hope all Hon. Members will give the concerns of their constituents in this matter the serious consideration they deserve.

WILDLIFE

SANCTUARY SOUGHT FOR GRIZZLY BEARS IN KHUTZEYMATEEN VALLEY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, since the arrival of the white man, the grizzly bear has been driven from over half of its natural habitat in North America. Highly sensitive to human activity, the grizzly now only exists in significant numbers in areas of British Columbia, Alberta, Yukon, Northwest Territories, and Alaska. Despite this alarming decline, Canada does not have a single sanctuary dedicated primarily to the protection of the grizzly.

The best candidate for such a sanctuary is the Khutzeymateen Valley north of Prince Rupert on the B.C. coast. Khutzeymateen is one of the last undisturbed valleys on the West Coast. The Khutzeymateen has been recognized by the United Nations as a globally unique and significant site. Most important, the Khutzeymateen has one of the highest concentrations of grizzly bears left in Canada. The Khutzeymateen would be an excellent choice as Canada's first grizzly bear sanctuary.

Unfortunately, the Khutzeymateen, like so many other ecologically important areas in B.C., is threatened by logging. This would be a terrible mistake that would only further reduce the grizzly's already shrinking habitat and population.

I call upon the Government to take the initiative and begin immediate negotiations with the Government of British Columbia to establish a grizzly bear sanctuary in the Khutzeymateen Valley.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SUPPORT FROM ORGANIZATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "we believe that a free trade agreement will help better our economy and our workforce and create new opportunity and choices for all Canadians". This is the unqualified conclusion of The Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities, comprised of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Consumers' Association of Canada, Business Council on National Issues, Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and the Canadian Exporters' Association.

Canadians from all walks of life and all regions of the country are speaking out in support of the Government's free trade initiative.

The Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities is to be complimented on its campaign to promote free trade and thereby a better life for all Canadians.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—COMPENSATION ISSUE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, hopes that the Government would achieve an honourable redress for Japanese-Canadian dispossession during World War II seem very near being blasted entirely. One Minister's promise of negotiations two and a half years ago did not survive the second meeting with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. A second Minister's promise of a fair, equitable and honourable resolution was never given any practical expression. A third Minister's promise to obtain approval for a process of negotiation has ended in a take-it-or-forget-it ultimatum from his Chief of Staff.

Forty-five years ago a Liberal Government yielded to racial prejudice in British Columbia and disrupted a peaceable community. Today a Conservative Government refuses to find the financial resources required to do the honourable thing by redressing individuals.

The Government has never really negotiated with the NAJC. The hopes of June, 1984, lie in ruins. One more promise has been broken. Clearly it will require a different Government to clear the national honour of this genocidal blot.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RECORD OF AMOCO ACCIDENTS AFFECTING THE ENVIRONMENT—DOME PURCHASE PROPOSAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the proposed takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco Canada has environmental as well as sovereignty implications. Amoco is the company responsible for the world's largest oil spill, the sinking of the Amoco Cadiz. Here at home, Amoco Canada was responsible for the Lodgepole sour gas blowout in Alberta which, I am told, could have been a disaster of Bhopal proportions but for the fact that the surrounding area is so sparsely populated.

To say the least, Amoco has not been a leader in environmental responsibility. By contrast, Dome Petroleum has developed quite a sensitivity toward environmental and socio-economic concerns, particularly in the north where human and natural environments are particularly fragile. Amoco's track record causes concern that Amoco Canada will not apply the same environmental standards.

I call on Investment Canada to include the environment in the review of proposals and to scrutinize closely the Amoco-Dome deal from an environmental viewpoint. In doing so, it would protect Canada's economic interests and the economic interests of generations to come.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FIRST EXPORT CLUB IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN—GOVERNMENT'S PARTICIPATION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud to tell the House and the Canadian people that my riding witnessed the birth of the first export club of the region last Monday.

This association was set up through the co-operative efforts of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Economic Council of Alma and will monitor companies interested in exporting their products to both extra-regional and international markets.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize our Government's participation in this project and the spirit of co-operation inherent in this endeavour which will make it possible for certain companies to benefit from the experience others may have gained. Hopefully more such initiatives will be taken throughout the country.

DRUGS

FIGHT AGAINST ABUSIVE CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOL AND DRUGS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, faithful to its commitment made in last October's Speech from the Throne, the federal Government unveiled this week a five-year $200-million wide-ranging campaign to fight against the abusive consumption of drug and alcohol.

Mr. Speaker, knowing as we do that 16 million Canadians drink alcoholic beverages and that close to 1.5 million are addicted to cannabis or cocaine, we simply had to come to grips with this serious national problem.

Mr. Speaker, alcohol and drug ravages are even more obvious in rural regions. Oftentimes they are the major source of family and social problems which may eventually lead to suicide.

Mr. Speaker, a responsible Government could not stand still before this scourge which is particularly prevalent among young people. The Member for Témiscamingue intends to take active participation in this campaign and denounce the harmful effects of drugs as well as criminals who benefit from illicit drug trafficking at the expense of younger people who are powerless because they are badly informed.

CULTURE

IMPORTANCE OF LE DROIT NEWSPAPER FOR FRANCO-ONTARIANS AND FRENCH FACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we learned this morning that the assets of Unimédia, which owns, among other things, the French language dailies Le Droit of Ottawa, Le Soleil of Quebec City and Le Quotidien of Chicoutimi, have been acquired by a new company, Média-Québec, owned by Toronto financier Conrad Black.

It seems that, according to the former owner, Mr. Francoeur, the takeover by Mr. Black was necessary to ensure the survival of these newspapers. For us, Franco-Ontarians, the newspaper Le Droit is of vital importance. Since its foundation in 1912, its purpose has been to promote and defend the French fact in Ontario and Canada.

I sincerely hope that this transaction will stabilize the financial position of Le Droit and the other dailies involved as their services are essential to our community. I also hope that the reporters of Le Droit will be able to remain independent and continue to promote and defend the French fact.

Le Droit is the voice of Franco-Ontarians in the National Capital Region. I am therefore speaking on behalf of all readers of Le Droit and wish them good luck.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—RELEASE OF MORE DISSIDENTS URGED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the whole House rejoiced with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when, by persistent effort, he obtained the release of Josyp Terelya, Danylo Shumuk, and others. The Soviet Union has gained much favourable publicity through the release of these political prisoners. Dissident sources, such as the Ukrainian Human Rights Commission, say, however, that the number said to be released is extremely exaggerated.

Few religious activists are among those released, and few were advocates of national or human rights. Very few were released from the notorious Camp 36-1 where a number of deaths have been reported as a result of administrative misdemeanours and mistreatment.

Given the successes of recent months and the great number of political prisoners still in detention I urge the Minister to continue to press for the release of persons exiled or imprisoned for no more than reciting a Christian prayer. The job has really just begun.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, May 28 is Armenian Independence Day. Between 1918 and 1920 the short-lived independent Republic of Armenia had an impressive record of social democracy. During the first elections in June, 1919, all adults of both sexes, including Muslim and Russian minorities, were granted the right to vote in universal, secret and proportional balloting. Six political Parties participated and 80 members were elected, among whom were women and representatives of the minorities.

Despite the extended pressures building against the Republic and the internal problems of hunger, disease and poverty, this tiny nation founded a university, provided schools for Muslim minorities, and authorized formation of labour unions. Courts were established and the jury system was introduced for the first time in that area of the world.

Certainly it was the commitment of the Armenian people to democracy and social welfare, in addition to their past sufferings, that led the Government of Canada, on April 1, 1920, to place itself formally on record as absolutely opposed to the return of any Armenian provinces of Turkey to Turkish rule.

COPYRIGHT

AMENDMENTS TO ACT WELCOMED

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted with the copyright Bill tabled yesterday. These amendments are just the first step in a comprehensive revision of the Act. A second Bill dealing with other copyright issues will be tabled in the House as soon as possible, probably in the fall.

The abolition of the compulsory licensing of sound recordings is most welcome. By abolishing this provision, a grave restriction on musical copyright will be removed. The composer of a song or the copyright owner will be freely able to negotiate fees and conditions through the market-place.

This new Bill encourages the creation of new types of collectives in all areas of copyright. It also expands creator's moral rights.

The Bill introduces a new right, that of exhibition. Artists will now have a right over the public exhibition of their work.

I trust that the second set of revisions to be tabled will address the issue of classroom use of copyright material, an issue I brought up in the House late last fall. The Bill tabled yesterday is very encouraging for all Canadians directly or indirectly involved in matters relating to copyright. I look forward to step two.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSAL TO IMPROVE AND ADOPT BILL C-50 BEFORE JUNE 10

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Official Opposition made a firm proposal to the Conservative Government to ensure that the 35,000 early retirees whose unemployment insurance benefits were unfairly cut off will be reimbursed by the first week of July.

Mr. Speaker, the firm proposal made to this Government includes, first, the holding next week of the second reading debate on Bill C-50; the referral of this Bill to committee to allow the Opposition and various witnesses to suggest improvements; the holding of the third reading debate and passage of an amended Bill before June 10 so that the 35,000 early retirees involved in Canada, in both Eastern and Western Canada, as well as in Quebec and Ontario, may be finally reimbursed as they should.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

WORK EXPERIENCE PROGRAM FOR MENTALLY DISADVANTAGED—SUCCESS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS PILOT PROJECT

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform Members of the House today that the Speaker has opened the doors of opportunity for the mentally disadvantaged youth of Ottawa by providing, with the outstanding assistance and commitment of employees of the House of Commons, a unique on-the-job work experience training program to allow mentally handicapped students to learn on-the-job skills in the House of Commons.

The success of the Exceptional Students Pilot Project has given these youngsters the chance to develop their personal potential while enriching the lives of all of us. Let us allow this experience to serve as a model of how all Canadians can further the development of the mentally handicapped and provide the young people with the opportunity to achieve their goals.

This weekend the Speaker will share this Hill experience with his colleagues from the Legislatures of Canada. He will spread the word and encourage others to lead by initiating similar programs so that a beacon of hope will shine across the country.

Oral Questions

PARTICIPACTION

CHALLENGE 87 WON BY HAMILTONIANS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, once again Hamilton is number one, and number one by a very wide margin. The results of Participaction Challenge 87 which required 15 minutes of continuous exercise, show that 210,000 Hamiltonians participated. The runner-up, London, had a pathetic 97,800 participants.

We have our own ski hill in Hamilton. We have our own hockey arena. We can skate, we can ski, we can even jump on tables. The Hamilton community has shown an example to all of Canada by getting off our butts, getting out there and participating. I challenge other communities with pathetic participation levels, such as Ottawa which had only 97,000 participants.

Once again Hamilton is number one. All I ask is that Harold Ballard please allow us to have an NHL team so that we will win not only the Grey Cup but the Stanley Cup.

RAILWAYS

APPLICATION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT BY CN AT MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, in Moncton, CN violated certain articles of the collective agreement when it laid off workers at its workshops. That was the ruling handed down by arbitrator J.F.W. Weatherill. The ruling means that CN employees with eight years of service or more are entitled to employment security, and CN had no right to lay them off. I hope CN will act on this ruling as soon as possible, to correct the grave injustice that was done to Moncton workers.

Mr. Speaker, I also invite the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to get involved and ensure that justice is done. And I think the Minister should apologize to the workers for wrongly blaming them for the closing of the CN shops.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DECISION OF U.S. FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION—EFFECT ON NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On May 5 the Prime Minister sent a communication to President Reagan, asking him to assure that a solution is found for the detrimental decision of the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission which will cost exporters of natural gas in this country between $140 million and $400 million a year.

Yesterday that same American commission turned down a petition from Canadian natural gas exporters to have this dreadful decision reheard.

It is obvious that the White House did not even pay attention to the Prime Minister's petition and request to the President of the United States to intervene in this. Why does the Canadian Government keep giving the Americans everything they want while, at the same time, we have to sell off our natural resources and our major Canadian corporations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may remind the Hon. Member that the Canadian Government has made representations through diplomatic channels and has had various meetings with people in the U.S. Administration. In fact, the U.S. Administration, at the highest level, the Secretary of Energy and all others with administrative responsibilities, have always shown the greatest sympathy and support for the Canadian position.

There is also the fact that an American agency, a quasi-judicial body, has made a decision that to a certain extent was largely contrary to the Administration's expressed intentions. On behalf of the Canadian Government, I have deplored, in the strongest diplomatic terms, this decision by the U.S. judicial body.

Finally, we would have preferred a decision other than the one that was announced. We would rather have seen the postponement requested by the Secretary of Energy so they could continue the in-depth study of the natural gas rates system, initiated by the U.S. Government, and await the conclusions of the study. However, the judicial body decided otherwise, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, we do not want the sympathy of the United States, we want them to have some respect for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: The Prime Minister himself has said that this decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States extends U.S. regulations into Canada. Why is the Government not only giving away our resources, but now allowing the Americans to make our laws?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, for the time being this is not a problem with a government but with a judicial body, and subsequent actions will have to be taken at that level.

[English]

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it seems that anything the Americans want, the Americans get, including the take-over of Dome Petroleum by Amoco.

Why have Investment Canada and the Competitions Branch been told by the Government to keep their hands off this transaction? Is it because Simon Reisman has told the Government that any interference by the Canadian Government in this will jeopardize the success of U.S. free trade talks?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have never seen such a display of ignorance in this House.

The judicial power in the United States has the same independence that our Canadian institutions provide for our judicial power. And why should it be otherwise? When a Canadian judicial body makes a decision contrary to the will of U.S. citizens, that is the responsibility of the body in question, and the Government of Canada is not asked to reverse a judicial decision. That is what we call division of powers.

To infer that we can, at will, blur those divisions between the judicial, legislative and executive powers is erroneous in the extreme, Mr. Speaker.

As for the question of Investment Canada, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well, and if he didn't, he does now, because I can inform him no such requests were made.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has just stated that the Government knew that this was a quasi-judicial process and that there was no power of intervention. If that is the case, why did the Prime Minister, with full knowledge of that, then undertake to write the letter to President Reagan holding out the hope to the western Canadian oil and gas industry that he was personally going to do something about it? Why were that expectation and hope raised when the Government already knew it was bound to fail? Why is the Government creating those kinds of tricks on Canadians and holding out those kinds of false hopes?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows the process and is not willfully trying to play a trick on the House of Commons. What we had sought—and Secretary of State Shultz had already acted on the question as a result of our representations—was a delay in the decision so there could be more evidence brought forward. That request by this Government and by the U.S. administration was not heeded, was not acceded to, by the quasi-judicial body concerned. We very much regret that, as my colleague has made clear. However, the matter is now a matter to be handled by the private companies. They have already indicated their intention to launch an appeal.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will then direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Government has now said that the letter which was sent by the Prime Minister was sent in the knowledge that there was not going to be any effective stoppage, but simply to try to get a delay, which has now been rejected. Is the Government now simply laying off the whole issue? Is it not going to make any further response even though the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources himself has said that this is an extraterritorial application of U.S. law into Canada?

Surely there must be steps the Government could take to challenge this in the U.S. system and the international system? We would really like to know if the Government intends to take further steps to combat this very unfortunate and damaging decision taken by the Americans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would, as usual, prefer the words I just uttered in the House of Commons to be taken as our position rather than the interpretation placed upon them by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

We had sought, through the intermediation of the United States administration, a delay in the proceedings. The United States administration sought that delay in the proceedings. It was not granted. We regret that. We are now looking at every option which is available to the Government of Canada to support Canadian interests which must now pursue the matter through the courts. We have indicated to the companies which are involved in the appeal that they enter into that appeal with our support.

UNITED STATES REGULATIONS AFFECTING PRICE OF CANADIAN NATURAL GAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This decision by a United States agency could cost the people of Alberta some $400 million. In the case of softwoods, the United States tried to impose its law—and got away with it with the Conservative Government—on our provinces and the price for which they should sell their wood products. So too in this decision it is now insisting U.S. regulations affecting gas pricing ought to apply on our side of the border.

Given the serious impingement on Canadian sovereignty which is involved in this course of action, will the Prime Minister immediately contact President Reagan on a Head of Government to Head of Government basis, and let him know this is completely unacceptable to the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no one knows better than I, with all respect to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the importance and impact of this decision upon the people and the producers of Alberta. That is why we used every instrument available to us to try to seek a delay in the proceedings. That effort, although it was supported by the United States administration, did not succeed.

We have now indicated we are prepared to be of as much help, as is feasible for this Government, to the private sector as it pursues the only course open to it. I take it what the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking us to do is to go down and, I presume, shout at the President of the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Well, if he has some other course of action which is open in law, open in diplomacy, to the Government of Canada, we would be interested in knowing what that is.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER COMMUNICATE WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to suggest what that should be to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I want to suggest it to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister said when he was in Lethbridge, and I quote him: "President Reagan has an obligation to act".

With respect, I would suggest that the people of Alberta think that the Prime Minister of Canada has an obligation to act.

Given the seriousness of this, not only for the people of Alberta, but because the matter goes to the heart of the notion of the sovereignty of a nation, making its own laws, pertinent to its own people, will the Prime Minister in a straightforward fashion get in touch with President Reagan and make it clear that in this decision, as well as in any other related trade embargo decision, Canadian law, and Canadian law only, ought to affect the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP may have noticed a statement on an unrelated but also important matter yesterday by the President of the United States in which he is, I think, signalling a very strong response to the contention of this Government in regard to sovereignty in the Arctic, which is most encouraging. I think it is an indication of the strong results that come from the policy adopted by our Government in asserting the sovereignty of Canada at all times.

In regard to this case that has been raised, we think that the FERC ruling marks a serious set-back in our joint efforts which we have developed since the Quebec meetings toward a market-oriented pricing arrangement concerning energy products. We believe that this kind of inhibition runs counter to the best interests of both countries. It is one that we vigorously and strongly protest. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has quite properly pointed it out in an appropriate context. We shall do so again and we will pursue it with all of the vigour and all of the leverage which this national Government has, to make sure that producers in western Canada, particularly Alberta, get justice to which they are entitled.

EFFECT OF DECISION ON ECONOMY OF ALBERTA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Americans said yesterday about Canadian sovereignty in the Canadian Arctic is that they accept Canadian sovereignty over Canadian territory. That is very nice.

But I want to say to the Prime Minister that what is involved here is something that directly affects the people of Alberta in terms of trade, and implicitly all other Canadians in terms of trade, namely, it is Canadian law on commercial matters that should be pertinent to Canadians' lives, not American law. That is the point.

Since the Prime Minister made the commitment in Alberta, and since he knows in the Accord that he reached with President Reagan two years ago in Quebec that the President made a specific commitment to move in this area, will the Prime Minister get in touch with President Reagan and make it clear that on a matter like this, that is inextricably connected with Canadian sovereignty, the decision that has now been taken by the United States is totally unacceptable to the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is in substantial error in regard to the interpretation he places on the statement yesterday.

With regard to the second point which the Hon. Member makes, whether Canadian law applies, well, of course, it does. Concerning the third point as to whether we will be in touch, we already have. It is my hope to be meeting with President Reagan for a discussion of this and other important matters relating to our ongoing bilateral agenda.

Mr. Rodriguez: When?

REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR 1987-88 CROP YEAR

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Prime Minister told the House this week that we should not be recommending that the Government provide a deficiency payment to help grain farmers survive the trade wars that are going on between the United States and the European Economic Community.

Today the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, on behalf of tens of thousands of grain and corn farmers across the country, are demanding a commitment by the Government that it provide a deficiency payment as they meet with members of caucuses on all sides of the House.

When will the Minister of Agriculture stop stonewalling the farmers and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and make a commitment to a deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must respond to that because the Hon. Member says that I recommended that the Government not be making a deficiency payment to western farmers. That statement is a complete fabrication and falsehood.

Mr. Axworthy: Withdraw.

Mr. Mulroney: That is at total variance with what I said in the House of Commons.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Withdraw.

Mr. Mulroney: It is at total variance with what I said in the House of Commons. It is at total variance with the record of this Government which has given more aid to western farmers, which has been here to assist western farmers—

An Hon. Member: What about the problems?

Mr. Mulroney: Here is a Liberal yelling. When the Liberals refused and said to western farmers, "Why should we sell your wheat?", this Government said we should sell your wheat because we have an obligation to help farmers. That is why.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma.

PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we will let Hansard speak for itself. I think we will find exactly what I said is exactly what the Prime Minister said earlier this week.

If the Prime Minister wants to come clean with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the pools, the corn growers and the farmers—and he will be meeting with them tomorrow morning—why does he not make a simple commitment that he will provide a deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year so that our Canadian farmers will know that they are going to survive, the same as farmers in the United States, not a gold-plated deficiency system, but just to survive?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I invite my hon. friend to take a look at Hansard very closely and to reflect upon what was said. I know he will want to withdraw the inadvertent distortions in what he said in the prefatory remarks to his questions.

Indeed, he is right. As opposed to any Liberal Prime Minister that he can care to name, I, tomorrow, will be meeting with farmers again. It is probably the sixth or seventh formal meeting with farmers that I have had in the last few years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): They will boo you too.

Mr. Mulroney: There is the Liberal point of view. The Liberals give the farmers the finger, and we give them the time of day and a hell of a lot of help. That is the difference.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

WAGE SCALES FOR NEW EMPLOYEES—EFFECT ON WOMEN WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last November the Prime Minister insisted that Crown corporations be required to have affirmative action plans and work toward meeting the equity legislation passed by the House of Commons.

Considering that 85 per cent of Canada's letter carriers are men and that the Crown corporation is insisting that all new employees have 25 per cent less in salary, does the Prime Minister not recognize that the Government's action in this case is going to mean that women workers always earn less than men?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not catch the earlier part of the Hon. Member's question—

An Hon. Member: You never do.

Mr. Andre: —because it was not directed at me initially.

In terms of salaries for employees, this is a matter that is being negotiated now between the unions and the Post Office. I do not think it is particularly useful to bring those negotiations or the elements of them to the floor of the House of Commons.

SALARIES OF NEW WOMEN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. It is a matter of government procedure and government policy. Is he going to allow a Crown corporation to insist that all new employees, who will basically be women, receive salaries which are 25 per cent less than those of the men who are working there now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the Hon. Member would feel he would be contributing to labour peace by bringing in here the question of starting salaries or any other element of the contracts that are now being discussed at the table between management and labour.

As to the assertion of starting employees of one gender or another, that does not mesh with the facts as I know them. As far as I know, there are both men and women working in the Post Office, although I cannot give the Hon. Member the exact percentages at this point in time.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES—PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In January, 1986, the Government unfairly and savagely cut the unemployment insurance benefits of thousands of pre-retired Canadians. After a year of protests the Government recognized its error and introduced Bill C-50 on April 1. However, after eight weeks, the Government has not called that Bill for debate.

While we do not accept all parts of the Bill, today we made a proposal to the Government to limit debate on the Bill to two days, with short committee hearings, so that it would be completely passed by June 19. Won't the Minister give attention to this proposal and accept it immediately so that we can reimburse these thousands of Canadian pensioners?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): We have done much better, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the House Leader suggested to the Liberal Party having a full day debate on the issue. I am making the same proposal today. We are not suggesting a two-day debate. If you had not blocked so many Bills in the House, this measure would have been passed a long time ago.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TWO-DAY DEBATE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Government House Leader. Bill C-50 is a complex, controversial Bill which affects thousands of Canadians. The Government is asking us to deal with it in all stages in one day, when it delayed the issue for more than a year.

Two days are reasonable and necessary. Won't the Government House Leader give the Minister permission to accept this reasonable proposal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if the Liberal Party got its act together. We have the critic negotiating here on this particular issue—

Mr. Allmand: It is the same position.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Clean up your own mess. It is your mess.

Mr. Mazankowski: When they are through, Mr. Speaker, I will give the answer.

We discussed this matter at a House Leaders' meeting yesterday. It is a matter which is still before us for consideration.

There was a proposal made. My understanding is that both House Leaders were to go back to their respective caucuses and/or critics and to come back with another proposal. We are prepared to move on it very quickly.

Mr. Allmand: There it is.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member is a well seasoned Member. He knows very well that these kinds of negotiations normally take place at House Leaders' meetings, not on the floor of the House of Commons. What he is really trying to do is bail them out of a sink-hole into which he and his colleagues have got themselves.

ENERGY

DECISION OF U.S. FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION—EFFECT ON ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I think, as he is well aware, that the U.S. FERC ruling will cost the people of Alberta and their economy $400 million.

Since the letter to the President of the United States has failed; since, as we have learned from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, diplomatic efforts to this point have failed; and since they are both looking for positive suggestions, would the Prime Minister be prepared to accept a motion before the House to allow the House to express unanimously its views on the matter so that the President of the United States, the U.S. Congress, and their regulatory agencies can hear Canadian voices united loud and clear on this important Alberta issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in the minds of the United States about the strength of the feeling of Canadians on this question. That has been made clear.

What we must do is see if there are means open to us by which that decision can be reversed. One way in which that can occur is through the courts.

I am touched as an Albertan by the interest pretended by the New Democratic Party in the oil and gas industry in my province. Its policy calls for a halt to all exports of oil and gas from Alberta to the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: I was born in Alberta. I know a little about Alberta. I do not know what kind of Canadian unity is supposed to be expressed in here with that kind of petty comment from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

PASSAGE OF UNANIMOUS MOTION REQUESTED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs is just flatly wrong.

My question to the Prime Minister is a serious one in that neighbourly countries like the United States listen when legislatures pass unanimous resolutions. I ask in utmost seriousness will the Prime Minister accept a motion before the House so that all Parties and all Members can express their concern to Albertans and their concern to the Americans about this FERC ruling which would cost $400 million per year?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question is not about unity in the country. The question is about unity in the New Democratic Party.

Let me quote their policy: "We therefore recommend the phasing out of such exports". Once it becomes known in the Province of Alberta that what the New Democratic Party wants to do with the oil and gas industry is cut off the exports and cut off the jobs which are involved in those exports, then, seriously though we regard the FERC decision in the United States and seriously though we regard that problem to Alberta, it is clear that the four letter word "FERC" is less dangerous to Alberta than the three letter word "NDP".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL OPPOSITION'S OFFER CONCERNING 35,000 ELDERLY WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and again concerns older workers in Canada. We know that his performance in this matter has been dismal.

Ms. Copps: He does not care about it either.

Mr. Malépart: The Official Opposition made a specific offer to ensure that the 35,000 older workers involved will receive their cheques before the first week of July. Would the Prime Minister ask his Deputy Prime Minister, first to call the second reading debate of the Bill next week, second, to allow referral to committee so that witnesses can be heard, and third, to see to it that the Bill passes the third reading stage with amendments the first week of June to ensure that these older workers receive what is owed to them?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for several months, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has been travelling throughout Quebec promising people who are waiting for their pensions that they will be paid. Now is the time to deliver. We are ready to pay after a one-day debate. We are waiting for you.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT APPARENTLY REFUSES TO HEAR CERTAIN PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): The Minister of Employment and Immigration has already made a shocking statement about the purity of the Lac-Saint-Jean area. He has already made the shocking statement that francophones do not know how to add, and he has just committed a shocking injustice as far as older workers are concerned.

Can the Prime Minister explain why his Government is denying our military, our veterans and our senior citizens the right to express their views? Why discriminate against these people? Why have the hypocrisy to applaud?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malépart: Mrs. Solange Denis and Charlie Brown.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I only want to say to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that the retirees want a one-day debate only, not the type of shouting we have just heard. They want to get paid, sir, if you please.

Mr. Malépart: Two days of debate.

HARBOURFRONT

TORONTO PROJECT—FUTURE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, once the Liberals calm down, I will direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the Harbourfront property in Toronto.

Will the Minister advise the House why, in the name of heaven, just three weeks after imposing a freeze at Harbourfront, he approved a new lease for development at that site? Is there a freeze at Harbourfront or isn't there a freeze?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the freeze continues. The lease which was recently signed with Wang and Danetsky was a formalization of an agreement entered into some years ago. The Government was legally committed. The freeze continues, and there are many other approvals which this developer must obtain specifically from the Toronto planning authorities before anything further happens.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF BANK ACCOUNTS—CONTENT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As he knows, a significant and effective component of U.S. legislation against the laundering of illicit drug generated income is its Bank Secrecy Act. It looks as though Canada is not to follow suit.

Would the Prime Minister confirm or deny that the legislation against money laundering will not include a requirement for reporting on the part of financial institutions and banks in Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this particular question is relevant to financial institutions. I have to tell the Hon. Member that I cannot speculate, and I know he would understand that, on the contents of legislation which has not yet been introduced in the House. I suggest that he wait until the legislation is introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Justice.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, would the Government not agree that the failure to have a reporting component to this legislation would be like loading up a gun with blanks, especially when four Canadian banks are already under investigation for the laundering of money in the Bahamas?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the way that issue will be handled will become evident in the legislation.

REPORTING OF LARGE BANK DEPOSITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject, the Government's so-called war on drug abuse. It appears clear now that the legislation to be introduced tomorrow will not include a provision that would require Canadian banks and financial institutions to report large sums of money that have been deposited in their institutions.

Can the Prime Minister give the House his undertaking that the legislation that will be introduced tomorrow will include a provision requiring the banks to report? If not, why will that provision not be in the legislation?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one has to wonder why hon. gentlemen are asking these questions. They pooh-poohed the fact that there was any problem with drug abuse in Canada a few months ago when the Prime Minister introduced the subject. Now they are trying to show an interest in it.

The legislation in question that will deal with the proceeds of crime was under study and review last year. It will be introduced this week. If there are any improvements to it that Hon. Members would suggest, they may suggest them in committee. I would suggest that we wait until it is introduced before we have a vigorous debate on the provisions of legislation that is not yet known.

SEIZURE OF PROFITS OF CRIME

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, if the Government is serious about its war on drug abuse, it should not go into the battle with pop-guns. A former Deputy Solicitor General has stated:

> Canadian legislation that would permit the freezing, seizure, and forfeiture of the profits from enterprise crime would have little effect unless there were mechanisms in place whereby these profits could be traced.

Will the Minister not admit that that provision will not be in the legislation because the Government caved in to the Canadian banks?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one of course despairs of ever reaching the hon. gentleman, but the fact is that his own Party was in power nearly every year since 1945 and did exactly nothing about the proceeds of crime or the disposition of the proceeds of crime. Why is there this late interest in the subject when nothing was done by his Party for 40 years?

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PURCHASE OF WOODWARD'S STORES BY SAFEWAY—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS IN EDMONTON AND CALGARY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know that Safeway has purchased 23 of the food stores formerly owned by Woodward's. This means that in the City of Edmonton, Safeway will have more than 60 per cent of the market. In the City of Calgary, it will have over 50 per cent of the market.

There has been a great deal of concern over this expressed by the Consumers' Association of Canada. What steps does the Minister intend to take to protect the consumers in Calgary, Edmonton and a number of other cities in Alberta and British Columbia who will be so adversely affected?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the examination of this merger takeover is part of the responsibility of the Director of Investigation Research of the Combines Branch. The Hon. Member will also know that it is against the law for the Minister to interfere and participate in that activity. His request of me that I break the law by interfering is one I will have to turn down.

The decision has been announced by the Director of Investigation, and part of the agreement was that Safeway would divest itself of a number of stores in areas where there was significant detrimental impact on competition as a result of the Woodward's takeover.

REQUIREMENT TO SELL CERTAIN STORES—REPORTED REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not know that the way Safeway got around the requirement to account for what it is doing to the Director of Investigation was to promise to sell 12 to 15 stores but it has now said that it wants to be exempt from the necessity of doing that? Is it not time the Government and the Director took some action to protect people who will really get hurt by Safeway's monopoly?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think one should in fact examine what was said and not what headline writers wrote. In the event, any change of that sort could only occur with the concurrence of the competition tribunal, the semi-judicial and indeed judicial body that would examine this. If that eventuality should come to pass, the Hon. Member and any other interested Canadian would have the opportunity to make representations before the competition tribunal to ensure that the decision is in the interests of the consumers of Canada.

LAPRADE FUND

AWARDING OF MONEYS—CRITERIA FOR DISTRIBUTION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Further to a recent news item in the daily Le Nouvelliste, announcing that two million dollars from the Laprade Fund would be distributed to eight ridings, could the President of the Treasury Board inform the House whether these monies can be used to set up a special investment fund, similar to the one in the Lac-Saint-Jean area, or will they have to be used for a specific purpose, for projects that are to be submitted either to the office of the President of the Treasury Board or of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member referred to an article that appeared last week and which, I imagine, was based on leaked information and contained a number of inaccuracies. The Laprade Fund will be used, as I have said many times, to create permanent jobs, to promote industrial, recreational and technological development in the region and also as a complement, especially to existing programs. What we want to do, further to what happened at Laprade, is to provide a development fund for the central region of Quebec, which will give us our 'place in the sun' and promote economic development.

DETERMINATION OF PRIORITIES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Will the projects that are submitted, or the projects or studies that are on the table now, be used to determine the priorities in each riding, and will this be done from the office of the President of the Treasury Board or of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, or can those projects or priorities in the ridings be determined by management boards that could be set up to manage the Laprade Fund?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is speculating on how the Laprade Fund will be spent. We as a Government would prefer to see the people in the various regions across this country contribute to a very large extent to our economic development, and the Laprade Fund will be used along those lines. We will try to get the people in the region actively involved, by having people from each riding help determine priorities according to the general criteria for awarding monies from this Fund.

VIA RAIL

SERVICE IN WINDSOR-LONDON-TORONTO CORRIDOR

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Windsor-London-Toronto corridor is one of the most highly travelled corridors in the VIA Rail system. In light of recent service cut-backs made without any consultation, together with a new commitment to improve this national service, will the Minister relate to the House how residents of southwestern Ontario, particularly London—Middlesex, can gain assurance that changes in service policy are not implemented without their input, and will he assure those patrons that they will in fact be granted an opportunity to be heard?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with the additional funds we are now providing for VIA Rail we hope passenger comfort and equipment reliability will improve. I agree with the Hon. Member that there needs to be greater consultation between VIA Rail and those it serves. I believe in his area a consultative committee is going to be set up by VIA. That will be in addition to the North Main line consultative committee on which London is represented. A community consultative committee is going to be set up in London itself to discuss not only scheduling but all other VIA related issues. That is a course I hope VIA will continue to pursue in response to the vigorous representations of the Hon. Member.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES' RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister who received last week an invitation from the leaders of aboriginal organizations to meet with them here in Ottawa during this week's conference to discuss the implications of the Meech Lake accord over which they entertain serious and legitimate concerns.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to meet with the leaders of the main aboriginal organizations at the earliest opportunity to set up a negotiation program to complete the Canadian Confederation by including the aboriginal peoples' right to self-government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for this question. Indeed, on four occasions, through constitutional conferences on aboriginal issues, we attempted to reintegrate, to give native peoples the full benefit of Canada's constitutional provisions.

Again recently, despite our best efforts, we as a nation failed in this latest attempt. I pointed out at the time, and again here in the House, that in spite of that failure—my friend would know that the provinces must co-operate if we are to succeed—at the appropriate time I would of course be prepared to re-open the case and make a new attempt to propose a fair integration process to the native peoples with respect to the Canadian Constitution.

I remain available and interested in seeing this process through to its successful completion.

[English]

REQUEST FOR SCHEDULING OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians appreciate the Prime Minister's commitment. What concrete measures will he take to ensure that a schedule is set up for negotiations to include aboriginal self-government rights in the Constitution, and will he raise this matter with the Premiers at the next meeting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Wake up!

Mr. Mulroney: It is nice to see her grace from Hamilton East back in her seat. When we are trying to discuss something of value to the aboriginal peoples all we get is heckling from the Liberal Party.

In regard to the very important question raised by my hon. friend, I think he will agree that the most important aspect in this kind of process is to ensure a reasonable chance of success. We have had four constitutional conferences on this question so far without success. As I have already indicated, it is important that we try to create a climate so that the next time we meet a degree of success is attainable. I expressed that view in regard to the timing and manner in which I proposed to have this Government prepare for the constitutional negotiations with the Province of Quebec at Meech Lake. I believe that was an important part of the process.

I also believe that much more important than a schedule at this point in time are discussions with the First Ministers to try to create a climate wherein it is generally recognized and accepted that a sense of justice and equity is required for the aboriginal peoples of Canada so that there can be a constitutional accord on this vital issue.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question.

REFUGEES

CASE OF FRANCESCO PIPERNO—REQUEST FOR DEPORTATION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration and concerns Francesco Piperno, a known terrorist, who organized a conference at the University of Quebec in November, 1985. He has used taxpayers' money to bring all sorts of terrorists to Canada. I am asking the Minister why he does not apply Section 39 of the Immigration Act of 1976, Chapter 52, which permits him to have this individual deported for the safety and security of Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I answered clearly in the House yesterday, this matter is now before the Immigration Appeal Board. It is inappropriate for me to comment while the case is before a quasi-judicial body.

Mr. Pennock: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North.

SECURITY RISK INQUIRY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a matter of security. This person has been convicted in absentia in Rome for terrorism and he is teaching students in Canada. In the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he assure this House that the necessary steps have been taken to ensure that this person is not a security risk to young Canadians here in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should want to reassure my colleague concerning the case to which he is referring. The case is now before the Immigration Appeal Board, and the Minister cannot intervene directly to stop a process which is already under way. We will wait for the ruling which should be made soon. The government takes security matters into account, and that will be our approach in this case as well.

[English]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have two points. One is the usual business question and the other is a point of order arising out of today's Question Period. I ask your guidance as to which you would like me to raise first.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order arising out of today's Question Period. In answer to a question raised by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Prime Minister, in referring to the words used by the Hon. Member, used the word "fabrication". I want to refer to Beauchesne's Citation 320(2) which indicates that since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions. Then on page 106 we find the word "fabrication". There appears to have been a ruling by a Speaker reported in the House of Commons Debates of January 27, 1959, at page 385.

Unlike the word "falsehood", the use of which was discussed in a point of order a few days ago, and which was found in some cases to be parliamentary and in other cases unparliamentary, the only precedent before you is that of a Speaker who ruled that the word "fabrication" was unparliamentary. Therefore, I respectfully call upon you to ask the Prime Minister to follow the accepted practice of this House and withdraw the word "fabrication" unconditionally.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I refer my hon. friend to the prefatory remarks of the Hon. Member today in which he made a statement—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We are talking about your remarks.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, indeed. He talked about remarks I made on May 26 at page 6401 of Hansard. He will see there is absolutely nothing in those remarks that would give rise at all to the—

Mr. Marchi: Today's remark.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It is irrelevant. Either withdraw or not.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you keep quiet?

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members are aware that the Chair has been very careful on points of order and questions of privilege to hear all those who are involved in the dispute or the complaint, and to hear as well other Hon. Members who wish to intervene. In the present case the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is responding to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The Prime Minister has the floor as he is entitled to have.

Mr. Mulroney: It is a very, very simple point, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend said that I had said no to western farmers. I said no such thing. My hon. friend is the one who, as reported at page 6401 of Hansard, said "It is a no, a firm no." In other words, his interpretation gave rise to his own suggestion that I had said no to western farmers when I had said exactly the opposite.

If the objection is to the word "fabrication", if that is unparliamentary, I would happily withdraw it in favour of the word "invention" because I made no such comment at all. I would be happy to follow your directive, Mr. Speaker, in this regard.

Mr. Rossi: Did he say "fabrication" or not?

Mr. Mazankowski: He withdrew it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West has risen on a point of order and quite properly pointed out to the House that the word "fabrication" has in the past been found to be unparliamentary. The Hon. Member for Windsor West, who is a scholar on procedural matters, would also point out that these words must be looked at in the context in which they were spoken. The Chair has not had the opportunity in the last few minutes to check Hansard for that particular citation.

However, the Right Hon. Prime Minister got up and said "I withdraw the word 'fabrication'", and I think that that ends it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to ask the usual question of the Government House Leader as to the business he intends to call during the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in order to accommodate the Opposition we will be calling Bills C-42 and C-56 tomorrow. Monday will be an allotted day. Presuming that we conclude the second reading stage of Bill C-42, we will call Bill C-56 on Tuesday. Perhaps we will get into Bill C-56 tomorrow. However, that will be the order of business.

POINT OF ORDER

METHOD OF PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) has been patiently awaiting, for quite some time, the Chair's comments on a matter which he raised on March 23 last. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, on a point of order, questioned the current practice with respect to the presentation of petitions. In particular, he pointed out a number of instances where petitions were certified by the Clerk of Petitions and then presented to the House some weeks or months later. He claimed that a lengthy lapse of time between the certification of a petition and its presentation in the House denied those Canadians who were petitioning the opportunity for speedy redress of their grievances. It also, he claimed, denied the Government the right to reply promptly.

So that all Hon. Members and the public will understand, under the rules of this place when a petition is presented either by an Hon. Member rising to his or her feet to present it, or by filing it at the Table, the Government is now required under the rules to reply to that petition in so many days. It is important that all Hon. Members and the public which is watching this understand that because that is a key ingredient of these remarks.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is raising an extremely legitimate complaint here. Any Canadian who signs a petition would not expect that several months would elapse from the date the petition is first signed until a response is forthcoming. While a delay of several weeks is potentially required in order to allow for the collection of signatures, the transmittal to Ottawa, the certification by the Clerk of Petitions, the presentation in the House, and the response by the Government, most Canadians would agree that delays of some seven or eight months, as pointed out by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, are difficult to justify.

The second point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary dealt with the presentation of petitions by Members other than the Member who had the petition certified. As Hon. Members will know, before a petition can be presented it must be certified at the Table. He claimed that this practice would be misleading because when Members from across the country were presenting petitions the implication could be drawn that a particular issue was of more widespread concern to Canadians than possibly was the case.

By way of response to these two points let me first quote Standing Order 106(1) which states:

> Prior to presentation, the Clerk of Petitions shall examine all petitions, and in order to be presented, they must be certified correct as to form and content by the said Clerk.

There is no specific mention in this Standing Order of any requirement to present a petition within a specific time frame, only the point that "prior to presentation" it must be certified.

The Chair consulted the McGrath Committee report of June 1985 which recommended this particular Standing Order to see whether any indication was given there of a possible restriction on the period of time between certification and presentation but could find no guidance.

[English]

To take the matter further, in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Citation 691 states:

> A Member cannot be compelled to present a petition. In a subsequent action, it was held that there is no right in a person desirous of petitioning the House to compel any Member to present his petition and that no action will lie against a Member for refusing to do so.

If there is no requirement that a Member present a petition, can there be a requirement that a petition should be presented within a specified period of time following certification? On March 23, 1987, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) ably pointed out that various reasons might prevent a Member from presenting a certified petition expeditiously. I would suggest to Members that several months need not elapse between certification and presentation in most circumstances. However, I agree with the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that the present Standing Order does not impose any specific restriction.

[Translation]

To address the second point raised by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary let me quote Standing Order 106(4) which states:

> Any Member desiring to present a petition in his or her place in the House may do so on "Presenting Petitions—"

There is no specific mention here that the Member presenting the petition must be the Member who had it certified, or indeed that it must be the Member in whose riding the petitioners reside. There is no restriction stated in the Standing Order. It merely states "any member".

• (1520)

On a careful reading of the Standing Orders and a strict interpretation of those Standing Orders, I can find no requirement that the Member who has the petition certified must be the Member who presents it. In fact, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier pointed out, Beauchesne's Citations 689 and 690 specifically relate to Members presenting petitions for other Members.

However, because the current Standing Orders relating to petitions are provisional and have only been in force for a short time, and because the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure is in the process of considering the Standing Orders at the present time, it might be timely to suggest to members of this committee that they may wish to pay particular attention to the Standing Orders relating to the presentation of petitions, if as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has contended, these particular Standing Orders are causing concern.

As these provisional Standing Orders are now written, I am unable to order that the Member who has a petition certified be the same Member who presents it to the House, nor can I define any time restriction for the period between the certification and the presentation of a petition.

I do, however, feel that the issues raised by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary are legitimate ones dealing with the fundamental right of every citizen to petition the House of Commons and to expect speedy redress. I would suggest to all Members that they give this issue their close attention. I thank Hon. Members for their representations.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—TAX REFORM—OPPOSITION TO FOOD TAX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

> That this House oppose any imposition of a federal tax on food and urge the Government to reject any such tax as part of its tax reform package.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion by the New Democratic Party which expresses the view of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who do not want the sales tax extended, and certainly do not want it applied to food.

This country has been governed by Liberal Governments for 50 of the last 60 years. During those years the tax system became increasingly unfair. In the last year for which we have figures, over 200 Canadians with incomes of $250,000 or more paid no income tax. Many of the most profitable corporations in this country have paid no corporation taxes for years. Indeed, there is the recent example of the Gulf Canada purchase in which the purchasers were able to avoid payment of $500 million in corporation taxes which they should have paid.

We realize today that we mistakenly believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the last election campaign to be sincere when he said he believed in a more fair and equitable tax system. Unfortunately, the record proves the exact opposite. Since the Government has been in office it has loaded increased taxes on ordinary citizens and has made it easier for those in the high income brackets and those wealthy corporations to pay even less than they did in the past.

On May 6, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) condemned the current sales tax regime as being flawed and inadequate. We agree with that. However, he went on to say that he wanted to replace the sales tax system with "a broad-based, multi-stage sales tax". This concept can mean virtually anything. It could mean that there will be a tax on almost all goods and services at all stages of production and development of consumption items. It could mean that there will be a tax on everyday transactions such as a tenant paying rent, a parent taking a child to day care, or someone visiting a dentist. The Government has been very careful not to make public the details of what it proposes.

We have estimated that the average Canadian family spends about $5,000 a year on food. Under a new Conservative sales tax regime, the average Canadian family might pay a minimum of $300 in new taxes if food is not exempted from this new tax. We intend to fight such a proposal if and when the Government attempts to bring it forward. The Government has argued that it will minimize the difficulties which will be created for low and middle-income people by this new sales tax through the use of an enhanced refundable sales tax credit which, at the present time, gives adults $50 in refunds and children $25 in refunds. However, the National Council of Welfare has calculated that while this form of tax relief does reduce the sales tax burden considerably, it does not fully offset the cost of recent Conservative sales and excise tax increases. Furthermore, the tax credit is only available to families with incomes between $10,000 and $15,000.

We have made some calculations on what tax increases have meant to ordinary Canadian families since the Conservative Government took office. As a result of the November, 1985 economic statement of the Minister of Finance, there were increases in oil and gas price, unemployment insurance premiums, and an increase in sales tax. That cost the ordinary family $425.

The May, 1985 Budget eliminated the federal tax reduction, modified indexing of income tax, cut the family allowance payments, broadened the sales tax base, increased cigarettes and alcohol tax, and increased the gas tax. That cost the ordinary family $512 in the course of a year.

There were further increases in the Budget of February 26, 1986. There was a 3 per cent surtax on income tax, a sales tax increase, and an increase in taxes for cigarettes and alcohol. That cost the family $340 in a year.

In February of this year there were further increases in the gas tax. The sales tax base was broadened and cigarette and air ticket taxes were increased. That cost the family about $80.

The cost to the ordinary family of increases in taxes by the Conservative Government has been $1,384 in the course of a year.

The New Democratic Party and the National Council on Welfare are not the only ones to criticize the imposition of a business transfer tax. Mr. Bulloch's Canadian Federation of Independent Business, whose membership includes tens of thousands of small-business people, have opposed such a tax.

The Minister of Finance has said that one of the chief objectives of tax reform is to give the majority of Canadians more take home pay by way of a personal tax cut. We are concerned that what the Conservatives give with one hand they will just as likely take with the other through increases, hidden sales taxes.

This is not only true of sales taxes. We have seen a steady increase in the use of consumption taxes. We oppose the increased use of consumption taxes because we believe that it is regressive and shifts corporate tax burdens directly on to consumers. We believe that not only do corporations not pay their fair share, they pass their share of taxes on to consumers.

The increased use of sales taxes is a blow to the fair and progressive tax system in Canada that was almost destroyed by former Liberal Governments. Yet this is exactly the direction in which the Conservative tax changes have taken us since 1984.

As a consequence of the last three Budgets, and one economic statement, Canadians are now paying over $20 billion in new sales and excise taxes, or will be by 1990. That amounts to an additional $910 for an average Canadian family over and above what we were paying in sales taxes prior to the time the Conservatives took office. It is also one of the largest single tax increases in Canadian history.

What this has meant in terms of how the Government gets its revenue can be explained very simply. The revenue that personal income taxes have brought to the Government has increased by 43 per cent. The revenue which came to the Government as a result of the increases it instituted through indirect taxes has increased by 56 per cent. The revenue of the Government from changes in the corporate income tax has increased by just three-tenths of 1 per cent. So it is pretty obvious to us who the Conservative Government represents.

We believe in a fair and progressive tax system, a system where individual incomes above a basic level are taxed on a progressive and graduated basis in order to redistribute the income from the wealthy to average and lower income Canadians and to achieve a more equal society. The past and future addiction of the Conservatives to sales tax increases will mean a serious erosion of progressivity in the tax system as consumption taxes take up an increasingly higher proportion of over-all revenues.

In 1986 alone, sales tax increases managed to move the percentage of revenues represented by these taxes from 22.3 per cent to much more. Tax reform proposals which the Minister will bring in in a few weeks will undoubtedly propel this percentage higher. It is the equivalent of imposing a flat tax on all incomes regardless of whether the person is rich or poor.

Let us deal with what a tax on food will do. It is important to note that the Conservatives have already put in motion their methods of collecting sales tax on food. In February of this year they extended the federal sales tax to snack foods effective July 1. A month from now we are going to see the kids paying more for their potato chips and chocolate bars.

This tax will primarily hit children and raise $120 million in revenue. It will cost the average family about $15 a year.

Why would a Government which cares about the Canadian people impose that kind of tax when it lets the purchasers of Gulf Canada avoid paying $500 million in taxes? If the Government had collected that tax which the purchasers should have paid, and were obligated to pay by law, except for the very strange ruling by Revenue Canada, the Government would not have to do most of the things it is doing.

We have estimated that the average Canadian family will pay $300 in new taxes as a result of taxing food. That is if the new tax is what is called "revenue neutral", in other words, if it is set at 6 per cent. However, what is to prevent the present Conservative Government, which is so concerned about the deficit, from setting the rate not at 6 per cent but at 7 per cent or 8 per cent or higher, as it is in many European countries? This would mean an increased cost of about $350 or $400 a year to the average family.

We say that tax increases on such fundamental living items will generate a tax revolt among Canadians. The people of Canada took the Prime Minister seriously when he talked before the election about a fairer, simpler, less complex tax system. He said that Canadians who were wealthy and corporations which were profitable would pay their fair share of taxes. We are still waiting for that. We are certain that the imposition of a tax on food is precisely the wrong way in which the people of Canada want this Government, or any government, to go. Therefore, we give notice now that we will fight such a proposal if it is in the White Paper the Minister will be bringing down shortly. We will fight it with everything we have, both in Parliament and outside of this place among the ordinary people of this country.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, clearly the New Democratic Party opposes any kind of tax on food, but surely it will acknowledge that there are already hidden taxes involved in the processing of food, whether it is the hidden price subsidies or the cost of packaging or the cost of transportation. These are all taxes on the production of food. Is the NDP saying that it would attempt as a Government, should it ever become a Government, to remove those taxes on food? Is the NDP in opposition to those taxes on food? And if it thinks it can remove them, how would that be done?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, what I said today and what we have always said is that we believe that the services the people of Canada want and need have to be paid for in one way or another, but we also believe that the tax system should be as fair as possible. That is why we are opposed to increases in hidden taxes. That is why we are opposed to increases in sales taxes, the business-transfer tax or value-added tax, whatever name or label one wants to give to that kind of tax. We are opposed to any increases. We believe that the loopholes in the income tax should be plugged so that everyone will have to pay a fair share. Why should a teller in a bank pay more in income tax than the bank he works for pays in corporation taxes? Why should a clerk at the Hudson Bay store pay more in income tax than the Hudson Bay Company pays in corporation taxes?

We say we want to plug the holes in the Income Tax Act, most of which were created when the Liberals formed the Government. We want fairness. We want the large corporations to pay taxes at least at the same rate and with the same consistency as the small businessman. There is more than $30 billion in deferred corporation taxes owing, and 90 per cent of that or more is owed by a very small number of the largest corporations.

Are we proposing that all the sales taxes which are already there should be removed? Of course, we cannot do that because we cannot do everything at one time. What we are saying is we do not want any increase or broadening of the sales tax base, and we want those individuals who are wealthy and those corporations which are profitable to pay their fair share of taxes.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who is, as I am, a Manitoban. We have in Manitoba a NDP Government, one of two in Canada. I think we can use them as an example of NDP tax policy in action.

• (1540)

On March 16 a Budget was introduced in Manitoba. It increased taxes for four out of every five Manitobans. The retail sales tax was increased. In spite of the Hon. Member's comment that the NDP is opposed to a consumptive tax, the NDP in Manitoba raised the sales tax from 6 per cent to 7 per cent. The Government extended the provincial sales tax to include take-out meals. The payroll tax was increased by 60 per cent. Every small business in Manitoba pays a tax on gross payroll, and that figure was increased by 50 per cent. A 2 per cent tax was imposed on net income for every Manitoban. This basically means a 21 per cent tax increase for a single mother earning $27,000 per year. However, if a taxpayer is part of a childless couple making over $200,000 per year then that couple will pay less than half the increase that a single mother will pay. If there is going to be a tax revolt it will be in Manitoba where we pay the highest rate of provincial tax in the country.

In light of what the Hon. Member has said I am wondering if he and his federal colleagues have passed on their feelings and their displeasure with the Manitoba budget to their cohorts in Manitoba.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) has given the facts with respect to the increases levied by the Government of Manitoba in its last Budget. However, I ask him to think about the reasons for these increases. The fact is that Manitoba is one of the have-not provinces, whether we have an NDP Government, a Conservative Government or a Liberal Government as we had years ago. Manitoba depends to a large extent on transfer payments from the federal Government, as do the Atlantic provinces. What has happened since the Conservatives won the last election is that the funds going to the Province of Manitoba from the federal Government have been sharply reduced.

Mr. Minaker: They have not.

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member says that they have not. The fact is that the Government has limited the transfer payments under the EPF and a whole host of other programs. The other thing is that Manitoba, like nine of the provinces in the country, has its income taxes collected by the federal Government. Those exemptions and those loopholes in the income tax structure which I talked about, put into place by members of the Liberal Party when they formed the Government, and which have been extended by the Conservative Government, such as the $500,000 exemption on capital gains, are built into the system by the federal Government. The Government of Manitoba, like every other provincial Government in Canada, except Quebec which collects its own income taxes, has to build its tax program on the federal tax system. So of course the Government of Manitoba had to do a number of things which it did not like to do. But it had to do them because of the way the federal Government has treated the Province of Manitoba. The alternative to that was not to increase taxes and to impose Draconian cuts in services which we see have been implemented by the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan.

I make the following challenge to the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River. I will come up to his constituency and the two of us can talk about the Budget presented by the NDP Government of Manitoba and what it has meant and the Budget presented by the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan with its major cut-backs in services and the lay-off of 2,000 civil servants. I will take my chances that there will be much more sympathy for the Manitoba Government than there will be for the Government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, here we go again. Once more all we hear from the Hon. Member this afternoon are more words of fear. He is here to sow fear on behalf of his Party. He is here to sow fear in the minds of average and ordinary Canadians. His Party was created on fear and it continues to exist on fear. I refer not to the fear of realities but to the fear of myths, the fear of suspicions which the Hon. Member and members of his Party try to sow in the minds of other Canadians.

One thing that is a reality and about which we know is the fact that before the last Budget there was a federal sales tax on certain, what we might describe as, junk foods. The Hon. Member spoke about the extension of the federal sales tax to other junk foods during his remarks.

I have in my riding a company by the name of Wrigley which produces chewing gum. It complained to me and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about the fact that the federal sales tax prior to the last Budget applied to it but not to its direct competitors which produced potato chips and things of that sort. That was a disadvantage to Wrigley that was driving it out of business. That was threatening to put its 300 employees, some of whom I suspect were supporters of the Hon. Member's Party, out of work and onto the street. In fact, the last Budget imposed a sales tax which applied fairly to competing products in this area.

Based on what the Hon. Member says I have the impression that he thinks we should do away with sales tax on this type of food. Can he tell us whether or not he would remove the federal sales tax, not only on things such as potato chips, a measure which was included in the last Budget, but also on Wrigley's chewing gum? If that is his position and the position of his Party then will he tell us whether or not the following resolution passed at the 1977 NDP federal convention is still the policy of his Party?

> Be it further resolved that a surtax shall be placed on junk foods to make them very expensive.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that if the polls showed that the NDP was still at 18 per cent we would not have Conservative Members of Parliament digging out resolutions passed at NDP conventions 10 or more years ago. I thought I made it clear in my reply to the last question I was asked that we do not believe that we can get rid of all sales taxes which are now in place. What we are saying is that we will not have a more fair system by broadening sales tax and by including more items.

I want to tell the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) that when the former Conservative cabinet Minister from Ontario, Mr. Norton, came to see me this morning to plead that we not put sales tax on potato chips I wished I had known what he felt. Had I known that, I would have told Mr. Norton that he was wasting his time, he should go to see the Hon. Member for York East.

I wish to say something about spreading fear. This morning in the course of asking a question the Hon. Member made it very clear that he is opposed to marketing boards and supply management for agriculture. In talking about fear, if that is the policy of the Conservative Government, then Conservative Members of Parliament from rural areas, and I see the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) in the House, should really be frightened. I say that because if there is one thing that the farmers of the country know it is that the only way they can survive in almost every commodity which they produce is by having marketing boards and supply management. If we are talking about fear, then that is really something to fear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate, after the comments by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and I hope I will be able to rouse the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), on whom our colleague's comments seemed to have a soporific effect. I think it is important to clarify the Government's intentions with respect to tax reform. Mr. Speaker, you will recall, and I do not want to go back to early 1984, but you will recall that when we were elected, we promised that, as a Government, we would bring in a complete program for economic renewal, and this program included improving the tax system. Mr. Speaker, when we talk about tax reform, we are not talking about your usual budget with a few amendments to the Income Tax Act, as it affects personal income tax and corporate taxes, and some changes in the federal sales tax. We are really talking about the kind of tax reform that will be as important as the last one, which dates back to 1971. Last July, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his intention of proceeding with a study of the options the Government had for a thorough reform of the Canadian tax system. In October, he identified the specific guidelines for this reform. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, repeat them here.

First, fairness; second, simplification; third, ease of compliance; fourth, balance; fifth, revenue stability; sixth, international competitiveness; seventh, economic growth; eighth, Canadian priorities; ninth, measured transition; and finally, Mr. Speaker, consultation.

The Minister of Finance is following these 10 guidelines to prepare the tax reform and the White Paper which will be announced on June 18. But why exactly? What do those guidelines mean, Mr. Speaker?

First, I believe that is is essentiel to ensure a fairer distribution of the tax burden so that Canadian taxpayers in comparable circumstances will pay the same amount of taxes. We must also ensure that corporations pay their fair share of taxes. Mr. Speaker, I shall not list the aberrations introduced in our tax system by the former Liberal Government. I shall only mention in passing the scientific research tax credit which lost billions of dollars in revenue for the Canadian Government and in assistance those who really needed it.

Mr. Speaker, I shall wait for the questions of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre before replying.

There is another point which should be emphasized. I recall that, when I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, the Hon. Perrin Beatty, we said that self-assessment should be maintained and that Canadian taxpayers should work in co-operation with their Government in this regard. However, this does not mean that there is no need to simplify our tax system.

At the same time, we must bring back some balance to the sources of public revenue. In so doing, Mr. Speaker, we must take action to ensure that the tax system will become less dependent on personal income tax and that Canadian taxpayers have more money at their disposal. This is the purpose of our tax reform. Canadians whose taxes were too high will have more money in their pockets. Businesses which took advantage of the unfair benefits granted by the former Government will pay a fair and reasonable amount of taxes. At the same time, the Government will have enough money to pursue its economic development initiatives and maintain useful programs. However, in this context, while we speak about our regions, our provinces and our country, we must also remember that Canada must compete with the United States, Japan, France, New Zealand, Aústralia and Great Britain, many of which are also reforming their own tax system.

Mr. Speaker, our tax system must be just and fair and deal strictly with tax matters; it should not be an income tax legislation dealing with regional development or economic development. Our tax system should help the Canadian economy, but the purpose of our tax legislation should not be regional development. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, that tax reform should help create a positive climate so that the people of Canada, with a little more money in their pockets, should be able to invest at the regional level in your riding, Mr. Speaker, in the Trois-Rivières constituency, in the constituency of my Hon. colleague, to invest in the Canadian economy and trust that Canadian economy and of course their tax system. Now, Mr. Speaker, those principles are the underlying principles of the tax reform which will be tabled by the Hon. Minister of Finance on June 18.

Opposition Members are against that tax reform. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, and I shall quote—

An Hon. Member: Against the tax reform? But you—

Mr. Vincent: They are against the tax reform. That is what you said, that you were against it . . . I could quote, Mr. Speaker, from some of the suggestions and recommendations of a tax reform committee: "The Canadian tax system should be as close as possible to, but not necessarily a blueprint of, the U.S. tax system, it should increase the corporate tax rate instead of paying specific attention to profit transfers by foreign-based companies, instead of dealing with the appropriateness of a minimum tax calculation for companies, it should be used to establish tighter administrative controls for companies and to tax every source of income whatsoever, it should deal with the $25,000 life insurance tax exemption". I could go on, Mr. Speaker, as there are several more pages of similar suggestions. Mr. Speaker, I have just quoted part of a report submitted to me by a group of businessmen in my riding of Trois-Rivières: Pierre Bettez, a chartered accountant; Pierre Dessureault, a chartered accountant with the Dessureault, Leblanc, et Lefebvre firm; Paul Lavoie, a consulting economist; Jean Morand, a lawyer with a Master's degree in tax administration, with the Jolicoeur, Lacasse et Simard law firm; Gilles Morin, a chartered accountant; Gabriel Pellerin, a chartered accountant; Luc Therrien, a lawyer with a Master's degree in tax administration with the Baumier & Associés law office, and Laurent Verreault, the Chairman of the Laperrière & Verreault group. Mr. Speaker, there was a meeting of those people in Trois-Rivières and I told them: We are working on a tax reform, and I would like to know what you, as professionals involved daily with such matters, would expect from that reform. And I have just quoted part of their report.

I believe that most Canadians, if presented with those suggestions, would agree with them. Our tax burden is unfairly distributed at the present time, Mr. Speaker. The increase that we have seen in the income tax of ordinary taxpayers is counter-progressive, it acts as a barrier to the economic growth of our regions, our provinces and our country.

If you look at the tax incentive that were granted over the years by the former Government, particularly to businesses, companies, Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to see how a number of those businesses, not many of them, but too many nevertheless, took unfair advantage of tax shelters, those tax shelters which the former Government considered normal, which were provided since 1971, since the last tax reform, over the years, and I remember, Mr. Speaker, seing budgets where we had to deal with heaps of documents, technical papers and so on. With respect to the ordinary taxpayers, the situation was pretty much the same. However, tax shelters were mostly available for high income earners than for Canadians with a lower income. The last point, Mr. Speaker, leaving aside partisan biases, is the federal sales tax—

I remember that in 1978, Mr. Speaker, when I was a student at Sherbrooke University, taking a Master's degree in taxation, our professor used to tell us about the federal sales tax that the Federal Government should change shortly, because it was nonsense. That was in 1978 and the federal sales tax law has not been amended. We are aware of it and we have said it. That tax presently harms our businesses. It kills jobs and that is why this reform is so important. That is why this reform must aim to reduce tax rates of individual taxpayers who have paid too much tax and of corporations which paid their fair share, while increasing the tax rate of corporations which have not paid their share. At the same time, in that comprehensive reform, we should amend the federal sales tax. We have said that we would reduce tax rates and also that we would reduce the number of tax brackets in order to streamline the system. And we said that we would change exemptions which taxpayers enjoy in tax credits.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, a tax credit, whatever its kind and level, is much more profitable than an exemption for a taxpayer. To understand that, you do not have to go to university for it is mathematical. At the same time, it brings about a huge benefit. It makes the tax system more equitable because as you know, Mr. Speaker, if I am entitled to a tax credit of $1,000, somebody whose yearly income is $100,000 will happen to pay more tax than with an exemption for the same amount. As for low income people, of course, they will benefit more from a tax credit than an exemption.

Therefore, all Canadians will eventually pay less tax, thanks to the tax reform. That is the important thing to remember. The White Paper on tax reform will be tabled in that perspective.

Obviously, within that context, high income people who might have avoided to pay their fair share of tax in the past will have to pay more. That is the substance of my basic criteria when I referred to fairness, when I said that all Canadians must pay their fair share of income tax at all levels.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that in terms of tax law, we have innovated in this country with the introduction a federal sales tax credit. It was the first time in this country that a Government, after increasing the rate of the federal sales tax, had the decency to grant a refundable credit to low income people. This is a new kind of law, Mr. Speaker. And I can tell you, having had the opportunity to go to different places in Quebec as well as outside that province, that people are grateful for that. Nobody likes tax increases, but people recognize that, while there has been an increase, this Government has taken steps to help low-income families.

Mr. Cassidy: With capital gain tax exemptions.

Mr. Vincent: There is nothing to indicate that this new benefit will not resurface in the White Paper.

As far as corporations are concerned, we must put together a package for our corporations which really create jobs in this country, even if the socialist party refuses to believe it. We must see to it that they carry their fair share of the tax burden. We must be careful not to overtax them, however, because they create most jobs in this country, but we must collect the income tax they owe. I suggest that the previous Government's performance in this regard had left a lot to be desired. The White Paper will be there to correct all past mistakes.

As I was saying a while ago, Mr. Speaker, our federal sales tax scheme is much too narrow. As it is currently applied, it favours imported goods at the expense of Canadian goods. This is something which is not right and should be changed, Mr. Speaker.

As a country, Canada needs a federal sales tax scheme with a wider base and reduced rates to be levied more evenly and equitably on a wide variety of goods and services.

There can be different types of federal sales tax. There could be a multi-stage sales tax, with or without invoices, levied only by the federal Government, or a federal provincial sales tax with invoices, but what we should be seeking in a non-partisan way is the common good of Canadians. If the federal government can agree with the 10 provinces, and so far I think that things are going well at this level, to set up a national sales tax scheme, I think it would be a great step for Canada, for each and every province and, therefore, for all Canadian taxpayers.

The make-up of the sales tax base will be a key element of our indirect tax system reform and I think that what we should be looking at is the tax reform as a whole. We should take into account personal income taxes, corporate taxes and indirect taxes which is the federal sales tax. I think that if we tried to look at them separately and individually, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is doing, we would be wrong. This is a major and comprehensive reform. It must not be divided.

You are signalling that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I feel that the motion moved today must be defeated and that my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre should wait until we introduce our White Paper on June 18 before making comments which might not reflect reality and, as my other colleague was saying, serve only to frighten Canadians. This is a responsible Government which is seeking a tax reform for the common good of Canadians and, in this context, I urge him to wait until June 18.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering at first why in opinion polls in Quebec, the Tories are third, the NDP people are second and Liberals first. However, after the speech which I have just heard, I understand why in Trois-Rivières, even the Rhinocéros Party leads the Conservative Party. I shall put my question to the Hon. Member. He boasts about the merits of his Government, about the capital gains exemption. His comments are timely. Mr. Alain Dubuc of the newspaper La Presse, who is neither a Liberal nor a Conservative, was not born yesterday, is not on welfare, and is better informed than the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) says: "The capital gains exemption is an indecent gift". If an Oscar were given for the most stupid tax measure, the capital gains exemption would win that award outright."

Now the Hon. Member is boasting about the eminent members of his committee who had all obtained contracts and were not ordinary citizens. Does the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivière approve or disapprove the comments of Alain Dubuc who is a reputable and unbiased economist? Has he some comments to make about Alain Dubuc? Is Alain Dubuc right or wrong?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) by his more than partisan comments. I find it sad that he would attack my constituents of Trois-Rivières who worked hard to submit theirs views on tax reform and who unfortunately—and my colleague will be sorry to hear that—did not get any contract but have worked in good faith. They are accountants and businessmen who have voluntarily given their time to help their province and country. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is unfortunate to hear in the House of Commons comments such as those made by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. I trust that when he is given the opportunity to rise, he will surely apologize to those people in Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question put by my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie, I did not read the above-mentioned report. However, I can say that the capital gains exemption introduced by our Government has definitely helped to create permanent jobs in Quebec and everywhere in Canada. And if it is a gift, it was a profitable one for all Canadians. I find it rather less absurd than the tax credit for scientific research implemented under the former Liberal government, under which some billions of dollars were wasted and given away to Canadian and international corporations already making millions in profits. That seems to me to be much more aberrant.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, having listened carefully to the speech by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), I should have thought that he would make no statement on the motion before the House today.

Finally, he indicates that he is not even willing to attempt to influence his Government to ensure that taxation of food will not be included in the tax reform proposals that the Minister of Finance will submit on June 18.

The Hon. Member is mistaken when he states that the Opposition is against fiscal reform. If he is referring to the New Democratic Party, I submit that our party has been pushing for fiscal reform. I was among the Members of our Party who travelled all across Canada to discuss tax reform with Canadians and to gather information as part of the 1986 Tax Probe project. I have recently given speeches on this topic in various communities in Ontario and Quebec. The Hon. Member is therefore mistaken to think that the New Democratic Party is not pushing for tax reform.

But then again, there is such a thing as the wrong kind of fiscal reform. I fear, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member does not grasp the necessity of voicing a considered opinion on the specific initiative which the Government is proposing, that is to impose a 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent tax on all purchases of food and grocery items in Canada.

I would perhaps want to put my question once again to the Hon. Member. He says we should look at the overall picture. However, I have given all kinds of reasons why the overall approach does not apply in the case of a tax on food products, which represent the most basic of basic necessities.

I would ask the Hon. Member, then, to say whether or not he is in favour of a sales tax on food.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I find it unfortunate that my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is attempting to scare people. This is not the way Parliament was meant to work.

He has presented a motion and my response is as follows, Mr. Speaker. He should wait until June 18 before getting scared. You're afraid of being scared, of being afraid. Wait until June 18—

Mr. Malépart: Senior citizens have a long memory.

Mr. Vincent: Let him wait until June 18, Mr. Speaker, and then he can bring in 25 motions if he disagrees with the White Paper. At that time, I shall be ready to support him if there are things on which I disagree. However, Mr. Speaker, his timing is wrong and he should wait.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will be aware, I know, that on average Canadian manufacturers pay one-third more tax than competing imports and that, in fact, imported goods often end up costing less than goods manufactured here because of the federal sales tax as it now impacts on Canadian manufacturers and their products. He will be aware as well that the Bic company in Toronto, for instance, has laid off workers as a result of that sort of situation and that the sales tax in fact hurts our exports, encourages imports and hurts job creation. I wonder if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could advise the House if the White Paper on tax reform that we will be seeing very shortly will address this problem and correct it so Canadian companies and manufacturers can at least compete on an equal basis with foreign producers.

• (1620)

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I must say without any partisanship that this surely is the best question that I have been asked so far this afternoon. And I am happy to provide my collegue with an answer.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, and I have mentioned it earlier briefly, I would say that the federal sales tax legislation in its present form is a real "hassle", as we say back home. My colleague is absolutely right. The White Paper will deal precisely with that aspect among other aspects of the fiscal reform. And again, my answer could also be directed to the Member for Ottawa Centre, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that we must expect a package deal, that the reform will reduce the personal income tax, will deal with corporations which do not pay any tax and will also help companies which are having difficulties with the federal sales tax legislation as it is now, that is legislation that very often benefits importers as opposed to exporters.

Mr. Cassidy: It is not necessary to tax food to achieve a much needed reform of existing sales tax. The Hon. Member knows it very well. This Government, Mr. Speaker, is arrogant. It should tell us: "Don't ask for our opinions now, wait until we are willing and ready to accept comments." Mr. Speaker, Canadians already know what it means. Take for example those in Quebec who took early retirement. The Government reduced or cut their access to unemployment insurance by changing the policy and, when told, said: "If only we had known that you had problems . . . But now the decision has been made". Finally, a Bill might change the situation for some of them, only some, after more than a year and a half of continuing struggle. That is how this Government works. After only two and a half years in power, that is the way this new Government operates.

The Government backed down on the question of deindexing Old Age Security pensions, but the partial deindexing of the fiscal system was successfully achieved, because there was no way of convincing the Government to change its mind. It is my duty as an opposition Member to inform the Government—yes, it is partisan; being in opposition I have to be partisan—that Canadians do not, and will not, accept a tax on food; they are very concerned by what the Government said and they are asking to be listened to now, rather than having to wait, in fear, for what the Government will come out with. I am asking the Hon. Member: Is he willing to listen to the people, the poor, those who live below the poverty line, as well as workers who are just beyond the poverty line but do not want, and cannot afford, a tax on the necessities of life like bread and milk?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, if ever a federal Government has consulted the Canadian people on financial matters it is ours. I can say in all sincerity and objectivity, and I think that my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie will agree with me, that there have been consultations before and after each budget; consultation is an ongoing process and it will not stop on June 18. I think that at that level—

Mr. Cassidy: You did consult the early retirees!

Mr. Vincent: I have been polite and did not interrupt. Please show me the same consideration.

At the level of the Department of Finance, Mr. Speaker, I can say quite frankly that there is consultation.

In answer to my colleague for Ottawa Centre who mentioned early retirees, I can tell him that they will be happy with the fiscal reform. I ask him to be patient. June 18 is in three weeks. He will then learn about our proposals. And if he does not agree they will be pleased to listen to him and even discuss the matter with him. But please let him stop sowing fear in the minds of people way ahead of time. No one in the Conservative government said that food would be taxed. It is pure invention. I do not know how it happened but this is how fear spreads among people, Mr. Speaker, that is the only thing I ask of him.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTED DAY, S. O. 82—TAX REFORM—OPPOSITION TO FOOD TAX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

That this House oppose any imposition of a federal tax on food and urge the Government to reject any such tax as part of its tax reform package.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak, especially after the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). Frankly, the contradictions in his speech were incredible. All of a sudden, the Hon. Member made the discovery that tax exemptions were regressive and tax credits were better, and this after three Budgets, after exploiting workers and their families, after increasing the exemption on contributions to Registered Retirement Savings Plans. No wonder he wants to leave the House to hide his shame.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that there is a Member in this House, the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), of quite some years' standing—granted, he was silent for much of that time—who ought to know the Standing Orders. I would ask him to please withdraw what he just said.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I refuse to get involved in the Hon. Member's little games. Considering the kind of speech he made, no wonder he is ashamed and wants to make a quick exit.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize the disastrous situation facing the Conservatives today, and I realize why the Hon. Member would prefer to disappear without a trace, because that is exactly what is going to happen to him in the next election. I understand that, and I support the motion and what was said in the debate today by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians, including the senior citizens, mothers and workers who are watching us today, remember clearly the solemn commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with one hand on his heart and the other on the Bible, when he promised full indexation of Old Age Security pensions. People remember the so-called consultation. It is true that this Government consults, but then it turns around and does the exact opposite. It misleads people. I have here the January 1985 Consultation Paper signed by the Minister of National Health and "Social Injustice" in Canada, who told senior citizens: Nothing will be changed. Don't worry. Remember the Mulroney Budget! What happened? Old Age Security pensions were de-indexed. He told families: Don't worry, the changes that are going to be made in support programs for families with children, including family allowance, the child tax credit and the child tax exemption, will not be used to reduce the deficit but to help people in need. Again, Canadians and this House were deceived by the Government. Six months later, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was forced to admit that he had cut, in fact had stolen money from Canadian families to reduce his deficit and at the same time, given the rich a capital gains tax exemption of $500,000. What Alain Dubuc, in yesterday's La Presse, referred to as "Capital gains: an obscene giveaway", is indeed an obscene giveaway, useless except for making the rich richer. It does not create a single job for anyone, and today, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières and his fellow Members of the Conservative Party are saying: How come, you are making people scared? But the Conservative Members misled Canadians. You misled them on four occasions, yet now you expect them to believe you. They will never believe you from now on. When it comes to the tax reform Canadians insist that Conservative Members who have enough courage and this Prime Minister who misled them four times tell them that food, which is essential to survive, will not be taxed.

Still the Conservative Members are asking themselves: How come people have lost faith in us? How come people do not listen to us? Why is it that people no longer trust us? Simple: This same Government came out with a Budget to remove indexation on Old Age Security pensions and family allowances, and then decided to slap a 10 per cent tax on prescription drugs, taxing the health of people yet. Never before in the history of Canada did a Government, no matter its political stripe, stoop to the point of taxing health, taxing sick people to erase its deficit.

It was only after people rallied, particularly the elderly, and forced this Government to back down and restore the full indexation of old age security pensions.

Sadly enough, we were unable to get this shameless Government to change its policy concerning family allowances, but at least we did manage to force . . . Think only about the syringes which people who suffer from diabetes have to use every day, this Conservative Government, this Minister of Finance—we should say the Minister of High Finance—this Minister deliberately chose to tax these people, Mr. Speaker. Except for the Official Opposition along with spokesmen for these groups, people who buy drugs for cardiovascular conditions or equipment to relieve respiratory ailments, not a single Conservative Member of this same Government rose to say: Enough is enough, Mr. Prime Minister, stop this attack against poor people. No, Sir, not one! At the same time those people . . . Referring to the capital gains tax exemption, Alain Dubuc said: If there were an Oscar Award, the capital gains tax exemption would get it.

And we remember that at the same time, on the same occasion—and Canadians in all provinces and all ridings remember that and have lost faith in this Government with respect to the tax reform—we all remember that when the Government raised personal income taxes at the same time it introduced legislation to repay the wealthy depositors of the two banks which went under, people who had $60,000 or more in their accounts. This Government has given billions of dollars to the rich, for instance the Reisman brothers in the case of the Gulf deal which resulted in the closing of the Gulf refinery in East Montreal. There have been so many scandals. Yet now, the Conservatives would like the people of New Brunswick, of Halifax in Nova Scotia, of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and Vancouver in British Columbia to believe them after all the scandals, the bribes, the manipulations, the unfairness to the public. They would like them to believe the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance when they say that there will be a comprehensive tax reform and that even though food might be taxed, there will be a small credit for the poorest, those with a $15,000 income. Come on! Will the grocer give credit without interest to each poor family and say: You are paying the food tax, but you will give me the difference at the end of the year because Mr. Mulroney will send you a little cheque as you are under the $15,000 level. However, if you have the misfortune to make $500 more in overtime during that year, with an income of $15,500, you will not receive any cheque. This is ridiculous and unacceptable.

We in the Official Opposition say that we need a tax reform. However, we need both a tax reform and a reform of our social programs. We need a tax reform to ensure that there is some justice and that every high income Canadian will pay his rightful share of taxes since he will benefit from the programs and services provided by the Canadian people and the federal Government. The tax reform must be fair instead of allowing the rich to use all the tax shelters available to avoid paying one cent of taxes while middle income taxpayers bear most of the burden. These people are fed up with paying always more taxes.

If we follow the path on which the Government is leading us with its tax reform, who will foot the bill? It will be the middle income taxpayers, fathers, mothers, young couples, working Canadians who contribute to the economy, and in return, the Conservative Government will take away nearly half of their paycheque with its hidden taxes. If you call a plumber tomorrow you will pay a 10 per cent tax to have him fix your tap; if you go to the butcher's tomorrow you will pay a 10 per cent tax on the meat you buy; if you go to the bakery you will pay 10 per cent; consult a lawyer, a notary, another 10 per cent; your accountant fills in your tax return, again 10 per cent. Is that equity and justice? The tax reform of this Government is sheer financial hypocrisy.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party fought to protect elderly Canadians from the deindexation of Old Age Security pensions; we fought in the case of taxes on drugs; we fought in the case of family allowances; and again recently we have been keeping up the fight against the injustice done to older workers by the Government which saw fit to deprive them of their unemployment insurance benefits. After a year and a half these people are forced to go from one office to the next and call upon their Members of Parliament to force this Government to pass legislation, whereas the big wheels of financial circles simply called the Prime Minister's Office, and PMO officials crawled on their knees to rush legislation through without our ever finding out just who would be getting these billions of dollars.

The Official Opposition did not roll over and play dead when faced with your budgetary onslaught. My friends, I suggest you get ready, you have not seen anything yet. There are thousands of Canadian women like Mrs. Denis who will confront your leader, Charlie Brown. There are men and women who have had it up to here. You have seen this in each of your ridings, no? The Conservative Party ranks third and would fall to fourth place if there were a fourth party.

But the question you must ask yourselves has to do with all the mistakes and blunders you made, authorized and allowed to go on.

You are the accomplices of the Minister of Finance. By remaining silent, you are condoning what he has done. If we look at the exemption for contributions to a Registered Retirement Savings plan, we have to realize that by the year 2000, over 12 per cent of the population will be 65. People are opting for early retirement. What did the Government do? It refused to index private pension plans but agreed to spend billions of dollars to let someone with an income of $150,000 contribute $15,000 tax-free to an RRSP. People with an annual income of $10,000, $20,000 or $25,000 are being ignored by this Government. Three million women in Canada are not eligible to contribute to a public plan, either the Quebec or the Canada Pension Plan. Three million women, through the fault of this Conservative Government, realize that by the time they are 65, they will be living in poverty and will have to apply for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. This Government, this Minister, this Prime Minister and all these Conservative Members know what they are doing and are doing so deliberately.

We have the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) boasting that he had a committee in his riding to advise him on tax reform. Did you notice who was on the committee? A tax lawyer, a chartered accountant, a notary, another lawyer, another accountant, and a bank manager. What about the average person, the taxpayers, the people who pay to support his advisers? He didn't see them. He didn't care what they thought. He just wanted to know what his friends thought about tax reform.

So the guy says: I have a small office as a tax lawyer. Get me all the exemptions you can. And then the expert who works for an insurance company says: Get me a bigger exemption because I sell insurance. But he does not care, and he does not even know, what the people in Trois-Rivières, what the taxpayers and the unemployed textile workers think. He does not know and he does not care, with all his boasting.

Multiply this example by 210 or 211, if you include the one who crossed the floor to the NDP. They are all the same. It is a disgrace. It is worse than anything else this Government and this Party has done, worse than all the other scandals, flagrant and not so flagrant. Of course we need tax reform. We have to get rid of the tax shelters. We have to share the exemptions.

He wanted suggestions about the Registered Retirement Savings plans. For instance, instead of giving a tax exemption to someone who has a higher income and costs the Canadian taxpayer more in tax shelters, we might say that anyone who puts $1,000 into an RRSP will be entitled to a $100 tax credit. Whether this person earns $10,000 or $100,000 a year, the tax credit will be $100. This would be fair. However, I am now convinced that the Government after improving the RRSP system, will not touch it in its tax reform in view of its hypocrisy: nor will it alter the tax breaks given to the rich, such as the capital gains tax exemption and the tax exemption for RRSPs which benefits the rich.

The only things the Government wants to touch are the tax exemptions for senior citizens, dependent children and spouses and the personal tax exemption. The Government will change these exemptions and implement the purchasing tax credit. If, instead of an income of $15,000, you have an income of $17,000, the Government will take 10 per cent of this money and say that it will be given to low-income Canadians. The balance will be used to compensate the loss of revenue from the capital gains tax exemption and the RRSP exemption which benefits the rich. Who will be penalized? Who will have to pay the 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent tax when he needs the plumber, the electrician, the accountant, the lawyer or the notary to make out a will, the baker, the grocer and the milkman? Middle income earners. They are not the pals of the Conservatives.

The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières has already explained in which tax bracket the pals of the Conservatives are. They are the ones who will benefit from exemptions because they have already had all kinds of goodies. But this will not be allowed. It will not be allowed, not only by the Official Opposition which knows this Government and knows how it misleads the public and how to make it back down, but it will not be accepted by the public either. The public will protest vigorously, perhaps with the same results as for the reform of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, this Government which has once again deceived the Canadian public is committed to amending the Unemployment Insurance Program. All political Parties and the Canadian population generally agree that it should be amended. Following four reports, including those submitted by the Macdonald Commission which was prepared at a cost of millions of dollars, the Forget Commission which cost $6 million, those of an internal committee of officials and the House of Commons Committee, four reports, on which the Government wasted almost $8 million of our taxpayers' money, the learned Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rose on a Friday morning on the orders of the Prime Minister and stated solemnly that on the basis of all these reports and after spending all that money, that he felt he had different opinions from various groups. He was satisfied with sitting on his bum and doing nothing.

Such are the political will and guts of this Government.

But who pays for all of that? Who pays for all this foolishness on top of the $7 million or $8 million of the taxpayers' money which was wasted? It is the men and women working part-time who will continue to be penalized by not being paid full unemployment insurance benefits, those who are on maternity leave or on sick leave. Should a labour conflict arise, either through a strike or a lock-out, these people will be penalized and will lose their benefits because they will be deemed striking employees, even though the House Committee, including its Tory Members, unanimously agreed that there had to be changes.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope today, and I conclude on this, that there will be at least one Progressive Conservative Member who will open his eyes and read the article published in La Presse under the signature of Alain Dubuc, a guy highly regarded for his honesty and expertise and who clearly describes the implications of capital gains tax exemption, who foresees what is going to happen in the so-called tax reform, but the people here, no matter their political stripe, should stand up and tell the Prime Minister, as the population as a whole did: Do not touch our senior citizens and do not levy a food tax.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that the voters in every constituency go to their Member of Parliament, whatever his Party, and have him sign a paper promising to vote against any measure which would impose a tax on food products as this is a basic necessity.

Mr. Speaker, I warn the Prime Minister that there will be a national campaign with leaders in every riding and that every Member of this House will be contacted. The public will remember those who refuse to sign and to promise that they will object to a tax on food products and who agree with such a tax. The public will remember them at election time.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, when one comes from a Party that does not have a policy, like the Hon. Member's Party, or when one comes from a Party which has a number of policies that conflict with one another, like the Hon. Member's Party, what does one do?

The Hon. Member, as have many of his colleagues, has chosen to spread fear and confusion in the minds of the average Canadian about the issue of tax reform and the question of a tax on food. The Hon. Member is obviously spreading fear and confusion on the basis of not one single, solitary shred of evidence.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member has a lot of nerve. He was a member of a government that gave us and the Canadian people the Scientific Research Tax Credit that ripped off Canadian taxpayers and poor people of this country to the tune of over $1 billion. It was his former Liberal Government that gave us tax shelters for investment on such things as yachts and recreational vehicles. He has a lot of nerve.

It was his Government that gave us income splitting, that allowed the use of interest-free loans in order to minimize taxes. His Government did not impose a minimum tax on high income individuals in this country, as the present Government has done.

It was his Government that gave us the carve-out transactions which allowed other people to save taxes and rip off the Canadian public. His Government allowed for the use of trusts to market security issues in such a way that income and capital were distributed tax free. It was his Government that allowed the use in tax law of partnerships in corporate take-overs to increase tax deductions and rip off the Canadian taxpayer.

It was also his Government that gave provisions in the Income Tax Act that allowed for salary tax deferral arrangements to rip off the Canadian taxpayer. His Government set up the general Investment Tax Credit which is being phased out by the present Government. It was his Government that set up the inventory deduction that is being phased out by the current Government.

All of these are examples of what the Hon. Member and his Government put in place to rip off Canadian taxpayers. Now he is telling us that we should have some competence and faith in him. How, in heaven's name, can he expect Canadians to have any faith, confidence or trust in anything that he or his Party has to say?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member is from Mars, but he does not read the polls or live in the real world. He wonders whether the public is confident. If he looks at the polls, he will find that 70 per cent or 77 per cent of the public no longer trusts the Prime Minister. Wake up, my dear sir. Get back on earth. You are in Canada, in Ottawa, in the House of Commons. Read and you will see what I mean. Thousands of Canadians are saying that they no longer trust the Government. Why? Because the Hon. Member who has just spoken and his Prime Minister tried to rob the elderly by deindexing old age security pensions when the Hon. Member himself and his Prime Minister had promised that they would not. The Hon. Member who has just spoken was with me when the committee considered the estimates. The Hon. Member was an accomplice when he let the family allowance deindexation go through, pure and simple theft of the indexation money, the 3 per cent reduction in the deindexation of family allowances which was to be used to reduce the deficit. People no longer have confidence in this Member because he was on the committee which voted with the Government and which made a written commitment—as the Hon. Member will recall—that the money saved would not be used to lower the deficit, yet the Minister did the contrary. Why have people lost confidence? Because this Government did not keep its promise and, contrary to what it had said, went ahead and put a tax on drugs. The same Government which chose to tax candies, snack foods for kids, soft drinks. After all this Government has done, leading an attack against all Canadians with the complicity and support of this Member, he stands up in the House and brags about being proud to have voted in favour of reimbursing depositors who had $60,000 or more in the bank. The same Member takes the floor because he has friends and pals who benefit from that capital gains tax exemption. And he wonders how come people no longer trust them. The Hon. Member seems to think that all is well and could not be better. And of course he is right, provided he only considers what his Conservative colleagues are saying and what they are saying on Bay Street. All is well for those people. All is right with the world. And making money like it was going out of style. But the people in the Hon. Member's riding are not that sure all is well. The people in his riding think the Hon. Member did the exact opposite of what he told them. And people who are found lacking in intellectual honesty do not last very long in politics.

If the Liberals made some poor decisions in the past, well, we were beaten in the last election. And that is what is going to happen to you if you keep this up. We want to pick up the pieces and do better, and that is why we are number one in the polls.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the Hon. Member's question satisfactorily, and if he doesn't remember, I happen to have the January, 1985, Blue paper right here. Jake Epp, that is your Minister of National Health and Welfare, but to me, he is Canada's Minister of Social Injustice. It says here in print that the funds, and I am not making this up, this is the truth. Now that is the difference between a Liberal and a Conservative. We can document what we say. We don't make it up as we go along. It says here that the money saved will not be used to reduce the deficit. It will be transferred to help those most in need. But that is not what happened. One billion six hundred million dollars were stolen out of the pockets of every family with children here in Canada. One billion six hundred million dollars were stolen by that Government with the complicity mostly of that Member, for he sat on that committee. The only thing you did which deserves my appreciation was in respect of missing children, when you applied a little common sense to prevent your Government from acting with disgrace in the case of those people too. But on the matter of family allowances, you frankly, honestly, earnestly helped to deceive the people of Canada, and if you need further evidence, I will give you the Blue paper in case you have lost it. It states black on white that your Government deceived the people of Canada.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member began his speech, he mentioned that the people who were going to be affected most adversely by tax reform, in his words, were those watching this broadcast, the seniors, the middle-income earner, the school children. I was moved almost to tears. I was very upset thinking about that. Then I remembered that those are the same people who are actually going to benefit from much of this tax reform.

Then, of course, it came to me that this same Hon. Member was a Member of the previous Liberal Government and, if my history serves me right, I recall that in 1968 when the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, who has just come out of hibernation, became the Prime Minister we had a $600 million surplus in this country. Over a period of years we started to get into a deficit under the now Leader of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), who was then Minister of Finance. We got into a position where our deficit became $12 billion, $20 billion, $32 billion. When we came into office it was at $37 billion. It is now going down.

When the Hon. Member sat as a member of the previous Government, did he speak up as passionately as he does now in favour of those seniors, school children and middle-income earners? Or is he part of the Liberal legacy with which we are living in this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Member sat in this House before 1979. I do not know if he read the newspapers or if he was just busy like others making money. However, I would like to tell him that when the Liberal Government ran into deficits, it did so to help people. Whereas under the Conservative philosophy, you want to have deficits in order to help the rich, I remember that in those difficult times, we were in favour of the programs under Section 38. The Hon. Member has probably never heard of Section 38, because it is not meant to help the rich, but to help regular middle income workers. I am convinced that he does not know what it is. When a business was experiencing difficulties, rather than laying off young workers, it was agreed, based on the program under Section 38, that those workers would work under a time-sharing formula. They would work three days, spend two days on unemployment insurance, so that they would not all have to be layed off.

I know that the Hon. Member is not aware of that program, because it is meant to help ordinary people. But we did not have the capital gains exemption to help the rich. I know that he is aware of the profits involved. If you sell your gold ingots, you have saved your money and you can buy a condominium in Florida. That is his problem.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to tell the Hon. Member what action I took with respect to other programs. With respect to elderly people, we should be thankful to Mrs. Bégin, we should be thankful to the Hon. Member for the NDP who sits here in the House of Commons, for what they did when we were in power.

Senior citizens living alone received increases of $50, $35, to make sure they would no longer live below the poverty line. Liberals introduced the child tax credit, all the current social programs, free health insurance—I know you are against that, because it is humiliating for the rich to be next to a social welfare recipient when he or she goes to hospital. Who is responsible for all these programs? Even if helping people in need resulted in a deficit, the Liberal Party did something good, something honorable, and we can walk tall. But a Conservative will never be able to take pride in having reduced the deficit on the back of poor families.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to enter into debate on the motion presented by my Party. The motion calls upon the Government not to impose a federal tax on food. This motion is presented at a time when we are about ready to enter into a regime of tax reform. Certainly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has given every indication that there will be some form of federal sales tax, whether it will be called a business-transfer tax or a value-added tax, the type of tax which most European countries now have, or whether it will be a federal sales tax, and that is a tax in conjunction with the provinces. Regardless of the form this sales tax will take, there is very good reason to believe that food will be taxed by the federal Government.

My colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party basically oppose this measure. Let me say that there is no doubt that we need reform of our tax system. We also need reform of our federal sales and excise tax system. The system as it exists today is in many ways confusing and arbitrary. While the Government has set rates, we also know that the Department of Revenue enters into numerous contracts with various firms and establishes other rates. I think it is just a question of time before some of those agreements are taken to court because some industries have these agreements and other industries have other agreements. Certainly some people claim that these agreements are arbitrary.

I have received correspondence from business people who feel the federal sales tax which was imposed on their product was unfair. In fact, I am dealing with a particular case right now where federal sales tax was imposed and then two or three years later the Government admitted it had made a mistake and refunded all the money which had been collected by this particular manufacturer. It did not do the manufacturer much good because over a period of years he had to charge the sales tax and he succeeded in pricing his goods out of the market because his competitors did not have to pay that sales tax. This individual lost a fair amount of business. In fact, the particular business he was involved in has since gone bankrupt.

I do not have to be convinced that the sales tax regime which now exists is in need of reform. It is, as I mentioned, very arbitrary and confusing. I remember meeting a while ago with manufacturers of sailboats in Victoria. They told me that various items on their boats were taxed at different levels and different rates. It was very confusing for them. Certainly, our present sales tax regime imposes taxes on our exporters and gives some benefit to importers. Canada is one of the few countries in the world that actually gives benefit to those who import. We tax those who export. This is because of our particular system, which just does not make sense.

It has been known for quite some time that our sales tax system is a total mess. In the many years that the Liberals were in power they really did not do very much to clean it up. In fact, if anything, they added to it.

I understand that if we are to have a sales tax of some sort, it is desirable that it be as simple as possible. Some European countries have value-added taxes that really impose a high level of bureaucracy upon the businesses that have to collect it. I think it is in the interests of everyone that if we must have a sales tax in Canada, it be as simple as possible.

I certainly do not disagree with the attempt of the Government to reform our tax system, in particular the sales tax system, to end up with a simple system, one that is easy to administer and understand. There is no doubt that if we are to have a simple system then tax must be placed on everything. The moment one starts to introduce exemptions then one starts to create more paperwork. I understand that.

I understand the notion that if one is to have simplicity, then quite often it has to be at the expense of equity. If one is to have equity then one has to introduce some form of complexity into the tax system. This is true whether we are talking about sales tax or income tax. There is a trade-off that Governments have to make between simplicity and fairness. Of course, a wise government attempts to have as simple a system as possible while having a primarily fair system.

Thus I come to the following point. I have admitted that we need reform of our tax system, in particular the sales tax system. I have admitted that the more exemptions one introduces into a federal sales tax system the more complexity there is created. However, I have to rise here in my place today to oppose the imposition of a federal sales tax on food. I rise today to denounce any attempt to tax food. I do this for the following reasons.

All those who advocate a federal sales tax recognize that it is regressive. The Minister of Finance has stated both in the House and in committee, as well as in other public fora, that, yes, a sales tax is a regressive measure. It is regressive because everyone pays the same per centage of tax on an item regardless of one's ability to pay. Thus a person who buys a steak, a pound of hamburger, or a can of sardines pays the same tax, whatever the rate might be. Of course, a poor person who has to dispose of most of his income on the basic necessities of life, that is, food, shelter and clothing, ends up paying a proportionately higher per centage of his income as a tax than a person with more income. Therefore it is regressive. I think that with this basic principle there is surely no disagreement.

Everyone will recognize that a federal sales tax, or a provincial sales tax, is a regressive form of taxation. It is not tied to one's ability to pay. However, the Minister of Finance stated that he would correct this. He said, "We are going to introduce a federal sales tax credit". He pointed to the fact that the 1985 Budget created a federal sales tax credit so that those people who are at the low end of the income scale will receive a credit back. In other words, the money they have spent on the essentials for goods and services which they need and upon which they have paid federal sales tax will be partially reimbursed through this sales tax credit.

The credit amounts to some $50 for a person and then $25 for every dependant under the age of 18. The maximum income that a family of four could earn in order to qualify is around $15,000 per year. As soon as that family earns more than $15,000 per year then the tax credit will be reduced accordingly. If the family earns up to $18,000 per year then they will not get anything back. They will not get any credit at all.

It has to be recognized that the sales tax credit the Minister of Finance and the Government have given does not compensate what a family of four at the low end of the income scale would be paying the Government in federal sales tax and excise tax. First, the $50 does not cover it. Okay, I will accept the fact that that is sort of a first step. I would have greater difficulty rising in my place today to oppose a sales tax on food had the Minister of Finance in his Budget of February of this year indicated that the Government would maintain the sales tax credit at some equal level. I would have more difficulty if he had said that as the amount individuals pay and as the sales tax goes up he would increase the credit for poorer families. He failed to do that. He failed to index the level at which people would become eligible for the sales tax credit; and he did not index the sales tax credit itself. In fact, he increased the sales tax in his Budget. He increased the amount that he was taking in from Canadian consumers. He increased the tax on gasoline. He added more items to the list of those which will be taxed by the federal sales tax. Therefore, he is taking more money out of the pockets of Canadian consumers. However, he did not compensate or increase the compensation to the poor by increasing the sales tax credit.

In my books the Minister committed three sins. First, he did not index the level at which people would become eligible for the sales tax credit. Second, he did not index the sales tax credit. Third, he did not increase the sales tax credit when he increased the sales tax.

If the Government is to introduce a wide sales tax on all goods and services, and if it wants to convince the Canadian public that the very poor will be compensated for this increase in taxation, then the Minister should have sent out a signal to the people that whatever benefits they will get back will not be eroded. He did not do that. The whole matter comes down to a question of trust. I for one do not have trust in the Government, nor does the Canadian public, particularly the poor, have any trust or confidence in it. We are concerned that the Minister of Finance will impose a sales tax, especially on the basic needs; food, clothing and shelter. Will he at the same time redress the imbalance, the unfairness and the inequity of the federal sales tax by giving a tax credit to the poor? We cannot believe that a tax credit would be fully indexed, so it would in time just erode, erode and erode. Certainly the Minister of Finance can introduce a Budget, impose a federal sales tax and then compensate the very poor with a tax credit. But then a year later with inflation and an increase in the federal sales tax, what will happen? The people who would be eligible to receive the sales tax credit would become fewer in number. In a few years time the benefit would hardly be meaningful.

If Canadians are to accept that the inequity of a federal sales tax will be redressed by a federal tax credit, then Canadians will have to be able to trust the Government that the tax credit will remain constant with the cost of living. Canadians will have to trust the Government that there will be full indexing. We do not have the confidence in this Government to do that.

We have seen this Government more often than not break its sacred trust. We saw that with the attempt to deindex the benefits to pensioners. Were it not for the opposition of senior citizens across the country and the Opposition in this House, the Government would have succeeded in deindexing benefits to our old people. The Government did succeed in deindexing the benefits that parents receive. The Government succeeded in deindexing income tax. The Government succeeded in deindexing the family allowance and the family child tax credit so that fewer and fewer people are now qualified to receive those benefits. It is an eroding base.

I hear an Hon. Member say, "We will give it all away". That makes me afraid of a Tory Government and any sales tax credits the Conservatives might introduce, because the thinking is that somehow or other these poor people do not deserve them, that they are getting enough anyway. Therefore, we will cut short indexing provisions.

It is a question of trust, Mr. Speaker. We cannot trust this Government. We cannot trust that any sales tax credit to compensate the very poor will remain an effective tax credit, because the Government will allow it to erode away through inflation.

There is need for tax reform. In 1983 over $13 billion in profits did not produce one cent tax. When the Hon. Member says, "We will give it all away", that has been happening both under Liberal and Tory Governments. We have been giving it away, but we have not been giving it to the poor. We have been taxing, taxing and taxing the poor. Today a person who earns $10 in taxable income pays tax. Yet, $13 billion in profits can be made without producing one cent of tax. Isn't that shameful, Mr. Speaker? Is that fair? Is that equal? We say no. That is why I rise today and denounce any attempts to increase the tax load on middle and poor people. What the Government has done to middle and low income Canadians is outrageous. We will resist with every bit of our strength the imposition of a sales tax on the basic necessity of life—food.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions and comments. The first is with regard to the question of trust. Both the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) mentioned the question of trust and fairness. Hypothetically should his Party ever form the federal Government of Canada—Heaven forbid—could we trust an NDP Government? Let me give you an idea of what the Manitoba New Democratic Government did and how much the people of Manitoba trust that Government.

Concerning the taxing of food, a question which the Hon. Member raised, the Manitoba NDP Government's Budget this year raised taxes through provincial sales tax on take-out orders. The Manitoba New Democratic Government has taxed food. The NDP Government in Manitoba has gone further. It now taxes water. The headlines in the paper read, "What next? A tax on the air that we breath?" Now in Manitoba the provincial NDP Government taxes municipalities for the use of water from the rivers, the rivers that were formed from rain that drains off the land which the people own. This is what we can expect from an NDP Government.

The Hon. Member talks about the fairness of sales tax. In Manitoba, the New Democratic Party Government raised the sales tax by 1 per cent and took away the sales tax credit that the federal Government gave the seniors through the federal sales tax exemption credit. The Manitoba NDP Government took that away.

Who do we trust, Mr. Speaker? Do we trust the Hon. Member for Regina East? The Member talks about not indexing certain things. In Manitoba you pay 2 per cent tax on your net income. Do you know what that means, Mr. Speaker? Does the Hon. Member from Regina East know what that means to senior citizens and to families? When you tax net income, you do not take into account basic personal deductions, family size, age or charitable donations. But that NDP Government does not even take into account the disability or the pension deduction. This is what the NDP Manitoba Government did. Who can we trust when you get something like that happening?

Can we trust the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre when he said, "Don't cut spending, tax higher". That is exactly what the NDP Government did in Manitoba. This year that Government will raise 8.2 per cent more in taxes but it is going to spend 9.7 per cent more than last year. That is the policy of the NDP Government. Raise the taxes and spend more.

Is the Hon. Member for Regina East talking out of both sides of his mouth? Does he support what has been done in Manitoba? Or is the Hon. Member not telling the truth in this House, because that is exactly what the New Democrats would do if the NDP formed the federal Government?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member raises some good points. One also has to add that the taxes which the NDP Government has raised in Manitoba are very similar to taxes that Conservative Governments have raised in other provinces. When the Member talks about the 2 per cent tax on income before deductions, it was the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan which introduced that innovation. I think it is also true that provincial Governments have less tax manoeuvrability than does the federal Government. The federal Government's ability to raise taxes is certainly much better than provincial Governments. Provincial Governments have been in a tight squeeze all across the board, partly because of the actions of the federal Government.

• (1720)

Mr. Cassidy: Manitoba doesn't tax bread and milk.

Mr. de Jong: With the cut-backs occurring at the federal level, very often the provinces have to pick up the pieces. The over-all economic performance of Manitoba has been quite good in terms of job creation. When the Hon. Member criticizes that Government for having increased expenditures by 9 per cent, he should realize that much of it goes toward creating jobs and job opportunities in Manitoba.

Philosophically I find that sales tax is regressive and wish that perhaps some day we could do without a sales tax per se. However, I know there is also a need for revenues at the provincial and federal levels. Therefore, I cannot advocate that we do away with sales taxes.

One must draw a line. The Manitoba Government, as my colleague just mentioned, is not taxing bread and milk. Yes, it is taxing restaurant meals, which is what the Tories and Liberals in Ontario also did. However, the basics of life which everyone picks up at the grocery store or the essentials which everyone needs are not being taxed. Our motion is asking the Government not to tax the basic foods which every human being needs.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, we have a unique tax in Manitoba called the payroll tax. It was increased by 50 per cent, from 1.5 per cent to 2.25 per cent. If one decides to open a business and create 30 jobs in Manitoba, one must pay 2.25 per cent of employees' salaries in taxes to the provincial Government. Does the Hon. Member for Regina East support that principle?

We want to broaden the base in our tax reform so that lower individual income taxes will be paid by both persons and corporations. We are hoping for and encouraging investment in our country to create jobs, which is the reverse effect of the direction taken by the Manitoba Government that has increased by 50 per cent the amount of tax people who are opening businesses will have to pay from their employees' incomes.

Does the Hon. Member support that type of taxation? Would he institute it if his Party were the Government of Canada?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, in some ways we already have an employment tax. Certainly CPP and UI contributions are in one form or another a payroll tax per se. Governments must raise revenues. It does not matter what Party forms the Government, whether it be NDP, Conservative, or Liberal. The question is one of fairness—what is fair and what produces the best economic results. Certainly we could say that a certain measure is an undesirable tax and that it would be better if we did not have it. Certainly the cost of doing business in Canada would be much less if there was no necessity for CPP and unemployment insurance contributions.

If Manitoba did not have its payroll tax, the money would have to be raised from other sources of revenue. However, it is within the ability of the federal Government to set up a tax regime. Surely that is where the action must lie. If the federal Government shows leadership in introducing a fair tax regime, many provinces would also see their tax revenues increase.

I should like to pose a question to the Hon. Member. Does he think it is fair that, for example, in 1983 the Royal Bank of Canada, with over $360 million in profits, did not pay one cent of tax? In fact, the Royal Bank of Canada received a tax credit of some $25 million. Is that fair? No, it is not. No wonder we are running into deficits. No wonder there is a squeeze on many provincial Governments to make up the difference through regressive tax measures.

If the taxation system in the country were fair, provincial revenues would likely increase as well and the need for regressive taxes would become less. Had we had a fair tax regime in the country, there would not have been the need for the Government to increase sales taxes, as it has in the last number of years. We would have come close to balanced budgets, had those with the ability to pay actually been paying their fair share of tax. When the largest corporations in Canada can make over $13 billion in profits in one year and not pay one cent of tax, something is very wrong, very sick, very unfair.

We will support the Government in its attempt to correct that measure, but adding a tax on food will not do it. It is not the type of tax reform we will support. In the area of genuine tax reform, by golly, we are right behind the Government and applaud it, but we cannot support regressive tax reform.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—TAX REFORM—OPPOSITION TO FOOD TAX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

That this House oppose any imposition of a federal tax on food and urge the Government to reject any such tax as part of its tax reform package.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate on tax reform this afternoon. I am not a tax lawyer. I am not exactly a financial wizard. My wife will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I even have trouble balancing our own family cheque-book. However, I am an individual who has been paying income tax in Canada for a couple of decades at least, and it is to my fellow taxpayers that I wish to direct my remarks this afternoon.

First, let us look at the motion. It asks the House to oppose any attempt by the Government in its White Paper on tax reform to impose a federal tax on food.

I hate to disagree with one of my own colleagues, but the Deputy Government House Leader this morning said when the motion was brought forward that it was "an appropriate motion for debate". I do not think it is. It is an interesting point that the Opposition has made, but it is not an appropriate motion for debate and it should not take up House time.

As I pointed out earlier in questioning of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), we might as well debate what the weather will be like this weekend, because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Government of Canada have not said that there will be a tax on food. The NDP and the Liberals set up these strawmen and then knock them down. They spent a whole day of House time knocking down strawmen, and I think it is an absolute waste of time. However, as I say, it is a valid—

Mr. Darling: Where are the NDP?

Mr. Schellenberg: That is a good question.

An Hon. Member: They are not interested in this issue, I guess.

Mr. Gustafson: It is not an issue, that is why.

Mr. Schellenberg: I should like to thank my colleagues for their comments, but I will resume debate.

Following June 18 when the White Paper is presented, we will have more meat to chew on, so to speak, and we should be able to have ample opportunity to debate the question. However, a White Paper is just that; it is a discussion paper, an opportunity for the Government to put forward its ideas. At that time we can certainly deal with the question of taxes on whatever items.

As I rose to join in the debate today, my eye caught the sculpture on the west wall of the House of Commons which reads: "Impôt-Tax", and below it is depicted a Canadian family. There is a father, a mother, and a child on the lap. I am sure that when this Chamber was built, that was put there for good reason. Those are the commoners of Canada, the people who make what we do possible through their taxation dollars. Indeed, the figure appears on one of the major arches of the House of Commons, quite appropriately. If it was not there, the ceiling would fall down. Those people are important to Canada. They are the ones who make what we do possible and it is to them that I wish to address my remarks today.

Let me begin by making an obvious but important assumption. Where the tax system is concerned, fairness is uppermost in the minds of most Canadians. Fairness is the basic standard by which Canadians assess the tax system and how it affects them and others around them.

Over the past decade, the perception has grown that the tax system falls short of the level of fairness Canadians have a right to expect. This growing perception is expressed in questions any Canadian might ask: why is the tax burden so high, why do some people in the same circumstances pay less tax, how is it that some profitable corporations pay little or no tax?

The latter question was raised in debate by my hon. colleague from Regina East. He asked if it was right that the Royal Bank of Canada with all its profits pay no tax. It is not right and that is the purpose of tax reform. Tax reform will ensure that corporations like that pay their fair share. I cannot understand why members of the NDP and the Liberal Party would oppose tax reform.

The Government shares the concerns of most Canadians about the tax system. We intend, in the weeks and months to come, to make the Canadian taxation system fairer. We believe that the tax system should not only be fair but that it should generally be perceived to be fair. We believe it is a primary responsibility to ensure that the elderly and those in greatest need receive fair treatment. We believe that high-income earners and profitable corporations should pay their fair share of tax. We believe that individuals with similar abilities to pay taxes should pay similar amounts of tax. Finally, we believe that fair sharing of the tax burden should apply broadly across sectors of the economy and across goods and services.

Ironically, one of my constituents came up with what he thought was the perfect solution to all of our tax dilemmas. He suggested, in all due respect, that we should consider taxing sex. He said that indeed, if a tax was paid whenever the act was performed, eventually Canadians would brag about how much they were paying in taxes and indeed we would solve all of our deficit problems. It would be a little hard to administer, but like most of my constituents' suggestions, one worth considering.

For the third time in 20 years Canadians will soon attempt a major overhaul of the tax system. It is generally agreed that the first two attempts by other Governments ended in failure. In each case, the blueprint for tax reform designed by economists and tax specialists was shredded by the arguments and opposition of special-interest groups who sought to maintain the tax preferences that benefited them most.

The greatest challenge facing proponents of comprehensive tax reform today, proponents like members of the Government, is the same as it was in the past. It is to reform the tax system to make it internationally competitive, fair and efficient in a way that avoids the swamp of special-interest pleading. Avoiding the swamp will require not only a sound blueprint for reform, which we will soon release, but also a Government that is prepared to consult on ways to improve that reform and will provide the leadership necessary to see that the national interest is put ahead of special interests. The Government we have in Canada today is that kind of Government.

Last summer, the U.S. Congress made history when it passed its comprehensive tax reform Bill. So many things in Canada are dependent upon what happens south of the 49th. That is the world in which we live. By eliminating hundreds of deductions and incentives, the Americans were able to substantially reduce personal and corporate income tax rates for the first time in decades. The Canadian Government has now served notice that it too is planning an overhaul of its entire tax system.

We in Canada have lived with taxation for over 300 years. The first recorded tax in Canada was levied in 1650. It was an export tax on beaver and moose pelts. The annual revenue yield is estimated to have been no more than $200. If the Liberals had been in power then, they might have received $200 and spent $300, but that is another matter.

In 1867, the British North America Act institutionalized taxation by granting the federal Government wide powers to raise revenues while restricting the provinces to direct taxation within their own jurisdictional boundaries. Direct taxation includes such taxes as personal and corporate income tax, property tax, sales tax, succession duties, et cetera. Customs and excise taxes are the best examples of indirect taxation.

In 1916, the business profits war tax Act was passed to help finance the Canadian war effort followed by the income war tax Act in 1917. That was, of course, the first national personal income tax and it was, we were told then, a temporary measure. For the next 20 years, the bulk of government revenues continued to be derived from customs and excise taxes on products such as tobacco and alcohol. By the time World War II started, however, the burden of taxation had shifted to personal and corporate income taxes.

Governments have continually tinkered with the Income Tax Act for the past 40 years. Changes have been made under the guise of stimulating economic growth, creating employment and increasing international competitiveness as well as more equitably redistributing income. Forty years of changes during which the Conservatives have only been in power for five or six years means that the Liberals must take credit for 35 of those 40 years. Those changes have made the Act one of the most unwieldy, complex pieces of legislation today.

The Canadian Income Tax Act is about as thick as three volumes of Hansard and some say it makes just about as much sense. There is also a generally accepted feeling that the current system no longer meets the stated objectives. The question of fairness figures prominently in people's perception of our current tax system. Public opinion indicates that there is a growing attitudinal gap between those in the upper and lower ends of the socio-economic scale. Those on the lower end have the sense that while the economy may be steadily improving, they are not benefiting from it. Much of that feeling can be traced back to concerns about the tax system and the belief that corporations are not paying their fair share due to the numerous deductions and exemptions available.

These exemptions and deductions for corporations, of course, do serve a valuable purpose. Corporations do hire people. William Watson of McGill University, in the March 26 edition of the Financial Post, said:

> The corporation is nothing more than a convenient legal fiction. Corporations don't pay taxes. People pay corporate taxes. The taxes are paid either by the corporation's customers (in higher prices), by its workers (in lower wages), by its suppliers (in lower materials prices), or by its shareholders (in reduced earnings).

Unfortunately, 50 years of economic analysis hasn't made clear in just what proportion these four groups pay . . . more and more corporations are now owned by pension plans, so that, increasingly, even when "capital" pays, labor pays. If the NDP wants to raise a tax that may well be paid in large part by the "working class," that's fine by me, though someone should tell the working class what its friends are up to.

Indeed, when we talk about the value of corporations and small business to the Canadian economy, we should remember where our recent economic growth has come from. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business points out the following:

Solid growth has been achieved with an 11 per cent increase in business formations over 1984, a net gain of 65,000 new businesses. The marked improvement in national job generation has resulted in a significant lowering of unemployment.

That is something for which my colleagues and I will take some credit. The federation continues:

Over 70 per cent of the jobs created during this Government's mandate, in excess of 394,000, are the result of small business entrepreneurial activity.

Of course, that is also the result of good Government. The federation goes on to say:

Canadians in all regions are benefiting from the hard work of the nation's risk takers who have been encouraged by measures in the last two budgets.

Those measures will be improved by the measures contained in the White Paper on tax reform which is to be released on June 18.

With all that in mind, we cannot deny that by treating different sources of investment and savings in different ways, financial decisions by corporations and individuals are often made purely on the basis of tax treatment.

A good example of tax abuse, as we have heard several times in the Chamber today, is the scientific research tax credit introduced in 1983 to encourage research. It ended up costing the federal Treasury $3 billion or $4 billion without a proportionate amount of scientific research being done. The result is that the Government and taxpayers have been subsidizing companies without enjoying the full benefits of job creation, regional development or indeed scientific breakthroughs.

The Minister of Finance first addressed the issue of tax reform in his economic statement of 1984. This is culminating in the White Paper of June 18. Indeed, a background paper prepared for the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs by the C. D. Howe Institute issued a warning to which my opposition colleagues should pay heed. The institute said:

Much of the debate undoubtedly will be couched in terms of the reform's fairness. In this regard, we believe that it is essential to focus on the impact of the over-all package rather than on individual elements. Failure to judge the reform in this way may mean that special interests will dominate, to the detriment of the national interest.

We must have a release of that White Paper, and deal with the measures it contains then, not 20 days in advance, as we are doing today.

How will our Government make Canada's taxation system fair? Let us look first at lower rates. Lower marginal rates coupled with the elimination of preferences, and strengthened provisions to counter tax avoidance, would reverse our growing dependence on personal income taxes. Canadians would get to keep more of each additional dollar they earn to spend, save or invest as they choose. They would also be assured that others are bearing their fair share of the burden. I repeat, fair taxation will make tax reform work.

What has our Government done so far to improve our taxation system? As has been mentioned several times today, we put an end to the SRTC which was considerably abused. We restricted tax losses and credits for investors and limited partnerships. We put a stop to the so-called carve-out transactions in the oil and gas sector. We introduced rules to prevent trading in tax losses and credits among corporations. We also brought in the minimum income tax, the sales tax credit, and increases in the child tax credit.

A major part of our continuing tax reform will be to build in several specific measures to ensure that low-income Canadians, including pensioners, are treated equitably. I trust the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is listening because many pensioners will go off the tax rolls because of the tax reform we are bringing in.

As part of our tax reform we are going to convert personal exemptions and some deductions to tax credits. Exemptions favour those in higher income brackets. Indeed, the identical exemption confers considerably more benefit on the high-income earner as it is now, than on the lower income earner. On the other hand, a tax credit provides the same dollar benefit to taxpayers regardless of their income level. With a system of tax credits, lower income taxpayers will receive greater benefit than they do now, while those at the higher income levels would receive less.

A system of tax credits would make the system more progressive. In other words, for every $1,000 of tax exemption the individual at the 34 per cent rate is allowed a $340 tax exemption. The lower income earner at the bottom of the scale, 6 per cent, only makes $60 on that exemption. That is what we are changing through the tax credit system. With the change from exemptions to credits, many low-income people, including pensioners, will be dropped from the rolls. These people will no longer be required to pay income tax.

Let there be no doubt at all about the Government's revenue intentions for tax reform. We have said all along that in pursuing a fairer balance our intention is to ensure a sounder, more predictable revenue base, not greater total revenue. Tax reform will not be a tax grab. That is worth repeating. Tax reform under a Progressive Conservative Government will not be a tax grab.

To sum up, the Government's plan for comprehensive tax reform is to bring greater equity to the federal taxation system. We want Canadians to feel that their tax system treats all members of the Canadian community fairly. When you analyse all the features of the tax reform, all the improvements we want to make are designed to ultimately improve the fairness of the system. We realize that a fair tax system, fair in the fullest sense of the word, is one that helps the economy to operate to its full potential at maximum efficiency, so that it generates the growth and produces the jobs which will benefit all Canadians. A tax system that does that is a system of which all Canadians can be proud. This is our goal in tax reform and we intend to accomplish it.

The public debate on tax reform is just beginning to build momentum. The search for an equitable tax system acceptable to all Canadians, including the provinces, the business community and social groups, will be one of the most difficult tasks this Government will face. However, failure to do so will only perpetuate a problem which has simply become too expensive to ignore. We will act. We will reform the tax system. Canadian taxpayers expect it, want it, and they are going to get tax reform under a Progressive Conservative Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this has been an interesting and perhaps a bit disturbing kind of debate, given the submissions made by government Members. I say disturbing because through the entire day those Members talked about tax reform in general terms. They suggested we should have a debate on tax reform in general. They have avoided the specific question put before the House, which is that the House declare itself in opposition to the imposition of a federal tax on food and urges the Government to reject such a tax as part of its tax reform package.

The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) has joined the chorus of those who say how wonderful tax reform is while avoiding the question of whether or not it is appropriate to levy a tax on people's grocery bills. This is particularly important to those working Canadians who are somewhere not too far above what we see now as the poverty line in major cities and are still struggling to make end's meet. They may occasionally take their kids to McDonald's or do something special for them rather than just grimly hanging on. They will be really hit by a $400 or $500 a year tax on their grocery bill. That is what the business-transfer tax proposal would amount to. If the precedent established with respect to the sales tax were followed they would get no remission of that tax at all.

Perhaps I can ask the Hon. Member to answer the question directly. Does he favour a tax on food or is he prepared to join with us and express his reservations over imposing a tax on the most basic essential of life.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre enjoys dealing with hypothetical situations. I do not. He was not here at the beginning of my speech when I said I have yet to see—

Mr. Redway: He was not here except for the last few seconds.

Mr. Schellenberg: He was not here for the majority of my speech. In any event, neither the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, nor anyone else in the Government of Canada has said we are bringing in a tax on food. If he wants to tilt at hypothetical windmills or erect strawmen and knock them down he is more than entitled to do it as a Member of Parliament. However, this Government does not deal with hypothetical situations. If the Hon. Member would be kind enough to call me on the afternoon of June 18 I will inform him just what this Government will be doing with tax reform.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, that sums up the problem. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and others have on many occasions averred to a major new tax area which I believe most Canadians would find objectionable. It is clear that such a tax would be extremely regressive even if a modest amount of tax credit were given to low-income Canadians.

A month ago I was briefed by the Department of Finance at length on the business-transfer tax which, as I understand it, is still the most likely option to be implemented. It was referred to by the Minister of Finance in his statement in this House on May 6. I will just refer to a departmental analysis in order to inform the Hon. Member and explain why I am expressing my Party's concerns now rather than waiting tamely and passively until the afternoon of June 18. Even then we will still be in the dark because the proposals are being put forward at eight p.m. in the evening.

This is from an analysis the Department of Finance made just a month ago. They said ad hoc changes would be complex and limited in scope. A shift to the wholesale level would be rejected by business. A shift to the retail level is not feasible in the presence of provincial retail sales taxes. The business-transfer tax is feasible "only if applied at a single rate and on all goods and services". That is what the Government is considering. The BTT is a comprehensive tax with few exemptions. It is not viable with exemptions at multiple rates. Exemptions lead to double taxation and complicate compliance and administration, and the impact on lower income families is best redressed through a tax credit.

We have a proposal for a tax on food with no exemption and a credit for low-income families. The Government has defined low-income families as those earning less than $15,000 a year. There is a gap of about $5,000 a year below the urban poverty line for a family of four in which people would be paying the tax on food. This is not hypothetical. This is a very real proposal which is currently being considered by the Ministry and is being actively lobbied for by the tax experts and officials in the Department of Finance.

Is the Member prepared to stand with me and other Members of Parliament in telling the Government that that is not an acceptable form of tax and that it should rule that out and look for other options for reform of the sales tax? Is the Hon. Member prepared to say that or not?

Mr. Schellenberg: Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre has gone to a briefing where items were thrown out which may or may not be acted upon. He is taking up a day's time on a situation which I continue to call a strawman, a hypothetical windmill at which he wants to tilt. I have discussed a number of the measures which may or may not come forward in tax reform. Knowing the Minister of Finance as I do, I am sure he will take the wisdom and the excellent advice of the Member for Nanaimo—Alberni to heart and we will all see that on June 18.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has quite rightly been trying to enlighten the House, notwithstanding the fact that many Members of the House have indicated that they will probably still be in the dark after the White Paper has been issued. I know the Hon. Member is concerned about the complexity and the arbitrary nature of the current federal sales tax provisions. I know that he is as concerned as I am about the fact, for example, that fluoridated toothpaste may qualify as a tax-exempt health product because it claims to be fighting cavities, or it may be taxable as a cosmetic. That is an example of the problems which the current federal sales tax imposes on our system.

In his statement the Minister of Finance indicated that there are a number of options for dealing with this particular issue. He indicated that one of the options which would be put forward is a business transfer tax. He also indicated that we could still have a federal sales tax. In addition, he talked about the possibility of a combined federal and provincial sales tax which appears to be a good option.

Would the Hon. Member comment on the three options, and particularly on what the chances are that we may have a combined provincial and federal sales tax, bearing in mind that the Province of Alberta currently has no provincial sales tax? I have been told by some people in the eastern part of British Columbia, the Hon. Member's home province, that at one time there was a movement afoot to secede to Alberta because there is no sales tax paid there while there is in the Hon. Member's province.

Mr. Schellenberg: I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his question. It seems that very often westerners are talking about seceding from one body or another. That often happens when they get disgruntled. That is the way we are.

The Hon. Member is correct when he talks about how the federal sales tax kills jobs. We are told that Canada's federal sales tax is the only commodity tax in the world which favours imports over domestic goods. I understand that on average Canadian manufacturers pay one-third more tax than competing importers. In fact, some pay as much as 60 or 70 per cent more under the federal sales tax system which now exists than do their important competitors. This happens because the tax is levied on a domestic manufacturers' final price which usually includes expenses for advertising, warehousing, warranty programs and other marketing operations.

My colleague spoke about the different options being considered, such as the business-transfer tax, the federal sales tax, and perhaps a joint federal-provincial sales tax. That shows the kind of consultation which has taken place and the work the Finance Minister, his Department, and my colleagues have done to study all the avenues open. They have consulted and received as much input as possible to ensure that when the announcement is made on June 18 at eight o'clock Ottawa time, 5 p.m. in B.C., it will be the best possible document that we can provide.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, in the statement of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regarding the tax reform package, he indicated that it was very likely that there would be much more reliance on tax credits than there has been in the past. He indicated as well that the tax credit was a fairer process than deductions, that deductions might very well save high-income persons more taxes than the same deductions would save a low-income person. He indicated that the tax credit system would be more beneficial. Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell us whether he favours a system with tax credits as opposed to deductions.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. The Hon. Member is correct when he talks about the unfairness of the exemption versus tax credit system. In reality the present tax exemption system is Robin Hood in reverse, it is taxing the poor and giving to the rich. An individual in the 34 per cent bracket who is claiming a tax deduction of $1,000 is getting $340. The individual in the 6 per cent bracket is only getting $60. The Government proposes to remove the tax exemptions and replace them with tax credits in many areas. I think that is a worthy goal.

A Motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE—REFUSAL OF INFORMATION CONCERNING FORMER AMBASSADOR TO EGYPT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning one of the former employees of his Department, Herbert Norman, who was Ambassador to Egypt and who committed suicide in 1956. At that time he was suspected not only by the RCMP, but by the American services, of having worked for the KGB. He was a member of the Communist Party and apparently belonged to a cell here in Ottawa.

I asked some very specific questions of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) but the answer I received was: "I cannot confirm or deny your question". We have to look at this matter in an objective way. Over 30 years have passed since this gentleman died. Some persons who were close to him were the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and the Secretary to the then Cabinet, Mr. Robert Bryce.

At one point the Secretary to the then Cabinet was aware that Mr. Norman was investigated, but did not come forward to say he knew that Mr. Herbert Norman belonged to a Communist cell and that he wanted the Secretary to the then Cabinet to be part of a Communist cell in Cambridge in the 1930s.

Our Party was elected in 1984 to have an open Government, a Government which would open its books and show the people what lay behind a lot of problems. One of those problems is intelligence carried on by foreign countries in Canada.

I submitted a second question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). His answer was that there are no skeletons left in that closet. I dare to challenge that statement. If there are no skeletons left in that closet, then why does the Government not open the books and come clean?

Today I addressed another question to the Government. I asked it of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). It concerned a terrorist, Francesco Piperno, who was sentenced on May 15, 1987, to 10 years in jail. This fellow has been in Canada for six years. Italy wanted to extradite him for the murder of a former Italian Prime Minister, Mr. Aldo Moro, and he was not extradited. This fellow was teaching up until two weeks ago at the University of Alberta. He is known as a Red Brigade terrorist. At the same time we have difficulty getting legal immigrants into Canada.

The answer the Minister of State for Immigration gave me was that this case is before the Immigration Appeal Board. It is a known fact that Section 39 of the Immigration Act of 1976 is very specific where the safety of Canada is concerned. The Minister, in conjunction with the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), can deport a person.

I would not say that we have a cover-up in the case of Mr. Piperno. But why are we trying to hide situations which involve infiltration by the communist bloc? We did not hesitate to deport a representative of Taiwan under the provisions of Section 39 of the Immigration Act who was attending an anti-communist conference in Toronto which dealt with the Red regime in Red China. I say that we have to open the case of Mr. Herbert Norman. We have to come clean. We have to answer the questions that have been asked. In the case of Mr. Piperno, we must deport him as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy), I would remind the House that the case referred to involves a man who has been dead, as the Hon. Member stated, for more than 30 years, and deals with allegations about activities going back for more than 50 years. I would also point out that over the last 40 years security matters, including questions related to Soviet penetration of the Government of Canada, have been very comprehensively investigated by three royal commissions which had unrestricted access to all relevant documents. The findings of these royal commissions have been made available to Parliament and to the people of Canada. Successive governments have stood to account for implementing the recommendations of these commissions.

Furthermore, all of the information that may be released pursuant to the Access to Information Act has been made available to those requesting it, including the various authors and scholars conducting investigations in this area.

• (1815)

I am informed that the amount of material released pursuant to the Act is in the order of 355 pages by External Affairs and 550 pages by CSIS. I would like to take this opportunity to emphasize that the Government fully supports the policy underlying the Act and expects all government institutions to apply its provisions, which may best be summarized by the principle that government information should be available to the public but that necessary exceptions to the right of access should be limited and specific. Another aspect of the Hon. Member's question was the statement that:

> The Information Commissioner is taking CSIS to court because the Government does not want to reveal information in the spirit of freedom of information.

That requires comment. I believe he may have misunderstood or been misinformed concerning the litigation. Without wishing to comment in any way on the particulars of a case before the courts, which would be quite improper, I think it fair to say that the aspect of the Access to Information Act which the Information Commissioner is asking the court to clarify relates to whether the Act requires that the institution releasing documents identify the exemptions made under the Act on the face of the documents.

NUCLEAR ENERGY—LEPREAU II REACTOR PROJECT IN NEW BRUNSWICK. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue a question that I asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) on April 14 concerning the Government's policy toward the proposed construction of a second nuclear reactor at Point Lepreau in New Brunswick, often known as the Lepreau II proposal.

At that time I asked the Minister to assure the House that the Government would not consider participating in this project, or give its consent or any financial aid to it, until such time as either it had lived up to the Conservative Party's promise in 1979 and in 1984 to hold a full inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada or, as I elaborated to the Minister in a letter on April 15, until such time as the whole question of nuclear power was considered within the context of the process which the Minister launched entitled "Energy Options: A Canadian Dialogue".

I find it strange that at the same time as the Minister is launching this particular process, in which he is encouraging Canadians to think about what the various energy options are, he is refusing to give this House the assurance that the Government will not make a major decision with respect to one particular option, the nuclear energy option, in the meantime.

That is my first quarrel with the Minister's answer. My second is that the Minister says:

> Unlike the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, this Government is not bent on overly centralizing Canada, and we acknowledge the existence of the provinces and their responsibility in the field of energy. It is up to the Government of New Brunswick to decide whether or not its territory and its citizens are seeking an increase in the electricity sector. It is up to them to decide how these needs are going to be met—The New Brunswick Government has not yet made this choice.

This is typical of the attitude the Government displays toward major economic, and in this case energy, decisions. We see the Government taking a hands-off approach to the purchase of Dome by Amoco and saying "It is not really our business. It is up to the shareholders of Dome and others in the private sector. It is not really anything the Government should have anything to do with. We are not responsible. We are only the federal Government. We are only responsible for the nation's future. If a sizeable portion of our energy sector happens to be bought up by an American multinational, it is none of our business."

That is the same attitude we see manifesting itself here with respect to nuclear energy. If a second reactor is built at Point Lepreau, it will probably be done with about two-thirds of the funding coming from the federal Government.

The federal Government will be making the decision on whether or not to proceed with building the first nuclear reactor to be commissioned, I believe in North America, since the Three Mile Island accident in 1979. Yet, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wants us to believe that it is something which is up to New Brunswick, that it is kind of a local energy decision in which he does not have any involvement because he is not a centralist.

The fact of the matter is that when it comes to issues like nuclear reactors, there is no such thing as a local decision, either in respect of geography and the environment or in respect of the realities of federal policy and the fact that it will have to be a federal decision which makes the reactor possible through federal funding.

We could ask the people of northern Sweden, the Samiid, whether or not the decision to build the reactor in Chernobyl in Ukraine was a local decision or a global decision. Its consequences were much more than local, particularly for the Samiid people in northern Sweden who saw their livelihood wiped out by the after-effects of a nuclear accident at a reactor many thousands of miles away from them.

I reject completely the notion suggested by the Minister of Energy that this is some kind of provincial or local decision which he, in his unwillingness to interfere, is simply allowing to happen munificently.

I reject that politically, environmentally, and in terms of established policy, unless it was established lies, Mr. Speaker, of the Progressive Conservative Party to have an inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada, promised in 1979 and 1984, or even in the context of commitments made by the Government in respect of discussing energy options.

I repeat my urgings to the Government that it not go ahead with the project. There is absolutely no need for it. It does not have to do with supplying the legitimate electricity needs of the people of New Brunswick. They have a surplus in that province now. It has more to do with AECL's need to build a prototype reactor for export purposes, or with New Brunswick's felt need to export more electricity to the United States, or with Premier Hatfield's felt need to have a major project to announce some time before the next provincial election.

Whatever the case may be, it has nothing to do with the legitimate electricity needs of the people of New Brunswick. The spectre of a shortage of power now being supplied to New Brunswick by Quebec is, in my judgment, a false fear on the part of people whose real agenda is to create the political context in which Lepreau II can go ahead when it should not.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, Canada's energy policy is a matter of continuing interest to all Canadians. In recognition of this, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) recently announced a conference process entitled "Energy Options-A Canadian Dialogue". This process is designed to review and assess Canada's energy prospects and options over the longer term. Considerable public input into the process is expected. However, it is not the intention of the Government to defer decisions on major energy projects while this dialogue continues.

With regard to the construction of the Lepreau II unit, I must stress that decisions on new generating capacity are made by the provinces. The federal Government is sure that the provincial Government of New Brunswick would not proceed with a project that it did not think was in the province's best interest.

The economics of a second reactor at Point Lepreau are a major consideration in any decision to proceed with this reactor. The federal Government would support Lepreau II only as a commercial project which will bring significant net benefits to New Brunswick and Canada.

The rate of growth of electricity demand in New Brunswick indicates that additional electrical generating capacity will be required in the 1990s. The principal sources of energy available to supply this future demand will be either nuclear or coal.

I note that the Hon. Member is also a proponent of a public inquiry into the nuclear industry. In an address to the House on May 15, 1986, the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated that an inquiry into the nuclear industry should wait until the Atomic Energy Control Board has reported to the Government on the implications of the Chernobyl accident. That report has now been issued.

The AECB has concluded that the Chernobyl accident has not revealed any significant new information that would affect the current safety requirements for Candu reactors. It was determined that all important aspects of the accident and its causes have been considered by the AECB and the licensing process for the currently operating reactors.

In light of this report, the Government sees no urgency for an inquiry into the nuclear industry at this time. Two previous intensive inquiries in Ontario by the Porter Commission and the Parliamentary Select Committee on Hydro Affairs both concluded that Candu reactors are adequately safe. The AECB report finds nothing in the Chernobyl accident to cause a reassessment of the opinions of these two inquiries.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—POSITION OF HEAD OF UNITED STATES ENVIRONMENT PROTECTION AGENCY—POLICY ANNOUNCED BY PRESIDENT REAGAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on April 6, President Reagan said in this Chamber that he had agreed to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain. Two weeks later, Lee Thomas, the head of the American Environmental Protection Agency, told a U.S. Senate committee that he saw no need for the U.S. Congress to pass legislation to reduce acid rain.

Knowing the resistance within the United States administration to acid rain control, we in Canada anticipated that the Canadian demands regarding cuts, targets and timetable would be very firm. We can bargain from a position of strength considering what we have done and are doing. So it was with some concern that many of us read in the newspapers of May 23 that Canada may be flexible about an acid rain pact with the U.S. and will not demand that a Canadian timetable for cutting acid gas emissions be followed by the Americans. I am referring to an article by Canadian Press which appeared in The Globe and Mail.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government's record in bargaining and negotiating is not one to write home about. First the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) allowed himself to be talked into wasting one year with the acid rain envoys' process at the first 1985 summit. Then the Prime Minister accepted a proposal for five years of research and demonstration at the 1986 summit meeting. Then the Prime Minister applauded when President Reagan, after stonewalling for one year, promised five more years of research just weeks before the 1987 summit meeting here in Ottawa.

Instead of starting with a tough, firm stand on acid gas pollution, we now see the Government vacillating and apparently willing to make concessions even before the real bargaining starts. Several questions need to be asked. What was accomplished at last week's meeting in Washington at which the Canadians and Americans met? Second, if the Government is really flexible on timetables, what else is it willing to be flexible about? Will it be flexible on targets or on the size of the cuts?

Would we not be dealing from a position of greater strength than we are now if New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were finally to sign their parts of the agreement on the acid rain emission control program with a target of 50 per cent reduction by 1994? This kind of foot-dragging by New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is not very helpful and is particularly noticeable and quite in contrast with Ontario now that the Government of Ontario has put a lid on Ontario Hydro and its banking proposition.

In conclusion, I have to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, and I am glad to see him ready to get up on his feet, what did the meeting between officials in Washington last week achieve on the acid rain question? Was it substance? Was it just appearances? Was it just another exercise in cosmetics?

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, few things have tested the long and impressive record of environmental co-operation between Canada and the United States as much as the issue of acid rain. Successive Governments have grappled with the dilemma of how to move a stubborn U.S. bureaucracy, entrenched industrial and regional interests, and wary U.S. politicians to take action on a problem that affects both our countries. In fact, from June, 1982, until March, 1985, there was an impasse on how to deal with the problem. This stalemate was broken only when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President, despite the opposition of many within the U.S. administration, agreed at the Quebec Summit to appoint high level special envoys to examine the issue.

At their meeting in Washington in March, 1986, the Prime Minister and the President fully endorsed the special envoys' recommendations. Throughout the subsequent year, administration officials tried to portray ongoing programs as meeting the purpose of the envoys' recommendations. The Government's concern about the shortcomings of this approach lead to the visit of Vice-President Bush to Ottawa this past January and, subsequently, to President Reagan's announcement that he would be seeking funds to fulfil his commitment. Those funds have now been officially requested.

Many in the U.S. administration counselled that this was enough; that Canada should be satisfied. They ignored the clearly stated position of this Government that what Canada needs is a reduction in the amount of sulphur dioxide that crosses the border into eastern Canada.

Once again, in spite of this kind of advice, and at the urging of the Prime Minister, President Reagan announced during his visit to Ottawa in April that he had agreed to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain. There are many in the U.S. administration who would have done nothing about the problem during the past two years. The President has clearly decided, on a number of occasions, that more needed to be done.

Opposition to progress on the problem exists and will continue to exist. For our part, we will continue to seek a reduction in the transboundary flow of air pollution from the United States. We will continue to pursue an acid rain accord. Officials from both countries are engaged in preliminary discussions already. We still have much to do but we think we will continue to make progress. Certainly we on this side will not be deterred or diverted from our purpose by the recalcitrance of American officials. Members opposite should show the same steadfastness.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.35 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EMPLOYMENT

SHORTAGE OF QUALIFIED DAIRY HERDSMEN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, at a time when my region is suffering very serious unemployment one sector of the local economy is suffering because it is unable to find qualified workers. Indeed, the agricultural sector, particularly the dairy industry in eastern Ontario, is in a serious bind and unable to find dairy herd workers.

The Farm Labour Pool office in Vankleek Hill, Ontario, in my riding presently has 28 unfilled vacancies on dairy farms. The salary range for these jobs is between $250 and $350 per week. In some cases accommodation is included. This shortage of qualified people is critical.

I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to place the position of dairy herdsman on a priorized shortage list under the Skills Shortage Program and allocate the necessary funding to train dairy herdsmen. Meanwhile, Canadians looking for a good, hard-working, healthy outdoor job should phone the Farm Labour Pool in Vankleek Hill, Ontario, at area code (613) 678-2134, or contact my own constituency office. We desperately need the help.

THE MONARCHY

OMISSION OF QUEEN'S PORTRAIT FROM POSTAGE STAMPS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, is Canada Post going republican? When the new 36-cent stamps were issued in April many were disappointed to discover that there was none bearing the Queen's portrait. This stamp was promised twice for dates in May but still has not appeared. Many Toronto customers have been told by post office workers there that it might never be issued.

If this were an isolated incident it might be accepted as only an inconvenience. However, it impresses many from experience that it is part of a pattern. It is a serious grievance to all Canadians who esteem the Queen as Canada's head of state.

We have just begun today's sitting, as we do every day, with a prayer for Her Majesty. The Government has made clear that respect for the monarchy is a priority. A Gallup poll has shown that a majority of Canadians believe the monarchy is of value to this country. When will Canada Post catch up with Canada?

VIA RAIL

CONSTRUCTION OF MAINTENANCE SHOPS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, a controversy broke out a week or so ago about the announcement which the Minister of Transport made in the House that VIA Rail would now be free to go ahead with constructing the maintenance shops in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax which were postponed when the Conservatives came to office. The controversy was with regard to whether the plans for Winnipeg would be downgraded and the major western maintenance facility would be at Vancouver.

If VIA is considering downgrading the maintenance facility in Winnipeg, I want to tell the House, VIA, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), and anyone else concerned with this issue, from an operational point of view, that I advise it not to make the same mistakes as railways have made on occasion in the past, that is, try to run trains from Toronto in the east and Vancouver in the west to Winnipeg, turn them around there, and run them back without having the major maintenance facility in Winnipeg.

It is a fact of Canadian life, due to the climate, that equipment most often breaks down in Winnipeg, particularly in the winter. It would be sheer madness for VIA to differ from the plan of having Winnipeg as a major maintenance facility, both on the motive power side and on the coach side.

NARCOTICS

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, last fall the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced plans to deal with Canada's drug epidemic. This is a problem which affects in some way virtually every family in Canada, a problem which not only costs the nation millions in lost productivity, but also threatens the minds and lives of many Canadians. In combatting drug abuse the state clearly has a place in the classrooms, workrooms and boardrooms of the nation.

This week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) put forward a $210 million five-year plan which will involve public education, drug and alcohol treatment and rehabilitation, law enforcement and control, and research efforts.

I congratulate the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, first for recognizing that there is a drug crisis in Canada, second, for undertaking to educate all Canadians about the dangers of drug abuse and, third, for responding in a number of concrete ways; internationally through our consulates abroad, and domestically in co-operation with the provinces and community groups.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the aboriginal leaders of Canada and the people whom they represent feel betrayed by the Meech Lake Accord. They, too, have sought to have their distinct place in Canada recognized in our Constitution. Repeatedly, however, they have been rebuffed by fearful, hesitant Premiers who seek more power for themselves but are unwilling to share even a modest amount with others.

The second round of constitutional talks referred to in the Accord mentions fisheries, but aboriginal rights are left out. This is an omission of enormous proportions. The fishery and aboriginal rights are intimately related. I, therefore, urge the inclusion of aboriginal peoples and their rights on the second round agenda.

In the Yukon and Northwest Territories court action is under way against the Meech Lake Accord. To give every Premier a veto over the creation of new provinces is highly offensive to the Governments of the North and the northerners whom they represent.

• (1110)

Therefore I urge the deletion of this veto power over the creation of new provinces.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL UNITY—IMPACT OF VISIT BY PRESIDENT OF FRANCE—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, I commented on President Mitterand's visit to Canada, and today, a few hours before he leaves this country, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the positive impact of this brief visit.

I want to point out the general approval surrounding the cordial welcome the President received. The unanimity of Canadians in this respect reflects the unity of this country.

As a Canadian, I am particularly happy to feel this unity, since all Canadians want to live in a united Canada. This country has not always been as united, but since we came to power in 1984, our Prime Minister has managed to create this climate of national unity, a fact of which Canadians are very proud.

In concluding, I would like to repeat what I said Tuesday, namely, that the positive impact of President Mitterand's visit will continue to make itself felt and that the prospects for a united Canada under Prime Minister Mulroney are very good indeed.

STATUS OF WOMEN

INCREASED ENTRY TO PROFESSIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada has just published some very encouraging material showing the important entry of women into the professions. There has been a great change in representation, especially in the professions of law and pharmacy. We welcome that change.

In the case of engineering the increase is in the order of 300 per cent. However, since the figure has only risen from 1 per cent to 3 per cent it is not very encouraging. We need to see more storming of these all-male bastions, these boys clubs in the engineering schools.

Canada can only be a great country if its people are well trained. We need the talents of all our people. Thus we welcome this important development of women moving into the professions.

We have to support concrete measures to see that this movement continues. I hope that it will be matched by the movement of native peoples, handicapped persons, and people of visible minorities so that we will have really fair representation and that, as a country, we will be able to employ the talents of all our people.

AGRICULTURE

BRITISH COLUMBIA DAIRY INDUSTRY—IMPORTATION OF DUTY-FREE PRODUCTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the dairy industry of British Columbia is deeply worried about the volume of milk and dairy products that is being brought into British Columbia from the U.S. without duty charged.

Customs officials at the five Lower Mainland crossings have calculated that on a daily average there are 12,200 cars crossing at these borders and that 65 per cent to 80 per cent of individuals returning home to B.C. through four of these crossings have purchased dairy products. At the Point Roberts crossing the estimate is that 100 per cent bring home these goods. This crossing, which is U.S. territory, is accessible only through Canada and has been called the "milk and gas run".

If we consider that each car has an average of 2.5 people in it and that each person represents $10 Canadian of dairy products, this could add up to a staggering $72 million per year lost to the B.C. dairy industry. Small grocery stores have opened along the Washington border to sell milk, eggs and bread to Canadian customers who just "pop across the border".

The 17 per cent duty that the law requires is not needed on "small value" grocery items. I believe that Customs must enforce this levy in order to ensure that Canadian dairy producers will receive the full protection of our excise law.

PUBLIC WORKS

OLD PORT OF MONTREAL

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal have been waiting a long time for the Old Port of Montreal, to be developed. Once it has been developed, the Old Port will have much to contribute to the city, in terms of beauty, recreation and tourism. However, as in the case of the space agency, the Conservative Government has been dragging its feet. Montreal has been waiting nearly three years for financial assistance to develop the Old Port. The city of Toronto made a similar request, and it did receive funding. Will the Old Port of Montreal have the same fate as the space agency?

Yesterday, a telegram was sent to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), and to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), signed by Mrs. Manon Vennat and Mr. Marcel Daoust of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce. In it the federal Government is asked to provide funding for the development of the Port of Montreal.

I therefore want to add my voice to that of my colleagues and I ask the Government to act quickly.

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

SUCCESS OF ALBERTA'S TRIPLICATE PRESCRIPTION PROGRAM

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the College of Physicians and Surgeons introduced the triplicate prescription program one year ago. Chemical addiction is a principal disease of our time and prescription drug abuse plays a major role.

For the 10 most commonly abused drugs, narcotics and others, the physician uses a special prescription pad with an original and two copies, keeping the original for himself. The patient then takes two copies to the pharmacist who sends one to the college.

Using computers, the college can identify a physician who is providing unusual amounts of these drugs and patients who may be going from doctor to doctor for prescriptions. If several doctors are involved, they are notified and then are in a position to treat their patients more effectively if addiction is indicated. It is a true success story.

In commending the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons along with the Alberta Government, and the Alberta Pharmaceutical Association which support this initiative, I urge the federal Government to make this a national program.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Governments of Yukon and the Northwest Territories have launched a suit in the Supreme Court regarding the Meech Lake Accord. Canadians north of 60 have aspirations to provincehood just as did our forefathers in each of the 10 provinces.

Prior to the 1982 Constitution Act, provinces were created bilaterally between the federal Government and the region wishing status. In these intervening five years, the requirement has been the general amending formula of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population, along with Parliament.

The Meech Lake Accord touches on the creation of new provinces and provincial boundaries in a most fundamental sense by requiring the unanimity of provinces. I have reviewed the public record and find no evidence of provinces, federal Parties, or public groups arguing for the application of unanimity for the creation of new provinces. This raises a fundamental constitutional and political question that must be addressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Since there has been no debate upon applying such a measure, Canadians must ask why and on what grounds are the aspirations of northerners to be made so much more difficult to achieve. Yukon will become a province as will Denendeh and Nunavut. Eleven men have no right at law or in history to make Clause 42 comparable to an ascent of Everest for our northern brothers and sisters.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY—POSITION ON CONSTITUTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, pity the poor Liberals for they know not what they do. Split and divided on just about every issue from free trade to Cruise missiles, they have now been shafted on the Constitution by their erstwhile Leader, Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

They cannot even decide who is in charge over there. Is the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) calling the shots, not that anyone really listens to him, or are they still taking orders from the magus from Mount Royal? It is sad, Sir, but not too sad, to see the demise of a once proud national Party as it sinks into the oblivion that it so richly deserves.

INCREASE IN ONTARIO GOVERNMENT'S ENVIRONMENT BUDGET

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, congratulations are due to the Government of Ontario for its recent Budget as it affects the environment. What a contrast between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada.

On the one hand, the Government of Ontario is increasing its environment budget by 16 per cent to $410 million to deal with water pollution, waste management, sewer systems and acid rain. On the other hand, the Tory Government here in Ottawa has this year reduced by 103 persons the number of scientists, technicians and support staff in the Department of the Environment at a time when Canadians want more government action on the environment. On top of that, between September, 1984, and now, the federal Department of the Environment has lost $64.5 million because of inflation. What a sham!

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—NATURAL GAS POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct for the record some statements that were made by my friend, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). The Minister quoted from an NDP resolution book on natural gas exports. He should know that that book was published for the convenience of delegates and does not in fact reflect the present policy with respect to natural gas of the New Democratic Party of Canada.

• (1120)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It's still current today.

Mr. Waddell: He should know that that resolution was passed at the time of an energy crisis in 1979—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —so we could make sure that when Canadians did not have oil, they would have Canadian gas.

The Minister should look at my statements in the House of Commons and my submission to the National Energy Board this month where NDP policy is that there should be reasonable gas exports, not at fire sale prices, and there should be guaranteed reserves for Canadians in the future. That is a rational and reasonable policy and should not be distorted.

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO KNOW ELDERLY WORKERS' NEEDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition is once again asking this Government to start second reading of Bill C-50 as soon as possible, so that elderly workers can get their refunds by the first week of July. We also want to ask this Conservative Government whether in a democracy, older workers can be heard and allowed to express their philosophy and their needs to the Government. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government twice made a horrendous mistake in dealing with senior citizens in Canada. And both times it was forced to reverse its decision. This Government should act on the Official Opposition's request and hear witnesses first, before it makes another monumental mistake, in its dealings with senior citizens.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—EFFECT OF U.S. FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION DECISION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In early May the Prime Minister in his recent visit to western Canada had western Canadians generally believing he was interested in trying to find a solution to the very damaging decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States. But now we find that the Prime Minister and the Government are just posturing.

Has the Prime Minister called President Reagan since Question Period yesterday or are the Prime Minister and the Government quite content to wait until the Venice Summit to raise this very important issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will be meeting President Reagan within eight or nine days in Venice to discuss the FERC question. I will be meeting with Secretary of State Shultz and in addition I would imagine my colleague, the Minister for Finance, will be meeting with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. Those will be the personal meetings. We have already made known our very great regret at the decision taken by the quasi-judicial tribunal with respect to the FERC decision, and we have indicated to those Canadian companies which are affected and which are proceeding, as they have the right to do, through the courts, that they do that with our encouragement and support.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TELEPHONE UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, we are not talking about someone losing their paper route. We are talking a loss of possibly $400 million to the Canadian economy. We are talking about a situation where the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States acted outside its jurisdiction because it is responsible only for distribution. The import and export of natural gas are the sole jurisdiction of the Department of Energy in the United States. Why has the Prime Minister not telephoned President Reagan by now—why won't he do it immediately—to express the outrage of Canadians?

Ms. Copps: Absolutely.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks of the loss to Canadians. I know the loss to Canadians—most of those who are affected are in my province—just as I know the loss to Canadians in that province of the disastrous National Energy Program which that Hon. Member, and the Government of which he was part, brought in and imposed upon the people of Alberta in an utter act of carelessness for the interests of western Canada.

Ms. Copps: Next?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East, speaking again from her seat, asks what next the Liberal Party will do to destroy western Canada. Well, it won't get the chance, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT ON CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister himself has said that this decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is an extension of U.S. regulations into Canada.

• (1125)

The Government is allowing the United States pretty well to run the country. Why are the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister—the whole Government—allowing the United States to make laws in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the people of western Canada, the people of Alberta, take this issue very seriously. We do not regard it as simply another instance for people who are instinctually, viscerally anti-American to express those anti-American instincts again.

There is a real problem here. It is a problem deeper than simple visceral anti-Americanism. It is a threat to the economic interests of Alberta and of western Canada. We have raised it. We have failed in the first instance. We intend to continue to raise it, using every option available to us, including the options through the courts and including the options of direct and personal representations by the Prime Minister, by myself, and by the Minister of Finance.

Those kinds of representations have worked before in cases where the Liberals failed as, for example, with regard to the recognition of Canada's rights in the Arctic. We intend to continue to follow that kind of path to protect and advance Canadian interests.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the Prime Minister's statement of May 6, issued in Red Deer, Alberta, in speaking of the natural gas ruling he said:

> If confirmed and applied, this ruling will extend U.S. regulation into Canada and jeopardize from $140 to $400 million in Canadian export revenue.

If the matter is as serious as the Prime Minister admits, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why the Prime Minister is willing to wait even eight days or nine days to raise this matter personally with President Reagan.

If the Prime Minister and the Government are serious about this infringement of Canadian sovereignty and this damage to western Canada, and therefore to all Canada, surely the Prime Minister will get on the phone this afternoon to President Reagan. Why is he afraid to do that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no question, as the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition should know, about the seriousness of this matter not only for producers in western Canada but also the serious implications of the extraterritorial application of U.S. law in a way which affects Canada.

We take it with the utmost seriousness. That is why, rather than limiting ourselves to a phone call, the Prime Minister has made representations. I have had conversations as recently as two weeks ago. Those conversations did not have the result we sought.

The administration co-operated with us. The Secretary of State of the United States sought a delay before a quasi-judicial tribunal. He could not order it; he sought it. The quasi-judicial tribunal in the United States decided not to adhere to the request which was made, in effect on our behalf, by the United States State Department.

We will carry it forward now to personal meetings with all those officers. We have indicated that we are prepared to support the Canadian companies which are proceeding through the courts. We have indicated to the United States, immediately after the decision came down, our deep unhappiness about that decision.

Those are real actions which may bring about a change. They are not empty gestures, shaking one's fist at the wind.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It is obvious that what the Prime Minister did so far has been nothing but an empty gesture. This is why we are calling upon the Government to do something of substance.

REQUEST FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why the Prime Minister persists in waiting until the meeting in Venice where the whole agenda is on matters quite apart from this one and when President Reagan's attention will be on that broader agenda.

Why will he not take the opportunity now to speak personally to President Reagan to try to get some meaningful action? Furthermore, if the executive branch of the United States has some authority in this regard, why won't the Government send the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to meet personally with the U.S. Secretary for Energy? It is clear that this is not simply something for a regulatory tribunal. The Secretary of Energy has some direct authority.

Why won't the Government work directly with the Secretary of Energy to have him use that authority, as well as have the Prime Minister speak personally now with President Reagan? Why the delay? Why the willingness to let slide Canadian sovereignty and Canadian jobs?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the irony here is that this Government is receiving advice on dealings with the United States from a Government that failed to make any progress on acid rain whereas we have made progress, that failed to make any progress with regard to Arctic sovereignty whereas we have made progress, that failed to make progress on a range of other economic fronts where we have made progress.

The facts are very clear. There has been a decision taken by a quasi-judicial body in the United States, a decision very harmful to Canada, perhaps in a multitude of ways. We have made known immediately after that decision was rendered our great unhappiness with that decision. In addition to that, the Prime Minister has sought, and there will be a special meeting on the margins of the Venice meeting—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): On the margins?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Yes, on the margins. In other words, in Venice in the same place where the President is—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I presume in a gondola.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —in a direct face to face meeting between the Prime Minister and the President in which this issue will be raised again. Those are the ways that if progress is to be made, it is achieved. It is not achieved by the kind of sporadic inconsistent interest in Canadian sovereignty—

An Hon. Member: Hear the baby crying up there?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I guess the Member for Vancouver Quadra is in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: I won't say it, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The public was informed yesterday during a Senate hearing on the Dome take-over that at one time before the immediate crisis, Petro-Canada was involved in discussions about participating in a resolution of the Dome problem. I was given additional information this morning.

Would the Minister of Finance confirm that, prior to the immediate crisis, the Government had before it a proposal that would have resulted in a total Canadian solution to the Dome problem, that would have included Petro-Canada and with which the major Canadian banks involved would have been happy, and that this proposal, in fact, has been turned down by the Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. I can confirm that in a Senate committee hearing today the president of Amoco Canada did say that the company proposed to issue shares in Amoco Canada to the Canadian public to an amount that will not be less than the degree of Canadian ownership that is there in the case of Dome today. I think we are making some very real progress in achieving some of the objectives that both the Hon. Member and myself would support.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada may be bought off by a certain whitewashing operation, but I can tell you that people on this side of the House won't be taken in by that little manoeuvre.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be more specific and go to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he confirm that the former Minister of Energy took a proposal directly to the Prime Minister that included participation by Petro-Canada and Dome, that would have kept the banks involved happy, that would have left it totally Canadian owned, and that it was the Prime Minister directly himself, after considering the details of this proposal, who said no to it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The answer is still the same, Mr. Speaker. There was no proposal put forward that meets the criteria which the Hon. Member has set out. There were a number of things that were being discussed but there was no proposal.

ALLEGED PROPOSAL PLACED BEFORE PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Finance is choosing his words with care. Is he saying to the House that the Prime Minister did not have put before him a proposal endorsed by the former Minister of Energy that included—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The former Minister?

Mr. Broadbent: Pat Carney, former Minister of Energy—that included Petro-Canada, that would have been supported by the banks and the net result would have been total Canadian ownership of what is now Dome? Is the Minister saying that the Prime Minister did not consider such a proposal and that he did not turn it down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for the third time, there was no proposal.

Mr. Broadbent: Okay.

TAX REFORM—THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The House will recall that on two occasions, this Government blatantly misled senior citizens. We remember the de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions and the cuts in unemployment insurance benefits for older workers.

Today, we heard that the Minister intends to cut tax exemptions for senior citizens. This time, could the Minister make a commitment, and I mean a formal commitment, not like the previous ones, that none of the exemptions enjoyed today by senior citizens will be cut after the tax reform?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it important for the Hon. Member to exercise some patience. Three weeks from yesterday the tax reform White Paper will be tabled. I can assure the Member that we are very conscious of the position of senior citizens in tax reform, and a very major effort has been made to ensure that they are beneficiaries of tax reform on a bottom line basis.

INCOME TAX—THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as a result of this Government's two budgets, senior citizens who were not paying a cent of income tax will now have to pay federal income tax. Could the Minister give these people the assurance that their $2,600 exemption, plus the $1,000 deduction on pension income, will not be cut, because otherwise people who are already paying income tax will have to pay more? Could the Minister give senior citizens the assurance that they will not be penalized this time?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be a little more precise. I have said that a number of low-income Canadians will be off the tax rolls, will no longer be paying tax and a large number of those will be senior citizens.

Second, I have said clearly that we will be moving from a position of a system of exemptions to a system of credits, and the beneficiaries will be those with low and middle incomes, not people with high incomes. Again the major beneficiaries will be senior citizens.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, again on this Dome-Amoco matter. Yesterday the Bank of Montreal in a written brief told the committee: "Under Dome's insistence that the company shares be purchased, no Canadian can effectively compete with Amoco". We learned that Public Affairs International has been retained and is lobbying for Amoco, that senior executives—I will not mention some names—from Amoco have been involved with the Government, and the Energy Minister has been talking with the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Waddell: Why is it hands off the other Canadian bidders, including the proposal that my Leader mentioned a few minutes ago, and it is hands on dealing with the Americans and with Amoco? Why the double standard?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, it is clear the reason that we are dealing with Amoco is that Dome has chosen to deal with Amoco. That is the only deal in place.

Mr. Broadbent: Because you turned down an earlier one.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would ask the Hon. Member to prove that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Prove it, Ed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Then the Hon. Member said why is it hands off the Canadian issue or the Canadian purchaser. I think the Hon. Member would not want us to get into the middle of a legal dispute between two private sector organizations because obviously problems could be generated by that.

• (1140)

Let me draw the Hon. Member's attention to what Amoco said in an appearance before a committee of the other place. It is going to bring substantial benefits through substantial investment in the oil and gas industry, an increase over what has been the case for the past five years. Continued employment opportunities for Canadians. Increased activity for suppliers of goods and services to the Canadian oil and gas industry. Those are the small companies in the foothills of Alberta. Continuation and expansion of research and development.

Those are the benefits we are going to be looking very carefully at through Investment Canada to ensure the deal will be a good deal for Canadians.

AMOCO'S PROPOSED SALE OF SHARES TO CANADIANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Amoco has operated in the oil patch for numerous years. It is 100 per cent American-owned. Last year it sent $686 million in dividends to the U.S. and reinvested $107 million. Has the Minister ever seen such a conversion since Saul on the road to Damascus? This company has suddenly become Canadian.

Would the Minister not agree with me that selling shares to Canadians is simply window-dressing unless you sell the majority of shares? The control of Canada's energy future will rest in Chicago.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member is aware of it, but today Dome is owned by Americans to a far greater extent than Canadians. Opinions as to the precise figure vary, but it is somewhere between 25 per cent and 35 per cent Canadian-owned today. The statement the Hon. Member made is not correct.

I would also point out that Amoco's reinvestment level, before the NEP, was as good as any in the industry. It demonstrated over a period of 35 to 40 years, prior to the NEP, that it was prepared to invest significant amounts of money.

Mr. Waddell: They held us to ransom over the NEP.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would listen I think he will be pleased with the answer.

Those are the commitments we are going to be looking at through Investment Canada prior—prior—to approval of any deal.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Government is owned by the Americans, lock, stock, and energy barrel.

TAX REFORM

EFFECT ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and deals with the hypocrisy of the Government concerning senior citizens. We have heard about a potential tax on food and now we see a cut-back of senior citizens' tax benefits. The Minister asked us to be patient. Tom Winning, a former steelworker who has been on a disability pension for 14 years, is now paying income tax for the first time as a result of the Government's tax policies. Should he be patient and wait for another cut-back in his benefits from the Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member could be patient I think she will have her answer on June 18.

SITUATION OF FORMER STEELWORKER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I specifically asked the Minister about Tom Winning, a constituent of mine, a former steelworker who has been on disability pension for 14 years. He is a senior and is now paying taxes for the first time. Why should he wait for another double whammy, another hit in the face from a Government which has already been fraudulent as it relates to senior citizens?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is now on good terms with the Premier of the Province of Ontario. She should go to him and ask him why he has not passed on the increase in the disability pension this Government brought in.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Answer that!

Mr. McDermid: Don't shake your head, Sheila. You know it is true.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member is looking for someone who is hitting her constituent in the face she should go and speak to David Peterson.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY—PROFITS OF CRIMINAL ENTERPRISES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. Legislation that would permit the freezing, seizure and forfeiture of the profits of crime would have little effect unless mechanisms are in place whereby those profits can be traced. Does the Minister agree with a former Deputy Solicitor General who said any anti-laundering legislation that does not include a reporting requirement by financial institutions is bound to be ineffective?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange that the Hon. Member would raise a question about legislation which I hope to introduce at 12 noon. If the Hon. Member holds his question for about half an hour I will answer it for him then.

REPORTING OF PROFITS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is claimed that $9 billion in profits is generated by criminal enterprise. Leaving aside the tax losses, does the Minister not agree he is using a gun filled with blanks in this so-called fight against drugs if the Government is not willing to impose the same requirements upon its friends as it is on other sectors of society in this so-called anti-drug strategy?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the NDP, who have been against the drug strategy from the very beginning and are apparently not at all interested in this very serious problem, are now trying to get on board and pretend they are very much interested. We are bringing in the most progressive and hard-hitting legislation concerning the proceeds of crime in the history of this country. It is a very good piece of legislation and I hope he changes his mind and supports it.

HEALTH

MAMMARY IMPLANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to know what the Minister has decided to do about breast implants since out of thirty laboratory-tested prosthesis implants, seven are defective and a health hazard for women, at considerable cost to provincial health insurance plans.

What kind of action does the Minister of National Health and Welfare intend to take to correct this situation?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter and I am indebted to the Hon. Member for bringing it to the attention of myself and my Department over the last two years. With respect to prosthesis implants the Department has now re-examined this question. Over the summer we are going to be looking at new protocols. We are putting it on the Deputy Minister's agenda. It is proposed that steps be taken not only to examine the evidence brought to our attention by the Hon. Member and the medical community, but also put in place procedures whereby we can avoid the negative effects of these medical devices, especially for women.

IMMIGRATION

FRAUDULENT IMMIGRATION SCHEMES—REQUEST THAT CHARGES BE LAID

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Last summer, referring to the increasing number of unscrupulous immigration consultants, he said: "My Department will stop these counsellors and we are going to lay charges and we are going to make them stick."

A year has gone by and fraudulent immigration scams have mushroomed unchallenged here and abroad. Today yet another paper, The Toronto Sun, revealed another immigration ring which has left numerous families deserted and penniless after charging them over $6,000 for visas, jobs, and other documents.

Does the Minister not think the Government has dragged its feet long enough and it is time to stop this cancerous activity from spreading? To use his own words, when will these shady operators be stopped and charges laid?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have informed the Hon. Member several times in this House that the Department of Employment and Immigration has taken steps to have the people to whom he is referring investigated. I also said that reports on a matter as sensitive as this one, namely, investigations carried out by the RCMP, have been made to the Department of Justice. Again, I think that in the circumstances, we must be very careful, considering charges that may be laid. That is why we are not going to assess these cases on our own and start judging these people. I think that is the role of the Department of Justice. It is the Department's responsibility to bring such cases to court if necessary, depending on the charges to be laid at that time.

• (1150)

REPORT SUBMITTED BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. There are growing fears within the RCMP that their cases against these shady operators are crumbling because of inaction by the Minister's Department and witnesses are no longer coming forward because they have been frustrated over a period of 12 to 14 months.

Since the RCMP completed one report and submitted at least one report to the Minister's Department last June, why, over the course of 12 months, has not one single charge been laid as recommended by the RCMP? Why the procrastination? Will he assure this House that the Minister will order his Department to follow up immediately on the recommendations of the RCMP to lay charges under the Immigration Act so that this illegal and growing industry can be brought to an immediate halt?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first, I do not accept for a moment the premise of the Hon. Member's question. Second, it is a tradition in the responsibilities of the Minister of Justice not to comment on specific cases because such comments will in fact prejudice the administration of justice. I am sure the Hon. Member did not raise this question for the purpose of impeding the proper course of justice. I hope he will show some restraint in this regard.

Mr. Marchi: You're doing that well enough.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This type of allegation is totally irresponsible. I hope his Leader will have a talk with him and explain to him some of the basic principles of justice. The Department of Justice is working on these matters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—DISCOVERY OF HEADLESS BODY OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS' REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On May 2 in El Salvador the headless body of Antonio Hernandez, an officer of the National Association of Agricultural Workers of El Salvador, was found in the city dressed in guerrilla clothes. I was told two days later by the Human Rights Commission that he had been kidnapped on April 16 by armed forces, in front of witnesses, on his way to arrange for a loan for a peasant co-op.

Will the Minister lodge a strong protest with the President of El Salvador, Napoleon Duarte, against the military kidnapping and murder of Hernandez and many other labour leaders and co-op leaders this year, even after the state of siege ended in January along with its special police powers?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the details of the case which has been raised by the Hon. Member, but I am familiar with his record of interest in affairs in that region. I appreciate the intensity and seriousness of that interest.

I will look into those facts and if they are as he has described them I will certainly take appropriate action. In any event, I will keep him informed of what I learn and what we believe it is possible for the Government of Canada to do in the circumstances.

CANADIAN AID TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister very much for his undertaking. As the Minister knows, Canada provides $8 million of bilateral aid to the Government of El Salvador which, after certain transactions, is distributed to certain projects after they have received the approval of President Duarte's Government.

Will the Minister indicate to the President that Canada's decision to extend that aid was based on an expectation that the President would be willing and able to control human rights violations of this sort and that the continuation of the aid is conditional on progress in that matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want my response on this to be misunderstood. I will look into the facts and see what actions they justify.

The question of Canada's development assistance, not only to El Salvador but to other countries in Central America where there is conflict which causes controversy here, is a matter of some delicacy. I do not want to make any general comment that might make that delicate situation more difficult. However, I will certainly look into the information which the Member has provided and will take whatever action is appropriate.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ETHIOPIA—PLIGHT OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is also on the theme of human rights and official development aid, the subject on which the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has recently reported.

Canada provides development assistance to Ethiopia, a country with one of the worst human rights records in the world. In keeping with the report of our standing committee, what action can the Minister take to renew government efforts to gain justice for Ethiopia's thousands of political prisoners, many of whom have been held for years with neither a charge nor a trial?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has visited Ethiopia and kept himself very current with the situation in that country. He has raised questions of this kind with a consistency which I appreciate. We have raised human rights questions in Ethiopia and will continue to do that.

With regard to the committee report, it was tabled only yesterday. We have not yet had an opportunity to study it and its very important recommendations with regard to human rights. As is the practice of the Government, we will respond fully to that report by a committee of the House.

AIR TRANSPORT

TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR—LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is with regard to the takeover of Canadian Pacific Air by Pacific Western Airlines. It is now obvious that the Government did not know what it was doing when it approved the takeover. The Government was either innocently naive or grossly incompetent when it deemed that particular takeover to be in the best interests of Canada.

On March 25 the Government estimated that 3,000 jobs would be lost as a result of the takeover. On April 2 it said that few if any jobs would be lost. Today we learned from the president of the new airline that up to 1,900 jobs will be lost as a result of the takeover.

I will direct my question to the Minister responsible. Why did the Government approve the takeover when it knew, or ought to have known, that so many jobs would be lost? Is this what airline deregulation is all about?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as usual my friend opposite is entirely incorrect. The effect of deregulation, which was started by his Party, has, on an over-all basis, been an increase in the number of Canadians working in the airline industry. That will continue because there are now commuter services serving smaller centres.

It is true that in this particular merger there will perhaps be a loss of up to 1,900 jobs. However, most of those losses will be handled through attrition, the golden handshake, and reorganization. However, we should always remember that on an over-all basis there will be more people working in the airline industry as a result of deregulation than there were when the Liberals had everything tightly regulated.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, when I raised this issue in the House on April 14 I was told by the usually pompous Minister of Transport that there would be few if any jobs lost. Today, for the first time, the Government is admitting that up to 1,900 jobs will be lost as a result of this proposed takeover. It is obvious that the Government did not know what it was doing when it approved the takeover.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he explain why on one occasion the Government said 3,000 jobs would be lost, on another occasion it said that few if any jobs would be lost, and today we are told that 1,900 jobs will be lost? Explain the discrepancy. Explain the gross incompetence.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be more appropriate for the Hon. Member to explain to the House and to the people of Canada his irresponsibility in the way he has raised this issue. He, not the Government, said that 3,000 jobs would be lost. That was roundly condemned and criticized by the officials of the company.

Mr. Nunziata: It's a government memo.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps he may want to reconsider his questions in that context. Again, the Hon. Member is not only factually incorrect, he is acting irresponsibly, as is normal for him.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—ECONOMIC RECOVERY PLAN—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the economic recovery plan for northern Ontario. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that it has been eight months since the Solicitor General made the announcement and that on four separate occasions in this House the Deputy Prime Minister has promised this economic recovery plan. Since it is now three weeks since the last time the Deputy Prime Minister said the plan would be announced very soon, I would like him to give to this House and this country a commitment when that plan will be introduced?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, not only will an economic recovery program be announced for northern Ontario, but one will be announced for the Atlantic region and the western region in a very short period of time.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, for the fifth time of asking the question, that is a pretty poor answer from a man who brags his second name is "Frank".

POSSIBLE CONTENT OF PLAN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the unemployment insurance benefits are running out for the laid-off Griffith Mines workers at Ear Falls this very week. What can the people of northern Ontario expect by way of this plan when it is announced?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, they can expect and will get the kind of treatment that is unique to that region, and a recognition by a federal Government at long last that northern Ontario has problems, challenges, and opportunities which are unique to the region. If the Hon. Member is just a little more patient, I will be frank with him when the announcement is made.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES TRANS-BOUNDARY ACID RAIN EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, I am sure, will answer it in his usual non-partisan manner. It has to do with the fact that in January of this year the Minister of the Environment called upon the United States to reduce trans-boundary acid rain emissions by half by 1994. Last week, after Canadian and U.S. officials met in Washington, they indicated that the Government of Canada has become flexible, that it is not going to demand what the Minister of the Environment called for in January.

Why does the Government appear to give up its bargaining position at the very first meeting in Washington?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I try to provide non-partisan answers to non-partisan questions. Let me see if I can find a non-partisan element in that question. Perhaps the best way would be to indicate that at the most recent meeting, which was designed in part to try to make some progress towards formalizing the reference the President of the United States made here on the floor of the House of Commons to some kind of formal agreement, we think that some progress was made. We have learned not to celebrate that progress until it has been achieved. However, I think the House will recognize, in fairness, that there has been some modest movement forward on the part of the United States administration on this very serious question of acid rain. Certainly we believe it is important to continue that process rather than to walk away in frustration from the talks.

Mr. Caccia: I am so glad that the Secretary of State for External Affairs refrained from rounding off his final sentence and I appreciate the thoughtfulness of his answer.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure this House now that the Government of Canada will not waver in its position as expounded by the Minister of the Environment last November, namely, that it will not abandon the position of demanding from the U.S. a cut by half in trans-boundary acid rain emissions by 1994?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our position has been known. The firmness with which we pursued it has yielded more progress than that found by earlier Governments. We intend to continue to seek a reduction in trans-boundary emissions. We require not only constancy on the part of the Government, which will continue to be there, but support and constancy on the part of parliamentarians who have taken an active interest in this issue.

I have been informed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka, that the Parliamentary Committee on Acid Rain will be in Washington later in June. I think the Hon. Member will be part of that group. I certainly hope they can contribute in a constructive way in trying to achieve a reduction in trans-boundary emissions, which is the goal of this Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena on a short question, please.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF AIRLINE LICENCE—TREATMENT OF FRED TURNER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since the Minister of Transport has stated publicly that Fred Turner was treated unfairly, and since Cabinet has overruled the CTC and returned his airline licence, and since Cabinet is determined in principle to compensate with an out of court ex gratia payment, why has the Government chosen to finish Fred Turner off in the Federal Court when it has already stated publicly that he has been unfairly treated?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that issue has been handled by the Minister of Transport here in the House. Questions have been responded to and I have nothing further to add.

LAUNCHING OF LEGAL ACTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, nothing short of back alley justice is now being meted out to Fred Turner. Following a meeting Fred Turner and I had with the Prime Minister on May 15, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, who is here, met with Mr. Turner and suggested the figure of $40,000. When Fred did not agree, the Government chose to prosecute him in the Federal Court at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. I wonder if that is the kind of justice which will be the trade mark of this Government where, if someone does not agree to a settlement, it simply prosecutes them at a far higher cost in the Federal Court?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I met with Mr. Turner, but it was in the same light as all sorts of Members meeting Mr. Turner, to go through the issues, and try to see the question of liabilities—

Mr. Fulton: You suggested forty thousand bucks.

Mr. Thacker: But other figures were suggested as well. He suggested $2 million. Under our democratic system, if one is unable to come up with a "without prejudice" offer which both sides can accept in order to save the problems of a law suit, one resolves those problems in a law suit. Mr. Turner has revived the law suit and it will have to go its normal course.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre, one question, please.

ROLE OF CANADA IN RELATION TO NORWAY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with Canada's military role in NATO in Norway.

I want to ask the Minister, in the interests of the Norwegian Government and the representations which have been made, to reassure the House that the Government will not be recommending any reduction of our NATO role in relation to Norway, and that it will not be one of the options in the White Paper he will be presenting.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend should know, the White Paper will be produced a week today, and he will have to wait for it. One thing I can say, though, is that I am very much aware of the Liberal Party's policy, which was to pull half of our troops out of Europe. This Government, instead of reducing our commitments to Europe, has stepped up Canadian presence in Europe.

The petition is pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners ask that Parliament support Motion No. M-37, which will allow the unborn to be protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition concerning postal service which has been signed by most of the residents of Muenster, Saskatchewan, in my riding. The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to work towards instructing the Government as it highest priority to improve service for Canada Post Corporation and to abandon the policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural routes.

They are aware that the existing policy is almost exactly like the previous policy in that these rural post offices are still under threat of being closed when the postmaster retires.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions. The first is signed by Canadians from a number of places such as St. Hubert, Lachine, Beaconsfield and Montreal in Quebec, as well as citizens of Vancouver, Richmond and Coquitlam in British Columbia. They petition the House to ask the Government to withdraw Bill C-18 and to retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation policy and to retain licensing in order to restrict market-place activity to a positive level functioning in the best interests of the public as a whole.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by citizens of Ottawa, Nepean, Montreal, Laval and Val d'Or in which the petitioners show that Mr. Fred Turner, whose licence was cancelled which led to his bankruptcy, operated an airline in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. The petitioners pray and call upon the House to seek the assignment of an independent arbitrator to this matter to investigate the details of the case and to review and to negotiate the offer from the federal Government with Fred Turner in order to reach an equitable settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss.

SOVEREIGNTY—U.S. REGULATION—CANADIAN NATURAL GAS TRANSMISSION COSTS

Mr. Speaker: I advise the House that I have received from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) an application under Standing Order 29(1) to adjourn the House. I call upon the Hon. Member to make his representations to the Chair.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the confirmation of the ruling of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission concerning transmission costs of Canadian gas exported to the United States, a ruling that infringes upon Canadian sovereignty by extending U.S. regulation into Canada and that jeopardizes from $140 million to $400 million in Canadian export revenue.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has applied under Standing Order 29 for what is in effect an emergency debate on a matter which it is agreed on both sides of the House is serious. It is a matter which has not only taken up some time in the House, but may well do so again.

However, under the circumstances the Chair feels that it is not appropriate to move an emergency debate, at least at this time. It may be that the Hon. Member might want to bring this matter to the attention of the Chair and the House on another occasion.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, May 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-42, an Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on Bill C-42 in order to review the policy direction that the Government is proposing with respect to this Bill and to show how we arrived at this point. Since this is second reading debate such comments, I understand, are appropriate.

The proposal that we are dealing with here today comes in part out of the Estey report which came about because of the failure of two of our financial institutions, namely, the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank. During the same period of time, we saw a number of federal and provincial trust and loan institutions and some casualty insurance companies collapse. When the totals were added up, I believe that something like two banks collapsed in 1985; since 1980, nine trust and loan companies collapsed, and again since 1980, five property and casualty insurance companies collapsed.

All of this raised serious doubts about the ability of the regulatory package that had been in place since the collapse in 1923 of the Home Bank to handle the four pillars of our financial institutions. That collapse, along with the depression of the 1930s, resulted in a series of regulatory proposals that had the effect of establishing traditional areas of function for banks, trust companies, insurance companies and the securities industry. Each was complete in itself, and separate, and there was very little integration of the four pillars. Some people believe that a fifth pillar has been established by way of the co-operative credit institutions which have become a force in the financial services area.

The intention of the legislative and regulatory program was to establish, as a result of what occurred in the 1930s, such departments for regulation and supervision as the Department of Insurance, which looked after insurance companies, the Inspector General of Banks, responsible for regulating and monitoring the banks and the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, which provides guarantees to depositors of $60,000 per depositor. Out of that same set of changes came the Bank of Canada, to provide last-minute funding to keep banking institutions as viable as possible.

Over the years these regulatory commissions appear to have been doing their jobs. We had no problems until the 1980s, and then we were faced with this sudden and unexpected collapse of the two banks which precipitated the Estey Inquiry. At the same time, something like nine trust and loan companies and five casualty and property insurance companies collapsed. The question of whether or not our financial institutions were being properly monitored and regulated came into public view.

Internationally, there was a philosophical move toward complete deregulation of these kinds of institutions. We saw this happening in Great Britain under the Conservative Government of Margaret Thatcher, and we saw considerable deregulation under the similar-minded administration of President Reagan in the United States.

Perhaps as a result of this, there was beginning to be a tendency for those clear functions of the four or five pillars to blur together. Insurance programs were being introduced by some banking institutions, and mortgage and trust company functions were being carried out by all of the pillars. Some Canadians feared that the blurring and intermarriage of these companies was responsible in part for the difficulty the Inspector General of Banks and the Inspector of Insurance had in carrying out their regulatory and supervisory functions.

While the international philosophical move was away from regulation, this Bill, after the Estey report, appears to be trying to make a compromise between continued regulation or reregulation and lip service toward deregulation as well. The report submitted by Justice Estey in October of 1986 provided the basis for the White Paper which was produced on financial institution reform. I would like to very quickly go through some of the Government's proposals embodied in its twin aims of deregulation and reregulation. I will try to keep it brief as I know that our time is limited to 20 minutes.

The Government is proposing to allow the diversification and integration of financial services within the total industry so that consumers will be able to deposit and withdraw funds, buy stocks and bonds, arrange loans and mortgages and obtain investment advice and portfolio management, all within the walls of one branch of a financial institution. For instance, banks will be able to underwrite securities while trust and loan and insurance companies will enjoy full consumer and commercial lending privileges. To a certain extent, these kinds of services are beginning to be offered by some companies already, even though the regulations have not changed.

Having been a Member of Parliament only since 1980, I have observed that this seems to be the pattern with very large financial institutions. I recall that when the Bank Act came up for revision in 1980, we rescinded the Usury Act which would have limited interest rates lending institutions could charge. As a new Member, I was somewhat appalled and surprised that the actual rate of interest charged by most of the financial institutions had for some months exceeded the limit in the Usury Act and no charges had been laid and nothing was done. Instead, the Government chose to simply rescind the Act and change the law so that the practice would become legal.

To a certain extent, that kind of thing is now occurring as the clear distinctions between the functions of the four pillars has eroded. I fear that to some extent this Bill may be a reaction to the existing erosion. I only raise this fear because I think Members of Parliament, in their blind and simple way of looking at things, would hope that practices in Canada would conform to the law as long as the law is in effect. While I know society changes and politicians often respond after the changes have occurred, we should always be conscious of compliance with the law and we should provide ways to make certain that compliance.

I believe that was one of the difficulties that emerged with the two banks that collapsed. As I recall, it appeared that the Inspector General of Banks did not have sufficient resources and personnel to do the job of inspection and to provide the proper kinds of information required by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Minister responsible for these institutions, depending on how the Government decided to set things up.

Some of these shortcomings may in fact continue with this proposal, since a new office will be set up, that of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. I understand that it would combine, more or less, the Inspector General of Banks and the functions of the Superintendent of Insurance. This combined office would be given a new title, that of Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

The information we have at this point would indicate that the resources available to that office would not be much greater than the combined resources of the existing institutions. In fact, I am wondering whether the interests of consumers will be well served and whether the institution will be well monitored.

Given the now blurred functions of the various institutions, I suspect that it will be more difficult to track down the various combinations of responsibility, ownership, and commitment among various like-minded institutions which, at one time, were clearly separate and apart and therefore more easily monitored and regulated.

The principle of deposit insurance has been under some attack as a result of the bail-out of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank which went under in 1985. Several proposals have been put forward which would basically fall into two categories. The first proposition put forward is that uninsured depositors should be responsible for carrying the burden of a failure of an institution. The other extreme, I suppose, was to make certain that all deposits were fully insured and that over a certain level—and I assume it would be the $60,000 which was proposed as the maximum level of complete insurance—depositors would pay a higher share of deposit insurance so that almost full coverage of deposits would be possible if a bank or financial institution in fact failed. These kinds of propositions are floating around.

Bill C-42 seems to be fairly unambitious in its treatment of the problem. The Bill gives Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation a closer relationship with other regulatory officials and a procedure by which it can terminate deposit insurance coverage for recalcitrant institutions. In the case of this happening, a registered letter delivered to the institution's chief executive would be sent out detailing CDIC complaints. The institution's board must then convene and send a report to CDIC on its deliberations within a given time period.

If CDIC remains dissatisfied it can, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, terminate insurance coverage within 30 days of notice. The procedure will take some time, but there is enough time involved that it is very difficult to intervene quickly enough if there are some shenanigans ongoing within the corporation.

Bill C-42 also attempts to deal with the present debt of CDIC, which I understand is somewhere around $1.5 billion, by increasing the fees for deposit insurance. They will be set at $5,000 per institution, plus one-sixth of one percent of each deposit held by the institution. Most financial institutions have responded to the Government's proposal, including the top five chartered banks, by strongly objecting to this solution and citing the issue of uninsured deposit coverage. Apparently they are still attempting to negotiate the particular issue.

Since the time for my remarks is almost over, I should like to point out that it has been the position of the New Democratic Party that the problem of financial institutional solvency can be resolved only through a combination of clear and effective regulatory and supervisory controls for financial institutions in Canada, with strict domestic ownership limits which ensure that institutions will be widely held. This is one issue which has been debated at some length in financial and policy areas.

Upon entering this new era, some institutions will hold as much as 35 per cent of another institution, which normally would have been one of the other competing pillars of the financial institution under the old analysis.

A great many of us think that it should be limited to about 10 per cent per investor, so that there will be in effect a discouragement in respect of the controlling of some companies, even though only 35 per cent of the shares are held.

We would prefer that the 35 per cent be reduced to 10 per cent by law in order to make certain that financial, insurance, and trust company institutions in Canada are as widely held as possible, to avoid the kind of control and manipulation which appears to have occurred in some of the provincial scandals involving trust and loan companies with fast flips and that sort of thing. We would hope that these kinds of amendments could be made to the process, if not in this particular Bill, in companion Bills which deal more specifically with that particular aspect.

I conclude by saying that we will be watching the legislation closely and will be attempting to make appropriate amendments to bring about the kind of regulatory reform which we in the New Democratic Party believe would be in the best interests of Canadian users of financial insurance institutions.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-42 is an Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system. Because of the general importance of the subject, both to many Canadians as individual investors and to all Canadians who must be concerned about the possible dangers to our economy if mismanagement of large sums of money, it is quite important that something should be said on the matter, and I am glad of the opportunity to contribute to the debate.

The legislation before us appears to be fairly good, as far as it goes, but it appears that it does not go far enough. Of course the concern is with the conflict between the Government's interest in deregulating financial institutions and what even it recognizes as the failure, to date, of some of the regulatory activities, and perhaps some of the regulatory legislation. Therefore, the Government appears to be trying to steer a middle course and taking too cautious a line.

We had the very unfortunate collapse of two western banks a couple of years ago, apparently caused by unwise lending practices, unwise in the sense that they made bad loans because they thought they would get high interest, and their investors invested because of high interest. Then, when the banks collapsed, the investors demanded—and the Government agreed—that they be reimbursed even beyond what legislation at that time required in the form of loan insurance. That has given the Government a very difficult situation to deal with, and it does not seem to be able to think its way clearly to the end of the problem.

We had quite a spate of failures in the early 1980s in the loan and insurance company section of the business. There were two national bank failures in the mid 1980s. The Government has had to give attention to the matter of preventing further failures like those, since clearly people were in danger of losing their confidence in the banking system.

Canada has been lucky for over half a century in not having any serious troubles of that sort. The present legislation was mainly developed about 60 years ago after the collapse of the Home Bank in 1923, and further during the Great Depression. However, part of the principle adopted at that time is what is now being changed by the Government.

At that time there was an attempt to make sure that there was a spreading out of financial responsibility and power, a spreading out between lending institutions, deposit institutions, stocks and bonds institutions and insurance institutions. For the average person, some of those distinctions are hard to follow and to keep track of, especially as detailed regulations change. The principle was not to concentrate too much power in too few hands, which was what most people remembered as the results of the crash of 1929. Therefore, we have a system of controls, notably the Bank of Canada, the office of the Inspector General of Banks, the Department of Insurance, and the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation with which many people are familiar because the CDIC has been called upon to act during several of these failures of banks or credit enterprises.

The situation has been complicated more recently by international development, particularly of conglomerates that combine these functions in ways that perhaps were not foreseen by earlier laws and sometimes are difficult to control because of their bases outside of Canada.

Britain and the United States are moving in the direction of deregulation of their financial enterprises. From time to time we see reports, particularly from the United States, about how paper money is growing mightily without very much counterpart in actual production of goods and services which ordinary people produce and need. In other words, takeovers, buy-outs, refinancings and so on can increase the paper value of an enterprise immensely without actually any more cars, food or any other goods or services being produced for the people who ultimately must carry the cost if the financial system collapses. There is a great deal of anxiety in the United States and Britain about what could happen when things get whirling at a faster and faster pace in the financial world without corresponding development in actual production.

The bank failures of 1985 might have prompted this Government to take more firm action than it seems minded to take in connection with controlling the banks. In 1986 because of the troubles in 1985, some of the smaller banks fell to the pressure of the distrust of the public, the distrust of the investors who are not in a position to know the intimate details of banks, even to the extent that the Inspector of Banks or the Bank of Canada are, and who may have been uneasy about their deposits in certain middle-sized banks, perhaps without good reason. They just did not know.

In 1986 the Mercantile Bank was forced to merge with the National Bank. The Morguard Bank, which I know was engaged in the 1970s in financing low-income housing built by the City of Toronto, and I think was serving a useful function, was taken over by the Security Pacific Bank. There was a Continental Bank that merged with Lloyds Bank of London through its Canadian subsidiary. There was recently the Bank of British Columbia which had to go somewhere. A local powerful financially strong credit union bid to buy that bank, but this Government and the crypto Tory Government of British Columbia desperately headed that off and, with the commitment of $200 million of taxpayers' money managed to ensure that a Canadian based democratically structured credit union did not gain control of the Bank of British Columbia; a foreign bank, the Hongkong Bank got it.

There have been a good many acquisitions of this sort which have considerably altered the general profile of the financial structures of our country placing much more power in much fewer hands. People are uneasy still about the solvency and the safety of an enterprise which is so remote from the control of the investors and perhaps remote from the control of the Government which would have a responsibility and has the legislative power to take control.

When the western banks collapsed there was much discussion as to whether the controlling institutions, the Inspector of Banks and the Bank of Canada, had carried out their duties adequately or whether they were able to carry out their duties adequately. As these financial structures become more complicated, it becomes difficult to police them, as it were. When the managers make errors through excessive risk taking, through failing to match their assets and liabilities, through perhaps what is or may appear to be a conflict of interest, through self dealing, it is very difficult for the regulator agencies to keep up with, to keep watching all of them, or to keep doing enough inspections to keep track of these evolving institutions.

What happens then is that the officials who attempt to act decisively on behalf of the depositors, the policy holders, the creditors and other victims of the insolvency are hindered. They cannot act fast and surely enough to prevent the trouble such as we witnessed in the bank collapses.

What we really need is a new framework—The Government has admitted this in its paper at the end of 1986—for corporate Governments to guide this institutional behaviour. Particularly, there have to be firm rules for self dealing and conflict of interest situations. It appears that that is where this Bill is very weak. We understand it is part of a package, but we are asked to take it on faith without being told clearly what the rest of that package will be. As I said, as far as it goes, it appears perhaps adequate.

There will be some development of the supervision powers of the Inspector General of Banks, the Department of Insurance, the Canada Insurance Corporation and the Bank of Canada. They will be given certain legal rights of control which go beyond what they have now. They will include the right of temporary seizing of assets of a troubled institution so as to give officials time to look into things and to respond to the complaints that have been made specifically about an institution's operations. Officials will be able to study the situation and, if they remain unconvinced that the institution really is solvent and will continue to be solvent, they can hold hearings with the Minister of Finance and the institution can afterwards be restricted. In effect, it can be supervised by the superintendent and if the institution fails to respond satisfactorily, the superintendent can wind up the business of the company.

The problem, as I say, is that apparently there is not enough muscle or enough money for staff to carry out this kind of investigation. The pressure on this regulatory institution to either leave them alone or act quickly will be such that the regulators will probably err on the side of leaving them alone, perhaps for too long as they did in the case of the western banks.

On the question of deposit insurance, which was a matter of hot public and parliamentary debate in connection with the western banks, it should be said that this protection of the public's investments is a very important element of a democratic banking sector. If small investors cannot be protected they will naturally hesitate to invest. The investment pool will then shrink and be occupied almost exclusively by the very large investors whose interests are not the same as small investors. Therefore it is understood to be in the interest of the country to have an insurance system which spreads the risk, within limits, and protects the ability of the small investor along with others to share in the direction of the investment industry.

Unfortunately, confidence in the insurance system was weakened when the Government decided to reimburse uninsured investors in the western banks. They were being reimbursed up to $60,000 according to the law, but the Government decided to reimburse them beyond that. In other words, it rewarded those who had acted foolishly and out of greed, whether it be the officers of the banks in question who made loans they should not have made because they hoped for unusually high returns, or whether it be the investors in those banks who made their investments for the same reason, being lured by high interest rates without examining sufficiently the basis on which the bank was operating.

In fact, Canadian taxpayers are still $1.5 billion in the hole for that bail-out. The Government is penny-pinching on unemployment insurance, pensions, children's allowances, funding of post-secondary education, social housing, even when it admits that half a million units are needed, yet it threw $1.5 billion to the richest people, not to the poorest people. They were protected by the law. It was the richest of the investors who got that $1.5 billion.

The provisions for controlling or revising the deposit insurance system seem a little uncertain or timid or tentative. It is not clear that there will be any firm prevention of the same kind of bad decisions. The banks that operate, not only within the law but within good investment practices and did not have to be bailed out, are now having to pay an extra levy in order to cover the Government's bail-out of the foolish banks. I understand that many banks are objecting to that practice.

What is lacking is a serious attempt to address the question of, as it were, cross-ownership in which a bank, insurance company or trust company may own a significant part of an enterprise to which it is also lending money. The NDP has for years advocated doing two things to provide reasonable insurance so that these financial enterprises can operate in reasonable safety. First, there has to be a combination of clear and effective regulations and supervision of the financial system. There is some movement in that direction in this Bill. Second, there has to be a restriction on this kind of cross-ownership, crossing over the lines of different sections of commercial and financial enterprises. There has to be restriction on ownership well below the present 35 per cent. We have advocated the figure of 10 per cent. Without some restriction on that ownership and without a considerable increase in the funding of the regulatory institutions, which the Government has not offered and does not offer in this Bill, there is no serious and convincing control over the kind of crashes we have already seen and fear. Therefore I believe this Bill is not really fit to receive approval in principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his contribution to the debate on C-42. I would expect such contribution, in view of the fact that many of his constituents work in the financial industry on Bay Street in downtown Toronto and live very close thereto in the riding of Spadina.

I want to briefly raise a point which is perhaps not in line with what he was saying, but I think still worth noting. Does he believe this legislation adequately addresses the need for the Government of Canada to have some regard for how consumers are treated by their financial institutions? Do his constituents feel content with the services they receive from the banking industry? If they have problems, do they feel they have adequate powers of redress? Does the individual consumer, the small merchant, have a means by which he or she can get reasonable treatment in dealing with these multibillion dollar institutions? If not, would he welcome changes to ensure that the legislation does not just address financial stability but also the needs of the consumer?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. In fact, Spadina has a great variety of enterprises, large and small. The most frequent problem I have heard from the people who guide those enterprises is their difficulty in getting funding from the banks. Sometimes federal institutions have helped them but very often they simply have not been able to get the help they need from the banks. I have known of a number who were closed through lack of that support from the banking system. It appears that even when their credit is acceptable they are told there just is no money, it has gone to someone else. I think there should be a change in the system in the way the Hon. Member has described.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have eight minutes left in questions and comments when we return at two o'clock.

It being 1 p.m. I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock there were eight minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my friend from Spadina mentioned that small enterprises in his constituency have had a number of difficulties. I know of a restaurant in his riding, the proprietor of which was in constant battle with the bank branch in the area. The bank branch in turn could not get authority to make reasonable arrangements with the restaurant proprietor. They required an extraordinary amount of security including a mortgage on the home of the owner. Basically everything he owned was committed to maintaining this enterprise which was probably creating 10 or 15 jobs for people in the constituency of Spadina. This kind of story is repeated again and again.

How can this House of Commons make legislation which ensures that banks are stable for the Conrad Blacks, the Reichmanns and the Bronfmans of this world, are able to make substantial loans, some of which have turned out to be bad, to enterprises or governments, as a result of which enormous losses will be incurred and subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer, while ordinary citizens, farmers, consumers and small business people get pushed against the wall? What is fair about that? Why do we in the House of Commons, in studying the health and effectiveness of the banking system, which in some ways is very effective, not have as much concern for the needs of the little people, the consumers and farmers and so on, as we have for the stability of free enterprise? What use is there in having stable enterprises if they do not also provide effective service to the mass of Canadian citizens?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. The list of complaints which I have heard over the years from the people of Spadina against banks is long. We all remember the summer of 1981 when interest rates on mortgages went as high as 24 per cent. That could happen again. We do not know whether it will but the homeowners in Spadina who were not wiped out by those interest rates when they had to refinance their mortgages have no way of protecting themselves against that kind of behaviour by the banks. There is deep bitterness and distrust felt by many people, regardless of their formal Party affiliation.

As I mentioned before, I have heard of a number of businesses which failed; and enterprises which were trying to develop but were not seriously considered in terms of assistance simply because they were small. Since there is almost as much paperwork to be done to make a small loan as there is to make a large loan, banks would prefer to make large loans. Small business people, would-be entrepreneurs, young people with education and ideas about modern technology, people skilled in computer work and so on, would like to try out their ideas and start their enterprises, but find a great lack of sympathy at the huge central bank offices at the bottom of Spadina. They find an equal lack of sympathy at the branches on every corner.

There must be a greater sense of public accountability by the banks. It is good for the banks to be regulated so that they are not likely to fail and cause collapse. I would point out that when the Government subsidized; that is, bailed out the western banks with taxpayer's money, most of that money came from people who had not invested in those banks and probably did not have enough money to invest in those banks. In other words, the poor were subsidizing the rich. That sort of behaviour ought to be stopped.

The Government is directly responsible for part of that problem and could restrict it if it chose to do so by simply barring itself from that kind of bail-out of foolish and essentially wealthier than average investors. Both in their contribution as taxpayers and in their difficulty in getting the loans they need, many people of Spadina, of all political persuasions, are deeply distrustful of the banking institutions as they stand now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

MEASURE TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-56, an Act to amend certain Acts relating to financial institutions, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain that there has been an agreement between all Parties that there will be one speaker from each Party on this Bill, and at the conclusion it will be put to a vote on second reading. Immediately following the referral to committee of Bill C-56, the House will proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business scheduled for today for debate during Private Members' Hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to move the second reading of Bill C-56, a measure which will bring important and necessary changes to federal legislation governing financial institutions. This Bill is, as we know, the second of three elements designed to strengthen the system of regulation of financial institutions and to implement the policy proposals which were announced on December 18.

The first element was introduced as Bill C-42, which was just referred to committee, and this Bill is the second.

[Translation]

The Bill regroups and amends two Bills that were tabled on October 6, 1986, and contains an important new provision that will allow federally regulated institutions to own brokerage firms.

[English]

All the measures introduced in the earlier Bills are included in this Bill. These include the power to review transfers and ownership of financial institutions, the power to issue cease and desist orders to institutions engaging in unsound or unsafe business practices, the very important power to revalue real estate assets and authority to strengthen the financial standards of insurance companies.

These measures, important as they are, have been in the public domain for several months. Bill C-9 was released in the form of draft legislation and comments which were received were reflected in the final Bill. The consultations indicated that there is wide-spread support for these measure. Bill C-8 also received wide-spread support from the insurance industry.

Major provisions in the Bill are as follows. First, with respect to transfers in ownership, the Bill would require that approval be obtained from the Minister of Finance when a company or individual wishes to acquire, directly or indirectly, an ownership position in a federally regulated trust, loan or insurance company that exceeds 10 per cent. That is a very important provision. The Bill provides for a process which must be followed by the Minister and the applicant when a transfer in ownership is contemplated and gives the Governor in Council the authority to prescribe the type of information which the prospective purchaser must file with the regulator in seeking approval.

By setting out a formal approval process for transfers in ownership, the Bill provides the basis for the implementation of the policy presented in the December 18 statement and, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the policy, in particular, was to arrest the formation of, or the increase in financial-commercial links. The latter would include any increases in ownership of financial institutions already held by commercially linked institutions or holding companies. Legislation to implement the remainder of the ownership rules, including the requirement that 35 per cent of the shares of commercially linked companies or large financial institutions be widely held and publicly traded, is expected this summer.

The second part of the Bill is very important, and that is in regard to cease and desist orders. The Bill would give the federal regulator the power to issue cease and desist orders to institutions engaging or planning to engage in any activity that is considered to be an unsafe or unsound business practice. In our discussion with respect to Bill C-42, expressions of concern, invoked by memories of the collapse of the two banks a few years ago, gives rise once again to the importance of having this power.

In the past, regulators have indicated that even when they were aware that unsafe or unsound business practices were being followed they frequently lacked the legislative authority to order the institution to cease the questionable practices. It was of great concern. They were watching this go on but there was no legislative authority to bring about the cessation of it. The cease and desist powers in this Bill are broad ranging and will respond to the need for both timely and effective intervention by the regulator.

The third part of the Bill is with respect to real estate valuation power. All of us who have seen how real estate values have changed during the 1980s will know this is important. No one who looks at the reform of financial institutions should overlook how they are often intricately related to real estate because it is such an important part of the assets of financial institutions.

The Bill would give the superintendent the power to prescribe values for real estate or assets secured by real estate held by federally incorporated trust, loan and insurance companies. Past experience has indicated that these companies can encounter serious problems from unrealistic real estate asset valuations. The valuation power will be an important measure in maintaining the public's confidence in our financial institutions.

The next major part of this legislation is to strengthen financial standards for insurance companies.

[Translation]

The Bill will substantially increase the financial standards that insurance companies must meet and will introduce further measures to strengthen the industry.

[English]

For life insurance companies, the Bill would authorize the setting of minimum continuing capital and surplus margins by regulation or by written ministerial directive. The proposed provision follows the precedent in the Bank Act in this regard. The provision would, for the first time, make life insurers subject to statutory minimum capital and surplus margins on an ongoing basis. Other financial institutions are already subject to legislative provisions in this area. I think the House knows that minimum capital requirements are crucial for trust companies and banks since that is the number on which all this leverage is based. Since we are allowing insurance companies to move into these new areas of power we had to put this capital provision in place, something which is at the very heart of a financial institution.

For property and casualty insurers the Bill provides for an increase in the minimum continuing capital, or solvency, requirements. Our major influence as the federal Government in the field of property and casualty insurance is really in the area of solvency. That is the reason people look to us, to make judgments on solvency.

Also, property and casualty insurance companies would be required to submit actuarial reports with their annual statements. These reports must contain a professional opinion with regard to the adequacy of reserves established to provide for future claims under policies in force and to cover the costs of claims that have occurred but are not yet paid. This provision would adopt a practice long used with considerable success in connection with life insurers. The new requirement will assist the superintendent in judging the true financial position of each company.

In addition to these specific proposals, the Bill would establish new rules to govern the use of reinsurance by federally-regulated insurance companies. The proposed rules, to be set by regulation, would require companies to retain a minimum portion of the business that they write. This will ensure that companies have an incentive to write good business and are not merely in existence to make money on reinsurance commissions.

Limits would also be set on the extent to which companies may reinsure business with companies that are not federally regulated, given that in the past difficulties have arisen from the inability or unwillingness of reinsurers to pay claims. Reinsurance effected with associated companies would be permitted only with the prior approval of the Superintendent. These are new and important provisions about reinsurance in this Bill. The approval of the superintendent is crucial throughout the process.

[Translation]

Other provisions in Bill C-56 which are concerned more specifically with the insurance sector include the authority to demand that an insurance company provide preliminary financial statements, setting margins of assets over liabilities for small companies, provisions relating to wind-up charges and to the priority of policy holder claims when an insurance company goes bankrupt.

[English]

The next section with which I wish to deal involves securities subsidiaries which has been at the heart of the business pages and which has generated the interest of financial markets over the past two years. An important new provision in this Bill relative to its precursors is the provision to permit domestically owned, federally-regulated financial institutions to own securities dealer subsidiaries. Schedule B banks and other non-resident controlled federally-regulated financial institutions would also, with prior approval, be permitted to own a securities dealer.

In providing approval for the purchase by a non-resident of an existing dealer I remind the House that the Minister would impose the condition noted in the December 18 policy statement, that not more than 50 per cent of a securities dealer could be bought prior to June 30, 1988. In the case where a new subsidiary is started the Minister would impose the condition that the subsidiary be limited to engaging in activities which its parent is permitted to do in-house. Also, where a non-resident owned institution has a Schedule B bank in Canada and wishes to purchase or establish a securities dealer, it will be required to do so through its Schedule B bank, and not independently.

In view of the conflict of interest problems which could arise with the prospect of financial institutions owning securities dealers an amendment will be proposed to Bill C-42 to ensure adequate authority for the new Superintendent of Financial Institutions to regulate the in-house securities activities of banks. This will be in addition to the measures which will be put forward in the third element of the legislative package and which were covered in the December 18 policy statement, including the creation of what are commonly known in the financial sector as "Chinese walls", greater disclosure to the consumer, and enhanced internal scrutiny through creation of a monitoring group within each institution.

The power for federal institutions to own securities dealers, as well as the constraints on the initial participation by non-resident owned institutions, are being introduced this afternoon to ensure a strong and viable Canadian presence in the strategic securities industry as it is increasingly opened to international competition. We recognize that they must be part of the international market, but we want to give them an important head start.

The final provision in the Bill about which I want to speak deals with mutual insurance companies.

[Translation]

Finally, another new measure is contained in a provision aimed at clarifying the residency status of mutual insurance companies. The Bill will consider as Canadian companies those mutual insurance companies whose head office and chief place of business are located in Canada, provided three-quarters or more of the board of directors and its committees are Canadian citizens ordinarily residing in Canada.

[English]

In conclusion, I think it is clear to the House that this legislation is an important aspect of a broad, ongoing effort to bring about reform of the supervisory and regulatory framework for financial institutions in Canada. Most of the provisions have been in the public domain for several months, play a key role in strengthening supervisory powers and, if I may reiterate, were very well received by the public. By providing for more effective regulation this Bill will maintain confidence in financial institutions, an essential ingredient in maintaining a healthy financial system. As well, the Bill will allow securities markets to benefit from the provisions for ownership of securities dealers by federally-regulated institutions.

Therefore I am pleased that the House will give this matter its attention this afternoon as well as possible speedy passage into committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see Bill C-56 finally appear before the House. As with Bill C-42, on which I spoke earlier this month, I welcome its appearance in the House as evidence that the Government is finally beginning to move through its agenda for the reform of the financial services industry in Canada. Bill C-56 is the second of three Bills whose passage will complete the reform process which was begun by the previous Government and carried forward somewhat fitfully by the present one.

Bill C-56 was introduced on May 7. If the fact that we are starting second reading today looks remarkably and unusually speedy, I remind Hon. Members that parts of the Bill have been around in one form or another for over a year and a half. Other parts of the Bill are subject to a deadline of June 30 of this year, a deadline imposed by the need for uniformity with legislation brought forward by the Ontario Government last year when the federal Government's reform process seemed hopelessly bogged down.

The Bill is a mix of older and more recent proposals. It contains proposals that would allow federally-regulated financial institutions to own securities dealerships.

As Hon. Members know, the securities industry is provincially regulated. Obviously, it is this portion of the Bill that is meant to complement the earlier initiatives of the Ontario Government which set the effective date of June 30, 1987. However, a good part of the Bill pre-dates the White Paper issued by the Government last December. The Ontario Government's proposals to open up its securities industry were released in June, more or less obliging the Government of Canada to fall into step.

A number of the Bill's other proposals, for example the strengthening of the powers of the federal supervisory authorities and the ministerial review process for transfer of ownership, have been around for some time. On September 9, 1985, nine days after the Canadian Commercial Bank closed its doors, the then Minister of State for Finance appeared before the Finance Committee and described measures which are included in the Bill before us today. She referred to the urgent need to improve the capacity of the Government and the supervisory agencies to deal with problems in financial institutions. She described as urgent the measures she was proposing and said that they were measures on which immediate action would seem appropriate. That was in September of 1985.

Let me describe the history of those urgent measures. In November, 1985, they were released as draft legislation. In April, 1986, they were tabled as Bill C-103 respecting banks, trust and loan companies. In June, 1986, parallel measures were introduced for insurance companies in Bill C-123. These Bills were never called for debate and died on the Order Paper. In October, 1986, the measures were reintroduced as Bills C-8 and C-9. Now they have been amalgamated and lumped in with the securities proposals to form Bill C-56.

It is clear from this brief chronology that the Government is taking a bit of a liberty in including this Bill as part of its reform program. If the Government had acted with all the urgency described by the former Minister of State for Finance at the Finance Committee meeting in September of 1985, we would have had legislation in place that might have made some difference in events that later occurred in the financial services industry. At the very least, the Government might have been just a little less prone to being overtaken by events.

This Bill in fact is a collection of proposals in response to particular situations. It is in response to the bank failures, in response to the takeover of Canada Trust by a non-financial corporation, and in response to the legislative initiative of a provincial Government. This Bill did not spring from the White Paper issued in December, 1986. As I have said, it is all older than that. It is reactive rather than proactive.

This is not to say that we do not consider the Bill worthy of support. There are proposals that the Official Opposition is pleased to support since they confer what we consider necessary and desirable powers on federal regulators. This Bill would give regulators the ability to take early action against unsafe or unsound business practices by issuing cease and desist orders. Second, the Bill proposes an expansion in the regulators' powers to set and to write down the value of real estate assets held by federally-regulated financial institutions.

The power to have an independent valuation of real estate has been proven to be important because a high proportion of the assets held by financial institutions, particularly trust and loan companies, consist of real estate and mortgage loans secured by real estate. The valuation of real estate is not always a straightforward matter and inaccurate valuations can materially affect a financial institution.

The Canadian Commercial Bank is a case in point. In the course of our hearings, the Finance Committee found that one of the factors contributing to that bank's eventual insolvency was its practice of over-valuing its loan and real estate assets. So it is appropriate for the Government to address the matter in legislation, even though we are somewhat past the point when it might have been called timely.

Another proposal in the Bill to which I alluded earlier would give the Minister the power to review and either block or give written approval to share transactions that would result in any one person or associated group acquiring more than 10 per cent of the voting shares of a financial institution. The Bill proposes that the ministerial review be based on the following criteria: first, the financial resources of the prospective purchaser; second, the purchaser's plans for the institution's future; third, the purchaser's experience and business record; and fourth, the best interests of the financial system in Canada.

It is the last criterion that concerns me. The language is unbelievably vague and imprecise. What are the best interests of the Canadian financial system? How are they to be defined and interpreted? It seems to me that the criterion of best interests as we see it in the Bill brings the matter down to a political decision in the hands of the Minister of the day. I am not satisfied to see a matter as important as the ownership of financial institutions left entirely to the discretion of any Minister.

We have heard from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) that the policy on ownership would be part of the final segment of the reform legislation. We have been told to expect a draft Bill, not a Bill, before summer. Who can say when we will have an ownership policy in place? In the meantime, we have only this Bill which says that in certain circumstances there will be a review but that the final decision will be the Minister's.

At this point I am not prepared to approve such an open-ended provision. Once this Bill is in committee, I will want to have much more information about how this provision is to be applied. In fact, my own view is that some clear criteria must be written into the legislation. I certainly would not be happy with, and I do not know of anyone else who would be, a provision that seems to say that the Minister of the day determines what constitutes the best interests of our financial system and lets the Minister have sole responsibility for deciding which large-scale transfers of control or ownership should go ahead and which should be blocked.

I turn now to the other set of proposals in Bill C-56, proposals which would permit the entry of federally-regulated financial institutions into the securities industry. As I said earlier, the Ontario Government came forward with its proposals nearly a year ago. In December, 1986, there was agreement with respect to the timetable and the effective date of June 30, 1987. However, the introduction of the legislation before us today was delayed by a protracted dispute over what securities-related activities would fall under the jurisdiction of federal and of provincial regulators respectively. It was not until the end of April that an agreement was finally reached.

The June 30 deadline is still intact. This means that again there is pressure on us to make quick work of this Bill in the House and in committee. There would not have been this pressure had the Government moved earlier and had the Government negotiated better.

The Bill before us today proposes to allow domestically owned financial institutions to own subsidiaries dealing in securities. Foreign banks and other foreign institutions would also be allowed to own securities dealers, subject to the approval of the Minister. Also, foreign owned institutions would be restricted to 50 per cent ownership until June 30, 1988, at which point they would be allowed 100 per cent ownership.

According to the agreement reached by the federal Government and the Ontario Government, the federal regulatory authority, that is the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, will regulate the securities related activities which are carried on directly or in-house by federally regulated financial institutions. The provincial regulator, that is the Ontario Securities Commission, will regulate all the activities of securities subsidiaries bought or established by federally regulated financial institutions.

It is clear in looking at the agreement that the parties to it were very much concerned about getting the show on the road by June 30, and that the agreement represents the very minimum of what they could find to agree upon. The accord is based very much in the here and now. It says basically that federal institutions can keep on doing in-house whatever securities activities they are doing now; anything on top of that will happen through a subsidiary which will be provincially regulated. Maybe, in the interest of short-term expediency, that is all that is needed, but surely for the long-term a more comprehensive agreement will be needed.

The agreement announced on April 27 is a bare bones affair which does not envision any change, and surely change is the one thing on which we can count as we move to a more integrated financial system in Canada.

Another concern about the agreement is that it was signed with Ontario only, with the hope that it would serve as a model for the other provinces. This is an assumption that some provinces, Alberta and Quebec in particular, are objecting to, and understandably so. After all, none of the other provinces was consulted when the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario were negotiating. Surely the matter warrants a federal-provincial meeting and the establishment of some sort of permanent mechanism to ensure uniformity in the implementation and regulation of these new proposals which represent significant change for the financial services industry in Canada.

We are told, according to the Bill, that foreign owned institutions wishing to enter the Canadian securities market will need the Minister's approval, but the Bill before us today does not include any criteria on which this ministerial approval would be based. Surely the Government has some criteria. However, why are they not in the Bill?

Something the federal Government should surely look for from foreign institutions wanting to enter our market is reciprocity. If foreign owned institutions are coming to compete in the Canadian market, we should be looking for equal time for our institutions on their home turf. Different countries have different financial systems, so this would have to be negotiated on a case-by-case basis. However, the principle of reciprocity should be there, and the Government should insist on it if it cares for the interests of Canadians.

I also question why the Government has chosen to allow complete foreign ownership of Canadian securities dealers when the trade negotiations with the U.S. are still ongoing. Free trade in financial services is a key part of the negotiations. Why is the Government giving up this bargaining chip now?

This was an issue that Liberal members of the Finance committee raised in our minority report in November, 1985. The committee had recommended a level playing field for domestic and foreign owned institutions in Canada; in other words, a situation of unnegotiated free trade, freely conceded. The other Liberal members on the committee and myself opposed that recommendation, saying at the time that our recommendation was to forestall changes in foreign ownership requirements until the free trade negotiating strategy had been developed and the costs and benefits of the proposals had been established. I think our recommendation is still valid today.

I should also like, before the Bill is passed, some assurance from the Government that in implementing its new system it is mindful of the possible consequences on the concentration of economic power in Canada. Concentration of assets in the financial sector is higher than in many other sectors of our economy. The Government's goal of greater integration of services can lead both to greater competitiveness and to greater concentration. It is very important to ensure that an appropriate balance is struck.

Greater integration also brings with it greater potential for abuse and conflict of interest, and thus a greater need for consistent and vigilant regulation. Bill C-56 contains a few measures in this direction, but the frustrating part is that the bulk of the new policy will be in the legislation we have yet to see.

Again I must say that I have some difficulty in assessing what is before us today when it is only a portion of the total picture. This is a criticism which I made when I spoke on Bill C-42 earlier this month. In Bill C-56 we see some proposals for transfer of ownership of financial institutions, but the over-all ownership policy is not available to us yet in specific terms. I do not see why the Government could not have got its act together and presented us with a complete package at the outset.

Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 are welcome and useful preliminaries. However, let us be frank. The main event is yet to come and all we are hearing from the Minister with these curtain raisers is a vague promise of draft legislation.

We in the Liberal Party are willing to proceed. We are interested in getting these Bills to committee where we can explore them thoroughly and where we will have some amendments to move. However, I would certainly prefer to do so in a comprehensive fashion rather than in the piecemeal approach the Government seems to favour. I look forward to an early introduction of the remainder of the Government's proposals.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect Bill C-56 to come forward today, but I am happy to speak on it. Of course we have already begun study of the Bill in the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

I realize that part of the problem with the legislation is that it is really complex. Everybody's eyes tend to glaze over, I suspect even the Minister occasionally would prefer to be watching the Stanley Cup final between the Flyers and the Oilers than to be worrying about this particular matter. He nods his head. When he writes his epitaph, hopefully some years from now—and I do not mean his political epitaph; I mean his personal epitaph—he will not put on his gravestone, "I crafted a reform of financial institutions legislation". It will be a footnote to a footnote in his biography.

Let me try to put some flesh and blood on what we are talking about in this particular Bill. We are not just talking about new rules in respect of ownership of securities firms by insurance companies and other institutions. We are not talking only about a new formula for regulation or for oversight. We are talking about a related series of Bills, Bill C-42, which we have seen, and Bill C-56, which is before us now.

The third portion—when the third shoe will drop, so to speak, which we have not yet seen and about which the Government has only given us a glimpse of its intentions—is designed to put in place a pattern or a framework of both deregulation and reregulation for Canada's financial services and banking industry. This presumably will be in force for the next 10 or 15 years. In other words, for the period from now to the turn of the century, we in this House are being asked to make decisions about major elements in the financial operations of the country.

Why is that important, Mr. Speaker? It is important because finance, the movement of money, the access to capital, the ability to gain access to the financial payments system and so on, is the lifeblood of the economy, and because in this society, as in other western capitalized democracies, the access to political power is very closely related to access to economic power.

What we are talking about in this related series of Bills—I will talk about Bill C-56—in a somewhat broad context is the degree to which the Government of Canada will come to grips with the concentration of economic power that we have in Canada.

As I said in the debate on Bill C-42, and I repeat it now, the major weakness in what the Government is proposing is that it has not been prepared to come to grips with the excessive concentration of economic power in financial institutions and in large holding companies in Canada, and with the fact that that concentration is on the increase rather than on the decrease. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) frowns. He looks a bit troubled about that.

Let me read him some figures. People think that at least the major financial institutions in Canada are the chartered banks. The chartered banks of Canada are widely held. Perhaps it would surprise Hon. Members to know that the smallest of the big five financial banks—the Bank of Nova Scotia—is the eighth largest financial institution in Canada in terms of Canadian assets that it controls.

At the head of the Bank of Nova Scotia you have Power Financial Corporation, a corporation controlled by Paul Desmarais which has Canadian assets larger than those of the Bank of Nova Scotia. You have the Desjardines Group, a co-operative group, mainly centred in Quebec, based on the Caisse Populaire movement and larger than the Bank of Nova Scotia; more power to them. You have Genstar Financial Corporation, much larger than the Bank of Nova Scotia and larger than the Toronto-Dominion as well, controlled by Imasco, which if I recall correctly is in the end a British controlled conglomerate which owns 100 per cent or thereabouts of Genstar. You have Trilon Financial Corporation controlled by the Bronfmans with assets larger than either the TD Bank or the Bank of Nova Scotia. Just above them the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the Royal Bank of Canada.

Therefore, two of those top eight financial institutions are controlled by one or two institutions. As Diane Francis has pointed out in her excellent book on financial concentration called Controlling Interest, there is an enormous concentration of financial power in the hands of a very small number of groups. In fact, something like one-fifth of the assets of the companies on the Toronto Stock Exchange are in the hands of just a mere handful of tycoons.

I did not mention E-L Financial Corporation whose assets are just a bit below the Bank of Nova Scotia, controlled by a Toronto financier, Hal Jackman, someone also known as a prominent Tory, albeit an unsuccessful one when he has tried to run.

I am also trying to put some flesh and blood in this. We should look at the financial record of the past few years in order to see the ineffectiveness of the regulatory system which the Government is seeking to reinforce by means of the various Bills we have before us. Half of the chartered banks in Canada have gone bust or have had to find new proprietors in the last two or three years since the Government came to power; that is one half of the schedule A banks, which is pretty bad. A whole succession of trust and insurance companies have also had very serious difficulties.

If you look at the list—I have it here—of institutions which have had particularly severe problems, Mr. Speaker, you will find a very sad and sorry tale of institutions which are now defunct, just about defunct, or have had to go on the crippled list. The list begins with the Home Bank in 1923, and jumps to 1985 with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, not to speak of the Morguard Bank, the Bank of British Columbia and the other two banks which have had to come under new ownership. Beginning in 1980 you have Astra Trust, Fidelity Trust, AMIC Mortgage Investment Corporation, Greymac and Seaway in 1983, Northguard Mortgage Corporation in 1984, Pioneer Trust, Western Capital Trust and Continental Trust all in 1985.

Since 1976 we have seen the failures of the following federally regulated insurance companies: Underwriters National, American Reserve Insurance, Pitts Insurance, Strathcona General Insurance, Cardinal Insurance, Ideal Mutual Insurance and in 1985 Northumberland General Insurance Company.

What I am trying to do before coming to grips with the details of the legislation is just to remind the House and remind those dedicated readers of Hansard who will look at this debate that we are talking about real companies and real institutions which have had trouble. We are talking about real failures of the regulatory system and we are talking about concentration of ownership in the financial sector and about a Government which chooses to try to pep up the regulatory system by establishing a Superintendent of Financial Institutions but is not prepared to take any effective action to do anything about ownership.

I want to give a bit of credit to the Minister of State for Finance. He was a brave man, but his loyalty to the Cabinet is stronger than his ability or his determination to do something about the concentration of ownership. On December 4, 1986, the Minister of State took his proposals about ownership of trust companies before the Economic and Regional Development Committee of Cabinet. I cannot vouch for this because obviously I was not there. I did not have the privilege of being a fly on the wall. I hope to be in Government very soon. My Party is working at it very successfully.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: That, of course, is an aside. One or two Hon. Members shout, but I would retort to them that if they looked at the opinion polls they would find that the Progressive Conservative Party is shortly to have the fate it predicted for the New Democratic Party for so many years. The PC Party is down to 22 per cent in popularity and sliding very fast.

Mr. McDermid: You will eat those words.

Mr. Cassidy: I think it is noteworthy that we are having a lively debate on a subject as dry as this one, but one of the reasons is precisely that Canadian people perceive that the Government in power now pays a lot more attention to the rich and the powerful individuals and interests in Canada than it does to the needs of ordinary Canadians.

Let us look at the sad fate of the Minister of State for Finance. On December 4, 1986, Diane Francis, who is very knowledgeable in this area, writing in The Toronto Star said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: —that he took a proposal to limit the ownership of trust companies on a sliding scale, which would mean that the largest trust companies would be allowed to have no more than 10 per cent ownership in any individual hands, putting them on the same basis as the banks. Also there was a proposal to restrict cross-ownership to 30 per cent so that if there were commercial owners they would only be able to have 30 per cent of a financial institution. The Minister will get up and say it ain't so, or he might, but of course he has no choice because Cabinet solidarity binds him and he has not shown—

Mr. McDermid: He was there and Diane Francis wasn't.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister can deny it if he will. I challenge him to rise on a point of order now to say that what I am recounting is not so. I have lots of time. I believe I have 40 minutes. Please do not seek to hurry me up like that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there has been agreement in the House to try to terminate this debate by at least 3.15 p.m. I feel, from the way the Hon. Member is participating, that we could be here all afternoon I just thought I would bring that to his attention. There is such a thing as relevance, and I hope the Hon. Member will speak about the Bill. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate your participation, Mr. Speaker. However, I note that the Hon. Minister has chosen not to intervene, as I suggested he might. I believe the first speech on second reading of a Bill can go on up to 40 minutes and I was intending to speak for 40 minutes. I am sure you will inform me when my time has come to an end. I do not intend to speak endlessly. One or two of my friends pointed out they were sure the House would like to debate this matter through July but the attendance might be even more limited than it is right now.

The fact is that when the Minister took this legislation before the committee he found himself garotted, guillotined, manacled, shackled and otherwise prevented from acting to ensure some protection against this concentration of economic ownership. In the end we have a mild set of restraints affecting only two of the largest trust companies compelling them to divest themselves of 35 per cent of their ownership over some period of time while they retain 65 per cent control. I suggest that is no discipline at all. They will still have control.

Not only that, the Bronfmans, the Reichmanns, the Conrad Blacks, the Hal Jackmans and Paul Desmarais have the assurance of the Government that no new financial conglomerates will be allowed to emerge. Is that not wonderful? In other words, we are going to continue this cosy relationship where "them what has" can get bigger, fatter, more prosperous, and pile up more and more assets. At the same time they will not be dogged by new contenders coming up behind them.

The Hon. Minister may recall the way in which the financial industry joined forces and circled the wagons when Bob Campeau of Ottawa, I suppose a constituent of mine, sought to gain control of a major trust company. Boy, did they ever stand tall in order to prevent that from happening. If the Government's view is that it is okay to have these large conglomerates, how can self-made people like Bob Campeau or Paul Desmarais come up in a new generation? The fact is that even Mr. Desmarais was part of the lobby that ensured the door was shut after he got inside. I suggest there is a serious problem there.

Let me move on a bit. The Government of Canada has decided to join forces with the provinces, particularly the Province of Ontario. It is a bit like building the Sky Dome in Toronto. That city somehow feels inadequate if it does not have a dome stadium as extravagant and of as little potential utility as domes in other major cities. World class to Toronto is not a state of mind; it is whether you have the necessary architecture and hardware to say "we are world class".

Mr. McDermid: What a tiny little mind you have.

Mr. Cassidy: There has been deregulation on Wall Street and that led to such things as a $250 million loss in mortgage security trading at Merrill Lynch. Because there was a big bang a year or so ago in London, Canada has to have its big bang, too, without looking at the evidence. When the former British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, was here last December he told Canadians not to do it, to learn from their mistakes. If you look at the kind of problems now being experienced on Wall Street with insider trading, massive losses in institutions which had a very good reputation, if you look at the degree to which some President Reagan's men and women are now finding a safe haven with million dollar salaries on Wall Street, I ask myself if that is what we as Canadians really want. Maybe the Minister and his colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party want that, but I am sure there are some ordinary Canadians watching who ask whether we want a casino economy where this conglomeration of capital is perpetuated. Do we want the situation to continue where an ordinary Canadian who wants to borrow a few thousand dollars to establish a business, buy a house or expand a restaurant is put through an impossible situation by the banks.

Mr. McDermid: Talk to us, not the TV cameras.

Mr. Cassidy: I will talk to the citizens out there. There are only 10 Members on the other side of the House but there are millions of Canadians who may be watching this particular debate.

An Hon. Member: Not since you got up.

Mr. Cassidy: The point I am making is that at the time when we have such a concentration of commercial interests on the boards of directors of Canadian banks, the 10 per cent ownership rule is virtually useless in undermining the concentration of economic power in our country. If I as a citizen would like to have banking services in my community until six o'clock, why do I have to wait for 25 years before the banks begin to wake up? Why is it that through most of the City of Ottawa I cannot go to a bank on a Saturday? If I happen to be in a job where I work hard from nine until six day after day, I cannot, without taking time off from my job, do my banking. When I do, I have to stand in a line with 30 other people because I happen to go on pay day because that is when I need my money.

Mr. McDermid: Boy, are you out of date.

Mr. Cassidy: How come the consumer is so badly served, yet, if I am Conrad Black and I want to do a deal and I need to bring together $500 million in bank lending, I can get that through a few telephone calls. The Hon. Member from Brampton should realize that this is precisely what is happening. There are enormous inequities in our financial system between the rich and powerful and the ordinary Canadians.

I speak, among other things, as a democratic socialist. I think there is something wrong when the Government gives to a handful of financial institutions the power to create money. For every dollar in assets they can create $19 or $20 by means of the credit system, as any student of economics will know. We give that privilege, and that is what it is, to our Schedule A banks. Yet do we turn around and ask whether those banks are generally doing the appropriate job for the consumer? Do we ask whether the banking services available in the Northwest Territories or in small communities are adequate? Maybe we ask but we do not get answers. In fact they are not.

Do we use the powers of the state through the Inspector General of Banks or the Superintendent of Financial Institutions in order to ensure that a consumer who is being ill-treated by the banks has some right of redress? When the banks grant a loan to Argentina and the loan fails, farmers in western Canada feel it a month or so later when suddenly credit conditions are tightened and their loans are being called. This has occurred over the course of the last few years. I express some indignation over that because I think it is appropriate from time to time that we in the House of Commons should do so and that the banks should hear some of it.

A year or two ago we had a dinner with the presidents of about five Schedule A banks. We had a very jolly time, I and members of my caucus who had taken pains to meet with the banks. It was a very interesting session. We talked about a number of things including concerns the NDP has over the adequacy of services for farmers and small business people. It is really a scandal at times the way some of those people are dealt with. While in general there are aspects to our banking system which are more favourable and more effectively operated than in other countries, I asked why in a country where 40 per cent of the workforce are members of trade unions, you and your institutions have moved heaven and earth to keep the union out of your institutions? There was such a frost that descended on that cosy little tête-à-tête—I had accepted a couple of glasses of wine from the bankers in the interests of communication—you could almost see the icicles hanging down from the walls. I have real concerns about giving privileges to those large financial institutions when they turn around and give generously to the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals.

Mr. McDermid: You would not accept it.

Mr. Cassidy: They do their bit to keep men and women working for financial institutions in a subservient way. They should be ashamed of the way they have behaved over the course of the last two or three decades. They have denied working men and women the right to speak for themselves and are basically trying to perpetuate the labour-employer relationships of the 19th century. Those are the facts. That is how those institutions have been operating.

• (1510)

I say all these things to put what we are talking about into perspective. We as parliamentarians and legislators should be very aware of the abuses which have taken place in our financial institutions. Just because banks do a few good things as corporate citizens we should not be blinded to the fact that there has been too much self-dealing and concentration of ownership. Neither the United States nor Japan allow their banks to engage in underwriting, yet we are about to do that. That is very serious.

What would happen, for example, if we had another Dome situation and the banks or their security subsidiaries are involved in underwriting equity or debt for a new Dome Petroleum? Will the banks which will be concerned about their loans to that particular institution turning bad tell their security people to sell a bit of equity because they are feeling shaky about it? What kind of Chinese wall could prevent the potential abuses in such a situation? All we will get is a Chinese wall based on soft noodles which will not prevent that kind of abuse from taking place.

In the context of the present negotiations for free trade with the United States one must ask whether the United States has offered to allow Canadian banks to own securities subsidiaries in the United States. For 30 or 40 years they have insisted on strict segregation and they will not change just because Canada says it should be so. We are saying that as of this June any American bank can own and have effective control of a securities house here in Canada. As of June, 1988, they will be able to have 100 per cent ownership.

If I were running a $20 billion bank in the United States I would very quickly take advantage of this opportunity and buy a subsidiary here in Canada. We are likely to give American banks a back door to the securities market and then the subsidiary of the Canadian firm will do business in the United States. That is a perfectly logical thing to do.

The other day I said that the investment dealers in this country are like the chickens going to Colonel Sanders because they do not realize that we are seeing the end of an independent securities industry in Canada. As a democratic socialist I am not sure if I should leap to their defence. I noticed that the spokesman from Nesbitt Thomson was beginning to wake up to that fact the other day, but the investment dealers are too late. They have been sold out.

There are some very serious questions which still have not been adequately answered with regard to the degree to which the Government has moved into this area with the consent of Ontario but no particular agreement from the other provinces. We will have to explore in committee where that will lead, but I have some grave reservations about the way in which it has proceeded.

I want to talk now in more specific terms about the Bill and some concerns which New Democrats have about financial services in general. I have been developing some policy, as is appropriate for an opposition spokesman. I suggest to the Minister that there is an over-emphasis on the problems of stability. It is not that those problems are not real, but they are addressed too much by regulation rather than ownership. The missing element is that we are not at all taking up the needs of consumers. That is a real question in that too many banks still close at three o'clock. It is a real question if consumers have to pay an inordinate rate of interest.

An example of the abuse in a supposedly competitive area is that it took the Commons Finance Committee two months to persuade the chartered banks to lower interest rates and service fees on credit cards to a more reasonable level. It was clear that they were making excessive profits and they have now agreed to roll them back. However, a Common's committee should not be responsible for ensuring that kind of protection. It should be there at all times. There should be a means by which individual consumers, small businessmen, farmers and so on can have their grievances against banks examined and get some redress.

The drafting problems in Bill C-56 are very serious. For example, it amends sections of the Canada British Insurance Act which are being amended simultaneously through Bill C-42. I have to ask who is smoking what in the drafting section of the Ministry of Finance.

I disagree with banks having security underwriting powers, but the proprietors of the Montreal District Savings Bank point out that if the chartered banks are to have those powers, surely the Quebec Savings Bank Act should be suitably amended as well. If we are going to make a wrong decision, we should not put the City and District Savings Bank on a basis different from that of the co-operative institutions, the financial institutions, and the chartered banks.

With respect to securities regulations in general, we should be seriously looking at a form of joint agency. The present situation in which the provinces all go their own way is ludicrous in a country of 25 million. I would have liked to have seen more leadership from the Government on this. I am sorry that it has not been forthcoming. We have retained an awkward compromise with the securities commission in Ontario doing the job of a national securities commission while Quebec, Alberta and other jurisdictions are able to pass independent legislation. I realize that we will not get a federal securities commission which is under provincial jurisdiction, but there is enough overlapping jurisdiction, particularly as the pillars collapse, that I think the Government, even now, could be taking initiative to get a joint body in which both levels of Government might give up some powers to get a common pattern of securities regulation. My Party does not believe that just because there has been a big bang in London or on Wall Street we have to follow that particular route.

The Bill speaks specifically to the moratorium on ownership. I think that section is ludicrous in the absence of any adequate ownership rules. The guidelines which include the stipulation that the Minister must look at the best interests of the financial system are meaningless. I do not know what the devil they mean. If I were the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) I might say that it is in the best interests of the financial system not to have further concentration of ownership and, therefore, reject any share transfer which would involve the passage of control of a widely held financial institution into narrower hands. It could be argued that that would be an abuse of a very wide paragraph. I think the whole section is rather nuts. It disguises the Government's failure to come to grips with the ownership powers.

With regard to the cease and desist powers in Bill C-56, the Government is giving the Superintendent of Financial Institutions the power to move in and exercise the powers of directors for a short period of time without giving the institution any power to retaliate or resist and then, with ministerial approval, to do it on a more permanent basis. I believe one can make a strong case that something like that might have been useful in the events we have experienced over the last few years. It is also fair to say, that had there been the will to act on behalf of the regulators, there would be no need for the legislation. It was the failure of will, both at the official level and at the ministerial level which, in large measure, accounts for the approximately $2 billion we had to pay out through the CDIC and, in other ways, over the course of the last couple of years.

The point I want to make is that I think there are real problems in terms of information being available to other than insiders. I cited in committee the other day an example. Let us suppose that I was a small entrepreneur, I was a good socialist developer and was about to develop a few factory units or a small shopping centre. Socialists do these things as well, Mr. Speaker. The Minister seems to be a bit upset. Suppose I arranged for insurance with a company and the insurance was the last element in making my deal fly. Suppose that three days before I signed the contract with the agent for the insurance company, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions had moved in because he had reason to believe the insurance company was about to belly-up. I took my risks, I committed my capital, without that knowledge. Then it became evident a few days later, after I had signed the contracts and committed my capital, that the insurance had unravelled. With the insurance unravelled, the deal unravelled and I found myself completely up the creek.

The question is, at what point is information to be made available publicly? That is an issue with which we will be dealing in committee. I think it is a very serious issue because if the Superintendent has grounds to move into a company, it seems to me there has to be some way by which that information can be made public.

The Ontario Securities Commission and the SCC in the United States make their actions public despite the fact that those actions will have an effect on the quoted market value of shares actually being traded at that time. We have to look at that and perhaps get used to it.

The point was made about the appraisal of asset values. Again, the Government has failed to address the responsibility of accountants and auditors in this particular area. In other words, they will advise in an area where they have in many respects been a cause of the problems with which we are concerned.

The committee is concerned, and I put this to the Minister now, over the fact that the limits on reinsurance are being put down by regulation when in fact it is appropriate, because it is such a major restraint on the operations of an insurance company, that at least the broad parameters should be in the legislation itself and just in the form of regulations.

With respect to the insurance companies, there is also a matter of consumer protection. The Minister, coming from Ontario and a community where insurance is an important industry, will know the concern which my colleague, Bob Rae, a former Member of this House and Leader of my Party in Ontario, has been raising over the degree to which property and casualty companies are bleeding Ontario drivers dry with the rates they are charging for automobile insurance. In particular, we are concerned about the way in which they are abusing individuals because of arbitrary rules which in some cases have driven businesses to the wall. For example, there was a case in the papers the other day of a woman who married her boyfriend—I think she was probably living with him as well—and as a consequence, the insurance she had to pay on her vehicle rose from $600 to $1500, just like that. The fact that she assured the insurance company that her husband was not going to drive her vehicle was irrelevant. That kind of silliness has to stop.

Just as there is a desirability for the federal Government in respect to banks to protect the consumer, I think there should be a measure of consumer protection as well with respect to insurance companies who also have the privilege, not the right, of carrying out insurance duties here in Canada.

Mr. Hockin: Talk to Bob Ray. It is a provincial issue.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister says it is a provincial issue. If these companies are federally regulated, then I believe we can in fact provide some direction in terms of how those companies are to operate. If people then choose to set up provincially regulated insurance companies because they do not like the federal rules, that is fine. Let the province deal with them. But I do not think we as federal legislators should abdicate our responsibility in that particular area.

There are a number of specific points which perhaps I will have a chance to talk about later. However, I would like to make a point to the Minister in a very serious way. What we have heard from the officials of the Department of Finance with respect to the resources which will be made available to the new Superintendent of Financial Institutions is extremely disturbing.

The previous Inspector General of Banks should have, in my opinion, put his job on the line to get adequate resources to do his job as Inspector General. It is a personal tragedy, I think, that he did not have the gumption to do so perhaps five or six years ago. He did not and his office was too weak. He perhaps lacked some of the will to do what he needed to do and that contributed to the failures of the banks which we have experienced.

What senior officials of the Department of Finance have told us is that there will only be a moderate increase in the resources which will be made available to the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions relative to what was available to the Inspector of Insurance and to the Inspector General of Banks.

Mr. Hockin: That's not true.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister says that this is not true. I hope he will answer that in committee since he will not have a chance to answer here in the House. That is a very serious concern, particularly in view of the excessive reliance on regulations which my Party has indicated we believe is contained in the Act.

I would like to suggest that part of the changes in corporate governments—and perhaps that is still to come—should include a broader reflection of the community on boards of directors for financial institutions. These boards should include representation for consumers, farmers, small business, women and other relevant groups. That is something which I think we can insist upon because these institutions operate not by right, but because of a privilege which is given to them in the powers of limited liability, the powers to create money and the other powers they have under federal legislation. We are very concerned about the degree to which self-dealing is permitted. We are concerned about the degree to which there is a total deregulation of the power of making commercial loans by non-financial institutions.

These are some of the points about which we are particularly concerned. I could make other points but I guess I will just conclude by saying that we should have addressed, in the reform of the financial institutions, a number of consumer issues as well as the stabilities issues so that the way in which those institutions offer services to consumers was addressed, and there was some redress for consumers. There is a very serious need for a kind of financial ombudsman who would be on the consumer's side.

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald that Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join the debate today on Bill C-204. As the only actuary elected to the House I would like to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for bringing this important initiative forward, and to indicate that I intend to support the Bill on second reading. However, I should also signal that if the Bill were to leave the legislative committee unamended, I would be forced to vote against it as it currently stands at third reading.

The Bill contains several important features. The first feature would restrict smoking at the work station. I support this feature of the Bill. However, the Bill also provides that designated smoking rooms should be provided for employees who wish to continue to smoke at the office, and imposes a stipulation that any such room be both enclosed and independently ventilated.

While I have no particular objections to the designated smoking room concept per se, I cannot justify the allocation of several hundred millions of taxpayers' dollars at this time to provide for independently ventilated smoking rooms in many old buildings used by the Public Service. It may be desirable, however, to consider such a feature for buildings designed in the future. For this reason, if the Bill passes second reading, and if the independent ventilation feature remains in the Bill, I would oppose it at third reading.

The Bill would also restrict smoking on airplanes, ships, railways and motor vehicles under federal jurisdiction. This feature of the Bill goes far beyond what was recently announced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who restricted smoking only on airplane flights of less than two hours' duration. I believe that the proposals of the Bill to consider further limitations on smoking on common carriers are worth future study. It is principally for this reason that I offer my support for the Bill at this time.

Finally, the Bill would designate tobacco and tobacco products under the Hazardous Products Act. As an actuary there is no doubt in my mind that tobacco is a hazardous product. I would like to see committee hearings held to establish whether such a designation would be in the public interest and what the ramifications of such a designation would be.

The debate concerning the use of tobacco is an old one. The first reference I was able to find described tobacco as "barbarous, beastly, hateful to the nose, a vile and stinking custom, harmful to the brain, and dangerous to the lungs". The comment, I hasten to add, was not made by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood but by King James I in the year 1604.

Nevertheless, tobacco-related illnesses did not begin to flourish until the invention of the cigarette machine in 1880. In that year, 500 million cigarettes were produced commercially in the United States. Within five years the production doubled to one billion cigarettes; and within another five years the production quadrupled to four billion cigarettes. Some 90 years later, in 1980, the annual production of cigarettes in the United States was 620 billion and in Canada it was about 64 billion.

Almost all Canadians know of the association of smoking with lung cancer. What most people do not know is that lung cancer was almost unknown prior to the invention of the cigarette machine. At the turn of the century the pathologist Adler estimated in a review of world hospitals that he had been able to uncover that only about 300 cases of lung cancer had ever been reported. Today, it is the number one killer in terms of cancer for males. In one hospital in Toronto alone, the Princess Margaret, there were 1,119 new cases of lung cancer in 1980.

Cigarette smoking is now the number one cause of premature death in North America. Actuarial studies indicate that it is responsible for 33 per cent of all cancer deaths, 25 per cent of all coronary heart disease deaths, and 40 per cent of all respiratory disease deaths.

Not only do smokers die early, they are sick more frequently. Smokers are hospitalized 50 per cent more than non-smokers. They have twice the accident rate of non-smokers. It is estimated that in 1980 dollars each smoker costs an employer an average of $600 in lost productivity.

Actuaries have been studying mortality differences between smokers and non-smokers since 1964. The ratio of smoker to non-smoker mortality among insured lives is 15 times higher for respiratory cancer, 14.7 times higher for pneumonia and influenza, 8.1 times higher for hypertensive heart disease, and 5.8 times higher for fatal digestive diseases.

In the United States a detailed mortality study of all U.S. veterans has been conducted. In addition to the elevated rates of cancers of the lung and bronchia mentioned above it was found that smokers are 12.5 times more likely to contract cancer of the pharynx, 10 times more likely to contract cancer of the larynx, 6.2 times more likely to contract cancer of the oesophagus, and 5.2 times more likely to have an aortic aneurysm.

Over the study period 1960 to 1984, it is estimated that 659,000 Canadians had premature deaths directly related to tobacco use—almost 30,000 a year. Studies indicate that the extra mortality is directly related to the age that a person first began smoking, as well as the number of cigarettes smoked per day. This is why it is so important to control the new use of smoking among our youth and why I support the recent ban on tobacco advertising introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

However, there is some hope for smokers. Studies also indicate that mortality starts to return to normal after smoking stops. For those who smoke less than an average of 20 cigarettes a day mortality is only 30 per cent above normal after one year of abstinence and is essentially back to normal after 10 years of abstinence.

Those who smoke more than a pack a day are not quite so lucky. Their mortality in the year after they stopped smoking is still 269 per cent of normal. However, after 10 years even heavy user mortality drops to only 50 per cent above normal. This 50 per cent figure is as high as it is because it includes a large number of people who quit smoking on doctors' orders because they had already developed severe health problems.

If one were to study former heavy smokers who quit voluntarily before their doctors told them to one would find that their mortality is quite close to normal within five years and is essentially back to normal within 10 years. Unfortunately, those who wait until the doctor orders them to quit smoking have considerably elevated mortality even 15 years after they stop smoking, that is those who are still alive.

The actuarial statistical studies are numerous and consistent. Tobacco use kills. Tobacco use disables. Even indirect smoke inhaled by a non-smoker is dangerous. Tobacco use is a health menace. It is now socially unacceptable to expose others to the risks of second-hand smoke at the office or on public transit.

Once again, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood for bringing forward Bill C-204. Obviously, she has served to focus Parliament's attention on the most serious health problem we have in Canada.

Within the last few weeks the Government has taken major initiatives to curtail smoking. Hopefully, by passage of this Bill at second reading and study in committee several additional reasonable steps can be found which might save additional hundreds of lives a year.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), on an excellent and very topical Bill. It deals with a subject matter which is foremost in the minds of many Canadians. My colleague, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), brought out a great many statistics which I think are worthwhile and which should be considered by all Canadians. I would like to talk generally about the Bill for a long time, but there are some specific matters I would like to bring forward.

Bill C-204 which is in its final hour of debate today addresses two specific areas related to the use of tobacco products in Canada. First, it seeks to restrict smoking in federally-regulated workplaces, transit vehicles and other locations under federal jurisdiction. Second, it would ban the advertising and promotion of cigarettes. The goals of this Bill are indeed laudable.

The detrimental effects of tobacco smoke, not only on the health of smokers but also on the health of non-smokers who may be forced to breathe air contaminated with tobacco smoke, has been clearly established. It would therefore be unconscionable on our part to ignore this problem.

On April 22 of this year the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) announced major new initiatives concerning the use of tobacco products in Canada. I shall concentrate on one particular aspect of these initiatives and that is, the issue of smoking in the workplace.

There are approximately 900,000 workers in the federal jurisdiction. The Minister of Labour has the responsibility of ensuring that the health and safety of these workers are protected while they are in the workplace. He fulfils that responsibility by administering the Canada Labour Code. Part IV of the Code addresses the issues of occupational safety and health.

There are two specific points in the Code which the Minister of Labour is intending to use in order to minimize the exposure of workers to second-hand smoke. The first point concerns the creation of joint health and safety committees. These committees are mandatory for establishments with 20 or more employees. A safety and health representative is required and the committees are composed of representatives of both employees and management.

The Minister proposes to request employers to restrict smoking in their workplaces to specifically designated areas. This is to be implemented by the employers in full consultation with their safety and health committees or safety and health representatives as the case may be and should be in place before the end of 1987. This is phase one of his initiatives.

The second point is the authority that the Code bestows on the Minister of Labour to prescribe specific regulations pertaining to any aspect of the occupational safety and health of workers under federal jurisdiction. Phase two of his initiatives involves the development of a new regulation regarding smoking in the workplace.

At the present time, the Minister's Department is actively engaged in a full-scale technical review of all aspects of the Canada occupational and safety and health regulations issued pursuant to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. This review is being carried out in an unique way which I consider to be very Canadian. A special review committee has been set up with the joint participation of labour and industry representatives.

The Minister will be requesting this committee to develop the regulation on smoking and to have it ready to take effect in 1989. He has publicly announced his hope that the review committee will seriously consider a total ban on smoking in all federally-regulated workplaces. The highlight of these initiatives by the Minister of Labour is the active participation of the two key stakeholders in this issue, employers and employees.

We all know that the practice of smoking dates back many centuries and it has become well entrenched in the daily habits of millions of Canadians. We are debating an issue that constitutes a major lifestyle change for these Canadians. Surely, unless we can get the co-operation and good will of both smoking and non-smoking workers, our efforts will be in vain.

One reasonable way of minimizing this potential hazard in the workplace is by seeking the co-operation of employers and employees. This is precisely what the Minister of Labour intends to do. Unfortunately, it is not altogether clear that Bill C-204 would involve employers and employees in the process of decision-making and implementation of workplace smoking restrictions. Experience has shown that when employers and employees are involved in the design and implementation of workplace smoking policies, the policies that result work well and are self-enforcing.

According to Bill C-204, a workplace is considered smoke-free if the concentration of airborne tobacco tar in that space does not exceed .75 micrograms per cubic metre of air. In my opinion, this issue can be more easily addressed by administrative action, and that is precisely the route the Minister of Labour is taking at the moment.

I am sure we all appreciate the complexity of this problem. I am convinced that the phased-in approach put forward by the Minister of Labour will succeed in reducing this hazard to the health of Canadians. In conclusion, let me once again give credit to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, for bringing this issue to the forefront. I would urge my fellow Hon. Members, however, to consider the major initiatives taken by the Government in deciding how its members will eventually vote on Bill C-204.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on an important Private Member's Bill which has attracted a great deal of attention in my riding and, I am sure, across Canada.

The Government which I support has taken an active role over the past two years in addressing the issue of cigarette smoking. This has been in response to overwhelming evidence that tobacco smoke is the largest preventable cause of illness and premature death in Canada. Moreover, it is becoming increasingly clear that Canadians who are consistently exposed to smoke in the environment may also be suffering adverse health effects. Not surprisingly, the public is increasingly asking for an environment that protects non-smokers from tobacco smoke.

The effects of direct exposure to smoke have been clearly demonstrated over the past decades. Thirty per cent of cancer deaths, 30 per cent of heart disease deaths, and 90 per cent of chronic obstructive lung disease deaths are caused by tobacco. More than 30,000 Canadians die each year from smoking-related diseases and 17 per cent of all deaths in Canada are attributed to smoking.

The evidence on the effects of environmental or passive smoking has only begun to emerge in the past 10 years or so. Research to date indicates a relationship between passive smoke and low birth weight and injury for unborn babies, respiratory illnesses for children and lung cancer for those involuntarily exposed to smoke over a long period of time such as spouses of smokers.

The U.S. Surgeon General estimates that one hour spent by non-smokers in a smoke-filled room my be equivalent to their smoking five to thirty cigarettes. In his 1986 annual report, he recommended that exposure to environmental tobacco smoke be eliminated and that policies aiming to do this be implemented with the input and support of all involved including smokers and non-smokers and management and employees.

I would like to comment briefly on the recent initiatives announced by the Government to reduce tobacco use in Canada, and particularly those measures to reduce smoking in the federal government workplace. As part of the Government's initiatives which were referred to by my friend from Scarborough and announced on April 22, 1987, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) indicated his intention to declare a ban on smoking in all Public Service workplaces by January 1, 1989. This smoking ban will be implemented in a phased-in manner based on consultation with the unions in the National Joint Council. This consultation is essential to achieve the successful and harmonious implementation of a ban and to ensure the continued co-operation and compliance of all employees.

The Public Service of Canada is the largest employer under federal jurisdiction and has a number of unique work situations and work sites. Some work sites are shared with employees of private sector employers, others are the full-time residents of special client groups or of Public Service employees, and some work sites are in shared accommodations with the general public. These situations will need to be considered and addressed in the consultation process to establish implementation measures that take into account these special situations.

There are already a number of Public Service departments that have restricted smoking in their workplaces. These measures were implemented after consultation with the employees involved. The experiences of these departments indicate that not only non-smokers but also many smokers and in fact the majority of smokers among the employees supported these initiatives.

It is increasingly evident that smoking in the workplace and in other public areas is becoming unacceptable to a majority of Canadians. The Government's initiative to ban smoking in the Public Service workplace reflects the rapidly changing public and employee attitudes toward tobacco usage. Daily we hear of employers implementing bans or restricting smoking in the workplace to a few designated, agreed upon smoking areas. Exposure to second-hand tobacco smoke in the workplace is no longer tolerated and employees have requested action on this issue.

In 1985, Treasury Board, in consultation with Public Service unions, developed guidelines to assist Departments in implementing measures to control smoking in the workplace. Certain areas were identified where public servants could not smoke, for example in areas or at service counters where the general public was served. It was agreed at that time that the guidelines were an interim measure designed to inform Departments of the increasing sensitivity to this issue and of the need to consult with their employees on ways to resolve co-operatively differences related to tobacco smoke in the workplace. It was also agreed that these guidelines were for a period of three years and that thereafter a more stringent approach would be required. Both the Treasury Board and the unions in the National Joint Council agreed to start consulting on a standard a year ahead of schedule because of increasing pressure to have more stringent measures apply.

According to Health and Welfare Canada, the successful implementation of a smoking ban is based upon strong support for a ban by the senior management of an organization and consultation with employees on the development of a phased in plan to achieve this ban. These measures, as I have indicated, are being adopted by the Public Service of Canada.

The announcement of the Government's intention to ban smoking in the Public Service workplace is an important and progressive step by Canada's largest employer. It is hoped that it may serve as a catalyst for other employers.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for raising this issue. It is an historic fact that this is the first Bill under the new Private Members' procedures which will hopefully go through its remaining stages and come to a vote.

Mr. Boudria: It is the second one.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has corrected me.

The Bill calls for two measures—first, to ban advertising by declaring tobacco to be a hazardous product and, second, to ban smoking in federally regulated workplaces, particularly in the Government of Canada.

I was pleased that the Government had finally began to act on this issue and that it announced some policy in this area in the press conference held by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) about four weeks or five weeks ago.

However, I was disappointed by two aspects of the Government's proposal. The first is that the proposed advertising ban is incomplete. It will continue to allow point of sale advertising. I think it is well known that if one stifles advertising in one way but leaves a loophole, the advertising funds—and I believe that they amount to $200 million per year which cannot be spent elsewhere—will go into the area which is still exempt. In other words, we are likely to see a substantial increase in point of sale advertising, which will continue to communicate the idea that it is hip, smart, sexy, or somehow positive to be seen with a cigarette in one's mouth.

Second, tobacco companies, perhaps by registering subsidiaries with the names of their brand in the title, will be able to promote their products in terms of sporting and other types of events which they help to sponsor. There too I have some real questions. To have Macdonald Export establish a subsidiary so that it can subsidize the Macdonald Export ballet or some such event is another covert way by which promotion and public relations on behalf of cigarette smoking are likely to be permitted. It is a shame.

Another problem with the Minister's Bill is the fact that he lacks urgency and is not prepared to act in what I believe is the spirit of the House when it decided to put in force a procedure to allow Private Members' Bills to come to vote. If the Minister were really seized with the urgency, I believe he should have in fact said: "I will piggyback the Government's proposals on to the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood". We all know that parliamentary time is very scarce. It is difficult for measures or for Bills to actually get heard.

If the Minister were sincere in wanting his Bill or his proposals to go before a committee as rapidly as possible, it seems to me that he should have agreed to see the Bill go and, if his Party had amendments, it could have made its amendments and let the committee do what it would with the particular proposals.

It is no secret that I support the Bill. I am an ex-smoker. I quit in 1983, on New Year's Eve. It was a New Year's resolution which I have actually succeeded in maintaining. I am still scared to death that if I ever had one cigarette, I would be hooked by the habit again. I believe it is an addiction which lasts through life.

I am pleased with the support the Bill has attracted. Three or four groups have written letters of endorsement which I should like to put on record. One is from Frank Garritty, President of the Canadian Teachers' Federation, and is directed to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. It reads:

> I am pleased to advise that, at its most recent meeting, the Board of Directors of the Canadian Teachers' Federation passed a resolution endorsing Bill C-204. The Canadian Teachers' Federation represents 220,000 elementary and secondary school teachers who teach in every province and territory of Canada.

Another one is from Ginette Rodger, Executive Director of the Canadian Nurses Association. It is directed to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood and reads:

> The Canadian Nurses Association . . . supports your initiative in bringing this Private Member's Bill. The CNA Board of Directors has reviewed the Bill and has reacted very favourably. The Board is concerned however that the occupational health hazard created by smoking is so significant that smoking should be banned in all federal government workplaces.

Another one is from Wendy Williams, Vice-President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. She wrote to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood as follows:

> On behalf of Canadian women who are members of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, thank you for Bill C-204.
> We hope this Act, to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, gets discussed and passed in the House of Commons.

The last letter is from Bob White, National President of CAW. It is dated March 24, 1987 and it is addressed to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. It reads:

> —I want to congratulate you on the work you have done towards guaranteeing Canadian workers a tobacco smoke-free environment—there can be no justification for any delay in passing legislation controlling it. It is for this reason that we whole-heartedly endorse your Private Member's Bill, the Non-Smokers' Health Act—C-204.

This letter was from CAW, one of the most important unions in the country. These are only some of the more recent letters endorsing this particular measure.

I remind Hon. Members that we are dealing with a health hazard which results in the direct death of some 35,000 people per year. To put it into perspective, I should like to refer to some figures from the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health. It is equivalent in 18 months to the total number of Canadian servicemen and servicewomen who were killed in World War II. In other words, tobacco is creating as much death and suffering every 18 months as Canada experienced as a nation from its participation in World War II.

The costs are enormous. It is time that we took action in order to indicate that tobacco no longer has the endorsement or approval, either in a direct or in a covert way, of the Government of Canada.

If some manufacturer said to the Department of National Health and Welfare that it had a great new product which it wanted to make available to Canadians, which would send hundreds of thousands of them to hospital, which would shorten their life spans from seven years to eight years on average, and which would cause 35,000 deaths every year; if some manufacturer asked "would you please allow me to sell this product in Canada", we would all say it was appalling. However, that is precisely what we continue to allow because of the degree to which Canadians have permitted the tobacco manufacturers' lobby to dictate what we should do.

We have alternative uses for the farmland affected. We, as Canadians, should be prepared to put up some of the money saved by the reduction in smoking to ensure that tobacco farmers can phase into other areas. Neither the manufacturers, the employees, nor the farmers have a compelling case that we should continue with this health hazard and make it as publicly available as we do now when it causes such amounts of illness, death, carnage, and loss of life as tobacco does today.

This is why I believe that all Members of Parliament should support Bill C-204. Once again I congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood on what I think is a very positive contribution. I also note with a great deal of approval the way in which members of all Parties have endorsed the Bill and the degree to which even the Minister of National Health and Welfare has now joined in publicly condemning the health hazards caused by tobacco smoking.

It is a disease. It is an illness. We should do away with it. In 50 years we will wonder how anybody could have put a stick of tobacco in his or her mouth. It is time we brought it to an end.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Hinton, Red Deer, and Edmonton, Alberta, who are indicating their concern about the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides which are being proven to have negative effects on human health. They charge that these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms in soil and water.

They are calling upon the House of Commons to initiate a full inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant derived pesticides.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions on behalf of approximately 120 residents of Alberta. One is in English and one is in French and they both say the same thing. They are protesting the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian babies each year for reasons of convenience. For such babies the crime of capital punishment exists for being unwanted. The French petition says—

[Translation]

That the execution of unborn infants every year, for the sake of convenience, and that the death penalty exists for these infants whose only crime is to be unwanted.

[English]

It is a pleasure to file the petitions on behalf of my constituents.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—SOVEREIGNTY AND ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys) moved:

> That this House condemn the Government for its repeated failures to protect Canadian sovereignty and economic independence as demonstrated by its weak and ineffectual efforts to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with regard to transmission costs of Canadian gas, and by its compliant approach to permitting foreign takeovers of Canadian corporations and natural resources.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my Party has brought forward this motion in order to bring to the attention of the Government and Canadians the seriousness with which we hold this ruling by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States.

On December 8, 1986, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States gave an opinion, saying that the two-price system which was in place for the sale of Canadian natural gas to the United States was not effective. It stated that the demand charge, which was one of the two prices that were being passed along to the buyers of natural gas in the United States, could no longer be applied, and that the transportation charge in the demand charge that was being paid willingly by American buyers, must be paid. It essentially told the Canadian natural gas industry that it had to absorb this charge.

This decision was made in contravention of a previous decision by Canada's National Energy Board which set forward the principle and the procedure for the sale of natural gas in accordance with internationally accepted regulatory principles.

This decision raises two very important issues. First, this change will result in an additional cost of between $140 million and $400 million to the natural gas industry in western Canada. Second, it is blatant interference with Canadian law and the Canadian regulatory process and will be devastating to the natural gas industry in western Canada.

Our Party objected to this opinion from the very beginning and was adamant that it was one of the most arbitrary and damaging decisions that the United States has ever made against Canadian commerce. We were prepared to accept the Government's undertaking that it would take action and make interventions in the United States.

However, on May 27, just a few days ago, we learned that the petition of the Canadian natural gas producers to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States had been denied and that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission was going to proceed with this very damaging decision even after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent letters to the President, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) sent letters to the Secretary of Energy in Washington, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) communicated with the United States Government.

We object to such treatment of the Canadian natural gas industry by the United States as well as to the lukewarm interest, at best, that the Government is taking in this very serious situation. Not only will there be a dramatic loss to western natural gas producers, it will be a great deal more difficult to finance future projects in the natural gas industry in western Canada.

The most ludicrous aspect of this issue is that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States does not have the jurisdiction to take that action. That commission is in charge of transportation of natural gas through the pipelines. It does not have jurisdiction over exports and imports, which is the prerogative of the Secretary of Energy through the Economic Regulatory Agency in the United States.

I want to take a moment to explain the position of the Economic Regulatory Agency. In its order of May 15, 1986, permitting the import of natural gas into the United States under the two-part price arrangement that existed before the December 8 ruling of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the ERA found that the contract terms including the two-part price structure would "result in a more competitive and market responsive arrangement" and are "therefore not inconsistent with the public interest".

The Energy Regulatory Agency, the body responsible for importing and exporting natural gas, is in total agreement with the procedure of the National Energy Board. The ERA went on to say in February, 1984:

> The market, not government, should determine the price and other contract terms of imported gas. U.S. buyers should have full freedom—along with responsibility—for negotiating the terms of trade arrangements with foreign sellers. The federal Government's prime responsibility in authorizing imports should be to evaluate the need for the gas and whether the import arrangement will provide the gas on a competitively priced basis for the duration of the contract while minimizing regulation impediments to a freely operating market.

There is a blatant disregard for the ruling and the opinion of the Economic Regulatory Agency in the United States by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which does not have responsibility for the item on which it has passed a judgment which completely counteracts the ruling of our own National Energy Board.

The National Energy Board suggested to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that it would be an appropriate course of action for the commission to continue its previous practice of allowing the pass-through, to U.S. interstate pipeline rates, of those elements of cost which have been determined to be just and reasonable by a Canadian regulatory jurisdiction using internationally recognized toll marketing procedures. We thought reason would prevail in the United States, but that is not the case.

The United States Government has been completely oblivious to the urgency of the situation in Canada. The President of the United States is not living up to his commitment at the March, 1985, summit in Quebec City where the Prime Minister and the President agreed to work toward reducing trade restrictions and in particular to maintaining and extending open access to each other's energy markets.

On January 7, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated his objections to this decision in a speech in Los Angeles. He said that the FERC decision "raises serious questions of extraterritoriality, the extension of U.S. regulatory practices to matters under Canadian jurisdiction".

On the first day of the Prime Minister's tour in which he was trying to appease western Canadians, he stated that on May 5 he had written to the President about the seriousness of this situation and that the decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on December 8 extended U.S. regulations into Canada. He asked the President to attempt to find a solution to this particular problem.

On May 27, the commission in the United States turned down the application of natural gas producers to overturn this very damaging decision.

There is complete disregard in the United States for the Government of Canada. The Americans are downplaying the intervention of American agencies into the laws of Canada. When the National Energy Program was in place the American Government stated that it wanted a level playing field. We are seeing the Government of the United States tilting the playing field to its advantage. That is not acceptable to Canadians in the west or anywhere else in Canada. It should not be acceptable to the Government.

There exists a freely negotiated contract between Canadian producers of natural gas and American buyers of natural gas whereby American buyers agreed to accept this toll charge as part of the price of the natural gas. These were freely negotiated contracts under a regulatory framework, set up and approved by the National Energy Board, the law-making regulatory body in Canada with jurisdiction over this particular business.

We have a blatant overturning of Canadian laws as they affect Canada in Canada by an American regulatory commission. To me, this is the most damaging breach of Canadian sovereignty we have experienced in this country to date. In my opinion, and in the opinion of the Liberal Party, this is something which the Government cannot treat in a lukewarm fashion. It must daily use its most determined efforts to have this breach of Canadian identity overturned by the American Government.

How did this all come about? It came about, of course, largely because of the American Government's disregard for matters of Canadian interest and for the thinking of the Canadian Government. It also came about because the Government had to do away with the adjacent border price which assured Canadians that natural gas would be sold in the United States at a price not lower than the price for which it sold in Canada. The Government did away with that so it could sell natural gas into the United States more cheaply than it could sell it to Canadians. The American Government then panicked, the Americans panicked, and this is the result.

Just a little over a month after the federal Government did away with the adjacent border price this derogatory ruling was made by a United States commission, and it is going to be severely damaging to the Canadian economy. We were warned this was going to happen. We were warned by Mr. Dick Cahoon, spokesman for the 11,000 member Petroleum Marketers Association of America. He said, "This is unfair competition to do away with the adjacent border price". But, no, this Government, which legislates on energy by the seat of its pants, was completely oblivious to what was going on. As usual, energy was not a priority. Political will was not of interest.

The Prime Minister is now saying he is going to bring up this important issue at the Venice Summit. The Venice Summit will be held over two weeks after the turndown of the petition of the Canadian Natural Gas Producers to have this overturned. Nothing would be done for two weeks.

It is another issue which will be brought up in the negotiations. I will tell you, Madam Speaker, and I will tell this Government, that the Americans are taking energy seriously. They are taking the lack-lustre position of the Canada seriously. They look upon Canada as an energy fiefdom for their own interests. I do not object to the Americans wanting assistance from Canada for their energy needs and security of supply. However, I do object to the fact that we get kicked in the teeth, that we are supposed to provide everything the United States wants in the assurance of its own energy needs.

On May 6, just three weeks before the decision not to allow the appeal of the natural gas producers, President Reagan submitted, as one of his recommendations to Congress on the energy and national security concerns relating to oil import levels, that one of his concerns was "promoting the importance of stockpiles among U.S. allies". He was going to be doing this at Ministerial meetings of the International Energy Agency and at the Venice Economic Summit. So the President of the United States will be there telling his allies, including Canada, of the importance of stockpiling energy, particularly oil, so that this will be available to the United States.

At the same time, he is ignoring the very sovereignty of Canada in relation to energy, a matter in respect of which this Government has appealed time and again in a lack-lustre fashion—a little letter asking, "Oh, will you please, if you get time, look at this situation"—not giving it the urgency which it requires and which the Canadian people expect. This cannot go on. It just gets worse and worse.

The authority of Canada with regard to its trading partners, particularly the United States, is diminishing at a rapid rate. We are constantly doing what is wanted of us by the United States in order to secure a free trade agreement. A free trade agreement would be nice if it could be achieved without giving away the country. The Prime Minister, in his speech at the Economic Club in New York in December of 1984, said that Canada is open for business. But as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has said, Canada is not for sale.

It seems that in the opinion of foreign countries Canada is for sale, and it is for sale again and again. That is being proven each day by the treatment we are receiving from supposed friends such as the United States, from the takeover of companies such as Cadillac-Fairview, which is being purchased by a Chicago based company for $2.7 billion, and from the sale of Dome Petroleum to Amoco Canada, a 100 per cent owned subsidiary of Amoco Corporation in Chicago. There is no way that this can continue if we are going to have a free trade agreement, because there will be nothing left on this side of the border with which to enter into a free trade agreement.

Over the weekend, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was very supportive of Amoco's position with respect to its offering of Canadian shares, but we do not know any of the details. We see that other bids cannot possibly be put forward by other companies who have signed a confidentiality agreement with Dome Petroleum. It seems that what is going on is whatever is wished by the American Government. We in this House are told that when we say these things we are being anti-American. This Party is not anti-American. What we are is pro-Canadian. This is something the Government should be. The Government is representing the interests of this country. These interests must not only be upheld, they must be maintained in the interests of this generation and future generations. They are not to be given away at fire sale prices to the United States or any other country. These are resources which are in the interests of all of Canada, and I ask the Government, for a change, to please represent and stick up for the rights of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the views put forward by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

I noticed that in stating his position, the Hon. Member was careful not to mention the disastrous impact the Liberal Party's energy policies have had on the Canadian economy, especially in Western Canada.

Madam Speaker, everyone in this House knows perfectly well that under the National Energy Program, the previous Government, the Liberals under Pierre Elliott Trudeau, managed to drain billions of dollars of potential investment from the energy economy.

We remember the harm done to Canada's reputation in the international investment community, as a result of the protectionist and discriminatory barriers erected against our friends and allies in the western world.

No one will forget the profound alienation of Western Canada as a result of this policy.

• (1130)

We know too well the great damage that the National Energy Program caused the country. As a direct consequence of the NEP the country lost billions of dollars in potential investment. How many new jobs, how many new drilling starts, how much new exploration and development could have been achieved with these billions? We will never know.

Because of the National Energy Program an estimated $10 billion was lost to the petroleum economy through the petroleum and gas revenue tax. The PGRT, as we know, was one of the prime components of the NEP. We will never know what could have been done with that $10 billion which was taken directly from the petroleum companies because of the National Energy Program.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member claims the Government has been unable to protect Canada's sovereignty and economic independence. Madam Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth.

The Hon. Member says the Government has taken an accommodating approach to let foreign interests take over this country's companies and natural resources. That is of course not the case. This Government's approach is not the kind of unfortunate and inflexible attitude taken by the previous Government. It is flexible and tries to strike a balance between new investment, promoting the exploration and development of our oil and gas resources and protecting what has been achieved in the way of Canadianization.

It is a policy that has been and continues to be favourable to Canada's economic interests, both in terms of the oil industry and the industrial structure of this country.

In December 1985, this Government approved a policy for foreign investment in the upstream component of the oil industry. Its objective was to encourage 50 per cent Canadian ownership in the oil sector by means of measures that would be flexible, market responsive and mindful of the need for encouraging investment.

Our acquisition policy for the oil and gas sector is quite clear. It allows the acquisition of companies already controlled by foreign interests, subject to Canadianization and investment commitments. Second, it does not allow the acquisition of financially sound Canadian companies by other companies controlled by foreign interests.

Third, it provides for considering the acquisition of Canadian-controlled companies in obvious financial difficulty.

This policy has proved a success. Canadian ownership has increased significantly since 1984—by about 5.5 per cent since the present Government came to power in 1984 and introduced this policy. Canadian ownership was stable at 42.5 per cent in 1984, and now, in 1986, it is 48 per cent. This means that our flexible policy that strikes a balance between investment and Canadianization has born fruit, so that now, 48 per cent of the industry is Canadian-owned.

We are of course anxious to see these developments continue, and I am sure that under this Government, the trend in the long term will be very positive. However, we have to acknowledge that we may be faced with losses as well as profits, especially in times of restructuring the industry or lower international prices, as has happened quite recently.

That is the Government's general policy. Now in the particular case of Dome, here again, we have to strike a balance between our Canadianization objective and our objective to increase exploration and development in this sector. It is no use saying that our natural resources belong to us, if we do not have a policy to develop them. What the Government is seeking is to have a balanced investment policy to ensure that these natural resources which belong to, and are the heritage of, Canadians are developed in the best interests of Canadians and our industry.

Let us first consider the facts in the Dome affair. We must remember that the majority of the company's shares are held by foreign interests. Nearly 57 per cent of Dome shareholders are non-Canadian. In addition, Dome has a special place in the oil industry. It is the second largest company in terms of upstream revenue. It is the biggest landowner in Western Canada. It ranks first on the number of its gas reserves and seventh for its oil reserves. It has become the largest gas producer and the third largest producer of oil and hydrocarbons. With 4,000 employees, Dome is a major employer.

But the problem is that Dome is saddled with a $6.3 billion debt. Recently it reported losses of $2 billion, the biggest loss in the economic history of Canada. Of course everybody considers that Dome is now in a catrastophic financial situation. As a result of its financial woes Dome is severely restricted in its day-to-day operations. It has been and still is unable to make the investments required to maintain its assets, the kind of investments needed to carry out various projects in the territories for which it holds permits.

[English]

In the particular case of Dome it is important to seek a balance between our Canadianization objective and our objective to increase exploration and development in the industry. First, let us consider the facts. Dome is not a totally owned Canadian company. About 57 per cent of Dome's shareholders are foreigners. Dome has a very significant position in the industry. It is the second-largest company in terms of upstream revenues. It is the largest land holder in western Canada. It is the largest holder of gas reserves and the seventh-largest holder of oil reserves. It is the second-largest producer of gas and the third-largest producer of oil and field liquids. It is a large employer. About 4,000 people work for Dome. But Dome has a debt of $6.3 billion. It has recently announced a loss of $2 billion, the largest single loss in Canadian history. Due to its financial difficulties Dome has been constrained in its normal business dealings. It cannot make the necessary investments in its properties.

[Translation]

Therefore it is imperative to find a satisfactory solution to the Dome problem if gas and petroleum activities are to continue in Western Canada. The company must simply get back on an even keel and be in a position to make promising investments in its assets. Dome creditors also need a solution to this problem which has remained unsolved for too long. And among those creditors I would include a number of small companies in Western Canada which are Dome suppliers.

The Government has been cautious in this complex case which may have many consequences. Obviously the Government has no intention of buying Dome, therefore it is up to the private sector to take the initiative. This does not in any way lessen the significance we attach to Dome, but we will not use public funds to solve a problem created by the private sector. We have taken this approach for the following reasons. First, let me remind you of the origin of Dome's indebtedness, now standing at $6.3 billion, as I said. This money was borrowed by Dome, not by the Government of Canada, and the money was loaned by banks, not by the Government. It stands to reason that any solution to the Dome problems will force lenders and company shareholders to admit that their investments and their loans are worth less than the purchasing price or their book value.

• (1140)

It is clear that this Government is not responsible for these business losses. I remind the House that it was the discriminatory policy of Marc Lalonde and the promotion of Canadianization through billions of dollars in PIP grants that led Dome to embark upon an overly ambitious acquisitions strategy.

Dome is not a public company. While the company has indeed benefited from various tax and subsidy programs over the years, these have been policies of general application. The fact that it has received such public largesse, however, has led some to conclude that the Government has a special responsibility to protect creditors. My colleagues and I are determined that such will not be the case. We are not in favour of and will not support a bail-out disguised as a sale.

Our position has received public and media support. On May 12 The Toronto Sun editorial said:

> The notion that Dome should be kept Canadian by accepting a poorer offer is patently absurd. If Amoco or someone else can somehow turn Dome around and make rescue a reality, perhaps some Canadians should sit up and take notice.

The Financial Times on April 27 said:

> For a refreshing change the Canadian Government seems content to play a minimalist role, surely the proper one under the circumstances.

On May 8 the Gleaner of Fredericton, New Brunswick, contained these words:

> Government meddling in the oil and gas industry in recent years has been so costly that the people of this country should be skeptical of the interventionist views over Dome Petroleum.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, Members of the Opposition have been urging us to intervene to seal the outcome of the Dome purchase offer. They suggested that the Government should use its clout and make sure that a Canadian company be favoured. Madam Speaker, this suggestion reveals their ignorance of the law: there simply is not a Canadian law under which the Government would be able to give the nod to a Canadian bidder. Dome belongs to its shareholders, not to the Government. The Government has set a clear and no-strings-attached framework for companies anxious to do business in Canada. Pursuant to this process any offer, including Amoco's, must be examined in light of the legislation and policies prevailing in this country. Any other approach would make it mandatory for the Government to pass specific new legislation in this case, and this would have a strong negative impact on investments, on quality, on our country's image and, ultimately, on job creation.

[English]

The results of establishing this clear framework can now be seen. Dome's problems are well under way to being resolved. We have witnessed a healthy competitive process which is in the interests of all Parties, be they employees, suppliers, shareholders or creditors.

There have been three bids to acquire Dome, one from a Canadian firm. To date a foreign firm, Amoco, has made the best bid which was selected by the Dome board of directors. No one has denied that that is the case. However, the deal has not yet been approved by Dome's creditors and shareholders. Other companies have indicated a continued interest in Dome.

[Translation]

If Amoco's bid is approved by Dome creditors and shareholders, then the acquisition will have to be reviewed by Investment Canada. The Government which I represent wants to make sure that such a purchase will be of significant benefit to Canada. I have already said I am convinced that such a company will have to be a model organization for corporate citizens. It is very important that any company seeking a merger abide by high standards with respect to investment, job creation and Canadian ownership. Madam Speaker, we would be acting irresponsibly if we were to engage in public negotiations concerning this kind of takeover. Still I can assure you that this Government is intent on making sure that the deal be in the interests of Canada.

No official request has been submitted to the Government as yet, but we have taken some significant measures to guarantee that Amoco's proposal, if it goes through all the required stages, is a profitable one for Canada.

I had a meeting with Amoco executives at my office, and I let them know, in the clearest possible terms, how important the Government felt this transaction to be and that we would ensure it would benefit Canadians in terms of jobs, investment and participation in the company.

Last week, Mr. Dan Stacey, President of Amoco Canada, announced that his corporation would issue a substantial number of shares in Canada, if the proposal to purchase Dome Petroleum was accepted. Thus the principle of Canadian participation in the development of our oil and gas resources will be respected. It also guarantees that the corporation will have a Canadian face. Madam Speaker, I believe this was a major decision. For the first time in its corporate existence, Amoco has agreed to create a local corporation in a country outside the United States, and I think that the discussions and the Government's position, as expressed in the clearest possible terms by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, were instrumental in convincing Amoco that there were certain requirements that had to be met to do business in Canada.

[English]

This is a major commitment on the part of Amoco, one which should be commended. It will mark the first time in 40 years that Canadians will have an opportunity to participate directly as shareholders in the company's growth. As I indicated to Amoco, I believe Canadians should have a right to invest directly in the development of their resources. This is particularly important in the case of a company which, by a number of measures, would be the largest oil and gas firm operating in Canada.

[Translation]

I would now like to address the first example given in the motion, which deals with the action taken by the Canadian Government subsequent to Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

First of all, I must say I am surprised to see the Opposition take an interest in negotiations on the sale of natural gas to the United States. I find this sudden turnaround particularly surprising when I recall, and with me the oil industry in Western Canada, that dismal period from 1980 to 1984, when the Government at the time, formed by the Liberal Party to which the Hon. Member belongs, imposed its energy policy in such a cavalier fashion. The arbitrary and tyrannical measures adopted unilaterally by the Liberal Government provided for setting the price of Canadian natural gas without consideration for American market criteria. They also gave us an unenviable reputation as a country that could not be trusted to be a reliable and reasonable trading partner.

[English]

Needless to say, the New Democratic Party's approach to energy trade is simply to shut it down. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) admits that in 1979 the NDP passed a resolution calling for an end to natural gas exports. He now says his Party's policy is that there should be "reasonable" gas exports, whatever that means. He cannot have it both ways; supporting gas exports when he is in the West and opposing them when he is in the East. It is time now for the NDP to make up its mind and let the people of Canada know what its energy policy really is. Do they or do they not favour the export of natural gas?

[Translation]

Nevertheless, we have at least one motive for rejoicing. The Opposition has finally realized the importance of the natural gas trade between Canada and the United States. At least, I find something positive in this change of heart and I can tell the Opposition outright that Opinion 256 represents a serious threat for the trade deals which, over the past 30 years, have been beneficial to both Canadians and Americans.

The FERC Opinion defines the manner in which American corporations can recoup from their customers the costs of purchasing Canadian natural gas. This decision was officially made public on December 8, 1986, and confirmed on May 27, 1987. The Opinion prohibits the full recovery of some costs from American customers. These are the costs which had been borne in Canada and set by Canadian regulating agencies to provide pipe-line corporations with the capacity to serve export markets.

In practice, FERC will make it possible to by-pass transmission costs set in Canada, but only from the American point of view.

We foresee that the yearly difference between the actual costs assumed by exporters and the recovery carried out by FERC will amount to at least $140 million US per year. According to FERC, our own producers should carry this burden, and we are greatly concerned about this.

The Government sees in this Opinion, first a foreign intrusion in the regulatory jurisdiction of a Canadian agency, second an unfair tax burden imposed on the Canadian natural gas producing industry and, third, a significant set back from the joint efforts of Canada and the United States to establish a bilateral market oriented energy trade.

The motion before the House describes the Canadian response to this Opinion as "weak and ineffectual". It is not, Madam Speaker. On September 4, when the FERC Opinion had not yet been finalized, I met in Washington with Mr. Herrington, the American Secretary of Energy, and expressed my concern about this Opinion. This meeting marked the beginning of a concerted offensive by the producing provinces, the Canadian natural gas industry and my Cabinet colleagues to make the U.S. authorities more aware of the impact of this Opinion on the natural gas trade which brings wealth to both our countries.

I think it is important to enlighten the House about our initiatives. On December 18, together with my Alberta and British Columbia counterparts, I sent a note to the Secretary of State expressing our views and concerns about Opinion 256.

The exporting companies, the main associations of Canadian producers, the National Energy Board and the provinces' regulating agencies have all made official representations to FERC seeking new hearings.

In February, the officials of the Alberta Government and those in my Department advised fully their Canadian counterparts in the Ministries of Energy and Trade. My Cabinet colleagues, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister for International Trade (Mrs. Carney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have all had official discussions concerning this issue with their opposite numbers in the United States.

Opinion 256 was discussed during the Canada-United States Summit with took place here in Ottawa last March. Finally, on May 5, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wrote the President of the United States to express our country's concern about the impact of this Opinion.

Unfortunately, these concerted efforts have failed so far in convincing FERC to amend its decision. But we should keep in mind that this organization is an independent regulatory agency which must act within the limits of its mandate as determined by laws and regulations.

In spite of the fact that we may very well have lost the first innings, Madam Speaker, we have not yet lost the game, and the representatives of private corporations are already determined to bring the whole issue before the courts, and they can count on the support of this Government, especially the Department of Energy, because this decision of our American friends is contrary to the interests of both American and Canadian consumers.

[English]

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I am afraid the Minister has not convinced those of us on this side of the House of the Government's sincerity in terms of pressing the matter as hard as it possibly can and giving it the attention it deserves.

What has the Minister done since the request by the producers of Canadian natural gas to have the ruling of FERC overturned? Since the decision was handed down on May 27, has the Minister contacted his counterpart in the United States? Has he arranged for meetings with the Secretary of Energy in the United States? Has the Prime Minister been in contact with President Reagan?

This is not an ordinary discussion on a subject of mutual interest; this is a discussion on something of vital importance to the United States. To say that it can go through the courts is not enough. It could be tied up for years in the courts.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, first we did not hide the seriousness of the situation. We have publicly expressed our dissatisfaction with the decision. But we must respect the American legal system. It is the same kind of system that we ourselves recognize in Canada.

The National Energy Board can make decisions that may not always please the Government, but such is life, and that is the kind of system we chose to establish in Canada and in the United States.

But as a Minister of Energy, I and the Government as such made known our dissatisfaction with a decision that in our view is not in the best interests of Canadians and of American consumers.

Second, we have been in constant and frequent contact with the private sector, and we support their move to take that decision to the U.S. courts.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I should like to refer to a press release dated May 6 issued by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Alberta. He indicated that the Government was concerned about the potential ruling to which the Minister referred. He said that the Minister had been in touch with his American counterparts, that a variety of cabinet Ministers had been in touch with their counterparts in the U.S., and that he had been in touch with the United States President.

Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) now admit that despite all the overtures—his best efforts, the best efforts of the Prime Minister and of his colleagues—that all their requests fell on deaf ears? Will he admit that the Americans said, "No, we are not going to pay any attention. We are going to go ahead and do exactly what we want to do in Canada?"

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the American system better than that. We in Canada accept that the judiciary power is something different from the administration. Let us be honest. We have discussed that case with our counterparts in the United States. I have met many times—and the last time was two weeks ago—with the Secretary of Energy in the United States. I can tell the Hon. Member that they have agreed to the basic principles on which we are working—to have a freer market and so on and to make sure that consumers in both countries will be pleased by our policy. However, that does not give him the right to direct the judiciary power in the United States.

The same applies in Canada. It may happen in Canada that Governments agree with a foreign Government about a situation, but that does not give the Prime Minister the right to telephone a judge somewhere and say, "You have to do this because the political power of the country has decided that that is the way it should be done". If we did that in Canada, the Hon. Member's Party would be the first to say that we do not respect the way Governments are organized.

I think we have to recognize that the United States has the right to be organized on the same democratic principles as us. That does not mean that the Government of the United States disagrees with the Government of Canada. If a judge or a board of judges decided something contrary to the will of the American administration, the next step would be to appeal and to fight in court. That is not a political decision. That is not a decision of the administration of the United States. It is a decision of the judiciary power.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I completely disagree with the Minister of Energy. This is not only hurting the economy of western Canada and the country as a whole, but it is an infringement of Canadian laws. It is an extension of U.S. regulations into Canada, which is completely unacceptable. Also, we have FERC exercising a decision on something over which it does not have jurisdiction, the import-export of natural gas.

Surely the Minister in his discussions with the Secretary of Energy in the United States has brought to the Secretary's attention that this is his jurisdiction, not the jurisdiction of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. The Minister should be doing something to support his own position.

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, I have no difficulty in agreeing with my colleague. That is exactly what we have said publicly. The decision is contrary to the interests of both, and is an intrusion in our own regulatory responsibility. We have said that. The Hon. Member says nothing that we do not support. We said it before the Liberals and we have said it publicly. In the United States and everywhere we have said that it is not acceptable.

We agree with that, but that does not give my colleague, Mr. Herrington, the right to phone the judge and say, "You are wrong and you will do it another way". He cannot do that. He has no right. The Hon. Member knows that Mr. Herrington has no right to do that.

I have no right to instruct the National Energy Board on such issues when it is the board independently that must take a decision. We have to accept that. We can be annoyed with the American system and its decision, and I fully agree that we should be annoyed. But we cannot force the United States of America into changing its basic democratic system. It is, by the way, the same as the one we have in Canada.

The Liberal Party will never agree to the Minister of Energy, or the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) phoning CRTC giving them a directive. I have to respect our system. I am doing that as a Minister. The least I can do is accept that my colleague has roughly the same approach in the United States and I must respect him. As far as having a discussion, we agree, but that does not give the Secretary of Energy the right to instruct the judge.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, when the Minister of Energy wanted to test and have an examination of the surplus natural gas in Canada he wrote to the National Energy Board asking for hearings and the board held hearings. If the Secretary of Energy's position through the economic regulatory agency in the United States is being usurped, the Minister has a right to do something about it. Do something; at least call the Secretary of Energy, write him a letter. Maybe without a stamp the letter may get to the Secretary anyway, but just do something.

Mr. Masse: Madam Speaker, I am surprised that my hon. colleague forgets that that is exactly what happened. The Americans have announced a review of their tariff in the United States. That issue, we are sure, will be part of their study. So that is already done. We did not have to wait for the Liberal Party to discover that. There will be a board in the United States to review the tariff. It is done.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, would the Minister explain why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) bothered writing to the President of the United States if he felt that he could not really intervene because it was a judicial decision rather than an administrative or political decision? Why did the Prime Minister happen to write to the President just the day before he went to Red Deer, Alberta, and appeared with the oil rig people? Was it strictly grandstanding or did the Prime Minister hope to be able to intervene in the decision?

From what the Minister said, I take it that the Government disagrees with the United States administration, but is supporting private individuals going before the U.S. judicial system. Does the Government plan to take this matter to the international court because the United States is applying its laws, extraterritorially, into Canada? Is the Minister prepared to do that?

It seems to me that this decision sets a tremendous precedent which could be used in all kinds of other areas, especially when the United States regulatory agency is agreeing with the decision while another department is disapproving of it. It seems to me that the Government should not lay down and play dead just because free trade negotiations are going on.

Has the Minister examined with his officials the economic impact and how many jobs this will involve? It occurs to me that the $400 million is about the same as the investment which the Government plans to give under the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program which the Government suggested might create some 15,000 or 20,000 jobs. Will this decision, if it stands—if the Government does not appeal it or does not have it overturned—cost us 15,000 jobs in that profits will be creamed off which will not be available for exploration and development? Can the Minister respond to those several questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: In that question, Madam Speaker, I see at least three sub-questions. First, there is an important distinction to be made between representations and instructions. What the Government did through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Government officials, even provinces and the Prime Minister and my colleagues, was to make representations, explain the situation. The American system provides for an opportunity to make representations before such a tribunal, in the same way as before the CRTC or the National Energy Board, people can make representations, and the U.S. Administration on behalf of the Canadian Government made a number of representations.

This is the difference between making representations and giving instructions to the legal system, and I believe my hon. colleague in his question recognizes there is a distinction, that we must respect the legal system both in United States and Canada.

Second problem—should the matter be brought before international tribunals? I believe the first step, according to the lawyers in charge of that matter, is first and foremost to bring the case before the American courts. If and when a review and recommendations lead us to believe there are other legal avenues, you can rest assured the Canadian Government will act to support our industry wherever needed. This I can assure my hon. colleague.

Third, the estimated amounts are in the order of $140-150 million rather than the order you mentioned. Of course, such evaluations are always difficult to make, but it is the evaluation that was made available to us and that will be largely supported by exporters. How many jobs would be lost because of lack of investment resulting from the loss of those $140 million? I have no figures at the moment. That may happen in some cases. Hopefully, the number of jobs that will be lost as a result of that decision will be kept to a minimum. It may happen—but how many? Certainly not in the orders you referred to, because the initial amount itself is not in the order you mentioned earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now ended. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for debate.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, as Canadians looked at their newspapers over the weekend and again this morning, they saw in almost every newspaper in Canada headlines such as, "Disaffected westerners spawn new federal political Party". That description was not quite right because when you look at who were those westerners meeting in Vancouver this past weekend you will see that they were almost exclusively Conservatives. As a matter of fact, the largest contingent was from Alberta.

Mr. Masse: I saw some disappointed New Democrats.

Mr. Riis: When you look through the list, 95 per cent were card carrying members of the Conservative Party. They said that they have been betrayed by the Conservatives, and they feel that the only way to register their concern, after sending the largest majority of westerners to the House of Commons hoping that their views would be put on the parliamentary table, and now having been abandoned by the P.C. Government, is to form their own political Party. I think that speaks clearly for itself.

Today we discuss another betrayal of western Canadians and a betrayal of Canadians generally. More and more when people try to determine what the future of Canada holds they will not be paying attention to what is going on on Parliament Hill, they will be looking at Congress. Decisions being made in the United States are having increasingly more impact on the future for our country. When asked to test the Cruise missile, the Government said yes, let's test the Cruise missile. When the Americans wanted to take over West Kootenay Power and Light Company, the Government said yes. When they wanted to have a 10-year monopoly on American drugs being sold in Canada, they were given that right. When they wanted to take over Dome Petroleum, the Government gave them the right to take over Dome Petroleum. When they wanted to impose a special tax on Canada's softwood lumber industry, that was fine. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Government itself imposed that 15 per cent tax to keep Canadian wood out of the United States.

In this weekend's newspaper, there was a report from the National Forest Products Association of America indicating that the new tax imposed by Canada has achieved what it was intended to do, it has kept Canadian wood out of the United States market. As a matter of fact, Canada's share of the United States market slipped to 28.7 per cent in the first two months of 1987, down from 31.5 per cent a year earlier. Now the United States does not even have to pass its own laws to keep goods from coming from Canada. The Government of Canada will do it for it. This is nothing short of a betrayal.

Over the last few days a former Prime Minister has spoken about the Meech Lake Accord and has called the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) a weakling. Indeed, we could consider to what extent the Prime Minister has betrayed Canada. A few weeks ago, the Prime Minister went from place to place in western Canada saying, "We will fight the Americans on this gas issue, we are concerned". Well, some fighter. That was like the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) when she was sitting on the beaches of Maui saying, "We will fight the softwood issue, we will fight them on the beaches of Hawaii, we will stop the Americans". Yet the Government imposed its own tax on the softwood producers of Canada.

Maybe the best thing that could happen to us is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) not to speak to his counterparts in the United States, for the rest of the cabinet Ministers including the Minister for International Trade not to speak to their United States counterparts and for the Prime Minister not to phone or write letters to Mr. Reagan any longer. Whenever he does this on our behalf, we are betrayed. We are sold out.

As the speaker from the Liberal Party indicated when the American—good grief, I was going to say when the American Prime Minister—when the Canadian Prime Minister was in the United States saying that Canada was now open for business, what he meant was that it is now for sale. In two and a half years we have seen more foreign transactions and takeovers in our economy than in any other similar period in history. In fact, there have been 2,200 foreign transactions, primarily takeovers by American companies. We are now seeing more intrusion than ever.

I respect the honesty of the Minister of Energy. On many occasions he speaks forthrightly. Last Thursday, he said that the implementation of this rule will extend the United States regulation into Canada. Indeed, I appreciate his point. The United States is now deciding how we should export our natural gas. The United States is now determining our export policy for natural gas, just as it is now deciding how we should impose softwood lumber stumpage rates in the various provinces.

I think it is time the Parliament of Canada said something about this. It will have the opportunity to do so today as a result of this Opposition Motion. Parliamentarians ought to say that it is time Parliament started determining our economic policies, not the Congress or the quasi-judicial bodies in the United States.

Let me identify the extent of this natural gas disaster for western Canada. Perhaps as much as $400 million will be lost as a result of the Government's inability to deal effectively with the United States in ensuring a movement of Canadian exports to the U.S. The United States has indicated its concern about this incredible wave of Canadian natural gas invading its markets. What a peculiar view considering that between 4 per cent and 5 per cent of the United States' demand is met by Canada. As a matter of fact, in the last few months there has been a 17 per cent decline in exports to the United States. When the Americans talk about unfair competition from Canada, perhaps we should ask them to explain why there has been a 17 per cent drop in exports over the last number of months.

I recognize that 30 per cent of our natural gas is exported, giving us a $2.5 billion revenue flow.

Mr. Shields: Where do you stand on that?

Mr. Riis: If I were that person from Alberta, I would not be here today. I would be going door to door in my constituency because—

Mr. Shields: Where do you stand on the export of natural gas? Just answer that.

Mr. Riis: He is presumably asking where I or my Party stand on the export of natural gas. After our security has been declared, then we are certainly in favour of exports of natural gas. However, let us take care of Canada first.

Conservative Members are laughing at me when I say we should take care of Canadian concerns first. Of course they laugh. After giving away most of Canada since they have been in office for two and a half years, anything that puts Canada first would be a laughing matter to the Conservatives. As I say, I would advise them to get to their constituencies to try to explain why once again they have agreed to betray western Canadian concerns regarding the export of natural gas.

Things will be changing very shortly. I think Canadians have had enough. They have indicated that they will not stand by and watch the situation deteriorate continuously over the years. They have registered that at the polls where they have indicated clearly right across Canada that they are now turning their backs on Progressive Conservatives, having seen what they have been able to do to Canada, particularly to western Canada.

As the Minister of Energy has indicated, the decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in Washington will now result in Americans extending their regulations into Canada. Over the last while, part of the cost of transmission of natural gas in Canada was reflected in the price obtained by natural gas companies. We have been doing that with the United States and, as a matter of fact, there have been negotiations going on with the United States to ensure that the free flow of natural gas into the United States market to serve American consumers would continue. This system has been working well for years and years. All of a sudden the Americans have presumably decided that 4 per cent or 5 per cent of the market being supplied by Canadian gas is too much and therefore they need to take steps to reduce the flow southward. That is exactly what they have done.

In spite of the efforts of the Prime Minister to reverse this decision, nothing of the sort has occurred. We will now have to rely on the consortium of natural gas exporters to take this matter to court in the United States in an attempt to oppose it. Obviously the Government has failed in its efforts. The Cabinet has failed in its efforts. The Minister of Energy has failed in his efforts. Now a court action by a consortium of natural gas exporters will be required to attempt to reverse this decision, in co-operation, I might add, with American consumers. They too are concerned. They thought they were getting a good deal because Canadian exports of natural gas provided competition and kept prices down. As a result of this decision, it is unknown what will happen to competitive pricing.

Let us turn for a moment or two to the matter of foreign ownership. I think it is disgraceful that in spite of all the warnings about the tremendously high levels of foreign investment in Canada and, more importantly, the role of foreign control in our economy, Canada has more of its economic decisions made in foreign countries than any other country in the world. The board offices in Tokyo, Dallas, New York and Chicago will be making decisions on corporate investment and expansion in Canada for the next 10 years.

In the last two and a half years since the Conservative administration took office, Investment Canada has approved hundreds and hundreds of foreign takeovers. Considering that, we must ask what we are getting for those takeover dollars that are presumably coming to Canada.

It was revealed last week that of all the foreign investment which has come into Canada in the last two and one-half years 95 per cent has been used for takeovers; not new plants or the opening of new mines or factories, but for takeovers. As a result of this incredible dominance by a foreign presence in our economy a lot of money leaves Canada every week and goes back to the head offices. In fact, every day, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year, $2.5 million each hour flows out of Canada back to the parent companies in other countries, primarily in the United States of America. One of the major reasons there is a lot more investment in Canada is because every hour of the day $2.5 million flows out of Canada back to foreign countries. No other country in the world accepts this state of affairs.

How is it in Canada's best interest to have such extensive foreign involvement in our economy? The most recent example is the Dome takeover. Amoco has operated in Canada for 40 years. In spite of the length of time during which it has been here there is not a single Canadian on its board of directors and there is absolutely no Canadian ownership whatsoever. This company now wants to take over one of the critical players in the oil and gas industry of Canada.

The Government favours an American company taking over Dome Petroleum; it approves an American company having total control of this company and that future profits made in Canada will go to the United States.

Where do we turn to when we have a Government which thinks it is a great idea to have foreigners deciding our future? We can only hope that the people of Canada will realize that there is an incredible sell-out taking place and will register their concern in the next federal election. Unfortunately, that will probably not come for 18 months and in the interim we must do what we can to bring some logic to the Dome takeover.

We believe there are alternatives. The proposal that Dome would sell some of its shares to Canada if the Amoco takeover is approved is of little comfort. It is important to distinguish clearly between ownership and control. We are concerned that the control of Dome will be held by foreigners, mainly Amoco representatives, rather than Canadians. The decision of where the parent company will be headquartered will, therefore, be made in the best interests of the United States. Handing out a few shares to Canadian shareholders will not change that one iota. The future decision-making of that company will be done by people who are not Canadian citizens. Presumably they will be good American citizens, so the decisions will be made in the best interests of the Amoco corporation and, ultimately, the United States of America.

Mr. Cassidy: The Tories don't mind that.

Mr. Riis: As my friend from Ottawa says, the Tories don't mind that. Presumably this is what they want. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to New York and said that we want more foreigners doing business in Canada he was really saying that the Government does not have faith in Canadian investors and entrepreneurs. Well, Madam Speaker, we have faith. We believe that we should begin looking for solutions to job creation and economic prosperity at home. We should take pride in the knowledge that we can do the job and do not have to turn to the Japanese, Americans or Germans to solve our problems. We like their support, encouragement and involvement, but we are not looking to them to solve our economic problems.

The United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has indicated that it wants to change the rules under which we export our natural gas. It has said that the way in which we handle the transmission of our gas and assign the charges to that transmission is not now appropriate for exports to the United States.

This is a very short-sighted decision by the Americans. In 1986 we exported 744 billion cubic feet to the United States. That is a relatively small amount considering our historic trend. It was that low because of the fall in the cost of No. 6 fuel oil in the United States. I suspect that that is probably a temporary situation and that in the future the cost of No. 6 fuel oil will go up, as oil costs generally do. The demand for natural gas will then increase. As a matter of fact, only a few days ago western oil reports indicated that Tennaco from the United States was in Canada looking for possible ways to facilitate future gas exports to the United States.

We must also realize that President Reagan is a lame duck President. While our Prime Minister and the President of the United States may be good friends, write letters back and forth, and telephone each other as the news release indicates, it is really Congress which decides upon the protectionist policies that will be applied.

As a result of this recent decision by FERC the playing field for natural gas exports to the United States has been tilted in favour of the U.S. They no longer provide equal opportunities for Canadian exporters to the United States. That is the real concern. We must realize that because the Prime Minister calls President Reagan on a regular basis and asks for his help is irrelevant. The President of the United States is either not interested in intervening on Canada's behalf, or not prepared or not able to intervene on Canada's behalf. Whatever the reason, that the Prime Minister reminds us daily of his close friendship with President Reagan is of little comfort, indeed.

In closing, we once again find that western Canada has been betrayed by the inability of the Government to deal with the international crisis affecting natural gas exports, just as the Government was so woefully inadequate in its response to the challenge on softwood lumber exports. One almost shudders to think of what tomorrow's headline will bring us. On what sector will the Americans next make a demand in response to which the Government, true to form, will say that if there is any way in which we can co-operate we will do so, whether with regard to steel exports, agricultural or mineral policy? More than simply having caved in, the Government has co-operated with the American demand on Dome.

We oppose the way in which the Government has bungled the situation of natural gas exports. In spite of the promises made by the Prime Minister when he was in western Canada that he would do something, he has done nothing about this matter. In spite of the promises of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he would do something, he has done nothing. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources admitted today in the House that he was unable to do anything, that it is now up to the law courts in the United States and it will probably take years and years. It looks as though all Canadians will have to look to another political Party if their interests are to be adequately met.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). His opening and closing remarks seemed to sum up the purpose of his rising to speak in the House today. In my opinion, he is not really concerned about the problems that we face in the energy industry in western Canada, but concerned about his Party's popularity and opportunity to transfer some of the support that has supposedly eroded from the Conservative Party in mid-term over to his Party.

I want to assure him that his rhetoric and misspeak will not go unnoticed. The Hon. Member talked about takeovers and that they represented a takeover of Canada by the United States. Of course, we in the House are familiar with the New Democratic Party rhetoric and that the socialist party of this country has always been anti-American.

The Member said that we allowed the Americans to come here and test the Cruise missile. We know the position of the socialist New Democratic Party about the NATO Alliance. Now they are trying to hide that policy and say that we have a commitment to defend the north. They are against armed forces in the north yet say we must defend and define our position in the north.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Come off it. We never said that.

Mr. Shields: They are having difficulty determining their own position. They then talk about drugs. We are the only western country—

Mr. Cassidy: You are sensitive. You are going down the tubes in Alberta.

Mr. Shields: Listen to them now. The socialists are speaking rhetoric, as they always do. Let us consider the drug question. We are the only western country that did not recognize and protect intellectual property.

The New Democrats say that we are allowing "those dirty Americans" to take over Dome Petroleum. Presently, Canadians own 25 per cent to 30 per cent of Dome. Amoco has offered to take over Dome to keep it operating and has said that it would sell off the same per centage of shares to Canadians. Now the New Democratic Party says that is not good enough, that there should be control of the company.

Let us consider the lumber issue. The Americans proposed a 25 per cent countervail duty on lumber going into the United States. We worked out an agreement and introduced a Bill that kept the money in Canada.

The speeches by the NDP are strictly anti-American rhetoric. They talked about Mr. Trudeau, the Constitution, and the Meech Lake Accord. Why did the New Democratic Party deny in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights that we passed in the House the right of each Canadian to own property?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We never did.

Mr. Shields: They were shoulder to shoulder with Pierre Elliott Trudeau because they are socialists and cannot allow individual Canadians to own property. The New Democratic Party betrayed every Canadian because they prevented the inclusion of the right of ownership of property in the Constitution so that all Canadians and their children could have the fundamental right to own property. That is where the socialists stand.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that there was opposition to the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution. Let me remind the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) that his Party has been in government for almost three years. Have those Members indicated an interest in entrenching property rights in the Constitution?

Mr. Shields: Look on the Order Paper. It is there.

Mr. Riis: We have been talking about the Constitution for months but they have never mentioned that the Government is at all interested in putting property rights in the Constitution. I can understand why the Member is upset. I would be upset as well if I was part of a majority of 212 Members that had 60 per cent of the popular vote in Canada but is now at some 22 per cent. I would also be concerned because we know that Alberta will be changing its electoral behaviour significantly as soon as the opportunity arises.

The Hon. Member mentioned the Dome Petroleum takeover. Our Party is concerned about the Dome takeover because it plays a critical role in the natural gas and oil industry of Canada. It is a major player in the oil patch in western Canada and we believe that it ought to be maintained in Canadian hands. The majority of Canadians feel the same way, as in the testing of the Cruise. When it comes to the takeover of Dome by a foreign enterprise, most Canadians believe it is not in our best interests and would rather see a Canadian solution.

We proposed a Canadian solution, which involves a consortium of a number of Canadian companies, including Petro-Canada, that be allowed to make a bid to take over Dome Petroleum and keep it in Canadian hands. The Government has not shown any interest in such a proposal.

Day after day we urged the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to facilitate a Canadian solution, but he is not interested. The point that must be made is that the evidence over the last two and one-half years leads one to believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Government of Canada would prefer a foreign takeover to allow Americans to run the economy of Canada rather than Canadians.

That is clearly where we differ. We have faith in Canadians and in Canada. We want a Canadian solution and expected the Minister of Energy to facilitate a Canadian solution. He did not do so because the Government does not believe such a solution is useful either now or in the future.

When it comes to Canada, we in the New Democratic Party prefer a Canadian solution. We believe a Canadian solution is possible if the Government would allow Petro-Canada to work in consortium with a number of other Canadian companies to come forward with a Canadian bid for troubled Dome Petroleum.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, is it true that the official policy of the New Democratic Party is not to sell gas from western Canada to the United States? Is that the stand of the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the seventh time I have responded to that question, but I will try again. The policy that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to was passed in 1979 during the second OPEC crisis, when reports from the National Energy Board indicated that the natural gas security for Canada was under some question. It was not clear to what extent our reserves were in place to ensure Canadian supply.

Much has changed since 1979 and, as our energy critic, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has indicated on a number of occasions, under appropriate conditions, where our security is assured, that exports of natural gas to the United States would be supported by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my socialist friend opposite whether we should pay attention to anything he said. He stated unequivocally that the new reform association that was formed in Vancouver was a Tory organization totally. I am sure he knows that Stan Roberts, a former President of the Chamber of Commerce, is a noted Liberal and is one of the three founding members. Why should we pay attention to anything the Member says when he makes a statement like that?

Mr. Riis: The reason I said that virtually everyone there was a Tory—

Mr. Stewart: I did not hear you say that.

Mr. Riis: If I did not say "virtually", it is because I do not distinguish clearly between Liberals and Tories when it comes to policies in this country. Liberal policies on most issues are not clearly defined as being any different from Conservative policies.

If there is one political party that is different from the Conservatives and Liberals, it is the New Democratic Party. Let me state clearly that virtually all of the participants who are disillusioned westerners were card-carrying Conservatives and a handful were Liberals. As I said, however, I do not distinguish much between the two.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today. I want to return to the comments by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). I will suggest to him that out of all the rhetoric we heard from the other side today, he has a real sense of the problems we face. I noted he listened attentively to what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) had to say. I think he understands the problems we are facing.

The National Energy Board in Canada, as a quasi-judicial board, may receive representation from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, or from Members of the House of Commons, but, being a quasi-judicial body, it cannot be directed. It makes decisions as it sees fit in the national interests. That is Canada.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States, commonly called FERC, is also a quasi-judicial body. It is set up very similar to the National Energy Board. It cannot be directed to adopt a regulation or policy in exactly the same way as the National Energy Board cannot. I note that the motion before the House refers to the weak and ineffectual efforts of the Government of Canada to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. I wish to address my remarks to that aspect of the motion.

To begin, I would like to remind the House that the approach taken by the Government towards its energy policy is an approach which differs dramatically from the confrontational, divisive and unpredictable actions of previous administrations. In fact, I find it a bit ironic that the Liberal Opposition chose to denounce a decision by a U.S. regulatory agency which bears a very striking resemblance to the high-handed tactics embodied in the Liberals' National Energy Program which totally and absolutely devastated the oil and natural gas industry in western Canada.

Mr. Foster: Take a look at the number of jobs lost out there.

Mr. Shields: In contrast, the energy policies of this Government are built on the firm foundations of consultation, co-operation and consensus.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) tells me to look at the situation now. The situation now is that the industry can move and move freely. We are doing exactly what it has asked. We have deregulated, we have brought in the Western Accord, and never again, if the Meech Lake Accord goes through, will any Liberal Government be able to perpetrate such a disaster on a region in this country.

The Western Accord and the agreement on natural gas markets and prices have provided our oil and gas industry with a flexible market oriented framework in which it can compete effectively for sales in Canada and the United States. With respect to energy trade, we are taking a consistent approach to remove unnecessary regulator burdens and to rely on market forces as the most efficient allocators of energy resources.

Our policies have been successful. Our energy producers have been able to maintain and even expand market share within a highly competitive international market. Canadian consumers have also benefited from access to secure, reasonably priced, domestic energy resources. What really sets our approach apart from that advocated by the Opposition is that we work with the provinces, with industry, with the consumers and with our trading partners to develop policies which meet the needs of buyers and sellers.

We know we are on the right track since, following their January meeting—I might add that it was the first meeting since 1977 of Canada's energy Ministers—the energy Ministers jointly reaffirmed that adherence to market mechanisms is most important in ensuring that the most efficient decisions are made regarding energy supply and demand. However, we are not content to rest with these achievements.

In April, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced a unique, consultative process to examine ways to plan for Canada's energy future. In three weeks, the first of a series of energy options conferences begins in Calgary. I am very impressed both with the level of interest this consultative process has generated and with the enthusiasm being displayed by the participants. With some of the best minds in the country engaged in debate and dialogue, the energy options conferences promise to yield innovative approaches to Canada's energy future.

Despite our success, we are not blind to current problems faced by our energy industry. The legacy of unfair legislation, unworkable regulations and economic imprudence left by the previous Government presents a serious challenge. Our task is not made easier by volatility in international energy markets.

The removal of the petroleum and gas revenue tax and the introduction of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, are concrete examples of the commitment of the Government to a strong oil and natural gas producing sector. In light of this commitment, it should come as no surprise that the Government has protested vigorously against FERC Opinion 256. As a Member from Alberta, I am particularly concerned about the impact of this decision on the western Canadian oil and gas industry. I know first-hand of the importance to our energy industry of access to markets at home and abroad. This is especially true with natural gas. Because of our rich resource base, Canadians have been able to export surpluses of natural gas for over 30 years. These exports have provided the economies of scale needed to finance the major pipeline systems now serving domestic markets. They also generate the cash flow needed by producers for reinvestment in the exploration and development required to bring on new reserves, thus ensuring all Canadians with future supply security.

Because of the importance of natural gas exports, we are clearly alarmed at any new barrier to our long-standing bilateral trade. FERC Opinion 256 is just such a barrier. The decision disallows assured full recovery from U.S. customers of certain costs; costs which have been incurred in Canada and established by Canadian regulators to provide firm pipeline capacity to serve the export market. In plain terms, FERC will allow pass through of regulated Canadian transportation charges only on a "made in the U.S.A." basis.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys is correct. The FERC order infringes on our regulatory system. The Government of Canada has several very real concerns about Opinion 256. First, there is the question of jurisdiction. For the past decades regulators in Canada and the U.S. have accepted the consequence of each other's regulatory actions. In other words, the regulatory bodies here and in the United States have jointly accepted those actions. This decision by the regulatory body, FERC, in the United States, overturns this long-standing practice and has the effect of extending U.S. pipeline rate-making into Canadian jurisdiction.

We believe that Canadian and U.S. regulators, respectively, are in the best positions to determine just and reasonable pipeline rates in their own jurisdictions. Canadians have long accepted U.S.-designed tolls for those pipelines—the Lakehead, Portland and the Great Lakes—carrying oil and gas to our markets. By the same token, we expect the U.S. to accept the charges, set in accordance with established rate-making principles, associated with the transportation of gas in Canada to U.S. consumers.

We are also gravely concerned about the economic impact of Opinion 256 on Canadian producers. Those producers serving the export market receive a net-back price for their gas. This means that from gross export revenues received at the international border Canadian transportation tolls are deducted and the residual is returned to producers. If export transportation charges are not fully recovered from those U.S. consumers on whose behalf pipeline investment was made, then Canadian producers will bear the risk of under-recovery.

Our calculations show that even a limited application of Opinion 256 to existing export arrangements will cost Canadian producers at least $140 million U.S. Clearly, this revenue drop is unacceptable when our industry is still coping with last year's sudden fall in world oil prices.

Finally, Opinion 256 has serious implications for the bilateral energy trade policy framework established by our respective Governments over the past three years. In February, 1984, the U.S. Department of Energy introduced a new natural gas import policy. This policy strongly emphasized natural gas trade arrangements based on arm's length, private sector negotiations, and free from undue regulatory interference. Further, the Secretary of Energy clearly delegated authority over natural gas imports to the U.S. economic regulatory administration.

The framework gave the Government of Canada confidence to move in November, 1984, to its own export policy, based on buyer-seller negotiations, subject only to broad public interest criteria. Knowing the rules of the game we are able to allow our industry the flexibility to compete in U.S. markets. This consistent Canada-U.S. approach was confirmed in joint undertaking by the President and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the 1985 Quebec Summit to remove regulatory barriers to energy trade.

Thus we are disappointed with a FERC decision which adds a new and unexpected regulatory hurdle to the private sector contractual negotiation process. Opinion 256 has the effect of interfering in negotiated contracts which had already been determined by the U.S. economic regulatory administration to be just, reasonable and in the public interest. Such action clearly runs counter to the U.S. administration's natural gas import policy.

The Minister of Energy has outlined to the House the concrete action taken by the Government of Canada, in full consultation and co-operation with the producing provinces and the industry, to bring our concerns to the attention of the U.S. administration.

It is true that our representations did not deter the FERC from reaffirming its original approach. However, this should not be interpreted as a failure. Our arguments have gained ground. It is clear that many in the U.S. administration and among the customers of Canadian gas are deeply concerned about the impact of this decision on the credibility of the United States as a reliable trading partner. There is pressure in the United States from consumers of Canadian natural gas on the administration and, indeed, on the regulatory body because they recognize the impact on the credibility of the United States as a reliable trading partner and the effect that this could have on their continued energy security. So we are not alone in our concerns.

The United States needs Canadian natural gas, and it needs it now. Many of the regional markets are heavily dependent on our gas supplies. As U.S. deliverability declines, demand for natural gas imports will increase. U.S. consumers know that Canadian natural gas is reliable. When they want secure, long-term contracts they come to Canada.

Over the past year we have seen several proposals to serve the U.S. Northeast with Canadian natural gas. Ocean State, Alberta Northeast and the Shell-Granite State contracts will provide our producers with new markets for their natural gas. Even more important, these projects will supply the Northeast with a secure, reasonably priced alternative to oil imports.

It is this kind of mutual benefit that has been the underpinning of our bilateral gas trade. But industry on both sides of the border must have a predictable, stable basis on which they can negotiate arrangements which meet the needs of buyers and sellers.

In conclusion, we intend to sustain and increase our efforts to bring our concerns to the attention of the U.S. administration, U.S. regulators, authorities and U.S. consumers and producers.

Unlike the previous Liberal Government, this Government believes that discussion and dialogue are the best tools to bring an end to trade problems. We are determined to overcome problems affecting our natural gas trade so that industry on both sides of the border will be free to continue and to develop trade arrangements of lasting benefit to both our countries. This Government is not anti-American.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the speech of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I have always known him to be fairly straightforward and fair. However, once again, as with the Minister, I find very great difficulty in accepting that the Government can do nothing other than what it has done. It is not making any objection to the turning down of the petition of the Canadian natural gas producers other than the Prime Minister saying that he will bring it up at the Venice Summit.

Something which I am completely unable to swallow is the fact that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission of the United States is able to make rulings that affect Canada, particularly when they concern the import of natural gas into the United States, something which falls under the jurisdiction of the Department of Energy of the United States, yet the Department of Energy can do nothing. In my opinion the American Department of Energy is playing politics and is choosing to do nothing. I think that our Government's letters and requests to the American Government are being ignored. I think that is detrimental to the Canadian economy, in particular to the export of natural gas from Canada to the United States. It is blatantly offensive and damaging to Canadian sovereignty.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Athabasca about something his Minister said regarding investment in Canada and how Investment Canada is being run. I have a great concern about the amount of money coming into Canada from outside Canada which is going toward acquisitions instead of new investment in this country. When I hear that 90 per cent of the money involved in the approvals of Investment Canada goes not to investment but to acquisitions I have a tremendous difficulty seeing that as being of benefit to Canada.

What I want to ask the Hon. Member is how this will benefit Canada.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I will answer the last question first. The Hon. Member talked about investment coming into Canada. To illustrate my point let us use as an example the Husky investment by Mr. Lee of Hong Kong and the subsequent announcement of the $1 billion investment to develop in the Beaufort. I think that is very significant. It is clear to me that there is considerable benefit when someone of Mr. Lee's stature invests in the purchase of a large oil company and then immediately upon it going through Investment Canada announces a major investment in terms of the development of the Beaufort. I think that is what we are talking about.

Let us recognize too that this is not a country—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. When Government Orders are resumed the Hon. Member will have six minutes left in his question and comment period.

It being one o'clock, I do leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

DISASTERS

FATAL MINE ACCIDENT IN ELLIOT LAKE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last Friday morning there was a tragic accident at the Rio Algom Panel Mine in Elliot Lake which took the life of Kevin Grondin. I want to extend our sympathy to his wife and family on this sad and tragic occasion.

This accident was the ninth in Ontario mines this year. It points out the dangers in mining and points to the need for continuous improvement to mining safety and health regulations.

I also want to pay tribute to the valiant efforts of six mine rescue teams of seven members each who worked around the clock from the time of the accident until the body of Mr. Grondin was found on Sunday around six o'clock. Their bravery and tremendous effort to save a fellow miner in the face of obvious danger are commendable.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ATTACK BY CONTRA FORCES ON CANADIAN AID PROJECT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week Contra terrorists attacked a Canadian funded co-operative farm in Nicaragua killing 10 people, wounding eight, and kidnapping four. They destroyed homes, buildings and farm equipment. These terrorists are financed by the Reagan Government and by powerful right-wingers such as the anti-union owners of Coors beer.

The Contras are trying to turn the clock back to the dark days of the Somoza regime and the only way they know to do it is by cowardly attacks on community health centres, schools, co-operative farms and other development projects.

Because the farm was funded by Canadians through the Farmers for Peace organization, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) condemned the raid. However, Canada must do more than issue a vague condemnation. We need to protest, in the strongest terms, to the Reagan Government. Its funding of the Contras is cowardly and despicable and must be so named by any Government that claims to stand for the development ideals of the Canadian people.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—CALL FOR INCLUSION OF HAY PRODUCERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the farmers who produce hay were denied assistance under the Special Canadian Grains Program last fall but here are some sound reasons why they should be included in the pay-out this spring. Barley crops were subsidized under the program and, as a result, barley was sold to feeders at a cheaper rate than hay. Feeders are the main market for hay. In addition, grain farmers cut poor crops and sold them as green feed. Again, because it was subsidized the green feed was sold at a lower price than hay.

Just as subsidization of agricultural products by the EEC and U.S.A. put our grain farmers in a position where the selling price is below the cost of production, the Canadian government subsidization has placed our hay producers in the same position. As a result the price of hay is now one-third of what it was. In desperation the hay farmers turned to the export market but found the Americans were subsidizing compressed hay, and so they lost out again.

Hay producers cannot compete against government money any more than can any other farmer. The bottom line is that we destroy this needed segment of agriculture with government subsidies to its competitors, or we include hay producers in the Special Canadian Grains Program. Which will it be?

THE ADMINISTRATION

AWARDING OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, for some people, as we know, the time period since the 1984 elections has been very difficult. But for other Canadians, this period under the Conservative régime has been rewarding.

I want to say that one of these people who has become richer at the expense of the public and Canadian taxpayers is Mr. Roger Nantel. Today, as a matter of fact, the media report that Mr. Nantel is alleged to have been awarded untendered contracts valued at more than $4 million.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand one of these contracts for $46,200. I will tell you what Mr. Nantel was expected to do to earn this money: take part in the preparation and drafting of a summary brief; coordinate the organization of a poll; coordinate slide composition and reproduction services; write speeches; prepare an audiovisual presentation for March 26, 1986. As I said earlier, he was paid $46,200 for these services.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should apologize to the House for spending public funds this way.

GERIATRICS

POPULATION'S AGING TREND

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the announcement last week of the birth in Toronto of test-tube triplets has resulted in some well-deserved national attention for my friend, Dr. George Woo, his laboratory initiated foetal emplacement program, and the Toronto East General and Orthopaedic Hospital in my constituency.

It also brings to mind the fact that when my children were born there, the East General recorded more births each year than any other hospital in Canada, with the exception of the Vancouver General. Now all of that has changed.

Apart from Dr. Woo's in vitro fertilization program, the East General is now better known for geriatrics than it is for obstetrics. It is a dramatic reminder of Canada's aging population. At present, approximately 11 per cent of Canadians are over 65; in my riding it is over 20 per cent. By the year 2010, over 25 per cent of all Canadians will be senior citizens.

If Canada's birth rate and immigration levels do not increase, there will be a smaller pool of workers to support this larger number of seniors. Mr. Speaker, do you ever wonder where your old age pension is going to come from?

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

CALL FOR RE-EVALUATION OF DRAFT LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today marks the beginning of Environment Week. All across Canada events took place last weekend, and will be taking place this week, pursuant to the theme: "It's up to all of us".

I want the Government to remember that it is also very much up to the Government. In keeping with that sentiment, I call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to re-evaluate the Environmental Protection Act, the draft of which he has already put before the public and of which he intends to introduce a second draft this month. I call upon him to respond to the criticisms that have been made of the first draft.

The Minister and the Government know—

[Editor's Note: And a stranger having entered the Chamber, addressed the Chair, and been removed by Assistant Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms Leo Robitaille:]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not mean to get everybody so excited.

I call upon the Government to consider the following recommendations to the Environmental Protection Act so that the Act might live up to its name: to incorporate a meaningful Environmental Bill of Rights establishing Canadians' right to a clean and healthy environment and the right to go to court to protect those rights; to expand the scope of the Act to include the control and registration of pesticides, and other federal environmental legislation; to make the Act the pre-eminent federal environmental legislation, taking precedence over all others; and to strengthen the public's right-to-know provisions in the Act and increased public involvement in the operation of the Act.

These are but a few of the changes the Government should make to the proposed Environmental Protection Act if it is truly serious about protecting the environment.

CULTURE

WEEK OF FRENCH SONGS IN CANADA—ROLE OF BROADCASTERS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) I am pleased to tell the House that the Week of French Song in Canada was officially opened yesterday evening. This remarkable event is undoubtedly a highlight in the history of French broadcasting in Canada. For the first time in the world public and private broadcasters join their efforts to celebrate their country's talents.

The main purpose of this project sponsored by the Association canadienne de la radio et de la télévision de langue française is to provide francophone creators and performers a unique opportunity to present their works and gain wider recognition and better appreciation in their respective circles. This ACRTF initiative shows it is anxious to respond more readily to the needs and aspirations of francophones artists and audiences in Canada, and its determination to contribute to the expansion of the French presence on our airwaves.

Mr. Speaker, let us hope this event will make Canadians proud of all these artists, and at the same time pay high tribute to the artisans of Canada's French song industry.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT HOME MAIL DELIVERY SERVICE BE RESTORED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, despite the rain, several hundred people in Montreal East met to protest against the service provided by Canada Post with the Government's approval, and I am referring to the cuts in home delivery and the continuing installation of superboxes.

Mr. Speaker, these people were determined. They are fed up with being treated like second-class citizens. People living practically next door are getting home delivery, and they are not, because their homes were built a year later. They pay the same 36 cents for their stamps, they pay the same taxes but they are not getting the same service.

I think it is high time this Government gave Canada Post a clear-cut mandate to reinstate home delivery.

MINES AND MINING

TRIBUTE TO EMPLOYEES AND MANAGING DIRECTOR OF SIGMA MINE AT VAL D'OR IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 17, 1937, it was St. Patrick's Day all over the world. But, in Val-d'Or, in Abitibi, it was the day the new plant at the Sigma mine started its operations.

Sigma has always had a reputation as a reliable gold mine, a progressive and well-organized company with the lowest turnover rate of any mine of its class in Canada, thanks to the excellent relations between management and the independent employees' union under the leadership of Mr. André Busque.

Under the management of Mr. C. Henri Bréhaut and Mr. J. André Carrier, engineer and Director General, Sigma Québec Mines Ltd. celebrated its fiftieth anniversary last Saturday, with all former and present employees, administrators and a number of local, provincial and national figures.

Sigma produces over 3,515,000 troy ounces of gold and 680,000 troy ounces of silver. Sigma's history is also that of its workers, the men who work underground, the workers in the plant, the geologists and the engineers.

Mr. Speaker, as a former miner with the company, I say three cheers for Director General André Carrier and his employees!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE SOUGHT OF WOMAN CONVICTED OF SECOND DEGREE MURDER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Maisie Clark is a 63-year-old woman presently serving a life sentence at the Prison for Women in Kingston, Ontario. She was convicted of second degree murder, and except for a period of nine months during her appeal she has been incarcerated since October 26, 1981. According to the verdict, she must serve 10 years before she becomes eligible for parole.

Maisie Clark's offence is a classic case of a crime of passion. One commentator stated that "she snapped under a combination of grief, loneliness and sexual humiliation." She has had the support of many prominent Canadians, including the ex-warden of the Prison for Women, Isabel McNeil of Mill Village, Nova Scotia.

The continued incarceration of Maisie Clark serves no useful purpose from the point of view of rehabilitation or the protection of society. She is a mother and a grandmother. She is in failing health and it is unlikely in the extreme that she will ever commit another crime. Her life sentence may as well be a death sentence.

I would ask that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) consider exercising his authority under the royal prerogative of mercy to release Maisie Clark. The criminal justice system would be well served by her release.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—CATHOLIC PRIEST RETURNED TO LABOUR CAMP

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, since Mikhail Gorbachev came to power, the Soviet Union has been telling all the world that it is changing. The world receives a constant barrage of propaganda designed to project an image of caring and understanding. Yet the U.S.S.R. continues its brutal war in Afghanistan, its persecution of Jews, and the stifling of religious freedoms.

A Lithuanian Catholic priest, Father Tamevicius, has been returned to a Soviet labour camp after refusing to confess to anti-state activities. Father Tamevicius said:

> In prison, I will always pray for . . . the struggle for the freedom of the church and for basic human rights. Do not believe it when propagandists for Government atheism say that such activity is political. It is not politics, but a matter of life and death for all of us.

Religious freedom has been a cornerstone of democracy, and the Soviet Union continues to demonstrate that religious freedom will never be tolerated, but it is finding that religion and faith will never be extinguished.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GENERAL STRIKE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, today, a day of protest by workers throughout the province, has brought the Province of British Columbia to a standstill. This is a dramatic moment in the history of the province, indeed in the history of Canada, and in the struggle for trade union and democratic freedoms in our society.

As former B.C. Deputy Labour Minister, Graham Leslie, has pointed out, the Vander Zalm Government has reintroduced unacceptable confrontation and conflict to industrial relations in B.C. Furthermore, Bill 19 clearly contravenes ILO Convention 87 dealing with freedom of association and the right to organize. Canada is a signatory to this Convention which among other things guarantees workers and employers the right to draw up their own constitutions and rules. It also prohibits public authorities from impeding the exercise of that right and seeks to prevent Governments from interfering with already negotiated settlements.

• (1415)

The Government of B.C. clearly has no intention of working within labour-management norms that conform to accepted standards of a modern democratic state. Hence this day of protest.

CANADIAN RED CROSS

BLOOD DONOR CLINIC—PARTICIPATION BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to take this opportunity to make a non-partisan announcement.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, I'm going to listen.

Mr. Lewis: Great, I want you to do so.

Three or four times a year the House of Commons participates in blood donor clinics. Today and tomorrow, the blood donor clinic is taking place in Room 200, West Block. I would encourage all of my colleagues in the House, staff, and even the media to attend to give blood. At the same time, I would encourage Canadians all across the country to do the same. This gift means so very much to the recipient and at the same time gives the donor the opportunity to extend life.

[English]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENT SEE FINAL TEXT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I put a question or two to the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader? My question revolves around the constitutional process.

On May 1 and May 11 I said in the House of Commons that Parliament had the right to see the final text of the proposed constitutional amendment before it was again negotiated with the Premiers. Will Parliament be allowed to see that final text before it is signed by the Premiers of the provinces?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, the Prime Minister indicated on May 1 and again on May 11 that every opportunity would be made available to Members of the House to participate in this very important issue. As he knows, the First Ministers are meeting tomorrow. We are not sure whether an agreement will be ratified but we are all hopeful that that will be the case. If such is the case, then I would be prepared to sit down with the House Leaders opposite to work out a satisfactory arrangement for Parliament to consider this issue, and I would do so at the earliest possible opportunity.

DEMAND FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I bet the Deputy Prime Minister's answer will indicate that Parliament will have the right to see and examine the text after rather than before it is signed by the First Ministers.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favour of the Meech Lake agreement as a basis to bring Quebec back into the constitutional fold, and I still am. The Constitution is the basic statute of Canada. It governs the implementation of all our legislation and our institutions.

I want the Deputy Prime Minister to explain to us how he intends to allow us to make improvements to the agreement? Will there be exhaustive public parliamentary hearings here in Ottawa and across the country to enable Canadians to voice their opinions on the legal text? Will the constitutional resolution undergo at least the same legislative process as an ordinary bill?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, those questions and issues that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition quite rightly raises would be part of the considerations that I would hope to discuss with the Opposition House Leaders.

As the Prime Minister indicated, he made the commitment to all Hon. Members of the House to become as actively involved as possible to provide the moral leadership to the country and for other Governments. It would be in that spirit and in that context that we would attempt to establish the kind of process that would allow that to proceed in the interests not only of examining all elements of the Accord but of engaging in a national debate affecting a very important issue to all Canadians from one coast to the other.

• (1420)

PROCESSES TO ADDRESS VARIOUS CONCERNS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows, I have always been supportive of the Meech Lake Accord as a basis for bringing Quebec into our Federation as a full partner under the Constitution Act, 1982, and I still am.

I also told the Prime Minister, during the two interventions I made in Parliament on the subject, of areas which we believe need to be strengthened, including the Charter of Rights, the future of our northern Territories, the protection of our aboriginal peoples, more certainty about the scope of federal spending power, and guarantees on minority language rights.

Does the final text take into account the concerns I have raised? If not, what process will be followed to allow those concerns to be addressed openly, completely and publicly by this House of Commons so that Canadians can be fully apprised of the basic law of our country before it is finally adopted?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, as I am sure are all Hon. Members, at least those on this side of the House are, that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition agrees with the spirit of the Meech Lake Accord. We have not seen the final draft and it is, therefore, very difficult to answer precisely the questions which the Right Hon. Leader has put. However, it is my understanding that in the 1981-82 case there were amendments entered into and agreed to.

I repeat that we will be discussing these things with House Leaders presuming, of course, that an agreement is reached tomorrow. I can assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, pursuant to the statements which have been made by the Prime Minister, that we will certainly allow Members every opportunity to become engaged in this very important debate.

REQUEST FOR CLEAR LEGAL TEXT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): In the absence of the Prime Minister, this question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Meech Lake Accord. Hon. Members are aware of my position both inside and outside the House and I do not intend to change it. However, there are many people who, as I did when I spoke in the House on May 11, have raised the question how the provision relating to spending power is to be interpreted.

Tomorrow, the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial Premiers are to meet to draft a legal text that will embody the Accord. Can the Deputy Prime Minister give the House and all Canadians the assurance that the legal text the Prime Minister intends to propose to his provincial counterparts will be clear and precise, to avoid any ambiguity regarding the federal Government's capability to propose and implement national programs, and furthermore, to allay the concern that was raised as a result of faulty interpretation by certain provinces, and especially Quebec, the concern that the federal Government might be able to intervene without prior consultation in areas under exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Can the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the legal text will be quite clear in that respect?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to engage in a debate on specifics at this particular time. That is precisely why at a very early opportunity we triggered a debate in the House of Commons to get the precise views of Hon. Members opposite and those on this side of the House on the principles of the Accord.

With regard to interpretation, there are certainly Premiers who are putting forth certain interpretations which might be somewhat at variance with that which was agreed upon. All those things will be discussed tomorrow. Naturally, the views, opinions, and the admonitions that the Hon. Member raised in a very eloquent speech in the House will certainly be taken into consideration. That is precisely why we wanted that debate at a very early opportunity.

RIGHTS OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I had some trouble following the Deputy Prime Minister's reasoning, because what it comes down to is that we can address the subject any number of times in the House—God knows I have not been remiss in this respect—but we do not have a chance to make any specific proposals. So we have to depend on the information the Government is willing to give us. What it boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government is conducting these negotiations and it refuses to answer.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker, in the Meech Lake Accord, a number of other issues were raised. I was in Northern Ontario on the weekend, and I met a lot of francophones living outside Quebec. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he can give the House and all Canadians, especially French-speaking Canadians living outside Quebec, the assurance that the legal texts that will probably be produced tomorrow at Meech Lake or some other venue, will not only guarantee the rights of francophones outside Quebec but also guarantee that those rights can be reaffirmed and that it is the role of the Parliament of Canada and the provinces to promote the rights of francophones outside Quebec. Francophones outside Quebec want to be full-fledged citizens, and they want to be able to live and obtain services in their own language across the country.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman opposite should not have any difficulty following my line of reasoning. We have had debate on this issue in the House. There is—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): One day.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A very short debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Members say one day. We offered to extend the time, to extend the hours. There was not the kind of—

Mr. Gauthier: One government day.

Mr. Mazankowski: —reciprocal agreement in kind.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One day on trade, one day on the Constitution. Great.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact is that there has been a debate. There is a debate going on outside the House.

Mr. Forrestall: It has been going on since Victoria some years ago.

Mr. Rossi: Okay, blabbermouth.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: As I said, there has been debate. There is an ongoing debate outside the House. There will be further debate. There will probably be hearings, providing we can reach some understanding with the House Leaders. There will be ample opportunity for all Hon. Members to put forth their points of view and draw attention to any weaknesses or strengths that the Accord may have.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS EXPORTS—U.S. REGULATORY COMMISSION'S DECISION—ACTION BY PRIME MINISTERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Not long ago the Prime Minister promised in Lethbridge that the Canadian Government would do everything it could to ensure that no U.S. energy agency, and specifically the Federal Regulatory Energy Commission, would take unfair steps against Canadian gas exports. As a consequence, a letter was sent by the Prime Minister, and was simply forwarded, without endorsation by the President, to this commission. We saw that the results were negative in terms of Canadian interests.

Since the Prime Minister is now going to raise the issue again, this time at Venice, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Deputy Prime Minister tell us very precisely what kind of action he will be asking President Reagan to take?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question was dealt with at some length last week, but if the Hon. Member wants to continue to pursue it, naturally I will seek to reply. There will be meetings involving the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and myself, with senior American authorities in the United States. On one level we will make known to them our very great regret that the representations we have made did not have greater effect upon the quasi-judicial body.

We are determining if there are other options open to the Government of the United States that we can recommend to it. I do not think that there is a great deal of advantage in publicizing in the House of Commons what those particular recommendations might be before we make them.

Mr. Broadbent: The people of western Canada, and the people in the Minister's home Province of Alberta are particularly interested in the outcome, as the Minister knows.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister talked about the Prime Minister's intention to bring this up in Venice, presumably the Government has reviewed the appropriate legislation in the United States to see what avenue is legitimately open to the Government of Canada. If there is not some legitimate avenue open to us to protest, are we not simply misleading the people of Canada in suggesting the Prime Minister is going to talk to Mr. Reagan in Venice?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certainly I am not attempting to mislead the people of Canada, nor is the Prime Minister. The Leader of the Opposition—excuse me—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Benjamin: You were right the first time.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Leader of the Opposition, of course, is hiding out in Mount Royal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Leader of the New Democratic Party asked me last week whether there would be a contact by telephone with the President. I indicated that instead of relying upon a telephone communication—although I know that to be the preferred instrument of the Leader of the New Democratic Party—we thought it would be preferable to have a direct contact between the President and the Prime Minister.

I indicated in the House previously that at this stage we know there is a legal recourse open to Canadian firms. We are encouraging them to pursue that. We are looking at any other instrument which might be available to us, or to the United States, and expect to know the full range of options we might either be able to take or to recommend by the time of those meetings in Venice.

REQUEST THAT REPRESENTATIONS BE MADE TO COMMISSION BY U.S. SECRETARY OF ENERGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since, as I understand it, the Secretary of Energy in the United States has the authority to pass on recommendations or references to the appropriate commission in that country, will the Government, in this particular instance, ask Mr. Reagan not simply to pass on a letter of the Prime Minister of Canada without comment, but would our Prime Minister ask President Reagan to go to his own Secretary of Energy and ask him to make a reference to the appropriate commission in support of the Canadian cause, which is consistent with what President Reagan promised two years ago in Quebec City?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if it appears that kind of representation by the Prime Minister to the President with respect to the U.S. Secretary of Energy would be productive, of course we will consider following that advice and following that direction. We are interested in looking at any instrument we can which will lead to the reverse of a decision which is harmful to energy producers in Canada and, in our judgment, is not helpful to relations between Canada and the United States.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT LEGAL TEXT OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD BE DEFERRED FOR STUDY BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to revert to the subject raised earlier by the Leader of the Opposition, namely whether the Government intends to submit the legal text of the constitutional accord to a parliamentary committee, for consideration. The Deputy Prime Minister cleverly evaded the issue by saying that he was willing to negotiate with the other political parties. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform him that the inalienable right of Canadians to be consulted has nothing to do with consultations between the parties. I would therefore ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he is prepared to state in the House in no uncertain terms that the text will be referred to a parliamentary committee. Afterwards, we will see whether there is any need for the parties to discuss the conditions under which the committee will operate. For the time being, however, we would like to know whether Canadians will be allowed to exercise their fundamental right to be heard before a committee on the most fundamental legislation of this country, yes or no!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, every Legislature, including the House of Commons, will have an opportunity to pass judgment on this. I do not know why the Hon. Member will not accept the traditional way of doing business in the House and that is dealing with the Opposition House Leaders. It is a tradition which has served us well in the past and I would suggest that he submit himself to that in the future.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, certainly that is not a clear yes answer. The Government is denying the Canadian public the right to be heard on the Constitution.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to quote for the Deputy Prime Minister what the Prime Minister wrote in 1983 in his book Where I Stand:

> So let us have this final constitutional forum in Ottawa in the hope that a favourable consensus will be referred back to the House for ultimate resolution.
> By so doing the federal parliament will have gone the extra mile to ensure that, to the extent humanly possible, everyone was heard, all opinions were considered,—

Does the Deputy Prime Minister realize that by not agreeing clearly to grant parliamentary committee hearings, he is risking forcing the Prime Minister to change the title of his book from Where I Stand to Where I Stood?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's allegation is absolutely untrue and does not really—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Then just say: "Yes, we are going to have one".

Mr. Mazankowski: —require any further elaboration. I can tell the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as I said earlier in the House, that we will be prepared to sit down and negotiate with his House Leader and give him the assurance, as well as all other Hon. Members, of an opportunity so that this process can be studied and reviewed to the fullest possible extent. I give him that personal assurance.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

WESTERN CANADA—PROPOSED FORMATION OF NEW POLITICAL PARTY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will remember only too well the latter days of the Trudeau regime when several western separatist parties sprang up in response to what they felt was a lack of representation from western Canada. Of course we know the number of western representatives who were sent to Ottawa in 1984 to be part of the government benches. We also know that this past weekend delegates from the western Provinces met in Vancouver and decided to strike a new federal political party because they felt their representation was held to be inappropriate. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why his Conservative Government has failed to make western Canadians feel they are equal and true partners in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think we all noticed as well that there was a spattering of Liberals and New Democrats at the conference to which he referred.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): And an NDP, MLA.

Mr. Mazankowski: Including an NDP, MLA.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Former NDP.

Mr. Mazankowski: A former NDP, MLA. I am not sure what Mr. Roberts is, whether he is a disenchanted Liberal or one trying to get back into the fold.

Mr. Crosbie: He is a chanted Liberal.

Mr. Mazankowski: A number of steps have been taken by this Government to renew and in fact strengthen the partnership between western Canada and the federal Government on the economic front and the political front, and I think the record of achievements clearly speaks for itself—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, that is the problem.

Mr. Mazankowski: —the evidence of ERDAs, the Western Accord, farm stabilization programs, drought assistance, grain and oilseeds assistance, trade, transportation, the Meech Lake Accord, western diversification, and I could go on and on and on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION IN WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If the Government has been so generous to western Canada, I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could explain why, between September, 1984, and March of 1986, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion spent over 70 per cent of its funds in central Canada and a paltry 12 per cent in all four western provinces combined? Can he not understand that it is that kind of figure which makes western Canadians feel like second-class citizens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think what western Canadians appreciate is the dismantling of the NEP and FIRA, the 350 per cent increase in western agricultural support, amendments to the Transportation Act—

Mr. Benjamin: No, that is no good, either.

Mr. Mazankowski: —free trade—

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. Mazankowski: A whole host of things. These are the kinds of things which go to the fundamental problems which are irritating western Canada. If the New Democrats and Liberals got off their butts and co-operated in seeing this legislation advance to its fruition, there would be a lot more happiness out in western Canada.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—SIGNING BY FIRST MINISTERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It also concerns the Meech Lake process.

The Deputy Prime Minister has made it clear that the House will not be seeing a constitutionalized version of the Meech Lake Agreement before it receives the signature of First Ministers, perhaps tomorrow. I wish to ask the Minister about the signature process.

If the document is signed by First Ministers tomorrow, or at any time in the near future, will that be a commitment by First Ministers to assure that the resolution is passed in the form settled by the Legislatures which they control? Or will that document come back to this place, and other places, for the hearings and debate that the Deputy Prime Minister has indicated will take place in the spirit that the resolution can be changed and can be improved upon if that is the will of the people of Canada expressed to any hearings or through this place?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, this is a matter that will be dealt with by all the Legislatures. The Hon. Member prefaced his question with the word "if". We are not sure whether there will be an agreement signed tomorrow. Until such time as that takes place it is very difficult to speculate just what process may have to take place. But, as I said, I have expressed a clear willingness to sit down with House Leaders to work out a reasonable approach so that all the aspects referred to can, hopefully, be satisfied.

EFFECT OF PRIME MINISTER'S SIGNATURE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister view the signature of the Prime Minister on such a document as a commitment to have the support of Parliament? Or does he view that as an opportunity to bring the document back here for discussion, for debate and for public participation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member. That is for Parliament to decide. He has been a parliamentarian around here for a long time, with a distinguished career. Why does he not act his age?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the midst of all the pomp and circumstance of President Mitterrand's visit last week the Government assured Canadians that it was making progress on the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary dispute. Now, President Mitterrand's statement and demand that Canada reopen its ports before negotiations continue have indicated that no progress at all is being made. We are right back at square one.

I wish to ask the Minister this. Why have all our diplomatic efforts to reach a boundary dispute settlement with France and St. Pierre and Miquelon failed? Why has progress not been made?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the Hon. Member misunderstood the position that was stated by President Mitterrand. President Mitterrand, not surprisingly, has indicated that before any agreement is concluded there would have to be, in his view, a reopening of the ports. The negotiations will continue.

I hope that among the changes that might occur as a result of the President's visit here is that members of the New Democratic Party will put aside their rather unique proposal that we should attack France. They have, of course, a unique position in Canadian defence policy in which they want us, as I had a chance to comment before, to get out of NATO, to get out of NORAD, and to declare war on France.

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS—PROTECTION OF FISH STOCKS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since the Government was so forceful, as it says, in stating to France how important this issue is to Canada-France relations, and since it was so unsuccessful in taking even the smallest step last week toward the negotiation of this boundary dispute, what steps will the Government now take to protect Canadian fish stocks and to protect the livelihood of fishing families in Atlantic Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing the negotiations. We have made very clear to the President of France and to the delegation travelling with him the importance of the Canadian interests involved. If the Hon. Member is suggesting on behalf of his Party that we should reopen the ports, if that is the socialist position, then I should say that it is not ours.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the President of France said that Canada is guilty of "hostile, unjust and unacceptable behaviour and France cannot resume talks on the territorial waters dispute until Canada lifts its ports ban".

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans this. What happened? How could there be such a great difference between what the Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Transport said was the response of Mr. Mitterrand, in this House, when Mr. Mitterrand gave a statement such as the one he gave on Friday in St. Pierre? Did the Government have any hint at all that the President was going to be so hostile toward Canada? What will the Government's response be?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is good to have a sensible question on this issue.

As to what the President of France said, we cannot be responsible for what the President of France says, particularly when he is on French soil. But there is a natural tendency to say one thing on your own soil and something else on somebody else's soil.

An Hon. Member: Like the NDP.

Mr. Crosbie: The NDP, of course, does that on 12 patches of soil across the country.

In Moncton, the advisers of the French President underlined that in any event negotiations should recommence at the end of June. As a matter of fact on June 24 and 25 there will be a second round of fishery quota negotiations in Paris. In short, in response to the hon. gentleman's question, our position is that we shall not be moved; we shall continue to be fair and firm for the fishermen of eastern Canada.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the port closures do not hurt the French fishing fleet from France. They hurt the fishing fleet from St. Pierre and Miquelon, whereas the real culprits, the biggest overfishers in Canadian waters, they go untouched by the Government. All they get are letters of support from the Secretary of State for External Affairs who says: "We will never back down. We will always protect the fishermen of France".

I ask the Minister, who knows that France has now declared that it will overfish by over 20,000 metric tonnes again next year, when the Government will treat French overfishing the same way as it treats overfishing by Quebecers, New Brunswickers, Nova Scotians, or Newfoundlanders, and arrest them? The Spanish had to kidnap one of our officers before they were arrested for overfishing. Maybe the French should kidnap the Minister of Transport and then maybe they would be arrested. But if they do, they can keep their catch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the net has not yet been invented that could catch me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to violations of our law within our recognized 200-mile economic zone, we will continue to apprehend any miscreants who overfish or break our conservation laws, just as we did with two Spanish vessels which were fined in excess of $100,000 last week. The power of nations, their circumference, nothing matters to us—we will see that the law is administered to them in the disputed area. We have to abide by international custom, by international law. We will do our best to see that this matter is settled fairly and reasonably. The reason we wish to go to arbitration is to see the question of territorial boundaries settled. In that resolve we shall not be moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CONTRA FORCES' ATTACK ON CANADIAN AID PROJECT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He responded on Friday to the Contra attack on an aid project in Nicaragua supported by the Canadian Farmers for Peace group. Fortunately no Canadian aid workers were at the site but the Contra attack left 10 Nicaraguans dead, others wounded or captured, and extensive damage to farm equipment, buildings and homes.

Since Washington is the source of Contra funding and arms, has the Minister informed his U.S. counterpart, George Shultz, in the strongest possible terms about Canada's continuing opposition to further U.S. funding of the Contras which threatens Canadian interests and lives as well as those of innocent Nicaraguans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's reference to the statement I issued on Friday. Later today I will be signing a letter to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz expressing deep concern about the attack on a project in which Canadians are involved, by the Contras, an organization which it is the policy of the U.S. Government to support. I would add indicate that I will want to discuss that matter further with Mr. Shultz during the series of meetings he and I will have over the course of the next three weeks.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister and hope he makes clear to Mr. Shultz that it is the U.S. funding of the Contra aggression to which we are totally opposed.

UNITED STATES SUPPORT OF CONTRAS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my second question to the Minister would be whether it is not time to make Canada's opposition to this funding and aggression more public. For example, in his meeting with George Shultz in California last month why did the Minister not take the opportunity, as he did in East European capitals the week before, to state publicly Canada's opposition to some of the host Government's policies, in this case U.S. support of the Contras?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I think the Hon. Member knows, being the foreign policy spokesperson for her Party, the meeting in California was not simply with Mr. Shultz. It was also with Foreign Minister Sepûlveda of Mexico. That is the first time the Foreign Ministers of Mexico, the U.S., and Canada have met together. In a meeting of that kind naturally the question of Nicaragua and Central America was discussed. As to why I did not deal with that in my public speech, it was asked explicitly that that speech deal with questions of Pacific Rim development. That is the subject that I, Foreign Minister Sepûlveda, and Secretary Shultz all addressed.

RESULTS OF CONTRA ATTACK—POSSIBLE PASSAGE OF RESOLUTION BY PARLIAMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out, this attack by American funded Contras on the village of Dionisio Quinteio Castra, where Canadian Farmers for Peace are operating a development program assisted by the Canadian Government, left 10 Nicaraguan citizens dead, eight wounded and three captured. There was extensive damage to a health centre and other important community buildings. I appreciate that the Minister made a critical statement on Friday. However, because we do not want the Americans to miss the message, would he be willing to consult with opposition Parties and prepare an appropriate resolution which we could all support condemning this kind of attack and the U.S. Contra policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, naturally I am as usual prepared to consult with my colleagues in the House. I am also very much interested in having Canada take policies and make statements that lead to some constructive purpose rather than simply being an expression of opinion. I think the Hon. Member shares that view generally.

Perhaps what might be most appropriate would be for me to meet with him and my friend, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), upon my return from ASEAN. Unfortunately that will not be before the end of June. I would discuss with them then the results of the conversation I had with Secretary Shultz to see if there is any need for further action to be taken by the House.

OPPOSITION BY UNITED STATES CONGRESSMEN TO PRESIDENT'S POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with American Congressmen who very much oppose President Reagan's policy toward Nicaragua and the funding of the Contras. Does the Minister not agree that the support of this entire House for those Congressman would be very helpful in bringing to an end this type of interference in the affairs of Nicaragua which none of us accept? It would be very important to support those American Congressman in their goal of bringing peace to that region.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I guess that is precisely the point. The Hon. Member suggests that it would help change policy in the U.S. if we in this House passed a resolution supporting the position of a group of Congressmen who are not setting that policy. I think the consequences of an action of that kind may indeed be counter-productive. It may complicate rather than achieve the goal of the Hon. Member. That is one of the reasons I have historically been hesitant about that kind of approach.

Let me simply say that when this matter was brought to my attention by a member of the Farmers for Peace organization, Barry King, who farms west of my home town, I was in touch with the organization and issued a statement as quickly as we could. I think it is intolerable that projects of this kind in which Canadians are involved are the subject of that kind of attack and I am going to see if there are practical steps we can take.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he advise the House whether or not Canada has received a request from President Botha of South Africa requesting us to sever all relationships with the African National Congress in return for South Africa proceeding with a reform program? If that is the case, will he advise the House specifically what reforms would be included in that program and whether it would mean the expulsion from Canada of ANC's chief representative here, Yusuf Saloojee?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the Prime Minister has received, as he did last year just before the summit, a letter from President Botha which sets forth some general representations regarding the situation in South Africa. I think there are two other things that it would be germane for me to say in response to the question.

First, the Prime Minister intends to meet with Mr. Oliver Tambo of the ANC some time later this summer, as do I. We believe the ANC will be part of any solution in South Africa, whatever it is, and it will be important for us to try to contribute to a peaceful solution.

Second, we hope on the occasion of the Venice Summit to find some means by which those seven industrialized countries can continue the external pressure on South Africa for change in a policy that most of us find reprehensible, and also try to find some means of maintaining a dialogue with the regime and the black population of South Africa.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, on February 5 the Minister for International Trade praised the prosperity in our forest industry brought about by her softwood lumber agreement with the U.S. How does the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain, then, the hard statistics which have finally emerged today indicating that the Canadian share of the U.S. lumber market has fallen from 31.5 per cent in the first two months of 1986 to 28.7 per cent in the same period this year? Does this not show what a bad deal the Government made for the Canadian communities which produce softwood lumber?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hard statistics to which the Hon. Member pretends to want to refer in fact show that in the period from January to the end of May, this year, there was a 1.4 per cent increase in Canadian shipments of softwood lumber to the United States. Those are the hard facts.

Over-all purchasing in the United States has increased. That leads to the report which the Hon. Member read in The Globe and Mail.

I would suggest that if he is interested in dealing with the facts, and not simply in trying to create false impressions about the effectiveness of Canadian policy, he should do more. He should enlarge his research beyond The Globe and Mail, perhaps to Saturday Night.

Mr. Langdon: It is useful if the Minister indicates the full facts from the report which indicate that U.S. consumption went up 11 per cent while Canadian exports went up by only 1.4 per cent in terms of exports. Those are the facts.

EXPORT TAX REVENUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Would he also confirm that revenue fell from the lumber export tax between January and February of this year, suggesting that our exports of softwood are indeed in trouble in the United States?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot make that confirmation. There were certain complications at the beginning of the administration of this tax. I will check into it, but I cannot make that confirmation today.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Several months ago I brought to the attention of the RCMP 10 illegal Portuguese immigrants whom I convinced to provide evidence against those individuals who brought them into the country illegally.

These 10 individuals have taken a huge risk in deciding to provide evidence and to testify, should it become necessary, since they were promised nothing and they have nothing to gain by their action. However, they are very uneasy, since there has yet to be any decision on whether or not their evidence will be of any use.

Could the Minister assure the House that this case is continuing to receive the Department's attention?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He has had a very substantial interest in the welfare of immigrants to our country, and I congratulate him for that.

As I have indicated on previous occasions, I follow a policy of not commenting upon individual cases because I think public comment on matters under investigation could well jeopardize or prejudice the successful conclusion of the investigations.

However, in a general way I want to reassure the House that my Department as a matter of direct policy—and from time to time I ensure that this takes place—is handling all cases presented to it in an expeditious manner.

I can certainly assure the Hon. Member that in important matters we want to ensure that the evidence is sufficient and properly presented for the purposes of prosecution in appropriate cases. I thank the Hon. Member for his continued interest.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—OFFER OF SHARES TO CANADIANS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Amoco Canada has decided to allow at least the placement of a few shares in Canadian hands should its proposed purchase of Dome Petroleum go ahead.

In its meetings with Amoco Canada the Government was impressing upon it the importance of some shares being in Canadian hands, as the Minister of Energy put it. Why does the Government not go a step further and suggest to Amoco Canada the per centage of shares which should be in Canadian hands and when the placement should actually take place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware of the normal process which is followed here. The company will be meeting with Investment Canada. These are matters which are discussed and negotiated with Investment Canada as part of the process.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government takes the trouble to meet with Amoco Canada, which it said it was not doing, and to talk about the importance of shares being in the hands of Canadians, but it does not bother to say how much or when.

What we have here is a sop to the Canadian public to try to smooth the wheels through Investment Canada. How does the Minister of Finance expect the people of Canada to accept this sop and then to give up their natural resources readily?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Hon. Member. At one stage he is saying that the Government of Canada has to make sure that Amoco Canada issues shares to the general public. It is going to issue shares to the general public.

Mr. MacLellan: How much and when?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Then he starts to change his mind and says: "No, that is not enough".

Investment Canada, as I said in the House on Friday, will review the application from the standpoint of investment in western Canada in the Dome properties, from the standpoint of job creation, and from the standpoint of the development of a company which is on its last legs today. Dome Canada is on its last legs.

The Hon. Member should be very pleased that the Government of Canada is able to negotiate the proposal by Amoco Canada, and not be presiding over a bankruptcy.

PRIVILEGE

INTRUSION BY STRANGER ON PROCEEDINGS IN HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon there was an intruder on the floor of the House of Commons. Perhaps I should use the parliamentary term "stranger".

I raise this question not by way of passing judgment on anything which happened but simply to ask you, Sir, if you would investigate the matter immediately and see that any and all corrective measures that may be required in terms of security procedures involving the Chamber and the House of Commons are taken.

After all—and I couch my point as a question of privilege—we are dealing with a situation which could very well impede Members in carrying out their parliamentary duties.

This could have been a matter of some seriousness. I do not say that it is not serious; in any event, I think it is. However, I felt that I should formally raise this matter as a question of privilege because I think it involves the privileges of all Members, requiring immediate investigation by yourself, Sir, and the assurance to Members of the House and the Canadian people that any corrective measures in security procedures which may be required will be in place as soon as possible.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as the one who had the floor when the even occurred, I rise on the same question of privilege. I would certainly want to second the urgings of the Opposition House Leader in respect of Your Honour having a look into what transpired and what made it possible for someone to get into the Chamber like that and do what was done.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. My colleagues and I were very concerned with what happened a little earlier. I should like to take a moment or so to caution the Speaker on something which I feel is worrisome regarding what might transpire.

It is obvious that our House is guarded by what I consider to be very competent personnel. However, in my humble opinion, their numbers standing by the doorways to the House are not nearly as large as they should be. I feel it would be most unfortunate if someone were disciplined for the fact that he or she were not four people instead of one person.

There are four doors at the back of this room, and only one person was there guarding. No matter how devoted is that person, he or she cannot supervise more than one area at one time. I know that that presented a difficulty today.

It is also equally true that there are three front doors to the House and only two people guarding those doors, even though there is considerable traffic of Members, staff, assistants, and so on, entering the area.

I do not think that this is a very funny matter, and I hope Hon. Members across would treat it seriously. As one who was an employee of this place for a number of years, it is my hope that due regard will be given to those people who do an excellent job of supervising access and egress to the House of Commons, as I am sure Your Honour, the Sergeant-at-Arms, and others will do in their review of what happened today.

• (1510)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, on behalf of my colleagues would want to associate myself with the spokesmen for the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. I can only say that while this is something that comes within your direct jurisdiction, from the standpoint of the Government I can assure you that we will co-operate with you in every respect in order to address this important issue. I simply want to say that I offer you my fullest co-operation on behalf of the Government.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, as one of the spokesmen for the Board of Internal Economy who are under your excellent chairmanship for this area of responsibility, you can rest assured that you have the entire support of the Board in dealing with this matter immediately.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank Hon. Members, led by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and others, for their comments. We had an incident here an hour or so ago. Clearly someone who ought not to have got into the Chamber did get into the Chamber. Immediately afterwards instructions were given to increase the security in the event that there might be others involved. That was done and an investigation has already commenced.

I think that Hon. Members having given the Chair the support they have will want to know that I shall deal with the matter as quickly as possible, taking into account the comments of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), in a fair and appropriate manner. I think we all recognize that the tasks that our security people have in this place, which is a relatively open forum, open Chamber, open facilities, in the tradition of a free country, are not always easy.

I think Hon. Members at this point will want to join with me in congratulating officials who were here at the time in the very expeditious and efficient way they took care of the problem and secured the intruder.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED FALSE STATEMENT BY MEMBER

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with reference to a matter that occurred on Friday when I was not present at the Question Period. I think it is quite a serious matter.

In introductory remarks to a question, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) made a completely false statement in what he alleged that I had said. He was asking a question as reported at page 6537 of Hansard about the takeover of Canadian Pacific Air by Pacific Western Airlines. As found at the bottom of the page, the Hon. Member said:

> —on April 14 I was told by the usually pompous Minister of Transport that there would be few if any jobs lost.

I defy anybody in this House to read the April 14 Hansard or any other source and find anywhere a statement from me that as a result of that takeover there would be few if any jobs lost.

I was asked a question by the Member of Parliament for York South—Weston and I made no statement about the number of jobs to be lost, as you will see, Sir, if you look at the page. I was asked a second question on April 14 by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). All I said about the number of employees that might be laid off is this:

> However, there has been no indication that any number of the size to which the Hon. Member is referring are to be laid off.

That being 3,000. There is no similarity between that and saying there will be few if any jobs lost, Mr. Speaker.

I submit that we should not continue to allow Members asking questions in this House to make completely false statements leading up to the questions they ask, such as occurred last Friday with the Hon. Member for York South—Weston. Whether it was deliberate or not, I am not in a position to say, although surely he could have checked the record to see what I had actually said.

The continuation of these kinds of wrongful allegations of what are supposed to be facts and the asking of questions on their basis should be stopped. I would ask you to make an example of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, unless he wants to bear his breast and agree that no such statements were ever made by me and promises to be more careful in the future with respect to the way in which he asks questions.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the beginning of the Minister's intervention, I did catch the latter part. I only regret that the Minister did not have the common courtesy to ensure that I was in the House to hear all of his submissions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Having said that, Mr. Speaker, on Friday I asked a question—

Mr. Crosbie: When I wasn't here.

Mr. Nunziata: —with regard to the takeover of Canadian Pacific by Pacific Western Airlines. I asked a question a number of weeks ago with regard to the number of lay-offs. I was basing the question I asked on an internal confidential memo from a high-ranking official in the Department. In that particular memo it indicated that up to 3,000 jobs could be lost as a result of the takeover. That is 25 per cent of the combined workforce. The Minister stood up in the House and he denied that that number of jobs would be lost. He suggested that I was basing my question on opinion rather than fact. I presented the memorandum to him.

A week later, a second memo came from the Department, this time the memo said there would be few if any jobs lost. I am sorry I do not have the file with me, Mr. Speaker, to give you further information. But the exact quote is "Few if any jobs would be lost". I believe it was Martha Hynna in the Department who wrote that particular memo. I accepted that few if any jobs would be lost. Then we learned on Friday from the president of the new airline that up to 1,900 jobs would be lost.

I looked at the facts and I tried to understand what was going on. We had one memo that said 3,000 jobs were to be lost, another that said few if any. It became obvious to me that the Minister and his Government did not know what they were doing when they endorsed and allowed the takeover to occur.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has raised a point in which his complaint is that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) in the preamble to a question in effect made allegations as to things which the Minister said or did not say at another time. He claims that the Member from York South—Weston has his facts wrong. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston was not able to be here for the opening minute of the Minister's remarks, but has risen and in his defence says that he is not satisfied with various answers that have been coming from the Minister's Department.

I understand that the Hon. Minister's complaint is one in which he would ask that Hon. Members be careful at least when referring to what he, the Minister, has said. I am sure that all Hon. Members would want to do that.

However, we are here arguing a dispute over facts. It is not, in the view of the Chair, a question of privilege or, even under these circumstances at least, a question of order. I would, however, ask the Hon. Member for York South—Weston to consider, and I know he will consider, that the Minister's complaint is one voiced by Members on both sides of the Chamber from time to time with respect to remarks made by others. I am sure we will all try to work diligently to be sure that we have good research on the facts before a statement is made. I think that closes off the matter.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which is this. I was quoted in Hansard at page 6537 on Friday by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston who said:

> —I was told by the usually pompous—
> I do not care about that.
> —Minister of Transport that there would be few if any jobs lost.

The facts, as anyone who looks at Hansard can see, is that I did not say "few if any jobs lost". The Member is making a false statement about what I said and nothing could be more serious to a Member of this House. Now the Member does not choose to withdraw that when I point out I did not say this. He chooses to go on with some convoluted argument about how he saw a memo, he saw this and he saw that. But, he never heard me say that there would be few if any jobs lost. I am not prepared to put up with being misquoted deliberately like that.

• (1520)

The hon. gentleman has uttered a falsehood about what I said in the House. He makes it clear today that he made that statement knowingly and willingly. He was lying to the House when he made the statement. That is my position and I will not be satisfied with anything less than the hon. gentleman stating that I did not state what I did not state.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) would want to address the Chamber.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) should use such unparliamentary language in trying to make his point.

Mr. Shields: You're regrettable. We all regret the day you arrived. You brought the level down like you wouldn't believe.

Mr. Gauthier: You charged the Chair now, you better be quiet.

Mr. Nunziata: I would—

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members ought to listen carefully to the interventions that have been made. The Hon. Minister's complaint, which I do not think is a question of privilege, was that the Hon. Member made some comment in a preamble that indicated that the Hon. Minister had said something or not said something on a previous occasion. The Hon. Member has risen and in partial explanation at least said that he had different versions from the Department. These are questions of fact.

If the Hon. Member for York South—Weston would like to assist the Chamber by saying that of course he did not intend any deliberate misinterpretation of the Minister, that would probably be helpful. At the same time, the Minister might also indicate that he is quite prepared to withdraw the charge that the Hon. Member is deliberately lying. If I could have both those positions taken, it might end the matter at least with some dignity.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, if I could explain the question I asked on Friday, I was faced with a number of facts which can be substantiated by way of memoranda from the Department—

Mr. Speaker: I might say to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston that I think the Chair has fully appreciated the Hon. Member's argument and I think the Hon. Member has put his case as well as it can be put.

I am suggesting that the Hon. Member make clear that he did not mean that the Minister had in any way intentionally misled, and he might even go so far as to say that on that particular day that is not what the Minister said, as the Minister has read from Hansard and that is clear. At the same time, it might be very appropriate if the Minister would say under the circumstances that he might be prepared to withdraw any suggestion that the Hon. Member has intentionally misled the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, if I might have the opportunity, I know it is against parliamentary rules to suggest either directly or indirectly that a Member is either lying or deliberately misleading the House. If I might explain, I was basing the question I asked on several written memoranda from the Department. In view of the fact that the Minister speaks for the Government and is responsible for his Department, the Minister should assume responsibility for what happens in his Department.

Having said that, I will withdraw unequivocally any suggestion, either directly or indirectly, that the Minister intentionally misled the House. If anything, the Minister is guilty of gross negligence and of not knowing his dossier.

Mr. Speaker: The statement of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston is quite clear. There is no suggestion that the Minister has in any way intentionally misled the House. His explanation for having said what he said is that he had in mind a number of different responses or at least alleged different responses. Under the circumstances, I would hear from the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, first I suppose I want to observe the rules of the House, so I withdraw what I said about the Hon. Member in the interests of observing the rules of the House. However, this is a most serious matter. If we cannot trust what other Members are saying that we said when we are not in this House, as I was not in the House on Friday, then this House will deteriorate to a completely hopeless situation. This will happen if we cannot trust another Member to treat us decently, properly, honourably and accurately when we are not present in the House.

On April 14, I never said, nor have I at any time said, as I am quoted as having said, that there would be few if any jobs lost. To have an Hon. Member introduce a question by saying that is to permit a false statement to be made, a statement which the Member knows is false, and there is no point in saying that he read a memo from somewhere else.

By the way, the memo of which he speaks is a memo from the Department of Employment and Immigration, not a memo from my Department. It has nothing to do with ministerial responsibility. One Member of the House has falsely said that I said certain things in the House I did not say.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to graciously accept that the Chair has heard the complaint. I have treated the complaint as serious. It is not the first time it has been heard and probably it will not be the last, but the Hon. Member has gone a long way toward putting his point in a satisfactory position as far as the Chair is concerned.

The Hon. Minister has properly withdrawn that one word which is not acceptable. The Hon. Minister has also pointed out, and the Minister's word is accepted in this place, that he did not say what the Hon. Member thought he had said or claimed he had said.

I am not for one minute diminishing the seriousness of preambles or, for that matter, responses which put words in someone else's mouth, whether it be sometimes intentionally, and sometimes without intention to do much harm, but perhaps some mischief. In any event, the matter has been heard and I really do not think that the Chair can go any further in the case. There are withdrawals on both sides and that is where the Chair wishes it to be left. The Chair is very cognizant of the matter the Hon. Minister has raised and has listened to both sides carefully. I thank both Hon. Members for their interventions.

Mr. Crosbie: In deference to you, Your Honour, I will accept that, but that is only in deference to your good self.

It is a disgrace, a damnable disgrace.

Mr. Nunziata: Go home, John.

Mr. Shields: You're a sick man. You lowered the level of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to assist the Chair. It is for the Chair to settle these matters. They are not assisted by comments made afterward. All of us in this place have at times cause or at least think we have cause to say things that perhaps afterwards we would not have said in quite the same way.

I think all Hon. Members realize that the Chair's task is to hear and to admonish if necessary and hopefully to obtain withdrawals when necessary. In the Chair's view, that has been done. I am sure all Hon. Members would be more careful.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—SOVEREIGNTY AND ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLellan:

That this House condemn the Government for its repeated failures to protect Canadian sovereignty and economic independence as demonstrated by its weak and ineffectual efforts to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with regard to transmission costs of Canadian gas, and by its compliant approach to permitting foreign takeovers of Canadian corporations and natural resources.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at 1 p.m., there were six minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). The Hon. Member had the floor. I am sure he will make his comments brief if possible to allow as many Members as possible to ask questions.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, you can trust my good judgment in that matter.

I was just in the process of answering the question of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). It was a two-part question, the first being what responsibility the federal Government has in the recent decision taken in the United States. He inferred that the amount of foreign investment coming into Canada was detrimental and asked me to comment on that. This morning I used the example of the minority purchase of Husky by Mr. Lee's company from Hong Kong. That was very upbeat in the oil industry in western Canada because along with that purchase $1 billion of new investment money was committed to develop Amauligak in the Beaufort. That is very important to the energy security of this country and the psychology of the oil industry in western Canada because of the downturn in oil prices world-wide and the recovery which is now taking place.

• (1530)

Investment in the oil sands was commenced with what they called at the time the Great Canadian Oil Sands, a wholly-owned company formed in Canada but owned by Sun Oil of Philadelphia. Without a nickel of Canadian investment they went in, at great risk to the company, and invested in the oil sands north of Fort McMurray to develop the oil sands plant now known as the Suncor plant. I wonder whether without that foreign investment we would be developing the oil sands as we are today with Syncrude. It was very risky and I think it is acknowledged that Sun Oil very nearly went down because of that investment. It was only the increase in oil prices which allowed it to survive.

With regard to investment, the national energy policy perpetrated on this country, and particularly on western Canada, by the previous Government drove investment out of the country—not only foreign investment, but Canadian investment as well. In addition to transferring vast amounts of money from western Canada, which hit the oil industry terribly hard, it contained a back-in provision which actually confiscated property earned by foreign-owned companies. It put us on the same basis as a banana republic. The Member knows how detrimental that policy was to Canada's reputation as a safe place to invest.

The responsibility of the administration of the United States to FERC is exactly the same as that of Energy, Mines and Resources to the National Energy Board. The National Energy Board is a quasi-judicial body. Any Member of this House or any other person may make representations to that body, but its decision is final. We cannot interfere in a legislative sense. The administration of the United States is faced with exactly the same situation with FERC. The Member knows that it was a quasi-judicial body which made the ruling on the charges on transportation of natural gas exports. There is nothing we can do about it in that sense.

The buyers in the United States are extremely concerned about that ruling because it means that the United States is not a safe place to export to since they have changed the rules in the middle of the game. Buyers and consumers in the United States are making representations to their administration. We are following through in the courts. We are telling the producers in western Canada that we will assist them in their court challenges against the United States.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to participate in this debate this afternoon. I was very pleased that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields) raised the history of Syncrude. He will remember that when there was difficulty getting the Syncrude project rolling in the mid-1970s the federal Government of the day put up $300 million to enable that project to go forward when the three private sector companies were unable to proceed with it.

We should compare the response of Syncrude and the three companies which are taking part with the response which we got from the Government last fall. Representatives of Syncrude came before the various caucuses of this House and provided an excellent briefing. They pointed out the need for a guarantee agreement in order for the $700 million expansion of Syncrude to go forward is 1987-88.

It is interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary who represents that area was flatly turned down by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) who supposedly had some clout in Alberta affairs. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) claims to have great concern about and interest in the energy industry in Alberta but flatly turned Syncrude down for a guarantee agreement that if the price of oil fell below $15 a barrel during the next few years the Government would guarantee a loan of $175 million.

I do not know how the Government can raise the matter of Syncrude, as the Parliamentary Secretary has done, without hanging its head in shame over that response to Syncrude.

Syncrude has an expansion program proceeding which would boost its production from about 130,000 barrels a day to about 150,000 barrels a day. That opens the door to a doubling of production in the 1990s. The Alberta Government has already provided an $85 million pre-engineering study on the feasibility of major expansion in the 1990s beyond that expansion which is already going forward.

It was interesting just before Christmas to hear the Parliamentary Secretary taking the rap, so to speak, for the decision by the Government of Canada not to encourage the development of the tar sands in the Athabasca area. It is especially revealing of the callous, hard-nosed approach of the Government that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Deputy Prime Minister, both of whom are integrally involved in that development, were both turned down by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Edmonton Journal editorial on January 6, 1987, put it very succinctly. The headline reads: "Ottawa denies energy security", and the editorial states:

> In refusing to extend federal loan guarantees for the expansion of the Syncrude plant, Energy Minister Marcel Masse has made a liar out of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.
> Only six weeks ago, the prime minister guaranteed more federal attention and money to develop oil sands projects in Alberta. "We plan to do much more", he said in Calgary. "Syncrude is an important element of security of supply for Canada. The federal Government has provided some relief, some substantial relief, but it is not enough in a time of collapsing prices internationally".

• (1540)

Perhaps the House recognizes the superlative tone that the Prime Minister always uses. Canadians are becoming very conscious of that.

The editorial in The Edmonton Journal of January 6 goes on to state:

> This is the government that refused to honour a long-standing commitment to the Husky Oil upgrader at Lloydminster.
> Most important, it would have been an act of good faith, an indication that—
> —the Government—
> —was sincere when he promised, in July 1984, to make the West "a full and equal partner in Canadian Confederation".

I am sure that the Government's decision not to provide additional assistance, support, or even comfort to the Syncrude project was partly responsible for the formation of a new right wing Party in Vancouver this past weekend. There are many Tories from Alberta who just cannot stomach the current Prime Minister and his energy policies in the West.

The Calgary Herald published an equally succinct editorial on January 6, 1987. It states:

> If any additional evidence were needed that Marcel Masse is in over his head as Canada's energy minister, surely Ottawa's refusal to help the Syncrude expansion project is it.
> Given Masse's myopia about long-term security of supply, Ottawa's refusal is hardly surprising. Sadly, it is what Albertans have come to expect from a government that seems to value petty, arrogant attitudes from a man who demonstrates little grasp of the complexities of the important portfolio he has been given.

A further editorial written by Geoff White, on January 9, three days later, contains the headline: "Syncrude snub fits policy". He goes on to state:

> In the summer of 1985, the federal government gave Petro-Canada $1.6 billion in borrowing authority to take over Gulf Canada's refinery and retail assets—on the say-so of only four ministers.
> If Mulroney and Mazankowski had truly been determined to give help, it would have been given. Athabasca MP Jack Shields to offer himself as the whipping boy for Ottawa's decision is amusing, but irrelevant.

It is laughable, to say the least, for the Hon. Member for Athabasca to give the Syncrude project as the Government's indication of a competent energy policy.

The motion before the House states:

> That this House condemn the Government for its repeated failures to protect Canadian sovereignty and economic independence as demonstrated by its weak and ineffectual efforts to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, with regard to transmission costs of Canadian gas, and by its compliant approach to permitting foreign takeovers of Canadian corporations and natural resources.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources talked about the Government's commitment to increasing Canadian ownership. He referred to an increase from 42 per cent to 48 per cent and suggested that this was due to greater Canadian development. However, when one examines that increase closely, it will be evident that most of it relates to the takeover of the Gulf Oil Company of the United States by Petro-Canada and the Reichmann brothers. Of course, Petro-Canada required a commitment of over $1 billion by the federal Government and the Reichmann brothers required the Little Egypt Bump tax adjustment for which the federal Government essentially provided all of the funding. While the Government may suggest that its policies are dramatically increasing Canadian ownership, the fact is that it is primarily because of that transaction.

The Minister spoke about the reduction of the petroleum gas revenue tax under the Tory energy policy, but did not mention that that tax was removed after great duress, when the Tories almost lost a by-election in western Canada. Furthermore, the Petroleum Incentives Program grants which were essentially funded through the PGRT were cut off in the spring of 1986, but the PGRT was reluctantly removed only in the fall of 1986, after a great deal of pressure from the Government of Alberta. Therefore, the gains in Canadian ownership are not particularly spectacular.

Let us consider Dome Petroleum. While there is substantial foreign ownership, it is operated by Canadians. Amoco has not shown great interest in increasing Canadian ownership and we see its proposed takeover as being another step in the Government's general approach to the Prime Minister's policy outlined in the fall of 1984 when he told the Economic Club in New York that Canada was open for investment and takeover. Obviously, that is what we see and that is the reason for the motion before us today.

Last week, Mr. Stacey appeared before the committee. It was interesting to note that he suddenly announced that Amoco would sell shares to Canadians. We do not have an indication of the number of shares, but the announcement that some shares will be sold to Canadians is probably part of the smoke and mirrors approach to this issue.

The Minister mentioned that he met with Amoco officials and obviously put some pressure on them due to the uproar in the country about the takeover of Dome, one of our largest oil and gas producers. Furthermore, it has already been publicized that the officials already met with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

We also know that the free trade negotiations have an effect on this takeover bid. The Government is aware that if it attempts to change the successful bidder for Dome to a Canadian company, it could be disastrous in the free trade negotiations. That has been the story of our lives for the last two years in Canada. Every decision by the Government is coloured by those free trade negotiations.

The Government's policy when it came to power in the fall of 1984 was to create "jobs, jobs, jobs". Canadians did not realize what this slogan really meant until the spring of 1986 when the energy industry collapsed. Not only did people in western Canada lose jobs, Canadians throughout the country lost jobs, whether off the East Coast, as a result of the cut-back in drilling with the elimination of the PIP grants, whether it is in the high Arctic in the oil and gas exploration, or in industries of Ontario like Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie. Some 20,000 jobs were lost in Alberta.

The former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said there would be some 200,000 jobs in the oil and gas industry, which was the engine of growth for development in Canada. The new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when he came to power last summer, said that the whole energy industry was really a highly capital intensive industry and we could not really expect it to create very many jobs. He also said that it really was not an engine of growth. I think that is very revealing. He is bringing in a whole new government policy with regard to job creation in relation to the economic engine of growth. He seemed to even suggest, with regard to being self-sufficient in energy, that even though we had achieved it in the first half of this decade, we should not really be looking toward Canadian self-sufficiency until the end of this decade. I think those are really sad indications. We have certainly seen this compliant approach with respect to the Patent Act, softwood lumber and in the takeover by Amoco. We see that every deal has to be made with the idea in the back of our mind that the free trade negotiations are paramount compared to everything else that is going on in the country.

Clearly the $22 billion of investment from June of 1985 to December of 1986, is not investment which is going to create many new jobs. When we look closely at it, we see that 95 per cent is simply the taking over of Canadian companies so that the decisions are made in Houston, Dallas, Washington, Cleveland and New York rather than in Calgary, Edmonton, Regina or Winnipeg.

I think this whole open-door approach does not necessarily mean many jobs. I would be interested to know from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when the shake-down occurs, if the Amoco deal does go ahead, just exactly how many of those jobs which are currently held by people working in Dome will be lost. Will a third or a quarter of the jobs be lost to Canadians? I think that is really important.

The President of Amoco has indicated that it is going to offer shares to Canadians. I would be interested to know just what per centage that would be, whether it would be able to give Investment Canada a target of the number of jobs or the per centage of Canadian ownership it would be looking at in the first few years. Those are the kinds of answers the Government should be asking for from Amoco if the deal is allowed to go ahead.

The second part of the motion before the House today deals with the decision by the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. It is a decision which has far-reaching implications.

The ruling does not just apply to Canadian gas but surely will spread to all exported gas and will involve cut-backs in the returns to Canadian natural gas producers between $140 million and $400 million. If we put that into perspective, it looks as though an extremely sizeable amount of funding will be lost to Canadians for oil and gas exploration during the next few years. From that point of view, I think the Government should be looking at the possibility of bringing legislation into this House under the National Energy Act or whatever statute it can so that we can enforce upon President Reagan and the United States administration, and clearly upon the U. S. Federal Regulatory Commission that we are a sovereign nation, that we do not like the Americans imposing their laws in an extraterritorial manner on Canadian citizens and Canadian companies with respect to an industry which is already suffering from the Western Accord, which is totally inadequate to deal with the kind of drop in price we saw last year.

The big multinationals are taking their piece of pie from distribution and refining, and at the oil and gas exploration and development level people are really hurting. I think we should not have this additional imposition of an American regulatory system taking away Canadian jobs.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I would like to ask him a number of questions. First, when will members of the Opposition understand or acknowledge that the National Energy Board of Canada is a quasi-judicial body which acts independently of this House of Commons by an Act of the House of Commons? In other words, no one can direct the National Energy Board to make a decision as to regulatory situations under its jurisdiction on oil and natural gas in Canada. Comparable to the National Energy Board is the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States, commonly known as FERC. FERC, like the NEB is a quasi-judicical body, which is not accountable, in the same way as the National Energy Board is not accountable, to the administration in the United States for its decisions.

My good friend, the Hon. Member for Algoma, asks when the Government is going to pass legislation—and listen to this carefully, Madam Speaker—in this House of Commons to overrule the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States, in other words, a ruling which is made in the United States with its regulatory board on the transport of natural gas, which disallows federal producers in western Canada or gas producers to pass the transportation costs on to the user in the United States, thus interfering—and we acknowledge that it interferes—with our regulatory commission here.

When will the Opposition understand that we have made all sorts of representations to the federal administration and that we are also encouraging the producers in western Canada to take the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to court? I understand there is a court case in process. When will the Opposition understand that the consumers and buyers in the United States are as concerned as we are because they feel that it demeans the United States position in the world trade market?

The Hon. Member also interprets the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as saying that energy is not a job creation activity. I am sure that the Hon. Member would not want to leave a misconception with Members of the House that the Minister of Energy (Mr. Masse) said that energy should not be treated as a job-creation project. Energy should be treated as a national priority and projects should not go ahead just to create jobs. I think that is sensible.

• (1600)

I want to repeat once more something about investment in western Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may want to allow the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) to answer some of his questions. One half of the 10-minute question and comment period has already elapsed.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is clear in the Standing Orders that this time can be used to ask questions or to make comments. While I had the floor I thought that I would be able to continue with my last question, which was a very short one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member will understand that earlier when there were six minutes left in the question and comment period the Hon. Member took up the whole period of time. In all fairness at this point in time, now that more than half the time of the question and comment period has elapsed, I think it would be only fair to allow the Hon. Member for Algoma to answer some of the questions raised.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Parliamentary Secretary not take responsibility for this debacle with respect to the decision of the United States regulatory agency. Last fall, when the Government refused to provide assistance to Syncrude, the Parliamentary Secretary became the fall guy and took full responsibility for that. We have not seen such a charade repeated here today. But we have heard the Government say that it is helpless and that it really cannot do anything. The Prime Minister wrote a desperate letter just a matter of hours before he went to Red Deer to stand in front of the television cameras and in front of the oil rig to say that he had written to the President of the United States asking him to take action on this upcoming FERC decision.

What I think is important for the Parliamentary Secretary to remember is that we are a sovereign nation. We can pass laws concerning the National Energy Board or other legislation applicable to Canadian producers of natural gas.

Mr. Shields: Like the national energy policy.

Mr. Foster: I assume the Hon. Member believes in having the National Energy Board. The board has the ability to establish prices and rates.

It was a matter of a few weeks after the Government abandoned the border pricing mechanism that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission moved in to disallow a good portion of the transportation charges which formed part of a signed agreement. I am sure the Government has not even inquired yet about the possibility of bringing in legislation under the National Energy Board Act to strengthen our position with respect to the $400 million which essentially stole away the entire funds allocated for exploration and development about which the Government made a lot of ballyhoo. It said that it would bring in a program of incentives for exploration and development which would cost $350 million. It did this after the Premier of Alberta threatened to split the federal and provincial Parties. If he had done that it would have been split three ways. I say that because part of the Party out in Vancouver is forming a new political Party, and then we have the provincial PC Party and the federal—

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend has digressed considerably from answering anything on the energy question. He is now starting to talk about political Parties. I think that if he is going to answer the question, he should do so. He should not waste the time of the House.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I was just pointing out that the exploration development program which was requested last fall was only brought in by the Government when the Premier of Alberta threatened to split the federal and provincial wings of the Tory Party.

Mr. Shields: Not true.

Mr. Foster: The amount of money in that program is being totally wiped out by the decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Some $400 million will be wiped off the books, charged back to the oil and gas exploration companies in Alberta. The net effect will be zero. Not only should the Government bring in useful programs such as this, but it is also important that when it is setting the border reference price and adopting policies they not be used in such a way that the United States takes away $400 million worth of the Canadian Government's benefits.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I have listened to some amazing debate in the House of Commons since my election. However, I must say that the most amazing that I have heard yet was the speech made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) this morning who tried to defend his completely indefensible, completely inconsistent and completely unsuccessful policy with respect to the natural gas industry.

Mr. Shields: Where does the NDP stand on natural gas exports?

Mr. Langdon: I will come to that.

I have just come back from Edmonton from a meeting with our NDP caucus out there. The last time that I was there—

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House. He said that he met with the NDP provincial caucus. There is not a New Democratic Party in Alberta. Members of the Party call themselves NDs, although I do not know what that means.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I do not think that the Hon. Member really wanted to interrupt—

Mr. Shields: That was a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It was not a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Let him be accurate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's point of order is consistent with his usual points of order.

The last time I met with the New Democratic Party caucus in Alberta, Ray Martin and I sat down for coffee. This time, of course, there was a roomful of people. There was a very solid opposition being mounted during Question Period. In short, it was the death knell of the Conservative Government in Alberta. One must say that that is long overdue.

We have had today, in view of what is taking place in Alberta, a most amazing performance by the Minister of Energy. When I grew up Alberta was noted throughout Canada for its prosperity. Now, they tell me, there are over 30,000 people dependent on food banks in the City of Edmonton alone. Unemployment is among the highest in the prairie provinces. There is a sense of grievance and unhappiness with a Government which simply cannot work its way to succeeding, even with a fellow Conservative Government in Ottawa, in obtaining changes to benefit Alberta.

I might say parenthetically that one of the subjects we discussed was the two-year battle of the Alberta Government to try to get changes in the IRDP. This effort included letters from Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Jim Horsman and the Parliamentary Secretary from Lethbridge, yet no significant changes were brought about. For the Cities of Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge and the regions surrounding them, which are so important to the growth of Alberta, this meant they were unable to get access to the IRDP. That program was set up for the poorer parts of the country facing the kind of downturn Alberta has faced over the last couple of years.

With that as the background, it was with a sense of tragedy, a sense of the inevitable increase in growth of western alienation and active opposition to the federal Government, as well as the inevitable increase in damage to the people of Alberta, that I listened to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources speak this morning. There was such an incredible lack of knowledge on his part. I must say he was a fine Minister of Communications, but he is a lousy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When he gets up in the House and says 57 per cent of the shares of Dome Petroleum are not owned by Canadians so it is not a Canadian company, he is either trying deliberately to mislead the House, which I could not believe such a cultured Minister would do, or he is trying to demonstrate his lack of knowledge. Control is exercised by far less than even the 43 per cent of Dome which is held in Canadian hands.

The Minister then started to quote from The Toronto Sun. If that was the ultimate that the Minister could come up with as his source of expertise on the petroleum industry of Alberta, it shows where he is. It shows us how much impact the Members from Alberta have had on him. He quoted from The Toronto Sun, that paragon of energy expertise, and indicated what he was concerned about was what the The Toronto Sun referred to as the poorer offers for Dome Petroleum as a result of any intervention which might stop the Amoco takeover. Of course what was being talked about in the House, and has been for so many days that I would think even The Toronto Sun would have absorbed it, was the suggestion of a Canadian consortium being put together to buy Dome. If necessary it could have been led by PetroCan or TCPL. That would leave control of Dome very much in Canadian hands. Obviously to satisfy the creditors it would have to provide a better offer than Amoco has been able to provide. That offer was laughed out of court not just by the creditors here in Canada but by Citibank in the U.S.

First we have this bizarre lack of knowledge by the Minister, then an incredible lack of consistency. How many days did we have to sit here in the House and listen to him saying, "No, this is a private sector decision and is not something the Government can get involved in"? How many days? How many weeks? Yet what did he do? He sat down with Amoco. He was not the only cabinet Minister to do that. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) did so. I am sure there were others. As a consequence, suddenly the "No, we cannot possibly get involved", became "yes, we should try to make our influence felt". As a result, the Minister claims credit this morning for Amoco agreeing out of the goodness of its heart to offer some shares to Canadians. A majority of shares? Even 43 per cent? Any kind of specific figure? No, nothing. Not a single detail. Yet we could be sure of ourselves in the future because Amoco was going to offer some of its shares, 5 per cent, 2 per cent, to Canadians. An act of total inconsistency.

When you are faced with a lack of knowledge and lack of consistency, what you do is attack. You attack a 1979 resolution by the NDP passed at the height of the world energy shortage, a resolution which talked about reducing or phasing out the kinds of gas exports—

Mr. Shields: Let's hear it now.

Mr. Langdon: —that had taken place in the past. As if that had anything to do with the policies of the NDP in 1987.

Mr. Shields: It has everything to do with it.

Mr. Langdon: It is exactly the same as if the former Prime Minister, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), stood up today and made a speech extolling the virtues of the agreement he made with the Premier of Alberta or had hoped to make with the Premier of Alberta concerning sharing gas revenues in 1979. That agreement led to not only the Premier of Alberta but a good many other Canadians rejecting that Prime Minister. Of course, as a consequence, the policies of the Conservative Party have vastly changed since 1979.

• (1620)

What do we have aside from this sorry record on Dome? It is bad enough; I mean it is bad enough to make any Parliament look in derision at a Minister of Energy who tries to defend himself with that kind of nonsense. In addition, we have the ruling by FERC, order No. 256. What it means is much more serious damage to the Alberta economy than has yet been done by the Conservative Government.

Perhaps it would be useful to quote, not from The Toronto Sun, but from The Financial Post which has a little more knowledge in respect of energy issues. This article is from January, 1987. This issue did not suddenly rear its head last week. It has been around for some time. I have clippings of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) talking about it over a year ago. It is an issue with which the Government has failed to deal. The Financial Post indicated:

> As with lumber, where the U.S. said because Canada doesn't charge stumpage the way it does we have to change, so with gas; calculate demand charges the way U.S. says and then Canadian gas will be less competitive in the American market.

The Financial Post went on to say:

> The gall of this stance is breath-taking. It was because of American bleatings that we deregulated gas pricing three years ago and let the market prevail. On this new basis, Canadian producers have signed contracts with American users. The sanctity of contracts freely entered into—an essential element of the enterprise system so staunchly upheld by most Americans—seems to mean nothing to FERC and its U.S. applicants.

What has happened is that 33 cents out of every 50 cents of demand charges which could previously be placed, not because Canadian companies established it as law but because American companies had signed contracts, must be dropped or these exports will not be possible in the future.

What are we heading toward? Frankly I think we are heading toward a situation where we have a Government in place which has proved itself to be incompetent on virtually every trade issue which has faced it.

We could talk about softwood. I quoted figures in Question Period earlier today which showed the Canadian market share. It is the market share which matters. The market share has declined by almost 3 per centage points from the same time last year.

We could talk about fish and the position into which Canadian producers on the East Coast were put where they have had to pay countervail on fish.

We could talk about shakes and shingles where we had the case of retaliation brought in by the Canadian Government, which proved to be not just totally ineffective in doing anything about the shakes and shingles levies but totally destructive in respect of the Canadian publishing industry.

We could talk about hogs and the case of Canadian farmers across the country who are still faced with levies which they must pay on hogs. If the levies do not work, U.S. states put into effect so-called health restrictions which stop hogs from crossing the border. Those health restrictions will be there just as FERC will be there regardless of whether or not there is free trade.

We could talk about grain and the fact that the United States has as a result of its Farm Bill put policies into effect which devastated farm communities in my county and in the counties of hundreds of other Members.

We cannot find a single place in which the trade policy of the Government has worked. There is not a single, solitary example of the Government's trade policy working for Canadians.

Mr. Keeper: It is working for the Americans.

Mr. Langdon: As my colleague says, our trade policy has been to make things right for Americans, not to protect Canadian producers.

Frankly, in each case we have had to give up, to give in to the United States, to give it what it wanted. The reason for that is absolutely clear-cut. It lies in the desperate effort of the Government to try to achieve a free trade agreement at any price or at any cost, with any sacrifice and with any loss to Canadian people, regardless of what happens to Canada. It is a process which has been getting worse and worse as Parliament has gone on. It is a process which should not even be in place. If any of the promises made by President Reagan at the Quebec Summit to ensure that there was not a single step taken by the United States to increase protectionism against Canada had meant anything aside from rhetoric, none of this would have happened. In every case, and I omit none, the trade position of the Government has created a worse position for Canada than when we started out.

In the case of FERC, frankly there are things we can do. For instance, we should raise the whole question in the free trade talks. We should also look very carefully at whether legislation is possible on our side of the border which would prevent this American incursion of their laws and regulations into our jurisdiction. If the Government said it was looking at that, I would accept that at least it was doing something for Canadians. As it stands, I can see nothing at all being done.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He went to a great deal of effort to explain that the NDP policy on natural gas exports is no longer Party policy and that it now has a new policy which says that reasonable export of natural gas should take place. How can the Member square this with the October 1986 Resolutions Reference? Let me quote from the New Democrats 1986 Resolutions Reference. It reads:

> This book contains those resolutions passed by the New Democrats since 1961 which are still current today. That is, resolutions which have not been overtaken by events—

• (1630)

The introduction states that these resolutions "are still current today". We have the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who is the Energy critic, saying the particular resolution is no longer valid because it was passed at the time of the energy crisis. How can the New Democrats square this when it is pointed out to them that the introduction to the Resolutions Reference goes on to state that these are resolutions which have not been overtaken by events?

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway stated on Friday that New Democratic Party policy is that there should be reasonable natural gas exports. I am not sure what that means. He may not have the authority—maybe the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor can confirm this—to make such a commitment. The New Democratic Party constitution calls for policy statements to be consistent with resolutions passed by NDP conventions.

Is the Member for Essex—Windsor saying that really this has been passed by an NDP convention, it is on the books as policy but that Members of the caucus in the House of Commons can negate what went on at the convention? Are they saying they can change the policy unilaterally? That is not the way their papers read. Perhaps the Member from Essex—Windsor could clarify that position.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I must say it is amusing to hear such comments coming from a Party led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who in 1983 stated that he was opposed to free trade—

Mr. Shields: Answer the question.

Mr. Langdon: —that free trade would lead to a situation where branch plants in Canada would leave Canada, where Canadian jobs would be drastically threatened and, as a result, his Party should never espouse, promote or push for free trade with the United States.

Times change, I suppose, in the Conservative Party. They seem to change a little bit faster than most and for less clear cut reasons.

Mr. Shields: He won't answer.

Mr. Langdon: With respect to our Party, I can certainly answer because I was chairperson of our policy review committee at the time that those policies to which the Hon. Member referred were passed. I continue to maintain that the thrust of the resolutions which were passed in that resolutions convention and were passed in resolutions conventions that we have held each two years since 1961 will form important considerations and the basic thrusts of what we would want to do as the Government of this country. I am certainly not going to say that each and every detail of such policy resolutions is as deathless in its prose as it was at the time.

What is crucial is that there was a commitment to our energy policy which was passed at that time to try to see to it that Canadians came first, and that commitment is as clear-cut as it was in 1979. It is a commitment which would lead us, as I have suggested with respect to Amoco, to take a completely different policy than this Government did. With respect to gas exports it would also lead us to take a completely different approach. For instance, we have been much more concerned about many of the small scale gas producers—

Mr. Shields: Answer the question.

Mr. Langdon: —which have been locked in by previous Governments' positions. Our position would be to try to open up both the Canadian market, and where the Canadian market is secure, other markets, such as the United States, to potential export from those small producers so that they too could gain many of the benefits, and Alberta could gain many of the jobs and spin-offs which would exist and which are not at the present time being obtained.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I think everyone who listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor realizes that the NDP has a convenient policy which it enunciates because it can be a different policy in Saskatchewan, in Alberta and in British Columbia, the gas-producing parts of the country, from the one it enunciates here.

The Member also states, and I think it is utter rubbish, that the NDP would move to enhance or increase the consumption of natural gas in Canada and then maybe export gas. We are doing that. The Member knows full well about the National Energy Board's rulings and the reserves that have to be in place. We have a formula and we have been following it.

I think people will read through the NDP socialist garbage and claptrap that comes consistently, which I call NDP or socialist misspeak. What about his idea of a consortium to buy Dome led by Petro-Canada—and that is key because the socialists believe in state ownership of all enterprises in Canada whether the production of shoes or the production of oil and natural gas? What we are talking about is a bail-out of a company which is virtually insolvent or is considered to be insolvent or bankrupt. The Government has to bail out a company that has the problem it has today because of the National Energy Program perpetrated on Canada by the previous Government and, I might add, supported by the New Democratic Party, the socialists. The New Democrats may say that they voted against the NEP, but we all know that the Energy critic, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway, rose in this House and said "We shouldn't be going after PetroFina with Petro-Canada, we should nationalize one of the big boys, Esso". I think those were virtually his words. He will correct me if I am wrong.

I would ask the Member to elaborate on that because the Minister has been very clear in this House. He has been very clear in any speeches he has made and in every statement, that it was a private sector problem brought on by the National Energy Program which got Dome into trouble. It was a private sector solution, until the Minister of Energy who recognized the problems we were facing with Dome addressed them, as the previous Government would not, and then all of a sudden Dome received offers for amalgamation from TransCanada PipeLines and from Amoco. They were told ahead of time to make the best offer because the board of directors would make the decision. The federal Government does not own Dome and is not selling Dome. The Dome shareholders, who hold the Dome board of directors responsible, are selling Dome.

The Member asks how many shares of Amoco are going to be made available to the Canadian public. I think the Member honestly said that. He said, how much? Two per cent or 3 per cent? If the Hon. Member is as knowledgeable as he professes to be, he should know that the President of Amoco Canada, Don Stacy, said the following:

> What we (Amoco) are committed to do is not have a net decrease in Canadian ownership (in the oil and gas industry), and in fact have a net increase in Canadian ownership as we develop this program over time with Investment Canada and as time allows us to issue shares.

• (1640)

That is the principle involved. There will be no decrease in Canadian ownership on the share issues, and that should be very clear. Why does the Hon. Member not acknowledge that that is what has been said and that that is the commitment that has been made?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has actually expired, but I will allow the Hon. Member two minutes to answer his colleague.

Mr. Shields: One minute of claptrap.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, there is so much claptrap, as the Hon. Member calls it, in that question that it is difficult to reply quickly. Let me say three things.

First, as the Hon. Member has been told many times, the New Democratic Party did not support the NEP, and especially not its details.

Mr. Shields: I was here, you weren't.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, but I read the votes and you obviously don't.

Second, the Hon. Member suggested that the NDP program would have everything owned by Government. I assume he has been reading our resolutions books very carefully from the reference he made of them in the debate. Clearly he is telling the House something which is quite false and quite unreflected in those resolutions. We have a commitment to using the state creatively, something which we believe this Government does not do. That is why I suggested that if necessary, Petro-Canada might be the leader of such a consortium.

Finally, with respect to the inconsistency of the Minister, I heard the Minister say for weeks in the House that this is a private sector issue and he would not interfere. Then he interfered. He interfered not to help Canadian companies take over Dome, not to open up the bids for Dome so that more would be provided, but to make certain that an American company would be able to take over this company with greater ease. That is the interference he undertook.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon although I am not particularly pleased about the subject matter we are debating. As an Albertan and a small producer in the energy sector, I have listened to this rhetoric with the knowledge that order 256 is certainly causing concern to producers in western Canada. I can say that there are Albertan producers who will probably never get over what happened under the National Energy Program.

I share the sense of injury and frustration which several Hon. Members have expressed over order 256, the ruling made by the American Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Like many others in the House, I am extremely disappointed by that decision.

Order 256 runs counter to the long-term trade interests of Americans as well as Canadians. I think we must look at it from the perspective of Americans as well. Americans will be dependent to a much greater degree on Canadian gas in the very near future than they are at the present time. The order violates a long-standing tradition of mutual respect between Canada and the United States for each other's regulatory approaches and it is a step away from rather than toward the effort both countries are making to adopt a more market-oriented policy in our bilateral trade agreements.

Energy is an important component of our trade relationship with the United States. In 1985, that two-way trade was worth approximately $17 billion. While the dollar value of these exchanges declined to roughly $12 billion in 1986, they remain important to both countries.

I should stress that the worth of our energy trade lies not only in the dollar value associated with it but in the fact that our bilateral exchanges in energy can and should contribute to greater security, efficiency and economy on both sides of the border. Within our bilateral trade, natural gas occupies an important place. In the first 11 months of 1986, natural gas accounted for 25 per cent of the value of total Canadian exports to the United States. Moreover, it is well known that natural gas is a key element in the economy of western Canada.

I think I can speak with some feeling on this subject, representing as I do the City of Medicine Hat which was one of the first areas in western Canada to develop natural gas in the early 1900s. Medicine Hat is known as the gas city of the West. There has been in the past and there will be again street lights in Medicine Hat that are run by natural gas. In the early years, it was cheaper to leave the lights on all the time than it was to hire someone to go around turning those lights out.

The industry that came to Medicine Hat came as a result of the abundance and the price of natural gas. The city now has over 500 gas wells and somewhere in the area of 50 oil wells and is the seventeenth largest producer of natural gas in Canada.

Many Hon. Members are aware of what happened during the time of the National Energy Program. At that time, the City of Medicine Hat faced a variety of taxes. The second increase in the PGRT amounted to more than residential consumers were paying for gas. The City of Medicine Hat took the case to the Supreme Court but lost. Imagine a city of about 43,000 people paying $55 million in federal tax and the devastating effect the National Energy Program had on the industries of that city. As I said, most of the industries came there as a result of the abundant and relatively cheap gas. The National Energy Program affected fertilizer plants, methanol plants, brick plants, the forest industry and many other sectors of the economy. They were affected by that one move which was made within the borders of Canada.

Certainly I am upset about what I can see happening across the border and it will cause some hardship. Certainly we should do everything we can to address it, but it will in no way begin to reflect the hurt that was caused by a program drafted by the previous Government, a program for which many Canadians will pay for the rest of their lives in jobs lost and in businesses gone down the drain.

Within the United States market, Canadian natural gas imports have accounted for roughly 4 per cent to 5 per cent in some years and this has been going on for some time. While we clearly do not occupy a dominant position in the American gas market, the American consumer has long benefited from the existence of significant, reliable, competitive supplies of Canadian natural gas.

One of the reasons we find the FERC decision so objectionable is its manifest unfairness. The 1985-86 American consumption of natural gas from all sources declined by 4 per cent. During that same period, Canadian exports declined by 16 per cent. At the very time when we were being lectured on the virtues of the level playing field and the need to ensure open and fair competition, our exports were declining four times faster than the rate at which the market was shrinking. A 16 per cent drop in a market which declined by 4 per cent does not suggest that our exporters enjoyed an unfair competitive advantage.

What does the decision mean and what effect will it have? The House will be aware that the FERC order 256 confirmed on May 27 disallows several major elements of the fixed transportation charges which Canadian exporters previously passed through to their U.S. customers. On May 27, the NOVA charge, which is essentially a transportation cost and had erroneously been disallowed along with several other fixed costs, was reinstated. That means that the impact on Canadian exporters will not be quite as severe as it might have been otherwise. We are still very much of the view, however, that regardless of the financial impact, this decision violates principles which we think are important.

Some of my colleagues have already explained how order 256 will affect Canadian companies involved in exporting natural gas to the United States. Essentially the problem is that if the disallowed cost cannot be recovered in the demand charge it must be added to the commodity component of the rate. That will make Canadian gas less competitive and will most likely lead to a decrease in the importers' gas takes.

In a jurisdictional sense, FERC's decision amounts to imposing its rate-making practices on Canadian pipelines. The fixed costs incurred in Canada for transportation facilities to deliver Canadian gas to U.S. markets on a firm basis and are not structured by Canadian regulators. According to FERC's preferred rate design, recovery of these costs will no longer be assured.

Another major issue raised relates to the policy. The FERC decision undercuts attempts by both the Canadian and United States Governments to strengthen the market approach to energy trade.

Many in the U.S. administration, I think, understood our position and sympathized with it. Secretary Shultz himself advocated a delay in taking any final action by FERC to allow more time for consideration and review. Unfortunately, FERC, admittedly an independent agency, chose to ignore the request. Instead of taking the long-term view, it let itself be swayed by short-term considerations.

This ruling is part of an unfortunate series of recent decisions affecting major Canadian exports to the United States. We know, and I believe the U.S. administration knows as well, that the protectionist trend which it once again illustrates is as short-sighted as it is regrettable.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was in Washington on business in December following the announcement of the FERC ruling. He was thus able to raise it immediately with his counterpart. Shortly afterward, at the level of officials, an interdepartmental meeting was held in Ottawa to develop a concerted Canadian response to what was seen as an unfair and discriminatory move against Canadian gas exporters. At this early stage there were extensive consultations with representatives of the Canadian companies involved as well as with the provinces, especially Alberta and British Columbia. On December 18, the Minister wrote to his American counterpart in some detail outlining Canada's serious concerns over the FERC ruling and attaching copies of letters he had received from the Ministers of Energy of the two concerned provinces.

The Minister has already informed the House of the steps which he and his officials took to sensitize the U.S. Department of Energy to the serious implications of order 256 for Canada. I shall, therefore, not dwell on them. However, I will quote from Ambassador Gotlieb's letter to Mr. Wallis, the Under-Secretary for Economic Affairs in the State Department, to which he attached a copy of the letter of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asking the State Department to bring Canada's concerns to the attention of FERC. The letter reads in part:

> FERC's decision denies Canadian exporters the ability to pass through natural gas rates which have been freely negotiated with U.S. consumers and approved by the Economic Regulatory Administration in accordance with the Department of Energy's import guidelines. By disallowing the recovery of legitimate costs in the demand charge related to investments made to service U.S. markets, FERC's decision treats Canadian gas unfairly. Indeed, instead of meeting the Commission's stated objective—"to level the playing field"—FERC's decision, if implemented as it now stands, would actually tilt the playing field against Canadian imports.
> The U.S. import policy guidelines announced in 1984 aimed at ensuring that Canadian gas enters the U.S. on a competitive, market-oriented basis to facilitate arrangements which are essential to Canada's remaining a secure and reliable supplier.
> For its part, the Canadian Government has adopted market-based policies which permit Canadian gas to be competitive in U.S. markets.
> Placing Canadian gas at a serious disadvantage in U.S. markets, as the FERC decision does, could in the short term mean the loss of competitively priced Canadian gas for U.S. consumers.

Those Members who are on the Standing Committee for Energy, Mines and Resources will recall a meeting held on February 10 of this year before which a consortium represented by Polar Gas appeared. It outlined the long-term views of the gas industry as they saw it, not only for North America but broken down into the American and Canadian markets. We have studied the 18-month natural gas bubble which seems to run ahead. It appears to be coming to a close, perhaps sooner than people on both sides of the border may appreciate.

In the summary of the submission which was presented by the Polar Gas consortium on the supply-demand balance they say that it is exceedingly difficult to estimate the annual net effect of the multitude of gas supply and demand factors. Nevertheless, it is clear that the apparent over-supply in the U.S. gas market is unlikely to continue far into the future. Some forecasters foresee a growing need for the United States to obtain additional gas supplies, especially after 1990.

In October, 1985, a comprehensive study of the U.S. gas market by Foster Associates forecast an end of the deliverability surplus by 1990. A similar forecast was contained in the May, 1986, analysis brief from the American Gas Association. Such forecasts are now receiving broader acceptance.

They go on to say that a technical analysis of the U.S. gas market points clearly to a significant reduction in the deliverability surplus over the next few years, and the reduction in the long-term reserves for which there is generally a firm demand will require major imports of supplementary natural gas beginning in the early 1990s. There is also at risk international and domestic energy market dynamics which will result in the supply shortfall developing at a pace faster than is now widely anticipated.

I hope that our counterpart south of the border will appreciate that the gas situation is changing rapidly. We are seeing a decline in the western sedimentary basin. The reserves which will have to be called on in the future will be much more costly. I think that security of supply and fair treatment for traders on both sides of the border should be utmost in the minds of those who are considering decisions such as the one we are presently dealing with.

Canada and the United States have made great progress in improving the basis for natural gas trade in recent years. Legislative and regulatory changes, including positive moves by FERC to deregulate prices and transportation, have contributed to making this trade more market-responsive, thereby benefiting producers and consumers in both our countries. We are hopeful that this constructive approach will continue and that the Canadian concerns relating to FERC's decision will be addressed in the review procedures.

In the meantime the Government was in close touch with and lent every assistance to the Canadian companies and their request for a rehearing of the case by FERC. Our embassy also organized meetings with several of the key players for the Alberta Energy Minister, Mr. Webber, when he travelled to Washington in mid-January to make the case for fairness for western gas exporters.

• (1700)

Ambassador Gotlieb's letter found a responsive chord in the State Department. In January, the State Department wrote to FERC urging it to grant the Canadian companies concerned a rehearing of the case.

The House will recall that on January 21, Vice-President Bush and Secretary of the Treasury Baker visited Ottawa. During that visit, the issue was raised in vigorous terms by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

I will not take up more time of the House in describing every step the Government has taken to defend the interests of Canadian gas exporters, but I want to mention that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) raised this issue twice with the American Secretary of State Shultz, and each time he elicited a supportive reaction on the part of his U.S. counterpart. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury Baker. The issue was raised at the Ottawa Summit and finally, further to these discussions, the Prime Minister wrote to President Reagan on May 5.

The text of the FERC decision was received in Ottawa late last week. Clearly, it will have to be reviewed in detail before we can determine what further steps we may take.

I would not wish to create the impression that prospects for an early, positive outcome are bright. I am able to assure the House, however, that we will continue to do all that lies in our power to achieve a satisfactory result.

The House will be aware that the Canadian producers are challenging the FERC decision in the American courts. We have worked closely with the producers and the provincial Governments concerned for the past six months. We will continue to do so in the future.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that my constituency is not a western constituency or one normally associated with the oil and gas industry. However, I do have a number of companies in my constituency that are very much involved in the oil and gas industry.

In fact, there are major offices in my constituency for Imperial Oil, Texaco, and Shell. In addition, I learned upon coming to Ottawa that there are some 63 different businesses in my constituency—only one of the constituencies in Metropolitan Toronto—that are suppliers to the oil and gas industry in western Canada. Therefore, the future of the oil and gas industry is very significant as far as my riding is concerned and as far as the businesses and jobs in my riding are concerned. Considering those facts, I took advantage of an opportunity to travel to Alberta about two years ago and to tour the oil and gas fields, particularly those around Edmonton such as the Cold Lake area and the oil sands. I had an opportunity to see Suncor and Syncrude.

As a matter of fact, I also had the opportunity to get out on the Gulf oil rig in the Beaufort Sea. Therefore, I have a little knowledge of the importance of the oil and gas industry not only to my constituency, but to western Canada and Alberta in particular.

I have had discussions with the Hon. Member and I know that he has very strong opinions about one area of the oil and gas industry but about which he did not have a chance to comment in his remarks. It concerns the impact of Dome on the oil and gas industry in Alberta in particular. He has told me that Dome is involved in 24 per cent of the land permits in Alberta, has some 4,000 employees, but has a debt of some $6.3 billion.

That huge debt and the fact that Dome plays such an active role in the oil and gas industry in Alberta makes it very important to the economy of Alberta. The fact that this huge debt hangs over Dome's head has a stifling effect on the development of the oil and gas industry in Alberta.

Would the Hon. Member comment on that aspect of the control that Dome has over the future of the oil and gas industry in Alberta?

Mr. Porter: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his question. The Hon. Member raises an important question about the impact on Alberta of a company as large as Dome, which holds so much of the resource potential in Alberta.

When we consider the oil and gas industry, we should take into account that while a lot of drilling activity takes place, a gas well can be drilled in a matter of hours or days and larger gas and oil wells take somewhat longer. The service sector of the industry becomes involved from the beginning, with the land men who make the original deals with the surface lease owner, to the company that supplies the pipes, cement and materials.

In the town of Brooks in my constituency, with a population of just over 9,000, 53 per cent of the jobs are related to the energy sector. Many of those jobs were filled by rural people who may have faced difficulties in agriculture. There has been 16 per cent to 17 per cent unemployment in that area where 53 per cent of the jobs are in the service sector of the oil and gas industry.

I too have travelled to the tar sands and the Beaufort up north. The Hon. Member can appreciate that pulling 25 per cent of the activity from there, without a stable base, will obviously have a tremendous impact on the whole economy of the energy sector in Alberta generally.

When the petroleum and gas revenue tax was in place, the initial tax at the wellhead was 16 per cent. This included dry holes, since one does not strike gas or oil at every hole. A dry hole in the case of a gas well costs $600 less to drill than one in which gas is discovered, because the dry hole does not need a wellhead.

I ask the Hon. Member to consider that taking 16 per cent off the top is like taking 16 per cent off the day's take from a store in Ottawa before it pays its expenses or staff. That was the case in the West, and no other industry in the history of Canada faced a similar tax.

While we went through a difficult period, we are seeing a measure of recovery as a result of the announced CEDIP program, putting a third of the funding in place for the companies that are willing to explore. Some companies are still hesitant to do so, but the provision of some funding has made it easier for them to seek financing and there is activity in place in southern Alberta and across the West. We are seeing some encouragement in the energy sector, and that is why it is important that we maintain our current markets and develop them for the future. Since we supply 4 per cent to 5 per cent of the American market presently, it will obviously need more gas in the future. That is a reason that Polar Gas was there looking at a large consortium which would bring gas down from the North. The Americans are going to require it, and certainly I would think that any moves they take to make it more difficult at this time is not only going to make it difficult for Canadian producers but will affect their long-term availability of gas.

One cannot just turn on a pipe overnight. It takes time to go out and develop. Anything which brings some concern to the market-place will reflect back to the production end of it. I think we have to be concerned about it and I think the Americans should also be concerned because their future is tied to the North American gas market.

North America, as we all know, shares a gas market. Our imports and exports of oil products are based on world prices. The price for natural gas is based on a North American market and is reflected somewhat, I suppose, on what energy prices world-wide are doing. However, the market board is here, and that is why this is such a sensitive issue and I think it should be viewed very carefully by those who are making this decision.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the last spokesperson for the Conservative Party who, once again, was forced to rise to his feet to defend another major incursion into the natural resource field by the actions of another country. I do not doubt for a moment his sincerity and feelings of anguish about the impact on his constituents. However, Madam Speaker, think for a moment how often we have heard that. How many times in the last 18 months to two years have Conservative Members of Parliament been required to rise to their feet in this House, shake their heads, wring their hands and cry: "Woe is me unto the fates" because of some major decision primarily taken by the Reagan administration in the United States against this country. I can give an example of shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, the import tax on petroleum last fall, and the fundamental problems we face in agriculture because of the U.S. Farm Bill which is taking away our markets and forcing prices down. How many times have we had to hear attempts to rationalize, to apologize, and to explain why it is that in the last two years, in particular, there have been broader and more extreme restraints put on our trade with the United States than ever before? The only solutions we have been able to find is when, in the softwood lumber case, we imposed a $600 million tax on ourselves and lost the lumber markets. This all came about after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States got together in Quebec City and promised there would be a freeze on such actions. They promised there would no longer be these kinds of impediments to our trade. In fact, they went so far as to promise to strengthen our market approach to Canadian-United States energy trade by reducing restrictions, particularly those on petroleum imports and exports.

That was a solemn agreement entered into by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada, but how many times has it been trespassed? How many times have we had transgressions and how many times have we had to suffer the crocodile tears of members of the Government which has willfully allowed it to happen?

The irony is that every time this happens, every time we are faced with one of these blows against our resource sector, we are told that that is another example of why we have to continue trying to work out a better deal with the Americans so they will not do it to us again. As we capitulate and surrender time after time, we are saying: "Well, if we only surrender one more time, perhaps the Americans will not do it again".

You may recall, Madam Speaker, that childhood toy, the little rubber dummy with the sand in its bottom. One hits it and it keeps bouncing back. Well, we are becoming the rubber dummies of the trade world.

Mr. MacKay: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Axworthy: I am speaking for this Government which is constantly and continually, without cease, following its line of argument that it alone will solve the trade problems when in fact under its regime there have been more actions, more restrictions, and they come by the barrelhead. This is just the beginning. I have a whole list to go through. The potash requirement is going to be another major blow. Canadians are waiting for a resolution to this problem. I would suggest that the reason is that they had it all wrong. When the Prime Minister signed his agreement with the President, he might have been wise to have taken a couple of lessons from Thomas Haliburton when he had his "Sam Slick" series back in the 19th century when he talked about the Yankee trader. "They are tough and they are smart and they will pull the wool over your eyes any time they get a chance as long as they have someone naive on the other side of the bargaining table". And we do have someone naive handling our trade negotiations here.

More important than the naivety is the dissembling which goes along with it, which is more destructive than a willingness to really deal with these measures in a forthright way. I do not think I have seen in a long time a more calculated piece of chicanery than the Prime Minister's trip to western Canada where the only thing he announced in the Town of Lethbridge was that he had written the President to get a solution to the national energy gas ruling. Boy, he was going to be Horatio at the bridge. After all, he spent all this time establishing a special relationship with the President of the United States. He spent all his time developing all these good causes. But the fact is that the President had no intention of interfering because we were told in the House two weeks later that all along the Ambassador and others knew it was a judicial decision, which makes the case that the Prime Minister was simply fooling western Canadians simply to get a headline. Or he did not know, which is even worse, what was going on in this vital decision. I do not know whether it is worse being a knave or a fool. Perhaps we are faced with a situation where we have both embodiments in the figure of our Prime Minister.

Why would he go to western Canada and make that grandiloquent gesture that he was going to save the situation when he knew full well that that kind of intervention was not going to work because the ground work had not been laid? The kind of clear willingness of the Government to stand up to these interventions in our natural resource fields is not taken seriously by the Reagan administration. Why should we be taken seriously? Every time the United States has applied intimidation and blackmail, we have given in and paid the ransom.

That is what we are facing. It comes at a very serious time when our natural resource industries, particularly in western Canada, northern Ontario and in parts of the Atlantic and Quebec, are reeling from an incredible series of blows dealt them in the international market-place. In many cases there is an over supply of products, whether it be nickel or wheat. In many cases there is the emergence of new competitors who are providing the same types of commodities and resources. In other cases there is a replacement of natural resources with new types of artificial materials. Whatever the reason, we know that the old cornucopia of the Canadian resource field is becoming uncoupled from the international market, and certainly uncoupled from our own domestic economy.

There has been more than enough clear analysis to show that what used to lead to recovery in Canada, what used to be the engine of growth, that is, our resource industries, is now falling further and further behind. What will be required is an effective set of national policies to come to grips with these matters. This means that we must have the national instruments to deal with them. We must have ownership of the industries so that they are accountable to political and national decisions.

In all these respects we are giving up on the various agreements and ingredients to have an effective national policy. This is at a time when we have demands for substantial, effective answers to the incredibly difficult circumstances faced by our resource industries in our resource regions, and we are negotiating them away. We are giving them up, whether it be through constitutional change, free trade negotiation or an acquiescence with respect to a whole series of acquisitions and takeovers. Whatever facet it is, Canada is losing its tools and abilities to meet that type of challenge.

I point Hon. Members to one of the most serious international developments that Canadians face. It is the God-given assumption now prevalent in the United States that that country has the right to insist, extra-territorially, that we follow its policies. We saw it with respect to the softwood lumber decision in which a decision taken by the American authorities told us how to price our resources.

We see it now in the decision of the Federal Energy Resource Commission which now has the right to decide how we will price our natural gas exports and how we will deal with the transmission of those resources. We see it being introduced in House and Senate Bills on trade in which the Americans would abrogate to themselves the right to determine subsidies in other jurisdictions, other countries, where they consider there to be unfair trade practices and apply penalties against them if they do not like them.

What is interesting to note is that in the congressional debates dealing with that legislation the concessions made by Canada on the softwood lumber case are cited as full warranty as to why they have the right to go ahead and do that. Thus we have a situation in which our neighbour to the south has decided that it can basically determine and choose what our national resource policies will be. That is really the type of issue the country should be facing with fear and trepidation. It means that we will be losing not only the right but the opportunity to try to engage in a major restructuring and reformulation of the resource industries that are so vital to so many parts of the country.

I weep at times when I think of how little ability we will have left to deal with these problems once the Government gets through with its mandate in a year or two. There will be no power left at the federal level to come to grips with these issues since we are bargaining it away all over the place. Therefore, as much as we may perceive the problem, our capacity and ability to meet the problem will disappear. It will evaporate. It will become part of the bargain-basement approach.

I return with some real concern to the speech given what must be about two years ago now by Simon Reisman, our chief trade negotiator, before he was appointed to that position. After a speech given to the Ontario Economic Council he was asked what it would take for the Americans to sign a deal to limit their contingency practices or trade remedy laws. He said: "Well, we don't really have enough to give up unless we're basically prepared to negotiate away our resources, particularly our water resources". Mr. Reisman was a prescient fellow in many ways. I do not know what kind of negotiator he will be, but he understood then, and I presume he has never lost the sense of what it will take to get a good deal, that, basically we will have to give up our ability to own and to manage our own resources and to set policies for them.

How true that prophecy is becoming. I do not know if Mr. Reisman was the author of it, but it certainly seems that the Government we have now is following footstep by footstep down the path of surrendering not only the resources themselves but the right of Canadians to decide how they will be used.

For all the stamping of feet and gnashing of teeth that we see from the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), we have heard it before on shakes and shingles and softwood lumber and all the rest of it. Are they not good at crying over spilt milk? They have a wonderful capacity for dramatic overtones in dealing with those problems. But they certainly have not demonstrated any ability to come to grips with the issue and really recognize what is at stake.

I would now like to outline another facet of the problem. It is not only government policies that are being given away, surrendered and bargained down the track, but the question of the ultimate ownership and accountability of the resources that must be considered. As we have seen in the House, Investment Canada has become a joke. It is becoming one of the great all-time Canadian jokes. I think it will become a perennial series next to the Royal Canadian Air Farce. That agency, which is supposed to retain some rudimentary responsibility for determining questions of foreign investment in this country, is so busy rubber-stamping every single possible takeover and acquisition that it has never been able to find anything with which it disagrees.

Why would it not have raised the slightest question, even stopped for a day or two, to examine the sell-off of the West Kootenay Power and Light Co. in the Okanagan? It is the first time in Canada that we have sold off a public utility. Did it even wait for the B.C. Utilities Commission to finish its own hearings to look at the evidence? No. It was in such a rush to get the rubber stamp at work that it agreed to the takeover and acquisition before the evidence was even on the table.

Mr. MacLellan: On Christmas Eve.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right, on Christmas Eve. I suppose that that was the Government's idea of Santa Claus coming down the chimney from Ronald Reagan or the firm in St. Louis which bought the company and the water rights that go along with it.

Did I hear any protest in the House from the three or four Conservative Members of Parliament who represent the interior of B.C.? I did not hear a word. There was total acquiescence.

If we consider the record of Investment Canada we will see that $22 billion worth of foreign investment has taken place in just 15 months, and that 95 per cent of the assets are in takeovers and acquisitions. Yet it says that it is doing a good job. Why is that important?

I suppose it comes down partly from the historical evidence provided by the Institute for Research and Public Policy. It is provided in part by Investment Canada. It is certainly provided by DRIE in its own reports.

Whatever you may say about foreign versus Canadian ownership, Canadian companies invest more in research and development, in exports, and in jobs. Why is that important in this case? If our resource industries are going to meet international competition, it will take new investment in research and development to come up with new products, new fabrications, new uses. It will take substantially more effective effort at export development.

It is interesting to note that at the very time our industry is facing this new, intense bareknuckle world of international competition, what is the Government doing? It is reducing the amount of money available for trade development and marketing programs to help industry find new markets. Do you think there is a conspiracy here? Do you think the Government is really just letting this happen by sheer coincidence? Or, do you think someone has decided that they do not want us to compete. They do not want us to become better through research and development. It cannot be completely by accident that you stop investing, pull back support, and surrender to the efforts by U.S. regulatory agencies or the U.S. administration to move in and tell us how to run your industry.

Maybe it is what we call the Schefferville complex. Maybe the Prime Minister thought he was so successful in Schefferville, although the town is now totally closed down, that he is going to apply that principle to the entire country. Maybe Canada is going to become one big Schefferville. You get snazzy headlines that you are trying to save the community, and a year later the fact that everything has gone down the drain does not matter because you have had your headline. Maybe that is the principle now in place.

There has to be some explanation of why every time you turn around you see a Government ill-prepared to come to grips specifically with the major restructuring problems in oil and gas, minerals and grain, yet at the same time surrendering its sovereign ability to do something about it.

I submit that the purpose of this resolution is simply to say once again that the Government has a major responsibility to the resource regions of Canada and it has dismally failed in that responsibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I want to start by indicating that we support this motion put forward by the other opposition Party. I want to read that motion into the record. It says:

> That this House condemn the government for its repeated failures to protect Canadian sovereignty and economic independence as demonstrated by its weak and ineffectual efforts to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with regard to transmission costs of Canadian gas, and by its compliant approach to permitting foreign take-overs of Canadian corporations and natural resources.

That really hits the nail on the head. It points out that the Government is giving up Canadian sovereignty. It is making a series of policy decisions that are eroding Canadian sovereignty. This is not just an abstract concept, it is a matter of public policy which directly affects both our economic well-being and independence. Of course, our economic independence is related to our capacity to make decisions in other areas, including that of foreign policy. The resolution points to what is basically a sell-out of Canadian corporations and Canadian natural resources. It points to the series of policy decisions the Government has taken since it came into office which have rolled out the red carpet for increased foreign ownership.

I want to back up those assertions by indicating that the decision we are dealing with today, something called Opinion 256 of the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, affects Canadian energy policy. This decision of an American regulatory body seeks to determine how we handle the charges we apply to our resources. In this case it is called a toll.

Of course, this is not the first failure the Government has had in maintaining Canada's capacity to regulate its own natural resources. We can easily remember the softwood lumber conflict. The American industry became concerned about the fact that Canadian exports of softwood lumber into the U.S. were cutting into the American companies' business and those companies raised a real stink. The American Government responded and demanded that Canada impose a tax on its softwood resource.

What we have is the beginning of a pattern in which the Canadian Government buckles under to pressure from the U.S. Government and U.S. industry. As a result, our policies on the regulation of natural resources are beginning to be made in the U.S. The Canadian Government is in the process of giving up its ability to regulate our natural resources. It is beginning to simply respond to American pressure.

It is not only in the area of regulation that we are giving up authority and power and ability to regulate. This also spills over into the area of ownership. It raises the question of who owns the Canadian economy.

Obviously one long-standing problem in the Canadian economy is the fact that many of our industries are heavily owned by foreigners, primarily Americans. American investors and American companies own the greater part of Canadian industry. The Government has exacerbated this problem. It has moved us further down that road.

In the last few weeks we have heard much about Dome Petroleum and about the bid by Amoco, a large American corporation, to take over Dome. The Canadian Government stands idly by while corporations in the petroleum industry are being sold off by Americans. The amount of foreign ownership in the petroleum industry is continuing to increase. This means that we have less capacity as Canadians to direct and set economic policy in this area. The Canadian Government is really assisting the Americans to gain greater influence over the Canadian economy.

Perhaps it is forgivable for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to be buddy-buddy with the American President and to sign Irish songs with him. We understand that kind of behaviour; it is all right for television cameras. However, when that attitude or behaviour spills into economic policy, we have a real problem. When the Canadian Prime Minister fails to stand up for Canadian interests, fails to protect the capacity of the Canadian Government to regulate our natural resources, and fails to take effective action to ensure that the petroleum industry remains in Canadian hands or that the amount of Canadian ownership in the petroleum industry increases, in fact the Government is standing aside while the amount of foreign ownership in the petroleum industry continues to increase.

It is not surprising, because this is the Government which scuttled FIRA, an agency which was to examine foreign investment to see whether or not it was in the interests of Canada, and replaced it with Investment Canada, which had a track record for approving just about every bid by Americans to take over Canadian corporations. It is really a paper tiger. The Government has been weak-kneed in its approach toward the Americans.

This is really sad and dangerous at this time, because the same Government is involved in a free trade initiative with the United States. It has taken on the responsibility to negotiate a comprehensive trading arrangement with our American friends. If its track record in terms of natural gas, softwood, shakes and shingles, and increased foreign ownership of our economy is any indication of how it will handle the free trade initiative, Canadians have good reason to be afraid of what kind of deal the Prime Minister will bring to the House in the fall.

Will the free trade initiative adequately protect Canadian culture? Will it protect Canadian magazines? Will it protect the capacity of the Canadian Government to undertake regional development?

The matter about which we are speaking today involves natural gas. It is another blow to the western economy. Will the Government protect our capacity to take initiatives to develop our regional economies, particularly at a time when we know that the recovery over the last few years has had a positive impact in a very inequitable way? There has been considerable economic growth in southern Ontario, but that growth has not been reflected in western Canada.

We want a Government which will stand up for the interests of all Canadians. We particularly want a Government which will take effective action so that western Canadians can share in the recovery about which the Government so proudly boasts on a day to day basis.

We call upon the Government to get up off its knees when it is facing the Americans, to stand up for Canadian interests, and to do something effective to develop the economy in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 82(9) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House.

Accordingly the question is as follows:

Mr. MacLellan, seconded by Mr. Foster, moved:

—That this House condemn the government for its repeated failures to project Canadian sovereignty and economic independence as demonstrated by its weak and ineffectual efforts to oppose Opinion 256 of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with regard to transmission costs of Canadian gas, and by its compliant approach to permitting foreign take-overs of Canadian corporations and natural resources.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacLellan), which was negatived on the following division:
