The second component is resettlement from abroad. This is in line with the United Nations' approach that for some, the only solution is resettlement in a country far away from their homeland. Voluntary return or local resettlement are considered the best options for most refugees. Canada's resettlement record is outstanding, with 18,000-plus refugees in 1986 and 500,000 since World War II.

The third element is the determination system in Canada. It is designed to help those who arrive looking for protection and have nowhere else to go. This determination system is under severe pressure. It can no longer respond to genuine refugees in need. Over the last few years, refugee claims have increased dramatically. Population pressures in the Third World have caused massive migrations to developed countries.

The Europeans have moved to control abuse of their systems. The United States recently took steps affecting thousands of illegal immigrants there. The spill-over from these events has now reached Canada.

[Translation]

There are 80 million people in the world who have left their homes, and 15 million are refugees. We must find solutions at the international level, and Canada is playing a leading role in seeking such solutions.

Mr. Speaker, in 1980, there were 1,600 claims in Canada. In 1986, that number rose to 18,000. The forecast for 1987 is 25,000.

Before dealing with the Bill and its provisions for claiming refugee status in Canada, we must first agree on some basic definitions of refugees and refugee claims.

• (1730)

[English]

What is the difference between a refugee and a refugee claimant? What is an economic migrant? People coming to Canada and claiming refugee status are refugee claimants. But a refugee claimant is not necessarily a genuine refugee. Many are economic migrants.

Canada respects the United Nations' definition of a Convention refugee. Briefly, this is someone who is outside his or her country and is unable to return because of a real fear of persecution based on race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular social group. As a signatory to the U.N. Convention, Canada must give protection to those who have no other safe haven.

Economic migrants come to Canada to improve their economic well-being. They want to avoid immigration selection abroad. They are the major source of false refugee claims in Canada.

They should and must file an application through the usual channels at Canadian embassies and consulates.

Mr. Speaker, last year, two of the five main source countries of refugee claimants in Canada were Portugal and Turkey. These are not source countries of refugees. There has been a obvious abuse of our process for determining refugee status. Canada's ability to protect genuine refugees is being undermined and the process appears to favour these fraudulent cases. The consistent support of Canadians for increasing immigration levels and aid to refugees is suffering as well.

[English]

I now wish to outline the objectives of the proposed new system for refugee determination in Canada. The new Bill respects Canada's values and humanitarian traditions. Its objectives are to protect genuine refugees in need, to process claims fairly and quickly, to curb abuse, and to manage resources effectively. It ensures that refugees and immigrants are treated fairly.

There are several key features. The new process is streamlined. Refugee determination is completed in months. Now it often takes years. It quickly sorts out arguable cases from clearly unfounded claims. The system provides quality oral hearings before independent, well trained refugee board members, and provides for appeals to the Federal Court. The Bill sets up a new immigration and refugee board. There are two sections; an immigration board dealing only with immigration matters, and a Convention Refugee Determination Board dealing exclusively with refugee claims.

[Translation]

I shall now deal with how the new process works. Step one. Upon arrival in Canada, the individual claims refugee status and the claimant appears before an adjudicator and a member of the refugee board. Individuals with a defensible claim and those whose case is in some doubt are directed to the refugee board.

[English]

People who will not go on to the refugee board include people with refugee status elsewhere and people who arrive from a safe country where they have a claim, or a reasonable opportunity to make one. They will be returned to these countries. However, people who have simply passed through another country on their way to Canada will not be affected on these grounds. People with unfounded claims, such as the Portuguese claim of persecution as Jehovah's Witnesses, will be returned to apply in their home country. Anyone who was previously rejected as a refugee claimant in Canada, and anyone subject to a removal order, will also not proceed to the board. None of these people need Canada's protection.

Important safeguards are built into this process. The refugee board member must agree with the decisions. People not referred to the board are removed. However, they can appeal by leave to the Federal Court even though they are outside Canada. If the appeal succeeds, the person will be brought back at Government expense. Everyone has the right to counsel. A lawyer will be provided, if needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these bona fide refugees will never be sent back to a country where they fear persecution. The list of safe countries will be short and will be drafted by Cabinet. Considerations in establishing the list will be the record of these countries on human rights and on the way they protect refugees. Cabinet will seek the advice of reliable sources including the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, non-governmental organizations and the new independent Refugee Board. Safe countries that do not have an unblemished record with respect to some of their nationals will not be eligible.

Claimants whose case has been referred to the refugee board must be given a firm date for a hearing within 10 days.

Step 2—At the refugee board, the claimant will be given a hearing before a jury of two. The claimant is entitled to counsel. The hearing will be held according to a non-adversarial formula. The claim will be accepted if approved by one of the members of the refugee board. The claimant will be given the benefit of the doubt.

[English]

Work permits can be issued at this point. Step three, claimants accepted by the board can apply for landing. If the claim is rejected, reasons must be given. The claimant has the right of appeal by leave to the Federal Court. Removal takes place only after appeals are decided.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the new refugee determination system ensures that genuine refugees are protected. Every claimant is seen by at least one member of the refugee board. Claims will be processed fairly and quickly. Refugee determination will be decided in months, not years. The new system responds quickly to abuse. People coming to Canada for reasons other than protection will be speedily removed. Workable procedures aim, above all, at giving protection to those who need it, not to those who do not.

There are three steps in the new system. The old system had eight. People will be referred to the refugee board in a matter of days. Determinations will be made in months. It now takes years. The new system will get rid of long delays and uncertainty for genuine refugees. Rejected claimants will be speedily removed.

• (1740)

The new system meets Canada's Convention obligations, respects the Charter and the Bill of Rights, maintains Canada's humanitarian tradition, and preserves the integrity of the immigration and refugee programs.

I wish to emphasize that Canada's refugee program measures up internationally. The new system has more safeguards than most refugee-receiving countries. Canada has a generous refugee aid program both at home and abroad.

Our best contribution is still resettlement from camps abroad. Many of the people in these camps have been there for years and have no other options. The Government sponsors thousands every year, and there is no limit on privately-sponsored refugees. The Government helps groups find refugees to sponsor, helps with language training and pays for other resettlement services.

I have personally worked hard to obtain support from the Canadian executive of the International Parliamentary Union to have the question of refugees placed on the fall agenda of the world-wide IPU conference to be held in Bangkok, Thailand. With the assistance of Senator Bonnell of the other place and the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), Canada has gained support from the European 12-plus group of which Canada is a member. As a result, the international responsibility for refugees will be debated by the IPU next fall when Canada hopes to play the role of chef de file.

Canada's respected humanitarian record will continue. The Government is committed to protecting genuine refugees. It is firm in its resolve to curb abuse and committed to increased immigration.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my colleague who sits on the Immigration Committee, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom). The Hon. Member spent a considerable amount of time during his allotted time in the debate dealing with the question of fraudulent applications and the suggestion that Canada should not offer any assistance to those who wish to come in through the back door and break our regulations. I do not think there is one Member of Parliament or one political Party which suggests that fraudulent claims should be rewarded to the detriment of those who are genuine and legitimate claimants.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member this. Instead of talking about the visa position and about getting tough with legislation, which in the end will hurt and handicap genuine claimants as has been suggested throughout this debate, what does the Hon. Member think of the Government's inaction in terms of bringing a great deal of the source of the cancer of fraudulent claims to some type of order? What does he feel about individuals such as John Santos who has made some $600,000 at the very least, who owns a $50,000 Mercedes and who lives by the sea in Portugal on the proceeds of fraudulent and scandalous schemes which take advantage of many innocent individuals? What does he think when he sees scams in Portugal, Lebanon and Turkey going on unabated and the fact that the Government is missing a chance to send a strong signal by prosecuting these individuals and by making a legitimate example of what we will not tolerate? How does the Hon. Member reconcile that action in the face of increased fraudulent and unscrupulous activities? What does the Hon. Member think ought to happen vis-à-vis unscrupulous consultants?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for his question. I do not find the proposed legislation very tough on the part of Government in terms of real refugees. I find it to be humanitarian. I think it will provide a faster process. It will provide a solution. These people will not be held in limbo for years, as was the case under the previous Government. I think we are speeding up the process so that people will know exactly where they stand within a very short period of time. I think it is unjustified to call this policy tough. I would rather call it humanitarian.

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question concerning fraudulent applications, I think that the Government has been trying to gather evidence, and I have been trying to gather evidence, to convict fraudulent immigration consultants. If the Hon. Member has any solid evidence to bring forward so that the Government can convict these consultants, we would be only too pleased to have it since we are having some difficulty in obtaining real evidence to convict these consultants. As I have said, I have been trying to obtain some solid evidence on this matter. Some people who have come to Canada, in particular those from Portugal and other countries, have come forward. They want to help the Government to convict these fraudulent operators in order that their families back home will not be harassed.

I hope that the Minister of Immigration, in consultation with the Department of Justice, will allow these people to stay here for perhaps a year. I hope that they will be given a work permit so that they can give evidence to the Government in order to prosecute these fraudulent operators in the near future.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today, although I am saddened by what is contained in Bill C-55. As we have listened to government Members rise one after another a theme is clearly coming out through the speech notes that they have prepared or have had provided to them. They have used words such as "stop abuse" and "curb abuse". As has been pointed out by some Hon. Members, there are no Members in the House who support the abuse of the process as it has been set up to this point. But for the Government to try to claim that the approach it is taking through Bill C-55 is somehow streamlining and making the process more fair and so on is simply not the case.

I listened with care to what members of the Opposition had to say in terms of this type of legislation being a method of pandering to ideological biases and to certain perceived unfairnesses in the system. I think that we can see not only in this piece of legislation but in others a theme coming forward from the Government. In terms of the pornography legislation, rather than dealing with kiddie porn and violence against women the Government has gone much further. It is attempting to reach out to those biases that are floating around within Canadian society in terms of the legislation. In relation to the return of capital punishment, again, we find the same type of tone and the same kind of theme. We see the same words reaching out to Canadians which seem to say: "Look, we are going to reduce crime. We will bring back capital punishment. We will reduce the number of sex offences with this pornography legislation. We will reduce the amount of abuse of Canada's immigration system in terms of refugees and economic migrants," as the Hon. Member who just spoke called them.

A lot of the concern that there is throughout Canada, and I am talking about both urban and rural areas, has been created by some Members who sit on the government side. There is a concern on the part of those Canadians who are waiting for family reunification, for relations or for friends to come from the country from which they have come. They have been led to believe, through a lot of what has been said by government Members in speeches that they have given and in articles that they have sent out, that the reason they are having to wait such a long time is that our Canadian officials throughout the world are somehow spending all their time on cases of abuse by refugees, economic migrants and others. The concern is that the legitimate aspirations of other Canadians to have a son, daughter, mother, father, uncle, other relative, or friend join them in Canada are being held in abeyance, because the system is fouled up with those who are abusing it and the Government, for some reason, is spending all its time and energy in dealing with abuses.

The Minister who spoke did not give us any statistics on abuse. None of the government Members gave us specific cases of abuse. We know that there have been some. However, to say that the legislation is required to stop that leads me to feel that the Government is looking at the whole refugee matter in terms of numbers rather than in terms of real families and the real pain behind many of their cases. The Bill is designed to deal with numbers.

It is not just a merry-go-round. Some government Members have tried to make it sound as if some people have had to return to a safe third country and then come back for another process, that the federal Government pays for them to come back, and all this kind of thing. In fact, it is quite different, and I will come to that in a moment.

Who are the refugees? Who are they? Members of the House talk about different clauses of the Bill, different procedures, and so on. However, one Canadian in 50 living in Canada today, on May 12, 1987, came to Canada since 1945 as a refugee under the various and changing pieces of legislation Canada used to deal with refugees. Canada has had a good record in most areas in terms of dealing with refugees.

I should like to spend a moment on what exactly is in today's motion, what has been proposed by the Canadian Council of Churches, and why groups are working in Central America, in South America, and in other parts of the world to assist refugees who are trying to flee persecution in other political systems on the basis of race, religion, economic participation in the economy, and, most often, political involvement. In terms of refugees fleeing to Canada, certainly in terms of Central America and South America, in most cases they are fleeing from extreme right wing dictatorships. I hope as well to have time to come to the ideological bias we find in the concept of safe third countries.

However, let us look at the motion before the House. It is reasonably clear. In part it suggests that the Government establish a system which would:

> (1) guarantee full accessibility to the system for refugee claimants by rejecting any pre-screening stage within the process;
> (2) ensure maximum protection and safety for all refugees and a comprehensive and adequate hearing of their claims by abolishing the highly restrictive "safe third country" concept as an integral part of the refugee determination process;—

As other Hon. Members have pointed out, between 1983 and 1986 the United States only accepted 2 per cent of those claimants who were trying to obtain refugee status, particularly from countries like El Salvador, whereas Canada accepted almost 50 per cent of such claims.

The Government says that Cabinet will decide what is a safe third country. Any of us who have been around here for a while—and I have been here for the last eight years—knows that Cabinet will not have monthly or bimonthly meetings to decide which countries are safe third countries. It will come from within the system. This is where the ideological bias of the Government is being built into it.

I think we all know of the pressures which are brought by Governments in places like El Salvador, Guatemala, India, and other nations around the world to bear on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), on other Ministers, and on the Government of Canada. They ask: "Why did you let so and so come to Canada as a refugee?" They ask why we let certain groups into the country and about the numbers. Because they have a certain level of trade with us, they want us to slow down and make them remain in such and such a country. This sets up a whole new bureaucratic mechanism. As other Members have pointed out, should Canada move in the direction of starting to close doors to make the whole system less accessible and of saying that someone must return to country x or go from there to another country, it will force more and more bona fide refugees.

Let us pull the mask off these unknown refugees. Who are these people? Half a million bona fide Canadians came to the country as refugees. Who were they? Who was persecuting them? Why did they choose Canada? I have dealt with many refugee cases in my own constituency. Generally, when they arrive at the borders of Canada, at an airport, on a boat, or whatever, they have used the last of their resources. Very few refugees have an opportunity to sell their home or their car and casually board a Boeing 747 to fly to Canada. Very few of them can say that they will set up a business or do x, y, or z. It is a totally different situation.

Our refugee system and the legislation to deal with refugees face to face must be incredibly sensitive to the reality of what these people and their families have gone through. They fled the countries where they were born. They fled a political system. They fled the reality of the country in which they were living and tried to find a safe haven.

As the legislation is drafted, some of these people will simply come before an almost untrained officer, perhaps at a border crossing or at an airport. They might have to spend three hours or four hours at an airport after having come perhaps half way around the world and having been in all kinds of unsavoury situations from which they have fled. They are given a few moments of time, quite often after having arrived here as part of a busload of people.

As other Hon. Members have pointed out, 18,000 refugees arrived in Canada last year. The Government is sending out signals that there is abuse and indicating the reasons one's grandmother cannot come from Scotland is the refugee problem, the abuse which has been created by the Liberals, the abuse in the system, and so on.

We must understand that the Bill was not drafted by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). Those of us who have been around here for a while know that pressure was brought from within the system. Are we really to say to Salvadoran refugees that the United States is a safe country?

Let us look at the evidence given before a Senate hearing in the United States. It is shocking. In testimony before a Senate subcommittee in April, 1985, the American Civil Liberties Union found evidence that returnees were abducted, murdered, beaten, and arrested. It also indicated that the United States only granted asylum to 2.6 per cent of those who applied between June, 1983 and January, 1986.

We know that the Government is trying to curry favour with the United States Government on free trade and all kinds of other issues. The Government would not want to say to the United States: "You are not a safe country". If the Minister of State for Immigration were serious, why would he not indicate that Parliament or a committee of Parliament would determine the safe countries? It has been left to Cabinet.

What grounds are there for the Government to refuse to accept the proposal put forward by the Canadian Council of Churches? What could be more practical and more reasonable than its five points? They read as follows:

STAGE 1 ARRIVAL

Refugee claimant arrives at border. Immigration Official registers person and refers to the Refugee Board. Claimants cannot be returned.

STAGE 2 REFUGEE CLAIM

Claimant makes an appointment with Refugee Board for an oral hearing within a fixed time period after referral.

STAGE 3 ORAL HEARING

Claimant and legal counsel present case to a two person panel of competent specialized persons of a Refugee Board who will decide whether or not they believe the person is a refugee.

Stage 4 is the appeal/review, and Stage 5 is the Federal Court. Why did the Government not go that route?

The Government wants to create the belief among Canadians that there has been abuse, that the entire system is sort of stalled, that there cannot be family reunification and so on because of the ongoing process.

I know the Minister is a compassionate person. He must return to the drawing board. The "safe third country concept" simply must go. Other substantive changes must be made to the Bill.

To this point in time we have been a beacon of fairness around the world in terms of dealing with bona fide refugees. None of us support the abusers, the economic migrants, and so on. However, the Bill falls short of what all Canadians support, that is, a true sense of fairness in dealing with refugees from around the world.

I am sorry I do not have more time. I look forward to participating in the debate again.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

DISASTERS—ANNIVERSARY OF CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT—IMPACT ON CANADA. (B) REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Sunday, April 26 marked the first anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear reactor accident in Ukraine. I am pleased to have this opportunity to pursue a question I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on Monday, April 27, concerning the impact of Chernobyl on Canada.

On April 27, I asked the Minister to make public information relating to what radionuclides were found in Canada following Chernobyl, where they were found, in what quantities and from what sources. This is not the first time I have requested such information. The Minister will remember that I requested details on Canada's radiation monitoring capabilities on several occasions immediately after Chernobyl. More recently, I have asked him in this House and in correspondence to outline exactly what the Government knows about radioactive fall-out over Canada following Chernobyl.

Specifically, I requested such information in the House on December 3, in a detailed three page letter on January 22, in the House on March 12, and again in the House on April 27. To date, all I have received from the Minister is the skimpy eight page report he released on December 11 and a two page letter dated March 13 in reply to my letter of January 22. Both the report and the Minister's letter, not to mention the Minister's comments in the House, are full of generalities and bland assurances, but do not answer my specific questions and concerns.

To make matters worse, Mr. Speaker, the Minister continually states that all information on the Government's post-Chernobyl monitoring is readily available. This may be the case for certain scientists in Canada and abroad, but it certainly is not the case for Parliament or for the Canadian public at large. As a case in point, I recently received a report on the medical consequences of Chernobyl that had been prepared by researchers at the Manitoba Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation. Not only is this report far more detailed than anything the Minister has released to date, it is based on data that the Minister's own Department provided to these researchers, the very type of information I have requested and have yet to receive.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, allow me to outline, once again, exactly what I want from the Minister. First, I want detailed information on what Government and non-government monitoring equipment was activated following Chernobyl, where it was activated, when it was activated and what was the sophistication of such equipment. Second, I want to know exactly what radionuclides the monitoring network was looking for, what radionuclides were discovered, where and in what quantities. Third, I want to know what radionuclides and methodology were used to calculate the microsievert doses and the long range risk projections outlined in the Government's report of December 3. Finally, I want to know whether the Government was capable of determining, whether it tried to determine or did determine, that all radioactive fall-out over Canada in the wake of Chernobyl, did, in fact, come from Chernobyl and not from nuclear weapons testing, notably the "Mighty Oak" bomb blast in Nevada on April 10, 1986.

This is the type of information I have been seeking and have not received. This is the type of information the Government has made available to selected individuals but not to Parliament or the public. Instead, Parliament and Canadians are told they must wait for a detailed report that the Minister says he hopes to release some time in the next two months, over one year after the Chernobyl accident. Over one year later, Mr. Speaker.

To say that I am irritated by this delay and lack of information would be an understatement. The Minister knows my long standing interest in this issue and, as I have just noted, the Minister is aware of the number of times I have requested this information. Surely, if the Minister has any respect for the parliamentary process, he should attempt to provide me, and other Members of Parliament for that matter, with the information I am seeking. What is more, the Minister knows that Canadians generally are concerned about the impact of Chernobyl on Canada and he must recognize, whether he likes it or not, that a great many Canadians simply do not believe the Government is open when it comes to things nuclear. By not providing me with this information, the Minister is simply reinforcing that image.

Considering the widespread public concern that exists on this issue, surely it is time that the Government and the Minister stopped dealing in generalities and provided Parliament and Canadians with all known information about radioactive contamination of the Canadian environment in the days and weeks following Chernobyl. Failure to do so can only be interpreted as meaning that the Government lacks the capacity to effectively monitor radioactive fall-out over Canada, is unwilling to effectively monitor radioactive fall-out over Canada or is unwilling to provide Canadians with information on radioactive fall-out over Canada. All three possibilities are equally unacceptable.

I would like to deal briefly with the Government's over-all response to the Chernobyl crisis. As the Government's own Prince report concludes, the Government's ability to respond to nuclear accidents is woefully inadequate, just as I and many others have suspected for some time. It is obvious that the Government needs to re-evaluate and restructure its nuclear emergency response capabilities, and I was pleased to hear the Minister say that changes are under way though I think it would be helpful if he outlined in greater detail what exactly is being done to improve the situation. Again, there has been a great lack of detail and information.

I would point out to the Government that part of the problem stems from the uncritical approach successive federal Governments have taken on nuclear issues in general. This Government, like previous Liberal Governments, has demonstrated itself to be far too willing to accept the assurances of nuclear technocrats that everything is under control and that there is no need to worry. Chernobyl, like Three Mile Island before it, demonstrated clearly that nuclear technology is by no means infallible and that there is always reason to worry, even with Canadian nuclear technology.

The Government needs to do more than simply tinker with its nuclear-response capabilities. The Government needs to completely rethink its approach to nuclear issues and part of that process could and should be the establishment of the sort of independent inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle that the Conservative Party promised in 1979 and again during the election campaign of 1984. Another part of that process could and should be a greater willingness on the part of the Government to provide Parliament and Canadians with detailed information on nuclear issues, including the type of detailed information on radioactive fall-out that I am seeking tonight.

From what I can make out, given the little information on which I have been able to get my hands, I do not think the impact of the Chernobyl accident on the Canadian environment was great. I suspect from what I have heard from a number of people that the amount of fall-out was insignificant compared to the amount of fall-out in the Canadian North in the 1960s as a result of atmospheric testing. However, that is not the point. If that is the case, I would be very happy, but I want to know the details, the real information on which that kind of judgment is based. The Government's consistent refusal to provide me with those kinds of details is totally unacceptable. I hope some day, somewhere, some Minister will answer the questions I have been asking for a whole year now.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on April 27 concerning information on radioactivity levels in Canada following the Chernobyl reactor accident, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) assured the House that he would make available information that comes to his attention. The Minister of National Health and Welfare wishes to remind the House that information obtained following the Chernobyl reactor incident was provided to the House as soon as it was available.

Within hours of learning of the accident, the Department of National Health and Welfare began an intensive monitoring program across Canada. In the six weeks following the accident, over 2,000 samples were analysed with results and interpretation provided on a day-to-day basis.

The report tabled in the House of Commons in December 1986 presented the conclusions drawn from the results that had been made public earlier on the impact of the fall-out on Canada and Canadians. This intensive monitoring program was reduced at the end of June 1986. The Department of National Health and Welfare continues, however, to closely monitor both domestic and imported foodstuffs.

Air, rain-water and milk samples continue to be checked on a regular basis to ensure there is no continuing risk to Canadians. More detailed analyses of the samples collected in the intensive monitoring program have been conducted. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has assured the House that radioactivity levels in Canada are at or close to those present before the Chernobyl accident. Of 350 imported food samples tested to date, 25 have been refused entry to Canada because they do not meet the stringent Canadian screening limits.

The Department of National Health and Welfare publishes each year an account of its environmental radioactivity monitoring programs across Canada. This report is presently being prepared for 1986. It will contain the results of the fallout monitoring program, the Canadian reactor monitoring program and the measurements of natural radioactivity made in Canada for the entire year. Because of the significance of the Chernobyl reactor accident, all of the data collected by the Department of National Health and Welfare following the accident and made public will be included, as well as data provided to the Department by many other agencies which conducted monitoring and assisted the Department by sharing their results. This entails the consolidation of many thousands of measurements and is a major undertaking. It is anticipated that this report will be available within the next month or two.

STATUS OF WOMEN—HARASSMENT OF WOMAN FIRE-FIGHTER. (B) REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, last November the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver:

> The federal Government, as Canada's largest single employer of women, is committed to ensuring the equality of women within its own workforce. We trust others will be encouraged to follow suit.

He outlined the federal government work plan for women in the Dimensions for Equality document. The case of Bobbi Stadnyk does not reflect any such commitment and most certainly does not set an example for the private sector. The refusal of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women to come to her defence is a denial of the Vancouver commitment as well as the Charter, in my view.

The experience of Bobbi Stadnyk, a fire-fighter for Transport Canada at the Regina Airport, demonstrates that as an employer the federal Government is guilty of allowing blatant sexual harassment of a woman who had the courage to become one of the first women fire-fighters in Canada. Bobbi served for four years as a term employee of Transport Canada, during which time she was subject to continuous harassment from her male co-workers. Her fire truck was deliberately polluted with Raid insecticide with the full knowledge of management. Her picture was pinned up on the dartboard and her fellow workers threw darts at her image. Her male counterparts took liberties by engaging in bum slapping. Bobbi Stadnyk was allowed to work for a year and a half in a dangerous operation in a mask and uniform that did not fit her. Not only was a blind eye turned to the intolerable sexual harassment she was receiving, but her very health and safety were being jeopardized. The negligence on the part of her superiors in Transport Canada is inexcusable and unconstitutional.

Bobbi Stadnyk did not quit. She was not beaten down by the abuse she was subjected to. Finally she was promoted to full-time and put on probation. She became pregnant and went on maternity leave, which is her right. However, three days after returning from maternity leave this tenacious and brave woman found herself fired. Upon reading her personnel record she discovered it had been doctored by additions after she had signed it.

The case of Bobbi Stadnyk has been investigated by three separate bodies, Transport Canada, the Public Service Commission, and the Human Rights Commission. All three investigations found in favour of Bobbi. Yet over a year has passed and she has not received full reinstatement, back pay and damages.

On March 1 I asked the Minister responsible for the Status of Women to take a personal interest in seeing that the case of Bobbi Stadnyk was brought to an equitable conclusion. I was astounded when she refused and would only commit herself to "developing further policies in this regard". It is very hard to understand why the Minister charged with being an advocate for women would refuse to intervene in this case. This is not an isolated incident. It is part of the systemic discrimination which women often suffer in non-traditional jobs. The Minister has a responsibility to use her influence to ensure justice for Bobbi and to provide a positive example for all other women in the same position.

Bobbi Stadnyk is still fighting for her job. Negotiations with Transport Canada are dragging on. Although Transport Canada has admitted liability in the circumstances, compensation offers are unsatisfactory. She wants and deserves full reinstatement with back pay and damages.

I ask the Minister again to personally intervene in this case to ensure an equitable settlement for Bobbi Stadnyk and the women of Canada. Anything less will make a mockery of the Government's stated commitments to women as stated in Dimensions of Equality and of the credibility of the Prime Minister. When will the Government live up to its commitment to women starting with its own federal employees?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all Members know that these types of cases are difficult for both sides. I suppose it will be so as long as we are human beings. There are always two perspectives.

However, I would advise Hon. Members that both the Public Service Commission and Transport Canada have conducted an investigation into Ms. Stadnyk's complaint. They have concluded that although the Department had a legal right to reject her on probation no proper cause justified the rejection. However, neither investigation found evidence of sexual harassment. In fact, Ms. Stadnyk did not complain of sexual harassment until her press conference in Winnipeg on March 18 of this year.

The Public Service Commission and Transport Canada officials have been negotiating a settlement. The most recent meeting took place on Friday, May 8, 1987, and a number of options were considered at that time.

A final review of Ms. Stadnyk's case is ongoing and it is anticipated that a settlement offer will be made to her within the next 30 days. I am sure we are all hopeful that the dispute will be settled at that time in a manner satisfactory to both sides.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CLOSURE OF PORTS TO NUCLEAR POWERED SHIPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, do you have any peace groups or peace committees in your constituency? By that I mean, of course, committees or organizations whose members are dedicated to trying to help our country and all of us to achieve peace with nuclear disarmament. I suspect that you do, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly do in my constituency. I can think of many groups which are very active in this way.

I think particularly of the East York Peace Group and the Crescent Town Peace Group. A number of the churches have active peace organizations connected to them. The Canadian Martyrs Church certainly does, as does the Leaside United Church. I am sure you have individuals in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, as do I, who are dedicated to the cause of peace and disarmament in general.

I think of Betsy Carr from my riding who was here on Monday with the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. Her efforts with regard to peace have been focused through the National Action Committee. She is also a member of the consultative committee which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has in connection with nuclear disarmament.

I think as well of a good friend of mine, a lawyer by the name of David Wright, who is the head of Lawyers for Social Responsibility. All of these individuals and groups in my constituency are dedicated to the cause of peace and disarmament in general. I am sure there are similar individuals and groups in your riding.

It is my belief that these people and committees reflect the overwhelming desire of Canadians for peace and disarmament. But you know as well as I, that while there is this common strain that runs through Canadian society in which we do want peace and disarmament, there is a great deal of disagreement about how that should best be brought about.

Many people have different points of view. There are those who feel that the only way we can achieve peace is through strength, and not to disarm or negotiate in any way, shape or form. Others believe the best way is to be strong, but to negotiate disarmament on a mutual disarmament and verifiable basis.

Others feel just as strongly that the best way to achieve disarmament might be through such things as a freeze on nuclear weapons and on the production of all nuclear weapons. They feel that not only do we have enough nuclear weapons, there are too many and there is certainly no need for more.

Some people feel that there should be no more testing of Cruise missiles, and others feel we should declare Canada or parts of it a nuclear-free zone. Some people feel that we should leave NATO or NORAD, while others believe that we should declare ourselves a neutral nation.

There are those who believe that the best way to peace and disarmament is by unilateral disarmament as a sign of good faith. Others feel that the important initiative is to show good faith to the other side and that they will respond with good faith to us.

We know that there are those who simply do not trust one side or the other. Some people do not trust the Soviet Union in anything the United States does. Others do not trust anything the United States does.

Recently, at the national convention of the New Democratic Party, they adopted a policy to ban the visits to Canadian ports of ships that were powered with nuclear fuel or had nuclear armaments. If Canada adopted a policy of that sort, it would present us with a difficult situation.

The United States Navy and the United States Government will not tell us or anyone else what their military ships contain. They will not disclose whether their ships are fuelled with nuclear power or whether they contain nuclear armaments. In fact, if we exercised that power and said that they could not come to our ports if they had those armaments or nuclear power, they would not send any more ships to our ports.

That is what New Zealand did recently. Is this the kind of approach that will achieve peace and nuclear disarmament, or disarmament in general? Will it achieve the ends we seek?

Recently I had an opportunity to talk with and be briefed by our ambassador to NATO in Brussels. Ambassador Gordon Smith indicated to me at that time that when the United States sits down to negotiate issues of peace and disarmament it consults with its allies. It consults with its NATO allies, and therefore consults with us as a member of NATO. It consults with Japan and Australia. The United States used to consult with New Zealand but no longer does so because New Zealand adopted the policy of restricting from its ports ships that have nuclear power or are armed with nuclear weapons.

Therefore, what influence does New Zealand have on the process? Ambassador Smith said that New Zealand has no influence on the disarmament discussions or the process of negotiating toward peace.

I asked Ambassador Smith whether we have any influence on the United States in these negotiations. He said that, in fact, we did. It was not the power to decide whether we would go to war or whether we would disarm or not. It was a more subtle power. That consultation gave us a restraining influence on the more drastic steps which perhaps the United States may take in its more bellicose tendencies, one might say. It also gave us the power to put forth new ideas and suggestions which might not have been thought of.

This would not happen, of course, if we adopted a policy similar to New Zealand. The question is, would that matter? I personally think it would matter. I personally think there is a great benefit in being able to discuss these things, to be consulted by the United States, to try to influence, even in a small way, its policies on these issues of peace and nuclear disarmament. It seems to me that if we ever get into a nuclear holocaust, the whole world could be destroyed and I know, Mr. Speaker, you know that as well as I do. Surely, if there is any small way in which we can influence that process, we have to grasp it and try to use it.

We know we do not have any influence with the Soviet Union. We would not have any influence with the Americans either if we adopted the policy suggested by the New Democratic Party. That is why I oppose that policy. I suspect, and I am almost absolutely sure, that you, Mr. Speaker, oppose that kind of policy as well. I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight whether he and the Government oppose this policy of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course, we oppose that policy. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) in a very thoughtful way has given us a vignette of sense and soundness and has certainly left us with a clear impression that he understands the difficulty of the western world as it approaches the vast and very important question of nuclear disarmament.

Once the Government of New Zealand had taken the decision that its territory should be nuclear weapons free, it would appear that Prime Minister Lange felt compelled to prohibit visits by naval vessels carrying nuclear weapons. Since, as the Hon. Member for York East has indicated to the Chamber, nations are quite reluctant to declare how they are powered and what weapons systems are on board, in the wisdom of Prime Minister Lange, he felt it necessary to simply prohibit the entry of United States naval vessels into New Zealand's ports and waters.

While it would seem that the New Democratic Party is prepared to adopt a similar policy, this Government believes as a member of NATO that an important element of Canada's security policy is, and continues to be recognition of the contribution of the nuclear deterrent to western security. Access to Canadian waters and designated port facilities is granted by Canada to allied vessels, including those which are in fact nuclear powered. This is considered a normal aspect of Canada's defence co-operation with our allies and a long established practice when navies work together in an alliance.

Throughout our history, Canada has sought its protection in defensive alliances, first, under the shield of the great British Empire, and more recently in the collective security we enjoy through NATO and NORAD. Collective security means that each of us, in our own way and in our own capacity, are our own share. The Prime Minister has repeatedly reaffirmed Canada's commitment to NATO. I would like to quote from his address to the Consultative Group on Disarmament and Arms Control last year. He said, and I quote:

> We are a member of the Western Alliance and we are members out of choice, not circumstances. It is an alliance which requires military commitment and political solidarity.

I hope it is clear that the Government would not even consider emulating the actions of the New Zealand Government and certainly not the policy adopted by the New Democratic Party in this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON POTATO CHIPS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in a statement given here on March 24, 1987, I expressed my strong opposition to the 12 per cent tax on potato chips contained in the February Budget. Since then I have received a number of letters from groups which are also opposed to this measure.

This tax remains a grave concern for the P.E.I. Potato Chip Co-operative, a new and important business in Urbainville, Prince Edward Island. At their annual meeting, the P.E.I. Women in Support of Agriculture passed a resolution requesting the immediate withdrawal of this tax. In addition, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has received telexes from the P.E.I. Potato Producers Association and the Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board expressing their strong disapproval of the new tax.

The general manager of the marketing board lists the many direct and indirect benefits of the Canadian potato chip industry. He feels the new tax "will contribute to greater pressure on many Canadian farmers". Surely the Minister can see that this short-sighted tax is a serious blow to the entire potato-growing industry on Prince Edward Island. Therefore, I urge the Minister of Finance to revoke the tax immediately.

ABORTION

IMPACT ON ECONOMY AND JOBS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you know, many Canadians hold strong strong and diametrically opposing views on the subject of abortion. Often overlooked in this ongoing debate is the impact that abortion has on the economy and jobs. An example is the number of school classrooms that might have been filled had abortions not taken place.

In September, 1986, the children born in 1980 entered Grade 1. The unborn of 1980 would have filled 1,644 classrooms. Had these children been born, 733 more Grade 1 teachers in Ontario and 871 more Grade 1 teachers across the rest of Canada would have had jobs for the present school year. If there had been no abortions between 1971 and 1981, 14,117 more teachers could have been employed in Canada this year. It does not take much imagination to see the effect of this on the demand for and production of consumer goods and services.

The greatest impact, however, will come a few years from now when a shrinking number of wage earners will be required to provide pensions and health benefits for an increasing number of senior citizens.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—SUB-ATOMIC PARTICLE PHYSICS—KAON FACTORY PROPOSAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Province of British Columbia is seeking the support of the federal Government to build the world's first KAON factory by upgrading the existing TRIUMF cyclotron at the University of British Columbia. The construction of a KAON factory at the multi-university MESON facility would create jobs for Canadians. It would generate tremendous economic spinoffs both during its construction and its operational phases. The impact on scientific research and related technology development in Canada would be significant.

Building a KAON factory at UBC would also help to redress Canada's poor international standing in terms of the amount of money spent on research and development as well as the low proportion of federal R and D funds directed toward British Columbia. As Canada currently has only a one-year lead over world competition in the pursuit of this project, we should not ignore this vital opportunity to maintain our leadership role in the field of sub-atomic particle physics.

SENIOR CITIZENS

ACTIVITIES OF FREDERICTON SENIOR CITIZENS' CLUB—SUPPORT FOR NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly on a subject of some importance to me. While in Fredericton recently, I visited a senior citizens' club which I feel presented a shining example of seniors helping seniors along with the financial assistance of the Government.

Government assistance was being transformed by senior citizens into programs and events for seniors aimed at promoting and enhancing the mental and physical well-being of all concerned. While there, I saw activities such as painting workshops, swimming, and even synchronized swimming, all of which demonstrated to me the active and contributive role seniors are capable of playing if given sufficient resources to do so.

While Budget constraints are a fact of life for this and every other Government, programs such as New Horizons richly deserve the support of the federal Government. I applaud the Government's past support and would urge that that support be continued.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

MANITOBA GOVERNMENT'S PROHIBITION ON DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba Government has introduced legislation which would prohibit the disposal of high-level nuclear waste in the Province of Manitoba, in keeping with its long-standing position that provinces which generate nuclear waste, such as the Province of Ontario, ought also to be the provinces which take final responsibility for those wastes. The legislation was also introduced in response to the anxiety many Manitobans have about the fact that the Underground Research Laboratory, where AECL has chosen to do research into the deep geological disposal of high-level radioactive waste, exists in Manitoba.

One of the things Manitobans have been concerned about for a long time is that Manitoba ought not to become, either by accident or by design, a final site for disposal. In response to the refusal of this Government to give Manitoba the kind of guarantees it has been seeking for a number of years, guarantees that Manitoba would not be an option for high-level nuclear waste disposal, the Manitoba Government has done the right thing. I hope other non-nuclear provinces will do likewise and thus send a message to Ontario and other nuclear-waste-generating provinces that if they want to continue to produce nuclear waste and pursue the nuclear option, they will have to be responsible for it in the final analysis.

POLICE WEEK

TRIBUTE TO POLICE PERSONNEL

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to take the floor to commend our police officers, both men and women, for their dedicated, courageous and professional work to serve our communities and our country.

The House acknowledges the leading role of police personnel and the need to set a week aside for highlighting their special contribution to Canada. I am sure the House will also want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the families of police officers.

Too often we hear about a police officer shot dead or seriously injured, a timely reminder of hazards inherent in police work. Still I am convinced that every day relatives of police officers live in anxiety and apprehension as they await the return of their loved one. I sympathize with them, Mr. Speaker.

• (1410)

[English]

In conclusion, I call upon this House to pay special tribute to the families of all police officers and especially to those who have lost a loved one in the line of duty.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISITS BY UNITED STATES NUCLEAR WARSHIPS—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has a policy of encouraging visits to Canadian ports by U.S. warships. There is growing concern about this practice and growing public support for a comprehensive public inquiry into this policy.

Recently the Capital Regional District, representing 250,000 people of Greater Victoria and 14 municipalities, passed a resolution saying that the Capital Regional District Board asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to convene a formal public inquiry into all aspects of the issue of nuclear warships visiting Canadian ports.

There is concern about continued low-level radiation leakage, the possibility of a nuclear accident, and about whether or not our Government has any contingency plans in the event of such an accident. I urge the Government to convene that kind of formal public inquiry now.

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF TOURIST INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, we are currently celebrating National Tourism Week in Canada which runs from May 11 to May 17. The theme is: "Canada grows with tourism". Its objective is to raise the public's understanding of the importance and economic potential of tourism in Canada.

Tourism is a $20 billion a year industry employing over 600,000 people. It is one of the largest and fastest growing industries in Canada, and the third largest in Alberta. The theme in Alberta is: "Smile, you're a tourist attraction". This campaign shows Albertans the importance of extending a friendly welcome to visitors.

The federal Government and the Government of Alberta have signed a five-year subagreement worth $56.3 million to be cost shared on a 50/50 basis. This rapidly growing industry is a key part of our economic diversification strategy and both federal and provincial Governments have demonstrated their commitment to tourism. I would like to take this opportunity to invite you, Mr. Speaker, and all other Members to come and enjoy our Alberta hospitality.

LITERACY

DIFFICULTIES ENCOUNTERED BY THE ILLITERATE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, too little attention has been paid to the alarming fact that large numbers of Canadians are functionally illiterate. Some four million cannot read or write well enough to function in society and a million more cannot read or write at all. Many illiterate Canadians are unemployed and cannot qualify for government-sponsored job training because they lack literacy skills.

Life is filled with obstacles and hazards for those who cannot read labels or street signs, identify emergency telephone numbers, do their own banking, read to their children, or accomplish many other tasks of daily life that most of us take for granted.

As a nation Canada has not come to grips with this crisis as we have with more visible disabilities. Canada lags behind other western countries which have recognized the problem and introduced programs to deal with it.

The key to fighting illiteracy is in heightening public awareness and providing the means to acquire literacy skills. In its last Throne Speech the federal Government indicated it is aware of the problem. What is needed now is the political will to act.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, a report issued last week again brought attention to the problems of pollution in the Niagara River. That river, indeed the whole Great Lakes system, has been the receptacle of a continuous stream of toxic pollutants for years. I believe this problem and acid rain are the two most important environmental issues this country faces.

It is sad to note that the vast majority of this pollution comes from the U.S. Some progress has been made and more is necessary for the Niagara River. What we are asking of the Americans I do not think is unfair or unreasonable. We are simply asking them to clean up the mess they have made. In helping us they will be protecting themselves from a world in which no one is safe.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT URGED TO PROTECT CITIZENS FROM CRIMINALS WIELDING KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, citizens of Vancouver were horrified when four serious criminal incidents involving knives took place on city streets in a recent two-week period. Three incidents resulted in deaths. Of the 10 homicides in Vancouver this year five have involved knives. The same deadly pattern is reported across the country.

This situation is clearly intolerable. For many years community groups and police officers have called for amendments to the Criminal Code which would prohibit the carrying of knives in public and in licensed drinking establishments. Both the Conservative Government and the previous Liberal Government have done nothing while the use of knives in criminal incidents has steadily increased throughout Canada.

I again call upon the federal Government to act now to save lives. Do not wait for more killings. Amend the Criminal Code to protect average citizens from knives.

AGRICULTURE

CONVERSION OF SURPLUS GRAIN TO ETHANOL—POTENTIAL FOR NEW INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the major problems with which our farmers are contending today originated with the high interest rates during 1982 and 1983 and a subsidy war wherein the European Common Market subsidized agricultural products to the hilt, thus accumulating surpluses which it is dumping into every market it can find. The U.S.A. is now doing the same thing thinking that two wrongs can make a right. The Progressive Conservative Government and its Ministers are trying to talk sense into the heads of both the EEC and the U.S.A., but while they are doing so our farmers are suffering.

To reduce necessary subsidization in Canada we should start a new industry to convert surplus wheat and corn into fuel ethanol for blending with methanol and gasoline. This has the potential of creating jobs, helping the gas and oil industry, and providing a brand new market for our farmers. It can contribute to energy security, have significant environmental benefits, and bring buoyancy back to the economy. Will the Government take up the challenge?

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CASE OF FRED TURNER—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR REVOCATION OF AIRLINE LICENCE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for Mr. Fred Turner's request that the Government appoint an independent arbitrator to settle fairly his dispute with the Canadian Transport Commission. At a press conference yesterday hosted by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, Members of Parliament from all three political Parties demonstrated their support for Mr. Fred Turner and their belief in his cause.

Mr. Turner lost his airline business because the Canadian Transport Commission removed his licence unfairly. Ministers of the Government have acknowledged that an error was made because they reinstated his licence and offered him a small ex gratia payment. However, the offer is a pittance compared to the loss of Mr. Fred Turner's livelihood.

I urge the Government to do the just and right thing—appoint an independent arbitrator to examine all aspects of this case and make the appropriate recommendations for a redress of this grievance.

PATRIOTISM

STIMULATION OF PATRIOTISM AND CITIZENSHIP AMONG YOUTH

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): For the thirty-seventh consecutive year, Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa Rotary Club is organizing a program designed to stimulate more patriotism and citizenship among our youth.

As Member for Argenteuil—Papineau I am extremely proud that my riding should be represented by Trent Mell of Lachute. My young constituent will represent all Argenteuil—Papineau youths, Mr. Speaker, and I want to commend him for taking part in this national program.

Mr. Speaker, young people in Quebec and Canada need examples for inspiration to get involved and participate in our country's social, economic and political life.

We should take every means available to encourage and congratulate the Rotary Club of Canada and the National Capital Commission for setting up this constructive patriotism program.

Such commendable and wide-ranging initiatives will make it easier for young Canadians to appreciate the true meaning of their actions in a great country like Canada as we mark the 40th anniversary of Canadian citizenship.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DUMPING OF TOXIC PRODUCTS IN OTTAWA RIVER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, for some time, residents of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell have been working hard to rid the Ottawa River of residue that has accumulated over the years.

Several groups in my region, including the Hawkesbury hunting and fishing club, the Prescott—Russell joint county council, and the tourism association, are doing a large share of the work involved in cleaning up the waters of the Ottawa River and making general improvements in our area.

Unfortunately, some people seem to be completely indifferent to these improvements. Go-Hut Sanitation Services has been charged with dumping toxic waste in the Ottawa River. Even worse, Mr. Speaker, the toxic waste came from the Government of Canada, from four federal agencies, namely the Bank of Canada, the National Research Council, Transport Canada and Supply and Services, each of whom has been a customer of the Go-Hut company, from time to time.

Mr. Speaker, the moral is that when the Conservative Government brags about its record, it is really saying: Do as I say, not as I do.

SPORTS

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—NON-AVAILABILITY OF TELEVISED BROADCASTS IN PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the best of hockey is presently being played, with two Canadian teams in the semi-finals. Tonight the Edmonton Oilers will be playing a big game at Northlands Coliseum. My concern is that my constituents in the Peace country are unable to view this game.

This problem has existed for some of the previous games played, as well as being the third year in a row that the series has not been aired in my area.

Carling-O'Keefe won out over the CBC in the bidding process for broadcasting rights and have entered into agreements with smaller television networks in order to broadcast the games. In Alberta they have utilized ITV's facilities which do not reach the majority in my riding.

I strongly urge Carling-O'Keefe and the CBC to reach an agreement in the negotiations taking place this week in Toronto to allow those games to be distributed fairly, not only for this series but also for next year's finals. If you think people have strong opinions on capital punishment, Mr. Speaker, try this one!

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

BRAIN DRAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, two days ago, a survey of Canada's scientific community revealed that 40 per cent of our best researchers are about to leave the country because of a major reduction in federal funding for research and development. Yesterday, the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced a terrific new initiative, namely that the Government was going to set up a mailing list and ask scientists who are leaving the country to come back to Canada.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister: Is that the best the Government can do to stop our brain drain? Draw up a mailing list?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the remark of the Leader of the Opposition on the brain drain are grossly exaggerated. In fact, the Canadian Government has set up a National Advisory Science and Technology Board, which I have the honour of chairing. Last night, I met some of our leading scientists who spoke to me in very positive terms, not only about further developments in this area but also about their confidence and faith in the scientific dimension and the technological course Canada intends to take. They felt most encouraged, and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will be as well.

CUTS IN RESEARCH FACILITIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is obviously not close enough to the scene because he would know—

Mr. Gormley: You are?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, as a matter of fact, I am.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gormley: Tell us more, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Forty per cent of our scientists are ready to leave the country because of the lack of support to our scientific community by the Government. All the Government can do is come up with a mailing list prepared by the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Will the Prime Minister ask the Minister of State for Science and Technology, when he is drawing up his brain drain mailing list, to use that list to inform our scientists why the Government cut the National Research Council laboratories, why it closed the Algonquin observatory, why it is closing down the Bedford Institute and why it is cutting out a number of other leading facilities, including the Canadian Centre for Toxicology at Guelph? Will he explain that to our scientists by using this new mailing list of the Minister in order to keep in touch with the men and women with brains in this country who are leaving because of the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that there would be criticism of the science policy of this or any other Government from a Party that devised the scientific tax scam that took billions of dollars from legitimate investment in Canada in science and technology.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Scientific Tax Credit was a disgrace and dishonour that sucked hundreds of millions of dollars—

Mr. Broadbent: You voted for it.

Mr. Mulroney: —from the scientific community in Canada, and the Liberals will forever bear the disgrace of that initiative.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: You voted for it over there.

Mr. Mulroney: We are in the process now of putting together—

Mr. Broadbent: You voted for it.

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the New Democratic Party should not get too excited. I am getting 24 Sussex all ready for you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I even have a pair of shoes to go with that nice new suit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I think there is general agreement in the scientific community. I had the honour of chairing the first meeting of the National Advisory Science and Technology Board for a number of hours. I then met at the University of Waterloo with some of our leading scholars and experts in science and technology. Last evening, as I indicated, I had the opportunity again. There is a strong view that collectively, with the co-operation of the provinces, the research institutes and universities and the Government of Canada, we are putting together a national science policy which will allow us to recapture a lot of the time lost over the last number of years and bring Canada to the forefront of science and technology.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why then would 40 per cent of our scientists be prepared to leave this country because they have no faith in this Government understanding Canada's possibilities in the 21st century? Why prepare a mailing list to try to invite our scientists back to Canada once they leave? Why not do something now to persuade them to stay, with a constructive scientific policy in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the Leader of the Opposition seriously suggesting that 40 per cent of the scientists in Canada are about to leave this country? Three times now—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Show him the report.

Mr. Mulroney: Does the Leader of the Opposition seriously believe what he has just said, that 40 per cent of the science community of this country—

An Hon. Member: That's right.

An Hon. Member: Wake up, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: That is an absolute statement of nonsense. If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not know that, I fear he is in for even worse days ahead.

INSTITUTE FOR MARINE DYNAMICS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that the National Research Council's Institute for Marine Dynamics is located at St. John's, Newfoundland, and that centre, at a cost of $55 million, gives St. John's and, indeed, Canada, the leading institute of its kind in the world today. Why then has the Government of Canada put at risk the world-class potential and capabilities of this institute by underfunding by as much as $5 million a year the operating budget of that world-class facility?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when we signed an agreement with the Newfoundland Government, especially with respect to offshore exploration, we brought a substantial and fundamental contribution to Memorial University and all research centres in Newfoundland. I am convinced that the Member is aware of that fact.

We are now negotiating with the Government of Newfoundland concerning grants for other types of research. I think that the Government of Canada is doing a lot in that field and that without the Government's action in the past, presently and in the future, Memorial University would not enjoy the scientific recognition it now has across Canada.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): The facility was put there by the previous administration. It was supposed to be the most up to date place in the world to test the seaworthiness of drilling platforms, seagoing oil rigs and ships. The Director of the Institute says: "If we don't get the additional money, I guess what we will have is a great big pool of water". That was said by the Director of the National Research Institute. The kind of answer the Minister has just given is what we have been hearing for the last year.

When will the Government of Canada get serious and provide the dollars necessary for both scientists and basic research at a $55 million facility which can and should be a world leader in that particular kind of scientific research and which currently is not because of a lack of commitment by the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government of Canada has acted on the issue of research, especially as far as Newfoundland is concerned. I personally had the opportunity to visit the Research Centre mentioned by the Hon. Member and have discussions with the officials and, in the months to come, the Government of Canada in co-operation with the Government of Newfoundland and not unilaterally, will ensure that research centres in Newfoundland maintain their degree of excellence.

PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday I noted in Question Period that the final agreement in the takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco could well be signed within 24 hours. As the Minister knows that did in fact take place yesterday afternoon. Is the Minister aware that there is a provision in the takeover agreement which effectively precludes Dome, or any of its shareholders, from considering any other offer in the takeover bid?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on April 22 this year, Mr. Macdonald, Chairman of Dome, was very specific in his public statement that under an existing agreement between Amoco and Dome, the latter could not seek competitive bids but would have to consider any bids that would be submitted.

The fiduciary function of the Board of Directors and especially its Chairman, as the person responsible for Dome, is set forth very clearly in the Canada Business Corporations Act, Section 117 (1), first paragraph, which says that every director and officer, in discharging his duties, shall act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation.

Personally, I am not familiar with the contents of the definitive agreement referred to by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I believe it is to be submitted to Dome's creditors this afternoon and tomorrow. Subsequently, creditors and shareholders will make a decision, and if they approve the proposal, it will be reviewed by Investment Canada.

This kind of definitive agreement does not constitute the final and irrevocable sale of Dome. It does provide details of financial and other conditions, so that the parties concerned, and above all the owners, in other words, creditors and shareholders, can ascertain the exact value of the offer.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, part of the Minister's answer dealt with the actual question. Considering that our understanding is that the agreement that has been signed effectively precludes Dome and its shareholders from considering another offer, and since we know that Amoco has threatened to sue Imperial Oil as well as potential, would-be competitors with suits that could involve many millions of dollars, does the Government of Canada not think it is time that it intervened in this process and took steps to ensure that not only the interests of the shareholders and creditors are served in this multi-million dollar decision but that the interests of the people of Canada are served? Will the Minister intervene?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party should at least acknowledge that we have acted in what we believe to be the best interests of the Canadian people. Dome, which was considered to be bankrupt last year, has now had three bids from three different corporations: Amoco, Esso and TransCanada PipeLines.

Everybody in Canada and anywhere else in the world who had any interest in this question knew that Dome was up for sale. That is why these bids were prepared. It is now up to parties other than Amoco to decide, advised therein by counsel, how they will proceed to make a bid.

However, I repeat what the Chairman of Dome said himself on April 22. Their agreement with Amoco provides that Dome will not seek any bids. On the other hand, Dome's Chairman and its board of directors have a legal responsibility, should a bid be made and they consider it to be in the interests of the shareholders and creditors, to advise the latter accordingly.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government stood back while Amoco got away and finalized its takeover bid of Dome. It is now standing back while the creditors are meeting. As we sit in the House this afternoon the creditors could take a decision that could force Dome into bankruptcy. Having stood back from these two important processes, does the Government believe that the Government of Japan, or the Government of the vast majority of countries in western Europe, would stand back when millions of dollars of their taxpayers' money are at stake and allow a decision such as this to be reached by, and only by, the private sector? Does the Minister believe that for a minute?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Leader of the New Democratic Party—which is first and foremost a socialist party—would probably rather have the entire private sector in Canada run by the State. That is not the kind of country we live in. There are laws in this country that protect relations within the private sector. And that is the kind of framework in which these transactions are taking place.

ROLE OF INVESTMENT CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On the one hand the Minister refuses to differentiate between the fiduciary capacity of the management and directors of Dome with the shareholders of that company and the management and directors' agreement with Amoco Canada on the other. They are two different things.

Yesterday the head of Investment Canada said that he is concerned about the sale of Dome Petroleum, yet he does not have the mandate to be able to review bids other than the bid that comes before it, which would be that of Amoco Canada. Why does the Government not honour its own Canadianization policy and insist that other bids come before Investment Canada instead of selling out the country's natural resources?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that, had it not been for the policies of the Liberal Party, Dome Petroleum might not be up for sale today.

What the Government wants to ensure, Mr. Speaker, is that the sale is made in keeping with Canadian laws and in the interest of Canadians, and the interest of Canadians includes that of Dome management. The law is there, everything is being done in accordance with it, Mr. Speaker, and we are concerned over the sale of Dome. Should a deal be concluded with a foreign controlled company, this company will have to submit its proposal to Investment Canada.

I can assure the House that we will take every step required to make sure that Canadian interests are better protected by this Government than they ever were under the previous administration.

• (1440)

RECORD OF INVESTMENT CANADA DECISIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the Minister of Energy admit that Investment Canada is no deterrent? It has not turned down one application to date. All it amounts to is an attempt to legitimize the Government's sell-out of our natural resources.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Investment Canada did not have to reject any bid because the offers were the subject of responsible negotiations and Investment Canada made sure that all final offers were in the interest of Canadians.

FORECAST OF ENERGY CRISIS IN 1990S

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to take up the same line of questioning.

Given that we are going to have an energy crisis in the 1990s, as all of the commentators seem to say, and given that Dome in fact will be selling out this vast pool of oil and gas to Amoco, a big American oil company, would he not agree that this in fact is setting the energy policy for the 1990s, and isn't it a fact that the state that is going to be running the energy policy of Canada in the 1990s, if this deal goes through, is the United States of America?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time our colleague has predicted a crisis in the energy sector. He has been doing just that for 10 years and, as far as I know, the international problem right now is that we have surpluses in that sector. Besides, the best way to make sure that Canada does not run out of petroleum products is to see to it that Dome will be in a position to exploit the oil patch over which it now holds drilling rights. That is what the Government intends to do, Mr. Speaker.

QUERY CONCERNING POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF TERMS ON PURCHASE BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): The Minister should perhaps read the statement of his own Deputy Minister about the oil crisis that is coming up, a statement that was made in Paris yesterday.

An Hon. Member: He doesn't read such things.

Mr. Waddell: Let me ask him a question with respect to the meeting of creditors, to be held tomorrow in Toronto.

The Minister has already said in a press conference that he was going to require some terms of Amoco. He said that a couple of weeks ago.

Should he not, therefore, then tell those creditors, and the banks, and the companies which are putting this deal together, what those terms are going to be? Those terms could affect the deal.

So, I would ask the Minister to stand in his place in this House and tell us the terms he intends to put on Amoco in respect of this takeover.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my colleague that all countries attending yesterday's International Energy Agency meeting were in agreement on a basic principle, namely that energy supply will be guaranteed through a free market economy, a far cry from the proposal of the socialist party across the aisle. As to tomorrow's meeting, Canadian legislation provides that the Government can express its requirements through Investment Canada. Our general requirements have been made public. We are waiting for a proposal to make sure that once the final agreement is signed it is in the interest of Canadians, and the best interest of Canadians is to make sure that drilling operations continue on Dome lands, Mr. Speaker.

LOBBYISTS

REGISTRATION—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it concerns the registration of lobbyists.

On September 9, 1985, in an open letter to Members of Parliament and Senators, the Prime Minister wrote:

> I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to prepare on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

On December 19, 1985, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs presented a White Paper on lobbying, instead of legislation.

On January 27, 1987, an all-Party committee presented a report recommending the registration of lobbyists.

My question, very simply, is: Where is the Bill?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the timetable outlined by the Hon. Member should have also included the fact that in February the House passed a motion agreeing to the committee's report; and based on that motion, I am preparing legislation, which I shall introduce in the House soon.

Mr. Boudria: So much for the promise of the Prime Minister.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF LOBBYISTS—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION IN TERMS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who had promised to introduce this Bill urgently. Is the Prime Minister now prepared to assure the House that the Bill, when available, will provide for disclosure of lobbyists' salaries and expenses, as well as registration of the Government officials who have rallied to their cause? Is he determined to include these specific provisions in the legislation?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee, which was unanimously endorsed—and I think the Hon. Member was on the committee—specifically recommended against including fees. Given that fact, I find it strange that this representation would now be made.

A Bill reflecting the deliberations of the committee will be brought forward.

I hope that the Hon. Member has not changed his mind from the position he took while a member of that committee.

Mr. Boudria: You don't read Hansard too well, either.

OWNERSHIP OF OIL RESOURCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

As the Minister well knows, other oil-producing countries around the world have taken steps to ensure domestic control over that particular aspect of their respective energy sectors. One needs only to consider what has taken place in such countries as Norway, Great Britain, Venezuela, Mexico, as well as all of the countries of the Middle East, and even the United States of America.

Would the Minister indicate to the House and to the people of Canada a single oil-producing country that has not taken steps to ensure that the ownership and control of that critical resource remains in domestic hands? Could he name a single country that falls into that category?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is the most extraordinary question I have ever heard in the House. The energy reserves are on Canadian territory. They are developed under the jurisdiction of Canadian laws, whether in the area of transport, labour or even income tax. Mr. Speaker, all the countries of the world have organized their respective systems along that line. The royalties are paid to the provinces. They are not paid to the state of California or the state of Louisiana. The labour force operates under Canadian legislation generally and, in particular, under Alberta and Saskatchewan legislation. Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe that there is a Member of this House who does not know that the energy industry is first and foremost under the control of Canada with the support of the various provinces, which are responsible in this country for natural resources management.

PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, that is the most extraordinary response I have ever heard in this House. You know full well that Amoco shifted $600 million out of this country in the first few months of this year.

Mr. Masse: You should at least know that. Ask a question about what you do not know, not what you should know.

Mr. Riis: My supplementary question for the Minister is as follows: The Minister will know that the President of Investment Canada indicated yesterday in committee his personal concern regarding this takeover. He said he was very, very concerned about the implications for Canada.

Considering the importance of this takeover bid, and to ensure fair treatment in the bidding process, would the Minister give consideration to referring this matter to a special committee, to ensure that the three bids do receive consideration and that, whatever the final decision, that decision is in the best interests of Canada and Canadians?

An Hon. Member: It might even help your Party.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Again, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Government generally, including our administrators, is determined to make sure through Investment Canada that the proposals which are accepted in the end are in Canada's best interests. I wish to indicate to the House that since our Government came to power in 1984, the proportion of Canadian property has increased from 42.5 percent to 47 percent, and that of Canadian control from 40.5 percent to 48.4 percent. We should be commended for that, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: It goes in reverse, with Dome.

An Hon. Member: You are inconsistent.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT'S EMPLOYMENT OF DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Sub-committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped released recently the Challenge Report, which shows that the Government's employment record for disabled persons is only 2 per cent, compared to 6 per cent for the private sector.

When is the Minister going to take action to follow the guidelines of equality? His own Department's record is one of the worst in the Government, with a one-fiftieth of 1 per cent employment record for the disabled.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government is concerned over the issue of employment for the handicapped, and one of the objectives of the Employment Equity Act was to give various categories or workers ready access to the labour market. I would suggest that the act is being implemented to meet the objectives I have just mentioned.

• (1450)

DEPARTMENT'S RECORD

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about accessibility, I am talking about the employment rate. When we realize that one in every 17 people in Canada is disabled or handicapped and the Minister is only employing one in every 5,000 in his Department, what kind of guidelines and program for employment is his Department, which is supposed to be the Department of Employment, giving as an example to the rest of the country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): When we came into office three years ago, Mr. Speaker, federal departments had practically no handicapped employees on their payroll.

When I was Secretary of State we invested $16 million to promote—and this going on now—access not only to employment but also to all economic and other sectors where the handicapped should be represented. The Secretary of State is implementing and will implement other policies.

As to Employment and Immigration Canada, with a staff of 25,000 it is obvious that it is much more complicated to set up facilities accessible to the handicapped.

But I agree with my colleague that even though we are now making every effort in Canada Manpower Centres there is still some way to go. Of course this will take more than three years, given the situation we were faced with when we took over.

NATIONAL PARKS

DESIGNATION OF SOUTH MORESBY AS NATIONAL PARK—CO-OPERATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would first like to thank him for his personal determination to preserve South Moresby.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Over two months ago the Prime Minister met with the Premier of British Columbia, sought and found his support for the designation of South Moresby as a national park reserve as demonstrated in the March 9 B.C. Speech from the Throne.

Would the Prime Minister advise this House whether he has been able to resecure the co-operation of British Columbia on this in light of the bad faith demonstrated earlier this week by British Columbia in its proposal to log until 1997 within the proposed park boundaries?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are continuing with the Province of B.C. on this very important national and, indeed, international question. I was talking to my opposite number, Bruce Strachan, who is responsible for the park system in British Columbia, as recently as a few moments before Question Period. I am awaiting a new proposal from the B.C. Government which, I understand, is being discussed by the B.C. Cabinet even as I speak. It would be premature for me to comment further on this matter except to say that both Governments are negotiating in good faith.

For our part, the entire Cabinet, in fact the entire caucus, including the B.C. caucus, supports the establishment of a national park in what is arguably the most important wilderness treasure in the entire Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not arguable.

Mr. Fulton: I would like to thank the Minister of the Environment publicly. I know he has always negotiated in good faith with the Government of B.C.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK END TO LOGGING OPERATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister, who I think is the only person who can ensure at this point in time that the Premier of British Columbia's word to the Prime Minister is lived up to, namely, that the area proposed by the Government of Canada is the only part of South Moresby now left that could ensure a national park reserve.

Will the Prime Minister call the Premier of British Columbia today and ask him to live up to his word and not allow any further logging? Will the Prime Minister himself call the Premier of British Columbia and ask for an end to the logging, because that is the first step to securing this area as a national park reserve?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, because this issue is a government-wide priority, and because of the importance which the Prime Minister himself attaches to the question, in addition to the negotiations that I myself am conducting with my opposite number, the Prime Minister has raised the issue with the Premier, as did the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES—REQUEST THAT PROCESS BE ACCELERATED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and it concerns the reimbursement of Unemployment Insurance cheques for 35,000 early retirees in Canada who were unfairly cut off by the Conservative Government in 1985. So that these elderly workers can receive the cheques to which they are entitled, would the Minister, in order to speed up the process, be willing to ask the Unemployment Insurance Commission to start the reimbursement process immediately by advising these 35,000 people to report to the Unemployment Insurance office and start completing their benefit reimbursement card?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the condition we had set for reimbursing claimants before January 1986 was that they had to fill out the benefit application form. As soon as the form is completed by all persons eligible for the reimbursement, and as soon as the legislation is adopted by the House, the process will start automatically, since the benefit applications are already on record at the Canada Employment Centres.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE DIVIDED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, for 18 months these people have been fighting and waiting for their reimbursement, in many cases so they can pay back the money they had to borrow. Will the Minister be willing to let these people receive the unemployment insurance cheques to which they are entitled within a month at the latest, and have the House immediately adopt that part of the Bill that allows for this reimbursement? And if not, why is the Minister holding these 35,000 people hostage to discriminate against other elderly workers?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, how typical of the speeches of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, who is always trying to scare people for no reason at all. The Hon. Member will soon have a chance to vote for the whole Bill, not half and not one quarter, and that is when . . . You have been trying to scare people for a year now. Vote for the Bill and we will take care of reimbursing these people.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF DELAY IN AMENDING PATENT ACT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning Bill C-22. As a pharmacist I believe in the necessity of enhanced patent protection to further research and development in Canada. Earlier we heard the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition tell us about the supposed exodus of researchers and scientists from Canada with the accompanying loss of millions and millions of dollars.

Could the Minister please tell this House what is the impact of the continued delay of passage of Bill C-22 on research and development in Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that each day of delay in the passage of and Royal Assent to Bill C-22 is a further delay for those scientists who are waiting for the $800 million of additional research that has already been committed. There are grants to universities included in the amount which are all conditional on the Bill's passage. Each day of delay means a further delay for Canadian scientists who want to get to work in this very important area.

DECISION ALLOWING VARIABLE GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has expressed, to use its words, "disappointment", "shock", "intolerable", concerning the CTC ruling to allow variable grain rates between certain grain companies and the CNR in certain selected locations in Saskatchewan, which flies in the face of a High-Court decision on western grain movement. The only shipper is the Canadian Wheat Board, not the grain companies and not even the farmers.

Since the Sask Pool which represents 80 or more per cent of the farmers in that province and the National Farmers Union have appealed to the Cabinet to overturn that CTC decision, is it the intention to entertain that appeal and when will they get a decision?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue of great interest to grain farmers and, of course, there is divided opinion on it as there is on many issues both in western Canada and elsewhere. A number of groups appeared before the CTC supporting the variable innovation, and a number of groups, including the group which the Hon. Member mentioned, opposed it. They have appealed to the Governor in Council. That is now being processed and we will have to make a decision on it. I cannot say very well what the decision will be until we have considered it.

Hearings were held in the west and the experienced persons who make up the CTC have given their views on the matter. Of course they have instituted certain safeguards, including the fact that this is for a trial period of one year.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OVERTURN DECISION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the CTC chose to ignore the evidence. As the Minister is aware, variable rates mean that farmers who live closer to Thunder Bay and Vancouver will pay higher freight rates than those who live farther away because they happen to live at or near a place where there are variable freight rates. Is it the intention of the Government to allow the railways and a few private grain companies to play God, picking and choosing which farmers will pay less and which will pay more? Will he overturn the CTC decision?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission is a quasi-judicial body. To have a Member play-acting in the House saying that they ignored the evidence is beyond all comprehension, and is certainly improper, to put it at the very minimum.

Mr. Broadbent: Improper?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman laughs. That is why he will not be first for very long.

ENERGY

CONVERSION OF SURPLUS GRAIN TO ETHANOL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Energy, the best Minister of Energy Canada has ever had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Given that the use of grain-derived ethanol as an octane enhancing additive for gasoline would use hundreds of ton of wheat and corn, and given that early adoption of U.S. standards in gasoline, plus a reduction in sales tax of two cents per litre on gasoline containing a minimum of 3 per cent ethanol and 5 per cent methanol, would use up large surpluses of wheat and corn and would provide benefits for all of Canada, will the Hon. Minister provide the leadership and action required so all of these good things can happen in a free enterprise way?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague. Indeed truth sounds better from that side than it does from the other side. I can assure my colleague that the Government is aware of the great interest in the use of ethanol and all mixtures like methanol as fuel. This is what my department had in mind recently when it carried out a study on oxygenated fuel in Canada. Being a Government which likes to consult with all interested groups we have sent this analysis to all interested parties to find out exactly what they think of this Government approach. Hopefully their comments will reach me by May 31, and department officials will prepare a summary of their views before making recommendations to the Minister this summer.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—REDUCTION IN STAFF OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last week we learned from two University of Toronto researchers that as much as 175 tonnes per year of toxic chemicals are released into the air from the mist at Niagara Falls. How can the Minister's Department be of assistance to Canadians who live in the Niagara Peninsula, particularly in relation to their health and to the tourist industry, considering that this year the Department of the Environment has cut its strength by 106 employees, from scientists to technicians and from field workers to administrators? In what way can the Department be of assistance?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of question the Hon. Member has raised with me in committee and it is no more valid merely by being repeated in the House of Commons. The fact is that the budget of Environment Canada is now higher than it has ever been in the history of this country except for one fiscal year.

Mr. Caccia: That does not negate the fact that Environment Canada has lost 106 valuable people.

Tabling of Documents

PROPOSED TOXICOLOGY CENTRE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in light of this rather disturbing development which threatens the health of Canadians who live in a peninsula that is international in scope, will the Government now reconsider its decision to cancel the Toronto-Guelph toxicology centre which was cancelled in November, 1984, and go ahead with the construction of that very necessary establishment?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is that the Government of Canada is neglecting toxicology. The facts are contrary to that premise.

At present 368 person-years are being devoted by the Government of Canada to this important field. We spend $20.4 million every year on toxicology in-house. To boot, we contract out an additional $5.6 million, not to mention the $15 million we cost-share with the provinces. This is one area in which I would have thought the Hon. Member for Davenport would avoid asking questions because the record is good.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has ended. I regret that there are some Hon. Members to whom we could not get today and I hope we will be able to get to them tomorrow.

They are petitioning the House of Commons and the Government of Canada and note that the application for variable rates made by Canadian National Railways and six grain companies will lower freight rates which will adversely affect the quality and stability of rural life in Saskatchewan since they will only apply to a few places.

The petitioners say that the expense of hauling grain will fall back on the producer. Longer hauls will increase trucking and fuel costs and increase the upkeep on municipal roads, and will eventually allow the disintegration of the railway branch line network. They humbly call upon Parliament to reject the proposal to apply variable freight rates to 47 delivery points in western Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition concerning the report of the commission of inquiry into unemployment insurance, known as the Forget Commission.

The petitioners point out that the Forget proposal to annualize the UI program will reduce benefits to the unemployed by 31 per cent over all, forcing over 62 per cent of the unemployed to live on less than $140 a week.

Therefore the undersigned call upon Parliament to reject any legislation designed to eliminate federal contributions to the unemployment program or reduce UI benefits for unemployed Canadians.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and pleasure to table several petitions with over 100 signatures dealing with Motion No. 37 presently before the House.

The petitioners indicate that because of the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian children every year for reasons of convenience, they call upon Parliament to approve this Private Members' motion which asks the Government to protect the right to life for the unborn in the Canadian Charter of Rights.

The petitioners come from several communities in The Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency, and I am very pleased to note that the majority of signatures are from John Paul II Collegiate in North Battleford.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 112 will be answered today.

[Text]

FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES—UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS

Question No. 112—Mr. Howie:

1. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, did persons in federal penitentiaries avail themselves of university programs and, if so (a) how many (b) in what penitentiaries (c) what was the total cost of this program?

2. In what manner and to what extent were appropriate program objectives achieved as a result of the program?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. Yes. (a) For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, average full-time equivalent students; 247. Inmates in all institutions could also avail themselves of university correspondence courses. As of March 31, 1987, there were 369 registrations in university correspondence courses.

(b) In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987 university programs were offered at Archambault and Cowansville institutions in Quebec; Prison for Women, Kingston Penitentiary, Collins Bay and Millhaven institutions in Ontario; Stony Mountain institution in Manitoba; Saskatchewan Penitentiary in Saskatchewan; Drumheller and Edmonton institutions in Alberta; and Kent, Matsqui, William Head and Mountain institutions in British Columbia.

(c) The total cost for university programs in 86/87 was $904,000.

2. Educational programs are intended to provide opportunities for academic advancement as well as personal development through goal setting and achievement.

University programs provide an improved ability to find and hold a job thus potentially reducing recidivism. Taking such programs also improves self-image and increases the ability of the inmate to participate in further educational programs. The pursuit and achievement of a university degree has been found to be a positive contributing factor to the rehabilitation of the inmate students.

REPLY TO MEMBER'S ALLEGATION

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege with respect to a statement made by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) during question period yesterday, while I was away from the House.

The Hon. Member said that on May 5 this year, I deliberately misled the House when I said that the agreement between Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum allowed for other bids to be made.

Yesterday, he said that the agreement prohibits or would prohibit or prohibited other companies from making bids, under threat of a suit.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may refer you to the statement made by Dome Chairman Mr. Macdonald, who explained at a press conference in Calgary on April 22 this year that under the agreement with Amoco, Dome could not seek other bids but would nevertheless have to consider any bids it would receive.

In a letter to Imperial Oil dated April 24, 1987, the president of Amoco Canada, Don Stacy, recalled details of the memorandum of agreement concluded by Dome and Amoco, to warn the company not to make a bid. That was what the letter contained. The complete text of the memorandum of agreement was subsequently submitted to the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission on May 4, 1987.

It will be up to counsel for the parties interested in making bids to interpret the details of this memorandum of agreement. Any conflict between Amoco, Dome and other parties regarding the interpretation of the conditions of the agreement will have to be settled by those parties and not by the Government of Canada.

As I pointed out in a letter I sent last week to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Broadbent, according to the legal advice I received from the Department of Justice, I may not intervene in this basically private matter, which should be resolved by the parties themselves.

I maintain what I said in my answer to the Hon. Member on May 5 and subsequent days. The Government of Canada will examine all bids to purchase Dome Petroleum which are submitted for review under the Investment Canada Act.

Mr. Speaker, that is how we will ensure that the transaction, once it has been accepted by Dome, will provide a net benefit to Canada.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 I did not say the Minister was intentionally misleading the House. I said he was misleading the House. As you will remember, Sir, you rose to state that you hoped I was not implying that he was intentionally misleading the House and I said that I would not do that. That seemed to clarify the issue at that time.

• (1520)

With regard to the Minister's statement, I said "misleading" because in answer to my question the Hon. Minister said:

> I can only refer the Hon. Member to the statements made by the President of Dome Petroleum where the answer is yes.

I had asked, "Does the agreement between Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum allow for other bids to be made?", and the Minister said yes.

In my opinion and that of others the memorandum of agreement which was signed by the Chairman of Dome Petroleum on April 17 and the President of Amoco Canada on April 18 states that Dome Petroleum will not enter into any agreements with any other bidders, which indicates to me, as do other things in the agreement, that Dome Petroleum cannot entertain any other bids.

Regardless of what the fiduciary responsibilities of the management and directors of Dome are to the shareholders, that is not stated in the agreement. We must look at what is stated in the agreement, which is that Dome Petroleum cannot enter into an agreement with any other party.

My feeling was and still is that the Minister's statement that Dome could entertain other bids was a misleading statement. I still stand by that. I cannot say that the Minister intentionally misled because I do not know whether the Minister actually read that memorandum of agreement. He should have had access to it, but I cannot say whether he read it and I thereby cannot say he intentionally misled. However, I do think this is an important question and I think it is misleading. I certainly am not attributing any clandestine motives to the Hon. Minister.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was completely in error when he said that the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) claimed that the Minister had deliberately misled the House with respect to the agreement in question. At no time, either today or on May 5, did the Hon. Member say anything of the kind. In fact, you were good enough to intervene on May 5 to confirm that it was not the Member's intention to allege that the Minister was deliberately misleading the House.

Second, if the Hon. Minister had a question of privilege about the May 5 question, surely the time to have raised it was on May 5, and the Hon. Minister did not do that.

Mr. Masse: He said that yesterday.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Hon. Minister says that he is complaining about what the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys said yesterday. I repeat that nowhere in Hansard is it recorded that the Hon. Member claimed that the Hon. Minister deliberately misled the House.

In any event, if I am not mistaken, the Minister's complaint is not the basis for a question of privilege. If he has a complaint, it may be the basis for a point of order. Even then, it is a valid point of order only if, as I have already said, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys stated that the Hon. Minister deliberately misled the House which, I repeat, he did not say.

Also, the Hon. Minister's point is defective because he did not say that if you found a prima facie case of privilege he would move a motion referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. He has not stated that intention and his point is therefore defective.

Finally, I respectfully refer you to page 12 of Beauchesne's, citation 19, which says:

> A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The Hon. Minister has raised a grievance about what the Hon. Member said. I respectfully submit that it cannot be a point of order for the reasons I have stated, and certainly it cannot be a valid question of privilege.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points, if I may, on this question of privilege. Both of them are directly related to the comments of the House Leader of the Official Opposition.

First, if time were to be of the essence in every question of privilege, as the Member alleges, there would be very few questions of privilege debated. I think the Speaker has been wise in allowing questions of privilege to be aired as a safety valve, as a method of allowing Members to expound upon their points of view. I think we should continue to ignore the time factor in favour of allowing questions of privilege to be brought forward as a safety valve.

Second, I noted with interest my hon. friend's argument that a question of privilege must be concluded with a motion. I welcome his joining me in this argument. He has argued the other side of the case on previous occasions, I believe. I have made the argument time and again that a question of privilege must be concluded with a motion. If not the Member himself, other members of his Party have disagreed with me and I welcome his joining with me on this technical point. The Hon. Minister has made his case. It may indeed be a matter of debate, but I think we have aired it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You have erred, that's right.

Mr. Lewis: As my colleague has pointed out, no one would suggest for a minute that the Hon. Minister would deliberately mislead the House. I conclude my argument on that point and leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, to decide on the question of privilege.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as a somewhat dispassionate observer, being neither a member of the Party, a member of which, it is being suggested, has suggested that another person has misled the House, or a member of the Party of the Minister who is making the point, it seems to me that the problem is that there is no point really. In order to mislead the House you must have some leadership in the House. To "mislead" you must have some "lead" and then you mislead.

The problem is that we are not getting any statements at all from the Minister with respect to this deal. He should stand up and make a statement in the House and not smuggle it in on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has evidenced again his great genius at managing to find ways to make points on behalf of the people he represents. Hon. Members will, of course, appreciate the points which he has made.

I will check the "blues" carefully. I want to thank the Minister and Hon. Members for their representations. I will give them careful consideration.

ALLEGED DIVULGING OF IN CAMERA COMMITTEE DELIBERATIONS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a question of privilege with regard to confidential information from an in camera committee hearing being made public. I respectfully refer to Erskine May, Nineteenth Edition, page 146, Chapter X "Breaches of Privilege and Contempts", which reads as follows:

> The publication or disclosure of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of draft reports of committees before they have been reported to the House will, however, constitute a breach of privilege or a contempt.

On Tuesday, May 5, 1987, your Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources met in camera to discuss a motion previously adopted. A great deal of debate occurred, and at the termination of this debate a motion was adopted to rescind the previous motion. Approximately 30 to 40 minutes following this meeting the press phoned my office, recited the discussions, the motion, and the exact way the committee voted and then, of course, asked for my comments in reply, to which I said everything was confidential.

On May 6, 1987, the following day, a Canadian Press article appeared in The Calgary Sun which described the committee proceedings on the motion as follows:

> At yesterday's review, two Conservatives voted to reverse that decision, a committee member told the Canadian Press. Another Tory and a Liberal MP voted to stick to the original decision. Conservative chairman, Barbara Sparrow, who urged the committee to look at last week's decision again, cast the deciding vote.

Articles also appeared in The Ottawa Citizen and The Edmonton Journal. I have those articles if you wish to see them.

My duties as a Member of Parliament, a member of a Standing Committee of the House and also as a chairman of that Committee have been degraded, curtailed and indeed somewhat inhibited by the leak of confidential information.

The proceedings of my Committee and, by extension, of all other Committees of the House have been jeopardized by this divulgation of in camera deliberations.

If you find there is a prima facie case of privilege, I will be prepared to move that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I was going to address the last point, but I will address this one inasmuch as I was a member of the Committee. I can vouch for the facts as expressed by my colleague, the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

I also want to point out to the Speaker that on May 5, at page 5777 of Hansard, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) raised a similar point of order on this very matter, bringing to the attention of the House deliberations that had taken place in camera. I want to emphasize to the Speaker that I find it ironic that the House Leader of the New Democratic Party raised his point on May 5 when the NDP had no member present at either of the votes.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, as a member of that Committee I do not disagree with what has been stated by the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) and the Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon). However, I want to add some further information.

First, we are talking about two meetings. One meeting, at which certain questions were asked about inviting witnesses, occurred the week before. That was the sum and substance of the in camera meeting the week before and the in camera meeting of May 5.

These meetings were dealing with questions of Steering Committee and a matter of inviting witnesses. Those were the sole topics of conversation of those two meetings.

Shortly after the first meeting it became public as to who would be invited to appear as witnesses. Not only was information leaked from the second meeting, but obviously it became public from the first meeting.

My other point is that before the second meeting a reporter came to me and said, "I understand the witnesses will not be coming, that something else has been arranged". In the case of the second meeting, the press not only knew what might have been said at the first meeting and subsequently knew what was said at the second meeting, they knew what was going to be said at the second meeting before it took place. I believe that this is an embarrassment.

I also have two major concerns about this issue. The first is that the matters discussed were of a steering committee nature. The information from the first meeting about the witnesses to be invited having been made public, there would be a problem if we were just concerned that it became public that the witnesses would not be invited as a result of the second meeting? After all, how will witnesses know not to appear if they are not told not to appear? It is a difficult question.

My third point does not relate to what has been said but I think it is important. If there are to be Steering Committees, then that is what should take place. If there is to be information discussed in Steering Committees, that is where it should take place rather than in in camera meetings.

Holding in camera meetings any time one wishes to keep information private will only exacerbate the leakage of information. We have never experienced this type of situation before. It is unfortunate, but information that pertains to the Steering Committee should be discussed only in the Steering Committee rather than an in camera meeting.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources does not have a Steering Committee. There are only seven members present and when we began one and a half years ago it was moved and voted upon by all members present that the full committee would be the Steering Committee.

In addition, I want to refresh the memory of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). The meeting that was held two weeks ago was not just in regard to inviting witnesses. We discussed the full agenda in regard to our crude oil reserves and security of supply study.

If you require more information in regard to the two meetings that took place I would be glad to discuss it with you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously there is a leak of confidential information. We rarely hold in camera meetings, having had only three or four.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has based her question of privilege on a precedent which she describes as something from Erskine May. I must admit that I may not have heard everything she said, but I presume she was talking about the resolution of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom in 1937 that, in effect, says that documents of the kind she mentions if prematurely disclosed could be a basis for a question of privilege.

However, I want to refer you to page 203 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 647(2) which cites a Speaker's ruling reported in the House of Commons Journals for June 23, 1977 at page 1209. The citation states:

> In Canada, when a question of privilege was raised concerning the publication of a committee report before it was presented to the House, the Speaker ruled that the matter could not be resolved as in the British practice because the motion appeared to attack the press for publishing the confidential document but did not attack Members of the House for their attitude in respect of their own confidential documents, and in missing this point, it missed something most important with respect to the privileges of the House.

I do not have the complete ruling to which this edition of Beauchesne refers. There may well be other pertinent paragraphs in it that you may want to consider. However, it struck me, in listening to the Hon. Member, that her motion simply asked the House to refer this matter to the appropriate Committee. It did not contain the essential element apparently required, according to this citation, and that is that there be some attack on Members of the House for their role in this particular matter.

While I understand that the Hon. Member is concerned about this particular issue, I ask the Chair to take into account whether the nature of the Hon. Member's point of privilege, and the motion she says she will present if a prima facie case of privilege were to be found, meets the requirements for a prima facie case of privilege and a proper motion founded thereon, or whether, as I said earlier today in the House of Commons, we are not again seeing a matter of dispute as to facts or of a sense of grievance which may well be in the mind of the Hon. Member a well founded one, but not a bona fide question of privilege?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time in a couple of weeks that the deliberations of an in camera meeting have been discussed as point of privilege on the floor.

With specific reference to the point raised by House Leader of the Official Opposition, and his quoting of Beauchesne's, Section 647(2), it seems to me that on a reading of the substance of that citation, that refers to a privilege of the House being breached because of publication of the deliberations of a committee before they got to the floor of the House. What my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is specifically complaining about is the disclosure of what took place, the deliberations, the proceedings, at an in camera meeting.

I go back to what I said on that earlier occasion, committees would not be able to function without the ability to hold in camera meetings, to have the give and take which one requires from time to time in this business—in any business, at any level, in fact—away from, and I do not even have to read Beauchesne, the glare of publicity. I think that is what my hon. friend is driving at when she says her privileges as a member of that committee have been breached, and her ability to do her job as a member and chairman of that committee is being derogated by the fact that on this occasion the deliberations of that committee, the proceedings—not the committee report, per se—were disclosed. I respectfully suggest that the final report would be eventually tabled in the House, in any event.

I do not have an awful lot of trouble as to whether or not the media might receive it a half hour before the House. However, I have a great deal of difficulty with the problem the Hon. Member had, and the problem brought up two weeks ago, when Members go behind closed doors to discuss and deliberate, and then find that what was discussed in camera becomes the property of the media and the public. I do not think this helps the House or Hon. Members. I think the Hon. Member made an excellent point as to her question of privilege.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for clarifying the matter of concern. However, I think it is still sound for me to ask the Chair to consider whether the point I raised is not equally relevant to the fact situation, which is the basis for the complaint of the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

Are we faced with a complaint which is so vague as to whom it is directed, particularly with respect to the role of Members of Parliament, that the complaint is not a sound basis for a motion to be voted on by this House to refer the matter to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure? Such a motion, and the investigation by a committee which would flow therefrom, is a serious matter, and one which takes place rarely.

While I understand the Hon. Member's concern, especially now that it has been clarified for me by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, I wonder if it is still not the case, and I would argue that it is, that any motion the Hon. Member for Calgary South would move, if the Speaker found a prima facie case of privilege, would be of such a vague nature it would not be a proper basis for a vote of this House with a resulting inquiry by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys on the same point?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, there was just one thing which concerned me and I think it has been made clear by the House Leader of our Party, so I am prepared to let the matter stand.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their interventions, all of which are helpful to the Chair. I should advise the House that a week or so ago an application, not exactly the same as this, but similar, was brought before the House by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) with respect to a statement made in this House relating to an in camera meeting by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). I think I should advise Hon. Members that that matter has given the Chair a great deal of difficulty. However, the Chair will be ruling on that matter tomorrow.

With respect to the matter I have heard today, I will be giving it very careful consideration. I can indicate to Hon. Members that there have been enough of these cases now that the Chair feels duty bound to Hon. Members to take the matter very seriously, indeed, and I will be returning to the Chamber tomorrow with a ruling.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, there are 12 motions on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

Motion No. 1 attempts to import into the Bill provisions found in the Indian Act which were not contemplated at the second reading of the Bill. This amendment falls clearly beyond the scope of the Bill and I must therefore rule it out of order. In doing so, I wish to refer the Hon. Member to Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

Motion No. 2 was moved in committee and ruled out of order. It falls beyond the scope of the Ways and Means resolution on which the Bill is based. On the basis of Citation 523 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, and after careful examination, I must rule this motion out of order.

[English]

Motions Nos. 3 and 5 seek to introduce some new kind of mechanism in the establishment of the export charge of 15 per cent. I have come to the conclusion that these motions fall outside the scope of the Bill and the Ways and Means Resolution upon which the Bill is based. No provision for adjustments in the determination of the export charge was contemplated in the resolution of the Bill. Therefore, I have to rule the motions out of order. I refer the Hon. Members to Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states, and I quote:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

[Translation]

Motion No. 6, which is consequential to Motion No. 3, will not be selected for debate and will not be put to the House.

• (1550)

Motion No. 4 was ruled out of order in committee on the basis that it goes beyond the scope of the Ways and Means resolution by attempting to exempt joint and several liability to a corporation or a region exempt from a charge. I have come to the conclusion that this motion, in attempting to exempt U.S. harvested logs, goes beyond the scope of the Bill and introduces a new concept not contemplated in this Bill. Hon. Members are referred to Citation 523 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states:

> Amendments must not exceed the scope, increase the amount or extend the incidence of any charge upon the public, defined by the terms of the Ways and Means resolutions, by which the provisions proposed to be amended are authorized.

On these grounds I must rule this motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 were dealt with earlier.

Motion No. 7 was ruled out of order in the legislative committee. It could be argued that the motion, if carried, might encroach on provincial jurisdiction, although that would be a matter for the courts to decide. However, the Chair recognizes that in procedural terms it is a borderline case. After careful examination the Chair has decided to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. Therefore, Motion No. 7 will be put to the House, debated and voted on by itself.

Motion No. 8, in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), seeks to amend the same clause of the Bill in a manner similar to motion No. 7, in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and therefore will not be selected for debate.

[English]

Motion No. 9 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 10, 11 and 12 will not be selected for debate.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the Chair having provided us with a written version of its ruling. I wish to draw the attention of the Chair to the apparent discrepancy in the ruling on Motion No. 1. Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is cited as the rationale for ruling this motion to be beyond the scope of the Bill. When we presented a similar amendment in committee the Chair at that time cited Citation 773(10). It is a citation which I would submit might be more subject to debate in re-examination.

I am wondering if the Chair is prepared to clarify why it is now referring to Citation 773(1) as opposed to Citation 773(10) which citation is more appropriate to the decision made by the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will consider the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and come back to the matter. In the meantime we will proceed with debate.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the Chair's ruling on Motion No. 4. The Chair has quoted Citation 523 which states:

> Amendments must not exceed the scope, increase the amount or extend the incidence of any charge upon the public, defined by the terms of the Ways and Means resolutions, by which the provisions to be amended are authorized.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you look at what I propose in Subclause (3) and Subclause (4). In Subclause (3) the attempt is to exempt those wholesalers who are temporarily holding softwood lumber which comes from corporations that are exempt under the Schedule in Bill C-37. If the softwood lumber was going directly from the exempt mill into the United States then it would be exempt all the way.

What I am attempting to do is not to increase the scope. All I am attempting to do is ensure that those wholesalers who move ribboned lumber, lumber which has been sawn in an exempt mill, held temporarily on their site but which is going to the United States, are not required to pay the 15 per cent export tax because that wood was, and always is throughout its movement to the United States, exempt.

In Subclause (4) I am not attempting to expand the scope. What I am attempting to do particularly is in relation to the border mills. It refers to trees that are grown in the United States and harvested there and for which the U.S. countervailing action never sought to go after. The Americans have never contended that their stumpage system was subsidized. That wood is brought into Canada, milled in Canadian mills, principally the 13 border mills in the Province of Quebec, and then as it goes from the site or from a wholesaler back into the United States it is presently subject to the 15 per cent export charge.

I have been through the Memorandum of Understanding with a fine-tooth comb. I am unable to find language which leads me to believe that either our negotiators or the American negotiators ever intended, because it was not put into the Memorandum of Understanding, to catch either this wood from the Quebec mills that was grown in the United States, or to capture our wholesalers who were simply temporarily, and at times not even physically, holding the wood. They would simply order the wood from an exempt mill. It would come through. They would ribbon strip it for their buyers in the United States. So I do not believe, from my understanding of Citation 523, that either of these two subclauses would expand or exceed the scope.

I also do not find wording in the Memorandum of Understanding, or as a result of the extensive committee hearings which we held for six weeks, that these commodities and these Canadian businesses were intended to be captured by the 15 per cent export tax.

If you could have another look at this matter, Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful. I think the cost being added on, both to the border mills and to the wholesalers, is inappropriate. This is the only way that Bill C-37 can be remedied.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I admire the ingenious way in which the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) got his point to the floor of the House of Commons after it had been ruled out of order by the Speaker. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that because it is not in the Memorandum of Understanding we cannot create other issues. That would be in violation of the memorandum of understanding, something which the Hon. Member understands and knows.

He also understands that a commitment was made by the Minister and by her staff members that these points would be raised in negotiations with the Americans once this Bill is under way and passed. The ruling is accurate. The amendments would increase the scope of the legislation. Therefore the Memorandum of Understanding stands and the rulings are correct.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to go back to Motion No. 1. The Parliamentary Secretary who is in the Chamber will recall that during the committee hearings I raised a question as to which took precedence, the Indian Affairs Act or the Income Tax Act. Under the Indian Affairs Act, natives on reserve land or in the territory of band councils are given exemptions from provisions of the Income Tax Act. We had asked for a ruling by Revenue Canada which I think would go to the whole point of the amendment that we presented. We are trying to help the Government to be legal and not to abrogate or to eliminate provisions of the Indian Act which, in my understanding, might take precedence over this particular proposal dealing with an imposition of a tax upon native or aboriginal peoples. I am wondering if at this time the Parliamentary Secretary is in a position to provide us with the ruling from Revenue Canada.

• (1600)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I can make inquiries in that regard. I do not have the ruling with me at this particular moment. Certainly, I think it can be obtained fairly quickly.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would ask the Chair to reflect for a moment on the point just made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

The Chair is ruling Motion No. 1 out of order on procedural grounds. The point raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is fundamentally important. I was in attendance when the Hon. Member raised the point during committee consideration. I believe the Deputy Minister for Revenue Canada was in attendance. That was on March 23 last, some seven weeks ago now. The Government has had sufficient opportunity to find out whether or not the Indian Act, in terms of this particular taxation matter, is a more powerful piece of legislation.

The attempt here is simply to protect aboriginal people who might in some way now, or in the near future, be operating logging operations, harvesting operations, sawmilling operations, and particularly where they are exporting lumber to the United States.

Certainly Revenue Canada is abundantly aware of the ruling of less than a year ago, the famed Nowachut case; and certainly I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary is also aware of the March, 1987 ruling of Revenue Canada in relation to aboriginal peoples, status Indian and Inuit people in Canada, pursuant to which it is no longer simply the case of their being employed on or paid on reserve lands where they do not have to pay taxes, whether export taxes, or otherwise, but where the moneys are paid to an establishment on the reserve.

In fact, I met with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) yesterday and it is my understanding that where aboriginal people are working off the reserve but the funds earned are paid to an establishment on the reserve, no taxes are payable.

In respect of the logging and sawmilling operations in my own constituency, and elsewhere in the country, this is a fundamentally important amendment. The proposed amendment reads:

"or temporary license but does not include a person within the meaning of the Indian Act;"—

The purpose of the amendment, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has pointed out, is simply to ensure that Bill C-37, when passed, does not have to come back to the House for amendment because that particular section would be ultra vires.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong the debate, but my recollection is that Revenue Canada made a ruling on that point at the hearing, stating that in fact the export tax was applicable to everyone, including Indian people who export lumber; that the tax situation that both Hon. Members have referred to pertained to the reserve and the reserve lands and the use of the particular material on the reserve.

Once the material is moved off the reserve it is subject to taxation. Once it is exported it is subject to the excise tax regime.

As I understand it, Indian people making an export would have to pay the export tax, in the same way as any other exporter. They would be the exporter of record and licensed to export and in fact would have to pay the export tax. That ruling was given by an ADM of Revenue Canada at the committee hearing.

I will leave it in your good hands, Mr. Speaker, to look at that, as you said you would, and suggest that we get on with the debate on the two amendments that have been accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have looked into the matters raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and the Hon. Member for Skeena.

With respect to the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, I should like to advise him that in fact the citation of Beauchesne concerning Motion No. 1 is in fact 773(1), as set out in the decision of the Speaker.

Let me now deal with the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena. I thank the Hon. Member for his argument. However, the ruling made by the Speaker on this matter will stand.

We will now proceed with the two motions that have been accepted, Motion No. 7 and Motion No. 9.

We will first deal with Motion No. 7, which will be debated and voted on separately.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-37, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 10 the following:

"(4) Revenue derived by Canada from the charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act and payable to the provinces according to subsection (2) may be applied by the province to the awarding of contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe that this amendment goes to the heart of the debate that has emerged over Bill C-37. It is one that is related directly to the right of this Parliament, in its time-honoured tradition, to designate how tax moneys raised by this Parliament should be spent.

The importance of this amendment goes back to the controversy surrounding the introduction of the Memorandum of Agreement by this Government on that famous cold wintry day of December 30 last when, in a last-ditch effort, the Government signed an agreement with the United States pursuant to which there arose the obligation of imposing a tax upon Canadian softwood lumber producers.

Subsequent to that, there was provided a letter written by the Secretary of Commerce, a very substantial official in the U.S. system, along with the Chief Trade Negotiator, Mr. Yeutter, to Mr. Dennison, the head of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports in the United States. In that letter, the writers made a very clear commitment as to how the funds raised by the Canadian Government could or could not be used. In specific reference, they said that moneys raised by the Government could not be used for the "awarding of contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis".

At that time, Mr. Speaker, we raised the matter of the very clear infringement upon the sovereignty of this country that such a limitation on how Canadian tax moneys could be spent would represent. We were given assurances that it was only the "musings of the Secretary of Commerce of the United States", that it did not have any clear standing in law and that it was not a formal part of the Memorandum of Agreement.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fact is, a major signatory to that Agreement, the Secretary of Commerce, as well as the Chief Trade Negotiator, put in writing a clear commitment to their own lumber lobby in terms of what they interpreted to be the meaning and significance of that Agreement.

Certainly that has provided a number of Canadians, both in the industry and without, a real reservation. If one regards the statements made by the provincial Ministers, there is a feeling, as well, that there is delineation, a prescription, as to how the $500 million to $600 million raised through this new tax in fact can be used.

If the Government of Canada has agreed implicitly to the kind of interpretation provided by Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter in their letter to Mr. Dennison, then certainly in my view it is clear that it has agreed to limit a very fundamental right. But, because the Government did so is no reason why the Parliament of Canada should do so. As a sovereign body able to make our own laws, we should ensure that there is no ambiguity or any implicit or accepted argument for the way in which tax moneys can be spent in this country.

Therefore, I have introduced an amendment that specifically authorizes the expenditure of money in those areas, such as silviculture, roadbuilding and recreation mentioned in the Yeutter-Baldrige letter. That does not mean to say the provinces must spend the money in those areas, but it clearly says that they may spend it in those areas and there should be no hesitation or reservation on the part of the provinces, thinking they would be abrogating the treaty or the understandings reached by using the tax moneys thereby raised in these important areas.

Let me point out that we are talking, for example, relating to the matters of silviculture and roadbuilding, about two of the most important activities in the whole program of reforestation that we have been promised. One of the original arguments used by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) for keeping the money here in Canada was for reforestation purposes.

As I recall, the Minister for International Trade said that she thought the forests of British Columbia were some kind of a slum, and this initiative of the Government would be to invest in these important activities, silviculture, roadbuilding et cetera.

Mrs. Finestone: What is the et cetera?

Mr. Axworthy: But that question mark hovers over the whole understanding. When you have a letter written by one partner to the agreement saying the money cannot be used for these reasons, and if it is they can apply Section 301 of the U.S. trade Bill—which would be a kind of automatic trade penalty imposed by the President of the United States—one assumes there would be a lot of nervous people saying that we better not trifle with it, that we better not take the risk or have the American President zap us with some kind of effective penalty, so we will not do it.

I make the case to you, Mr. Speaker, that unless this amendment is accepted, the letter to Mr. Dennison signed by the Secretary of Commerce and the Chief Trade Representative of the President will stand as a clear signal as to how Canadian tax money must or can be used. The only way we can erase that reservation or answer that question is through this amendment. If the Parliament of Canada accepts it, then we are clearly saying that we are a sovereign body, we have the right to raise taxes and we also have the right to spend that tax money, as Canadians, as we see fit. We do not care about what the Secretary of Commerce has to say or the chief negotiator of the president, we decide for our own right.

This is particularly important because as we enter into the broader trade negotiations one of the question marks hovering over that whole negotiation is how far and in what way will the sovereignty of Canada be limited. How will Parliament deal with the various kinds of understandings, reservations and limitations put upon our ability to decide for ourselves? How will we manage the economy or decide on industrial support? Will we instead be accepting a whole series of prescriptions determined in Washington rather than in Ottawa?

I make the case as strongly as I can, that if the Government of Canada is being forthright in saying that the Baldrige letter is of no importance, then the Government should have absolutely no reason for not accepting this amendment, because it would simply clarify and make clear that the letter has no standing. It would not in any way interfere with Government policy. It would reinforce it. It would support it and it would give the mandate and stamp of approval of Parliament to statements that have been made. If, however, the Conservatives reject this amendment and vote against it, we will know that we have surrendered part of our sovereignty and that the Government is simply trying to fool Canadians.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak very much in favour of Motion No. 7. The letter just referred to by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is a crucial document, and the Government has tried to downplay what it might or might not mean. We have to provide some specific wording in Bill C-37 to give assurance to the provinces, the people of Canada and those who work in the forest industry.

The U.S. trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, signed this letter on December 30, 1986, along with the Secretary of Commerce, Malcolm Baldrige, two Cabinet level members of the Reagan administration. It is worth putting a couple of points on the record, and then I will direct myself to the specific wording.

In the third paragraph of the letter addressed to Mr. Stanley S. Dennison, Chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports in Washington, D.C., we find the following:

> —the U.S. Government will monitor closely the operation of this agreement to insure that the amounts collected through the export charge or replacement measures are not returned to or otherwise used to benefit producers or exporters of Canadian softwood lumber.

Then it goes on to the really crucial language that you find in the amendment now before us. At the bottom of page 2 we find:

> We would consider that the follow-up actions by the governmental bodies in Canada could have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures within the meaning of Paragraph 6 of the Understanding.

Then it lists rebates, remissions and so on. More crucial language comes in point number 7 right above the signatures of Mr. Yeutter and Mr. Baldrige where it says:

> —awarding contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis.

We find those same words in the amendment by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, namely, silviculture, roadbuilding, recreation and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis.

We went through this matter at some length in the committee. We could not get some of the expert witnesses that we wanted, but I attempted, as you will note in Motion No. 8, to do the same form of clarification by stating definitively that for further clarification forest management includes silviculture, conifer release, reforestation, site stabilization and general forest rehabilitation. I also state:

> The revenue derived by Canada from the charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act shall be used for the purposes of forest management in the regions from which those revenues are derived.

As Members of this House will know, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) pointed out quite accurately that the Province of British Columbia, the largest producer of softwood lumber used not only in Canada but exported to the United States has become a silvicultural slum. We are aware on the coast that we have only, according to Dr. Peter Pierce, 14 years of forest supply left. We have Bill Ewing's report in relation to Prince George and the northern Cariboo, which report said very much the same thing as Dr. Pierce, that by the year 2000 we will be out of wood. Clearly in British Columbia we need to use all of that $300 million a year to get cracking on forest rehabilitation. While the Government claims that the letter outlining the U.S. Government's interpretation of the export tax agreement has no weight, let us keep in mind that the letter was sent the same day the Memorandum of Understanding was signed. It was cranked up the same day and given to the Coalition as the U.S. Government's interpretation.

Now that we have waived our opportunities to go before a GATT panel we have put ourselves in the position that if we do not live up to the expectations of the United States the Americans can slap Section 301 on us 30 days after they back out of this agreement.

Let us look at what was said by Max Cohen, one of Canada's foremost experts on international law, once a judge on the international Court of Justice and former chairman of the International Joint Commission. In evidence given before the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on February 19 he said:

> I conclude by saying to you that in my view it would be very difficult for the legal adviser of the U.S. State Department to deny the effect of the interpretation given by Mr. Baldrige or Mr. Yeutter.

• (1620)

In International Trade of January 3, 1987, Mr. Cohen went on to state:

> It is a strange procedure to allow someone to monitor our own stuff.

The committee did try, but did not get very far, to have the Chair accept these amendments while we were still in committee some six weeks ago. Of course, at that time, the Government felt it was urgent that we finish the committee process so that this could return to the House, but that was six weeks ago.

The committee sent a letter signed by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis), the Chairman of the committee, drafted on March 25 and addressed to the Hon. Minister for International Trade. In that letter, point number five made by the Chairman with the unanimous support of the members present asked that an attempt be made during negotiations to clarify the confusion as to the application of tax revenues brought about by the so-called Dennison letter. The House now has the opportunity to do that.

We have before us the evidence of internationally renowned legal expert Max Cohen. We have before us the letter signed by Malcolm Baldrige and Clayton Yeutter. We have before us an amendment and we know what the committee sought unanimously. The committee still has not received a response from the Minister for International Trade on what kind of clarification there has been from the U.S. to the Minister for International Trade on the Baldrige-Yeutter letter to Mr. Dennison. This leaves us with only one opportunity.

I am quite certain that we on this side of the House will vote unanimously for the motion and I hope that government Members do not get nervous because this amendment is brought forward by the Opposition. I hope that they will think coolly and carefully about this. Canada's sovereignty was massively invaded by this whole process. Even if government Members do not believe that this will have an impact on sovereignty, then there will be no reason for not voting in favour of the motion. I would encourage government Members to speak in favour of this amendment and also, when they have the opportunity, to vote in favour of it.

It is very important that we send that signal from the House of Commons to Washington and to the U.S. coalition. As well, we should send a nice clear message back to British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces, the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

This House has a vital responsibility to pass an amendment like this, making it clear that the money gathered under Bill C-37 and returned to the provinces can be used for rehabilitative work, silviculture, roadbuilding or anything else the provinces are planning to do, using either their own revenues, revenues that will be returned to them from the 15 per cent export tax or revenues from any new measures that might be brought in, like a provincial export tax or an increase in stumpage fees. If nothing else, that will protect our sovereignty. If nothing else other than that, it will send a clear smoke signal to Washington, indicating that we will not be shilly-shallied about on sovereign issues like taking care of our own forests and natural resources.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in support of the amendment to Bill C-37 that has been proposed by my hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). In speaking in favour of this amendment I would like to underline what the two previous speakers have said.

The failure to approve this amendment and have it become a part of Bill C-37 will make it possible for the very long arm of Washington to reach into provincial administrations and, in fact, to dictate forest resource policy. I do not think Hon. Members opposite want to see Ontario's forest management policy dictated from Washington.

Mr. McDermid: You're dictating from Ottawa.

Mr. Penner: If my hon. friend thinks that that is acceptable, then he has not properly understood the effects of Bill C-37.

I submit as well that Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter, in making the argument they made in their letter to the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, that somehow silviculture activities, roadbuilding into places where wood is overripe and would otherwise be subject to blow-downs and be lost entirely or engaging in some sort of assistance for the recreational use of forests, is considered to have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge, have made an argument that escapes me entirely. For example, we know that there are forest-management agreements in the Province of Ontario at the present time. These agreements place upon the companies an obligation to reforest.

In accepting certain timber limits, the companies agree with the provincial administration that they will undertake certain obligations in the restoration of the cut-over area. However, it has not always been so. There was a time when the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources assumed that responsibility itself. At that time, seedling nurseries were entirely operated by the Ministry of Natural Resources. Now that particular obligation has been passed to the private sector. The private sector grows the seedlings which are then sold to the companies that are obligated to plant them.

I must tell the House that the Ontario forest management agreements are experimental in nature. It is believed that they will be more successful than entirely government-operated ventures had been in the past. However, that is a philosophical discussion and all of the facts have not yet been submitted. We do not know for a fact at this point in time if forest management agreements are a better method than operations entirely within the scope of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

The point I am making is that if at some point in time it were to be decided that forest management agreements were not as successful as some have argued they will be and the Government of Ontario or any other provincial administration wanted to assume this obligation for itself, there could be a direct challenge to the provincial authorities on the legality of this if this amendment is not passed. The very fact that that possibility exists is the reason Members of my Party and Members on the government benches must approve this amendment. Approving this amendment will leave the door entirely open for provincial administrations to make these decisions.

We know that in the past there have been agreements between the provinces and the federal Government under the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to undertake road and bridge construction in isolated areas, where the costs are enormous or in fact prohibitive, in order to access a resource that is ready to be harvested. If you cannot access that resource, if industry finds the cost prohibitive, then the province and its people have lost a resource which could otherwise be used.

What will happen to it? During a lightening storm a fire will start and will be allowed to run its course because it is in an isolated area as sometimes happens in northern Ontario, or there will be exceedingly expensive operations to put the fire out. That is why it was decided in agreements between the Government of Canada and the provincial Governments that these overripe areas should be accessed and that they have a joint responsibility to assist the industry so that the resource can be used.

Now we are saying, if we accept the arguments of Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter, that this can no longer be done. The responsibility is totally that of the industry. Spruce Falls Power and Paper, Domtar, or Abitibi-Price must bear that cost themselves and somehow recoup it in the sale of their products.

Mr. McDermid: Do they now?

Mr. Penner: It has already been proven in many cases that the industry cannot bear that cost.

Mr. McDermid: Do they now?

Mr. Penner: What choice do we have? We can let the trees stand and either suffer a blowdown from high winds, a fire, or rot. In any case it is a waste. It is stupidity. It is bad forest management policy and something no one will accept.

Why would we want to prohibit the provincial Governments from making those kinds of decisions? How can it possibly be argued that to access an overripe resource and make use of it is in some way offsetting this 15 per cent charge on the production of softwood lumber? It makes no sense at all. If it does not make sense for those reasons, then how even more remote is it to argue that a provincial Government cannot make use of its resource by spending tax dollars for recreational purposes? How would we be offsetting the 15 per cent charge by opening up a lake, for example, through the provincial Ministry of Natural Resources so that cottagers can, under a Crown lease arrangement, erect a cabin or residence for summer use? How would that be offensive?

My friend seems most anxious to speak, so he will have answers to all this.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask my hon. friend, who is waxing eloquent—

Mr. Penner: I am not waxing eloquent. I am speaking about a concern in the region I represent. Get it straight, John.

Mr. McDermid: I meant that as a compliment, so I am not sure why the Hon. Member is so uptight. I want to find out if he will accept a question at this time.

Mr. Penner: You are on your feet, so don't waste time.

Mr. McDermid: Will you accept it?

Mr. Penner: Certainly.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member is talking about his region. My question is: Do the provincial Governments build those roads now? Did they before the agreement was reached? Was that part of the Ontario provincial Government's program before this tax came in? Did they put those roads in to access forests and cottages before the agreement of December 30?

Mr. Penner: The answer is that it has been done, it is being done, and they want to continue doing it.

Mr. McDermid: Fine. They can.

Mr. Penner: The letter I am referring to from the U.S. Secretary of Commerce and the U.S. trade representative argues that this kind of activity violates the agreement between Canada and the U.S. with respect to the 15 per cent export tax. In the region of Ontario that I represent there is great concern that the freedom to make policy in these areas is being restricted by an agreement we have negotiated with the U.S.

I come back to the point I made at the very outset. Forest management policy is, to a very significant extent, being restricted and controlled by Washington. In the province from which I come, and more particularly the region I represent, we find this to be offensive.

We are not arguing that this is a partisan issue. We are arguing that this is a reasonable amendment, and I am delighted that Your Honour has accepted it although I understand that you are concerned it may be in the provincial domain. I do not think it is. We are not entering the provincial domain by this amendment. We are saying that we should not enter the provincial domain by an agreement we made with the Americans. This amendment is quite the opposite. It leaves the door open for the provinces to make important decisions concerning a resource that belongs to them and not to Ottawa. We should not be making agreements with Washington which limit provincial government policies.

I argue that Members opposite would be assisting the region I come from and acting in the best interests of the Province of Ontario if they agreed to support this very reasonable amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also very happy to join my predecessors in unreservedly supporting this amendment, which to me seems more than reasonable in the circumstances. I view the amendment as improving what was simply and squarely shameful. For discussion's sake, Mr. Speaker, let me read the amendment, which is more than reasonable in my view. It states:

> "(4) Revenue derived by Canada from the charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act and payable to the provinces according to subsection (2) may be applied by the province to the awarding of contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis."

Here, Mr. Speaker, you have an amendment which beyond the shadow of a doubt would make an interesting and reasonable improvement to something that is totally unacceptable. When the Government signed that agreement, of course the arguments used by myself and other Members on this side of the House were quite numerous, in the sense that we deplored that in a way we had been "had" financially, in a way we had given our American friends what clearly we would not have had to pay had we left things on the course that had been taken.

Here is an agreement that in effect forces producers to pay inordinate amounts. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I am concerned, although the Government in fact signed in a hurry, in a sense it has been "had" financially, this is something that can always be repaired, something that can always be remedied. But where sovereignty is involved, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of untangible, undisputable principle. It is my sincere belief that the amendment now before us results in a direct improvement to the most offensive aspect of the Bill in my view. Improvement in the sense that we would say to our American friends: Look here, this is our land, our country, we want to use that revenue, that money as we see fit. And the amendment proposes that the money be spent in specified areas to the benefit of all provinces which in fact will be collecting the tax.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back a little in time, since this is the most important aspect in my view. As I said earlier the question of money is important because the amounts at stake are considerable. But what made all opponents mad was the aspect of sovereignty, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to certain comments concerning that part of the agreement, to the effect that letting somebody else control what belongs to us in the first place is a rather bizarre process. They maintained the unilateral aspect of something which in fact we share in common, for the Americans have the right to know everything about Canadian activities, be it with respect to information or anything else. Of course, these were the comments of Mr. Maxwell Cohen.

And then the Premier of Ontario is telling us that we have let another sovereign country gain control not only over our resources and taxation policies but also, to a certain extent, over our employment and regional development policies, which is a dangerous precedent.

Somebody has suggested that the agreement can only encourage the United States to extend their protectionist measures to other sectors.

Or that natural resources constitute an absolute right which should not be abandoned to any foreign government.

The final argument is that even if Canada were to lose the case it would be well-advised to state its position immediately lest it might jeopardize our sovereignty for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, the comments and criticism I just mentioned went beyond the purely financial aspect and straight to the crux of the problem raised by this agreement, namely that Canada's sovereignty is at risk, and that from now on our American friends will be able to call the shots in this country, which is particularly dramatic in an industry that is of strategic importance to the Canadian economy, to the economy of the provinces and to local economies.

The Hon. Member's amendment is eminently reasonable and fair, and I think the Government has no choice here, if it was at all sincere and honest at the time when, in answer to the Opposition's comments about the sovereignty issue, it said: No, our sovereignty is not at stake. No, we will continue to manage this natural resource. No, the Americans will have no authority to intervene in the management of this resource. Mr. Speaker, if they were at all honest and sincere at the time, they could hardly object to the House adopting an amendment of this nature, because I think this is a perfectly reasonable proposal which would show that Canada intends to continue to be the master of its own house and to manage its own affairs like any sovereign country.

The Government is saying that they got back $500 million which would otherwise have gone to our American friends. The point as such may or may not be acceptable, but it is not unreasonable.

But with respect to the question of sovereignty the only statements to which we were entitled were fuzzy, confused and ambiguous. I think that in the next few days we will see the true nature of the Government and find out whether Members over there really intend to show that Canadians are masters in their own home and can indeed lay claim to the autonomy which any sovereign country enjoys. Mr. Speaker, should the Government fail to accept this amendment it will reveal for everyone to see that it is altogether indifferent and could not care less about such indecent interference flowing from this agreement which allows our American friends to tell us what we should do, how we should plan, and what approach we should take with respect to so basic a natural resource as softwood lumber.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, it is altogether normal, reasonable, fair and equitable that the producers expect that money, collected from the producing provinces, to be spent in this area.

From my standpoint the amendment of my colleague is more than reasonable. I wanted to echo the views of others who spoke before me and express unqualified support for what seems to me to be more than reasonable. I sincerely hope that the Government will lay its cards on the table and agree to this amendment.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): I heard the Hon. Member talking about calling the shots, and I think that is a very good point. Are we going to call the shots in this country or will they be called elsewhere, in Washington, for instance? The point is whether we are going to be masters in our own house or whether others are going to decide how we are going to run things. It is a matter of cultural and economic sovereignty.

[English]

It is strange that this question arises today. It seems to me that the cultural and economic sovereignty of Canada has been on our plate time and time again. The Government has not the courage to talk back to the Americans and say that we are who we are, that these are the things we stand for and this is what we believe in. An example is the film distribution Bill. That Bill has curried great favour and could be well received. If the Government only had the courage of its convictions, the film distribution Bill would be in the House today. This is as is usual in Canada because the Government has not said no to American pressure, and we have seen what they can do in one industry.

Before the issue of the film industry came up we had the issue of the softwood lumber industry. It is a sad day when we have to debate the extremely intelligent, well thought out and reasoned amendment of my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I urge all Members of the House to support this amendment to Bill C-37 as it makes intelligent, good sense. We want the right to stipulate how tax dollars raised on our goods will be spent.

I am going to read into the record a letter which was sent to Mr. Dennison by Mr. Clayton Yeutter and Mr. Malcolm Baldrige. According to that letter, we are talking about $500 million to $600 million. That is not peanuts. That is a lot of money. It could be used to rebuild our forests, to build roads, to expand Canada as we see fit. The provincial Governments, on whose territory this money will be raised, should be able to use this money in the manner in which they determine.

The question is whether we will show broad-mindedness or narrow-mindedness by accepting or rejecting this very sound amendment which would tell the Americans to stay home, that we know how to look after our own business. The amendment would tell the Americans that we know how to manage our own economy, not to tell us how, that we wish to determine for ourselves through our provincial Governments how we are going to handle our money, that we are not passing the buck to them and did not ask them to stick their nose into our business. That is essentially what we will be doing by saying yes to this amendment.

My colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, said that we are talking about the role of Government and the role of the Parliament of Canada. He was calling upon all of us to be parliamentarians, to forget about our partisan point of view in this instance and think about the well-being of Canada.

I see that one of my hon. friends opposite is not particularly pleased. That is unfortunate.

Let us consider the letter that was sent to Stanley Dennison, Chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, on behalf of Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige and U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter. It indicates that when the export tax is removed, future provincial stumpage increases must raise lumber prices at the border by an amount equivalent to the 15 per cent export tax.

The letter further indicates that certain actions will be considered to be in violation of the agreement, including the awarding of contracts for silviculture, road building, recreational, and other forestry activities on a non-competitive basis.

The provincial Governments have stated that they wish to use the funds from the export tax for reforestation, among other uses. If one interprets the United States position correctly, the letter seems to indicate that some of these uses may be regarded as indirect subsidies to the industry. The Government should have taken the issue to GATT originally. The Americans went to GATT on the corn issue, but the Government did not see fit to use that route with respect to softwood lumber.

Now the Americans are trying to tell us what we should do with what they perceive to be an indirect subsidy.

The Canadian Government has declared that the letter has no standing in Canada and that the document does not reflect the terms agreed upon in the memorandum of understanding. The letter states:

> Dear Mr. Dennison:
> Several questions have arisen in the course of the negotiation of the recently signed U.S./Canadian softwood lumber agreement. We record here the understanding of the U.S. Government with respect to several of the key provisions of the agreement. These understandings have been conveyed to the Government of Canada although they have not been explicitly expressed in that agreement.

First they twist our arm and tell us what they think, then they tell us how to proceed. The letter continues:

> First, as the 15 per cent export charge is a substitute for a countervailing duty, and is being imposed for the purpose of offsetting Canadian stumpage subsidies, the U.S. Government intends that collection of the charge will begin immediately upon withdrawal of the countervailing duty petition, effective on cessation of bonding. The charge may be collected by either the Government of Canada or the Government of the United States. We intend that the charge will be collected until agreed replacement measures have the equivalent economic impact on average on each unit of exports to the United States as the 15 per cent charge or that portion of it which is being replaced.
> The United States would not object to replacement measures being implemented by individual provinces and the export charge being reduced or eliminated accordingly for such provinces.
> Second, the U.S. Government will monitor closely the operation of this agreement to insure that the amounts collected through the export charge or replacement measures are not returned to or otherwise used to benefit producers or exporters of Canadian softwood lumber.

We will see later that they list 10 areas in which they will absolutely not agree to our having any say about how we should handle our undertakings.

They point out that the export charge represents at least $500 million and they want a right to have a say in what should be done. In point 10 they state that they would consider that the follow-up actions by the governmental bodies in Canada could have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures within the meaning of paragraph 6 of the understanding. They specifically point out the measures that they will find unacceptable. I do not have time to read them all, but point 7 is the awarding of contracts for silviculture, road building, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis.

The letter is signed on behalf of Clayton Yeutter, U.S. Trade Representative and Malcolm Baldrige, Secretary of Commerce.

Is this a fair and unbiased situation in which to place the industry, the Government and the House of Commons?

I urge all Members of the House to support Motion No. 7, moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, which states:

> That Bill C-37, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 10 the following:
> "(4) Revenue derived by Canada from the charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act and payable to the provinces according to subsection (2) may be applied by the province to the awarding of contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis".

That is the way to send a message to the United States,

—that we are masters in our own house.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this report stage debate on a Bill that has extreme importance to my constituency of Thunder Bay—Atikokan and all of northwestern Ontario. It is one area of the country that depends on the forest industry for much of our economic livelihood.

The Government's decision which has resulted in this Bill has a very great impact on us. We have already seen softwood lumber mills close as a direct result of the tax, and others are in jeopardy.

The amendment moved by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is very similar to the motion that was moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), but ruled out of order.

This motion basically allows the provinces to spend the revenue for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis.

Clearly, the provinces must be able to use this revenue to assist in the reforestation and ensure their longevity.

Over the years we have argued about policies of provincial Governments as well as harvesting companies and whether or not enough is being done for reforestation, recreational use of the forests and the construction of roads.

The Canada-Ontario forest agreement provides for federal funding for silviculture, for road construction, and other aspects of providing for our forests. It is very sensible to ensure that the funds being extracted from our forest industry can be recycled in that industry. I do not believe this will jeopardize the ability of the Americans to compete with us if they have a quality product and the dollar is such that there is balanced competition. However, I believe it is very important that the legislation state that the provinces have a right to spend the money in the forest industry. If not, the money will be diverted to other areas at the expense of the forest-based industry.

It is my understanding that this amendment arises from a letter from Malcolm Baldrige, U.S. Secretary of Commerce, and Clayton Yeutter, U.S. Trade Representative. Mr. Yeutter is the United States Trade Representative. In a letter to the Chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports he states, and I quote:

> We would consider that the follow-up actions by the governmental bodies in Canada could have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures within the meaning of paragraph 6 of the Understanding.

He lists some of them, including awarding contracts for silviculture, road building, recreational and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis. Those are very interesting words. What he is trying to say is that the United States does not want us to be able to do that, and that the lobby for the lumber industry in the United States is in effect telling its Government to dictate to our Government and, therefore, to the people of Canada, how we should manage our forests and how we should spend the money which we are duly collecting supposedly on behalf of the people of Canada.

I think that is an insult to the integrity of the Government and the people of Canada. I would hope that all Hon. Members will agree to accept this amendment so we can give that right— it does not say the provinces must do it but that they may do it—to spend the money on matters directly related to the forest industry.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this is an important amendment before us, as the entire Bill is important and the whole issue is important, because it really sets a tone for the relationship between the Government of Canada and the United States, which has been essentially designed to appease in every way any relationship where Canada might be standing up as a sovereign nation. The entire legislation and the approach of the Minister and the Government has been that way since last June when this issue first got under way.

The amendment before us at report stage was moved by the Hon. member for Winnipeg Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It is an amendment to Clause 14 of the Bill. It provides that:

> Revenue derived by Canada from the charge imposed on softwood lumber products under this Act and payable to the provinces according to subsection (2) may be applied by the province to the awarding of contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational, and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis.

I think that is an amendment which should be passed just to show that the provinces will not be intimidated by the actions of the United States. If the Government does not accept this amendment we will know that it is really scared and totally intimidated by the letter which was sent by Mr. Yeutter. The letter is dated December 30, 1986. I do not believe he spent New Year's Eve preparing it. He outlines in very clear terms that the United States will move against Canada under Section 301 as provided for in the agreement if Canada moves to support the provinces with the export charge with regard to roadbuilding and those other activities.

The letter states very clearly under item 10, and I quote:

> We would consider that the follow-up actions by the governmental bodies in Canada could have the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures within the meaning of paragraph 6 of the Understanding.

It then cites item 7, awarding contracts for silviculture, roadbuilding, recreational and other foresting activities on a non-competitive basis. It is that letter, signed by both the U.S. Secretary of Commerce and the U.S. Trade Representative, sent to Stanley Dennison, Chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, we are trying to overcome. We want to ensure that Canada says to these two representatives of the United States that regardless of how acquiescent the Government is, regardless of the fact that the United States snaps its fingers and we have higher drug prices in this country, and regardless of whatever other actions have been taken in the past year, this legislation will not bypass the laws of Canada and tell the provincial Governments what they can or cannot do.

I thought Premier Peterson of Ontario put it very succinctly in an article reported in The Globe and Mail, on January 6, 1987 that "they—the U.S. Government—will have the thumbscrews on us at all times and if we do not behave they will put the blocks to us. I do not like a deal like that". In an article in the Ottawa Citizen on January 6 he stated:

We've turned not only our resource and taxation policies but in a sense our regional development and employment policies over to another sovereign country. It is a dangerous precedent.

I think that is what Hon. Members from Northern Ontario are extremely concerned about. We have seen a pro-active Government during the last two years in Ontario. It has tried every possible device to develop roads, and our tourism potential because we have not shared in the tremendous growth of economic activity of southern Ontario, for instance.

Since January 1, in my constituency alone, every month $1 million dollars from one company alone goes to the federal Government. It does not get anything for it. It just gets the incompetence of the Government in negotiating this arrangement. If the Government had fought it all the way in the United States trade tribunals, if the Government had fought it in the GATT, this company would not have to send a cheque every month to the Government of Canada.

What this motion seeks to do is to say no to Mr. Yeutter and Mr. Baldrige. It is saying: "We are the sovereign nation. If this export tax is passed on to the provinces, it can be used for roadbuilding, recreational development and for all those other uses". Obviously, the Government of Canada is extremely concerned that the agreement is binding, and it intends to knuckle under to the threats and intimidation of the U.S. Secretary of Commerce and the U.S. Trade Representative.

I would like to read a paragraph of a legal opinion concerning the Dennison letter, and I quote:

The Dennison letter is a contemporaneous expression of the understanding of one of the parties to the Agreement. Therefore, to the extent the language of the Agreement itself fails to resolve any disagreement between the parties, the letter may be used to construe the Agreement. If the U.S. industry were to file a Section 301 case it almost certainly would submit the Dennison letter as evidence of the meaning of the Agreement, and the Administration would be hard pressed, both legally and politically, to disavow its own interpretation as expressed in the letter. Even before a more objective body, such as a GATT panel, the letter would be strong evidence of the meaning of the Agreement.

Thus, to the extent the Canadian Government's interpretation of the Agreement differs from the interpretation expressed by the U.S. government, it should seriously consider stating publicly the Canadian position, perhaps in a letter to the Department of commerce and the United States Trade Representative.

The Government has not taken that action. The House of Commons can take such action. I believe that as a sovereign nation we are obligated to take this action by adopting the amendment to the Bill and by placing it right in the legislation. In this way it will be clear to the Americans, to the Provinces of Ontario, B.C., Alberta and Quebec, that they will not be bound by that United States letter. In this way we will know, and everyone will know, that we are masters in our own house and that we will not be intimidated by that letter from United States cabinet Ministers. It is essential that the Parliamentary Secretary accept the amendment.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I have been sitting listening to the debate this afternoon on this particular amendment brought forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would first like to make a couple of points, if I might, just to cover the sovereignty issue.

I think a country loses its sovereignty when laws of another country are brought forward to force a country to do certain things within one's country. Had the countervailing duty proceeded it would have allowed the American Government to come into Canada to check the books of the Government. It would have been able to check the books of individual exporters. To my way of thinking that would have damaged the sovereignty of Canada.

When two sovereign nations such as the United States and Canada sit down to negotiate an agreement that is not losing sovereignty, that is putting into practice sovereign rights. That is exactly what the Government did. It negotiated an agreement with the United States which allowed Canada to place an export tax on lumber and to keep the money in Canada, money which will go to the provinces.

In our federation the provinces own the resources, that is, the lumber. In co-operation with the provinces, and with the consent of the provinces with the exception of one, we proceeded in this manner. We have agreed with the provinces that the money from the federal Government will go to them, with the exception of a small administration charge.

There was a great deal of talk about who can spend the money and what can be done and so on. I enjoy members of the Opposition quoting Clayton Yeutter and Malcolm Baldrige's letter to Dennison which has nothing to do with the memorandum of understanding whatsoever. It has no legal status whatsoever. It may be their interpretation of what they think the memorandum of understanding states. But we have also made our interpretation of what is stated, and I have not heard any disagreement from the United States with respect to our interpretations.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, come on.

Mr. McDermid: I sat and listened very patiently all afternoon to my hon. friends opposite. I have been restraining myself all afternoon. I thought I was pretty good. I have behaved myself very well. I did not interrupt Hon. Members but sat and listened attentively to them. I find it interesting that they concentrate more on the American letter than on what the Minister has said and on what our Government's interpretation of the agreement is.

I can tell Hon. Members this. If the provincial Governments planted trees before and did silviculture before, then they can do it with this money. If they built roads with it before, then they can build roads again with this money. They can use it for employee adjustment. They can do these things with this money as long as it does not form a grant back to the industry, a direct grant, or something that could be considered to circumvent the memorandum of understanding. We said that. We said it in committee. Hon. Members who were there and who are in the House today know full well that that was said in committee.

I find it rather amusing that the amendment was drafted by Malcolm Baldrige and Clayton Yeutter and not by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. The amendment is word for word out of their letter. It is not original on the part of the Hon. Member. I do not want him to take credit for it.

Mr. Penner: Come on, John, you can do better than that.

Mr. McDermid: I find it interesting that Malcolm Baldrige and Clayton Yeutter drafted this particular amendment. It has been lifted from the last few lines of their letter.

Mr. Penner: What has that to do with anything?

Mr. McDermid: We cannot accept this amendment. It would be inconsistent with our understanding with the provinces for federal legislation to state how the provinces may spend revenues arising from the export charge.

Mr. Penner: It is just the opposite, and you know better than that, John.

Mr. McDermid: My friend opposite can sit and argue all he wants. He can holler and yell and rant and rave. It is inconsistent with the agreement we have with the provinces in this regard. There is no stipulation in the Bill, no conditions whatsoever, with respect to what use the provinces may put the revenues generated from the export charge. It is not in the Bill. We are not going to limit them. We are not going to give them permission or anything else. They know how they can spend the moneys. It is their money because it is their resources about which we are talking.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) have already stated very clearly many times that they hope the provinces will use this money for reforestation and silviculture. They have stated that many times.

All I can say is that the amendment would be inconsistent with the agreement that we have with the provinces. Therefore, on behalf of the Government, I say that we cannot accept the amendment. We will be voting against it.

Mr. Penner: May I ask a question of the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for my hon. friend. He mentioned in his remarks to the House something about the possibility of the countervailing duty having proceeded. Of course there is no proof that that in fact would have ever happened. Spokesmen in the industry argue that they could have won that countervail action. They argue that they could have been successful, as they were in the past.

My friend also suggests that to negotiate is a sovereign act. I agree with that. But will he not accept the fact that it is possible in those negotiations to bargain away a portion of one's sovereignty?

My real question is this. The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry puts no obligations on the provinces at all. It says that they may be applied. The letter from which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry gets this concern states that this is an interpretation of the Government. The Parliamentary Secretary says: "We have a different interpretation". I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary this. How do we know which interpretation will prevail? Does he not agree that it would make good sense to put this amendment in, so that we have greater certainty? Would the Hon. Member not agree with that?

• (1720)

Mr. McDermid: In the first place, I do not think it offers greater certainty—

Mr. Penner: That is exactly what it does.

Mr. McDermid: To answer the first question, when two sovereign countries negotiate an agreement, sign an agreement, each gives up a little something. There is no question about that.

Mr. Penner: What did the Americans give up?

Mr. McDermid: What have they given up?—$600 million, or $500 million, or however much they would have received by way of a countervail duty.

Mr. Penner: Oh, come on!

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member makes the assertion that we would have won the case. The best advice we could receive, advice which came from the same people who were involved in the 1983 case, was that we were not going to win. That was the advice we got, and that was from the same people who worked on the 1983 case. They told us we were not going to win it, and we were not going to win it because of the change in attitude in the United States.

Everyone knows that the protectionist mood in the United States has grown rather dramatically over the last number of years, and particularly so since the 1983 case.

At the time of the 1983 case, there was a different mood in the U.S., a different Government, a different mind-set entirely.

The Hon. Member is a great crystal ball gazer. It was a judgment call by the provinces and by this Government. In fact, if one takes the time to go back and check, one will find that the lumber producers themselves suggested a negotiated agreement. That is well documented.

The sovereignty issue Hon. Members opposite keep raising is, to my mind, a smoke and mirrors type of argument.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 7 standing in the name of Mr. Axworthy.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is Motion No. 9, standing in the name of Mr. Fulton.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That Bill C-37, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 4 and 5 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"Act;

(c) conditionally or unconditionally exempt any softwood lumber products from corporations that can demonstrate that they meet the requirements met by those corporations presently exempt from the charges of this Act;

(d) conditionally or unconditionally exempt any softwood lumber products from corporations that can demonstrate that their raw log supply comes from regions not named in the 1986 U.S. Countervailing Duty action.

For greater certainty this includes those areas outside of B.C., Alberta, Ontario and Quebec; and

(e) conditionally or unconditionally exempt those softwood products such as remanufactured products which were not named in the 1986 U.S. Countervailing Duty Action."

He said: I am pleased to speak to Motion No. 9. The proposed paragraph (c) is as follows:

(c) conditionally or unconditionally exempt any softwood lumber products from corporations that can demonstrate that they meet the requirements met by those corporations presently exempt from the charges of this Act;—

As many Members of this House will know, there are some two dozen corporations that have been exempted. Those corporations are not set out by way of appendix or annex to the Bill, notwithstanding the suggestion in the committee that that be done. They are, however, to be found in the memorandum of understanding.

During committee consideration of the Bill, we heard time and time again from witnesses from across the country the fact that over the course of last summer some companies happened to hear about the procedures to be undertaken to obtain an exemption, and in fact did so, but that others simply were not aware of it.

It has never been entirely clarified as to who was responsible for getting this information out. I am not laying blame on anyone's doorstep. However, as a consequence, many firms simply were unaware of the steps to be taken to obtain an exemption.

By the time the preliminary determination came down on October 16, 1986, it was too late for them, and certainly by December 30, 1986, at which point the negotiations were over and the memorandum of understanding signed, many companies had not taken the necessary steps to be exempted from the 15 per cent export tax.

What has happened is that in some parts of the Atlantic Provinces, a very substantial percentage of the companies are on the exempt list. In some regions, notably in the Province of New Brunswick, over 90 per cent of the forest lands held by corporations are exempt, with the percentage in other parts of the country being much lower.

As a consequence, we have something that we do not find across the landscape of Canada in any other sector that I am aware of, that being that there can be two forest products companies operating on opposite sides of the street, both harvesting the same species, paying the same wages, and selling product into the same markets, one of which is exempt from the 15 per cent export tax and the other not.

What we discovered happened was that during the negotiations it was decided that the short list of those corporations which had gone through the earlier process to obtain exemption were those who were subsequently included on the exempt list.

Subsequent to December 30, 1986, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) commented how great it was that he had been able to do such good work for the Maritime region in obtaining these exemptions—and that is something that irritated me. He is a Member from that region and as such he has every right to get out and provide information to corporations, small or large, as to how they should go about getting exempt status. During committee consideration, it became abundantly clear to us that this kind of unfairness of treatment could not go on.

If a company is exempt, whether that company is based in British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, Quebec, or the Maritime region, it has an unfair advantage over the non-exempt company when it comes to shipping product into the U.S. market. Given two companies in exactly the same circumstance—the same wage rate structure, cost structure, taxation structure—one exempt and one not exempt, we are faced with an unfair situation.

If we as a Parliament cannot find a way to remedy that unfairness, a number of things will ensue. The banks are obviously going to be more inclined to advance funds to the company with the exemption, with the result that over time that company will buy up the forest lands of the non-exempt company, ultimately ending up with the market and operations of that company.

We heard evidence from companies right across the country, and there were very few if any that could say they were making a 15 per cent profit. Most said they were barely keeping their heads above water, and that what little profit they were making would be eroded by the 15 per cent export tax.

Those who are exempt from this export tax are in a position to take over the operations of those who are not. Those companies without the exemption are going to have to cut corners, perhaps leading to lower safety standards, lower production levels, and the seeking of other markets.

Strictly from the point of view of fairness, this situation needs to be remedied. Canada has always at least attempted to have its tax laws operate fairly.

It has never, of course, been a level playing field, as Sam Gibbons and others like to call it, but at least there has been an attempt to have tax measures apply reasonably fairly cross the landscape.

I am not proposing a mandatory provision that all forestry companies are immediately exempted; what I am proposing, through this amendment, is that the Minister, as is provided in Clause 15, be given the opportunity to grant exemption. It would provide the opportunity for corporations to demonstrate that they meet the requirements to be conditionally or unconditionally exempt in respect of the charges under this legislation.

This is crucially important, and particularly so for the Maritime region, where we do have the situation where it is only the large corporations that are exempt. In many cases, the smaller operations, operations that have been owned in many cases by the same family for many generations, find themselves in the situation where they either did not apply at all or just missed gaining exempt status. I think it important that the Government accept this amendment.

The next paragraph (d) reads:

> Conditionally or unconditionally exempt any softwood lumber products from corporations that can demonstrate that their raw log supply comes from regions not named in the 1986 U.S. Countervailing Duty action.

I have very broad support for this amendment from right across the country because, as I point out:

> For greater certainty this includes those areas outside of B.C., Alberta, Ontario and Quebec.

This would provide an exemption to those companies operating in Saskatchewan that were not named in the U.S. CVD action which provides exemptions for all of Maritime Canada, and should products from Yukon or NWT start to come on the market, it gives them an exemption. The United States and the U.S. coalition in the CVD action went after the four provinces which they felt were subsidizing logging and trees, namely B.C., Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, so this would provide the opportunity for the Minister conditionally or unconditionally to exempt the products.

It also does another thing which I raised earlier today, namely, the matter of wood coming from south of the border. These are trees grown in the United States. The Americans never named the United States in their own CVD action. Wood comes into western Canada, and particularly into the Province of Quebec, to the 13 border mills. They get almost all of their wood from the United States, and clearly that wood was never named in the U.S. CVD action. That wood was never named during the negotiations in Washington leading up to that fateful agreement of December 30. It seems highly odd to me that in committee we did not find some fertile ground on the government side to provide the kind of opportunity for conditional or unconditional exemptions that I am suggesting here for wood produced in those regions.

I would like to hear from government Members who participated in this process. I find it interesting that on the last day of our committee, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Carney) happened to be in New Zealand, just as on December 30 we happened to find her in Hawaii, and we found that the Conservative Members who had participated earlier in the committee process had suddenly vanished. Once again, today, we find that those government Members, particularly from the west but also from Ontario and other parts of the country who had participated in the hearings are not here in this debate. This disturbs me profoundly and should profoundly disturb those million workers right across the country who are involved in Canada's largest industry, the forestry sector, which is the largest source of revenue in our balance of trade. Why is it that the Government urged us to hurry through the committee stage in hearing all of the witnesses and made us finish on March 24 to hurry the Bill into the House? Yet here we are another six weeks later dealing with it supposedly because the U.S. is considering a Section 301 action. We still have not heard from the Minister for International Trade on our unanimous requests from the committee.

Part of my amendment is contained in the request that went to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) on March 25. Supposedly negotiations were going on in Washington and supposedly we were going to get some added exemptions in terms of corporate exemptions, regional exemptions and exemptions of remanufactured products. But there has been no action, Mr. Speaker. It somehow demonstrates the inactivity on the government side on this issue.

We know about the 10 per cent one time only offer. We know about the bungling and the incompetence. It is sad that those government Members who did participate in the committee process have found it impossible once again to participate in public debate, to tell the public where they really stand and whether or not they support those corporations which are duly deserving of the exemption. Where do these Members stand? I hoped they would support that. They always claim so privately. I hope to hear that support on the record today. What about the U.S. logs that are being milled in our mills and re-exported to the United States? Why are they not being provided with the pathway and the opportunity to obtain the exemption?

Paragraph (e) reads:

> Conditionally or unconditionally exempt those softwood products such as remanufactured products which were not named in the 1986 U.S. Countervailing Duty action.

We listed those in our unanimous letter to the Minister for International Trade. They are the following:

> Specialty Remanufactured Cut Stock (including precut pallet stock; precut spring mattress frame components; crating stock; box stock; cleat stock and blanks; turning squares), Furring Strips/Roofing Strips, Remanufactured Studs, Softwood Lumber Pressure Treated with Preservative or Fire Retardant Chemicals With Respect to the Value Added by the Pressure Treatment, Tongue and Groove Roof and Floor Decking, Remanufactured Cedar and Pine Boards, Industrial Clears and Shop (Remanufactured)(Shop and Better) Edge-Glued Panels, Select Fascia, Custom Kiln Dried/Custom Planed Lumber, Finger-Jointed Lumber, Car Lining and Decking, Machine Stress Rated (MSR) Lumber, Bridging, Vegetable Stakes, Spruce Patterns.

In paragraph (e) I am suggesting those products which we have now finally added.

For the reason they were not in the memorandum of understanding and are not to be found in the schedules of exemptions in Bill C-37 we can only go back to the evidence given to us. Some of the witnesses made it very clear that they were never given an opportunity to provide a complete list that could have been added. We have learned that it is hundreds of millions of dollars, close to a billion dollars in product that has been thrown into the hopper for an added 15 per cent export tax, simply because the Government did not have a proper negotiating process at that time leading up to that fateful day of December 30.

This amendment, Motion No. 9, speaks for itself. It provides for anomalies that never should have been included in the memorandum of understanding. They were never sought by the U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports. They were never sought by Mr. Baldrige, Mr. Yeutter or Ronald Reagan. They were thrown into the hopper. What this amendment does is to provide a pathway within Clause 15 for the Minister to take that opportunity conditionally or unconditionally to exempt those products that I have identified.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House of the words of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). When she arrived back from the shores of Hawaii she said, "This is a good deal for Canada". You will find it very hard to convince people in the Maritime regions, the very large number of firms across Canada in remanufacturing that this is a good deal for Canada, Mr. Speaker. They are now in danger of losing their jobs, their businesses and their livelihood. One can hardly call it a good deal. The Government negotiates an agreement which puts a penalty on its own citizens.

Let me quote from the submission made to the Senate Finance Committee on behalf of the British Columbia Secondary Softwood Lumber Manufacturers. It reads:

> Unfortunately, the B.C. secondary softwood lumber industry is finding that the agreement is seriously flawed from a technical standpoint. Due to the Government's insistence upon proceeding alone with the negotiations, Canadian officials did not enjoy the same benefits of industry expertise as did their U.S. counterparts. As a result, the Understanding is damaging the future viability of our industry.

Let me quote another submission, this one from the Coalition Against Unfair Labour Taxes, basically the organization representing the Maritimes softwood lumber people. It says that a survey of 79 members of the Maritime Lumber Bureau indicates that 57 per cent of those employed by non-exempt firms will be laid off within one year of the imposition of the tax. This amounts to 4,167 of a total of 11,000 direct industry employees.

It is hardly a fair description to say that this was a good deal for Canada when in fact those very industries directly affected, in their words, have pointed out how seriously flawed this may be.

This amendment which we support and endorse proposes a way of correcting that particular exclusion by providing within the Bill the clear power to add substantially for exclusions those in the Maritimes region in particular and, for the remanufacturing people, those products which are not presently excluded.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary say that we did not lose our sovereignty. It is interesting to see the process we are now going through. The United States Government and the United States lumber industry is saying that they will not negotiate changes in the agreement until we pass the Bill. Even the Minister for International Trade has almost come to her senses and said that she thinks the Americans are violating the spirit of this agreement. On the other hand, we are faced with the comments of the famous Mr. Dennison who says that they will not negotiate anything until the legislation is passed. Then, according to the Vancouver Sun of April 9, 1987, he said that nothing will be done until the legislation is passed. He said that there are changes the coalition wants too and that there are companies completely excluded from the tax that do not deserve to be excluded. He said that some of them are just wholesalers and he thinks they will want to take them off the list.

The Government is in fact asking us to give it a blank cheque removing the leverage provided by this legislation so that the Minister for International Trade, who at this point might be on the shores of the Fiji Islands will have her negotiators begin negotiating with the Americans so we will have to give up more than we gave up originally. We know the kind of negotiation of which the Minister is capable, and that is simply to surrender.

Now we are faced with what can only be called a form of international blackmail. We are told to pass the Bill so that the American industry can be totally satisfied that it gets everything it wants. It is prepared to negotiate after that, but it has taken a new bargaining position which is that it wants to eliminate companies that have already been granted exclusions. We are in a classic Catch-22 situation.

The Parliamentary Secretary wants a further explanation. Perhaps he is busily involved in matters of great substance, so let me repeat for him that Mr. Dennison, the chief lobbyist for the U.S. lumber industry, has said they will not do anything until the legislation is passed, and then he went on to say that they want changes in the legislation and the memorandum of agreement because there are Canadian companies completely excluded from the tax that do not deserve to be excluded and they want them off the list. That sets off warning bells suggesting that the next stage of negotiations will be one further stage of retreat.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Apparently I struck a funny-bone in the arm of the Parliamentary Secretary. How else would he explain that when the original negotiations took place, certain companies gained exclusion and others did not? According to the brief presented by the Maritime Lumber Bureau, 57 per cent of them are facing a loss of close to 4,100 jobs because the Government did not do an effective job when the original negotiations took place. That is hardly a laughing matter. It is hardly something that would cause great hilarity.

We are now being faced with the obvious conclusion that one of the results of this negotiation will be that Canadians will lose jobs. Members of the industry have detailed exactly how that will happen. In the remanufacturing industry, 300 or 400 lay-offs are taking place in British Columbia already. A number of firms have already indicated that they will move their operations to the other side of the border. They say they are doing that because when the Government negotiated this, it held no consultations with the industry and somehow forgot to put them on the list.

Let me remind Hon. Members of the incredible mistake that was made during negotiations to compound the injury. When the original countervailing duty was imposed, U.S. authorities made it clear that the value-added portion of any remanufactured product would not be included in the assessment of duty. The Minister for International Trade was such a great negotiator that she managed to include Canadian secondary lumber manufacturers in the deal, and the tax is now imposed on them. That $500 million industry was put in jeopardy because of the skill of that negotiation. That has to go down as one of the most brilliant negotiations in the annals of Canadian commercial relations.

This amendment seeks what we have sought throughout, and that is, to say that it is proper for the Parliament of Canada to assert its own right to protect its own citizens. If we are as sovereign as the Parliamentary Secretary has said we are, then surely this Parliament has a right to say that Canadian businesses and citizens will be hurt by this agreement. Therefore, we have a right to make an amendment that will protect those businesses and citizens against the mistakes that were made in the original negotiations.

I would only say to Hon. Members opposite that it is beyond belief that they could vote against such an amendment when that is its clear purpose and intent. Perhaps they are basically saying once again that that memorandum of agreement so circumscribes the powers of Parliament that we do not have the right to defend our citizens and to offer them the kind of protection they need against the stupid actions of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 114, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

I have been asked by the government Whip to defer the vote. Is that the position of the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I understood that consultations had taken place and that we would proceed to third reading immediately. I would imagine that if we do proceed to third reading, we would naturally vote on the motions before we did so.

• (1750)

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not know that we would finish this quickly and I had a phone call. I was going to speak to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: It is too late.

Mr. Fennell: Will this be on division or do you request a vote?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, you know how co-operative we want to be in helping the Government manage the affairs of this House. We are certainly prepared to have these two amendments go on division. We are prepared as well to consent to move on to third reading. However, I want to say to the Parliamentary Secretaries collectively that we do not think it would be possible to complete third reading today.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate to do it on division. You have just been advised there is another problem as well, and doing it on division for that reason as well may be the most appropriate way to go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather there is consent to have Motion No. 7 and Motion No. 9 negatived on division. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Axworthy) negatived.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (for the Minister for International Trade) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Crosbie (for the Minister for International Trade) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my friends in the Liberal Party and the NDP for their co-operation so we could move into third reading. I appreciate that very much.

The Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act, Bill C-37, now before the House for third reading, comes at the end of a long, complex and very important trade action in which the Government had to make a very difficult choice among the alternatives open to it. I would like to review briefly the background to our agreement with the U.S., and then comment on the initiatives the Government has taken since the end of December.

As you know, we argued strongly against the acceptance of the U.S. countervailing duty petition when it was filed some 10 months ago. Despite our strong representations, we were not successful. It was not because of a lack of effort. Our representations were very strong and I know Members on the other side of the House in meetings with their U.S. counterparts also made strong representations on behalf of the Canadian lumber industry.

Last October 16, the U.S. Department of Commerce reversed its 1983 decision and determined that stumpage was in fact a subsidy subject to countervailing duty and imposed a preliminary duty of 15 per cent. In a formal note the Government of Canada characterized this finding as: "Flawed in law, inconsistent with established U.S. practice and, in several important respects, based on erroneous assumptions". Nevertheless we had to face the fact that the ruling had gone against us. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and I had a discussion today as to what would have happened if. All I can say is that if he knows what would have happened if, he is far better than I am. Perhaps he is anyway, but if he can see into the future and what might have happened if, he is certainly wasting his time in doing what he is doing today.

By early November it was becoming increasingly apparent that the final ruling would almost certainly go against us as well. I explained that when we discussed one of the amendments a little earlier. The best advice we received from those involved intimately with the 1983 decision was that we were not going to win. We were going to end up with a countervailing duty, and it seemed prudent to try to resolve the issue before that decision could be handed down.

The subsequent negotiations, which were the subject of a lot of debate this afternoon, were not easy. Initially, the petitioners held out for much more stringent terms than we were prepared to accept. They were talking about 30 per cent or 32 per cent as the starting point along with a number of other demands. However, these demands were successfully resisted. I have to give credit to the negotiating team. They did an excellent job under some very tough circumstances.

In its fundamentals the eventual agreement was in line with the terms proposed by Canada and met all of Canada's declared objectives. It was signed without prejudice to our position that stumpage programs and practices are not subsidies subject to countervailing duty. It avoided the establishment of a potentially dangerous legal precedent. It ensured that any additional revenues would be retained in Canada. It maintained provincial sovereignty over the management of their natural resources. The only matter which was to be the subject of further consultation and agreement between the Canadian and U.S. Governments was the calculation of the value of any replacement measures in relation to the export charge.

The memorandum of understanding embodies the agreement reached between Canada and the U.S., implementation of which requires authority to collect the export charge. That authority is contained in Bill C-37 which reflects the elements of the memorandum of understanding.

Committees of both the House and the other place have completed several weeks of hearings on Bill C-37. I believe we worked on it for about six weeks in committee. We heard from a broad and impressive group of witnesses. Certain aspects of the agreement on which the Bill is based came under close scrutiny in both committees. I believe the committees' major concerns are being addressed through initiatives we have taken in discussions with the U.S.

Many of the other issues of concern will undoubtedly become less significant as the export charge is replaced by provincial measures as allowed by the legislation and the memorandum of understanding.

The Canadian Council of Forest Ministers has taken a lead in developing a national package of replacement measures. The provinces are co-operating on replacement measures, and the Minister's report progress is being made in this direction. I appreciate and fully support the efforts of the council and look forward to the Minister's next report which should be in June.

It is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will finish my remarks when the Bill is brought back to the House. I know the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) wants to participate as do my friends on the other side of the House. Again I want to thank them very much for their co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the honour to present its first report. In accordance with its mandate under Standing Order 96(2), your committee has examined the question of food irradiation and the labelling of irradiated foods.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests that the Government table a comprehensive response to the report within 120 days.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Issues 2 to 12 of the Second Session, Thirty-third Parliament which includes this report, is tabled.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions. They are both identical and both have been approved as to form. They are signed by approximately 60 Canadian citizens who ask for the appointment of an independent arbitrator to consider the question of damages with respect to Fred Turner of Yellowknife.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, since Bill C-22 has not yet passed through the entire Parliament, I would like to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians, pursuant to Standing Order 106, who feel that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will severely increase drug prices for the Canadian consumer and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. They are calling upon Parliament to reject these proposals that are included in Bill C-22.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-255, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (Privileges and Immunities).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is civil rights legislation. Its purpose is to enhance the civil rights of the individual by circumscribing the freedom of speech of Members of Parliament in cases where irrelevant reflections are made on the character or conduct of private citizens during a proceeding in Parliament. In such cases Members of Parliament would be subject to the ordinary laws of libel and slander.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DESIGNATION OF SOUTH MORESBY AREA AS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That this House calls upon the Government of British Columbia to co-operate in setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a National Park Reserve; and

Further, that the federal government provide for compensation to those interests affected by such a National Park Reserve; and

Further, that the House confirms its intention to ensure the continued participation of the Haida people in matters affecting South Moresby.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to bring this motion forward today. I know many British Columbians and many other Canadians are going to be deeply interested in this day-long debate. From the consultations I have had with the Parties in this House it would appear that the Parliament of Canada is unanimous with relation to this motion. It being a day-long debate, if there are any Members of Parliament who have concerns about the proposed national park reserve in South Moresby, which would include negotiations with the Council of the Haida Nation concerning their rights, I hope they raise them today. In that way the B.C. Government will get as clear an understanding as is possible of the unanimity of parliamentarians concerning setting aside the South Moresby area, the Tangil Peninsula, Kunga, Tanu, Richardson and Anthony islands, in fact the 138 small islands included in the area proposed for this National Park Reserve.

I know of the enormous work that you have done, Mr. Speaker. I know of the work done by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), members of the Official Opposition including the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the work done by my colleague, the Hon Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), as well as many other Members of this House. They have worked long and hard to finally reach this point in Canadian history where the Parliament of Canada is speaking with one voice to the Government of British Columbia in asking it to act.

I was particularly pleased to hear yesterday from the Government about the unanimity that now exists on that side. In response to a question I put to the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Environment said:

> For our part, the entire Cabinet, in fact the entire caucus, including the B.C. caucus, supports the establishment of a national park in what is arguably the most important wilderness treasure in the entire Dominion of Canada.

I thank the Minister. I know it has been his long and difficult task to convince some Members on his side who had concerns that perhaps in setting this area aside huge numbers of jobs would be lost. A lot of artificial arguments were ballooned in British Columbia by Western Forest Products, Frank Beban Logging Ltd., and those associated with them in their clear desire to continue logging. A great deal of misinformation and, unfortunately, false information was put out to the public. A lot of well-known journalists like Jack Webster travelled down that path in British Columbia, unfortunately, claiming that setting this area aside would cause hundreds if not thousands to lose their jobs. They said it would mean the end of the forest industry in British Columbia.

This motion before us today allows us to speak with one voice. I know it is improper but I must say, Mr. Speaker, that you have been at the forefront of the fight even while you have been in the Chair. You have assisted Members of this House in having their voices heard on behalf of the Haida people and the setting aside of this area for all future generations.

A little bit of history is crucially important in understanding what the Haida people have been saying. I know that Miles Richardson and Guvjaw and many others are watching the debate this morning. They are encouraged by this motion and hope to hear from all Parties about their complete involvement in the evolution of negotiations and settlement of exactly what the meaning of the national park reserve will be and how the rights of the Haida people will be included.

It is important to understand that close to 10,000 Haidas lived in the South Moresby region until 1884. Between 1884 and 1890 that population of an enormous and famed group of people declined to less than 500 as a result of the ravages of smallpox and measles. I do not think there is another civilization around the world that went through such an enormous rate of decline from disease as did the Haida people. As you know, they travelled in huge numbers, sometimes by the thousands, by canoe from the Queen Charlotte Islands, Haida Gwaii, down to Victoria to trade in the wintertime and then went back up the coast. They were famed for their travel and art, and still are. They travelled as far south as California and Mexico in trading on the West Coast of North America.

The area of Anthony Island has already been designated as a UN world heritage site. I know many Members of this House have been to Anthony Island and seen the rare and deeply moving beauty as you come into the pebbled bay and see the totem poles and longhouses standing in that area. I am sure Members are aware that in that immediate vicinity there are 10 species of whales, killer whales and others. It contains the largest rookery of Steller's sea-lions on the West Coast of North America. It has a large seal population and 250,000 breeding pairs of sea-birds. There are rare peregrine falcons, large populations of bald eagles and the world's largest black bear population. The area has all kinds of endemic species of plants not found anywhere else in this part of North America because that area, for a variety of reasons, was not covered by ice during the last ice age. It is a truly important area to the Haida people, to all Canadians, and to all people of the world to have preserved in as pristine a state as possible.

When Juan Perez sailed into that area in 1774 there were huge communities at Burnaby Island, Burnaby Narrows, Skedans and on Lyell Island. There were communities of thousands of people which were very large by any standard on the West Coast of North America for many centuries.

Members should not forget what this House did in 1981 and 1982 by including Section 5 in the Constitution Act. We recognized and affirmed aboriginal rights and title. It is certainly my view and I think that of all Hon. Members of my Party and of this House that that is a full box. Today we are demonstrating our intention to recognize that and affirm the real aboriginal rights of the Haida people in the area south of the Tangil Peninsula and those islands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: From 1935 until the end of the Second World War there was logging in the South Moresby area. The Sitka spruce was harvested particularly during the war for the production of Mosquito bombers and other small aircraft because of its incredible strength and its versatility for use in aircraft. However, only about 400 hectares were harvested in the entire South Moresby region. Some of the trees in that area are of incredible antiquity. There are spruce and cedar trees in that area in excess of 1,000 years of age. I have a piece of a cyprus hanging on the wall of my office which is dated back over the last thousand years. It is truly remarkable.

The Windy Bay area, which I know you and others have been to and have worked to protect during your political life, is a remarkable area. I was speaking to a British scientist who was on the Queen Charlottes during the past year. He informed me that from his studies of tropical forests around the world and the width of trees and the biology and botany of Windy Bay he estimates that it has the highest amount of biomass per cubic metre to be found anywhere on the face of the planet earth. It is remarkable to think that that area has the largest amount of living biology of any place on the planet. That is why the area is so productive for fishing, shell fish, gow, herring, sea-lions, seals, whales, killer whales, falcons, eagles, gulls, geese, ducks, sandhill cranes, rhinocerous auklets and many, many others.

The battle to protect the South Moresby area has been going on for decades. The Haida people have never moved away from that area even following the enormous decline of their population as a result of disease introduced by European populations. They have continued throughout the generations to go back into that area as a spiritual place of very deep attachment for them.

Over 3.5 million people represented by various groups have petitioned the Government of Canada in one way or other asking that the area be set aside as a national park reserve. The battle has gone on. From too many mouths we have heard it said that it is either jobs or the environment, that the Haida people are simply blocking them from being able to make a livelihood. All of these arguments have been thrown out.

I hope this day-long debate, the first in the history of this Parliament on this issue, will allow us to get to the bottom of the issue so that everyone will know where every Member of Parliament stands. There is an opportunity today for anyone who does not support this proposal to rise. However, I am quite sure that by the end of today everyone in the country will know that the House of Commons in the Thirty-third Session is unanimous in recommending that the B.C. Government move quickly in co-operating to have the area set aside.

Just over a year ago the 250,000 members of the B.C. Federation of Labour unanimously passed a resolution calling on the B.C. Government to negotiate a fair and just settlement with the Haida nation and South Moresby in support of the Haida action on Lyell Island.

I would like to deal for a moment with the issues which have been put forward in terms of values and what is happening in the forest industry in British Columbia. According to the former Minister of Forests, Mr. Kempf, British Columbia subsidized forest activity by over $250 million in 1985. According to his statements earlier this month over $1 billion in tax revenue was lost to the large companies because of improper forms of stumpage and taxation in the Province of British Columbia. We have been losing enormous amounts of revenues as a result of the tax measures and the stumpage system in British Columbia. During most of this decade the industry contributed less than 10 per cent of provincial tax revenue and only about 15 per cent of the gross provincial product.

The argument has long been that the forest companies, Western Forest Products in particular, has to have this area which represents less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of one year's annual allowable cut in British Columbia. Let us be clear on that, it is less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the annual allowable cut in British Columbia, a tiny area.

Less than 3.5 per cent of the land base of B.C.is set aside for parks. Many Members have travelled in Africa and other areas of the world and have been amazed to find that Kenya, for example, has set aside over 15 per cent of its land base.

Countries which are incredibly poor have determined that tourism is a sound opportunity for the future of their country and that the setting aside of wilderness areas to preserve wildlife is crucial for generations to come.

The acceptance of all new park proposals made in British Columbia over the last decade would only raise the amount of the land base in B.C. set aside for parks to 6 per cent. As we know, there is now active logging in such parks as Tweedsmuir, Manning, Strathcona and others.

Comments of some of the Haida people in relation to this issue about which they feel so deeply are important to inject into this part of the debate. Nathan Young, the hereditary chief of Lyell Island, said last year before the Supreme Court of British Columbia: "This land is dear to me. This land was given to us by our Lord. Just as land was given to the Swedish people and the English people, so it is ours." In November, 1985, during the crisis in terms of the occupation by the Haida elders of Lyell Island a Vancouver poll found that two-thirds of British Columbians wanted the B.C. Government to negotiate Indian land claims and two to one supported the Haida in their actions on Lyell Island. An unreleased B.C. Government poll showed that this support reached over 80 per cent by last fall. One must wonder why a government would not co-operate when four of five British Columbians supported action on South Moresby.

Many from the group which has been supportive of the position taken by Western Forest Products and Frank Beban Logging Ltd. have tried to make this appear to involve a choice between the environment and the logging, that if the area is set aside and the rights of the Haida are recognized hundreds of thousands would become unemployed or underemployed. This motion addresses that head on.

I know that Parks Canada has done good work studying how Western Forest Products could be compensated. Studies have been done on how to use the Forest Act, what amounts of dollars would be required, and how the loggers who have worked there for a long time could be realistically compensated. They have studied how to compensate nearby communities which would lose part of the logging-associated activities, the provision of food, fuel and transport. These include the communities of Sandspit, Queen Charlotte City and Skidegate.

The IWA recognized early on that this was not a situation as it was being portrayed by the corporate interests. Earl Foxcroft of the IWA, in November, 1985, supported the declaration of solidarity with the Haida and the natural resource workers. He said that for more than a decade government and resource corporations have been using IWA loggers to come between Indians and their rights. Jack Munro added at that time: "It was not the Indians who stopped this logging, it was the Government. They are directly responsible for this mess".

One of the brilliant and capable orators of the Haida people, the President of the Council of the Haida Nation, has spoken, not just throughout British Columbia but across this land. He spoke most recently at our national convention where he had an opportunity to be introduced and to speak to the convention in terms of how crucial this issue was.

Miles Richardson has worked hard and arduously across the country with the Minister of the Environment. He has attempted to work with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Prime Minister and others. Finally, today we see light at the end of the tunnel as Parliament speaks with one voice to British Columbia.

Miles Richardson had the following to say when the Supreme Court action was taking place in British Columbia: "You have never fought us in a war and we have never surrendered. This is our land".

I believe every Canadian has come to understand what it is that the first citizens of this country mean when they say these things about their deep attachment to the land and their understanding of their rights that are so crucial.

Bill Reid is a famed Canadian Haida artist. Anyone who walks through this building or any of the Parliament Buildings will see his art being displayed. As he pointed out, "The forests of South Moresby should be treasured like the great cathedrals of Europe".

We need to think about these matters. We need to think about trees at which we must look far higher than this ceiling even before we see the very first branch; trees 10 feet through, of pure lovely wood, that rise into the heavens. Anyone who has walked along those streams and seen the salmon returning, saw the fauna and deep moss on the ground, and had an opportunity to hear eagles crying in the trees and saw the black bears walking on the beach has to be moved by the experience.

Mr. Justice Peter Seaton had words to say upon which I think we all must reflect when thinking of clear-cut logging of areas such as this. In considering the Meares Island injunction in relation to MacMillan Bloedel, he concluded that he could think of few, if any, aboriginal rights that would continue to exist in an area that has been clear-cut. No truer words were ever said by someone on the Bench or a parliamentarian.

Many years ago, during the debate regarding Lyell Island and the controversy surrounding all of South Moresby, I was struck by the words of an elder Haida who sat down with me to talk. He told me that there were 400 village sites in that area and that logging was taking place in and around those sites.

We must keep in mind that over 90 per cent of the Haida population was wiped out, not in a period of years or decades, but in a period of months. The Haida could not carry on their traditional practices of caring for those who had passed away. I think we as Canadians and parliamentarians must understand what this elder was trying to say. He asked me to think about the logging that is going on there, of the trees being felled in this area.

At that time, that area was more densely populated than almost anywhere not just in North America but in the world, by one of the most outstanding civilizations there has been in terms of their own laws, potlatches, art and tradition.

What he said to me sunk to my heart and will be with me for as long as I live. He said,"Jim, if a Haida went down on a skidder to a large graveyard in Vancouver and drove around with the blade down and pushed all of the headstones into a big pile, what do you think the white people in Vancouver would do?" He said, "That is how I feel about the logging on Lyell Island. That is how I feel about what is going on in South Moresby".

I understood him. I know what people in Vancouver would think if a British Columbia Indian was sitting on a skidder, pushing headstones into a big pile. We all know what that would mean.

I believe we must have that understanding between cultures, to know what the Indian people of British Columbia are saying and understand what the aboriginal people of Canada are saying, in order to get above those meaningless arguments that we must harvest or there will be massive bankruptcies of forest companies in British Columbia. That is hog-wash. The studies have been done, the forest companies have had their day. They have had the year of Bill Bennett and they have had the year of Bill Vander Zalm. This Parliament will speak today and the Legislature in British Columbia had better understand, because there will be no more logging in South Moresby.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Let us take a moment to consider the area that is being proposed to be set aside in perhaps one of the most important processes that Parliament has entered into in order to deal head on with the issue of aboriginal title and rights in British Columbia, and to deal directly with a treasure of the globe, an area that has been identified by the United Nations as a world heritage site. It is an area that has been recognized by professional foresters, biologists, wildlife experts and others as one of those unique and rare oases on the planet Earth, where there is a multiplicity of life that is still interacting as it has been, not just for decades or centuries, but for thousands of years since the last ice age. It is a truly remarkable area.

The proposal is to have a marine park on the West Coast of the Queen Charlottes. Again, false arguments have been put forward that these marine parks would mean an end to commercial fishing. I have had discussions with the Minister who has been involved in the negotiations. There is no intention within the marine park proposal to limit in any way the commercial fishery that has traditionally taken place on either the west or east coast of the Queen Charlottes.

The western boundary would go out on the West Coast of the Queen Charlottes and include the San Andreas Fault, which runs up the West Coast of North America, so that in the future those who are involved in underwater archaeology and geology and other important studies of the earth will have an opportunity to work in an area that has been preserved, with no other involvement by man and industry.

The boundary comes down, goes around to include Anthony Island, down around Kunghit, below Cape St. James, including the rookeries of the Steller sea-lions in that area and the 10 whale populations that use the area, up the East Coast and on the outside of Hot Springs Island, the outside of Lyell Island, including Tanu, Richardson and Tunga, up to include the beach at Skedans. This includes a vastly important area. On the land base, it would include those 138 islands, including what is left of Lyell Island, the other three islands and across the Tango Peninsula, providing for those 100 kilometres of archipelago that runs south of Cape St. James.

I have already indicated that the area has not been untouched by development. There has been harvesting, particularly of the Sitka spruce during the Second World War. There has been some mining and mine staking. However, I believe that the outstanding and widely known traditions of the Haida people and their occupation of the area is something that simply cannot be overlooked. I know that Parliament will no longer overlook it.

I worded the motion very carefully for this debate so that there would not be a perception that it was a partisan approach for someone from one Party to attempt to claim that he or she is trying to preserve this area and stand up for those rights. I have spoken to almost every Member of the House and I know that there is a mood of unanimity, a desire to speak to British Columbia and to the Legislature in British Columbia, to do what we can to get it to move quickly. I know that the proposal made last week to have 10 further years of logging in South Moresby has now been formally and publicly set aside by the Government of British Columbia. I think that demonstrates that the legislature is listening. It understands.

The two Parties in the B.C. Legislature are now coming together. I understand there were high level meetings yesterday involving both the Government side and the Opposition. They were looking at how to move as quickly as possible to complete the negotiations. No doubt the Government of British Columbia will drive a hard bargain in terms of getting what it feels is fair compensation. However, one has to understand that the Government of British Columbia has a rare and unique opportunity, as well as a responsibility, to British Columbians, to the Haida people, to people around the world. This area is very important. I have travelled throughout the whole of the area and it is truly remarkable and beautiful.

During today's debate I am sure other Members will have an opportunity to talk about the more technical matters. The Sterling Wood report has been completed. It evaluated what a fair amount of compensation would be as somewhere between $9 million and $18 million to Western Forest Products. A process has been undertaken by Parks Canada to evaluate what a fair degree of compensation would be, based on weeks and months worked by each logger and each person involved in logging activity in that area. Many of us have worked on options to provide other forest lands, other cutting areas, to Western Forest Products, MacMillan Bloedel and Frank Beban Logging. It has looked at what kind of realistic package could be put together to expand the rights as they are negotiated with the Haida people in relation to the Haida Gwaii Watchmen so their involvement in the evolution of any developments in the area are on their terms and on terms which are acceptable to the people of the region, what kinds of dollars are required to preserve and make more healthy the economy of Sandspit and Moresby in that area and what to do for Graham Island so it can be included. There is an abundance of information. In my office I probably have 10 vertical feet of information regarding the South Moresby area. It has been studied and studied.

You have been most kind, Mr. Speaker, in giving me a few extra moments in speaking this morning. If any Hon. Members have any questions I would be more than pleased to spend a few more minutes either answering technical questions or anything in relation to what I have said.

I am honoured to have had an opportunity to have simply put the words which are now before the House, but I think it will be an even more important day to me, because in the last few days I have considered offering my resignation in this House over this issue and ask that the Prime Minister call an immediate by-election so that I can run on this issue in my constituency. In my constituency the loggers, the fishermen and the Indian people understand this issue and I think if that was necessary, or is necessary in the future, it is something I will actively consider, because I take this issue as being fundamentally important in a constitutional sense and, as a parliamentarian, I take it seriously. I thank Hon. Members for an opportunity to speak and I look forward to speaking again.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, it is just a matter of seeking information. The Hon. Member mentioned what the population of the islands was back in the 1800s. I wonder if he could tell us what the population is now, in view of the fact he is asking for a national park reserve? It is generally considered that the activity of hunting and such like on reserves is very limited. I wonder if there has been any negotiation as to what the limitations are in that regard and whether or not people from the mainland might exploit the opportunities given to the residents of that island?

Mr. Fulton: I thank the Hon. Member for the question. With respect to the population, a considerable amount of work has been done by archaeologists and by universities, particularly in British Columbia, on the populations in that area. As I said, the South Moresby portion of the archipelago is the most densely populated historically by the Haida people. There are some 400 sites where there were communities of up to 1,000 people and more.

The largest part of the population decline occurred in the late 1880s. It occurred very rapidly with the introduction particularly of smallpox which came up the coast with some of the Haidas who were returning, as I understand, from Vancouver Island. The main population of Haida people on the Queen Charlotte Islands are in Skidegate. A Skidegate mission was set up by the United Church to assist those Haidas who had survived the ravages of the smallpox and measles outbreaks. The other main Haida community on the Queen Charlotte Islands is at Old Masset at the northern tip of Graham Island.

There are now about 5,000 Haida people. Many of them live off the Queen Charlottes now to work in Prince Rupert or elsewhere on the coast. The population of the Queen Charlotte Islands is about 5,000 at present, about half now of what it was a century ago. It is probably the only place in Canada where that is true for a geographic region, that the population is now much smaller. The re-evolution of the Haida culture has been taking place for several decades. As the Hon. Member knows, much of the art which hangs in the buildings here is West Coast art done by Haida artists.

In terms of the Hon. Member's question regarding harvesting in the area, there is no doubt that what is required under the National Park legislation which this House passes, and what will have to be looked at, is a rather unique approach in that the discussions which have gone to this point in the negotiations would allow for the continued trolling efforts principally for chinook and coho. That would continue.

In terms of hunting in that area, there never has been a great deal done. The deer population was gradually introduced about 40 or 50 years ago. There are extensive deer populations throughout the islands. In fact, throughout the islands right now, one is allowed to shoot 10 in a day or in a season. I think that is the only place in North American where those kinds of limits are allowed.

With respect to the bear population, as I said, the largest black bears in the world reside in South Moresby. There is limited hunting of them now. I do not think it would be that difficult to negotiate a situation where there was no hunting either of the deer or bear populations. There are no other predators. There are no cougars, no wolves. The Dawson caribou became extinct at the beginning of the century.

This would be negotiated between Canada and the Council of Haida Nation but I am certain that the major population of birds, the 250,000 pairs of breeding sea-birds and others, would be protected, along with the peregrine falcons, the eagle population and the whale population. I think it would be in the interest of everyone that those populations be protected as they are within the National Park system as it now stands. I hope that answers those two questions.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I missed the first few minutes of the Hon. Member's speech and he may have covered this, but I would like a point of clarification regarding the motion which speaks of setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen

Charlotte Islands as a National Park Reserve. Does the motion mean the entire island of South Moresby plus the 140 smaller islands around it? Could the Hon. Member circumscribe accurately what he means by the "South Moresby area"?

Mr. Fulton: The area which has been actively negotiated in a trilateral sense—including the Council of the Haida Nation, although it has not been involved as much as it would have liked—between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia, which as I understand it, is nearly complete. It would basically be an east-west line across the Tangil Peninsula just to the immediate west of Lyell Island. The line would then go up to just north of the Islands of Tanu, Kunghit and Richardson so it would include Lyell Island. Then the marine boundary would go up to just north of Skedans. So it would come across the Tangil Peninsula in an east-west line. It would go off the West Coast of the Queen Charlotte Islands to where the San Andreas Fault would be included which I understand is slightly more than 15 miles. I do not have the map with me.

It would then go south, down around the bottom of Cape St. James, including the Stellar sea-lion rookeries, and around the bottom of Kunghit Island, then running, in a surf-line fashion, some 12 nautical miles along the coast to the outside of Lyell Island, and then turning back and touching at Skedans. That is the outline of the area that has now been agreed upon by those who have been involved in the discussions over the last 15 years.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), on a supplementary.

Mr. Friesen: One further point of clarification. The motion speaks of the South Moresby area. As such, it implies that it would comprise everything south of Graham Island.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member is now saying that that is not what is meant.

Mr. Fulton: The motion does not in any way intend to include South Moresby as it would appear on a map. What is intended to be included are those areas that have been the subject of active discussion between both levels of Government and the Council of the Haida Nation. The area is known generally by journalists and others as the "South Moresby area", but should not be taken to include the much larger South Moresby area itself.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's motion is ambiguous and misleading, in the sense that more information is required. I am wondering whether he has taken into consideration the recommendations of the Wilderness Advisory Council to any degree at all in respect of this proposal.

Mr. Fulton: I have, yes. One of the difficulties encountered from a parks perspective and from the perspective of the Council of the Haida Nation is that the area proposed by that Council would have included only a very narrow border along the west side of Lyell Island, taking in Sedgewick Bay but excluding Windy Bay and some other areas. That simply would not provide what is required to actually have a national park reserve. It does not fall fully enough within the scope of what is required for a national park reserve, or a national park.

In looking at this proposal, we have to deal with what the Council of the Haida Nation has been saying, that there will be no further logging on Lyell Island. We have to appreciate the number of Canadians who have come to support and understand that view.

Very little is left of Lyell Island. If one looks at a recent satellite aerial photograph, one will see that there is very little of Lyell Island left. It is an area that has been more than 20 per cent overcut in recent years. The remaining forested areas are comprised of a fringe on the west side of the island, the area around Windy Bay and the watershed in that area, and a limited area to the east and to the west of Sedgewick Bay.

In formulating the motion, I could have written pages and pages, setting out in precise terms the area involved, even to the extent of setting out the latitudinal and longitudinal reference points. Had I done so, I am sure Hon. Members may have had difficulty in understanding exactly what was involved, with the result that there may have been calls for further studies. I have tried to be as general and generic as possible in respect of the three main components of the motion, the goal being to achieve unanimity in terms of support for the motion.

I know my hon. friend opposite now supports the setting aside of this area as a national park reserve, and for that I thank him. Moving this proposal along has been a long and difficult struggle for me. It is a proposal on which Members from other constituencies have always had a great deal to say.

As is the case whenever an Hon. Member is involved in a national issue, I myself will travel to that Member's constituency to speak on the subject; and in so doing, I try to be fair in my comments. In the case of this particular proposal, I think we are finally seeing the fairness aspect coming to the fore.

The motion deals with all three interests involved; the area itself, being the South Moresby area, the question of compensation for the loggers and companies, and finally the historical ties of the Haida people to this area.

The South Moresby area was the locus of the civilization of the Haida people—and not merely for centuries, but for thousands of years. The Haida people had evolved to one of the most profound civilizations on earth. It should not be forgotten that between 1874 and 1951, the Parliament of the Haida people was outlawed. Those Haidas who practised potlatch during that period did so at the risk of imprisonment.

I have attended potlatches, as I am sure have other Hon. Members. The Parliament of the Haida people, as is the case in respect of other B.C. Indian Nations, functions in much the same way as this Parliament functions. In addition to dealing with marriage and death ceremonies, the potlatch, or Parliament, deals with the transmission of lands, the passage of new laws, the transfer of property and territorial rights, and so forth. These are all matters that are dealt with, by tradition, by the potlatch. The potlatch is in fact a sitting Parliament.

What happened to the Haida people of South Moresby in terms of the enormous decline of their population through the introduction of diseases inherent to our civilization is little understood. There were two major disease types involved, and a vaccine was available in Victoria for both. However, that vaccine was not made available to the Haida people on the coast.

In addition to bringing about an enormous decline in the population of the Haida people, we then made it illegal for their Parliament to sit.

It is only in recent times that the aspirations of the aboriginal peoples of B.C. are really coming to the fore. Their Parliaments are back in full activity; their traditional laws are fully functioning.

This proposal recognizes the title of the aboriginal people of that area, the Haida people, giving them the right to practise self-government in that area, while at the same time allowing British Columbians, Canadians, and citizens of planet Earth the opportunity to have that area preserved as a beautiful oasis of timelessness, a place where one can see water drops falling from trees a thousand years old.

That we can deal with it in this way is remarkable.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Hon. Member can become quite emotional in speaking of South Moresby. It is, after all, an area within his riding. However, I want to ensure that the Canadian public understands that it is this Government, the Progressive Conservative Government, that has taken the necessary initiatives to achieve this end. In doing so, all we ask is that common sense prevail for all groups involved.

That is the only comment I wish to make, in closing.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it has never been my intention to make this a partisan issue. I do not intend to quote what has been said by some Members of this House in earlier times. I think we have gone beyond that.

I thank the Government, led by the Prime Minister, for having taken such an active interest in this proposal. The Prime Minister played a most useful role in getting a commitment from the Premier of British Columbia to resolve the matter. It is a commitment that found its way into the Speech from the Throne in the British Columbia Legislature. Just this week, both the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister telephoned the Premier of British Columbia and once again got a commitment from him that the issue would be resolved; and with this whole House speaking as one voice, there is no doubt in my mind that it will be resolved.

I am being very serious in saying that we have to be non-partisan in respect of this issue. This is not an initiative that is taken by any one Party; rather, it is an initiative that is fundamental to planet Earth, an initiative that is fundamental to the South Moresby area, and an initiative that is fundamental to the constitutional and historic rights of the original inhabitants of the area involved.

It is an area that must be preserved, and I thank the Hon. Member for his continued support toward that end.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today on the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

At the outset, let me say that the Hon. Member for Skeena is a gentleman who is noted for bringing a great deal of passion to this place in dealing with various issues. Some days I find myself in accord with the Hon. Member; and other days, I find myself in passionate disagreement.

I would be less than honest if I did not say that during the course of the Hon. Member's remarks today, as one who comes from Newfoundland, the other side of the country, but also as one who has a deep appreciation of the unspoiled environment in this country, I found myself carried away by his words, carried away by the passion, carried away by the commitment that he articulated in putting forward the proposition that that area known as South Moresby, all of the island south of the line known as South Moresby, ought to be protected and set aside as a national park reserve.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena for giving the House an opportunity to debate this motion today. I am sure, as the Hon. Member for Skeena has said, that today the House is dealing very much with a non-partisan issue. This is not an issue to be dealt with by parliamentarians in a manner that reflects the partisan differences of individual Members or of individual political Parties. I believe this motion deserves a conclusion to the process, that is, a unanimous endorsement from all Members of Parliament present from all three political Parties.

It is my privilege today to speak on behalf of my Leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), on this issue since he could not be in the House today. In fact, he is not even in Ottawa. As Hon. Members will know, the Leader of the Official Opposition has had a long involvement and interest in the South Moresby issue going back over many years. He has made many visits to the region, both as a parliamentarian and, perhaps equally as often, in the days when he was not a parliamentarian, when he had absolutely no overt political interest in the matter. As recently as last fall the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra and his family spent a two-week holiday in the area with a gentleman mentioned by my friend from Skeena, Mr. Bill Reid, a very famous and well-known Haida artist. My Leader spent two weeks on a boat travelling through the islands, Lyell Island and others, in the South Moresby region.

On September 13, 1985, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra stood in the House and, pursuant to a motion under Standing Order 22, said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House the situation in South Moresby in the Queen Charlotte Islands. I had the opportunity last week, along with my wife and other friends, including Bill Reid, the famous Haida artist, to sail for six days around the South Moresby parts of the Queen Charlottes visiting the traditional Haida sites, seeing the most magnificent primeval forest on the face of the globe, which is really an environmental treasure. There is limitless aquaculture, among the richest in the world. It is nesting grounds for hundreds of varieties of birds.
> For over 4,000 to 6,000 years they have lived there and built up a unique culture and tradition, and depended upon the resources of the islands and the sea for their livelihood. That is all threatened . . . by indiscriminate logging, particularly on Lyell Island and, potentially, some of the rest of South Moresby. If this continues indiscriminately, the country will lose a priceless heritage.
> I wish to suggest to the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan)—

The Minister is in the House today. The Environment portfolio was new to him back in September of 1985.

> —that he, buttressed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), negotiate with the Province of British Columbia for a national park, recognizing the traditional rights of the Haida people in such negotiations and making an accommodation with the logging industry—

I began my remarks today by acknowledging the good work and the proper and appreciated efforts of the Hon. Member for Skeena in bringing forward this motion. It is also right and proper that I acknowledge the work of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) who has shown a genuine and a sincere interest in terms of this issue. Along with other Members, including the Hon. Member for Skeena, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, and I know, and the House knows that the Speaker himself has adopted this issue at a level that one could only describe as a crusade.

What we really have in Parliament today is the reflection of the will, in all honesty, of a handful of people in Parliament who have made converts of those of us from Toronto, Newfoundland, Quebec, the Prairies and the Atlantic Region, from all political Parties. Those few, that handful, through their passion and through the poetry they discover in their own language when they speak in this House about those forests that they have had the opportunity to walk through, that untouched and unspoiled land, at least the parts of it which they have had a chance to experience, speak primarily on behalf of the Haida people. But, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that they speak on behalf of all Canadians who understand that for this country South Moresby is a test of whether or not we are able to stop, whether or not we are able to put the brakes on once in a while, and understand that a natural heritage such as South Moresby is the test of whether or not the civilization understands the real meaning of a very old Haida saying.

The Haidas have a unique way of expressing the notion of continuity and of responsibility in society. They say, "We do not inherit the land from our ancestors, we borrow it from our children". What an incredible short few words to encapsulate the responsibility of Canadians in 1987, "We do not inherit the land from our ancestors, we borrow it from our children".

Last December, after the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra came back from his latest visit to that area with his family, he invited Bill Reid to attend a meeting of friends and associates in his riding of Vancouver Quadra where Mr. Reid talked to the assembled people about South Moresby. His wife, who is not a bad photographer—in fact she is a pretty good one—presented a slide show. I have a copy of some of the words that Mr. Reid brought to the gathering. I think what he said bears repeating, since it speaks to the whole notion that somehow this is a conflict between a priceless heritage resource that belongs to all the people of Canada and jobs in the logging industry today. He said this:

> This is not intended as a diatribe aimed at the most important part of our economy. I am not opposed to logging, loggers or the lumber industry. I do not want to see my fellow residents of British Columbia starve in the primeval forest. As one who spent many years using beautiful British Columbia woods in my work, I would be ridiculous if I opposed the end of the tree harvest. But for heavens sake, can't we, while we still have a little bit of a last chance institute true multi use of the forest with due regard for its own regeneration, the wildlife it nurtures and most important and most neglected its aesthetic values, that is the nurture it affords human life.

He said:

> At this moment what is happening on the poor old Charlottes is a desperate attempt to loot a treasure house before the owners, you and I, realize what is going on and take measures to stop it. This on our famous misty isles, home of the fabled Haidas, one of the places in our country still imbued with romance, a world renowned, unique ecological area.

I rise today on behalf of my Leader and my Party. My Leader speaks for all his members of caucus. We support the motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena which calls, as my Leader did last September in the House, for a negotiation on the part of the Government of Canada, the Government of British Columbia, and the Haida people to bring about a protected national park reserve in South Moresby. We are, as is Bill Reid, conscious and sensitive to the interests of those British Columbians, those Canadians, who have made their living as loggers.

I know, from having had the opportunity to talk with the Minister of the Environment, that in the ongoing negotiations between the Minister and the Premier of British Columbia, with the involvement of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr.

Mazankowski), that careful consideration is being given to ensuring proper, just, and fair compensation to loggers who might be affected by the establishment of a national park reserve. This meets with the approval and the appreciation of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra and indeed members of the Liberal Party.

I have not been to South Moresby. I have not had the opportunity, as have the Hon. Member for Skeena, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, and perhaps the Minister, of strolling through a primeval forest where the limbs start at a height equivalent to that of the ceiling of this Chamber, or where the raindrops fall from a tree which is 500 years old, a 1,000 years old, or whatever the case might be. I have not had the opportunity, as Bill Reid described in his talk, of walking through the riding of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, through a forest where the moss is so thick that only a young, strong, and healthy man could walk more than a mile. I have not had that experience.

I am a Canadian who comes from a province which on the one hand sought the great benefits of industry, the economic advantages of industry, and the jobs associated with industry. On the other hand, we have always had a dark foreboding in our hearts because Newfoundland, an island and a part of Canada, is largely untouched. Its environment is largely unspoiled. It is a piece of the planet Earth which largely resembles the way it was hundreds and thousands of years ago, except for those changes brought about by natural evolution. As every Newfoundlander, I think I have an intrinsic empathy, understanding, and appreciation of what the Hon. Member for Skeena said, and indeed what my own Leader has said many times in caucus when he talked about South Moresby.

It is an area which has a quarter of all nesting sea-birds on the British Columbia coast. It contains some of the most ancient, oldest, largest, and last remaining Sitka spruce, red cedar, and western hemlock anywhere in the world. It contains a spectacular diversity of marine life including half of Canada's Steller sea-lions and 11 species of whale, as well as important fishing resources. It contains more endemic plants, insects, birds, and mammals than any other area in Canada. Of course it is renowned for its outstanding Haida village sites, unique in the world, including a UNESCO World Heritage Cultural Site designated on Anthony Island.

I believe the House speaks with one voice today in endorsing its support for the motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena. As well, I believe the House speaks with one voice in endorsing and lending our moral support to the work, which is being undertaken by the Minister of the Environment on behalf of all Canadians, to negotiate a just settlement with the Province of British Columbia and to ensure that the rights of the Haida people are acknowledged during the course of that negotiation.

I remind Canadians, and I remind the Government of British Columbia, that the Government of Canada is rightly prepared to incur financially the total cost of establishing and operating a national park reserve. That responsibility will be borne by the federal Government on behalf of all Canadians, including taxpayers who live in the Province of Newfoundland. We do it with a happy heart. As well, we accept with a happy heart the cost of sharing in the compensation to those people who have traditionally logged those areas.

I come from a riding with 30 per cent unemployment. However, in the midst of the unemployment we suffer, and all the human misery which that entails, I know that the people of Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe can reach beyond that present human condition and share in the aspiration and noble cause of preserving this part of Canada's heritage.

We also approve of the Minister's proposal to compensate those who have timber or lumber rights on Lyell Island-South Moresby generally. Canadians across the country are prepared for the Minister of the Environment, speaking on behalf of all of us, to make the necessary financial investments to ensure a national park reserve.

I do not want to get into the middle of the negotiations, but I hope the Government of British Columbia, representing the people of British Columbia and representing, as the Hon. Member for Skeena pointed out, the views of the vast majority of British Columbians, will see the resolution and the negotiation required to resolve the issue as an opportunity to see justice done.

The Hon. Member for Skeena said that they might drive a hard bargain. I have spoken with the Minister briefly. I do not know the details of what he wants to negotiate; obviously he cannot tell me that. However, I sense a willingness to be reasonable. I hope the Government of British Columbia will see this as an opportunity to make a contribution, not only to British Columbia, but to Canada as a whole and to the world's environmental community. I also hope that the Government of British Columbia will not see it as a priority in terms of seeking compensation for whatever package is finally negotiated.

Let me conclude by repeating the words of the old Haida saying. I first heard them, quite honestly, this morning. I thought they were some of the most profound words that I have ever heard to express the notion of man's responsibility in providing continuity in society. The Haidas said, "We do not inherit the land from our ancestors, we borrow it from our children".

Through our support for this motion, we shall leave that land in good shape.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his remarks and for the support his Party is giving to the resolution and to the peaceful conclusion to this long-standing conflict.

I would like to seek clarification in relation to the policies taken by his Party in terms of the process that is now occurring. The federal Government is now negotiating with the Province to have the area set aside as a national park reserve. I would seek the Hon. Member's assurance that he and his Party endorse the concept I outlined in part of my remarks, namely, that once we reach that important point, and perhaps even during this part of that process, the Council of the Haida Nation will be brought in and be a full partner, a completely equal partner, with the Government of Canada. Then in bilateral negotiations we should make sure that the rights of the Haida people are fully recognized and affirmed in the South Moresby area. They feel very strongly and I know the Hon. Member feels very strongly that that is the appropriate route we follow now.

We should complete this process of delineating the area of providing compensation to the province, to the forest companies, to the loggers and to the communities and put together a process of looking at the developments that can best deal with so-called tourism developments. The Member and his Party support—I am sure the Member does—the full involvement of the Council of the Haida Nation in the negotiations regarding rights in that area.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me say, in the style of one Joseph R. Smallwood, that we in the Liberal Party insist upon not the aspirations, not the wants, not the desires, not the feelings, not the mood but the rights of the Haida people. Intrinsic in using that word "rights" versus aspirations, desires, moods, wants, is the notion that something is provided, not as a matter of convenience, not as a matter of sensitivity, not as a matter of good intention but as a matter of right. That is precisely the kind of terminology we would apply to the role of the Haida people in finally resolving these negotiations.

Though I know the Member would understand if I add that while all of us in the House would use those kinds of words to articulate the role we see for the Haida people in these negotiations, none of us at this, I believe particularly happy stage, in what has been at least for more than a decade a long battle, would want to impose ourselves in the middle of whatever negotiations are ongoing.

I believe that we have seen evidence of serious and of constructive negotiations being carried on between the Minister of the Environment, the Premier of British Columbia, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Environment Minister for British Columbia, Mr. Strachan, who has had a few things to say in the last few days that sound positive. I know the Minister is certainly in touch with the representatives of the Haida people. He has consulted with them. That is as it should be.

While I want to assure the Hon. Member that we too share the notion of rights of the Haida people, those rights are more than merely aspirations or expressions of goodwill on the part of Governments. We believe as well that it is important now that the negotiation process be allowed to work, and that the job of Parliament is to give all-Party expression and non-partisan support to the determination to reach a successful conclusion to those negotiations that should and must include the Haida people.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise in response to the motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). As all Members of the House are aware, the negotiations for the creation of a national park in the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands of British Columbia have accelerated dramatically in the last few days and, indeed, hours. The very fact that the House of Commons is debating this motion, not just as a British Columbia question but as a national and an international one, underscores the keen interest of all Members of the House from all Parties. It reflects, too, the strong hold that that unique collection of islands has exerted in the consciousness of Canadians.

We owe it to ourselves, to the world community as a whole and to generations yet unborn to save what is the most internationally significant wilderness treasure in all of Canada. I do not exaggerate when I say that the eyes of the world are upon us. The Minister of the Environment from the remote island nation of Indonesia, Emil Salim, recently remarked to a Canadian journalist that he found it incomprehensible that an advanced, affluent nation like Canada would allow the loss of an ecological gem as precious as South Moresby. He asked, with profound insight, if Canada cannot save one small irreplaceable part of the world's heritage what help is there for the planet?

The area is one of genuine splendour, both for its ecological diversity and for its rich cultural heritage. South Moresby has been described as "an evolutionary showcase", as the "Canadian Galapagos". Scientists tell us that the islands remained ice-free during the Great Ice Age, allowing the survival of plants and animals species now found nowhere else in the world.

The islands speak to our genetic memory of a time primeval, towering Sitka spruce rise from the rich moss-laden earth, untouched by the ravages of time or man. Bald eagles, unique forms of black bear and pine marten populate the region, as they have since time itself began. Plants, lichens, birds, fish and insects not to be found elsewhere thrive in the lush environment of this Canadian Garden of Eden.

The cultural heritage of the area is no less awesome. The Haida nation thrived on those shores for thousands of years before Christopher Columbus set sail for the East Indies. Their numbers were tragically decimated by the ravages of white man's disease. But they left behind the signposts of a great culture, and the Haida nation tenaciously and proudly fights for the survival of that culture today. The artistic expression of their binding connection to nature can be seen in the fallen totems of the Ninstints, declared by UNESCO a world heritage site. Like the flora and the fauna of the islands, the Haida culture is unique.

I myself had the pleasure of touring South Moresby within weeks of my appointment as Canada's Minister of the Environment. Despite advance descriptions from people who had visited the islands before me, including other Members of the House of Commons, I was singularly unprepared for the magnificence of the islands: the awe-inspiring forest canopies, the bubbling hot springs, the teeming wildlife, the wide-open spaces, the pristine stillness, the sheer beauty of an unspoiled world. Sir, as a Canadian who lives on one island, Prince Edward Island, almost as far from the Queen Charlottes as one can reside and still be in Canada, I feel a special personal kinship for those remote misty isles on the opposite coast.

It has been said that some countries are shaped by their history, others by their geography. I believe that in large measure Canada belongs in the latter category. It is a statement about our sense of nationhood that Canadians from coast to coast care deeply, even passionately, about a small family of islands which many of them have never seen but which they know instinctively ought to be saved because they are part of themselves.

In the last three months alone, I have received nearly 1,000 individual letters urging the Canadian Government, through myself and Environment Canada, and through the parks service of my department in particular, to protect South Moresby. Many more people have spoken to me directly about their concerns, and still more have signed petitions and raised the issue with other members of the Government and other Members of Parliament. We have heard from Canadians in all parts of the country, of all ages and from all walks of life.

Typical of the concern expressed to me was a letter received from Silas Donham. He wrote:

> I'm eleven years old, and I live on Boularderie Island, in Cape Breton. I live in the country and I'm very concerned about the environment. I have recently heard about the—Queen Charlotte Island logging. These islands harbour some of the rarest species of plant and animal life in the world, and they should definitely be preserved. I know you're always talking about the actions you're going to take, but it's not good enough to just talk. You have to do something.

I agree with Silas and with the implied criticism, perhaps, in his letter. Talk is not enough. Parliamentary debate, however important, is not enough. Negotiations, though necessary, are not enough. Even deep-seated concern is not enough. In the words of this 11-year old, "we must do something".

In my first major speech as Minister of the Environment in September, 1985, in Banff, I committed the Government of Canada to the establishment of a national park reserve on South Moresby as a government-wide priority. Since that time, we as a Government have negotiated intensively with the British Columbia Government and consulted closely with the Haida people. The task has not always been easy. In many ways we have been racing against time and ducking the chainsaw. We are now at the crossroads. Time is running out. Key decisions must be made and value judgments rendered.

Allow me to stress one point. This is not an economy-versus-ecology issue. The world-wide interest in the ecology of this magnificent part of British Columbia and Canada provides us with a significant tourism opportunity in the context of establishing a national park. The benefits would accrue, not just to the people of British Columbia, not just to the people of the Queen Charlotte Islands most certainly, but to all Canadians.

Those who believe the islands are too remote, too inaccessible or too inclement to attract and accommodate tourists do not know the tourism industry. No longer, Sir, is tourism a matter of mom and dad and the two kids and the dog packing themselves into the family station-wagon for a week in the country or a weekend at the lake. It is a highly segmented market with increasing numbers of consumers seeking a remote, wilderness, exotic, and even safari experience. It is no accident that in Yukon tourism is now the number one industry. Yet Yukon is farther removed from key population centres than is South Moresby, and its climate is less hospitable.

The essential appeal of South Moresby is so universal that its success as an international tourism destination is assured, provided it is saved. Indeed, it is a likely candidate for world heritage status, in the company of the Giza Pyramids and the Taj Mahal.

The Government of Canada is committed to working with the B.C. Government to develop immediately the tourism opportunity afforded through a heritage and environmentally sensitive economic strategy for the entire Queen Charlotte Islands area.

Difficult decisions need to be made. There are legitimate forest industry concerns. There are important questions of compensation, not just for the forestry companies and their contractors but also for the individual loggers and for others dependent on logging for their pay cheque. The communities life-blood has for years been drawn primarily from the logging industry. Those significant interests must be respected and reflected in any plan to establish a national park, and they will be.

If this were an easy issue, it would have been solved long ago and with much less soul-searching than many of us have had to do. Despite the support of all three federal Parties in the House of Commons, and despite widespread support in the country at large, we are not debating a motherhood issue. The establishment of a national park is never motherhood. Contentious and often complex land use interests are at stake, involving competing demands and conflicting values, each of them worthy in itself. After all, people have fought wars and spilled blood over land. Clearly, such is not the flavour of the current controversy, but land is at the heart of it. Whether we ourselves rise to the challenge to save a precious part of our heritage is a measure of our maturity as a country and of our civility as a people. The prophetic conservationist Aldo Leopold wrote in 1949:

> Ability to see the cultural value of wilderness boils down, in the last analysis, to a question of intellectual humility . . . It is only the scholar who understands why the raw wilderness gives definition and meaning to the human enterprise.

I take issue with this gentleman merely in one respect. It is not only the scholar who has such an appreciation. We politicians, representative of the people of Canada, must have that appreciation, too.

Sir, the South Moresby issue is a litmus test of our values as a society. How much importance do we attach to the aesthetic, the intangible, even the spiritual values that South Moresby represents? Those qualities do not readily lend themselves to cost/benefit analysis. That fact does not make them any less compelling. Again, some of the strongest arguments for saving South Moresby are economic. But it is the other arguments that cry out for us to act: the ones that strike at the heart of what we stand for as a people, the ones that address whether we stand for anything beyond feeding and clothing and sheltering ourselves.

Providence, Sir, has seen fit to bequeath to us the second biggest piece of real estate in the world, with resources beyond the imagination of most other nations and beyond even our own capacity to exploit them. In such a vast and bountiful land, do we have it in us to protect our country's finest features? Just as we have benefited from the foresight of other generations, we have an opportunity to save and pass on something special to our children, their children, and their children after them.

Genesis tells us that the Lord created the planet and all living things upon it and that He gave us domain over it all. It is for us, as mortal creatures, to decide whether we will exercise wise stewardship over those special features that give our existence context and meaning or whether we will treat them as dispensable in this throwaway society of ours.

Sir John A. Macdonald, the first Prime Minister of Canada, the man who forged a country from sea to sea out of a vast wilderness, who opened the west, who linked an infant nation with tracks of iron, had the vision of a great dominion in this, the winter half of North America. The same man saw the value of establishing the country's first national park in 1885 at Banff.

Banff, at that time, was just 10 square kilometres of wilderness surrounding some hot springs. Like the Queen Charlotte Islands today, Banff was seemingly remote and inaccessible, and even inhospitable. Many of the identical arguments used today against establishing a national park at South Moresby were used in 1885 against Banff. "Why would anyone want to go there?" Sir John A. Macdonald had a vision which went well beyond the immediate needs and wants of his generation. Are we ourselves so much less capable of vision that we cannot act to save this important part of our natural heritage? Can we not bring ourselves to say "this is special, this deserves to be protected, let us save it?" Only we Canadians can save South Moresby. If we do not do it, no one will. Once lost, it will be lost forever.

Even as I speak, the Government of Canada is involved in accelerating intense negotiations with the Government of British Columbia. I eagerly await the B.C. Government's most recent proposal, following a full discussion which I and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had with the Premier of B.C., Mr. Vander Zalm.

Based on that discussion and on news reports which we are getting out of Victoria right now, I believe there is common resolve between the federal Government and the B.C. Government to act on this most vital of issues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: Whether I am right will be clearer today, perhaps before the debate on this important question is completed. Whatever the outcome may be, and I am optimistic that it will be what we all want, I thank all Members of the House on all sides for their support and encouragement. Although between Members of Parliament and between Parties we may differ on the particulars surrounding the establishment of the national park, we are, I know, united on one thing—South Moresby must be saved. Let us rise to the occasion and do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate most warmly the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), not only for spearheading the very positive negotiations with the Province of British Columbia, but for spearheading as well the non-partisan and very constructive debate we have heard in this Chamber from Members of different political Parties representing such vastly different regions of the country as Skeena and Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe in Newfoundland.

I am not trying to indulge in the natural cynicism of my former profession in the media, but I would like to ask the Minister a question for clarification. I trust that this is academic, but let us take the worst possible scenario and consider what would happen if negotiations for a national park failed. What happens if it is game over? Is there another route the Government could take? For example, could we establish a national park in South Moresby unilaterally without the co-operation of the province? It is an important question which I would like to have the Minister clarify.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, let me deal with the technical dimension of my answer and then with the values part of it. On the former, we must face the fact that this land does not belong to the people of Canada through their Government. It is British Columbia Crown land. We could not just march in and establish a national park without the consent of the people of B.C. as represented by their Government, even if we wanted to.

Some people argue that we should turn off the fiscal tap, we should withdraw transfer payments, we should renege on federal-provincial agreements, for example, in the forestry area. None of those things is even being considered because the people of Canada would not want us to consider them. It is not in the spirit of the country.

On the latter dimension of my answer, I think a national park must flow from the will of the people who benefit from the values which will be saved. The rest of our national park system, now only half complete, was willed into existence as a reflection of what people wanted for their country; it was not the result of stubbornness or bull-headedness, much less the result of unilateral action by one government at the expense of another. We must will South Moresby as a national park into existence. It must flow from what the people of B.C. want and what the people of Canada want. I am convinced that that does exist. It is just a matter of executing it and reflecting it in fact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, given the obvious and welcome non-partisan context in which this motion is being debated, could the Minister indicate whether he would be willing to support a proposal at the end of the day to have this motion deemed to have been passed by the House so that the House will have an opportunity to express itself in that very clear way? It would not involve individual Members standing up to vote, but is a procedure we have followed in the past. Today is one of the rare occasions on which it is totally appropriate for the House to do so. I seek the Minister's view on that.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an inspired suggestion from someone who himself is committed to the cause we are debating today. It is one of the peculiarities of this House that the rules do not lend themselves readily to votes on certain questions and in certain debates. We simply have a glorious debate, an exchange of views, and out of the debate comes some ill-defined sense of the House's will. I believe that there is so much support for what the lawyers would call the pit and substance of the motion we are discussing that the debate would be incomplete if we did not agree among ourselves that the debate and unanimity expressed within it constitutes, if not technically, then in effect a vote in favour of the motion.

Even if the rules or some particular circumstances surrounding the calendar of the House do not suggest that it would be appropriate to have a formal vote on the floor of the House later today at the end of the debate, let us all agree in the spirit of non-partisanship that that vote, nevertheless, be deemed to have been held.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate on behalf of the Liberal Party that we would very much support the proposal made by my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, seconded by the Minister of the Environment, to have deemed at the end of the day that the House has voted on the motion and has unanimously supported it.

I would like to ask the Minister a question. While it is tempting to ask the Minister about the negotiations, I will not do so since they are still taking place. We know that his heart is in the right place on this issue. However, at the end of my remarks some 20 minutes ago, the Member for Skeena asked me about my understanding and the view of the Liberal Party, including the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who has also been involved with this issue for a long time, of the Haida role in these negotiations.

We understand that governments negotiate at a certain level, but due to the great interest of many people who are watching or will read about this debate in Hansard, perhaps the Minister would want to use the opportunity to tell us what he believes is the proper role of the Haida people in the negotiations now taking place and which hopefully will be successful?

I agree with the Minister that the Government of Canada cannot go to British Columbia and impose itself in respect of B.C. Crown lands. I agree with the Minister when he says that national parks happen because these kinds of worth-while decisions are most easily taken when they flow from public will. Many Members have an interest in national parks. I have a national park in my riding. I know the Minister shares with me and many Members that very often—including the example of Banff National Park and Sir John A. Macdonald which the Minister gave—we must do more than sit back and wait for the parade. Sometimes we have to be more than mere politicians, but statesmen, and sometimes lead the parade. I believe that is what the Minister is doing in many respects in relation to South Moresby.

What does he believe is the proper role of the Haida people?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the role of the Haida people is crucial in all of this. When talking about the establishment of a national park, we are not talking only in the context of trees, however tall, old or broad; we are not talking only about bears, however splendid; rivers, however rich; or about islands, however distinctive; we are talking about the ancestral home of the Haida people. They appreciate all of those features, and much more, that I described in my speech. More than that, they recognize that this is where they live.

As a government, we negotiate government to government, in this case with the British Columbia Government. In my case, I negotiate with the Minister of the Environment responsible for parks, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) negotiates with the Premier of British Columbia. However, in all of those negotiations we have consulted closely with the Haida Nation, especially through their leader, Miles Richardson.

I envision, and have said as much to the Haida people both privately and publicly, that when a national park is established as a reserve, all of the legitimate interests of the Haida people will be reflected in the very fabric of the park itself. I have indicated that I see a direct role for the Haida in the management of the park, and not just as lowly paid assistant wardens or trail keepers or guides, but as leaders themselves in the protection and in the articulation of the values of the park.

In that context, we see the establishment, in the first instance, not of a national park per se, but of a national park reserve which is a distinctive legal entity that is without prejudice to the interests of the Haida people in connection with the negotiations that are going on, in parallel with ones on the national park, as far as land claims are concerned. On both counts, the interests of the Haida people are uppermost in my mind.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given the unanimous views which have been expressed, could the House agree and have you put it on record, with unanimous consent, that the motion we are debating at this point will be deemed to have been passed at the end of the day?

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the comment of the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the comment of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). Procedurally, the House can accept the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill at this point, and that will govern the rest of the day's debate. The record will show that at the end of the debate the House has been unanimous in supporting the motion put forward by the New Democratic Party. I take it that is the pleasure of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the motion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That will be appropriately recorded.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have all had the privilege today of witnessing some of the most outstanding debates we have heard in the House for a long time. I suspect that this will continue for the remainder of the day, considering the line-up of speakers from the various parties. Since we will break for lunch in a few minutes, would it be appropriate to call it one o'clock and resume debate at three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

HEALTH

ALBERTA COALITION ON ACID GAS—REPRESENTATIONS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, two days ago Doctor Martha Kostuch of the Alberta Coalition on Acid Gas appeared before the Acid Rain Committee to make representations about the effects on the health of Canadians in Alberta and Saskatchewan from the activities of sour gas plants, tar sands refining, and the heavy oil industry. Her presentation gave us a classic example of economic gains being made at the expense of human health, property values, farm incomes and so on.

The Government of Canada should do something about this situation by directing the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to carry out an independent examination of the southwestern Alberta medical diagnostic review, by directing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to permit sour gas plant owners to write off capital costs for pollution control technology on an accelerated basis, and by making federal payments to tar sands and heavy oil industry, and any other industry for that matter, contingent upon emission controls and environmentally responsible performance.

SMALL BUSINESS

REDUCTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to inform business people in my riding of the excellent work done by this Government on reducing the red tape inflicted on Canadian businesses.

The measures announced by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) are aimed at reducing the number of overlapping investigations, centralizing data, designing shorter contract forms for Government suppliers, simplifying income tax requirements and cutting down on the number of import formalities.

Mr. Speaker, these measures were implemented as part of a specific action plan, followed by the publication of a progress report and the creation of an advisory committee consisting of representatives in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, these measures will make life easier for our business people and let them take an active part in providing solutions for areas in which they are directly concerned, and thus enhance the growth of their businesses.

We have every reason to be proud of this initiative that will most certainly have a considerable economic impact on the entire economy of this country.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that the Conservative Government set up a commission of inquiry, referred to as the Forget Commission, and that $6 million of taxpayers' money were spent on a study to reform unemployment insurance.

Furthermore, a committee consisting of Members of all parties in this House worked day and night, and a number of people appeared before this committee and submitted briefs.

Mr. Speaker, I warn the Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). If this Government announces tomorrow that it will maintain the status quo for unemployment insurance, it will be the worst scandal we have ever known, twice as bad as the Prime Minister's shoes, Mr. Speaker. Everybody agrees, both labour and management, that changes are necessary in unemployment insurance. We are against the annualization of unemployment insurance, and we are in favour of an improved program that will protect part-time workers and ensure that people who are drawing benefits because of illness or maternity leave, are not penalized when there is a work stoppage. Mr. Speaker, if the Government doesn't announce any changes tomorrow, it will be an out and out scandal.

POLICE WEEK

MEMBERS' APPRECIATION OF POLICE FORCES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, this is Police Week and I am pleased to take a few moments to express, on behalf of Members of the this House, our appreciation to the Canadian police community.

Advances in technology and communications are resulting in the emergence of increasingly complex and sophisticated crimes. Canada's police forces are adapting to these changes by enhancing the knowledge and skills of their members and by expanding the use of modern technology in the war against crime.

There is also a need, however, to update our criminal law to take into account the emergence of new crimes, new ways of committing traditional crimes such as theft and fraud, and complex criminal conspiracies which span continents.

Police Week serves as a cogent reminder to all Hon. Members that we as legislators have a responsibility to assist our police forces by providing them with the tools to deal with increasingly complex and sophisticated crimes while at the same time preserving the rights and freedoms of individual Canadians.

Today we salute the police forces and the police of this country.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the announcement today by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) regarding Indian post-secondary education is a distressing statement. It is closing the doors on Indian students seeking higher education. It is limiting and restricting their entrance to post-secondary institutions. The Minister has made public only his Government's new restrictive criteria, which will suffocate many Indian students' education and employment aspirations.

While the announcement seems to assure those who are currently enrolled of continued assistance, this is not certain. Those whose applications were deferred last year—and I point out this was due to lack of funding—are also assured of some help, but high school graduates, or mature students enrolling for the first time, will only be considered if there are any funds left over in the budget. That is not very likely. The same applies to those who are seeking to do postgraduate studies or earn professional degrees in law, education or medicine.

Once again the Government of Canada is failing to live up to its trust and constitutional responsibilities to Indian people. It is running away. There will be a strong reaction to the Minister's efforts to limit his role in helping Indian students attain higher education.

ABORTION

EIGHTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, today marks the eighteenth anniversary of the current abortion law. On May 14, 1969, Parliament voted to change Section 251 of the Criminal Code, a move which now results in over 60,000 abortions per year. In the last 18 years nearly one million unborn children have been aborted in Canadian hospitals.

The anniversary today will be marked by pro-life Canadians all across Canada. Many will bear silent witness in front of the hospitals which perform abortions, while others will gather in their places of worship to pray for an end to this destruction of living human beings.

Alliance for Life, Campaign Life, and Coalition for Life have declared this week to be a national Week for Life in an effort to remind Canadians that human life is precious and that abortion, infanticide, and euthanasia should not be tolerated in our society. I commend them for their initiatives in bringing these issues before us.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FOOD IRRADIATION—CAUTIOUS APPROACH RECOMMENDED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs tabled its report in the House of Commons on food irradiation. It appropriately recommends that Canada take an extremely cautious approach to food irradiation, which is a procedure involving exposing food to ionizing radiation emitted from Cobalt-60 radioisotopes. These are stored in special facilities that are designed, made and sold by the Radiochemical Company unit of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.

The report also recommends that we take the same caution before exporting this technology to the Third World, something that CIDA is not doing. There is a serious contradiction between what the committee recommends and what CIDA is doing. CIDA should immediately halt all its food irradiation projects, such as the one in Thailand, and all others that are presently on the drawing board.

CIDA should also make public, in the Third World, matters affecting the recipient country's food supply, including environmental assessments and any other studies dealing with worker health and safety. The public in the Third World should have the right to participate in any decision to adopt food irradiation technology.

It is inappropriate for us to have one standard here in Canada and another for the poor in the Third World.

RENDEZ-VOUS '87

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND HELPERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, on February 5, 1987, I drew the attention of the House to a unique event that was about to take place in Quebec City, and I am referring to Rendez-vous '87.

S. O. 21

Today, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the leadership of Mr. Marcel Aubut, President of Rendez-vous '87, who has just released a financial statement that is truly exceptional.

Rendez-vous '87 wound up with a net surplus of $1.5 million which will be shared among 20 non-profit agencies and various levels of Government. The federal Government had invested $2.4 million in this event. This was a good example of co-operation between the public and the private sectors. The Progressive Conservative Government encourages valid private initiatives that make a positive contribution to the community.

Mr. Aubut's financial statement mentions the present and future impact of Rendez-vous '87, and according to a very reliable consulting firm, the economic spinoffs for the province of Quebec are estimated at $18.5 million. Isn't that fantastic, Mr. Speaker?

I am therefore proud to salute the organizers of Rendez-vous '87 and their collaborators, who were able to win the confidence of socio-economic sectors at the local and national level and were able to focus the attention of thousands of spectators.

Three cheers for a job well done!

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—CONDITION OF HOISTS ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WHARFS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have stood in this House on many occasions to ask the Government to increase the budget for the small craft harbours program. Dependable, well-maintained harbours and wharfs are absolutely essential, and the Government's neglect is a threat to the safety of our fishermen and boaters. The Government is being penny wise and pound foolish because the condition of our wharfs will get worse and the repairs will only become more and more costly.

Many fishermen in Prince Edward Island are deeply concerned over the condition of the hoists used to handle their boats.

Apparently some hoists have been taken out of service and replaced with winches that can lift only up to 3,000 pounds.

The fishermen believe that funds should be made available to repair the hoists deemed unsafe; and where hoists have been removed the fishermen want new ones, with suitable capacity, installed.

S. O. 21

I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to approve this modest request.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

RESTRICTED ACCESS TO BITTERS URGED

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, last week-end two Parkdale men were found in an apartment littered with bitters, beer and wine bottles. Their deaths have served to highlight the dangers of bitters, a herb-based drink which contains an alcohol content as high as 43 per cent.

Bitters can be bought in corner stores at any hour of the day or night and has proven a potent temptation to those individuals whose craving for alcohol overcomes their good sense.

It poses a clear hazard to impaired adults and minors who do not have access to other forms of alcohol, and as such it should be removed from store shelves immediately before any further deaths occur from its abuse.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations for the Province of Ontario must pay heed to the many representations he has received from the police, the Addiction Research Foundation, the medical community, and concerned citizens of Parkdale regarding the dangers of this product.

I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to bring his influence to bear on the Ontario Government to ensure the removal of bitters from corner stores, and to restrict access to that drink through provincial liquor control boards.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) announced the capping of one of the most successful programs ever delivered by that Department.

The Post-secondary Education Assistance Program has been the single most important building block in improving the quality of life for Indian and Inuit people in Canada. By providing tuition and living allowances for native students, the Government has assisted thousands of people in their education needs.

By capping this program, the Government deliberately closes the door to education for a sector of our society that needs it most. By the Minister's own admission, the participation rate of Indian students attending colleges and universities this year stands at 4 per cent. For the rest of the country, the figure exceeds 20 per cent.

The Government is willfully pointing eager but poor native students in the direction of the welfare rolls, as if the shamefully high unemployment rates on reserves are not bad enough already.

Even the Nielsen report, Mr. Speaker, found that this program was not only worth saving but worthy of improvement. The Nielsen report found that 90 per cent of those assisted by this program found employment upon graduation. Not only is this higher than the national average, but something very much needed.

The New Democratic Party calls upon the Government to restore the PSE Assistance Program in the interests of fairness and justice for aboriginal people in Canada.

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

STUDY OF BILL C-22—SENATE'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on May 6, 1987, this House adopted Bill C-22 which concerns the pharmaceutical industry. It cost the House $22,173 to hear 100 witnesses. On May 12, 1987, the Liberal majority in the Senate decided to challenge the principle of this Bill and to hear 200 witnesses, although the most important of these have already been heard before the House committee. The Senate will be spending $315,337 just to delay royal assent for Bill C-22.

And by the way, the Senate's itinerary has been planned, what a coincidence, along a route with the very best first-class hotels. The Senate is losing its credibility. The question of Senate reform will be discussed by the provinces and this Government between now and 1988, and meanwhile, the attitude of 43 Liberal senators who to all intents and purposes are defying this elected Government and thumbing their noses at taxpayers' money, this attitude will certainly be stimulating for certain proponents of Senate reform. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Senate, that repository of knowledge and wisdom, is still living in the shadow of the Liberals.

LITERACY

NEED FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ACTION TO OVERCOME ILLITERACY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the difficulties faced by those who cannot read and write result in missed opportunities to work and provide a livelihood for oneself and family, the inability to function in today's ever changing and complex society, and feelings of rejection and poor self-esteem.

It is estimated that four million to five million Canadians are functionally illiterate, with up to one million individuals who cannot read or write whatsoever. Most affected by this unfortunate reality are, among others, immigrant women, Canada's indigenous peoples, and our country's poor.

For the illiterate, every-day tasks of shopping, associating products with labels, banking, and finding directions, become an unwanted adventure of desperation and frustration. Yet these difficulties need not exist to such a great extent. Canadians have become sufficiently aware of the concerns confronted by the illiterate, as nine out of ten of those recently polled termed the problem which warranted immediate action either "serious" or "very serious".

It is time for the federal Government, in co-operation with provincial Governments, school-boards, training centres, and labour organizations, to implement a national reading and writing campaign to eliminate the handicaps confronted by the illiterate. It is our collective responsibility to welcome these Canadians into a society which has shut them out for far too long and to harness their talents and aspirations in the building of a better and more prosperous Canada.

THE ARTS

MUSICAL COMPETITIONS—CUT IN GRANTS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVISE DECISION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Last April 28, Mr. Speaker, seven days after the opening of the Canadian musical competitions the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) advised this volunteer and non-profit organization that its federal Government grant would be cut by $100,000. Coming as it does at the beginning of regional auditions in the 10 provinces of Canada, in which 3,000 young Canadians will participate, this grant cut-back is totally unacceptable and jeopardizes the national finals scheduled from June 27 to July 6.

As a result of this decision, Mr. Speaker, the music competitions of Canada will no longer be able to help finalists pay for their transportation expenses to take part in the national finals.

I urge the Minister of Communications to revise this decision which affects thousands of participants from coast to coast and strikes hard at all men and women in this country who are interested in the classical music apprenticeship of young Canadian boys and girls.

ENERGY

COST OF LITRE OF GASOLINE IN TORONTO AND MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who daily seems to be showing his inability to deal with Canada's energy problems.

This morning, a survey published in La Presse reported some disturbing statistics on the price of gas in Canada, and more specifically in Montreal and Toronto.

I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—who washed his hands of the Gulf refinery affair and is doing the same for Dome—whether he intends to repeat this approach and let the oil multinationals, including Petro-Canada, sell gas at ten to eleven cents more per litre in Montreal than they are charging in Toronto.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to consider all the so-called points the Hon. Member is trying to make, since they are entirely unfounded. As a former Minister of Finance in the Quebec Government, he ought to know that as far as prices are concerned in this country, the responsibility is shared by a number of authorities: the provinces, the Canadian Government and various departments.

The agencies concerned investigate such measures on a regular basis, and if people feel their rights have been abused, these agencies are ready to do everything they can to help.

POSSIBILITY OF MULTINATIONALS SELLING LITRE OF GASOLINE AT HIGHER PRICE IN MONTREAL THAN TORONTO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the survey published this morning shows that in Montreal, regular gas is 52.8 cents per litre, while in Toronto it is 41.7 cents.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister's reply is unacceptable, since the problem goes beyond the borders of a single province.

I want to ask the Minister, and I don't want him to tell me it is because different taxes are involved because even when we consider the provincial tax, the difference is still 5 cents a litre, I want to ask the Minister: Will he let the multinationals set a double standard for Canadian drivers by charging 5 to 6 cents more for a litre of gas in Montreal than in Toronto?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in Canada the price of gas is established first of all according to the value of the commodity itself, plus federal taxes, which are the same across the country, and provincial taxes which vary from province to province. Furthermore, the price is established in terms of local competition and the distance of gas stations from the refinery.

Mr. Speaker, that is why prices are not uniform across this country.

DEPARTMENT'S MONITORING OF PETROLEUM MARKETING SYSTEM IN QUEBEC

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, since I cannot get an answer from the Minister of Energy, may I direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

On November 5, 1986, I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to explain why the price of gasoline was higher in some regions of Quebec than in other regions of Canada. He said that his Department was monitoring the issue and he would probably report to the House. Has the Minister completed his monitoring and when is he going to act to protect the motorists in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Competition Bureau has undertaken, in response to a six-person request, a formal inquiry into the petroleum marketing situation in the Province of Quebec.

I think I need to remind the Hon. Member that if he is talking about price controls on gasoline in the Province of Quebec or in any other part of Canada, he must know that that matter falls within provincial jurisdiction. There is no power in the federal Government to put in a price-control mechanism, if that is what the Hon. Member is requesting.

SALE OF DOME PETROLEUM TO AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It seems that while the Government is allowing consumers to be ripped off at the pumps, it is giving away our natural resources to foreigners.

In a poll conducted by the Minister's own Department, 77 per cent of those surveyed said that the Government should try to keep our oil and gas companies owned by Canadians, that they should not be sold off to Americans. Why is the Minister of Energy thumbing his nose at Canadians and allowing an oil and gas company, such as Dome Petroleum, to be sold to an American company that 100 per cent owns the company trying to buy Dome Petroleum and to which this Government is giving its okay?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether, in the first part of his question, he means to say that the Government of Canada should have the authority to set the price of gas across Canada. I wish he would answer that.

Second, as far as Dome is concerned, we explained repeatedly that the company was in considerable financial difficulty, and this is known well beyond our borders. It was above all the interventionist policies of the previous Liberal Government that led to Dome's present difficulties. It was your policies that caused the problem.

This Government wants to ensure that the 3,000 people now working for Dome and company reserves as yet untapped at the present time will be respectively working in the sector that now belongs to Dome and used to meet our energy requirements in Canada.

[English]

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, this Government is worried more about what Washington is thinking than it is about what Canadians are thinking.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government smoothing the way for Amoco Canada to buy Dome Petroleum without allowing other bids to be made?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard anyone make so many false statements in such a short sentence.

The Government ensured that Dome was able to consider three bids, three purchase offers, and those in charge of Dome have selected the offer they feel is favourable for Dome, its shareholders and its creditors. In the days to come, the latter will decide whether or not they agree with the proposal made by Dome's board of directors.

Mr. Speaker, unlike what the Hon. Member claimed, the Government is not concerned about what Washington will say but about the situation at Dome, and we took action to ensure that proposals were made to help save Dome.

SITUATION OF QUEBEC CONSUMERS

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Over a year ago I said that the Conservative Government's shut down of the Montreal Gulf refinery would have the following consequences: first, unwarranted loss of jobs in Quebec; second, more acute underproductive capacity in Quebec; third, handouts to the multinationals and certain friends of high finance; and fourth, I said that Canadian taxpayers and Quebec consumers would pick up the tab as a result of reduced competition in Quebec. Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: the April report of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources indicates that the profits of oil companies in Montreal are twice as high as in Toronto. Does the Minister realize that Quebec consumers are now paying for the shameful action of his Government?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Quebec leader of Canada's socialist party that in Montreal East there are now more people working in the petrochemical sector than at the time when, from the Conservative benches, he was telling us what to do.

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should tell that to the unemployed Gulf workers and to Quebec consumers who, as a result of Conservative mismanagement, now have to pay twice as much as Torontonians do. What concrete measure does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources intend to take to correct this injustice towards Quebec consumers?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that my colleague has not visited the Montreal region for quite some time. I would be rather surprised if indeed the price of gas in Montreal were twice as high as in Toronto.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, first I had the pleasure of being in Montreal yesterday with some of the Gulf workers and, second, I would urge the Minister to have a look at the figures put out by his own officials. Does the Minister intend to issue clear and specific instructions so that Petro-Canada will intervene and restore healthy competition in Quebec, in the interest of all Quebec consumers?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have anticipated the wishes of the Hon. Member. This Government gave Petro-Canada a mandate to operate on the market in accordance with Canadian legislation so as to promote competitiveness.

OIL COMPANIES

PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Consumer or Corporate Affairs, depending on where his interests lie. As a result of the Conservative Government's negligence and failure to act in the Gulf refinery affair in Montreal East, for which we have Mr. Toupin and Mr. Masse to thank, today we have the following situation: consumers in Quebec are paying 11 cents more for a litre of gas. The Minister said earlier in his answer to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides that he was prepared to order an investigation if six people in Quebec asked for one. Is the Minister willing to do so, because six people have indeed written to the Investigations Commissioner to ask for an investigation? Furthermore, I am sending a letter to the Minister by messenger, right now. Considering the section in the Act that authorizes the Minister to request an investigation as well, is he prepared to acknowledge his responsibilities and defend the interests of Quebecers against the oil multinationals and to order an investigation as requested today of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should have been awake while I was responding to his colleague. I said the inquiry is under way. I have the letter in question. It was delivered to me by Canada Post.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's reply confirms what people have been saying since the shutdown of the Gulf refinery. What the Government is admitting today, and in fact, my colleague filed his request for an investigation several days ago, if today the Minister confirms that an investigation is being made, it just means that the truth is out and the Government was wrong.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday, the Automobile Protection Association condemned the attitude of Petro-Canada, which claims to take the lead in these things and works hand in glove with the Governement in raising prices in the Eastern Townships and the Quebec City region. Would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, instead of sitting there doing nothing, be prepared to pick up the phone and call the President of Petro-Canada and tell him: Sorry, but Petro-Canada has to protect the Canadian consumer; you are entitled to make a profit but not by exploiting the consumer and applying outrageous price hikes.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question myself while answering the Hon. Member's question. If his assumption is that the situation in Quebec has become a problem as a result of the closing of the Gulf refinery, I would like to point out, first of all, that there are more people working in this industry today than—

Mr. Malépart: That is not true.

Mr. Masse: —when Gulf closed down. I would also like to remind him of one thing, Mr. Speaker: If one refinery was closed, what about the three refineries that were closed by the Liberals a few years ago? Let him answer that one, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will wait until it is quiet because I want to talk about money. The Minister is aware that the creditors of Dome Petroleum are meeting in Toronto this afternoon. One of the creditors has been quoted as saying that the offer by Amoco to Dome just will not fly. The Toronto Dominion Bank has been quoted as saying that it remains unacceptable.

Has the Government prepared for the eventuality of the bankruptcy of Dome and the cost of jobs in western Canada, or is the Government prepared to get involved in this matter and meet with the banks and some of the creditors concerned to try to facilitate an acceptable Canadian settlement of this matter?

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that his Department took a public opinion poll and that 77 per cent of the people who answered believe that the Government should act to prevent the takeover of Canadian owned oil companies by foreign owned firms? Did the Department take that poll? If it did, why is the Government taking this rather peculiar hands-off approach to the collapse of Dome?

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should know that Canadians are getting sick and tired of his laissez-faire attitude on the Americanization of Canadian industry. Canadians cannot accept that big banks, fast-talking lawyers, and well-heeled executives should alone and unilaterally carve out Canada's energy future.

In light of the predictions of a possibility of a collapse in the current negotiations on Dome, the Minister's hands-off attitude, and the statement by the President of Investment Canada that he has no mandate whatsoever to investigate other bids which are available for Dome, can the Minister tell the House who will act in Canada's interests versus private interests should this bid fail?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that Canadianization has increased in all sectors since 1984, including energy, be it with respect to control or to ownership. I am still wondering why the previous Government which had spent billions of dollars with that in mind did not fare any better with its interventionist policies.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is an intelligent man. It is about time he woke up and realized that he occupies a front bench seat as a Minister of the Crown and has to take his responsibilities. Talking about the previous Government will not solve Canada's energy problems.

POSSIBILITY OF OTHER BIDS FOR DOME

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Minister's hands-off policy, in view of the fact that to this time, as far as we in this House know, no government initiative whatsoever, direct or indirect, has been taken to examine any other potential bids, and in view of the fact that there is a prospect of failure with regard to the bid now facing us, will the Minister undertake to instruct the President of Investment Canada, despite the fact that it is not within his mandate, to be in touch with those other Canadian oriented companies which are interested in making bids on Dome?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: It is in the interest of consumers.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

IRRADIATION OF FOOD—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For some time Health and Welfare Canada has been considering changing the classification of irradiated food from an additive to a process.

Since the all-Party Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs tabled its report today recommending that food treated with ionizing energy continue to be classified as an additive to ensure that proper labeling and testing occur, will the Minister give the House and Canadian consumers his assurance that his Department will follow these recommendations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the committee also requested that the Government make a formal response within a 120-day period. It is, of course, our intention to do that. I would like to leave the details of that response until Cabinet has had time to consider it.

As the issue of labeling affects my Department we will, of course, continue with the practice of ensuring that foods so treated are labeled.

IMPORTATION OF IRRADIATED FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since his Department is already responsible for the labeling of irradiated foods, and since the Science Council report indicates that irradiation may be used by more Third World countries for their exports of some fruits and vegetables aimed at North America, will the Minister assure Canadians that as those foods are irradiated they will be labeled before entrance into this country?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the Hazardous Products Act the Department requires that foods be labeled to indicate additives. It is the position of the Government now that irradiation constitutes a sort of additive and would have to be so identified.

IRRADIATED POTATO PLAN—INVOLVEMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and is also with regard to irradiation. He will no doubt be aware that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited currently has in place a plan to test-market Canadian irradiated potatoes in Hamilton.

Given the concerns expressed today by the all-Party committee and the fact that the Conservative Chairman herself said that she would not eat irradiated potatoes, will the Minister order Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to put a hold on any tests of any potatoes in Hamilton or anywhere else in Canada until it gets a go-ahead from the Government?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this has already been done at least three weeks ago.

Will the Minister issue a directive to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited that Hamilton will not be used as a test point for irradiation zapping, and will he further direct AECL to ensure that no test takes place until it gets the go-ahead from the Government?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Either the Minister does not recognize the value and success of the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program, or he is indifferent to the continuing cycle of poverty and despair that faces many Indian and Inuit young people today. Why is he deliberately closing the door to education and a better life for Indian and Inuit young people by capping the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, neither one of the Hon. Member's assertions in his preamble is accurate. We recognize the success of the program. We recognized it by creating an additional $12 million to be added to the post-secondary budget this year. That is some $94 million that is provided for some 12,000 students attending post-secondary educational institutions in Canada.

The growth rate from 1983-84 to 1987-88 is over 200 per cent. The reason that the interim measure had to be taken was to assure that there would be fairness and that the funds provided would be used in an equitable manner, to provide post-secondary education to Indian and Inuit students.

Mr. Manly: The program was growing because it was working and more students were able to take advantage of it.

FUNDING OF PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Why is the Minister closing this program at the very time when Indian communities recognize the possibilities available to them in post-secondary education, when more Indian and Inuit young people have come through school and are able to take advantage of it? Why does the Minister cut it off now when the program is beginning to work? Is that not an example of bad faith, to fund a program until people begin to take advantage of it, then shut it down?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to shutting down a program. An increase of $12 million over budget is not shutting down a program. Some 12,000 Inuit and Indian students are taking advantage of post-secondary education. The expenditures are some $94 million.

The interim changes were made so that those who are benefiting now and those who wish to benefit in the future will be able to do so. Ten years ago the program was funded at a level of $8 million. Today it is funded at $94 million. I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is a program in existence which will benefit Indian and Inuit students.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SENTENCE IN QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY MURDER CASE—CALL FOR REFORM OF CRIMINAL LAW

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. The decision on Monday that Denis Lortie, a man who has been convicted of murdering three and wounding 13 others in a machine-gun attack, will be eligible for parole in some seven years is undoubtedly going to underline and reinforce the concerns of many Canadians who are calling for the return of the death penalty.

Bearing in mind that for many weeks now his Department has had the report of the Sentencing Commission, will the Parliamentary Secretary give the undertaking to the House that the Government will move immediately to reform criminal law sentencing? Will he give us the assurance as well that the Government will not wait until the end of the capital punishment debate to move to reassure concerned of Canadians in this area?

[Translation]

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Member for his question. Indeed, the Sentencing Commission tabled its report a few weeks ago, and the Department is completing its examination. But, as you know, there will have to be consultation with the provincial Ministers of Justice, in view of the fact that the administration of justice comes under provincial jurisdiction. Moreover, the Minister has every intention of seeking the advice not only of provincial Governments, but also of federal and provincial Government corrections representatives and all individuals and groups interested in this important matter.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE AGREEMENT—NEED FOR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last evening in the committee the Minister of Employment and Immigration made what can only be called a shocking confession on behalf of the Government, that there are absolutely no plans and there is no interest in preparing plans for the adjustment of all those communities that will be affected under a free trade deal. Yet the Government's own studies, prepared by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, have pointed out that thousands of workers will be displaced or dislocated across the country upon the signing of a free trade agreement.

Why is the Government totally ignoring its own studies and totally ignoring its responsibility to prepare some form of adjustment program that will provide help for those workers in those communities who will face dislocation and turmoil as a result of the Government's policy to negotiate a free trade agreement?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry had been present yesterday at the Committee meeting, he would have understood me completely. I said that manpower adjustment is a continuing problem: every year, 2.4 million Canadians are involved in job displacement and avail themselves of the various Government programs to achieve employment adjustment. Therefore, it is completely independant from the trade negotiations with the United States.

Also, I said yesterday that nobody is in a position to foresee exactly what individual area of our economy would be affected, should we ever reach an agreement with the United States. Studies have been made. I suggest it would be somewhat premature, before any agreement is reached, to indicate in which industry we should apply adjustment mechanisms. I can assure my hon. friend that if we need to define these industries, we shall do so. We do it already for 2.4 million Canadians. Therefore, instead of trying to frighten people, I think we should use the mechanisms that exist already. In my opinion, there is no problem at that level.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can take the opportunity at some point to introduce the Minister to his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, whose Department has prepared a series of studies that demonstrate that in the automobile industry, the food processing industry, the appliance industry and in the agricultural sector there will be major dislocation of thousands of jobs, affecting communities in all those sectors.

When the Government states that this is the most important economic policy it has, surely it should recognize that it will need special programs to prepare those workers whose jobs will be lost or affected. Why is the Government doing absolutely nothing to prepare for that outcome? Is the real reason that the Government does not want to admit that there will be jobs lost because it will show that its policy is bankrupt?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to my hon. friend that he would rather try to scare Canadians than have them believe that we are right.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RETURN OF CORRECTLY ADDRESSED MAIL

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I have been receiving many complaints from constituents that mail is being returned to the sender marked "Address Unknown". In each case, however, the mail was correctly addressed. I have been shown examples of such mail.

I have with me today a package that was sent from my office to a constituent, which has been returned in a completely mutilated condition more than a month after being mailed. In fact, the correct name, address, street, city and postal code are on both sides of the package. Will the Minister tell us when we can expect the people at the Post Office to learn how to read and provide the service for which people are paying?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Would you believe tomorrow?

The question of the service of the Post Office is very serious. As the Marchment Committee pointed out, there are very serious problems in the Post Office we are trying to address. I have indicated that service has to be the very first priority. In that regard, a large national consulting firm has been hired and will report on a quarterly basis to Parliament and to the public.

Mr. Benjamin: That will cost the public.

Mr. Andre: Socialists apparently are not interested. It will report on a quarterly basis to Parliament and to the public about the service of the Post Office. It will be an independent outside audit.

In the meantime, I think complaints such as that of the Hon. Member should be directed to the Post Office so that the employee, supervisor, or manager who is responsible for that kind of shoddy service can be dealt with in the appropriate fashion.

FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Today I received petitions which represent 100,000 Canadians who indicate their opposition to the Draconian measures included in the Forget Commission Report on unemployment insurance. We have had commissions and studies. We have had committees studying the commission reports.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have reports on the committees studying the commission reports.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to put it to the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: —and call upon him to stop playing politics and start—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —dealing off the top of the deck with the unemployed. Will the Minister stand in his place now and not only reject Forget's major recommendations but also announce improvements and strengthening of the unemployment insurance program when he makes his statement tomorrow?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): At noon tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is as decisive as the Liberal caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: He is not that bad, is he?

Ms. Copps: Gallup all the way, John.

Mr. Nunziata: Rise and fall.

Mr. Blaikie: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair cannot help but note there seems to be an attempt here to kill two birds with one stone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member would put his question.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I want to apologize to the Minister. He is not that bad.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Now, having softened up and buttered up the Minister, maybe he will see fit to give me a positive response. Is the Minister prepared to stand up now and tell us that tomorrow, when he makes his announcement, he will not only be setting himself up as the great hero who saved the unemployed from Forget but he is prepared to make some positive changes along the lines suggested by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which was dominated by Tories?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall not move as much as the polls have moved since yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Seriously, I want to tell my hon. friend that tomorrow I think will be an important day for U.I. I will try to give the best answer we can to the unemployed in the country, in those circumstances where we actually have unemployment in the country.

OECD MEETING—SALE OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED WHEAT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will address my question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. I note the Leader of the New Democratic Party has disappeared overnight. I thought he might have been here to take a bow, but he is not.

An Hon. Member: Tell us where rabbit John is? What burrow is he hiding in?

Mr. Foster: Yesterday the OECD declared its opposition to the dumping of surplus grain onto world markets at subsidized prices. I wonder if, as a result of this agreement to which the United States was a party, the Minister has a commitment that the United States will not raid our traditional Canadian markets as it has been doing in the Russian market for wheat and in the Saudi Arabia market for barley. Has the Minister, as a result of this proclamation yesterday in Paris, received a commitment from the United States that it will stop this raiding of our traditional markets?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, what did happen yesterday as a result of the OECD meeting and the communique is that for the first time we have 24 of the OECD countries unanimously making a declaration on agriculture. I think that is very good news.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I also think that the Prime Minister needs to be congratulated for the lead he has taken, as well as the two Ministers of this Government who attended that meeting.

CAIRNS GROUP MEETING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister points out that the Prime Minister should receive a bow, too. The Prime Minister noted that the Cairns group on grain is going to be meeting here next week. Since the two warring parties are the EEC and the United States, which is party to the agreement yesterday, is the Minister going to invite representatives from the EEC and the United States to be participants in the Cairns group meeting next week? Since they are the principal adversaries in this trade war, can there really be an effective or useful meeting without those two warring parties? Surely we cannot have a peace treaty without the two combatants in the war.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the first meeting which was held in Cairns, Australia, last August—hence the name "the Cairns group"—is made up of 14 so-called fair trading agricultural nations. It involves more than just grain. Thailand, for instance, is very interested in rice, and many of the developing countries are also there as a result of sugar and sugar-beets.

At the Cairns meeting both the United States and European Community were there as observers, as was Japan. Those invitations have been extended so that those countries and the European Community can be there and make their presentations as a result of being observers at the meeting. So they are certainly included. However, the prime focus of the Cairns group is to get 14 of the trading countries which believe we trade fairly in agriculture together so that collectively we can take that message to some of the other countries we think are causing the problems, namely, the European Community, the United States, and Japan.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SUPPORT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board with respect to the OECD Accord and grain wars in the world and the fact there is no timetable as of yet and no penalties if anyone breaks this Accord. Those are to be worked out during the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations.

I want to ask the Minister the specific question which some farm organizations asked me this morning. They are concerned to know whether or not we have some guarantees that the European Common Market and the United States, which are the main culprits in the trade war, will be the ones which begin to roll back farm support massively before countries like Canada are expected to cut back on support to farmers. Can we have the guarantee from the Minister that we will not be cutting back on farm support to farmers until there is at least a level playing field around the world, if even at that time?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, that has been our position as a Government and that is the position of the farm community. We see the support we are providing for our farmers as being in reaction and in order to keep our farmers in business, as a result of the silliness which is going on between the Europeans and the Americans.

I will even go one step further and say that Canada in the past, in the early 1970s, participated by itself in reducing its over-all production. We have no intention of getting into anything like that either unless we have complete agreement and assurance from the other grain exporting countries that they are prepared to do the same.

GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. Another concern voiced to me this morning by some farmers and farm organizations was with respect to the fact that we know the Government, at least publicly, has not made a commitment yet to a deficiency payment next fall. We know at least that that is the public position.

Can the Minister assure the House that in no way will the agreement reached in Paris yesterday jeopardize, influence or have any impact on the Government's thinking as to whether or not there will be a deficiency payment next fall? Can the Minister assure us that what happened in Paris yesterday will not influence the Government with respect to whether or not there will be a deficiency payment next year that might guarantee farmers a final price that is no lower than they received for last year's crop?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member should have prefaced his question by saying that what happened yesterday in Paris at the OECD meeting is a step in the right direction and that it is some good news.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: With regard to the support the Government has shown for agriculture, it is substantial. It has increased dramatically. It is up 350 per cent.

The Minister of Finance said yesterday: "Just because we have called for a truce that doesn't mean that the support programs are going to disappear because you cannot leave the farmer high and dry". That is a very strong commitment on behalf of the Government from the Minister of Finance to support farmers in the future.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence for a question and a supplementary. That will close off Question Period.

DEPARTMENTS' EMPLOYMENT RECORD

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State of Canada and the Minister of National Health and Welfare my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Departments of these two Minister have a major, basic, fundamental responsibility for the needs and concerns of the disabled and the handicapped, how does the Government account for the fact that in the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of National Health and Welfare only 1 per cent of the employees are disabled and handicapped—in other words only one in every one hundred—while the national average is six in every one hundred? Why is the policy of the Government: "Don't do as I do, do as I say"?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not authorized to answer for the two departments mentioned by my colleague. Yesterday however the Hon. Member quoted figures which are false and do not reflect reality. On the basis of the figures I am about to give him, I would ask him to check again the figures he has today because yesterday he said that Employment and Immigration Canada was one of the departments with the smallest number of handicapped employees. I would remind my colleague that 708 people are registered as handicapped employees working for the department. This amounts to 2.54 per cent, definitely more than the standards set by Treasury Board.

So in the case of the two departments he mentioned today I would ask him to check his figures before making the kind of statements we have just heard.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: I am shocked that the Minister would say that the figures from the Challenge report which his Department gave to the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped are incorrect when those are the very figures his Department gave to the committee. It is shameful for him to deny that now.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as House Leader take immediate steps to establish the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped as a permanent standing committee of the House of Commons so that it will have the credibility and the status it needs to carry out its own recommendations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion put forward by the Hon. Member is indeed a worthy one. However, it is one of those types of things that are normally transacted during the course of the discussions that take place among House Leaders. Perhaps the Hon. Member might want to ask his House Leader to raise it at our next meeting.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what legislative menu the Government intends to bring before the House in the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be another allotted day. On Monday the House does not sit. Tuesday will be another allotted day. On Wednesday we will be proceeding with third reading of Bill C-37, followed by Bill C-57.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I want to raise a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: What is it this time?

Mr. Masse: I believe many of my colleagues on this side of the House clearly heard our colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie use, in our exchange of questions and answers, words which seem quite unparliamentary to us.

I can understand that Hon. Members may have exchanges on personal views, but as to the form, Mr. Speaker, I have always shown respect for my colleagues in the House and each Member is entitled to expect to be so treated. I believe the words used by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) were clearly unparliamentary and, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, he should withdraw them.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. First I would point out that the Minister rose to attack my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie in his absence, which is somewhat unusual.

Second, I would draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Minister made a general attack without indicating in any way whatever the specific words which, in his opinion, my colleague allegedly used to insult him. I would suggest that the Chair ought not to accept that general accusations be made without specifying what they are all about; this has never been done.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in direct reply to my colleague's suggestion that a question of privilege cannot be raised when a Member is not in the Chamber, the Hon. Minister raised the question of privilege at the first available opportunity. If my friend's point is valid, then a question of privilege on items which take place in Question Period could simply be avoided by leaving the Chamber. I think the Minister has done the correct thing.

Waiting until the "blues" are available or until the other Member is available for comment are other ways of handling the matter. However, I do not think it should be thrown out simply because the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has left the Chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raised an important point, a complaint concerning the language used by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Unfortunately it was impossible for the Chair to hear clearly the words which are the subject of the complaint, but naturally when the Minister and, I think, a few other Members have heard a few words which obviously gave rise to this question, consequently—

Perhaps I can review the "blues", and if I think it is necessary and, in the interests of fairness, I would, of course, hear the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie. Perhaps for now Hon. Members will let the Chair review the "blues". I will return to the House at an appropriate moment.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that I have received a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary will have an intervention to make, which may prove helpful. I will now hear the Hon. Member.

INACCURATE INFORMATION IN ANSWER TO QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is with respect to a question on the Order Paper which was answered yesterday. I refer to Question No. 95 in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). The question reads:

> For the period September 4, 1984 to March 4, 1987, did Members of Parliament travel outside of Canada at the expense, in whole or in part, of any department of the Government of Canada and, if so, for each Member and each trip what was the (a) sponsoring department (b) purpose (c) destination (d) cost?

Included in this answer, Mr. Speaker, is an expense item listed in my name, in relation to my attendance at the Forty-First Session of the United Nations General Assembly, in the amount of $25,721.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

An Hon. Member: A typical "liberal" spender.

An Hon. Member: One would think he was the Prime Minister, spending that amount of money!

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to think that the Government would provide me with that amount of money for one week; but, I can assure you, if I spent that amount of money for a one-week trip, I would have to get my closets expanded.

While I can laugh about this matter now, it was not very funny this morning when it was flashed across the country as the lead news item. It caused great concern to myself, my family, and my constituents.

My office telephoned the Department of External Affairs regarding this, and the response received was, "Oh, well, that's too bad. Evidently, your name was confused with that of another Member, who had attributed to him expenditures totalling $25,720." But even in the confusion there was still attributed to me $1 more than that attributed to the other Member.

It is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker, when this type of erroneous information is allowed to slip through. It can do nothing but cause problems for the credibility of Members of Parliament, in addition to causing embarrassment to Hon. Members, their families, and their constituents. Some tightening up in respect of the compilation and dissemination of this information is required.

I do not disagree for a moment with the right of Members of Parliament to have this information, or the right of the press or the Canadian public. All I ask is that the right information be brought forward.

In my particular case, according to External Affairs, my expenses in respect of that week amounted to $2,183. So, as one can see, it is not even a question of a misplaced decimal.

I ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, for a public apology, and I ask that the correct figure be printed in Hansard as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Before hearing from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), let me just observe that it is regrettable that this error has taken place. It is something that may have stemmed from over-enthusiastic investigative reporting.

In any event, we shall hear from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council on the matter.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague that a serious mistake has indeed been made. On behalf of the Government, I rise to admit that an administrative error has been made, in respect of which I offer our sincere apologies to my colleague.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I am advised that the correct amount is indeed $2,183. At the present time, I have no idea as to how such an error could have been made. The fact that a great number of figures are provided without error does not make any less grievous this particular mistake.

We regret that it has caused the Hon. Member and his family embarrassment, not to mention the time involved in straightening the matter out. Given my personal friendship with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), I am particularly regretful that this error occurred. I can tell the Hon. Member that I expect to have the official correction ready for tabling tomorrow; or if not then, at the first available opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for his response. I trust that the response given will completely satisfy the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—the Sydneys as well as his family and his constituents.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LEAKS OF INFORMATION FROM IN CAMERA COMMITTEE MEETINGS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) on April 28 and May 5, as well as the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) yesterday, May 13.

I will first briefly recapitulate the sequence of events underlying the first question of privilege, as I understand them.

For the benefit of those Hon. Members who were unable to be here yesterday, as well as the public, let me say that this ruling relates to alleged leaks of information from committee meetings held in camera; that is to say, in absolute privacy.

There have been several incidents over the last few months involving such leaks brought to the attention of the Chair. The Chair considers such leaks a very serious matter.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) a few days ago, when this place operates at its best, it operates on the basis of mutual trust. When Hon. Members take part in what is an in camera meeting—and it is not for the Chair to say when and under what circumstances such meetings are held; that is a decision for the respective committees—they have to be assured that what takes place in confidence will be held in confidence.

That, I am sure, is a sentiment shared by all Hon. Members, and it is that which the Chair intends to address in its ruling. I invite all Hon. Members, some of whom were unable to be here when the arguments were given, to reflect upon that, and I also want the public watching the proceedings of this place to understand exactly what it is the ruling relates to.

To briefly recapitulate the sequence of events, on March 24 last the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development met in camera to consider a draft report to the House. The committee resolved—and remember, the committee was in camera—following a recorded vote, not to report the draft report to the House at that time.

On the following day, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), a distinguished member of that particular committee, and an individual for whom Hon. Members have a high regard, made a statement under Standing Order 21 criticizing the decision of the committee. In the course of his statement, he said:

> In an anonymous office tower, behind closed doors and safely tucked away from probing microphones, four Members of Parliament abrogated their responsibilities to aboriginal people.

He then went on to disclose the names of four members of the Committee who, in his words, "voted to block the report".

On April 1, at another in camera meeting, the Committee considered a motion to report the action of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River to the House. The report was adopted on April 7 and later presented to the House. On the presentation of the report the House was formally seized of the matter.

[English]

The matter raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South yesterday concerned the publication in the press of certain proceedings which took place at an in camera meeting of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources. In this case, as well, the matter was formally reported to the House by the committee. The Hon. Member provided the Chair with the relevant press reports, which constitute the only available evidence. The committee did not attempt to identify the source of the leak.

On April 28, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake raised the matter arising from the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development as a question of privilege. Because of the absence of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, who was engaged on other parliamentary business, argument was postponed until May 5.

The presentation of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake was very straightforward. He argued that the unauthorized disclosure of the proceedings of an in camera meeting of a committee could be damaging to Members and constitute a breach of privilege. He supported his argument with an apposite citation from the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice.

The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River, in a defence of his action, claimed that he did not violate the intent of the in camera meeting and that a clear distinction should be made between Votes and Proceedings. He argued that with the taking of a recorded vote, the in camera meeting was in essence suspended.

I noted at the time that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River, who as I have commented is a well-respected Member of the House, did not take the position that a Member was entitled to reveal anything which goes on at an in camera meeting just because he or she did not happen to agree with it.

It is important for the Chair to make it very clear that that was not the thrust of the defence of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River. He was not saying that a particular Member ought to be able to reveal anything that happens in camera if he or she feels strongly about it; that was not the Hon. Member's position.

As I say, the position was that there was a difference, as he argued, between the substance of the discussion which had been taking place in the in camera meeting and the vote which took place in the in camera meeting. However, there is no doubt on the facts, the vote took place within the in camera meeting.

He argued that with the taking of a recorded vote, the in camera meeting was in essence suspended. As I say, I noted at the time that he did not take the position that a Member was entitled to reveal anything which goes on at an in camera meeting just because he or she did not happen to agree with it.

The Hon. Member was supported in his argument by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who is a senior Member of this place and enjoys the respect of all Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior requested the Chair to rule "that the revelation of a recorded vote under any circumstances at all is not the same thing as the publication of a committee's proceedings". He also expressed doubt that such a revelation could damage the reputation of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake in any event.

We had two Members arguing that there was a distinction between the substance of what took place—the discussions and the vote. Again I reiterate that neither Hon. Member was in any way, as far as the Chair is concerned, taking the position that in camera proceedings ought not to be respected just because a Member does not agree with what goes on there or, as I suppose could be implied in this case because both Hon. Members are very concerned about native matters, depending upon the seriousness of the discussion and the nature of the issue involved.

The Chair first had to decide, therefore, whether a recorded vote taken at an in camera meeting of a committee was not, as the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River and the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior claimed, a part of the in camera proceedings.

I must say that the two Hon. Members argued their points very effectively. However, the Chair has been forced to the conclusion that when a committee resolves to meet in camera, the intention of the committee is that all deliberations which take place at that meeting must be confidential unless and until it resolves otherwise. It is clear that the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development did not resolve that its sitting should be resumed in public for the purpose of taking the recorded vote. The committee did in fact resume its sitting in public subsequently, but not before the vote was taken. I cannot therefore accept the argument that there is a distinction between votes and proceedings in this context and in the manner argued by both Hon. Members.

The next question to be decided by the Chair is whether this particular disclosure of what took place at an in camera meeting constitutes prima facie evidence of a question of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake quoted a sentence from the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May, which is repeated in identical terms on page 154 of the Twentieth Edition. The citation reads:

> The publication or disclosure of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of draft reports of committees before they have been reported to the House will, however, constitute a breach of privilege or a contempt.

[Translation]

In the British House of Commons, this principle has always been strictly enforced. As recently as 1968 a British Member was ordered by the House to be reprimanded in his place by the Speaker for having revealed to a journalist confidential evidence received by a committee of which he was a member. In 1976, The Economist was censured by the Committee of Privileges for having published the confidential report of a select committee.

[English]

Canadian practice in this area is less easily defined, although Citation 628(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition indicates that the publication of the proceedings at an in camera meeting of a committee would be an offence with which the House could deal upon receiving a report from the committee.

There are two rulings of October 21, 1975 and May 6, 1977, dismissing complaints arising from the disclosure of confidential proceedings of committees. These are two Canadian rulings of this House. I should point out that the circumstances of these two cases were not unlike those of the case raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South, but rather different from those of the one raised by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake. In the 1975 case the complaint was dismissed because it was not directed against any specific individual or group.

In the 1977 case the complaint was directed against the press, and Mr. Speaker Jerome said the following in the course of his ruling:

> It concerns me, however, that the motion appears to attack the press for publishing a confidential document but does not attack ourselves as Members of the House for our own attitude in respect of our own confidential documents. Since it misses that point it misses something I think most important with respect to the privileges of the House.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) referred to this ruling when he was speaking to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South. I must agree that it does not become the House to attack the press without reviewing the part that some of us as Members of the House have played in revealing the confidential proceedings of certain committees. One can hardly blame the press for publishing leaked information. It is far more important that we, as Members of Parliament, should address our own responsibilities in ensuring that such leaks do not take place.

I believe it is my duty on your behalf to state in categoric terms that when a committee resolves to meet in camera, all the deliberations which take place at such a meeting, including any votes which might be recorded, are intended to be confidential. All Members attending such a meeting, together with any members of the staff assisting the committee, are expected to respect the confidentiality of the proceedings which take place at that meeting. This place can only operate on the basis of respect for its rules and practice and of confidence and trust among its Members.

At this point I am prepared to rule that I do not feel I can accord precedence over other business to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary South. My reasoning, as I think Hon. Members will have divined, is the same as that which inspired Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling of May 6, 1977. We should not attack the press before determining the measure of responsibility that attaches to ourselves as the possible source of the leaked information.

The question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake involves other considerations. The elements which influenced the Chair in dismissing the two complaints raised on October 21, 1975 and May 6, 1977 are not present in this case. The complaint of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake is directed at a Member of this House on the basis of undisputed facts.

The Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development was meeting in camera and a recorded vote was taken before the committee resumed its sitting in public. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River made a statement in this House under Standing Order 21 criticizing the decision of the committee and revealing the names of four members who participated in the vote. These facts were duly reported to the House by the committee. In these circumstances, it would be very difficult to dismiss the complaint of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake. I, find, therefore, in view of the evidence which has been presented to the Chair that this matter should be accorded the necessary precedence.

I should explain, in case the practice is not generally understood, that the Chair is not judging this issue. Only the House itself can do that. The Chair simply decides on the basis of the evidence presented whether the matter is one which should take priority over other business. For those who may get lost in these procedural terms, it just means that this matter is now deemed by the Chair to be sufficiently serious to be put to the House in precedence over anything else the House might be doing at this time. That is all it means. The point is that it is the House that is to make this decision.

The next step is normally the introduction of a motion by the Member raising the complaint. Such motions usually propose the referral of the issue concerned to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure; not back to the committee from which the complaint came, but to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. The House might then decide to take no further action until the committee has reported. However, I point out that the motion is debatable and the effect of my ruling is to allow it to be taken into consideration immediately, with or without debate. I might also point out that the usual practice has been for the House to allow the matter to go to the appropriate committee without debate but, as I say, I am saying that if any Hon. Member feels compelled to enter into debate, then that is the right of any Hon. Member.

Again, so far as the Chair is concerned, the vigorous arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior and the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River strove to draw a distinction between the vote which took place in camera and the substance of the discussion. I want to emphasize once more that if the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake proposes the motion and it goes to committee, that is the question which the committee is to decide. It has been the sense of the Chair that you cannot divide these two, but it is also important for all Hon. Members to remember that in the vigorous arguments put forward by both Members in defence of the application neither of them at any time was advancing the notion that in camera meetings are not to be respected. I ask Hon. Members to keep that in mind.

It is important that this matter be considered in the context of the position taken by both Hon. Members, but it is also very important, in the view of the Chair, that this serious principle be addressed because it goes beyond the question of any one particular individual Member; it is a matter of grave importance for all of the committees that are operating in this place.

I therefore invite the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake to move an appropriate motion.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, in view of your findings, I move:

That the matter of disclosure by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River of a recorded vote taken at an in camera meeting of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, as reported to the House by the said committee on April 28, 1987, be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the ruling that you have made today is, in my view, an extremely important one. It is an important ruling for at least two reasons and probably many more than that, Sir.

First, I think that Hon. Members as a result of your ruling will have to give quite careful consideration as to whether it is in the best interests of Parliament and in the best interests of our work as publicly elected representatives to do our work in camera. The decision to go into an in camera meeting will have to be given much more careful consideration by each and every committee. On many occasions it has been done without the degree of thought and consideration that such a decision deserves. Is it really necessary and is it so important that Members work behind closed doors in strict confidentiality? That is the first point I want to make, and your ruling, I think, will impose on those who chair committees and who participate in decisions of committees that they give much more thought to this decision.

The second aspect of your ruling is that for the first time in the Canadian parliamentary tradition the due importance of in camera meetings has been underlined by you. I think Hon. Members in the past have perhaps considered that which goes on in in camera meetings too lightly but henceforth they will not be able to do so.

I come now to the third point. What still has to be considered by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, as I understand your ruling, is whether there is a distinction between proceedings and a recorded vote. You indicated quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, that all of this went on within an in camera meeting and, therefore, the rules of in camera as outlined by Beauchesne are applicable.

It does seem that there is a bit of an anomaly herein that when you record something in an in camera meeting, that recording of a vote, of a division, among the members must be given confidentiality. That strikes me as a bit of an anomaly and I think it needs some sorting out.

The experience learned in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is that committees cannot be sloppy in their procedures. Obviously there was a bit of sloppiness that took place at that particular meeting with which we are dealing. When an Hon. Member who was distressed by the decision that had been made within the committee called for a recorded vote, it was at that very moment that members should also have taken the precaution and the necessary step to ask the Chairman and the Clerk of the committee that the in camera situation be changed and it become a regular meeting. In fact, this very item was subsequently discussed in the committee, and that is now the practice.

The motion which will be referred to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure will establish important new precedents for the Canadian House of Commons. The lessons that can be learned from this for the work of committees will be important in the future. Committees will have to proceed with much more care about going in camera. If there is going to be a recorded vote they will have to take the necessary procedural step to make sure they are no longer in camera when the recorded vote is taken.

I thank Your Honour for the decision.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member. Is the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) rising to speak?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that since the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) is in our Party and we do not object to the motion, it should be put without any further debate so we can get back to the Opposition Day debate.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who is, as I said earlier, a distinguished senior Member of this place. His comments are helpful.

The question that I now have to put to the House is: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Holtmann) agreed to.

Committees of the House

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL FOR STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let me say, just before we get back to Orders of the Day, that there have been discussions among the Parties and I wish to put a motion with respect to travel in order that the committee involved may make the appropriate arrangements. I move:

That the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada, specifically:

1) Toronto, Ontario, May 20 to 22, 1987, inclusive;

2) Victoria, Vancouver, Alkali Lake and Meares Island, British Columbia, May 31 to June 3, 1987, inclusive; and

3) Edmonton, Alberta, June 3 to June 4, 1987, inclusive; to hold public hearings concerning the committee's ongoing study on alcohol and drug abuse and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

ADOPTION OF MOTION PRIOR TO END OF DEBATE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether my point is a point of order or question of privilege but I did want to reflect on the ruling made at the lunch break. I do it with some trepidation because I hold you in very high regard.

I think the statement, which obviously is not available to me in the "blues", had something to do with assuming that there was unanimous consent or there is deemed to be unanimous consent in the House regarding the motion before the House. I would not argue at all that at the time of debate there was unanimous consent. I think there was that spirit of oneness among the Members and I am not speaking to the substance of the motion at all. There may well be unanimous consent throughout the day regarding the motion. However, I wonder if, by assuming at one o'clock that there is unanimous consent when there are still several hours of debate left, and since we do not even know who is going to be speaking to the motion, it would not be considered premature to consider that there is unanimous consent or there is deemed to be unanimous consent to the motion before the debate is over. Are we not proscribing the rights of other Members who have yet to speak on the motion if, before the debate is finished, there is deemed to be unanimous consent?

While I do not want to disagree with you, I do draw to your attention the fact that an early decision regarding unanimous consent has the potential of restricting debate and restricting the rights of Members in the debate. Therefore, I would like to have a clarification of the remarks you made since, as I said, I do not have the "blues" at my disposal.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member who has raised a legitimate point. What happened just before one o'clock was that a suggestion was made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that in view of the way the debate was going there might be some disposition in the House to take the position then that, at the end of the day, it would be deemed that this motion receive the unanimous support of the House. The point that the Hon. Member is making is that this is probably not the usual practice. It may be that some caution should be exercised when such a suggestion is made, especially if it is made relatively early in the debate on a motion. I think that is the sense of the Hon. Member's observations, and of course there always is the difficulty that if a motion like this should be accepted by the House early in debate, some Hon. Member who was busy attending to some other parliamentary duty might have felt that if he or she had been in the Chamber the matter might have gone a little differently.

However, the position the Chair before one o'clock was simply this. A suggestion was made by an Hon. Member. The Minister of the Crown concerned was in the Chamber. Both the Minister and the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), who seemed to be quite clearly speaking for the Official Opposition, indicated support for the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill. At that point, because this House is the master of its own proceedings and in view of the fact that the Chair could not see that there was anything out of order about the procedure proposed, the Chair listened carefully and I think properly made it clear what was being proposed, and then clearly put the question to the House. Therefore I think procedurally what took place is proper.

However, the Hon. Member raises a question which perhaps we could all keep in mind, that is, that while this was unusual and it may well be resorted to again, there is of course the caveats which the Hon. Member has pointed out. I am sure all Hon. Members will benefit from the comments made. However, I certainly have to find that what was done was done within the procedural rules and according to the will of the House, as the Hon. Member pointed out. I thank the Hon. Member for his observations.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DESIGNATION OF SOUTH MORESBY AREA AS NATIONAL PARK

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House calls upon the Government of British Columbia to co-operate in setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a National Park Reserve; and

Further, that the federal government provide for compensation to those interests affected by such a National Park Reserve; and

Further, that the House confirms its intention to ensure the continued participation of the Haida people in matters affecting South Moresby.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, concerning what the House did by unanimous consent in those moments prior to the lunch break, I want to say that I regard it as one of the highest moments in the life of this Parliament and in the life of the House of Commons, it being one of those occasions when we put our hearts and minds together and unanimously express the will of the House of Commons of Canada regarding the preservation of South Moresby and the creation of a national park reserve in that area. I am very glad that we were able to do that and I call the attention of all Canadians concerned about the preservation of that area to the fact that the House of Commons has acted in this way. I think it is a very important moment in the life of the House of Commons.

It is more than appropriate for us to have done this as a Parliament today because of the particular historical context in which we find ourselves, both as it concerns the recent report of the World Commission on Environment and Development chaired by Norwegian Prime Minister Madame Brundtland, and also with respect to the historical context in which we have found ourselves for some time now. I would like to say a word about that. Perhaps because we have agreed that the motion shall be deemed to be passed at the end of the day, I will be freer to be less argumentative and more able to put what we have done here today in a larger framework.

I believe that at this point in human history we are faced with a unique set of planetary factors which call for a transcendence of all traditional western political philosophies and ideologies. None of these ideologies, whether they be capitalist or socialist, whether they have been production oriented or profit oriented, which have competed for so long for the minds of men and women are now adequate to the emerging reality of what has popularly become known as planet earth, although in my view obviously some views are more capable of meeting the challenge than others.

I refer to the moment that we are in by quoting from the World Commission on the Environment and Development, the chapter entitled "From One Earth to One World". It reads:

> In the middle of the 20th century, we saw our planet from space for the first time. Historians may eventually find that this vision had a greater impact on thought than did the Copernican revolution of the 16th century, which upset the human self image by revealing that the Earth is not the centre of the universe. From space, we see a small and fragile ball dominated not by human activity and edifice but by a pattern of clouds, oceans, greenery, and soils. Humanity's inability to fit its activities into that pattern is changing planetary systems fundamentally. Many such changes are accompanied by life-threatening hazards. This new reality, from which there is no escape, must be recognized and—managed.

This is true in the physical sense that the prevailing view of economic growth, which is responsible in many ways for much of the clear-cutting that has already been done in all parts of Canada, needs to be transcended in order that the limitless thrust of this way of looking at things not bring us to destruction by its ignorance of the limits to the kind of growth that we have had so far, of the limits to the amount of pollution that the environment can take, for example, of the limits to the amount of resources that are readily available to us without environmental penalty, and finally, quite simply, of the limits upon systems and upon notions of our economy which seem to presuppose, and some even to require, infinite growth in a finite world.

We heard earlier from the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) about the spirituality, culture and traditions of the Haida people. I want to speak from the traditions of western civilization and talk about the philosophical roots in our own traditions of the problems that we face. It is important to recognize that much of the present dilemma cannot be separated from the limits of that view of nature which has complimented the establishment of what could be called the industrial paradigm, which is what I have been talking about, for the question of resources and of pollution is not just a question of limits of what nature can give and of what nature can take, but also of what nature should be expected to give and what it should not have to take. It is our whole approach to non-human creation which needs to be reflected upon at this point.

The critique of the modern world's attitude to nature has placed much of the blame for the exploitation of nature at the feet of Christianity. It is argued that the notion of man's dominion over nature derived from the creation story in Genesis is responsible for our present situation. This is no doubt partially true in the same way as many other modern attitudes can be traced to the selective expansion of a particular biblical theme at the expense of other themes and at the expense of the biblical stories from which the attitude is derived. The creation story is a good example. If you will permit me to revert to my other vocation I would like to quote from Genesis, Chapter 1, Verse 9, which I think is relevant to the South Moresby situation. It reads:

> And God said, "Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear." And it was so. God called the dry land Earth, and the waters that were gathered together he called Seas. And God saw that it was good. And God said, "Let the earth put forth vegetation, plants yielding seed, and fruit trees bearing fruit in which is their seed, each according to its kind, upon the earth." And it was so. The earth brought forth vegetation, plants yielding seed according to their own kinds, and trees bearing fruit in which is their seed, each according to its kind. And God saw that it was good. And there was evening and there was morning, a third day.

In this Creation story we read that God created those things over which humans are said to have dominion before the creation of human life, and they are called good even before human life is added to them, which seems to suggest that non-human creation has value in the eyes of the Creator independent of its use to human life. God saw that it was good, that it was valuable, that it had value independent of the existence of human life. This is a way of reading the Creation story which needs to be emphasized. The fact that it has not been so emphasized is not so much the fault of the story itself as it is of its various interpreters down through the years.

Likewise, it is quite out of context to notice only the dominion of humanity without noticing the dominion of God and his intentions for the dominion of humanity. There is a unique role for human life in creation insofar as humans are able to understand and explain the rest of creation in a way that is not possible for other creatures. The power which this gives to humanity over the rest of creation is certainly a form of dominion, but it is not the case that this dominion could ever have rightly been interpreted as a licence to see the whole world as a mere instrument of human goals.

Thus, it is possible to admit that the concept of man's dominion over nature has found support in biblical teachings while at the same time suggesting that this dominion is more appropriately understood as a form of stewardship rather than exploitation. Human life is responsible, not only for itself but, as the image bearer of the same God who created and loved the rest of creation, human life is responsible for the well-being of non-human creation as well. The separation of human life from nature which human responsibility implies is rightly criticized by those who believe that we need to begin again to see ourselves as part of nature, as part of a larger whole with which we must live in harmony if we are both to survive and to be more fully human. Human vanity, aided and abetted by advances in technology, has led us to imagine that by dint of scientific and technological achievement in everything from medicine to pesticides, and now to genetic engineering, we could put ourselves beyond the place where we would have need of conforming to given natural realities.

This has been a mistake, but it would also be a mistake to imagine that somehow we can throw off our own nature and abdicate our humanity by simply leaving nature to itself. Even organic farmers have to weed the garden. We need to find a view of nature and ourselves which enables us to have a proper relationship which does justice to human responsibility for creation and for others, and to nature's own intrinsic worth as another aspect of the world intended by the Creator.

Nevertheless, it is true that the focus on human life and its fulfilment, which is characteristic of biblical religion, has tended to separate man from his environment in a way that has made possible the despoliation and depletion of that which was entrusted to the stewardship of humanity. A new view of our dominion over nature is needed, not just to save nature but to save ourselves, for our dominion over nature, however interpreted, is not total and we threaten our own survival as we ignore the extent to which it is also true that in our relation with nature, nature has some dominion over us.

We need a view of the environment which sees human life as included, albeit in a special way, in the realm of nature and in which the idea of stewardship takes it meaning from a variety of places. This includes the traditional views of aboriginal peoples toward creation but also from what those of us who are Christians learn about true humanity in Christ, the servant King.

Human dominion is a form of service to all creation and to our fellow human beings. This is where I suggest we have the beginning of a view adequate to the ecological crisis which we now face and a view which should provide the framework for our debate today. Within that framework we will see that for too long we have been dominated by the false dichotomy of jobs versus the environment. While I emphasize that it is not necessarily the case that jobs and the environment are in conflict, let me say to those who are still captive to that false dichotomy that even when they are sometimes in conflict, it is a question of doing the right thing and making the right decision with respect to questions of inter-generational morality and what kind of future and planet we leave to those who come after us.

I remind the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), whom I do not see as an antagonist but as one who has an interest in biblical matters, that one of the complaints against St. Paul in Rome was that Christianity was putting people out of jobs. There was the complaint that people who made their living from making graven images were put out of work by the arrival of this new religion called Christianity. But St. Paul did not say that anything that does away with jobs must be bad so he will abandon the entire evangelical project. He said that the right thing must be done and the problem of employment can be addressed at the same time while certainly not drawing back from that which he thinks is right simply because it may endanger jobs.

In any event, that problem does not exist with South Moresby because more than enough provision has been made in the proposals put forward by the federal Government to the British Columbia Government in terms of financial compensation and alternative areas to be logged. We are not talking about a conflict between the environment and jobs.

The Brundtland Commission repeatedly raises the question of sustainable development. We are talking about a need to finally accede that whatever new economic development opportunities exist either in Canada or in the developing countries, they must be forms of economic development which respect the absolute and vital need to pass on a sustainable environment to future generations. This not only involves a question of aesthetics so that people with money can visit South Moresby and enjoy the scenery. It concerns an integral part of the planetary biosphere.

I listened to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) talk about tourism possibilities. It is true that people who are concerned about economic development should keep in mind that tourism possibilities only exist to the extent that the magnificent ecosphere which people want to see is preserved. This is true not only of South Moresby but of the four mountain national parks, which I hope the Minister will keep in mind in his deliberations on the proposed expansion of Sunshine Village.

In the final analysis, whether it is tourism, agriculture or another sector, one cannot build a sustainable human future on a deteriorating environmental base, whether it is soil erosion in respect of agriculture, or the preservation of Moresby out of respect for the aboriginal claims of the Haida people or for tourism purposes.

I can only make one final argument because I have a commitment to speak in Winnipeg tonight. I regret that because I understand there will be an opposition motion tomorrow on the Brundtland Commission, a debate in which I would very much like to take part. However, other members of my Party will participate in the debate and we look forward to it.

The question of South Moresby has an international consequence in terms of Canada's position of leadership in the world with respect to environmental matters. The Brundtland Commission pointed out that the developing countries are finally able to begin developing or exploiting natural resources that we developed or exploited long ago.

A good example of those natural resources are forests. There has been much concern expressed internationally about the rate at which tropical rain forests in the Amazon are being cut down, some suggest at a rate of 600 acres a day. The preservation of these forests, which have sometimes been called the lungs of the world since they produce so much oxygen, is a concern not only to those areas but to the whole ecosphere.

What right will Canadians have to go to the people of Brazil and other countries that have a standard of living that is far below ours and consume perhaps one-eightieth of the world's energy, to ask them not to cut down their forests in order to save the planet if we in Canada, with our affluence and sophisticated political and economic society, cannot bring ourselves not to log Lyell Island or South Moresby? The Minister of the Environment and other Canadians would never be able to go to an environmental conference without putting a bag over their heads. They would not be able honestly to request other nations to respect the limits of the earth if we in Canada were not in a position to show that kind of leadership.

We are not just talking about a local decision. We are not talking about a decision made in British Columbia or in the South Moresby area or, for that matter, a decision made here in the House of Commons of Canada. We are talking about whether at this point in human history Canada is going to take a step in the right direction or whether we are going to be part and parcel of that inertia to which the Brundtland Commission referred, and which, if it is not overcome, will see the day when our generation will be regarded—if there are future generations to regard us—as people who turned a blind eye to our moral responsibility to creation and to the people of the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being no questions and comments, we will resume debate. Before I recognize the next speaker, however—

ALLOTTED DAY S. O. 82—DESIGNATION OF SOUTH MORESBY AREA AS NATIONAL PARK

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House calls upon the Government of British Columbia to co-operate in setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a National Park Reserve; and

Further, that the federal Government provide for compensation to those interests affected by such a National Park Reserve; and Further, that the House confirm its intention to ensure the continued participation of the Haida people in matters affecting South Moresby.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on the motion he has put forward today. It would be hard to find enough words to describe the perseverance, patience and imagination of the Hon. Member in his pursuit of what he believes is the right future for the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The news that South Moresby could have a happy ending comes, of course, as a great relief. Recognition must be given to the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for the fine effort he has put into the negotiations, showing the readiness of the Government of Canada to entertain negotiation and find the necessary money in order to proceed with the implementation of the commitment, which was definitely much more than a good and sound principle of government. I think if this matter does have a happy ending, the name of the Minister will be remembered for a long time, and quite rightly so.

In the discussion of this particular potential area as a park, one very important factor emerges, which has been mentioned previously and one I would like to underscore as well, that is, the importance of recognizing the land claims of the Haida Tribal Council, because it is through this process of recognition of land claims, giving jurisdiction and management of these lands to the Haida people, that permanent stability and protection could be secured for these lands. That was the first lesson I learned when I became acquainted with this issue in 1984. It was put to me by Miles Richardson, the Chief of the Haida Tribal Council, a position he still occupies, as somehow the key to the solution of this particular issue. I do not know whether in the negotiations between the Minister and the Government of British Columbia the question of land claims, is paramount, but as I stand here I am convinced that in the long run the solution lies in ensuring that the aboriginal people of this area become the stewards and administrators. The long term responsibility for the management of these islands should be given to them in perpetuity because it is their land.

Another factor which comes to mind in this debate is the question of compensation, an issue which I am sure is a most contemporary and crucial item on the agenda in the negotiations. The loggers have to be compensated for the loss of jobs over a period of time. Solutions must be found for the logging companies which have been given, at least in the past, the indication that this would be an area which could be logged.

I never understood why land planning of British Columbia over the last three decades was worked out in such a manner as to provide so little elbow room for the Government of British Columbia to offer alternative logging areas if and when the need arose and if and when native claims would be made. It seems to me that a good part of the problems lies with the present policy of land use as implemented by the Province of British Columbia and that in future a number of potential problems could be anticipated and resolved by a revision of the present land use which gives to forest exploitation such a tight schedule, which does not permit certain flexibility and a slowdown in that exploitation if and when situations such as this do arise.

When it comes to the matter of compensation, it seems to me that compensation funds sought not to be taken from the operating budget of Parks Canada as is the experience of Parks Canada with respect to compensation for the Pacific Rim. Between this year and 1989, Parks Canada will be deprived of roughly $25 million in order to pay compensation for timber rights in the Pacific Rim National Park. The result is that it creates limitations in the funds available to Parks Canada to run the existing network. Programs have to be reduced and sometimes even postponed in order to accommodate this hefty requirement.

Another lesson which could be learned from this South Moresby experience is that the compensation should be made by way of a special allocation by Treasury Board with a cabinet commitment to the cause that it would not expect the operation of Parks Canada to be curtailed because of suddenly having to cough up a substantial sum in compensation. In other words, the compensation ought to be a sum of money that is provided in addition to the normal budget of Parks Canada.

Those who have spoken before me have said very eloquently what South Moresby is all about. I only want to add that in order to qualify as a natural world heritage site an area must meet at least one of four criteria which have been established by UNESCO—just one. South Moresby, this fantastic archipelago, meets three of them, namely, it is of biological significance; it is of geological significance; and it is unique to the earth's evolutionary history. It could also qualify because it is a cultural world heritage site on account of the Haida culture which, as Hon. Members know, is not only well regarded and well respected at home but it is so abroad as well. I am told that there are only one dozen sites in the world that at the present time qualify as both natural and cultural world heritage sites.

I would like to return to the history of South Moresby. We have seen that the value of public pressure and the role of individual citizens and organizations have been extremely important. The efforts over the last 14 to 15 years by environmentalists as individuals or as groups and by native aboriginal groups have been important in registering and developing pressure on the respective Governments, both in Victoria and here in Ottawa.

The latest pressure that was brought to bear and which stands out in our collective memory is with respect to a caravan, the Save South Moresby Caravan, a train which travelled from coast to coast in March of 1986, if I remember correctly. It was organized jointly by the Canadian Nature Federation and the Save South Moresby Committee. It consisted of a train that gathered support throughout the country. It collected money and picked up as it travelled enthusiasm and financial contributions, small and large, as well as emotional expressions that go with an issue such as this. It culminated in Vancouver with an unforgettable march on a sunny Saturday afternoon from the railway station down to the harbour.

There were a number of figures, costumes and expressions of support by groups that participated in this march, which gave folklore and colour to the entire event. I remember that at that time a substantial number of signatures were collected in a very bulky volume of petitions which the organizers eventually gave to the Minister of the Environment of British Columbia, thus registering the fact that from coast to coast Canadians cared about the creation and the formation of this park.

The questions we must ask are the following ones. Why do we all get involved in an issue such as this? Why do we have a day such as this in the House of Commons? Why is there this fantastic unanimous support in the House? I suppose it is because national parks are created for Canadians, for their benefit, education and enjoyment, as is stated in Section 4 of the National Parks Act. In that same section there is a notion that national parks ought to be maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations. I suppose that is why we all get excited about it and why we are so keen. It is because we see here something that can be transferred from the preceding generation through ours to the next generation. It is a real act of carrying a torch of beauty and enjoyment, of intangible values that one cannot express in dollars. One cannot measure in dollars the excitement that one feels when one sees wildlife at its fullest, as is the case in South Moresby.

Creating a national park is more than just creating a new entity or drawing a certain boundary on a map, making the necessary ceremonial speeches and the cutting of a ribbon. It is much more than that, which is why many of us in the Chamber, and I am sure the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) as well, get upset when we hear that some national parks at times are under pressure and that pressures are being developed on existing ones, as is the case in Banff. In Banff recently pressure has been brought to bear with respect to developing a ski resort at Sunshine which is well known for its sensitive meadows and delicate ecosystem which ought to be preserved. One must ask: Why is this happening? Why are members of the Alberta caucus not supportive of the Minister of the Environment in ensuring that the pressure that is being generated here will be contained and that this development will not take place?

We are worried about newspaper reports with respect to what is happening in Banff. The pressure is not limited only to Sunshine, although it is the most recent experience. It goes back to my time as well and is just not limited to recent time. There was pressure for logging in Wood Buffalo Park and for mining in North Yukon Park. There is a constant effort to encroach into these limited areas which we have decided, for better or for worse, should somehow be outside the scope of human exploitation. I know that it is extremely difficult to resist these pressures, but it has to be done. That is why in the debate on South Moresby, as others have already done, we must raise a cry to stop the logging.

As we are talking here today I am told that the logging is still taking place. The fantastic forests that have been so well described by others are being reduced in size. The whole quality of the South Moresby area could be seriously endangered, if not wiped out, if the logging on Lyell Island, for instance, is not stopped since it has a profound effect on the visual quality of the area. So when we are debating South Moresby and the possibility of adding a park, we are also debating the necessity of retaining the integrity of what we want to acquire as a new area. But, as well, we want to retain the integrity of what we already have in inventory in terms of national parks in Canada. The integrity of our existing parks must become a firm commitment. We cannot permit any exception to the commitment, the policy, to retain the integrity of existing parks.

The Sunshine proposal carried on the front page, in addition to the names of the proponents, the name of Parks Canada, thus giving the impression that the proposal was put forward under the auspices, in part, of Parks Canada.

This debate today is in relation to the acquisition, as a national park reserve, of a fantastic site, a site proclaimed by UNESCO and a site admired by leading figures in Canada and abroad. Its preservation has been defended by successive governments, as well as being raised as an issue by the Haida people in the debate in respect of native land claims. In that context, it is put forward as a symbol of Canada's commitment to retaining, where possible, the richness of its wilderness areas.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, were I not to put on record a passage from page 163 of the Report of the World Commission on the Environment and Development, a commission headed by Madam Brundtland, the Prime Minister of Norway. Under the heading "Scope for National Action", the following sentence appears:

> —governments—should review programmes in areas such as agriculture, forestry, and settlements that serve to degrade and destroy species' habitats. Governments should determine how many more protected areas are needed, especially in the spirit of how such areas can contribute to national development objectives, and make further provision for protection of gene reservoirs (for instance, primitive cultivated varieties) that may not normally be preserved through conventional protected areas.

In those words there is a message for Canada. I join with those who have preceded me in this debate in congratulating the Minister on his efforts. I wish him success. It is a success that will be shared by many others, both inside this House and outside this House. As well, it will head off confrontation that will otherwise take place on these islands. As Miles Richardson has indicated on more than one occasion, if the logging operations do not stop, there will be confrontation.

It would be a red feather in the cap of the Hon. Minister if one day soon he can announce in this House that the negotiations proclaiming this area as a a national park reserve have been successfully completed. It is a subject that has generated a great deal of public interest and support. I feel sure that the Minister has the ability to succeed in this area, and from the bottom of my heart I wish him the very best of success.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? There would appear to be no questions or comments.

The Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), on debate.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this morning, my colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), stated quite clearly the Government's commitment to seeking fair and equitable settlements to the problems of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

The concerns of the Haida people respecting Lyell Island and the South Moresby area demonstrate the importance of the participation of the aboriginal peoples in matters that affect them. The cultural and religious values that the Haida place on the South Moresby Island bespeak clearly of the necessity of involving the Haida people in the resolution of this question.

The federal Government, and I as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, have assured the Haida people that their concerns will be considered in discussions that may occur in reaching a solution to the problem.

In establishing national parks, the federal Government, since 1973, has recognized the interests of native people by creating national park reserves. National park reserves are distinct from national parks in that traditional native activities are provided for in such areas, with no prejudice to aboriginal claims. The legislation stipulates quite clearly that a national park cannot be formally proclaimed until there is a settlement of the aboriginal claim.

This, Mr. Speaker, as we all recognize, is a difficult issue. There are differing views. It is important that the views of the Haida people be known and understood.

In seeking a fair and equitable solution in respect of settlements with aboriginal people, this Government has taken some important initiatives. In December of 1986, we announced a revised comprehensive land claim policy, a policy that acknowledged the special relationship to the land that the aboriginal peoples have always claimed as the basis for their cultural distinctiveness and special aboriginal status.

In fact, it was a court case in the Province of British Columbia that prompted the development of the initial policy on comprehensive land claims, in 1973. The current policy is designed to deal with claims based on aboriginal title to lands. It seeks to resolve such claims through the negotiation of settlement agreements based on aboriginal title.

The objective of the land claims policy is to obtain certainty with respect to the use of the land. Although it is not legally obliged to do so, the Government has been willing to enter into negotiations with aboriginal groups with claims to aboriginal title.

A land claims agreement is a typical exchange transaction. One party, the claimant group, brings its interest in the land to the table, and in respect of that interest the other party, the Government, is prepared to bargain. The precise nature of the aboriginal interest, the content of aboriginal title, in most cases is uncertain and controversial.

Whatever the interest may be, by virtue of being at the table, the parties are at the heart of the transaction. There is an implied willingness to negotiate.

In a land claims agreement, the claimant group exchanges vague and uncertain aboriginal rights for specific treaty rights and benefits.

Since 1973, the Government of Canada had insisted that all aboriginal rights, title and interests in and to the settlement areas, be extinguished in exchange for rights conveyed or granted back by the Crown through the settlement. This approach, commonly referred to as blanket extinguishment, was regarded by many aboriginal groups as offensive and unacceptable. They pointed to the recognition and affirmation of existing aboriginal rights under Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 as being inconsistent with the extinguishment of aboriginal rights through claim settlements.

Concern was also expressed that other rights, such as rights to language and culture, might be affected adversely by a blanket extinguishment.

In 1983, we had the all-Party report of the Special Committee of the House on Indian Self-Government, which report recognized the problem. As I look around, I see some Members who served on that committee, most notably the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

That committee recommended that the claim settlements should be limited to those matters specifically being negotiated, with the result that the revised policy no longer requires a blanket extinguishment of all aboriginal rights in comprehensive land claims settlements.

First, we explicitly acknowledge that only those land-based rights, those rights encompassed in the term "aboriginal title", are subject to negotiation in the new comprehensive claims process.

Other aboriginal rights which may exist are not at issue and will remain unaffected by the comprehensive claims agreements unless identified explicitly by the parties to be part of the negotiations.

The revised policy also proposes two alternatives to extinguishment which may be considered in negotiation. The first would involve the conveyance to the Crown of the aboriginal title claimed through all the settlement area but without the requirement for the use of the terminology of extinguishment. In exchange, the aboriginal groups would, as they do now, receive a grant-back of lands or land-related rights in the agreed upon areas.

The second alternative would involve conveyance by the aboriginal group to the Crown of the aboriginal title to certain specified lands within the claimed area. In this alternative, aboriginal title would remain undisturbed in other lands selected by the claimant group. I should like to reiterate that aboriginal rights which are not related to land and are not under negotiation would not be affected in either case outlined.

Thus, the federal Government is committed to the resolution of comprehensive land claims through the negotiation of settlement agreements. We believe that negotiation rather than litigation on other adversarial approaches is the best means whereby the interests of aboriginal people may best be represented and served.

In any settlement area the continuing interest of claimants must be recognized. Agreements are not simply based upon land and cash or cash transactions. They should provide the means and establish the mechanisms whereby claimants can enhance their cultural and social well-being and promote self-reliance and economic development.

The Government has indicated that it is prepared to discuss a wide range of issues in comprehensive land claims negotiations. Some of the issues which may be discussed are: land selection, self-government, environmental management, resource revenue sharing, hunting, fishing and trapping rights, as well as other topics.

The policy of the federal Government on self-government acknowledges the desire expressed by communities to exercise greater control and authority over the management of their affairs. The objectives of this policy are based upon principles which we all understand. Local control and decision-making must be substantially increased. Flexibility is needed to recognize diverse needs, traditions, and cultures. Greater accountability to community must be achieved.

Self-government in the context of comprehensive land claims is tied closely to the need for the continuing involvement of aboriginal peoples in the management of land and resources. It is also linked to the development of self-governing institutions which recognize the place of aboriginal people in Canadian society.

In seeking to settle aboriginal claims to land that falls within provincial boundaries, the co-operation and participation of provincial Governments are essential. The federal Government has strongly encouraged the participation of provincial Governments in the negotiation of settlements involving areas of provincial jurisdiction or provincial lands and resources.

An opportunity will be provided to aboriginal groups to consider the implications of developments which may take place and to identify, where appropriate, the conditions under which such activities should be provided. Under the policy, interim protection measures can be planned and agreed to for a specified period of time at the outset of the negotiations rather than devised in an ad hoc manner as has been done in the past.

The comprehensive claims process has many important features which relate to the general issues under debate today. It seeks to provide clarity of rights of aboriginal people. It seeks to provide certainty to aboriginal and non-aboriginal groups in respect of land ownership and management. It seeks to provide fair and equitable settlements through a process of negotiation which brings major parties affected by the claim to the negotiating table. As well it seeks to protect both aboriginal and non-aboriginal interests in the process.

Aboriginal peoples were the original inhabitants of the country. Their claims derive from their original use and occupancy of the land. Their aboriginal rights flow from their relationship to the land. They cherish their culture. They cherish their heritage. It is incumbent upon non-aboriginal Canadians to understand the aboriginal perspective and to respect it.

In recognition of the Haida claim which affects the South Moresby area, the federal Government would initially establish a national park reserve. Traditional native activities could continue, and the Haida people would be involved in all aspects of park planning and operations. While the establishment of a national park reserve would not of itself settle the Haida claim, the proposal would protect under federal legislation natural and cultural resources which are central to the Haida way of life. Moreover, a national park reserve would provide an important means for the Haida people to participate in the management of this key part of their ancestral homeland.

The creation of a national park reserve is something to which we all look forward. Again, the issue has diverse points of view. It is not as simple as some of us would initially believe it to be. However, as early as 1973, under the National Parks Act the creation of a national park reserve was recognized as being a way of protecting the aboriginal title until it could be addressed in another form and allowing aboriginal people—in this case the Haida people—to play an important part in the management of their land and resources, their ancestral homeland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment and pose a question to the Hon. Minister. I appreciate seeing the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) across the way, and I appreciate the fact that they have taken part in the debate. That is the way Parliament should work.

I should like to refer to a report in which I was involved, not in a big way. I refer to the report of the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline inquiry entitled: Northern Frontier,Northern Homeland. I had the honour of being a co-counsel along with Ian Scott, who is now the Attorney General of Ontario.

Mr. Justice Berger issued a report on April 15, 1977, or just over 10 years from which I should like to quote the following:

> The concept of native self-determination must be understood in the context of native claims.

It went on to refer to the Dene of the Northwest Territories, but the following comments could refer to any native Canadian:

> When the Dene refer to themselves as a nation, as many of them have, they are not renouncing Canada or Confederation. Rather, they are proclaiming that they are a distinct people, who share a common historical experience, a common set of values, and a common world view. They want their children and their children's children to be secure in that same knowledge of who they are and where they came from. They want their own experience, traditions and values to occupy an honourable place in the contemporary life of our country. Seen in this light, they say their claims will lead to the enhancement of Confederation—not to its renunciation.

Those words were very remarkable, especially when we consider that they were spoken 10 years ago. Perhaps if we had got on with the settlement of native land claims, we would not be in a position today where we have competing interests for land.

I recognize that the Minister is not responsible for Saskatchewan. He is a Minister for Canada but he does not speak for the Government of Saskatchewan. However, he took part in the constitutional debate recently. He is from Saskatchewan and very close to its Government. Of course he is familiar with the constitutional positions on native matters of every provincial and territorial Government.

What is the position of the Saskatchewan Government on native land claims? How does it differ from the position of the Government of Canada, if it differs in any way?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Government of Saskatchewan. However, in the best interests of accuracy, I must decline.

I should inform the Hon. Member that the entitlement discussions which are taking place between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan stem from an exchange of letters in 1979 between, I believe, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the former administration of the Province of Saskatchewan under Premier Blakeney. The entitlement was identified and the fulfilling of that entitled land, which had not been transferred after the signing of the treaties, would be drawn from Crown lands, the lands provided by the Province of Saskatchewan according to the Natural Resources Transfer Act of 1930.

Some transfers have taken place in the Province of Saskatchewan, not as many as we all would like. At present one, I know, is under discussion, namely, the Lucky Man transfer with which my colleague, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) is familiar. That band has been rooming and visiting with the Little Pine people for 100-plus years, I believe. Hopefully they will receive part of their entitlement very shortly. Regarding claims or entitlement, I can answer the Hon. Member's question regarding Saskatchewan, but I do not pretend to speak on behalf of the Government of Saskatchewan in the House.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, after nearly two decades in this place, I have come to realize that progress is never made in giant steps but little by little. When the Minister made reference to the revised comprehensive claims policy, I want to recognize, as he already knows, that there was some response to the report of the special committee and some response to the Coolican task force. We do have certain improvements. I would describe them as modest, but we are moving forward and that is important.

However, the Minister knows that in his claims policy there can still only be six claims negotiated at any one time. In the Province of British Columbia, 13 claims have now been accepted by the Government of Canada for negotiation. There are another seven that are being actively considered. The Minister has said with respect to British Columbia that he "hopes to discuss the policy with Ministers in B.C. and to propose more specific measures to ensure a more fruitful negotiation process in that province". I wish him well, Mr. Speaker. I want to encourage that undertaking. Specifically, though, has the Minister had these discussions? If so, how many of them? During the course of those discussions, if they have taken place, what proposals has he made and what response has British Columbia given?

Finally, what hope is there at all for the Haida people that their rights will be recognized and accommodated at some moment in time in the Province of British Columbia?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the real concern of the Hon. Member. I also believe that the changes are modest, that we will only know how successful those changes we propose and have implemented in comprehensive claims are after we have had an opportunity to proceed. As the Hon. Member is aware, we have one mandate in place for the Dene-Métis. Hopefully we will be negotiating with the CYI and Yukon Government before the middle of June. TFN is next on the list. The discussions I said I would have with the Province of British Columbia have not taken place. The one claim we are negotiating now that has been accepted for negotiation and is on stream is the Nishga claim. I hope to be able to address that in the time period of the other claims that are left, the CAM claim and the Labrador claim.

The reason six are prescribed, as the Hon. Member knows, is because of the resources and the expertise needed to enter into these negotiations, some of which have been going on far too long, some of them for almost 12 or 13 years. We do not have within the Department the ability to handle any more than that.

I will be discussing with Ministers in British Columbia in a more direct manner the British Columbia claims process when we come to British Columbia. All parties are involved in the other areas we are negotiating. Up to this time the Province of British Columbia has chosen not to negotiate. That is what makes the claims process in British Columbia very difficult. Again, and I have expressed this view, I find it more comforting, and I believe it is a more accurate reflection of the interests of all Canadians, if we negotiate rather than litigate. We are elected representatives who can be replaced. From time to time we are involved in negotiations, which is better than the adversarial litigation route where decisions are made by men and women, although they be very intelligent and well meaning, who are not responsive to the electoral process and the wishes of Canadians in the same manner as the Hon. Member and I are as elected Members. I hope we will be able to negotiate in British Columbia rather than litigate. To that end I will be having discussions.

I believe the initiative taken today in the creation of a national park reserve will protect the land until we are able to enter into meaningful negotiations on behalf of the Haida people and the claim that has been recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no more questions or comments, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate and it is a privilege to do so. I would like to reiterate the motion so we all know what the debate is about. It reads:

> That this House calls upon the Government of British Columbia to co-operate in setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a National Park Reserve; and
> Further, that the federal government provide for compensation to those interests affected by such a National Park Reserve; and
> Further, that the House confirms its intention to ensure the continued participation of the Haida people in matters affecting South Moresby.

The motion asks for co-operation from the Government of British Columbia. As the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said in answer to a question earlier today, those lands are provincial Crown lands and the federal Government could not move unilaterally into that area. The co-operation of the provincial Government is needed to make a national park.

Second, the motion asks that the federal Government provide compensation to the interests involved. This indicates there are interests affected. It is not an easy question. There are loggers there who have a legitimate interest. There are working people and there are native people who have an interest. The third part of the motion deals with protecting the great Haida culture and people.

There have been some fine speeches in this House today. I cannot duplicate those speeches. They had heart in them. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who opened the debate lives in a log cabin in the Queen Charlotte Islands, which is north of the affected area of South Moresby which is in the southern part of the Queen Charlottes. I visited the Member and stayed there. It is a magnificent part of Canada.

I spent a few days this weekend in your part of the country, Mr. Speaker, south of Edmonton just north of Calgary on the Prairie. It was the first time that I had ever visited the rural Prairie. That too is a magnificent part of the country. It is so different from the Queen Charlottes, which is an area of trees. What a wonderful country we have! Those are just two different parts of the country that have a completely different geography. If the Hon. Member for Skeena came from Toronto I think he would be a folk hero to the rest of the country. We have not made folk heroes in Canada yet, but in some ways the Hon. Member would qualify. He is a colourful Member of Parliament and an old friend of mine. We started our political careers together. He worked on environmental matters in the Queen Charlotte Islands when I was a young lawyer and visited him there. That is the first time I met him.

We heard a speech from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) with his normal magnificent eloquence. We heard a speech from the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) in Newfoundland. It is great to have someone from Newfoundland take part in this debate. He has a national park in his riding. We heard a very exceptional speech from the Minister. We also heard from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and that was very welcome. We heard from the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who has real credibility on environmental matters when he speaks in this House. No doubt we will hear from other Members.

As David Suzuki said, a modern politician has to be able to deal with environmental matters. It is one of the big issues of our time. A modern politician will be judged on how he or she can deal with environmental matters. They are not easy matters to deal with. They are often scientifically complex. You cannot get some of these issues into the twenty-second news clip because of their competing interests and technical facts. You also have to know something about what you are talking about on these environmental matters. They are issues of our time.

While I do not often admit it, I grew up in the suburbs of Toronto. I will just say that very softly. My mother and father used to take me to Niagara Falls for a picnic. It was about an hour and a half drive. It was always great to see the falls. There was a story this week that the spray of Niagara Falls was polluted and had carcinogenic properties. I just could not believe it. What kind of world are we creating? I hope the story is exaggerated, I do not know.

As a Member of Parliament I travelled throughout southern Ontario this past year and I am convinced that we have some incredible environmental problems in our industrial heartland which have to be tackled. I am also convinced that there is a terrific constituency in favour of retaining some of our wilderness area. That is why the issue of South Moresby Island in the Queen Charlottes on the far West Coast of Canada is of interest to the average Canadian.

I want to say for people who are watching on television that this is a live debate today. I will tell you why.

Mr. Gormley: You are not taped?

Mr. Waddell: No, I mean something else by that. Let me rephrase it. There is more going on than meets the eye. Some things are going on behind the scenes. By live debate I mean an evolving debate, and the issue is continuing. The Minister said during Question Period that he had been talking to his British Columbia counterpart just before Question Period. There is action, if you like, going on between the federal and provincial Ministers, as there should be. NDP, Liberal and Conservative Members of Parliament are participating, using whatever connections they have with their provincial counterparts. For example, we can put pressure on the NDP Leader in British Columbia to bring him on board. Our Conservative friends can put some pressure on through some of their Social Credit friends in B.C. The Speaker of the House of Commons cannot participate in this matter but people know that he has a deep-felt interest in the environment. He has colleagues and friends in British Columbia who are not without influence and who are deeply committed to this issue. These are Conservatives who are deeply committed to environmental issues. There was a dinner party for the Speaker in Vancouver about a month and a half ago. I had the privilege to attend and I met many people who were not of my political persuasion. Yet I could see they were deeply committed to environmental matters.

I say this to the Government of British Columbia: There is a big constituency out there of all Parties who want to see a solution to this problem.

We are moving. The Government of British Columbia announced that it will no longer require a 10-year period of logging on South Moresby. That makes sense because if you had 10 years of logging, there would not be many trees left. We are making progress even as we speak in this debate. That is what I mean when I say it is a live debate.

This issue is also important because it tells us what kind of Canada we are setting up and where we are going. I had a chance to speak the other day with a person who works in Ottawa for the European Economic Community. They have an office here. I talked to him and he said to me: "I love being in Canada". I asked why. We have lots of problems, unemployment, we do not own our own industry, sometimes I feel we are a colony of the U.S. He said: "No, I like it here because this is a civilized country". It is nice to hear the view of an outsider. I think what he would say in this debate is that to save South Moresby Island and create a national park would make us a more civilized country.

This debate has been going on for a while. I would not be human if I did not point out that on May 2, 1980, I had the privilege of introducing a Private Members' Bill in this House, Bill C-454, an Act respecting a national park on Moresby Island and its adjacent islands. I was not the only one. Later on my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena, introduced Bill C-45. He basically took my Bill and got all the geography right where I made mistakes. This Bill was one way of keeping the debate going in those years. I just want to read the following from the explanatory notes of Bill C-454:

> This bill would authorize the Governor in Council to set aside, as a National Park of Canada, any lands on Moresby Island.
> The southern portion of Moresby Island is internationally recognized as an outstanding biological, geographical, and cultural area.
> The coastline has exposure to both Hecate Strait and the open Pacific, with a rich variety of shorelines including sea caves, sandy beaches, tidal falls, hidden coves, shallow reefs, and safe anchorages. The area contains a remarkable variety of intact ecological systems ranging from the San Cristoval alpine environment to the fresh water Victoria Lakes and from the Skincuttle Inlet marine gardens to the bonsai forest of Gowgaia Bay.
> Moresby Island is home of the world's largest subspecies of black bear and the rare Peale's Peregrine Falcon. The unusual salt marshes are part of the migratory flyway of the Pacific Coast, and there are numerous highly productive salmon streams. The virgin rain forests of the area have Canada's largest and tallest Red Cedar, Sitka Spruce and Western Hemlock.
> Moresby Island was inhabited by the Haida Indians until the last century, and includes numerous archaeological and village sites. Most remarkable is the assemblage of carved cedar totems found on Anthony Island, the best remaining example of a traditional west coast native village.

I read that to give you some idea of what the territory is like there. Have you ever seen that picture of the falling poles in the rain forest? Some poles are falling down and others are tilted and so on. That is Anthony Island. That is a beautiful sight.

I said the Hon. Member for Skeena followed this up with Bill C-45. On August 29, 1981, the UN declared some world heritage sites. One site was the Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump in Alberta and the other was Anthony Island in British Columbia.

I quote from the press release of the Minister of the Environment as follows:

> The Unesco World Heritage Convention, a treaty among more than 60 nations, recognizes that the world's natural and cultural heritage transcends national boundaries and must be identified, protected and preserved for future generations. The Pyramids of Giza, Egypt; Chartres Cathedral, France; the ancient city of Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic; the historic centre of Rome, Italy; the Galapagos Islands, Ecuador; Sagarmatha (Mount Everest) National Park, Nepal; and Yellowstone National Park, U.S.A. are among the other World Heritage Sites.

They also mentioned the Great Barrier Reef, the Palace and Park at Fontainebleau, France, and the Old City of Jerusalem. South Moresby, as a world heritage site, fits in with these places in the rest of the world, which I think we would all agree need to be preserved and protected. This is what we are fighting for today.

There has been a long and noble campaign. My friend and colleague, Murray Rankin, a professor of law at the University of Victoria, wrote in The Globe and Mail of July 26, 1979, about the battle raging to preserve rare wilderness from the axe. The Western Canada Wilderness Committee led by Paul George, an environmentalist from British Columbia, has tried to preserve the area. It presented petitions to Parliament and made posters and buttons, mostly out of their own pockets. These were not rich people and they paid for this mostly out of their own pockets. This campaign has inspired people. I received a letter from a young man in Peterborough in 1981. He said:

Last summer I had the opportunity to spend a month kayaking through the South Moresby wilderness in the Queen Charlottes, and subsequently have become very interested and actively concerned about the fate of this magnificent area. In addition to working on slide shows, distributing literature, etc, I have been working on a term paper focusing in on the social, economic and environmental issues underlying the controversy.

That is the kind of thing I am talking about, young Canadians kayaking up in the wilderness. The Western Canada Wilderness Committee sent me a letter on February 14, 1981, which indicates how many Members of Parliament supported my Bill in principle, how many did not support it, and how many were non-committal. They kept the pressure up, and I thank them for that. There was interest right across the country from Newfoundland to Peterborough and to British Columbia. They did not have much money, only a lot of determination.

I cited the Berger report called Northern Frontier, Northern Homeland earlier in my question to the Minister. I have already described how Justice Berger talked about the native rights and how self-determination meant being more Canadian rather than less Canadian. Through this report Judge Berger was trying to show that there were different interests, a frontier interest as well as a homeland interest. This is part of the homeland of the native people.

Often southern Canadians, if you like, look at the North and rural areas as big, empty areas which we can exploit. We forget that they are people's backyards. We should always try to remember that. When I am flying over northern Canada I try to remember that that is not just a big, empty land, but people's backyards. If we can think of it that way we can understand how the native people feel about it.

I was lucky to be in Banff on Tuesday. I went for a little walk and literally ran into some of the magnificent animals in that park. I thought of how lucky we are to have that national park.

These are difficult issues. They are not motherhood issues. There are different interests. As I said earlier, loggers have an interest and have to be accommodated. We must deal with tourist operators. We must weigh matters and cannot leave any group out. Our concept of Canada is that no one is left out, that everyone is encouraged. We will not leave the loggers out, but for the sake of 50 or 100 jobs we must think of what weighs against it. On the other side is the preservation of a most magnificent site for future generations.

I am confident that the Minister, helped by Members of the House from all Parties, can find a way to do this. This resolution will be passed today. By a rather unusual procedural measure we are going to agree to pass this motion as the view of the House.

I want to ask Premier Vander Zalm and his Cabinet to find a way to make an agreement on this matter. If they can make an agreement, they will be applauded by many, many people in British Columbia and in all of Canada. I think this can be accomplished. The Minister's participation and actions today should be applauded. For future generations we can establish a magnificent park in that area which some day will be part of our national parks system of which Canadians can be proud and we can have a very civilized country.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with those who have commended the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for presenting this motion to the House today. His speech in support of this motion ranks among the best that I have heard given in the House of Commons. While I am handing out bouquets, I think the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) also made important and significant contributions to this debate.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena proposes a specific plan for South Moresby. It does not say, although I would argue that it is implicit within it, that the Queen Charlotte Islands, and South Moresby in particular, are part of a very important unsettled aboriginal claim.

The Queen Charlotte Islands are the hereditary lands of the Haida people. These lands are called by them the "land of Haida" or "beautiful islands". South Moresby, as a part of the Queen Charlottes, is both a unique and a very fascinating part of Canada. I am happy that I had the opportunity to visit those islands when my daughter was a resident there.

South Moresby is a part of the Haida lands which they claim have been in their possession for thousands of years. South Moresby contains, as others have noted, the highest concentration of endemic plants, birds, mammals and insects of any area of its size in all of North America. As well, there are major archaeological sites in South Moresby as a part of those Haida lands. So valuable and so important are these archaeological sites that certain responsible citizens in Canada who have the necessary knowledge and required expertise to make these judgments went to the United Nations and asked that South Moresby be declared a world heritage site.

One will find on South Moresby primeval forests containing western red cedar, yellow cedar, western hemlock and Sitka spruce which are among the largest of their genera. However, I am entering this debate today not only in support of the fact that South Moresby is unique and of great environmental significance. I recognize that and appreciate it. Other Members more competent in the environmental area than I can claim to be have spoken eloquently on that point.

I want to use the time allocated to me in this debate to talk about another matter of equal importance. It is that we are discussing today the homeland of the Haida Indian people. As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development noted in his speech, since 1973 our nation has had a policy that recognizes that some Indian people have outstanding aboriginal rights or claims. These are claims that were never dealt with by way of treaty or by way of any other kind of agreement which is binding and legal.

This policy was given birth as a result of a Supreme Court decision rendered in 1973. It was the case brought to the Supreme Court by the Nishga Indian people of British Columbia. The particular case is known as the Calder case. In that case, six out of seven judges agreed that the Nishga people had an aboriginal title in accord with English law and that they had this at the time of the first contact with Europeans. However, the six judges split three to three as to whether that title still existed. There was one judge who opted out of the decision altogether, so that the Nishga people lost their case on a technicality.

But all was not lost. The Prime Minister of the day, Mr. Trudeau, who had strongly resisted for a long period of time the legal and valid concept of aboriginal rights, became persuaded otherwise as a result of that case. I remember well the day that he spoke on the issue from a different point of view. It was one of the important historic moments during which I have been here in the Parliament of Canada.

As a result of that, the federal Government decided to acknowledge the principle that aboriginal rights still existed today and the Government committed itself to negotiate those claims with the Indian people. That claims policy, with some recent and welcome modifications—although the Minister and I agreed they are modest in their scope—is still in effect today.

Today we talk about aboriginal rights, aboriginal claims, and aboriginal title. When you and I first came to Parliament, Mr. Speaker, it would have been a strange debate to hear anyone present these arguments. Today, parliamentarians understand them and Canadian citizens in growing numbers have an appreciation of what is involved.

I want to submit, however, that we are very close to another important breakthrough. I hope that I am here long enough to see it happen. That breakthrough is to appreciate fully and adequately what is involved in aboriginal title.

I have had some delightful and interesting discussions in the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs with officials and others about the meaning of aboriginal title. For example, very recently I asked one senior official: "I get the impression from what you said to the members of the committee that you consider aboriginal title to be some sort of a burden or some sort of interest that exists on the Crown rights". He agreed that that is the way he interpreted it, but the question that has not yet been resolved in Canada is when the Crown right took precedent over aboriginal title.

How can we make the assumption that the Crown right exists and there is some sort of lien, called an aboriginal title, on the Crown right? In response to these kinds of questions, the senior official agreed with me. He said that, first, he has to work in somewhat limited confines and has to work within what the courts have told them. He said: "For example, the courts have not said as much as we might like about what aboriginal title is". This is interesting because it is so relevant to the debate today.

He went on to say that the courts will say a lot more because of the B.C. cases that are coming forward. It was his impression that all the courts have told them so far is that aboriginal title consists of hunting, fishing and gathering rights, traditional use rights over lands which the aboriginal people have continually occupied. I predict that we can expect very soon a major breakthrough on that limited understanding of aboriginal title. Aboriginal title is much more than that.

A curious process has been going on in Canada. Even if we live within these limited confines of what aboriginal title is, even then the aboriginal people of Canada are having difficulties with hunting, fishing and trapping. Those court cases will change the way we understand what aboriginal title means with respect to Crown rights.

The federal Government has now accepted 13 claims in British Columbia. Another seven claims are being examined by the Department of Justice.

The Haida formally submitted their claim to the federal Government in 1980. The Department of Justice formally accepted it as being valid for the purposes of negotiation in 1983. As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development pointed out to the House earlier, the problem is that the Government of British Columbia is not willing to negotiate along with the Government of Canada in the settlement of this or any other claim in the Province of British Columbia. It continues to take the view of those three judges in the Calder case, who argued that aboriginal title had been extinguished. However, no one has yet been able to show the document, the historical or the legal evidence, that would prove that that extinguishment took place. That is why those court cases in British Columbia are so fascinating and will be so crucial in the settlement of aboriginal title.

I sincerely believe that the Government of British Columbia should follow the dictum of John F. Kennedy, who said at one time: "We shall never fear to negotiate but we shall never negotiate from fear".

We know that aboriginal claims in this country can be successfully and satisfactorily settled. There is no reason for fear on the part of other Canadians, on the part of Members of Parliament, or on the part of third party interests. There is no need to fear negotiation in the settlement of aboriginal claims.

I want to say how strongly I agree with what the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said in the House this afternoon. It is far better to negotiate those claims than to have them resolved by way of litigation. If the courts impose settlements because there has been a lack of political will to negotiate, then those settlements may be objectionable to many Canadians. Instead of bringing the kind of peace and harmony that we all want in all parts of Canada in living with the aboriginal people of this country, those kinds of settlements may cause irritation and disagreement. That is not the way we want to go.

I have said that the claims of the Haida people have been accepted by Canada. I want to say as well that the Province of British Columbia is a signatory to the Constitution Act of 1982. The Constitution Act of 1982 recognizes that aboriginal rights exist. They are contained in Section 35 of our Constitution. Those Premiers who have gone to the First Ministers' Conference and argued that Section 35 is nothing but an empty box are fooling themselves. That is self-delusion.

Section 35, asserting that aboriginal rights exist, is not an empty box. It is a full box. That is why, even though the last First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights seeking a definition did not succeed, the aboriginal leaders knew that they did not walk away empty-handed because Section 35 is still theirs. In time, we will begin to see all that is in Section 35.

There is a recognition of these rights. Since the Haida claim has been accepted, is it not only logical that there should be a postponement of any kind of development in that area which has been submitted as a claim for settlement by way of negotiation? Whether that development is cutting down trees, building roads or establishing new towns or mining, all that should be postponed until there is a just, fair and adequate settlement of this claim accepted by the Government of Canada after careful analysis by the Department of Justice.

For one brief moment, I believe, the Government of British Columbia was recognizing this important point. At one point it did impose a moratorium on logging on a part of South Moresby on Lyell Island. Then, to the surprise and dismay of the Haida people, that moratorium was suddenly lifted. Should any of us wonder why there was a strong protest from those people, and why that protest generated so much sympathy and understanding right across the country? People are not only concerned about the environmental aspects of South Moresby but about the other matter, which is the burden of my contribution to this debate today, and that is, that there is an unsettled claim.

As part of those negotiations in the settling of the Haida claim, I believe, as the motion today suggests, that there should be active consideration of setting aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a national park reserve. I accept that. The Leader of my Party is a strong proponent of that idea. However, it is also my firm view and that of my Party that the full participation of the Haida people is an essential requirement in any decisions that are made, whether they are about national parks or about any other kind of economic development. I am not talking about consultation. Members of Parliament who know about aboriginal affairs will realize that consultation has become a dirty word in relations between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal people. It has become a dirty word because it has been abused. Consultation has been a sham. It has been play acting. It has not been real.

What I am calling for, as the motion suggests, is not mere consultation, but full participation and full collaboration of the Haida people in the settling of this claim. I believe, with Members of the House and the Minister who is working toward this end, that in a part of that settlement we will see a national park reserve.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join in this debate this afternoon. I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for bringing this question before the House, particularly at this time. As the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said, it is a rather lively debate in the sense that negotiations are going on hourly right at this time between the Minister's Department and the Government of British Columbia.

This is also a rather odd occasion, at least for me. I have been in this House for several years now and it is not very frequent that we have such wide unanimity on any issue. This is more like a love-in than a debate. Even before the debate got started, the House agreed it would pass this resolution unanimously. I think that is very peculiar and unusual happening, particularly with respect to a motion put by the Opposition.

I have no hesitation at all in endorsing the motion which calls for the Government of British Columbia to co-operate with the Government of Canada in setting aside an area in South Moresby as a national park reserve. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), as we all know, has been working for almost two years to achieve this objective.

Hon. Members will recall, I am sure, that one of the first public statements the Minister made in 1985 was a pledge to work for the establishment of a South Moresby National Park. Since that time he has met on many occasions with various representatives, particularly those from the Province of British Columbia, in order to work towards the goal of preserving one of the greatest natural wonders of our country for the benefit and enjoyment of Canadians, and the development of a world-class tourist attraction.

Hon. Members from every province and territory will certainly have first-hand knowledge of what a national park can do for Canada. There are national parks in every province, I believe, and they are certainly an outstanding example of what can be done to preserve the original territory. I think Canada takes second place to no country in preserving its national parks.

I believe one of the most famous national parks is the Pacific Rim National Park in British Columbia. it was the first national park on the West Coast of British Columbia. The agreement with respect to that park was signed in 1970. The lands of the famous Long Beach section of the park were transferred to the Government of Canada in 1972. In barely 15 years the Pacific Rim National Park has grown to be one of the most attractive and popular national parks in Canada. In the last two years alone more than a million visitors have enjoyed the peace and beauty of the Pacific Rim National Park. Since the park first opened, over five million visitors have visited this natural wonderland. I am sure all of those visitors would gladly endorse the motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena. I myself, with my family, have visited that park on many occasions. I can assure Hon. Members that nowhere else have I seen a greater example of natural beauty preserved in a manner which is capable of being enjoyed by everyone without destroying the natural flora and fauna.

As the Minister said today during his speech and on many other occasions, national parks in Canada are not a frill. They are not peripheral to the Canadian experience. They are part of our heritage and part of our way of life. They are places where Canadians find refreshment, inspiration and renewal. In a world which is becoming increasingly smaller and more crowded our national parks serve the purpose of preserving the original face of Canada.

I join with the Minister and Hon. Members of this House to urge the Government of British Columbia to co-operate in setting aside the South Moresby National Park Reserve. This is a difficult question. As someone said, it is not a question of motherhood. For that reason, and as the Minister has recognized so eloquently in his speech, it is necessary we talk about parks and recognize the competing interests. These are valid and difficult questions. Therefore, I strongly endorse the proposal that the federal Government provide for compensation and share in the costs of those interests which will be affected by such a national park reserve. Nothing is free in this society, and the establishment of a park is certainly not free. There are people who will suffer economic loss as a result of establishing a park in this area. Those people should be compensated adequately for the loss they will suffer.

The Minister of the Environment has said we will put our cash where our commitment is—right on the barrel head. I agree with that. We will cost share the buying out of the timber rights. That is only just. Compensation is really not the issue. As the Minister has said, it is a matter of political courage, will and responsibility to ensure that if this park is created, and I hope it is, all parties concerned will find it to their benefit and that no one will suffer inordinately from its establishment.

I understand, and it is only natural, that the province will seek the most favourable terms possible for the creation of such a park. I suggest that this is not a poker game in which someone is trying to gain an advantage over another. This is part of nation building. This park will be part of our nation for time immemorial. I honestly believe that while a fair price should be paid, no one particular party should benefit to the disadvantage of another. Therefore, I urge the Government of the Province of British Columbia to come to the negotiating table in search of a fair deal and not an unfair one. The key to this issue has to be the cost to the various parties concerned, and those are the costs of the Government. I think other matters can be worked out. Hopefully they are well on their way to being worked out now. Excessive costs will be the first thing that will torpedo this tremendous idea.

An agreement between Canada and British Columbia to establish the final boundaries for the Pacific Rim National Park was signed in February of this year. That is 15 years from the time negotiations were first started. The Government of Canada has agreed to pay $25 million as its share of compensation for forest interests. All those who are interested in national parks were pleased that the federal Government finally resolved this long-standing issue. I congratulate the Minister for so doing. This is a clear signal that the federal Government in living up to its commitment to the province for the Pacific Rim Park was seeking and is seeking similar co-operation for the South Moresby proposal.

It is time for political courage. I share the concern of the provincial Government and of Members of the House with respect to protecting the forest industry which, as we all know, is the cornerstone of the economy of British Columbia and a very important part of the economy of Canada. The proposal by the federal Government on this issue reflects that reality.

Of course logging will continue to be one of the main industries in the Province of British Columbia and in Canada. But national parks, and the one we are talking about in particular, raise the prospect of a great new industry in British Columbia in the Queen Charlotte area, an industry based on a world-class tourist attraction and destination.

The example of the Pacific Rim National Park which I have mentioned frequently may be useful to consider. It has been identified by Tourism Canada as a superior tourist attraction. The park attracted more than 75 per cent of the visitors to the region in 1983. The estimated total spending of visitors to the region was more than $5.6 million. The benefits of this national park are material and immeasurable, as they are in all national parks.

South Moresby has the potential to become an international attraction for visitors to British Columbia if we seize the opportunity now. If an adequate part of that unique area is protected, as I have said, there will be an opportunity to develop this area into a first-class tourist destination. There are currently some 15 tour operators working in South Moresby, and further interest has been expressed by the small cruise ship market and other tourist operators. We can anticipate that this interest will continue to grow.

At one time, as one of the speakers said earlier, when the parks of Banff and Jasper were established in western Canada people wondered why government money was spent on these remote areas. I can tell Hon. Members that the tourists and the people of the world are pounding at the doors of these parks. There is scarcely any room in them. In order to find a place to stay for the night one has to be there early. At times, reservations have to be made ahead of time. These parks have become very popular places.

Thus when we look ahead, we have to base our cost figures on the potential of these parks in the future, because there will certainly be no more land and there will always be more people. Hon. Members can rest assured that places such as Jasper, Banff and other national parks in Canada will be recreated and re-experienced by a place such as South Moresby when a park is created there.

By way of example, tourism in the Pacific Rim Park has grown by an average of 60 per cent in each of the past five years. What a staggering growth that is! I am sure that the proposed park in South Moresby will experience the same type of attraction to tourists throughout the world. We expect that tourism in British Columbia will increase even more if a world-class national park is established in South Moresby. However, tour operators and those who know have said that the tourist potential will be greatly reduced if excessive logging, in particular logging on the south slopes of Lyell Island and other areas visible from the proposed park, continues. Therefore, I welcome the British Columbia offer as it appeared in today's newspapers which stated that it would discontinue logging immediately should an agreement be reached with respect to this park.

From a review of a number of recently established national parks in other countries which have also been designated as world heritage sites, and from discussion with UNESCO officials, it has been confirmed that the establishment and active promotion of a proposed South Moresby National Park and its designation as a world heritage site would result in attracting new visitors to the Queen Charlotte Islands, especially from international markets. Of course that was the example in such areas in Australia as the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park with which the whole world is now familiar. It has experienced an increase in attendance of 10 per cent per year since it was first established as a world heritage site. Certainly the site which is being proposed in the House this afternoon is no less an attraction than the Great Barrier Reef in and near Australia. Foreign visitors have played a significant role in that particular area. We expect them to play a very significant role in terms of the establishment of this park.

As we all know, last year British Columbia played host to the world through Expo. The world loved it. Tourism is turning out to be the main legacy of Expo 86. A world-class tourist destination in the Queen Charlotte Islands would make a continuing contribution to the province and to the Canadian economy.

According to the province, preliminary research has indicated that significant numbers of first-time visitors plan to return to British Columbia in order to fully explore that great and beautiful province. The tourism sector is optimistic about the future of post-Expo opportunities. The development of new products, such as cultural tourism and native cultural destinations, are considered significant new developments.

So quite aside from preserving the heritage of our beautiful country, there are very valid commercial reasons for proceeding with this proposal. We cannot ignore the commercial aspects of the proposal now before the House.

In the recent Speech from the Throne in the Legislature of British Columbia, we had an expression of the intention of the Province of British Columbia in respect of this proposal. In that speech, the Government of B.C. made the following statement:

> We will attempt to expedite the federal-provincial negotiations for the establishment of a national park on South Moresby in the Queen Charlottes.

The speech went on:

> My Government—

And that, of course, refers to the Social Credit Government of British Columbia:

> My Government will seek a bilateral agreement with the federal government to develop the enormous tourism potential this area offers.

> Working together, our two governments can create a national park and tourism environment that will not only generate major economic benefits for all British Columbia, but in particular, new employment and income for the friendly people of the Queen Charlottes region.

That is an objective, Mr. Speaker, that we share. I call upon the Government of British Columbia to carry through fully on that particular promise.

Today in this House we heard the commitment of the Minister to co-operate and to work hard toward the realization of that dream, a dream that has been around for many years. I call upon the Premier of the Province of British Columbia to match the Hon. Minister's enthusiasm.

I should like to take a moment to deal with another matter contained in the resolution, a matter which has been referred to on occasion this afternoon, that being the situation with respect to the Haida people.

I was pleased to hear both the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and the Minister of the Environment indicate their commitment to the active involvement of the Haida in the planning and development and running of a national park reserve on South Moresby.

In closing, let me again congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena on his motion. It is a subject that warrants the attention and support of all Members of the House. I am sure that we all share his desire and the desire of the Minister to see the establishment of a national park reserve in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), on debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to congratulate those who have preceded me in the debate, starting with the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), who comes from a beautiful province on the other side of the country, as well as the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), and the Hon. Member for Kindersley—Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

As a prairie boy, I support fully the efforts of all Hon. Members and the Government in the establishment of a national park reserve in the Queen Charlottes, and specifically the South Moresby area.

It is my hope that in the quest for an agreement, the loggers are not over-compensated. In my personal view, the compensation should amount to no more than the expenses involved in their departure from the area.

The trees of our wilderness areas belong to the people of Canada. Those companies involved in logging operations pay a royalty or stumpage fee on trees harvested. That is all they pay in order to harvest the forests of this country. Where a tree has not been harvested, no payment should be due the logger. But, in any event, let us get on with achieving agreement on this proposal for a national park reserve.

When it comes to the heritage of the environment, the resources, the natural habitat of this country, none of us have any right to leave a mess for succeeding generations.

Who do we think we are that we can waste our forests, pollute our waters, and foul our air in order to satisfy the bottom line syndrome, as I choose to call it, the principle of anything to make a buck? Since when does that take priority over the welfare of our people and our planet and our environment?

I hope that a national park reserve is no different from a national park. I am aware that in the case of some forest reserves, logging and mining interests have been allowed to operate. I am thinking of some reserve lands in eastern British Columbia and western Alberta, in the Rocky Mountains. These are what are called forest reserves and park reserves. Notwithstanding that they had been set aside as such, the regulations still permitted logging and mining operations.

I hope that in the establishment of the South Moresby National Park Reserve, no opening is left for the "cut-and-run" boys to move in down the road.

In supporting this proposal, I wish to take a moment to make an appeal for the establishment of the Grasslands National Park in southwestern Saskatchewan. This is something that the people of the Prairies, and particularly the people of Saskatchewan, have wanted for decades.

From my arrival here in 1968, there have been discussions and negotiations in respect of the Grasslands National Park. I can recall attending a large reception at which a profile map of the entire park area was displayed. Agreement had been reached among the province and the federal Government, the local municipalities, the ranchers and other interests on the establishment of the Grasslands National Park. But, Mr. Speaker, we still do not have it. It is still not in place.

I suppose it could be called a place where the buffalo can roam and the deer and the antelope play, and groundhog and the sage grouse and the prairie dogs and rattlesnakes thrive. It could be a place where the original grasslands, and the Coulees, and the Badlands, and the Buttes can remain as they are and as they were.

I put in a plea that the Minister renew discussions on an urgent basis with the Government of Saskatchewan and any other interests on the establishment of the Grasslands National Park.

Saskatchewan is one of the few provinces still limited to one national park. Apart from the odd small area in the United States, the southwestern part of Saskatchewan is the only area where we still have the grasslands existing in their original state.

It is my hope that once the Hon. Minister has achieved agreement on the establishment of the South Moresby National Park Reserve, he will then turn his attention to getting established, once and for all, the Grasslands National Park in Saskatchewan. As far as both are concerned, he has the unanimous support of all Members from all sides of the House of Commons. That being said, let us now get it done.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

LITERACY—FUNCTIONALLY ILLITERATE ADULTS—NEED FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET DEADLINE FOR ENDING ILLITERACY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some 10 days ago I brought to the attention of the Government the fact that there are now five million functionally illiterate people in Canada and that their ability to find work in an increasingly technological society is becoming smaller and smaller. I called upon the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces, to develop a 10-year program with the objective to wipe out this blot on Canada.

I was appalled by the Minister's response, which simply promised more discussions and more meetings. There was little commitment, if any, to real action.

A substantial majority of the illiterate people in Canada were born in Canada. Almost half of them are under the age of 45 years. Some 60 per cent of them are unemployed and are not even looking for work. Given the 1.25 million unemployed at the present time, what chance would they have of being hired? Those who are lucky enough to obtain work are sentenced to minimum wage and uninteresting, mind-dulling work.

Who are the illiterate? They are farmers, native people, inmates in our jails and penitentiaries, and young people who somehow got through the school system without learning to read at a grade eight level or better. These five million people face a grim future for themselves, but their plight is creating an increasing danger for all Canadians.

However, the problem can be solved. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) announced a new program to tackle the problem of illiteracy among inmates in our prisons. I support the initiative but ask why we restrict the federal Government's involvement in the problem to our prisons.

Small successful programs have been operating in many parts of Canada. One of the most successful is Frontier College which has worked on this problem since the beginning of the century. In Ottawa, Calgary, Winnipeg, and other cities too numerous to mention, there are groups working with the illiterates in their areas. These groups were formed by churches, labour groups, and various community groups. They need the support of Governments, federal and provincial.

It has been demonstrated in Third World countries such as Cuba, China, and Venezuela that well planned programs which have the support of personnel and finances can succeed. Many of these countries have virtually wiped out illiteracy, which was so prevalent and was the fate of most of their people. If they can do it in Third World countries, we can do it in Canada.

These groups need support. They do not need to have plans worked out in Ottawa by the federal Government or even plans worked out in detail and imposed upon them by provincial Governments. The self-help groups need support, not only support of a financial nature. Their programs need publicity. They need more people involved and the development of new techniques. What they need the most is the assistance of thousands of volunteers who, I am convinced, would come forward to help in a very necessary program, if they were made aware of the need and were alerted to the kind of help they could provide in dealing with a tremendously serious problem.

I call upon the federal Government to meet with the provincial and territorial Governments, to work out plans, and to set a timetable so that, if not in the 10 years which I suggested in my original questions, at least by the end of this century, the year 2000, we will no longer have to accept the reality that 20 per cent of the people living in Canada are still functionally illiterate.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had more than three minutes because I think the Hon. Member knows that I am also interested in this subject.

In 1980 the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and I served on a task force which identified this problem and made certain recommendations to the federal Government at that time. I am pleased to note now that our Government is taking some action regarding adult literacy. Because of the encouragement of the committee headed by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and its work, along with the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and myself, continued pressure has been put on cabinet Ministers to come forward with a literacy program.

The former Minister of the Environment sits there and laughs and makes fun, but it is a very serious problem. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North is absolutely right in what he says. The problem was recognized in the Speech from the Throne. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie) are taking active roles. Last week the Secretary of State met with many of the country's leading experts in the field of literacy. Among them were representatives of the Movement for Canadian Literacy, Laubach Literacy of Canada, Regroupement des Groupes Populaires en Alphabétisation, the Canadian Business Task Force on Literacy and the International Council for Adult Education. It was made clear at that time to the delegates that the Government does, indeed, recognize the problem and that it is taking a very active role. Another meeting will be held shortly, and the Minister will be presenting some information that I think Canadians will appreciate very much.

We are fully aware of the fact that illiteracy is costly in personal, educational, social and economic terms. The Member is correct that the volunteer sector is very important. It is the key to the whole program. I spent some time with the Peel Literacy Guild on Appreciation Night. Labour, industry and the volunteers—of which we have a large number in Peel but we can always use more—were honoured.

What the Secretary of State is doing at present, in co-operation with other Governments and organizations—because I think it has to be a co-operative effort—is trying to identify short-term initiatives immediately but in parallel with long-term strategies for lasting solutions. We have started with one of those short-term initiatives by increasing the basic adult literacy program among federal penitentiary inmates. This will increase the number of inmates who will be taught reading and writing. It will be established over the next three years, with an increase of 400 per cent in the number of inmates receiving this type of training. That is just a start on what I and this Government consider a very serious problem. There will be more action in the very near future.

AGRICULTURE—WHEAT FARMERS 1987-88 CROP YEAR—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT. (B) REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW DEBT RESTRUCTURING INSTRUMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as a result of his trip to western Canada. I asked him whether after four days in the west he would decide to finally provide a deficiency payment for the new crop year, 1987-88.

The Prime Minister met, albeit with selected people—mostly partisan supporters of his own—but even in meeting with a very select group of partisan supporters the message was always the same, that the situation in southern Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba needed a commitment by the Government for the new crop year.

It is unfortunate that the Prime Minister refused to meet with the western wheat pools, the prairie pools and their constituent organizations, the National Farmers Union and the Keystone Agricultural groups. The Prime Minister when in the west operated on a solely photo-opportunity, closed-shop type of basis. It may have impressed people in eastern Canada that the Prime Minister was meeting with people in agriculture who are facing the worst economic crisis since the 1930s, but it did not impress the westerners themselves.

On Monday, May 11, the Montreal Gazette said the Prime Minister's message in the west missed the mark. The paper goes on to outline how the Prime Minister met with some Party supporters but did not get down to meeting with the broad-based agricultural groups who are facing such a difficult time. On May 9, The Globe and Mail said the Prime Minister's western trip generated scant enthusiasm. On May 10 the Sunday Sun reported that the welcome for the Prime Minister was lukewarm to hostile.

On Monday I asked whether or not the Prime Minister would make a commitment to a deficiency payment. The general strategy of the Government has been to keep talking about what assistance was provided in the current crop year, without making a firm commitment. The decrease in farm income is calculated at $2 billion to $3 billion from the 1985-86 crop year, yet we have no commitment from the Prime Minister. I believe he will be meeting with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on May 29. At this stage it appears that meeting will only be about an hour, a quick snapshot visit with the producers. The producers do not want the Minister of Agriculture to do what he did a few months ago, walk into the meeting, throw down a press release and say "this is what we are issuing as a result of this meeting".

The second part of my question dealt with the terrible financial crisis facing agriculture right across the country. It has been estimated that the value of farmland has decreased by some $17 billion since this Government came to power in September, 1984. There are about 170,000 economic-sized farms with gross sales of at least $20,000 a year. That means each of those farmers have lost an average of $100,000 in land value. When the Prime Minister talks about assistance amounting to $2 billion or $3 billion over the last couple of years, we have to compare it with the amount farmers have lost.

I asked the Prime Minister if he would make a commitment to bring in new debt restructuring instruments which would assist some 52,000 farmers who are facing either total insolvency or serious cash flow problems. His response was that he would be looking into it, but he made no firm commitment. That was a tremendous disappointment to every western farmer, indeed every farmer in the country. The Prime Minister went out there, he saw the malaise, hardship, indeed the tortured unfairness of it all. Farmers in this country are not receiving the same level of support as those in the U.S.

Thousands of our youngest and most productive farmers are facing the loss of their land and there are no proper debt restructuring instruments being put in place. The ones which are there are totally inadequate for the circumstances of the day.

I certainly hope that the Government will move expeditiously on both of these problems. We want a commitment now that farmers will receive an adequate deficiency payment in the new crop year this fall and that new debt restructuring instruments and programs will be put in place to assist farmers to stay on the land and continue to produce the food that is vitally needed for this country and for our international commitments.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to complete what was said by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his answer to this question on May 11 this year.

The Government sees agriculture as a very important industry, a position that was reflected in the Prime Minister's pertinent and enlightened replies. The Government realizes that grain producers have been severely affected by the dramatic drop in world prices for grain, caused by a subsidy war between the European Economic Community and the United States.

We also realize that Western Canada has been particularly affected, and that is why we have taken exceptional measures to deal with this situation. Since we came to power, financial assistance to western farmers through federal programs has more than tripled. For this year alone, direct payments to farmers under federal programs are expected to increase by about $1 billion over last year's, making a total of about $3 billion.

Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly frank, I think this is more than just lip service. These are concrete measures. They are official measures. These measures are the national expression of a national party, the Progressive Conservative Party, and were taken by our Prime Minister, by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) together with all provincial Agriculture Ministers, who represent four Parties between them, and they all agreed to help western farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) may not fully understand the problem because his speech does not recognize the facts, it does not recognize that we are fully aware of what is going on, we are fully aware of the steps taken by our Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board to help Western producers cope through cash payments, we are thinking of the coming stabilization payments, $702 million, $64 million extra payments that have just been announced to help pay freight rates. We are aware that under those policies we are putting in place to help Canadian agriculture, we must keep on co-operating with the farming industry, we must keep on working with provinces to finally give farming something decent, a stable role, a foundation within our economy, our economic activity.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress to my colleague for Algoma that the Prime Minister is aware of farmers' problems, that he is the first Prime Minister in Canadian history who has ever succeeded in making agriculture a priority on the GATT agenda. That is a tangible move by this Government because agriculture is important to us, both in words and in deeds.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NIAGARA RIVER CLEAN-UP PLAN. (B) START OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised dealt with the Niagara River toxic problem and particularly with the management plan which was formulated to clean up the toxic chemicals which enter the Niagara River through municipal and industrial sewers and seep from old toxic chemical dumps through the porous bedrock directly into the river from the United States side. More details on how this plan will be defined, hopefully including targets, deadlines and a commitment to zero discharge, are to be released in July of this year.

Now, however, there is a wrench in the works and an open flank in the battle plan. It concerns airborne chemicals. The Niagara work plan agreed to in February of this year did not address the possibility of toxic chemicals being released into the air at Niagara Falls. This is a major blunder that could have been prevented.

In 1984, Dr. Barry Oliver, at the Canada Centre for Inland Waters in Burlington, calculated that 50 per cent of the toxic chemicals in the Niagara River volatilized, that is left the water by way of vapours and entered the air at the Falls themselves. Dr. Oliver wanted to measure toxic chemicals in the mist in 1984, but the severe cuts that were inflicted in November, 1984, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and subsequent budgets of Environment Canada made it impossible for Dr. Oliver to receive the money or the help to pursue this research. Finally, Dr. Oliver left Environment Canada in February of this year.

When the blob in the St. Clair River occurred, its clean-up sapped the limited resources that Environment Canada had left to respond to chemical crises.

In October, 1986, Pollution Probe did what Environment Canada should have done. They took samples of the mist at Niagara Falls and found nine toxic chemicals, including chloroform, benzene and toluene, in small amounts, that are not immediate health threats but could pose a chronic, long-term health hazard.

Last week came the release of the study done by Donald MacKay and Michael McLachlan, of the University of Toronto, which indicated that 35 to 175 tonnes of chemicals go into the air each year at Niagara Falls.

The questions that emerge are fundamental. Why has Environment Canada been so reduced in its capacity and strength to study toxic chemicals that only one full-time scientist is working on the Niagara River Toxics Management Plan while Ontario has four people on site?

Why was Dr. Oliver not provided with the necessary funds to carry out the study at the Falls in relation to the plan that had been conceived in recent times and would have included the study of toxicity released at the Falls themselves? Will Environment Canada, belatedly and after many warnings, tackle the problems of toxic chemicals in the mist at Niagara Falls? Finally, Environment Canada must get heavily involved at the Falls in measuring these toxics. Otherwise, how accurate can the estimates be of toxic chemical loadings based on measurements at Fort Erie and Niagara-on-the-Lake?

We are talking about the health of millions of Canadians in the Niagara Peninsula. We are also talking about the viability of the tourist industry, which is very intense, with millions of visitors every year. We must ensure that the issue is handled and that we know the impact of the toxic chemicals that are released at the Falls. We must ensure the presence of Environment Canada in international waters because that is demanded of the Department. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will give us a satisfactory answer.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, all of my answers are satisfactory so I do not know why the Hon. Member would add that caveat to his presentation.

I might say that there have been many solid achievements in the Niagara River issue. Of course, it is a major issue and one that should concern us all. Being an Ontarian and a Bramptonian who gets water from Lake Ontario, naturally I should be very interested in the issue. As a parliamentarian, I spent the weekend in Niagara Falls. A more beautiful part of the world is hard to find. There is no question about that.

• (1825)

The Hon. Member talked about the Niagara River Toxics Management Plan which had been agreed upon by Canada, Ontario, the United States and New York, and the second major initiative on February 4, 1987, of an international declaration of intent which is intended to accompany and complement the Niagara River Toxics Management Plan. This is a very important document because it talks about the political will to support the toxics management plan and to work toward what I think is key, the reduction of loadings to toxic chemicals entering the Niagara River by 50 per cent over the coming decade.

I think that is a great goal to work toward. I hope they surpass it as, I am sure, does the Hon. Member. I think we all do. We have the political will now. The Hon. Member knows how difficult it was to get that political will. He is a former Minister of the Environment and he had his problems getting those agreements signed. He should be happy that the political will is there now and that we have to get on with the job.

With respect to the toxics in the air to which the Hon. Member referred, there have been some media reports about this matter. By the way, the Hon. Member asked this question last November and is just following up now. I find that interesting. There have been recent media reports relating to a University of Toronto modelling study. The model estimated quantities of volatile chemicals evaporating into the air from the Niagara River and Niagara Falls.

This particular study was supported by Environment Canada on the basis that previous research conducted by the Government provided indications of the volatile nature of some of the contaminates carried in the river. So we have been involved in that right from the start, and we support it. While the model predictions should be considered preliminary—and the Hon. Member will understand that—and speculative at this time, support of such work is indicative of the continuing efforts by Canada to investigate and describe the environmental pathways, fate and effects of chemical contaminates in this system. Environment Canada will be conducting further research on volatile chemicals at Niagara Falls this year.

The Hon. Member tells us that Ontario has four people on site and we only have one person on site. I can tell the Hon. Member that that has been one of the major problems with the Government of Canada, trying to outdo the Ontario Government or vice versa. The money all comes from the same pocket. The important thing is that work is going on there now and we are studying this particular problem. It is worrisome to us all. It is being investigated.

Now that we have the political will, I think that is about three quarters of the battle won. We can now get on with the toxics management plan, together with the declaration of intent, which is intended to push the parties toward the goal of zero discharge and virtual elimination in a scheduled and stepwise fashion, which I think is very important. I think we should congratulate the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for the work he has done.

WELFARE

CHILDREN LIVING IN POVERTY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the latest statistics from the National Council of Welfare illustrate the tragedy of the children of Canada, more than one million of whom are living in poverty. Almost four million Canadians are living in poverty. Yet, to read an interview given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in Faith Today entitled "Saints in Caesar's Household", you would think that people living in poverty choose their lot in life. He says:

> We have to recognize that there are those who are poor because of circumstances, but many by their own decisions are where they are.

Are those million children living in poverty where they are by choice? When the Minister was questioned on this issue earlier this week in committee he suggested that abusing families are also there by their own decision. It seems to me that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) expresses this kind of attitude in a magazine he should be giving some answers to Canadian people.

• (1105)

The one million Canadian children are not living in poverty by choice. Abusing families are not abusing by choice. There is in fact work which must be done in this area. I frankly hang my head in shame when the Canadian Minister of National Health and Welfare makes a statement like that in a magazine in which he is labeled a saint in Caesar's household.

THE LATE SUZANNE BARUK

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask Hon. Members to join me in paying tribute to the memory of Suzanne Baruk, whose life and work have been an inspiration to hundreds of thousands of Canadians and whose thinking has been discussed at length in this House.

The wife of Henri Baruk made a major contribution to philosophy and to developing the Tzedek theory. Believers and agnostics, Semites and goyim, we are all indebted to Suzanne Baruk for her contribution to our civilization and to Western ethics. Canadians remember well her visits to Canada.

We want to express our sincere condolences to the entire Jewish community in Canada and to Professor Henri Baruk, the father of modern psychiatry and of Tzedek: Baruch Dayan O'Emeth! May Tzedek continue to shine as a star in our Canadian firmament!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW-LEVEL TRAINING FLIGHTS OVER LABRADOR—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT REVIEW

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last fall the Government announced an environmental impact hearing on the proposal to build a NATO base at Goose Bay, Labrador. These hearings were scheduled to evaluate the legitimacy of the complaints that low-level flights would have destructive impacts on the environment and the Innu people of Labrador.

In January the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Panel issued interim recommendations that the number of low-level flights not be increased so that no further damage would be done to the environment or to the Innu people prior to the review being completed.

This week, according to news reports, the Department of National Defence showed its contempt for the FEARO process by rejecting that interim recommendation and by having the Minister sign an agreement with the Netherlands Air Force to engage in low-level flight training with the Dutch which will add 10 to 16 aircraft and a great number of daily or weekly flights.

I call upon the Government to stop using environmental hearings as mere public relations gestures, to take seriously the needs of the Innu people, and to stop breaking faith with the Canadian public.

PERFORMING ARTS

ANNUAL STAGE BAND COMPETITION—PROCEEDS TO AID CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL OF EASTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House of Commons, please wait for the downbeat: A-one-two-three-four—

All this week some 8,000 students from high schools, colleges and universities from across Canada have been competing here in Ottawa in the Annual Stage Band Competition. The grand finale will take place on Monday evening at the National Arts Centre in a big band jazz night with proceeds going to the Eastern Ontario Children's Hospital.

What a line-up to prove that Canadian culture is alive and well among our young people and those of us in a more nostalgic mood. Following rave reviews for the same show at Hamilton Place a couple of years ago, song writer Norm Tufts of Hamilton and Bill Jupp of Ottawa, along with names like James Moodie, Guido Basso, Rick Wilkins, and even the Four Freshmen, will thrill a Victoria Day audience here with a 30-piece big jazz band aggregation. This will be ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths per cent pure Canadian content.

Mr. Tufts tells me that a lot of people have gone to a lot of work to make it happen. Queen Victoria herself would be proud to hear something so stirringly Canadian on her day.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DEMAND FOR JUSTICE AND RESPECT FOR FRANCOPHONES IN AGENCIES RESPONSIBLE TO SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) announced that he would raise the target for francophone participation in the RCMP to 20 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, on 13 occasions, and I counted them, the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues: the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have given me the assurance here in the House that the 20 per cent target set by the previous Government a few years ago had not been changed.

Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister announce Wednesday in Montreal that he reinstated the 20 per cent target, when we all know he said he never changed it? For six months, we have been fed hogwash.

The Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has admitted to infringing the Official Languages Act for two years. Mr. Speaker, some public servants think the Official Languages Act is a regulation. It is not a regulation. It is an Act of Parliament. It is enshrined in the Constitution. The Ministers will have to start enforcing this legislation and making their employees understand, especially at the management and senior management level, that the legislation applies to the RCMP as well as to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and Correctional Services.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to do his job. If he cannot, he should resign and let others do it for him.

FORESTRY

OUTBREAK OF FOREST FIRES—CAMPERS URGED TO EXERCISE CAUTION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, a very serious problem has developed very rapidly in the forests of western and northern Canada. They are tinder dry at this moment and, as I speak, thousands of acres are raging under forest fires, posing a serious problem to all Canadians.

We have already lost $100 million in forests. In Manitoba alone there are 400 people fighting forest fires. Fifty homes in Fisher Bay had to be evacuated and at Wallace Lake there is another extremely serious fire.

This is the first long weekend when thousands of Canadians will go to the forests to enjoy camping. I ask the Government and all Members of Parliament to urge everyone to exercise extreme caution when setting campfires because most fires are caused by human error and carelessness.

I am sure that if it does not rain in western Canada we will lose many more hundreds of thousands of acres of our forests. This is an important concern, and everyone should be very much aware of the importance of our forests.

MILITARY COUP IN FIJI

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we in this Party view with alarm and grave concern the military coup in Fiji.

We share the sentiments expressed yesterday by the Prime Minister of New Zealand who told his House of Representatives: "That the parliamentary democracy which was so recently reinforced in Fiji by the general election should have gone in such a way is abhorrent".

All Members of the House will be concerned about the subversion of democracy anywhere. That such subversion by the military should take place in the Parliament of a sister commonwealth country is especially distressing.

While recognizing the clear divisions within Fijian society and politics at the moment, we all feel that the return to parliamentary democracy must be the first priority of the Fijian people and Fiji's friends.

It is important that Canada not give any recognition or support to the military leaders and that civilian government and democracy return to Fiji quickly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MINISTER'S ALLEGED STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Once again, Mr. Speaker, Canada's social injustice Minister—the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp)—has shown his lack of concern and his incompetence with respect to the Canadian people.

Remember his intention to de-index old age security pensions, remember the de-indexation of family allowances, and remember the tax on prescription drugs, on sick people. But now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made an outrageous statement: National Health Council officials have just told us that four million Canadians live in poverty, so the Minister of National Health and Welfare says that these people live in poverty because they like it that way.

Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House should tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare to withdraw his remarks and offer his apologies, and they should urge the Prime Minister to ask for the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This is unacceptable from a man who is expected to defend the interests of poor people in Canada.

EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS BY HOUSE OF COMMONS—TRIBUTE TO SUCCESS OF "BUDDY" SYSTEM

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, former Speaker Bosley, and you, Sir, along with myself, the Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford), and many parliamentary staff members, in co-operation with Ridgemont High School's co-operative education program, through Glen Pettinger, Ilse Turnsen, Bud Crawford, Pat Mainwaring and Charlotte Boroczki, put into place the "buddies" system that assigned students with intellectual handicaps to staff at the House of Commons.

This program provides valuable work adjustment training and has the potential to evolve apprentice-like skill development for real employment.

Such a model encourages Governments and businesses to share with educators in the responsibility we all have to our handicapped citizens to provide relevant training and preparation for productive participation in our society.

The House must congratulate the employees who made it possible to launch this program by ensuring its smooth operation and success: Rita Makavic, Bernie Bédard, Rod Despaties, Adèle Saulnier, Claudette Larocque, Lucille Ryan, Noëlla Forgues, Muriel Larabie, Lucienne Lebrun, Claude Nobert and Maurice Poirier. Such small things make life that much more pleasant, and it proved to be a challenging experience for Ridgemont students.

EFFECT OF FORMER NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Ralph Hedlin writes in the Western Report magazine, and I quote:

> It will soon be seven years since Pierre Trudeau's Government laid down a new set of principles to govern western oil and gas policy—the National Energy Program of October 28, 1980.
> The National Energy Program was the capstone of a decade of intense Trudeau Liberal Government intervention in oil and gas during the years of 1974-84.
> The Trudeau Liberals, among whom John Turner was a major player, put in position policies that transferred a greedy proportion of the benefits from the west to the consumers of central Canada and the tax-gatherers in Ottawa.
> Every year new evidences surface that bear witness to the damage done by the intervention of the federal politicians and bureaucrats.
> The most recent is the demise of Dome Petroleum. The wild irresponsibility of the debt accumulation of the Trudeau years is only comprehensible if one accepts that the Government was satisfied it could recover by looting the west of revenues produced by $100 oil. Interest charges on those immense debts are a major contributor to today's deficits and a major drag on the Mulroney Government.
> In the long history of Canada there has been no economic initiative that has been as utterly wrong-headed and as disastrously damaging as the energy policies of the Trudeau years. It is a root cause of much of the economic frailty and regional distrust in Canada.

The players have passed from the stage, nearly, but we are still suffering the legacy of those policies from those years.

Oral Questions

ABORTION

RESTRICTIONS ON ACCESS TO ABORTIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recently a 14-year-old girl was refused an abortion at Royal Inland Hospital in Kamloops. She was forced to suffer a very difficult forced delivery which will scar her emotionally for the rest of her life. Across British Columbia women's access to abortion is becoming more and more restricted as politicians, led by the Premier, are imposing their personal moral views on women despite the fact that the general public supports greater access to abortion under our existing legislation.

The restriction of access to legal abortions, which is approved under existing federal legislation, surely is contradictory to our federal laws. What is our Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) doing about this?

Women of Canada feel strongly that access to abortion is an essential service, essential to their health. Limiting access to abortions approved by committees in accredited hospitals denies the spirit of the Canada Health Act which states that we should have reasonable access to health services.

I urge both provincial and federal Governments to uphold existing federal laws and to work toward more progressive changes in future.

POLICE WEEK

TRIBUTE TO MEMBERS OF POLICE FORCES

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, Police Week was established as a means by which this nation could officially recognize and pay tribute to those men and women who have chosen a career to protect and serve their communities. I am pleased to have the opportunity to express my personal views, my profound respect and heartfelt appreciation for these men and women.

Police work requires a special kind of person. They must have courage to deal with the dangers inherent in their work. They must be fair and impartial in enforcing the law. They must have integrity beyond reproach. They must exhibit and utilize consideration, sensitivity and compassion when dealing with the public. Those personal characteristics have always been, and are still required by police officers.

However, new skills have been incorporated into modern-day policing. The police officer today requires many of the skills of a psychologist, social worker, criminologist, computer scientist, lawyer, accountant and administrator. Police forces have in recent years moved rapidly to adjust to these new demands and have developed and engaged officers to meet the challenge of crime in today's society.

I believe all Members of this House will join in paying tribute to these police officers and to the Chiefs of Police across this nation who have meet these new challenges with resolve and are serving each and every Canadian as they fulfil their responsibilities on behalf of us all.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASK PETRO-CANADA TO REDUCE PRICE OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On April 13, Petro-Canada was the first to raise the price of gas in the Eastern Townships and the Quebec City region. Yesterday, the Quebec Minister of Finance told the oil companies to stop fleecing Quebec consumers. Furthermore, the Quebec Minister of Energy has advised the federal Government to put pressure on Petro-Canada so it will stop taking the lead in raising the price of gas in Quebec, as it has done in the past. My question for the Minister is the question all Quebecers are asking today: Considering this advice, is the Minister willing to ask those in charge of Petro-Canada to reduce the price of gas in Quebec and show it can behave as a good corporate citizen?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada, like all oil companies in Canada, is subject to federal and provincial regulations and legislation, according to the respective responsibilities of each jurisdiction. Petro-Canada has been given a mandate by this Government to operate on a commercial basis, in the interests of the consumer and also in the interests of investing in exploration.

PETRO-CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister. When we see Gérard D. Lévesque cailing for help and asking Petro-Canada to stop fleecing Quebecers; when we know that the reduction in the escalator tax—more than 50 per cent of the money will go to the oil companies—and when the Minister tells us that Petro-Canada has a duty to protect the consumer, could the Minister please explain why he is not taking any action? Why is he letting Petro-Canada protect the corporations instead of the consumer? Why isn't he doing anything about that?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has indulged in his usual rhetoric in presenting his questions. However, that does not change the situation.

Petro-Canada's mandate is a public one. It is supposed to operate on a commercial basis like all other oil companies in Canada. These companies, including Petro-Canada, are expected to act in the full knowledge of the applicable legislation and regulations of the provinces and the federal Government. If Canadians feel there has been abuse in this area, they can file complaints either with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Ottawa, depending on the particular jurisdiction, or with the provinces. It will then be up to the various departments to take action, if necessary.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICE CONTROL BOARD IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Considering the absence of any action on the part of the Minister of "inertia", and considering his admission that his hands are tied—would the Minister be willing to support the Government or the Minister of Energy of Quebec, who is a Minister who does defend his consumers, to help Quebec establish a price control board like the one in Nova Scotia? Is the Minister prepared to help Quebec do that?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is not up to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to intervene on a daily basis in the activities of Petro-Canada. If I did so, the Opposition would be the first to criticize me for it. The Hon. Member is indulging in a lot of rhetoric by starting a debate of this kind, because if Parliament had wanted the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to intervene daily in Petro-Canada's business, it would not have passed legislation making Petro-Canada a Crown corporation separate from the daily activities of the Department and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Furthermore, regarding Quebec's interest in creating a price control board like the one in Nova Scotia, it is obviously up to the Government of Quebec to take action as it sees fit.

PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, how funny that we should be listening to Louis XIVth talk about demagogy. Still, my question is directed to the same Minister.

Talking about consumer protection as the Minister does, I should like to know whether he would be prepared to accept that we, as Members who are here precisely to speak up on behalf of citizens, refer this question to the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources where the chairman of Petro-Canada will appear next week to justify what he is doing now, which is not in the interests of either consumers or Canadians.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the fact the Louis XIVth could not possibly have heard about Petro-Canada since the corporation did not exist at the time. But the Hon. Member for Hamilton East should at least know that it is not up to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to decide whether he will give or withhold his agreement so that a parliamentary committee of this House might be authorized to ask the chairman of Petro-Canada to give evidence and answer their questions. The Hon. Member would know that this Government does not operate that way, and if she wants to invite the chairman of Petro-Canada and ask him a number of questions, there is a procedure for doing just that.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I fully expected that the Minister would pass the buck on to the committee, in the same way that he passed the buck on to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in the same way that he passed the buck on to the consumers, and in the same way that he passed the buck on to Petro-Canada.

REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA PRESIDENT BE CALLED BEFORE COMMITTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I should like to ask the Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources whether that committee is prepared to show some leadership, where the Government is ill-prepared to do so, and in fact call Mr. Hopper before the committee next week to justify the gouging that is going on of Canadian consumers.

An Hon. Member: No one answers!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East might wish to direct her question to the chairman of the appropriate committee.

An Hon. Member: Can anybody answer?

Mr. Speaker: The chairperson of the committee is apparently not here this morning.

I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) may be quite prepared to volunteer a response.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I am prepared to redirect the question to the Government House Leader.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The Hon. Member has had a lot of parliamentary experience, and she will know that this is a matter that should be considered at the committee level or at the steering committee level. If she has a representation to make in that regard, she should get on that committee and make that representation.

Mr. Gauthier: You can make a reference.

GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Minister stated that the market should dictate the price of gas in Montreal, that one of the reasons why gas was more expensive in Montreal was the distances from the various refineries to the gas pumps.

My question is this: Since the Minister is referring to market forces, why did his Government, this Conservative Government, allow a reduction of competition in Quebec and the closing down of the Gulf refinery?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the existence of refineries is not dictated by the Canadian Government. It is not for the Minister of Finance nor the Minister of Energy nor the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to decide whether at any given place a refinery shall open or close. Such is not the Government's responsibility. Companies are responsible for setting up refineries where needed, if warranted by the market.

I know that is not the kind of world the socialist party would like to live in. They would rather live in a system where everything is planned, everything is organized. That is the kind of system, that was set up in the energy sector a few years back, Mr. Speaker, following gross Government interventions, with results such as we have seen in the energy sector, corporate wind-ups, hundreds of people laid off. Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of reverting to that kind of system.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, with that flow of rhetoric I suppose the Minister conceded his Government was not the mastermind behind that shutdown and that reduction in competition. He is right, Mr. Speaker. His Government was merely the puppet of large financiers and oil multinationals.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister intend to ask Petro-Canada—and I insist again—to move to lower its sale prices to Quebec consumers, to reinstate a healthy competition and, as an immediate action, to remit to Quebec consumers the fuel tax reduction implemented by the Quebec Government?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the energy critic for the socialist party is pursuing a dream, a myth of a wishful nature in which market forces would not exist, in which entrepreneurial freedom would not exist, in which there would only be bureaucracy, regulations, ministerial decisions. Mr. Speaker, that is not the kind of world we want to live in. We want to live in a world of free enterprise, in which the market is the prime indicator.

It is in that spirit that Petro-Canada has a clear and specific mandate, a business mandate to work with and abide by market forces, in the interest of both consumers and those who invest in exploration.

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I just mentioned the flow of rhetoric we heard from the Minister; well, the Minister just gave us more of the same.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACCEPT RESPONSIBILITY AND SHOW LEADERSHIP

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): This is my final question Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister prepared to accept responsibility and show some leadership mainly at the level of his Department and this, as I said, in the interests of both Canadian consumers and those in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the first quality of leadership in the energy sector is to make sure that bogey men and other nasty fellows in the mind of the spokesman on energy for the socialist party does not have any effect on the energy policy.

The Hon. Member lives in a world where all decisions makers are callous capitalists or bogey men who want to gouge the consumer. Mr. Speaker, he is living in a dream or a mythological world. We are living in a world where free market and entrepreneurship exist, where companies have to protect consumers as well as shareholders and their investments. The Government of Canada as the Government of Quebec have enacted legislations to that effect and corporations have to abide by them.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister needs to learn the difference between free enterprise and price fixing. There is a hell of a difference.

My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Dome-Amoco deal. The Minister has been telling Members of the House that the Government will take a hands-off attitude in respect of the deal, and that other offers will only be entertained when it becomes clear that the Dome creditors have rejected the current deal. Now that rejection gets closer every day.

Under the memorandum of agreement signed between Dome and Amoco, is the Minister aware that the concerned parties indicated that even if the creditors turned down the deal, "Dome will attempt to effect the transaction under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act or such other procedures"?

In other words, even if the creditors say "no", they will appeal for a trustee to be appointed under a government Act to enforce the deal anyway. Is that an acceptable way for Canadian energy policy to be put in place?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the first responsibility of the Government was to make sure that proposals would be made to Dome and, as a result of our initiative, we saw that three different groups expressed interest in acquiring Dome. The Dome board of directors picked one of the three offers and agreed to convey it to their stockholders and their creditors who were made aware of the offer yesterday and will make their decision after due consideration. We are now at the second stage, Mr. Speaker, and first and foremost we must let these people make their own judgment.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are wondering why the Minister does not have the guts to admit, notwithstanding whether or not the deal is good for the creditors in Canada and notwithstanding whether or not the deal is good for Canadians in terms of energy policy, that the Government, under a hammer poised by the muscled arm of Washington, is sitting neutered and afraid to take its responsibilities. Why does he not admit that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may well raise his voice and try to use one word or another, but there is one fact he simply cannot ignore: he remained silent at the time, yet the problems now experienced by Dome are first and foremost the aftermath of the policies advocated by the previous Government. Where were you at the time? Today we are in a situation where 4,000 Dome employees want to protect their jobs, where hundreds of acres of land are there awaiting development. The Government wants to make sure that Dome will continue to operate in Canada because we need it for purposes of energy security and supply. We need that company for the economy of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and we also need it for investment purposes. That is what the Government has done. That is the difference between the two policies: yours which drove Dome to the brink of bankruptcy, and this Government's policy which is responsible for the fact that three companies were interested in buying Dome.

DOME'S OIL LANDS LEASES AND HOLDINGS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on this matter for the Minister of Energy. The Minister must know—and he just mentioned it—that Dome has a net working interest in 14.9 million acres of land, three-quarters of which is in conventional producing areas. It has been described as the best developed acreage in North America, and there are 4,000 workers out there.

Would the Minister not admit that the result of the meeting yesterday was a great deal of uncertainty? Would he tell the House why he is not taking action and showing some leadership? Who is speaking for Canada when one of its largest energy companies is going down the drain, possibly to bankruptcy? Why is he taking this hands-off approach? Why does he not get involved in the bankruptcy of Dome?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the uncertainty has been there for the last two years because of the type of policies the NDP pushed on the Liberals. That is where we are; that is the difference. We are working for the real economic future of Dome. However, what they have done, in the last two years has put Dome where it is now. That is what happened.

Mr. Waddell: That is patently absurd.

Mr. Althouse: For the last two years you have been in government.

Mr. Gauthier: You have been the Government.

Mr. Waddell: Would the Minister like to exchange seats with us? We will go over there.

Mr. Speaker: The exchange has been very vigorous, but perhaps the Chair might ask Hon. Members who are asking questions to try to confine their remarks to questions.

Of course long preambles which are argumentative invite a response, and then a further response. I would ask the Hon. Member, who I know is very knowledgeable in the matter, to put his question and to put his question precisely.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given the uncertainty, does the Minister intend to take any steps at all to deal with the banks or with the Swiss creditors to decide the future of Dome Petroleum?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the offer was unveiled at the meeting yesterday. These people must consider it and respond. Once we get to know their answer, perhaps it will dispel what you call uncertainty.

[English]

I do not know.

First of all we have to make sure that we have the proper time to reflect and to take a decision.

I just want to tell members of the socialist Party that they cannot have it both ways. They cannot have the dumb, stupid policies which they pushed on the former Government and now ask the Government, by other proposals, to clean the same barn which they have already put in a mess.

AIR TRANSPORT

CASE OF FRED TURNER, FORMER AIRLINE LICENCE HOLDER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Because it is now clear that Mr. Fred Turner has been the victim of a series of unfortunate events and possibly over-zealous actions by government officials, will the Government now accept the referral of the matter to an impartial, binding arbitrator, in order to give Mr. Fred Turner an appropriate amount to compensate him for the loss of his business?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course this action was started under the previous administration. I think that should be clearly noted, and it should also be noted that a number of allegations have been passed back and forth.

There was a certain violation of compliance with respect to the operating licence of the applicant in question, which was dealt with through due process under the aegis of the Canadian Transport Commission. The matter has been reviewed on a number of occasions. It has recently been reviewed by the Minister of Transport. My understanding is that the standing committee is seized of this issue. Perhaps that might be the most appropriate place for the issue to be dealt with further. Suffice it to say that the appeal process has been complied with. It is a fairly clear-cut case in terms of compliance as it relates to requirements under the licence.

Mr. Benjamin: Clear your backsides.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is a very serious matter. I think the heckling from the New Democrats contributes to the fact that they only want to make a political issue out of this thing.

The matter has been considered seriously. It will be brought before the standing committee. I understand that Mr. Turner spoke to the Prime Minister about it yesterday. The Minister of Transport indicated that, while he sympathized, there are certain rules and regulations that have to be complied with.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF INDEPENDENT ARBITRATOR

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that Mr. Turner spoke to the Prime Minister. The last thing that should be done is to treat this question as a legal matter. I think the Prime Minister said yesterday this was more or less a moral issue. The Minister has to realize that this is a case of big government versus a poor individual.

Since his Government—I think from his own initiative while he was Minister of Transport—has agreed to offer Mr. Fred Turner the sum of $15,000 on an ex gratia basis, would it not be the right thing for the Minister to make sure that an impartial person decides on the proper amount to be given to Mr. Turner?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we as a Government and as responsible Members of Parliament should be ignoring some of the basic requirements of compliance with the law and compliance with a licence requirement. Mr. Turner was operating, I am told, without adequate liability insurance.

Mr. Benjamin: He was not operating. His licence was under suspension after you cancelled it.

Mr. Mazankowski: His aircraft had been seized, he was not in possession of a valid Transport Canada operating—

Ms. Copps: You better get a new researcher.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am simply quoting the statements of the Minister of Transport who, I suggest, would probably have as good an idea as the Hon. Member from Hamilton who thinks she is an expert on everything but is an expert on nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I repeat, the matter as I understand it, is before the parliamentary committee. If there are any changes with respect to the disposition of this, those changes will be enunciated by the Minister of Transport.

REQUEST FOR BINDING ARBITRATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I met with the Prime Minister and Mr. Turner yesterday. I would like to get to the bottom of this. In 1984 the former Government under the CTC cancelled Mr. Turner's licence. This Government, and I congratulate it for it, gave Mr. Turner his licence back recognizing that what had been done was wrong. In offering the $15,000 ex gratia payment, it is known that Fred Turner and Turn-Air cannot get back in the air.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister agree that now is the time for binding arbitration so that Fred Turner can get a fair settlement so that he can get his aircraft back in the air and his airline operating?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has been very active on this file. I wish he would listen to the answers that I give to the House because it would result in him not having to ask the question again. I simply indicated that if there was going to be a change in policy, it would be announced by the Minister of Transport.

BINDING ARBITRATION SOUGHT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, something very important is going on here. Mr. Turner's licence was taken away by the CTC. The Cabinet of this Government recognized that was wrong and gave him his licence back. Mr. Turner has lost his six aircraft, he has lost his licences, he has lost his hangar and he is losing his home. This is an honest upstanding Canadian, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Government put forward a binding arbitration process to look at what the losses have been to Fred Turner and give him what is necessary so that this Canadian can get back into the business that he duly deserves?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while we have shown sympathy toward this issue, I think the Hon. Member would be the first one to criticize if this Government or any Minister attempted to circumvent the due process, and now he is suggesting just that.

The Member has repeated the question. I will repeat the answer. If there are any changes respecting disposition, the matter will be considered by the Minister of Transport and he will make an announcement if such is the case.

FILM INDUSTRY

CANADIAN DISTRIBUTION POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, at the Cannes Film Festival this week Canadians still cannot close deals for films for Canada. European and foreign film makers just do not believe this Government and do not believe we are committed to a Canadian film distribution policy. Americans continue to buy and tie up North American distribution rights. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

I am laughing, Mr. Speaker, because I see that the Deputy Prime Minister is a little preoccupied. My question has to do with the promise that you made that you were educating the Americans to no threats—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could help. First, I know the Hon. Member for Mount Royal would prefer not to use the personal pronoun you. I have noticed that it has been used a bit this morning. We will try not to do it again.

The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister was in some difficulty because a distinguished Hon. Member from the other side of the House seemed to wish to speak with him while the Hon. Member's question was being put. That situation has been rectified.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I will ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Mrs. Finestone: I am seeking guidance from you, Mr. Speaker. Do you think that the Deputy Prime Minister heard the question, or should I start again?

Mr. Speaker: I am certainly not going to take a vote on that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Member should put the question again.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, at the Cannes Film Festival nobody believes that the Canadian Government believes in a Canadian film distribution policy. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Does he realize that unless the Government removes the cloud of uncertainty that hangs over the reality of tabling your Canadian film distribution policy that no one believes the Minister of Communications and no one is going to accept her policy? Stop scuttling her Bill. Are you going to deposit that Bill in the House before the end of June? Yes or no?

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, for 55 years now, the film industry has been seeking a Bill similar to that which the Minister of Communications is planning to introduce. There is no change in our agenda. There are many rumors about. Just the same, the Hon. Member should know that the Minister is firmly committed to this Bill and that she will introduce it as soon as the legislative agenda will allow.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that there is a big difference between a promise and action.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE INTRODUCED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): The game plan to promise but not deliver but to delay is the obvious game plan that has been accepted in Cannes right now. That is why we cannot, as Canadian film distributors, buy the films we want from the Europeans.

Mr. Masse: Because of the former Government's policy.

Mrs. Finestone: You have been here for three years practically—

Mr. Masse: You did nothing for the film industry at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I should like the Hon. Member to please ask her question.

• (1150)

Mrs. Finestone: To the Deputy Prime Minister, to the House Leader, will you deposit that Bill before June 30, yes or no?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought that question was answered fully not only today but on several occasions this week by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Communications. Why does the Hon. Member not listen once in a while?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Deputy Prime Minister as well. I have here leaked documents from the United States which—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Masse: Big news.

Mr. Langdon: The Government of the State of Michigan last month told the chief U.S. trade negotiator that his state wants the Auto Pact and its safeguards done away with so that auto products would be treated like any other product under free trade. Given the fact that this pressure is coming from the most auto intensive state in the United States, will the Government finally admit that the Auto Pact is now squarely on the bargaining table and that Canada runs the risk of losing those safeguards and the thousands of jobs that go with those safeguards?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is Friday. I will explain it to the member of the NDP once more, very clearly, and I will go slowly so he will be able to understand it this time. The Auto Pact is not on the table. There has been no request for it to be on the table. If there is a request for it to be on the table, we will only accept changes if they are better for Canadians and Canadian workers, period.

MICHIGAN'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, let me read slowly from the document of the Department of Commerce of the State of Michigan which states that if its recommendation is carried through, we will see a shift of production over time from Canadian to U.S.-based manufacturing facilities and the shrinkage of the Canadian auto industry. Will the Government admit that the auto safeguards are crucial, something it has not been prepared to admit before, and that if these are weakened in any way there will be a tremendous loss of jobs right across Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, members of the NDP are up to their old trick of fear-mongering again. They are frightening the workers. This supposed document of which he speaks, which I have not seen nor had the opportunity to review, says "if". It is a state document, not a federal document and not an administration document. The Hon. Member keeps saying: "if, if, if". We are saying that there are no ifs. Quit scaring the workers like that. That is the NDP's tactic; they do it all the time for no just reason at all.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—PROPAGANDA BOOKLETS MAILED TO PARLIAMENTARY SPOUSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week a number of parliamentary spouses received in the mail two propaganda booklets from right-wing organizations promoting apartheid in South Africa. This material was mailed at the House of Commons using the frank of the Tory MP from Okanagan—Similkameen. It describes South Africa as a model multiracial society and describes people against apartheid as radical revolutionaries who are Marxist-Leninists and so on.

What is the new position of the Government on South Africa? Is it the one described by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen in this document he sent to us or is it the earlier one that we have been hearing all along?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government on South Africa has been clearly enunciated from time to time by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Ms. Jewett: Let your caucus know.

Mr. Mazankowski: We can talk about the NDP caucus or the Liberal caucus for that matter. They really have to learn some lessons in being united on certain things as well.

In this case, the position is very clear.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in a bit of difficulty here and I would ask Hon. Members to bear with the Chair for a moment. As I understand the Hon. Member's question, the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen has apparently sent two documents presumably published by the Government of South Africa or an agency thereof. Unless it is quite clear that the Hon. Member is speaking for the Government in endorsing those statements, and I am not sure that is what the Hon. Member is saying, we do have a rule that we do not attack the motives or propriety of any Hon. Member unless it is quite clearly a case where the Hon. Member has made those statements.

I am a bit troubled because the documentation clearly does not seem to be documentation that was printed or prepared by the Hon. Member. I would ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to keep that in mind in his second question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will bear that in mind. Thank you for your guidance.

GOVERNMENT'S VIEW

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the following quote from the document is the position of the Government:

> Those behind the scene manipulators who drive the bandwagon against the moral evils of apartheid in the South African reformist Government are neither Christian nor moral but rather amoral, immoral, non-Christian, anti-Christian and pro-Marxist-Leninist.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister on behalf of the Government share that view?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. The Hon. Member is trying to assert that what he is reading from is a government document that represents government policy. He knows that that is the kind of misrepresentation that certainly does not augur well for Hon. Members of the House and, indeed, the institution.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—OTTAWA FIRM'S EXPORTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It has been revealed today by The Toronto Star that Semoptics of Ottawa is selling to the United States vital material that is a key element in the development of star wars weapons. Semoptics is doing this through the use of about $200,000 worth of National Research Council equipment.

In light of the Government's own policy not to offer government support for star wars research let alone for star wars weapons development, will the Government investigate the NRC involvement and will it move now to end any and all such support to firms involved in either star wars research or, worse still, star wars weapons development?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the Canadian Government was quite clearly expressed by the Prime Minister on September 7, 1985, when he confirmed that there would be no Government to Government participation by Canada to the United States strategic initiative. On the other hand, the Government has allowed the private sector to participate, and I think that is an example of the private sector's contribution to the American initiative.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that government Departments and agencies like the National Research Council can lend support to star wars projects? Is she saying that the Government's policy is that now government agencies like the National Research Council can lend support to private firms doing star wars research or star wars weapons development?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is raising a hypothetical question and no request has been made directly to the National Research Council. Should one be made, we would analyze the situation before taking any position.

• (1200)

Ms. Jewett: Brief supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

REPORTED USE OF NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL EQUIPMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there is a report done by an investigative reporter which shows that National Research Council equipment is in fact being used by Semoptics for its star wars research. Will the Minister commit the Government to give to the House full information on all government agencies or Crown corporations which are involved in assisting or supporting star wars research or star wars weapons development?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this question seems hypothetical to me. Should a request be made, we would examine it in the light of the impact such research would have on Canada's objectives. Then we would make a decision.

FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD CLASS MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. In a speech before the National Association of Major Mail Users on May 12 the President of Canada Post said that first class mail, second class mail, and third class mail as well, will be treated the same way.

Can the Minister tell us why first class mail with a 36-cent stamp does not get priority over junk mail which requires only a 7-cent stamp? Is first class mail now third class mail?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I think the President of Canada Post was saying that it is the intention of Canada Post to deliver all mail; first, second, and third class, as expeditiously and on time as possible. Standards have been articulated in the corporate plan as to the number of days which will be required for each class and they are different for each class. An independent auditing company will be reporting on a quarterly basis on the extent to which Canada Post meets those standards.

ALLEGED EMERGENCY PLAN—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister responsible for the third class postal service. In the same speech, the President of the Canada Post Corporation indicated that "strike or no strike, we are going to deliver the mail". Could the Minister indicate to us how the Canada Post Corporation will deliver the mail if its employees are on strike? The medias have been telling us that there is a plan. Could the Minister confirm its existence?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, I cannot, Mr. Speaker. Canada Post is a Crown corporation and operates at arm's length as was intended by Parliament when the Crown Corporations Act was created. In that context the corporation was directed by Parliament, as it has been consistently, to deliver the mail to the extent possible. As I understand the speech, the intention is to do that.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that we are over time. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior may ask one question to close off Question Period. I am sure the New Democratic Party will note that I allowed one of their Members three questions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister knows, the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program for Indian students has been among the most successful federal government programs which we have had. In fact, over a decade it has grown from an expenditure of $8 million to $93 million because more and more young Indian people have seen this as the route to self-sufficiency and independence.

Yesterday the Minister moved to limit this program. Does he believe it is right and fair that when so many other government programs have universal access we should have a different policy for Indian people? How can he explain to the House that this year's high school graduates and those studying law, education, and medicine have the lowest priority for access to this important program?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in his question the Hon. Member recognized the growth from $8 million to $93 million. Unless other programs within the Department are reduced we cannot state with certainty the number of dollars which will be made available for post-secondary education for Indian and Inuit students.

The dollars that have been identified this year are beyond the historic increase in expenditures. An additional $12 has been identified. The establishment of criteria in an interim manner for this year, while we discuss with Indian leaders and bands changes that can be put in place, was necessary so that we could maintain dollars in other Indian programs.

To meet the increase that was necessary last year money from other very important Indian programs such as housing, infrastructure and band support had to be used to supplement the education budget.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Regina East rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping you would relent and allow my question.

Mr. Speaker: I deeply regret that I cannot. We are over time. I ask for the co-operation of all Members.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't see the clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member can give me much advice.

Mr. Benjamin: It's Friday.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise that that was the last question.

Statement by Ministers

REFORM

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about Unemployment Insurance.

Since its inception over 40 years ago, unemployment insurance has evolved into one of our most important national programs, touching almost every Canadian and forming an important element of Canada's economy. Originally, unemployment insurance was meant to provide temporary income protection against an unexpected job loss. Over the years, it also became a response to seasonal unemployment. Today, for many, it remains temporary income protection. For others, it has become a frequently used source of guaranteed income. For others it provides what are called "social benefits" such as income support during maternity leave.

[English]

Few government programs affect so many people in Canada. This was never clearer than during the recession of the early 1980s when, out of necessity, more and more people from all walks of life turned to unemployment insurance for support. Such an important and broad program having such an important effect on so many individuals, economic sectors, and regions of the country was naturally prone to criticism from different quarters for different reasons.

When we came into office, Mr. Speaker, we decided that the Unemployment Insurance program needed to be reviewed. We had to ensure that it continued to meet the needs of Canadians. We established a Commission of Inquiry to examine the program and its place in the Canadian economy. We asked that, for the first time, there be public hearings across the country to receive the views of all interested Canadians.

In December we received the Report of that Commission, which included a minority report by two commissioners and supplementary statements by four commissioners. In the past six months the Government has considered carefully the advice of all of the commissioners. As well we have studied the recommendations of the Royal Commission in Newfoundland, the Macdonald Commission recommendations and those of the Standing Committee.

Members of this House will know that there are sharp and irreconcilable differences between these studies.

The Government has listened closely to the public debate. We have consulted widely on the subject. I have met with worker and employer groups. I have received representations from many Canadians, who have made their views known to me. These consultations made it clear that opinion on Unemployment Insurance is divided—even polarized. Some want a more generous unemployment insurance system while others want a more restrictive program.

I have also met twice with the provinces on the Unemployment Insurance Program. Some provinces are strongly opposed to any move to a more restrictive program, while others want the social aspects to be removed. Mr. Speaker, two distinct schools of thought have emerged. One school holds that to achieve the objectives of the current program, it should be broken apart into at least two distinct programs: insurance on one side and what are called social benefits on the other. It is argued that the current system actually encourages people not to work—that unemployment insurance should return to strict insurance principles and let the social benefits be handled by another, unspecified, mechanism.

The other school of thought holds that the scope and coverage of unemployment insurance should be expanded and enriched. It is proposed that unemployment insurance play a stronger income support role. This school rejects as "myth" the notion that substantial numbers of Canadians draw unemployment insurance in preference to holding a job. Thus the proposals are for more money to be introduced into the program. The distinction between social benefits and insurance principles is simply not accepted.

Each of these schools is not only sharply critical of the other, but each forecasts disastrous results if the other's proposals are implemented. But everyone is agreed that any change in the design of the program would profoundly affect millions of individuals and the economies of the regions where they live.

[English]

The Government has considered carefully the current program and all of the proposals for a change in its design. We reject the argument that unemployment insurance benefits should be expanded and enriched. Not only would this be expensive and require an increase of premium payments by all Canadians, it may well create disincentives to work.

Equally, we reject the proposals for a reduction of unemployment insurance benefits. Such reductions would hurt blameless individuals and would damage the economies of certain regions of the country.

As the Government charged with representing an interest of all Canadians, we have concluded that the competing and conflicting opinions of all the interested parties are, at best, reconciled within the current structure of unemployment insurance.

The common element in all the proposals for change is that they would cause hardship among individuals, businesses, and regions, all for an uncertain result. This would be counterproductive to the progress we have made in rebuilding our economy, supporting regional development, and creating jobs.

[Translation]

The Government acknowledges unemployment insurance is not a perfect program, but the current system is helping millions of Canadians and we will not induce unnecessary uncertainty by attempting change for the sake of change. Our plan is not to reduce unemployment insurance but to reduce the need for unemployment insurance.

[English]

We must continue to do what helps Canada achieve durable employment. All our economic, fiscal and regional development, trade and human resource development policies are dedicated to this end. Unemployment insurance is assisting in those efforts and will continue to do so.

Unemployment insurance is only one tool within the package of our labour market and employment development programs. The Canadian Jobs Strategy plays a vital role in assisting Canadians to adjust to changing economic circumstances.

While the employment picture is steadily improving—778,000 jobs have been created since September, 1984—and we have an excellent and effective set of programs, I cannot and shall not rest complacent. I intend to ensure that the jobs strategy remains responsive to regional needs and labour market changes, responsive to the needs of individuals such as women re-entering the workforce, the older unemployed, youth making the transition from school to work, those workers facing shifts in global trading pattern, and technological change, and the long-term unemployed.

Reducing regional disparity is a major goal of the Government. We are giving special emphasis to diversifying the economic base of western Canada. We have taken steps to assist the oil industry and we are working to help the agricultural sector. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will improve federal development initiatives in Atlantic Canada.

Throughout my consideration of unemployment insurance, I have been struck by the importance of how the unemployment insurance program is administered. For most people, the way the program is delivered is the first issue raised. Our staff in the Canada Employment Centres do a fine job in what are often difficult circumstances, but I believe that we can and must do better in administering the program. We can provide better and more sensitive service to our clients and we can better control abuse by those who would cheat the unemployment insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to outline administrative initiatives which we will implement, and which should be fully operational in 1988.

We will place Claimant Services Officers in our busiest offices. These people will work directly with our claimants to provide clear explanations and help when it is needed. We will provide public awareness sessions, so people can understand the system, and will know what to expect. We will provide better telephone access so our clients can be spared the frustration of busy phone lines, and can get the information they need about their claims.

We will implement a simplified Record of Employment after consultations with employers and employees to reduce the paper burden on employers.

We will step up our activities to weed out those who would abuse the system. There will be enhanced job search and availability interviews. We will serve our claimants better—those honest people who would rather work than collect unemployment insurance. The small group who would cheat the Unemployment Insurance Program, and who tarnish the reputation of all claimants, will not be tolerated.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank each member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration for their work on the Unemployment Insurance Program.

Their report was most helpful in our consideration of not only the current program but the other proposals for reform we received. The committee suggested we consider its recommendations as a package and we have done so.

I am tabling today a letter to the Chairman of the Standing Committee reflecting the contents of my statement which will serve as the Government's response to the Report in accordance with the Standing Orders.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are laughing at the Government this morning but they are not amused. After two and a half years and millions of dollars spent on four commissions and studies, the Forget Commission, the Macdonald Commission, the Newfoundland Royal Commission and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the Minister comes to the House this morning and says he is going to do absolutely nothing about unemployment insurance reform. There will be no Bill dealing with necessary reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Minister mentioned a few administrative changes which he could have put in place two years or three years ago without any study whatsoever.

On November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance in his Economic Statement said:

> To ensure that this program—
> The Unemployment Insurance Program.
> —meets the needs of individuals in adjusting to rapidly changing labour market conditions at a reasonable cost to workers, employers and the Government, statutory changes are likely to be required. Accordingly, the Government has initiated a review of the Unemployment Insurance program to be undertaken on an urgent basis. A discussion paper will be published shortly by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) followed by appropriate parliamentary review.

The Minister then went on to give us more details in his book entitled A New Direction for Canada. An Agenda for Economic Renewal. Talk about urgency. The Government then took seven months to set up the Forget Commission which cost this country nearly $7 million. After more than a year and a half of research and study and hearings, Forget produced his report in December of 1986, along with two minority reports. The commission was very severely divided.

At that time we in the Liberal Party took strong exception to proposals by Forget to reduce benefits by a method of calculating them on the basis of annualization, and to his proposals to cut seasonal and regional benefits. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration then undertook a study of the Forget Report and made its own report on the subject in March of 1987. The committee unanimously rejected the annualization proposal and cuts in benefits and made 90 recommendations for improvement to the Unemployment Insurance Program. Many of these recommendations were similar to the Forget Commission's recommendations. There were agreements between the standing committee and the Forget Commission on some essential points.

The Minister, however, has ignored all these proposals. He has done nothing to extend unemployment insurance to the growing number of part-time workers. He has done nothing to improve maternity and parental benefits. He has done nothing to provide more training opportunities for those on unemployment insurance. He has done nothing to clarify the law with respect to those locked out or unable to work during strikes. He has done nothing to bring equity to the problem of overpayments.

During our hearings we heard many horror stories of people who were paid the wrong amount of unemployment insurance benefits. It was through no fault of their own but was the fault of government officials. Yet they were asked to pay back thousands of dollars while they were still unemployed. Nothing is going to be done about that. The Minister has said nothing about the restructuring of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to make it more efficient and independent.

The Government is once again abandoning its political agenda. Once again it has ignored a unanimous committee report, despite great claims for parliamentary reform.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government brought in parliamentary reform, but this month it managed to ignore two unanimous reports from the Committee on Employment and Immigration, one on refugees and one on unemployment insurance.

[English]

Twice in one month the Government, which has prided itself on Parliamentary reform, has ignored two unanimous committee reports from the same committee. The Minister's claim in his statement that "Our plan is not to reduce unemployment insurance but to reduce the need for unemployment insurance" is a real farce. If the Minister has in mind some new programs to combat unemployment, where are they? He certainly did not announce them this morning.

The rate of unemployment in this country is still 9.3 per cent with 1.2 million persons out of work. We have not yet returned to the pre-recession rate of 7.5 per cent unemployment which existed in 1981 and we are three years out of the recession. We have nowhere approached the average rate of unemployment of 5.6 per cent which existed in this country from 1965 to 1980. In fact, the Government has cut the employment and training programs by 30 per cent, from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.6 billion in this fiscal year. The Government's approach is one of laissez-faire resulting in low unemployment figures in the Toronto area but a 20 per cent rate in Newfoundland, a 12.6 per cent rate in British Columbia, a 10 per cent rate in Alberta and a 14 per cent rate for youth in this country.

The Government is doing nothing with respect to the growing number of low-paying, non-union part time jobs which have no benefits, 70 per cent of which are held by women. Nothing is being done about the growing gap between the incomes of men and women. This year for the first time in 18 years the gap widened rather than narrowed. The Government is also doing nothing about the growing gap between rich and poor as a result of the growing tendency to low paying part-time jobs.

The Unemployment Insurance Act was introduced by a Liberal Government in 1940 following the unemployment tragedy of the 1930s. The legislation was a great accomplishment of the Liberal Party under MacKenzie King. Over the years the Liberal Party has continued to refine, reform and fine tune the legislation. We still favour reform and improvement. We supported all the 90 recommendations in the standing committee report but one.

Much could have been done by the Government without touching controversial issues, but it has shown absolutely no leadership. The statement by the Minister today will not please anyone. It is a complete abdication of responsibility.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to express to the Minister my thanks for the promptness with which I received his statement. He said I would receive it in my office shortly after 9 a.m. and it was there shortly after 9 a.m. That is certainly an example which should be emulated by every Minister on the benches opposite.

Having said that, and that is the only one nice thing I am going to say about the Minister today, I do not think Canadians are laughing. I think that at 12.08 p.m. today, a collective sigh of relief went up from all the unemployed Canadians across this country. They are relieved because the Minister did not implement any of the Draconian recommendations of the Forget Commission. In fact, the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Labour, Employment and Immigration is largely responsible for getting the Minister off the hook. He should get down on his knees and thank every single member of that standing committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, May 15, 1987 is a great day for the rights of Canadian workers, who will keep unemployment insurance as a form of income support when looking for a job. It is probably a slap in the face for Mr. Forget and his recommendation for annualization.

Members of the Standing Committee managed to put their personal views aside and unanimously recommended a set of measures and some thorough reforms for unemployment insurance. Members of all Parties in this House made it possible for the Government to save face and reject the abomination of annualization. Much remains to be done, however, to gain acceptance for measures that will improve the unemployment insurance system.

• (1230)

It is too bad that the Minister could not summon up his courage. As I read his statement I felt like a mosquito in a nudist colony—I just did not know where to begin.

First, I should set out very clearly that the only good thing that I can see in the statement is the fact that the recommendations of Forget have not been implemented. It is too bad that the Minister preferred to do this balancing act. As a matter of fact, I am surprised that he has been sitting on the fence for five months and 10 days from December 5 to May 15. It is five months and 10 days since the report of Forget was tabled in the House. The Minister sat on the fence for that length of time. I am surprised that today he is still on the fence and that there are not any splinters in his derrière. For five months and 10 days the Minister has been sitting on this egg. He was sitting on this egg, clucking and clucking, and what we have today in his statement is a scrambled result.

The Minister could not find the courage to deal with the unemployment insurance program in the positive way that was recommended by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. In his statement the Minister mentioned the Macdonald Commission Report, the report of the Newfoundland Royal Commission and the report of the committee of the House of Commons as if all three are separate reports. In fact, the Forget Commission Report was set up to study the recommendations of the Macdonald Commission. The standing committee of the House examined the Forget Report.

In the standing committee there sat members from all three Parties dominated by Conservatives. We considered Forget's report. We heard witnesses. In fact, the committee came back with 90 recommendations, 89 of them unanimous. Yet what has the Minister done instead of taking some of our recommendations? We recommended 10 weeks and 50 weeks of benefit. Yet what did we get? We got five and ten—five months and ten days that the Minister has been sitting on this issue.

We expected the Minister to deal with some of the positive recommendations we made. Some of the recommendations were with respect to maternity benefits. There was agreement from 99.99 per cent of the witnesses we heard that maternity benefits ought to be enhanced.

One of the most serious problems starting to emerge in our economy is with respect to part-time workers who are not only mostly women but young people. We looked at the question and we made a positive recommendation to the Government. Yet there has been no response to it.

We considered training, which was one of the issues in the Forget Commission Report. We specifically recommended to the Government certain items with respect to training. We did the same thing with respect to administration. In our report there are specific recommendations with respect to improving the records of employment so that delays to claimants can be avoided. So what will the Minister do with records of employment? He is going to consult. He is going to consult employers and employees. He is going to do more studies when there was a specific recommendation dealing with records of employment.

As for administration and local offices, we will improve the profits of Bell Telephone. A few more telephone lines will be put in. Does it take the $6 million or $7 million of taxpayers' money which was spent on Forget, the thousands of dollars which were spent on the expenses of the standing committee which studied Forget and five months and 10 days to discover that we do not have enough telephones in local offices? Has it taken that long for the Minister to discover that claimants are getting busy signals?

The Minister has set up a great straw person. Oh, there is abuse in the system, he says. We thoroughly examined the UI Program and all the evidence from the Minister's bureaucracy. The Minister clearly indicated that abuse in the system is 3 per cent or less. That compares with doctors in the medicare system. It compares with lawyers in the legal aid system. Three per cent abuse and the Minister says that we are going to cuff them with respect to benefit control to claimants.

We made specific recommendations with respect to how to deliver the services to legitimate claimants in an effective and efficient manner with as little delay as possible. The Minister has those recommendations in the report of the standing committee. Yet what does he do? He completely ignores the report and goes off to say, "Oh, well, we are going to consult with employers and employees to improve that. We are going to do this and do that".

We have entered into a new era with respect to standing committees of the House. They are supposed to have more power. They are supposed to participate more fully in what goes on and what should come from government. Well, our committee unanimously supported 89 recommendations. One recommendation, the ninetieth, was a majority recommendation. The Government has chosen to ignore these recommendations.

Ours was the first report on unemployment insurance that I have ever seen around here in which there was unanimity. Conservatives, who share the same ideology as the Minister, and some of them come from the same region as he, sat and discussed Forget with us. We called witnesses. We called Forget twice, and we called the members of his commission twice. We called the members of his commission who wrote the minority report. We talked to the bureaucrats. We talked to the Advisory Council on Employment and Immigration. The committee meetings were extensive. The Minister has a blueprint. Yet all the recommendations he picked out of the 90 amounted to zilch—zero. It is shameful that the Minister would ignore completely an arm of this House in the form of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and not recognize the work it has done by implementing its recommendations which are positive and which enhance the Unemployment Insurance Program. It is indeed sad that it took the Minister five months and 10 days to come up with his statement.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a petition on behalf of those who feel that the Government of Canada has inflicted an extreme injustice on one of its citizens, one Mr. Fred Turner, by wrongfully depriving that individual of his right to earn a living through the operation of his family business.

The petitioners hope that the Government will appoint an independent arbitrator to investigate the details of this case, thus ensuring a settlement that better reflects the true nature of Mr. Turner's loss.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have here several hundred petitions from various parts of Canada, including Repentigny, Rigaud and Ville Saint-Laurent, in the Province of Quebec, as well as Weston, in Ontario. I also have many petitions covered with the signatures of hundreds of residents of Belleville, in Ontario.

The petitioners feel that the new Canada Post corporate plan will create two classes of citizens through the permanent installation of superboxes in both urban and rural areas; that the closing of post offices in rural areas will deprive the citizens of a unique federal presence and reduce the level of postal service which is vital to rural communities; and that the rate increases, especially for second class mail, will jeopardize the distribution of many newspapers, regional weeklies, magazines and religious publications.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to turn down the Canada Post Corporate plan and urge Canada Post to deliver mail indiscriminately to all Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS ON AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have close to 1,300 names on three petitions dealing with the Auto Pact. The petitioners are resident in various parts of my constituency.

The first petition contains a total of 441 names, with the petitioners in this particular case coming mainly from the City of Windsor itself; the second petition, with 232 names, is from auto workers in the rural areas of the constituency; and the third petition contains the names of residents of many of the small towns throughout my constituency, such as Amherstburg, Essex, Belle River, Stoney Point, and La Salle.

These petitions, as a whole, say to the Government that there is a great deal of concern that the safeguards built into the Auto Pact will be given away in the free trade talks with the United States. The petitioners call upon the Government to prevent any threat to the Canadian content safeguards of the Auto Pact and to maintain the promise that the Auto Pact will not be a subject for negotiation in the free trade talks with the United States.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, from a number of Canadian residents, from such places as Halifax, Sackville, Toronto, Cooper Creek, B.C., Hamilton, Winnipeg, Wolfville, Victoria, and Côte des Neiges.

These petitioners point out that the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador disrupts the way of life of many of the native people in that area, and that it is also an aggressive and war-fighting action which tends to endanger world peace. They therefore ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister ends all low-level flight training at Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and ceases negotiating with NATO for the establishment of a larger base at that location.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARING BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Next I have a petition from some 150 Canadians, from such places as Saskatoon, Whitby, Grand Falls, St. John's, Newfoundland, Ottawa, Amherstburg, Varennes, Quebec, Scarborough, St. Bruno, Charlesbourg, Hamilton, Montreal, Toronto, Mississauga, Estevan, Swift Current, Neville and Regina in Saskatchewan.

This petition points out that many people around the world are being forced to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada. It goes on to point out that we have in the past in Canada had a good system for refugee determination but that system has now broken down.

There has been a proposal put forward, with support from all sides of this House, as well as from the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups, that Parliament should enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings for refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, and that there be provided universal access to these hearings for every claimant in Canada and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make the claim that one is a refugee.

SUPPORT FOR EDUCATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 105—Mr. Vankoughnet:

1. Since January 1986, did the government give financial support to educational organizations in South Africa and, if so (a) what were the names of these organizations (b) for each, what was the amount of financial support?

2. Is the Government presently giving financial support to any educational organizations in South Africa which condone violence and, if so (a) what are the names of these organizations (b) for each, what is the amount of financial support?

3. Has a (a) Canadian Prime Minister (b) Canadian Minister of External Affairs ever visited South Africa and, if so, on what date did the last such visit take place?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency as follows:

1. See below.

2. The Government is not giving financial support to any organizations in South Africa which condones violence. The organizations funded have education as their mandate and their projects are evaluated using developmental criteria.

3. There has not been an official bilateral visit to South Africa by a Canadian Prime Minister or a Secretary of State for External Affairs. In October, 1978, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, Donald Jamieson, visited South Africa with the other four Contact Group Foreign Ministers to encourage South Africa to continue talks on agreeing to United Nations supervised elections in Namibia. In July, 1980, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mark MacGuigan, transited through the airport in Johannesburg en route from the funeral of the President of Botswana. Dr. MacGuigan met the South African Foreign Minister at the airport.

In July, 1985, a new initiative for educational assistance to South African blacks was announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A $7 million program was approved in May, 1986, toward this end. As part of this $7 million initiative, CIDA's bilateral program provided funds to support the educational organizations in South Africa listed below.

(a) The Educational Opportunities Council (EOC) of South Africa—Undergraduate Scholarships tenable in South African and awarded by EOC in collaboration with the Canadian Embassy ($1.6 million over the next three years; $60,000 disbursed as of March, 1987).

(b) Through the Canadian Education Fund (CEF), which was established as a component of the $7 million program for the purpose of supporting small scale educational initiatives, the 12 organizations below received support. Two million dollars have been allocated to CEF over the next three years, of which $196,000 (approximately R310,000) had been disbursed as of March, 1987.

(i) St. Ansgars Primary School (R50,000)

(ii) Witswatersrand Council of Churches (R10,000)

(iii) Winterveldt Community School (R40,000)

(iv) Christian Outreach and Education (R30,000)

(v) Ikageng Education Centre (R15,000)

(vi) Four Universities (Witswatersrand, Natal, Capetown and Rhodes) (R20,000 each)

(vii) St. Alban's College (R20,000)

(viii) The Rudolf Steiner Centre for Adult Education (R10,000)

CIDA's Special Programs Branch provided funds to support the following educational organizations.

(a) The South African Insititution of Race Relations, through World University Service of Canada (WUSC), for scholarships to 110 black South Africans. In fiscal year 83/84, $1.5 million was approved over five years; following the announcement of the $7 million program, an additional $814,000 was earmarked for this purpose; between January, 1986, and March 31, 1987, $702,400 were disbursed.

(b) The University of Kwazulu, through the University of Calgary for extension staff and faculty member upgrading ($246,000 over three years).

(c) The Self Help Associates for Development Economics (SHADE) through the Coady International Institute ($520,000, of which $386,000 was approved in May, 1986, and $134,000 was approved in September, 1985, and of which $107,000 were disbursed since January, 1986). These funds are used for adult education, self-help activities and community development.

Twenty-two organizations received support through the Mission Administered Fund; these are listed below.

(a) Masazane open school ($2,946)

(b) English language teaching information centre ($5,892)

(r) Molobasane Secondary School ($2,189)

INFORMATION PACKAGE "INNOVACTION"

Question No. 107—Mr. Boudria:

Supply

1. On March 24, 1987, did the Ministry of State for Science and Technology release an information package entitled "INNOVACTION" and, if so (a) what was the total cost (b) how many kits were prepared (c) what was the cost for (i) production (ii) printing (iii) distribution (d) were any other costs incurred and, if so, what were they?

2. What was the purpose of the information package?

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. An information package entitled "INNOVACTION" was released on March 24, 1987. (a) The total cost was $49,915.94. (b) 10,000 kits were prepared. (c) The costs for the following were:

(i) production: $10,000

(ii) Printing (including typesetting): $37,201.20

(iii) distribution: $2,714.74

(d) No other costs were incurred.

2. The purpose of the information package was to inform the public of the details of the strategy.

"INNOVACTION" is a five-part strategy designed to provide a framework for Canada's science and technology efforts. It will involve a number of specific initiatives introduced by federal departments and agencies, which will strengthen our scientific and technological resources, as well as improve Canada's ability to compete within the global marketplace, in the area of science and technology.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 95 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 95 be deemed to have been made an order to return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—THE ENVIRONMENT—REQUEST THAT THE GOVERNMENT ENDORSE, ADOPT AND ADVOCATE, AT HOME AND ABROAD, THE GOALS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BRUNDTLAND REPORT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

—That this House urge the Government to endorse, adopt and advocate, at home and abroad, the goals and recommendations of the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (Brundtland Report), entitled "Our Common Future";

That this report, dealing with global concerns, challenges and endeavours, be adopted as the central policy of the federal Government, its agencies and commissions; and

That the Minister of the Environment advocate the spirit and the substance of this report at the coming General Assembly of the United Nations on behalf of Canadians and of the global community, thus continuing Canada's tradition of giving leadership on environmental matters.

He said: Mr. Speaker, through this motion we urge the Government of Canada—to endorse, adopt and advocate, at home and abroad, the goals and recommendations of the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development—

—widely known as the Brundtland Commission whose report is entitled "Our Common Future".

We are asking:

That this report, dealing with global concerns, challenges and endeavours, be adopted as the central policy of the federal Government, its agencies and commissions.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, we insist:

That the Minister of the Environment advocate the spirit and the substance of this report at the coming General Assembly of the United Nations on behalf of Canadians and of the global community, thus continuing Canada's tradition of giving leadership on environmental matters.

[English]

The history of the report goes back a few years to when the global community came to the conclusion that the environment and its protection and the understandable aspirations of developing nations had to be examined at the same time by way of a global commission. The debate was long and difficult. Finally, in December, 1983, the General Assembly gave the green light to the commission which came down with the report that we are discussing and debating today.

Canada's role or involvement in the time leading to the decision in December, 1983 was central, important, and of considerable significance, because of the role which Canada played in preceding years in other initiatives such as the discussions and negotiations leading to the adoption by the United Nations of the Law of the Sea.

In 1983, the then environment critic of the Official Opposition, who is now the Speaker, lent his support to the initiative. It is important to make that point because there has been, therefore, strong parliamentary support in addition to the government initiative at that time for what we are debating today.

What we are debating today is only one step in a long series of steps behind us and a number of important steps still ahead of us. The commission consisted of 22 individuals drawn from many regions of the globe. Among them were two Canadians. One was Maurice Strong who was very well known for the fact, among other things, that he was the Executive Director of UNEP and as Secretary General was the person in charge of the Stockholm environmental conference in 1972. The other Canadian was the Secretary General of the commission itself, Jim MacNeill. Preceding that assignment, he was the Director of Environment of the OECD. We can see that there was also participation in terms of human resources in the work of the commission by Canada, which lends additional significance and dimension to the report.

The report was released in London on April 27 of this year. I am glad that only 19 days later we have the opportunity in this House to debate its contents and to advance the cause embodied in the report entitled Our Common Future.

The commissioners advanced the debate on the environment from a theme of protection to a theme of survival of the human species on this planet, involving not only us as the human species, but the totality of living beings, with the background notion that between now and the year 2025 the population of this planet will double to almost nine billion persons. Given that today's population of 4.5 billion already has a substantial impact upon the environment, one can imagine the impact upon the resources of this globe if the population doubles and if we do not take certain precautions.

Therefore, the commissioners viewed the environment not only in the context of another public interest competing with existing interests, such as transport, finance, industry, agriculture, forestry, and the like, they stressed the importance of our capacity for a sustainable economy. In other words, they stressed the importance of careful management of the natural resources available on earth and the immense impact upon natural resources being implemented in a manner which would ensure the regenerative capacity of nature.

It was in this sense that the words "sustainable development" suddenly emerged. These two words imply and require a longer definition, which I have just attempted to give, namely, to ensure that the regenerative capacity of nature is assured in order to provide sustainment and a capacity to draw from our natural resources—from fish, forests, water, soil, and air—in a manner which accommodates a population that is expected to double. In a nutshell, that is what sustainable development is all about. Therefore, it becomes a concept or almost a precondition for our approach to the business of Governments and to the public interest in years ahead.

In this scenario, for instance, the Minister of Finance becomes an agent for the environment, as do his colleagues such as the Ministers of Transport, Energy, Mines and Resources, Industry, Agriculture, Forestry, and so on. It sees the totality of the public interest becoming a force intended to ensure sustainable development in Canada and abroad.

Therefore, the commissioners have conceptually incorporated the environment in a global survival theme which brings together, perhaps for the first time, the ambitions and aspirations of developed countries with those of developing countries. No longer will the dichotomy exist; the two hemispheres are brought together with the theme of sustainable development. That I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, is the genius of this report. For the first time this dichotomy of interests, north and south, has been put aside and the theme of sustainable development has provided the common denominator for the totality of mankind.

According to the commissioners, change must occur along three basic tracks; placing on our national Governments the onus of implementing at home and abroad the report's recommendations; confirming the present mandate of the United Nations Environment Program and giving it new technical responsibilities; and three, by calling on the U.N. Secretary General to act globally through existing United Nations agencies in their totality. In other words, not by reinventing another bureaucracy or mechanism but by using better, and reorganizing, existing United Nations agencies which, as we know, are many and important but have not yet adopted, in their own way of thinking, budgeting and setting their own goals, the importance of sustainable development. This is a first in the history of the United Nations.

As with many other things in life, a task like this requires political will. I am sure that if national Governments, and Canada in particular, will generate pressure in the United Nations, governments will manage to bring the change about. There is only until October in time, of course, for governments to prepare themselves at the General Assembly, but it can be done.

The report outlines how to proceed from now in anticipation of this doubling of our planet's population. In order to get from here to there, one of the essential prerequisites is to rekindle the flame of international co-operation, which has a special meaning to Canada if one considers the difficulties we are having with acid rain and with other trans-boundary pollution problems experienced in the last decade or so. We do not want this report to become just another report. We do not want it to collect dust. The commission calls for a high level centre of leadership at the U.N. which can only be brought about by the political will generated among the nations which are members of the United Nations.

While national Governments are asked to reinforce the system, they ask why is it the responsibility and authority of the United Nations Secretary General? The commission at the same time is calling upon the Secretary General to constitute under his chairmanship a special United Nations board for sustainable development. In that sense, they give a signal that if the United Nations Secretary General were to assume this responsibility and develop it, then he would become the pivotal force, so to speak, for environment and development in his office at the head of the United Nations. His office would become the centre of three global preoccupations; one being peace, as well all know, the second being the environment, and the third being development. These are the three themes which would be the cement and the bond because of the community of interest in all member nations of the UN. Not one member nation of the UN would disagree with the fact that the main preoccupations globally today are these three points; peace, development and environment. In this sense, time is of the essence.

In her forward to this report, Madam Brundtland who, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister of Norway, makes a number of interesting observations which I will quickly put forward for your consideration.

First, in the present times we have seen a deterioration in global co-operation which must be replaced by a return to multilateralism. That means co-operation between neighbouring nations in one region, globally as well. Second, the environment does not exist as a sphere separate from human actions, the environment is where we all live, and development is what we all do in attempting to improve our own lot within that abode called the environment. The two are inseparable. Third, many of the development paths of the industrialized nations are clearly unsustainable. I repeat, they are unsustainable, one of Madam Brundtland's points. The development decision of these countries, because of their great economic and political power, could have a profound effect upon the ability of all people to sustain human progress for generations to come.

What is needed is a new approach to economic growth, a new era so to speak; growth that is forceful and at the same time socially and environmentally sustainable. You can see the importance of the word "sustainable" which pops up almost on every page of this report, the theme of finding ways to maintain sustainable growth that can accommodate larger and larger numbers of inhabitants on this planet.

The commissioners, as I mentioned to you, Mr. Speaker, came from widely differing backgrounds. After three years and starting with a variety of different approaches, they managed to produce a unanimous report. That is no minor feat considering the background, the education, the outlooks and the cultural values of the 22 commissioners from five different regions of the world.

In the report, the commissioners address governments, private enterprise, industry and labour. First and foremost are people, in particular, the young people of the world. Madam Brundtland stresses the fact that the world's teachers will have a crucial role to play in bringing this report to the attention of the young.

The report has an optimistic tone in contrast to other environmental documents. It expresses the belief that people can build a future more prosperous, more just and more secure. Rather than predicting ever increasing environmental decay, poverty and hardship, the commission seized the possibility for a new era of economic growth based on policies that sustain and expand the environmental resource base. Such growth is absolutely essential to relieve the great poverty in many parts of the world poverty which is deepening in much of the developing world.

The commissioners give the reader an urgent message based on the latest and best scientific evidence that the time has come to take the decisions needed to secure the resources to sustain this and coming generations. What is required is a spirit of international co-operation with the future of mankind in mind.

As you know, it is an historic fact that over time humanity has developed loyalties with greater and greater scope, Mr. Speaker. We started with the family, of course, and developed loyalties within the family. We then went to the clan to which we belong, then to the region, and eventually in the political history of mankind we developed the concept of nation and loyalty to the nation. In recent decades we have developed the new concept of loyalty to groups of nations and to the United Nations in general.

The authors of this report point to a new loyalty, a loyalty to the planet. The test of this report and of the political will in the parliaments of the world will be whether we will have the ability and foresight to make these loyalties ours, not only in theory but in practice. That will be the real test. The report refers to who the beneficiaries of the report will be.

I notice that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether, with the consent of the House, I could be permitted to carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has consent to continue for a few more minutes.

Mr. Caccia: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to thank my colleagues. I will accelerate my pace.

My colleagues and others watching these proceedings may ask who benefits from this report. In the case of Canada I would say that over 25 million Canadians would benefit from this report.

Mr. Nunziata: And their children and grandchildren.

Mr. Caccia: As the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is suggesting, their children and grandchildren would benefit as well.

In the implementation of the ideas of this report, which may take several generations of parliamentarians, in the time period leading up to the launching of the commission, during the life of the commission, and from then on, there are very good reasons for Canada to develop the same relationship with the World Commission on the Environment and Development as Switzerland has developed with the Red Cross over the last century.

We certainly have a stake in that which is in this report because our well-being depends so much on natural resources. If we can turn things around in a manner which will enable us to better develop our relationship with our natural resources, our economy will benefit as well as our well-being.

The process will not be as simple as I have outlined it so far. The process will require changes in thinking, in behaviour and in structures. If the changes in thought take place, structures can change, particularly governmental structures with regard to how we govern and organize ourselves. As Madam Brundtland emphasized very strongly in her report, there would be a return to multilateralism and an international spirit of co-operation.

I will move on to Chapter 12, the action chapter of the report, in which six priorities are outlined. The first priority deals with getting at the sources, in other words, to begin to focus on the source of the problem of how we affect the resources rather than on the effects, as we often do.

The second priority is to deal with the effects. The importance of that can, of course, be the subject of another intervention.

The third priority is the importance of assessing the global risks. In this respect Canada is playing a leadership role right now under the auspices of the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) on the question of the depletion of the ozone. We congratulate the Minister on that very fine initiative because the depletion of the ozone is one of the global risks which we must face. In addition to that we must be concerned about the warming up of temperatures, better known as the greenhouse effect.

The fourth priority is the importance of making informed choices. There is a phenomenal range of informed choices which must be made through the actions of NGOs, teachers and governments in informing the public and so on.

The fifth priority is to provide legal means. This again is the subject of a speech by itself which the Hon. Member for York South—Weston will tackle later this afternoon. The sixth priority is investing in our future. There are a number of very important considerations with regard to this which time does not permit me to put on the record.

I would like to put the following paragraph from page 336 of the report forward for your consideration because I think it is so important. It reads:

> Nations, industrial and developing, that did not make these investments have paid much more in terms of damage costs to human health, property, natural resources and the environment.
> And these costs continue to rise at an accelerating pace. Indeed, countries that have not yet instituted strong programmes now face the need for very large investments. Not only do they need to roll back the first generation of environmental damage—

This is something which we are doing on the Niagara River and the St. Clair River and are trying to do with acid rain.

> —they also need to begin to catch up with the rising incidence of future damage. If they do not, their fundamental capital assets, their environmental resources, will continue to decline.

What are these environmental resources? Obviously they are water, soil, forests, and all the other natural resources on which humanity depends that are so essential in maintaining the growth and well-being of the human species.

What should the response be to this report? The Government could and should direct each Deputy Minister to review the content of Our Common Future and report to their respective Ministers which recommendations in this report their Department can adopt and incorporate by way of a change of internal policy, and which they cannot adopt, and to indicate the reasons why.

Further, the Government can, as it has already, form a task force on the environment and the economy which has the mandate to consider this report; the group presently consists of seven Ministers of the Environment, provincial and federal, representatives from industry, from NGOs and one academic. We deplore very much the absence of labour from that committee. The committee could be expanded to include other people as well, but time does not permit me to go into that.

The Government could also ensure that the basic recommendations which impinge upon Canada's performance in our common future become standing items on the agenda of the meetings of the committee of provincial and federal environment and resource Ministers from across the country. That is a must.

Further, sustainable development should be made a permanent item on the agenda of the regular meetings of the First Ministers when they meet at regular intervals. Parliament could launch a joint committee of the House and Senate to ensure that the basic concepts of this report are known to the public, and to solicit and invite suggestions and input from Canadians at large. That in itself would be a very interesting and exciting parliamentary experience.

Looking beyond our boundaries, the report makes a recommendation which I commend to you very highly, and that is that Canada should develop an environmental foreign policy. As we develop a peace policy we should certainly start to think in terms of an environmental foreign policy.

What can be done outside government does not require much elucidation. I would only say that non-governmental organizations could perform a major role, as well as interested individuals and groups and native groups who will become increasingly interested in finding ways of supporting the transition that lies ahead to an economy based on sustainable development.

As well, a suggestion could be made to establish a "futures committee", comprised of leaders in business and labour, in environmental organizations, in the educational sector, in the arts and communications to look at the concepts of sustainable development as they apply to Canada and the globe, and to tap new ideas and resources. Public education will be the key in the adoption and implementation of what is in this report.

It is absolutely essential to provide a kit for teachers that will give them an understanding of Our Common Future so they will be able to pass the message on to the children and youth in our school systems across the nation.

The reason for this motion today is to provide for a constructive debate on the report of the World Commission on the Environment and Development only 19 days after it was released in London. We do this in order to bring to the attention of the House and Canadians at large the concepts involved in this very crucial and important document, and to register and reinforce the urgency of the situation and the overwhelming need to act now if we are to assure the survival of the human race in the long term.

In October of this year the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) will be addressing the General Assembly of the United Nations to deliver Canada's response to this report. Many of our colleagues who have attended international conferences will know that Canada is looked upon for leadership in global environmental, peace and security matters. To this end, we on this side of the House urge the Minister of the Environment, with the help of his Cabinet colleagues and Members of Parliament, provincial Governments, public groups and NGOs, to develop not just a message of process and policy but of specific projects and concrete examples on how to reach the goals of sustainable development within the systems of three levels of Government in our nation, as basically advanced by the Brundtland Report.

I will conclude by quoting the last paragraph of that report which states:

> We are unanimous in our conviction that the security, well being, and very survival of the planet depend on such changes, now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes), do I have consent to call it one-thirty o'clock? Questions and comments have terminated, therefore I will not recognize any questions and comments.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, while we were listening attentively to our colleague, I had discussions with Members, and I think you will find agreement by all Parties to call it one-thirty so that the Member who speaks at two o'clock can make all of his comments at one time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.30 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.25 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2.07 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House adjourned at 1.30 p.m. I had recognized the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me as Parliamentary Secretary, to speak today on behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) on this very important subject. We are discussing today the work of the World Commission on the Environment and Development, commonly known as the Brundtland report. That report is named, of course after the Prime Minister of Norway. I had the very great pleasure of welcoming some musicians from Norway just a few days before the report was tabled in London. I must say the Norwegian people are very proud of the report being named after their Prime Minister.

We are all in agreement with the World Commission Report on the Environment and Development. It is a major step towards tackling global environmental challenges. There are a number of serious challenges which affect us all, such as acid rain, air and water quality, pollution, toxic wastes, to name a few. However, the commission focuses on the most important challenge of all, and that is the challenge of encouraging economic growth while protecting our ecological environment.

Economic growth together with environmental protection is the theme of this report called Our Common Future. Today we have an opportunity to consider the environment on a global plane. By providing people in Canada and around the world with this report the commission has performed a most useful function. The presence of Dr. Maurice Strong and Jim MacNeill, Secretary General, both Canadians, ensured that the commission was made well aware of Canadian concerns.

In choosing Canada as one of only four countries in which to hold public hearings, the commission chose wisely. Canada is a unique resource for any environment related studies. There are several reasons for this. First, this is a very large country. It is the world's second largest land mass embracing, as it does, three oceans, the Atlantic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean and the Arctic Ocean. Since we are managers of such a large part of the globe's real estate, how we manage what we have has to be important to the rest of the world.

Much of Canada rests on the Precambrian Shield which sustains vast forests and pockets of mineral wealth, but we have a relatively small population. In the West, farmers are plagued by drought, falling water-tables and unstable soils. The mountains in the west, magnificent in their majesty, restrict two-thirds of the population of that area to the lower Fraser River valley. The north is dominated by cold, dry tundra. In fact, the north, because of the limitations of its ecosystems, has a very delicate environmental balance. Economic development must therefore be undertaken with care.

Let us look more closely at the reality behind the popular image of Canada as a country of hewers of wood and drawers of water, at the parts of the country—the Province of Ontario in which we are sitting today, the Province of Quebec which we can see across the river, the eastern provinces, including Prince Edward Island, where once there was a sea of white pine, wave after wave of trees that grew so tall that they seemed the very pillars holding up our skies. It was not uncommon to fell trees that were 15 metres high and perhaps three metres in diameter. We need to do more to replant what has been harvested. As a result lumbermen have been reduced to cutting black spruce 1,500 kilometres northeast of Ottawa in our less fertile forests.

Within our mammoth land is a diversity that parallels much of the rest of the world; geographically, climatically, economically and culturally. There are within Canada greater differences than exist between entire countries elsewhere in the world. Looking at Canada is like viewing conditions around the globe, as if we offered the commission a world visit for the cost of a single airfare; from virgin forests in South Moresby to the fragile high Arctic to the towering but delicate sand dunes of the Cavendish Beaches; from Quebec City, a UNESCO heritage site, to the Old Port of Montreal; and from Toronto, which is now praised as North America's most livable large city, to the Scarborough Bluffs which are on the edge of Lake Ontario just south of my riding, right to Vancouver.

Beyond what Canada is lies what Canada does. What Canada does best goes to the very heart of this debate. We were pioneers and have now become seasoned experts in the reality of environmental interdependence. Whether acid or toxic rain, nuclear radiation, or in any other form, pollution moves around our planet irrespective of the maps we have made and the national flags in which we wrap our pride. Pollution moves upward and outward as well, piercing the layers of the stratosphere nature gave us as a protective blanket and threatening the purity of space beyond our space.

Nowhere is this more obvious than in the shared Canadian-American environment where, on a less global scale, two countries are linked by waterways, mountain ranges and even by wind patterns. We in Canada have, with our American friends, pioneered international co-operation. We have resorted to every form of co-operative measure to keep each other's garbage off our own front lawns. We have reciprocal laws, bilateral mechanisms, agreements, treaties and regular summits between heads of state.

We are very pleased with the recent Niagara River memorandum of understanding signed by four levels of Government: Ontario, New York, United States and Canada. There is a Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and, of course, the International Joint Commission which has been dealing with transboundary water boundaries and now soil, pollution, air, and, of course, the high water levels that are of particular importance today.

I recognize, of course, that these Canadian-U.S. initiatives are the result of interaction between two wealthy countries. By contrast, the commission faced environmental questions in countries where poverty is an economic reality. Countries are forced to sacrifice their precious natural resources for urgent short-term purposes at the expense of their immediate environment and future generations.

The consequences of encroaching on our environmental capital have been identified by the report of the commission. Some of them include the greenhouse effect, which threatens to overheat the world by wrapping it in a layer of carbon dioxide; the dangers of a nuclear winter imposed on us by war or by accident; arctic haze, which reminds us that airborne pollution travels thousands of miles, and even countries away from its industrial origins; lessened genetic diversity, which may eliminate potential sources of medications that alleviate human suffering; and the destruction of the natural heritage so essential to human survival. Humankind's life support systems—the air we breathe, the water we drink, the soil that provides our food—is under seige. A steadily growing population means that more and more people will be trying to live on less and less environmental capital, much of which is under environmental strain.

The commission report asks what can be done to stop this spiral. Despite the best intentions, foreign aid and favourable trade arrangements, the industrialized world has work to do in assisting developing countries and nations to solve their root problems. We live in a fortunate country blessed with a wealth of resources and opportunities. That wealth gives us a unique role to play in helping less developed countries reach their potential.

Part of that role includes providing development assistance that takes into account both economic development and environmental protection. Canada's development agency, CIDA, now budgets 20 per cent to 25 per cent of all funds for bilateral aid projects to the environmental concerns associated with them. That is a significant part of the CIDA budget. In addition, all Canadian aid projects in the Third World are subject to an in-depth environmental assessment. The Government is also tackling our own domestic environmental issues.

One of Canada's most troubling environmental problems is that of toxic wastes. The Department of the Environment is now preparing legislation to help manage toxic chemicals through their entire life cycle, from formulation, manufacture, distribution, sale and use, to eventual disposal.

Even as that legislation is now being developed, there is growing concern, because of toxic rain, about the presence of lethal chemicals in the environment. If we are to take action, and we are, we will find solid ground on which to tackle this problem in concrete terms. The commission has already identified anticipation and prevention of economic environmental mismanagement as essential, and I certainly agree.

The Minister of the Environment established the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy to improve the co-ordination of economic and environmental decision-making. Further, the Minister of the Environment is also ensuring that his cabinet colleagues take environmental considerations into account when federal economic decisions are made.

In Canada, studies show that in all of the policy questions that have dominated the public agenda since the end of World War II, attitudes have shifted on only one major issue, the environment. And even in respect of the environment there is a need to increase an understanding of the true state of the environment and of the importance of preventive measures.

We have to ensure that today's consumers of the environment, and tomorrow's, understand the consequences of the chemical society, of the overfished lake, of the carelessly set forest fire; and moreover, we have to make the consumer aware not just of the problem but of how we as individuals can help prevent it.

A better understanding by youth is especially important, for half of the present and all of the future belongs to our youth.

The State of the Environment report, released by the Department of the Environment in May of 1986 is an analysis of the Canadian environment, over time and on the total system, on a stress-response basis, not on the basis of individual problems in specific parts of the country. While there have been such surveys in other countries, the State of the Environment report in Canada remains the first of its kind anywhere in the world, both for its thoroughness and for its holistic approach.

With the release of this report, Our Common Future, we have a global State of the Environment report.

Canadians, for their part, participated in the events leading to the report during the visit of the commission to Canada last summer. We see throughout the report the importance placed on the Canadian input. Throughout the pages of the report, many Canadians are quoted, including the federal Minister of the Environment. I should like to quote some of the words of the Minister of the Environment, as set out in the report, as follows:

> The world's environmental problems are greater than the sum of those in each country. Certainly, they can no longer be dealt with purely on a nation-state basis.

The commission met with Canadians in Vancouver, Edmonton, Toronto, Quebec City, and Halifax. It also visited Fort McMurray, South Moresby, and James Bay, all very important parts of Canada from an environmental standpoint. In addition, the commission held two days of public hearings in Ottawa, for the purpose of hearing submissions from Canadians from across the country.

During the public hearings in Ottawa the commission received 124 written submissions. At the same time, there were discussions with 140 individuals, representing industry, labour, native and environmental groups, the voluntary sector, and the general public.

This Government welcomes the clear demonstration of interest and concern expressed by Canadians. We are going to be sure that the voice of Canada, and of Canadians, is heard in the follow-up to this report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary, in her most informative and interesting speech this afternoon, made reference to CIDA, a reference which I should like to pursue for a moment by way of one question.

If I understood her correctly, she indicated to the House that CIDA projects are now subject to an in-depth environmental assessment before a decision is taken. I should like to know the date on which that policy was put into place by CIDA, and the date from which such in-depth environmental assessments have been carried out in respect of CIDA projects.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) and her officials, I learned of this policy. I think it is important that such impact studies be carried out in respect of CIDA projects. It is my understanding that during the time the public hearings were held in Ottawa there was a fair amount of discussion about this particular policy. As to the date on which impact studies began to be carried out on CIDA projects, I cannot say. I can tell Hon. Members that the discussions and hearings that were held in Ottawa and across the country played a major role in having CIDA projects analysed and reviewed in relation to the environmental impact that would flow from such projects. Because Canada puts the environment on such a high plane, it is important that we show a good example in terms of the environmental impact of projects that we sponsor in developing countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) on a question or comment.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I want to offer some comments on the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary. Before I do so, I wish to note my disappointment at not being able to engage in questions or comments in relation to the remarks of the opposition environment critic. In agreeing to provide him with extended time, I did not realize that I would be denied the questions or comments interface.

In relation to the Task Force on the Environment and the Economy, he made the point that there was no labour representation. It is my understanding that in fact the CLC was invited to participate in that task force and that they in fact turned the invitation down. I wanted to set the record straight in that regard.

While I think we need to compliment the opposition environment critic for bringing this subject forward at this time, I do wish to note my disappointment at the generalities of his suggestions. I really wanted to find out this afternoon the direction that the Liberal Party wishes to take in response to this report. That is the sort of thing I would have tried to draw from the Hon. Member in a questions or comments session.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me compliment the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) for her presentation this afternoon. I welcome very much the Government's endorsement of the report because I think its tone, thrust, and direction are important to all Canadians.

Recently I have taken a considerable interest in this topic, because the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology has been addressing the problem of global change. The report deals with those aspects of the earth support structure as they relate to the ability of man to survive on this globe.

I should like to share with my colleagues in the House of Commons the fact that one organization within the Canadian fabric which is delving deeply into the matter on behalf of all Canadians is the Royal Society of Canada. Over the last 18 months it has been discussing on an international level how we should approach matters of global change which affect all of us. In that process the Royal Society of Canada has come to the conclusion that the best way Canadians and Canada can contribute is through detailed studies in the Canadian Arctic, in the Canadian North. It is concerned about how little we know about that important part of the earth. In fact, we know far more about Antarctica than we do about the Canadian Arctic. The Canadian Arctic and the ice mass associated with the whole north polar region play a dramatic role in terms of the earth's climate. It is reflected in many ways relative to rainfall, aridity, soil erosion, and a whole host of other things.

The message I really want to leave with my colleagues is that the Royal Society feels, in that our best contribution can be through studies in the Canadian Arctic, that we should develop the high technology tool of satellite observation known as Radarsat.

We as a Government should ensure that this project goes forward, because it will be one of the most useful tools to study the environment, particularly the Canadian Arctic. It will provide information on ice thickness, ice temperatures, soil erosion, soil alkalinity, and many other areas which are important to all of us who have the privilege of laying the foundation for our next generation.

In closing I should like to repeat that the main theme of the report is that humanity has the ability to make development sustainable and to ensure that it meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations. I take that to mean that there is considerable hope for all of us if we apply our talents in the right direction.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) for his enlightened comments today and for his sustained interest in environmental issues. The issues about which he spoke, the Arctic and satellite observation, are important. However, I want to mention to the Hon. Member some specifics in terms of what will be taking place and will be of concern to the Canadian population.

The Canadian Government is hosting an international conference in Montreal in September of this year. It will concern an international agreement on the ozone layer.

In June, 1988 the Department of the Environment will be hosting in Toronto a conference on the impact of man's activities on climatic change.

In a few short days an international conference will be held in Regina, the Ramsar conference relating to the wetlands. We will also have a visit from royalty, from Prince Philip, at that particular conference.

Of course the federal Minister of the Environment will be making a very important address at the United Nations in culmination of the report and discussions flowing from the national task force.

Also, during the first week of June we will be celebrating environment week in Canada. Its theme is "It is up to all of us".

It is very important that 400 or 500 network organizations are being funded by the Minister of the Environment and that we also participate in our local communities in those very important projects.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is not here today to participate in this most important debate, but I appreciate the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary made some remarks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member, if I may interrupt him for a minute, knows very well that he should not comment upon the presence or absence of Members of the House. There are television cameras outside the Chamber which Hon. Members could be watching. They are in committees, and they are working in other places such as their constituencies. I do not think it is fair for the Hon. Member to keep saying this. He has done it a number of times, and that is the only reason I bring it to his attention.

Mr. Nunziata: In her comments—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If they want to play that game, we waited for the Liberal Party until 2.07 p.m. and this is their motion—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a perfect example of what can happen when this type of thing occurs in the Chamber. Therefore I ask the Hon. Member for a short question and comment, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in her comments the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that the Government of Canada puts the environment on a high plane. I believe I am quoting her correctly. If that is the case, could the Parliamentary Secretary explain why the Conservative Government of Canada cut $46 million from the environment portfolio two and a half years ago? Could she explain, as well, why the Conservative Government of Canada is participating in an ongoing program to cut nearly 750 jobs in that particular area over the next five years? If the Government is as committed as the Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting, why has almost every major environmental group in Canada criticized the pollution policies of the Government? Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could explain the obvious inconsistency between her words and the actions of her Government.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I reiterate what has been mentioned on numerous occasions in the House, that is, the commitment of the Government to environmental issues. Indeed, I outlined some major specifics relating to the environment which I believe deserve a great deal of credit.

Let me also say to the Hon. Member that the budget for Environment Canada this year is now higher than it has ever been in the history of the country, except for one fiscal year, and that is very excellent.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this very important debate. At the outset, let me say that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) was unable to be here today. He very much wanted to participate in the debate, but a long-standing invitation to a speaking engagement in his riding prevented him from being here. He very much regrets it. However, I do not regret it, because it gives me the opportunity to speak on the motion.

I also wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for introducing the motion and for encouraging the creation of the World Commission on Environment and Development and its report entitled Our Common Future. He has played a positive role in that regard, allowing for a very positive and important report to be issued by the international commission.

The commission warns us of the environmental disasters that are waiting to happen. It outlines for the public of the world some of the social, economic and environmental trends. In doing so, I think it functions in a very important way. It gives us a warning that we should heed. For example it says:

> In terms of absolute numbers there are more hungry people in the world than ever before, and their numbers are increasing. So are the numbers of those who cannot read or write, the numbers of those without safe water or safe and sound homes, and the numbers who are short of woodfuel with which to cook and warm themselves. The gap between the rich and the poor nations is widening—not shrinking—and there is little prospect, given present trends and institutional arrangements, that this process will be reversed.

It goes on to outline that:

> Each year another 6 million hectares of productive dryland turns into worthless desert. More than 11 million hectares of forests are destroyed yearly, and this, over 3 decades, would equal an area the size of India.

It talks about acid rain.

> The burning of fossil fuels puts into the atmosphere carbon dioxide which is causing gradual global warming.

This is the greenhouse effect. It maintains that in the early part of the next century the greenhouse effect will increase average global temperatures enough to shift agricultural production areas, raise sea levels to flood coastal cities, disrupt national economies and so forth. It also warns of the depletion of the ozone layer and the effect this will have on increasing human and animal cancers.

The commission did not deal with that area I would call social and psychological pollution. We are living in an age of tremendous social and economic change. You start out in life after some training, never being certain that the job you have trained for will be there. Most people realize now that they will have to change jobs two or three times in a lifetime. We have also seen that the social glue holding communities, societies and families together is now also disappearing. Individual human beings are somewhat in a free flow. A tremendous state of instability exists among our social institutions. There are increases in crime rates, depressions, mental breakdowns and suicides, particularly, and alarmingly, among the young. We have psychopaths who wander the streets and commit mindless murders. These are all symptoms of a society becoming unglued. They are examples of social and psychological pollution.

There is no doubt that we are living in an age of tremendous change, unparalleled in the history of the human race. I remember a few years ago attending a conference in Vancouver listening to the eminent American futurologist, Buckminster Fuller. He was explaining to us that all of the important discoveries made in the history of the human race had been made in his lifetime—in his lifetime, Mr. Speaker.

So fast are the rates of change that nobody is unaffected. The industrialized developed world is also finding the effects of those rapid economic, social and cultural changes. It is obvious that present social institutions in many respects are not capable of dealing with these rapid changes. There are social institutions based on a mind-set in vogue as we entered this century, yet the events that have occurred in this century have made many of those mind-sets obsolete and dangerous.

The commission talks about—and I was very pleased to read this—viable, sustainable social and economic institutions. It talks about sustainable development and growth. In that word "sustainable" lies a whole world of different thoughts, a whole different civilization, a whole different way of doing things, living lives and doing economic and social activities that put a roof over our heads and bread on the table. In that word lies the real importance of this document. In many ways we live in two different worlds. We are all caught in it, particularly we as Members of Parliament.

Let me give two examples. The commission talks about energy, and the need to plan. Oil is a finite resource for which alternate energies must be developed. Conservation has to be dealt with. Last night when I was preparing for my remarks I came across an old copy of the December 1983 report put out by Canertech, a division of Petro-Canada, dealing with alternate energies. In its report it states that alternate energy and energy conservation will create more jobs, save so many billions of dollars to the consumer and so forth. In a recommendation it says that the days of burning fossil fuels have to be numbered. A greenhouse effect is forming that will totally change the climatic patterns and therefore the social and economic patterns of this globe. We cannot continue to put out garbage. Other ways have to be found to dispose of it.

The warnings are there. Yet we live in this other world. We live in this world of jobs in which the economy of your Province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and my Province of Saskatchewan are almost in ruins because of the oil price collapse. We stand here in the House of Commons asking for more assistance for the industry, yet we know that that industry over the long term is not sustainable. It is not a life forming sustainable industry because it is threatening the very atmosphere of this globe.

The other example, is the field of agriculture. The commission points out rightly that the heavy subsidization of agriculture in the developed world has meant more planting from fence line to fence line, putting land into production that should never be in production, with the use of chemicals and fertilizer—mining the soil, so to speak. We in western Canada know this. Commissions and studies have warned us that one cannot continue doing this forever and ever. We have a finite world. Our resources are finite. The soil is finite. We do not have an infinite world in which we can continue to exploit the soil as people have in the past. On the other hand, when wheat prices fall, my colleagues and I ask for further assistance from the Government. I raise this in all honesty because if we take a look we will recognize the contradictions that exist. We are living in two different worlds simultaneously. They are worlds in conflict and worlds apart.

The commission talks about a new type of world that we have to move into if we are to survive as a human species. We are still in this other world which assumes that our resources are infinite. We are in a world which demands short-term decision making, not long-term, meaning governments from poll to poll and election to election. We should be guided and motivated by that. With business it is the bottom line at the end of the month or at the end of the year. That is what shareholders are concerned about.

If we as a human species are to survive we have to expand our consciousness. We must begin to realize that what we do in one place has an effect on other places around the globe. We have to expand our collective consciousness to realize that what we do today will affect tomorrow and the days after. We have to expand our consciousness so that we begin to realize that things have effects and then act accordingly in the best interests of future generations. The institutions, of which we are a part, force us to act on a short-term basis and not in the best interests of the global village, and not necessarily in the best interests of tomorrow and the heritage of our children.

I do not know what the solutions to these problems are. If, for example, the oil industry is not a sustainable industry in the long term, we must be able to offer a social net so that those employed in that industry can find other meaningful employment. We must, for example, allow for the evolution of another form of agriculture that is on a smaller scale, is sustainable and would allow people to live economically viable lives in a rural setting without being forced into the cities. However, evolving those programs and policies requires a different mind-set, a different consciousness, a different civilization. I hope that this report is a step in that direction and I hope that this debate in the House is a step in that direction.

The human race has embarked on a journey into the unknown. The old patterns no longer fit. It is not a question of the old ideologies, public versus private ownership, because either can be as unconscious of the environment and its workers. It is not a matter of workers versus capital because they are both motivated by their own self interests. Workers want and need their jobs and incomes, and capital, of course, requires a rate of return. It is not a question of left versus right. New thinking is required.

This new thinking must be co-operative. People must work together in the common interest and for the common good. That surely is the first priority. If we are to evolve sustainable economic, social and political institutions, those institutions must surely be built on a co-operative model and not on an adversarial one. That is true of labour and capital and of our justice and political systems.

It is the adversarial nature of our present civilization that in many ways creates the bottle-necks. Humanity must evolve more stable and life-sustaining forms of social institutions.

I am particularly happy that the commission addressed international arms expenditures. The commission states that out of a world economy of some $16 trillion, about $1 trillion gets funnelled into the development of arms, the machinery of death. Over all this hangs the danger of a nuclear war and the destruction of the human race as we know it. Surely of all the environmental dangers that face humanity, that is the most important one. The resolution of that danger again requires a different mind-set. It is not East versus West, the communists against the capitalists, the Russians against the Americans. It is a question of our mutual survival. It is a question of addressing the fears of nation states and political and cultural alliances, not through the production of more deadly means of destruction but through the development of sustaining forms of social, economic and political institutions.

The commission pointed out how ironic it is that because of decisions that were made, the deserts in the Sahara are increasing at such an alarming rate that more destruction is being done there than would have been done if an army had invaded and practised the worst kind of scorched-earth policy. Against such an army, we would invest hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars. Yet hardly a gesture has been made to block the desert. How strange our priorities for surviving in this day and age.

In creating those institutions which are meaningful in what I would call a post-industrial society, we must see that they are co-operative in nature. They must take a long-term view of decisions that are made. They must imply planning and care and the proper husbandry, not only of our soil but of our resources and our environment. This requires an intelligence in the decision-making process. It will be a long journey and the human race has embarked on that journey. There is no turning back. As we come to the end of the century, we will continue to meet increasing crises in food and starvation, environmental damage on a global or a regional scale and further economic, social and psychological upheavals. These are indeed very dangerous times.

The members of the commission and I have come to the same conclusion, that there is hope that the human race has the capability of developing those institutions that are sustainable. The human race can develop a higher level of consciousness and all men and women on the face of this planet can begin to benefit from the richness of human intelligence, the vastness of our resources and the beauty of our mother, this planet Earth.

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, before I ask the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) a question, I, like the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), would like to express my regret for not having had an opportunity to ask the former Minister of the Environment in the previous Government some questions. We know the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is sometimes long on words and short on action. Perhaps we will get another opportunity to question him in the future. At least the Hon. Member for Davenport thanked this Government extensively for working—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on a point of order.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did abide by your ruling that, because you were kind enough to extend the time for my speech, there ought not to be a period of questions and comments. I would be more than happy to respond to questions and comments if that is your wish and the wish of Members in the House. However, to be criticized in the manner that I have just been I do not think is fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. I did allow the Hon. Member more time because it was his motion. As he did take a few extra minutes which extended into the question and comment period I felt it only fair, so that other Members could have an opportunity to speak on this debate before five o'clock, that there not be a question and comment period. I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member would like to respond to questions and comments.

After we have completed the period for questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) we will consider the matter of a period for questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) on questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not want to take away the rights of other Members who would like to speak on this important topic this afternoon. I would, however, like to thank the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for his laudatory comments, not only with regard to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) but also with regard to the Government which is finally taking some action on the environment.

The report on the environment stresses that the fundamental links between economic growth and environmental protection is very important. Would the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) not endorse some constructive policies as a means of helping Third World countries to a higher level of growth such as better trade relations around the world? I am sure he will agree that enhanced trade, for example, will help the poorer nations break out of the cycle of poverty and expand their economies. In that way they will have money and resources for environmental protection in their countries.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very valid question. I am not certain what the answer is to all of this. Of course if Third World countries are able to export more and earn more income they can increase their standards of living and have the resources to deal with the environmental problems which will arise as they develop.

Another voice inside of me says that that was the same argument used to get them into forms and patterns of development which now have them so badly in debt that there is more hunger now than there ever was before in those countries. They were lured into this pattern of development and got into cash crops. They now have surpluses of coffee and sugar but not enough basic substances to feed their people on a day-to-day basis. There is starvation in the midst of plenty.

Something has gone wrong with the pattern of development. We must make certain that whatever pattern of development we suggest to Third World countries will not put them deeper in the pit than they are now. So far we have not been very helpful to them.

We hear everyone saying that we need more international trade in order to balance our payments and create jobs and prosperity at home. That is what the Americans are saying and that is what they are saying in Brazil and all over Europe. If everyone is going to be exporting more, who is going to be importing? There is a myth that the more we export the more wealthy we will become. Who is going to import? I have not heard of one country saying that it will import more.

Something else is amiss, Mr. Speaker. I do not have all the answers but before we find answers we will have to explode some of the myths. There are a few around which deserve to be discredited and questioned.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is very little time left for this discussion. I would very much like to hear from the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) what his Party's position is on the specific areas in which Canada and Canadians could make a contribution to solving the problems of global change.

Mr. de Jong: That is a great question, Mr. Speaker. Could I have an hour? It is a very valid question. The New Democratic Party, and particularly its membership, is very committed to, conscious of and concerned about the environmental question. There are contradictions and difficulties within the Party. Sometimes the contradiction is between jobs, jobs, jobs and the environment. I will be perfectly truthful and honest in admitting that there are difficulties and contradictions as there are in all political Parties.

We believe that Canada can make a tremendous contribution. We do have the technical ability and human know-how to make a very strong contribution to global development. New Democrats believe that this can be one of Canada's missions, so to speak. We have a tremendous responsibility to the human family to make this contribution. My colleagues and members of the New Democratic Party are strongly committed to ensuring that human institutions on this globe remain a viable life form.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions on the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow a short question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As I heard a "no" I will recognize the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) for debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat strange that Conservative Members of Parliament would deny unanimous consent to allow questions to be asked of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) after several members of the Conservative Party complained that they did not have the opportunity to ask questions, and particularly after the Hon. Member for Davenport indicated a willingness to answer any questions which might be presented to him.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate this afternoon. I am very proud and pleased that the Parliament of Canada is debating the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development entitled Our Common Future less than three weeks after it was tabled and made public in London. The credit, of course, must go to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport, the critic for the Ministry of the Environment for the Official Opposition, for taking the initiative to bring this matter before Parliament to allow all parliamentarians the opportunity to discuss this document which will be discussed world-wide for the remainder of this century.

The report, Our Common Future, is probably one of the most important documents ever produced because it addresses the very future of the world. The Hon. Member for Davenport has moved what I consider to be an extremely important motion which, with your permission, I would like to read. The motion reads:

> That this House urge the Government to endorse, adopt and advocate, at home and abroad, the goals and recommendations of the Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (Brundtland Report), entitled "Our Common Future";
> That this Report, dealing with global concerns, challenges and endeavours, be adopted as the central policy of the federal Government, its agencies and commissions; and
> That the Minister of the Environment advocate the spirit and the substance of this Report at the coming General Assembly of the United Nations on behalf of Canadians and of the global community, thus continuing Canada's tradition of giving leadership on environmental matters.

If this motion were to be put to a vote, I suspect that it would receive unanimous consent of the House.

• (1510)

I believe the report Our Common Future is probably one of the most important documents that will be discussed in Parliaments throughout the world, including the countries in the western world and behind the Iron Curtain.

When the report speaks of our common future, its authors are not speaking specifically with regard to the future of any particular country but are speaking of the future of humanity and the world as we know it.

The point has been made that the world is finite, that we can grow only so much before we run out of room and deplete the necessary resources to sustain growth.

By the year 2025, the population of the world will double. Presently, the population of the world is 4.5 billion. In a short 38 years, the population will be nine billion, and that fact alone would suggest very strongly that every Parliament, every parliamentarian, every politician and every person in the world must address the question of the future of the globe. It is not only timely that we in Canada should be discussing this report, it is timely for the world.

In 1983, the United Nations General Assembly took a timely decision and established the World Commission on Environment and Development, to study and recommend action on global trends which require urgent attention. Let us examine these trends. One trend is the doubling of the population in 38 years. The report made several other important observations. For example, there are more hungry people in the world today than ever before and more will be hungry with each passing day.

Canada is not immune to the problem of hunger. Members will know that there are food banks in Canada and some of our fellow Canadians suffer the indignity of standing in line for food. There is a problem with poverty and hunger here in Canada, and when we speak of these problems that exist in the world, we must recognize that while we, as Canadians, are fortunate, we are not immune from each of these problems.

The commission also recognized that the gap between the rich and the poor nations is widening rather than narrowing. Each year, another six million hectares of productive dry land turn into worthless desert. More than 11 million hectares of forest are destroyed yearly.

Acid rain kills forests and lakes, damages buildings, structures, monuments, and acidifies water and soil. We in Canada are blessed by the environment. We are indeed fortunate to have some of the most beautiful country anywhere in the world.

However, our environment is threatened. Our lakes and forests are being threatened because of the problem of acid rain. We in the Opposition, through our critic on the environment, have been working very hard to ensure that this issue is treated as a top priority.

The commission also observed the problem with the greenhouse effect, which is the burning of fossil fuels which puts carbon dioxide into the atmosphere causing gradual global warming. By early next century this phenomenon may increase average temperatures enough to shift agricultural production areas, raise sea levels to flood coastal cities, and disrupt national economies.

The commission also observed that industrial and agricultural activities release toxic substances into the human food chain and into underground water tables where removal is virtually impossible.

The commissioners found that the separation of economic development issues from environmental issues is a short-sighted policy. Many forms of development erode the environmental resource upon which they must be based. Environmental degradation can undermine economic development.

Poverty is a major cause and effect of global environmental problems. Attempts to deal with environmental problems without a broader perspective, encompassing the factors underlying world poverty and international inequality are becoming futile.

These main concerns led to the establishment of the commission some three or four years ago. Linked to, but outside the control of, governments and the UN system, the commission which was headed by Harlem Brundtland, pursued three objectives. They were: first, to re-examine the critical environment and development issues and to formulate realistic proposals for dealing with them; second, to propose new forums of international co-operation on these issues that will influence policies and events; and third, to raise the levels of understanding and commitment to action of individuals, volunteer organizations, businesses, institutes, and Governments.

The World Commission on Environment and Development consisted of 22 individuals drawn from five continents. I am pleased to say that the commission consisted of two very eminent Canadians, Mr. Maurice Strong and Mr. Jim MacNeill, who contributed tremendously to the report Our Common Future.

The commission held public hearings throughout the world. Observing that many development trends leave increasing numbers of people poor while at the same time degrading the environment, the commissioners pursued the question: "How can such development serve next century's world of twice as many people relying on the same environment?" As the hearings and meetings progressed, the commissioners came to view development not just in the restricted context of economic growth in developing countries. They concluded that a new development path was required, one which sustained human progress not just in a few places for a few years, but for the entire planet into the distant future. Thus the term "sustainable development" is a goal not just for the developing nations, but for industrialized nations as well.

The conclusions of this report are somewhat of a departure from previous thought in the area. Not long ago there was a general opinion that co-operation between the environment and economic development was not possible. Many people cited gloomy statistics and were not at all optimistic about the future.

This report says that the environment can sustain economic growth and that the goals must be to ensure that economic growth occurs while considering the impact on the environment. In the Chairman's foreword to the report entitled Our Common Future, Mrs. Brundtland makes a number of interesting observations. She says in part, and I quote:

> After a decade and a half of a standstill or even deterioration in global co-operation, I believe the time has come for higher expectations, for common goals pursued together, for an increased political will to address our common future.

We are here for a short period of time in the scheme of things. The average life span today in this country is age 65 years to 70 years. When we speak of the environment, we are talking about the future, not only the future of our children, our grandchildren and the generations to follow but the future of the world. All too often we become preoccupied with things which affect our country and our well-being simply in the short run.

Of course it is important to talk about the unemployment rate and the inflation rate. However, all too often issues dealing with the environment are put on the back burner. What this report, and hopefully this debate, will do is to put the issue of the environment in the forefront to ensure that not only this Parliament but people throughout the world think about the future of the world so that as we continue to grow, as our population increases, and the population of the world doubles in the next 38 years, this planet will be able to survive. In effect, what we are talking about is the survival of the planet.

The two world powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, are spending billions and billions of dollars in the arms race. Other nations in the world are spending billions of dollars as well to build arms to defend themselves. But who is spending money and resources to protect themselves not from one another but from the ultimate destruction of the world? The ultimate destruction will not come by war but because our environment might become destroyed making it impossible for human life to continue. Would it not be a Utopia if all those resources used today for building nuclear weapons and arms, defence systems and star wars systems could be spent on the environment? Would it not be great if we could deal with the problems of acid rain which are articulated in the report?

As the report points out, there is a way of ensuring the continued existence of humanity in this world. All that is necessary is the political will. The World Commission on Environment and Development quite correctly points out that the political will is not there at present. There must be political will in order to pursue some of the recommendations and objectives of this particular report. I suppose one of the reasons the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) presented his motion to the House is to try not only to raise the consciousness of this Parliament and the country on this particular issue but also to try to urge every parliamentarian to somehow acquire the political will in order to ensure that we can continue to grow while at the same time protecting and improving our environment.

The environment should not be a partisan issue. Unfortunately, at times it does become a partisan issue, but such is the nature of our adversarial system and our Parliament. However, I am sure all three political Parties can work together in pursuing some of the very important objectives which are outlined in this report.

The remarkable achievement of the report is that it lucidly advances the debate on the environment from a protection to a survival theme. People have to become aware that we are talking about survival. We are not simply talking about protecting our lakes, our forests and our soil. We are talking about the future of humanity. In effect, we are talking about the survival of the world. How do we ensure sustainable development on this planet while the global population will double between now and the year 2025? Some of us, God willing, may still be alive in the year 2025. Our children and grandchildren will be alive. Future generations will be born in the years which follow the year 2025. Looking at this prospect, the commissioners place the environment not in the context of just one public interest competing with others and at times even in conflict with the economy. The commissioners lead the reader to conclude that the only sensible answer to global problems is through the careful management of the natural resources available on earth and man's impact on them in a manner which ensures nature's generative capacity.

The environment is thus brought to the very centre of economic activity and becomes a pre-condition for development. The dichotomy which has plagued some policy makers so far, that there is a choice to be made between the economy and the environment, is put neatly to rest, hopefully once and for all.

In this scenario, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) becomes an agent for sustainable development, as do other political forces such as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and so on.

In closing, let me say that it is not sufficient simply to have a Minister of the Environment and a Ministry of the Environment, and to say that this particular Ministry and this particular Minister are responsible for the environment and that somehow other Ministers of the Crown should not address that issue. What this report is saying is that each and every Minister of the Crown and, indeed, every policy maker in Canada, when deciding public policy, must ask: "What impact will my decision have on the environment? How can I ensure that we can sustain growth?" I simply ask Hon. Members opposite to support this very worthwhile motion which was presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport. I am grateful to have had the opportunity to participate in this important debate.

Mr. Warner: The previous speaker mentioned a few points, one of which was that this debate is non-partisan and probably should remain that way. It is a concern which all Members of the House share. The importance of the environment to all Canadians, and to the whole world, is certainly supreme in our minds.

The Hon. Member mentioned the tremendous growth rate expected in the next 38 years. Our world population will increase from five billion to double that, and the report suggests that it may stabilize sometime in the next century in the eight billion to 14 billion person range. The report does note that 90 per cent of this growth will take place in the world's poorest nations, quite obviously putting very severe stress and pressure on the economies of already very fragile countries. Would the Hon. Member have specific recommendations as to how to approach this oncoming and very real problem?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, obviously there is no quick and easy solution to the problem. I recognize that most of the growth will occur in the underdeveloped nations in terms of population. I suppose our immigration policy is a way in which we can assist to a large extent with regard to that particular problem. We have a population of some 25 million in Canada. We know, just in terms of land mass, that our country can accommodate millions and millions more individuals. Of course, our social programs may not.

The important conclusion from this report is that we can sustain growth, which is in opposition to a body of thought prevalent in the past which suggested that the world could not sustain the growth that will occur. Because of the fact that the population is about to double in 38 years there was a feeling of almost surrender, a feeling of despair that nothing could be done. What makes this report so important is that it concludes that we can sustain growth. It does not say that growth has to stop at some future point in time and that the environment will be adversely affected. This report says that we can continue to grow while at the same time protecting our environment.

If all the Governments of the world were to adopt some of the recommendations in the report, then we could have this sustainable growth and accommodate the population increase that is predicted over the next 20 or 30 years.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions that our immigration policy could relieve this problem somewhat. In reality what we are looking at is an increase of five billion once the world population doubles. Our economy and our resources cannot offer very much assistance to that type of problem. I suggest that more effort will have to go into areas in which the expected growth will take place and that perhaps the focus should be on poorer countries and how we can assist them in terms of their quality of growth. We also have to take into consideration the fragile nature of our world environment.

Does the Hon. Member care to offer specific suggestions for what we should be doing in the poorer countries of the world and how we can assist their quality of growth at a time when such assistance is very vital and much needed?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately my time is limited. I refer the Hon. Member to Chapter 12 of the report, which is a lengthy chapter. I am sure it will address some of the questions raised by him.

In my previous reply I was not suggesting that we can solve the problem simply by opening up our doors here in Canada. I was simply suggesting that there are ways that we can participate in this global strategy. There are quite a number of things that can be done.

What is important is that the report speaks of a new loyalty that is emerging. Whereas in the past we had loyalties to a particular region, to our country, for example, there is a new emerging loyalty which is articulated in the report. That loyalty is to the planet on which we live. If each and every person who lives in the world increases that loyalty to the planet then that will go a long way to ensuring its survival.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on this major issue of the environment which is vital to Quebec and Canada, and of course, as you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, to the riding of Trois-Rivières and its residents.

As mentioned, last April 29 the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) received the report of the World Commission on the Environment and Development. It was a highlight in the history of the world ecological movement.

Last year Canada and the Conservative Government were delighted to play host to the World Commission on the Environment and Development, and we welcome their report entitled "Our Common Future". We will participate actively in the debate on the report which is on the agenda of the governing council of the United Nations environment program and that of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Compared with other diagnoses made on the condition of the world, the World Commission on the Environment and Development report has a rather uncommon history. To begin with, the 21 commission members led by Mrs. Brundtland met with ordinary people, farmers, workers, students, tribesmen, shanty town residents as well as with heads of state, scientists, industry and financial leaders. Public hearings, free of official constraints, were also held in a number of cities, in 10 countries including, of course, Canada.

The Commission's mandate consisted of re-examining urgent problems for the environment and development; drafting proposals for innovative, concrete and realistic measures to try and resolve those problems; and also increasing public awareness of these problems.

Mr. Speaker, this mandate is unique in that it deals with the environment and development together instead of separately, as is customary at nearly all levels in international and governmental organizations.

Today, however, the connection between ecology and economy is becoming more and more apparent. The report is based on case histories, statistics, personal testimony by participants at the public hearings and scientific assessments, which give a clear picture of the close links that exist between matters as apparently diverse as debt payments and natural disasters, the arms race and the disappearance of tropical forests.

In additional to the Commission's public hearings and its meetings with political leaders and figures throughout the world, the Commission received 75 studies by experts on all aspects of environmental and development problems. It set up task forces with the best experts to be had, to draft recommendations on food security, industry, energy and law. These recommendations formed the basis for the report's 12 chapters, which cover new approaches to the environment and development, the concept of sustainable development, the role of the international economy, population and human resources, the common future of the world and the environment, and proposals for institutional and legal change.

Finally, a decision had to be made, and the Commission did in fact decide, to avoid pointing an accusing finger at certain Governments, leading some to predict that the report would be wishy-washy.

"Our goal was to create a debate on these questions at the highest level and to promote international co-operation on those questions that could rally the support of all parties", explained Jim MacNeill of Canada, the Secretary General of the Commission. "Putting governments on the defensive would do nothing to encourage co-operation. The major players would simply refuse to play."

"Wherever the Commission went in Canada, it heard people passionately express their concern at realizing that, in their own part of the world, something had gone wrong" continued Mr. MacNeill. "This gave the Commission members a particular motivation, a feeling of responsibility towards all these people."

This approach reflects the wishes of Mrs. Brundtland. A former Minister of the Environment in Norway and Leader of the Opposition when she was appointed to chair the Commission, Mrs. Brundtland became Prime Minister in May 1986. Two weeks later, she left for Canada with her Commission for eight days of public hearings.

The members are personally committed to this job, which they feel very strongly is of major importance, since the decisions to be made will determine mankind's future.

They do not see in this report the end of their assignment, but rather its beginning. They have been invited to submit their report next May to ministerial representatives of countries belonging to the European Community and the European Association for Free Trade.

Canada was one of the first countries to receive a copy of this report. Mr. Maurice Strong, a member of the Commission, presented the report to the Minister of the Environment on April 29, 1987, two days following its international release in London.

One of the purposes was to let the Governments peruse the report and be familiar with it when they take part next fall in the United Nations' debate. Another was to provoke public awareness and secure the support of the people for such important issues as the environment.

Canada shares the hopes of the World Commission on Environment and Development that the United Nations' debate will not mean the end of their efforts to build a more prosperous, fair and secure world. Canada supports the Commission's proposals to integrate the notion of sustainable development in current economic and assistance programs.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that, during the United Nations' debate scheduled for next fall, Canada intends to participate fully and actively in the discussions on these and other issues raised in the Brundtland report.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start with some broad points which clearly emerge from the report entitled Our Common Future, a report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

To be serious, it is, I think, a very difficult report for Members of Parliament to relate to. Its complexities are considerable. The extent of the subject matter which it looks at is quite widespread. However, there are some aspects of the report that I should like to highlight in my remarks.

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), in his remarks, spoke of the optimistic tone through the report. And reading through the report itself, one can certainly see the optimism. We have such comments as the following: "We see instead the possibility for a new era of economic growth"—and this despite the problems of "environmental decay, poverty, and hardship in an ever more polluted world among ever decreasing resources".

The analysis goes on to say that the possibility for this new era has to be "based on policies that sustain and expand the environmental resource base". It goes on:

> And we believe such growth to be absolutely essential to relieve the great poverty that is deepening in much of the developing world.

> But the Commission's hope for the future is conditional on decisive political action now to begin managing environmental resources to ensure both sustainable human progress and human survival.
> We are not forecasting a future; we are serving a notice—an urgent notice based on the latest and best scientific evidence—that the time has come to take the decisions needed to secure the resources to sustain this and coming generations.

So, while it is a message of hope, it is very much, too, a message of urgency, a message which tells us, as societies, that we must start to review the policies that we now pursue, the structures of society that are now in place. We have to look at new directions and to put in place these new directions for the sake of future generations.

As someone who has worked in developing countries a great deal, I was particularly struck by those portions of the report dealing with the gross poverty which exists in many parts of the Third World. For instance, at one stage in the report, the commission speaks of the economic crisis which faces us all, a crisis which the commission says is based on the slow-down of economic expansion and the stagnation in world trade in the 1980s, something which has challenged the ability of all nations to react and adjust.

Here we have a diverse group of people from all parts of the world identifying, in powerful terms, problems in the world economy.

The developing countries have been particularly hard hit by this economic crunch. Between 1980 and 1984, according to the commission, developing countries lost about $55 billion in export earnings because of the fall in commodity prices.

As a consequence, there has been a period of slow growth in the world economy, a slow growth which has hit especially hard the poorer countries of the world, those countries which can least afford to experience economic stagnation.

Looking at the change in per capita Gross Domestic Product for the middle range developing countries, those countries that we are most concerned about, in many respects, and leaving the large countries aside, leaving the oil-producing countries aside, we see that since 1981, in every single solitary year up to 1985—and I suspect beyond, though we do not have the statistics before us to substantiate that—there has been an absolute decrease in the per capita Gross Domestic Product, a decrease which, in 1982, for instance, was as high as 3.1 per cent per capita.

In talking about our environmental concerns, Mr. Speaker, we have to do so against that backdrop of economic crisis. It is against that backdrop that we have to consider the economic solutions that will mesh with our environmental concerns.

As the report itself stresses, reforms at the international level are needed to enable us to deal simultaneously with economic and ecological aspects in ways that allow the world economy to stimulate the growth of the developing countries while giving greater weight to environmental concerns.

Such an agenda requires a deep commitment by all countries, from the satisfactory working of multilateral institutions such as the development banks to the making and observance of international rules in fields such as trade and investment, and a constructive dialogue on the many areas where national issues do not immediately coincide.

It is possible for us as Members of Parliament to have a debate on a Friday afternoon like this about what is a very heartfelt, well organized and important document; but I think it is absolutely crucial that we bring back to earth here in Canada some of the concerns which are being discussed in this report.

It is not simply a matter of work and improvement at the international level. The report and the motion, which we would support if it were a votable motion, concern the need for us to do something about the serious and urgent environmental problems facing us in Canada without putting at risk the economic concerns of many of us.

In order to bring the debate down to earth, I will talk about three or four specific environmental concerns which I think Canadian Governments have not recognized as being serious or have not dealt with urgently, as the report suggests is badly required.

For instance, I should like to refer to the report of the International Joint Commission on the Great Lakes in Ontario because it is so easy for us to forget, after dramatic incidents like the St. Clair River crisis, that the basic problem goes on. In respect of the Great Lakes area, the report indicates that the intrusion of toxic chemicals on our lives, including the incidence of specific toxic chemical disasters, is occurring with greater impact and frequency. These occurrences cannot be viewed as systemic aberrations or something we can forget about. Rather, they may be the inevitable, if unintended, consequences of our industrialized societies. More toxic chemical-related incidents are therefore bound to occur. The questions thus become: how many, where, how serious will be the consequences, and what can be done to mitigate the production and use of toxic chemicals?

The report also suggests that we do not have a comprehensive solution in Canada in respect of the Great Lakes, one part of the body of freshwater lakes in the country. This represents a source of shame for us as a country. It is important to accept the urgency suggested in the Brundtland report. It asks us to do something not only about world problems but about the problems in our own backyard which so far we have not been able to tackle successfully. As far as I am concerned, that is certainly at the top of the list of crucial issues which need to be tackled and require the urgency essential to come up with some sort of solution or plan toward a solution, at the very least.

We must also talk about the extent of air pollution which exists in many communities across Canada. We have a predilection for looking at the United States and saying that that country and its acid rain delays are the crucial environmental issues facing us. I frankly say that in community after community across the country, as is the case in my constituency and I suspect in the constituencies of many Hon. Members sitting in the House today, there are air pollution problems which are damaging the environment and threatening the health of our constituents. We must apply to those problems the sense of urgency which the report asks us to emphasize.

For instance, we have been working in my constituency with BCM Technologies for over a year to try to reach a complete solution to its chlorine emissions. We have found, despite commitments on the part of the company and on the part of the provincial Ministry of the Environment, that a year later the commitments have not been honoured. The air pollution continues and my constituents continue to experience health hazards and the lack of satisfactory environmental conditions which I think they have the right to expect as Canadians.

I want to talk about even more exciting topics, aside from air pollution, and to take a step down to what often seems to be the level of discussion in this Chamber. I want to talk about sewage and about garbage. When we talk about environmental problems, we must remember that there are sewage problems across the nation which we are not treating with urgency. One example is contained in a letter which I wrote in July, 1985 to the then Minister of the Environment, that is, the sewer system in south Windsor.

One might say that sewage is not something which reaches the levels of the high power rhetoric we have heard in the debate today, but fundamentally that is what the issue is all about. It is about ensuring that sewage systems in our communities are able to meet the needs of the people. We found in our community that our constant efforts to try to push the Government to accept the responsibility to provide assistance in the area of sewage systems have simply been rejected. We have seen this in the southern part of the City of Windsor and in the Township of Sandwich West. Recently a public meeting focused on this question.

We will be taken seriously as a country which cares about environmental issues when we start doing something about such mundane but serious problems as the antiquated sewer systems of our cities. As it stands at the moment, we simply let sewers run into international waters, with the result that rivers get polluted, again a potential health hazard, again a lack of the environmental protection which Canadians should expect in this country.

I have to say that it is just not sewage we have to talk about but garbage as well. For instance, the City of Detroit is planning to erect the largest incinerator in the United States without the latest technology to prevent the escape of material which will damage the air and be injurious to people's health which, it has been demonstrated in laboratory tests, will cause increases in cancer rates. We have to recognize that that kind of problem is as crucial and urgent and is as serious as the concerns which have been indicated here.

I am impressed with this report. There are interesting and innovative ideas being suggested at the international level. I want to make the point that we in Canada, to prove our seriousness, have to start dealing with some of these mundane, down to earth problems of water pollution, air pollution, sewage and garbage. When we start doing that with the urgency and with the support of our people, then I think we will be taking the first steps to a safe environmental future for this country and for the world.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia):

> That this House urge the Government to endorse, adopt and advocate, at home and abroad, the goals and recommendations of the Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (Brundtland Report), entitled "Our Common Future";
> This Report, dealing with global concerns, challenges and endeavours, be adopted as the central policy of the federal Government, its agencies and commissions; and
> That the Minister of the Environment advocate the spirit and the substance of this Report at the coming General Assembly of the United Nations on behalf of Canadians and of the global community, thus continuing Canada's tradition of giving leadership on environmental matters.

Canada's leadership on the evolving world stage is becoming more and more important as we mature and become a respected nation in our second decade of development. Although perhaps not particularly relevant to the subject matter, I think in an ancillary way it is. I had the opportunity, it was a glorious one, to meet with Mr. Yehudi Menuhin today. In a conversation with him, he brought to my attention how important Canada has become on the world scene. He said that he found it particularly interesting that we, as Canadians, have developed culturally very distinctively. We have developed an artistic community with talents found almost nowhere else in the world where he has taught as a master. He equates that with the fact that we have in Canada a specific attitude, one of accepting the world as part of our responsibility, and that people who come here are welcomed and are encouraged to maintain their identity, their roots and to go back to their roots. He said, "It is not like teaching students from the Julliard School because they would not do what the students here do. Here they go back to their roots and the original interpretations. They have a sense of participation and belonging to past history which they bring with them and do not want to remove in any way. They want to maintain the links with the old and the new and they have pride in their heritage".

This brings me to the report which the World Commission on Environment and Development put together when it established this UN commission in December, 1983. This was strongly supported by Canada. We do have a very special role as a mature nation and as a partnership for the diverse beauty of this country as it is reflected by the people who are in it.

I would suggest that we listen very carefully to what has been written in this report by Dr. Brundtland, Norway's Prime Minister, and the 22 commissioners, two of whom are highly respected Canadians, namely, Maurice Strong and Jim MacNeill, who was the Secretary General for the commission. The report was released in London on April 27, 1987. This report is exciting because it is a positive one. It is not a doomsday report. It does not make you feel that the world is going to blow itself away, or that we are in inherent danger of disappearing as a race. This report lucidly advances the debate on the environment from a protection to a survival theme. It looks at the world in which we live to the global society and puts us all in this great big envelope. We do live together in an envelope. It might be trite to say that it is a global village, but, truly, Mr. Speaker, it is. What happens in other countries of the world impacts on us right here. There is no greater lesson than the Chernobyl affair which impacted on our reindeer herds, the caribou, milk and everything else. It is a reflection of something that happened seemingly so far away, and not too long ago it would have seemed very far away.

Looking at the prospects outlined in this report, it is important that the commissioners have placed the environment not in the context of just one public interest competing with others, but in the context of all our interests collectively, whether trade, health, the growth of our wheat or the development and concerns around acid rain. All of these economic activities and the fall-out from them impact upon our environment, which bring us to the very centre of economic activity and the pre-conditions that we have for the development of our world.

Each one of us has to live in our own community and one tends not to think of the larger world. We can ill afford that isolated view of society. We can ill afford to ignore our neighbours in this larger world.

The message is that we have to find a sustainable development process. I think all the forces of all the Ministries together here in Canada and around the world must put their heads and efforts together to ensure that our children and grandchildren and their children's children will have a world in which to live.

It is true that the document—for those who care to pick it up, and I would encourage people to do so—would seem to be very dry. It contains 348 pages, and I must admit that leafing through it I had to sort of push myself to find some of the areas of particular interest to me. It is, however, a vital and important document. It will be front and centre in the discussions to be held in the capitals and in the Parliaments around the world, no matter what the political bent of the Government in question. It will affect each and every one of us.

What is exciting about this report is that it is not a doomsday report. It offers new approaches and scenarios. It links the environment with what we do and how we live on a daily basis. It indicates that there are unsolved problems and that there are no immediate answers, but it does offer some directions and ideas. It took three years, a lot of effort and a great deal of money to compile this report, and it has come up with some very positive facts which we would all do well to examine quite carefully.

The answer is not simple. It is not: "Stop the world, I want to get off". The message is that there is room to grow in the world. We can make the economic ball roll. We like to call for jobs, jobs, jobs, but there are other ways of living without degrading the life around us. We do have the capacity to solve environmental problems.

I thought it was interesting that the report indicated that mass poverty could be overcome. I know that all of us have contributed to world hunger campaigns and have been sensitized through the mass media to the plight of starving people in the world.

The report tells us that there are absolutely no limits to our growth. The report actually links the problems of poverty in sub-Sahara Africa to the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and it links the deforestation of South America with acid rain in West Germany and here. It is fascinating that we think of each one of those as being separate entities. In reality, these crises are not separate. Environmental crises, developmental crises and energy crises are all one crisis that must be faced by each and every one of us. We must try to find a healthy and sustainable balance so we can live in this world. The fundamental question to be asked is how we are to find that sustainable balance.

We should listen to the report's call on world Governments, particularly those of the developed world, to think more broadly and deeply about environmental and developmental problems. It calls on us to think not just in terms of me, myself and I, not just in terms of instant gratification, and not just in terms of how I can climb the ladder, have more goods and services and be a bigger and fatter consumer. We must ask if we can live in society tomorrow. Will we be able to breathe, will society be here? This report says yes, if. That "if" is important.

The report suggests that we must use the intelligence that created the problems to resolve them. I think that is a modest enough aim and we should all try to devote our political will to making this world a place where we can live together.

I would like to deal with the interlocking crises. Until very recently, the world was a place where human activities and efforts were neatly compartmentalized by nations, by sectors such as energy, agriculture or trade, and by broad areas of concern, environmental, economic and social. All these concerns were related to cultural patterns that had evolved throughout the world and reflected common communal values which resulted from the choices and options taken by particular cultural entities. I suggest that most of these compartments have been dissolved and the world has become a global village. I suggest as well that in these various global crises, there are common public concerns. We began to recognize that just a short time ago.

I would suggest, and I do not think I am going beyond reality, that much of this recognition has to do with the feminine revolution. Women have become sensitive to the world and their environment. More particularly, the communications systems that now exist link us to the world within seconds. Women have been the nurturers of society and have begun to raise environmental concerns, nuclear concerns and survival concerns. I would salute the women's movement for having sensitized the world to this issue.

In Nairobi, a meeting of women was held at the end of the decade. Groups of women came from all corners of the world, from all socio-economic levels, and from every political Party imaginable. Some of the things that were said I found abominable and some of the things they did I found abhorrent. However, one common line ran through the entire debate and that was the volition on the part of women around the world to live in a better environment, a safe environment in which to bring up their children. That line transcended all ideologies and every sector, no matter what colour, race, creed, language or religion.

This report contains some very substantive facts and figures. It talks about the fact that the planet is going through a period of dramatic growth and fundamental change. It indicates that our world, which is presently made up of five billion people, must make room in a finite environment for another huge mass of humanity. The population will potentially level out at eight billion to 14 billion sometime within the next century. That is an awful lot of people.

It goes on to talk about the fact that economic activity has multiplied to create a world economy of $13 trillion. I cannot even imagine how many zeros there are in that figure. I am trying to indicate that these facts have to be translated into individual lives and individual survival. If we are to have economic activity that creates $13 trillion in the world economy and could grow five-fold to ten-fold in the coming half century, then I think we must develop the kind of survival policies that will allow us to consider the total environment, whether we are pulling raw materials from our forests, our soils, our seas or our waterways.

People are the ultimate resource. Improvements in education, health and nutrition allow people to better use the resources they command and to stretch them even further. The concern for the population problem is underlined in this report, and if one reads it carefully, one sees that there is a sense of hope that there could be human equality if we would simply sit down long enough to develop common policies to live together.

One additional person in an industrial country consumes far more and places far more pressure on natural resources than one additional person in the Third World. Consumption patterns and preferences are as important as numbers of consumers in the conservation of our resources.

What about environment and development? Population growth and development are linked in very complex ways. In the past, the intensification of agriculture and the production of higher yields helped nations cope with increasing populations and pressures on available land. However, that is not the case today. Today there is over-production, yet there are starving people. There must be something wrong with our international policies. It seems to me that if we could find a way to balance our agricultural policies so that the starving people had food and we, overstuffed people, did not waste food, we could find a solution to some of the problems to which I have been referring.

We are facing rapid technological change. It is important that the commission has made some positive recommendations. It has recommended alternatives to allow us to continue to live with a decent life-style throughout the world. The commission talks about sustainable economic development and growth. It directs us on how to think and act in order to make life sustainable. We must look at new ways of living if we wish to survive as a species. As you and I know, our resources are not infinite. Whatever we do, we must think on the larger world scale as we all impact on each other in this world.

The population increases to which I referred earlier bring a series of additional concerns for social and economic development. This has created the problem of unmanageable cities which we must be seriously concerned with. A concern for population growth is part of the broader concern for the rapid rate of economic and social development in developing countries. We cannot afford to be selfish. We must think about education, growth, and development for all the world's children. As we think of our brothers and sisters around the world we must think of what will make life liveable for them. A balance must be established between population size and available resources.

We must find ways to make sustainable human progress a reality. This report has been able to do this. We need policies which will enable us to control our enormous population growth and enable people to have choices. We need improved public health and child nutrition. Family planning services must be further developed and integrated with other health programs such as mother and child care programs, preschool education, and education in general.

We need a commitment to rural development. We cannot empty the countryside, make vast parklands, and put everyone into huge cosmopolitan centres. We must develop policies which will allow people to grow and develop in their own areas. Canada has a good model which has partially worked within our regional development projects. Perhaps we can share with others and learn so that we do not depopulate the countryside, so that we find a better pattern of development for the entire world.

We must find a way to spread employment opportunities throughout the nations. Not every nation can be a producer with no nation being consumers of the products of others. That will not work. We must determine how to control and develop our cities and encourage people to stay in their natural environment without feeling that they do not have an adequate chance in life.

I talked about the need to improve health. This is absolutely fundamental in the developing world. The problems are critical. The concerns for ill health are closely related to environmental conditions and developmental problems. There is inadequacy of water supply and sanitation, which are direct causes of widespread and debilitating diseases such as diarrhea and various worm infestations.

Clean water is not accessible to 1.7 billion people, and 1.2 billion do not have adequate sanitation. If we could solve that problem alone many diseases would be controlled and life would be more liveable for many people. Canada is doing very good work throughout the world with some of our programs. Other nations must do the same.

I know that my time is running out. I would like to urge strongly that through the United Nations we find some way to answer the questions raised. There is a sunset clause of December 31 in this report. The United Nations Secretariat must find a way to implement this document by then. We do not want it to gather dust. There is an urgency for everyone in the world. We should support the call of the United Nations Secretary General to constitute, under his chairmanship, a special United Nations board extending to all the nations of the world.

If we really believe that we have a common future we should consider the words of the poet, Bliss Carmen, who said that we are moulded by the conditions and surroundings in which we live, but we often forget that the environment is largely what we make it. I hope that we will be considerate and make it liveable for all.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Member on her speech on this very important subject. I would like to commend her on her commitment and the sincerity of her comments.

The mover of the motion spoke about responses. I would just like to mention that the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers is meeting in Quebec City in September, 1987. It was suggested that this report should be put on the agenda of that meeting, and I would like to inform the Member and the House that it is indeed on the agenda. We look forward to having those Ministers discuss this report. That is only one of many responses which the Government has made to this report.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am very encouraged by that. I hope, however, that we will go beyond that. There are so many aspects to this complex problem that it will require co-operation among and concerted action by all Ministers and Ministries. We need support for the projects which CIDA has been financing as well as those on which the International Research and Development Foundation is doing superb work. There is work being done in Chile with regard to diseases affecting children. Wells are being dug to provide water.

In response to my friend and colleague I say that we should not stop there. That is a good step, but there is a giant step between that and the moon.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) with regard to the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, the Brundtland report entitled, Our Common Future. I would like to congratulate the Member for raising this issue today. I recognize his genuine interest in environmental concerns. We on this side of the House sometimes tend to heckle him in a partisan way a little bit unfairly. While he may not have been as effective as the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) when he held that important job, it was not due to any lack of sincerity or genuine interest in the issues on his part.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology I would like to add a few comments to those which have already been made this afternoon. Canadian technology can play a significant role in achieving the objectives set out in Our Common Future. I hope I will have time to talk a little about that toward the end of my speech.

The report on the World Commission on Environment and Development recommends that new mechanisms be established to ensure that, as a matter of routine, environmental consequences be considered when economic decisions are made.

The report was presented at the beginning of the second meeting of the National Task Force on Environment and Economy. This task force, in itself, is an innovative response to the Brundtland Report in that it brings together the federal, provincial, public and private sector to improve co-ordination of economic decision-making in Canada.

The Minister of the Environment, upon receipt of the report, pointed out: "As the thinking which went into the establishment of this task force illustrates, better integration of environmental considerations into economic planning and decision-making is and has been a priority direction set by this Government".

I am pleased and encouraged that the importance which the Government attaches to the integration of environmental and economic decision-making has been taken up as a major thrust of the Brundtland report. The report is both timely and appropriate, and fully in keeping with the priorities of the Government.

The report dramatically underscores the need to make the leap from focusing our environmental efforts on dealing after the fact with the adverse impact of economic development, to starting, instead, to concern ourselves more with economic strategies and developments which are environmentally sound and sustainable in the first instance.

The fact is that the environment and the economy are not two distinct entities. They are not two solitudes. They are interrelated and indivisible. In fact, they are the two sides of the same coin.

The commission was composed of 22 eminent people, most of them politicians from around the world. The Prime Minister of Norway, Gro Brundtland, formerly her country's Environment Minister, headed the group. I want to emphasize again that the majority of these investigators were, like us, politicians. They were not theoreticians, academics, or ecological ideologues, but people experienced in identifying practical responses to actual problems. What their report makes clear is that our planet's survival is at stake and that only concerted international action undertaken now can save it. In effect, either the buck stops here or the world does.

That message confirms what scientists have been saying for some time now, that the human race is progressively eliminating, through environmental mismanagement, its own chances of a future. Pollution has become so widespread, so varied, and so pervasive that no corner of the earth is free from it. Nations are threatened, not just by their own sources of contamination, but also by those of their neighbours and by those of countries half a world away. Sulphur dioxide rises from smokestacks in northeastern United States and falls as acid rain here in eastern Ontario, killing our trees and lakes. Nuclear fall-out drifts westward from Chernobyl over northern Europe and the Arctic, polluting crops and livestock. The indiscriminate use of chlorofluorocarbons, CFCs, in the developed world is thinning the stratospheric layer of ozone that blankets the earth from the sun's ultraviolet rays. In the process, millions of people around the globe are being exposed to an increased risk of cancer. The problem is contributing to a greenhouse effect that may eventually reduce Canada's rich prairie grain belt to a desert and cause floods in Atlantic Canada.

Pollution respects no state boundaries or political divisions. It carries no national passport or corporate key. That fact is inescapable as well as dismaying. It also, however, points us toward the approach we must take in the face of such an enemy. In our present situation, it makes no sense to argue unduly about jurisdictions and responsibilities. We are all part of the human family, the global village. We must, therefore, co-operate willingly, energetically and immediately if we are to preserve our world.

It is not a question of saving developed nations at the expense of the Third World, or of cleaning up North America without regard to Europe or the USSR. We are all in this together; and, as that old saying goes, if we do not hang together, we shall all hang separately. Those are our options, plain and simple.

The Brundtland Report makes the point clearly that: "These are not separate crises, an environmental crisis, a development crisis, an energy crisis. They are all one".

Economies depend, for their survival, on the resource bases supplied by a healthy environment. The environment depends, for its survival, on economic decision-making that takes full account of impacts on resources. Any society that ignores that equation does so at its peril.

The implications of the link between the environment and the economy are far-reaching and complex.

Canada is, after all, perhaps the pre-eminent candidate to take the lead in helping meet the needs that arise around the globe from environmental requirements. The solutions we find to soil erosion on the Prairies, the equipment we develop to curb pollution, the methods we devise to preserve our fragile northern tundra or our West Coast rain forests, all can be crucial not only to our nation's future but to the future of the world as well.

Solutions that work for industries in Canada can be applied with the necessary modifications, and with equal success, to industries in Indonesia, Brazil or Zambia, and to industries in Germany's Rhur Valley, in Rotterdam or Yokohama. Our nation—the nation that developed the first geo-stationary communications satellite and the space arm, that built the Bluenose and spanned a continent with rail lines—can meet the environmental challenge.

We would urge that the report of the Brundtland Commission be taken up by all United Nations member countries, and that the recommendations be considered as well at the national level.

Needless to say, Canada, as a long-term supporter of the United Nations, expects to play an active role in the debate of this report in the United Nations this fall. I look forward to that debate and to Canada's leadership role in it.

In the few minutes remaining, I would like to read a very short excerpt from Our Common Future, the report we are discussing this afternoon, just to emphasize the urgency of the issues that this report raises. It states:

> The World Commission on Environment and Development first met in October 1984, and published its report 900 days later, in April 1987. Over those few days:
> The drought-triggered, environment-development crisis in Africa peaked, putting 35 million people at risk, killing perhaps a million.
> A leak from a pesticides factory in Bhopal, India, killed more than 2,000 people and blinded and injured over 200,000 more.
> Liquid gas tanks exploded in Mexico City, killing 1,000 and leaving thousands more homeless.
> The Chernobyl nuclear reactor explosion sent nuclear fall-out across Europe, increasing the risks of future human cancers.
> Agricultural chemicals, solvents, and mercury flowed into the Rhine River during a warehouse fire in Switzerland, killing millions of fish and threatening drinking water in the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands.
> An estimated 60 million died of diarrhoeal diseases related to unsafe drinking water and malnutrition; most of the victims were children.

At the outset of my remarks, I mentioned that I believe that Canadian technology can play a role. I also described some of the high technology that we have developed in Canada that can be applied throughout the world.

We should not think only in terms of high-tech. We can do so much simply by funding small clean water projects in the Third World. I refer to the 60 million deaths in a period of less than three years from diarrhoea caused by unsafe drinking water. It seems to me that clean water is the key to economic and social development in Africa and Asia. The Government is doing a lot. In particular, I congratulate CIDA and the private sector non-governmental organizations in this country which are doing so much to try to provide clean water in Africa and Asia. I urge the Government however, to do much more. If we were just to concentrate on this one way of helping our fellow citizens in the rest of the world, it would go a long way towards achieving the objectives of this report.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon on the motion introduced in accordance with Standing Order 82(12) of the House of Commons and sponsored today by my colleague the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). In my view, this is an extremely important motion which gives us as parliamentarians an opportunity to consider environmental problems, and more especially the Brundtland Report which has just been made public.

I am very proud to see that my colleague, the former Minister of the Environment in the Liberal Cabinet, has brought to the attention of the House this report drafted under the auspices of the United Nations. I am very proud of his initiative because it shows to what extent an individual can, after being a Cabinet Minister, continue to be deeply interested in this issue.

In a number of cases the Environment was a first department for several Ministers and a stage in their career. I have no hesitation in saying that, of all the Ministers of the Environment I have known since the department was established, my colleague from Davenport is propably the Minister who has shown the most interest, the most conviction in his work, and the greatest desire to promote the environmental cause. This is why I hope that in the near future he will be given the opportunity to become Minister of the Environment again so as to continue the work which he began with such dedication in his department and which, unfortunately, has not been followed up as closely since he left.

There is no doubt that the ongoing discussions with the Americans are not producing the results which he would hope to see. With respect to environmental matters the American authorities should indeed act much more responsibly and take positive measures to reduce the pollution we are getting from the United States instead of being satisfied with yet more studies.

I spoke recently to Quebec farmers who described how much sugar bushes are threatened by acid rain, how much an industry that is truly close to home, truly of Quebec, truly Canadian—the maple sugar and maple syrup industry—is seriously threatened by acid rain and the inaction of numerous corporations that pollute our environment. Whether they are Canadian or American, this is a major problem to be addressed.

There is no doubt that as we receive that report prepared by the United Nations, we must view it as a very important document. It is my conviction that the Brundtland Report is no doubt the single most important environmental document of the decade. What one finds encouraging when making a quick study of the main recommendations of this report is that here is a practical report, a report that is filled with concrete proposals. It is essential that those proposals be accepted and implemented by the most industrialized nations in the world.

The efforts to protect our environment must come first and foremost from the richer countries of this planet. Clearly, we cannot expect developing nations, the poorer nations to assume the responsibility for depolluting our environment, depolluting the world, if the richer nations, first the United States and second Canada and the other industrialized nations, do not do their share.

I hope that the Government of Canada will review this document very closely and will respond to it. At any rate, the resolution put forward by our colleague for Davenport is very clear in that regard. It not only suggests but urges the Government to act upont it. I quote:

• (1640)

should

—this House urge the Government to endorse, adopt and advocate, at home and abroad, the goals and recommendations of the Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development (Brundtland Report), "Our Common Future"; That this Report, dealing with global concerns, challenges and endeavours, be adopted as the central policy of the federal Government, its agencies and commissions;

And finally, it is clear the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) should ensure that at the next United Nations General Assembly, the promotion of the spirit and substance of that United Nations report, on behalf of Canadians and the world community, be in line with the Canadian tradition of leadership in the area of environment.

It is therefore clear that we expect concrete steps, not merely fine speeches but concrete steps from the Canadian Government when it makes decisions concerning the protection of our environment.

I represent a constituency that is located in Montreal, an island in the middle of the St. Lawrence River, one of the most beautiful rivers in the world, but also one of the most polluted unfortunately. Efforts have to be made by the federal as well as provincial authorities and by the private sector not only to control that pollution, but also to take radical steps to clean up that pollution. I do hope that in a near future, in the Montreal area, it will be possible as it used to be possible some years ago, a few decades ago, to swim in the St. Lawrence River without taking any risks and to fully enjoy this magnificent river which is one of the most majestic in the world, to enjoy the beaches and the waters of that river which we have unfortunately ignored too much.

In conclusion, may I suggest that it is essential that government authorities throughout the world think about these words of hope which were spoken by the chairwoman of that committee, Mrs. Brundtland, and I quote:

• (1650)

[English]

"Our report—is not a prediction of ever-increasing environmental decay, poverty and hardship in an ever-more polluted world among ever-decreasing resources—

"We see instead the possibility for a new era of economic growth—absolutely essential to relieve the great poverty that is deepening in much of the developing world."

The panel which she chaired and on which sat an important and well known Canadian, Mr. Maurice Strong, considered population growth, energy strategies, global warming because of atmospheric changes, man-made disasters and economic conditions that cause the destruction of tropical forests. "Poverty itself pollutes the environment," the panel said. It stated further:

"Those who are poor and hungry will often destroy their immediate environment in order to survive: they will cut down forests; their livestock will overgraze grasslands; they will overuse marginal land and in growing numbers they will crowd into congested cities.

In order to live in a better world it is absolutely important that the leaders of the world get together not only to fight pollution but, in the process of fighting pollution, to establish new programs for this era of economic growth in order to spread the growth among all the nations of the world. The rich nations of the world must help the poor nations of the world to tackle the problems with which they are confronted.

It is on this note that I wish to end my remarks, by saying that I welcome wholeheartedly the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Through his initiative, we have been given a deeper awareness of that important document published by the United Nations, and I hope the Conservative Government will not abdicate its responsibilities and will take quick action on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, because I know the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) wishes to say a few words, I want to be a fine gentleman. I wish to be on record as saying that I would have liked to speak in this important debate but I know that the Hon. Member has been waiting patiently all afternoon in order to participate. Thus I will not make the comments I wanted to make since there will not be time.

I wish to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), for having brought this important matter to our attention so soon after the publication of this very important report by an organization of the United Nations. I would have liked to speak at length about the United Nations and to consider the important matters at which it looks. I would have liked to point out how important the United Nations is in the role it plays as the conscience of the world. I also wanted to make comments on the eloquent speeches made by my colleagues this afternoon.

It has been an interesting day, and a totally non-partisan one. In saying that I am looking at the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes), and all the others who participated in the debate today. I would have liked to have participated, but such is life. We will finish the debate in a few minutes. I wish to allow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton, to have the floor.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise in the closing moments of this debate to offer some comments. Today has been a great opportunity for all Hon. Members to address the problem at hand, and I note the commonality of the objective. I feel that Members from all Parties have expressed their deep concern with respect to the quality of the environment and what we must do as Canadians to put it into perspective.

The opening chapters of the Brundtland report suggest that a first step toward addressing common environmental concerns is the recognition that most of the problems of ecology and economy that, until now, have been dealt with separately, are in fact very closely linked together and require integrated action on a global scale. Our Government is particularly encouraged that the report stresses the need for more co-ordination between economic and environmental development. The report reaffirms that we must make the leap from preoccupation with undoing environmental damage to planning and managing our affairs so that economic development efforts are environmentally sound and sustainable in the first place.

The National Task Force on the Economy and the Environment which was set up last year is an excellent example of how we can do this. An encouraging aspect to me is the recognition that we have the technology, the know-how, the ability to address the global problems with which we are confronted. The challenge with which we are confronted is: Do we have the will to do it? That is our collective challenge as parliamentarians.

The report shows that Canadian concerns about acid rain, soil and water degradation, toxic waste, the holes in our ozone layer and ozone depletion, and sustainable use of our natural resources are environmental and economic issues of the highest order both in Canada and world-wide. We are involved with this in Canada, as much as the rest of the world is involved, in the sense that our children and our grandchildren will be dramatically affected by it as much as anyone. I recall hearing just a few days ago how a change in our mean temperature of only two degrees could precipitate another ice-age. Just think how catastrophic that would be in terms of our ability to produce food and to continue to exist on earth.

At the moment in China alone the citizens of that country are burning annually more than one cubic mile of coal. Let us think about what that is doing to our atmosphere and the possibility of the climatic change it can precipitate. Around the world annually we produce about one cubic mile of solid garbage of which we have to dispose. The problems we face are enormous.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) will be discussing the report which we have been talking about today with his colleagues and with all parliamentarians. Following these discussions, and after hearing from non-governmental organizations and others, a formal and detailed governmental response to the recommendations of the commission will be announced. Thereafter Canada has every intention to participate in the debate which will take place at the General Assembly of the United Nations this fall. When that happens I am confident that all Canadians will be proud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PETITIONS

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the pleasure and honour to present to this House a duly certified petition signed by over 1,300 high school students in Ontario from Toronto, Willowdale, Richmond Hill, Markham, Gormley, Thornhill, Agincourt, Islington, Scarborough, North York, Woodbridge, Unionville, Stouffville, Weston and Pickering who support Motion M-37. The petition calls upon Parliament to amend Section 7 of the Charter of Rights to read: "everyone including a human foetus or unborn human being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice".

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, although the House has passed the changes to the Patent Act I am still receiving petitions from Canadians who are concerned about what the Government is doing. These people believe that the government measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals. They also express their opinion that this is just another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations at the expense of average Canadians.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING UNCORROBORATED EVIDENCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of people asking for amendments to the Canada Evidence Act, the Young Offenders Act, and all corresponding sections of provincial and territorial Acts. I will not read the rest of the petition but will present it to you, Sir.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of Canadian citizens calling for amendments to a number of Acts to enable children to provide uncorroborated testimony in all cases involving sexual offences.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—UI REFORM—FULL EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House today deals with two important issues which are intimately related to each other. First, it deals with the important issue of unemployment and the need for full employment policies which should be our first and highest priority. It then deals with unemployment insurance policies which are essential for those who are put out of work, contrary to their will. I will deal first with the question of unemployment insurance.

On Friday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) told the House that because the Government could not make up its mind it would do nothing with respect to the reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In November, 1984, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his famous financial statement, he said that unemployment insurance reform was one of the priorities of the Government. In his booklet entitled A New Direction for Canada: An Agenda for Economic Renewal, he set out some of the problems that were being experienced with unemployment insurance and also listed some questions that he wanted answered. At that time in November, 1984, he said this was an urgent matter. However, it took the Government until 1985 to set up the Forget Commission which consisted of five persons and eventually cost approximately $7 million.

The House should also note that just prior to the appointment of the Forget Commission there was also the Macdonald Royal Commission on Economic Prospects which studied the issue of unemployment insurance as well as the problems of unemployment, and the Newfoundland Royal Commission on Unemployment. In that period from 1985 to 1987, three Royal Commissions looked at this important subject.

The Forget Commission reported in December, 1986, with 53 recommendations. The recommendations which received the most attention, because they were the most controversial, were those relating to its annualization proposal and its proposals to cut extended regional benefits and fishermen's benefits. The annualization proposal was one for a new method of calculating unemployment insurance benefits and, according to which, there would have been serious cuts in benefits for people who were plagued with seasonal unemployment, part-time work, and the like.

While recommending this new annualization scheme which would have cut benefits, and recommending the removal of the extended regional benefits and fishermen's benefits, Mr. Forget also made a vague recommendation that new programs be set up for a guaranteed income and for regional development. However, he did not give any detail.

The recommendations in his report would have amounted to $3 billion in cuts in a $12 billion program. Those cuts would have had a particular impact on Atlantic Canada, the east and north of Quebec, the north of Ontario, and in the north of our western provinces, including most of British Columbia and Alberta.

Workers in Canada might have been willing to consider a package of proposals whereby there would have been cuts in the unemployment insurance system due to some inconsistency with the principles of unemployment insurance if Mr. Forget had also tabled a detailed plan for regional economic expansion and development and for a new guaranteed income program. Without such details, however, no worker in this country who has been chronically hit by unemployment will give up a good program, which they know, even if imperfect, for vague, pie-in-the-sky proposals related to guaranteed income and regional development.

On Friday the Minister could have recognized that deficiency in the Forget Commission recommendations, rather than copping out entirely on unemployment insurance reform.

When the standing committee studied the Forget Report, even members of the Forget Commission told us that they understood why Canadians would not be willing to accept their proposal on annualization and the cutting of regional benefits and fishermen's benefits without seeing the details of a replacement program. They said they understood that.

The Minister could have come to the House on Friday and, instead of saying there would be no reform whatsoever in this field, said those proposals of Mr. Forget or similar ones would be put on the back burner while the Government was preparing, as suggested by Mr. Forget, new programs for regional economic expansion and for income support. But the whole subject is forgotten altogether.

Immediately after the tabling of the Forget Report the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration took notice of the report and undertook a study of the same issues. It looked at the recommendations made by Forget and at the alternatives which had been discussed in the country, and heard witnesses. As a member of the standing committee I thought that in a short period of time we did a good job in studying the principal issues. We came out with a report in March, just a few months ago, in which we made 90 recommendations for reform. There was unanimous agreement in the committee on 89 of the recommendations. In other words, the Conservative, New Democrat and Liberal Members of the committee agreed that we could and should move ahead with reform of the unemployment insurance system, and we agreed unanimously on 89 recommendations.

If we compare the 90 recommendations with the 53 recommendations in the Forget Report, we find there is a lot of common ground. It is true, as I mentioned a few moments ago, there was a lot of controversy with respect to the Forget recommendations relating to annualization, regional benefits and fishermen's benefits. However, there were other recommendations in respect of which there was less controversy because they were well accepted throughout the country. The standing committee took those recommendations and I think improved on them.

I might just mention some of those recommendations relating to serious deficiencies in the unemployment insurance system, and where there was agreement between Forget and the standing committee, and where the Minister could have taken action.

To begin with, with respect to the whole area of training, it has been a bit of a scandal that in the past an individual was not able to go on a training program he or she had chosen if receiving unemployment insurance, because the basic rules of unemployment insurance require that one must always be ready and available for work.

A few years ago, under the previous Liberal Government, certain amendments were made so that a person collecting unemployment insurance could take certain specified training programs, and we had a certain experience with that, but it was not good enough.

Both the Forget Commission and the standing committee recommended that a person receiving unemployment insurance should be able to participate in a wide range of training programs precisely because if we want this person to go back into the labour market fully employed, and he is an untrained person, the only way he is going to get full-time employment or reasonable employment is by becoming trained. Although, as I said, when putting together the unemployment insurance program we had established a principle that one must be ready and available for work, how silly it is to use that principle to prevent someone from getting training which would give him or her a meaningful chance at employment.

The standing committee made recommendations about that, as did Forget, but those recommendations have been set aside. Both Forget and the standing committee made recommendations to extend unemployment insurance into the area of part-time work. This would have meant that those who are in part-time work would pay contributions in proportion to their incomes and receive benefits in proportion to their incomes.

As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, there are many individuals doing part-time work. About 71 per cent of them are women. They are working part time in order to supplement the incomes of their spouse. That additional income is very important in supporting the family. Some of these women are in part-time jobs for two, three and four years and their earnings become extremely important as part of the family income. If that person is laid off, the family is in serious difficulty. There is no reason why people in part-time work should not receive unemployment insurance. That was recognized by Forget and it was recognized by the standing committee.

Another situation about which there is a lot of concern in Canada is when overpayments are made to individuals under the Unemployment Insurance Act and, after the overpayment is discovered, a claim is made against that person to reimburse the amount of overpayment. We can understand a demand for return of overpayment if the overpayment was the fault of the claimant. However, in many cases the fault for the overpayment rests with officials in the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Sometimes there are horrendous situations where people who are still unemployed, or who have gone beyond unemployment and are on social welfare, are asked to pay back sums of money they cannot afford. It is true the Unemployment Insurance Commission will make arrangements with these people, but there is the whole principle of harassing these people for overpayments for which they were not responsible.

Just recently there was an article in The Globe and Mail reporting on a problem in Quebec which was raised by a Conservative Member. Eighteen women in a Gaspé village were being asked to repay up to $13,000 each for overpayments that were made to them, not because of their fault but because of the fault of officials. The Hon. Member from Gaspé went to bat for them but, unfortunately, the matter has not been resolved satisfactorily. In any case, the standing committee made recommendations to deal with this problem. It is again unfortunate that we could not make reforms in those areas.

With respect to maternity and parental benefits, again there was common ground between the standing committee and the Forget Commission in taking action in this area, particularly to eliminate the two-week waiting period in the case of maternity benefits. A birth is something which happens in the natural course of events. It is not planned deliberately in the sense that one cannot pick the date. There was agreement there but again there was no action taken.

Another problem which has lingered on for the last few years which requires reform arises in the situation where workers in a plant who are not on strike are locked out when another union in the same plant goes on strike. We all agree that if one deliberately goes on strike one has no right to unemployment insurance benefits. However, there must be clarification with respect to those workers who have been locked out due to a strike in which they are not involved, or they cannot cross picket lines. Again, the Forget Commission and the standing committee made recommendations to correct that situation.

Finally, the standing committee and the Forget Commission made recommendations to restructure the Unemployment Insurance Commission so that it would have better representation from both workers and employers; it would be more independent and efficient. Again, this is an area where the Minister could have acted and he did not.

While these issues are all critical to many thousands of Canadians, they are not controversial in the way in which the issues of annualization and severe cuts were. I might say that the standing committee in hearing evidence on these matters heard from trade unions and others that workers would be willing to pay increases in their contributions if they were able to get improved benefits.

As I stated earlier, these reforms could have been implemented pending a more profound reform of the unemployment insurance system coupled with a new income support system and a new regional development program. But, no, the Government has decided to do nothing. It abdicated its responsibility. It took the path of least resistance. And all this after a $7 million study conducted by Forget, not to mention the work carried out by the Macdonald Royal Commission, the Newfoundland Royal Commission and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Unemployment insurance was introduced in 1940 after the tragedies of the 1930s, the Great Depression of 1929 and the massive unemployment that followed. Unemployment Insurance was a great Liberal accomplishment. But we Liberals have always agreed that reform is necessary. As a matter of fact, over the years Bills have been brought in to reform and update the Unemployment Insurance Act. We still favour fine-tuning and reforming of the Act.

Unemployment insurance is not only good for those workers who are unemployed but it is good for the country. It is good for business. If we look at the phenomenon that took place in the Great Depression of the 1930s when there was no unemployment insurance, we see that as men and women were laid off they lost their purchasing power. The phenomenon hit businesses in the community sooner or later. It hit the corner stores. Mortgages were foreclosed. People could not pay their rents. There was a snowball effect that took place which went well beyond the original numbers of people who were laid off. So unemployment insurance, to the extent that it maintains purchasing power when times are bad, is good for the whole community and also good for business.

There are those people in the country, and their names are listed as witnesses who appeared before the standing committee and the Forget Commission, who complained that we must make massive cuts in the unemployment insurance system because there are so many cheaters. Forget himself found that cheaters on unemployment insurance amount to less than 3 per cent of the total claimants in a program which amounts to approximately $12 billion. As a matter of fact, there are fewer cheaters on unemployment insurance than there are in terms of income tax.

In his statement on Friday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration also said that his first priority would be to create employment so that people would not have to make claims on unemployment insurance. We all applaud that statement of principle. Unfortunately, the Minister did not go on to give any evidence of new programs or a new commitment to deal with the unemployment problem. It appears that this is just more of the politics of rhetoric.

Since 1984, budgets for employment creation and training have been cut by 30 per cent. Budgets in this area totalled $2.2 billion in 1984. They have now been reduced to $1.6 billion. There have also been cuts in budgets for regional economic development. This morning we read that the entire Department may be done away with. The Government is going to get out of regional development altogether.

It is true that the rate of unemployment has been brought down from about 12.5 per cent in 1983 to 9.3 per cent in the most recent months.

Mr. Charest: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: The Minister applauds. Three years after the recession he is applauding a 9.3 per cent unemployment rate.

In 1981, the year before the recession, the rate of unemployment was 7.5 per cent. It jumped up to over 11 per cent in one year due to world-wide economic conditions. The fact is that during the period of time under Liberal Governments from 1965 to 1980 the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. We were a Government that cared about the unemployed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Here we are three years out of the recession and the rate of unemployment is still 9.3 per cent as a result of the Government's reliance on a laissez-faire approach to unemployment. The Government still takes great joy in the fact that we have a rate of unemployment of 9.3 per cent.

Members of the Government repeat over and over again the number of jobs that have been created. But in a report which came out in February of this year we were told that more than 95 per cent of the new jobs created last year were created in one province, that is, in the Province of Ontario. Some 95 per cent of the new jobs created last year were created in Ontario, and most of them were created in southern Ontario. It must be pointed out to the Government that in Ontario we have a Liberal Government which is at least trying to do something about the situation.

More than 40 per cent of the 11.6 million jobs in Canada are located in the economic heartland of Canada where 36 per cent of the total population lives. This morning there was a report from the Conference Board of Canada which states that while there may be improvement again next year in Ontario and Quebec, the unemployment rate will climb in all the other provinces.

If we take Ontario out of the picture—and Ontario is an important place and we are all pleased to see things going so well in southern Ontario—we note that Ontario is not Canada. If we rely simply on a market economy approach, a laissez-faire approach, we will end up with a situation in which one part of the country does enormously well while the other part does poorly. That is not acceptable in Canada. It has never been acceptable in Canada.

Despite the challenges, governments of the country, and I might say former Conservative Governments, have tried to do something about regional economic problems, but the present Government has abdicated its role in this area. It seems that it will abdicate it still more.

In addition to the unfair distribution of job creation and the unfair distribution of economic growth we also have a great increase in part-time jobs in terms of recovery in employment. People who were working formerly in highly paid industrial jobs have been cut out of those jobs and are now going back into the job market in lower paying service jobs. Part-time work in Canada increased 73 per cent from 1976 to 1986 while full-time work has increased by only 17 per cent. In 1976, only 11 per cent of those in part-time work did not want to work part-time. Today, 30 per cent are dissatisfied with employment in part-time work.

As I mentioned earlier, 75 per cent of those in part-time work are women. Their wage gap started to widen this year for the first time in 18 years. It is all part of the same picture, this increase in part-time work, more women into part-time work, and their wage gap beginning to widen.

Again, the Government speaks about its wish to do something about high unemployment and problems in the employment field, but it puts forward no new programs. The response of the Government to all of these problems—the high rates of regional unemployment, the high rates of part-time work, the growing gap between the rich and the poor and the growing gap between the wages of men and women—is rhetoric and political flimflam.

The Government has said over and over again that things are better than they were in 1983. That is no great accomplishment. The Government would have something to brag about if it could bring the rate of unemployment down to what it was in pre-recession times, to at least 7.5 per cent or the average of 5.6 per cent that it was in the 1960s and 1970s.

The reason we are left with this situation is that the Government has an extremely laissez-faire approach to it. Liberal Governments have always believed in the free enterprise system, but we also believe that there is a strong role to be played by Government. Where there are problems in the regions and where there are problems with key groups of unemployed we should do something about them. The greatest levels of prosperity in this country have come when we have had the proper mix of public and private expenditure with respect to employment. When the two have worked together, that is when we have had prosperity. We are not having prosperity now, except perhaps in the greater Toronto region.

According to a Gallup poll taken in February of this year, only a couple of months ago, 41 per cent of Canadians consider unemployment to be the greatest problem in this country. Canadians want action. They know that things can be done to improve the unemployment situation.

Twice since World War II, Liberal governments made a commitment to full employment, and twice it was achieved. After World War II, the governments of Mackenzie King and St. Laurent, following the first White Paper on Full Employment, made a commitment to full employment, and for seven years we had average unemployment in this country of 3 per cent. After returning to power in 1963, the Pearson Government, following the establishment of the Canada Economic Council, again made a commitment to full employment, and we averaged around 3.7 per cent unemployment for four years. That is what can be done, Mr. Speaker, when a commitment to full employment is made; when decreasing the unemployment level becomes the highest priority.

Many things can be done in dealing with this situation, if the Government has the political will. One is to increase the commitment to regional economic development and not to cut it back. Another is to stimulate the slow-growth areas of the country. Another is to maintain or increase purchasing power during periods of economic slow-down and not cut it back, and another is to provide the essential economic infrastructure that is required in this country in order for private business to do its job properly.

The proper economic infrastructure, coupled with a serious commitment to education, training, retraining, upgrading, and research and development, can do a lot to maintain and attract employment.

In conclusion, let me say this. The Government on Friday abdicated its responsibility with respect to the reform of the unemployment insurance system. It said nothing. It just copped out completely on the subject. Some non-controversial measures could have been implemented measures that would have been helpful to many thousands of Canadians, but those measures were not taken. The Government made some brave statements with respect to dealing with the unemployed, but it announced no new programs, in fact it is cutting back while it is talking big.

[Translation]

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Government has abandoned the Canadian people. Last Friday, the Minister decided to make no changes in the unemployment insurance system but promised some major programs or measures for the unemployed in this country. Unfortunately, nothing was put on the table, not a single program, and this at a time when we have had 30 per cent cuts in job creation and training programs.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

[English]

Mr. Allmand: The resolution before the House, Mr. Speaker, asks this House to condemn the Government for its lack of action. But better still, I would be willing to applaud the Minister were he to stand up in his place once I have finished my remarks and say that, despite what he said on Friday last, he does have in mind certain reforms for the unemployment insurance program, that he does have in mind some new programs to help the unemployed in this country—the unemployed in the Atlantic part of the country, the unemployed in Alberta, the unemployed in British Columbia, the unemployed in eastern Quebec and northern Ontario.

If he does that, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to withdraw my motion and applaud the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for his motion, and also for his speech, a speech in which he covered a great many important subjects.

Without encroaching on his own time, I should like to put two questions to him. He referred to part-time work. I would ask him to expand on that, in terms of the conditions that lead to people being compelled to accept part-time work.

As well, I would ask him to expand on the conditions accounting for the high level of youth unemployment and what remedies he feels can be applied to youth unemployment.

Mr. Allmand: I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. With respect to part-time work, a sinister phenomenon has been taking place in Canada over the last number of years in that certain large firms are deliberately laying off their full-time staff and hiring back greater numbers of part-time workers. By doing that, these firms cut the cost of both their benefits package and the wage package. Those working fewer than 15 hours per week are not eligible for unemployment insurance, and are very often not eligible for training programs or pension programs. Often, they draw the minimum wage and are not subject to unionization. In any event, it is a more difficult matter to unionize part-time workers.

Having seen that phenomenon and its effects, the previous Government appointed the Wallace Royal Commission. That commission recommended that benefits be paid pro rata to part-time workers, thereby discouraging the movement by some firms from a full-time work-force to a part-time workforce. Under the recommendations of the Wallace Commission, the firm would still have to pay the benefits on a pro rata basis.

While it suits the purposes of some to work part time, that is certainly not true of all. A good many people are forced to take part-time work simply because there is no full-time work available. The average part-time work week amounts to 14.5 hours, which is just under the 15 hours required to qualify for unemployment insurance eligibility.

Let me now turn to the youth unemployment problem. The major difficulty is that our young people do not have experience. Those seeking employment after high school, or even after acquiring a general arts degree or general sciences degree from university, are told by prospective employers that they do not have the experience required. The reaction of prospective employers is, I do need somebody, but I need somebody with experience.

Over and over again what we have been told by the commissions and experts is that what is needed in this country are better bridging programs, programs which will assist young people in bridging the shift from the school place to the workplace, programs which would combine training and education. It is for that reason that co-operative education programs are becoming more popular; it is for that reason that new apprenticeship programs are being promoted.

The Liberal Party, during the last election campaign, put forward the First Chance Program, a program that would have spent $1 billion putting 100,000 young people into a bridging program, thus providing them with work experience.

This Government does have some youth employment programs in place, and some bridging programs. They are not bad programs, but they deserve a bigger commitment of resources and money. They cover too few people. They are not that bad in themselves, but they do require a much greater commitment, a much greater show of political will on this Government's part.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), on a question or comment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) to provide us with an update on the status of the almost 50,000 retired workers who are awaiting the reinstatement of benefits, benefits that were denied them as a result of the negative practices of this Government.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is another area where there was common ground between the Forget Commission and the standing committee report. Forget recommended that those measures to cut unemployment insurance for those on pre-retirement pension be completely rescinded. But the Government did not do that. After a lot of starts and stops, finally the Government produced Bill C-50, which would rescind the cuts for those who applied for unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986, but not for those who applied after January 5, 1986. The Bill suggests a system which is grossly unfair. The Minister wants us to accept a Bill, one part of which is good and one part of which is terrible. We are not ready to do that quickly.

Despite that, the Minister has not once called the Bill for debate since its tabling in the House. I hear that in certain parts of the country he is blaming the delay on the Liberal and NDP opposition. His House Leader has not once gone to the House Leader of the Liberal Party and asked that the Bill be given time for debate. The burden lies with the Government. If it wants to debate the Bill because it thinks it is so important, let the Government bring it forward for debate. Then we will table some amendments and see what happens.

However, the Government abdicated its responsibility again. It did not follow the recommendation of the Forget Commission or of the standing committee.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East made some comments in respect of the number of cheaters on the unemployment insurance system. He noted that the percentage of cheaters on UI is smaller than what it is for income tax. Could he explain why the Minister, in announcing his response to the Forget Commission last week, said that he would step up activities to weed out those who would abuse the system? Is he hiding behind a red herring?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as with the legislation on refugees presented by his colleague, the Minister is catering to what I would call a reactionary element in the country. Unfortunately some people think that those who cheat on unemployment insurance amount to an enormous, massive percentage. However, each time a study has been conducted it has been shown that the percentage of cheaters is relatively small.

The Forget Commission found that just less than 3 per cent of claimants cheated on their unemployment insurance. We cannot approve of that. We must do everything possible to ensure that the money is used for those people who are truly unemployed. On the other hand, some of those people who are recommending harsh crack-downs are not recommending the same harsh crack-downs for those people who cheat on income tax. They have a double standard.

While I think it is appropriate that we try to weed out those who cheat on any program, it must be fair minded and applied on both sides. We cannot just do it against the unemployed yet do nothing about those who are cheating in other areas of government programs.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member could elaborate on the pretty startling figures which he gave to the House. They show a 30 per cent cut-back in the amount of funds available for job development within the federal Government. Could he give any possible explanation of why the Government would cut back this fund by 30 per cent at a time when the unemployment rate is still unacceptably high?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Conservative Government started cutting back on employment and training programs just after it took office in 1984. Since that time it has cut back those programs from $2.2 billion to $1.6 billion.

The Government did this because, according to its philosophy, things will get done if we leave it to the market economy. In other words it is a real Conservative Party over there; its members believe that the market economy will take care of everything. As I pointed out, in a country like Canada it will not take care of everything. We are a broad, vast country with 25 million people spread all over. If we leave everything to the market-place, we will have situations just like the ones I described where 85 per cent of the new jobs go to the greater Toronto region and growing unemployment takes place in the Atlantic region and in other remote regions of the country.

One must recall that Canada has regions which are based upon one or two industries, either lumber, fisheries, agriculture, or tourism. They are subject to severe seasonal fluctuations in employment.

Since the Second World War, Governments of all stripes in Canada have taken the position that Government must intervene to redress imbalances. That is why the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Manpower and Immigration were set up under Prime Minister Trudeau. We believe that if we left things to work themselves out they would not be worked out. We believe in a free enterprise system, but we believe that there are times when the Government must intervene to correct imbalances and to help those who need help the most.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member also elaborate on the Government's decision to ignore the suggestion agreed upon by all Parties, that in fact maternity benefits per se are sexist benefits and that there should be available parental leave to allow couples to make the choice, given that there will be a certain period of leave granted to a woman because of the physical condition of pregnancy? Why has the Government chosen to ignore the very progressive notion of parental leave, which was agreed upon by all three Parties?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes difficult for me to understand this Government. The Forget Commission was described as a rather conservative commission. In recommendation No. 11.1 it suggested that a two-tier system of maternity and parental benefits should be implemented immediately, comprised of maternity benefits available during the period surrounding childbirth and parental benefits available during the period following maternity leave or placement of an adoptive child. The standing committee also made that unanimous recommendation with some improvements. However, the Government did nothing.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I can only surmise, because the Minister himself is a very humane person, that he would like to do better but he is in a caucus which is severely divided.

Mr. Bouchard: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: The chairman of the finance committee sent letters to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, criticizing his recommendations and so on. Despite the good intentions of the Minister, he is not able to act because he is in a caucus which is severely divided.

I put that on the record because he takes great joy in referring to divisions in other political Parties. He has them over there as well.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that the Minister comes from a severely divided caucus. I wonder whether he makes that assessment because he is a Liberal and Liberals are experts on internal division.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be familiar with that as well, because he is in the same caucus as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the justice critic who has on several occasions over the last few years divided with his Party. I guess it is something common to all political Parties.

What I do not like is when any one of these other political Parties pretends that it is without divisions. They have divisions as well. The reason for its "no policy" announced on Friday was the serious divisions in its caucus, and its members cannot say otherwise.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the last question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member has any comment on the local advisory councils which were established by the Government, in a different way, in an alleged effort to have local input? Could the Hon. Member comment upon how effectively they have been functioning and whether their recommendations have been accepted or ignored by the Government?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, once again the idea of these local advisory councils was perhaps a good one. However, their implementation has been much less than perfect. As a matter of fact, the Province of Quebec does not have any local advisory councils. They are hit or miss operations throughout the country. Even where they are present, they have not been too effective in making changes or giving advice to the Government that the Government can agree to. It would seem that that part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is more rhetoric than reality.

Mr. Speaker: I see the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I think the time has expired for questions and comments, and I think it is the responsibility of the Chair to move on to the next speaker on debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the chance today to speak for the New Democratic Party in this debate on the Government's policies on unemployment insurance and full employment.

However, first I wish to let an unemployed worker from Spadina speak to the same question. In a letter I received just recently he says in part:

> The reason for this letter is simple. I am twenty-four years old and unemployed. I have a good education, I am willing to do most types of work, I am in good health, and I live in Toronto which has a relatively low rate of unemployment. Yet I simply cannot find a job.
> I wonder if the Conservative party members really know what it is like to have no future to look forward to? I question whether the Prime Minister really cares about the thousands of people like myself. I sometimes feel that the country as a whole does not really care about the country's youth, after all we are only its future.

• (1200)

Farther down he says he feels that politicians must be made aware that there are thousands of people in Canada who are young, eager, and obsolete. He is far from the only one who experiences that although he says it with perhaps more eloquence than some people are able to muster in a letter.

I commend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for moving this motion against the background of government failure. It demands reform of the unemployment insurance system, the meeting of direct needs, including reform of unemployment insurance, social legislation, upgrading of transportation and urban infrastructure. He also refers to youth unemployment and part-time workers.

I wish to respond to three main points. First, something on which the Hon. Member has spent a great deal of time not only in his speech but in previous years as chairman of that committee, reform of the unemployment insurance system. Second, I wish to deal with the meeting of direct needs of the people, including social legislation, upgrading of transportation and urban infrastructure, and democratization of defence. Third, local control, so far as possible of production of agriculture and manufacturing products, especially for the domestic market.

On the first point, the basic principle of full employment, we must begin by declaring that full employment is not only desirable, it is essential to our people's health and happiness, as well as being economically possible and socially workable. Today we have many voices, some academic, some popular writers, and some politicians telling us that full employment is a dream, a thing of the past. They say modern technology and population growth doom us to a larger and larger share of unemployment for the work-force or, as a last resort, a fawning on the rich for personal service jobs. I say that is nonsense. In this, one of the world's richest lands, the population has doubled since I was a youth and we are stronger and wealthier than we were then. Many here can recall, as I can, how in 1945 we returned from the Armed Forces bitterly remembering the misery and unemployment of the Dirty Thirties. We demanded full employment above all and we got it. For five years at least unemployment did not rise above 3 per cent. I firmly believe that what we did in the late 1940s we can do in the late 1980s.

However, there is one big difference. In 1945 North America had a near monopoly with the only industrial economy not wrecked by war, including the basis of industrialized agriculture. We seized the chance to dominate world markets for the export of manufactured and agricultural products and so, along with the U.S., we enjoyed three decades of easy growth. However, that is no more. Europe, the U.S.S.R. and Japan have renewed their industry and industrialized their agriculture. Brazil, India, China and other countries are rapidly industrializing. We are no longer like a man selling water in the desert. We can no longer expand our exports limitlessly. We must now rely more on our domestic market. That means we must not only ask the Canadian people what goods and services they need but also how Canadians are prepared to change our working relations and expectations and attitudes in production; how we will work together to produce these things so as to provide a market for goods and services we produce. That is the first point, the general principle of full employment, which is possible and necessary.

Second, as a foundation, we must recommit our country's resources to meeting the direct needs of the Canadian people individually and socially. The first example, of course, which we have just been considering is the unemployment insurance system which needs to be reformed. Reforms have been unanimously recommended by an all-Party committee of Parliament, predominantly a Conservative committee. They propose to include 50 weeks of benefits for 10 weeks of eligibility, coverage for part-time and short-time workers, pensions and vacations and severance pay not to be treated as earned income so as to reduce unemployment insurance benefits, maternity benefits available consecutively with regular benefits up to 50 weeks, unemployment insurance benefits funded out of general revenue available for training, to start a business, to move to another region, to share in community controlled job creation projects, and have fishermen's benefits continue.

They also propose that the Unemployment Insurance Commission be an autonomous organization accountable to Parliament through the Minister and to the proprietors of that program, that is the workers and employers who pay for it. Furthermore, in addition to reforming unemployment insurance we need much more vigorous job creation programs; not cut-backs but expansion. Disadvantaged groups such as women returning to the workforce, native people on or off the reserve and youth entering the work-force must be better funded than the token programs being offered now.

Third, one of the serious causes of our present high rate of unemployment is the cut-backs and freezes in public employment. For doctrinaire capitalist reasons the Government and most provincial Governments are withholding work opportunities in the provision of social housing, education, especially post-secondary education, in preventive and environmental health, in child care which the Government has put off and put off and put off and does not want to discuss seriously, and in culture and recreation which has been grossly underfunded compared to most other countries. This policy must be reversed and employment in these services must be increased. These services are in fact essential to a modern industrial and commercial country. Without them our society cannot survive let alone produce efficiently.

If you want to see what happens to a country that follows the road of cut-back and freeze you can find a gruesome example in Chile. Pinochet, using the Chicago Boys' philosophy, has brought about an absolute reduction in the number of children in elementary school although the population is one-sixth larger. There is nearly 50 per cent malnutrition among children under six. There has been a doubling of the rate of some infectious diseases, and massive poverty in what was once a prosperous democracy. The only industry thriving there is the military, people who are needed to repress the poor, the workers and the students.

That brings me to the question of Canada's national defence establishment and arms industry. The Government, by trying to follow President Reagan, is in danger of locking Canada into a defence and defence industry policy that would give us the least security and the least sovereignty at the greatest expense. Worship of high-tech schemes like immense radar systems, nuclear submarines, and star wars, lock us into the American war program, and the continued production in Canada of nuclear fuel with the excuse of nuclear power is wasting billions of tax dollars of which the Oerlikon scandal is only a very small part. As defence these programs are questionable and dangerous since they heat up the arms race and make World World III, an unwinnable war, more likely than ever before. As job creation projects they are a sick joke because dollar for dollar they give us less jobs than any other industry, public or private. By spreading the dictatorial role of the military and the rule of secrecy over more and more of the economy, they are undermining our democracy. By starving public projects of funding, they are impoverishing our people and even our industries. Subsidized arms production for export only compounds the problem.

We need those tax dollars for much better programs. There are many urgently needed public projects that private enterprise, the darling of the Government, will not or cannot do. It is well known that our cities are falling into disrepair. Roads, bridges, sewers, waterworks and other basic necessities are wearing out. The federal Government, which helped to build them in the first place through direct grants and generous tax breaks for real estate development, now looks the other way and tells the municipalities and provinces that they are on their own.

How extremely shortsighted. If this Government would add $1 billion per year to the $2 billion proposed by the cities and the provinces, nearly all of it would come back to the federal Government in unemployment insurance benefit savings and in new tax dollars. Our cities would be more efficient and this would generate a more efficient economy. Above all, 60,000 more self-respecting Canadians would be working at useful jobs for decent wages. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is so obsessed with his paper deficit that he would rather see those 60,000 Canadians unemployed.

In addition, Canada's transportation industries need to be renovated. The railways are worn out. The bus system needs to be expanded. Our air system which is in better shape needs the continuing security of a proper system of regulation, with public ownership, especially of airports. However, besides supplying the essential services and the infrastructure that private enterprise cannot supply satisfactorily, we need to democratize the production of primary and secondary products.

In The Financial Post of June, there appeared an article by Peter Cook entitled: "If We're So Smart, Where are the Jobs?" His subtitle note is as follows:

> Countries as diverse as Japan and Sweden have kept unemployment below 4 per cent. Ours is three times higher. What do they know that we don't?

He points out that in spite of 4 per cent growth for four and maybe five years, Canada still has an official national unemployment rate of 9.5 per cent, a combination he calls unprecedented. On the other hand, in Japan where many companies have a commitment to life-time employment, he finds that a laid-off assembly line worker can be switched into the marketing department, sent to a dealership to help reduce inventory or be given a repair job in the plant. Job security like that reduces unnecessary labour market conflict and assists efficient production.

In his other example, Sweden, Cook notes that after 49 years of Social Democratic rule during the last 55 years and a public sector that by 1982 absorbed 67 per cent of Gross Domestic Product, "Growth has averaged 3 per cent to 4 per cent, inflation is down at 3 per cent, the balance of payments is solidly in surplus and unemployment is a mere 2.7 per cent". He finds that while the Swedish Social Democrat Government has refused to prop up lame-duck industries, it has intervened chiefly in the labour market, "to facilitate the transfer of workers from old to new industries and, through high taxes, ensure as much labour mobility as possible". He also says that differences in wage levels in Sweden are small and that if they get large, they get taxed away. As a result of this egalitarianism, Cook says the workers can move to new jobs without facing, as they would in Canada, large differences in living costs and they are helped with retraining and moving costs.

Peter Cook provides a warning which I hope this Government will take to heart. He said:

When Sweden got into trouble, it was because, under a conservative coalition, it departed from its socialist model. In the late 1970s, the government decided to prop up ailing shipyards and steel works and to spend massively on subsidized industry—

As we all know, the Social Democrats are back in the driver's seat in Sweden and Cook reports contentedly that they have been retrenching and getting back to basics since. He says that the most flexible labour market among 18 industrial countries is that of Sweden.

In the time I have left, I hope to offer two different parts of Canada as examples of attempting to apply the principles of fair treatment of workers and wages, training, job security and local democratic control.

In Newfoundland, the unemployment rate is as high as 20.4 per cent, the highest, I believe, of any Canadian province. Newfoundland has been richly endowed with fisheries, game, forests, minerals and hydro potential. Unfortunately for the people of Newfoundland, others took control.

In centuries past, the cod fishery in Newfoundland generated its own surplus capital, but as much as two-thirds of that capital was taken away to England. It was not available to build up the economic, social and educational foundations needed by the Newfoundland people.

Likewise, splendid forests were cut down to build large wooden ships, most of which became the property of merchants in England. In second-growth forests, the pulp and paper industry drained off to Britain and the United States the capital resources created by Newfoundland labour, capital resources that ought to have been used to build up a modern Newfoundland.

Mines like the huge iron deposit at Belle Isle and the hydro such as that at Churchill Falls also enriched a few people, mainly in Montreal, New York and perhaps Toronto. This was done at the cost of starving Newfoundland's economic development. No wonder Newfoundland serves employers in central Canada and elsewhere by providing a handy reservoir of the reserve army of labour, the unemployed.

The present Government of Newfoundland is considering a path of job creation that does not rely chiefly on grandiose multimillion-dollar projects of ripping out natural resources and shipping them away as fast as possible along with the future means of living of Newfoundland's children. The Government proposes to concentrate on smaller local projects, viable agriculture for local markets with the help of modern technology and provision of repair, construction and even light industry such as would be proportionate to local financial means and local markets.

The other area to which I would like to refer is Spadina. A local advisory council on employment has been established in Spadina. Many observers find that Canada is becoming deindustrialized and that the bank towers and the fast-food outlets in Spadina cannot take up all the slack in unemployment. Therefore, we in Spadina have focused on the garment or fashion industry, on the very substantial hospitality industry and on the busy arts and drama industry.

I give credit to the present Government for having half of a good idea. It has promoted the formation of local advisory councils on unemployment. It was a good hunch to urge local workers' organizations, business organizations, social, cultural and ethnic groups and even politicians to meet together regularly in order to identify local employment needs and to devise workable solutions. Unfortunately, the Government failed to provide either the staff to give continuity to the work of volunteers in searching out necessary labour market information, or the adequate attention of the Minister himself. Vital information about cuts in federal training course allocations was withheld from the local advisory council for nine months. The Minister failed to answer serious questions.

Last May, on the motion of the local advisory council, I wrote the Minister asking that the designation of skills shortages be restored to the title "power sewing operator". Sewing machine operators are vital to the garment industry and that skill is taught at George Brown College which is located in Spadina. Ninety per cent of the graduates of that course had been employed in that trade immediately after graduation, yet the number of places in the course was cut although employers were being held back in production for lack of as many as 200 trained sewing machine operators.

The Minister wrote back in July saying that the course was reduced for lack of applicants. However, his letter pointedly ignored our specific question about the skills designation category. The problem was that potential applicants who did not fit into other programs would have fit under the skills shortage designation but were prevented from doing that. Having prevented them from entering the course, the Government could say it was cutting back on the number of seats in the course for lack of applicants.

The picture of the Minister's ignorance and neglect is much worse than that. In April of this year, after receiving the long-delayed information about the skills shortage designation list, I wrote to the Minister pointing out that he had totally wiped out seven of the eight courses needed for training workers in the fashion industry. He had also wiped out six of the eight courses needed in the hospitality industry, including cooks, in an area with an extremely high concentration of hotels and good restaurants.

Finally, he had wiped out 22 of the 23 courses in the arts, drama and culture industries leaving only "opera singer". In other words, a garment worker or hospitality worker who wants to find a job had better become an opera singer. I am awaiting the Minister's reply without much hope of hearing informed common sense.

I have offered a few thoughts on a practical approach to job creation. The main principle is that we must trust the people of whom the majority are workers. Let them take part in the planning and decision-making. Assure them of a fair reward and job security and our economic ills can be overcome. We can have a healthy economy and a just society in which people can walk the streets without fearing either unemployment or increased crime as a result of poverty. It can be done. It has been done in other countries. We have done it in Canada before. I hope the Minister will change his policy and begin to follow a well-proven path.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I referred to the report of the Conference Board that came out over the weekend. It says that Alberta will remain mired in recession this year while economic growth in Ontario, and to a lesser extent Quebec, will outpace growth in the other provinces. The report also says that only three provinces, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, would have unemployment rates of less than 10 per cent this year and next. I also mentioned another report which says that of the 137,000 new jobs created in 1986, all but 5,000 were created in Ontario.

In view of those figures, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised when the Hon. Member, at the beginning of his remarks, read a letter from a young person in Toronto saying that despite good times generally in Toronto things were pretty tough on young people. Could the Member elaborate on that? One has the impression that in Toronto everything is just fine, that it is the hallowed land for workers of Canada, that if you go to Toronto you will be all right. I am now led to believe that despite the general picture it is still very tough for certain people.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, what the Member says is true. Toronto is regarded as the place to go. I was told that when I visited Vancouver and Halifax. I am reminded of a story about a march of unemployed people to Toronto City Hall 50 years ago. The people came from Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and British Columbia. The Mayor asked the Alderman who presented them why they had all come to Toronto. The Alderman said, "Mr. Mayor, I guess they are following the money". In fact, the money is concentrated in Toronto and that is one of the points I was making. The regions which produce the money should have more control over it.

With regard to the situation in downtown Toronto, I know that the figures of 4, 5, or 6 per cent are official, but they miss many. For example, they miss the homeless. Our best social scientists and social workers in Toronto estimate that there are 10,000 homeless people in Toronto. I know that many of them live downtown, including the Spadina area. There are at least two food banks in Spadina, one about four blocks from my office and the other about ten blocks from my office, and they are busy.

I know that many immigrant families are afraid to apply for unemployment insurance. They do everything they can to keep their unemployment troubles, as their other troubles, to themselves. There are many immigrant workers who either have no work or are very seriously underemployed with short hours and low pay.

Therefore, although I recognize that Toronto presently has an unfair advantage over many other parts of Canada, the fact is that there are thousands of people in downtown Toronto suffering the same problems as are suffered elsewhere.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in making a few comments and in asking a question. My comment relates to the debate this morning from the Liberal side of the House dealing with how well the Liberals did in their day and the fact that, as far as they are concerned—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the Standing Orders permit questions or comments on the comments of the previous speaker. If the Member was not here to ask questions or make comments about the speech of the Member of the Liberal Party, he is a little late. He is violating the Standing Orders.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is correct. The comments made by the Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) should be on the speech made by the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I will then make some general comments. My general comments have to do with what the Government is doing today as compared with what was done by the previous administration. It seems to me that the previous administration spent millions if not billions of dollars, in many cases buying people off the streets. People were given short-term jobs and many of them have just reappeared on the unemployment rolls. Why are we in the predicament we are in today? The previous administration spent billions of dollars and there is really nothing to show for it.

That brings me to my next point with regard to the Canadian Jobs Strategy program. The Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) indicated that it was rather hollow, that there was not much to it. I have taken the time to attend a couple of meetings of the advisory council, as has my staff in my Saskatoon office. The feedback from the Canada Employment Centre is that these programs are different and are in fact making an impact. They are a change from what we have seen in the past.

Last week I met with a group which deals with the severely unemployed in Saskatoon. It is called the Regional Employment Development Program. They deal with people who left school, with ex-convicts, with people from broken homes, and with people from a background of drugs and alcohol. These people are having a very difficult time. The Canadian Jobs Strategy is being used for them and it is producing results. They speak highly of the new approach.

Is the Member for Spadina not prepared to give some recognition to the new approach started by the Government which is already starting to show some positive results? I am sure the Government is prepared to consider some fine tuning of the Canadian Jobs Strategy and possibly there could be a further drop in unemployment from the 9.3 per cent which I believe is a record in these economic times.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not show much evidence of having been consciously present during my remarks or he would have heard what I said about my experience with the LAC. I did not simply attend a couple of meetings or become an honourary member, I am the chairman. I have organized and chaired the nine meetings of the LAC since last spring. I have written and spoken to people in government in an attempt to get some answers to the questions that were raised during those meetings.

Perhaps there are no problems in Saskatoon, and I congratulate the people of Saskatoon in that case. However, neither the staff of the Canada Employment Commission, nor the Minister, provided us with appropriate answers to our questions.

For example, we asked about a vital trade course for training sewing machine operators for an industry that was complaining about a shortage of 200 operators. The employers told me that they could provide extra production if they could find sewing machine operators. They were advertising for them but could not find any. George Brown College was not allowed to train them in the numbers in which they were trained before, although its graduates had a remarkably high rate of employment success in that industry.

The Minister responded to everything except my question about how his Government decided there was no need for skill shortage designation for that trade. I never received an answer from the Minister, but some nine months later we received an answer from someone in the CEIC who said that although he is the economist, he was not aware of the problem before. We did not receive an explanation why sewing machine operators were cut, but a description of several other trades that are used in downtown Spadina in the three major industries there which had also been cut out with no explanation.

I said that the Government had half of a good idea, for which I commended it and still do. I have taken action on that myself in an attempt to make the idea work. However, I find that in attempting to use the democratic type of structure in a move toward democracy in industry which the Government has proposed, I am being blockaded by the Government itself through lack of answers and lack of information.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for raising a number of important issues, including the question of regional disparity. He referred specifically to the very difficult situation in Newfoundland. What is his Party's position on the seal hunt, because he referred to game and fishing in his discussion?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I want to respond on two points. With respect to the seal hunt, our Party, in consultation with the section of our Party in Newfoundland, believes that we should replace the seal hunt with better opportunities for those people to earn a living. Until then we will not act against the seal hunt anymore than we would act against the beef farmers of Ontario, the wheat farmers of Saskatchewan, or the hog farmers of Quebec.

There are questions about the methods used in the seal hunt, but that is not the issue. The issue is the existence of the seal hunt as the only source of revenue for many people in that region. Our position is that it should be replaced with a better way of earning a living, but, until it is, it should continue under the best conditions possible for human and beast.

Second, in questions such as these it is essential that we listen to the people who are doing the work, whether it is Newfoundland seal hunters, Newfoundland miners, Newfoundland pulpwood cutters, Newfoundland house builders, or Newfoundland farmers of which there are some in Newfoundland who are using modern technology. Those workers, as do others in Canada, know something about their work and should be heard before outsiders undertake to solve their problems for them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today, considering the fact that the decision we announced last week is basically attuned to the economic and social realities in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance system, and I think it would do no harm to recall this fact, is essentially based on a partnership that was established in an attempt to meet the needs of Canadians generally and, as far as possible, the specific needs of each individual Canadian. Workers, employers and the Government all contribute towards financing the unemployment insurance fund.

Over ten million Canadians are covered by unemployment insurance and have a vested interest in the administration and the future of the system. Basically, they are insured against job loss as a result of layoffs, termination of employment, sickness or maternity leave. Every day, the system helps hundreds of thousands of Canadians to maintain a minimum income.

To do so, Mr. Speaker, the plan's present structure must reflect the realities of this country's economy. In any discussion on unemployment insurance, we must never forget the diversity that is the strength of this country, but which also means that needs vary from region to region. The unemployment insurance system must and, in fact, does take these regional differences into account.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployed are not confined to one and the same region. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) was referring to the fact that even Toronto had its unemployment problem. However, the problems of the unemployed in Fredericton are not the same as those of the unemployed in Toronto or Vancouver. I think that if we ignore these differences, we are not being realistic. The differences exist, and I think the system must take these into account.

Mr. Speaker, a system based on the concept that we are dealing with a uniform problem could well turn out to be a system that is basically rigid and totally lacking in flexibility. For instance—and I believe I share the concern that has arisen in the past few months in Canada with respect to annualization—if we were to lose $2 billion in unemployment insurance benefits, I think we all realize this would have a disproportionate and damaging impact on regions with a fragile economy.

Workers would not be alone in suffering the impact of such a measure, since the entire economy of the regions in question would be affected, and I think this is a fact the Government is certainly not denying, and a fact that was considered in assessing the system.

Mr. Speaker, as we said last Friday, our consultations have shown that there are in this country two very much polarized positions on unemployment insurance. I think we know them quite well. There are those, like the Hon. Member for the Liberal Party whose position, and his was certainly not clear, as usual, is that the program ought to be expanded, while many Canadians—and I don't think we can ignore this fact, which I found came to the fore this morning in a number of interviews—consider that the system should be made more restrictive. I think the findings of the Forget Commission, the Parliamentary Committee, the Newfoundland House Report and the Macdonald Commission, I think that all these groups finally advocated one position or another, but we must admit that most of the major commissions—Forget, Hawkes, the Macdonald Commission—did favour restrictive measures, among others the Forget Commission recommendation which would have reduced unemployment benefits by up to $3 billion, as we know. And so we came to the conclusion that, since each of the various positions is so radical and leaves no room for compromise, the best approach is to maintain the existing system because it best meets the needs of Canadians under present circumstances.

Some people claim that the Forget Commission was a waste of money, yet it is a lot better to have a study confirming that the system we have, although it has its weak points, is best suited to the situation than to change things just for the sake of changing, or to say that because we paid $6 million for a study we have to spend $1 billion if only because a commission cannot be asked to make a study without recommending changes. Why? Why can a study not reveal that the system we have is the best one available?

We looked at the recommendations to expand the program. We looked at the benefits and the costs. To spend $1 billion or more to enrich the program would not have been in the best interests of the partnership and could have a negative effect on our economic recovery. To increase the benefits, to make benefits easier to get, to pay benefits for a longer period of time, would undeniably change UI. However, a bigger program is not necessarily a better program. An increase in the scope and coverage of the program would result in a corresponding increase in the cost of the program.

Let us take an example. To lower the entrance requirements for all workers to 10 weeks and to provide an automatic 50 weeks of benefits would cost more than $500 million. This would not improve the over-all program. It would offer more benefits to some workers but would increase premiums for all workers and for all employers. It would increase disincentives to work and to make the program rigid to the detriment of the entire labour market.

I do not believe that workers would rather collect UI than have meaningful employment. The vast majority of Canadians want work first. Yes, there are those people for whom this is not true. There are those who abuse the system and in so doing cheat their fellow workers. However, the solution to this problem is not to wield an axe and cut benefits for all workers across the country. The approach must be specific and precise. As we announced on Friday, we intend to modestly increase our efforts to weed out the abusers by, for instance, seeing that claimants are interviewed more often by more officers to ensure that they are looking for work and are accepting suitable job opportunities.

We have looked at suggestions to cut the program by $2 billion or $3 billion or more, but this would seriously undermine the ability of UI to properly protect Canadian workers. We will not impose such hardship.

The study we have made of unemployment insurance shows that while UI is not perfect, it is a fundamentally sound program. Unemployment insurance not only provides a substantial response but a swift response to changing labour market conditions. It responds directly to individual needs and in so doing assists local economies and the national economy. Both dramatic cuts and dramatic increases carry with them undesirable consequences. Neither promises better than the current broad program. The uemployment insurance program is a balanced national program meeting the needs of individuals and communities across the country.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who moved today's motion is usually a well-informed man. Although on this side of the House at the time, he was a Member when Canada's unemployment rates peaked, when interest rates were soaring and the economy was stagnant, but of course this was due to the crisis, it was somebody else's fault. Generally speaking the Liberal Party never did accept responsibility for the economic situation of 1983-84, yet it did create it. Mr. Speaker, suffice to say that Canadians passed judgment on the economic management of the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East knows full well that unemployment insurance did Canadians a good service before the recession. He also knows that unemployment insurance plays a vital role on the labour market. However it is only one aspect of the efforts made by the Government to help Canadians face the new economic conditions.

Last Friday I stated that the trade, tax and economic policies as well as the regional and human resources development policies were basically aimed at helping Canadians find stable employment. My colleague knows that all these measures have contributed to strengthen the economy, restore confidence and create jobs. A lot of things may appear doubtful, but 800,000 real jobs, 85 per cent of stable jobs are not dreams but facts. Not only have we made progress, but I think we are also building a solid foundation for years of growth, prosperity and employment for new Canadians, such as the co-operation offered in that respect by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I think we will have jobs for these future Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the work done by my Department attests to the commitments we made and fits in nicely with initiatives taken in other sectors. Employment planning, to be specific, is based on the strength of the economic growth and makes it even more dynamic. Let us not forget that we are not talking about abstractions but about the needs of individuals, about concrete realities. In all regions of the country, and I suggest this is the big plus about employment planning, it is geared to the person, to the requirements and basic needs of individuals. Practically all programs of previous administrations had been based on labour market theories and presented in attractive manuals which were the latest fad several decades earlier. According to the theory applied by the previous Government, labour market problems fell into certain categories, depending on the factors that caused them. They were either cyclical, seasonal or structural. Cyclical factors were connected with the economic cycle, seasonal factors with the seasonal drop in employment and structural factors essentially reflected the imbalance between the skills in demand on the market, and the skills workers had to offer.

Mr. Speaker, the old programs focused on what were seen as the causes of employment problems, but unfortunately, the labour market does not work like that. It does not operate according to specific rules. In Canada, unemployment has remained high for some time. Although the general situation has improved over the last two years, long term unemployment remains a problem. In this kind of context, the creation of short term jobs is pretty useless as far as most of the country is concerned.

Today, it is impossible to pinpoint one specific cause for a worker's being unemployed. It is more important to give workers a chance to acquire the skills and experience actually in demand on the labour market. The jobs strategy is therefore aimed above all at those who are most in need of employment assistance, whatever the economic cause of the problem. The strategy provides for various combinations of courses, training on the job and practical experience, so as to provide the formula that is best suited to a particular region, community or individual.

Mr. Speaker, increasingly, people are realizing that the best way to help those who need employment assistance consists in offering them a combination of institutional training and practical experience, while avoiding any rigid distinction between these two types of training. We must remove the barriers between the world of labour and that of education. We want to bring on-the-job training and formal school education closer together, and bridge the gap which still exists between a great many of our labour market training institutions. Employment planning can provide the essential flexibility which Canada needs to adapt to the rapidly changing labour market.

Major changes are taking place in the work place because of technological and market transformations. In an ever-changing situation, programs must adapt and the decision-making process must be extended at the regional or local level, which is the reason behind the existence of local employment committees where such changes are immediately identified.

• (1250)

I am pleased to report that it is a challenge to which Canadians are responding in increasing numbers. Although it is only 18 months since this fundamental change was introduced, more than 400,000 Canadians have benefited from the skills and experience gained through the six options of Jobs Strategy.

Another fundamental change has been the Government's commitment to continually monitor, assess and re-evaluate the program. We cannot and will not assume that what worked yesterday is also the solution for tomorrow. We have established mechanisms to determine the performance of each program. Our aim is clear—we want to eliminate what does not work, to improve what does work and to anticipate continually future needs.

The preliminary results of our first surveys of our programs are really most encouraging. Results show that the entry and re-entry options report success rates of 73 per cent for young people who completed entry and 67 per cent for women completing re-entry. These are good figures. They show that we already have improvement over the 64 per cent success rate of old-style institutional training in the same period.

Results are equally positive with respect to employment equity. Participation of women, natives, the disabled and visible minorities are all higher than under the programs that preceded the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Most targets for women have already been met in the first year of operation.

We have also conducted follow-up studies which reveal an overwhelmingly positive response among participants. Fully 89 per cent said that their participation in the Jobs Strategy provided them with new or better employment or helped them to retain their present jobs.

The results are encouraging. They point to the essential value of the changes we have made. They will not serve as laurels upon which we rest. Rather, they are spurs to our continuing efforts to assist individuals, communities and regions across the country.

The labour market is not static. Fully 2 million Canadians leave and enter the labour market each year. Such changes and adjustments occur every day. Every sector of Canada plays a part in this dynamic process.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government is simply trying to facilitate and integrate the efforts of teaching institutions within the private sector to meet the needs of both the business world and labour organizations, as well as voluntary groups and individuals.

Thanks to the updating of resources, solutions are coming to light in every region, every community, every corporation, and from each and every individual.

In short, Mr. Speaker, our unemployment insurance scheme is providing good results. We have never claimed it to be perfect, and past studies have not striven for perfection either. However, in the consideration of various commissions, various studies that were made, it has been useful in my view to receive all those recommendations which enabled us to realize that the proposed change . . . Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East suggested earlier we should take a proposal here, another proposal there. They were very careful not to say they supported the Forget Report. Of course, they prefer to quote selectively from the Forget Report.

Mr. Speaker, when there is a report with an overall impact that one cannot implement, one cannot choose one bit from a report, another bit from another report, and try to make some sort of melting pot that does not meet today's reality. We have decided the current system in the circumstances was the best one because of that impossibility. And if there is one conclusion to be derived from the Canadian Jobs Strategy, it is that while it is important to provide solid protection to the unemployed, temporary protection under which they can look for a job, the Government first and foremost, and in this we are successful, the Government should first ensure it provides jobs. Such is the goal of the Jobs Strategy. The results are there. Results are now increasingly encouraging, and all we ask is an opportunity to carry on while again protecting workers who unfortunately lose their jobs.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Minister said that we should not implement a report simply because it cost $7 million. I agree with him on that point. Reports are not implemented simply because they cost a large amount of money. However, I do not think we should reject an entire report simply because there are opposing views on different recommendations.

I wish to ask the Minister this. Why would he not introduce those measures with respect to which there is common ground, such as a wider scope for training while on unemployment insurance, changes in maternity benefits to make them parental benefits in certain cases and some changes with respect to over-payments?

The Minister said that I have never declared myself for or against the Forget Report. There are 53 recommendations in the report. In all my years here I have never seen a report in which all recommendations were either accepted or rejected. Governments pick and choose those recommendations which they believe to be practical and possible and they reject others. Within a few weeks after the Forget Report came out the Minister himself made a decision with respect to cuts relating to pre-retired pensioners. We may have disagreed or agreed with his decision, but we did not condemn him for not dealing with the entire report at one time. So I ask him why he will not accept those recommendations on which there is common ground.

I wish to return to the recommendation with respect to a wider scope for training. It is a recommendation which would not even cost more money to implement. All that is required to implement it is a change in the law. In order to permit those who were on unemployment insurance to take a wider range of training programs we amended the law a few years ago. But we now find that it is not enough. Both the standing committee and Mr. Forget recommended that while one is on unemployment insurance there should be a wider scope for training. I will not get into the details in my question, but why can the Minister not move in those areas by bringing a Bill forward? I mentioned about eight areas in which there are common ground and where there is agreement, not on the details but in principle. I believe that we could do a great deal to improve unemployment insurance by acting on these recommendations.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed an interesting question. We believe that any kind of reform that deals with the scope, the costs of the program, does not have to be considered for the moment. The standing committee mentioned a cost of $1 billion. Of course, the Hon. Member has other figures. But we could talk about a cost of at least $500 million. The Member has referred to training services being provided under the unemployment insurance system. While that could be a logical move, we believe it could lead to too great a widening of the program itself.

For most Canadians the UI system has to be just that, an insurance plan. However, increasingly for some it has become a part of the social welfare system. That is not a trend that I necessarily condemn. That aspect of the unemployment insurance system is an important one in those regions of the country where the economy is so fragile. But, to broaden the scope of the UI system in order to achieve better results in those areas could lead to other problems.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions or comments will continue following Question Period this afternoon, assuming the Minister is present at that time.

It being 1 p.m. I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—PROPOSAL TO RESOLVE ISSUE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the inability of the Government to reach a fair and appropriate agreement on the issue of Japanese Canadian redress was most regrettable. The Government failed, during this heightened window of opportunity, to right a long-standing wrong.

Its failure, however, was inevitable and predictable, for the Conservative administration steadfastly refused to attach to this issue the political priority it deserved, and refused to establish a comprehensive process for dialogue.

Moreover, this stubborn and short-sighted attitude makes a mockery of the personal commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the issue. He promised urgency. He promised compensation. He promised negotiations. Yet, through three different Conservative Ministers of Multiculturalism, the National Association of Japanese Canadians was resigned to individual meetings here and there, sessions which were not conducive to a spirit of compromise, to a spirit of give and take, or to a spirit of understanding.

Instead the Government entrenched an adversarial approach, pitting the Government against the Japanese Canadian community, while opposition Parties and parliamentarians were totally ignored and kept in the dark.

I call upon the Minister and the Government to give the process a chance. A sensitive process is needed to reach a resolution of what is a very sensitive and pressing national issue.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM—INCREASE IN ONTARIO PRODUCTION FOR DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Canada's two-price wheat policy pays Canadian farmers $7 per bushel for the 10 per cent of Canadian wheat production which goes into domestic human consumption. The traditional split in the domestic wheat benefit has been approximately 87 per cent to the Canadian Wheat Board area and 13 per cent to Ontario and the rest of Canada.

Ontario production of good quality red wheat can be sold straight to the miller at the domestic price, thus giving Ontario producers the potential to displace production from western Canada. This spring Ontario producers have increased their red spring wheat acreage by 400 per cent, a pattern which, if magnified, could seriously upset the historical regional balance in the two-price wheat benefit.

I urge the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to note the report of the 1986 special committee on the pricing of domestic wheat, which recommended that he explore mechanisms to ensure that the two-price wheat policy continues to reflect the historic regional market share of all wheat types used domestically for human consumption.

This benefit should be available to producers regardless of where they live or who sells their wheat.

SENATE REFORM

CALL FOR RESIGNATIONS TO FACILITATE ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTED SENATE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has come up with what he has called an ingenious way of moving toward an elected Senate, a proposal which has the support of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba Liberal Parties.

The Hon. Member proposes that prairie Premiers hold elections to determine their nominees for any future vacancies in the Senate. This return to democratic principles by the Liberal Parties of western Canada is overdue.

Might I make a suggestion of how the Liberals could show that they are serious about it, not simply trying to exploit the movement toward an elected Senate, a movement which has its origins, in large part, in the failure of Liberal Senators from the West, and western Liberals in general, to understand and meet the needs of western Canada during their many years in government?

My suggestion would be equally ingenious. It would be that the 12 Liberals in the Senate from western Canada who are now clogging up that place, resign en masse, this dirty dozen, and make a significant advance toward an elected Senate immediately possible. Instead, what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry suggested would simply be a vacancy by vacancy advance well into the 21st Century.

If the Liberal Members in the other place would do that, perhaps we could take the Liberals seriously.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DEMAND THAT NATIONAL ANTHEM BE SUNG IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES AT EDMONTON OILERS' HOCKEY GAMES

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday, that is on May 17, the final series of the Stanley Cup between the Edmonton Oilers and the Philadephia Flyers began. The Oilers organization which I am pleased to congratulate had chosen a francophone, Mr. Loriaux, to sing the Canadian and American anthems.

In view of the fact that hockey is recognized as our sport and the overwhelming majority of spectators of that game were French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians, it was entirely proper to expect that O Canada would be sung in both French and English. However, such was not the case and it was only sung in English.

I do not know why but I feel that this is unacceptable and I ask the Oilers organization in Edmonton to reconsider the matter and ensure that French is also used at the opening of Stanley Cup games.

HELICOPTER ACCIDENT IN OUTAOUAIS—CONDOLENCES TO FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, a tragic accident occurred over the weekend when the helicopter chartered by Hull's station CHOT snagged a power cable as a crew was shooting sequences for a hunting and fishing program at Grand Lake, killing all five aboard.

On behalf of the Liberal Party and all my colleagues in the House I should like to offer my most sincere condolences to the families of Messrs. Jacques Bériault, Claude Girard, Clément Diotte and Guy Fréchette of CHOT station, and to the family of pilot Jean-Paul Parent. They made up an outstanding crew working to keep the National Capital Region public better informed and thus making it possible for station CHOT to maintain its rating of excellence and popularity among French regional stations.

Again I offer my most sincere condolences to the families and to their station CHOT TV colleagues.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

PROPOSED MOTION INCORPORATING PROTECTION FOR UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Motion M-37, sponsored by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), asks that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms be amended so as to protect the unborn human foetus. I and millions of Canadians support this protection for the unborn child.

I believe life begins upon conception and I base this conviction on Scripture which is the word inspired by our omnipotent God. For example, from the Book of Jeremiah, Chapter 1, verse 5: "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you; and before you were were born I consecrated you."

Some 60,000 unborn babies are murdered every year in Canada. Cradled in the mother's womb should be the safest place in the world for a child, but not in Canada; certainly not for the 60,000 who were aborted during the last 12 months.

Not one Member of this House would be here today had our mothers chosen abortion. I urge every Member to give unborn babies in Canada a chance to live by passing Motion M-37.

MARINE SAFETY

IMPORTANCE OF WORK OF LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 a federal inquiry headed by Paul Leblond said that lightkeepers are the only source of information on local weather conditions available to mariners. Their contributions are invaluable. Three years later the Government has again enlisted Dr. Leblond to investigate the impact of the Tory plan to destaff a number of West Coast light stations.

While search and rescue activities are not part of their job description, lighthouse keepers have recorded numerous rescue incidents. How many of these incidents were serious enough to be called life threatening? How many lives is the Government willing to risk?

The assault on Canada's light stations started under the former Liberal Government. Between 1978 and 1985 the number of person-years allocated to light stations declined by approximately 200. In the name of restraint the present Government has taken this scheme further and now plans to replace workers with machines.

Last week one of the witnesses told the Leblond inquiry that automation is a hazard to navigation. We need real modernization of lighthouses and not automation which is unreliable at best.

ENGINEERING

CENTENNIAL OF ENGINEERING IN CANADA

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, today is the centenary of engineering in Canada. For 100 years Canada has been relying on the brains of its residents to ensure its progress.

What would we be today without our Canadian engineers? Without them, where would we rank in research, science and technology?

Canadian engineers have become the driving force behind our development and earned a worldwide reputation. We often see a Canadian heading a major project in other countries of the world. Our engineers are the best and we are proud of them.

I want to thank Canada Post Corporation management for issuing today a commemorative stamp marking the one-hundredth year of engineering in Canada, and I urge all Canadian Members of Parliament who are engineers to join me on this historic event.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ALLEGED INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT TO WITHDRAW FROM FIELD

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, Le Devoir newspaper informed us this morning that the Government intends to withdraw from regional development. This announcement comes after a series of measures taken by this Government which show its lack of interest in fighting regional disparities. I suggest that one of the most important things for this Parliament and Canada as a whole is to make sure that citizens are given equal opportunities, wherever they may live in this country. We have come to realize that with its free enterprise philosophy, the Government is completely abdicating its responsibility of ensuring that people of far-away and disadvantaged areas have equal access to employment and dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it will be a very sad day when the Government of Canada abdicates all its responsibilities and says to the less affluent regions: Take care of your own problems. Mr. Speaker, I think that after having promised the moon to the Canadian people and assuring all regions of equal access, the Conservative Government has again broken one of its promises, thereby jeopardizing the very survival of economic equality in Canada.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—NEED FOR CANADIAN CONTENT REQUIREMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, North American car manufacturers are tied into a trade pact providing for a 60 per cent Canadian value added. Offshore car plants are expected to assemble about 430,000 new cars per year in Canada by the year 1990 and are not subject to the same limitations or to any requirement to source supply in Canada. The only possible result can be a loss of Canadian jobs in the Canadian auto parts supply sector and even more in the assembly plants when North American manufacturers turn to foreign-built cars which are sold in Canada under recognized trade names.

I call on the Government now to review its foreign investment policy to ensure the strengthening of the Canadian automobile industry and to ensure that foreign investment must be an investment in Canadian jobs.

MEDICAL CARE

COST OF CANADIAN WOMEN BECOMING SURROGATE PARENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Canada is experiencing a Baby M dilemma of its own with an added twist. Americans are now using Canadian women as surrogate mothers with medicare benefits thrown in for good measure.

Growing numbers of American couples find that by using Canadian women as surrogate mothers, the cost of surrogate parenting is lowered. The dollar amount has been estimated at around $5,000 per birth which is paid by the Canadian taxpayer.

Are we to allow people from foreign lands to exploit our medicare system for personal benefit and gain? Furthermore, this raises the whole question of the contracting of parental responsibility.

It is clear that the American Baby M case does not affect contract law in Canada but we must now ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to introduce into Parliament the Government's clear position on the issue of surrogate parenting.

As science moves quickly, so do expanded roles for surrogate parents. This raises a number of questions, paramount of which is the interest of the child. Are the interests of children being served? I daresay they may not be and I think the Minister of Justice should show some leadership in this area.

MINES AND MINING

AID GIVEN TO INCO AND GOLDEN KNIGHT RESOURCES

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Abitibi area will experience a new mineral resources development through the opening of a new gold field. I am referring to the first stage in the development of the Golden Pond East gold deposit, situated in the Casa Berardi township in the federal riding of Abitibi, some 100 kilometers north of La Sarre, on the Villebois-Selbaie-Joutel highway.

Assistance amounting to $14.5 million has been granted to Inco Ltd. and its partner, the Golden Knight Resources Ltd, to be shared equally by the Governments of Canada and Quebec under the infrastructure program provided for by the Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on Mineral Developments. It will be used to build an access route and a high-voltage power line in this faraway region. This project will necessitate over $74 million in investments and create some 180 jobs when production starts in 1988.

As elected representative of that region, I am proud, together with the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the Hon. Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) (Mr. Merrithew), to share in this major development in a remote mining territory.

ACQUISITION OF AMERICAN ENTERPRISE—DOUBLE STANDARDS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, last week we had another example of the double standards used by the United States in the matter of foreign investment when their country is involved rather than Canada. Recently, Dominion Textiles in Montreal announced it was ready to make a bid for the Burlington Industries in Greenberg, North Carolina. But that company was not interested in using State politicians from North Carolina and Members of the American Senate to fight against the Canadian take over. It is amusing, Mr. Speaker, that while the Americans are looking for free investment access in Canada, it appears the North Carolina Assembly put in place legislation to block the purchase of an American Corporation by a Canadian company. We may sympathize with American politicians, Mr. Speaker, since foreign ownership in the United States, including the textile industry, could lead to a loss of jobs and technology. But this is something we Canadians know. For that reason we want to protect our interests, our industries and we are asking the Americans not to apply double standards.

EXPENSES INCURRED BY THE BLIND

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the special needs of the 38,000 visually impaired people living in Canada today. While most of us jot down a phone message on a piece of paper, a blind person must often purchase and use a recording device. Special equipment is also needed for reading and writing.

Many blind people depend upon public transit, but in smaller centres that can be a problem when buses run infrequently and never on Sundays. Consequently, blind people must often take taxis and that is expensive. In short, Mr. Speaker, it costs money to be blind.

Meeting the special needs of the blind can also be costly in the workplace and many employers are unwilling or unable to buy the equipment necessary to hire a blind person. This results in lost work opportunities for people who are capable of doing a job but are denied the right to work because they are visually impaired.

The federal Government has already substantially improved the situation of handicapped Canadians but more needs to be done to remove the economic obstacles which blind people now have to deal with at home and in the workplace.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that the Government is about to announce some major changes at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, changes that will be applauded in Washington but not in Canada's regions.

The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that since his Government came to power in 1984, the regional development envelope has been cut by $3 billion. According to the personal estimate of the Minister of Finance, regional development financing has been reduced by 20 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister announce today and promise before this House that there will be no termination of the regional development component of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, despite pressure from Mr. Peter Murphy, chief U.S. negotiator in the free trade talks?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the subject of regional development and job creation in the regions remains a vital focus for the Government of Canada.

The 778,000 new jobs created since the new Government was sworn in have had a very positive impact across the country, but we still have regions that are less well off than others. We are working with the provinces and at the national level to create a better balance of opportunities across this country.

I may add that nothing is going to happen in the course of any negotiations that would diminish the Government's authority in this vital sector.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—ALLEGED AMERICAN PRESSURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the country has been observing that the Government has been caving in to American pressure on all fronts. The Prime Minister can twist a phrase as he will.

Let me give him another example. Since the Dome Petroleum affair became public, in its struggle to survive, the Government has adopted a hands-off attitude as a result of American pressure. Now that several major secured creditors have said no to Amoco, will the Government of Canada say no to Washington and adopt a more activist stance so that we obtain a Canadian solution for Dome Petroleum?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition has either a poor knowledge or a poor appreciation of what is being done with respect to the Dome question.

[English]

The first responsibility of the Government was to make sure that Dome would receive proposals. This is exactly what happened. It received three proposals, contrary to a year ago when everyone thought that Dome was bankrupt. That is what the Government achieved first.

Presently, the board of directors, the shareholders and the creditors of Dome have a certain number of days, if not weeks, to study the proposal put to them by Amoco. That is the present situation.

In the future other proposals may be submitted to Dome. It is up to those interested in Dome to study the question and discuss the details with the lawyers. I think the Government has achieved its purpose, which is to show that Dome will survive for the good of the country, the people there, and our natural resource reserves in the West.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): For that to happen, the Minister better start adopting a more activist stance because there are six weeks left before the waivers on those security guarantees lapse.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AGENDA INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct another supplementary question to the Prime Minister. The regional development programs of the country have been destroyed in the two and one-half years since the Government took office. There have been over 2,200 foreign transactions approved by the Government, mostly involving take-overs, during the last two and one-half years. The Prime Minister has repeatedly allowed our resource industries to be sold out.

What do the Americans now want on the free trade bargaining table that they have not already obtained?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader just said the resource industries have been sold out. Perhaps he could tell us which ones he is referring to.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I'll be glad to.

Mr. Mulroney: He says he will be glad to. We will wait for that. While he is doing that, perhaps he would be happy to indicate—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Lumber, fish, potash, petroleum, oil and gas.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the spirit of Louis St-Laurent may be dead in the Liberal Party, but the spirit of Lloyd Axworthy lives on.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Mr. Rossi: That's a poor answer.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the commitments of the Prime Minister continue to live on. Two and a half years ago the Prime Minister promised to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland. Unemployment in western Newfoundland now stands at 31 per cent. It is 24 per cent on average across the province. In the face of these staggering statistics, the Government's response has been the Atlantic Enterprise Program which has resulted in exactly 26 program approvals since that program's inception.

When will the Prime Minister realize that increased unemployment in Newfoundland and other regions is not an example of bad luck, it is an example of bad policy by this administration? Will he restore the 20 per cent or $3 billion cut in regional development programs in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that since this Government was sworn in jobs in Atlantic Canada have been created at a rate twice as fast as those under the previous Governments.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That is a fact.

Mr. Broadbent: That is two times zero.

Mr. Mulroney: I think our commitment, for example, to Newfoundland was indicated by resolving the matter in the offshore—

Mr. Foster: How many rigs are working?

Mr. Mulroney: —and by our co-operation in terms of the fishery and the solution which has just emerged in the fishery to the benefit of Newfoundlanders.

We have been discussing a number of regional development programs including the Atlantic Opportunities Agency which we think will be a major initiative which will bring help and the beginnings of equality of opportunity which has escaped Newfoundland now for 20 years while my hon. friend was a member of the Liberal Party.

I think it is time for him to stand up and salute the beginnings of prosperity that are coming to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, a prime example of the Prime Minister's tendency toward accuracy is the fact that, at age 32, I have been in Parliament since I was 12.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FUNDING OF DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, last fall in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Prime Minister promised the regions a new deal for regional development. That's what he promised last fall in St. John's, Newfoundland. What we have had instead is the region's sacrifice on the altar of deficit reduction.

We learned today, and we know, that an announcement is coming soon that the Regional Development Branch of the Department of DRIE is about to be scrapped. That is on top of a $3 billion cut in that Department's funding for regional development.

Will the Prime Minister put aside the flimflammery? Will he quit twisting and turning and stand in his place and tell the people of Newfoundland, who are suffering under a burden of increased unemployment since his Party came to power, that funding will be restored to the department of regional development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have readily acknowledged the imbalance which has come about over the years in terms of economic growth in Canada. One of the principal reasons we have managed, notwithstanding the fact of bringing down unemployment since we came in from 11.7 per cent to 9.3 per cent—

Mr. Tobin: It is up—up in the regions.

Mr. Mulroney: Notwithstanding that fact, there is this imbalance to which I referred as the development of two economies in Canada, which is unacceptable and unfair. One of the reasons this Government has committed itself to new trade relationships with the United States is that this gives Newfoundland and Labrador a chance now for economic equality.

Mr. Tobin: Don't make me laugh.

Mr. Mulroney: That is another indication of what this federal Government is trying to do in a constructive way.

My hon. friend says: "Don't make me laugh". I will tell you it was not funny when the Government of which he was a member lost in the previous three years a million jobs, and this Government has created 778,000 new jobs in less than three years. I think my hon. friend will agree that is the beginning, and you will see more with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. You will see more jobs created as Canada and the Parliament of Canada must commit themselves to a greater degree of fairness in building equality of opportunity in the regions and spreading equality more fairly across the country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that one of the defining characteristics of this sovereign nation is its right to establish for itself the criteria for investment within its own borders including, if it should so decide, the restriction or exclusion entirely of foreign investment from a certain sector. Simon Reisman, our principal negotiator in the free trade talks with the United States, said yesterday that he is still awaiting instructions from the Government of Canada on this important matter.

• (1430)

Will the Prime Minister assure the House, and in particular the people of Canada, that Canada's traditional sovereign authority in this area will remain and that Canada and the Government of Canada will retain the criteria, for example, to restrict or to exclude entirely, if it should so desire, foreign investment from certain sectors of the economy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has pointed out correctly that there has been limited discussion of this issue in the free trade talks. The negotiators are meeting today at Meech Lake. Over the last couple of days they have been discussing the issues of subsidies and dispute settlement mechanisms. They have been carrying out their mandate, which is to listen to the Americans to try to determine what areas of investment they would be interested in including in the free trade negotiations since investment is not on the table, except trade related investment.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the kind of sensitivities he has identified is of course the kind of sensitivities that the Government is committed to address.

INQUIRY WHETHER ABSOLUTE SOVEREIGNTY WILL BE RESPECTED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. He must clarify the situation for Canadians, for Americans and for our negotiator. Are we going to maintain our traditional position of full sovereignty in this area—yes or no? That is my question.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that the actions of the Government and the statements made by the Prime Minister and members of his Cabinet have indicated clearly on a broad range of issues that the sovereignty of Canada will remain intact in terms of anything that we carry out.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO U.S. OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the actions of the Government are precisely why we are asking the question. It has given away FIRA. It sold out Prentice Hall. It is about to sell out Dome Petroleum. Canadians want to know when the Government will stop selling out Canada. That is why we are asking the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: A senior U.S. official, Mr. Bruce Smart, U.S. Under-Secretary of Commerce, who was objecting to what the Government might do in stopping an Amoco takeover was quoted as having said this:

> —it would be one example to us of the kind of conduct that needed to be negotiated away . . . With barriers that could prevent that kind of takeover, you couldn't have a free trade agreement.

Will the Minister assure us now that the kind of power to which he is objecting will in fact remain in Canadian hands?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

An Hon. Member: The socialist Party.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —the socialist Party thinks he can pedal around the country running exclusively on anti-Americanism. He may be interested in trading away the sovereignty of Canada. That may be the New Democratic Party policy. It is certainly not ours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MANDATE OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister for International Trade. In an interview on March 15 the Minister said in reference to the question of foreign investment in Canada that the issue has been addressed by Cabinet but that the mandate has not yet been completed by Cabinet. She said: "If they want something more dramatic, we will have another look at it".

Considering the pressures which are now being applied by the American negotiator and, indeed, by the Canadian negotiator, does Cabinet intend to reconsider the mandate it has given to Mr. Reisman to broaden the terms by which the issue of investment will be considered as part of the free trade negotiations? Is there an intention on behalf of the Government and Cabinet to broaden the interpretation of investment as it will be applied in the free trade deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the Hon. Member that since the Government has taken office we have made a great many moves in the field of investment, to make it much more attractive for foreign investment. We have dismantled the NEP. We got rid of the offensive measures of expropriation introduced by the former Government.

Mr. Broadbent: Why not give the rest away? You can see what Canadians will think of it.

Miss Carney: I am sorry that Members opposite do not wish to listen to my answer.

As a result we have had record foreign investment in Canada which has created jobs, the job record to which the Prime Minister referred.

I have made it clear on many occasions in the House that the Americans have indicated on a number of occasions that they are interested in broadening the mandate in the free trade talks to include more than trade related investment. I have also told the House repeatedly that the negotiators have a mandate to find out what the Americans are looking at, if anything, in terms of what we already have. At such time as they have been able to indicate what their interest is we will see what is being put forward. We have an open investment climate. We have Investment Canada. We have had record investment.

POSITION OF CABINET

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about the record of the Government. I simply want to point out to the Minister that in the annual report of Investment Canada it is stated that 95 per cent of all foreign investment has been in takeovers and in acquisition. Only 5 per cent has gone to the creation of new business development. If that is the record upon which the Minister is standing, then it is a very poor basis upon which she will be negotiating a new investment package as far as the free trade talks are concerned.

That is the question to which we want to find an answer. Somewhere in her long description can the Minister direct her mind to this question? Does Cabinet intend to give a further mandate to Mr. Reisman to broaden the terms by which investment will be considered in the free trade talks? Will that mandate be made clear publicly so that Canadians will know exactly what it is the Government is prepared to give away?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Hon. Member would talk about our record since the record of the Government of which he was a member led to the out-flow of millions and millions of dollars of capital and the loss of thousands and thousands of jobs. So if the Hon. Member wants to stand on his record, he can stand on it. We will stand on ours.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

POSSIBLE ABOLITION OF DEPARTMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. According to Michel Vastel, as reported in Le Devoir this morning, the Federal Government wants to discontinue any direct involvement in the various regions of Canada and abolish the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Mr. Speaker, my question is this:

Could the Minister advise the House now whether this information provided this morning by the daily Le Devoir reflects the intention of the Federal Government?

Is it really the intention to abolish the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, if that is not true can the Minister tell us whether or not he is denying that Cabinet is now discussing or will be discussing soon a plan to reorganize governmental programs for regional industrial expansion? Can he get up in the House and categorically deny that there have been no discussions of reorganization of his Ministry's work and also the work of other Ministries that are relevant to regional economic expansion?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said earlier, we remain committed to regional development. We have the responsibility to promote economic prosperity in each region of the country, which is why we have created close to 800,000 jobs. We intend to continue in our efforts.

• (1440)

Under the Atlantic Enterprise Program, as has already been mentioned, we have examined a lot of cases, leading to the creation in the order of 1,000 new jobs.

That is what regional development is all about, Mr. Speaker.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO WORKERS AND REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the remarks of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, ever since the Conservative Government took office the budgetary envelope for regional economic expansion has been reduced by $3 billion and certain industrial sectors have practically been abandoned.

I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion what is happening to the footwear industry. For example, in a letter from the manufacturers' association we learned that, as a result of this Government's import policy, during the first two months of 1987 alone, our Canadian manufacturers saw their production drop by one million pairs as compared with last year's figures.

I would ask the Government or the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, what he proposes to do to help the workers first, but also the regions which have been hit by lost jobs, a drop of 11 per cent in employment over the past few months.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): First, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the argument of my colleague, in July 1986, after consulting the industry, we set up a footwear industry policy to meet the needs which had been pointed out and suggested by the industry. This initiative made it possible indeed to open up new opportunities for the footwear industry.

ASSISTANCE FOR AFFECTED REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if the policy was established with industry representatives I simply have to wonder why they keep sending us documents seeking interviews to tell us that their industry is going to pot!

So, I would ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, whose Department is being dismantled, how he will help these regions which have been hard hit by job losses in the footwear industry, how he will be able to help a region like Matane build a paper mill which the region so badly needs to create jobs.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, a correction first. There is absolutely no question of dismantling the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. On the contrary, our main concern is to make sure that we work in consultation with the people of the regions and with the provinces precisely to be in a position to meet the needs of the regions, something the previous Governments have never done.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, who has been twisting and turning, trying desperately to avoid answering a straight question.

She has tried to say that it is what Americans want that matters.

An Hon. Member: Try asking a straight question.

Mr. Langdon: My question for the Minister is: What is it that the Canadian Government wants? Does it want to have the full range of investment discussed with the United States, or not?

Answer the question clearly, please.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has not been listening either to myself or my colleagues who have answered this very question.

I have made it very clear that the negotiating mandate that our negotiators have deals with trade related investment. I have said that very clearly. I have also made it very clear that they have a mandate to listen to any overtures by the Americans in terms of investment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —to define what it is that they want to talk about, since they have made it very clear in a number of bilateral meetings with myself and the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs that they want to talk further on investment.

I have said that our negotiators have a mandate to listen to what they have in mind. I have pointed out that, unlike the previous Government, we have an open investment climate; we have Investment Canada; we have attracted record-breaking levels of foreign investment—

Mr. Axworthy: In takeovers.

Miss Carney: —that have created jobs in this country; and we are interested in any job-creating plans that are brought forward in the free trade talks.

Mr. Broadbent: Canada is for sale.

Miss Carney: But I have made it very clear that there is no mandate being given to the negotiators beyond that which I have outlined. I am surprised that the Hon. Member keeps trying to drag this issue forward, at a time when I have said there is no mandate to negotiate it.

Mr. Langdon: I agree with the Minister that it is a shame that one should be anxious to get the truth from this Government with respect to its intentions. Such a shame!

TRADE RELATED INVESTMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Let me try once more, with this question of the Minister. Will she be clear on whether she is prepared to take the mandate for trade related investment, to take the so-called open investment policy which she supports, and make that the clear mandate of the negotiator?

Otherwise, the negotiator is left in a completely empty-handed position, himself twisting in the wind as badly as is the Minister.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I am not clear, Mr. Speaker just what point the Hon. Member has raised.

Is he asking us to give a mandate on investment to the negotiator? Is he asking us—

Mr. Broadbent: He is asking what your answer is. We want your answer.

Miss Carney: Is he asking us to do that; and if so, I would be interested in his views on the matter.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister just denied the comments reported this morning in Le Devoir. I would now like to ask the Minister, if everything goes as well as he suggests, how he can explain that his budget is being reduced year after year, employee morale in his department is at its lowest, all top-notch people in his department are looking for jobs elsewhere and everyone is convinced that the end of the department is in the offing? I want to ask the Minister, if what he is saying is true, whether he can now assure this House there is no question of disbanding the Department, programs are here to stay and the Department's mandate is to be strenghtened rather than reduced, as they have been doing for two years?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will simply respond by stating once more that in October, 1986, the Government in the Throne Speech decided to put the emphasis on regional disparities and to work at getting nearer to regions, because regional needs are known by people living in the regions. Such is the direction the Government wants to take. And it is with that kind of initiative we are now implementing that we will keep on ensuring this country's economic prosperity and creating additional jobs.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister did not answer my first question. This is what I am asking: Currently, in view of the Department's commitment that the mandate to reduce regional disparities across Canada with programs like the RIDP will remain, because even if he does not realize it, all his officials at this point are wondering whether tomorrow they will have a job and the Department will still be there. Let him call any of his regional offices—all are saying: Côté does not know where he is going. Mr. Speaker, here is what I am asking the Minister: Do we have the assurance, on behalf of regions for which he just spoke, do the regions have the assurance the Canadian Government will continue looking after their needs rather than abdicate its role as suggested in Le Devoir's report?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member's comments are based on purely hypothetical questions raised in a report in Le Devoir, which in no way reflects nor in any was near the truth. Mr. Speaker, the Government's and the Department's responsibility indeed is to meet the needs of regions, and from time to time it is essential that the Department review those programs, to ensure that they work as efficiently as they possibly can. Such is the responsibility we are assuming, and we will keep on improving in this way Canada's economic prosperity and creating additional jobs.

ASSEMBLY PLANTS—CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion, who, I am told, met with the mayors of the automotive-based communities of Canada just last week.

My question for the Minister asks whether he was able to alleviate the concerns of those mayors and assure them that the assemblers of automobiles in Canada will be subject to a "Canadian content" provision.

Mr. Broadbent: Good luck!

Mr. Axworthy: Let's hear the answer to this one.

• (1450)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer that question by saying that it is the responsibility of the Department to look into the automotive industry. We have been doing it on a consultative basis with the industry. As my colleague knows, last week we met with the mayors involved in this sector. We made sure that they would be part of the consultative process.

We should be ready very shortly to submit some recommendations in that regard to the Government.

VIA RAIL

DECISION TO REFURBISH RAILWAY CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct some questions to the Minister of Transport who is also responsible for the line of the flat wheel special, namely, VIA Rail.

We have now spent over $1 billion refurbishing old railway cars since 1977. There have been no orders for new rail passenger cars, and the promise of the Government to create a viable passenger service has been broken. We now have cuts in everything from redcaps to summer schedules.

Could the Minister tell us whether or not he comprehends the devastating effect upon not only employees at Can Car in Thunder Bay and at Bombardier in Quebec but on the future of VIA Rail itself?

Why is he opting for short-term savings ahead of long-term earnings? Why does he not buy the new equipment and quit throwing good money after bad?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we can easily tell that 1984 has come and gone, because we are hearing Newspeak today.

I am pleased to announce today that we have agreed to spend $361 million more, not less, than was provided in our five-year plan to assist VIA Rail in acquiring equipment, to refurbish up to 200 long-haul cars, in acquiring new high power locomotives, and in continuing station upgrading.

The total over the next five years was to be $2,150 million. It is now going up to $2,511 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentleman does his homework and consults the Leader of the NDP, he will discover that more is more and less is less, and that this happens to be more.

Mr. Benjamin: I am glad the Minister answered my question indirectly by admitting that he still throws good money after bad. Now we are up to $2.5 billion to be spent on old equipment.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, do the Minister and his cabinet colleagues on the Priority and Planning Committee not understand that by buying new equipment they could recover the costs in savings on maintenance and operating costs within five to seven years? Why are they throwing away another $200 million this year on refurbishing old cars? Why do they keep perpetuating what the Liberals did, starting in 1977? Why are they doing exactly the same thing?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not doing what the NDP has done, because the NDP "has never done nothing".

We will be asking Members of the House to vote $588 million to help meet VIA Rail's capital requirements and operating losses this year; $588 million, and that ain't hay. It might be hay to the hon. gentleman because he does not seem to know the difference.

PROMISES CONCERNING PURCHASE OF NEW EQUIPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who seems to be forgetting the election promises of his Party. His announcement today does not deal with new train equipment. Does he not realize that, on two occasions, the former Minister of Transport announced, with much fanfare, the purchase of 130 new cars? Why is the Minister unwilling to fulfil his campaign promises?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. predecessor kept our election promises. He restored a number of routes which had been cancelled by the hon. gentleman's Party without any notice to the public and during the summertime when the House of Commons was closed. These have been restored, and we are making a mighty effort to support VIA Rail.

Mr. Tobin: What about Terra Transport?

Mr. Crosbie: In respect of Terra Transport, we are carrying on with the brilliant concept of the hon. gentlemen opposite in containerizing the Newfoundland railway, Terra Transport, about which they are now complaining.

Now I am forgetting what was the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Axworthy: It is no wonder VIA Rail has a problem. You have a short attention span, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, their questions come all the way from Rhodesia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: As a matter of fact, the former Minister of Transport announced the purchase of 20 locomotives on June 20, 1985, and they were purchased. With the announcement which I am making today, further locomotives will be purchased by VIA Rail.

PROMISE NOT TO REDUCE PASSENGER SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this answer is totally unacceptable, because not only is the Government breaking its promise that VIA Rail would get new equipment and new passenger cars, but also because, since VIA Rail will have to repair and modernize some 200 cars, the company will have to operate with a reduced capacity. What will happen to the Government promise to keep the same services on transcontinental and regional lines? Since there will be less equipment available, how does the Minister propose to keep his promise not to reduce VIA Rail passenger service?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, because there is a limit to the amount of money we can make available to VIA Rail—and I have outlined the plan to spend $2.5 billion over the next five years—unfortunately we are not able to go forward with the purchase of new bilevel cars such as was originally envisaged.

The cost of those cars is considerably in excess of what had been anticipated or contemplated when it was planned to go in that direction. However, we will be revising and refurbishing up to 200 long-haul cars. We will acquire new high power locomotives. We will continue station upgrading. We will continue with new maintenance facilities, including facilities in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax.

We are doing the best we can, and we are devoting considerable assets to this task.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN ALBERTA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Conference Board of Canada indicated today that the Alberta economy was one of the worst in the country. It predicted a drop in Real Domestic Product of 1.1 per cent for 1987.

We in the NDP have tried to speak up for the ordinary Albertan—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: —and the response of his Conservative caucus in Alberta, the silent 20, as I call them, has been to raise the Red scare.

I ask the Prime Minister to name one positive measure he is prepared to take today to help the sick economy in Alberta.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that will come as a surprise to the ordinary Albertan.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the NDP says: "Oh, oh". What truly crippled the economy of Alberta was the National Energy Program. That was damage inflicted by the NDP and the Liberals, and that will never be forgotten by the ordinary Albertan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is being coached by the Leader of the NDP. I don't want to interrupt anything. Is it okay to go on?

We put an extra $350 million into the economy a few months ago. That was designed to create thousands of new jobs and generate hundreds of millions of dollars in new investment. I met with the leaders of the energy industry in Alberta last week. They confirmed the value of this kind of program in conjunction with initiatives taken by the provincial Government. They also confirmed their appreciation for the rapid action by the Government of Canada in providing $1 billion to western agriculture. That was also of great assistance to the economy of Alberta.

• (1500)

I think the larger answer lies in an economic diversification package which is being put together by the Deputy Prime Minister. That, along with other initiatives, will bring genuine solace and assistance to the ordinary Albertan.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, David Kilgour came as a surprise to the ordinary Albertan and they liked that surprise. As well, the NDP voted against the NEP as much as the Conservatives, and he knows that.

Mr. Beatty: It did not go far enough for you.

Ms. Copps: Tell the truth.

Mr. Speaker: We are reaching the end of Question Period and that will be the end of questions. I am sure all Hon. Members would want to hear the last few questions.

ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, concerning the positive aspects of the Prime Minister's answer, is he in a position to tell the House when these proposed measures for economic diversification, which we all want regardless of Party, will be announced?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will be making an announcement at the earliest possible moment.

If my hon. friend wants to place things in reasonable perspective, and if it is still accepted that unemployment levels remain a fair barometer of economic growth and activity, it should be noted that Ontario retains the lowest level of unemployment in Canada, followed by Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta. Western Canada has three of the top four provinces in economic growth and low unemployment. That indicates a tremendous commitment by the people of Alberta and the people of western Canada generally to their own growth in co-operation with the Parliament of Canada. We are determined that we shall do more to be of assistance to western Canada in order to reach new heights of economic growth and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West, two short questions.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—PROPOSAL TO RESOLVE ISSUE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The Government's failure to reach a fair and adequate settlement on the issue of redress for Japanese Canadians is most regrettable but not surprising when you consider its refusal to honour its commitment to an ongoing and comprehensive process of discussion was instrumental in that failure.

This sensitive issue requires a sensitive process of dialogue. Therefore, will the Minister agree it is time to establish, as promised, a comprehensive and continuing process of discussion which would be conducive to a spirit of understanding and compromise, rather than engendering an adversarial role through individual and irregular meetings which pit community against government?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, during the last seven months I suppose I engaged in the order of 20 to 30 meetings on this issue. That is pretty sensitive dialogue. All Members of this House should know the net result was that for the first time a Government of Canada said it would acknowledge the injustice of the treatment of the Japanese Canadian community in the 1940s. We stand ready to do that today.

Second, in my letter of March 27 I indicated we would repeal the War Measures Act and make sure those injustices would not occur again under its replacement.

Where we do not yet have common ground is on the question of money—not on the moral principle but on the question of money. We offered a $12 million fund which would produce $1 million to $1.5 million each year for that community. The executive of the National Association of Japanese Canadians is still demanding over $400 million. We have no common ground on the question of money.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's response. With respect to the issue of common ground, throughout the process the two opposition Parties and interested parliamentarians were ignored and kept completely in the dark.

In an attempt to try to reach common ground so that Parliament can collectively obtain an agreement we can be proud of, would the Minister be in favour of involving any and all Members of Parliament in the process by giving a mandate on this question to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism? In that way, together with the Japanese Canadian community, all three Parties can harness their efforts to try to reach a settlement of this issue which would do honour to Parliament and all Canadians. Every Member of Parliament would like to resolve this issue during the life of this Parliament.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first, if the committee wants to participate all it need do is so indicate. It has not done that. More importantly, when I first took on this task I met with my critic and two other Members in the NDP who asked me to consider certain facets of this issue. There is nothing in the process in which I have been involved on behalf of the Government which excluded anyone. Indeed, we are meeting again on June 1.

If the Hon. Member, and indeed any member of his caucus, want to participate in this process all they have to do is get in touch with me or the National Association of Japanese Canadians. It seems to me that was open to the Member and his caucus all along.

Finally, what is important here is that there has been an historic offer to the Japanese Canadian community in this Government's acknowledgement of those injustices. The Government stands ready to do that today. As to making sure there is no recurrence of those injustices, the Government has already indicated it will repeal the War Measures Act and make sure this does not happen again.

With respect to the community fund, I ask the Hon. Member to consider seriously that throughout the country we have many needs. When you consider that, along with the $400 million requested as opposed to a $12 million fund, it seems to me this Government's offer if fair and just. I stand by it 100 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret that we have time for only one more question.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EMPLOYMENT OF VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. According to a recent study prepared for the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police dealing with the number of visible minorities in large Canadian police departments, the RCMP refused to provide the study with any information on the grounds that it does not keep records of that sort of thing. Will the Minister advise the House whether or not the employment equity policy concerning visible minorities put in place by this Government for the first time in Canada some two years ago applies to the RCMP? If it does, why do RCMP officials not keep records which government Departments are now keeping, and when will they start to comply with government policy?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the study but I have not as yet received a copy. I would like to assure the Hon. Member, however, that there is no discrimination within the RCMP with respect to the hiring of visible minorities. The reason we do not keep statistics of that nature is in keeping with the spirit of the Human Rights Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand:

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, there was still time left in the question and comment period of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), so we will proceed with that question and comment period.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is supposed to have a reputation for being fair and equitable. That is why I would like to ask him, not during question period but in the course of this debate, why he is not willing, as of today, to offer all retirees affected by the decision to reinstate unemployment insurance benefits for those who retired in 1985-86, why he is not willing to give them their benefits as of today instead of letting them wait and holding them hostage, pending the passage of a Bill he intends to table which considers more universal aspects of unemployment insurance? Why doesn't he, in a spirit of co-operation, give these retirees who number nearly 50,000 across Canada the benefits owed them?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member erred because she was unaware of the fact we cannot reimburse retirees for the year 1985-86 because these are retroactive payments and, as such, must be approved by Parliament, otherwise the Minister has no authority to make these payments. Since we will soon be considering the second reading stage of Bill C-50 in the House, I hope to be able to count on the co-operation of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to proceed quickly with second and third reading, and we will be able to reimburse the retirees.

I repeat, as far as making the payments now, we have no authority to do so since these payments have not been approved by the House.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Minister pointed out that the Forget Commission report was highly controversial and that the recommendations of the standing committee report were highly controversial. However, 22 of the recommendations were supported by both the Forget minority and majority reports and the standing committee.

For example, there were recommendations for the coverage of part-time workers, the paying of benefits to those workers who were illegally locked out in a dispute and the extension of maternity benefits by two weeks, just to name three. Why would the Minister not have used this opportunity to move in those areas where there was common agreement in both reports?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my colleague from Nickel Belt that the question of unanimity on 22 recommendations does not mean that the Government took the decision it did because there was not unanimity. There were many other reasons for deciding not to move forward on giving more benefits or on giving a wider scope to the application of the UI review.

As well, we took into consideration that the UI system cannot afford more expenses in terms of benefits. I must point out to my friend that, contrary to what the commission said, this means about $1 billion more, not $175 million. Maternity benefits alone would be $475 million.

Mr. Rodriguez: Two weeks, two weeks.

Mr. Bouchard: No, I am talking about maternity benefits.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are talking about two weeks.

Mr. Bouchard: I was not talking about a waiting time of two weeks, I was talking about maternity benefits.

My friend knows very well that 70 per cent of part-time workers already receive UI. He knows as well that many part-time workers do not want to work on a full-time basis. Considering all those components, the decision we took last Friday and in the weeks before is certainly the best decision we could have taken under those circumstances.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that northern Ontario has been going through a very difficult time since the severe cut-backs in forestry, mining and the steel industry which have occurred in the last couple of years. As well, the federal civil service has been cut back by several hundred jobs.

I wonder if the Minister could explain the value of cutting down on the number of counsellors at the immigration offices in Sault Ste Marie, Sudbury and Thunder Bay. When these positions are cut back as dramatically as they have been in the last couple of months, immigration counsellors are effectively removed from the offices but these counsellors are the ones who assisted and encouraged entrepreneur immigrants to come to northern Ontario.

In northern Ontario, we need new industries and new small businesses. We need new entrepreneurs coming from Hong Kong, Europe and even the United States. Now there are effectively no people available in those offices to assist in those entrepreneurial inquiries.

I wonder if the Minister would review that decision with a view to reinstating those positions. Surely a time when a whole region of Canada like northern Ontario with 700,000 or 800,000 people is facing economic downturns is not the time to remove unemployment insurance assistance, immigration counselling positions and people in direct job-creation programs. These people are really needed now. We should not be facing cut-backs in direct job creation or in immigration counsellors who really assist in bringing in foreign investment and new entrepreneurs.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, what we have done in northern Ontario is to follow a national operation according to the policy of the Treasury Board about person-years available for any Department. It is the same operation we have undertaken elsewhere. I do not agree with my colleague that it necessarily means fewer services for entrepreneurs or anyone else. We agree that it will be a little tougher than it was before in terms of job development but, at the same time, northern Ontario is one of the regions where the Canadian Jobs Strategy has been applied and I think that has been quite efficient in its application.

On the specific question about Sault Ste Marie, at the request of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), who is the Member of Parliament for Sault Ste Marie, I agreed to look at the possibility of maintaining the same number of people in that office. I promise to give a very quick answer, hopefully this week.

• (1520)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, before the Minister leaves I would like to put some facts on the record. In response to the question I asked him about unemployment insurance, I think he inadvertently misled the House and the almost 50,000 Canadians who are waiting to receive assistance through unemployment insurance, which assistance was duly announced by the Minister in the House.

I asked the Minister today why he was not prepared to move immediately to allow those pensioners who qualified for pension benefits up to 1986 to receive benefits while we are awaiting further discussion on Bill C-50. He said only a few minutes ago that he is unable to do so because it was passed by legislation and new legislation has not been put in place to reverse that decision.

The Minister will know that his Government introduced the move to cut off almost 50,000 Canadian workers who applied for unemployment insurance after they were laid off, through no fault of their own. The changes were invoked by regulation rather than legislation. What the one hand giveth by regulation, the other hand is now taking away.

I cannot believe the Minister when he stands in the House and claims that he cannot, in a show of good faith today in the House, insist that at least those 50,000 Canadians who made the decision to retire in 1985 and 1986 be enabled to receive that benefit. The Minister has agreed with that logic. He said that false information was given out and the Government is therefore prepared to reverse its position. In the meantime he is holding those 50,000 Canadians hostage by refusing to return any of those moneys until Bill C-50 is passed.

The Government's policy was so bad that even Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament were standing in the House to dissociate themselves from it. Now that the Minister has come forward with a positive initiative, why does he not state that he is prepared to move immediately without holding those 50,000 workers hostage?

I am not even the critic and I have in my possession letters from people across the country, some of whom have lost their homes. You will be aware, Mr. Speaker, of one very sad and difficult case which actually resulted in a suicide. That case was raised by myself in the House. The Minister is turning his back on these thousands of Canadians who have written to him, exhorted him, and contacted their Members of Parliament. Why does he not move away from his very rigid position of refusing to grant cheques to those pensioners while waiting for the full development of Bill C-50?

Unfortunately the Government is once again playing politics on the backs of the unemployed and the workers. Anyone who had the opportunity to hear the very articulate argument put forward by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand) this morning will realize that the Government has no employment policy. That is why we are introducing a motion to condemn the Government.

We are three years out of the recession and the unemployment rate across the country is still hovering at almost 10 per cent. That is completely unacceptable, particularly when you consider that during the last 20 years while Liberal Governments were in power the average level of unemployment was around 5 per cent. This morning the Minister and members of the Government were laughing in glee over an unemployment rate of around 9.3 per cent. The Liberal Party does not think a full employment policy is a joke. We think it is an objective toward which we should be working.

I would like to spend a few minutes outlining the lack of a full employment policy of the Government in relation to older workers.

[Translation]

And I know for a fact that there are a number of Hon. Members, Conservative Members, who have indicated an interest for the issue of older workers, and I believe that the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) has indicated a deep interest for older workers. What I would like to do, Mr. Speaker, if I could, would be to attend Cabinet meetings or even caucus meetings of the Conservative Government to find out why the Hon. Member for Jonquière and other Conservative back-benchers did not have the courage to stand up to the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson), who had committed himself a year ago to introducing in the House a specific policy for older workers.

[English]

We hear government Members making pronouncements on all these issues in committee, yet when the telling moment comes in the House to vote on a resolution, such as the one before the House today, or to confront the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), they are afraid to do so and disappear. We do not hear them speaking out.

In February of 1986 the Minister promised that he would be introducing a package for older workers. Several months before February of 1986 the Government unilaterally and with one fell swoop did away with the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program which was the only program targeted for older workers. The Government slashed it and bashed it and did away with it. Nothing was put in its place and it was not until repeated questions were asked by the Opposition that the Minister made his promise in February of 1986.

He said: "The position of older workers deserves special consideration. I am announcing federal funding of up to $125 million over a four-year period, "—peanuts, Mr. Speaker, my words, not his—"to finance a new Program for Older Worker Adjustment". It even has an acronym, Mr. Speaker—POWA. Unfortunately, the only people who have been "pow—ed" and planted in the face are the older workers who have been waiting for more than a year for this program to materialize. This $125 million over four years is a pittance. The Government comes up with $1 billion in 48 hours to bail out the banks and then tells the older workers of the country that they will be given $125 million over four years.

Even that paltry, pathetic sum has not been handed out by the Government more than a year after the promise was made by the Minister of Finance. That is because the Minister fobbed it off to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) who fobbed it off to the provinces, who fobbed it off to the provincial labour ministers. The Government is blaming the provinces, passing the buck and the responsibility in the same way it did with the national housing program.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, according to the most recent statistics on unemployment among older workers, as presented in a March 1987 article entitled Les pertes d'emplois, et adaptation au marché du travail dans l'économie canadienne, it is already an established fact that once they lose their job, these workers, older workers that is, are more likely to leave the labour force. First of all, in January 1986, no less than 42 per cent left the labour force. And second . . .

• (1530)

Second, for those who did remain in the labour force, the job search was longer for older workers than any other age group. When they finally found jobs, those jobs tended to pay much less than the previous employment and much less than the national average.

The job search for the 45 per cent who did locate new full-time employment was the longest. It took them 33 weeks to find a new job, and the average wage loss between the lost and new full-time job was 12 per cent, also the largest of any age group. Furthermore, the one-half of those workers who took pay cuts lost an average of one-third of their wages in the job change. These pay cuts are likely related to the fact that many of these older workers lack levels of education and had already undergone longer than average job searches.

The job loss and labour market adjustment in the Canadian economy will show that those people who are suffering are not only located in the regions of the country that have been ignored by the Government. We learned in Question Period the startling statistics which show the cut in regional development moneys spent to assist the underprivileged regions of this country. At the same time, the Government is washing its hands of the plight of older workers and turning its back on those people who, through no fault of their own, find themselves out of work and, in some cases, taking an average of 33 weeks to find another job that will pay less.

What response has been made to the plight of older workers? Did the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) talk about older workers in his statement on May 15 which deals with the Forget Commission and unemployment insurance? Did he talk about the lack of worker adjustment programs or the Government's decision to turn its back on older workers? Instead, he talked about the abusers. He said: "We will step up our activities to weed out those who would abuse the system".

Unfortunately, the Minister is reinforcing the notion expressed to Forget and to the committee on employment that those people who are receiving unemployment insurance are attempting to rip off the system. However, Forget and the committee studying unemployment insurance changes were able to discover that the number of abusers of the unemployment insurance system is less than 3 per cent and that the record of the abuse inflicted upon the income tax system is far greater than that in unemployment insurance.

In spite of these statistics, the Minister talked about the abusers of the system and the kind of "fraud squad" that was launched by his predecessor, the Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), when she promised to hire an extra 700 people to investigate job claims. This is only pandering to the notion expressed by some Canadians that people who are seeking unemployment insurance are out to rip off the system.

My experience as a Member of Parliament as well as a Member of the Ontario Legislature convinces me and, I believe, members of our Party that people who apply for unemployment insurance do so because they are in real need. These include the people who have written me about the issue of changes to the definition of pension as income. They include firefighters of Hamilton who have written to the Government and me on this issue. I think of the workers at Firestone. I also think of the workers at Miracle Mart who were thrown out of their jobs. These workers were primarily women, many of whom had literally 20 to 25 years of service. They were told they would no longer have a job at Miracle Mart and, to add insult to injury, were told they would not be entitled to collect unemployment insurance.

The Minister has partially revoked that Draconian measure of his predecessor who attempted to take money from the mouths of the families of Miracle Mart workers. He has decided to change that unjust law partially, but he could make regulations or at least introduce a separate legislative package upon which Members could vote in one day, as we are prepared to do, in order to turn that money back to the workers. Why is he using this issue as a club with which to force us to accept other unjust changes to the regulations he is suggesting?

The motion of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) simply states:

> That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustment.

The Government literally laughs in the House at our proposal for a full employment policy. I believe the purpose of the motion of the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East is to make a full employment policy a goal for us all to attempt to achieve.

During his remarks he mentioned how two previous Liberal Governments have been able to keep the level of unemployment below 3 per cent because we set a full employment policy as our first national priority. Yet the Government will not even make a commitment to set 7 per cent, 6 per cent or 5 per cent as a national target for a reduction in unemployment.

We do not expect the Minister or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to achieve this goal tomorrow, although the Prime Minister stated during the election campaign that tens of thousands of jobs would be created overnight. It has been over two years since the mandate of the Conservative Government, and the average unemployment rate is higher than it ever was during the tenure of Liberal Governments in the past century.

It is difficult to understand why the Government is not prepared to set the objective of achieving a full employment policy by the end of its mandate. I believe that the Government is so committed to non-intervention and is so free market driven that it believes it has no place in the area of job-creation. This has been illustrated quite clearly in the cut-backs and slashes to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East outlined the cruel reality of a 30 per cent cut in funds that the Government should make available for job strategy programs.

[Translation]

And today, the Conference Board of Canada provided data which suggest that the situation in all provinces except Ontario and a few parts of Quebec will be worse.

[English]

We have heard the dire predictions of the Conference Board with respect to employment. The unemployment situation in certain sections of the Province of Newfoundland is worse than it ever was under the previous Liberal Government. Yet the Government will not make a commitment to a full employment policy.

While I certainly respect the work of government Members on the all-Party committee that came forth with unanimous recommendations dealing with part-time work and the question of unemployment insurance, I believe those Members on the government side who truly believe that there should be some drastic changes in the Government's approach to the unemployed in this country have no choice but to support this motion whole-heartedly. I invite them to do so.

The Minister and the Prime Minister have stated that they want to involve the regions and localities in the decentralization process. Therefore, the Government must begin to give some credence to the recommendations coming from the local advisory councils. The local advisory council in Hamilton is becoming quite frustrated by a Government that consistently ignores the advice of an advisory body that it established. I ask government Members to support this motion which will at least encourage the Government, if it does nothing else in this Parliament, to make a full employment policy its first priority in the goals we attempt to achieve. That will mean that those older workers who so far have been ignored by the Government, and those people who are not working, can have some hope.

If you wish to share our dream, then obviously you must agree with a motion which aims at eliminating unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest).

Mr. Charest: Yes, just one question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) suggests that the Government did not set clear-cut objectives. I suppose that, as the spokesperson for the Official Opposition, she will be in a position to tell us what the exact position of the federal Liberal Party is, and if so, whether the federal Liberal Party of Canada is indeed promising today every Canadian man and woman that if they were to win the elections some day, they will restore full employment in Canada and if not, what exactly do you have in mind as your objective?

Ms. Copps: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course full employment is indeed the goal of the Liberal Party. That is what was agreed upon at the National Convention of the Liberal Party, and if this Government is not at least committed to the objective of full employment, I wonder what they are doing here! Now, we are not saying that as early as 1988 or 1989, as soon as we are back in power, we will be able to achieve that goal immediately, but at least we can have full employment as an objective.

In answering this question, Mr. Speaker, I think that the federal Liberal Party is at least willing to support the changes suggested by the committee of all parties, including Conservative Members, Liberal Members and Members of the NDP with respect to the unemployment insurance program, that is the changes in family benefits, not only maternity benefits, but also changes for part-time workers, changes which would make the system more efficient and would streamline its bureaucracy. And I really wonder why the Government is not even willing to endorse those objectives as suggested by its own Members!

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) mentioned that at its national convention in November the Liberal Party passed two resolutions favouring full employment. As she pointed out in her speech, twice since the Second World War, Liberal Governments have made full employment their highest priority and twice it was achieved, once under the Mackenzie King—St. Laurent Governments of the late 1940s and early 1950s and again under Mr. Pearson in 1963.

In a report dated February 28, 1987, it was pointed out that more than 95 per cent of the new jobs created last year were created in the Province of Ontario. In fact, out of 137,000 new jobs created, only 5,000 of those jobs were created outside of Ontario. I know the Hon. Member is from what is considered the Golden Horseshoe of Ontario, which includes Hamilton, Toronto, Oshawa and so on. It is more than likely her area is one of the better off areas with respect to employment. No doubt that has happened under a free market economy and a Liberal Government in Ontario.

As a Liberal, does the Hon. Member believe that it is just that employment gains are so unevenly balanced in one area of the country, even within her own province? We know northern Ontario has suffered more with respect to unemployment than southern Ontario. Is the Hon. Member willing to leave it to the market economy to decide whether one region of the country should get all the jobs and others none at all or very little, or would she take a more pro-active approach?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think it is pretty clear, even from statements made by the Premier of Ontario, that Ontario is prepared to share in the benefits and good times and to share in some of the difficulties and bad times. When I look, for example, at the level of unemployment in Newfoundland, traced since the time of the Conservative Government coming into power, we see from the figures that both in Newfoundland and in British Columbia there is only a marginal drop in unemployment. In the case of Newfoundland, it was 23.8 per cent in September of 1984 to an unacceptably high level of 19.2 per cent in January of 1987. In British Columbia, there is a drop of about 1.6 per cent, which is completely unacceptable considering that we have gone from a period of recession into a period of world-wide resuscitation, as it were.

What I cannot understand is that the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) actually questions even the objective of a full employment policy. No one is suggesting that any Government, whether the Liberal Government of Ontario or the federal Conservative Government, has all the answers to all the problems of the unemployed. For a worker in Toronto or in Hamilton who does not have a pay cheque coming in, who has lost a job and who has no money to put food on the table, it is just as painful as it is in other areas of the country. The very least we can do is to support this motion which calls on the Government to endorse a full employment policy.

If we are not prepared to set national objectives, if we are not prepared to hope, how can we expect that from these thousands of workers—in fact over a million workers—and the number of children we know are living in poverty along with their parents who are not earning wages? How can we expect them to have hope, to hold up their heads and go out and fight for a job, having faith in the Canadian economy, if the leaders of our country and Conservative Members of Parliament will not even endorse the objective that at some future point we might have full employment again in this country?

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the last speaker, I could not help but think about the full employment program of the Liberal Party. I would like to bring to the attention of the House some figures on unemployment. The Hon. Member who proposed this motion indicated that we are not creating jobs outside of the Province of Ontario. The Government is creating jobs in Quebec at a rate of 7,258 jobs per month. That is 10 times faster than the Liberal rate of only 727 jobs per month. More jobs have been created in Quebec in the last three months than were created by the former Government in four and a half years. I think that is coming closer to a full employment program than the program proposed by the Liberal Party.

In the Prairies, 79,000 jobs have been created since September of 1984, including 31,000 jobs in Manitoba. In British Columbia, 87,000 jobs have been created since the election in comparison to only 26,000 jobs in British Columbia during the entire mandate of the previous Government. So who is creating new jobs?

Jobs are being created at a monthly rate of 25,097, compared to 7,700 under the Liberals. We have created 778,000 in 31 months, as compared to 424,000 jobs in 55 months created by the previous regime. The Liberals created only 87,000 full-time jobs in 55 months; we have created 667,000 full time jobs in just 31 months. I think that indicates that this Government is working toward a full employment situation in this country.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the Province of Quebec—

[Translation]

—the unemployment rate in the Province of Quebec is still close to 10 per cent. If that is acceptable to the Progressive Conservative Party, I doubt very much that they will keep all their seats when the next election comes, because 10 per cent, in any province, is considered too much by the Liberal Party. If the members of Conservative Party of the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell) are satisfied with an unemployment rate just under 10 percent, I hope they will be running in Quebec for the next federal election.

I would just like to draw the attention of the House on the rates of unemployment as they stood for almost 20 years when the Liberal Party was in power.

[English]

Between 1965 and 1980, before we were plunged into a recession which was accepted as a world-wide recession by any economist who examined the situation, the average unemployment rate under Liberal Governments in that period was 5.6 per cent. For 15 years we had consistent unemployment rates of less than 6 per cent.

As the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East pointed out, during two periods of time when the Liberal Government made it a national priority we had unemployment rates which were actually less than 3 per cent. Now, during the course of this Government's time in office, a Government which campaigned on the promise made by the Prime Minister that tens of thousands of jobs would be created overnight immediately upon the election of a Conservative Government, we see that the Government is still sitting on its fat fanny satisfied with having unemployment rates of more than 9 per cent.

In certain areas of the country there exists the unacceptable situation of 20 per cent to 30 per cent plus unemployment. That is not acceptable. The Liberal record in the last years of our Government was not acceptable to the Liberal Party either. We were fighting to try to change it. However, it is obvious that the record of complacency on the part of this Government is acceptable. If it were not acceptable then Members of the Government would have no other choice but to support the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—UI REFORM—FULL EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand:

> That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustment.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today, especially since quite frankly, I have been listening with some fascination to my opposition colleagues and to everything they had to say. I have heard some of the most incredible statements I have ever come across in such a short time. I must admit I was surprised at the kind of statements being made in the House, without any real relevance, about a number of subjects to which I will be referring to shortly.

First of all, perhaps we should stop and reflect for a moment on what lead up to today's debate, and I am referring to the fact that last Friday, the Government, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), announced that following a number of studies that had been ordered, not just Mr. Forget's study but a number of other studies published in this country, the Government had decided to make no substantial changes in the unemployment insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, we had a situation where the Government was literally confronted on one side by part of the population that wanted important changes, and on the other side by people who were not as keep on these changes.

Several people, Mr. Speaker, suggested making some entirely extraordinary changes in a system which for many Canadians, especially in the regions, has become vitally important.

Considering the lack of consensus across this country, it would probably have been very difficult to implement any effective changes in the system. The Government has preferred to make a number of administrative changes within the unemployment insurance system while attempting to improve the system, but in the short term, it will make no important changes.

Our Opposition colleagues are surprised. We are not surprised at their reaction. They are surprised, and that is why today, they have introduced a motion that refers to reform and at the same time condemns the Government for not having developed a full employment policy for Canada. I think that part of the motion also refers to the situation of youth in Canada, Mr. Speaker. And that is why, whether I like it or not, I feel I must intervene today to try and contribute a small measure of serenity and common sense to a debate which if we left it completely to the Opposition, would merely be a repetition of the entirely incredible statements we have been hearing since this morning.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, ever since the Liberal Party of Canada, among others, has had an opportunity to speak up this morning I have yet to hear a suggestion as to what we could have done. It is an absolutely extraordinary intrigue, they have been sitting on the opposition benches in this House for two years, so I have to presume that they may be experiencing difficulties such as those prevailing now about the Constitution where accusations are flying right and left, with racist overtones in some cases. Besides, when the cruise missile or the free trade negotiations come up for discussion, we simply have to conclude that we are facing a divided Opposition which is suffering from a flagrant lack of leadership, of inspiration, of research, of I do not know what, but in any event the result is that Canadians are being deprived, because in the end that is what it amounts to. Let us forget our situation for a moment, under our political system we have a Government which proposes solutions and tries to establish policies, and an Official Opposition which is expected to offer alternatives. In this case, after nearly three years of opposition, three years in this Parliament, the Official Opposition still has nothing to offer or to say to Canadian men and women.

What is surprising, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest this may explain today's motion, is this kind of utterly incredible statement on the part of our colleagues of the Official Opposition who are bragging about the fact that when the federal Liberal Party was in office between 1965 and 1980 the unemployment rate was about 6 per cent or lower—

Mr. Allmand: 5.6!

Mr. Charest: —5.6. Well. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) says 5.6 per cent, with a proud smile. My God! What a great thing for this country! It is absolutely unbelievable. It is unbelievable that we should come to the House today, on May 19, 1987, to be told something as ridiculous as this. Is the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East going to tell us that the world has not changed since 1965? Can he and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) have overlooked the fact that from 1965 to 1987, the world, the environment, the labour force and industry have changed in Canada? Did they fail to note, for instance, the changes in the natural resources industry? They would have us believe that the situation in this country in 1987 is exactly the same as in 1965. Come on, I just cannot believe such a thing! My friend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East would be the first to say that one would have to be something of a moron to try and convince the House and the Canadian public that the economic situation in Canada and the rest of the world in 1987 is comparable to what it was in 1965. One would have to be a complete imbecile to imply indirectly that which we are living in exactly the same world. As soon as I have completed my remarks, I am sure, because I know him well, that my friend, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East will want to stand in the House and say: Mr. Speaker, hon. colleagues, I did not mean to say that the world in 1987 is exactly the same as it was in 1965. I am sure he will want to say that. Knowing him to be an honest man, I am sure that he will want to correct this, at least in the minds of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, they have shown courage by speaking about the unemployment rate among young Canadians, which we recognize as much too high. As a matter of fact, we had already recognized that fact in the Throne Speech delivered on October 1st of last year. I do not think anybody could blame me for mentioning today that the unemployment rate among young Canadians in April was about 13.9 per cent. Since we came to power in 1984—let us be frank and direct about this, Mr. Speaker—our Government has managed to reduce the unemployment rate among young Canadians by about 6 per cent.

Well, I suppose it would be just too much to ask the federal Liberal Party of Canada, and even the Socialists, to stand up in the House and recognize that the situation has improved.

And, Mr. Speaker, to get away somewhat from the partisan nature of the debate to which Hon. Members are challenging us, let me tell you this: One rule is clear in the case of young Canadians, as far as their performance or their level of activity within the economy are concerned: When the economy is in a slump, either in Canada or elsewhere, the young are the first to be laid off. When the economy recovers, the young are the last ones to be recalled. In conclusion, the golden rule for the young more than for any other group in our society is this: It is important that the economy be healthy, that government expenditures be well managed, otherwise they will suffer the most. Although this is not romantic, it is one of the basic realities, and today at any rate, statistics are ample proof of it.

Even, my God, I listened with interest to our colleague from Hamilton East, a Member of the federal Liberal Party of Canada, when she referred to the fact that the unemployment rate since the turn of this century was always low under a Liberal Government. Well, my God, a hundred years ago there was no unemployment in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Nobody was working either, according to current definitions. But it is unbelievably gross for someone to suggest such things to Members of the House of Commons in the hope Canadians will swallow everything without uttering a word, as if citizens in this country were vases one could fill as one pleased. The times are over, Mr. Speaker, when one could tell people anything at all and have them believe it.

What puzzles me most on the other hand is this. The federal Liberal Party of Canada—perhaps and certainly our colleagues for the socialist party also advocate the same thing—are telling us: What we are promising Canadians is full employment. This is what we should have in Canada. Everyone should be rich. How are we going to be rich? Oh well, I do not know. That is no problem for them, but everyone should be a millionaire.

Well, we must remember this, Mr. Speaker. First, countries that have employment policies made a number of choices. First, they made choices as to their trade policy, in the first place. Are those exporting, importing countries? Is their market small enough? Will they try to specialize in a certain number of products, and so on? They made choices as regards their trade policy, on one hand.

Second, after making that choice, they subsequently developed an industrial development policy, or in some cases an industrial and regional development policy, in line with their initial choice. That is what was done in those countries.

Third, they developed an employment policy compatible with all their choices. Mr. Speaker, that is really the way to develop an employment policy. It has not always been clear in Canada for the following reasons, Mr. Speaker, and if my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East wants to be honest, he will admit it. Since World War II up to the 70's, in Canada, economic growth was almost continuous in a country with an economy largely based on natural resources. That was really the economic fabric of Canada. But there was a radical change in the last few years, and my Hon. colleague knows it. We are moving from an economy largely based on natural resources to a quite different one, an economy that requires substantial adjustments in the labour market which will not take place overnight.

As regards youth, for instance, we note the following: first, my colleague made a speech this morning without even mentioning youth once, and somebody had to ask him a question before he said something about our youth, but beyond all that, there was a debate on an Opposition day on youth, about two weeks ago in this House. At that time, everybody was surprised to hear that neither the federal Liberal Party of Canada nor the socialist party had developed a policy on youth. Neither one of them had taken the time to identify what could be the most important problem for young Canadians.

One must admit, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite ridiculous to ask others to spend more money, to develop other programs, to do this and that, when you do not even take the time to sit down and try to identify the most important problems of young Canadians. Neither one of those parties did that.

And today, I have never sensed and I have never had any indication of what they see as the main problems of young Canadians.

The federal Liberal Party of Canada, believe it or not, made a commitment today to achieve full employment when they are totally unable to come to an agreement on a trade policy for Canada. Mr. Speaker, the Liberals cannot really claim they can develop an employment policy separately from a trade policy. That is impossible. You cannot even agree among yourselves about the trade policy Canada must adopt but that does not stop you from rising in the House to tell Canadian men and women: "We will bring in full employment." My goodness, you could not be more ridiculous. That is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. How could anyone suppose Canadian men and women could be so gullible as to listen and trust the Liberals.

The choices on the socialist side are at least clearer. Their contradictions are apparent. They tell us: "We promise full employment to Canadian men and women, but do not deal with the Americans, do not sign any free or freer trade agreement with them", when Canada is the second most export dependent country in the world, in terms of Gross National Product; about 30 per cent of our GNP depends on exports. We follow West Germany as the second most export dependent country in the world, at least within the OECD. In fact, more than one job out of three depends on our exports.

So, how can they separate a full employment policy, that is the ultimate job development, throughout the economy, from a trade policy? How can you claim that this objective can be met in the absence of a policy on freer trade within your party? Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East will have to provide us with further explanations, because such a contradiction is unreconcilable, at least in my own mind.

As for the Socialists, that obvious contradiction is in their heart and in their mind and they will have to live with it and be accountable for it. We accept that. At least their position has the merit of being clear.

Mr. Speaker, over and above this whole debate about reforming the system or the Unemplyment Insurance Act is best summarized by the Employment and Immigration minister who is interested in creating as many jobs as possible in Canada. My Opposition colleagues keep repeating since this morning that all the new jobs are being created in Ontario, which is wrong. Mr. Speaker, I say with no hesitation that in fact, about 46 per cent of the jobs created since we came to power are located in Ontario. I dare hope, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who disagrees with me, any of my colleagues who do not believe what I have just said in this House will immediately stand up and contradict me. As I said, the rate is around 46 per cent.

We recognize the regional inequities of economic development in Canada.

Fundamentally, Mr. Speaker, the question day after day confronting us is that of economic development and job creation. As far as this issue is concerned, I will not hesitate one moment to say that the present Government does better than any previous administration, including the Liberal Government that was in power in 1965, at the beginning of this century, or at any time one might choose.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is because the Conservative Party and the Minister are doing such a wonderful job on employment that they have dropped down to 25 per cent in the polls and even lower among our young people; perhaps it is because of their fantastic record in employment creation!

Perhaps it is also because of their fantastic record that when Gallup asked Canadians in February what was the most important and serious problem in the country, 41 per cent said unemployment! A country mile ahead of any other problem was unemployment at 41 per cent.

In his remarks the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) inferred that because the industrial world has changed, because 1987 is not 1977, full employment is not possible. He suggested that it was ridiculous on our part to say that we should have the same rates of unemployment in 1987 that we had in 1981 or from 1965 to 1980.

Is the Minister aware of the fact that with a changed industrial economy Japan is averaging less than 3 per cent unemployment? Sweden has just over 3 per cent unemployment. Austria has just under 4 per cent unemployment. Switzerland has a similar rate. These countries have experienced very definite industrial change. As a matter of fact, Japan is in the third generation of computer technology. Despite that, and because it put a high priority upon full employment, Japan had less than 3 per cent unemployment last year and just over 3 per cent this year. Is the Minister aware of that?

Is the Minister saying to the House and to the people of Canada that because we are in a modern technological age we cannot have full employment? Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that my colleague would choose Sweden as an example. He should know that a certain number of years ago clear choices were made in Sweden on what would be the commercial, industrial, and labour policies of that country. Even today, in 1987, the Liberal Party of Canada is incapable of coming to grips with that.

The Hon. Member raised the resolutions of the Liberal Convention in November when they had to reconfirm the leadership of their Leader one more time. There were three different resolutions on trade.

I presume the Hon. Member should know—and if we put the question to him, I presume he will admit it—that any employment policy or full employment goal must first arise from clear choices being made on commercial policy. Does the Hon. Member agree with that?

There is no answer, Mr. Speaker. It is even worse than the other Liberals who offered three different answers. Now we have no answer. It is like multiple choice—a, b, c, or all of the above are right, and that is what was chosen today.

I hope the Hon. Member does not want to compare the economic situation of Japan with that of Canada and the way it has evolved from a one resource-based country. I hope not, especially in that its culture is not the same.

I am far from saying that full employment is not an objective in Canada. However, if we want to develop policies which have full employment as an ultimate objective—and I presume every righteous Government must have it as an objective—we must make choices on the commercial policy side, which the Liberal Party is totally incapable of doing.

We have made the choice. We have stated that Canada is a trading nation, the second most important country in the world which depends so heavily upon trade. We wish to pursue that objective through trade negotiations with the Americans, our most important trading partner, and through the GATT. We have made that choice. It remains to be seen whether the Liberal Party of Canada can come to grips with such a fundamental issue, to start with.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister indicated to the House this afternoon that not only is he incapable of projecting proper policy decisions, he cannot read. If he read the resolutions of the Liberal Convention and thinks he read three different ones in respect of trade, perhaps he should take a corrective reading course.

If he wants to compare trade policies—and I challenge him to do so at the end of his four-year or five-year mandate, if he hangs in to the very end—with any five-year period in the forties, fifties, or sixties in respect of trade, he will see that we will beat them by a country mile.

The Minister said that the Liberal Party—and I think he even said the NDP as well—had no policies in respect of youth. When the Conservative Government came into power in 1984, there was the First Chance Program to help 100,000 young people at a cost of $1 billion. That was cancelled. There was the Katimavik program. That was cancelled. We had dedicated $2.2 billion for job training and job creation. That was reduced to $1.6 billion. There were moneys for recreation and sport. That was cut back. There were more moneys for post-secondary education. That was cut back.

If First Chance, Katimavik, support to post-secondary education, training, job creation, recreation and sport were not a policy, I should like to ask the Minister what is his policy. It seems to be cut, cut, cut. That is great for youth!

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, had my hon. colleague been in the House when we had a full Opposition Day on youth two weeks ago, he would have had the opportunity of listening to his own colleagues and to members of the socialist Party debate in a very non-partisan way what is the youth policy of the country.

First, we proceeded to identify what is the most important problem facing young Canadian men and women in 1987. That is what I explained to the House on that day. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member could tell us at this point in time what is that problem. I do not think he knows. That is their problem, and that is the problem of the NDP also.

However, for his benefit and for the benefit of all Hon. Members in the House, we identified as being the most important problem the transition from school to work. He can read Hansard of that day, because I presume he has not read it. We proceeded to enter into discussions with the provinces in respect of their jurisdictions on how we can develop policies to deal with the transition from school to work. That is the direction in which we are going. It goes way beyond the usual, typical, partisan, paternalistic speeches we have been hearing from the other side.

I find it intriguing that the First Chance Program, which I think was supposed to encompass all youth programs of the federal Government, would help 100,000 people. For the last fiscal year, we helped over 250,000 with our programs. Perhaps that is why our performance is so good and unemployment for young people has gone down approximately 6 percentage points.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), and then I listened to one of the most pompous and arrogant speeches from the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) that I have ever heard in the House.

I should first like to deal with the Liberals. We heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and other Liberals talk about the new discovery of a full employment policy. Have we forgotten that their Leader in the previous Government, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, when unemployment was at 6 per cent and rising and when inflation was rising, turned around and said to workers who were demonstrating on the Hill: "If you think 6 per cent is high, you just watch me"? We watched as unemployment sky-rocketed into the teens. Can we believe that is the same Party whose Leader, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, went out to Salmon Arm and, when all the unemployed lined up at the side of the railway tracks, gave them the finger? Did I hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East bellowing from Hamilton against the policy of high unemployment in order to bring inflation down? Is that their version of employment? They are the same group who allowed interest rates to sky-rocket and caused the recession of 1982. That, in turn, put the unemployment insurance fund into hock for about $3 billion.

Then we listened to the pomposity of the Minister of State for Youth. Was it not his Government who, three short summers ago, in August of 1984, during the election said there are three main issues in this campaign: jobs, jobs, jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Here we are in 1987, three years later, and what does the Minister stand up and say? We are changing the base of the economy from resources to technology, and that takes time. Yet today we have over a million people unemployed, and that is only the official figure. The youth in this country are experiencing the highest unemployment rate of any group at more than 20 per cent.

If we look at the regions of this country, leaving Ontario out of it for the moment, unemployment is as high as it was under the previous Liberal Government. Then we look at Ontario. The vast majority of all jobs the Government claims have been created, over 75 per cent, are within a 60 mile radius of Toronto. We in northern Ontario do not experience any of the fall-out from the economic resurgence in Ontario.

It is also very disturbing to note that most of the new jobs are being created in the service sector. That sector is the soft underbelly of the economy in general. For example, in communities that depend on the exploitation of resources, any rumour of a lay-off or actual lay-off immediately results in the shutting down, closing up and laying off of workers in the service sector. Furthermore, the service sector is fragile and pays the lowest wages.

When we hear the Liberals talk about how many resolutions on full employment they passed at their convention, we know what that currency is worth. No sooner had the delegates left for the airport after the convention than their Leader said he is not bound by policies passed by the convention. Over on the other side they do not talk about policies. It is the backroom boys, the Dalton Camps and Lowell Murrays, who sit down and decide what they think Canadians would like to hear. If the Minister thinks they have done such a great job over there, he should know that the public does not have the same myopic vision.

What I have said has a direct bearing on the unemployment insurance program. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for putting this motion before the House today. I also want to congratulate the Conservative Members who sat on the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration. They are the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie), the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn), the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). There were six Conservatives, one NDP and one Liberal on that committee.

What was the committee's task? To examine the Forget Commission report and table a response in Parliament in the hope it would guide the Minister in his response on May 15 to that report. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that when the committee sat down, many Conservative Members were infected by myths concerning unemployment insurance. They were and are myths propagated by the National Citizen's Coalition, a right-wing organization in Canada, the Federation of Independent Business led by John Bulloch, various Chambers of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Construction Association of Canada. These myths were expressed, at first, by Conservative Members on that committee, and I want to discuss them.

Myth number one is that unemployment insurance is generous and abused. In fact, the average benefit in 1987 was $180.69 per week. Extrapolated over a year, that amounts to about $9,000. That is way below the poverty line for a single person and far, far below the poverty line for a married individual with dependent children. I hear that the program is abused. All the evidence which came before the committee indicated that abuse made up 3 per cent, and that includes claimants receiving benefits in error. In other words, when the UIC makes a mistake and people collect money in error that is included in the 3 per cent. Yet that 3 per cent compares very well with medicare and legal aid. In addition, some 15 per cent of clients quit their jobs voluntarily. The vast majority have been laid off. That 15 per cent includes those who quit for what is called just cause. If it is not just cause it is good cause.

Then we have the story that there are 10 and 40 wonders out there, that is, people who work for 10 weeks and then quit and collect 40 weeks of benefits. That is a myth. We found out that those people constitute less than 3 per cent of claimants.

The second myth is that people in seasonal industries ought not to be able to collect unemployment insurance. For example, fishermen know they are going to be unemployed for four months in the winter and therefore that is predictable and they ought not to be covered by the program. The same would apply to all seasonal workers. Well, is it or is it not important that the fishing resource of this country be exploited by Canadians? I have not spoken to a fisherman on the East Coast of this country who would not like to fish 12 months of the year. Yet the Government tells them when they are going to fish, where and how much they are going to take. If the Government establishes these limitations on seasonal workers and the Government believes this is a resource that should be exploited for the benefit of Canada, then in fact the Government and society as a whole have a responsibility to ensure that when seasonal fishermen are not fishing, they are not starving and dependent on the community as a whole, and that goes for all seasonal workers.

Mr. MacKay: Don't forget Mother Nature.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) has reminded us not to forget Mother Nature. Of course we cannot forget the boss upstairs. He has a say in this. It seems to me that the myth that seasonal workers rip off the unemployment insurance system is simply that, a myth.

Another myth is that we should return to running the Unemployment Insurance Program on true insurance principles. There is the argument that the Unemployment Insurance Program should not be a social insurance program. To do that, we would have to take benefits away from fishermen and seasonal workers and we would have to take away maternity and sick benefits. Any aspect of the program that speaks to the social needs of the working class would be taken out of the Unemployment Insurance Program. If we were to do that, where would we put them? What would we do with a person who is sick but works for a business too small to have a sickness insurance program? I do not care how the facts are twisted or turned, the benefits come from one pocket and that is the pocket of the taxpayer.

Those are the myths I have heard consistently. I have heard that UI benefits discourage people from leaving an area with low employment opportunities and moving to an area with high employment opportunities. However, when people move away from an area, the people left in the area that is denuded of workers are told that they do not have a workforce so they cannot attract industry. If the people stay there, they are told that the UIC benefits are keeping them in place and they should go abroad to look for work. We cannot have it both ways.

These are the myths that were prevalent among Tory Members when we were trying to determine our response to the report of the Forget Commission. It was a moving experience for me to see Conservatives, some of whom are to the right of Genghis Khan politically, after listening to the persuasive evidence—

An Hon. Member: Easy, now.

Mr. Rodriguez: It certainly was not my eloquence that moved the Conservatives. God give me the grace to move Conservatives. Then every motion I would put to the House would be agreed to unanimously.

I observed Conservatives questioning the witnesses closely day by day, hour by hour, probing with their minds set in the myths they brought to the committee. We heard from witnesses and were provided expert research. Mr. Forget was before the committee twice. We had both the majority and the minority commission reports. We had evidence from both sides of the spectrum. We listened, we questioned and when the dust cleared, we proposed 90 recommendations, three score and 30. Support for 89 of them was unanimous and the majority supported the ninetieth one. Only one Member, the Hon. Member for Jonquière voted against pension income as UI.

The committee that looked at the Forget report reflected the reality of this Parliament. There were six Conservatives, one NDP and one Liberal. All six Tories voted along with the lone Liberal and the lone New Democrat to support 89 of the recommendations unanimously.

Then the recommendations were tabled in the House. God only knows when the Minister would have found the time to do that kind of an in-depth study of the Forget Commission report and the UI Program. I suspect that he was listening to the nattering nabobs in the bureaucracy. In fact, I have absolutely no doubt about it. He was listening to those who are determined to maintain the status quo, those who feel that the only good ideas come from the bureaucracy.

We expected something different from this Government. After all, that is why we changed the parliamentary rules dealing with committees. The Government could have had its way in the committee. The whips could have been put on in committee, but they were not. To the credit of the Conservative members of the committee, they recognized that what we proposed was fair and just.

I compared what the committee proposed to what Forget proposed. There are similarities in 22 areas. The Minister could have moved in 22 areas. There would have been a considerable positive improvement in the Unemployment Insurance Program if the Government had moved in those 22 areas.

Mr. Manly: Why didn't it?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a good question and I will deal with it, but I want to set the stage first.

The Minister is now saying that he did not want to rile up the people on the right or the people of the left. It reminds me of the story of a Minister of Employment and Immigration who got lost in the maze of the UI system. As night was falling, he saw a light shining. As he moved toward this light, he saw that it came from a little cottage in the maze. He went in and saw that there were three bowls of porridge on the table. He took a little sip from the first one and he said: "Oh, that's too cold". Then he took a sip from the second bowl and he said: "Oh, that's too hot". Then he came to the third one, he sipped from it and he said: "Oh, just right, just where I want to be, up on a fence getting splinters". That is the position the Minister took on the UI Program.

I want the Minister to know that the UI Program is not a fairy-tale. The unemployed do not want the Minister to use fairy-tales to solve the problems they face.

For example, the Minister could have moved on maternity benefits. The committee proposed and Forget supported the elimination of the waiting period for maternity benefits. The cost to the UI Program would be $60 million. We proposed and Forget agreed that we have to use UI benefits that the unemployed have collected to help with training programs and to start new businesses because the people who are unemployed could in many cases create their own jobs. We proposed that they should be able to draw on their benefits at the back end of the program in order to be able to go where there may be a job. We proposed reforms of the administration.

For example, there are 214 vice-presidents at the very top to run the unemployment insurance program. Their total cost to the UI program is $15 million. We argued for more services on line to help the unemployed. We recognize that the Unemployment Insurance Program is generating a surplus. Last year it generated $800 million and this year it is expected to generate a surplus of $1.7 million. All of that is to pay off the deficit created by the recession of 1982.

We say that $450 million would have been the cost of putting into effect the proposals of the standing committee. Had they put in place only the 22 areas which were agreed upon, it would have cost less than $450 million. We could have created equity, flexibility and simplicity in the Unemployment Insurance Program. God knows that the unemployed right across the country and those who represent them have been crying to the Government to improve the Unemployment Insurance Program.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was surprised when, in his opening remarks, my good friend, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), suggested that the Liberal Party may not be sincere in opting for a full unemployment policy. Is the Hon. Member not aware that following the Second World War the Liberal Party, under Mackenzie King, opted for a full employment policy and in fact maintained employment at an average of 3 per cent for seven years? When Mike Pearson came to power in 1963, the Liberal Party again opted for a full employment policy and maintained an average of between 3 and 4 per cent unemployment for three years.

I know that from 1977 to 1984 that was not our highest priority. I admit that we in the Party make mistakes from time to time. However, since it was done before in this country, does the Member not think it is possible to do it again, especially when we look at the examples of Sweden, Japan, Austria and Switzerland? All of those countries have adopted full employment policies in recent years and have been able to achieve more or less full employment. If they can do it in those countries and if we did it before in Canada, can we not do it again?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for the question. It is interesting that he chose the period right after the Second World War and the period of the Pearson era of 1962. The answer to that is very simple. In the first case, the CCF was breathing down the neck of the minority Mackenzie King Government. During the Mike Pearson era, the NDP was breathing down the necks of the Liberals. There is nothing like a minority government to concentrate the minds of Liberals on full employment. In contrast, every time they have a majority government, that is forgotten. That is very unfortunate. I propose that the Hon. Member read our document, Canada Unlimited, which lays out the New Democratic Party's strategy for creating full employment.

During most of the years that I have been in Canada I have experienced Liberal rule. I have lived in northern Ontario and have seen a resource economy devastated by unemployment. I have never seen any kind of economic strategy, regional, provincial or national, put in place which would allow the resources of Canada to be refined where they are produced. Falconbridge still ships raw nickel to Norway to be refined and the finished product is sold back to Canada. Hardwood pulp from Nackawick, New Brunswick, is still shipped to Belgium where it is refined into photographic paper and then shipped back here. That is where the jobs are.

I remember Tommy Douglas preaching when I joined this Party that we are nothing but hewers of wood and drawers of water. The Minister has now proposed free trade as the panacea to create employment. We have free trade in the nickel industry. Our nickel crosses the United States border without any duty being paid, but I have seen no investment in northern Ontario in the equipment which goes underground to mine.

One would think that we would be the centre of manufacturing of mining equipment. One would think that the North would be the centre of research and development in new mining techniques. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. That is all done abroad in Virginia in the United States, in England and in Europe. We do not even produce the technology here for the things that we do well such as mining. I know how my western colleagues feel about eastern Canada because we feel the same way about Toronto. Even the iron ore which is taken out of northern Ontario is shipped south for refining.

We in the NDP are committed to full employment and have policies which bind our Party to establishing an environment in which we can have full employment. It is an achievable goal which has been reached in other countries where social democratic Governments are in power. When we have been in government in this country we have worked toward full employment and have achieved it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is a fair person and would not want to mislead the House. It is true that in 1963 Mike Pearson had a minority Government, but there certainly were not minority Governments in 1948 or 1952 when Mackenzie King and Louis St. Laurent were Prime Ministers. I admit that in the 1944 election the CCF fought a valiant battle and elected a large number of Members to this House, so what he said is partly true.

I am pleased that the Member's Party has such an elaborate policy for full employment, because we know that after the next election he will be able to support our Party in putting a full employment policy into effect.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I was in this House when my Party did that once before. At that time I swore that I would never let it happen again. I am hoping that it will not get to that. The way things are going these days there may be several baby Liberal Parties rather than one Liberal Party running in the next election. However, that is in the future and I do not want to deal with the future or with the past which my hon. friend has put forward.

Everyone who has studied the Unemployment Insurance Program has said that unemployment is not the problem—employment is the problem. Beyond that the positions are all over the place. The Minister and the Government seem to accept that you cannot achieve full employment in this country.

I have 26 municipalities in my constituency. The sewer systems, roads, and water systems need to be refurbished and we have the people to do the work. However, these municipalities do not have a sufficient corporate tax base to raise the money to spend on those refurbishings. If this were to be done, the cost would rest very heavily on the home owner. We do not have the corporate tax base, which means the home owner would be overtaxed in order to do this essential refurbishing.

The mayors of this great country presented a brief to the Government in which they asked it to establish a municipal fund. Over a period of five to ten years some millions of dollars could be spent refurbishing the communities and their infrastructures. In the long run, this is very essential to the attraction of entrepreneurial endeavours, and I suggest that this is a direction in which we should be moving because it makes common sense.

If the Government is sincere about defeating the scourge of unemployment and can find a billion dollars to bail out the depositors of two banks, why can it not find the money to invest, not only to improve the quality of life in the communities, but to provide gainful employment and maintain the dignity of people while doing so?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to express my views on the motion put forward by my colleague, and I would like to quote it for discussion's sake, if you allow me, Mr. Speaker:

> That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustment.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to have an opportunity to speak on that important matter. I would like if I may, for the purposes of discussion, to refer to the days following September 4, 1984 when faced with the important issue of unemployment which affected thousands of Canadians, the Government said it was aware, it was concerned, it was conscious of the thousands of problems it faced with unemployment insurance. Faced with that real problem, that real evil, the Government told us during the first months of its administration: We will strive for reconciliation, communication—ours will be a policy of analysis and consultation. It was trumpeted there would indeed be major consultation initiatives, also major pauses for thought.

It must also be understood that while those pauses for hesitation, reflection and analysis were going on, they had the Forget Commission travelling across Canada to hear representations from all those who were concerned with the important matter of unemployment. Each time the Opposition tried to know what would be the Government's position in that strategic area, we were told: Look here, we will make no decisions, if only out of respect for the Commission who is now sitting, we will wait for the Commission's report.

We were also told at the time, Mr. Speaker, that Parliament's work should be enhanced, committees should regain prestige and in some way credibility, they should also be involved in the redirection process, the process of suggesting to Government measures needed by the country. Of course, since then, the Forget Commission has tabled its report. Also, a committee of the House has spent months studying very seriously and thoroughly the whole question of unemployment in Canada and has tabled recommendations just as the Forget Commission did. And following those two exercises of very great significance and value, in my view, what is the answer of the government? The status quo.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is another proof of the almost complete and widespread carelessness of this government. The government had there, I think, an opportunity to propose to Canadian men and women an alternative—admittedly not a panacea—but an approach, a new direction that constitute a real improvement compared to the current situation. But the government has chosen to continue with the status quo, ignoring naturally the important issue of youth unemployment, ignoring the important issue of unemployment among part time workers, ignoring or rather simply dismissing the dramatic problems facing remote regions. The Government said: Even though we are always blaming and criticizing the former Government, let us continue exactly as before. That is why the House is being asked to maintain just about the same system.

I suggest that in view of the circumstances, the motion moved by my hon. friend is quite in order and that this decidedly scandalous decision demonstrates that the Government does not give a hoot about all these men and women who have worked for months and years to put together valid proposals. In its arrogant and insensitive attitude, it demonstrates that it could not care less for all these proposals and suggestions, which I feel were quite reasonable and equitable and which simply had to be put forward.

Mr. Speaker, I represent in the House of Commons a riding which is partly rural, which depends to a very large extent on regional development policies, and which has been very seriously affected by various problems these past few years. A lot of my constituents were economically dependent on the production of asbestos which, as you know, has had to be curtailed, and is still going through an incredibly difficult period, so much so that workers by the thousands have lost their jobs, and very well paid ones at that. This industry plays a major role in the economy of my riding.

An other issue with tremendous economic impact within my riding is that of the footwear industry. My riding depends very heavily on the footwear industry. Well, the Government announced over a year ago the total elimination of quotas, implying that it would take steps to compensate for these thousands of jobs which were automatically lost because of its decision.

Such is the situation of two major industries in my riding, and it is not unique in Canada. There are many other such ridings dependent upon sectors like asbestos mining and the shoe industry, which were really counting on a new direction and new provisions to get a glimmer of hope that they could overcome the difficulties they had been facing, in many cases for several years. What response is the government giving those thousands of workers? Things will remain exactly as they are now.

Mr. Speaker, the main town of my riding is Asbestos, a community of about 13,000 people six or seven years ago, which now has only 6,500 or 6,700 people. Workers in Asbestos had bought a house, they were homeowners with a decent income, earning enough to live comfortably. Most of those workers were aged between 35 and 45. They had worked all their life for a concern called Johns-Manville, an asbestos producing corporation. These people, who had no special training, who had not had to change jobs, who had not much experience outside the specific sector of an asbestos mine, lost their jobs because of a stagnant market due to decreasing consumer demand and decreasing production. Of course, UI provisions allowed them to get unemployment benefits after a certain waiting period. But in order to find another job, they had to be able to take advantage of what could be called transitional measures or training courses not only to become aware of the market opportunities, but also to gain the qualifications necessary to fill a second or third job. What is the Government's answer to that? Nothing.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is the same in the case of the shoe industry although it might have been a bit more dramatic, because workers in this industry are, in many cases, relatively older and extremely difficult to retrain. In the absence of training or retraining courses, these people have, in effect, no chance whatsoever of finding another job.

Mr. Speaker, to all these workers, we said: You do not have any chance with the federal Government. Do whatever you want. We are throwing in the towel. We do not have anything to offer you that can make you more optimistic about the future.

It was a real opportunity, a great chance for this Government to regain its credibility in terms of the regions and to prove that they are important. Once again, I think that the regions have no importance whatsoever for a Conservative Government and that the Tories try, by all means, to put all their eggs in one basket to the detriment of the large regions, including the one I represent.

The Governement also had, Mr. Speaker—and I think that this is clear enough in the many recommendations—the opportunity to modify, to simplify, the provisions relating to the Unemployment Insurance Act, to make them more consistent, if I may say so. In the last few years, I have had to represent dozens, if not hundreds of beneficiaries, people who lost their jobs and who had a number of problems when the time came to collect their benefits. I therefore had several dozens of occasions to represent and defend them in front of the arbitration board, so that they could receive what I consider, in many cases, to be barely a fair amount.

One need not have experienced the arbitration process very often, Mr. Speaker, to realize what a mess it is. I am not questioning the competence of those nominated to arbitration boards. Quite to the contrary, these people do their best to simplify and to humanize the Unemployment Insurance Act and its regulations. But it is all so complicated that one often gets the impression that these well intentioned and extremely competent people get lost in the maze and do not really know what to base their decisions on. We had a unique opportunity to simplify all this legislation and all these regulations to make them into one coherent and accessible body so that once and for all it would have been within the grasp of the average person to understand what one was entitled to or not.

Mr. Speaker, in a rural or semi-rural riding like the one I represent, I would venture to say that 80 per cent of the constituents we meet wish to bring to our attention problems which have to do with unemployment insurance.

As far as I am concerned, I do not think that it is exaggerated to say that eight cases out of 10 have to do with unemployment insurance. And after eight years as the Member for Richmond—Wolfe, it has become unequivocally obvious to me that those who come to my office are generally upstanding breadwinners who are at fault or have lost their job. It is usually their first or second experience with unemployment insurance and unfortunately, in the vast majority of cases, they are innocent victims. By that I meant to say that those who are used to bridging the gap or who have had the opportunity to collect unemployment insurance on 10, 15 or 20 occasions finally manage to understand the system to some degree and to act accordingly.

But, Mr. Speaker, particularly in a riding such as mine, where many people are new entrants looking for a job for the first or the second time, they might experience problems with unemployment insurance services and they can't figure out why. And regrettably, there is also an unpleasant attitude on the part of unemployment office personnel, which can be explained by the fact that they probably see more people in a single day than any other government office, but there the people looking for jobs have the feeling they are just numbers, nobodies, being treated in a very callous and inconsiderate manner, without any kind of consideration althought they are up against administrative problems or perhaps just a lack of understanding. So it seems to me that it would not have been presumptuous to expect to see a more accessible, more sensible and more coherent system thus allowing the people facing problems with the Unemployment Insurance Commission to quickly know their entitlement to benefits. Instead of that, the Government has chosen to perpetuate the complexity, the confusion, to keep the "monster" alive. Mr. Speaker, for the area I represent, which is far away in many respects from the larger centers, there seems to be within the recommendations some sort of major and real improvement which is summarized in the first recommendation where it is said that we should adopt a standard entrance requirement of ten weeks of insurable employment. Taken out of context, that recommendation per se may seem a bit generous, even questionnable. However, in context, this recommendation illustrates quite well how with such a simple measure we could have solved dozens of problems.

My riding is in the immediate vicinity of what is known as the queen of the Eastern Townships, the City of Sherbrooke. Recent statistics showed the economic recovery in that community to be one the most dynamic in Canada. It is from this buoyant, job creating community of Sherbrooke, with over 150,000 residents that the economic situation is assessed and statistics prepared. My riding which, as I said, is located in the immediate vicinity of Sherbrooke, is an indirect victim of this prosperity in the sense that, to determine entrance requirements to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, the statistics concerning Sherbrooke totally misrepresent the whole situation to the point that, in Asbestos and surrounding areas, the rate of unemployemnt is actually in the order of 35 per cent, and even 38, 39 and 40 per cent. At some 60 or 70 miles from Asbestos, the rate of unemployment is much or rather substantially lower, which directly contributes, you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, to penalizing heavily all of those earning their living from, and depending on the activities related to asbestos, textiles and shoe manufacturing.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that, after all the time taken by the Government to supposedly ponder the matter and fully understand the situation, it was quite a disappointment to see it come up with such an appalling and callous decision for all those men and women hoping for a new direction. I do hope that next polls will once again make the Government realize it is totally off the track and that, unless it comes to its senses, it might not survive the next election.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I was looking forward to making a speech this afternoon but I guess that we will soon run out of time. It is almost as if the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has been filling in the question and comment period to the point that it is now impossible in terms of time to make a speech.

I sat here throughout the day listening to members of the Opposition, including the Hon. Member who has just spoken, bemoan the fact that Canada does not yet have full employment. Over the past two and a half years I cannot think of a single exception to the following rule. Every time the Government proposes something that is good for the economy and good for job creation it is opposed by members of the Opposition. In this regard I wrote down a short list while listening to other Hon. Members speak. The list is as follows: the Patent Act, free trade, tax reform, transportation reform, agricultural war and what we are doing about it, reducing the deficit, getting rid of the National Energy Program, changing FIRA to Investment Canada, and the selling of Dome to a company which has some money and which can create some activity.

Every single one of those initiatives created jobs in the country. Every single one is being fought by members of both opposition Parties. It is a bit hypocritical to have to listen to a debate wherein Members opposite challenge the Government for its record in terms of full employment and then turn around day after day and fight everything that can produce jobs for Canadians. It is time to call a spade a spade and to make the point that I have made.

In terms of unemployment insurance, it is an astounding phenomenon to me as chairman of the committee which reported to the House on March 19 the degree to which business had a knee-jerk reaction to its report. I think it is fair to say that every single national business organization in the country condemned the report of the standing committee. I suggest to the House that they did so out of ignorance rather than out of solid knowledge about what was contained in the report. I think that has created a dilemma for the Government.

The owners of the fund, as the committee makes clear, are the businesses in the country which contribute premiums and the workers who also contribute premiums. They really own the fund.

In light of the very solid position of labour on one side and business on the other, with labour saying that the report of the Forget Commission is terrible while the standing committee's report is great and business saying that the Forget Commission report is great but the standing committee's report is much less than great and is terrible, will the Hon. Member tell us on which side he wants the Government to come down on, the labour side or the business side? Or does he want it to come down somewhere in between, somewhere like: "Let's continue the dialogue. Let's make no major changes at this point until we can get business and labour together at a table to quit taking firm positions and start to talk to each other about what the country needs"?

The committee said that the country needs a labour force adjustment mentality, that the workers of the country want jobs and they want to work. They want careers. They need to be insured against rapid technological change and against the changing patterns around the world. Business took the view with respect to Forget, which is an historical Liberal view, that unemployment insurance is basically an income supplement plan. What view does the Hon. Member have? He stood in the Chamber and said that the Government did the wrong thing. Let him tell us what he believes the right thing might have been.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is asking a question which is somewhat similar to that which the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) put last week to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) when he said: What would you do in our place? My colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie replied: It is rather like someone who goes to see a lawyer who asks him: "What do you want me to do?" It is quite simple, he will hire another lawyer. This is what Canadians will soon be doing .

This being so, you told us that amendments to the Patent legislation concerning drugs would create jobs by the thousands. I am still waiting for them. The government has taken the same approach we have seen with respect to farming problems in Western Canada. They say: "Listen, the small ones have to disappear, but we encourage and support the biggest ones because they soon will be creating jobs in the place of the small ones which will no longer exist.

Mr. Speaker when I was elected in 1984, there were so many people in my constituency; today, there are 1,500 or 2,000 less. Where have they gone? I say that the Government is responsible and this is the reason why Canadians trusted you. You were supposed to create jobs in the regions. And at present, your performance is quite dismal in that respect.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, 780,000 jobs in two and a half years is not bad compared to the loss of jobs under the previous Government. We have been creating jobs at three times the previous rate. They are full-time jobs and not part-time jobs. The policies which members of the Opposition are fighting day after day in this Chamber are policies which the country needs. They are working. Employment is coming, and it is coming at a rapid rate. If we were to get a little co-operation from Members opposite from time to time, employment would come at an even more rapid rate.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member opposite about the issue of abuse. In my view the biggest abuser of unemployment insurance today is business. When we really dig into the fund and consider the degree to which the data with respect to the record of employment are fudged or inaccurate, then it seems to me that the biggest abuse is on the business side of the ledger as opposed to the individual side of the ledger. Does the Hon. Member opposite care to comment on that?

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question because it allows me to emphasize one aspect. I have been in politics for eight years and out of a thousand cases of unemployment insurance that I see in my office, I would say that 950 involve men and women acting on good faith. The unemployment insurance professionals, as I call them, never come to see me because they have no problem. It was alarming to hear the Minister state last week that he is going to tighten the control and supervision mechanism. In fact, I approve such a step. But the innocent you will victimize with those systems are the real problem, the reality you would have seen had you kept in close touch with the people, because you are not hurting the unemployment insurance professionals and you will never hurt them with such measures.

In conclusion, I personally endorse all measures that would tend to penalize those who abuse the system, but you must keep giving benefits to those who need unemployment insurance, those who need training. It is a matter of regional development survival.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I too wish to put a question to the Hon. Member. We just heard the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, point out that business abuses the Unemployment Insurance Program in terms of record of employment. Does the Hon. Member not think that it would have been wiser for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to have implemented the recommendations of the standing committee with respect to the record of employment rather than dodging the issue by having more discussions with employers and employees about how to improve the record of employment? The Minister has in front of him specific recommendations with respect to how to improve the whole record of employment process. The Minister has dodged it. Does the Hon. Member not think that the Minister could have been more courageous in implementing those recommendations rather than showing cowardice and avoiding the issue by undertaking further studies and discussions with employers and employees?

• (1720)

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I too wish more consideration had been given to the recommendations of that committee, all the more so since it must be understood in this debate that there were NDP and Liberal committee members but the majority of members were Progressive Conservative, Mr. Speaker. The committee had a majority of people who had to have the ear of the Minister. They have just been given a slap on the face by their minister who is telling them: "You made your homework, but it does not impress me." Brushing the work aside, the Minister has simply ridiculed them. I cannot understand how you can just sit there in front, as a gang of do-nothings, without any reaction. You lack guts. You are not very courageous, because if you had the least bit of courage, you would tell your Minister: "Hold it, fellow. We believed in parliamentary reform, but you will deliver and take into account the examination we made."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate will proceed with the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to take part today in this debate on the motion tabled by my colleague in the opposition, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), regarding the reform of unemployment insurance.

I wanted to take part in this debate because the Hon. Member worked with us on the report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration concerning unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, what is the Hon. Member of the Official Opposition proposing in his motion? He says:

> That this House condemn the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and for its failure to commit itself to a full employment, youth unemployment, part-time work and labour market adjustement.

That is the motion from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. He is condemning the Government for failing to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployement insurance system. Really, Mr. Speaker, what I perceive in this motion is some frustration on the part of the Hon. Member. He is frustrated because the recommandations contained in the report of the standing committee have not been accepted entirely by the Government.

I understand why the Hon. Member is unhappy to see that all of our recommendations have not been accepted by the Government. I too, Mr. Speaker, worked on that committee. We each have spent may be a hundred hours studying the Forget Report and the minority opinions. We have met with some 50 groups of witnesses. We fought each other to have our views accepted by the standing committee, or to have them endorsed in a consensus. And above all, members of the three Parties, New Democrats, Liberals and Tory Government members, attempted together and succeeded in reaching a consensus on 89 of the 90 recommendations of the Hawkes Report.

That was some achievement, Mr. Speaker. We could have done what the Forget Commission did and submitted three reports to the Government: one report for the New Democratic Party, one for the Liberal Party, and one for the Government Party, the Conservative Party. And even possibly individual reports too. We could have done that, Mr. Speaker. It would have been quite different. But no, Mr. Speaker, we managed to reach an agreement and a consensus on 89 of the 90 recommendations.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East is disappointed and frustrated to see that our work was not acknowledged. However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member should instead be proud and satisfied to see that a major recommendation of our report, the standing committee report, the Hawkes Report, was acknowledged and accepted by the Government. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was a recommendation or a kind of preamble in our report which said that our committee opposed in the strongest terms the implementation of the annualization formula of the Forget Commission.

It was an extremely important suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and it was accepted by the Government. The viewpoint of the standing committee on that matter was upheld.

With respect to the Government accepting our point of view in the report, I think that the annualization formula was in itself worth all our efforts in the standing committee, because the annualization formula meant for all practical purposes that unemployment insurance benefits were to be cut in half.

What the Forget Commission advocated, Mr. Speaker, was that the income of claimants should be determined on an annual basis. Let us take for instance a worker who earns $400 per week and works for a period of 26 weeks because he is seasonally employed. The unemployment benefit payments to that worker after that period of 26 weeks at work would normally amount to 60 per cent of his income, or $240 per week. With the annualization formula presented by the Forget Commission, we would have brought the amount of $400 a week on an annual basis, which would have meant that the person would have earned $200 a week since it would have been on an annual basis. Sixty per cent of $200 a week equals $120. You see the difference for those who are unfortunately on unemployment insurance. Instead of having $240 as before, they would have seen their income fall to $120.

Accepting the annualization formula would have had disastrous effects in some areas, namely in those which have a strong touristic potential. It would have had serious consequences for seasonal workers, fishermen, etc. Moreover, it would have transferred the bill to the provinces. This is why, as members of the standing committee, we must be pleased that this recommendation was rejected, as recommended by our committee.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my colleagues and more particularly the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that the positions of business people and of unions were completely opposed. They were even polarized in the debate. On the one hand, business people were looking favourably at the Forget Commission Report, but it was not the case for the unions which simply rejected it. As far as the report of our standing committee is concerned, positions were simply reversed, Mr. Speaker. What could we do then? Accept the first report and reject the second one? Or accept the second report and reject the first? There is something worse than an imperfect status quo on unemployment insurance, namely to make a reform leading to social chaos.

However I agree with my colleague, particularly, as a Member from a region with a high unemployment rate, that some job creating proposals should have been implemented concerning, for instance, work sharing and lump sum payments to claimants wishing to start a business. I was hoping for that kind of recommendation, Mr. Speaker, but I still hope that some of them will be implemented at a more appropriate time.

As I was saying earlier we have reached a consensus on 89 of the 90 recommendations of the standing committee's report. Mr. Speaker I am the one who broke the consensus on one of them, recommendation No. 17, which stated:

That pension income not be treated as earned salary during a benefit period.

It meant that we had to go back to the situation prevailing two years ago when pension income was not considered as an income for unemployment insurance purposes. Mr. Speaker, we know perfectly well that this Government will not accept it, so why should we give false hopes to early retirees? I refused to accept it because the new pension policy had been implemented since January 1986 and had already created problems because those who had gone into early retirement had "misinterpreted" the rules. Workers who retired before January 5, 1986 thought that they would be entitled to unemployment insurance for a year, and rightly so. And Mr. Speaker, we should have gone back a year and a half. What were the people supposed to do from January 5, 1986 until the adoption of the new legislation? Can you imagine the confusion it would have created among early retirees when all this had been clearly announced and all Canadians are aware, since January 5, 1986, that pension income is considered as income?

• (1730)

So, I opposed this recommendation because I refuse to create false expectations. It is not true that I could be made to vote in committee for something contrary to my conscience and which would create false expectations.

Going back to the Opposition motion, Mr. Speaker, that motion implies that this Government has no full employment policy, that it does not seem to contemplate any action in that direction. I suggest that a few statistics are in order if we are to adopt the proper perspective. Since our election on September 1984, we have created 778,000 jobs in Canada according to figures and more than 80 per cent of those jobs were full time employment compared with a reverse 80 per cent part-time jobs for the previous Government. Of those 778 000 jobs, 427 000 were for women. The national unemployment rate decreased from 11.7 per cent to 9.3 per cent. There is still work to be done of course. But we are fully aware of it and we will keep on working to achieve full employment.

As far as young people are concerned, as recently as yesterday, I received in my office a 22-year-old young man who came to see me for a job. He is one of those persons who have problems finding their way into the labour market. It is never easy meeting with unemployed in search of the job they want to regain their self-esteem and achieve their full potential in our society. I will spare you the details about that young man. Yesterday, for instance, I saw a 22 year old who had finished Grade 11. When we look at the employment opportunities in regions like ours, when companies like Alcan, Abitibi-Price and Cascade are no longer hiring but introducing new technology and reducing the number of jobs, it is definitely something to be concerned about. We have to start asking ourselves what kind of focus we want to give our regional economy so these young people can develop their potential and get the jobs to which they are entitled. And that is why I still believe in the concept of job sharing, something for which I fought as a member of the standing committee. What good does it do to work 40 hours a week when the Government takes our taxes to pay some unfortunate who has to stay home and who would much rather have a job and develop his own potential? I think our big corporations will have to take this step some day. Why not take advantage of the situation to improve the lives of Canadians and give young people and older workers who lose their jobs because of technological change a chance to have the jobs they need to support their families and continue to develop their potential in our society.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the figures, we have created 778,000 jobs, and I repeat, the unemployment rate is 9.3 per cent. So there is still a lot to be done, and that is why we need the Opposition's help to get the unemployment rate down even further, but not systematic opposition to our proposals. I wonder how much time Opposition Members have made us waste in some committees, voicing objections as a matter of principle. That is what happens, and that is when reforming the standing committees becomes important, Mr. Speaker.

We have been told we have no comprehensive policy. I beg to differ. Unlike the previous Government, we have dispensed with the shortsighted policy that consists in creating short term jobs. Our predecessors' only concern was the unemployment rate in the here and now. They ignored the structural and cyclical aspects of the economy and the specific needs of the various regions in this country. Mr. Speaker, I heard one of our Members referring earlier to Toronto, where the need for unemployment insurance was not that great.

I may remind Hon. Members that Canada is more than just cities like Toronto. There are regions like the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean where the unemployment rate is not 4 or 5 per cent but 12 and 14 per cent, most of the time. In Toronto there may be some newspapers that have employment sections 30 pages long, which is not the case in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean. We have to consider the situation across this country. And across this country, there are regions that are disadvantaged. There is regional disparity, and we must take that into account.

This Government has dropped the concept of short term measures and opted for a long term policy. Long term employment means employment that requires adequate preparation and training that is relevant to the job. Hence our jobs strategy program.

For the first time, our country has a national policy based on a consensus of social and economic experts and involving specific goals to ensure that specific clients are provided with the skills required for their involvement in the labour market. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up too much time dealing with those objectives. Let me just deal with one of them.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy meets the needs of people who are most in need of a job. It is an innovative strategy which recognizes the fundamental relationship which should exist between training and employment creation. Its goal is to give people who need it most the means to find their way into the labour market, on the occasion of their first experience of the labour market or when they are forced to train into another job or to take a new direction in their career.

Mr. Speaker, here are those client groups. Young people, young men and women who have difficulties finding their way into the labour market, because of the usual Catch 22: no job without experience, no experience without a job; women who wish to become gainfully employed after being away from the labour market for a long time; workers whose employment is threatened by the evolution of technologies or of markets; workers in communities affected by an economic slowdown when there are signs of a possible recovery; and students who need to earn money to complete their education, and I think our Challenge Program speaks for itself in this respect: $180 million this year for the Student Employment Program. And every year, Mr. Speaker, we reject requests by companies and private businesses, non-profit organizations and others. Many more requests than we can cater for. That is an indication that the program is efficient and effective. Finally, people whose professional activity may improve the workings of the labour market.

During the last financial year, actions taken under the Canadian Jobs Strategy have resulted in the involvement of over 450,000 people, or 5 per cent of our labour market. That is an achievement which would not even have been dreamed of by the Government of which the sponsor of the motion before us today was a Member.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I shall not vote for the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I would only like to say that if the Opposition showed the least interest in the Canadian people, it would not introduce this kind of motion and would co-operate with the present Government to bring about some improvements to the programs already in place and whatever measures we intend to introduce for the Canadian people.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, time is running and unfortunately, I will probably not have enough time to take part in this debate. I would therefore take advantage of our rules to put a question to the Hon. Member who just spoke in this debate on a motion introduced by my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He has rightly blamed the Government for its failure to initiate meaningful reform in the unemployment insurance system and especially for its failure to commit itself to a full employment policy that seriously addresses high regional unemployment, youth unemployment, as well as labour market adjustments.

When we deal with regional unemployment, it seems that the Government tries to have us believe that it is responsible for the creation of hundreds of thousands of jobs. It is a fact, however, that there are still some one million unemployed in Canada and that some regions are affected more than others. The further we go from the main centres of Toronto and Montréal, the more unemployment there is. Today, the daily Le Devoir had this title: "Ottawa withdraws from regional development. A reorganization plan proposed by the federal Government would mean the end of direct involvement of the central Government in the regions."

I would like the Hon. Member who just spoke to explain to us why the Conservative Government is preparing to abandon in such a manner the remote and under-developed regions. It is quite obvious that if we let the market decide, the companies will set up shop in the large urban centres and the regions with strong economies. A department of regional development, which gives incentives to companies settling outside large urban centres, is essential to balance opportunities among Canadian workers. If this program is approved by the Government, workers in remote areas of Canada will have no other choice but to move to the large urban centres of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver to find work. This appears to me as very unfair to the regions.

After the announcement by the Minister, who promised so much about the unemployment insurance system and gives us so little, we are wondering where the Conservative Government is going. We must remember that upon taking office, the Conservatives vowed to reduce the unemployment insurance system to a bare minimum. They said in November 1984 that they would give new leadership to Canada. However, we had to wait until July 1985 to see the Forget Commission created. That Commission has only served to exacerbate the various opinions found in the country about unemployment insurance, rather than rallying new converts to the Conservative Government philosophy.

And we now realize, after all those months, after those $7,000 million spent on an inquiry, we find that the former chairman of the Commons standing committee on employment, manpower and immigration, the Hon. Member from Alberta, expresses one view, while the Hon. Member for the Toronto area, who chairs the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, expresses another view—total confusion among Conservative Members on that matter. Now, at a time when we realize the Minister really has no policy and he has been wasting our time for two years, it seems quite normal that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) complains about this Government's lack of action and especially about the possibility that this government drop a regional development policy that is absolutely essential if we are to improve employment in the most remote areas of the country.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) very rapidly draws conclusions. He should be cautious with newspaper reports.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and as it happens I have here a letter to all Members of the House, not only Progressive Conservative Members but all Members of the House of Commons, dated May 11, 1987, from Lawrence O'Neil, chairman of the committee of the House on private legislation. Here is what he has to say:

"The Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion will be undertaking over the next few days an in-depth study of the Regional Industrial Development Program (RIDP), which hopefully should lead to the tabling of a report in the House of Commons by the end of June, 1987. Should the proceedings of that Committee on that program which is of critical importance for many areas of the country be of interest to you, I would invite you to contact one of your party's representatives on the Committee, the list of permanent Members being as follows". And in the case of the Liberal Party, it is Mr. Tobin. All this, Mr. Speaker, to say that as far as I am concerned, as a Member from an area such as Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, as the Member for Jonquière, on a number of occasions I expressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion my disappointment at the current rules respecting grants paid out to certain industries in the regions. The current rules discriminate against some regions, and I have a quite recent case, Mr. Speaker, which I would like to bring to your attention.

The said business, Fenêtres Polico in Jonquières, a new venture which will be making PVC windows, has asked a grant to the Department of Regional industrial Expansion, but its application has been rejected because it was told that such a business would jeopardize sales of others making traditional windows made of wood or aluminium. However, according to experts, it would have been an excellent business with a new technology and a great potential. Here we have a business with an extremely promising future that could create hundreds of jobs but its application is turned down. But other applications coming from centres such as Montreal and Toronto where funds are easily obtainable will probably be approved.

That is an example of things that must change. We have to see to it that such industries can get off the ground in our regions and help them do so. But fortunately there is nevertheless a good side to this story. The industry got off the ground by itself and is now doing very well, and that is why we as a Government have to help our industries get started, especially in remote, disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for a brief supplementary question.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the Hon. Member. He is perfectly right to say that the system as presently operated by his Conservative Government is not working as well as it could. I am glad that an industry in his region had the guts to get off the ground by itself without the help of a subsidy from this Government.

There is something I want to tell the Hon. Member, and I ask him to think about it. When the Department of Regional Industrial Development was created, the first to hold this portfolio was the Hon. Jean Marchand. It was especially established for the specific purpose of helping to create jobs in remote regions of the country. It is a Department with a definite job creating vocation away from the major urban centres, and for years and years, that Department provided small, medium-sized and large corporations with a great many subsidies to set up shop away from the major economic centres of the country, so as to create jobs for young and not so young Canadians in remote regions of the country. Now, not only do we know that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has been paralysed for years and is no longer pursuing its original goal, but we hear from the Minister that the Government is planning to get rid of his Department and stop giving subsidies to create jobs in remote areas. Is it not the opinion of the Hon. Member that abandoning such a program would be a serious mistake?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the time for questions and answers is over, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, but I think we should allow the Hon. Member a short reply before going on with debate.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gave a lengthy reply to a lengthy question before you allowed the previous Hon. Member to go on at some length. It is time to close off the debate. I believe I should have the floor.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in defence of the Chair, I believe the Chair is allowed to see the time as the Chair sees it, not as the Hon. Member from the NDP sees it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we should allow the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) to make a short reply, and then we will proceed with debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) that this is a great opportunity for him to indicate what policies he would like the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to implement, and that he should do it now, not later, so that we might learn about them and find out what his position really is in this debate.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having the opportunity to close off this important debate this afternoon. I would like to express appreciation to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for having introduced the motion, and I would like to begin by asking when the Government will bring in for debate Bill C-50, the Bill that would redress the ill-considered, ill-advised and unjust measures that were put in place in 1985 and that discriminated against pensioners. We want to see that injustice redressed.

I would like to emphasize the importance of this issue, and perhaps a good way of doing that would be to refer to a Canadian film I saw the other night, John and the Missus, starring Gordon Pinsent. The film deals with the implications of a mine closure in Newfoundland. If Hon. Members had a chance to see that film, they would feel something of the hurt that individuals, families and whole communities feel when a single-industry town is destroyed.

I grew up in the 1940s and my father was a seasonal worker. Some years he had enough stamps to collect unemployment insurance and other years he did not. Whether he was able to collect unemployment insurance or not made all the difference to our family's Christmas and to our standard of living. The importance of unemployment insurance to many families in many communities cannot be underestimated. That is particularly the case for seasonal workers.

It is sometimes easy for people who have never missed a pay cheque to think that seasonal workers with their dependence upon the unemployment insurance system are ripping the system off. Yet the basic primary industries on which the Canadian economy depends, forestry, fishing, construction and agriculture, are all industries that are to a large extent seasonal. Canada depends upon these industries, these industries depend upon seasonal workers, and seasonal workers depend upon unemployment insurance. Yet these are the very people who were the major target of the Forget Commission's recommendation that there be a system of annualization which would reduce the benefits these people bring home. The elimination of regional benefits and the phasing out of benefits for fishermen and their families would affect seasonal workers, the people who were targeted by the Forget Commission.

The Government did the right thing in rejecting those recommendations, but we must ask why it appointed someone like Dr. Forget to head that commission in the first place.

Mr. Rodriguez: A Liberal.

Mr. Manly: My friend says that they appointed a Liberal. I suppose that when they really want cut-backs, they know where to go to get them.

Those recommendations of the Forget Commission were refused by two committees of the House, the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee and the Fisheries and Oceans Committee. Members of the Fisheries and Oceans Committee heard testimony from the workers and workers' organizations about the importance of unemployment insurance. We recognized that there were changes that could be made, yet we saw this major threat of the Forget Commission recommendation to eliminate regional benefits. We brought in a very simple report saying: "Don't touch the fishermen's program, don't accept this recommendation for annualization and don't eliminate regional benefits".

The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration took a much more comprehensive view. Not only did it reject those major recommendations of the Forget Commission but it went on to devise a program of unemployment insurance that was much more responsive to the needs of Canadian working men and women. In some cases, what the committee said corresponded with some of the more minor recommendations of the Forget Commission. Unfortunately, not only did the Government reject the recommendations of the Forget Commission that were wrong but it refused to touch any of the recommendations at all.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), has pointed out, some 22 of the 90 recommendations of the standing committee were right in line with the Forget Commission recommendations. Yet the Government refused to deal with them. These recommendations would have helped deal with unemployed workers who need further training or want some help starting small businesses.

I and many other Members have had many unemployed workers come to us with a great desire to use their time of unemployment in a constructive way. They want to further their education or perhaps to start small businesses. They do not simply want to be on the dole. Yet the present restrictive unemployment insurance policy does not allow them to use their time constructively. Our recommendations would have allowed for that, but the Government chose not to act on them.

The Government did not act on the recommendation for some kind of assistance for older workers. Again, certainly in my constituency and in many other parts of Canada which are dependent upon single-resource industries where those resources are in trouble, there are many older workers who need desperately some kind of additional assistance over and above that which the present program provides. The Government has chosen not to act there.

The Government could have eliminated the waiting period for maternity benefits. On a number of areas on which there was consensus, the Government has chosen not to act. We must ask why this is so.

In the minute I have left, I would like to emphasize that the primary problem is not with the Unemployment Insurance Program but with the lack of jobs in Canada. The Government is not addressing that problem in the way it should. It has cut back on regional programs, on job-creation programs and on several Departments. For example, it is refusing to fund adequately the small craft harbours to maintain infrastructure for fishermen and tourism and to provide jobs. Small craft harbours will be closed down because of the programs of this Government which refuses to see the need to maintain basic infrastructures and keep basic jobs for a vibrant economy. I lay that upon the Government. I ask it to take a second look at the recommendations of the standing committee and bring in a UI proposal which will be responsive to the real needs of the Canadian people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR LISTING OF HONORARY BALTIC CONSULS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on April 1 I directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to the listing of honorary Baltic consuls in the External Affairs directory of diplomatic, consular and other representatives in Canada. The Minister responded that the question was under review by his Department.

This matter has been in limbo since 1972 and clearly should have long since been resolved. For 10 years prior to 1972 the consuls were listed in the directory and it was only on the death of the acting Honorary Consul General of Estonia that year that the listing of the consuls were removed from the directory.

The federal Government has received countless representations from the Estonian Central Council in Canada, the Latvian Federation in Canada, the Lithuanian Canadian Community, the Captive Nations Committee in Canada and the Baltic Federation, yet their efforts have produced no results. Despite Canada's de jure nonrecognition of the illegal occupation of the Baltic states of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania by the Soviet Union, the Baltic consuls are still not listed as the representatives of the pre-Soviet occupation, freely and democratically elected governments of the Baltic States.

Over the years there have been many answers given as to who is responsible for the listings. On different occasions the Baltic communities have been informed that the listing is at the discretion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the responsibility lies with the Parliament of Canada in persuading the Secretary of State for External Affairs to list the Baltic consuls, that the question of listing of Baltic consuls must be decided by the Cabinet, and that the question of listing the Baltic consuls should be decided by the inner Cabinet.

With all these conflicting responses, it is small wonder that the Baltic communities are left confused and concerned as to how this matter can be resolved when it cannot even be established who is responsible. In the past, two Secretaries of State for External Affairs have commissioned reports to study the issue, neither of which were ever made public. The Minister's assurance that the issue is under review can therefore be of little comfort to the Baltic communities.

In discussions with representatives of the Department of External Affairs, representatives have been told that the listings would have a negative effect on "other areas". Such statements have led to the conclusion that the Department of External Affairs is concerned that the listing of consuls would anger the Soviet Union and, consequently, allows that fear to determine our policy on this important matter.

There are those in our Department of External Affairs who advocate that Canada should not do anything to ruffle the feathers of the U.S.S.R. They always recommend the path of least resistance and are proverbial fence-sitters. Such a position is an abrogation and betrayal of our principles as a free and democratic sovereign nation. For us to appease a morally bankrupt Soviet regime, whose only trumps are a mighty military apparatus, an aggressive stance toward the rest of the world, and their traditionally arrogant rhetoric, would constitute a betrayal of all those who gave their lives for freedom and democracy, all those who came to this country believing that Canada was a country which stands for fundamental freedom and human rights, including respect of territorial integrity and the right of self-determination.

If Canada continues to sit on the fence by refusing to list Baltic consuls, the Soviets will tell the people of the Baltic States that while Canada pays lip service to the principle of withholding de jure recognition of the captivity of their countries, in practice Canada has conceded Soviet sovereignty and Soviet right to enforce its illegal annexation. This is a discredit to our entire system of government.

The United States already accords the Baltic consuls full diplomatic recognition. It has led the way, and Australia has followed its lead by recognizing the honorary consul of the Latvian consulate.

• (1805)

The time for Canada to act is now. I urge Canada to stand up and be counted. I urge the Minister to list the Baltic consuls in the External Affairs directory of diplomatic, consular, and other representatives in Canada. In doing so, we demonstrate our continuing commitment to the principles and purpose of the United Nations Charter and to the cause of peace and freedom in the world. By our action, we will be sending out a message to oppressive regimes throughout the world that our principles are not and will not be for sale.

Given that the issue of listing Baltic consuls has already undergone at least two previous reviews, and in light of the decision by Australia to accord recognition to the honorary consul for Latvia, will the Minister now agree to take advantage of the opportunity to once and for all put an end to continuous studies on this matter and restore the listing of the Baltic consuls?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): On behalf of the Government, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to state Canada's policy with respect to the Baltic States, namely Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Every Canadian Government since 1940 has firmly refused to give de jure recognition to the forced annexation of these countries by the U.S.S.R. However Canada does give de facto recognition to their incorporation into the Soviet Union since the latter country exercises authority. The refusal of Canada to give de jure recognition to the annexation of the Baltic States goes far beyond mere words and includes measures which underscore the special status of the Baltic States as independent nations illegally annexed by the U.S.S.R. during World War II.

The Government allows the acting honorary consuls of the Baltic States to continue exercising their duties in Canada, although it does not formaly recognize them since honorary consuls are not appointed by a government with which Canada maintains diplomatic or consular relations. These consuls are Canadian citizens and for this reason have no immunity nor diplomatic privileges. Canadian ambassadors do not travel in the Baltic States.

As much as possible, other Canadian officials who do travel there avoid all contacts with local authorities. For purposes of Canadian passport and immigration documents, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania remain acceptable as references for places of birth. Since Baltic passports do not guarantee re-entry into Baltic countries, Canadian legislation does not consider them acceptable for admission to Canada. This is why extraordinary procedures have been adopted to clear the way for admission to Canada of Baltic representatives of other countries who come here in the discharge of their duties. These measures prove that Canada continues to reject the legality of Soviet control over Baltic countries, a fact which Soviet authorities have duly noted. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has already advised the House that he is reviewing the question of adding the names of Baltic acting honorary consuls in the publication of the Department of External Affairs entitled "Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada". The Minister is fully aware of the views expressed in this respect by the Baltic community in Canada; he will give particular consideration to them and to the general implications of such a decision for Canada's foreign policy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the Government of Canada does not intend to change this policy under which it does not give de jure recognition to the Soviet annexation of the Baltic States.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF ANTONIO ARCANGEL TO HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION. REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF APPOINTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to object to the Government's cavalier and callous appointment of those people who would represent our country on the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal.

The House will recall that my specific question related to the case of one Antonio Arcangel who was appointed by the Government to sit on the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, even though he had given a public interview in which he supported the long-term imposition of martial law in the Philippines. He basically suggested that life in the Philippines was good during the tenure of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos but had deteriorated since the arrival of Corazon Aquino.

As a result of my intervention in the House, the appointee subsequently withdrew from consideration but, at the same time, we witnessed the ridiculous situation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) suggesting to the House that it was the fault of the Opposition or, in some way, my fault because I had brought the facts surrounding Mr. Arcangel's appointment to the attention of the public via the Question Period process.

• (1810)

We see today a second appointee, another one of these rather questionable Conservative appointments to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal in the form of an appointee in the Yukon who gave an interview in the local press, making some comments suggesting that the native community was living at the expense of other taxpayers for the last number of years. When this question was raised in the House today and in committee, the Minister not only refused to expedite the investigation, but proceeded to suggest that it was perhaps all right in the interim because this particular individual might not be appointed to hear a human rights case.

As a result of the Arcangel case and subsequent cases which have been repeatedly brought to the attention of the Minister, who seems bent on appointing Tory hacks who have no interest in human rights and who in fact have shown to our committee that they not only are not interested in human rights but do not even understand the basic question of equality, the Minister should come forward with some specific recommendations to ensure that people who are appointed by this Government, or any government, to rule on matters of a quasi judicial nature—which is what we see in terms of human rights rulings—have a demonstrated competence in the area of human rights. The Minister should also be prepared to act quickly and expeditiously when problems are brought to his attention.

The Minister in the past has doctored resumes, removing, for example, in the case of Progressive Conservative appointees, any reference to their affiliation to the Conservative Party. Through his own Department, he has been involved with or condoned meetings which were set up in the Privy Council Office to brief appointees so that they knew exactly how to respond to members of the committee. Further, when matters such as the case of Flo Whyard in the Yukon are brought to his attention, as it was by letter more than a month ago, the Minister seems unprepared to act.

It seems a shame that Members of this House, either through Question Period or through committee, have to repeatedly bring to the attention of the Minister and the Government individual cases of concern with respect to human rights appointees. Quite clearly, it is the responsibility of the Minister and the Government to ensure that an objective process is put in place to ensure quality appointees to the Human Rights Tribunal.

That was not the case in the Arcangel situation. Certainly the Minister has dragged his heels with respect to concerns raised about the statements made in a newspaper article entitled "The Problem of Handouts", which was actually written by a human rights appointee. The so-called investigation the Minister plans to carry out has been dragging. The newspaper article was published in February. The Minister today in committee attempted to defend the potential for further delays by suggesting that perhaps this appointee might not hear tribunal hearings.

It seems to me that the Minister is not prepared to show leadership in this area, which has in fact been hailed around the world as an exemplary human rights process. The tribunal and the commission have been set in place. Over the last decade in Canada we have developed a forum for Canadians to bring forth grievances, whether they be in employment or with respect to sexual orientation. Of course, in the area of sexual orientation we certainly need further definition and clarification from the Minister. That process is now being threatened because the Minister has continually and repeatedly refused to set down a series of objective criteria for the appointment of officers and commissioners for the purpose of hearing complaints.

• (1815)

If the Minister does not act expeditiously in the case of Whyard, and if the Minister continues to shirk his responsibility as he did in the case of Arcangel, then, unfortunately, the whole human rights process in Canada will be undermined. As a result, what was in fact an exemplary system which was written about and exhibited throughout the world as a stellar example of human rights development will be destroyed. I think the responsibility for that destruction lies squarely on the shoulders of the Minister of Justice who has repeatedly shown that he is not interested in appointing quality members to the Human Rights Commission but, rather, is interested in using the tribunal as a resting place for old Tory hacks.

[Translation]

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows what are delays, because she raised that question in the House in November 1986. About three months ago, she had asked for 10 minutes of the time of the House to make the very same remarks she just made, but she did not come forward and thus wasted 10 minutes of our time. Here she is now, three months later, saying the Government is taking too much time to proceed. It is the people on that side when they were in office who delayed for too long. The Hon. Member is accusing the Government of not acting properly in appointing the members of that tribunal. The Liberals were in office for 20 years. They made appointments without ever consulting anyone. And what did we do? We said: "Our appointments will be submitted afterwards to a committee of the House for a full public examination."

That is an initiative our government has taken, contrary to the Liberal government which did nothing for 20 years and practised shameless and excessive patronage. About Mr. Arcangel, Mr. Speaker, let me quote from a telegram he sent the Minister of Justice in November 1986:

[English]

—I am hereby withdrawing my name from the list of human rights tribunal panel because Ms. Sheila Copps unfair remarks and unjust allegations have seriously impaired my ability to serve effectively as a member of such a tribunal. I have always been a law-abiding citizen and a firm believer in a democratic process. My efforts as a member of Canada's multicultural society have always been to promote the cause of human rights and equal opportunity.

And the telegram does not end there.

So I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that respect for human rights should start with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). She should behave in such a way that the Canadian public understand that Members of Parliament should be the first and foremost to respect human rights. In this case, the Hon. Member has disregarded Mr. Arcangel's most fundamental rights. And today, almost eight months later, a big fuss is to be made of it.

Therefore, I find her blameworthy and I am laying the blame on her, where it belongs. I would like to hear her comments on that aspect of the issue. And I would ask her not to try to take advantage of every possible circumstance and to slant the facts, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—COMPLIANCE WITH RENT CONTROL REGULATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you may not be aware of it, but there are more senior citizens in my constituency than there are in any other constituency in the country with the exception of Victoria, British Columbia. It is a very stable constituency, a very stable community. Usually, seniors live in their homes for years and years. Some of them go on until they reach the age of 90 or more but, inevitably, as you know, Mr. Speaker, they are forced to sell their homes eventually and to go into apartments.

• (1820)

Usually, Mr. Speaker, this happens when a spouse dies. The surviving spouse, often a widow, finds it very difficult to carry on in the family home. There are difficulties in doing the work that is needed around the house; there are difficulties in finding tradesmen to do the work. At the same time, of course, expenses are going up. Generally speaking, at that stage, the surviving senior moves into an apartment setting, where someone else looks after the home. It is also at this stage that our seniors can expect to be able to live on the income generated from the proceeds of the sale of the family home, and hopefully, if they are lucky, to have sufficient left over to enable them to live a little better life-style than had been experienced to that point.

All of that is true, Mr. Speaker, before one takes into account inflation—and we all know what happens when inflation hits.

There was a period of time when, for years, we experienced very modest inflation, and then we shot up to double-digit inflation. Of course, when inflation was in the double-digit category, interest rates also increased, so that at least the investments of seniors generated a little more income. But all of that has changed now, with falling interest rates. While falling interest rates are good for the economy, they are bad for the income of seniors. Today we have falling interest rates, with inflation continuing to rise, with the consequent increases in the cost of living: higher food, clothing, and shelter costs.

In my constituency, and in Metropolitan Toronto as a whole, and I expect across the country, rents have risen enormously in the last few years, reaching the stage where senior citizens, and tenants generally, live in fear of receiving the rent renewal notice announcing the inevitable rental increase.

For these people, rents have increased, while their income has either stayed the same, or perhaps even fallen off. Our seniors are finding that the increased cost of living is eating into the capital that they had hoped to retain to keep themselves self-sufficient during their lifetime.

As Hon. Members may be aware, in the Province of Ontario a number of years ago the provincial Government instituted rent controls and a rent review process, to try to control, in some modest manner at least, the impact of inflation on rents. Those controls are subject to a great deal of controversy. Some people contend that they make things worse rather than making them better. But, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, they were put in place to control rents for people who needed that control: seniors on fixed income, or whose incomes were falling.

It is hard enough for seniors living in apartments that are subject to rent review and control in times like this, but there are those who live in apartments that are not subject to such controls, specifically those owned by governments: apartments owned by municipal governments, and apartments owned by the federal Government through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Many municipalities, Mr. Speaker, which own apartments or own rental properties voluntarily agreed, many years ago, to restrict rent increases to those provided for under the rent review legislation, and to voluntarily submit to those rent review controls, notwithstanding that they are not in law subject to them. That is true of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. Not so, Mr. Speaker, for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. For years and years it went on in an uncontrolled fashion, disregarding those rent controls, disregarding the rent review regulations in every way, shape or form.

People could not understand, and I could not understand, why the Government, which was causing inflation, would not agree to be subject to the rent review controls.

It struck me that this was an example of Government placing itself above the law, similar, perhaps, to 13th century England, when King John tried to place himself above the law but was forced to submit under the Magna Carta; similar to 17th century England, when Charles II tried to place himself above the law, only to have his head cut off for his efforts.

All of that, Mr. Speaker, reminded me of a situation that occurred back in my law school days. You will remember law school, Mr. Speaker. In those days, one of my class-mates used to park on the old Armouries property near the law school, property which was federally owned, and in so doing he used to get parking tickets.

However, the court quashed those tickets because they were issued under municipal by-laws. The fact that it was federal property meant that they did not apply, so he got away with parking for free. All around him people were parking and paying their parking fines, but he got away with it because he was on federal property and above the law.

It may not have been fair or moral, but it was legal. The same applies with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC says: "Don't worry about it, senior citizens. If your rents go up too high, we will subsidize". That is no answer. It takes away human dignity. People who have always tried to pay their own way do not want the Government to force them into a situation where they must rely upon charity.

When I came to Ottawa, I made it my business to see whether we could get some changes to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this area, to see whether we could get it to submit voluntarily to rent review controls in the Province of Ontario. Eventually it took some three years, but I am pleased to say that at long last Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has agreed to submit voluntarily. It has agreed to hold meetings with tenants voluntarily—and it does not have to do it—to justify any rent increases which it is putting into effect.

Frankly I was delighted when I heard that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation was doing that. It does not solve all the problems, but it goes a long way toward improving things. I was delighted. I know you are delighted by that program, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is just as delighted as you and I.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to respond to the question raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on March 27 and tonight.

The issue of affordable housing in Canada is one that has concerned my government ever since we took office almost three years ago.

Following a complete review of all national housing policies, new directions were established that have resulted in far more truly disadvantaged Canadians receiving assistance.

The Main Square Complex, the home for many seniors, disabled and others of modest income which we are talking about tonight, continues to receive our attention and assistance.

Residents of Main Square who will have to renew their leases between July 1987 and June 1988 will experience the lowest rent increase in several years, 6.2 per cent. This level is within both the spirit and intent of the Ontario provincial rental guidelines.

Many of the tenants of Main Square already receive assistance in the form of subsidies if their rent exceeds 25 per cent of their gross income. Should the additional monthly payment result in any tenant exceeding the 25 per cent ceiling, assistance will be made available.

The additional revenue from the rent increases in 1987/88 will allow for a level of maintenance adequate to ensure clean and pleasant surroundings for the tenants while keeping rents at a reasonable level.

Mr. Speaker, my government believes in social justice and in assisting those in need. Main Square is another tangible evidence of our commitment to help the truly disadvantaged, even if it means a small sacrifice on the part of those who can afford it.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF HAWKER SIDDELEY CAR WORKS AT TRENTON, N. S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my frustration at the lack of action being taken by the Government of Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia in regard to the continued operation of the Hawker Siddeley Trenton Car Works in Pictou County, Nova Scotia.

Since the company gave notice some weeks ago, the Government of Nova Scotia and the federal Government came together to try to find a solution to this very difficult problem. Unfortunately, since that time meetings have taken place but indeed there has been no action. In fact the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) indicated to the House that a solution would have been found within weeks. Unfortunately, there is no solution.

All we are receiving from the national Government as well as the provincial Government is more delays. I suggest that these delays are very harmful to the people of that particular community. It is frustrating to the workers at the Hawker Siddeley plant in Trenton, Nova Scotia. Equally, the uncertainty of a lack of a decisive decision with regard to the future of that operation is causing havoc throughout Pictou County.

I call upon the Government to stand up and be counted, and to make a decisive, positive decision on behalf of the workers and community in that area.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BROADCASTING OF STANLEY CUP HOCKEY FINALS—TRIBUTE ON PROVIDING COVERAGE TO PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, dare I stand here, a back-bench government MP with no defences against my colleagues, to extend a compliment to the CBC? But indeed I must! Last week, the CBC entered into serious negotiations with Carling-O'Keefe to work out a solution to broadcast the Campbell Conference and Stanley Cup series of the NHL in remote areas of Canada. CBC was successful in its deliberations and I would like to extend my thanks at this time.

• (1405)

In particular, I would like to thank Mr. Tom Curzon of press relations at head office, CBC Toronto, for updating my staff on an ongoing basis as proceedings developed.

I am now pleased to say that all of Canada can sit back, relax, and watch the Edmonton Oilers take the cup.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SITUATION BETWEEN RAILWAYS AND UNIONS—CN PENSION PLAN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, many Hon. Members of the House will be aware of the situation which now exists between Canada's rail unions and the railways with respect to contract negotiations and the intransigent way in which the railways have been dealing with the rail unions, demanding a five per cent wage roll back. This is something which has always been unacceptable, in my view, but it is even more unacceptable when we realize that CN, for example, turned a profit in the first quarter of this year largely at the expense of its employees, yet still insists on a five per cent wage roll back, which is entirely unacceptable.

Something I think the Government could do to help the situation, if it is at a point where it can still be helped, is to make clear its intentions with respect to at least one item on the table, and that is the whole question of the CN pension plan. The Government set up a special committee, recommendations were made, yet it has basically put this on the shelf. Something it could do to help matters along, even in just a small way, is to make clear its intentions in that regard.

IMPORTANCE OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to draw attention to the presence in this House of the industrial commissioners of my region.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to commend Canada's industrial commissioners for their excellence and their expertise which has been the mainstay of regional development. Their work enables each region to take its rightful place within the Canadian Confederation.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, Canada's wealth rests primarily on regional diversities. Our Government is proud to acknowledge this fact and is committed to promote this concept by eliminating any disparity. The best example of this is that the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean industrial commissioners are given an opportunity to appear before the committee today.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SALES OF BOTTLED WATER—RESULTS OF TESTS—ENVIRONMENTAL CONSIDERATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Consumers' Association reports that sales of bottled water have doubled since 1982. The average Canadian now drinks four litres a year. In Quebec the consumption is twice a much as the average. At the same time, using standards set by the United States Environmental Protection Agency, the Consumers' Association tested 15 brands of commercial bottled spring water for 79 substances and concluded that bottled water is not purer or safer to drink than tap water.

The Consumers' Association's tests showed that all the brands tested contained dissolved metals, inorganic chemicals and other suspended particles often at higher levels than tap water in seven Canadian cities. What lesson can we draw from all this?

It is becoming more obvious every day that what we do in our environment eventually affects water, even spring water. Everything in the environment is connected to everything else. What we do above the ground ultimately affects ground water, even if it is hundreds of metres below the surface. The first step we must take to reverse this trend is to abandon the dangerous mindset, the "out of sight—out of mind" attitude.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO MEDICINE HAT TIGERS—MEMORIAL HOCKEY CUP CHAMPIONS

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to extend congratulations to the 1987 Memorial Cup winners, the Medicine Hat Tigers. The Western Hockey League champions defeated the Oshawa Generals 6-2 in a sudden death final on Saturday, May 16.

• (1410)

There are many former Medicine Hat Tigers now playing in the National Hockey League. This year's team, which placed five players in the six all-star positions at the Memorial Cup, will continue to be well represented in the NHL.

This year's edition of the Tigers had a lot of class, presented themselves well on and off the ice, and were an outstanding representation of junior hockey.

Best wishes for continued success to the team, George Maser, Russ Farwell, coach Brian Maxwell, and team announcer Bob Ridely.

The Memorial Cup will be at home in Medicine Hat this year. The team, management and fans of that city will see that it stays there.

Canada's national sport is alive and well in Medicine Hat.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

RADON GAS—HIGH LEVELS IN SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN HOMES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, studies conducted in the past several years show that Saskatchewan has the highest levels of radon gas in the country. According to news reports 27 per cent of homes surveyed in southern Saskatchewan have radon levels four times the normal level. This means that occupants of those homes are exposed to radiation equivalent to more than 200 chest X-rays a year. The same surveys show Regina and Winnipeg as the cities with the highest radon levels in the country.

Most of these surveys were done during the summer months. A survey during winter would show even higher levels. These results of high radon gas levels are of grave concern to us and reveal an urgent need for action.

What is needed are more surveys, especially during winter months. The results of these surveys should be made public immediately rather than years later. Home owners should also be given an opportunity to monitor radon levels in their homes. More public information is also needed. Home builders, local building and health authorities, as well as individual home owners, have got to know what they can do to reduce the radon gas to acceptable levels.

I urge the federal Government to provide leadership that will make the homes in the areas of high radon gas emissions safe homes in which to live.

CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

ATTACK BY PRESIDENT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER AS "NEW CANADIAN"

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and disappointed this past weekend to hear comments made by Shirley Carr, President of the Canadian Labour Congress. In a speech praising the New Democratic Party she launched an attack against the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Bill Vander Zalm. What was most troubling was her comment that Mr. Vander Zalm as "a new Canadian" should remember who helped liberate his country during World War II and that he had no right to bring his fascist ideas to this country.

I reject any distinction being made between native born and new Canadians. She should remember that, with the exception of our native groups, we were all new Canadians. As a nation we have never placed any limitation on a person's right to speak based on his country of origin, nor should we.

This kind of intolerance is unacceptable, un-Canadian, and I am sure is repudiated by the membership of the Canadian Labour Congress.

PENITENTIARIES

CANCELLATION OF EXPANSION PROJECT AT WESTMORLAND INSTITUTION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House an action by the Government which my constituents find totally unacceptable.

We have learned through access to information that the Government has cancelled an $18 million upgrading and expansion project at Westmorland Institution in southeast New Brunswick. While the Government cancelled Westmorland, and other important projects across Canada, it approved the construction of a $68 million penitentiary in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding, a facility which most everyone agrees is not needed.

[Translation]

The Government's decision to build a new institution in the Prime Minister's riding, at the expense of other regions, is entirely unacceptable, especially when you consider that the unemployment rate in my own riding is 17.5 per cent, which is outrageous.

How do we explain this to the people of New Brunswick? We can only say the Government has decided to forget they exist!

EMPLOYMENT

IMPACT OF CONSTRUCTION OF ALUMINUM PLANT AT LATERRIÈRE IN JONQUIÈRE CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, last week, Alcan announced it was investing $750 million in its future aluminum plant at Laterrière, in the riding of Jonquière.

Mr. Speaker, it sounds like good news. Unfortunately, with the new plant and the new technology that will be used, Jonquière will suffer a net loss of nearly 750 jobs. Add to that the loss in taxes and the good news becomes rather alarming for the community of Jonquière.

Mr. Speaker, over the years, Alcan has made billions of dollars thanks to our hydro-electric and human resources. Alcan cannot go on investing all around Jonquière while abandoning a community that has served it so well. We need more than the 4 or 5 million invested in SOCCRENT for our community. The company's directors are in the big league. They can afford to attract other investment to our region to diversify the local economy and maintain job levels in Jonquière.

The community of Jonquière is very worried, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROTEST RALLIES AGAINST PROPOSED LABOUR LAW CHANGES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, protest rallies will take place across British Columbia today, in opposition to proposed Draconian changes in the labour laws of British Columbia.

A work-to-rule campaign and an overtime ban by the B.C. Federation of Labour will go into effect today.

On April 3 last I drew the attention of this House to the drastic changes to the labour laws proposed by B.C.'s Social Credit Government. The proposals are ill-considered, confrontational, undemocratic, and unnecessary.

The Vancouver Sun has called Bill 19 "perhaps the most radical legislation introduced by the provincial government in the past decade".

I urge Premier Vander Zalm, in his meeting with the B.C. Federation of Labour tomorrow, to agree to withdraw both Bill 19 and Bill 20; and I once again urge the B.C. Government to study carefully and consult fully before proceeding with any further labour laws.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG PERSONS OVER 45 YEARS OF AGE—COMMITTEE'S STUDY OF AGE DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, unemployment is not only a regional problem, it is also an age problem. Unemployed Canadians 45 years of age and over are more likely to suffer permanent long-term unemployment than any other age group.

This is only one example, Mr. Speaker, of actual age discrimination in Canada, in spite of federal and provincial legislation against such discrimination.

For that reason the Human Rights Committee of this House will begin a study on age discrimination today, and we hope to visit western Canada next week to receive testimony from that region. For that, we need the approval of the House. I hope that the Opposition will not thwart the opportunity for western Canada to participate fully in this vital study.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

IMPACT OF CN BUDGETARY CUTBACKS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and elsewhere in Eastern Ontario are concerned about CN's decision to close down about 265 miles of track between Montreal and Sudbury, Ontario. These decisions will have a very serious impact on the riding I have the honour and the privilege to represent in this House.

A company in my riding, Alexandria Mouldings, has decided to postpone a $25 million expansion plan as a result of CN's budget cuts. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) must take immediate action and tell CN representatives to stop these tactics immediately and provide full service to all customers in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and elsewhere in Eastern Ontario.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE ABITIBI TOUR—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, every year, for 19 years, Le Tour de l'Abitibi has organized a junior cyclists meet, the biggest in the world. In connection with the Sommet de la Francophonie in Quebec City, which will be held from September 2 to 4, Le Tour de l'Abitibi will receive a $10,000 grant, which will make it possible for the president, Mr. André Babin of Val-d'Or, and organizers to invite representatives from Canada and several European, African and Caribbean countries, to talk about their respective cultures and sports disciplines.

In so doing, the Government of Canada wants to stress the fact that La Francophonie is not just a matter of heads of state and governments. In fact, it is unique as an assembly of individuals and agencies that in many cases initiated the concept of mutual aid and co-operation among francophone peoples throughout the world. Mr. Speaker, the Abitibi and Témiscamingue region appreciates the work done by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) who is responsible for the Francophone Summit, and who saw fit to support a region far removed from our urban centres.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—REPORTED U.S. INVESTMENT DEMANDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it was hard to believe the performance of the Minister for International Trade on television last night. She refused to say whether or not the Cabinet had rejected the American demand for unlimited American takeovers of Canadian industry.

The Americans obviously want the right to buy up to 100 per cent of our oil and gas industry, lumber, fish, our farms, financial institutions—the whole country, including 24 Sussex, for all I know. And yet the Minister—

• (1420)

An Hon. Member: They already have it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Somebody is suggesting to me that they already have 24 Sussex.

Mr. Hees: Don't worry, John; you will never need it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yet the Minister would not say yes or no last night on television.

Did the Cabinet reject yesterday the absurd American demand for unlimited takeover of vital Canadian industries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it must have been a tough caucus this morning. The tougher the caucus, the greater the demagoguery from the Leader of the Opposition. It must have been a real tough one.

I am surprised at the anti-American attitudes coming from the Leader of the Opposition, he who supped at their table so long and so well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it will come as a hell of a surprise to Bechtel to find out that he is anti-American.

Mr. Nunziata: Cheap shot.

Ms. Copps: You are the Prime Minister. Act like it.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, Liberals talking about cheap shots!

If the question is, is this Government inviting foreign investment into this country, the answer is yes. We stand for foreign investment, investment of all kinds which will result in jobs for Canadians. We campaigned on that. We indicated it very clearly.

With regard to a foreign investment policy which may or may not come under the free trade talks, that is for Cabinet to decide. We believe that trade and investment will create greater jobs and wealth for Canadians.

Our obligation is to reduce unemployment, the moral obligation to the country, to the extent humanly possible to provide everyone with a job. In large measure, in substantial measure, that must be done by investment of all kinds, including foreign investment in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister ducked that one again and did not answer the question.

[Translation]

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN FIRMS BY FOREIGNERS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has been approving takeovers at a rate of $1 billion per month. Ever since this Government came to power, not one takeover has been turned down. I am not talking about new investment but about takeovers.

So my question for the Prime Minister is: Doesn't he care that foreigners can buy up the whole country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question lacks both dignity and realism. The question is: Don't I care about the fact that foreigners can buy up the whole country? The question is hardly not worthy of an answer and the Leader of the Opposition knows this perfectly well.

We had an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, which we inherited. We managed to get it down to 9.3 per cent. We have also succeeded in creating 770,000 new jobs in this country, which I think is an impressive performance. However, it is not enough, because we still have 1.2 million Canadians who are jobless, and to find jobs, we have to seek out new investment as well. Not at any price and regardless of the circumstances, but we have made it clear, unlike others, that as far as we are concerned, investors are welcome in Canada, provided they create jobs, provided they produce employment here in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not think anybody in the House needs to take any lessons from the Prime Minister on a dignified performance.

I want to say that the question was perfectly relevant when he has been selling off the country at $1 billion per month through Investment Canada, to such an extent that no one can take seriously the Government's record on protecting Canadian sovereignty, and certainly the Americans do not take it seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

ACCESS TO INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Now the Government is apparently contemplating a trade deal which would allow, in an unfettered way, the Americans complete access to investment in Canada, Mr. Speaker. How can the Prime Minister even contemplate that type of a deal? Is the Prime Minister on the road to having Canada become the 51st State? That is what the issue is?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend knows that the answer to that really quite silly question is, no, in terms of contemplating that kind of a deal. We have indicated in this House, I think quite fairly, on a number of occasions the kinds of deals with the United States that would be acceptable to Canada.

I point out, for example, in regard to the question of trade raised by my right hon. friend, what the Hon. Donald Macdonald, a very distinguished Liberal, recently said about his position.

Ms. Copps: Get a new speechwriter.

Mr. Mulroney: "Some of" the Liberals, "they don't even know anything and you can't tell them anything. I think there's a low level of understanding on trade on the part of members of" the Liberal "caucus". I agree 100 per cent with what Donald Macdonald said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister is in an agreeable mood, I would like to ask him whether he would confirm the following statement. Peter Murphy, the U.S. trade negotiator, wrote a memo to U.S. Congressmen in which he said:

> Investment is another critical component for any agreement... The Canadians are finally getting the message but are holding it out as bait to get some progress on their key issues, such as contingency protection.

In the meeting held yesterday between Mr. Reisman and the Cabinet, did the Government, in fact, confirm directions to Mr. Reisman that it is prepared to give full and open access on investment, in return for making some modification to trade remedy laws? Are those the instructions on which Mr. Reisman is presently working?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Reisman, who is held in very high regard by the Leader of the Opposition, is operating under entirely appropriate instructions, instructions that are consistent with my statement to the House on September 26, 1985, statements by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and by the Minister for International Trade.

May I say with affection, to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, that he too was referred to by Donald Macdonald.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Donald Macdonald—this is important—said: "I've debated on platforms with Axworthy across the country and I don't think he's got a—grasp of the issues".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Then, in the unkindest cut of all, he said "I think he's engaged in purely political posturing".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would say in return to the Prime Minister with great affection that he might enjoy more affection from the Canadian people if he were prepared to come clean when asked questions of direct public interest to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Let me put the question in a slightly different way, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who is Chairman of the powerful Finance Committee which will decide on the question of a free trade agreement with Canada, said quite categorically that any attempt to make major changes to trade mechanisms will be rejected by the Congress.

Why is the Government prepared to sell out this country by giving totally open access to investment to try to get a deal with a trade remedy law to which the U.S. Senate will not even agree? Is the Prime Minister prepared to tell us what kind of curious, strange, perverse logic is working in the minds of this Government when it is prepared to give away Canada to get nothing in return?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the House and the country have just been treated to an exhibition of the reasons why Donald Macdonald, a very distinguished parliamentarian and Canadian, says that the hon. gentleman conducts himself like a sophomore who does not know what he is talking about. This is exactly what is going on. This is shameless—

Mr. Axworthy: Are you afraid to answer the question? Yes, you are. Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be happy to try to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: Answer it. We are waiting.

Mr. Mulroney: We are seeking a trade agreement, which we believe is very much in the national interest, the chief component of which would be the creation of new jobs, new employment opportunities for all Canada, particularly in those regions of the country that need investment and need job creation.

We have indicated very clearly, and most specifically the Minister for International Trade has spelled out the terms and conditions under which this kind of trade agreement would be entered into by Canada. Clearly the trade resolution mechanism is part and parcel of that. I have spoken to the issue directly. I have conveyed that to the President of the United States, and to Senator Bensten, distinguished Chairman of the Senate Committee, and others.

• (1430)

It is my hope and my judgment that this kind of mutually beneficial trade arrangement will emerge. It is consistent with the challenges of the 1990s and the 21st century and it is consistent with our obligations to create jobs. But we will only bring forward for the consideration of this House a trade arrangement which we believe is very much in the national interest. We are working toward that. If and when we achieve it, we will bring it forward, and I know my hon. friend will be the first to applaud it.

INVESTMENT RESTRICTIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue this issue with the Prime Minister. Yesterday Simon Reisman was quoted as saying that he had a clear idea of what the United States wanted in the way of investment freedom in Canada. The Minister for International Trade was quoted as saying that Cabinet has not yet decided whether to permit negotiation over those demands. In short, the Government continues to let the initiative be taken by the United States rather than by Canada.

Why did the Government not, right at the start, say no to demands that would tie our freedom so completely, demands with respect to holding restrictions on investment which are crucial to jobs in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has made it very clear that the kind of disaster and scare scenario members of the NDP are formulating is not being considered in any form in the current talks. I do not know why he is scaremongering like that but I can assure him that the kind of scenario he is suggesting is not the scenario being considered.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REJECT U.S. PROPOSAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Canadians heard the Minister say very clearly on television last night that the Government had not yet decided on this issue. I will ask her what I asked yesterday, and we still cannot get an answer.

Why has the Cabinet not said a flat no to the attempt of the United States to widen this discussion about investment beyond trade related investment? Why has there not been a flat no said in order to protect jobs in this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will try to indicate, like the Prime Minister, that the kind of question the Hon. Member is suggesting has never been put to us. It would never be acceptable to us and it has never been put to us. What is clear is that the Americans do not want the kind of investment policies followed by the previous Government, policies which involved expropriation and the theft of other people's property. That is what the Americans do not want.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that in 1986 actually more investment went out of this country than came into it from the United States, how can the Minister maintain that free investment policies with the United States would benefit Canada in any way whatsoever?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, a couple of questioners on the opposition side have referred to my remarks on television yesterday. I may point out that the remarks that were on television were the remarks I made in the House yesterday and I can only repeat them.

I said yesterday and I repeat now that, unlike the previous Government, we have an open investment climate. We have Investment Canada. We have attracted record-breaking levels of foreign investment, creating jobs in Canada. I have made it very clear that the negotiator's mandate is not beyond that which I stated in this House. Again, they are scaremongering and raising issues that have not ever been advanced at the negotiating table.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS—FORTHCOMING VISIT OF FRENCH PRESIDENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, President Mitterrand said today, when questioned about his trip to Canada and the fishing dispute:

> It is my intention to raise the issue with the people I will be talking to. Someone may be right and someone may be wrong. I hope reason will prevail.

I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if it is not time the Government informed the French that, if reason is to prevail, the French should at least be reasonable and that it is completely unreasonable to demand a 200-mile zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon while they demanded and received, only 10 years ago, a six-mile zone around the Channel Islands because those islands were off their coast. Now that the shoe is on the other foot, they are trying to give us the boot.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Hon. Member rise with his bright red puff in his pocket, I thought we were going to be treated to another of his dramatic shows. We instead heard a—

Mr. Crosbie: He poufed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I cannot do better than my hon. colleague, the Minister of Transport. Nor would the kind of attitude the Hon. Member adopts, an attitude of playing to the grandstands, help us in the negotiations under way with France over a matter that we know and will be treating in the discussions with the President of France as highly important to Canada.

The Hon. Member can take assurance in the fact that in the discussions we will have with the President of France during his historic visit here next week, the Government of Canada will be vigorously, assertively and consistently defending the interests of Canadian fishermen and other Canadian interests.

ISSUANCE OF LICENCES TO CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, for the first time this year the Government has outlawed Canadian fishermen from a portion of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland where the American fleet can fish all it wants without fear of being arrested. For the first time, the Government has removed fishing licences from Canadians on the South Coast of Newfoundland and issued them temporary permits only last month. Yet the French can fish all they want out to 200 miles.

If this is to be the laissez-faire attitude of the policy toward the French and the Americans, will the Government now give back the licences that were removed this year to Canadian fishermen so they can at least fish where the French fish and the Americans fish without fear of being arrested? Our fishermen are being French-filleted and Yankee-doodled.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that's better than being poufed. The Minister of Fisheries is not in the House at the moment. I will take that question as notice and will get back to the Hon. Member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I don't want to pouf and I don't want to puff, and I don't really care about the question of the Hon. Member from Gander—Gleason—Twillingate. Seriously, to the Minister for External Affairs, is there on the agenda with the President of France in his most important visit any suggestion at all that it is time France got rid of the last relic of its empire and that there be some devolution of St. Pierre and Miquelon to Canada under the proper processes so that we do not have to worry about fishing quotas or mineral resources and we will get back to what is properly ours?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is not on my agenda and I would be considerably surprised were it on the agenda of the President of France.

Mr. Waddell: I suppose we could trade the Turks and Caicos with the French.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members are interested in these novel suggestions but a lot of Members want to ask questions. I ask that questions be put clearly, succinctly, and that the answers be appropriately framed.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—POSSIBILITY OF OTHER BIDS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. He is quoted as saying on Monday that other companies can now bid for Dome. Is this position not now inconsistent? He is now getting involved in this matter as he should have been all along. If he is serious about this is he prepared to take positive measures to ensure that other Canadian companies can bid for Dome without prohibitive lawsuits from Amoco?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it happens that I read the press as the Hon. Member should do himself. It is all over the country. I am sure those corporations have good lawyers and they can answer the question.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF CERTAIN CANADIAN COMPANIES OFFERING TO BUY DOME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

A number of Canadian companies including TransCanada PipeLines, Imperial Oil, Husky and Petro-Canada may be making a bid to purchase Dome. Is the Minister prepared to consider such a bid and is he prepared to help these companies? We want a Canadian solution. Does the Minister also want a Canadian solution?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't think the Minister of Energy owns Dome, so I fail to see why these companies would make any proposals about Dome to the Minister of Energy. They know perfectly well where to go if they want to make a bid for Dome.

As for the future of such proposals, it is entirely up to the people in charge of Dome to decide whether they like them or not.

NARCOTICS

INCREASE IN DRUG ABUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In September of 1986 the Prime Minister said we had a drug epidemic in Canada. I did not agree with him at that time but shortly thereafter the principal of a Mississauga high school told me that 50 per cent of the students I spoke to that day were using drugs.

I know $50 billion from the sale of illegal drugs is laundered each year in North America. I have since found out there are many drug-related gangland slayings around the city of Toronto. As a former member of the RCMP and on behalf of many concerned parents I would ask when is the Government going to do something about this abhorrent situation, and what is it going to do?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is essential that all Members understand the importance of this issue, the importance the Prime Minister placed on it, and the public profile he gave to it. Since that statement was made I and other Members of the House have been confronted on this issue by parents and people who work with youth. There has been very close co-operation between the federal Government, the provinces, and those agencies working on drug and alcohol addiction. We believe that is a good plan. We intend to unveil it across the country next week.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I am certain he would agree that the union and management at the Saint John Shipyard ought to be congratulated for their good and efficient work on the first phase of the frigate program. Can he indicate to the House, and particularly to the people of Saint John, whether or not the Government is still committed to the second phase of that program whereby six additional frigates will be built in Canada by Canadians, and that the decision will be made before October, 1987?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I certainly join with my hon. friend in congratulating the workers at Saint John Shipyard on the fine work they are doing. I have heard directly from them, my colleague the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, the Premier of New Brunswick, as well as the Mayor of Saint John. They all made the case that the Saint John Shipyard is capable of doing superb work.

We will be announcing the architecture of the new Canadian Navy in the defence White Paper which will be coming out very shortly. My hon. friend will have his answer at that time.

REQUEST THAT SECOND PHASE BE AWARDED TO SAINT JOHN SHIPYARD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, there is high unemployment in Atlantic Canada. The Saint John Shipyard has the human and technical resources, as well as a cost advantage that other bidders do not have. Given that, does the Minister not think it in the best interests of Canada and regional equality that the entire second phase of the frigate program be awarded to Saint John so that the industrial benefits are distributed more equally throughout Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated we will be giving a clear indication of our intentions with regard to SRP II when the defence White Paper is released in a few days. I simply want to underscore again the appreciation we have for the fine work being done in Saint John at the present time.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION INITIATIVE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister said the western diversification initiative would be announced at the earliest possible moment. I have here a leaked letter from the Minister of DRIE which he was planning to send out to some business people in western Canada to start consultation, with 30 key business leaders. The letter has not yet been sent out, but there are supposed to be consultations between April 22 and June 12 according to another leaked document I have.

Since this letter has not yet gone out and the consultations have not yet started I want to know why the unacceptable delay? Why has this important project been stalled? Does he not know we have very serious economic problems in western Canada? Why are you pushing us around like that? We want action now.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would agree that it is not customary for a cabinet Minister to comment on a so-called leaked letter that was planned to be sent out by anyone.

Mr. Nystrom: Maybe the Government should develop the custom of at least answering the questions put by the Opposition.

Mr. Crosbie: Give us a sensible question.

CONSULTATIONS CONDUCTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a copy of a western diversification report or questionnaire used by public servants when they conducted a survey of western Canadian businesses. I understand a questionnaire of several pages is now being completed with about 24 different sector groups.

Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister could answer the first question and at the same time tell us why, during this round of consultations, the Government is planning to consult only with the business community in western Canada? Why not consult as well with provincial Governments, municipalities, the farm sector, trade unions and others across the west? Why only with the business community at this stage?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's question appalling. This Government has consulted with provincial Governments on a continuing basis. As a matter of fact, we are criticized every day from across the way for consulting too much with provincial Governments. Some have suggested we are giving away too much federal power to the provinces. The fact is that consultations have gone on.

As to responding to questions, if the Hon. Member put a thoughtful question I would certainly answer it. Hypothetical questions are not the kind of questions that I or any Minister, or even the Member I am sure, would like to answer.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

TEACHING OF FRENCH IN DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—BIDDING OFFERS—ABSENCE OF PARTICIPATION BY QUEBEC FIRMS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services, perhaps I might direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. It has to do with certain regional industrial development aspects which I raised yesterday. I should like to ask the Minister why Quebec firms specializing in this field—newspaper articles refer, among others, to Matrox, DIL International, Technogram—were not invited to bid on the software contract concerning the teaching of French in the Department of National Defence. I should like to know why they were not even invited to bid on this major contract valued at more than $700,000.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE JOBS AT LÉVIS-LAUZON SHIPYARDS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Another question, Mr. Speaker, again related to regional development. The Minister responsible for this Department being absent, perhaps I might direct my question to the Prime Minister because it concerns the important Lévis-Lauzon region. I learned over the weekend that there are only 400 workers left at the Lauzon shipyards, and that half of them are going to be laid off very soon. If we go back a few years to early September 1984 when this Government came into office, 1,500 Lévis-Lauzon region workers had jobs at the shipyards.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister what the Government is waiting for to award a contract and begin work on the Caribou II ferry, which might provide employment for these Lévis-Lauzon workers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the Lévis-Lauzon region is now lower than it was on September 17, 1984, much lower. I should think my friend would agree with me that this is due mainly to federal contract award initiatives in the greater Quebec City metropolitan area, and particularly in that region. The federal Government will be taking action in a number of cases precisely to lower even more the unacceptably high unemployment rate in that region and maintain wide-ranging activities on a regional basis. We will be making statements to that effect in the not too distant future.

VIA RAIL

MAINTENANCE FACILITY PROJECTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns his statement in the House yesterday when he said, in response to a question by the Hon. Member for Papineau with respect to VIA Rail:

> We will continue with new maintenance facilities, including facilities in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax.

Does this statement mean that the postponement of those new facilities in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax has ended and the building of these facilities will commence? If so, when?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement means exactly what it says, that because of the additional funding which we are now providing for VIA Rail, VIA Rail will be able to go forward with its plans to construct maintenance facilities in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and Halifax. It will have to produce a plan for my approval and it will have to be part of its fiscal and annual plan. All those procedures will have to be followed.

It means that we are giving VIA the financial wherewithal to go forward with these maintenance facilities, including the completion of the construction of the facilities at Toronto and Montreal.

CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES—LENGTH OF TRAINS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate the Minister giving us a bit more detail about the timeframe he envisages for beginning these projects because it is certainly something that would be economically significant for western Canada as well as Atlantic Canada.

Perhaps the Minister could elaborate on that and, while doing so, tell us whether the Government intends to give any instruction to VIA with respect to its plans to shorten its train this summer, at the very time when there is increased demand for passenger rail service in Canada? We are told that VIA is planning to have a 14-car train instead of its usual 21-car train. Will the Government do anything about that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any more details in connection with the construction of maintenance facilities until I have met with VIA Rail and received its latest plans and schedule. The additional funding we are providing is over a five-year period and VIA will have to bring forward a plan which indicates where, when, and how they will proceed.

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, it is not that VIA Rail plans to shorten its trains this summer; it plans not to lengthen them. It will not add cars to its train services. What I am saying is 100 per cent accurate: it is not shortening the trains, it will simply not lengthen them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT EMBASSY BE REOPENED IN BEIRUT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question which is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerns the Middle East. In 1985 the Government designated May 6 as Canada-Lebanon Day. During recent celebrations with the Lebanese community here in Ottawa, strong pleas were made for the Government to reopen its embassy in Beirut.

We all recognize the terrible tragedies that are still occurring in Beirut and in the Middle East. However, is the Government giving any consideration to reopening our embassy in Beirut in order to allow Canadians of Lebanese origin more easily and effectively to reunite their families here in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question and for the constant interest that he and the Minister of Public Works and others in the House have shown in the matter of our situation in Lebanon. We took the decision to close our embassy there because we thought it was not safe to maintain it open. Circumstances in Lebanon have not changed since that decision was taken.

IMMIGRATION LIAISON OPERATION PROPOSED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Minister's response, would it be possible for the Government to consider setting up an immigration liaison operation with the British Embassy or another embassy in Beirut in order to make it easier for Lebanese people who want to come to Canada to join Canadians of Lebanese origin?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am naturally prepared to consider that. I would not want my remarks to be taken as any more commitment than to consider that proposal. However, we will look at that as a means to supplement the service that we now try to extend to a city where it is not possible for us to maintain an embassy.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—FEDERAL JOB TRANSFERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that northern Ontario has faced a very difficult time in the last couple of years with losses in the steel, forestry, and the mining industries. Will he explain why the Government is making the situation worse by transferring and cutting out hundreds of federal government jobs which not only take away wages in northern Ontario but take away services? Why has the Province of Ontario been able to transfer 1,200 jobs, with whole departments of government, into northern Ontario while the federal Government is transferring jobs out?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated in the House before, the northern Ontario initiative is in its final stages of preparation. I have indicated on previous occasions that, in close co-operation with the Solicitor General, a program will be announced very soon which I believe will do much to establish a firm economic foundation for northern Ontario, which is something that had been sadly lacking during the previous administration.

TIMING OF RECOVERY PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that the Government will change its policies in this recovery program because we have lost some 450 jobs as a result of the Canada-U.S. export tax deal, lost hundreds of jobs in the steel industry at the tube mill at Sault Ste. Marie because of the energy policy of the Government, and our service industry has been hurt because of the cut-backs in the Small Craft Harbours Program? Will the Minister tell us today the date of the recovery program so that northern Ontario can begin to improve rather than decline as it has in the last two and one-half years?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, let me draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that 46 per cent of the new jobs have been created in the Province of Ontario since we became the Government.

Mr. Foster: Southern Ontario.

Mr. Mazankowski: I agree that a number of them have been created in southern Ontario. The fact is that we recognize that there is this regional imbalance to which the Prime Minister has referred on many occasions. We are addressing that.

I should also remind the Hon. Member, and perhaps he might advise his colleagues, that one of the best ways of securing a stable and durable future for northern Ontario is to obtain a bilateral trade arrangement with the United States to ensure that we would have—

Mr. Axworthy: Like softwood lumber.

Mr. Mazankowski: —to ensure that we would prevent the kinds of actions as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry suggested with regard to the softwood lumber issue. We need in place an equitable and workable dispute resolving mechanism, together with all the other components of an agreement which would enhance and secure our trading relationship with the United States. That would be in the best interests of northern Ontario and that is what we are trying to pursue.

LAPRADE FUND

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DELAY IN USING MONEY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, as Minister responsible for the Laprade Fund.

Last week, when I was in Victoriaville, I was told that although last November it was announced that the assets of the Laprade Fund were no longer frozen, there had been no grants from the Fund in the past six months.

Could the Minister give a reason for the delay and inform the House when the Government intends to start using the $87 million in the Fund to promote investment and job creation in the regions concerned?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that the Minister responsible for the Laprade Fund is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, since the Fund comes under his department.

As a regional Minister, however, I welcome the opportunity to answer this question. As I said before, there are still $87.3 million in the Laprade Fund. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has prepared criteria that have been accepted by the Treasury Board. It seems that the Department has already received about 80 applications that are now being considered, and as I said at the time, the Laprade Fund being a supplementary fund, it has been possible to accommodate a number of these applications through existing programs.

UTILIZATION OF FUND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister has failed to explain the six-month delay. Could he give the House the assurance that the Laprade Fund will not, as was the case under the previous Government, be used to provide election goodies but will be spent now, to create jobs and to provide for regional development, now, and not in 1989?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that first of all, there has been no unnecessary delay. In fact, we have been very concerned about avoiding the excesses of the previous Government and its wasteful spending, which did not go towards creating permanent jobs but jobs that disappeared after eight, ten or twelve weeks.

We want to create permanent jobs in the region and involve the region in its own economic development.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOVIET UNION—FAMILY REUNIFICATION RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During his most recent visit to the German Democratic Republic, the Minister called upon East Germany to relax family reunification restrictions and to pay compensation for properties seized by the Nazis during World War II.

As the Minister will know, many eastern Europeans including Ukrainians, Poles, Czechs, Slovaks, Hungarians, Croations, Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians and others were the victims of genocide and property liquidation in their respective countries at the hands of the Nazi regime and the Soviet Union.

Is the Minister prepared to make similar demands on the Soviet Government to relax restrictions barring family reunification and to provide compensation to Canadians for crimes committed against them in their homelands during World War II?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have raised those questions with representatives of the Soviet Union including, most recently, when Mr. Shevardnadze was here. I want to make clear a distinction of which the Hon. Member and some other Members of the House will be aware. This Government does not recognize de jure the annexation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union. Nonetheless, without prejudice to that legal position, we have raised the question of claims and compensation with the Soviet Union. To this stage there has been no positive reply by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to share with Hon. Members the observation that both yesterday and today we have been well under the usual number of questions we are usually able to deal with. I am considering what we can do to improve that, but I would ask Hon. Members to consider the matter between now and tomorrow and we will see if we can do a little better tomorrow. I ask for the indulgence and co-operation of Hon. Members.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is presenting a committee report. I know that all Hon. Members would want to listen carefully to her presentation.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): This report deals with the trade function of the Department of External Affairs.

In view of the importance of international trade to the Canadian economy and the assistance provided to exporters by the Department of External Affairs, the committee considers it essential that trade officers respond effectively and comprehensively to requests from the business community. The committee is concerned with the department's ad hoc approach to defining levels of service and has recommended clear definition and costing of the levels of service at each post abroad.

The committee is also concerned with the high turnover of senior managers and notes that in the last two years there have been four Deputy Ministers for international trade. This kind of rapid turnover cannot fail to interfere with accountability and sound management. The committee has recommended that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) give consideration to this practice.

The relationship between the Department of External Affairs and other departments is critical to promoting Canadian exports. Departments such as the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion can provide sectoral and technical expertise. The committee notes there have been difficulties in interdepartmental working relationships and recommends that this situation be urgently addressed.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) the committee requests a comprehensive Government response to the recommendation in paragraph 13 of the report.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from hundreds, if not thousands, of Canadians in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan, to point out a few of the provinces. They say that the proposal of the federal Government to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post will result in cutbacks, deterioration of service, and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadians.

These proposed measures have already resulted in the closure of many rural post offices, the cancellation of routes in rural communities, which means a drastic reduction in service for many Canadians.

Postal rate increases affect all Canadians while basic services are not being improved. The federal Government has not enabled Canada Post Corporation to pursue revenue generating services.

The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of Canada Post Corporation and to abandon its policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural postal routes.

They ask that Parliament direct the Government to ensure that universal access is available to all refugee claimants who come to Canada, and also a fair hearing of an appeal. In duty bound the petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that all questions stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): About questions on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he might not give us the assurance that, when a Member asks that a question be answered within 45 days, that question will indeed be answered. I noticed that five questions have now been on the Order Paper for more than 45 days, and I know the Hon. Member will do his utmost to try to obtain the answers. It would be greatly appreciated if, when Members ask questions requesting an answer within 45 days, every effort were to be made to answer them. Otherwise there is no remedy, there is no grievance, and the Standing Orders are not very helpful.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Parliamentary Secretary to hold his Department officials responsible—and I am very serious about this—for providing adequate answers to the questions. Otherwise the Order Paper will again become loaded with questions and, as you know, we have managed to cut down the number of questions since the new Standing Orders came into force, to the great satisfaction of everybody concerned.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the provision for answers by the Government within 45 days was one of the provisions which we brought in under parliamentary reform. We think it has worked reasonably well up until now. I realize that there are two or three questions on the Order Paper that have not been answered within that period of time. I can tell my hon. friend that I have been involved in trying to obtain these answers.

Part of our problem with respect to these questions occurs when the answers come from a range of departments; when we try to get an answer from one department it seems to be easier than when we try to get it from a range of departments. However, I will take a specific look at those five questions and try to get back to my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST THAT MISTAKE DURING QUESTION PERIOD BE CORRECTED

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. During Oral Question Period the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said that there were 400 employees at the Lauzon shipyards. He misinformed the House, there are 750 employees at the Lauzon shipyards today. It is a mistake of 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have it corrected.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) should have raised his point of order at the appropriate time. In my opinion, it is a little bit late to raise a point of order following Oral Question Period. He could have done so at the appropriate time, and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who was here then could have properly responded to the Hon. Member who is taking this opportunity to set the record straight. I think he should have risen right after Oral Question Period, as provided under the Standing Orders, Mr. Speaker.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 13, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney that Bill C-37, an Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: When the House last considered this motion the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) had the floor.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, when we last examined Bill C-37 I was talking about some of the concerns that were raised in committee. I covered some of the issues at that time. However, there are still other issues which I wish to cover.

As those who have been following the debate will know we spent a considerable amount of time in committee on this Bill. In fact, we spent some six weeks. We listened to a number of witnesses from across Canada who are affected by the Bill.

One of the areas of most concern raised in committee is that of certain anomalies in the Canada-United States Memorandum of Understanding. Several groups, particularly the remanufacturers, have pointed out, and rightfully so, that some of their products are not included in Appendix "B" of the Understanding and are therefore subject to the export charge on the final value added price of the product, rather than on the value of the softwood lumber content alone.

• (1520)

The Memorandum of Understanding specifically provides for the subsequent addition of further manufactured products to Appendix "B", with the agreement of both governments.

The Government has acted quickly under this provision in consulting with a wide range of industry representatives in developing a list of additional products for inclusion in Appendix "B".

The original list included in Appendix "B" was the result of consultation with the solicitor for the Remanufacturers' Association. It obviously was not a complete list. We all agree on that. However, it was the list presented to the negotiators by the solicitor for the Remanufacturers' Association. The solicitor's letter, containing that list, was filed at the hearing and made public.

With 20-20 hindsight vision, I guess it could be said that they could have consulted on a much wider basis; but, they took this list as the list presented from the Remanufacturers' Association, through their solicitor.

Just to follow along on this particular problem, and it is a problem, on February 13, Canadian officials asked the U.S. administration to agree to the addition of these remanufactured products to Appendix "B". Since that time the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) have continued to press for a favourable response to what we consider to be a legitimate request, one that is in full conformity with both the spirit and the letter of the Memorandum of Understanding.

The Minister for International Trade raised this issue in some detail during her meeting with U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter in Ottawa on April 6 last, and the Government, of course, has been continuing since that time to make all efforts to obtain accommodation for Canadian companies unfairly penalized through the lack of a positive response by the U.S. administration. However, I might say that at their latest meeting, a meeting held in Europe on other subjects, this matter was again raised by the Minister for International Trade with Mr. Yeutter, and the indications we had from the United States were positive. The negotiations are ongoing through the course of the debate on the motion for the third reading of the Bill and its eventual passage, which hopefully will come today, though that still remains to be seen.

The Government has also moved quickly to address, as far as possible, the concerns expressed over the fact that only 20 companies granted exclusions by the Commerce Department in the preliminary countervail decision of October 16 last are specifically excluded from the export charge as well.

In the discussions I have already mentioned, between U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter and the Minister for International Trade, as well as discussions between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his counterpart in the U.S., Mr. Shultz, we have asked that the list of exempted companies be expanded by including a limited number of companies that made timely requests to the U.S. Commerce Department during the countervail investigation, which companies, we believe, would have received exclusions but for want of a small amount of additional information.

We have also taken up the question of Canadian lumber products processed from logs or lumber imported from the United States. These were all requests presented to the committee. At the end of the committee hearings the committee made requests of the Minister on certain subjects, and she has followed through on every one, and is continuing to press for the appropriate changes in the Memorandum of Understanding—and the Memorandum of Understanding allows for that type of negotiation.

I might say that arriving at an exemption for the 20 companies listed in Appendix "B" was a difficult negotiation. The Americans did not want any companies excluded. They wanted all companies to be subject to the export tax. Had all companies been excluded, there would not be quite the controversy we have today. However, because of the regional disparity question in eastern Canada, something which this Government is extremely concerned about, the inclusion of these 20 companies on Appendix "B" was pursued.

The companies that were eventually excluded account for about 92 per cent of the export lumber into the United States from the Maritime region. Because of that, we insisted that those 20 companies be included on Appendix "B", and that was agreed to in the negotiations. We insisted too that the other companies be included, but could only reach agreement on those 20.

Not all of those companies are located in eastern Canada; they are located all across Canada. But those that are located in the Maritime region account for some 92 per cent of the exports coming out of that region, and that fact was taken into consideration in arriving at that decision.

Bill C-37 provides the regulatory authority to implement changes of the nature that I have discussed, changes which the committee has requested of the Minister, as soon as they are agreed upon.

Certain groups feel that additional products or regions should be entirely exempt from the export charge, and the Maritime region is one region that has been discussed as an area that should be totally exempt.

During the original negotiations, we did in fact press for additional exclusions, not only of companies, but also of products and regions. This did not prove to be negotiable, however, and there are no signs that it would be any more negotiable now.

Industry groups have also expressed their views on a wide range of administrative issues; that is to say, how the Department of National Revenue will administer the legislation. All groups have noted the excellent co-operation received from government departments in consulting with industry to develop administrative guidelines. To my knowledge, most of the administrative concerns have been addressed to the satisfaction of both the Government and the industry. The Government intends to continue this consultative process, as the system moves along.

The net proceeds of the export charge will of course be remitted to the provinces which, it is hoped, will invest in the future of Canada by ploughing some of the money back into reforestation, silviculture, worker training, and other related areas.

I have touched on some of the important issues raised by concerned Canadians. As can be seen, the Government has been sensitive to these concerns and has moved quickly to rectify or reduce inequities where it has been able to do so. As I noted earlier, many of the anomalies, such as exclusions and listings in Appendix "B", will no doubt become less significant as provincial replacement measures come on stream.

The effect of this tax is difficult, as yet, to judge. Lumber shipments to the United States in the first quarter of this year are up 15 per cent. However, there are many factors that go into that, as those who have a greater knowledge of the industry than I will be aware—and I look across the House to my hon. friend.

I know that the strike had some effect. The strike was settled in December, and what the figures show is that February shipments were higher than January shipments, with March shipments being down. It depends, of course, on housing starts in the United States. If the current level of housing starts is maintained, we will see lumber shipments into the United States continue at a high level.

It is interesting to note that the American lumber interests felt that we had too much of the U.S. market and that this tax might curtail it somewhat. However, according to the reports, the users of lumber in the United States prefer Canadian lumber. They consider it to be far superior in quality, with far less wastage than experienced with U.S. lumber. Even with the added cost, the preference seems to be for Canadian lumber. It is considered to be a far superior product, and in many instances the builders in the U.S. are continuing to use it. I think it is a little unfair to say that this has had little effect, no effect, or a lot of effect on the particular industry shipping softwood lumber to the United States.

In all fairness, I might say that some sawmills have closed down, especially in northern Ontario. However, of the mills which have closed down I am somewhat suspect of one that closed a week after the announcement, one which has been wondering for the last two years whether to keep its doors open. The situation involving another was much the same and it closed a month later. It found this to be a very easy excuse to use to close down what was an unprofitable operation before the tax ever came in.

In conclusion, I say in all sincerity that we have had good debates on the issue. I have learned a tremendous amount about the lumber industry in the last six to seven months. I think we have given it a very good airing. We had a long debate on second reading and spent a considerable amount of time in committee. They were good meetings. We now have a Bill before us which is ready for passage. As a matter of fact, the industry is now encouraging us to get the Bill through as soon as possible.

However, if I think of the much broader scale, the softwood lumber dispute is a graphic illustration of why we need better rules governing our trade with the United States. Protectionist pressures are strong down there. The trade Bills which they are passing in Congress are frightening to a country like Canada which does not have a large domestic market to absorb its products. Thirty per cent of everything we produce in Canada is exported, and it is frightening to see some of the legislation coming out of our largest trading partner. As a matter of fact, the largest trading bloc in the world today is that of Canada and the United States.

It is our resolve in these very difficult ongoing negotiations to try to create an instrument which could handle these disputes in what we consider to be a much quicker, much less expensive, and much fairer way than is the case now. That is one very important part of the ongoing trade negotiations and that is why I feel it is critical that they succeed. However, I repeat what has been said many times right from the start. If it is not a good deal for Canada, then we do not sign the deal.

We have seen this particular action coming along in a number of commodities. Either today or in the not too distant future we will be dealing with amendments to a Bill on steel. As Canadians we should all be concerned about these actions and support negotiations where we can put into effect a comprehensive trade agreement which will allow us to maintain the markets we have and in fact enhance them.

I thank Hon. Members for the co-operation they have shown in this particular matter. As I say, I am hopeful that sometime today the Bill will receive third reading.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are no questions.

Mr. Fulton: Could I seek unanimous consent to ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to one of the remarks the Parliamentary Secretary just made in terms of the corporations which are exempt in the Maritimes. The Hon. Member said that those companies which are exempt in Atlantic Canada produced 92 per cent of the softwood exported into the United States from the Maritimes area.

In passing Bill C-37, as it is now, would the Hon. Member not agree that what it really means to hundreds of small producers, many of whom appeared as witnesses before the committee, those who produce about 10 per cent of the Maritimes wood going into the U.S. market, is that the product which they have historically been shipping into the U.S. will now, in all likelihood, be milled and sold by corporations which have the exemption and that in fact the dozen or so in Atlantic Canada which have the corporate exemption will simply pick up that other part of the market because there is no way the smaller producers will be able to compete against the 15 per cent advantage of those companies?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely why the Council of Forest Ministers is working right now on replacement measures to this particular Bill so that those companies, as quickly as possible, will not be affected.

As the Hon. Member knows, the Maritimes area was not an offending area according to the preliminary findings in the United States.

The Council of Forest Ministers is meeting. I believe its next meeting from which there will be a report will be in June. I cannot give the exact date, but I think it will be in early June, if I am not mistaken. It is making progress in that regard. We are hoping the replacement measures will take place as quickly as possible so that those industries will not be too adversely affected.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Parliamentary Secretary. Should the Bill pass today and become law, what bargaining equipment will there be for dealing with the U.S.—for dealing with Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. administration, the U.S. coalition, and in fact the President on this issue—in terms of remanufactured products, in terms of logs coming from American lands to be milled in Canadian mills and sent back, in terms of wholesalers who are acting as middle people for wood moving from exempt companies on its way to the United States, and in terms of all other problems which have been raised since the MOU was signed on December 30?

What is left? I believe Mike Apsey was the one who was quoted as saying that obviously the Americans will be looking for a pound of flesh every time the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) tries to use Clause 15 of Bill C-37, goes down to the U.S. and says that she would like a particular corporate exemption, a regional exemption, a particular remanufactured product added, U.S. logs exempted, or wholesalers exempted.

On what ground can the Minister or the Government of Canada stand in getting the U.S. to agree? I have always assumed that the reason we have waited four and one half months since December 30 to come to third reading of the Bill was that the Government had some grand strategy to straighten out the terrible errors which occurred on December 30.

What can the Hon. Member, on behalf of the Government, give us on this side of the House? What about those tens of thousands of Canadian workers and companies drawn in under the 15 per cent export tax in a way which was never meant, either by the original action of the U.S. coalition, or in the October 16 preliminary determination, or in the period leading to December 30? They were sort of corralled in with B.C., Alberta, Ontario, and Quebec. What bargaining initiatives are there? How likely are we to see Clause 15 used to remedy the incredible unfairness toward so many parts of the forest sector?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I am not privy to the ongoing negotiations, as the Hon. Member knows full well. We have some very capable people who are doing that. It is their feeling that some very positive results will be coming out of the negotiations, the discussions which have been going on over the last number of months. We have not been sitting back and waiting for things to happen. They have been happening all along. I think the Hon. Member will be pleased with the results of the negotiations which have gone on over the last period of time. They have not come to fruition for one reason. It is that the Bill has not yet been passed. That is part of the ongoing negotiating process.

Let me just say a couple of other things. I do not want to take too much issue with the Hon. Member's preamble, but there were some things in it that were very NDPish, very pointed. The Hon. Member says that a disaster happened on December 30. I cannot look at it in that way. I think a disaster would have happened had we let it go to final decision in the United States after the preliminary decision was handed down; that would really have been a different kettle of fish.

I feel that we have kept the money in Canada, we have kept the management of our resources in Canada and that is very important. That was a major reason that the negotiations took place and that the decision was made to go this route.

To say that the Bill was held up for four months as a result is a little unfair as well. We had second reading in January and into February. We had six weeks of committee hearings which went on until near the end of March. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as any Member of this House knows, the parliamentary legislative schedule of this Government is a heavy one. To get space for a Bill to be debated on the floor of the House is somewhat difficult.

If the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) were fair, he would also admit that I postponed third reading of this Bill a couple of times to accommodate him on his trips to his constituency, or wherever, and also to accommodate my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who asked that the Bill not come up on certain days because he would be away from the House of Commons. There were a number of reasons that it has taken this long to get the Bill to the floor and debated. Opposition days are another reason. Let me say this to my hon. friend; now the Bill is here, we should get it through as soon as possible.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, third reading is always a somewhat curious time in parliamentary annals. It is the time when battles have been fought, amendments presented, won or lost, and all the heat of confrontation is over. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, intimated, obviously in kindly contemplation of the incongruities of being a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), it is time to take a philosophical approach to all of this. God knows, there is no point in taking a practical approach, because it does not work.

I will attempt to follow in the same vein and use third reading debate to draw some lessons from the softwood lumber case to try to examine this matter in the longer term Canadian perspective. I want to ask some serious questions about the meaning of our trade relationships with the U.S. and the rest of the world. What does it mean in terms of the fundamental issue we debate almost every day in this House, namely, the ability of this country to maintain a degree of control on decisions over our own resources and economy, and ultimately the judgment that we can expect from this Government when it comes to crucial, economic and social matters?

I am reminded when I think back to December 30 of the famous statement uttered by the Minister for International Trade upon her return from Hawaii, having had tough negotiations, that "This is a good deal for Canada". I think that statement will go down in the annals of history, along with the statement that it was a good deal when Manhattan Island was sold for 30 pieces of trinkets or beads. The Minister's statement is probably almost comparable in impact to the statement of the general manager of the Boston Red Socks who sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees because he did not think Babe Ruth could pitch any longer, and it is probably almost as significant in consequence as the contract entered into by the people of Canada with the Conservative Government in 1984. I suppose we could even elevate it to the whole question of the sacred trust.

Mr. McDermid: You are still smarting.

Mr. Axworthy: One of my colleagues has reminded me that the statement probably even equates with that all-time consummate deal-making which Nevil Chamberlain entered into in 1939 when he returned to England and said, "I have won the peace". Our Minister for International Trade unquestionably has a quieter place in history as having been one of the great all-time negotiators when it comes to making deals for Canada.

As we have gone through stage by stage of this Bill, second reading, committee hearings, we have seen a whole series of pratfalls, beginning with perhaps the most serious—maybe it was the beginning of the end—when the Minister and this Government summarily dismissed the consultation and involvement of the lumber industry in trying to arrive at a deal. Surely to get an understanding of trade matters it would be wise to draw upon the advice, knowledge and information of those being attacked by their American counterparts. But the Government went ahead and negotiated a deal totally and completely without any form of discussion or advice from the industry itself.

One only has to read the quotes upon quotes given to us by various representatives of industry at committee to recognize all the problems we tried to correct in the Bill; the problem of exemption in the Maritime industries, the problem faced by the remanufacturing lumber industry, the definition of what is a subsidy and the whole problem of stumpage fees. These are all the consequence of that negotiation being carried out in isolation, without participation.

The paradox is that the Government said, "We are the friends of the industry. We are the friends of the private sector". Yet when it comes to a crucial deal affecting a multi-billion dollar industry, the Government cannot quite get together with the industry to work out a common approach. That was mistake number one, Mr. Speaker.

Mistake number two, which is still being recorded, and to which the Parliamentary Secretary alluded in his opening remarks a week ago, was that the Government felt it had no choice. That again has become a famous political cliché in the history of Canada, "I had no choice." The Government did have a choice when it came to dealing with the countervailing initiative by the United States. It had a choice not to knuckle under and surrender to the blackmail and intimidation of the United States and its lumber industry. The Government had the choice to pursue the matter through the U.S. trade forums and through the international trade forums. We have been told time and again that the Government's decision was made on the best advice of some unknown group of invisible advisors—not the industry because the industry said the Government should go through the trade forums—hidden somewhere in the Lester B. Pearson building, that we could not win. That shows indomitable courage and spirit; giving up before trying. If they had looked at the record they would have discovered that there was a very clear possibility of winning the battle by using already existing trade remedy measures.

I remind Members opposite that we have taken some 10 countervail cases to the GATT in the past seven or eight years and we have won seven of them. The experts to whom I spoke said this case was the best we could ever have taken to the GATT. It had the best possible argument because what the United States was doing was claiming that a domestic policy, clearly initiated by legally elected governments of Canada, was unfair, as interpreted by the U.S. administration. That particular precedent, which the Americans were establishing, would have ramifications for all resource industries, not just Canada's but all other countries. That was contrary to a subsidy definition under the General Agreement of Tariffs and Trade in the international trade rules.

This Government, for reasons it only attributes to its faceless advisers, refused to take that route. The Government refused to go to GATT and bring the matter before a trade panel drawn from countries not involved in the case. Instead the Government said, with an incredible sense of irony, that we have won a victory because Canada is now imposing a $600 million tax on itself. No wonder no one was out dancing in the streets with that announcement. We were putting a tax on ourselves in order to save the victory while we refused to follow other alternatives.

What is even more tragic about that is that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said we chose that course because we did not want to acknowledge that there would be a precedent set. The Memorandum of Understanding contains a portion, written in some kind of legal language, indicating that it is without prejudice and that this will not be accepted as being a legal precedent showing that the United States has a right to tell Canada how to run its resources. However, the U.S. trade Bill that is presently being passed by the House of Representatives and debated by the Senate uses this softwood lumber countervail case and Canada's surrender to it as justification for introducing in the trade Bill new measures dealing with domestic subsidies.

Rather than winning a victory, our surrender has in fact confirmed in American eyes that we admit that we were wrong and that stumpage fees are in fact a subsidy. Now, U.S. legislators are using that as a clear rationale for writing a new trade Bill applying to all resource industries. That was some victory that was won on December 30. We have only confirmed, substantiated and underlined the American position.

One need only read the statements of Sam Gibbons, Senator Lloyd Bensten and all those distinguished American legislators who are managing the trade Bill through Congress. They are saying that the Canadians have admitted they were wrong, that Canadians have given in and, of course, the Americans were right. Therefore, we now face from the U.S. Congress a trade Bill that will have a devastating impact on all Canadian resource industries because we refused to stand up to them and because we did not use the alternatives available to us.

Mr. McDermid: You mean to tell me that the Bill wouldn't have come in?

Mr. Axworthy: Just for the sake of the record, I will repeat what the Parliamentary Secretary said. He asked if I thought the Bill would not have come in. Yes, it would have come in, but would the particular subsidy provisions that are now in the Bill have been as easily won and accepted in Congress if we had not already conceded the fact back on December 30?

We made Sam Gibbons into a great prophet of trade. We have turned Sam Gibbons and Lloyd Bensten into great wisemen in their own Congress. They are saying, "We told you so," because the Canadians have already admitted guilt on this issue. Rather than providing any antidote to the American position, we in fact have ended up endorsing it.

When the Parliamentary Secretary says on behalf of the Minister that the softwood lumber case is a clear example of why we need to negotiate a free trade deal in order to protect against this contingency, I think it can be excused if women and small children rush into their homes in fear that this is the Government that will be negotiating a free trade deal. If this is what it succeeded in achieving on the single issue of softwood lumber, then we should all be down on our knees praying to God that it does not negotiate the same way when it comes to free trade. Simply giving it all away is not negotiation. That is not skilful trade diplomacy, that is simply submission.

The fact is that we see in the softwood lumber case one of the clarion reasons why Canadians have every right to be deeply concerned about the broader negotiations. It points out that there will be a price to pay. Free trade with the Americans does not come without a price tag. It does not come cost-free.

It was mentioned today in the House of Commons during Question Period that we have seen the Government acceding to U.S. demands for open investment policies in order to get a free trade deal. We have seen the Government surrender on the Patent Act in order to get a free trade deal. We have seen the Government surrender on cultural matters in order to get a free trade deal. We are seeing the price we have to pay, and that is only the beginning of the price that will be exacted in dealing with those trade remedy laws which Senator Bensten, head of the Finance Committee, says will not be changed anyway.

We are weighing the table down with all the give-aways. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has become the Vanna White of Canada. We are in a great big quiz give-away game—turn the wheel and take what you want. I do not know who is advising the Government on trade. Maybe Monty Hall is saying, "Let's make a deal". I do not know where the Government is getting its advice from, but it sure as hell is not going the best way, from our experience, to defend Canadian trade interests against contingency action and against unfair trade initiatives, and that is to ensure that we have an effective, strong, international trade system with rules negotiated by all countries and defended by all countries, rather than back away as we have done. That should be a lesson etched deeply in the memories of Members of the House.

We do have a choice. There is an alternative to Canada-U.S. free trade, just as there was an alternative to the U.S. softwood lumber Bill. However, the Government refuses to use those alternatives and is trying to sell us a bunch of hocus-pocus about what is going on.

Sure, it hurts. The Hon. Member from Calgary is not going to like what I am saying, but he is going to sell out his oil and gas resource industry because of the precedent set by this Bill. He will be answerable to his constituents for that. Under free trade or anything else, no one wants to provide for the kind of give-aways that we are providing for in our resource industries.

Let us test this to see if it really is what I say it is. In committee, we proposed an amendment that, when voted upon, would determine the sincerity of this Government. We had before us a letter written by the Secretary of Commerce and the chief trade negotiator to Stanley Dennison, the major lobbyist for the lumber industry in the United States. In that letter, Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter said quite clearly that they wanted to confirm that any moneys acquired by the Governments of Canada as a result of this tax could not be used for certain specific functions, silviculture, recreation and the building of roads on a direct-grant basis. We raised questions about that and we asked if this did not in fact become a limitation on the sovereignty of Parliament to determine how its tax moneys would be spent.

We were debating the imposition of a major tax on a major industry and surely Parliament must retain the sovereign right to determine how that money should be allocated.

Therefore, we proposed an amendment giving the provinces the authorization to spend the money in exactly those areas where the Baldrige-Yeutter letter said they could not spend it, just to clearly outline and ensure that there was no mistake or ambiguity and that if the provinces want to spend the money on silviculture, recreation or roadbuilding through direct grants to industries, which is done in many jurisdictions, they could do so. We felt that if the Government were serious, it would accept the amendment. It would not hurt, it would only clarify the situation and clear up any ambivalence. The Government defeated that amendment. It rejected it.

What should that tell Canadians and provincial Governments? What does that tell the users of this program? First, it says that we have indeed implicitly accepted a limitation on our sovereignty and that provincial Governments are not free to spend that money in the forest industry as they see fit, but that there are limitations. There are limitations. They know if they contravene the terms then the U.S. President has the right to apply a trade penalty to Canada within 24 hours. It is part of the deal. Why? Because one singularly brilliant part of the negotiations was that we abdicate our right to further recourse to international forums. We said we would not take the softwood lumber case any further. Yet the U.S. President retained the right to use Section 301 and slap a trade penalty on this country any time he sees fit.

• (1600)

Mr. Fulton: Published on January 5.

Mr. Axworthy: As my friend says, the President confirmed that in a letter he sent to Mr. Baldrige.

Let us just put this deal in perspective for a moment. We have limited our spending power. We have given up our right of redress. We have acceded to the application of an American shotgun penalty any time they see fit. What that adds up to, as we said from the day the agreement was signed on December 30, is a clear and compelling reduction in the freedom of action of Canadian Governments. Once again an unholy precedent has been established.

Let me move to another matter which is still totally unresolved. We know from very extensive committee hearings that another catch-22 in the agreement and in this Bill itself is the proposed transition from a direct tax collected by the federal Government to stumpage fee increases in the various provinces involved. We had conflicting evidence about that.

B.C. being the largest lumber exporter by far, their forest industry officials told us that we will require the Government of British Columbia to increase stumpage fees to a level equivalent to the 15 per cent tax, but this would not be a $500 million or $600 million drop in income, it would be a $800 million or $900 million drop, perhaps as high as $1 billion. You cannot apply stumpage fee increases to exports to the U.S. and not apply it to exports to Japan, or even for the domestic market. The increase will apply to all wood products.

Not only are we penalizing the lumber industry, we are penalizing the Canadian home owner who will have to pay an average of $700 or $800 more for housing. We will be applying a penalty to our export of lumber products at a time when we are getting stiff competition from the Swedes and others. In other words, we are making our lumber industry less competitive. Yet the council of Ministers is going ahead.

That also involves a curious kind of negotiation. The Government is negotiating with provincial Ministers who are under pretty clear instructions, I would think, from their Ministers of Finance to make as big a tax grab as possible. Unfortunately, those seated around that negotiating table will not include the Canadian home buyer, the lumber industry or others in the export business. Yet they will be paying the additional freight. I would suggest that kind of negotiation is fraught with incredible complications and conflict.

Another side effect, clearly admitted when we discussed it in committee, is that this will begin to have a push-pull effect on the lumber industry in other parts of Canada. British Columbia, with a very powerful and productive industry, is going to start seeking markets which would normally be supplied by sawmills in Manitoba, northern Ontario and perhaps the East Coast. Those sawmills are much smaller, perhaps a little inefficient, but they provide employment in the regions. That was pointed out several times by my colleague from Algoma and my colleague from Cochrane—Superior. We already know of the lay-off of 450 or so people in northern Ontario. Once the effect of this legislation works its way through the system those smaller companies are going to be displaced from the market and bumped out of business. Once again we have a whole series of ramifications which no one predicted on that fateful day, and Canadians will be paying a very big price.

I also want to refer to the still unresolved problems of remanufacturing. The Parliamentary Secretary indicated in debate today that he hopes for positive results. So do I. Yet hundreds of companies have been caught up unintentionally in the web of this Bill. They will be forced out of business or forced to move their facilities across the border unless the situation is resolved very soon.

Again I point out that when the U.S. brought in its preliminary decision on October 15, secondary or value-added manufacturing was not subject to the countervailing duty. Yet somehow, by December 30, that part of the industry was roped in. A $500 million industry has become hostage to this agreement. We may be able to work our way out of it, goodness knows, but I raise the same question as the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Once the Bill is passed, what leverage do we have? It is clear that we have been caught in a conundrum; if we do not pass the Bill the Americans will not negotiate, but if we do they are going to ask for more.

I can read to you from the statements of Mr. Dennison, the chief lobbyist for the U.S. lumber industry. He said nothing would be done until the legislation is passed. There are things that his coalition wants as well. According to him there are companies completely excluded from the tax who do not deserve to be. Some of them are just wholesalers and he wants them taken off the list. Mr. Dennison is a powerful man. He is the author of this whole business. What are we going to be faced with if he has his way?

Yes, we may be able to provide exclusion, we hope, for some companies in the Maritimes and some remanufacturing companies in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario. Once again, however, we will have to pay a price. The negotiation is not over and the ante will simply be increased to more than they received on December 30. It is another unintended consequence and another lesson we should learn about those negotiations.

• (1610)

I suggest we can also learn from the odyssey of stumbling throughout this process, that in the negotiations dealing with this area we will find ourselves caught up in a series of impacts, influences and consequences that are not immediately visible to the naked eye at the time the document is signed. In the days, weeks and months after the document is signed we will become aware that the price we are paying is that for which the Government had bargained.

That is why I say to Members of the House that we should pay attention to this Bill.

The day the Prime Minister initials a free trade agreement with the President of the United States we will see one of the biggest public relations extravaganzas this country has ever seen. The $12 million slush fund in the Minister's Department will be used in extensive public relations to spread the propaganda that this is a wonderful deal. However, Canadians will learn that the price they will pay is not the one on the agreement, but a price which will become apparent from its consequences.

The primary consequence of such an agreement, as we have seen in this Bill, will be the loss of power and authority of this Parliament and the provincial jurisdictions to make decisions. Our ability as a country to decide on our own economic management will be restricted. We will be giving up our ability to look after our resources, to deal with our environment and to manage our own affairs.

I hope Members of Parliament and all Canadians will consider this Bill very carefully, because there are some very profound and tragic lessons to be learned from the negotiations that led up to this legislation today. One lesson we have learned is that Canadians are in real danger of losing control of their own country.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, while I do not intend to spend all my time berating the Government, I must say that I find it discouraging and somewhat unusual that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) did not appear as lead-off speaker in the third reading debate on this Bill. However, perhaps we should not be too disturbed, considering that last December during the most important period of negotiations in Washington, the Minister was in Hawaii. During the final days of our committee hearings where we had important amendments that I believe the Minister, if anyone, would have understood and accepted, she found it an opportune time to be in New Zealand. Now she has found some other and more pressing place to be than here during this debate to stand up for Canada's largest industry and source of balance of trade.

The entire process in the last three years has demonstrated to me, and I believe those million Canadians who are directly and indirectly involved in Canada's largest industry, the kind of blindness and political naivety of governments when they are dealing with industries that they do not really understand.

It has been pointed out during the debate at second reading and today that a great deal of Canadian sovereignty has been given away.

In the last three years I have travelled throughout the continent to attend meetings in relation to the forest issue. I want to spend a few moments reviewing the history of how we have arrived at this stage today, in placing a 15 per cent export tax against Canadian softwood exported to the United States.

In 1983 we won the case against exactly the same kind of countervail action brought against us by the same coalition from the United States, from the U.S. southeast, from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and California. We won that case because there was a de minimis finding. The U.S. authorities could find no injury of a countervail nature.

By the fall of 1984, a small handful of Members in the House became aware of just how serious and pressing this was when we travelled to the United States and began speaking with American legislators in both the Congress and the U.S. Senate.

Let me take a moment to quickly go through the chronology and evolution of protectionism in the United States and why we should have taken much stronger action in dealing with it back in 1984.

By July 2, 1985, we began to see the real tidal flow of protectionist legislation. The first was Bill 1088 from the House of Representatives, introduced by Mr. Weaver of Oregon. It was a proposal to impose a five-year restriction on lumber imports from Canada, to a maximum of 25 per cent of the U.S. market. Historically, we have had approximately one-third of the U.S. market.

By February 19, we had already seen the House of Representatives Bill 1139 introduced by Mr. Schulze, to impose a 20 per cent duty on all imports from countries restricting trade. That was directed against Canada.

On March 17, at the Shamrock Summit, we saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan in Quebec City, agreeing to place the highest priority to finding mutually acceptable means to reduce and eliminate existing barriers to trade. As a first step they said, "We commit ourselves to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services". Neither the Prime Minister nor the President took much action to live up to that commitment in terms of trade.

Before this legislation, which is at third reading stage today, we had a half century of absolutely unrestricted free trade in softwood and all wood products with the United States. We are the two largest trading partners in the world, and since the days of the Great Depression and Smoot-Holley, we have had absolutely unrestricted free trade in those products.

Protectionism began to accelerate and by March 21, Mr. Bonker of Washington introduced Bill 1648 to redefine "subsidy" to include stumpage. Protectionist Bills began to proliferate. On March 4, Bill HR1950 was introduced by Guarini of New Jersey, which was later replaced by Bill HR3777, the Labour Industry Coalition on International Trade Bill containing natural resource subsidy provisions. Senate Bill S982, the Senate version of Bill 1648, was introduced by Max Baucus. On February 5, Resolution 136 was introduced by McKernan, subsequently followed by Bill 2345 which was introduced by Moore, and Bill HR2451 which was introduced by Sam Gibbons. That is the natural resource subsidy Bill which is still proceeding through the U.S. system.

As pointed out by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), that Bill would affect not only resource pricing in terms of wood products in this country, but potash, oil and gas, as well as our aluminium industry, particularly in Quebec and British Columbia in terms of the availability of water supply for cheap hydroelectricity. Clearly, the Americans are very interested in levelling the playing field to their advantage.

Subsequently, Senate Bill 960, the Foreign Assistance Act, was passed, and on April 24 Senate Bill 1224 was introduced by Mr. Jim McClure. That was the Senate version of a House Bill.

Finally, the Congressmen visited Vancouver on their way to Japan and attended a meeting at which I was present. We had a first-hand opportunity to hear from the United States Subcommittee on Trade and listened to the preposterous views they held in terms of the subsidy on Canadian lumber and the steps they were planning to take in an attempt to level the playing field. As I said, a small handful of us had gone down to Washington and listened to Ambassador Gotlieb and our forest industry representatives who, by then, had spent almost $10 million fighting this battle alone in Washington. We had a chance to really start to understand how quickly things were moving in the United States.

• (1620)

That was a window of opportunity which this House, not just the Government, should have pursued with great vigor in opening trade consuls in the United States and getting information out to U.S. consumers. U. S. consumers did not know, and probably still do not, that the cost of a home in the United States is going to go up hundreds and thousands of dollars, depending on whether it is modular or contract built to certain specifications.

The Hon. Member who just spoke pointed out that we had evidence from the lumbermen from the Province of Quebec who said that as a result of the export tax plus the flow through provisions which will be brought forward sometime in June, a house in the Province of Quebec will cost $600 more to Canadians. American consumers are paying more, Canadian consumers are paying more, and anyone who honestly believes that the number of housing starts in either Canada or the United States will stay where they are, is simply not looking at the figures and at the increasing costs which will be brought about because of this unfair legislation. In other areas of the country the costs will go up much more.

Finally, on July 24, 1985, we took an interparliamentary group back down to Washington to meet with all the members of the U.S. House and Senate who had protectionist legislation before the House. We again brought a strong message back to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that serious action had to be taken at that time to get information out, not just to the L.A. Times and the New York Times, in which an occasional editorial was run saying the Americans were wrong, but actually to the American consumers. That action, unfortunately, was never taken.

That one window demonstrated blindness on behalf of the Government. There simply were not any Members in the Cabinet at that time who understood how delicate and dangerous a dilemma the Canadian forest industry was facing. No action was taken. There was the 10-10 tie vote on April 23, 1986, in the Senate Finance Committee to start the fast-track negotiation on free trade in which Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy are presently involved. Just a few days after that there was the famous "Dear Bob" letter which came out of the White House. It is perhaps something a lot of Members of the House have forgotten or did not really want to understand.

On May 8, 1986, President Reagan wrote a letter to Bob Packwood. The President viewed him as one of the Senators who had managed to do some arm twisting with a Senator from the State of Hawaii to bring about a 10-10 tie vote to give this enormous momentum and propulsion to the free trade process which is supposed to wind up sometime next month, if it is to stay on track and get through the U.S. House next fall. The letter from President Reagan to Mr. Packwood reads as follows:

> Dear Bob:
> Thank you again for your forceful efforts in preserving our fast-track proposal for a Canada free trade agreement. Once again, I want you to know that I am committed to finding a rapid and effective solution to the Canadian softwood lumber problem which restores for the American lumber industry a fair opportunity to compete.
> To this end, I intend to press for an expedited resolution to this problem, independent of the comprehensive negotiations.
> If this cannot be achieved through bilateral negotiations with Canada, then I will take such action as may be necessary to resolve this problem consistent with U.S. law.
> We fully realize that lumber and other pending trade irritants must be resolved before we submit to the Senate the results of the comprehensive negotiations.
> Sincerely,
> Ronald Reagan

It seems that the Cabinet and the Government of Canada heard about it but did not really want to take any action to try to deal with it.

I think we have to reflect for a moment on what happened on October 16 of last year. The Minister harped about it for a few days in the press. It caused a bit of a hiatus here in the House. But the 15 per cent preliminary determination which came down from the International Trade Commission was illegal. It was absolutely wrong. It added together two different ways of computing value. It added the stumpage on one hand and the imputed value on the other hand. The maximum it could have come up with legally was a 7.5 per cent tax against Canadian softwood. That is the most it could have come up with under U.S. law. It cheated. It committed an illegal act in putting that preliminary determination out.

What does the Government do? We had two trains of action. The Minister for International Trade was going down one rail line, and out in British Columbia we had the highest level of political incompetence in terms of this whole action with the Minister of Forests for that province, Mr. Kempf—fortunately, he is now no longer there—and Premier Vander Zalm, launching what is widely known among people who know the forest sector as the "blink". There are B.C. blinks and Ottawa blinks.

I will deal with the B.C. blink first because it did probably the most damage of any single act which took place at that time. The Minister responsible for forests, and Members from both sides of the House had been arguing vigorously, honestly and forthrightly with both Republicans and Democrats south of the border that what they were pursuing with the protectionist legislation and what the U.S. coalition was pursuing was absolutely hogwash, that it had no basis in law and no basis in fact. Then the B.C. Minister of Forests publicly said that the B.C. industry in that year had subsidized the industry by $150 million, that the cost to run the forest programs in British Columbia was $250 million and that the Government had only collected $100 million in revenue from stumpage. For the Minister to say that in British Columbia sent an immediate signal to the most vigorous protectionists in Washington who immediately forged ahead, pointing out that the largest producer of softwood in Canada for export to the United States—B.C. sends half of the wood exported into the United States—had admitted openly that the Government of British Columbia was subsidizing the industry.

That Minister is not in the Cabinet any longer but the political incompetence continues. Just a few weeks ago he publicly stated that over $1 billion was foregone in tax revenue in 1976 from the forest sector in British Columbia thereby clearly indicating to the United States again that in fact the subsidy as defined by a Social Credit Government of British Columbia is much larger than the Americans had ever imagined.

The B.C. blink went even further. The Premier of British Columbia was a defeatist from square one. In fact, on January 2 he was quoted as saying, "I have said all along we could not win so certainly this is the best way". Vander Zalm is quoted as saying, "The agreement is terrific".

We have to look as well at what happened during that fateful period of time while the negotiations were being carried on by our former Minister for International Trade. Just prior to those ludicrous statements by the Minister of Forests from B.C., on September 30, we found the Minister for International Trade saying in terms of the 10 per cent dollar equivalent offer, "It is our only offer. It is done on a without prejudice basis to our legal case and it is not open to negotiation".

Sure, it was the only offer at 10 per cent. The Americans knew pretty quickly that there were going to be other offers, as we found out just a matter of days later. On April 10 the Vancouver Sun quoted the Minister as stating, "we would look like bloody fools if we kept upping the ante. It is not an unlimited pot of money". Another eight days passed and suddenly the ITA affirmed the preliminary determination of 15 per cent and the Minister for International Trade said, "I deplore today's preliminary determination which cannot be justified either under U.S. law or GATT rules". In the House the Minister vowed to "fight this all the way". It was only a matter of days, as we know, before the Minister decided that even though she found the methodology wrong and stated publicly that the U.S. position was fundamentally wrong, she would agree to move forward with 15 per cent settlement. In fact, she proposed that on November 19, 1986, in a letter to Secretary Baldrige.

At the same time—in fact, on the same day—Minister Kempf of B.C. announced that the B.C. Government had been given legal advice that it could cut its own deal with the U.S. That was followed up by an announcement from Premier Vander Zalm, who later backed off.

I would now like to sum up the blinks in order to keep them in perspective. While Members of the House, a very small number, were working hard in the United States with the U.S. forest people and with the protectionists, both Republicans and Democrats, trying to get the information and the disinformation out of the U.S. political system, on the Canadian side we had incredible political incompetence coming from the Premier of British Columbia, the Minister responsible for forests in that province, and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) here in Ottawa. She never really put an oar in the water to deal with this issue, something one would have expected from a Minister holding a senior portfolio such as she does.

There was an admission by the Minister for forests of a subsidy starting at $150 million. That figure is now almost all the way to $1 billion. We had the Premier saying that the deal was terrific, and so on. He said that while listening to his rocket radio in the legislative buildings. He said that a deal had been cut when it had not been cut. He gradually skated Canada's position right off the ice.

We then found ourselves going all the way into that horrible period during the last few days of December when the negotiations actually got under way. So much that should have been dealt with, once the Government had made what I believe was an incompetent, improper and naive decision to go the route it went, was not dealt with. It did not even handle those negotiations well at all.

We know of the dozens of products which I listed during the debate at report stage in terms of remanufactured products that should have been in the Memorandum of Understanding but were not, and why. We know now that the American negotiators had enormous access to knowledgeable people from the U.S. coalition who were right there camped out in rooms next to the negotiation rooms constantly feeding information in. So rather than the softwood lumber that was coming from those provinces named in the countervailing applications, those provinces being British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were dragged in, as were the maritime provinces. Dozens and dozens of corporations which had been given excluded status earlier on in July, those that had been given that status, only those 20, were put into the Memorandum of Understanding. All the others which should have been included were not included.

I have said this before, but I think it is worth stating again. The situation now in place is that there are corporations on one side of the street which harvest wood, mill it and export it to the United States, while right across the street companies in exactly the same tax status which should be excluded under the rules by which the other 20 were excluded are not excluded. What does that mean? As I pointed out in my question to the Parliamentary Secretary, it means that in some areas of the country some corporations automatically have a 15 per cent competitive advantage. They will pick up either those smaller companies or they will pick up the market.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that he is hopeful. Well, I am hopeful, too, that those who are duly eligible will receive the corporate exemption and that we will see all of the Maritimes excluded, as we were trying to do in committee.

There are a great many other bits of unfairness in the Bill, and I have pointed them out before. There are logs from the United States which are grown in Vermont, New Hampshire and other areas that are brought into Canada and milled on the Canadian side of the border, particularly in the Quebec border mills. That wood is being hit with the 15 per cent export tax when it is returned to the United States. Exporters and wholesalers, such as Ron Pelton from Ontario who simply middles and handles wood as a wholesaler coming from exempt corporations on its way to the U.S. market, are being driven out of business because they are having to pay the 15 per cent export tax on wood that is cut and is exempt at its site. However, for reasons unknown to anyone—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member at this time. However, even though the Member's time would have expired by now according to the rules, it has been the custom, with unanimous consent, to allow a Member from the New Democratic Party time to complete his speech at third reading. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the House has opened up for itself. I could go on at some length. However, I will try to be fair to other Hon. Members.

As has been pointed out by other speakers, remanufacturing is a $500 million industry. Products from that industry have now been dragged in and are being taxed. They are products which were never even being chased after by the U.S. coalition. Thus we have a $500 million industry and wood which is grown in the United States coming into Canada. If the Americans are now claiming that their trees are subsidized, then that is an interesting way for them to go about it.

We have the wholesalers and the unfairness with respect to some corporations being exempt while ones across the street are not. We hear from the Parliamentary Secretary that the negotiations are going well in Washington. However, I fail to see why, once we have passed the Bill, the U.S. coalition will suddenly soften up and the International Trade Commission, or the Department of Commerce, will suddenly become so much more co-operative when they have already grabbed so much of our sovereignty and our opportunity to run our own programs.

One of the things that both opposition Parties tried very hard to do in committee was to obtain some clarification from the Government in relation to the Dennison letter. I will not read that letter into the record. Those who want the wording of it can refer back to previous days' debates when it was mentioned many times.

It was fundamentally important to demonstrate to the Americans that we were not swallowing in any way, shape or form the contents of the Baldrige-Yeutter letter that was sent to Mr. Dennison which stated that we could not spend the money gathered under this export tax on reforestation, conifer release, road construction, seedlings, nurseries or whatever in terms of reforestation programs. Both opposition Parties moved what I can only describe as very tender amendments. In fact, in one case the wording from the Dennison letter was used to try to make it clear to the U.S. prior to passage of this Bill during second reading and in committee, at report stage and during third reading, that Members of this House stand united in making it clear that we will not allow the Americans any jiggery-pokery on how we handle our forestry programs. This is something which I feel the federal Government should have done for the protection of the provinces prior to introducing the legislation.

I must say that I have not agreed with much that the Minister for International Trade has done in relation to all of this. However, one thing she did have to say during the hotter moments after Christmas was that British Columbia has become a silvicultural slum. There is no doubt about that. In this respect we have seen the recently released Pearse report on coast wood supply for the Queen Charlottes, the north coast, Vancouver Island and the Vancouver harvesting tree farm licence zones. There are only 14 years of harvestable wood supply left there. We have also seen the Ewing report, which was just released in relation to the greater Prince George and northern interior forest districts. There is not a sustainable harvestable supply to take us even to the turn of the century in that area.

British Columbia is truly a silvicultural slum, and that province, for whatever reason, has decided that none of the $300 million gathered in the coming year under Bill C-37 will be applied to reforestation in our province. In fact, the province has cancelled the $30 million that was promised last fall for this coming year.

I would like to put on the record what the exports of softwood lumber to the U.S. by province during the past year have been. It will give some idea to Hon. Members what parts of the country will be impacted the hardest by Bill C-37. Last year we exported to the U.S. 34 million cubic metres of softwood lumber. Some 19.8 million cubic metres of that, or 57.2 per cent, came from British Columbia. Ontario was the next largest exporter at 20 per cent of the market, or 7 million cubic metres. In third place was Quebec with 14.6 per cent of exports, or 5 million cubic metres.

• (1640)

We then had Alberta, with 1.1. million cubic metres; Manitoba, with 726,000; New Brunswick, with 556,000; Prince Edward Island, 1,699; Nova Scotia, 4,750; Newfoundland, 946,000; Saskatchewan, 152,000; and Manitoba, with 726,000 cubic metres.

As can be seen, our lumber exports to the United States are very substantial, to a value of several billions of dollars, and this added tax is certainly not going to do anything good for the industry.

There have been various estimates as to what the effects are going to be, ranging anywhere from the loss of a few thousand jobs, as reflected in the major study done by the IWA, to a high of over 17,000 according to the study conducted by Widman and Associates, with the Ontario Lumbermen's Association putting the figure at 15,000.

The pipeline to the United States is now filled with wood from British Columbia, now that the strike is behind us, and as the pipeline has filled, we have seen some tremblings in the market. As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, prices were up in February and down in March. We do not know what we will be facing over the long term. Certainly, those who appeared before the committee during February and March are deeply concerned about the effects of Bill C-37 come September, October, November and December, when the construction season in the United States winds down, as it usually does. They are anxious to see whether or not Canadian lumber exported to the U.S. will continue to fill the niches that it has historically.

Let me remind Members of this House, and Canadians and Americans generally, that Canadian lumber, for half a century, has been preferentially purchased in the United States. Canadian SPF is recognized by builders in the United States as being of such quality that one does not have to double-joist, one does not have to double-rafter, one does not have to double-stud. Its quality is such that single-plate construction can be utilized.

In terms of the construction activity itself, smaller teams are required when Canadian lumber is used. It is more bug, weather and bacteria resistant than is southern yellow pine.

The Americans will eventually come to recognize their error. On December 23, 1986, the International Trade Commission itself came out with a report pointing out that Canadian lumber exports into the U.S. were not injuring U.S. producers. That report came out seven clear calendar days before we entered into the famed Memorandum of Understanding on December 30, 1986.

Had we collectively taken the opportunity two and a half years ago to have gone through window number one, we would not be involved in this debate today. Had we convinced the American consumer of what the long-term cost of this would be, the protectionists within the U.S. system would never have got away with what they have.

This sets a dreadful precedent for our relations with the United States. We have forgone our opportunity to go to GATT on this issue. The President still has the unfettered opportunity to use his registered 301 action, which he filed five days after we signed the Memorandum of Understanding. The filing of a 301 in that way represents a unique step by the President of the United States.

We should not have backed down, Mr. Speaker. We had a good case; we have a good case. It is just unfortunate that we had the B.C. blinks, the Vander Zalm/Kempf team, which did an enormous amount of damage to the forestry sector and to the case that had been put together.

It is unfortunate that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) took so little interest in this issue, being away at every single opportunity during the time this was being negotiated and dealt with in Washington. The B.C. blinks put the final coup de grâce, one might say, to our case. Making a 10 per cent one-time-only offer and then, in a matter of days later, increasing that to 15 per cent did us no good at all.

Increasing your offer by 50 per cent when negotiating demonstrates, at best, a fickle mind, if not outright political incompetence.

In the forest sector, the companies have remained remarkably silent. I suppose they have been humbled by this experience, knowing that once the Government got involved, everything went off the rails so quickly.

We have reached the point, Mr. Speaker, where the Government has not accepted amendments put forward in good faith by the Opposition, some of which were drafted by myself—amendments in relation to exchange rates to protect the remanufacturers, to protect the wholesalers, to protect regions of the country that never should have been affected, to protect those who are milling wood that comes from outside the country.

I am sorry that the Government did not take the opportunity to accept any of those amendments, nor has the Minister for International Trade taken the opportunity either to write back to the chair of the committee or to committee members to outline what—

Mr. McDermid: We made the commitment today.

Mr. Fulton: —what kind of progress there has been since March 12 last. One would think that, in eight or nine weeks, the Minister might have had something on which to report back to the committee, the members of which spent so much time and effort in dealing with this subject matter in committee.

It is interesting to note that while the Government is crowing about free trade from one coast to the other, the largest industry in Canada, the largest contributor to the balance of trade situation, an industry employing one million Canadians, is the first to be pushed over the edge, and this coming just one month before Mr. Reisman moves to put his initials to some kind of an agreement with Mr. Murphy.

I hope Canadians are listening and are aware of the kind of carnage that can be brought about by the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: Before the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) speaks, I would like, on behalf of the Government, to officially designate tomorrow as an allotted day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), on debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is particularly appropriate that literally when the Government is crowing, as the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has said, we are eating crow here in the House, and specifically so with the passage of Bill C-37. In fact, it is an embarrassment, it seems to me, to Members of the House, and in particular to Members on the government side of the House, to be called upon to pass a piece of legislation which is actually going to invoke punishment on the Canadian softwood lumber industry.

At the same time as we are eating crow here in the House of Commons, we have seen the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself, in Question Period, laughing and deriding the Opposition in its attempts to get some answers on the free trade question.

Specifically, he challenged us yesterday to bring forward examples of where we have been on the losing end of the big stick of the American free trade initiative, and in fact we responded by citing the example of shakes and shingles, the example of the softwood lumber industry.

It seems to me that in imposing on ourselves a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber, we are admitting that we are in a losing position with respect to the American softwood lumber industry, and indeed on the weak end of the scale with respect to the free trade discussions with the United States.

The long-term ill effects of this legislation have been cited by members of the Opposition. In fact, it is so poorly conceived and so poorly thought out that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), after telling the country that a 10 per cent export tax was our final offer, that we would not be upping the ante in any way, shape or form, came back with a 15 per cent offer, ignoring the fact that, under a previous Liberal Government, when similar American allegations of unfair trading practices were levied against Canada, the Government of the day was prepared to take the issue and fight it out, and in fact won. We were able to prove that Canada's softwood lumber industry was not engaging in unfair trade practices and that the stumpage fee issue was in fact a red herring.

In this instance, the Minister brought forward a hastily drawn agreement, an agreement which does not take into consideration the effect of an increase in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Since Bill C-37 was originally tabled in the House, we have seen an increase in the value of the Canadian dollar, an increase which is going to cost Canadians more in the way of export taxes.

• (1650)

The Government has not seen fit to take it into consideration in drafting legislation which gives up our sovereignty and tells Americans that they have that right. We saw it in respect of the Memorandum of Understanding.

I see the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) shaking his head. He will remember that he and his Party were not even aware that the Memorandum of Understanding was not included in the original piece of legislation. In the Memorandum of Understanding we see that the Government is prepared to say to the Americans that they have the right to inspect our books, that they have the right to come into our softwood lumber companies and establish exactly what is going out and what is coming in. Quite clearly softwood lumber has been sacrificed on the altar of free trade.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government are so bent on seeking an agreement that by the time any agreement is reached—and they are talking about this fall—what will we have left to offer? We gave up the National Energy Program because the Americans did not like it. We gave up the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

We heard questions in the House today indicating that Canada is being sold off piece by piece by members of the Conservative Party who are ideologically bound to the notion that somehow anything in which government is involved is intrinsically bad. That was not the position of the Liberal Government. That is why we established the Foreign Investment Review Agency in the first place.

If we look at the downside of the sale of Dome in respect of the Canadianization of the petrochemical industry, I think we will see in five years or ten years from now the ill effects of the policies and the politics of the Conservative Government. To date the Conservative Government has not turned down any foreign takeover of any Canadian company. Foreign takeovers which are not necessarily creating jobs are being approved holus-bolus, wholesale. Investment Canada might as well be entitled "Abandon Canada" for all the good it does in terms of the Canadianization of the petrochemical and other industries.

Softwood lumber is another example of the Prime Minister being prepared to bow down to the Americans because he so desperately wants and needs a free trade agreement. He desperately wants and needs that agreement so that Canadians will forget about his other excesses, so Canadians will forget about the number of Gucci shoes he has in his closet.

We have a famous Prime Minister. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Bangkok Post on Monday, February 16. His legend is legion and it is travelling across the world. The article is entitled "Scandals shake Canadian Government".

Are they talking about the free trade agreement in the Bangkok Post? No, they are talking about scandals shaking the Canadian Government. I must admit that whoever wrote the article seems to assess the political situation in Canada quite accurately, because he says:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney swept to power in 1984—

Mr. Horner: Who wrote it?

Ms. Copps: It was written by Jeff Bradley of Associated Press, and appeared in the Monday, February 16 edition of the Bangkok Post. It reads:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney swept to power in 1984 with promises of clean government and Ronald Reagan-style conservatism.

Mr. Dick: What does that have to do with softwood lumber?

Ms. Copps: That is what it has to do with softwood lumber. It continues:

> But half-way through his five-year mandate, Mulroney already is being talked about as a one-term premier.

He has been demoted as well. He is referred to as a premier. I think in the States they call him Muldoon, but in this article he is referred to as a premier. In any case, it continues:

> Two new scandals grabbed headlines in Canada last week as Mulroney tried to fend off charges of influence-peddling and corruption among cabinet members and their advisers. And an opinion poll said last week that support for Mulroney's party has sunk to 23 per cent.

I could go on, but the article is available for Hon. Members.

Mr. Nunziata: What is the title of the article?

Ms. Copps: "Scandals shake Canadian Government".

My point is that the Prime Minister is so desperately seeking a free trade agreement that he will do anything to bow down to the Americans, including a complete sell-out on softwood lumber.

In Bill C-37 we have the first step in a sell-out of our Canadian resource industries. We have seen it in softwood lumber. We have seen it in shakes and shingles.

Mr. McDermid: Slow down, Sheila. The Americans put a tax on them.

Ms. Copps: We have seen it in fish. I understand that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown has a little time available which he could use if he would like to add to the discourse by standing and speaking instead of shrieking from his chair.

An Hon. Member: He has.

Ms. Copps: I am sure he has and he will have another opportunity at third reading, so he can make his comments and I am here to make mine.

Mr. McDermid: I have already spoken on third reading.

Ms. Copps: I have already spoken, also, on the Memorandum of Understanding. The Hon. Member will no doubt remember that heated debate in the House when he insisted that the Memorandum of Understanding was included in the draft Bill, but it was not. The Government does not even know how to write up a Bill. It botched the thing so badly that it did not even include the Memorandum of Understanding on this self-imposed, self-flagellated 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports.

Time and again we have heard from a number of Members who outlined the long-term negative impacts on the lumber industry, including the potential for the loss of thousands of jobs. We have heard that a million people are directly and indirectly employed in the lumber industry in Canada.

We also know that many Canadians are hoping and dreaming that they might buy a home at some time. In fact, it is estimated that this particular tax will add about $800 to $900 to the cost of a new house in Canada. The direct effect of the Government buckling down to the Americans on the softwood lumber industry will be to increase the cost of housing in Brampton—Georgetown, among other places across the country—

Mr. McDermid: It went up $50,000 in the last six months.

Ms. Copps: I am sure the Hon. Member is very happy with the rise of real estate in Metro Toronto and in the Toronto area. He says that it has gone up $50,000 in the last few months. Perhaps some of his constituents do not aspire to buying homes, but they do in my community. They are concerned because $800 or $900 extra on the cost of lumber will be an added cost to real estate, which is already going up sky-high in southern Ontario and for many families bringing beyond reach the possibility of buying a home.

The most important point in the whole issue is the dangerous precedent that has been set by the Government and by the Prime Minister, the dangerous precedent which probably had its historical origins in the so-called Shamrock Summit when we all got together and watched the Prime Minister sing for his supper with the President of the United States on March 17, 1985. He said: "Mr. President, we will get you a deal. We will back off on patents, on pharmaceutical drugs, raise the prices, and the consumers will pay; let the poor pay". The pharmaceutical industry was sold down the river. The patent industry was sold down the river—

Mr. Horner: Are you a Liberal or a Marxist-Leninist?

Ms. Copps: Am I a Liberal or a Marxist-Leninist? In Hamilton—

Mr. McDermid: Where is Judy Erola when you need her?

Ms. Copps: In Hamilton Liberals fight to keep prices down for consumers. I hate to be accused of being Marxist-Leninist, just because I would like to prevent an increase in further profits to a sector which in the last fiscal year experienced the most profitability of any other sector, that is, the pharmaceutical sector.

The pharmaceutical sector in Canada is doing very well. As a result of the Shamrock Summit and the promise of the Prime Minister on bended knee to the President, we have a decision to turn around and give blanket monopolies to pharmaceutical multinational companies to gouge Canadian consumers. If I have to apologize for that—and I am certainly not a Marxist-Leninist—as a Member of Parliament I am going to fight for that.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order—

Ms. Copps: I was responding to a heckle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the bombastic presentation of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). However, we are discussing softwood lumber on third reading—and the drug patent Bill was passed some weeks ago—and it might be apropos for her to get back to the subject matter of which she knows a great deal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, my balding colleague across the way persists in his interruptions of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I would ask that you, Sir, exercise your good judgment and discretion and request of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) to refrain from his heckles so as to allow the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to continue with her most interesting discussion of this particular issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary on the same point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I do not need lectures from a rookie, bald-headed friend of mine across the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

• (1700)

Mr. Nunziata: I just have a high forehead.

Mr. McDermid: I will remember that, cue ball.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think this whole discussion is patently absurd. I was responding to unsolicited heckles from the government side of the House. It was suggested to me that, because I was concerned about the precedent being set by the Government, I was somehow a Marxist-Leninist.

The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown claims perhaps that there is not a precedent. I think Clause 6 of the Memorandum of Understanding provides a very dangerous precedent. The Government of Canada will take no action. Here we are promising the Americans on bended knee that we will take "no action" and we will take all reasonable steps to ensure that no other government Party in Canada takes any action directly or indirectly which has the effect of offsetting or reducing the export charge or replacement measures. Further, if we do not live up to our Agreement, Mr. Ronald Reagan promises in writing that "I will take action if Canada does not live up to the terms of agreement". What that means to the average lumber worker is that jobs supported by the Employment Support Act, which was introduced in 1971 to support almost 22,000 jobs, would no longer be supported by that Act because we have guaranteed we will not intervene in any other way to offset the effect of this particular tax.

In legislation being considered for passage here today we are suggesting that we make promises to the United States of America that what we do with our employment programs and our lumber industry has first to be vetted through the White House and through Washington. If we do not get the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval from Ronald Reagan, then he can step in and revoke the Agreement at any time. If Canada does not live up to the Agreement, the President can move in immediately and invoke a 15 per cent tariff within 30 days.

Where is the fairness in GATT if Canada is imposing an export tax of 15 per cent on products only going to one country? What about the notion of a level playing field for all the countries covered under GATT? Instead, what we are seeing is another example of the Canadian Government and the Prime Minister being so wedded to Washington that they are unprepared to launch a Canadian sovereign policy in lumber which would save Canadian jobs and which would protect the ability of the Canadian Government and provincial Governments to act in our best interests when it suits Canadians. We should not have our policy on export tax dictated by Washington. It is as simple as that.

My Leader today asked the Prime Minister what he was prepared to sell out. Who is speaking for Canada, Mr. Speaker? I think it is pretty clear that my Leader's suggestion that we are moving toward a 51st state was not an unreasonable one when you examine the sequence of events over the course of this Government. We have said goodbye to the Canadianization of the petro-chemical industry, to Canadianization of most of our major multinationals because FIRA has been neutered and left with absolutely no power under the rubric of so-called Investment Canada. What about our major resource industries, softwood lumber, fisheries? Perhaps steel and the petro-chemical industry will be next. We are so bound and determined to get this Agreement with the United States that we are making all kinds of sacrifices along the way.

We heard the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) saying that she had no choice, that she had to move with this particular 15 per cent tax even though she had stalled at 10 per cent and said she would absolutely not negotiate anything higher than 10 per cent. She had no choice, because the potential for the levying of a 25 per cent tax was a question she was considering. If we look back to past Liberal Governments when similar ugly threats were raised in the United States concerning unfair stumpage fees in Canada, we went to court, fought the case and won. In the Liberal Party we are certainly not afraid to get out and fight if we believe we have a case, and we have a good case. We do not necessarily have to cut a deal by the back door which is not going to be good for Canada. That is a deal that is good for Washington and good for the Americans. Frankly, as a Member from a highly industrialized riding, the most industrialized riding in Canada—

Mr. Horner: Hold it. That is not quite true.

Ms. Copps: Hamilton East is the most industrialized riding in Canada. I am very proud of it. It is the most industrialized riding in Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: And it is well represented.

Ms. Copps: According to Statistics Canada, I have more steel mills per square foot—would he like to visit? I will set up a tour and allow him to go through all the steel mills in our riding.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has just made an extremely derogatory remark about Hamiltonians. He suggested that if anyone were to visit Hamilton, one would require a gas mask. I would ask the Hon. Member—what riding is he from, Sheila? Wherever, Mr. Horner—

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: —to stand up and apologize to the people of Hamilton.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I must seek the judgment of the Chair. To suggest that to come to Hamilton you have to wear a gas mask is offensive. The Member may think it is funny and in the context of Parliament it is a big joke, but we get sick and tired in Hamilton of having these stereotypes reinforced. I know the Member is a very reasonable person and he will want to take that back. He will not want me to pursue the matter in a question of privilege. The Member would like to pursue, wouldn't he?

Hamilton is a beautiful city. It happens to have one of the most beautiful views coming down from the mountain of any city. I have travelled in Vancouver and other places across the country. Do you think he can apologize, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would prefer not to get involved in this matter. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Mr. McDermid: You forgot the botanical gardens.

Ms. Copps: There are only two gardens in Canada that are blessed by the Queen—

Mr. Nunziata: Remind the voters in the by-election.

Ms. Copps: —the Royal Botanical Gardens is one of them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Dick: That was not a speech.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I am very offended by the comments made by the Conservative Member to my right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member knows, of course, that the comments he makes must refer to the speech made by his colleague from Hamilton East.

Mr. Nunziata: During my colleague's speech, Mr. Speaker, certain comments were made by a Conservative Member. I will not comment any further. We know that a by-election will be held in Hamilton Mountain on July 20. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Elizabeth Phinney is the Liberal candidate there. We are very proud of her credentials. She is a local and lifelong resident in the Mountain. She is very concerned about the people in Hamilton Mountain.

We know that the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The by-election is a long time away. Could we please get back to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East?

Is the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hate to interrupt this paid political commercial, but it did seem to me that equal time should be given to the magnificent candidate, Marion Dewar who will win that seat for the New Democrats—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —and be another important addition to our caucus in the House.

Mr. Nunziata: You cannot find one of your own in Hamilton.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East will reply to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Ms. Copps: I am responding to questions and comments, Mr. Speaker. That is what I call one parachute propping up another parachute, a Windsor parachute propping up a Hamilton parachute and they are both destined for a fall. Nonetheless, I would like to respond to the question and comment raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Government Members have been casting aspersions on why I should be interested in the softwood lumber issue. I am interested not only because it is an issue of national sovereignty but also because what happens in the lumber industry portends very ill for what will happen in other industries in Canada. Being from a riding which is the most industrialized riding in Canada which depends upon the steel industry for bread and butter—

Mr. Gustafson: And foreign investment.

Ms. Copps: Foreign investment? Canadian made and Canadian built steel industry is the best in the world. We do not need foreign investments. Look to the south to talk about lack of competition.

In the steel industry, we are watching what is happening very closely in the lumber industry. We are concerned that if the Canadian Government is prepared to put up the lumber industry on the chopping block, what resource based industry will be next? We are very concerned about saving Canadian jobs in the steel industry in Hamilton.

• (1710)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, seeing that no other Hon. Members are rising to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, I will take this opportunity to put a question to her. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the chief trade negotiator, Mr. Reisman, have indicated that a draft comprehensive agreement will likely be ready some time in the fall, notwithstanding the fact that there has not been a national debate of any significance on the subject of free trade. There was a one-day debate in the House of Commons but there was no general national cost benefit study. I would like the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to comment on the impending draft agreement and what she perceives to be the likely result of the negotiations that are taking place.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) will no doubt recall that the press and the Opposition had to apply under freedom of information for the background documentation on what was happening in free trade discussions. In fact, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), brought a whole stack of documents received through application to freedom of information, and we in the Liberal caucus thought we would finally have a chance to look at the Government's agenda for free trade discussions. Lo and behold, to our great chagrin, when we opened up this package of documents, which stood about a foot high, we found that every second page was censored because the Government does not even trust the Parliament of Canada to deal with one of the most serious questions facing it that has been launched by the Government, the sell-out of the country.

We did not see the cost benefit analysis and we did not get the full story even in the documentation we received through freedom of information. It is quite clear that the Prime Minister wants to negotiate a cosy little deal, possibly have the House rise at the end of July and not sit until October so he can come out with trumpet and much fanfare in September or October with this terrific deal. We Canadians will be paying in consequence through lost jobs, lost sovereignty and lost integrity for many years.

We want to fight that and in order to fight it, we need to have all the facts on the table, but we are not getting the facts. The facts we are getting like the legislation before us, Bill C-37, simply show us that what is coming in free trade for Canada does not bode well for Canadian citizens.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my speech will devote itself to this Bill because it is a very important Bill which Canada should look at carefully. The precedent which has been set in this case is a sad and unfortunate one which the country should consider carefully. There are still many aspects of what is taking place in these negotiations that must be treated in a serious manner and not simply used for partisan purposes.

To begin, I must say that I am disappointed that while debating a Bill as important, controversial and full of ramifications for the sovereignty of the country as this one before us, we have not heard speeches from either of the Ministers who have been so vociferous in defending the Bill during Question Period, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I must say as well that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who took his share of the defence of this indefensible set of actions, is someone, I believe, who should speak to us to explain as we wind up our consideration of this piece of legislation why it is that the surrender was made.

This is a surrender which affects a great many people. It affects people right across the country. In northern Ontario, 90 per cent of all wood cut is softwood and 6,000 people are directly employed in the industry. In British Columbia, over 40,000 people are employed in this industry. In Alberta, over 5,000 people are employed by 220 lumber companies. One would not perhaps think of Saskatchewan as a crucial contributor, but one nevertheless finds that there are over 8,500 people there directly affected by this Bill. In Manitoba, there are close to 13,000 affected by it. In Ontario itself, something like 19,500 people in total are affected and in Quebec, over 27,000 people are affected. New Brunswick employs 3,500 people in the industry, Nova Scotia employs close to 1,900 people in the industry, and even in Prince Edward Island, something like 140 people are employed in the industry. In Newfoundland, over 11,000 people are directly employed in forestry jobs.

I am quite prepared to state that there was a genuine effort on the part of the Government to find a solution to the problem, but sadly, that effort went badly off the rails at many points throughout the process. As my colleague explained earlier, we ended up with an agreement that is very, very detrimental to the people of Canada.

The agreement is also detrimental to our sense of propriety. A cabinet Minister in the British Columbia provincial Government actually bargained behind the back of the federal Minister while these discussions were taking place. What is more, as Mr. Kempf has now admitted, Premier Vander Zalm himself was aware of this and had approved of it. That kind of behind the back under-cutting of our country's efforts must be recognized. Frankly, I am sure everyone in the House, including British Columbia Members and the Minister for International Trade, would join in condemning that kind of lack of solidarity at a time when serious negotiations are taking place.

After some years have gone by and we are looking back at this piece of legislation and this episode in our trade history, what will strike us most is not so much this behind the back dealing in British Columbia nor the job risks which were taken by the Government but the broader implications that cut right across the concerns of Canadians for our freedom and our future sovereignty.

• (1720)

I think it is necessary to read into the record yet again exactly what U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter say is their understanding of this export tax. They said:

> The U.S. government will monitor closely the operation of this agreement to ensure that the amounts collected through the export charge or replacement measures are not returned to or otherwise used to benefit producers or exporters of Canadian softwood lumber.

How can a country possibly accept that kind of incursion on its sovereign right to shape future policy governing its forest industry? They continue:

> —it is the understanding of the U.S. Government that the U.S. Government would have to approve any changes in the export charge or calculation of the value of any replacement measures. Any changes made without U.S. Government approval would be considered a violation of the Understanding.

Let us just stop and recognize what we have here. This is a statement that a foreign Government—and regardless of our friendship with the U.S. it is a foreign Government—will have an effective veto power over our future policy towards replacing this export tax. If this Parliament chooses to do something which runs counter to that U.S. understanding, the U.S. will be able to say that it is a violation of the agreement and it considers the agreement null and void. That, of course, would have terrible consequences for Canadian lumber producers. We have, therefore, succeeded in putting a very large axe over the heads of Canadian lumber producers.

This action also affects remanufacturing firms right across this country, including my own constituency. The number of jobs has gone up and down in those companies as a direct result of what one can either consider ignorance or a direct sell-out of their interests by the Government in response to U.S. demands. As we all know, in the final stages of negotiation of this agreement many parts of the remanufacturing industry which had been excluded were suddenly included. That has to be seen, unfortunately, as one more of far too many examples of trade failure on the part of the Government. We have had trade failure with respect to the oil industry, the steel industry, the potash industry, the fish industry, indeed covering a whole range of products including shakes and shingles, raspberries, and pork, which again is of importance to my constituency. Yet this sorry record is nowhere surpassed than in the course followed with respect to softwood lumber. On the basis of their failure to speak I can only conclude that those Ministers who have the responsibility for this exercise share that sense of inadequacy and shame over the course of action which was followed in this case.

This was a case where, in 1982, American lumber companies unsuccessfully brought countervailing duty action against Canadian softwood. At that time the International Trade Commission ruled that any subsidy which might be found was so small as not to warrant tariff action. American lumber producers were not satisfied and made another effort. If at first you do not succeed, try again. Before the ITC had an opportunity to even rule on the petition, Ottawa offered a 10 per cent tax surrender on September 13. On October 16 the ITC made a preliminary ruling involving a 15 per cent duty. I hope we all know the way U.S. trade law works. It requires agreement between the ITC and the Department of Commerce with respect to damage to a given industry. On December 23, 1986, the ITC reported that lumber prices were rising, as they have continued to rise for much of the time since then, and that Canadian industry was not hurting the U.S. industry severely. That was the conclusion reached by the ITC report at that stage. That led anyone who followed the case closely to conclude that it was likely that we would win the ultimate ITC decision on whether or not there was damage being done to the U.S. industry. The Canadian lumber industry was unanimous in saying it wanted to reach that stage in trying to fight the issue. That was the stage at which it wanted to confront and at which it felt very strongly it could be successful.

• (1730)

Before that stage was reached, on December 30, 1986, a Memorandum of Understanding was signed which accepted the 15 per cent export tax which this Bill puts into law.

I do not know how any thinking Canadian could conclude other than that this has been a story of surrender and giving up before necessary, dare I say a Tory story of giving up before it was necessary?

It is the story of a path that should not have been followed. However, the Government followed it, took these steps, and now we are beginning to pay the price. The United States building industry was buoyant for the first period of this year but has begun to lose some of that buoyancy. Consequently, we are beginning to see this 15 per cent tax cut into margins, cut into reinvestment hopes and therefore ultimately cut into jobs.

We must conclude that it has been a disaster but one that I hope will never be repeated in this country. I hope it will lead Canadians to draw the conclusion that the Government's trade policy is fundamentally bankrupt and unacceptable to Canadians who believe in Canada, and fundamentally unacceptable to those who care about full employment in the future.

PETITIONS

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House signed by a number of citizens of The Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency. This is one of a series of petitions signed by individuals who protest the killing of thousands of unborn Canadians each year whose only crime is the crime of being unwanted.

The petitioners humbly pray and ask this Parliament to consider passage of M-37, which is the motion under the name of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) which asks the Government to ensure the right to life of the unborn in Canada.

This petition does meet the requirements of Standing Order 106.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSING OF POST OFFICES IN SMALL MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, today I have a petition signed by a large number of residents in my riding who are opposed to the closing down of Post Offices in small municipalities.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 33 people from the City of Yellowknife, duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, in respect of the Fred Turner and Turnair matter.

The petitioners seek the appointment of an independent arbitrator to adjudicate the case which Mr. Turner has with the Government of Canada and the Canadian Transport Commission.

Holidays Act

HOLIDAYS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-256, an Act to amend the Holidays Act (Dominion Day).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reimer: I rise to introduce for first reading a Bill to amend the Holidays Act, to substitute " Dominion Day" for "Canada Day". The purpose of the Bill is to call July 1 "Dominion Day", to more faithfully reflect the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation in their selection of the name "Dominion of Canada" as a vision of a sovereign nation extending from sea to sea. It is important that all Canadians, whatever their ancestry, be united under the conviction that ours is and always must be a sovereign nation.

• (1110)

Surely no title better captivates the historical and political realities of Canada than "Dominion Day".

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN TWENTIETH REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I move that the twentieth report of the Striking Committee, presented to the House earlier this day, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT MITTERRAND TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this next motion pertains to the visit of His Excellency the President of France, François Mitterrand, to Canada next week. The motion is as follows:

That notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House adjourns on Friday, May 22, 1987, it shall stand adjourned until 11 o'clock a.m., on Tuesday, May 26, 1987.

That the Address of His Excellency François Mitterrand, President of the French Republic, to be delivered in the House Chamber on Monday, May 25, 1987, at 3 o'clock p.m., before Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related remarks, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of Tuesday, May 26, 1987, and form part of the records of this House; and

That media recording and transmission of such Address, introductory and related remarks be authorized pursuant to guidelines for this occasion issued by the Speaker of this House pursuant to consultation with the Parties' House Leaders, dated March 31, 1987; and

That Monday, May 25, 1987, be deemed a sitting day for the purpose of the Office of the Clerk being able to receive Order Paper notices.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the arrangements mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary were discussed by the Parties, and we are pleased that this formula will enable the House to receive the President of France in a manner equivalent to the reception it gave the President of the United States, and we therefore give our consent.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we too are in agreement. It will be interesting to see our Senators come into an elected Chamber.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to make a comment with respect to decorum, in view of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy); but I will refrain from so doing.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MULTICULTURALISM

WITHDRAWAL OF ESTIMATES AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my final motion, which again has been the subject of discussion among the House Leaders, deals with the estimates of the Multiculturalism Directorate. The motion is as follows:

That, notwithstanding the order made on March 2, 1987, the operating expenditures of the Multiculturalism Directorate under Vote 1 of the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, of the Department of the Secretary of State in the amount of $5,536,000, together with the grants made by the said Directorate under Vote 5 of the Main Estimates of the said Department in the amount of $14,505,000, as well as the contributions made by the Directorate under the same vote in the amount of $3,262,000 be withdrawn from the Standing Committee on Secretary of State and be deemed referred to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism pursuant to Standing Order 82(15).

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader does have our consent to proceed with this motion. We would hope that in the future this would be the prescribed form for those particular Estimates; that is, that the estimates in respect of the Multiculturalism Directorate be automatically referred to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, rather than having a special order passed year after year.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ALBERTA ECONOMY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

That this House expresses its disappointment with the Government for its failure to deal effectively with the severe economic recession in Alberta which has resulted in, among other things:

(1) Alberta having the worst performance of any provincial economy in Canada which the Conference Board of Canada has estimated will shrink in over-all terms for the second consecutive year;

(2) a loss of 50,000 direct and indirect jobs in the oil and gas industry;

(3) leaving Alberta farmers with 23 per cent of Canada's outstanding farm debt;

(4) causing on average 600 new families per month to be placed on welfare; and

(5) Alberta having the highest per capita suicide rate in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resolution deals specifically with Alberta, but I suppose more generally the debate today is on western Canada. It will be focused upon Alberta and hopefully expanded to the economic plight and difficulty of people in western Canada.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has just returned from western Canada. While he was there, he was reported to have said that his Government had made some mistakes. I guess that makes it unanimous now; even the Prime Minister agrees, as does the whole country.

The resolution is based upon the report of the Conference Board of Canada, a non-partisan group with a good history. If anything, it is fairly small, conservative and business-oriented. Its report was published the other day. It is really a sad report for western Canada, but for Alberta in particular.

The Conference Board indicated that the Alberta economy will have the worst performing provincial economy in Canada and that growth will be down for the second consecutive year. Last year it was down .7 per cent; this year it will fall by 1.1 per cent. I will return to that issue in a minute and deal with some of the details of the performance of the Alberta economy.

However, I should like to indicate how we in the New Democratic Party feel. We think now, more than ever, that we must rise in the House to present motions and to ask questions on behalf of ordinary Albertans, because Alberta is not being very well represented by the silent 20. I used to call them the silent 21, but one of them spoke out.

At a time when a Member of the House, Mr. Bissonnette, is under investigation by the RCMP for allegedly profiting from a land deal in his riding; at a time when another Member, Mr. Stevens, the Member from York, has been at the centre of a major conflict-of-interest hearing; and at a time when another Member, Mr. Gravel, faces 50 charges of influence peddling and breach of trust, it is the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, (Mr. Kilgour), who gets booted out of the Conservative caucus. Western Canadians, Albertans in particular, wonder about the standards which that caucus is observing. Perhaps we will hear about that today. No doubt we will hear from the chairperson of the Alberta caucus.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very valid point of order. I have been in the House for 13 years and I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has been in the House for a significant period of time. He knows clearly and factually that he is not to make a reference to Members of the House of Commons by their names. He has just gone through a list of three or four of them. He knows that is inappropriate; he is experienced enough to know better. I ask the Chair to ensure that he refrains from doing what he knows to be unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on the point raised by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I just want to assure him that this will not count as debating time.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Hon. Member is right. I was trying to put it in terms which people who do not know the seats of Members could understand.

Let me rephrase it. One Member from Quebec, from the Saint-Jean area, is under RCMP investigation for a land deal.

Another Member from Toronto has just been the subject of a conflict-of-interest hearing. A third Conservative Member, a Member from Quebec, faces 50 charges of influence peddling. However, who is it that the Conservatives kick out of their caucus? It is the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). I find that to be very strange behaviour. I invite the chairperson of the Alberta caucus to rise to his feet to explain that to us.

Incidentally, I hope the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona will be able to take part in the debate. I for one—and I think it is the case with many other Canadians, especially westerners—would like to hear what he has to say.

I want to talk about the Alberta economy, and I think it will be a little more non-partisan. The facts speak for themselves. I already mentioned what the Conference Board indicated about economic growth. It also indicated that while economic growth will be up in Ontario and Quebec, especially in the Golden Horseshoe area of Ontario, it will be down—indeed it will be negative—next year in Alberta. This means problems for Alberta and problems for Canada. There has also been a loss of 25,000 direct jobs and 25,000 indirect jobs in the oil and gas industry last year.

While in the upstream the exploration and development revenues of the oil industry fell by 64 per cent in 1986 over 1985, the revenues from the refining operations of the major integrated oil companies increased by 110 per cent. While the small Canadian-owned oil and gas companies which operate almost exclusively in Alberta were squeezed, the major oil companies which operate in the downstream, that is, in refining, wholesaling, and retailing, at the gas pumps, were able to make money.

The economy of Alberta is still based upon the oil industry. That is its number one industry. I think oil and farming are the keys to the Alberta economy, and the oil industry is down. The major, largely foreign-controlled oil companies are making money because they have outlets in Ontario, Quebec, and other places; they are making enough money to buy out and take over other companies, and we are already seeing that happening to small Alberta oil companies which, in many ways, are the backbone of the oil economy. They are the efficient ones which actually explore to a greater extent than the major companies.

In 1986, as opposed to 1985, moneys spent on takeovers and acquisitions in the oil and gas sector rose by nearly 60 per cent, from $2.2 billion to $3.5 billion. There have been takeovers of oil companies and so on. That does not help the Alberta economy and is one of the reasons it is down. The money is largely wasted on takeovers, not used usefully and productively in the sense of getting out there and exploring for more oil.

Of course the oil industry is tied to the world price, and that is the key to the recovery of the oil industry. It is also another reason the Alberta economy is down.

There is a heritage fund in Alberta. Many Canadians think that Alberta is loaded with money, that it has it all socked away in the heritage fund. However, that fund is tied up in loans to other provinces and therefore not easily tapped by the provincial Government for needed revenues. In short, Alberta is not awash in petro-dollars from the 1970s and early 1980s when its economy was booming.

Those are some of the reasons the Alberta economy is in trouble, but there is a double whammy. Earlier I mentioned the farm economy. Average land values have fallen by 50 per cent in Alberta between 1981 and 1986. Alberta farmers had $5.06 billion in outstanding loans at year end, 1986. Alberta farmers owe 23 per cent of Canada's outstanding farm debt. In 1986, 800 farm families had to abandon their farms. In 1983, the figure was only 300. The realized net income from farming declined by 39 per cent in 1987.

I am from an urban constituency in Vancouver, but I had the opportunity to listen to the emergency debate on farming which the New Democratic Party requested and to which the Speaker agreed. It was the second longest debate in parliamentary history. A lot of good material was brought out. Through that debate and through a visit to a farm in Carstairs, Alberta, as well as talking with farmers in rural Alberta, I learned something about farming.

I hear the Hon. Member laughing. I do not pretend to be an expert. Probably he is an expert on farming or cattle ranching. I will be pleased to hear from him. What I am trying to say is that as someone from an urban riding like mine in central Vancouver I am beginning to see that farmers are faced with an incredibly difficult problem. We have a farm crisis and I have recited the figures.

There is a problem with the world economy and, as I recall from a recent debate, I think that wheat prices were down last year 20 per cent, and they will be down another 18 per cent in the upcoming year. We have a subsidy war between the European Economic Community and the United States. Farmers in other countries have their prices subsidized, but our treasury is not bottomless. That makes for further difficulty. There is a double whammy to the Alberta economy. World oil prices are down and world farm prices are down, especially grain prices. Farmers and small oil companies are experiencing great difficulties.

Statistics just out indicate that the unemployment rate for Alberta has risen from 10.8 per cent in April, 1986, to 11 per cent in April, 1987. Alberta used to have a low unemployment rate. Now it has a high rate and an unacceptable one. It is extremely difficult for young people between the ages of 17 and 25 to get jobs. In that age group the unemployment rate is 17.5 per cent. Young people are leaving Alberta and that is not good for families.

Alberta has the highest annual suicide rate per capita of any province in Canada at 16.9 per 100,000 people. Farm suicides in Alberta, I am told, have risen from 15.1 per 100,000 people in 1983 to 40.6 per 100,000 people in 1986. In short, the Alberta economy is in trouble on the oil front and on the farm front, and this is reflected in high unemployment and in turmoil evident among the population of Alberta.

What has been the reaction of the Progressive Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker? First, let me quote from the Calgary Herald for January 22, 1987, under a column entitled "Priorities? Really?" It reads:

> In comedy, it's timing. In business, it's location. In politics, it's priorities.
> Calgary North MP Paul Gagnon has managed to fail on all three counts. One short week after his government rejected the Syncrude loan proposal, the MP returned to his constituency to utter these telling words: "Certainly REAL Women is a No. 1 priority for the Alberta caucus."
> With priorities like this, is it any wonder that the Syncrude proposal fell flat?
> And with priorities like this, it sure would be a good time to be an opposition candidate in Calgary North.

Those were not my words, Mr. Speaker. That was an article from the Calgary Herald.

In an editorial written in The Edmonton Journal for January 23, 1987 we read:

> It is fortunate that Paul Gagnon doesn't set the agenda for Alberta's 21-member federal Tory caucus.
> Pithy issues such as softwood lumber tariffs, federal support for Syncrude, assistance for farmers and polls which show Mulroney's government is on the skids don't furrow his brow. No, the Conservative MP for Calgary North has a more important item on his mind—federal funding for a anti-feminist lobby group.

Other Alberta MPs have expressed their concerns about women in submarines, I believe—or is it gay people in submarines? I cannot quite remember which one it is. That seemed to be one of the priorities affecting a couple of Members of Parliament from Alberta. It seems to me that their priorities are misdirected. They should stick to bread and butter issues.

On May 19, this week I asked the Prime Minister about the Conference Board of Canada's report. I said:

> The Conference Board of Canada indicated today that the Alberta economy was one of the worst in the country. It predicted a drop in Real Domestic Product of 1.1 per cent for 1987.
> —I ask the Prime Minister to name one positive measure he is prepared to take today to help the sick economy in Alberta.

The Prime Minister replied:

> What truly crippled the economy of Alberta was the National Energy Program.

He then proposed that the New Democrats had voted for the National Energy Program. I just want to take a minute to deal with that; first, with respect to what crippled the economy. Yes, the National Energy Program hurt the economy for various reasons. We in the NDP at that time opposed the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: That is true. Members can make up myths. I just ask them to listen to me. I was the critic at the time and I will tell them why we opposed it. It is on the record.

We opposed it because the program would shift exploration out of the western sedimentary basin, that is basically Alberta, to the frontiers. There was a war between then Prime Minister Trudeau and Premier Lougheed over power. The frontiers were controlled by the federal Government, but in Alberta control was by the provincial Government. That was one of the reasons for the program. There are various others. I suggest Members read a book written by Professors Toner and Doern who wrote about the National Energy Program.

With respect to voting, there were 15 Bills. I asked the Library of Parliament to prepare a list; it was prepared on April 11, 1985. The Library wrote:

> As requested, please find enclosed a table showing the voting record of the three political parties on fifteen Bills, passed during the First Session of the 32nd Parliament, which implemented the National Energy Program.

The fifteen Bills were the following. The first was Bill C-48 on the offshore exploration. Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Next came a Bill on the excise tax which was passed by a voice vote, then a Bill on the National Energy Board also passed by a voice vote. Then we had Bill C-75 on home insulation, passed by a voice vote. Another home insulation Bill was passed by a voice vote. Bill C-77 on oil substitution was passed by a voice vote. National Energy Board amendments and Bill C-87 was passed by a voice vote. Bill C-101 to increase Petro-Canada's power, the NDP voted for it and the Conservatives voted against it. That is one. Next came Bill C-102 which dealt with the Department of Energy. Both the Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Bill C-103, the Petroleum Administration Act, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Bill C-104 concerning the Petroleum Incentive Program, the PIP grants, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Bill C-105, the Business Corporations Bill, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Bill C-106, the Energy Monitoring Bill, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it. Bill C-107 the Motor Fuel Bill, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it, and Bill C-108, amendments to the National Energy Board, the Conservatives and NDP voted against it.

I would like the Page to take this list and give it to the chairman of the Alberta caucus so he can see the truth.

Actions by the Government have been band-aid actions. For example, when was removal of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax done? It was done just before the Pembina by-election. That looked like a reaction to a strong NDP challenge which people recognized in Alberta. Another example is the loan guarantees to Syncrude, largely symbolic, but important for the West. It is important that those guarantees be given even after they were hinted at and almost promised. People were disappointed about that.

Then there is a certain degree of stupidity. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is spending most of his time on matters that are irrelevant to Alberta. He is bringing Francophones into his department, something which needs to be done, but that is not the top priority. We have an oil crisis in Alberta. The Minister has instituted a $3 million study on energy. Who is going to do it; apparently a Mr. Tom Kierans, a former associate of the Big Blue Machine in Ontario, a Toronto businessman. Western Canadians, specifically Albertans, do not want Toronto businessman studying their oil industry. They have made lots of suggestions to the Government.

We have raised the matter of Dome Petroleum, an important issue with which the Minister of Energy is dealing. We New Democrats have opposed the Amoco take-over of Dome. We think this is a backward step. Just when the west is trying to get out of a dependant relationship with eastern Canada and the United States, the Government, in contradiction to previous policies, reduces the level of Canadian ownership from 50 per cent to 40 per cent with this one deal. That means when the oil glut ends in the 1990s the multinationals will again be the beneficiaries, and the ordinary Albertan and the small oil companies will lose out.

How much time do I have left, Mr. Speaker?

• (1140)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Your time has just expired. Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I had more time. I realize that you were signalling that my time was up but I thought, as lead-off speaker, that I had more time. Perhaps I could ask permission of the House to have two minutes to sum up? I want to sum up by making positive suggestions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have two minutes to sum up his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that when I conclude my remarks I will be more than happy to entertain at least two minutes of questions from the Hon. Member so that he can complete what I thought was a very useful and intelligent description of some of the important issues facing this House.

In the last three or four months this House has had the occasion, mainly through opposition resolutions, to address a series of motions dealing with the issues facing western Canada. We introduced a resolution in December and one in the new year. There was a three-day farm debate and now we are dealing with a resolution presented by members of the New Democratic caucus.

In each of those debates we attempted to describe a deteriorating situation in western Canada, to provide some clear warning of the consequences for the entire country, and to prescribe some responses to it.

I must say that what we have received from the Government in return has not been particularly rewarding. The only result we have seen so far is the latest tour of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who went to western Canada for a three-day shopping centre visit where there were controlled crowds, with limited exposure. There was no real attempt to come to grips with the issues by dealing with the problems that exist there.

While we could go over the many statistics that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has just provided, I think it is perhaps much better to look at the situation as one would look at a series of pictures, to more graphically illustrate the kinds of difficulties people are facing in Alberta and western Canada.

I was struck by an article that appeared in the Calgary Herald on May 18. It is entitled: "Idle Nisku shocks Tory tour". It describes how a group of Tory Members of Parliament from other parts of Canada visited Alberta and found just how bad things were in the oil service industry. The article states:

> "I thought it was a lot better than that", Jean-Guy Guilbault, MP for the central Quebec riding of Drummond, said after a brief tour around the depressed Nisku industrial park.

Mr. Schellenberger: Your National Energy Program crippled that park.

Mr. Axworthy: Now we hear from the Members of Alberta the time honoured refrain that it was the NEP that did it. Let me pose an interesting question to the Hon. Members from Alberta. Why was there far less drilling activity last year than there was in 1983, 1984, and 1985 when the National Energy Program was in effect? If their policies were so brilliant and insightful, why had the oil industry, which had a capital investment of over $9 billion in 1985 when the NEP was still in effect and just beginning to be dismantled, failed by $4.5 billion by the next year?

I suggest to the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) that when the National Energy Program was in effect there was $9.5 billion of capital investment going into the oil industry. When his Government came to power and began to dismantle that program, the result was 50 per cent less drilling activity and $5 billion less in capital investment in that industry. The Member shakes his head, but those are the facts.

Mr. Schellenberger: Not all the facts.

Mr. Axworthy: Perhaps we can see the problem. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway properly pointed out that Tory Members of Parliament, with one or two exceptions, are incapable of seeing the facts. They do not have the capacity to remove their ideological blinders that have so mesmerized them over the years. Their problem is that they made the worst political mistake by believing their own propaganda, therefore ignoring the reality in the region they are supposed to represent. Consequently, they try to find scapegoats, try to blame others, and try to find external reasons for the problems, such as something in the past, rather than facing up to the reality that after two and one-half years in Government the resource commodity economy in western Canada is in a serious slump and has been decoupled from the economic growth in the rest of Canada. They have failed to realize that a solution to these problems requires an effective and imaginative response.

We hear the same refrain, that the NEP is at fault, each time there is a downturn in the oil industry. Those Conservative Members express the school yard, juvenile addled pratter, "The devil made me do it". They are not prepared to accept their responsibility as a Government and come to grips with the real problem. They are trailing in the polls in western Canada because western Canadians are discerning and know when they are being given a con job. They know when the Government is not prepared to fulfil all those promises it had made.

Let us consider agriculture for a moment. There was an interesting article in The Western Producer, written by a very distinguished journalist whom I believe all Members would admit is someone with much integrity. Mr. Barry Wilson pointed out that when the Conservatives were trying to gain power in 1983-84 they said they would far surpass the record of the Liberals in developing the agriculture export field. They cancelled Canagrex because they said they had a better way to proceed.

As Mr. Wilson pointed out in his article in The Western Producer on May 7, agriculture exports are way down. He said:

> —instead of an $11 billion increase in farm export values, government officials now predict the value of exports in 1987 will be almost $1 billion below 1984 exports of close to $10 billion.

An Hon. Member: It is the price of grain.

Mr. Axworthy: Of course there is a problem in the international export market. Of course prices are down. However, what is the Government doing about it? The farm groups have been saying for months that they need a substantial cash flow in order to make up the difference and enable them to stay on the farm. Mr. Mulroney goes out and says—

Mr. Malone: Order.

Mr. Axworthy: I am sorry, the Prime Minister. I think I can be excused if at times the gentleman who occupies the post of Prime Minister is not seen that way in my eyes or in the eyes of most Canadians, because he does not adequately fulfil that responsibility.

As an example of the pleas coming from people in Alberta, let me refer to a group from the Lethbridge area, comprised of municipal councillors, reeves, members of the farm review boards and members of agricultural organizations. They came to Ottawa to try to persuade the Government to respond. They received a five-minute meeting with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and that was the extent of his commitment to those farmers representing 20,000 farmers in that area. They said they needed a clear commitment of a deficiency payment so that they could tell their bankers they were able to stay on the land. They said they needed some restructuring of the farm debt credit problem. What did they receive? They received a visit from the Prime Minister. One of those people gave me a message to bring back to the House of Commons. Don't send the Prime Minister, send cash instead.

It is not a matter of deciding who is to blame. We know that the commodity industry, the backbone of the western Canadian way of life, is bleeding heavily. If that is allowed to continue, if the economic base of western Canada shrinks further, then it will never recover. The Government has the responsibility of responding to that problem. It is not someone else's responsibility. There is not another Government around. There will be in about two years but right now the problem is—

Mr. Scowen: Dream away.

Mr. Axworthy: Anyone who is standing at 23 per cent in the polls has nightmares, not dreams. I am sorry, the governing Party of Canada is now at 26 per cent and running third in western Canada. That is a great accomplishment.

I again plead with the Government to look at the facts and the consequences. It is not a matter of statistics or just saying the industry is in trouble. Look at what is beginning to happen. We had an announcement this week from the Alberta Minister of Health that as a result of the downturn the province is going to cut back on medicare payments. What is it that the province will not pay for anymore? It is podiatry treatment. Who uses podiatrists? Old people. That enlightened Conservative Government of Alberta says it is no longer going to provide support for the medical treatment of older people who have problems with their feet. What does the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) say? He has been given the responsibility for health in this country by legislative mandate. He says that is okay; why not? We have to look at that in human terms. We have older people who no longer feel they have the right to get proper medical treatment. Why? Because of the abdication of responsibility by various levels of Government.

Let us look at another issue which was not included in the Hon. Member's resolution, but which should have been and I understand why it was not. The NDP position is to abolish the Senate. They do not believe in it. The fact is that a majority of westerners, I would say, have come to the conclusion that the only way they will ultimately get the kind of attention they deserve and a fair deal in Confederation is through Senate reform. Senate reform has been endorsed by the Conservative Government of Alberta, by my Party, and a wide variety of groups. The federal Conservatives are conspicuous by their absence from that coalition but, nevertheless, it is now clear that the thrust towards Senate reform may be in jeopardy.

The ability to bring about the kind of constitutional amendment necessary may have been put in peril. The fact is that the Government has decided to pass control of a federal institution to the provincial Premiers. That will substantially alter the nature of this federation. It means that a federal institution reflecting the interests and concerns of the regions has been put in jeopardy.

It is striking that the kind of questions raised on that issue by my Leader and others have not been raised by Conservative Members from the west. You would think they would want to make sure that we have a proper opportunity to examine constitutional proposals in this House, that we have a committee determine whether the proposals ensure that we have meaningful Senate reform.

Once again I echo the words of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway who said that this is a story of the silent 20—perhaps the silent 40. When the time comes to fulfil their responsibility to their constituents to raise issues from a national perspective they are found silent and wanting. Instead they play with trifles. They find all kinds of extraneous issues with no relevance to the real meaning of what is happening in western Canada today.

We have heard now for six or seven months, I suppose, that one day the great economic diversification plan for the west will be revealed. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) put a group of 20 civil servants in the abandoned science building in Winnipeg, which the Government closed down even though it would have given Canada the most up-to-date robotics research centre in the world, to develop a diversification program.

There is a certain irony there that even Tory Members might be able to understand. The Government was going to come up with this grand blueprint. However, it will not have any money attached to it. It will be a grand balloon. I suppose the Government is going to do what it did with free trade, put out a fancy colour pamphlet and put it in the shopping centres along with The National Inquirer and People magazine to tell everyone what a wonderful blueprint it has for delivering the goods. Except there will be nothing meaningful in it.

I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) sitting there in all his glory. The unemployment rate in Alberta has gone up 3 per cent or 4 per cent since the Government was elected, but the amount of job-creation funds has not changed. The amount of money going to training programs has been cut back. That is the Government's response. There is effective Government for you! There you really see a Government that knows what it is doing! The Government likes to stand logic on its head.

Mr. Malone: When you point your finger at—

Mr. Axworthy: Unfortunately the Hon. Member cannot point a finger at his head because it is too pointed. Every time he does so he misses.

The real issue—

Mr. Bouchard: Everyone remembers when you were the Minister!

Mr. Axworthy: They do remember. As someone said when the Government brought in its refugee program, I was the last Minister to have control over my own department.

Mr. Bouchard: We had the worst rate in Canada with you.

Mr. Axworthy: The last one to have control over his department. Now we simply have a cipher who does not know what he is doing, but brings in the worst refugee program in the western world. He hardly should be shouting from his seat about grand accomplishments.

• (1200)

Let us talk about what the ultimate result of this should be. It is very clear that there must be announcements dealing with the agricultural crisis. We do not want Ministers responsible for trade and the Wheat Board holding press conferences to say how they will solve the long-term problem. Keynes once said that in the long term we will all be dead. The fact of the matter is that the problem exists in this crop year. It is necessary to have an announcement on deficiency payments now in order for farmers to plan their crop year.

There must be something more than a Kierans-type review on oil and gas policy and that will be addressed by my colleague, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), later in this debate.

Most important, there must be a real economic development plan for the west which is worked out with westerners rather than in an isolated think-tank of civil servants which the Deputy Prime Minister has put together.

Finally, the ultimate test for the people of Alberta and those of us on this side of the House will be when the Government is prepared to say that it is committed to true Senate reform which will recognize the necessity for the regions to be equally represented on the national level, not from provincial Governments.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, that was an excellent speech. I think the Member is right that the Conservatives are fighting yesterday's battles. We have to fight today's battles in the west. The Government could offer aid to the Husky up-grader. It could plan the next tar sands development with private or public companies or a combination. The Government has all these tools. It could aid small oil companies with a price regime which would help them. It could ship Alberta coal, which is cleaner burning, to Ontario.

The federal Government as well as the Alberta provincial Government could stop squeezing the domestic demand in Alberta. We learned from British Columbia that when restraint is put on when the economy is going down it only accelerates the worsening of the economy. Therefore, there are lots of things that could be done.

Peter Lougheed, former Premier of Alberta, and the late Grant Notley, former Leader of the Opposition there, spoke about using Alberta capital and economic diversification. I believe that the key for western Canada in the long run has to be in economic diversification.

Does the Member not think that perhaps the focus on Senate reform, institutional reform, will take away from the economic reforms which are needed in western Canada? How does he see the two relating? Does he not think perhaps that the emphasis should be on economic reform, economic diversification, using the tools which we presently have rather than focusing on institutional reform of the Senate?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I do not see economic reform and political reform as being contradictory. In fact, I see them as integral and connected parts of the same plan. The federal Government is a major reason for development in western Canada, and it has been historically from the time of the first railroads to the development of infrastructure programs, including highways, airports and others.

We are now into a new generation of reform which requires the federal Government to invest in science centres and research and development. It must provide the opportunity for western Canadians to become part of a new kind of economy based upon electronics, science, and various forms of high technology fields.

Unfortunately we in western Canada do not have the corporations to do that for us, aside from some of the big oil giants. Most of the economic base in western Canada is concentrated in small and medium-sized businesses. They do not have the resource capacity to have huge research laboratories. We do not have huge General Electric or General Motors plants in the west. Therefore, public sector investment has always provided that kind of support.

In order to make that happen there must be a clear willingness and ability by the federal Government to make those investments, to ensure that there is an equal distribution of procurement and investment in the scientific and technological facilities. There must be political will here in Ottawa to ensure that that takes place. I do not think that will exists, regardless of which Party is in power. We have one House comprised of seats based upon population. With the geography we have in Canada it is not always possible to ensure that there is equity in that system. That is why every other federal system has an effective second Chamber to ensure that there is balance in the distributional role of the federal Government.

I see the two as being very closely tied, as do most westerners. The matter was brought to a head with the CF-18 decision. There is no doubt that that had incredible importance in western eyes because they saw it as an unfair political decision against the proper and rational reasons why that major facility should have come west. They see it that way and they realize that those kinds of decisions are less likely to be taken if there is a second Chamber with elected and more equal representation to ensure that the political balance wheel is not out of whack.

We know that Senate reform is a long-term solution but it is symbolically very important for westerners to see that the rest of Canada is prepared to respond to what they see as a major system of disadvantage at this time. We know that psychology and symbolism are very important in politics. I do not think any Member of this House wants to see the emergence of a western separatist party. We want to argue these issues out among national parties, but if the national parties are seen not to care over a period of time about one region of the country, that will provide the stimulus for a separatist movement to emerge. It would be tragic if that took place in this country. That is why I believe that an economic reform plan and a political reform plan must go hand in hand.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Member read the editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press on the Meech Lake Accord and what it does to the prospects of an elected equal Senate. Does he subscribe to that editorial? Would he give us his thoughts on what he thinks the Meech Lake Accord does to the prospect of an elected Senate?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, rather than referring to the editorial in the Free Press, which I do not normally treat as a source of my opinion, I refer the Hon. Member to the speech given by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in this House during the debate. He said that when the exact language is put forward and we, hopefully, have the opportunity to have an active examination of it in this House, we will want to know whether the proposed amending formula, which in a sense provides for a unanimity principle, will provide a major blockade to the achievement of Senate reform.

I also raised the question of whether the proposal that the provincial Governments nominate Senate appointees may also provide a certain blockage. Once provincial Governments get used to the idea of having their own nominees it is less likely that they will be inspired by Senate reform based upon election.

Therefore, those items in the Accord must be very carefully examined. I want people who understand constitutional implications to appear before a committee of this House to give their expert opinion on whether the outcome will be as the Free Press predicts, that we would not have Senate reform if it proceeds. It is certainly a question which is in the mind of our caucus.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I guess my initial reaction to reading this motion is one of amazement. I am absolutely amazed at the gall, the nerve of the socialist party, with the support of the Liberals, apparently, from the last speech, to make that kind of motion. Where have those Members been if they do not realize that whatever problems exist are the result of the policies and programs of the previous Government supported by the socialist party?

I have been around here for a while. I remember the summer of 1973 very well when David Lewis who was propping up the Trudeau minority Government said, "You had better do something about inflation or I won't be able to support you anymore". On September 8, 1973, Mr. Trudeau gave a speech. He did something about inflation all right, he put a price freeze on oil and wheat. That is what he did. He said, "We are going to fight inflation by freezing the price of products produced in the west", and David Lewis said, "That's good enough for me".

Then we had the energy wars, the price freeze and the export tax, where the Government said, "Don't worry, we are going to return it to the producers who own it". Then the Government said, "Well, we are only going to return half". Then it said, "We are not going to return any of it at all".

I remember the famous Budget of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), then Minister of Finance, on May 8, 1974. The former Minister said, "By cracky, we are going to put those westerners in their place, those oil tycoons", and he made royalties non-tax deductible and the oil industry came to a grinding and screeching halt. I remember the applause from David Lewis and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I remember that very well.

Then there was a little sanity for a period when Donald Macdonald took over as Minister of Energy. We had a little sanity for a few years and some growth. Then we had Allan MacEachen and Marc Lalonde who brought in that great new piece of national policy, the National Energy Program, which confiscated private resources by way of the back-in, which introduced the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the petroleum compensation charge, the special compensation charge, the Canadian ownership charge and the export tax, ad nauseam.

Where were the socialists? They said, "Good for you. We have to put those multinationals in their place. We have to put a stop to this abuse". They brought the west to its knees. An economist at the University of Calgary estimated that over the period from 1974 to 1984, $50 billion was drained out of the western economy as a result of policies which the socialist party supported every step of the way. I was here and heard those debates.

We were elected on a promise made to the whole country that we would remove the National Energy Program and we would restore world prices, and we did. The best year ever was 1985. Yes, world oil prices collapsed in 1986, but we acted. We accelerated the removal of the rest of the PGRT and introduced the small producers program.

What about the people who work in that industry? What do they have to say about it, the people who know? How about the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, which is in the service sector, and members were just talking about its difficulty? What does it have to say? In a letter dated March 31, 1987, it states:

> The announcement by the Hon. Marcel Masse on March 25, 1987, proved that the Government of Canada was aware of industry's plight and was prepared to act very decisively to create a program of assistance through renewed investor interest.

The people who know say we have done the right thing and applaud us. The socialists and the Liberals, who do not have a clue about what is going on out there, say we have not done anything. How about SEPAC, the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada? In a letter of March 27, 1987, it states:

> Mr. Masse's program meets or exceeds all of SEPAC requirements. More importantly however, the package reintroduces fairness and equality into our system.

That is what people who know are saying about the programs we have introduced. Compare that to the Grit-socialist record. People out there have not forgotten. That is why in Alberta we talk about polls but the polls the NDP talk about do not exist in Alberta because Albertans know that this Government has acted.

The point was made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) that we should not look at the past but to the future. He asks us what we are today. Let us look at today. I was born and raised in Alberta and for as long as I can remember, and according to my teachers and parents for as long as the province has existed, there have been three burning issues in the west; there have been three major complaints about what it was getting out of Confederation. The first is resource policy, because when the provinces were formed they were not given the constitutional responsibility for resources. That only came in 1935 as a result of a Conservative Government. The energy policies, as we know from the NEP and the policies which preceded it—that David Lewis insisted on—still enabled the federal Government to abuse the resources of western Canada when it so chose and it chose to do it during that period, with the support of the socialists.

There are the other two issues of particular relevance today. For as long as anyone in the west can remember the complaint has been about the trade situation in the country, that everything the west produced had to be sold at world prices and everything we bought had to be at higher than world prices from behind tariff protected laws. The demand for fairness in that trade situation vis-à-vis the rest of the world has been a constant demand in the west since the provinces were formed in 1908. We are acting on that. This Government is acting through these free trade negotiations. We are addressing an historical Albertan complaint, but where do the socialists and the Liberals stand on this historic Albertan complaint? They stand on the other side, all the while claiming they are concerned about the west, and Alberta in particular. What hypocrisy.

There is another issue which goes back to the formation of the province and has been there as a burning and frustrating concern to westerners, and that is transportation. The transportation system made it very difficult if not impossible for western industry to compete, because of the set of regulated rail rates and so on. Everything was f.o.b. Alberta if we were exporting and f.o.b. Toronto if we were purchasing. The rates made it impossible to compete. That is being addressed with Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 by this Government. Where is the socialist party on this issue? It is opposed. It is with the CPR, for crying out loud.

This historical 80-year old issue for western Canada is being addressed by the Government and the socialists are opposed, all the while claiming they are interested in the west. What absolute utter hypocrisy. They do not have a clue what westerners want or what Albertans want. They do not have a clue about what is going on in Alberta today. Are they aware that 35,000 jobs were created in Alberta since the election? Are they aware that the unemployment rate was 12.1 per cent in September of 1984 and it is now 10 per cent? The unemployment rate in Alberta has dropped to 10 per cent. Total unemployment fell by 26,000 since September, 1984. Are they aware that the value of building permits in the first month of 1987 was up 29.3 per cent compared to the same period in 1986 and up 7.2 per cent compared to 1985 and up 12 per cent compared to 1984? The value of building permits is up. Are the socialists aware that housing starts in 1986 were up 5.5 per cent compared to 1985 and up 22.4 per cent compared to 1984 during the National Energy Program activity? Are they aware that last month there were more houses sold in Calgary than at any time in the history of that city, and that prices are rising?

• (1220)

Mr. Althouse: They are all leaving.

Mr. Andre: Are they aware of that fact? Are they aware that retail sales in Alberta, on a per capita basis, are the highest in the country, higher than in Ontario? Are they aware of that fact?

Comparing 1986 to 1981, are they aware that there was a much smaller reduction in farm families in Alberta in 1986 than in any other province of the country? Comparing 1986 to 1981, there was a drop of .5 per cent in the number of farm families in Alberta in 1986. In Ontario, the figure was 11.8 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 15.1 per cent; in British Columbia, 14.7 per cent. There was a smaller reduction in farm families in Alberta than in any other province of the country in that period.

Are they aware of those facts? Hardly. Had they been aware of them, they would not have had the nerve to introduce this motion.

Mr. Waddell: What about the Conference Board?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, they simply have not a clue about what is going on in Alberta, or the rest of the country. I have read a statement of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) to the effect that the jobs we have created have had no regional impact; that 94 per cent of the jobs created were in southern Ontario, around Toronto.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely false.

Mr. Andre: That is what the Leader of the New Democratic Party has said.

An Hon. Member: NDP distortion.

Mr. Andre: If he had any clue about what was going on, he would realize that that is nonsense. In fact, something in the order of 40 per cent of the jobs created were located in Ontario, with 28 per cent being in the Province of Quebec and 23 per cent in the west. In fact, the distribution of new jobs equates approximately to the distribution of the population of the country.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and every spokesman for this Government, recognizes that in fact regional disparity in this country remains a problem. But, it is not helpful to have the dauphin, the heir apparent, the guy who is buying the Gucci shop in anticipation of his move to 24 Sussex, going around making these absolutely false statements.

And talking about false statements, I heard the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) state in his speech that if Amoco takes over Dome, there will be a drop in Canadian ownership of the oil and gas sector to 40 per cent. Again, I urge the Hon. Member to learn some facts before making statements in the House.

An Hon. Member: The NDP do not know facts.

Mr. Andre: In 1984, ownership of the oil and gas industry stood at 42.5 per cent Canadian, with control at 40.5 per cent. As of today, the ownership level is at 47 per cent, with control being at 48.4 per cent. In the event that the Amoco deal goes through, the ownership will be 43.7 per cent—still higher than in September, 1984; and the control will be 41.1 per cent, again higher than the level in 1984.

The statement by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway that in fact we are reversing things somehow from that great wonderful period when we had the Liberals and the NDP in their coalition, is simply false. It is simply false, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Althouse: The notion of a coalition isn't exactly true either.

Mr. Andre: What the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway says is simply not the situation at all.

Let us look at what this Government has done for western Canada. We have had all of these false statements from the Opposition as to what the situation is today—

Mr. Althouse: We are simply quoting the figures of the Conference Board of Canada.

Mr. Andre: The Conference Board is trying to predict the future.

We have had all of these false statements about what the situation is today, and how we got to that situation. The explanations given by both opposition Parties were false and misleading. Let us have a look at what in fact this Government has done. Let us look first at the energy sector, in terms of over-all figures.

In 1983, the federal Government collected directly by way of taxes from the oil and gas industry, primarily located in Alberta, $4.7 billion. That was in direct taxes. Additional billions were lost as a result of the paying of less than world price. But directly by way of taxes there was an extraction from that part of the country of $4.7 billion. In 1986, that was down to about $400 million, or a reduction of approximately $4.3 billion.

Mr. Waddell: Where did all the money go?

Mr. Andre: That money is staying in Alberta, producing, among other things, the record housing sales that are now being experienced. It accounts for the high level of retail sales in Alberta, a level higher than anywhere in Canada. House sales in Alberta last month were the highest in the history of that province.

Let us look at the agriculture sector. In 1983, federal contributions to farmers amounted to some $300 million. In 1987, it is estimated that federal contributions will be $2.5 billion, an increase of roughly seven to eight times the 1983 level.

How can anyone in their right mind, Mr. Speaker, say that under the Liberal-NDP coalition, the west was doing well; that the west was getting favoured treatment from Ottawa, and it is only under the Tories that the west is being abused?

These are the same Tories who have raised the farm support from $300 million to $2.5 billion; these are the same Tories who cut back on taxes from the oil and gas sector from $4.6 billion to $400 million.

The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I will have time to go through the entire list.

Western Grain Stabilization Act payments are estimated to be $859 million this year, and last year amounted to $522 million. We had crop assistance payments of $150 million and $60 million in respect of emergencies and disasters. We also have the new grain deals with the U.S.S.R, Brazil, and Egypt.

Just this week we have had evidence from the OECD of the success that this Government has achieved in respect of the problems of western Canada. For the first time the OECD is looking at agriculture subsidies, and the rest of the world recognizes that this examination by the OECD flows from a Canadian initiative. It was the Prime Minister of this country who raised this issue at the Tokyo Summit; it was the Prime Minister of this country who instructed his Ministers to ensure that the question of agricultural subsidies be placed on the agenda of the GATT meetings.

It is under this Government that these long-standing problems, problems which had been left to fester, are finally being addressed. The members of the Opposition know in their souls that this is happening. Under the previous Government, it would have cost $11 a tonne to ship grain, in comparison to a cost last year of $6 a tonne.

The list of programs we have put in place is of such length it is difficult to know where to start. The establishment of farm debt review panels is but one example.

The members of the Opposition talk about agricultural debt. Yes, indeed, there is a lot of debt; and yes, indeed, the degree of debt has been a problem for agriculture across the country. As is apparent from the statistics, a lot of farmers have gone out of business all around the country as a result of farm debt and interest rates, but less so in Alberta than in the other province of the country. We have done something about this problem. Interest rates are down, and the consequent savings to the farmers are enormous.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway notes the high percentage of debt in his motion. Given the high percentage of debt, he ought to recognize the tremendous benefit accruing to debt holders as a result of the reduction in interest rates.

Mr. Althouse: I suppose the reduction in grain prices is a big help, too.

An Hon. Member: There he is, the Saskatchewan Rhodes Scholar.

Mr. Andre: The socialist opposite says it is the fault of the Mulroney Government that grain prices have gone down.

Mr. Althouse: No. You were talking about what has gone down. You put interest rates on an open-market basis, and they went down. So did grain prices. Open market!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has the floor.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, on the one hand they say we do nothing; on the other hand, they attribute to Prime Minister Mulroney the incredible power to control the world economy in grain.

Mr. Althouse: You are taking the credit for the fall in interest rates, a world situation.

Mr. Andre: We will take responsibility for all of our actions, for all of those matters over which we have control, and we will put our record of performance in terms of helping those hurt by events beyond our control against that of any other Government or Party.

• (1230)

If the Hon. Member were concerned about farmers, he would have been supporting free trade and amendments to the Transport Act. If he were concerned about the west, he would have supported those issues.

We refuse to take responsibility for rain on weekends or for the policies of the EEC, because we have no control over those policies.

Albertans know very well that the Government has been very responsive. Yes, indeed, things have been tough with the collapse in grain prices. I should mention parenthetically that the livestock industry is doing fairly well these days, and it is an important part of Alberta agriculture. Yes, indeed, the oil industry is hurting as a result of the collapse in oil prices in 1986. However, the people in the industry know that we have done as well as could be done. If we compare the damage in Calgary with the damage in Houston, for example, we see that in fact we have actually done considerably better, relatively speaking, because of what the Government has done.

If we look at the facts on farm incomes, individual incomes, jobs, and so on in terms of Alberta, we have actually not done bad as a result of the actions of the Government, given the circumstances. If the opposition Parties would be less obstructive and would co-operate in terms of free trade, transportation, and energy policies, we could restore to the west and provide for the west the kind of future which the people and resources out there are capable of producing. If it is not with the co-operation of the Opposition, then it will be in spite of the opposition of the Opposition, because we are determined to do it.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister. However, by way of preface I should like to thank him for his excellent remarks in respect of the motion. As a Saskatchewanian I have a particular interest in what the Opposition was saying about western Canada.

The thrust of my question to the Minister is, can the NDP, in suggesting this motion, be trusted in Alberta and trusted in western Canada?

As a western Canadian one sees three bizarre contradictions among many others in NDP policy. Those of us in the west who have historically been discriminated against by tariff barriers and who want free trade as an economic salvation to western Canada find ourselves blocked by the NDP and its big labour partners in Oshawa, those unions and people who wish to hold western Canada back.

If we look at foreign investment and what it has done for the oil patch in Alberta and in Saskatchewan and the thousands of jobs it has brought, there again the NDP tries to fight jobs and development for western Canada.

A point to those of us who are concerned with the farm economy is that when we have difficulty with the grain handlers we hear the NDP bleating and whining. We have to point out that there are seats on the NDP executive which are occupied by the Canadian Labour Congress. It becomes very difficult to deal with the NDP inconsistencies in labour policy when we look at the grain handlers who have often jeopardized the very life-blood of the Saskatchewan economy.

Given those three bizarre contradictions, my question to the Hon. Minister is, who would trust the NDP in western Canada?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, only the most gullible. The Hon. Member is absolutely right.

I have often wondered how the Leader of the New Democratic Party manages to straddle the policy issue when he applauds the investment of foreign-owned General Motors in Oshawa and says that it is good for Canada, that it means jobs, but when it comes to investment by a foreign company in the oil industry in Alberta he says that it is terrible for Canada. Why is it that a job with a foreign-owned company in Oshawa is in the national interest, but a job with a foreign-owned oil company in Calgary is somehow not in the national interest? I wonder if some day the socialists could explain that to me in a way that I can tell an employee in Calgary that the Leader of the NDP has a clear view of the country. I would like to be able to do that some day.

As the Hon. Member said, how does one base trust? How does one decide whether to trust? We can do so on one's past performance and one's performance today, but we take a risk on the future.

Referring to their past performance, we know that during the period from 1972 to 1974 when the energy war started David Lewis was there propping up Pierre Trudeau. David Lewis supported the then Minister of Finance who is now Leader of the Opposition in that disastrous Budget of May 8. We know all that. The history is there. We know their performance in the National Energy Program. We know what they did, how they sat by and in fact applauded for all kinds of "national noble reasons" while the west was having the boots put to it.

However, we know that today the west wants free trade and deregulated transportation to address historical problems which have been a bane to development in the west since the formation of the provinces out there. On these two vitally important issues to the west, we know where the NDP is—it is opposed, opposed and opposed. Perhaps it is because Shirley Carr told them to be. I do not know, because it does not make any sense. I do not see how anybody who has concern for the west can be opposed to those two initiatives.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Hon. Minister who comes from Calgary Centre. Bearing in mind that members of the NDP, putting on their mask and being great pretenders—

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you intend to recognize any opposition Members or other party Members in this period.

Mr. Gormley: Are you questioning the Speaker?

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I hope to, if time permits.

Mr. Malone: I might say parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that you are a fine gentleman, but it is pretty hard to see people who do not stand up.

I want to ask the Hon. Minister about these great pretenders who pretend to defend Alberta and the west. I should like to refer to a direct quotation from their policy resolutions. The Leader of the New Democratic Party said that they stand by all of them and will not change their mind to court public opinion. How will the following resolution help the good City of Calgary and western Canada, "The phasing out of all oil exports to the United States and a ban on the export of current supply of natural gas"? What would that do to Calgary? What would that do to western Canada? What would that do to Canada?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, obviously that would be an utter disaster to western Canada. Presumably it would make the people in Oshawa feel more comfortable to have the west remain a kind of sump or storage tank for oil and gas, so his constituents in Oshawa would never have to worry about supply.

The jobs of people who explore for oil, do the drilling, the geophysical work, the geological work, the pipeline work, and so on, are not real jobs! I mean, a real job is working on an assembly line in a foreign-owned automotive company! Those are not real jobs out there? They are supposed to find enough and keep it in a storage tank so that the people in Oshawa, apparently, will not have to worry about security in the future, but if people in Alberta are put out of work because of those policies, too bad! They will show their sincerity by introducing absurd motions, all the while adopting policies at their conventions which would make the statistics real, which would cause that loss of 50,000 jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) wishes to make a comment and ask a question.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a short comment and a question. I must say that this performance is beneath the Hon. Minister. It is full of half-truths and hypocrisy. It pits one segment of the country against the other. It shows a complete misunderstanding of the Auto Pact which forced reinvestment. It is a disgusting performance.

If the Albertan people, as the Minister claims, know very well what the Government is doing, why did they reduce the Government's majority in the Pembina by-election from 35,000 to 232 votes? Why did they do that?

• (1240)

Mr. Gormley: Who did they elect?

Mr. Waddell: Why did they do that?

Mr. Gormley: Who did they elect? They elected a Tory.

Mr. Waddell: Is he calling the Conference Board misleading? The Conference Board said that economic activity in Alberta in the last year fell; that economic activity decreased by .07 per cent. Is the Minister disputing that fact?

I know the Minister loves the past, I guess he wishes he were in opposition, he loves it. He remembers that time, but we are dealing with the here and now, not yesterday. What is his position on the Husky upgrader in Lloydminster? What is the Minister going to do about that? What is the Minister's position on the Amoco takeover of Dome Petroleum?

Mr. Andre: Very quickly on the question of the facts, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, the collapse in oil prices and the collapse in grain prices have had an effect. There is no denying that. But the question is, has the Government reacted to that? Has the Government introduced programs? Has the Government responded favourably and impressively?

Mr. Gormley: The answer is yes.

Mr. Andre: The answer is yes. The numbers are there. The facts are there. If the Hon. Member and his Party were being honest, they would recognize that. They apparently feel there is no partisan advantage in being honest.

As to the Amoco takeover of Dome, I am very pleased that there is bidding for Dome. This is very bullish news for the industry. Dome has a large land position, as the Hon. Member might know but probably does not. He might know that in the oil and gas industry most plays, drilling of wells and so on, are joint ventures. Many companies have joint venture arrangements with Dome, and that has effectively sterilized lands because Dome is in no position to participate and take up its share. If there were an active owner of Dome that could manage those properties, like an oil company, rather than doing what Dome has done in the last couple of years, of trying to survive, it would be very bullish news for the west—

Mr. Gagnon: It would create jobs.

Mr. Andre: It would create thousands of jobs. The question which the New Democrats have to consider is whether they are willing to sacrifice those thousands of jobs that would be created through a successful takeover of Dome because of their concern over the foreign ownership provisions. That is the question. If we were to follow NDP policy and say no to this takeover, we would be putting in jeopardy thousands and thousands of jobs as well as many little companies in the service sector about which the Hon. Member expressed concern. That is what the Hon. Member has to bear in mind.

It is marvellous to sit in opposition in great sanctimony and to wax eloquent on these questions of foreign ownership, of Amoco and so on, and at the same time worry about jobs but not make the intellectually honest connection between the two. You cannot have it both ways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in this debate. We have just learned graphically why the Minister and other Conservatives from Alberta are now known as the pathetic Conservatives in western Canada.

I was born in Alberta. My mom and dad were born in Alberta. My grandparents lived in Alberta. I have lots of aunts, uncles, cousins and all kinds of relatives who live in Alberta, most of whom used to be supporters of the Conservative Party, provincially and federally. They are not any more, almost to a one, and for good reasons.

The speech just given demonstrates clearly why Albertans are sick and tired of the rhetoric and malarkey coming from that Minister and the Alberta Tories. They go around saying, "Socialist this, red scare that. The socialists would do this or they would do that or did that." The old stories of fright and fear mongering do not work among Albertans any more. Albertans are much more intelligent, much more understanding and caring about Alberta and western Canada than the Tory Members want to give them credit for. Albertans now place their support as third for Conservatives. They place Liberals higher in their esteem than they do the Tories and they put New Democrats at the top, and I think for good reason.

Mr. Malone: In Alberta?

Mr. Fulton: Let me give an example of why Albertans are suspicious of where the Tories are coming from. Alberta has the lowest per capita acreage of parkland of any province in Canada. What are the Tory's response to that? They come to Cabinet and say "You should turn over the national parks to Alberta so that Alberta can have a parkland base". That is the kind of lack of vision that we have seen decade after decade after decade from the silent 20, as they are known in Alberta. What happens when one speaks out? What happened to the Member from Edmonton who spoke out? He got thrown out of caucus. But what happens to Tory Members who are involved in land deals or influence peddling or anything else? They get to stay in caucus. They get to hang around and continue to participate, but we know that if a western Tory tries to say the Government is not dealing with this or that bread and butter issue and speaks out, he gets bounced down the road.

Let me deal with the park issue for a moment because it is important to look at the silence of the Alberta Tories on issues related to the environment, on important national issues, such as parks. We have to understand that Albertans have a great love for the land, for the farmland, the foothills, for Jasper, Banff, for Wood Buffalo and other areas in the province. Why has there not been a single Alberta Tory Member talking about the national park system? Why have they not been a little more sensitive to this crazy idea of simply turning over the national parks so that a Don Getty and others can go around and crow saying, "Now we have all these marvellous provincial parks".

Why hasn't that Government with the Heritage Fund, and through other means, gone about acquiring some of the grasslands, acquiring part of the foothills, acquiring part of the Peace River, acquiring those areas of natural beauty so that Albertans can have a sound provincial and regional economic base in terms of tourism? I suggest it is for a simple reason that Albertans have now finally recognized. Tories have managed to get elected and re-elected. They have said that the reds are coming, that there is a socialist scare, that the socialists will take over the oil patch. They are going to do this and that, quoting from policies, 10, 15, 20 or 30 years ago. I do not stoop to that kind of stupidity, dragging out all Tory policies from the 1930s, 1940s or 1950s. That is the kind of low gutter politics which Tory MPs love to practice, going around telling half truths, saying, "Keep us in Government because if you had the New Democrats they would do this or that". As I said, Albertans are tired of the fear mongering. They have recognized that the silent 20 have become known in Alberta and in all of western Canada as the pathetic Conservatives.

Albertans have looked and they know what happened in Saskatchewan in the years of Tommy Douglas and Allan Blakeney. They know what good Government can bring at the provincial level. They saw what happened in British Columbia which brought in insurance policies and all kinds of other things that were good for individual ordinary Canadians in British Columbia. That is why the New Democrats are the Official Opposition in the Legislature of Alberta. After the next federal election they will hold a substantial majority of the seats in Alberta, I am quite convinced.

Mr. Malone: That is what you said in the last election and the election before that.

Mr. Fulton: We hear them crowing over there. Why is it that the 20 government Members have never brought forward any days of debate on the Alberta economy? Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Why is it that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has sneaked out once since the election and sneaked through Alberta to a couple of specially selected meetings and then sneaked back out of Alberta and into British Columbia? The Tory caucus says "Brian, don't come to the west. Put Maz up. Put Joe up. Don't bring the Prime Minister out here".

Mr. Jelinek: That is not true.

Mr. Fulton: "We know that our popularity will simply go down, down, down. We know what kind of a Government you bring us".

Let me just use some of the figures that were used by the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). Statistics Canada pointed out that of the real new jobs created since the last Budget, there were almost zero in Alberta; 137,000 were created in all of Canada, with 132,000 of them in southern Ontario. Five thousand were speckled and scattered throughout the rest of Canada, with very few in the west.

The Minister says that they have created all these jobs in Alberta, but we are talking about net job creation. For every 10 about which the Minister was talking having been created in Alberta, nine were lost. That happened in almost every single sector. The Minister pooh-poohs what the Conference Board of Canada has reported this week, that Alberta will have the worse performing provincial economy in Canada. Growth will be down for the second consecutive year, last year by .7 per cent and this year that is expected to almost double to a free fall of 1.1 per cent. The oil and gas sector has lost 25,000 direct and 25,000 indirect jobs in the last 12 months.

The Minister can go around Alberta and crow, saying this is marvellous, 50,000 jobs have disappeared, it is the bread and butter workers, the roughnecks, the people constructing pipelines and providing various kinds of technology to the oil patch, who know they are not taking home a pay cheque. They know they have the silent 20 here in Ottawa who are not addressing the problem on a daily, weekly or monthly basis.

Where is this famous western initiative fund? Where are all these famous proposals by these supposedly great Albertans who are standing up against the socialist hordes? The Conservative Government has the largest majority in Canadian history and it is unable to do anything in the west. It has no interest. Its only interest is in continuing to be re-elected.

Let us take another look at the oil patch. While upstream exploration and development revenues fell by 64 per cent in 1986 compared to 1985, revenues from the refining operations of the major integrated oil companies increased 110 per cent. The top five were all in the 90 per cent to 110 per cent range, with Texaco leading the way. At the same time the small Canadian-owned oil and gas companies that do most of the exploration were squeezed, in many cases squeezed out.

For decades Conservative MPs have returned to Ottawa time after time after time saying, "Give us a chance. When we are in Government we are going to do X, Z, and Y". I talk to Albertans all the time. I go to weddings and all kinds of things there. Most of my family still lives in Alberta. I am proud to say I was born an Albertan. As you probably know, I was born in Canmore, a small coal mining town just outside Banff, and many of my relatives still live there. I know what those people are saying.

In 1986 compared to 1985 the money spent on takeovers and acquisitions in the oil and gas industry rose by 60 per cent, from $2.2 billion to $3.5 billion. We know what is happening with respect to the Conservative investment policy. They love to sell out to the lowest bidder. If the Americans want to buy, come on in and buy all you want. Let the minnows take over the whales, let the whales take over the minnows. It is not creating any new jobs and in the future Canadians will reflect on this massive majority Conservative Government elected on September 4, 1984, and massively crushed in 1988, particularly in Alberta. Albertans are not fooled by the bombast of Ministers like the one who just spoke. Not anymore. You can drag all this socialist rhetoric out but Albertans drive to Saskatchewan. They know what Tommy Douglas and Allan Blakeney did. They know what good was done in British Columbia during the days of Dave Barrett.

Mr. Malone: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: They know and put trust in what Ed Broadbent has to say. They know he has some vision of the west and how the country can really work. They know why medicare is good.

How many Conservatives in this House or in Alberta go out and tear up their medicare cards? We have the great socialist scare. All the Tories were saying this is terrible, the doctors will all leave and we will not be able to get our toe-nails clipped. Everything is going to collapse. B.C. brings in an insurance corporation and Alberta Tories say this is the end, free enterprise is finished. People who were buying car insurance, though, said this is not bad. Their insurance went from $800 a year to $400. They said these New Democrats seem to know what they are talking about. They are able to get insurance prices down and we like that. It is great to have free enterprisers running around saying you have to have free enterprise and pay twice as much for your car insurance or your fire insurance. Ordinary working Canadians are not fooled by that kind of claptrap and nonsense anymore.

Let us take a look at the farm economy. My colleague from Humboldt—Lake Centre has pointed out many times realistic ways of assisting farmers. We know about the U.S. Farm Bill. We know about the battles with the EEC. We know how you buy four bushels of wheat from them and you get one free. We know it is a serious problem for our farmers but we come forward with realistic solutions.

When it came to planting time we asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Prime Minister whether they were prepared to give some kind of basic understanding to our farmers so that there would be some kind of additional funding at the end of this year. Do the Tories respond? No, they talk about the money given for the last crop year. They never want to deal with the real concerns of farmers.

Let us look at what has happened to farmland in Alberta. The average land value has fallen 50 per cent over the last five years. What does that mean to a farmer trying to get a loan to buy new equipment or fertilizer, trying to decide what to plant and where to plant, what to leave fallow? It does not help them. Albertan farmers had $5 billion in loans outstanding at the end of last year, 23 per cent of Canada's outstanding farm debt. In 1986, 800 farm families had to abandon their farms. In 1983 the figure was only 300. The Minister gets up and says, "We great Conservatives have brought down interest rates and we should take all the credit for that". We know our interest rates are a reflection of the international market, particularly the U.S. If the Government wants to take credit for falling interest rates, then it has to take some responsibility for the international market for grain. You cannot just say that is the international market-place. They say they will take credit for the good things but when it is bad, no, no, that is the NDP or the U.S. or the world, or because the moon rose on the wrong side of the earth.

That kind of pathetic and dishonest political reasoning is why Albertans are getting tired of the kind of claptrap they are always getting from their Tory MPs, whether from Crowfoot or Calgary or anywhere else. They are tired of the Tories always dragging out an old NDP policy and saying this was just printed. This is Ed Broadbent's latest position. That is malarkey. That kind of dishonesty is beneath what I would expect of any Member of this House, and not just here in Ottawa but as they travel around Alberta. Albertans are not dumb and they are tired of being treated as mushrooms.

Realized net income from farming declined by almost 40 per cent last year in Alberta. Serious steps have to be taken by this Parliament to deal with the real concerns of Albertans. Some 600 families are added to the welfare rolls in Alberta every month. That gives you some kind of indicator of what is happening in that economy. Unemployment is at 10.5 per cent. For those between the ages of 17 and 25, it is 17.5 per cent. That is almost one young person in five. That is totally unacceptable.

A country as wealthy as Canada simply cannot allow that to go on when large corporations, the great friends of the Tories, the great financiers, owe more than $30 billion in unpaid taxes from last year. The deficit was only $29.5 billion. Why does the Government not collect from those corporations? Why is it always going after the farmers with special tax audit teams, or the small business people or individual workers in Alberta?

We know the silent 20 from Alberta have not been speaking up for their constituents. Sadly enough Alberta now has the highest annual suicide rate of any province at 16.9 per 100,000. That is a true reflection of an economy in crisis. There is crisis in the family, violence in the family. People have given up all hope of ever finding a place in society. Farm suicides in Alberta rose from 15.1 per 100,000 four years ago to 40.6. It tripled in three years.

Let me deal with an issue which has been before this House for a long time and has never been dealt with in any way effectively by the Government despite the fact the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has tried to get some publicity and take the lead. What about Alberta and B.C. coal? It is clean low-sulphur coal and can be shipped along those unused back-haul lines to Ontario.

Mr. Malone: Why don't you pass Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 so we can do that?

Mr. Fulton: Why does the Government support buying dirty American coal to increase the amount of SO2 and NO2 emissions in Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, the Hon. Member will have four minutes left in debate plus 10 minutes for questions and comments when we return.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

RAOUL WALLENBERG AWARD FOR HUMANITARIAN SERVICE AWARDED TO CANADIAN, MR. JOE STERN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it was with great pleasure that I learned today that Mr. Joe Stern, Chairman of the Refugee Advisory Committee for Canada, has been awarded the Raoul Wallenberg Award for Humanitarian Service. This is a very distinguished award for a very distinguished Canadian.

In my esteem there is no one in this country who deserves this honour more. As Chairman of the Refugee Advisory Committee, Mr. Stern has brought judgment, wit and, above all, compassion to one of the most difficult tasks performed by any public servant in Canada. He is responsible for deciding the fate of the homeless of this world. In that role he has represented Canada with understanding and care that know no equal.

At a time when the prevailing view seems to be to close our doors and get tough with refugees, Mr. Stern has provided the opposite example. He cares deeply about people and has won the admiration of all those who work in the refugee field.

There is a saying from the Talmud, "He who saves one life saves the world". Joe Stern is a living example of that philosophy. I hope he will be in a position to continue his service to refugees and to Canada in the years to come. I pay tribute to him today for a remarkable achievement by a very worthy person.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SUPPLIERS—INFORMATION SESSION ORGANIZED AT MONSEIGNEUR-MARCOUX CENTRE IN QUÉBEC EST RIDING

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec Est): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House an event organized by the Department of Supply and Services that will take place in the beautiful riding of Québec-Est at the Centre Monseigneur-Marcoux on Friday, May 29. I am referring to an information session for suppliers in the Quebec City area which will concentrate on the anticipated requirements of various departments for goods and services and on purchase procedures.

I would like to point out that more than 450 businesses have already said they will attend, and I also would like to say that those who are interested may be registered locally with the federal Government's central file.

As the Member for Québec Est, I am anxious to make suppliers, both in my riding and Quebec City aware of federal purchasing requirements. My Government appreciates regional input, and the department's visit cannot be other than beneficial to the business community. The more the Government buys in our region, the more we have to produce and the more jobs we will create and preserve. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree this is an excellent initiative.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

INVITATION TO PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA TO APPEAR BEFORE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. John Buchanan, is going to refuse the invitation of the Special Committee on Acid Rain to appear before it to explain why Nova Scotia is the only province of those which were committed to entering into an acid rain abatement agreement with the federal Government which has yet to do so.

We should all realize that the fact that Nova Scotia has not yet come to an agreement with the federal Government is a blight upon the Canadian record. We want to be able to say to Americans, whom we want to act on acid rain, that Canada has its federal-provincial act together with respect to acid rain. Nova Scotia holding out in the way that it is is jeopardizing the Canadian position in this regard.

The committee only wanted Premier Buchanan, if he has justifiable reasons for holding out, to explain those reasons to the committee. His colleague, the Premier of New Brunswick, did that and I do not think it did him any harm. I think Premier Buchanan should reconsider his refusal and come before the Special Committee on Acid Rain on behalf of Nova Scotia.

HEALTH

PRESENCE OF TOXIC CHEMICALS IN NORTHERN FISH AND ARCTIC SEA MAMMALS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the distribution of chemical residues is a world-wide problem. Recently a Yellowknife conference was told of the presence of organochlorine compounds and alarmingly high concentrations of toxaphene, a now banned chemical formerly used in Texas cotton fields, found in fish livers from the lower Mackenzie River.

In addition, PCBs, DDT and other harmful substances have been discovered in the fatty tissues of sea mammals in the Arctic Ocean which, of course, is a source of food for the local inhabitants. Although the levels are generally lower than those considered to be dangerous to human life, these problems cannot be ignored. The Departments of Health and Welfare, Fisheries and Oceans, and the Environment, are to be complimented on their work to date and urged to continue with yet more diligence so that dangers to health might be averted.

THE MEDIA

INACCURATE REFLECTION OF MEMBER'S VIEWS ON SOLIDARITY IN POLAND

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Press story today regarding my recent visit to Hungary, Poland, and East Germany is not a fair and accurate reflection of my views of these eastern bloc countries.

The story says that, in my view, support for the trade union Solidarity is mainly from "Polish yuppies". This is simply not accurate.

In fact, I found that while support for Solidarity appears to have diminished since martial law was lifted in December, 1982, the movement continues to have widespread support in Poland in spite of the fact that it is outlawed.

The article erroneously leaves a negative impression of my views of Solidarity. While some people suggested Solidarity was not as relevant as it was in the past, in my view it has been and will continue to be the driving force behind the democratization and economic reform of Poland. Solidarity epitomizes the struggle of the Polish people for freedom and the recognition of human rights.

I have the greatest admiration and respect for Polish people and I am pleased with the direction in which the Polish Government is moving.

In this respect, I support the position that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has taken, that even though the Government of Poland is more liberal than one might expect, the Government of Canada still has an important role to play in encouraging greater economic and political freedom.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST ECONOMY IN ALBERTA

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the Alberta economy has long been dependent upon its natural resources as the major source of income. As a result, Alberta is vulnerable to shifts in world resource or commodity prices. As we are all aware, today the agriculture and oil industries are suffering.

However, our Government has been sensitive to the needs of Albertans. We dismantled the National Energy Program and eventually the PGRT. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) recently announced a major cash incentive program that will substantially boost employment, investment and activity in the oil and gas industry.

This program will provide approximately $350 million a year in direct assistance to the industry. The Canadian Government will provide cash incentives of up to 33.33 per cent of exploration and development expenses in Canada, up to a maximum of $10 million in spending per company each year.

In agriculture, we have made support of western farmers a priority. This year alone, they will receive direct federal assistance worth over $2.5 billion, up from $2.2 billion in 1986. Alberta has been and will continue to receive a major portion of government agricultural assistance.

I am proud to be part of a Government that not only listens to the needs of Albertans, but is actually doing something about answering those needs.

MINES AND MINING

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF RUTTAN MINE AT LEAF RAPIDS, MAN.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, at this time 500 employees of the Ruttan Mine at Leaf Rapids, Manitoba, face the prospect of losing their jobs by September. If the mine closes at that time, the 1,800 residents of the northern community face the prospect of having to leave their homes, and their town.

The loss of the mine will deal a major blow to northern Manitoba's mining industry, which has had to exist precariously for several years in the face of slumping world prices for base metals. The loss of Leaf Rapids would force the relocation of 1,800 people and would adversely affect northern Manitoba's economy.

Whether one looks at the human cost or simply the economic consequences, the closure of the mine would be a tragedy for all.

The future of the mine and of the town itself depends on the successful negotiation of the sale of Ruttan to Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company.

S. O. 21

I call upon the federal Government to co-operate fully with the Province of Manitoba in considering any request for assistance, and to do anything it possibly can to ensure that Leaf Rapids has a future.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP in Quebec disagrees with his national leader.

Now that the 10 Premiers of Canada's 10 provinces and this Government have reached a constitutional accord, the NDP is still wondering about Canada's identity.

It is hard to imagine a member of the NDP in Quebec automatically becoming a member of the national party, because an NDP member who lives in Quebec does not seem to see Canada in the same way as a member who lives elsewhere in Canada.

This attitude is typical of all members of this Party and of all the NDP Members in this House. Not one of these comrades has taken a clear and unambiguous stand on the Constitution, on national defence or on the economy.

This bunch of radicals consists of a group of extremists: comrades, communists and socialists.

The only thing they have in common, Mr. Speaker, and this includes their provincial Leader in Quebec and their national leader, is that they are all prepared to prostitute themselves to take power.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ENSURE POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, first it was the members of the Conservative caucus who wanted to call out the army to deliver the mail. Then it was the President of Canada Post who said: Strike or no strike, we will deliver the mail. Now the Minister responsible for Canada Post is supporting these confrontation tactics. The Conservative Government is so anxious to follow Uncle Reagan's example that it is doing everything it can to have a postal strike, so it can lay off 60,000 postal workers.

Instead of being concerned about restoring to Canadians the postal services they have cut and about the fact that they are still depriving Canadians of these essential services, they are fanning the flames so there will be a postal strike in Canada. They should stop making irresponsible statements and concentrate on providing services.

RED MEAT INDUSTRY OF WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, Canada's initiative to host a meeting of the Cairns Group of Agricultural Exporters reflects the lead role the Government is taking in seeking solutions to the serious agricultural trade situation facing the world today. As well, bilateral negotiations between Canada and the United States are important to Canadian agriculture if we are to secure U.S. markets and eliminate trade barriers.

As an Albertan and a producer of grain and livestock, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, it is essential to the long-term viability of the red meat industry that western Canada have access to the markets in the Pacific northwest and California. Because of distance, changing markets and transportation costs, the flow of products is shifting in western Canada markets to the south. Canadian livestock producers have proven they can compete and in fact have a balance of trade in livestock and meat products in our favour.

Canada is a trading nation, in fact one of the world's great traders. We export more per capita than any of the world's major industrialized nations. The United States is our most important trading partner. Our trading relationship provides growing economic opportunities and work for millions of people on both sides of the border.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS' RIGHT TO ORAL HEARINGS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled two years ago that under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms every person in Canada who claims to be a refugee from persecution in his homeland must have an oral hearing, that is, he must be present to have his credibility and facts judged by those who will decide his fate. However, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) keeps declaring publicly that every claimant will be heard and seen by a refugee board member at the port of entry and will thereby receive his oral hearing as guaranteed by the Supreme Court.

That is not true according to the Minister's Bill C-55. For example, a claimant who comes from a so-called non-refugee producing country will never be allowed to tell his story to the board member. Again, a claimant who passed through a so-called safe country will never be allowed to state his claim to the board member.

The Minister's statements in public are plainly contradicted by the words of Bill C-55. His assurance that everyone will have an oral hearing as guaranteed by the Supreme Court is false. I call upon the Minister to withdraw Bill C-55 and bring forward a new Bill which obeys Canada's Constitution and Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

ACID RAIN

SPECIAL COMMITTEE IN ROUYN-NORANDA—REQUEST OF INTERVENING PARTIES

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 19, the Special Committee on Acid Rain went to Rouyn-Noranda to meet municipal authorities, the Chamber of Commerce, the Regional Council for Economic Development, the Environment Committee and the regional UPA. These groups made the committee aware of an environmental problem that is specific to Abitibi—Témiscamingue, namely the serious deterioration of our forests, lakes and land, as well as the fact that our maple trees are dying and acid rain is having an impact on human health. These same groups asked the Special Committee on Acid Rain, which is to go to Washington in a few weeks, to put strong pressure on the American Government and urge it to adopt concrete measures to reduce the air pollution that is a major source of acid rain in Abitibi—Témiscamingue.

The committee was very receptive to the various statements and promised to make the necessary representations.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the members of the Committee who agreed to go to Rouyn-Noranda and all the organizations who attended this meeting and who through their testimony are trying to improve the quality of life in Abitibi—Témiscamingue.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

MEMBER'S COMMENT ABOUT HAMILTON—APOLOGY REQUESTED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) made a comment about Hamilton which was not only derogatory but insulting to Hamiltonians.

The Hon. Member suggested that if one were to visit our fair city, one would have to wear a gas mask.

I find this remark offensive, and so do the people of Hamilton.

Hamilton is a beautiful city. In fact, there are several students here from Hamilton today who will attest to the fact that Hamilton is the centre of economic and cultural opportunity in one of Canada's most populous regions.

We Hamiltonians are proud of our city and of our accomplishments in the fields of arts and entertainment and sports. We are proud to bear the name "Steel City".

The Member's remark was not only unprofessional but insulting to one of Canada's finest cities.

On behalf of Hamiltonians and the Liberal Party, I would ask that the Hon. Member for Mississauga North apologize to the people of Hamilton.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA NATIVE EDUCATION CENTRE—INCREASED FEDERAL FUNDING SOUGHT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on May 14, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), in a press release, stated that education and training are his important priorities for developing self-government and economic self-reliance. Yet, in the name of self-government, his department is terminating a $125,000 grant for the B.C. Native Education Centre in Vancouver, which has an outstanding record.

This centre, Mr. Speaker, has been operating for 20 years, is native-run and operated, and not only helps native people to find a new life through education but has many cultural and high-tech training programs as well.

I would ask the Minister to confirm his commitment to Indian education and self-government by reinstating and increasing the federal grant to this important native-run education centre in Vancouver.

RICK HANSEN—MAN IN MOTION TOUR SURPASSES RESEARCH FUND TARGET

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in the House today to pay tribute to the outstanding efforts of a great Canadian, Rick Hansen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Tomorrow in Vancouver, as we all know, Rick completes his round-the-world odyssey. I am sure he was buoyed by the news this week that his Man in Motion tour surpassed its original goal of raising $10 million for spinal cord research, rehabilitation, and wheelchair sports.

I know that Rick's determination and education have served as a source of inspiration for all who met him during his 26,000 mile tour. He has shown the depths of human spirit and endurance to the citizens of 34 countries along his path.

Almost two years ago, Mr. Speaker, I stood in this place and wished Rick the best of luck as he embarked on his dream. Now it fills me with great happiness to be able to say: Welcome home, Rick. You have been a source of hope and pride to all Canadians. To you and Amanda go our appreciation, our love, and our best wishes for the most wonderful future, a future you both deserve.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—INVESTMENT BY U.S. IN CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister lost his cool yesterday in responding to my questions about unlimited American takeovers of Canadian industry, I was suspicious that perhaps something was wrong, and now I know that something was wrong.

Yesterday afternoon, after Question Period, the chief Canadian negotiator told reporters that President Reagan personally had asked the Prime Minister for unlimited access by American investment in Canadian companies and Canadian business.

The Prime Minister did not tell Parliament of that request. The Prime Minister did not tell Canadians of that request. What is worse, the Prime Minister did not say no to that request.

I ask him, therefore, why not? Why didn't he tell President Reagan that Canadians will never allow the United States to have a total unfettered right to buy up any Canadian business they want, at their will?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I didn't tell the President that because it was never raised, Mr. Speaker. Those words were never used—unlimited access, total unfettered rights. That is a falsehood.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will not recite for the record what Mr. Reisman has said, as reported by a number of daily newspapers, but I will table the necessary documentation to back that up.

The recourse the Prime Minister has may not be with Parliament, if that is so, but with his chief negotiator. We are entitled to have a response on whether or not the President raised that issue directly with him.

AMERICANS' DEMANDS—CANADIAN CULTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in any case, the Prime Minister did not make the slightest show of strength to protect Canadian sovereignty. Since this Government came to power, it has approved takeovers proposed by the Americans without further ado. From their list it is pretty obvious the Americans want to have the right to buy our newspapers, our television stations, our radio stations and our publishing companies, so my question to the Prime Minister is: Why didn't he at least have the courage to say no to this incredible demand? Why doesn't the Prime Minister start protecting Canadian culture instead of just pretending to?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Leader of the Opposition is laughable and entirely false into the bargain. I would also like to say, in reply to his first suggestion, because in his supplementary he wondered whether the President had raised the question of investment with me: Yes, the answer is yes. Absolutely, but did the President use these terms:

[English]

—unlimited access, total and unfettered access, buying up Canada? The answer is an absolute no.

REPORTED DEMAND FOR WIDE OPEN INVESTMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Reisman is quoted as saying "Ronald Reagan told Prime Minister Mr. Brian Mulroney that U.S. demands for wide open investment"—call it wide open investment, don't call it unfettered—"must be included in the talks". Then there is a direct quote supporting that statement.

Of course today we now have in the supermarkets of Canada 200,000 copies of this new book which should be called "Sell-Out Canada". It has been distributed across the country.

Why is it that Canadians have to endure a gutless Government? Why is it that the Prime Minister did not give the President a final and categorical no to the American request for unfettered, wide open access to any Canadian business they might want to buy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition is losing his cool, Mr. Speaker. Now there has been a change. Now it wasn't unlimited access, total and unfettered purchasing. Now it is wide open investment pursuant to trade related investment—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not what he said.

Mr. Mulroney: —which has always been the case. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition, apart from making these preposterous statements that he knows full well are preposterous, could tell the House: If there is a request for foreign investment which creates jobs in Sydney, Nova Scotia, in North Bay, in Esterhazy, is he opposed to that foreign investment? Is he going to stand up and say that he is? Is he opposed to that investment in Oshawa, the largest single foreign investment that has taken place?

The statement was made, quite properly, that Canada now is open for business, but Canada is not for sale.

We are attracting foreign investment to create jobs. If the Leader of the Opposition is opposed to that, let him tell that to the people of Timmins, of Sydney, of North Bay, and of Esterhazy, because they are going to have some questions to ask him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVESTMENT CANADA REPORT—TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN BUSINESSES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question as well for the Prime Minister. He has just said that the purpose of foreign investment, in his view, is the creation of jobs. If that is the case, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us why his own agency, Investment Canada, pointed out in its recent report that from June, 1985, to December, 1986, 94 per cent of a total of $22 billion invested in Canada went into acquisitions and takeovers of existing Canadian business. It did not go into new jobs or new business; 94 per cent of it went into acquisitions and takeovers. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, why are the Prime Minister and this Government considering further American proposals for wide open investment which will only result in much broader, more massive takeovers of Canadian business? That is the result of your investment policy, takeovers of Canadian business, not the creation of new jobs.

• (1425)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can only say, as the Prime Minister said, that in place of politics we have put Investment Canada which provides new opportunities and new jobs for Canadians. That is why our record since 1984 is so attractive not only for foreign investors but as well for most Canadians because it means economic growth in Canada. That is what the Government is looking for.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I pose a question to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. You have the record, by your own agencies—

An Hon. Member: Address the Chair.

Mr. Axworthy: —that 94 per cent of foreign investment coming to this country has resulted simply in taking over companies with existing Canadian jobs, not creating new work, not creating new enterprises but existing takeovers. That is why we want to know, when the Prime Minister met with the President and received a request for a broader interpretation of investment rules, why didn't the Prime Minister just say no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Let us get down to it, Mr. Speaker. When the question of investment is raised, is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry saying that when a request from an American or foreign company comes to invest $35 million in Brandon that the answer should be no?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A takeover of a Canadian company.

Mr. Mulroney: If the question is for Versatile, a tremendous investment by Americans in western Canada, in Winnipeg, and in Manitoba, should the answer have been no? When the question is in regard to foreign investment in the smaller centres—

Mr. Axworthy: You have not said no yet. You have approved every application. Why don't you reject them? What kind of a program is it?

Mr. Mulroney: The Member is asking me should there have been a rejection. I ask him should we have turned down Versatile? Should we have turned down that investment in Manitoba?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: Should we have turned down that investment in Saskatchewan?

An Hon. Member: They fired the employees.

Mr. Mulroney: The Liberals cannot have it both ways. You have to tell the people where you stand, both of you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Axworthy: You are selling off this country.

Mr. Mazankowski: Stop asking silly questions.

Mr. Axworthy: We will keep asking questions until you guys are out of power.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are just as phoney as your speech.

Mr. Axworthy: They are firing right now.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind Hon. Members that both yesterday and the day before, while Question Period was, of course, a model of decorum, not very many questions got asked. I would hope that Hon. Members who wish to exchange their views, other than through the Chair in this Chamber, would remember today that there are other Hon. Members waiting to ask questions properly which Ministers are prepared to answer.

An Hon. Member: Properly.

Mr. Speaker: I think that asks and demands of all Hon. Members a certain co-operation—one Hon. Member has just said properly. Of course, in this Chamber, all questions are asked and answered properly.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

GOVERNMENT'S MINERAL AND METAL POLICY—CANADIAN EQUITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question on this same subject of free trade to the Prime Minister. I have here a document issued this week by the Government with respect to mineral and metal policy in Canada in which the Government states:

> —the government has set aside the practice of seeking 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian equity in new non-fuel mineral resource projects.

• (1430)

Why has the Government given up this practice? Is this not simply another giveaway to the U.S. in return for nothing?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that measure has been in effect for well over a year as part of Investment Canada's regulations. It is an indication to the mining industry that we welcome foreign investment. Let me tell the Hon. Member that this country's mining industry is in no danger of being taken over by foreigners. It is between 60 per cent and 70 per cent Canadian-owned and operated.

When the mining industry came to us they said they had gone through very difficult times. They needed new equity and new investment. They did not need this kind of restrictive investment decision by the Government of Canada. We listened and acted.

Mr. Langdon: So in fact it was a surrender with absolutely nothing in return.

PRIME MINISTER'S MOTIVES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, about this booklet with all the false points it tries to make, about this propaganda, why did the Prime Minister decide this time it was all right to publish it at the public's expense? Why?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we believe that publishing this booklet was entirely appropriate and will be useful in helping Canadians make an objective value judgment on this major national issue.

[English]

I think it should be noted that I was in Oshawa when General Motors put $2 billion of foreign investment in Oshawa. I have been to Windsor, the other area held by the NDP, a tremendous area of prosperity and the lowest unemployment in Canada, and largely because of foreign investment. What we are getting now is the privileged and selfish view of the NDP that foreign investment is good for them but bad for Bathurst and Kelowna and other areas across Canada. You cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Ask another one.

Mr. Langdon: The Prime Minister has shown his complete ignorance of Canada and of Windsor by saying it has the lowest unemployment rate of any place in Canada. Anyone who wants to check will find that is simply not the case.

REPORTED OPPOSITION BY PROVINCES TO FREEDOM OF INVESTMENT BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Governments of both Ontario and Quebec have now expressed opposition to freedom of investment by the U.S. Will the Prime Minister now state clearly that his Government completely rejects the U.S. demand for a completely free investment policy in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend places in doubt the statement that there is the lowest unemployment rate in Canada in southern Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: In Windsor.

Mr. Mulroney: Windsor is in southern Ontario. My hon. friend is following his Leader who said in a statement of May 8, I believe to the CBC, that 94 per cent of the jobs are created in only one small area. He was referring to Toronto and southern Ontario. That statement is false as well. Some 46 per cent of the jobs created were in Ontario, 28 per cent in Quebec, 22 per cent in western Canada, and so on.

I hope my hon. friend will agree with me that the prosperity he knows full well exists in southern Ontario has been brought about in very substantial measure by foreign investment. The degree of prosperity and economic opportunity for our young people that exists in southern Ontario we want to see repeated elsewhere, from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Surely that is fairness for all Canadians.

TAX REFORM

SCHEDULED TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance to whom I gave notice. When he tables the White Paper on June 18, is he going to table only a White Paper, a proposal or, as the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs said, a maxi-Budget? More precisely, will he be announcing tax changes which will take effect either immediately or before a formal budget speech?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me notice of part of the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Give us only part of the answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will give him only part of the answer. It will be a White Paper. It will be a prime time White Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INQUIRY WHETHER TAX AMENDMENTS WILL TAKE IMMEDIATE EFFECT ON JUNE 18 OR AT A DATE PRECEDING OFFICIAL BUDGET

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, playing with words is all very well, but I would like to say to the Minister of Finance that lately, he has been using press releases to announce changes in the Canadian tax system. And I probably don't have them all! I would like to say to the Minister that this time, we on this side of the House will be very reluctant to accept tax reform without a Budget, in other words, tax reform by press release.

Once again, I would like to ask the Minister, and I don't want to play word games: On June 18, will there be any tax changes that will become effective immediately or on a date preceding an official budget speech?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to bring down a Budget. The Minister of Finance will present a bulky White Paper on tax reform, and I think it will be very important for Canadians.

POLITICAL PARTIES

AMOCO CANADA OFFICIAL'S FUNDRAISING FOR PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CONSTITUENCY ASSOCIATION AND MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have here a copy of a letter from Mr.

Sherrold Moore, Vice-President of Amoco Canada Limited, dated May 8, 1987, raising money for the Minister and his constituency association. It says among other things that the PCs have made the energy industry a high priority.

Will the Minister undertake to remove himself from any decision of his department or Cabinet regarding the proposed takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have in my association, as the Hon. Member has in his, I am sure, people who campaign and raise money on my behalf. It is part of the democratic process. All of those people have day jobs. I do not understand the implications the Hon. Member is putting forward. If he is somehow suggesting that there is something improper in volunteers helping a political Party in this way, and that somehow I am not allowed as the Member of Parliament for Calgary Centre to have people who happen to work in the oil industry working on behalf of my association, I simply disagree.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: The Minister will know I am not suggesting that. I am simply trying to ensure that there is no conflict or even an appearance of a conflict.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The CLC made you say that.

Mr. Jelinek: Either make an accusation or shut up.

ENERGY

DOME PETROLEUM—QUERY CONCERNING CABINET DECISION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he indicate whether it was a cabinet decision not to get Petro-Canada involved in the bidding for Dome Petroleum? Were any of his Ministers involved in that in any way other than the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows full well that no Prime Minister or cabinet Minister comments on the substance of private discussions in Cabinet.

VIA RAIL

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CAN JUSTIFY DECISION NOT TO FOLLOW PRINCIPAL UNANIMOUS RECOMMENDATION IN HORNER REPORT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Last week, the Forget report on unemployment insurance was thrown out. This week, the Horner report on the future of VIA Rail was also thrown out, although it cost about a million dollars.

Can the Minister justify not following up the main and unanimous recommendation in the Horner report that VIA Rail should purchase new rolling stock or otherwise close down?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, much of what was recommended in the Horner task force report has been implemented. This House has already heard that an additional $361 million will be spent on VIA Rail over the next five years for a total of $2.5 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, those expenditures are excessive because the Minister has been dragging his feet and because of mismanagement at VIA.

THE CANADIAN—TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAIN SERVICE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister now aware that one-third of the service of the transcontinental train, The Canadian, will be cut? How can the Minister justify such a cut when this train is normally sold out during the busy summer months?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I explained yesterday that the transcontinental train is not going to be shortened this summer, it is simply not going to be lengthened. One of the reasons for that is that more refurbished cars are needed. Up to 200 cars will have air-conditioning installed and will have their heating systems changed from steam to electric. We will not have this problem after they are refurbished.

INVESTMENT IN NEW CARS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Government has preached financial competency and fiscal responsibility since it was elected. Yet in the case of VIA Rail it has shown that it is not interested in either fiscal responsibility or, apparently, in a real future for passenger rail in Canada.

Why was the Minister of Transport unable to convince his cabinet colleagues to invest in new rail passenger cars which would not only pay for themselves in seven years but would put VIA Rail in a very good financial situation thereafter, or did he even try?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my activities behind the scenes have to remain secret of course. I can assure you that you would find them very interesting were I to expose myself to your gaze while engaged in them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Save yourself the trouble.

Mr. Crosbie: With regard to this question, I regret that we are not in a position to go any further at this time with VIA Rail. We believe that the steps we are taking will considerably improve service, improve comfort and convenience for passengers, and help VIA to be on time more and more in the future. It involves the purchase of new locomotives and the refurbishing of equipment. I think the hon. gentleman will find a considerable improvement. The question of new cars will still have to be dealt with at some time in the future.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, we have heard that line from many, many Ministers.

EFFECT OF DECISION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister's Government not take into consideration the impact of this decision on the workers at CanCar in Thunder Bay and Bombardier in Montreal? Why did it not take into consideration the fact that not going ahead with the contract would cost the taxpayer, including the UIC fund, upwards of $30 million to protect the workers whose jobs will be lost as a result? Why did the Government not consider those matters when it discussed the question?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the work which we are now providing VIA Rail with the funds to do will involve 8,000 person-years of work in the construction and manufacturing sectors. We are not forgetting that.

The hon. gentleman should ask the companies which he mentioned whether they were keeping that problem in mind when they submitted their prices to do this work. The cars came in at hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of what had originally been estimated.

The hon. gentleman might well ask them why they did not sharpen their pencils and come in with a price which we might have found sustainable rather than one $100 million in excess of what was originally envisaged.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM INDIA

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery today of a parliamentary delegation from India led by Mr. Sat Paul Mittal, Member of Parliament, Chairman of the Parliamentarians Action for Removal of Apartheid.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post, who was in the House earlier, or to whomever is prepared to answer on his behalf. Since it came to power, the Conservative Government has cut postal services by installing its so-called superboxes and by closing down post offices in rural areas. Soon, Canadians will have no postal services at all, thanks to the irresponsible attitude of the Minister responsible for the Post Office, and this may bring about a strike. Could the Minister or his surrogate inform the House why the Government keeps using confrontation tactics with its workers instead of being concerned about restoring the postal services this Government has cut, while it continues to deprive Canada of essential services?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has just left the Chamber for a minute. I will take notice of the question and get back to him.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member again later.

AGRICULTURE

OECD AGREEMENT TO REDUCE GRAIN SUBSIDIES—EFFECT ON CANADA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In response to the OECD agreement to reduce grain export subsidies the U.S. Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Amstutz has said that U.S. proposals to reduce subsidies in step with Europe will take 10 to 13 years to achieve.

Is it a requirement of this understanding that Canadian subsidies such as the Special Grains Program must be dropped immediately, or can Canadian subsidies be reduced over the extended phase-out period?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the agreement reached at the OECD meetings last week in Paris was good news in that for the first time there was unanimous agreement that agriculture should be given top priority. The language of the communiqué, which I am sure the Hon. Member has looked at, is certainly encouraging.

We have no intention of doing anything which would damage our farmers other than to act, if we are satisfied, in total concert with other countries to ensure that collectively we can bring some action to bear which will resolve this very serious international question.

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House of what, if any, concrete commitments have been made by the Americans and/or the Europeans to put on the table for the OECD meetings?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, it is more of a question of the progress that we can make at the over-all GATT discussions which are presently under way. There is good potential, as I understand it, to have proposals tabled during the summer and to have discussions on those proposals under way early in the new year.

As the Hon. Member will recall, the last time GATT meetings were under way at the Tokyo Round it took over four years for these types of discussions to begin. We are on a very much shortened time frame and the proposals which will be put on the table will certainly be at the GATT for discussion and not in this kind of a forum.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROVISION OF SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I will try to combine my two questions into one now that the Minister is in the House. Canadians are dissatisfied with the Government's reduced postal service. Canada Post employees are also dissatisfied with the cut in service policy of the Government. Why is he doing everything he can to shut down Canada Post with his irresponsible statement?

• (1450)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, service is being increased over the next—

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Andre: Over the next four years there will be 6,000 new—

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Andre: Apparently the Hon. Member is not prepared to listen to my answer.

Mr. Speaker: I have asked Hon. Members to consider carefully that there are a number of questions yet to be asked in the Question Period. We have had two days that have gone very slowly, and it is the exchanges across the Chamber that contribute to that. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Andre: As I was indicating, Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of Canada Post to open 6,000 new postal outlets in the next four years in an effort to improve the service. What it is endeavouring to do now through management changes, through efficiency, through new productivity and new capital investment, is to ensure that there is dependable service to all Canadians, service in which they can have confidence.

An independent, outside auditing firm that will report to Parliament on a quarterly basis has been hired so that we will have that type of independent source of information to see whether the improved service for which the Post Office is striving will in fact be the result.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—GOVERNMENT OFFER OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. He is aware that his offer to the National Association of Japanese Canadians of $12 million for a community fund has been rejected by the Council of the NAJC this past weekend. Does he intend to go to this meeting with the NAJC on June 1 ready to negotiate seriously with the association in the attempt to arrive at a genuine redress package, and to take seriously their responses to his first offer?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that that has been my approach and my attitude since the beginning. It will continue to be my approach and attitude.

RESOURCES ALLOCATED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister, whose Government has found resources of up to a billion dollars at a time to meet important national needs, ensure that the Minister responsible for multiculturalism can go to the meeting on June 1 with the resources to carry on serious negotiations and keep the promise which the Prime Minister made to the Japanese Canadian community and to the Canadian people?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that I speak for the Government in all of these matters and, as always, the Prime Minister has been supportive.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION IN TORONTO AREA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In a recent, well publicized statement, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, stated that over the last two and one-half years over 95 per cent of all of the jobs created in Canada were created within a radius of 160 kilometres of Metropolitan Toronto. My constituents find that a little difficult to comprehend. Will the Minister advise the House and my constituents whether that is correct?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to correct the so-called NDP statistics that were used. In the last year, 21.5 per cent of the jobs created in this country were in the Toronto area.

My hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East also said that 95 per cent of jobs were created in Ontario. That is absolutely false. The fact is that 35 per cent of jobs were created in Ontario and Ontario represents 38 per cent of the labour force in this country. It is not a shame to create jobs in Ontario.

INDUSTRY

HAWKER SIDDELEY CAR WORKS IN TRENTON, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The workers and their families at the Hawker Siddeley Car Works in Trenton, Nova Scotia, are frustrated and disappointed at the Government's inability to provide meaningful leadership to assist the workers and to provide stability to that community.

Will the Minister indicate to the House, to the workers, and to the municipal representatives of Trenton, Nova Scotia, what concrete action his Government has taken with regard to providing employment opportunities in that region of Nova Scotia?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think everybody in the region knows that the Canadian Government has made a commitment to ensure that the Trenton plant will be sold as an operation and a going concern. Mr. Speaker, we obviously have to look at several alternatives. There have been discussions with various business people and companies that might be interested in acquiring the plant. Since these talks are confidential, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that I cannot really elaborate.

[English]

GOVERNMENT DECISION—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister with great sincerity that discussions, meetings and consultations are no substitute for concrete specific action by the Government of Canada. I ask the Minister, on behalf of those workers and their families, when will he put a positive proposal on the table so that workers and the people of Trenton, Nova Scotia, will understand something about their future? In all decency, I ask the Minister to give us a date as to when he will make a decision on their future.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are doing our utmost to provide a future for the workers of these regions, as we have done for all workers in the eastern provinces. That is why we have created so many jobs since 1984, and the hon. gentleman knows it.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise Hon. Members that our routine is a little out of order. I will recognize the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, then return to the New Democratic Party.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CORONER'S INQUEST INTO MURDER OF CELIA RUYGROK

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the coroner's inquest into the murder of Celia Ruygrok. During the course of the inquest the federal Government was accused of "buck passing, using a big stick, and intimidation". Will the Solicitor General explain to the people of Canada why the federal Government refused to co-operate fully at the coroner's inquest? What was it hiding, and why has the federal Government not assumed full responsibility for this tragedy?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have been following the inquest very closely and have taken everything that has been said very seriously. Having said that, I want to assure the Hon. Member and every Member of the House that the Ministry of the Solicitor General has co-operated fully in that inquiry, has had absolutely nothing to hide, and in fact has hidden nothing.

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister knows that that is absolute nonsense. He knows that that tragedy could have been avoided and that the criminal justice system failed in a very miserable and tragic way in this particular case.

MEASURES TO PREVENT SIMILAR TRAGEDIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, what measures has the Solicitor General taken to ensure that this type of tragedy does not happen again?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. gentleman I prefer to wait until the report comes out, and then assess the facts, assess the recommendations and address them as well as possible. I do not like to try to condemn people and come to judgments before I know what the report will contain.

REFUGEES

CASE OF FRANCESCO PIPERNO SENTENCED BY ITALIAN COURT FOR TERRORIST CRIME

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On June 2, 1986, I stated in the House my serious concern over the abuse of the refugee system by one Francesco Piperno, who was wanted in Italy in connection with the murder of Aldo Moro.

We know the Piperno case is now before the refugee appeal board, awaiting a decision, and therefore nothing further can be said on that subject. However, on Monday Mr. Piperno was sentenced in absentia to 10 years in prison by the Italian authorities for helping to establish an armed terrorist group. Will the Minister tell the House what precautions the Government has taken to ensure that this individual poses no security threat to Canadians while he uses our refugee system?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Member is correct that the case is before the Immigration Appeal Board and it would be inappropriate to comment on such a matter. I understand the Member's concern and would ask him to await the decision of that quasi-judicial body.

ABORTIONS

COMPILATION OF DATA BY STATISTICS CANADA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services, who is also the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada. As she knows, recently Statistics Canada changed the time space for the collection of data on abortion statistics to three years rather than an annual collection. This has seriously undermined the scientific research into the high incidence of adolescent pregnancies, a matter about which I am sure she is very concerned.

Will the Minister take immediate steps to revert to the original data base from hospital reports which was reliable, provided increasing detail and was published annually, so that we can get at this very serious problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House before, I am of course very concerned about the statistics on abortion. As soon as I became the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada, I asked for a review, to ensure that the statistics we shall be compiling are real statistics, which take into account private clinics in Quebec. In co-operation with the provinces, we have been able to set up a program which, I think, far better reflects the real situation regarding statistics on the abortion rate in Canada.

[English]

PROVISION OF INFORMATION ON ANNUAL BASIS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Through you, Mr. Speaker, does that mean that the Minister will make available this information on an annual basis which is absolutely essential? We want prevention; that is why it is so important.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, being a federal agency, Statistics Canada also has to conform to budget restrictions, and after assessing the program, we agreed that we could make a comprehensive assessment of the program every three years, since the statistics fluctuated very little. In fact, the improvement we have made in the annual statistics has vastly improved the whole program, and I am very satisfied with what is being done today.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CORONER'S INQUEST INTO MURDER OF CELIA RUYGROK

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I would like to return to the answer he gave to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, because I could not believe my ears. Did the Minister actually say that nothing has been done following the killing by Sweeney at the halfway house in Ottawa and that he is waiting for the report of an inquest before taking any action at all, in spite of the obvious evidence that procedures needed to be corrected and tightened up to prevent a murderer in a situation like that from being delivered to a halfway house with no warning? Surely something was done and the Minister should correct the answer he gave that he was waiting for an inquest report.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made an incorrect assumption. What I said is I have naturally not answered the evidence brought out at the inquest because I have not seen the jury's recommendations in that regard. Obviously, I cannot do anything until they come out. However, in anticipation of that, I have already asked my Deputy Minister to review the recommendations immediately and report to me once they come.

I can assure the Hon. Member that immediately following the death there was an immediate investigation carried out into the procedures at that halfway house. A number of recommendations were made and they have been and were acted upon immediately.

MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, with an incident as serious as this, I think the House is entitled to be told, and the question to be answered, what was done as a result of that tragic death to tighten up the system.

Mr. Gauthier: What did you do?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to list, and I will obtain for the Hon. Member, the recommendations which were made as a result of that inquiry, and the measures we took. I do not have them with me today but I will be quite glad to furnish them immediately to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: The last question will be from the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford).

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DESECRATION OF VETERAN'S PLAQUE IN HIGHBURY POST OFFICE, LONDON

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. The Minister is aware that a veteran's plaque located in the Highbury Post Office processing plant in London was recently desecrated, defaced and trashed. Will the Minister undertake to the House to investigate this incident and install the restored plaque in a prominent place in the Dominion Building in downtown London?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did ask the Post Office to conduct an investigation, which it is doing. It assures me it was not on anyone's orders from management. It still has not determined who in fact did take the plaque down and who desecrated it but, indeed, it is the intention to have that plaque properly restored to a position of honour.

Mr. Speaker: There are several questions of privilege which the Chair will now hear.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO ANSWER GIVEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on a point of order.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, this is just to correct the answer I gave earlier about 21.5 per cent of the jobs created in Toronto. This should be for three years, not just for one year.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since it relates to the same point of order raised by the Minister, I have the April statistics from Statistics Canada which indicate that the unemployment rate in Windsor, contrary to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, is 9.9 per cent compared to 9.8 per cent nationally and compared to 4.5 per cent in the City of Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members, of course, appreciate factual representations and we are indebted to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). However, I think we are getting into debate.

I have several notices of points of order and questions of privilege. I want to assure Hon. Members that the Chair will recognize each Member who wishes to rise, but the Chair cannot recognize them all at the same time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Hon. Government House Leader could answer the business question today and tell us what the Government intends to bring before the House in the coming days.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise that tomorrow will be an allotted day. On Monday special provisions have been made for the visit of President Mitterrand of France. We are presently looking at what might be done on Tuesday. I think if negotiations go well, we will be able to tell the House either tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also on House business. The Parliamentary Secretary would be aware that yesterday at the House Leaders' meeting I raised the possibility of knowing as soon as possible when we could expect that the Government might be calling Government business for the Private Members' hour. We have a Private Members' Bill in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and I would appreciate very much if the Parliamentary Secretary could tell us when we might expect the vote on that particular Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that will depend on what day Government business is called. It would appear that if Government business is called on Tuesday, then normally the Private Members' hour would follow and the last hour of debate, I believe, on the Hon. Members' Bill would take place then and the vote would proceed that evening.

At this point I am not able to suggest whether or not Tuesday will be an allotted day or a day for Government business. However, I appreciate that the Hon. Member and other committee members have business to do, and as soon as we know we will certainly communicate with the Hon. Member's House Leader's office.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue this discussion on House business. I believe I have to say, and all Members will recognize, that the answer which has been given to us is absolutely useless. We all know it is an allotted day tomorrow. We all know the President of France is coming next Monday. Now we are being told that the Government does not know what it is going to do Tuesday or Wednesday. In fact, we are receiving a non-answer. I would like us to get back to the tradition of the Government giving this House its agenda for a week, which has been the practice in the past.

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague. At the present time, there are certain matters that we are discussing and negotiating. We hoped to have heard from my colleague's office with respect to certain matters this afternoon. I do not wish to negotiate House business on the floor of the House. We are certainly prepared to meet with representatives of both Parties to discuss these matters just as soon as they are in a position to advise us of their views.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will hear, first of all, from the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on a question of privilege, followed by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), again on a question of privilege, following which the Chair shall hear from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED BREACH OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this question of privilege with some regret, but out of a feeling that it is necessary to address the issue, as it is an issue that goes to the fundamental rights, not just of myself as a Member of Parliament and a cabinet Minister but of all Members of Parliament.

The implication in the question raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and it was a direct implication, an accusation, is that because a member of my riding association is an employee of Amoco Canada, I either might be or am in conflict of interest in terms of acting in any way in respect of the potential takeover of Dome by Amoco Canada.

Let me indicate the dilemma for me, Mr. Speaker, and for every Member of the House, if that implication is allowed to stand unchallenged. Mr. Sherrold Moore is guilty only of being a concerned citizen, a citizen who participates in the political process by giving voluntarily of his time to our Party, both at the provincial and federal levels. That is his only sin, so to speak. It is an activity that all Members of this House depend upon in order to maintain our associations. It is absolutely vital to the success of our political Parties and to the political system in which we function.

I would not be surprised, Mr. Speaker, if some members of my association worked for Dome. I know that has been true in the past. I know there is at least one other employee in my association who works for Amoco. I have others in my association who work for other oil companies.

The implication, Mr. Speaker, that I would be in conflict of interest when it comes to the energy sector because there are volunteers working for my riding association who are employed in that sector is one that goes to the root of our democratic process, and it is one that must not be allowed to stand.

I suggest that there are in this Chamber over 100 Members who have farmers as members of their associations but who nevertheless regularly participate in agricultural debates and vote on agricultural measures. I submit that there are at least 30 Members opposite whose association memberships include union executives, and yet they regularly participate in discussions and votes pertaining to labour matters. In no such instance would it occur to me to suggest a conflict of interest. It would not be appropriate for me to suggest that a Member of Parliament absent himself or herself from discussion, debate or vote on a question because some member of his or her volunteer riding association happens to be employed by a union, or an oil company, or carries on a farming operation.

The question raised by the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway was prefaced with a request that I absent myself from any discussions having to do with the Dome/Amoco deal because a member of my executive, a member of my riding association, is an employee of Amoco. He then went on to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whether in fact I had ever discussed the role in this of Petro-Canada.

I can tell the Hon. Member that there are members of my riding executive who work for Petro-Canada. What does that imply? Is no one allowed to participate in the political process as a volunteer worker for political Parties if in fact his or her employer, at some time, might have business of interest to the Government of Canada, or vice versa?

While there was no accusation of conflict of interest, a conflict of interest was clearly implied. I suggest to the Hon. Member that the honourable thing for him to do would be to rise in his place and acknowledge that there is no conflict of interest; or, alternatively, to accuse me of a conflict of interest and have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure so that it might be adjudicated by a panel of this House. Otherwise, I am placed in an impossible position, as would be every other responsible concerned Member of this House.

We are going to have to examine the credentials of those who volunteer to work on our respective riding associations, those who choose to work as volunteers in the democratic process. It is an impossible position to be in.

I deeply resent the implication that Mr. Sherrold Moore might have been doing something improper. All he is guilty of is good citizenship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister raising the matter. It is, I think, an important matter.

Let me just say to the Minister that I have not accused Mr. Sherrold Moore of doing anything wrong, of committing any sin, as the Minister put it. I have not accused him of being guilty of anything. I have not made any such accusation, nor do I intend to. Nor have I accused the Minister of a conflict of interest. As a matter of fact, I think I pointed out in my question that I specifically made no accusation of conflict of interest.

It is my duty as a Member of Parliament to ask tough questions. Tough questions do not necessarily lead to a matter of privilege. It is a tough question. At the time of the biggest corporate takeover in the history of this country, the corporate takeover of Dome by Amoco Canada, a very controversial takeover, the Minister has on his riding executive an employee of Amoco Canada.

Insofar as the takeover itself is concerned, the Government seems to be standing on the side, with the Opposition calling for a Canadian solution. We all know the debate. There is a lot at stake for the companies involved, for the country, for the political process. Given that situation, I am entitled to raise the question I raised.

This is not an ordinary member of his executive. He is a fund raiser, and he is raising funds at a time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Well, I have to point that out. There can be a difference.

The Minister has confirmed that Mr. Moore is a fund raiser, an individual who is raising money at this particular time, a time when the proposed takeover is such a hot issue in the country.

In my question, I asked the Minister about the possibility of the appearance of a conflict of interest. Should the Amoco takeover go through it is a matter that will come before the Cabinet. I therefore asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), without alleging any conflict of interest, whether there had been a decision affecting the role of Petro-Canada in terms of whether or not it could bid against Amoco for Dome. That is something the Government has in its power, and it is part of the issue in this debate. For that reason, I put the question to the Prime Minister, and it was a proper question.

I am not accusing the Minister of anything. In my view, and I think this would be the view of the Canadian people, this would be an inappropriate time for the Minister to have on his riding executive a fund raiser who has a high position in Amoco Canada. The Hon. Member, as Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), might have to deal with this question at some point, either within his Department or within Cabinet.

It seems to me that I am entitled to ask the question, and I do not think it leads to a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I shall hear the Hon. Member further, but I would ask that the Chair be extended the courtesy of being sent the letter which was quoted when the question was asked. If there is a copy available, I should like to see it.

I will continue to hear from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I shall arrange to have the page deliver the letter to you.

There really is not very much more that I wish to say. I was merely trying to set the context in which the question was asked.

To summarize, I am not accusing the Minister of any conflict of interest. I want to know what the Minister's involvement in the process was—

Mr. Shields: Just by innuendo.

• (1520)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, my submission is that it is a perfectly proper question. The Minister answered the question, and his viewpoint was that he would continue. I thought the answer was that he would continue to sit on committees and deal with this matter. My feeling and that of my Party is that he should not, if he is a fund raiser who is involved intimately with the company in such a direct and open way as this. I think it could cause the appearance of problems, and I put that to the Minister. He may disagree, and he is entitled to disagree. I happen to think that most of the Canadian public might think the way I do.

Mr. Andre: Scum bag.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is now yelling "scum bag". I do not think that—

Mr. Andre: I retract that comment.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you. The Minister has kindly withdrawn that comment.

We may have different views. It may be a tough question. However, I have not accused the Minister of any conflict. I have raised the matter. I have an answer. I disagree with the answer. I will pursue it further. It is a tough question, but it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Shields: It is sickening innuendo.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) could further assist the Speaker in considering this matter which, as I indicated a few days ago on a somewhat similar case, I take seriously.

I have read the letter from which the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway quoted in his question. I would just like to be sure that I fully understand the Hon. Member's position. Is there anything in the letter itself, in the substance of the letter, which causes the Hon. Member any difficulty, or is it just the question that Mr. Moore who is in the oil industry is also a member of the constituency organization and a fund raiser for the Hon. Minister? In other words, is the letter itself in any way a source of concern for the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, or is it the fact that a fund-raising effort is being made?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the letter which concerns me. As the Minister said, a Canadian is entitled to exercise his or her political rights. What I am concerned about, what I raised in the question, was the fact that the fund raiser is a Vice-President of Amoco Canada, a senior executive, at a time when the Government may be called upon to make a huge decision about this corporate takeover, with competing Canadian companies, including a government company. That is what I am concerned about. I say that it could cause the appearance of difficulty for the Minister, and that is why I put the question to him.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. While I agree with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), though I do not think it is a question of privilege, I think it is an important point. The same information was made available to me. I spoke with the party about this. I asked a few questions on the basis of the information. It seems that this party, the Vice-President of Amoco who is involved in the constituency association of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), has been in this capacity for at least two years.

There was no proof that these letters were sent out using the frank. There was no indication which this person could give me that any undue influence was being applied or that anything other than the letter was being used. I think it is important to relate this information to the House.

While it is important that all Members be perceived as being above any kind of unscrupulous, subversive, or clandestine activity, we must draw a line. I agree with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that members of oil companies are entitled to be members of his organization.

The facts in this case speak for themselves. I, on behalf of the Liberal Party, feel that everything is quite in order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has made his case very well. As everybody knows, he is no stranger to the House and can hardly be expected to need my assistance.

However, I wish to draw to the attention of the House Your Honour's words on a previous occasion, as reported at page 5127 of Hansard for April 14, 1987, as follows:

> However, I think the point the Hon Minister is making, as a result of which his privileges have been breached, is that the effect of the innuendo carried by the questions was to slander him. The innuendo was an accusation or an assertion that the Hon. Minister was in breach of the guidelines.

Nobody in any Party is afraid of tough questions, whether they are placed in the House or at committee. One does not get into this business if one is afraid of tough questions. However, we are afraid of the phrasing of questions which slander within the walls of the House not only the Minister but innocent people out there.

When my hon. colleague in the Liberal Party rose, I was not at all surprised to hear him say what he said. I hold him in high esteem. However, I say to the House that we are privileged in here because we can say what we want to say within the walls of the House. We abuse the privileges of the House, as well as the privileges of the Minister, if we say things in the House that we will not say outside because, as my hon. colleague who is a lawyer knows very well, an inference is drawn when somebody works as a volunteer for an organization, is employed with an oil company, and asks for money on behalf of the Minister and the Minister is asked whether he was involved in any decisions. The Hon. Member knows very well that that is innuendo and slander by innuendo.

When one does that, one abuses not only the privileges of the Minister but all volunteers out there working in our riding associations. Every volunteer out there who works for me or for other Members of the House is slandered when a Member uses his ability in the House to say something which cannot be acted upon.

I know this matter has been raised as a question of privilege. If you find, Mr. Speaker, that it is a question of privilege after listening to the argument, I would be prepared to support my hon. colleague in framing the motion to send the matter to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how it can be slander if I am not accusing the Minister of conflict of interest. How can it be slander if I specifically said the contrary in the question?

I believe as strongly as the Hon. Minister that people should be active in the political process, and I agree that oilmen have to be active in the political process for all Parties. Surely I am entitled to ask tough questions in respect of the Minister's involvement in these decisions, whether government companies have been involved, and whether the Minister may want to take steps to make changes. His fund raiser, while the matter is possibly before the Government, may not want to do it and may want to have someone else do it for a while.

Mr. Andre: Why?

Mr. Waddell: Not to give the appearance of any conflict of interest to the Canadian public. That is where the Minister and I differ on the particular matter.

Mr. Andre: You are making an accusation.

Mr. Waddell: I repeat once again that I have not made any accusation of conflict of interest.

Mr. Shields: An innuendo.

Mr. Waddell: I have not made any innuendo. I have asked a tough question, and I think I am entitled in the House to ask these kinds of questions.

Mr. Andre: To slander anybody you want!

Mr. Speaker: Sometimes there is a temptation to argue such cases directly between and among Members and not through the Chair. This gives the Chair some difficulty, as Hon. Members can understand.

The Chair's responsibility in this regard is to hear the complaint and to hear very carefully the defence. It is very important for the Chair to know exactly what position the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is taking in the argument, because that of course affects the approach the Chair takes when delivering a ruling in answer to a complaint brought to the Chair. With the greatest respect to all Hon. Members, it does not assist the Chair to have comments tossed around in the Chamber and not put through the Chair, especially when the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is making his defence. I think this tends to make it more difficult for the Chair rather than easier.

• (1530)

As I say, I heard the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary quoting one of my own rulings of a few days ago to which I have just referred. I assure all Hon. Members that the Chair does take this kind of problem very seriously. It is also the reason that all argument ought to be very carefully heard and not interrupted.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to express the opinion that regardless of whether or not the Minister may feel he has a legitimate beef, disagreement or complaint, what was contained in the question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) I do not think in any way makes it a question of privilege.

What you are seeing here is a disagreement. The Hon. Member for Vancouver has said that he is not accusing the Minister of a conflict of interest or of wrongdoing. He was just asking whether or not it is proper that the Minister should now be involved in a potential cabinet decision when a fund raising letter just recently went out from a vice-president of Amoco, involved in the possible takeover of Dome, on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The question is whether or not that is appropriate. Surely to goodness that is a legitimate question. There was no implication that there might be a conflict of interest. The Member was asking whether or not it is the proper action by a cabinet Minister. I do not see any precedents in the rules of this place, and I have been here quite a while, where this could in any possible way be a question of privilege. I think it is a disagreement between two Members and nothing more than that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will hear other Hon. Members in a moment.

It is the responsibility of the Chair in a situation like this to be sure that the issue is very carefully defined. I take it from what the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and from what the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) have said that there was no intent on the part of the Member from Vancouver—Kingsway to accuse the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) of any wrongdoing. I take it that that is the position of the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

I also take it that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is saying, however, that under the circumstances he feels entitled to ask questions at least with respect to the fact that somebody in the riding association of the Hon. Minister is an employee of a company which is central in a lot of publicity and which company is important in terms of jobs to the industry and to Canada. I want to be absolutely sure that I understand exactly what the Member from Vancouver—Kingsway is saying.

As I have had to comment on other occasions, even lacking a complete charge, questions can be put in such a way that they do carry an innuendo of wrongdoing. What I want to be absolutely sure of is that the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is saying to me that not only did he not charge the Minister with any wrongdoing but that he did not intend any innuendo of wrongdoing to carry.

Mr. Waddell: That is almost exactly correct, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to cast any innuendo of wrongdoing. I am not accusing the Minister of wrongdoing.

I would adopt what you have said, Mr. Speaker, with the exception that at the end I would add that there is not just a question of jobs but a question of a major government decision either somewhere down the road or through Petro-Canada maybe having already been made.

Finally, since I forgot it last time, I would respectfully submit that this is a different case from the one referred to by the Hon. Deputy House Leader for the Government. He referred to Hansard at page 5127. I think that was an incident where there was an allegation that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) on some personal matters was somehow breaching cabinet guidelines.

Mr. Nystrom: Conflict of interest.

Mr. Waddell: That is different from this case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is an old saying in the law courts among those who practise there that one should never extend one's defence too far if one has been doing fairly well up to that point.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate very much the Hon. Member's comments.

The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to this matter because I see it as being fundamental on two counts. First, I have been concerned for some time that there has been an evolving practice in the House of Commons of using names in here of people who are not Members of the House and, therefore, have no opportunity, no right and no chance to defend themselves. I think that is really crucial. If that happens and if there is either directly or indirectly an accusation, an implication, a presentation or an appearance of wrongdoing, that person is immediately put in a position of guilt with no opportunity for defence and no opportunity to clear or to protect their own good reputation or name.

If we looked back over Hansard for the last couple of years we would find that this is becoming a growing practice in this House. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that in the very strongest terms we should come to grips with this problem. Whether it be an incident such as we have had this afternoon or whether it be other incidents that we have had in the past, people's reputations have been tarnished in the House of Commons either directly or indirectly, and those people are left outside these walls swinging in the wind with no chance to clear their names or to protect themselves.

We know of people who have been very badly hurt by these implications. I have made the arguments before, and I want to make them again, that we in this House have a special privilege. That privilege says we can make any statement we wish in here, and we can then not be sued in a court of this land because that is a privilege we need in order to have freedom of speech to represent fairly, clearly and as bravely as possible the concerns and the issues that we have.

I have argued in the past that with those privileges come responsibilities. One of those responsibilities is very clearly the responsibility to be very careful in the way that we treat other people, for instance, their names, their reputations and the kind of standards which they themselves live up to.

I want to refer to a case I had in this House in 1982-83 when I was in opposition in which the Speaker of the day ruled that I had a prima facie case of privilege. What was fascinating about that case is that it involved a member of the public who had done something which I felt was a breach of my privileges. The matter was raised in the House. The whole process of the arguments and the debates lasted about two to three weeks, but not once did that individual's name come up. That person's name, in my opinion, could not be divulged because the person had no opportunity to do anything until the Speaker found there was a prima facie case of privilege. That having happened, the House then sent the matter to a committee. The individual was then able to make a defence. Up until that point I never mentioned the individual's name. No one else mentioned it because there was a fundamental privilege involved of protecting the interests of people outside these walls.

I would argue that this is in fact very fundamental and important to the way this House works and to the privileges granted. If we abuse those privileges then we have no right to them and they should be taken away from us. We have responsibilities that go with privileges. We cannot do anything indirectly which we could not do directly. That is the fine line we are walking here today. If we are not careful we will come right up against the privileges of Members of Parliament and, more important, of the very people we claim to represent.

• (1540)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. First, as we all know, political Parties in this country are based totally on volunteers. As soon as you imply that somehow a benefit flows to those who volunteer, then you call into question whether people are really volunteering their time.

There is no question, at least in my mind, that the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) were put in such a way as to impugn the motives of both the Hon. Minister and the other person involved. That is very unfortunate. As the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) said, when you bring the name of someone into a discussion and that person has no idea that is going to happen, you automatically preclude that person from having any say in his or her defence. That also is very unfortunate. There is a practice that some of us in this House follow, that is, you never ever raise a person's name in the House without first clearing it with them. Doing that is very useful in protecting the privileges of people outside this House.

Second, as Government gets larger and larger it becomes virtually impossible to carry on activities which are isolated from what goes on in this place. To use myself as an example, I represent an agricultural constituency. Many of the people on the Progressive Conservative association in my riding of Portage—Marquette are farmers. Many of the people on my executive are farmers. Am I supposed to tailor my activities as a member of the Government to what goes on in my constituency so there can be no appearance of conflict of interest? The Government makes many decisions on behalf of farmers. When we set initial payments, is it supposed to be done at a time when there is no fund-raising or other activity going on in our constituencies so there can be no possible appearance of a link between the two? Setting the payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act is a major event in the spring. Is that supposed to happen at a time when there is no constituency activity in my riding association?

The mere fact that the Hon. Member raised the question in such a way as to imply some kind of unfit conduct calls into question many other government activities. As unfair as it is to the Minister involved, it is also grossly unfair to those volunteers who support political Parties so that the system can function as well as it does. This has implications not only for the Minister but for the way all of us as Members gain support in our constituencies so that we are eventually elected to this place, and for the way Government functions.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said there is no conflict of interest and he is not implying any conflict of interest. However, the thrust of his question was whether I would absent myself from any discussions concerning Dome and Amoco. The question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) dealt with whether I participated in any such discussions.

There is only one reason why I would absent myself from any such discussions, and that is, in order not to be in a conflict of interest. The fact that he asked if I would absent myself is, prima facie, a suggestion that I am in a conflict of interest and must not participate in those decisions. While he says he makes no accusation of conflict of interest and does not mean to imply it, he asks that I do something which I would only do if I were in a conflict of interest. I humbly suggest that if he wants to be consistent he should withdraw the implied suggestion in his question to the Prime Minister that I must not participate in any discussions concerning Dome and Amoco. To do otherwise is to leave the implication that I am in a conflict of interest.

As a Liberal Member pointed out, the person concerned on my executive has been doing this for two years. He has been on the executive longer than that, but he has been on the fund-raising committee for the last couple of years. He is doing this year what he did last year, that is, his activity on the executive. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) had the decency to talk to him before raising this matter and learned that it has nothing to do with any business transaction. He is simply participating as a volunteer in the same way that he has in the past and, hopefully, will in the future if he has not been totally turned off and soured by this experience.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the comments just made by the Hon. Minister cover a good part of the points I wanted to make, so I will be very brief.

What I have to say flows mainly from the comments of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Slander is an issue of privilege. Moreover, slander by innuendo is no less slanderous. On hearing the question by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) no reasonable citizen would doubt the intent. He says he did not intend to cast an innuendo. I do not believe him because, as the Hon. Minister indicated, the Hon. Member did not seek facts, an analysis, or any specific information. He rose only to question the propriety of the Minister undertaking certain activities, on the assumption and perhaps even in the hope that something might have been amiss.

I think the only appropriate and proper thing for the Hon. Member to do is, as requested, to withdraw, as the Hon. Liberal Member did, to his great credit.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rose earlier because I had some information that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) did not have. I did not mean to insinuate that the Hon. Member did not have the right to ask the questions he did. He said there was no innuendo intended, and I think all Members must acknowledge that statement and agree. I do not think it is within the realm of this House or any Member to cast aspersions on the statements of any Member of Parliament. If he says he did not mean any innuendo, it is important that all Members take that as his position.

The Hon. Minister comes from a city where most people work in the oil industry. It is difficult not to have some kind of connection. However, there is a perception here and that is what it is. Whether it is within the realm of this House to deal with it, or if it is up to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to talk to the Minister, I honestly do not know. However, I would not want to think that, while we do not want to cast aspersions on other Members, we do not have the right to ask questions. As one Member has said, we mention names in the House and by association cast aspersions on those other people. I do not think that is necessarily the case.

• (1550)

I honestly do not think this is a question of privilege, as I said initially. I do not think the Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is in a situation of conflict of interest, mainly because of the information which I had. I honestly believe that this is a very, very important question because, on the one hand, Members of Parliament need to have the right to have certain people work for them without being worried about the connotation of their involvement. As well, it is important that Members of Parliament be granted the right to ask questions. Where the perception exists I think it would be wrong for the Chair to limit the scope of Members of Parliament.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to enter this but I think something is being missed, that is that there would be no pith or substance to what we are talking about right now if there were not a couple of particular things going on in the country. First, the largest corporate takeover controversy in the country is the Dome-Amoco deal. I think the Minister would be the first to admit that when you have a large riding association you must question the appropriateness of having the Vice-President of Amoco sending out a fund-raising letter in the midst of such a controversy. That is the pith and substance of why this issue is being raised as a question of privilege, although I do not believe it is a question of privilege.

The organization in Calgary Centre could have had anyone else send out the letter. It is not only a fund-raising letter. As I understand, it also says that the PCs have made the energy industry a high priority. The Minister is in the particularly important position of being responsible for both corporate affairs and consumer affairs. If Mr. Moore wants to write and send out hundreds of such fund-raising letters, he should be fully aware that some of them may end up in a newspaper or coming to the public's attention. The fact that this particular person, who happens to be the Vice-President of Amoco, has written a letter about the energy industry, fundraising for a particular Member at a particular time when an issue is highly controversial, is really the pith of this issue.

Let us shift ground a little bit. Let us say it was a Minister in another portfolio, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion for example, and Chrysler and GM were vying to build a plant in a particular area and the vice-president of GM happened to send out, at a particularly controversial time, a fund-raising letter in that particular area.

We must gain some perspective from the portfolio of the Minister involved, why the question was asked, the timing of the letter, and the fact that the question of energy was raised, tying it to a major controversy in the country. It is important that the pith of this issue be kept in mind.

I am affronted by the comments of the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) who said that he simply does not believe the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). That in itself constitutes a breach of privilege. The Minister shouted "scum bag" across the House and then withdrew it. We must keep in mind that the Minister and some Members on that side may be embarrassed that this has been raised. I am sure Mr. Moore was fully aware, when he put his signature to this letter and sent out hundreds of copies, that there was a possibility that it would come to the public's attention.

Mr. Speaker: Before anything is added to the debate, keep in mind that it is not for the Chair to rule as to whether or not there ought to be some kind of guideline which spells out that people in a riding association of a Member of Parliament ought not do this or ought to do something else. That is not the issue which I have to determine. I have to determine whether the questions asked, and the context within which they were asked, injured the Minister sufficiently that his ability to function as a Member of this place and as a Minister would be diminished. That is the issue. That is what privilege is all about.

That is what I have to decide, and I would ask Hon. Members who have had the advantage of hearing some good arguments and wish to add something to this, to keep in mind that that is the issue. The issue is not whether or not there ought to be guidelines which cover this. The issue is whether the questions which were asked have damaged the Minister's ability to carry out the duties which he was sent here by the public to do.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. Every citizen in this land has the right to do his work unencumbered by aspersions or suggestions cast upon him by Members in this House. He has the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and that includes the Minister.

The question is not only whether or not he infringed upon the rights of the Minister without intending to. The fact is that he created a suspicion of guilt. It appears to me that he deliberately created an impression of suspicion. As long as that suspicion exists he has hampered the work of the Minister. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is a prima facie case that the Minister's rights have been violated by creating an unwarranted suspicion of the work of the Minister.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my remarks, too, will be brief. I listened with a great deal of interest to the presentation of the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). It appeared to me that the innuendo was being repeated. I am not saying that the Member for Skeena is making an accusation and I am not for a moment suggesting that I will accept what the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) says when he says that he is not accusing the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) of anything. The fact is that the question, framed in that way, casts an aspersion, whether or not it is done knowingly. That is not the question. In my mind the problem is whether the question casts an innuendo, whether or not the intent is there. That is the problem we face.

I do not control the activities of the association in my riding. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Members of this House that the Minister does not control the activities of the association which works on behalf of him in his riding. It is more than an arm's length transaction. In fact I asked my colleague, the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), whether he controls his association and he said that the association controls him. The association determines its own timetable when it does a fundraiser.

My last point is that Mr. Moore, the Vice-President of Amoco, is not identified as such in the letter. The only way that this comes to anyone's attention is when it is raised in the House. In my view, the fact that it was raised in the House further underlines the innuendo, whether or not it was intended.

Mr. Speaker: Keeping in mind that this is an allotted day, the Chair has certainly been very much assisted by the interventions of all Hon. Members and for that I thank them. I will consider the matter and return to the House at the appropriate time.

NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES AT LAUZON SHIPYARDS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to raise a question of privilege which, I hope, will not take as long as the one we just heard.

Yesterday, after Oral Question Period, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) said that I had misinformed the House regarding the number of employees at the Lauzon shipyards. Mr. Speaker, during Oral Question Period, I said that "I learned over the week-end that there are only 400 workers left at the Lauzon shipyards". Mr. Speaker, it was obvious that in my question I was referring to organized workers who are paid by the hour in the shipyards and who are the first to be laid off when work is slack. I was not referring to the engineers and technicians, who usually are not laid off when there is a reduction in the amount of work.

This morning, to make sure, I also called the President, Mr. Jean Roch Brisson, to ask him how many employees were actually working at the shipyards, and he told me that tomorrow's payroll, dated May 22, would cover 433 employees working directly at the shipyards and paid by the hour. Mr. Speaker, if I did make a mistake, I was out by 33.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, yesterday after the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) asked his question I wanted to check with the shipyard management, so I got in touch with the company public relations spokesman, Mr. René Hallé, who did confirm that the company has 750 employees, not 400 as stated by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. Should the Chair so wish I would be in a position to produce the appropriate documents stating the exact number of employees and the source of my information. The House was well informed by the Member for Lévis.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest that this may not be a question of privilege, but I thank the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) for correcting Hansard. Thank you for your attention to the details of the debate.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ALBERTA ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Waddell:

That this House expresses its disappointment with the Government for its failure to deal effectively with the severe economic recession in Alberta which has resulted in, among other things:

(1) Alberta having the worst performance of any provincial economy in Canada which the Conference Board of Canada has estimated will shrink in over-all terms for the second consecutive year;

(2) a loss of 50,000 direct and indirect jobs in the oil and gas industry;

(3) leaving Alberta farmers with 23 per cent of Canada's outstanding farm debt;

(4) causing on average 600 new families per month to be placed on welfare; and

(5) Alberta having the highest per capita suicide rate in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) had the floor. I advise the Hon. Member that he has approximately four minutes remaining.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to resume the debate. When we rose at one o'clock I was discussing the matter of using nice, clean British Columbia and Alberta coal for thermoelectrical production in Ontario rather than the dirty coal that comes in from the United States in enormous volumes.

This is an issue that has concerned Albertans and British Columbians for many years. When one considers the large numbers of rail cars that are available, particularly with the haul-back capacity on CN and CP lines from British Columbia and Alberta, one wonders why large volumes of coal are not coming from eastern British Columbia and southwestern Alberta to feed the electrical requirements of Ontario. One would have thought, with 20 Members from Alberta sitting on the government benches, that some efforts would have succeeded after two and a half years in Government in getting at least the occasional new carload of Alberta coal moving along those lines to provide good, clean electrical power to the Province of Ontario.

Even though we have seen occasional press releases and heard occasional murmurs from Alberta Members, including the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), nothing serious seems to be in the works. In fact, the Government seems to have buried the issue again. It is another example of Members on the government benches being strangely silent on an issue that could provide thousands of new jobs and new infrastructure in Alberta.

Other Members have raised the question with regard to the Husky upgrader at Lloydminster, which is a promise by the Tories that was heralded throughout Alberta during the election campaign but has not been fulfilled. The estimates are that some 5,000 Albertans could obtain employment in the development of that heavy oil upgrader at Lloydminster. Once again, government Members are strangely silent and incapable of making the Cabinet understand the importance of providing development initiatives in the West, particularly in Alberta.

Over the years the Government of Alberta invested a great deal of money in the Heritage Fund. However, those funds are tied up in loans to other provinces and therefore not easily tapped by the Government of Alberta in order to provide the required revenues to put people back to work. When the province was awash in oil money during the 1970s and early 1980s, one would have thought that a Government with some vision would have provided for a means of putting those funds into development activities.

As I stated at the outset of my remarks, tourism held one of the greatest potentials for Alberta. Considering the hundreds of thousands of tourists who come from the United States, Japan and elsewhere, perhaps greater initiative could have been taken with the Heritage Fund moneys to develop the kinds of facilities that would have attracted tourists to stay in Alberta longer, and to develop additional sectors within the Alberta economy in anticipation of the cyclical ups and downs that we all recognize occur in the energy sector.

No one expected such a prolonged downturn at this time, and certainly the diversification of the Alberta economy should have taken place during the good years so that these lean years would not have been so harmful as to force 600 additional families every month onto welfare in Alberta.

I am pleased to speak up for Albertans and let them know that there are Members in the House who are prepared to speak up on their issues and try to find solutions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ALBERTA ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Waddell:

That this House expresses its disappointment with the Government for its failure to deal effectively with the severe economic recession in Alberta which has resulted in, among other things:

(1) Alberta having the worst performance of any provincial economy in Canada which the Conference Board of Canada has estimated will shrink in over-all terms for the second consecutive year;

(2) a loss of 50,000 direct and indirect jobs in the oil and gas industry;

(3) leaving Alberta farmers with 23 per cent of Canada's outstanding farm debt;

(4) causing on average 600 new families per month to be placed on welfare; and

(5) Alberta having the highest per capita suicide rate in Canada.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, this is a long, dark day for the New Democratic Party. They began the debate with a resolution essentially based on innuendo, and have been continuing throughout the day on the same theme.

For a "peregrinatious" person such as the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to raise the resolution that he did, is a most perfidious act. The fact is that it is a mean-spirited resolution and one that is factually wrong.

The final comments of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) are factually wrong. He says that he and his Party will stand up for Alberta. I suggest that the New Democratic Party utters nothing but nonsense.

He said that 21 Members of Parliament from Alberta are silent and do not really care about the use of low-sulphur coal in Ontario. He wears the masks of theatre and is a great pretender. Now he raises the mask and says he cares for Alberta. That is false.

People on the Prairies, from grandfathers to children, know that there has been a history in western Canada of freight rate discrimination. Once that discrimination is removed, western Canada can have the industrialization of its raw products, of its coal and grain, and the industrialization of flour mills and meat-packing plants.

The great pretender would have others believe that he is speaking for Alberta. Yet the New Democratic Party opposed Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 which would end, forever, the discrimination that stops the very activities that could be good for the West. That is the Party which opposes that forward move.

• (1610)

The last time members of the New Democratic Party ever knew anything about oil and gas, they were using Brylcream. The New Democratic Party pretends it is interested in agriculture, but it is the political Party which stands against property rights in the Constitution of Canada. It is the political Party which, in its Resolutions Reference Book, has as a resolution that it will set up a commission in Canada to regulate the size of farms according to regions across Canada. That is NDP policy.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member for Crowfoot is going to quote this information, he might once in a while want to show us these documents from which he is always quoting as he travels around Alberta and so on. He knows it is absolutely wrong and false. I think the Hon. Member should avoid putting this information on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased by the invitation of the Hon. Member for Skeena. I will just pick up one of those documents. I see two Liberal Members in the House. They and members of the Progressive Conservative Party will know that the Liberal and Progressive Conservative Parties have Party constitutions which tells us that resolutions of our Parties are recommendations to the Party Leader and advice to that Party should it become government. That is not a part of the constitution of the New Democratic Party. Its constitution says that resolutions passed by its members are binding on the Party. I know that is in the NDP constitution, and so does the Hon. Member for Skeena.

He also knows there is a resolutions reference paper which, on its first page, says that while some of these resolutions were passed a few years ago, they are still binding. These are the resolutions which remain binding. I will read them for him. This is going to be great fun, Mr. Speaker, because one of the pretentions this pretending Party has about western Canada is that somehow the New Democratic Party would be the one which would serve the west. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, how it would serve the west. I am not going to re-read the resolution on agriculture right now. I will come to that one in a moment. One resolution is the phasing out of oil exports to the United States and a ban on exports of our current surpluses of natural gas. Here is a political Party which really favoured PetroCan. It bowed and kneeled and said: "Oh, thank goodness", when the new Petro-Canada Building went up into the skyline of Calgary. Five hundred acres of red marble were cut in Finland. There was no one to polish it in Finland or in Canada, so it was shipped by boat to Italy to be polished. It was brought across to the St. Lawrence River and across the country by train. This enormous monument built by the previous Government of Canada did not create a dollar. The NDP did not care that it never became more than 40 per cent filled with office space. It was an enormous waste of money. But yet these members of the New Democratic Party say: "We are here to save western Canada". Do not believe them, western Canada. They are not about to do that at all.

Let us go through a few more of these fine NDP resolutions. The price of oil products should remain below world levels. Is that not an amazing and interesting fact? Would the Hon. Member dare to stand up and say that the automobile industry should produce cars for the rest of the country below world prices? Is he about to stand up and say that the steel and iron ore of Ontario should be sold at below world prices? No, that Party pretends it is defending western Canada today, and as for the product which essentially comes from western Canada, it says: "Western Canada, you sell your product at below world prices and all the rest of the country will sell its product at fair market value. You regional folks away out there, your products will be sold at below world prices". They are the great pretenders.

The NDP also espouses the expansion of Petro-Canada by its purchasing of Imperial Oil to increase the activity of the provincial Crown corporation from the creation of a co-operative energy company.

Earlier this morning in this debate there was talk about interest rates. The NDP said its Party should take no credit for that, it was just a world condition. Anyone who believes that the debt of this country has no relationship to our interest rates is dreaming in technicolour. That debt is there because of overspending. Who could overspend more than the New Democratic Party? Who wants to nationalize CPR? Who wants to nationalize all the airlines? Who wants to nationalize the banks? Who wants to nationalize Imperial Oil? That Party is not really interested in the creation of jobs, the generation of wealth and the employment of people. What it is interested in is the intervention of the state so that the state can come into the homes and rooms of our citizens and tell us there is something called government which can run our lives better than we as individual Canadians can. That is where the great pretenders really fall flat because they should know, if they do not, that there is no place in Canada which has a more intensive spirit of enterprise than western Canada. There may be lots of places which are equal, but there are none which are greater. To pretend that somehow members of the NDP want the state to roll all over them is simply a fabrication of the imagination.

It does my heart good to see the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) right in bed with the sheets pulled up tight around him with the CPR with respect to Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. For generations we have cried for that change in the west so we could keep our packing plants, our flour mills, our crushing plants and all of the rest. But the Hon. Member for Skeena asks, why not sell more coal? But his Party says no to the method by which we could sell the coal. It does not want any part of those two Bills which will bring about some freedom of opportunity for western Canada to develop its infrastructure.

Perhaps I can take a look at a few other resolutions, about which the Hon. Member challenged me a few moments ago. He wants me to read some agricultural resolutions.

Mr. Fulton: Point of order.

Mr. Malone: Good. I will allow him his point of order.

Mr. Fulton: I wonder if this political giant from Crowfoot might have something to say about what he and his Government have done for Alberta. Or is he so simple-minded that he cannot possibly tell Albertans one thing he and his Party have done?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be time for questions and comments after the Hon. Member's speech. That, I think, is just debate. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot has the floor.

Mr. Malone: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I might add that my neurons are not lonesome as might be the case elsewhere.

The Hon. Member for Skeena does not want me to finish reading his resolutions.

Mr. Fulton: That is because your Government won't do anything for Alberta, Arnie. Let's hear one thing.

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member wants to hear one thing. I will not give him one thing. If you will allow me the time, Mr. Speaker, I will give him enough things which have been done for Alberta to fill the rest of the day and half way into the night.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Let's hear the best thing the Government has done for Alberta.

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and I were on a little chatter with CBC Calgary. I read out some of the NDP resolutions. What he said is on tape in Calgary. He said I was on a witch-hunt. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what will the average citizen in Alberta think about a person who was the Leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, who today is an elected Member of Parliament, who has a major part in influencing people about resolutions which are developed, who says, when you read his Party's resolutions as direct quotes in public so that Canadians can know about them, that I am on a witch-hunt? That is what the Hon. Member for Skeena is doing now. He does not like what I am doing. It must hurt.

Mr. Fulton: It is just that you have nothing to say, Arnie, you are a mental midget.

• (1620)

Mr. Malone: Here is what we get if we had an NDP Government: "the establishment of industrial plants to be co-operatively or publicly owned for the processing of food and the manufacture of farm supply items in the regions of production."

Well, now, isn't that interesting. Now they want the Government to own these farm machinery plants and the supply outlets.

And get this: "the establishment of a public commission to determine a formula for farm unit size on a regional basis."

Did you hear any farmer stand up, Mr. Speaker, and applaud that? Let us take a look at another one. That Party espouses "taking into pubic ownership some existing farm supply retail operations, farm machinery assembly plants, meat-packing plants and canneries".

Well, Canadian farmers, there you go. The NDP can give you all Polaris tractors. Would that not be a real thrill!

The Hon. Member opposite asks what it is I am quoting from. Well, here it is, the NDP Resolutions Reference book, dated October 1986. Here it states:

> This book contains those resolutions passed by New Democrats since 1961 which are still current today. That is, resolutions which have not been overtaken by events or superseded by subsequent resolutions.

There they are, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you, when I finish reading this book to Canadians, the New Democratic Party will be at 2 per cent in the polls and no higher, if people are made to understand all of the stuff that is in here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: There are socialist Governments around the world, many of which are in northern Europe, but there is only one socialist Party in the whole western world that wants to get out of NATO, and that is the New Democratic Party of Canada.

The Hon. Member opposite concluded his remarks in this debate by making the assertion that we have not done anything for tourism in western Canada. The first tourism sub-agreement ever signed with Alberta was one signed after we became the Government, involving an amount of $56 million.

It may be that the Hon. Member for Skeena does not know this, but we also committed $90 million to the second arm of the Trans-Canada Highway, the Yellowhead route. That should even benefit Skeena. But he closed his mind to that kind of information.

In the agricultural sector alone, 437 initiatives have been launched by this Government, to a total value of $5.88 billion. That is in the space of two years. I challenge the Hon. Member for Skeena or the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway to find any period in the history of Canada when that amount of money has flowed from the central Government of Canada to the regions, in this case to western Canada in large part—and they can index the money in any way they wish.

Under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, we have had record payments totalling $859 million. We had to pass two amendments to the Act in order to make those payments possible. This spring, there was $705 million allocated to interim payments; there was $210 million allocated to a drought assistance program. In addition to all of that, we introduced the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption.

Is it not interesting, Mr. Speaker, that while we were applauded all across the farming regions of Canada, the New Democratic Party, which pretends to be the great saviour of western Canada, came out in opposition to the $500,000 capital gains exemption, an exemption that is largely utilized by farmers and small business persons in Canada?

We have brought about a $100 million to $150 million savings on freight rate rollbacks. Had the formula put in place by the Liberal Government continued unchanged—and I know that conditions have changed—grain freight rates would be well over $11 a tonne today. As things stand, the freight rate barely touches $7 a tonne.

The fact of the matter is that the Hon. Member for Skeena has nothing to stand on at all when he tries to pretend that nothing is being done for western Canada.

In respect of regional development, we have had $370 million go to the western provinces. Three out of every four of the Alberta-listed companies have won federal government contracts, to a value of some $233 million: $50 million for the Yellowhead Highway upgrade; $50 million for agricultural processing; $40 million for northern development in the northern regions of the Prairies; $23 million for a federal forestry agreement with the provinces; and $22 million for the Lethbridge Animal Diseases Laboratory.

The federal Government also contributed 70 per cent of the $90 million cost of the Lloydminster upgrader research project.

The Hon. Member for Skeena has said this Government has not done anything. Well, if 70 per cent of $90 million is nothing, by golly, Sir, I want lots of nothing, because that kind of "nothing" sure is welcome in western Canada.

That is the kind of thing that this kind of tomfoolery that we are having in the House today—

Mr. McMillan: Watch it!

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan).

As the Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Member looks after national parks, and I know that he will do a good job in that respect insofar as Alberta is concerned. He will help us improve our environment and help us in enhancing our national parks. In doing all of that, I can tell you that Tom is not foolery; he is very wise.

I want to thank the NDP, Mr. Speaker, for having brought this silly motion before the House. It allows us to put on the record during the course of this debate what this Government has done for western Canada, and what it has done has been very, very significant.

It also provides us with an opportunity to remind the citizens of this country that it was the NDP and the Liberals who closed the door to economic development in western Canada, and to bring to the attention of Canadians what it would be like to live under the oppressive policies of a New Democratic Government.

Let me end on a point that I consider to be critical. There has been too much talk about doom and gloom in the west. In fact, the talk of gloom and doom is bringing about some actual doom and gloom.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that there are persons who are resisting investing in western Canada because of the perception that things are bad, when in fact there is much that warrants optimism.

If we look at the statistics, the truth of the matter is that drilling activity has increased. Over-all activity in the energy sector has significantly increased. The notion that agriculture is in the doldrums is overstated. The fact of the matter is, over-all income in agriculture has increased by more than 100 per cent since this Government took office. What has happened is that the grain sector has become greatly depressed.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that all of this talk of gloom and doom makes it more difficult for entrepreneurs and businesses in western Canada to attract capital. Even some members of the Alberta Government will admit that. Bearing that in mind, I ask people to act responsibly.

The Parties who are not in opposition drove $56 billion out of Alberta during the course of the National Energy Program, and they stand here today and complain that the Alberta Government is not looking after medicare in the way that it ought to. Well, had they left that $56 billion in the western Canada economy, the Alberta Government certainly would look after the needs of medicare.

They say that we are not doing enough for agriculture. Again, had the $56 billion that was taken out by the NDP and the Liberals been left in that economy, a lot more could be done.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I have a great deal more that I would like to say, both in terms of what the New Democratic Party is and what we have done for the west. I shall conclude for now, but Canadians will be hearing more from me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), on a question or comment.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the comments of my hon. friend from Crowfoot are very tough. It seems to me that he is being very critical of his fellow Albertans, who are turning in droves to the New Democratic Party. They have seen how the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada has sold out western Canada. They have seen a Government which has not been very honest in terms of how it is perceived in western Canada. They have seen a Government which is doing everything to reward its friends through patronage and through cronyism in central Canada. They are objecting to that in the west.

• (1630)

The best evidence I have of that is the election of all those New Democrats in Edmonton in the last provincial election. There were 16 in Alberta. Most of them were in Edmonton. There is also the fact that the by-election in Pembina was almost lost at the federal level. A majority of some 30,000 went down to some 200. This is why more ordinary Albertans are voting for the people's Party. They are not voting for the big money Party in central Canada, the Tories; they are voting for the people's Party, the New Democratic Party of Canada. That is why the Tories are terrified of the NDP.

We had to bring forward this motion today because of the 21 silent Conservatives from Alberta; they are called "the Silent 21". In fact, I have received calls in my office saying "the Silent 21 will not raise this question. Will you guys raise it for us?"

The Hon. Member is a good friend of mine and a distinguished Albertan. He says that he has all kinds of sources and contacts. I have a very simple question for him. What will the western diversification initiative do for ordinary Albertans?

We have had one very competent Conservative Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), denounce the Conservative Party because it does not stand up for western Canada. He had the courage of his convictions. This is why he has received such a positive response from his constituents in Edmonton. They see him as the one exception to the "Silent 21". One reason he denounced his Party was that there was no action in the area of western diversification.

What will the western diversification initiative do for ordinary Albertans? The Hon. Member may not know much about it. I have lots of government documents—they are leaked to me all the time—on western diversification. When I speak later, I will reveal some of the contents of them. Since the answer is not in all the documents I have, I want to know what the western diversification initiative will mean to ordinary Albertans.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I find it amusing that a Member would pretend for a moment that he has all kinds of leaked documents but would find it necessary to ask questions about substance.

He started out in his preamble by saying that we had done nothing for western Canada. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has great affinity for the pool system in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. I should like to read from the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget as follows:

> There's no denying that Canadian farmers have been receiving more public support than ever before. Last year Alberta producers received $470 million from three major support programs alone. In total about 17 per cent of total farm cash receipts came from government support programs in 1986 . . .
> These tremendous income declines would have caused a total collapse of western Canadian agriculture if the government support had been withheld.

Let us take a look at the enormous amount of money we have given. We must bear in mind that the big spenders who preceded us left us in a situation where one out of every three tax dollars is used to pay for interest on the accumulated debt. For the Hon. Member to pretend that we have done nothing raises the great pretention of the NDP, the "let's pretend" Party.

The truth is—and it is the statistic for which I was looking earlier—that total net farm income was up 176 per cent in 1986 over 1985. It is the grain sector that is down.

The Hon. Member asks what we will do. The truth of the matter is that we must put forth support to retain the agricultural sector until the basic fundamentals are looked after. In part the Liberals must share the blame. It started in the 1972 Tokyo Round of the Economic Summit when emphasis was not put upon agriculture. That changed in 1985 when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made sure that agriculture was forced to the top of the agenda in Tokyo.

It was followed up by the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) at Punta del Este, Uruguay, when he forced agriculture on to the primary agenda of the GATT at Geneva.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville knows that just this week OECD countries said that the Canadians were right.

They are now looking at backing away from their extraordinary subsidization.

The Hon. Member asked what diversification would do. I have already mentioned in my speech what it has done for tourism. It will take us away from having only two boom and bust industries. Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, which the New Democratic Party opposes, will allow for the infrastructure to manufacture raw materials from the prairie regions to be enhanced. However, he opposes that. It is one way in which to develop a capacity for the western basin to produce its products.

It is rather naive to ask for the details on a document which is not yet before the public and on which we are still working. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that I do not have to go public to have my voice heard. I can, at regular meetings with the people who are drafting and writing this important legislation, make sure that western Canadian interests are being looked after. I see the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) is here. He is playing an active part, as are other Alberta Members of Parliament.

I am thankful that we are not on the opposition side and that we can do hundreds and hundreds of things to make western Canada a better place to live, despite two terrible world conditions which have driven down the price of petroleum and the price of grain. There is a great day coming in oil. We have now been six weeks at $19.50 per barrel. I say to the Hon. Member: "You just stick around".

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). He certainly enlightened us about the situation in western Canada, in particular the situation in Alberta.

He mentioned the National Energy Program which was brought in by the former Government and of course supported by the New Democratic Party. He also mentioned its effect upon western Canada. Perhaps he could take a moment to elaborate on some of its effects on the economy in western Canada, on the jobs that were lost, on what the Progressive Conservative Government did after taking office in relation to that program, and on the follow-up programs in the energy sector for western Canada.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Program was a job-creation program by the Liberals—it created jobs in the United States, Venezuela, the North Sea, and Australia. It drove Canadian drilling rigs out of Canada; two-thirds of them left within the period of a year.

There is a great misconception in Canada that a drilling rig is a tower. To move a drilling rig requires approximately 16 very long, 18-wheeler tandem trucks. Each move costs about $500,000, yet three-quarters of our rigs were driven out of the sedimentary basin and headed for other countries. Head offices moved from Calgary to Denver, Colorado. One person who was a Member of Parliament moved many of his people out. The environment in Canada was a losing environment, and it took $56 billion out of western Canada.

Today Liberal and NDP Members stand and say that the provincial Government should do certain things. They ask why we as federal people do not do certain things for the west. The truth of the matter is that much of the damage which has taken place is the direct result of that terrible, awful, unjust, unfair, wrong-headed, and bull-headed policy, the National Energy Program. It treated western Canada differently from other parts of Canada. It treated one sector of the industry different from all other sectors. It sucked out from one sector just short of $5 billion in taxation at one time. Now that figure is just a little over $400 million for the same sector, because fairness has been put back into the game.

In response to the question of my good friend from Prince Edward Island, let me say that it was a devastating sight. Over a mile and a half of trucks were lined up from Coutts, Alberta, to Sweetgrass, Montana. They were heading for the United States and taking our men and women with them. Jobs were leaving the country. It was a devastating day. The great pretenders are the New Democrats who have the audacity to come to the House of Commons and say that they are sticking up for western Canada. What a façade, Mr. Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Government and the Conservatives, every time they are questioned about the lack of support for the energy industry in Alberta, always refer to the National Energy Program. Certainly the National Energy Program had some detrimental effects on the energy sector. That was evident in the last federal election, and the Liberal Government cannot be said to have done very well in Alberta. But now we are three years into the mandate of the present Government and it is still talking about the National Energy Program, trying to get Albertans off the track. This Government has not only not supported the energy sector in Alberta but it has completely ignored it.

There have been some programs, some of which have been noteworthy, but all of them have come far too late and all of them implemented only because of political necessity.

We are talking today about a province which has an unemployment rate of between 10 per cent and 11 per cent. Alberta Members can say that things are looking bright. I can say that with higher oil prices things are looking a little brighter, but it does not mean that Alberta is out of the woods by any means nor can we take for granted that the economy of Alberta will bounce back. An awful lot needs to be done.

I am very concerned when I hear government Members saying that things are looking brighter and that is their defence for ignoring the problems in Alberta. It is wrong also for Canadians in central and eastern Canada to point to the Heritage Fund and say that that is the answer. That is not fair to Albertans. Loans have been made to other provinces from the Heritage Fund. Those moneys are tied up for a considerable period of time. The Government of Alberta has put a great deal of the Heritage Fund into parks and hospitals, money which it cannot get out. You cannot sell parks and hospitals, but if you could, you would get very little in return. There is very little of the Heritage Fund that you can liquidate and use. It is a non-issue.

We have to look at the situation in Alberta as it is today, not to posture or to find some excuse and blame someone else. We have to look at the problems realistically. We have to take off the blinders and say that this is a concern which must be dealt with realistically and as soon as possible.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) talks about prior summits and about agricultural meetings. The problem is that the good friends of the Government, the Americans, have again let down the Conservative Government in the case of the wheat farmers. In order to fight the concessions given to farmers in the Common Market the Americans decided to subsidize their wheat growers, which put Canadian wheat growers in a very difficult position. You cannot say, "Those darn Americans are rascals. Look what they have done. Our farmers are really great guys and this should not have happened to them. There is really nothing we can do because it is out of our hands".

If the Conservative Government is conscious about the problems of the farmers as it says it is and puts their problems on the agenda as often as it has, why are other countries kicking sand in our face as never before? It is because the Government does not have any respect internationally. It is perceived that the Conservative Government wants a free trade agreement so badly that the Americans can do anything they want as long as they say that what they are doing will heighten Canada's chances of getting a free trade agreement. A free trade agreement would be nice if we did not have to sell the country to get it. There are a lot of things this country would like and a lot of things Canadians would like, but at what price? That of selling our country, our resources and our culture, of reducing our scope for making decisions on defence, on nuclear armaments, on submarines in the Arctic? We will stop being a sovereign nation if it is carried to the extent that the Americans would like to carry it. I am not being anti-American. The Americans are good neighbours, but the United States is a separate country, as is Canada. We have to have respect for one another. The respect Americans should have for Canada does not exist.

The problems in the energy sector at the present time are not, and I repeat, are not a result of the National Energy Program. When prices were higher, activity returned and reports from all of western Canada, including Alberta, were that there was going to be a boom. There was no talk in 1985 about the National Energy Program dragging down the oil and gas industry in western Canada. There was no talk of that at all. But when the price of oil went down to less than $10 a barrel U.S., all of a sudden the problems were a result of lower world oil prices and the National Energy Program. That is not fair at all. It is not fair to the Liberal Party nor to Albertans. It is not fair to delude oneself that the National Energy Program today is in any way responsible for the problems in Alberta.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot talks about $56 billion leaving the Province of Alberta. His Government has been in power during this downturn in world oil prices. How much money has gone back into the Province of Alberta since this Government has been in control? The Government is so apoplectic about the word regulation that it just backed away completely from assisting the energy sector.

Look, for example, at the time sequence when world oil prices declined. They started to decline in January, 1986. Nothing happened. Month after month after month there was talk of doing away with the petroleum gas revenue tax.

Mr. Malone: Who put it on?

Mr. MacLellan: In August, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), was going to be in Alberta to announce the abolishing of the PGRT. He went out west and spoke about how serious the situation was in the oil and gas industry in Alberta and then proceeded to walk away. Why? Presumably because the Minister of Energy in Alberta said that he might be announcing the abolishing of the PGRT. The next month there was the by-election in Pembina and the Government candidate was not doing too well. All of a sudden there was a retrenching and a scattering of paper and bodies. There were meetings and out went the Minister of Energy to Alberta to announce the abandonment, the abolishing and the doing away with the PGRT. It is a funny sequence of events that that announcement just happened to be a few days before the Pembina by-election.

The situation continues to get worse. Why does it continue to get worse, Mr. Speaker,? Not because the situation changed. The situation in September, 1986, in December 1986, in January and March, 1987 is the same. The situation is deteriorating because it has gone on for a longer period of time. The downturn in the sector has continued.

Most of all what has been damaging has been the continuing uncertainty. The oil and gas sector does not know where it stands. It does not know if the Government is going to help. It does not know if oil prices are going to go lower, higher or remain the same. It cannot plan. It is a simple question of economics. When the industry was down you could not expect it to plan large investments. Yet that is not what the Government would have us believe. When it did away with the PGRT the Government said it expected the major oil companies to reinvest that money in the energy sector. The Government is like the guy who lost five dollars on a goal scored in the hockey game and another five dollars on the instant replay. Time and time again we have seen that the multinational oil companies are not philanthropists. That is not a condemnation so long as you realize that they are multinational oil companies. They buy and sell oil and gas around the world. They do not become nationalists or philanthropists. They do not become an arm of the Canadian Government or society. We have to realize that, and for the Government to say what it did was naive and insulting to the people of western Canada.

In March the Government announced the exploration and development incentive program. It is estimated to be worth about $350 million. I think it will help exploration and development in the energy sector, and that is very important. While I do not think it is as good as others that could have been brought in, I support it because the Government is finally doing something for the energy sector. It is doing something for the small and medium-sized companies in that sector. That is very important.

There is a myth that when things were going well in Alberta a lot of people jumped on the bandwagon and invested money but they should have known better. That is a very unfair rap on the energy sector in Alberta. To say that when things were going better small and medium-sized oil companies should have known it was not going to last is wrong.

The major chartered banks invested millions of dollars in the energy sector. How can you say that about the small and medium-sized players and not about the banks? It is unfair to say these companies were all johnny-come-latelys. They are not. They have been in business since the 1930s and 1940s.

I talked to the president of one company which had been in his family since 1936. He told me he was going to have to lay off employees and it bothered him very much. It kept him awake at night. These people were not just employees. They were friends, he had known them and their families for years. That he would have to lay off some of them caused this man no end of concern.

I talked to a lot of people whose jobs were uncertain. They said they wanted the Government to tell them what it is going to do. If it does not want to help them, at least give them the courtesy of telling them that. If they are going to be laid off they want it done now so at least they have a chance to get a job. Given the uncertainty of the Government, later would be too late and the market will be filled with people looking for work. That is exactly what happened. Mind you, a lot of people have left the province, but a lot are still there, without jobs but with a great deal of uncertainty facing them in the future.

The price of oil has gone up, and I hope it goes up more because it is important to get a reasonable price so people can plan. If it does not go up, we have to do something. The Government did not do anything when it went down. Surely to goodness it will do something if it goes up over U.S. $20 a barrel. Surely it will plan and put some kind of safety net in place for the people of western Canada. Surely its inhibitions about regulation are gone now that it has brought forward the exploration and development incentive program. Surely the Government realizes this is regulation.

The Liberal Party brought forward a cash flow stabilization program which we thought and still think was in the best interests of the energy sector. It did not go anywhere, largely because it was the Liberal Party that recommended it. That is the sort of silliness that goes on across the way.

Members opposite talked about improved drilling. I am going to read some figures that were given to me by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. In 1985 there were 12,564 wells drilled in Canada. That dropped to 6,400 in 1986. This year it is projected at 5,400, and that with the price of $20 a barrel. That may increase if the price increases, but there is no abundance of drilling activity in Alberta.

What about the Senate? To my knowledge no Members across the way have said they support a triple-E Senate. Westerners, Albertans in particular, are completely disillusioned because of that. Not only with the Conservative Party but with federal politicians in general. Being a federal Member of Parliament, that causes me a great deal of concern. I am pleased Albertans put forward this idea of a triple-E Senate. Had they not done so in the hope they will get a fair deal in Confederation in future, then they would be talking about separation and splinter Parties and other things which are not in the general interest of keeping this country together. To lose that valuable and beautiful province would be a tragedy. It is important that the Government treat Alberta fairly. Don't go making excuses or pass the buck. Treat them fairly. Recognize their problems and deal with them. That is the only thing they are going to understand. Fair treatment is the only thing you can expect anyone to understand.

Since 1972, Albertans have voted Tory almost exclusively. They had the right to feel they were going to get fair treatment, but they were ignored. They got platitudes, which only insults their intelligence. Is there any wonder they get angry?

This is a good motion because it puts forward some very important facts, and I hope the Government will listen instead of turning away and making believe these problems do not exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comment? Debate.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). He said the National Energy Program did not cause the disaster we are faced with in the oil industry in Alberta today. Let me draw you an analogy. A fellow was walking across the road and was run over by an 18-wheeler. He ends up in the hospital with a broken leg, broken pelvis, wearing a body cast, with a tube of liquid running into his arm. He starts to make a come-back. He gets healthier, but then he catches pneumonia and dies. By the Hon. Member's reasoning his death has nothing to do with the accident, it is the pneumonia that killed him.

Let us talk about some of the history of the oil industry and go back to where it started. Our problem commenced in 1973. At that time we had a minority Government propped up by the NDP which decided, as a temporary measure until January 1, 1974, to put a freeze on the price of oil. They do not do that with cod fish, zinc, cars or lumber, but the minority Liberal Government of the day, aided and abetted by the NDP, did that to oil.

I am in the oil industry and saw the result of that. From the time that temporary measure was introduced in 1973 until it was taken off by the Progressive Conservative Government in 1985, $56 billion of revenue was lost. That money would not go only to the oil companies. In the Province of Alberta 81 per cent of the mineral rights are owned by the province. For every barrel of oil which comes out of the ground on which the province owns the mineral rights, it gets a percentage. From 1973 to 1975 the NDP-Liberal coalition stole $56 billion from the people of Alberta.

As a small oil producer I felt like a second-class citizen in my own country. I could sell a barrel of oil for only half as much as someone else would get. Oil came on to the Montreal market which was produced for the benefit of a dictator in North Africa who got the full price for the oil. He took his money and marched his army into Chad. He had hit squads running around Europe, which is well documented. However I, as an oil producer, and everyone like me, were second-class citizens and could get only half as much as that person. It is just unbelievable.

The next step was the national energy policy. On October 28, 1980, a day of infamy, they continued the low prices. If we were supposed to get $20, they would give us $10. They had a bunch of new taxes. There was the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the petroleum compensation charge, the natural gas and gas liquids tax and the incremental oil revenue tax. There was a whole basket of nomenclature, bureaucracy and paper shuffling to tax this resource. No other resource was taxed like this. Essentially they chose one segment of Canada and treated it differently because it produced that product. We got hammered. The PGRT alone took $10.5 billion, and that was only one of the taxes.

These geniuses said that the price of oil was going to continue to go up and up and up. In 1980 they said that they expected that the price of oil would be $63.20 today. It is $24.87. It is less than 40 per cent of what they thought it would be. That was not good enough. A year later they said that it would be $77.50 today, and it is less than $25.00.

There was no flexibility in the system. They expected something to happen which did not happen. Instead, as my hon. friend, the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) mentioned, the rigs left. There were lost jobs and opportunities. In 1984, Alberta and all of Canada repudiated these socialists and put the Progressive Conservative Party into government and we started cleaning up.

Within half a year of being in power we signed the Western Accord which got rid of the incremental oil revenue tax, the petroleum compensation charge and the natural gas and gas liquids tax. The Government set up a phase-out for the infamous PGRT. It also allowed oil to be sold at the market price, which was something new. In the fall of 1985, a little over a year after taking office, we began to deregulate the gas markets, and are still in the process of doing that. The national energy policy taught us that Government is not smart enough to make these prophecies. That is a perfect example of what these people did in 1980.

As my friend from Cape Breton—The Sydneys pointed out, in January, 1986, the price collapsed. By February the price was down to about $25, and on April 18 it was less than $16. It went down from $40 to $16. The Member said we did not do anything. In fact we addressed the problem by increasing the tax credit. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the tax credit meant that producers did not have to pay the first $250,000 of tax. The Government increased that amount to the first $2 million of tax. It was the smaller companies that benefited. We decreased the number of companies paying this tax to 45. The Member said we are sitting on our hands, but we did all of that within three months. In less than nine months, by October 1, we removed it entirely, which added hundreds of millions of dollars to the cash flow of the oil industry. We recognized the problems.

We also retroactively changed the PGRT on royalties, which helped the smallest and most Canadian entrepreneurial start-up companies. Six million dollars went back into the pockets of the smallest Canadian companies. They were happy and very thankful.

What does all this lead to? I will refer to Oil Week, which is one of the bibles of the western oil patch. I recommend that the socialists take a look at it once in a while. They might learn something. This is the issue of Oil Week from May 11, 1987. It says:

> A surprisingly bullish projection for the level of exploration activity in the last three months of 1987 has been made by analyst John Lloyd-Price of brokerage house Gordon Capital Corporation.
> Lloyd-Price says—the rig count could hit 200 in the third quarter and 450 by the fourth.

He says further:

> —if 450 (rigs) are put to work that will probably mean the industry will be fully operational.

• (1710)

We also implemented the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program on April 1 of this year. That measure will help the smaller companies, compared to the PIP grants under the national energy policy of the Opposition, which did not help the little guys but assisted the big companies like Dome. Dome received subsidies of $1.28 billion in taxpayers' money under the Petroleum Incentives Program.

According to our initiative, no company can receive more than $3.3 million, so that it will benefit the smaller companies.

I am flabbergasted that the New Democratic Party would have the gall to introduce this resolution after it created most of the problems. The New Democratic Party Policy is to stop oil exportation to the United States. The industry is sick because of the collapse of the price of oil, yet the NDP would cut off its life blood by preventing the sale of oil to the Americans, thereby greatly reducing the cash flow.

Let us consider the impact of the NDP policy not to sell gas to the Americans. There will be no cash flow, no jobs, no drilling and more unemployment. I do not understand their logic.

I want to talk for a moment about the Dome-Amoco merger. The New Democratic Party suggests that the Government should take steps toward Canadianization. There was a Canadian offer, but the NDP forgot to mention that such an offer would cost the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $600 million, an enormous expense to every man, woman and child in Canada. Furthermore, they forgot to tell us that the Canadian offer would consider the Dome Petroleum debt to the Government of Canada as an unsecured credit. This means the Government would receive 30 cents on the dollar for a $180 million loan, costing us another $120 million. They also forgot to tell us that the Canadian bid is 25 per cent sponsored by a foreign national oil company.

If we were to follow the New Democratic Party policy to assist Dome stay Canadian by absorbing $600 million of taxpayers' money and forgiving a debt of some $120 million, we would be assisting the Canadian banks. In other words, the socialists will help bail out the Canadian banks that they also want to nationalize. First, they will make the banks wealthy through this deal. Their policies do not make sense.

Let me summarize what the Government has done. We established a free market-place for oil and are working on the same initiative for gas. We need not be second-class citizens because we can sell our products at the same market demand price as any other commodity from Canada.

We acted on the petroleum gas and revenue tax by modifying it within three months after the collapse of oil prices and by removing it entirely within nine months. We came to the assistance of the smallest producers by applying this measure retroactively. We introduced a $350 million program to create jobs. We helped the small companies in that sector in order to get the rigs working, so that the well-known analyst to whom I referred expects full utilization by the fourth quarter of this year. That is the proof that our measures are working.

We also signed the Atlantic Accord, bringing Newfoundland and Nova Scotia on side.

I am proud of our record and of being able to play a minor part in working toward these goals. We realize there have been tough times, but we recognized the problems, consulted with the industry and the provinces, and found solutions jointly. I am pleased that we can now see some results and that even better results will appear in the days to come.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) talks about the man who was hit by the truck, recovering in hospital, then dying of pneumonia. The reason he died of pneumonia is that the Tory Government opened the windows and took away all his blankets.

The Government has pulled the bottom out of the energy sector and is trying to blame it on the National Energy Program. It is using the NEP as an excuse for doing nothing.

One of the few steps the Government took was to deregulate natural gas last fall. I suggest that the Hon. Member ask the producers about the benefits they are receiving from the deregulation of natural gas. He will discover that they are being forced to sell their natural gas for less than their production costs, that some of them must work for the banks, and others who are selling their product at a very low price in order to pay the banks are hurting those viable operations. They are doing away with the adjacent border price, which is only helping the Americans.

Will the Hon. Member tell us how deregulation of natural gas will help those producers who are selling their natural gas for well under what it costs them to produce it?

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys amazes me. Essentially, four things affected the natural gas industry. It began in 1973 when the price was frozen and the industry and the provinces, as well as the people, were deprived of $56 billion in income. Second, the National Energy Program was implemented in 1980 and the petroleum and gas revenue tax alone took $10.5 billion from the industry.

The Member represents a Party that was in government when the prime interest rate soared to 23.75 per cent in 1982.

Finally, just as the industry was getting back on its feet as a result of some positive initiatives by our Government, there was a collapse in the oil price. It was the 18-wheeler, driven by the socialists, that ran us over, and they have the audacity to say that somebody left the window open! The Liberals said the price of oil was supposed to be $77 a barrel, but they made a slight miscalculation. It is only $24, less than a third of their prediction.

• (1720)

I did not see them in 1982, 1983 and 1984 taking the PGRT, the incremental oil revenue tax, and the petroleum compensation charge and all the alphabet soup of charges off when the price did not go up to the level it was supposed to. Yes, we have some tough times ahead of us, but we are opening up new markets. We are learning new skills. We have a skill called "selling". We are moving gas into the California market which has not been touched. We are moving gas into the mid-western market, the Chicago, Milwaukee area, which we have never serviced before. We are breaking in new areas and competing.

The lower price of oil is benefiting the people of central Canada. We are gradually getting the volume up so that we are partly offsetting the loss in price by volume. We know where to find gas. There is lots of it out there. But we have been hampered. We have had our arms tied behind us and a gun put to our head. Finally, in 1985, we took the shackles off the oil industry and gave it free rein. It is learning about freedom. The drilling statistics and projections by the well-known oil analyst, John Lloyd-Price, is just another indication that we are doing what has to be done and doing it properly and well.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a comment. I know many Members from Alberta would like to join in this debate and tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Canada just what these so-called "Silent 21" are doing for the Province of Alberta.

I thought, as a Member from Ontario, that it might be worth-while for me to explain some of the things that Members from Alberta do. Last Thursday I was one of a group of Ontario and Quebec Members of Parliament who were taken to Alberta and given tours of the oil industry. We met with people out there in Bonnyville and Fort McMurray. We were taken out to Alberta by these Members of Parliament who are doing what is right. We learned an awful lot about the oil industry. I took a silly little test before I went out west. I only got 10 questions out of 20 right. Today, however, I could get 20 questions out of 20 right. I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that Members of Parliament from Alberta are working on behalf of their constituents.

When I met with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade in Bonnyville, they told me they were pleased. In the Town of Fort McMurray, 35,000 people of the average age of 24, young men and women, are putting their trust in Members of Parliament, who are doing a fine job for them and they know it.

I can also say that through New Canadian technology, the price of manufacturing a barrel of Syncrude is down to, I believe, $10.60, and we are told they can take it down lower. They have done this through the initiative of the private sector because the Alberta Members of Parliament have made it possible for them to do these things. I think we should all stand and congratulate the 21 Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, after the next election and redistribution, there will not be 21 Conservative Members of Parliament from Alberta, there will be 26 Conservative Members of Parliament.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing like that Horner optimism.

What I would like to speak about is western diversification, but I want to make a couple of comments before that. My friend from Mississauga mentioned "the silent 21". He refers, of course, to Conservative Members of Parliament from Alberta. Perhaps that should be amended. You are in the chair, Mr. Speaker, so it makes it difficult for you to speak out. The courageous Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) has already spoken. So I believe we are down to a Silent 19. We have heard Conservative after Conservative say that the big problem in Alberta was the NEP. They are living in the past as always, looking backwards. I wonder how long they are going to keep on doing that. I remind this House that I too voted against the NEP. If the records were checked, one would find that our Party voted against the NEP. I thought there was too much of a federal tax take in the NEP and I voted against it. The Premier of my province, Allan Blakeney, spoke out strongly against the NEP in terms of the federal tax take. I think the record should be clear on that.

In terms of whether or not there was enough public ownership, that is where I disagree with my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon). He thought there was too much public intervention. I did not think there was enough public intervention. That is because he is a capitalist and I am a socialist. We have this difference. I thought there should be more public intervention in the oil industry.

Petro-Canada should have been started sooner. It should have been a lot larger than it is today. That is a tradition we have in Saskatchewan. Under Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd and Allan Blakeney, Saskatchewan was one of the most prosperous provinces in the country. It never ran a deficit. We have a lot of public ownership in uranium, oil and potash. I am proud to say that Saskatchewan has the biggest potash company in the world under public ownership. I am proud to see the head office in Saskatoon. I am also proud that the people of Saskatchewan support greater public ownership, greater co-operative ownership of the resource industries. Those resources are here for us, the people of Canada, not the multinationals.

I want to see a bigger and stronger Petro-Canada, and I will fight very hard for that. I know the people of this country are behind me when I say that. I speak with perhaps the value of experience. I remember when the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister for a short period of time. He wanted to get rid of Petro-Canada, to abolish it, and the people of Canada rebelled.

I respect my friend from Calgary. He has the right to say he does not like Petro-Canada or public ownership and that kind of thing. I am just saying that it is not just a small number of people who want a strong Petro-Canada; it is the majority of the people in this country. That feeling was so strong that that Conservative Prime Minister was driven from office after nine months. After the election, public opinion was so strong that the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, who is a good friend of mine, and the Conservative Party changed their policy about Petro-Canada and decided they would keep Petro-Canada as a Crown corporation. That just shows how strong that feeling was in this country.

When we start talking about public ownership, I make it very clear that I will fight very hard—and I know the majority of the people in this country are behind me—to make sure there is a strong Petro-Canada. I thought from the beginning that instead of just relying on small oil companies we should have taken over Imperial Oil and started off making Petro-Canada the biggest oil company in this country. I am sure that will be my objective and that of my Party, and I know my constituents are behind me on that.

Mr. Scowen: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) does not like that. I suppose he is quivering, I am not sure. Even his Conservative Premier of Saskatchewan has not dismantled the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan. His Conservative Premier has not dismantled Saskoil, a Crown Corporation. His Premier has not privatized the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gagnon: He is selling shares of Saskoil.

Mr. Nystrom: He is selling some shares of Saskoil, but the Government retains control with the majority of the shares. But it has not privatized at all the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, and a number of other Crown corporations, because they are popular. The people of Saskatchewan know that this is a way of keeping Saskatchewan money in Saskatchewan for our future. It is only with a Conservative Government that that kind of thing has started to go astray.

We now have in our province the biggest deficit we have ever had in the history of our province. The Hon. Member for Mackenzie himself is even embarrassed at times to be a Conservative because of that massive deficit. That is also happening in Alberta. That is why Albertans are massively turning away from the Conservative Party and looking at the NDP, because they know who is speaking for Alberta. They know the Conservative Members speak for big oil in Alberta, but they want to know who is speaking for the average Albertan.

In a Pembina by-election they said by the thousands that the New Democratic Party is speaking for ordinary Albertans and they said in the Alberta election last year that the NDP is speaking for ordinary Albertans. The Progressive Conservative Members from Alberta, Mr. Speaker, know that to be the case, and that is why they are starting to panic, as evidenced by their recent strategy meetings in respect of the NDP threat, this great socialist threat. They are actually holding meetings on it. They are starting to panic. They know that their voters are being turned off.

One of their Members had the courage to speak out, the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. I have here an article from The Globe and Mail of April 25 last headed: "Disgruntled Tory Kilgour buoyed by voters' support". Let me read just a little from that article. I know that Albertans agree with the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. It reads:

> Disaffected Progressive Conservative David Kilgour said yesterday that a one-day visit to his south Edmonton riding had convinced him that he had done the right thing when he spoke out three weeks ago about Western alienation and corruption in the federal Government.

Let me remind Hon. Members that this is David Kilgour speaking, not Lorne Nystrom. I did not refer to corruption; I am merely repeating what he is reported to have said. I quote further:

> "When you have a clear conscience and the support of your constituency, well, you can't ask for more than that," the Edmonton—Strathcona MP said before returning to Ottawa last night. "I feel completely vindicated."
> More than 1,000 calls and hundreds of letters of support had been received and they were still coming in. Meetings with constituents in his riding office and in restaurants in Edmonton had also been overwhelmingly supportive, he said.
> "I've only been saying what Canadians are saying across the country," said Mr. Kilgour, who was first elected to Parliament in 1979. "We want a clean, open government and help for Alberta from our brothers."

That is a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament saying publicly, Mr. Speaker, what I know many Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament feel privately. That is why I say: Why doesn't this silent block of Conservative MPs speak out? Who speaks for Alberta, other than the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, and of course you, Sir, who sits in the chair?

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we in the New Democratic Party felt obliged to introduce a motion highlighting the fact that the economy that is in the most trouble in this country is that of the Province of Alberta, according to the Conference Board of Canada.

Albertans are alienated from this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They are really wondering whether or not they can trust this Prime Minister. They see a Prime Minister who, as the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona has said, is knee deep in patronage, who is involved in cronyism in terms of whom he appoints to government jobs and positions.

It is for that reason that Albertans are turning to us to put their arguments forward on the floor of the House of Commons.

One thing Albertans want is a western diversification plan. I note that my good friend, the Member for Calgary North is quoted in a very credible newspaper, the Calgary Herald, back on April 16 as saying that he "would have liked to see the strategy unveiled 'yesterday'"; and the article goes on:

> —and Calgary South MP Bobbie Sparrow said "the sooner the better."

Some of the Albertan MPs, too, are obviously unhappy that there have been delays in the announcement of the western diversification plan.

I have had the opportunity recently to talk to some people who have some knowledge about this particular plan, and I wish to put a few things on the record today.

The plan has been delayed. First of all, we had the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and his office saying, time and time again, that the plan was "coming soon" or "in a few weeks". Speculation was that it would be announced in March, and then again in April, and then again in June.

The evidence we have is that this plan will not be announced for a number of weeks yet.

I have here a copy of a draft letter, a letter drafted for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté). This is a draft letter that was supposed to have gone out to 30 business leaders in western Canada. As of noon yesterday, it had not yet gone out, according to my very reliable sources who have given me a copy of this particular letter.

In this letter, the Minister points out that "executives from leading firms across western Canada will be contacted shortly by officials of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to arrange a mutually acceptable time for an intensive consultation on opportunities for diversifying the economy of western Canada".

I am very happy that they are doing that, Mr. Speaker, but again the whole process has been delayed many, many weeks.

The letter goes on to say: "As Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I am now launching a major consultation effort with the private sector to move toward this objective. These consultations will provide an opportunity for Canadian industry, in partnership with Government, to identify major opportunities and constraints to diversification in the manufacturing and service sectors in western Canada, and the measures industry and Government might initiate to take action on these opportunities and constraints".

As he states in his letter, Mr. Speaker, he is talking about diversifying, not only agriculture or mining and resources, but the manufacturing and service sectors.

After two or three pages, he concludes: "It is my hope that you will fully support this initiative by becoming a participant in exploring the opportunities that exist within western Canadian industry and in helping us to develop appropriate policies, programs and other initiatives that will assist in achieving the diversification objectives for western Canada."

This is a letter, Mr. Speaker, that, as of yesterday, had not yet gone out. So the whole process of consultation with the business community has not even started.

According to another leaked document, that process was supposed to have been completed by June 12. It was to start on April 22 and be completed on June 12. As things stand, the process has not even started.

Many times we have asked the Government, Mr. Speaker, what it is looking at in terms of diversification, and the lack of an answer in that regard I know is one of the frustrations of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. I wish to announce in the House today the sectors that the federal Government is looking at. The Deputy Prime Minister will not provide us with this information.

The Government is looking at 24 different sectors, and I will list those sectors from this leaked document. The document is headed "Western Diversification Task Force Sector Teams".

Under high technology, the co-ordinator for which is an individual from Winnipeg, the sectors are: electronics, software, ocean industries, aerospace/defence, biotechnology, health care, advanced materials, and knowledge industries. Those are the sectors on the high technology side.

In manufacturing, the sectors that are being looked at are: wood products, petro-chemicals/plastics, food processing, which includes the sub-sectors of meat, fish, fruit and vegetables, and other; and also chemical and chemical products/fertilizers.

Other sectors include transportation equipment, clothing, machinery/metal fabricating, which includes agriculture equipment, oil and gas equipment, resource and other; and furniture.

Under services, we have tourism, cultural industries, and consulting engineers.

Those are the 24 sectors that the various sector teams are looking at in terms of the western diversification initiative that this Government hopes to launch at some point.

I want to give the House some idea of how these studies are being conducted. I will use the electronics sector in my example, but the same holds true for all 24 sectors.

For the electronics sector, they have a person in the regional office who has responsibility for the sector. In other words, he is the leader in respect of that particular sector. For the electronics sector, it is the British Columbia office of DRIE, and the man in charge is a Mr. J. Wiebe. Below that person they have regional participants, and in the case of the electronics sector, they are Mr. Girard of Edmonton, Mr. Jeanneau of Saskatchewan, and Mr. C. Wiecek of Winnipeg.

In addition, there is an industry participant, who in this case is Mr. A. Letendre; and finally there are sector consultants. In this case, the consultant is Touche Ross, represented by two individuals, Mr. Bruce Stuart and Mr. N. Webster.

I have outlined the 24 sector groups being looked at under the western diversification initiative, and if any Hon. Member has any questions in respect of who else is involved, I would be pleased, on behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister, to provide the names.

I also have with me, Mr. Speaker, a copy of the questionnaire that is being used by the sector teams in carrying out their advance work for the western diversification initiative. The questionnaire is headed: "A Western Diversification Company Report". On here, of course, we have such things as the company name, the head office, and an index. The index includes such things as background information, market opportunities, technology opportunities, productivity opportunities, new products opportunities, capital investment and other responsibilities, sector issues and constraints.

It goes on for some 15 or 20 pages. It is a fairly elaborate questionnaire, aimed at gathering information on the 24 sectors that I listed, and constitutes the advance work for interviews with some 30 business people.

I wish I had a couple of hours in which to make my speech. However, I should like to refer to a 29-page report which was written on March 31, 1987. It is entitled the Western Diversification Company Report. It contains instructions for completing a company report form. It contains some very interesting things. On behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister I should like to announce that it is worth-while reading. I am sure some members of the Conservative Party would like to go through it.

It talks about Government as an institution. It talks about impact. It talks about jobs which could be created, jobs which could be maintained, and jobs which could be reduced or lost because of certain initiatives in western Canada. It also talks about time frame, the current stage of development, appropriate action, new product opportunities, types of action, other opportunities, rationale, impact, constraints on investment, and so on.

I see that I have only three minutes remaining. There are many things which I could mention, but I should like to refer to a copy of a document which I have in hand. It is called the Interview Guide Instructions. It contains the instructions for interviewers when they do their advance work on the western diversification initiative. Once again, on behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister let me say that this guide is being studied by public servants in their approach to the economy of western Canada.

The interview guide contains a number of things. It talks about the depth of the information. We all feel that the study should be a thorough one. The document indicates that unless the Government has a clear and specific understanding of the opportunities and obstacles facing an organization, it will not be in a position to respond with either immediate action or longer term policy initiatives.

As we can see from the document, the consultations are just in the preliminary stages. They have not had time to get into them. It is a real concern to those of us in the west. I am not an Albertan, but I am sure it is a concern to Albertans as well. The western diversification initiative has been delayed and stalled. We are now asking why it has been stalled or delayed. Certainly the guide instructions are available.

I also have another document which made itself available to me in some mysterious way. It is called the Western Diversification Initiative. On behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada and if I have time, I would like to announce the purpose of this initiative. Also on his behalf I would like to give the background to this western diversification initiative.

If I had the time, I would tell the House what is the issue. I would also indicate the federal government participation. That is an interesting one because neither the Prime Minister nor the Deputy Prime Minister has announced it. I would also tell the House about the DRIE participation. Of course its participation is very key.

I also have the DRIE operational plan. It is interesting to look at it. If someone would ask me a question about it, perhaps I could read into the record some of the things which are being said in this regard. In addition I also have the objectives.

Does anyone in the House know what are the objectives of the western diversification initiative? I ask my towering friend from Red Deer that question. Does he know what are the objectives?

There is also the question of output. It is interesting because the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) said that diversification would be built upon agriculture, mining, resources, and so on. However, this document does not really mention that at all. In part it reads:

> In the Western Diversification Initiative DRIE will lead intensive, targeted discussions over a very tight time period with selected firms in the manufacturing and service sectors in western Canada—

Is my time up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Two weeks after the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced his Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, he announced that there would be a $3 million study into energy in Canada to be undertaken by Mr. Thomas Kierans of Toronto. He is a partner in a brokerage firm on Bay Street. By the way, he is the same man who is conducting the study into privatization which involves questions about the privatization of Petro-Canada. In my opinion it is a conflict of interest.

Although the privatization study was supposed to be reported back to the Government by April 1, we do not know whether in fact that occurred or whether the two studies overlap. Even if they did not overlap, there is still a conflict of interest.

Two weeks after the Minister will supposedly give $350 million to the energy sector over a period of time, he is now questioning the role of oil and gas in the whole Canadian sector. This does not even take into account another study, which was announced at the conference of energy Ministers in January, to determine which megaprojects will go ahead. That study is supposed to report back on July 1.

The Minister has initiated a second study which involves the first study. However, he did not wait for the first study to report so that the second study could have the benefit of the first study. Be that as it may, we also have the make-up of the Kierans Commission. It is holding hearings in Calgary on June 15 and June 16. Then it will hold hearings in other areas, ending with hearings in Montreal in December. Of course we have a Bay Street firm which is hoping to learn from the oil and gas industry during the June hearings, but those are the last planned hearings on the oil and gas industry.

How will the committee properly assess the problems in the oil and gas sector in its report when it is to report in January after having had its last hearings on that industry in June? Does the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville think that this will be a fair appraisal of the oil and gas sector? Does he think that it would be better at the end of its hearings for the committee to return to western Canada to hold additional hearings in Calgary, Regina, or Edmonton, to bring its information up to date, more or less?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think they should return to western Canada because I do not think it would be very fair for them not to do that. Unfortunately, I cannot make any announcement on behalf of the Government because I do not have that document with me.

Mr. MacLellan: It is the only one you have not got.

Mr. Nystrom: I will try to obtain it and answer the question in the appropriate way. I could be very forthcoming if I had the document to work from.

The Hon. Member asked about the oil industry. Perhaps I should tell the House what is the purpose of the document entitled Western Diversification Initiative. It is as follows:

> Progress towards diversification of the western Canadian economy, to position it to capture new opportunities in the face of severely deteriorating markets for most resource products, is a priority objective of the federal Government.

Of course in some way this may refer to the oil industry and the question the Hon. Member asked.

I do not see anything specific in the backgrounder in terms of oil, except for the fact that the following is mentioned:

> The sharp decrease in world oil prices has resulted in a $5 billion loss in revenues to oil companies and a dramatic reduction in exploration and drilling activity resulting in steadily growing unemployment in the sector and related industries. The mining and minerals processing sector is suffering from over-supplied international markets, declining prices and high transportation costs. In the forestry sector further modernization is necessary—

There is a bit of a reference to oil and gas. Turning to DRIE participation, there might be some way in which DRIE will be involved, but I do not think so. All it says about DRIE participation is the following:

> The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is launching an intensive effort, in collaboration with the private sector, to identify the major opportunities and constraints to diversification of the manufacturing and service sectors in western Canada and the measures industry and government might initiate to take action on these opportunities and constraints.

Again there is no reference to oil and gas. Again I say that the western diversification initiative of the Government is not something which will involve the oil industry. We have had this tremendous build-up. People are expecting from a mountain to get a small molehill. This article goes on to state:

> Diversification Strategies will be developed in each of four areas by DRIE—

• (1750)

DRIE is the key Department. It goes on to state:

> —high technology industries, resource processing, traditional manufacturing, and service industries. These Diversification Strategies will include—> an evaluation of the diversification potential of the sector in western Canada, with explicit descriptions of any major impediment;
> a review of possible options for promoting diversification, including a discussion of possible forward and backward linkages, and the public policy impacts associated with each option including estimated costs where possible; and > a recommended approach for diversification of the sector, including short, medium and long term measures that could be undertaken.

Under the DRIE operational plan, there is nothing about oil and gas. Again there is talk about manufacturing, the service industry, high-tech and resource processing, but nothing specifically about the oil and gas industry. The objectives are also stated here. I just do not have time to go over everything.

We in western Canada—and I know that of the people of Saskatchewan and, I am sure, of ordinary average Albertans—want some action very soon on western diversification. We want to know why there is such a major delay. I am told by reliable sources, whom I cannot name, that the delay is not because of the Public Service. The Public Service is ready to go. The delay is because of the slowness and the insensitivity of the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada to make a decision on behalf of western Canada.

Mr. Mayer: What a windbag.

Mr. Nystrom: That is what I am told. I have lots of documents outlining the western diversification initiative. My sources are very reliable. It is about time western Canada knew why we are being shortchanged and why there is this insensitivity to the problems of the West. It is amazing when there are so many western Ministers and so many western Members of Parliament. That is why that Party is in third place and that is why that Party will suffer a humiliating loss at the polls in the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick).

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to spend the last eight minutes of this debate enlarging on some of the aspects about which the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) spoke. It took him 15 minutes to read some of the things that we are attempting to do. It must be a source of great distress to him to know that we devoted months and months of work on our attempt. It took him a great deal of time to read things out, and yet he did not read everything. He does not know what it is all about, but he is praising us. I do not know why he speaks with such a forked tongue. While he is talking, we are doing things. The magnitude of the Western Economic Diversification Program—

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mayer: Sit down and let him speak.

Mr. Nystrom: I really hesitate to rise, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member accused me of speaking with a forked tongue. I do not know whether that is allowable but I have a lot of Indian people in my riding. I know that expression for Indian people is very much an insult. I would ask your guidance on whether or not those words should be withdrawn. I also know the meaning of the expression and the meaning is not allowed in the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In order to allow the Hon. Member for Edmonton East to continue his debate, I would hope that he will withdraw his statement and carry on with the debate.

Mr. Lesick: I withdraw the statement, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans are very fortunate to have Conservative Members of Parliament representing them. We have three Ministers in the Government, namely, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), one of the most effective and powerful men in Parliament, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who is highly respected and who has worked most effectively on behalf of the Government of Canada, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). When have we had three Ministers so effective? We also have four Parliamentary Secretaries representing us and four chairmen of standing committees. We also have you, Mr. Speaker. You are respected by men and women throughout the land and in this House as well. When has Alberta ever been represented by men and women of such potency?

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Lesick: That is right. We have never had anyone who has been able to do so much for Alberta. We all heard the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) explaining what we have done for Alberta, for western Canada and, indeed, for all of Canada. We have had the greatest programs any Government has ever put into place in the short period of two years and seven and a half months. The Opposition is virtually green with envy because it could never have done anything to the extent that we have.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) kept asking why we are talking about the National Energy Program. Why is that so important? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. I am a veteran of the Second World War. Many of us were badly injured, many are still in hospital as a result. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) was in Edmonton last Thursday and Friday morning and saw the devastating results the NEP wrought six and a half years ago by the actions of the socialists and the Liberal Government. Buildings are still boarded up. People are still out of work. Twenty-five per cent of the businesses in the Peace River country went bankrupt. What does bankruptcy mean? It meant family break-up, alcoholism and life savings gone. The Opposition says we should not talk about those things because we are living in the past. We are suffering today because of the Liberals and their socialist friends who combined to work this devastation upon Alberta and on the energy industry.

Our Government has done many things. Let me talk about Edmonton and Edmonton East. We received $150 million for Canada Place. We were going to cancel that, but we went ahead. We spent six months studying Canada Place. Seven and a half million dollars was paid for flood relief in the middle of March. We had $130 million for government travel services to a consortium including Edmonton's own Marlin Travel. This is fairness. Four years ago CIDA purchases in Alberta amounted to only 1 per cent. Today they amount to 8 per cent. That is fairness. Alberta MPs are looking after the needs of Albertans. There was $197,000 for the Charles Campsell Hospital for a study on northern infant nutrition and $187,000 was given to the provincial museum for public programming. We are rebuilding the CN MacDonald Hotel and there is $600,000 for Edmonton's Winter City's Project.

The CF-18 contract has been absolutely marvellous for Edmonton. It means another 135 jobs in the next two years instead of releasing half of the workforce. The company is ecstatic. I talked to its president, I did not have to read the paper or reports. I knew this contract would be good. It was good for western Canada, particularly for Edmonton. We have looked after Edmonton, Alberta and western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 12 of Standing Order 82, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—MARKETING OF INCUBATED EGGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise an issue to which I referred last December 2 when I asked a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning the marketing of broiler incubated eggs by a new national federal agency.

Members of the broiler hatching egg association have been asking for the establishment of such an agency since 1981.

Until December 1, 1986, all poultry farming sectors had their own marketing board, except the hatching egg sector.

On that day, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. John Wise, announced the establishment of a national marketing board for broiler hatching eggs. The mandate of this new agency is to organize the marketing of broiler eggs.

This is a most positive measure which shows the political will of the Conservative Government to set up and maintain a production quota system. In fact producers are now in a position to benefit from the same national supply management opportunities as those available to other sectors of the poultry industry.

This federal agency allocates quotas to the provinces, thus making it possible to remove market surpluses and regulate imports and exports. This will prevent new import records caused by inflated demand or surplus inventories among distributing agents or producers. The ultimate result should be increased efficiency and productivity, which in turn will contribute to even out the ups and downs of production operations and enable all firms concerned to make savings in the long run, even though the new system will discipline them at the outset.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the establishment of such an agency, because after many years of active representations from the Broiler Hatching Egg Producer Association of Canada, again it is this Government that, within a short time, succeeded in establishing that new agency.

I am all the more pleased since my constituency of Drummond has hatching egg producers, and a famous hatchery in Wickham, namely Boire Brothers which, as the name implies, is a family business producing 500,000 chicks a week, of which 430,000 broiler chicks and 70,000 layer chicks.

The total Quebec weekly production is two million chicks, which means that Boire Brothers' production in my constituency accounts for 25 per cent of the total Quebec production.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important industry in my constituency, generating as it does 95 direct jobs and some 15 indirect jobs, in addition to injecting into the regional economy a few million dollars' worth of investment. You will appreciate what such an industry in the farming sector can represent for a small village, a constituency or a whole province.

During my election campaign, in the summer of 1984, I was made very much aware of the problem by farmers, and I was committed to support their cause and that of the 100-odd quota holders in Quebec, who produce some 115 million hatching eggs, worth over $25 million a year.

What is of concern to me, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to put the question to the Minister of Agriculture or the Parliamentary Secretary who is present in this House: Will a free trade deal with the United States put that national marketing plan in jeopardy? I am expressing the concerns of producers.

Indeed, egg imports reached the 19-million level in 1985, and if the situation is maintained or grows worse after a free trade agreement, Ontario and Quebec would stand to suffer the most.

I should remind the House that Canada's total weekly production amounts to 6,181,000 chicks, including 1,980,000 in Quebec, which I suggest is very high.

Surely the Canadian agricultural community cannot afford to lose a sector which brings in more than $100 million a year and provides in excess of 2,000 jobs.

Let us not forget that hatching egg production is the first stage of all poultry farming operations. If imports are not controlled right from the first link of the chain, the entire agricultural sector will feel the impact.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary explain how our Government will protect the situation of the Canadian agricultural community? Or could our Government take long-term measures likely to enhance the quality of our farm products and pave the way for our agriculture to compete with American producers?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before answering this question, I would like to say that the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) is to be commended for his knowledge of this question and for the very real interest he has shown for local issues with a national and provincial dimension.

On November 27 last year, the Minister signed the proclamation creating the Canadian Broiler Hatching Egg Marketing Agency, and on December 1, 1986, the Minister announced the creation of this agency.

Mr. Speaker, I know that recently, Alberta signed an addendum to the federal-provincial agreement. Alberta's producers represent 13 per cent of production. The provinces of Quebec, Manitoba and Ontario, whose producers represent 66 per cent of production, have already signed the agreement.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the Government has fulfilled another policy commitment of the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election, namely that we would support Canadian farmers in the development of their own marketing plans.

This Government acted quickly to meet producer desires. The creation of this agency took a little over three years. In contrast, the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, the last one created, took four years to establish, from the start of public hearings to its proclamation late in 1978.

The program will not, however, establish prices. Pricing will remain as it is now, at the provincial level. Similarly, each province, not the National Agency, will assign quota to each individual producer.

This provides for a flexible system by encouraging the hatching egg board in each province to meet the marketing conditions as necessary.

The program does not include import controls. Currently, hatching eggs and chicks can enter Canada in any amount provided that the import tariff is paid. The current tariffs are 2.5 cents per dozen hatching eggs or 2 cents per chick. The chick tariffs represent about 6 per cent of the farm value of the chicks. At the end of 1986, imports of hatching eggs were 14.9 per cent of total production compared to 29.9 per cent in 1979, a drop of 15 per cent.

While I do not have an analysis of the impact of free trade negotiation on broiler hatching egg production, its effect would be, at most, the removal of the tariffs. Canadian farmers have been generally increasing their share of the domestic market because of the high quality of their products and their proximity to markets.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—FUTURE OF RAILWAY LINES IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC. REPORTED ABANDONMENT OF EFFORT TO ATTRACT NEW TRAFFIC

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, on December 16 in this House I raised an issue with regard to Canadian National Railways which is of great regional importance to the Ottawa Valley and, indeed, all of eastern Ontario and part of western Quebec. It dealt with the issue of a document by CN Rail, dated September 25, 1986, which was brought to the attention of the Standing Committee on Transport last fall. It listed a number of lines that would be closed.

To our great dismay, it mentioned the Beachburg subdivision, which is the 163.9 mile section of the main line of the CN track from Ottawa to the hamlet of Brent, in the middle of Algonquin Park. It also mentioned the Alexandria subdivision, which is a distance of 57.7 miles from Glen Robertson, just inside the Ontario-Quebec border west of Montreal, to the City of Ottawa.

There is one very serious problem with this. It is that over the past number of years, Canadian Pacific Railway, whose line also goes up the Ottawa Valley, has been using the CN track between Ottawa and Montreal. If CN abandons its rail line between Ottawa and Glen Robertson, the Alexandria subdivision, of course CP will have no line on which to run. Not only would we in the eastern and southern part of Ontario lose the main line of CN, we would also lose the main line of Canadian Pacific. It will mean that the whole region from the Ontario-Quebec border near Montreal, right through to North Bay, will have no rail traffic at all. That is unacceptable.

On December 16, I asked a question about this of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). After laying the groundwork, I said, as reported at page 2162 of Hansard:

> Is the Minister prepared to guarantee to Canadians that he will not abandon the regions of this country in favour of the large urban areas and the coffers of the CNR?

The Minister of Transport stood up and said:

> Mr. Speaker, that is a guarantee that any Member of this House would be pleased to give. I certainly give it. My guarantee is that whether it is CN, CP, BCR or any other railway, they will not be allowed to abandon any rail lines, branch lines, main lines, any line or anything with iron upon which a train runs, without going through the proper procedures, without applying to the Canadian Transport Commission and without going through every last letter of the law.

That answer does not mean a thing. It may sound like a great answer, in that flashy fashion of the Minister in the House, but of course we know that those companies must go through the Canadian Transport Commission. It was simply a non-answer.

What is really disturbing is that at a meeting on January 14, 1987, a month after I asked the question in the House, CN put out yet another document. The document stated that "for the purposes of the preparation of the tactical plan", meaning the closing of the lines, "the following are the most likely possible outcomes of some rationalization alternatives currently under study by the rationalization task force of CN as of January 14, 1987". The document went on to state: "These alternatives are in addition to strategy invoked, with shedding traffic on 2,500 miles of the light density network". About 275 miles of that is in eastern Ontario.

It then went on to mention the Alderdale and Beachburg subdivisions. The Alderdale subdivision is that part of the main line of CN from Brent in Algonquin Park through to Capreol near Sudbury.

I will refer to what it says about the Beachburg line from Ottawa through to Capreol, including Alderdale. It states that the Steering Committee meeting discussed on January 14 assume no maintenance requirement from Portage du Fort, which is in the County of Pontiac in Quebec, effective January, 1988. It goes on to state that a section of the main line around North Bay will become industrial trackage, approximately 15 miles, and Ottawa-Portage du Fort will probably only have weigh freight services required on the same date.

This means that they will even withdraw the maintenance of the rail line, which will lead to more rail accidents.

• (1815)

Apropos to this, if this main line closes, it will mean that there will be something in the neighbourhood of 4,500 cars from one plant alone, the papermill at Portage du Fort, which will be thrown onto the highways of eastern Ontario and western Quebec. It is estimated that 14,000 transports will be required to haul what is now being hauled out of there by CN. That is only one. We have three more plants in Pembroke and a couple in Arnprior and the Renfrew subdivision which require service.

This is a very serious regional issue and we want more than the non-answers of the Minister of Transport. The railways of this country were built to serve the regions. Are we going to continue to say they are only going to exist if they run between the major centres? It is 192 miles farther from Montreal to Capreol, near Sudbury, via Toronto, where the main line with all this traffic will then go, and only 410 miles, 192 miles less from Montreal to Capreol. Hundreds and hundreds of carloads of chemicals and hazardous products are now being shipped over CN Rail. The CN plans to close down this rail line in 1988 and these products will then be going through the urban areas between Montreal right through the middle of Toronto, and from Toronto to North Bay.

Our fight is not just our fight alone. Our fight is also the fight of those urban communities throughout southern Ontario. The Mayor of Toronto should be in on this. The Ontario Government and the Quebec Government should be included. They are the ones who will have to provide the moneys for the rebuilding of the highways and all the expenses in order to take on these 14,000 transports, plus, from all the other areas in eastern Ontario and western Quebec. This issue is far from dead and cannot be accepted.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, as do all Hon. Members in the House, shares the concerns of the Hon. Member, particularly those of us who come from the regions. We all know the railways were built originally to serve this country, but it is true as well that the nature of the country has changed. We do have more extensive highway networks. As all Hon. Members know, CN finds itself in a very difficult financial situation. It is an established fact that CN has substantial surplus rail capacity. Two thirds of its trackage carries no more than 10 per cent of its traffic. Clearly, that cannot carry on. Clearly we have to find ways to ensure that the size of its plant is appropriate to the size of its business. CN has repeatedly stated that it does not want to lose business, and I think that is axiomatic. It has an investment there and surely it will make all sorts of efforts to try to preserve it and get a return on its capital rather than to abandon it. CN is continuing to examine ways to improve service to its communities. It is examining the kind of line network it will need and will be able to support in the market-place a decade from now.

The Minister was at the standing committee this afternoon for the estimates. My friend, in his seven minute presentation, did a fine job in setting out some of the broader socio-economic context. I wish he had been there this afternoon to put that on the record because it was a good presentation. It may well be that the urban people should be involved in this and be prepared to indicate that they are prepared to face extra taxes. That is really what my friend is asking. He is asking the broad Canadian community to pay substantial increased taxes to keep a line going through a part of the country that is clearly not economical in itself. We on the Prairies are facing that same argument with respect to branch line abandonment on grain, which is very expensive.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the railway will have to apply to the CTC for permission to abandon each line. I think in a policy context, we have to face the reality that there may be lines which just have to go.

• (1820)

Surely our goal and objective is to provide a procedure, and we have done that under the proposed National Transportation Act. It will be substantially better than the old Railway Act.

All three Parties have had input into the proposed National Transportation Act. There were a substantial number of amendments made during committee consideration, and it will come before the House very shortly at report stage. If my friend opposite looks at that legislation, he will see that there is a very sophisticated appeal process, a process that will, hopefully, protect the public interest. That is certainly the intent of the Bill.

Socio-economic matters, such as reducing traffic on our highways and restricting the transport of dangerous chemicals through urban areas, can be raised in the appeals process, and hopefully result in wise decisions in the context of the current economic climate, as well as changing demographic and economic infrastructures and the structure of the nation generally.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—ENDING OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES. REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH LAND BANK RENTAL SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a result of some questions I asked of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on April 27 last concerning the Government's intention with regard to financing farm credit and providing a stable environment for farmers on the land at this point in time.

What had sparked the questions that particular day was the lifting of the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures. I was wondering what future policy the Government was going to be putting forward to provide for a viable agriculture sector and to provide some security of tenure for those either new to farming or continuing in farming.

The Minister at the time pointed out that the lifting of the moratorium was not something to be too concerned about as only 40 or 50 farmers would be losing their land as a result of Farm Credit Corporation foreclosure proceedings. While he did not say so, I believe he meant 40 or 50 farmers per month.

We know now, after analysing the situation and listening to Farm Credit Corporation personnel, that this coming year the Farm Credit Corporation will come into ownership of between 700 and 1,000 farm properties, about half of which they will receive by way of quit claim, where the farmer simply walks away and turns it all over to the Farm Credit Corporation, with the other 50 per cent coming as a result of actions taken and initiated by the FCC. Most will have gone through a debt review board process.

The fact is, the Farm Credit Corporation will be holding an additional 700 to 1,000 farm properties. We heard in testimony from FCC personnel today, for instance, that it has proven virtually impossible for the FCC to lease the properties it holds to existing farmers, and that is particularly true in western Canada. It is unable to get renters even at zero dollars per acre, because the land has been continuous cropped and has been left in bad shape.

The FCC has chosen to in effect act as the farmer, hiring custom operators to get the land in shape. It of course has to pay the taxes involved. As a consequence, it is soon to become one of the nation's largest farming operations. At some point, it will have to reassess its position, in terms of whether it will try to lease the land out next year or to find a buyer, at almost any price. As of this year, it is still hopeful of recovering most of the debt against those properties. In most instances, that is an impossibility. Had the land been worth as much as the debt against it, nine times out of 10 the farmer could have continued the operation. He could not, and I suspect that the FCC is going to have great difficulty in reducing its losses on these properties.

They reported last year that they lost about $90 million in the writedown of debt as a result of these transactions and as a result of foreseeing the debt write-down which will be coming due this year. They want to provide a bit of a cushion for that.

My question concerning whether the Government was looking at a land-banking type of scheme or an equity financing scheme was based upon what I perceive to be a very real need in the country right now for some alternative to land ownership, so that farmers who are in financial trouble can continue to farm and that new farmers will have an option which will provide them not only with land but land which is affordable and provides some security of tenure.

I know that the Farm Credit Corporation has been distributing numerous equity financing schemes to the provinces, to the farm community, and to some lending institutions. I also know that discussions have been ongoing.

I have been told that it largely gravitates around whether the provinces are interested. The FCC has indicated that it believes the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta are showing some interest in such a scheme and would be interested in having other investors, including a federal agency like FCC, involved to provide the necessary backing to such a fund, particularly in these times when no one knows how far is down in the farm land market.

The Minister pretended that the Government was not even considering any such proposal. Given the activities of his own Crown agency, the FCC, and given the advice of some members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, including the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig), I think the Minister should have been a little more forthcoming to the House. He should address the issue realistically. A very large problem is looming before us. If he does not have a policy on equity financing or land-banking, he should present one to the House very soon.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the value of farm land has decreased. It is also true that this is more pronounced in western Canada than in eastern Canada because of the problems created by stiff competition in the international grain market.

The Canadian farming community has been supported by the Government as shown by a number of measures over the last two years. The nature of the collapse has been so dramatic that existing social safety nets which were in place for agriculture—and there is a substantial number of them—simply were not able to cope. The Government has had to step in. It has increased the nets by over 350 per cent, by literally billions of dollars.

However, that does not mean that Canadian society, which is really the taxpayer, must seek at all cost to keep all farmers on their farms under all circumstances. Agriculture is undergoing a major adjustment, as are many other sectors of the economy.

The reason is simply the 1972 to 1974 Liberal-NDP alliance which increased spending in Canada by virtually billions and billions of dollars. It drove up interest rates. It caused inflation. Farmers who paid 24 per cent interest rates are in deep trouble, as are other sectors.

Mr. Althouse: That doesn't wash.

Mr. Thacker: That inflation was caused by the Government of the day, by the Liberals who were held in power by the New Democratic Party. It was not my friend's fault. He was not in Parliament at that time.

Under the circumstances, it seems to me that it is the role of Government to ensure that those who have the required qualifications and wish to remain in agriculture have access to fair and equitable programs to improve their situation. The lifting of the FCC moratorium supports this thrust, because the Farm Debt Review Board is a mechanism to let a farmer in trouble appear before a group of his peers and have his say. His peers can say whether or not there is a chance for him. It is a good process, and I think it is a fair one.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

SALUTE TO RICK HANSEN—CONCLUSION OF MAN IN MOTION TOUR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in Vancouver this afternoon Rick Hansen completes his heart-lifting Man in Motion journey around the world.

For the past two years Rick has demonstrated courage, humour, decency, strength of body, strength of mind, and strength of spirit.

Rick is a hero to physically challenged Canadians, to young people, indeed to all of us. He has taught us respect for others and respect for ourselves. He has taught us the joy of hard work and the value of endurance and perseverance.

I salute Rick Hansen. You know, Mr. Speaker, as I do, that today will be a very special day in Vancouver. Rick has come home, and we are all very proud of him.

We need more nice-guy heroes. We need more heroes like Rick Hansen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO WEIGHTLIFTER LANGIS CÔTÉ

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, last weekend, the Canadian weight lifting championships were held in the Lac Saint-Jean area. On that occasion, Langis Côté, a young resident of my riding, took first place in the 67.5 kg class, doing so for the third consecutive time.

Mr. Côté's achievements in the sport of weight lifting are a source of pride for our region, but above all, Mr. Speaker, this proves that young Canadian men and women are able to discipline themselves and focus their efforts on the goal they want to achieve. We would do well to follow this example.

In concluding, I want to wish Langis good luck at the European championships in Austria next month.

AIR CANADA

SUSPENSION OF FLIGHT ATTENDANT OVERTURNED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you remember the case of Toni Corrado, the Air Canada flight attendant who was suspended for 30 days for being critical of the Minister of Transport to a couple of passengers who asked her opinion and turned out to be delegates on their way to the Conservative Convention.

After writing to the Minister of Transport, the letter from the Tory Party workers went straight to Air Canada, which resulted in her receiving a 30-day suspension.

National interest in the case meant that there were many changes to the allegations against Ms. Corrado. Not wanting to appear as though the Conservative Party was against free speech, she received a reduction in her suspension to seven days on the suggestion that she was too persistent in expressing her views.

The House owes a debt of gratitude to the courage of Toni Corrado who refused to accept even a reduced sentence on an unjust charge. She grieved her penalty, and hearings began in Vancouver last week.

The hearings were under way when Air Canada offered Ms. Corrado a settlement, a settlement it could have offered a year ago.

I am pleased to report to the House that the seven-day suspension has been overturned, with complete financial compensation to Ms. Corrado. Her right to free speech has been acknowledged by Air Canada, and she will suffer absolutely no penalty.

Congratulations to Toni Corrado for fighting and winning this good fight.

EDMONTON VENUE OF NATIONAL RACKET-BALL CHAMPIONSHIPS—TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTARY WORKERS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the 1987 National Racket-ball Championships are being held in Edmonton from May 18 to May 23. More than 430 athletes from across Canada will participate. The men's and women's open will include many members of the World Championship Team. The competitions also include events for men aged 55 years and over, as well as events for wheelchair athletes.

Edmonton is noted for successfully sponsoring championship events such as the World University Games, the Commonwealth Games of 1978, and this week the National Racket-ball Championships. Outstanding success has always been achieved due to excellent organization and the commitment of a large body of volunteers.

Committed and dedicated volunteers are essential to ensure the success of events of this magnitude. I speak on behalf of all Edmontonians in paying tribute to the volunteers who contribute their free time for the betterment not only of racket-ball championships but indeed our society.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRITICISM OF STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR NORTHUMBERLAND—MIRAMICHI

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, on April 8 the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) criticized me in the House for taking the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) to task for denying that the Conservative Party had promised a real increase of 6 per cent in defence spending and has never come close.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi even inaccurately stated that Canada's stock in NATO was at an all-time high.

So bad was the statement of the Hon. Member that a retired general wrote the following letter to him and sent a copy to me:

Dear Mr. Jardine:

As a supporter of the Conservative Party, I regret that I must criticize your statement in the House on April 8 wherein you take Mr. Len Hopkins to task for his statement on March 27.

While you may be quite correct in a documentary sense to say that no election promises were made about defence expenditures under a Conservative Government, there were in fact promises made and, to date, unkept.

What's more, I would like to see the NATO documentation that puts "Canada's stock . . . at an all-time high". With this year's arbitrary cuts in the defence budget and rumoured changes in our force contributions to NATO, I would not be surprised to see our "stock" hit an all-time low before the end of this year.

As a member of the Air Force Officers Advisory Group, I am proud to endorse the position just made by our executive to the Prime Minister. I hope that you will not be so proud of the "record" that you will not admit that more funding for defence was promised and is needed.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House, the socialists were up to their old tricks, this time casting doubts on the integrity of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). It was a shabby attempt indeed.

Mr. Speaker, our party and the Liberal Party recruit their supporters, through their riding associations, among all Canadians.

The NDP, however, recruits its membership among radicals and extremists. It uses the money of honest workers through their unions, workers who would otherwise not finance the NDP.

This party is increasing its influence with the unions, unbeknownst to their members. It is being helped to the tune of millions of dollars by the big trade unions, without the workers being informed. It has made a specialty of using other people's money. It does this by taking advantage of hearings held by standing committees, and through the use of mailing privileges and of all the resources available to each Member of this House.

Before attacking and libelling Members of this House, this party should put its own house in order.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

NEED FOR NEW BUILDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canada, like other nations, has a National Archives where important documents are stored for posterity so that our history can be recorded and future generations can study and make up their own minds as to our successes and failures in terms of economic, social, cultural and political affairs.

Unfortunately, however, although we have a fine new Archives Act, we have no archives building. The Public Archives share the National Library building and both are forced to rent other space and move documents between buildings. The Public Archives has 17 buildings for storage, and 75 per cent of the documents are actually stored in sub-standard spaces. This means, in the case of flooding, that documents have been destroyed and others are deteriorating so they will be useless in the future.

If we as Canadians have any respect for ourselves, for our history, and the right of future generations to understand it, we need adequate space for our archives. In short, if we believe in Canada, we must find the means for acquiring a new archives building.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY

REFUSAL OF EGG PRODUCING QUOTA FOR NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, each year the Northwest Territories and Yukon import from the southern provinces over one million dozen eggs.

What happens when citizens of this part of Canada try to establish their own industry? I will tell you what happens, Sir. CEMA, the southern egg cartel, stomps down on them and tries to crush out this initiative. The Territories are refused a quota. Not only that, CEMA seeks court injunctions to prevent territorial eggs being shipped from one part of the Territories to another part on a road that goes through a province.

This constraint to trade and infringement on the freedom of Canadians is unacceptable. The Canadian Egg Marketing Agency is an affront to liberty, and ought to be disbanded forthwith.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

IMMIGRATION BOOKLET—INCLUSION OF ADVERTISEMENT SOLICITING POLITICAL PARTY FUNDING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Canadians became aware today that an inadvertent mistake appears to have happened whereby booklets published under contract by the Department of Supply and Services for the Immigration Department had an ad soliciting funds for the Conservative Party of Ontario.

While I accept the explanation given in this House by the Minister as being accurate, I would call upon the Minister to make an appropriate statement after Question Period in order to assure all Canadians, Members of this House as well, particularly the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) and I, that, in fact, no examples of these booklets were distributed to potential candidates for immigration, either here in Canada or abroad.

I feel that the House deserves such an explanation from the Minister and I invite her to take but a few minutes after Question Period in order to make such a statement.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

ACTIVITIES OF 50 PLUS CLUB IN ELGIN, NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I had the pleasure of visiting a small community in my constituency by the name of Elgin, in Albert County. Elgin is famous for maple syrup, blueberries, and experienced citizens. The reason for my visit was to meet with a group of people who belong to the 50 Plus Club and provide them with a grant under the New Horizons Program so they could continue with their community work.

The good citizens of Elgin are blessed with an extraordinary amount of good common sense. Since my return to Ottawa they have written me and I would like to share with you the words of Florence Wall, the President of the 50 Plus Club in Elgin, New Brunswick. In her last paragraph she wrote:

> Again may we thank you and wish you and your Party continued success in the good work you are doing to keep Canada a place we are all proud to call home.

MAINTENANCE OF SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—INCREASED FUNDING URGED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in its confusion and bungling the Conservative Government tries to pretend the problems it faces are the fault of the Opposition in the House of Commons. The fact is that the Cabinet has not been able to establish priorities.

For over two months the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has had proposals before Cabinet dealing with small craft harbours and second phase funding for salmonoid enhancement. Yet Cabinet has not reached a decision. In the meantime our small craft harbours continue to deteriorate. Department officials say $120 million is needed each year to maintain them. This year the Government allocated only $48 million. If this continues, officials warn, dozens of small communities will lose their docking facilities in the next few years.

In the 1984 election the Conservatives promised a properly funded salmonoid enhancement program. They increased licence fees for fishermen to help fund the program but it is stalled in Cabinet.

If the Government wants to regain the confidence of Canadians it must get its priorities straight and eliminate the log-jams in Cabinet.

SCIENCE

IMPORTANCE OF ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF ACFAS AT UNIVERSITY OF OTTAWA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a very important event that is taking place this week in the riding of Ottawa—Vanier. I am referring to the annual conference of the Association canadienne-française pour l'avancement des sciences being held at the University of Ottawa. This science conference is important to ensure the continued existence of the French language as a living force in the world of science. We all know how important English is as a language of work and communications in this area. We must promote the use of French in science. For instance, only 5 per cent of the articles published by the National Research Council in 13 scientific journals are in French. This must change. ACFAS, at conferences like the one being held this week, has shown it is possible to do high quality scientific work in French. I want to congratulate and pay tribute to all francophone researchers and wish them a cordial welcome and a pleasant stay with us in Ottawa—Vanier.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS IN ATLANTIC CANADA—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to an answer the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave yesterday in response to a question posed by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He was taking credit for jobs created in Canada and said the Hon. Member's statement was false. He went on to say:

> Some 46 per cent of the jobs created were in Ontario, 28 per cent in Quebec, 22 per cent in western Canada, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, the "and so on" is Atlantic Canada. The three regions that he referred to add up to 96 per cent of the jobs. "And so on" only got 4 per cent of the jobs. If the Prime Minister is going to continue to ignore Atlantic Canada I wish he would at least admit that and make mention of it in his answers to questions in the House.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AMERICAN INVESTMENT IN CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. For the past three days I have been trying to obtain an answer from the Government as to who was speaking on its behalf with regard to the wide open request made by the United States for American takeovers of Canadian industry.

Simon Reisman, our chief negotiator, is quoted as saying, and I am going to use his words, "—the U.S. side has made it very clear at every level, Presidential, Secretary to Secretary, and at the negotiating table, that they are anxious to talk about investment in the broadest sense". Those are his words as reported in a story filed by Terry Wills of the Montreal Gazette of May 21.

Yet the Minister for International Trade said yesterday that that simply was not true. In response to me yesterday in the House of Commons the Prime Minister said, yes, the President had raised the issue with him, then no, the issue had not been raised with him, all within two answers as recorded in Hansard.

Has the Prime Minister briefed the Minister for International Trade on what the President of the United States had to say to him on the issue of American takeover of Canadian industry and opening up the investment rules? If so, would he explain to the House who is speaking on behalf of the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made a false charge in the House yesterday when he used the word "unfettered". He had the grace to correct that false charge. He has now made another false charge with regard to the statements of the Prime Minister reported in yesterday's Hansard. I hope he will have the grace to withdraw that false charge.

I hope also, Mr. Speaker, that in the interest of ensuring that this House is able to deal with facts, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues will deal with facts and will not try to create fears or enter falsehoods into the record of the House of Commons.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the words which I have just quoted from Simon Reisman are accurate and also that Hansard bears out the ambiguity of the Prime Minister's responses to me yesterday. I will leave that to every Member of the House to judge.

INVESTMENT—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WILL NOT REVEAL PUBLICLY WHAT IT IS WILLING TO GIVE TO AMERICANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister for International Trade met with provincial Trade Ministers who urged her not to give in to the United States and its demands for greater freedom and latitude in taking over Canadian industries.

Even the provincial Governments are aware of U.S. demands in this respect, but the Minister said yesterday that the federal Cabinet had not been informed.

Why does the Government refuse to tell the House and the Canadian people that it is ready to give in to the Americans as far as investment in Canada is concerned?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, another falsehood by the Leader of the Official Opposition. I realize the Liberal Party is desperate, but I trust that in future, the Leader of the Official Opposition will talk about facts and not bandy about the kind of falsehoods we have just heard.

As the Prime Minister said yesterday, the President talked about the interest of the Americans in the investment question. The Leader of the Official Opposition claimed that the request was for unfettered and wide-open access. As the Prime Minister said yesterday, both allegations by the Leader of the Opposition are false.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, how about the words "in the broadest sense"? Those are Mr. Reisman's words and the words I used are certainly parallel to those.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They certainly are. Every statement I have quoted can be backed up by a tape.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister contradicted herself. First she said to journalists that the issue had not been raised, a few moments later she said the door is wide open, then she said it was up to the Americans to raise the issue if they wanted to, and then she said she would not consider it. I can give the Right Hon. Minister all those words. They are not falsehoods at all. They are out of the mouth of his colleague. In these circumstances, can you blame Canadians for being confused because the Government of Canada itself is confused? If the Minister is in this benign mood this morning, will he tell us who is speaking for the Government of Canada and what is the position of the Government of Canada?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not have to convince me that the words uttered by my colleagues are not falsehoods. We all know that. We also know that they are consistent, the statements of the Minister for International Trade and other Ministers are consistent.

The falsehoods have been uttered by the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Member for Essex—Windsor and by others in the House.

The situation is that the Americans are interested in discussing investment. We are prepared to consider their specific proposals to discuss investment once we have received them in final form. If they are acceptable to Canada, we are prepared to negotiate on that basis. If they are not acceptable to Canada we are not prepared to negotiate on that basis.

We intend to maintain in place protections for vital Canadian interests, as has been made clear by my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and by the Prime Minister.

I remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that all nations, including the United States, have very significant barriers to investment. For example, in the United States, in some 22 of those States, these are state actions, not simply national actions, which limit investment. We intend to make the Americans aware of that.

The only people whom I have heard talking about unfettered rights of investment in Canada by Americans are the Liberals and the New Democratic Party. That might be their policy, but it is not ours.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who said that the Americans have not yet raised the matter. Mr. Reisman, our trade negotiator, is quoted in yesterday's newspapers as saying that the United States is anxious to talk about investment in the broadest sense and, in fact, the matter was raised by the President himself, Secretary of State Shultz, and Secretary of the Treasury, James Baker.

In other words, Mr. Reisman, a man with a very distinguished record, has said that the Americans have already raised these matters about broadening the acceptance of investment in this country. Is Mr. Reisman correct in what he says and, if so, did the Government tell the President, Secretary Shultz and Secretary Baker that we are not interested in broadening the terms of investment and entrenching it in a free trade deal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is now trying to wiggle away from the words and accusations that were made by his Leader and himself. The record is there.

The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will not be able to wiggle away from it.

I will repeat what I said a moment ago. The President and other American officials, and as the Prime Minister said in the House yesterday, have indicated an interest in investment. I am current with all of the debates and all of the exchanges that have taken place. To my knowledge, at no time did anyone suggest unfettered, wide open investment in Canada; anyone, except the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. They might want unfettered American investment in Canada; that is not our position.

Mr. Axworthy: I simply remind the Secretary of State that those were not our words, but the words of the chief trade negotiator for Canada, Mr. Reisman, who said that the Americans want to raise the question of investment in its broadest sense.

UNITED STATES REPORT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he is current with everything that is going on. He is probably aware of the report on foreign trade barriers put out last fall by the office of the U.S. trade representative, describing the bilateral negotiations with the United States. It says:

> The United States has urged Canada to liberalize the Investment Canada Act—

It goes on to talk about the areas, such as culture, energy and resources. It states:

> The United States will raise its concerns on Canada's treatment of foreign investment during bilateral free trade negotiations.

My assertion is that the Americans themselves have already said that the matters have been raised and they are asking for liberalization. Having this on the public record, would it not be the proper position of this Government—and it had the opportunity this morning—to simply say that we are not prepared to have foreign investment raised as part of these negotiations other than trade related, that we will not agree to any broadening of the investment package? Why will the Secretary of State for External Affairs not say that now? Why has he refused? Or is in fact the Government preparing to give in and cave in once again?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Just so we are clear about this, Mr. Speaker, the word "unfettered", which is false, was not our word. It was the word of the Liberal Party. It is false.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You sound like a parrot, a broken record.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The word "wide-open" which was used by the Liberal Party, and which is false, is not our language. It is the Liberal Party's language.

What has happened, as I have said twice today and as the Prime Minister said yesterday, is that the United States has indicated in general terms an interest in having investment discussed. During the last set of negotiations involving Ambassador Reisman and Ambassador Murphy, there was an oral elaboration by the United States on some of the matters in which it is interested, none of which is unfettered access, none of which constitute wide open access, none of which constitute the kinds of interest that is being used falsely to raise fears by the Liberal Party and by its socialist friends in the House of Commons.

When we have a concrete idea of what it is the Americans are interested in discussing, that will be considered by the Cabinet of Canada and we will then consider whether or not it is in the interests of Canada for our negotiator to proceed with negotiations and consideration of those concrete proposals.

NON-TRADE RELATED INVESTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly good to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in such a good mood this morning.

I want to pursue the same subject. As the Minister knows, up to the present the talks on trade in terms of investment have always been restricted to trade related investment. Mr. Reisman has said not once but twice that he has conveyed directly to the Cabinet that the United States wanted to go beyond trade related investment. The Prime Minister, to whom the Minister just alluded, said in the House yesterday: "Now it is wide open investment pursuant to trade related investment which has always been the case". So the Prime Minister is saying that it is restricted to trade related matters, surely, which contradicts what Mr. Reisman is saying. Will the Government now be very clear on this? Is non-trade related investment on the negotiating table with the Americans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Is non-trade related investment on the table?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): First of all, let me welcome the Leader of the New Democratic Party back from the Province of Quebec. I sincerely hope he has been able to seek to heal the deep breach in his Party on the Meech Lake Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Once he has done that I hope he will turn his attention to the deep breach in his Party on trade questions, the deep breach in his Party on NATO, the deep breach in his Party on NORAD, the deep breach in his Party on other questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Cuddle up a little closer, Lloyd.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Right Hon. Minister could conclude the answer to the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead, Joe, have another go at it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is the answer I gave to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Gauthier: Which was no answer.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Stonewalling.

Mr. Broadbent: I might be tempted to refer to the breach between the Minister's ears, but I won't.

Mr. Nystrom: Irreparable.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister, both in his earlier answers and now, is trying to avoid answering by hurling abuse at the Opposition. That game won't count with the people of Canada, I want to tell the Minister right now.

Mr. Nystrom: That's why you are in third place.

Mr. Broadbent: That is exactly why you have dropped down to third place, this kind of snickering, snide evasiveness, that's it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Hon. Members would want the Hon. Member for Oshawa to put his question succinctly and clearly and I am sure other Hon. Members would want to hear the Minister respond in exactly the same way.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Minister would control his miasma and answer a straight question, I will give him a straight question.

Does the Minister agree with Mr. Reisman that the Americans have now requested to talk about investment that is not related to trade matters and that he has conveyed that to the Cabinet? Or does the Minister agree with the Prime Minister who said that all the Cabinet is aware of is discussions about trade related investment? On what side of the interesting approach to the truth is the Minister?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not hurling abuse, I am simply drawing the attention of Canadians to a political Party which says one thing on the Meech Lake Agreement in the House of Commons and has its Quebec Party say the exact opposite. That is what I am doing.

Mr. Broadbent: There's a guy who really believes in federalism. I can't believe it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Yes, I believe in federalism, and I believe federalism requires a national Party—

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —to say the same thing in both languages in all parts of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If I may repeat what I said to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry—

Mr. McDermid: Do it slowly.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): And I will do it very slowly so that the New Democratic Party Leader can understand and can take notes so he can telephone his Members about it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What has happened is that there have been proposals—there have been suggestions made by the President of the United States, and by others, indicating their general interest in having investment discussed. We have indicated to them that if they have proposals to make, we look forward to receiving them and we will then judge them once we have received them.

At the last meeting of the negotiators there was an oral indication—not a written indication, an oral indication—by the United States negotiator as to some of the details of what they are interested in, none of which goes so far, anywhere near so far as the false impressions left in the House of Commons by the two opposition Parties.

The process now, as the Leader of the NDP might know, would be that the chief negotiator will make a formal recommendation to the cabinet committee. The cabinet committee will consider whether we want to give to the negotiator the mandate to deal with those issues. We will make that judgment on the basis of Canada's best interest. That, of course, will not conclude the matter. The Cabinet of Canada would retain the right to approve or to reject and, indeed, to oversee and to approve or reject throughout the process anything which might be discussed by the negotiator at the table.

Mr. Broadbent: It has only taken a half hour to get that one fact out of the Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I gave it to Lloyd.

INQUIRY CONCERNING AMERICAN INTEREST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): We now know that the Government is in fact considering broadening the range of discussion about investment. Once again he has yielded to what the Americans wanted. Will the Minister at least share with the House of Commons the areas requested by the Americans that they want to be put on the table for discussion? Will he at least tell the people of Canada that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): From the beginning of this debate when it became clear that the socialist Party had taken an ideological position to oppose the trade negotiations, it has been seeking to have us reveal the details of the negotiation on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: Have a good week-end, Joe. Take a rest.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That, obviously, would give away our capacity to make a good deal for Canada. That might be the way Socialists negotiate. That is not the way this Government is going to negotiate, or seek to negotiate a trade arrangement with the United States which can secure Canadian jobs which are now being lost and which could open new opportunities for Canadian industries which need them.

Mr. Broadbent: Have a good week-end, Joe.

ORAL INDICATION GIVEN BY UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just admitted that in the last meeting between the United States and Canadian trade negotiators, the United States trade negotiator gave an oral indication as to some of the details of what they are interested in with respect to investment in Canada.

• (1140)

I want to ask the Minister to use this opportunity to tell the House and Canadians exactly what was said by the American negotiator in these oral indications.

We are not asking for the Canadian position. We want to know what the Americans are asking for.

Can he tell us today what that is? Give us a straight answer for a change.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition, and I know that he knows about negotiations. I know that he would understand that we could not expect to have a successful negotiation were we to reveal all of our negotiating positions on the floor of the House of Commons. He would also know that we cannot reveal what the other side is putting on the table and expect not to reveal what we are putting on the table. We cannot publicize half of the process, without leading to a situation which would lead, inexorably, to the publicizing of the whole process.

That would damage Canadian interests, and I am sure the House Leader of the Official Opposition would not want that to happen.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government is so worried about prejudicing the negotiations—negotiations which so far do not seem to be in the best interests of Canada—why is the chief negotiator going public?

We are raising this subject because of the words used by the chief negotiator, who said that the Americans are calling for "broad investment access to Canada".

Why is there this inconsistency between what he is saying now and what the chief negotiator has said? Why can't he tell us whether the Americans asked that culture be on the table; whether they asked that resources be on the table; whether they asked that this Government unravel its already weak Investment Canada Act?

I ask him again: Give us some straight answers for a change.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Just to set the record straight again, the House Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues have not been quoting in this House the words used by the chief negotiator, until today. They were using language to create false impressions, language that was false, and the record in that regard, I think, should be clear.

Our position on culture is known. We are not going to trade away Canadian culture.

Our position on official languages and other fundamental interests in this country is known. It has been the subject of debate in this House for some time.

I do not propose—and I know the House Leader of the Official Opposition would not seriously ask me to do so—to reveal, detail by detail, what is under discussion at the negotiating table, because that would be the way to subvert and destroy the negotiations.

An Hon. Member: And that is exactly what they want.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I hope that that is not what the Liberal Party wants. I know that that is what the socialist Party wants. It is not what this Government wants.

ORAL REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of External Affairs. Since he has indicated to the House that there have been these oral representations clearly made, since he has indicated, as well, that, as a cabinet Minister, clearly these have been communicated to him by the chief trade negotiator, is it not the responsibility of the Government of this country, which is now looking at widening the mandate of the trade talks, to come out and say so clearly to the Canadian people, so that they know what the points are that the Americans want to talk about?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our responsibility as a Cabinet to consider proposals that are put forward by the Americans in this negotiation, and to consider them in the context of the Canadian national interest.

There has been an oral indication. There will be a consideration by Cabinet of what exactly the Americans are looking for once we know, with absolute precision, what it is the Americans are looking for.

We will carry out our responsibility as the Cabinet of Canada, responsible to this House and responsible, ultimately, to the people of the country, to oversee the negotiations and to protect the Canadian interests.

If individual Canadians want to have some easy guideline as to what the Americans are asking for, the best advice I can give them is never pay attention to, or give credibility to, the representations of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Langdon: I thank the Minister. A compliment from the Minister is bound to come in the form of an insult.

MANDATE TO CONDUCT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Let me ask the Minister this. If this Government made a determination that it was right to take the country into trade negotiations with an existing mandate, a mandate set out very clearly, why is the Government now prepared to look at changing that mandate, widening it, and giving the United States something further without getting anything in return?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I don't want to engage in insults. What I am—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): So that the record is clear, the reason I made the comment I did, Mr. Speaker, is that I have paid close attention to the outrageous and false things the Hon. Member has said about the trade negotiations, and no one who wants to have a reasonable understanding about what is going on should be misled by those unreasonable and false statements that he has been making.

Let me just be clear about what I thought everybody in the House knew about a negotiation: a negotiation is not a static thing. Naturally, there is going to be some movement in the negotiations. There are some matters on which we want movement from the United States that will be proposed before the end of the negotiations. There have been matters proposed since the negotiations began by both sides.

That is in the nature of a negotiation. That would be understood by a Party that was not determined from the outset to sabotage and subvert the trade negotiations, as the Socialist Party has, and is.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if we understood the answers of the right hon. gentleman to the questions of both the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and the Member for Oshawa, the question being whether the Government would consider an American request to negotiate investment beyond trade related issues, he responded in the affirmative.

Yesterday the same question was put to his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and she responded in these terms:

> "If the Americans want to go beyond trade-related investment areas, it is up to them to indicate what they want," she said.

The journalist then asked: "Does that mean you would be willing to consider it?", to which the reply was—and I read from a Canadian Press article:

> "No!" Miss Carney replied loudly. "I am getting really annoyed. You are trying to exterpolate things that I don't say."

Would he over the week-end, once he has had a chance to reflect and perhaps calm down and return to his usual benign mood, talk to his colleague and the Prime Minister and give us, on Monday, what the position of the Government is?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have given to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition what the position of the Government is. He is quoting a journalist. I trust my colleague didn't use the word "exterpolate"; I have not known her to use a word like that before.

An Hon. Member: Not in public.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not in public. I will check the rest of the record.

An Hon. Member: It must be a falsehood.

Mr. Axworthy: There is nothing dirty about that. Is it against the new pornography Bill?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): So that the Leader of the Opposition can have some confidence, the position of the Government is as I stated it today and as it has been stated by the Minister for International Trade and by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: It is two positions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have a patchwork quilt now, and we will try to put that together over the weekend, Mr. Speaker. I say that his colleague not only used the word "exterpolate", she probably understands what it means.

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL TRADE MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I want to put a further question to the Minister. His colleague met yesterday with her provincial counterparts, with the provincial Trade Ministers. Did she describe to them the nature of the American request to broaden these trade negotiations relating to investment? And if she did, what did she tell them; and if she described in some detail what the Americans had in mind, would he share those thoughts with the House of Commons, so that Members of Parliament as well as the provincial Governments may know what is going on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr Speaker, while we are on the subject of patchwork quilts, may I congratulate the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on his appointment of himself as his Party's spokesman on external affairs and foreign policy.

The Minister for International Trade had discussions with her provincial counterparts yesterday. She is keeping them up to date with the process of the negotiations.

As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know, this is an entirely new step, a new process, and indeed a major institutional change in Canadian practice, because in the past, when he was involved in international trade negotiations, the provinces were shut out.

They are not shut out under this Government.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa in a moment.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SCOPE OF INVESTMENT DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue this interesting line of answers which we are getting from the Minister.

Yesterday the Prime Minister contradicted Simon Reisman and, if I heard the Minister correctly today, he has just contradicted the Prime Minister. He has just acknowledged that on non-trade related investment the Cabinet has been informed that the Americans want to talk about it, and the Canadian Government is waiting to hear more specifics on it.

The Prime Minister said yesterday, in reply to a question, that this wasn't the case. He said that what is on the table "is wide open investment pursuant to trade-related investment which has always been the case".

According to the Prime Minister, the discussions are still being restricted to trade-related investment. According to the Minister today, the scope is being broadened. Who is telling the truth in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The falsehood that is being attempted in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, is the attempt to pretend a difference exists between what the Prime Minister said and what I have said. I ask—I won't get into a long debate about it now; the Leader of the New Democratic Party can read. He can take a look at Hansard yesterday—

Mr. Broadbent: I just did.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and Hansard again today indicating my remarks.

Here is the situation. Trade-related investment measures are on the table now. There is a mandate for the negotiator to discuss them. There has been an oral suggestion by the United States, as I have repeated four or five times in this House today, that some other matters should be looked at. They are not yet on the table. They might never be on the table. We in the Cabinet have not yet received a formal, precise indication of what it is the Americans are interested in. Once we receive that, we will consider it—if we give the negotiator—and if it is not in Canada's interest, we will reject it.

Then, after that process is finished, we will indicate to the negotiator what mandate he has at the table. That is the situation. I have described it three or four times today. For those who want to understand it, it is quite clear.

ORAL COMMUNICATION FROM UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have what may be the last question on this today. I should like to ask the Minister, on this oral communication that was received, could he tell us if the Cabinet and the Prime Minister were informed of this oral communication before yesterday's Question Period?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime—the Leader of the Opposition—excuse me, I am getting ahead of himself.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that there is a long-standing practice regarding the confidentiality of matters—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No, no—that come before a Cabinet—that question invites me to break—

Mr. Broadbent: I know the answer now.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —asks me to break those rules. The socialist Party have shown a quite consistent contempt for the rules of this House, but I don't want to encourage them in it.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—BIDDERS' AGREEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said many times that in the agreement between Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum there is the right for other potential bidders to make bids as long as Dome Petroleum does not solicit the bids.

However, at least one of the potential bidders and I think as many as four, including Amoco, have signed confidentiality agreements in order to obtain evaluation material.

One of the requirements of this confidentiality agreement is that a bidder cannot make a bid until the bid has the prior approval of Dome Petroleum.

How can we have other bids when under the confidentiality agreement Dome Petroleum must give prior approval to the bids, but that is soliciting, and under the memorandum of agreement Dome Petroleum cannot solicit other bids?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to the response that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has given. I think he has been quite clear. Dome may not solicit competing offers but certainly has to consider them if they are presented.

Mr. MacLellan: It is continually not coming to grips with the question.

MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—MEETING WITH AMOCO CANADA REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister another question. On May 12 he said, relating to the agreement between Dome and Amoco, "they are in a position to make a decision", referring to the shareholders, and "when it is made and the proposal is presented to the Government of Canada, it will be examined in the normal course as it relates to Investment Canada, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and all other mechanisms in place for that purpose".

Why did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in light of what the Deputy Prime Minister has said and in light of the comments of the Minister of Energy that this is now in the private sector until it comes to Investment Canada, meet with representatives of Amoco Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is suggesting that elected representatives of the Calgary area are not free to meet with people in the energy sector.

I mean, what is this country coming to? When is a Member of Parliament not able to represent the interests of his constituents by meeting representatives of an energy sector which is very vital and very important?

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that because I may represent a farming district or I might be a farmer myself I cannot take an interest in farm problems, then we are really heading down a slippery slope to chaos in this country.

REASON FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on this matter for the Deputy Prime Minister, and I ask him: Let's not be naive about this matter.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said yesterday that he had met with Amoco, senior executives of Amoco, on the Dome takeover. If it is government policy that the Government has a hands-off approach in this deal, why is it necessary for Amoco to come and lobby the Government, and why is it necessary for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and perhaps other Ministers, to meet with Amoco?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McDermid: Just stand up and make your charges.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the co-operation of all Hon. Members at the moment to keep their remarks to themselves.

The Chair is in a difficult position, and I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway understands that, as does the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys. Also I want Hon. Members to understand clearly the difficulty the Chair is in, and I want the public to understand it, because this is a place where vigorous free speech must be defended.

My difficulty is that yesterday, on a matter raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, questions which the Chair allowed, a question of privilege has been raised by the Hon. Minister. There was an extensive discussion with respect to whether or not the question asked of the Minister yesterday was appropriate or had indeed infringed against the privileges of the Minister, and some Members went on to suggest that it had gone further than that.

I have not brought down a ruling on that matter yet, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway knows, and I regret that I have not been able to do so by this morning. However, I assure the Hon. Member that it is not because of any intention to delay.

An Hon. Member was in somewhat the same position some weeks ago on another matter where a question of privilege was raised and then the next day questions were again asked on the same point. At that time I said that I felt it was not appropriate to continue with those questions at that time until the ruling had come down.

Given the circumstances and given that fact, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway and other Hon. Members who are interested in this issue that I will strive mightily to have a ruling first thing on Tuesday morning. In the meantime, I would ask the co-operation of Hon. Members in respecting the position of the Chair, and to respect the fact that the very propriety of these questions is the subject matter of the dispute which I heard yesterday and on which I must decide.

I am not in any way indicating how I will rule on Tuesday morning, but I would ask that Hon. Members understand the position that we are in in this Chamber.

• (1200)

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will put my supplementary question carefully in order to get the balance between respecting the Chair and the Opposition's right to ask questions in a free and democratic society.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): More contempt on the House.

Mr. Waddell: My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who is responsible for the conflict of interest guidelines. In the opinion of the Deputy Prime Minister, does he consider it a conflict or even an appearance of conflict—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Waddell: —when a Minister of the Crown who will be—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: Listen to the question.

Mr. Waddell: The Speaker can rule on my question when I have finished it. I will not be silent on this matter.

An Hon. Member: Come on, Waddell.

Mr. Daubney: Have some respect.

Mr. Speaker: This is not a particularly easy matter for Members or the Chair, but it will be easier for all if Members leave it to the Chair to decide. I will hear the question.

Mr. Waddell: I will repeat the question, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to the conflict of interest guidelines, broadly, for which the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible, in his opinion does he consider it a conflict or even an appearance of conflict when a Minister of the Crown who will be participating in an important national decision has on his or her riding executive as a fund-raiser a senior official of one of the companies which will be affected by such an important national decision?

Mr. Speaker: The question may or may not, of course, be hypothetical and that is a matter for the Minister to comment on if, in fact, the Minister does want to comment on it.

I do want to point out to Hon. Members that the question we have just heard is not the same question as that put yesterday. It is a question of general application. To the degree that it is, I will allow it to stand. The Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Hon. Member made reference to an apparent conflict of interest. I certainly do not want to make any comment on that because it may very well reflect upon the admonition you have given in the House.

Suffice it to say that I consider this to be a normal political process. As I understand it, representatives have met with all Calgary area Members of Parliament. They have a vital interest in the energy sector, as the Hon. Leader of the NDP would have a vital interest in the automobile sector.

Mr. Broadbent: We are not making the decision, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure he from time to time receives representations from that sector in the discharge of his duties as a Member of Parliament for the Oshawa area, as does the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre who represents a farming area. I am sure if Hon. Members are going to be prevented from discharging their responsibilities and obligations as Members of Parliament—

Mr. Broadbent: He is a Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: —then we have a really serious problem in this country that has to be dealt with.

Mr. Broadbent: I agree.

Mr. Fulton: You guys don't know right from wrong.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell Harney.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the co-operation, which I know I will receive, from all Hon. Members on this matter. I would ask that the matter be left aside now and the Chair can return with a ruling on it. I want to assure Hon. Members that the Chair is very conscious of the undoubted right of the Opposition to seek information; in fact, it is the undoubted duty of the Opposition.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Speaker: I am also very aware that this is a place of free speech. However, we have our rules. As I say, I am now in the midst of a process where a question of privilege has arisen out of questions asked. That is a matter that I must decide. I shall decide it as quickly as I can and return to the House with that decision.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—GOVERNMENT JUSTIFICATION FOR PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the advertising campaign on free trade that is costing us about $12 million, a campaign to try and convince Canadians that the Government of Canada has acted in their interests by giving away Canada's sovereignty to foreign investors. How does the Government intend to justify wasting money on this folder and distributing it in shopping centres, a publication that is full of exaggerated statements? How can it justify this propaganda at a time when spending cut-backs are affecting people who are desperately in need of funds? How can the Government justify this kind of publication at a time when its mandate is still far from certain, when it has nothing to show for its efforts and the talks are still going on? How can it justify this utter waste of money?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I know this is part of the Liberal campaign to spread half-truths and no truths. The Hon. Member this morning said on CBC that this pamphlet in front of us is clearly erroneous. He went on to say that there was no consultative process before the agreement was made in 1985 to proceed with the negotiations.

The former Minister of Trade issued a White Paper and went across this country for months consulting with the provinces and with the private sector. There was a parliamentary committee that spent time looking at the White Paper and made a report to Parliament before the decision was made.

Mr. Axworthy: And recommended against it.

Mr. McDermid: For heaven's sake, the Member is telling half-truths. What he is saying is absolutely false and he is going around the country spreading false information about this brochure.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary should have listened to the interview instead of getting somebody else who couldn't memorize it trying to repeat it to him.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again for the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the shopping bag stuffer that he offered to Canadians yesterday.

The previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said as reported in Hansard, that there will be no more geese flying into the sunset. If it was wrong to have geese flying into the sunset in the name of national unity, what is so right about the turkeys on the other side walking across the U.S. border in a fog in the name of free trade? What is so right about that policy?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): It is too bad George Baker isn't here today.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And that Crosbie is not here either.

Mr. McDermid: Pardon me, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate.

As I go through this very excellent publication which provides information on the trade negotiations which Canadians have been requesting, I do not see a goose or a turkey in here but I see a lot of very important information which Canadians have been asking for and which they are going to receive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We see turkeys over there.

Mr. McDermid: I notice that the Canadian Labour Congress has put out a fancy brochure opposing it. Why doesn't the Hon. Member stand up and talk about that as well?

Mr. Speaker: The last question will be by the Hon. Member for Lévis.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CONTRACT CONCERNING FRENCH TEACHING AT DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. On May 20, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides directed a question to the Minister of Public Works, seeking to know why certain Quebec firms had not been given an opportunity to bid on contracts related to computer technology and French teaching to the Canadian military. Among others, he referred to Matrox, DIL International and Technogram. The Minister of Public Works replied that an investigation was under way. Can the Minister tell us what this investigation was all about and, if indeed there was an ongoing investigation, what are the findings?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for raising this question since it enables me to shed light on this contract award. Never was there any question of launching an investigation into the award of this $700,000 contract because it is very much in keeping with our purchasing policy. There was a tender call, 17 firms were asked for bids, including eight from Quebec. Unfortunately the eight Quebec firms decided not to bid and, as a Quebecer, I regret that.

With respect to the suppliers mentioned in Le Devoir, these companies did not care to register on my Department's list of suppliers.

One last comment, Mr. Speaker. I would simply remind the House and the people who may be listening to us that anyone who wants to deal with the federal Government should first register on the list of suppliers. The Chicoutimi firm thought it was adding its name to our list when it filled in a Statistics Canada questionnaire. Would anyone having filled in a census questionnaire have the impression that his or her income tax return has been completed? I suggest that one should be serious and register properly if one wants to do business and land contracts.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

PRIVILEGE

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE—ALLEGED FALSEHOODS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to register my concern over the number of statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) accusing me of uttering falsehoods in the House of Commons. First, it is my understanding that is not the type of language which should be used in the House. Second, it is my understanding also that one must do what one can in raising questions on behalf of one's constituents without such language being used in an attempt to attack one.

I therefore respectfully request the Speaker to refer the question of whether falsehoods have been uttered in the course of questions this week, and I assume that is the allegation from the way the Minister put his position; I would like that question referred to the appropriate committee or have the Minister withdraw his comments. I think it is possible to have critical debate in this House without descending to that level.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my support to a reference of this question to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. We have reached a new point of allegations of falsehoods being made, in this case by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) against my Leader and several other Members. Whether or not the technical use of that word in the past has been considered by previous Speakers to be appropriate, its repetitive use against Member after Member asking questions takes it to a new level. I urge you to have this matter referred to that committee so we can look at a new way of treating questions in the House of Commons; decide whether we agree with what has taken place and whether we want this to be continued by Ministers in their answers or, indeed, Members in their questions.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important question and I am pleased that it has been raised by members of the Opposition. We all know that Canadians take their view of reality, at least some Canadians, from some of what is said on the floor of the House of Commons. If statements that are not true are frequently repeated in the House there is the danger that the Canadian public watching television will come to believe something is true when it is not. A complication in this case, of course, is that at least one of the Parties in the House, the socialist Party, has been quite consistently seeking to have the Government of Canada reveal the details of its negotiating posture in public in a way that would subvert and undermine the negotiating process.

Mr. Murphy: Another falsehood.

Mr. Beatty: Look who is using the word "falsehood" on the other side.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member is trying to achieve that result now by an indirect means. Obviously if the matter were referred to a committee the question might arise requiring the Government of Canada to reveal to the committee our position in the negotiations with the U.S. That would achieve the NDP purpose of subverting the negotiations and would not be in the interests of the House, in my judgment.

My understanding of the rules of this place is that one cannot attribute to Members of the House of Commons a deliberate attempt to mislead. I am not sure if it is deliberate. I have not made that accusation. What I can say, Sir, knowing the facts, is that statements have been repeatedly made this week by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and other Members of the House of Commons that are false. If I did not describe them as false Canadians might believe they are true. They are not true. I should not be prevented by the rules of the House of Commons from letting Canadians know that statements that are made which they might accept as true are in fact false.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has raised a very useful point for you to consider. I suppose you might well be advised that technically we are dealing with a point of order rather than a question of privilege. However, that is not really the question.

The question is whether the language used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is unparliamentary and has to be withdrawn. Frankly, there is evidence to support the argument of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) that the language used by the Minister is unparliamentary. For example, if you look in Beauchesne's it lists words which have been found to be parliamentary and words which have been found to be unparliamentary. You will see on page 107 that apparently a Speaker ruled on December 3, 1976, at page 1640 of Hansard that the word "falsehood" is unparliamentary. However, to be fair, I have to say there is also a ruling in the other direction, about the same period of time.

Therefore, I invite you to carefully review what was said by the Minister and look at the precedents, including this one at page 114, Citation 324:

> (1) It is impossible to lay down any specific rules in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular Members, or to declare beforehand what expressions are or are not contrary to order; much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking; sometimes upon the person to whom the words are addressed—

And so on.

What I am getting at is that, despite the precedents in question, and even though details have not been set out in Beauchesne's but they are there to be looked at, the matter is not closed. It is open to you to examine the words used by the Minister, not only in light of the precedents based on rulings of your distinguished predecessors but in light of the circumstances. I respectfully submit that, in looking at the context in which the Minister used the word "falsehood", looking at his tone and manner and the other criteria set out in Beauchesne's, it is open to you to find that what the Minister said when he used the word "falsehood" was in fact unparliamentary.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, just briefly, because I think the point has been made by our side, I would first suggest that the Speaker was following Question Period closely. The evidence of that is that he did interrupt another Hon. Member who was putting a question to remind him to be careful about the subject matter of the question. It should be pointed out that the Speaker, who was following the questions closely, at no time interrupted the Hon. Minister and suggested there was anything unparliamentary in what was said.

I appreciate the House Leader for the Official Opposition bringing forward the fact that the word "falsehood" has been found parliamentary and unparliamentary. That leads me to my next point, which is that in seeking to bring a point of order or a question of privilege my friend from Essex—Windsor was in no way specific about any one phrase or any one sentence which he wishes to use as the foundation for his charge that something is unparliamentary or a question of privilege. Surely one cannot say that all the answers of the Minister today were unparliamentary because they suggested falsehoods. If one wants to lay charges as serious as these one has to be specific and exact in the charge he is trying to make. I think it fails both as a point of order and as a question of privilege.

• (1220)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I did not raise this as a point of order with regard to the question of parliamentary language only, but with regard to the fact that the Minister, at least twice and possibly three times—I will have to check the "blues" to be sure of that—accused me specifically of uttering falsehoods. That seems to me a very clear-cut accusation. If those accusations are to be permitted in the House in the future I think it will take us to a new level of disrespect—

Mr. Lewis: You're already there.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That works both ways.

Mr. Langdon: —on both sides of the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: You had better look at yourself first.

Mr. Langdon: It will be something we will all live to regret. I think, therefore, that the accusations which have been put quite clearly should be referred to the appropriate committee and that the Minister should be required to justify his statement that I was uttering falsehoods by being brought before that committee and forced to document exactly that which was supposed to be a falsehood which was uttered, unlike, for instance, the very clear statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday with respect to my city which was completely inaccurate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, before you hand down your ruling on the use of the word "falsehood" in English and the word fausseté in French and whether this constituted unparliamentary language or not, I think there are two aspects to be considered.

First of all, when the Chair examines an incident of this kind to find out whether there was a case of unparliamentary language, it is important to know whether the term was directed to several Members as a group, to a party in general or specifically to one individual. It is clear that in this case, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) directed his comments specifically to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and to the Leader of the Opposition.

With respect, I may remind the Chair that these are important considerations.

Furthermore, to determine the intent of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think it is important to consider the fact that the terms were repeated several times in English and in French.

If the Secretary of State for External Affairs merely wished to get the message across that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor or the Leader of the Opposition had made statements which in his opinion were not true he did so in more polite terms just a few moments ago when he tried to apologize without altogether doing so he would have used the term once or twice, but in this case, he repeated it eight or 10 times, as we see in Hansard, and he did so in a very accusing tone of voice.

I have to conclude that he was trying to tarnish the reputation of the Leader of the Opposition and that of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor and it is actions of this kind that are traditionally considered to be unparliamentary. Those were my comments, and I hope they will be of some use to the Chair.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will, of course, carefully consider the representations that have been made. I am especially touched by the helpful advice I received from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who has very correctly pointed out that it is not just the word, it is the context of the word. There have been different rulings on the same word to be found in the history of procedure of the House of Commons. However, there is a complaint before the House and the Chair will consider it.

Although I am going to reserve on this, I think it is necessary that I do not leave the Chamber with any misunderstanding of the intent of the Right Hon. Minister. I take it from the remarks of the Right Hon. Minister, and I would invite him to comment on what I am going to say if necessary, that it was his intent to say that certain things being said by some other Members were not accurate, and that there was not an intent to say that any inaccuracy was intentionally being bandied about or used in the debate. There is, of course, a very real difference. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) might want to make that point absolutely clear before the Chair retires to consider the matter.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, that certainly was my intent. Let me also say to you, Sir, as I do not think I need to say, that if my duties carry me away from the House and do not allow me to be present on the day that you make your ruling, if you find that any language of mine has been unparliamentary, I will withdraw, as I have on occasion in the past. I naturally would not anticipate that judgment, but your interpretation of my intent is correct.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Right Hon. gentleman.

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

DECLARATION OF HOMECOMING OF RICK HANSEN—MAN IN MOTION

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as members of the House know, an event will take place later today in Vancouver, British Columbia, which marks the end of a world odyssey, an odyssey comparable in achievements to those of other world explorers. Those achievements have graced the pages of history and today a Canadian is being added to that illustrious list. Rick Hansen, welcomed across the world and taken into the hearts and lives of millions, is home at last.

All Members of the House can take pride that our Speaker will be appearing at the Rick Hansen tribute in Vancouver on Saturday representing all of us. This day marks the fulfilment of a dream, a dream that resulted in a remarkable two-year journey around the world. Rick Hansen has demonstrated courage, determination and vision. It is incumbent upon us not only to keep this dream alive but to hasten the day when all disabled Canadians enjoy full and equal participation in Canadian society.

We believe that the public enthusiasm and understanding which has greeted the Man in Motion tour in every region of the country can be harnessed. Together we intend to turn this energy into a positive force.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I am pleased to announce on behalf of the federal Government and particularly my colleague, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), that the Government will lend its full support to a National Access Awareness Week for disabled persons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): This will be an annual event to be held for the first time in 1988. The federal Government, on behalf of Canadians, is pledging its support as a partner in developing and implementing this exciting initiative together with a National Access Awareness Week committee comprised of representatives of disabled persons organizations, labour, business, governments and rehabilitation agencies.

The experience Rick and others have gained confirms our belief that communities working together in partnership with all their members can achieve lasting change. The National Access Awareness Week builds upon that belief and creates an ongoing challenge for the future. I thank Members and all Canadians joining me in this tribute to a great Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, this is a special day in Vancouver, a special day in Canada and, indeed, a special day in the world because Rick Hansen is a world conqueror. Rick Hansen conquered the world and made it smaller and more manageable. Rick Hansen conquered the hearts of Canadians and, indeed, the hearts of people all over the world. Finally, Rick Hansen conquered disability. Because of that, he has done more than any of us can ever do to advance the cause of the disabled.

• (1230)

However, we in this Chamber do have a responsibility. We have a responsibility to see that the dream does not die and that the momentum is not lost.

I welcome the Minister's remarks. I know the generosity of spirit out of which he speaks. I believe that the special week that he has put aside will be an important and significant first step in bringing to the attention of the Canadian people the special situation of disabled people and the necessity of dealing with that.

I also believe that we must do more. I know that the Government gave $1 million to the special fund set up in connection with the Man in Motion tour, but I also know that the budget of the National Medical Research Council has been capped and tied to the private sector. I urge the Minister to take steps to change that and give to the agencies that are doing the research in this important area the necessary tools to do the job.

We know from experience in other areas that there are two requirements we must fulfil as parliamentarians and as a Government to help the disabled. They are money and legislation. I hope that we can put aside funds to aid disabled groups across the country to take affirmative action. I believe that we also need legislation with provisions that not only encourage but demand of the Government and the private sector that they put into practice the principle of affirmative action in hiring the disabled in the workplace. It is not enough to encourage hiring, to promote and monitor it. I believe we need strong legislation to back those objectives.

Permit me to add to the words of my leader earlier today when he said that Rick Hansen is a hero to physically challenged Canadians, young people, us all. We also welcomed him in my area of Canada, at the other end of the country. If I may, I would like to offer Rick Hansen a Newfoundland toast, the hope that the wind will always be in his sails. Rick Hansen, long may your big jib draw.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is a great day for Canadians, particularly disabled Canadians, and it is an absolutely superlative day for Rick Hansen as he at long last arrives home after some 792 days and 40,000 kilometres. It is an incredible feat for any human being, one in which all Canadians will take immense pride.

Rick has said that he was inspired originally by the wonderful work done by Terry Fox, who Canadians will recall set out to bring hope to those seeking a cure for cancer. Rick Hansen has done what we thought at that time would never be duplicated. What Terry Fox did for cancer, in making us aware of the incessant need for us to do more in getting research into that terrible disease, so Rick has drawn the attention not only of Canadians but the world to the problems of those afflicted by spinal cord damage. He was an inspiration to those of us who met him when he was in Ottawa. Many Members of the House had the occasion to see the courage and, frankly, modesty of the man, and his seriousness of purpose. He is an inspiration with that immediate impact of very fine character.

[Translation]

He did raise funds, of course, and hopefully there will be some progress in research in the near future. However, most Canadian men and women will remember the accomplishment itself, as will people worldwide who followed Rick's global tour.

[English]

We say to him: "A great job, wonderfully done. You have made all of us proud to be members of this very fine nation".

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—FREE TRADE—INVESTMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its refusal to reject flatly U.S. demands for unlimited investment freedom in Canada as part of the free trade negotiations, since these demands would threaten Canadian sovereignty and cultural integrity by removing Canada's ability to review and limit U.S. investment, so as to promote Canadianization and to ensure that U.S. investment does benefit Canadians by creating jobs, enhancing exports, expanding research and development and increasing sourcing from domestic suppliers.

• (1240)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have to begin by saying that in many respects it is ridiculous to be debating whether or not this Government is taking yet further steps to weaken investment regulations in this country. The steps which have already been taken over the past few years have been so excessive, so out of tune with the concerns of Canadians and so potentially dangerous to jobs, to the economic sovereignty of our country and its future, that it frankly defies the imagination. Yet it is this Government which has taken those steps to put in place a weak, limp Investment Canada agency which is mainly designed to promote investment rather than to regulate it.

With respect to the free trade discussions, whether we take one set of words, another set of words or yet another set of words, amid all the confusion which has taken place this week, it is absolutely clear that the United States, as it admitted—as it stressed, in fact, in its statements with respect to Canada—that is not satisfied. The U.S. considers these investment barriers which still exist, these mild, meek, Mr. Milquetoast barriers as offensive. So this Government, as has been made clear here this morning, is willing to talk about moving yet further in opening up investment restrictions.

There have been a series of statements from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) throughout this week, a set of defences of foreign investment, which are as inaccurate as one could possibly imagine, which are as far from the truth as one could potentially expect anyone to state in this Chamber, and which are simply parodies of the reality that exists.

The reality is that we as a country are facing a very serious threat to our capacity, economically, to decide where we go in the future. We are facing that threat partly because of legislative changes made by the Government and partly because of a major series of takeovers which have swept across North America. It is not just a Canadian phenomenon; there has been a major series of takeovers particularly prevalent in the record of foreign investment.

As the most recent report of the Investment Canada agency itself makes clear, 94 per cent of the investment that has come into this country has come in, not to expand new businesses, not to establish new jobs and new enterprises for Canadians, but to take over existing Canadian enterprises and, in many cases, as a consequence, to reduce the number of Canadian jobs available within those plants.

In looking at this basic record of investment and this basic record of confusion with respect to the trade talks and what precisely the Government hopes to do in the trade talks with respect to investment, we have to look very carefully at the record of enforcement of Investment Canada. It is Investment Canada itself, as weak-kneed as it is—Mr. Milquetoast—that is at least supposed to provide some kind of defence mechanism to communities. If Investment Canada is not putting into effect the agreements it reaches with foreign firms, if it does not monitor those agreements effectively, then we have a situation which is even worse than the situation which has been legislatively created across the land. We have a situation where the actual activity of the body that is charged to act in this area is itself so weak as to be pitiful. It is so ineffective it frankly dismays any of us who believe in future Canadian control over our economy.

I want to bring forward to the House today a series of cases we have looked at in some detail. These are cases which demonstrate very clearly the totally weak, ineffective and unacceptable record of Investment Canada with respect to the particular mandate it has. These are cases with which I have had to deal as a Member of Parliament for my region, and as the Member of Parliament responsible for monitoring Investment Canada.

Let me start with the case of a small company called Sheller-Globe of Canada Ltd. It is a small company, but in fact employed 200 workers in the constituencies of the Windsor area. It gave those workers a potential to improve the unacceptable unemployment rate in that part of the country. Those 200 workers produced steering wheels. That company was shut down recently, within the last few weeks in fact, despite the fact that when this takeover was reviewed by Investment Canada itself, commitments were made to new investment by Sheller-Globe of Canada Ltd. to increase use of Canadian parts and services and to additional exports to enhance technological development. Yet despite those commitments, this plant has simply shut down.

We finally managed to get a commitment in committee last week out of Investment Canada to investigate why it is that despite these commitments made so recently, this plant has nevertheless shut its doors and put 200 workers out on the street. I have to say that to this stage we could get absolutely no information from Investment Canada which would indicate that it had monitored whatsoever the commitments the company had made prior to the shutting of its doors in the last few weeks. The company, so far as anyone can tell, had record sales and profits. It worked at more than 100 per cent capacity, six to seven days per week, for the last two years, yet it shut down.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what foreign investment can be about in this country if there is not the sovereign ability of this country to be able to review, to be able to monitor, and to be able to see to it that these companies live up to the commitments that they make when they enter the country. That is one example.

A second example, and one which is equally sad, is the case of Cross-LaSalle, again, a smaller firm. Cross-LaSalle was taken over by Cross and Trecker of the United States, and Cross and Trecker again made certain commitments, commitments which it indicated to Investment Canada it would carry forward.

In this particular case, Cross and Trecker, in 1985, made commitments for new investment, for increased employment, for the increased use of Canadian parts and services, and for improved productivity and industrial efficiency.

Despite those commitments, commitments accepted by Investment Canada on June 14, 1985, this plant too shut its doors. It shut its doors in the middle of a strike, consolidating its operations in the United States and costing 40 workers in Windsor their jobs. That is the kind of record, too, which is possible with minimal monitoring by Investment Canada.

In this particular case, just this month that same firm, a firm which claimed so much poverty with respect to its operations that it had to shut down, indicated that it would be making new investments in Georgetown, Kentucky, a right-to-work state in the southern part of the United States, which would provide new jobs for 150 employees.

Once more, we have a clear indication of a lack of monitoring and a clear indication of what can happen if there is not a regime in place which permits close surveillance of foreign investors, surveillance which would ensure that they actually follow through on the commitments they make to this country when they come in here.

If we were to eliminate the commitments entirely, if we were to follow some of the suggestions made by the United States to liberalize yet further, that is, weaken yet further our foreign investment laws, we would find our position in dealing with companies such as these even more abjectly weakened.

Let me give you a third example. This one is in the publishing sector and involves Simon & Schuster. There was a takeover in this sector which my colleague will deal with in more detail, the Gulf and Western takeover of Prentice-Hall. I simply want to make the point that one of the commitments made in that particular takeover, and it was one that was trumpeted very loudly by the Government, was the commitment to see to it that Canadian authors were promoted through Simon & Schuster, the international arm of Gulf and Western.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, the 1987 Simon & Schuster catalogue. The commitment was that for each year for 10 years there would be 10 Canadian authors promoted through this international arm, and yet within this catalogue we have only one Canadian author listed, and that is in relation to a cassette tape, not a book that is being promoted.

Again, we have complete ignorance with respect to the agency involved in so far as the putting into effect of the commitments that have been made. We have talked to the agency about this particular issue. We have talked to officials of the agency, and they have admitted to us that more than a year after the agreement permitting Gulf and Western to purchase Prentice-Hall they still do not have in place an agreement with Gulf and Western with respect to this particular part of the arrangement.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, with specific cases. We could talk about the Dome—Amoco deal and the vicious legal attempts on the part of Amoco to try to make it impossible for Canadian companies to take over a Canadian company. We could talk about Cadillac-Fairview and what its takeover will mean to thousands of small businessmen and women across this country, who will have to deal with a new foreign owner who happens now to be in control of their mall.

We can talk about these supposed benefits, as our Prime Minister likes to refer to them. But the point, Mr. Speaker, the key point, is that what has to be put into place is a new set of policies.

What this Government has missed right from the beginning, what it has sold us out on right from the beginning, what it has ignored, what it has not understood, is that we face a crisis in this country, a crisis of employment, a crisis of our future, a crisis for many of our children in the future, which has to be met by policies very much different from those which are presently being pursued by this Government; pursued in the free trade negotiations, pursued in the ineffective operation of Investment Canada, and pursued in the legislation that established Investment Canada.

We call, not just for a condemnation of what this Government has done—frankly, this Government is sliding, hopefully, quickly into oblivion—but for a set of new policies, a set of policies, based not on rejection of foreign investment, but on safeguards, on review procedures, on careful work with foreign investors to see that they actually benefit this country in the way that we have indicated in our motion.

We call too for much tougher legislation in the area of foreign investment to permit that kind of surveillance to take place, and to take place effectively. We call too for control with respect to companies leaving the country, and not just those entering the country. That is the wave of the future. And finally, Mr. Speaker, we call above all for communities to have much more control over what is happening to them and the investors within them, because it is those communities which are suffering, as my community has suffered, from the unregulated, unmonitored activities of companies like Cross-LaSalle, and the others to whom I have referred. It is a system which must change for the sake of our future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

• (1300)

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the opportunity to speak to some of the socialist dialogue we have heard to pass. I want to ensure that the record of my community is brought forward.

The Hon. Member referred to the names of some companies. I would like to bring forward the names of the following companies: Imperial Oil, Esso, Dow Chemical, Fiberglas, Cabot Carbon, Sun Oil, Shell Oil, Dupont, Welland Chemical, CIL, and Union Carbide.

I would also like to talk about some instances of American and European companies investing in my community. For example, Imperial Oil came to Sarnia—Lambton in 1897, and Dow Chemical in the 1940s. At that time they had a handful of workers. Now they employ over 2,500 workers. They are excellent corporate citizens who brought with them maturity from the United States and other countries. They established some of the finest pension programs for workers in all of Canada.

I would not want this opportunity to pass without mentioning the great contribution foreign investment has made to my community, in a less regulated way than what the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) indicated the Government should attempt. I just want to be sure that the record is put before the House today in connection with the contribution of foreign investment to a very important part of Ontario.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my responses to the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) are always coloured by the fact that our communities are downstream from his magnificent chemical plants. We often bear the consequences of being downstream, as was the case with the Dow blob which still continues. We are still cleaning up material from the river bed many months after the first discovery, many months after the first initiatives were taken in respect of the blob.

The key thing I want to say is that the Hon. Member has entirely missed the point of my speech and the point of the motion before us today. Within the New Democratic Party there is not an opposition to foreign investment. There is an opposition to foreign investment coming into the country without any restriction or safeguard. This is why we have fought for legislation to be as effective as possible in respect of foreign companies, and for it to be implemented effectively.

However, I have certainly worked hard to try to bring foreign investors into my constituency or my community, because I think they can make a contribution. Certainly many of the auto plants in my community make a contribution, but they do so in large part because, in the case of auto plants, of the 60 per cent safeguards in the Auto Pact, and in the case of some other companies because of some commitments which they were brought to make under previous legislation and which I would hope they would be brought to make in a forceful manner under future legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell) and, if there is time, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I will try to leave time for the Parliamentary Secretary to make some comments.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) mentioned that Sheller-Globe is shutting down its plant in Windsor. That is very unfortunate, but I would not want the rest of the country to get the impression that Sheller-Globe of Kingsville in my riding is closing down.

Mr. McDermid: Or Sheller-Globe in Brampton.

Mr. Caldwell: It is staying open and is very healthy.

I think the Hon. Member has raised some interesting points. I think that maybe there has to be closer monitoring of some of the companies which come in. However, I would not like anyone to get the impression that companies such as Sheller-Globe and some of the others which have closed down in the area came under the policies of Investment Canada. They were under FIRA. They came under the auspices of the previous Government, with all very good intentions. I am not saying that the intentions were not there, but I have had several cases in my riding where companies received very sizable grants to come in and locate in my particular area, a number of years ago, stayed for a year, and then closed down.

For example, in Blenheim, a plant received a $5 million grant from the federal Government and within a year it was out of business. That plant is now operating again. It did not receive any assistance from this Government, but it is a foreign investment and it is doing very well. We must ensure that when we give incentives to these companies they do not just move out the next year.

I also bring to the attention of the Hon. Member and to the rest of the country that Windsor has received more investment over the past two or three years per capita than any other city in Canada, other than Hamilton. Those are not my figures, those are from the Essex-Windsor Industrial Commission. Windsor has been doing very well. The Hon. Member would lead us to believe that Windsor has not been doing very well. Windsor is booming; Essex County and Kent County are booming.

If the Hon. Member recalls, back in 1984 the unemployment rate in Windsor was somewhere around 13 per cent to 14 per cent. It is now down below 10 per cent. Despite that fact, and the Hon. Member asked about it yesterday, it is not the best in Canada, but certainly we are doing very well in the area and have come a long way in the past couple of years in enticing investment into the area.

There is to be more investment, and the Hon. Member knows it. Many inquiries are being made about the Windsor and Essex County area, by investors wanting to come into the area because we have an excellent workforce.

It is unfortunate that companies like Sheller-Globe move out. I am not sure how one stops them. If a company is going to go and wants to go, how does one stop it from going? That is the problem.

I would agree with the Hon. Member that maybe we should not be giving the incentives to come in when they are not really serious. Maybe they should have to make a commitment to stay when they come in. However, if it is an unprofitable company—and Sheller-Globe was not; it was reasonably profitable—I do not know how one makes it stay. Maybe he has an idea on how we make someone stay who does not want to stay.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, very briefly I should indicate that I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Caldwell) has finally seen the light on this issue and is now stating that he is in favour of tighter restrictions being put in place in respect of foreign investment.

Mr. McDermid: That is not what he said.

Mr. Langdon: That is actually what he said, if you check the "blues".

Mr. McDermid: An old NDP trick.

Mr. Langdon: That is exactly what he said. In any event, perhaps I could continue.

An Hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. Langdon: As I said, check the "blues" and you can make your point at that stage.

Mr. McDermid: I will.

Mr. Langdon: I would like to say something in respect of one point which my colleague raised. He suggested that these were decisions on the part of FIRA. Both the decisions which dealt with Gulf and Western and with Cross-LaSalle were decisions from the new agency, Investment Canada, and must be taken as reflective of the Government's new policies in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

It being 1.10 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.10 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) had completed initial debate at 1.10 p.m. I would like to recognize the next speaker in the debate. The Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate on the motion from the fevered imagination of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) will be brief and to the point so we can dismiss this false controversy once and for all. That is the only reason I would leave the most important meeting in Ottawa today with representatives of the 13 other member nations of the Cairns Group of agricultural trading nations. I appreciate the courtesy of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) for allowing me to speak now, in time to return to the conference where I and my colleagues are representing our country and hosting our international visitors.

The Cairns meeting is making a determined effort to help the hard-pressed farmers of this and other countries, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) noted today in his opening remarks. Canadian farmers know this Government is at the forefront of attempting to solve this and other international trade problems.

There was a time, Mr. Speaker, when the New Democrats, misguided as they often are, were honest and straightforward, but what we have here today is a motion from that Member which Saturday Night magazine described as knowing everything about the economy except how to make it work. It is scare mongering of the worst kind. It has no basis in fact or in logic. Let me once more, as I have in this House before, make the record clear, as plainly and as bluntly as I can, clear enough so that the Members from Essex—Windsor and Winnipeg—Fort Garry can understand it.

I am informed that there is no, and I repeat no, U.S. demand for unlimited or unfettered investment freedom in Canada on the negotiating table. If there were, it would be rejected. We would refuse. Our negotiator knows that. Any such arrangement would have to be reciprocal, and the U.S. itself is in no position to deliver. Indeed, the U.S. itself limits foreign investment in certain key sectors. It restricts access in such areas as aviation, broadcasting and telecommunications, to name but a few.

The trade Bill which recently passed the American House of Representatives calls for a review of foreign investment on the grounds of "national security" and "essential commerce". That Bill would empower the administration to block those investments which might have a negative impact in those areas. This is symbolic of the growing protectionist mood in the United States.

My Cabinet colleagues, including the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), other Ministers and myself, have repeatedly said in this House and elsewhere that any free trade deal with the United States will protect our political sovereignty and our cultural identity. In fact, just two months ago this House overwhelmingly passed a resolution saying just that.

Part of that political sovereignty, of course, is to make decisions in the best economic interests of Canada. Unlike those in the Opposition, this Government does not believe that foreign investment is automatically evil. I am really surprised at the Hon. Member for bringing this motion forward. His own leader in his own riding of Oshawa is heavily dependent upon foreign investment from the U.S. to maintain the jobs of his own voters. I find it so inconsistent that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) owes his presence in the House to voters who are on the payroll of American companies, yet his Party comes here regularly to dump on American investment and those American companies.

We believe that foreign investment can create jobs, which we all need in Canada. That is why we dismantled the National Energy Program. That is why we changed the Foreign Investment Review Agency to Investment Canada and welcomed foreign investment from all countries to Canada. Last year we had record levels of foreign investment. I spend a lot of my time, as do my Cabinet colleagues, travelling to countries saying, please bring your money to Canada, invest and create new jobs for Canadians. Perhaps the advantages of this approach are finally getting through to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, because I noticed in his motion he admits, reluctantly, that investment can create jobs.

My colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) will deal with the inaccurate assertions made by the Opposition regarding investment and job creation. The Opposition has referred to Investment Canada's annual report and has misconstrued the meaning of certain statistics contained in it.

The more accurate way to describe what is happening to the economy is to state that 60 per cent of the investment transactions recorded by Investment Canada were acquisitions, and 40 per cent were new businesses. The Opposition has focused, of course, on the asset values and not on the business values. Acquisitions are usually made up of businesses with well established asset bases. Business values reflect only the modest short-term start up costs of new businesses which are established by foreign investment. They do not reflect the growth potential and the employment potential of a new business.

In this regard, from July 1, 1985, to December 31, 1986, the number of new businesses under the Investment Canada Act totalled 573. That is 573 new employers, Mr. Speaker. Those new businesses created new jobs. It shows that the investment climate which this Government has created is attracting investment and creating those jobs which we promised Canadians.

What we have now, by our choice and through our policies, is an open investment climate with protection for key areas. We are having a hard time getting over the bad image left by the previous administration in this area. When I do travel abroad I am always told, "Well, Canada is supposed to be unfriendly to foreign investment. It expropriated property under the National Energy Program and turned away investment". We lost jobs and capital, which we needed, at a great rate. Our oil industry got shut down, which created devastation for whole sectors of our economy.

What is all the furor that we hear from the masters of fear tactics across the way? Is the Opposition opposed to new investment? Is the Hon. Member for Oshawa opposed to foreign investment? If the opposition Members are opposed to the creation of jobs, they will have to answer to the people of Canada.

I want to deal with our negotiator's mandate, which I have dealt with in this House in a very open way on many occasions. As I have said, he has a mandate from Cabinet to discuss trade-related investment measures and to listen to any U.S. proposals that go beyond that. We encourage him to do that. In the last negotiating session the Americans did not present a paper but suggested orally, as reported to us by our negotiators, some of the features on investment which might be incorporated into a bilateral agreement.

• (1410)

To summarize, yes, some investment measures are being discussed. Those are the trade-related investment measures which they have a mandate to discuss. That should be no surprise to the Opposition. In fact, they should welcome it because they are proponents, as are we, of multilateral trade negotiations. They also know that TRIMs, trade-related investment measures, are part of the Uruguay round. We signed the Uruguay round and therefore we are committed to deal with trade-related investment measures on a world-wide scale. Of course we will carry out that commitment on a bilateral basis.

As for other investment issues, as I have said, our negotiators have been given a mandate by Cabinet to listen to the U.S. and find out exactly what is proposed. Of course we know, and this House knows, that the Americans are asking for a broader agreement on investment. The House knows that because I said that here two months ago. I said investment is also on the table. All countries around the world are loosening their investment policies. We did so when FIRA became Investment Canada. The result was a record $6.8 billion worth of investment for 1986.

So far we are dealing only with trade-related investment measures. The Americans want more. We are listening but we have not given the negotiators a general investment mandate. When the negotiating team is satisfied that the U.S. proposals are clearly understood and the implications for Canada have been fully considered by Cabinet a decision will be taken. As in all areas of negotiations, the mandate of the negotiators is determined by Cabinet and discussed with First Ministers and the provinces. My colleagues and I regularly review all aspects of these negotiations.

Let me say in closing that the opposition Parties do a disservice to the people of Canada. They are making baseless accusations and raising unnecessary fears. I suggest that Members opposite let us and the negotiators get on with the job of securing Canada's future through a free trade agreement in our best interests. Canada will judge whether a deal is in the national interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister has returned so we have an opportunity to pursue further questions with her concerning the very serious issue of the direction the Government is taking on trade-related investments and the mandate it carries with it.

The Minister has just finished accusing the Opposition of trying to disrupt the negotiations. I suggest with all due respect to her that if anyone is disrupting the negotiations it is the Keystone Cop operation carried on by the Government. The chief trade negotiator says one thing. That is contradicted by the Minister. That is then modified by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That is in turn contradicted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Over the last three or four days we have had five different versions of what is going on. Is it any wonder that questions are raised in the minds, not only of Members of Parliament but the public as to who is really in charge, who knows what is going on, and who will ultimately make some kind of decision? That is the complete picture of how the Government has handled negotiations from day one. It has always been a matter of bewitched, bothered and bewildered rather than one of coherence.

The Minister referred to the question of how Investment Canada is performing its duties and the role of foreign investment. She suggested that we not take asset value as the measurement, even though 94 per cent of it represents acquisitions and takeovers. I would suggest that perhaps the best measure is the employment factor. From the $22 billion invested from June to December something like 5,000 jobs were created. That is, about 300 to 400 jobs a month. Compare that to close to 80,000 positions taken over. What we do not know, and I will elaborate on these remarks when I have a chance, is how much high technology has been stripped away in those takeovers.

Mr. Dick: Is this a speech?

Mr. Axworthy: The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) has been in the House long enough to know that this is called question and comment.

Mr. Dick: No question?

Mr. Axworthy: If he wants to read the rules I will be glad to send him a copy. I do direct a question specifically—

Mr. Dick: Oh, now a question. Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I am always prepared to take applause even from such dubious sources.

The Minister said the issue is very clear. Yet Mr. Reisman, our chief negotiator, is quoted as saying he wants to be very candid with reporters and the U.S. has, at every level, presidential, cabinet secretary, Secretary Shultz and Secretary Baker, made representations to our Government seeking a broader definition of the term investment. If the President, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury do it, I presume the Government might get the message eventually. How can the Minister stand up and say that the Government is totally oblivious of these American demands—

Mr. McDermid: We did not say that.

Mr. Axworthy: —when our negotiator has said these matters have already been brought forward at the highest levels? These representations have already been made.

I ask the Minister, have the U.S. President and these other officials brought this matter to the Prime Minister and other cabinet Ministers? Is Cabinet aware of the Americans' intentions? When the representations were made did the Government say no?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Hon. Member to prove that any member of this Government and Cabinet were in any way contradicting each other on this issue.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Obviously you were away.

Miss Carney: Let me just repeat what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said today in Question Period because I was across the street hosting the Cairns group. He said what I have said, that the Americans have indicated an interest in discussing investment. I said that in the House. I quoted from the record. I just said it again. He said we are prepared to consider those specific proposals once we have received them in final form. That is what I have said. He said at the last meeting the negotiators indicated there was an oral indication, not written, that the U.S. negotiator was interested in some details, but it does not go anywhere near the false impression fostered by the two opposition Parties on "full" and "unfettered access" to Canada.

The Right Hon. Minister also said when we have a concrete idea of what the Americans are interested in discussing it will be considered by Cabinet. He added that if they are acceptable and in the interests of Canada we are prepared to give our negotiator a mandate to negotiate. That is what we have done in other areas. That will not conclude the matter because Cabinet will retain the right to approve or reject and indeed oversee anything which might be discussed by the negotiator at the table.

As I pointed out, these things are all talked through with the provinces. If they are not acceptable to Canada we are not prepared to negotiate on that basis. The Right Hon. Member also said we intend to retain protection for vital Canadian interests as was made clear by myself and the Prime Minister.

I think if the Hon. Member checks that summary of the Minister's reply in Question Period against my reply and the record he will find that our Ministers have all been singing from the same song sheet and we are not singing bewitched, bothered and bewildered.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister is not singing that song but she is certainly performing it in mime, it seems to me.

• (1420)

I want to turn to what the Minister replied to me earlier this week when I asked her the very straight question:

> Why has the Cabinet not said a flat no to the attempt of the United States to widen this discussion about investment beyond trade related investment?

Her answer at that time was:

> —that the kind of question the Hon. Member is suggesting has never been put to us.

She did not say it has never been put to us in writing, she did not say it has never been put to us by the President of the United States in detail, she did not say it has never been put to us in detailed terms. She said it has never been put to us. That is a direct contradiction to what she has said today, which indicates that those positions were indeed put to us orally by the United States trade negotiator. Indeed, they have been put to us by many others including the United States Trade Commissioner, George Shultz, and the President, as indicated in every report we read in the press.

I suggest that the Minister must bear witness to the truth. She must respect the truth and clearly reflect the truth in answering questions or she will lose completely the very limited trust of the Canadian people which she still has.

The quotation I used comes directly from Hansard and perhaps the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) would like to check it. It is found on page 6241 of Hansard of May 20, 1987, and reflects exactly what I have just read into the record.

I want to make two points. First, the Minister, unfortunately, because she was not here for the thrust of our critique, has not dealt with the points which made up the supporting basis for my speech. Most important, I want to ask the Minister the question which has been our basic question throughout this week. Why is the Government permitting the United States continually to take the initiative with respect to this subject? Why have we not put forward our position with respect to extending this discussion beyond trade related investment? Why, from our perspective, has the Government not said no? If the Government does not wish to say no, why has it not been prepared to say what we believe should be extended with reference to investment?

The point is that the Minister has continually allowed the other side to take the initiative in these discussions and we as a country are losing. We are worse off as a consequence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated but I will allow the Hon. Minister to answer succinctly.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, it is hard to answer that kind of outpouring of rhetoric but I will concentrate on a couple of points. The Hon. Member said that I was not here to answer their criticisms in this area. I was in Quebec City meeting with provincial Trade Ministers yesterday. Last night, today and tomorrow I am meeting with international Trade Ministers. I am sorry that that is not considered by them to be the proper conduct of my duties.

Second, he asks why we did not run to the table and ask the Americans to please put investment on the table and then we will put investment on the table. That is because it is not on the table, Mr. Speaker. The Americans want to put it on the table, not Canadians. We are quite happy with our open investment climate. Our position, as I have said, is to allow the Americans to put forward what they consider a negotiating proposal. We are not the demanders in this. The Member obviously knows nothing about negotiations. In some areas such as dispute settlement we are the demanders and put the proposal on the table, but where they have an interest they put the proposal on the table.

The Hon. Member referred to bearing witness to the truth and he might live up to his own words. His question was:

> Why did the Government not, right at the start, say no to demands that would tie our freedom so completely, demands with respect to holding restrictions on investment which are crucial to jobs in Canada?

As I have indicated, the answer is because we never got such a silly request. The negotiators may have. I do not know what proposals float around over the negotiating table, but they were never ever brought to Cabinet in any way. I, as the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee, have never seen these "unfettered" proposals he has raised.

The Hon. Member has not answered the critical question. Is he against foreign investment in Canada? Is he against new jobs in Canada? Is he against General Motors in Oshawa? When he answers those questions we will be willing to listen to his proposals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, throughout Question Period during this past week one particular burning question has been on everyone's mind. Why is the Government hiding? Why is it up on its tippy-toes dancing around trying to obfuscate and evade? We know why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does it. He has all those Gucci shoes in his closet. You need 84 pairs of shoes when you are up on your tippy-toes all the time.

However, why are the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), and the trade negotiator bumping into one another saying we did not talk about it and we are talking about it? We have just heard the Minister saying with false indignation that everything is an open book. If that is the case, the Minister has no alternative other than to fire the trade negotiator because he has obviously contradicted what she, the Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State have said.

Mr. McDermid: Where?

Mr. Axworthy: The Parliamentary Secretary is asking where. I guess he cannot afford two bits to buy a newspaper. I will read to him from the Montreal Gazette of May 21, 1987. It reads:

> Reisman was asked whether refusal to bargain the U.S. demand for removal of investment barriers would scuttle the talks.
> "I think I can be very candid with you on that," he told reporters. "I think the United States side has made it very clear at every level—presidential, (cabinet) secretary to secretary, and at the negotiating table, that they are anxious to talk about investment in the broadest sense.

Surely even the Parliamentary Secretary who has been living in the large shadow of the Minister for International Trade so long that he walks in darkness is able to understand that point of view. The chief negotiator has said that the Americans have brought this to the table, their President has brought it to the Prime Minister, their Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of State have brought it to the Ministers. Yet the Government has not yet gotten the message. Can we believe that? Is it possible to believe that the President of the United States, the great prince of persuasion, has said something that the Prime Minister is incapable of understanding?

We can draw two conclusions. The first is that they are so totally incapable of comprehension that to allow them to continue negotiating free trade with such limited powers of comprehension puts us all in peril. The other conclusion is that the chief negotiator is not saying it as it is or the Minister is not saying it as it is, in which case they should get together and decide who is running trade policy in this country.

This is not a trifling item. We are not talking about something of temporary importance. This is a matter that goes to the very heart of the economic management of this country. The question is whether, as a result of the free trade negotiations, the Government of Canada will agree to pay the price of allowing the broadest possible foreign investment in this country without controls, guidelines or any definition as to whether that investment is in our basic interests.

One of the problems concerning the entire free trade negotiation issue is that we hear much about its benefits but nothing about the price we will have to pay for those benefits. We do not hear that these negotiations may result in Canadians losing their freedom of choice in all areas of public policy, federal and provincial. We do not hear about Canadians losing the right to decide what kind of country we want.

The investment issue is crucial because it dramatizes exactly the price we may have to pay. That is why we must pay attention to this issue and that is why it has dominated Question Period for four days. We want some answers as to whether the Government will indeed be paying that kind of price in order to modify the U.S. trade remedy laws. Will it allow the United States to have total access to foreign investment, as Mr. Reisman says they want, and as the Americans indicated in their own report last fall? Their primary demand is for a policy of investment based upon the principle of national treatment, which means there are no rules or guidelines. We are witnessing one of the worst cover-ups by the Government because it deals with something that will affect every part of this country.

Let me explain why investment policy is so crucial. The Prime Minister asked how could we be against jobs. The Minister asked how could we be against employment. We brought statistics to the House that were provided by the Government's own agency. In the last 15 months in which Investment Canada has kept records, there has been $22 billion worth of foreign investment, $21 billion of which has gone into takeovers and acquisitions of existing companies. Only 5 per cent of that foreign investment has gone into new business.

Some 80,000 Canadian employees are now under foreign owners, with less than 5,000 jobs in return for that $22 billion. I ask, does that demonstrate that this wide open policy is working to the benefit of Canadians? That does not appear to be the opinion of Investment Canada, given those disproportionate figures. One can only conclude from the figures provided by the Government's own agency that it desires further takeovers and acquisitions of Canadian businesses by foreigners.

Let us take the problem one step further. Some may ask what is wrong with foreign investment. There is nothing wrong with foreign investment, as long as it works toward the production of jobs and increased research and development in this country. Again, the record is not very clear. Investment Canada has yet to turn down or reject any application. Submitting an application to Investment Canada is like putting slush through a goose, because nothing is stopped.

There must be someone working on behalf of Canadians to require companies investing in Canada to ensure that the Canadian subsidiary will be able to export its goods, maintain employment and have a fair share of research and development. They must ensure that foreign investment will not be used, as it has been in the past, to strip companies of their technology, lay off Canadian workers to be replaced by their own, or to simply cut back employment. We must have someone acting on behalf of Canadians to prevent foreign investors from suffocating the opportunity of foreign-owned Canadian companies to export.

That is in fact what is happening, according to the Government's own reports from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. That Department prepared a series of industry-by-industry reports for Mr. Reisman, and they indicated that Canadian subsidiaries had a far lower record in export performance, conducted far less research and development, and in many cases had laid off Canadian employees, compared to Canadian-owned companies. In other words, the record of Canadian subsidiaries in a number of critical areas of the economy is not as good as those Canadian-owned companies. In fact, the report goes on to state that it is the Canadian-owned companies rather than Canadian subsidiaries that are exporting to Japan, Europe, Latin America and the Pacific Rim.

In fact, in a study by Mr. Samuel Wex that was commissioned by the Institute of Research on Public Policy, the suggestion is that in terms of total economic activity, Canadian-owned subsidiaries have less than 4 per cent of their activity in the export market.

Yet, here we are at a time when Canada faces perhaps the toughest and most competitive world environment, and in which we are imploring companies to create new products, develop new markets and create new jobs for Canadians, and the Government is shooting itself in the foot because it is providing the opportunity for the takeover of Canadian companies that are producing that export market and creating those jobs. It is allowing them to be sold out and simply become rubber stamps for many of the foreign-owned decision-makers.

I want to give another interesting example of why we should pay attention to the issue of foreign investment. Perhaps the House does not realize that Canada has the highest level of foreign ownership of any country in the world. Over 60 per cent of our manufacturing is dominated by foreign firms. The incidents of foreign manufacturing has increased incredibly over the last two years. In 1984, $3.9 billion left this country by way of dividends to foreign investors. In 1986, it amounted to $5.3 billion.

Mr. Daubney: That is because the economy is going again.

Mr. Axworthy: That is money that is not being invested in Canada.

Mr. Daubney: It is a measure of economic growth.

Mr. Axworthy: Let us consider the famous example of the Dome takeover by Amoco. That is a company with a wonderful corporate record, with about $30 million or $40 million worth of investment in Canada and $200 million or $300 million returning to the head office by way of dividends.

At the same time that the outflow of money has increased substantially, reinvestment in Canada has been going down. In 1984, $5.3 billion was reinvested in Canada. By 1986, that reinvestment amounted to $4.6 billion. Surely these figures should be a cause of concern and a reason that any further attempt to broaden or open the doors for more takeovers and acquisitions should alarm Canadians.

We are making these points because we will reverse that trend and return the kind of policy that will certainly have foreign investment, but foreign investment that is based upon Canadian interests.

Mr. James: We saw that.

Mr. Axworthy: We had foreign investment but the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) will know that companies came in under those provisions which required them to do research and development, to build plants here and create jobs here. The Tories have left the doors wide open and there no longer are controls.

If the Government caves in once again and entrenches an "open sesame" policy in a free trade agreement, it will be very difficult to remove. Future governments will want to reserve the right to change the ridiculous, inefficient and irresponsible policy that the Government is following because it is not creating jobs or creating economic strengths, but weakening those very things. We will want to change that when we become the Government. However, if the Government entrenches that open-door policy in a free trade agreement it will be much more difficult for more enlightened Governments of the future to protect interests of Canadian workers and Canadian industries. That is why it is very important that sometime this week-end the Minister for International Trade, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Prime Minister and Mr. Reisman get together in the same room so at least they can come up with the same message and decide what it is they are trying to do. Canadians want a clear picture of exactly what we face.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, after listening to that speech, I think it is obvious why the Liberals are in trouble with policy, not being able to make up their minds as to where they stand or what they want. We know where the socialist from Winnipeg—Fort Garry stands, diametrically opposed to the Liberal from Saint-Henri—Westmount and, we think, is somewhere in the middle of where his Right Hon. Leader stands. We are not sure.

The Liberals are trying to say to the people of Canada that they are receiving conflicting information. I want to read into the record what was said and I want the people of Canada to make that judgment. The Minister said this months ago in a speech in this House. The Liberals cry about this great revelation, that all of a sudden we have trade negotiations going on in Canada. Surprise! Some of it is controversial. Surprise! The country is going to hell in a handbasket they say. The NDP and the Liberals can only cry wolf for just so long until finally it will catch up with them. One of these days people are going to ask where they stand and what they stand for. We got an inkling today. They stand for bringing back the Foreign Investment Review Agency. They want to bring back that old dinosaur which held this country back from creating jobs for such a long period of time. It did not matter where one traveled in the world at that time, people said, "Canada is anti-investment. They don't want our money. They don't want jobs created there". Now the Liberal Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) wants to bring it back. I am glad we finally got a policy out of the Liberal Government. It wants to bring back FIRA.

I want to quote to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry what the Minister said:

> Also on the table is investment.

This was months ago, not yesterday. It was not Wednesday. It was months ago.

> All countries around the world are loosening their investment policies. We did so when FIRA became Investment Canada. The result was a record $6.8 billion worth of investment for 1986. So far we are dealing only with trade-related investment measures. The Americans want more. We are listening but we have not given the negotiators a general investment mandate.

There is nothing wrong with that. "The Americans want more", was the quote of months ago. Mr. Reisman said the United States is, "Anxious to talk about investment in the broadest sense". What great revelation is that? The Secretary of State for External Affairs today in the House of Commons in answering questions for 35 minutes on this subject was very up-front. Americans had indicated an interest in discussing investment. We are prepared to consider their specific proposals once we have received them in their final form. There is nothing inconsistent in all these things which have been said, and they have been said for months.

Perhaps I can ask the Hon. Member, other than for political haymaking, why is he bringing this subject up now, trying to befuddle the situation? I believe that if the quotes were checked they would be found to be very consistent. Why would he try to muddy up the waters now except for political purposes? Why has his Leader brought in this "unfettered" and "uncontrolled" nonsense, which are the Liberal's words, not the Conservative's words or our chief negotiator's words?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary, when he began his remark said he now understands why we are in trouble. I thought he meant trouble in the polls. There is only one Party which is in real trouble in the polls and that is the Conservative Party which is running at 23 per cent.

Mr. McDermid: Twenty-six per cent now. We are moving up. Be fair.

Mr. Axworthy: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. That Party has moved ahead slightly.

Mr. McDermid: The Liberals distort everything.

Mr. Axworthy: It is substantially behind the Liberals and substantially behind the NDP and has just moved ahead of the "don't know" category which, in the last three months, has had a larger proportion of voter support than the Conservative Party.

Mr. McDermid: We are going up.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact is that if anyone is talking about trouble, I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that he had better look in his own backyard because if any Party has a problem it is the people opposite.

The Hon. Member says this is no surprise. Of course, it is not, because we have been asking questions about this for two years. We have been asking if the Government is prepared to give up, to surrender, to transfer the right of full investment as a price of free trade negotiation. The Government all along has said, "Now, wait a minute. It is not on the table". There was all this dancing around until this week when we found out from the chief trade negotiator, Mr. Reisman, that in fact it was no longer a matter of speculation that, indeed, the Americans at the very highest level, the President of the United States, had brought the matter forward.

Mrs. Mailly: Not on the table.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member says, "not on the table". I do not know where the President put it. Perhaps he put in on the Prime Minister head. I do not know how he handed it to him. Perhaps they were sitting on the floor. Maybe that is where it was put. The fact is that Mr. Reisman said without contradiction from anyone opposite that this matter was brought forward by cabinet level Ministers of the U.S. government and by the President of the United States. They have put the matter directly—perhaps not on the table—right on the plate of the Prime Minister. What we wanted to know is did the Prime Minister say, "No, we can't do it. We will not broaden and give you national treatment in investment"?

All the Prime Minister had to do last Tuesday when we asked was to give us a simple answer that, "Yes, the Americans brought that to my attention and I said no". But the Government has never said that. It has danced, jumped, twisted, turned, but has never been prepared to say that when the President asked it did not have the guts to say no.

We know why it did not have the guts because it is going to give away that kind of open access in investment so it can get a deal, so the Prime Minister can save his political skin, he thinks. The Canadian people will not buy it. They will not buy anything this Prime Minister says. That is why that Party is standing at 25 per cent in the polls.

Mr. McDermid: There, you changed it again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have two more questioners. I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would restrain himself. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) and then the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil).

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Liberal spokesman on this subject today, FIRA and Investment Canada, was not at the Standing Committee on DRIE yesterday. We had a witness from the City of Brantford, an economic development officer, speaking on concerns relating to DRIE and foreign investment. His comments were, and they are a matter of record, that nothing was ever accomplished in terms of foreign investment for that community under FIRA. All they were aware of was delay after delay, frustration after frustration. Indeed, he complimented the Government of Canada for its change of position and legislation so we could have Investment Canada.

I would like to move quickly to my own constituency and give the Hon. Member two examples. Westar Pulp Mill is a Canadian owned company in British Columbia. It is B.C. resources owned. It was sold to Bathurst-Consolidated and the Investment Bank of China.

What happened? One of the first initiatives was to seek a small amount of federal assistance to develop a new system of feeding the boiler in that huge pulp mill, so that the end result would be a dramatic reduction in pollution going into the air, leading to acid rain, and pollution going into the water, and the smell. Not only that, the technology that would ensue has world-wide application in 400 different mills, all originating from that investment in technology and science and development at that mill, partially foreign-owned.

Finally we turn to Cominco Ltd., one of the world leaders in the technology of gallium arsenide, of zinc production a potential world leader in lead production. Who do we find marketing that technology? The ownership, as sold off by the CPR, is Teck Corporation, which holds 50 per cent of CPR's shares, Metallgesellshaft of Germany, 25 per cent, and M.I.M. Holdings Limited of Australia, 25 per cent. All three companies are good corporate citizens, putting a totally different complexion on the obtuse statements of the spokesman for the Liberal Party in today's debate.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). I am surprised he did not bring up the issue of Kootenay Power and Light Company—

Mr. Brisco: I would be delighted to.

Mr. Axworthy: —which represents, Mr. Speaker, the first time in the history of this country that we are allowing a major public power utility to be taken over by foreign interests.

Mr. Brisco: No, it is not.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, 7,000 people signed a petition against that takeover. Investment Canada, this wonderful agency that the Tories put in place, on December 21 last, in the dark of the night, passed on that application, without even considering the evidence from—

An Hon. Member: They have never been known to meet late at night.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to provide proper information to the Tory MPs. Thank God they can get good information from somewhere. They obviously do not get it from their own sources.

The fact of the matter is, Investment Canada passed on the Kootenay Power and Light application without even bothering to take into consideration the evidence adduced at the hearings of the Public Utilities Commission of B.C. They simply said: "Go ahead, take it over." In that part of B.C. alone, 7,000 people signed a petition to stop the total give-away of a major public utility in Canada.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member opposite should be a lot more concerned about the anger and the indignation of the people in his own constituency at that takeover, that acquisition, because that, Mr. Speaker, is going to be one of the reasons why we will not see him at the next Christmas party.

The Hon. Member has talked about FIRA itself, Mr. Speaker. He said that all of those people out there were trembling with fear and loathing about the record of FIRA; that people were not going to come to Canada.

Let me quote what I would consider to be an acceptable source to Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament, that being the former U.S. Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Robinson. In a Conference Board study, Mr. Robinson, while still the U.S. Ambassador to Canada, is quoted as having said, "Canada remains a very good country for people to invest their money in." In that same study, 333 foreign companies were interviewed as to what they consider to be the major problems in terms of investing in Canada, and only 6.6 per cent said that it had something to do with FIRA. I repeat, 6.6 per cent of the 333 companies interviewed.

What did result, Mr. Speaker—and I will give the Hon. Members opposite the answer—when FIRA was in place, is that jobs were created in Canada. An example is that of the Hyundai car company. Hyundai Corporation, a Korean car manufacturer, wanted access to this market for investment, and a condition of the agreement was that it would create automobile plants in Canada. As a result, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was able to announce, on coming into Government, that Hyundai had come to Canada to create a plant. The reason for that, of course, was that FIRA was in place and had set as a condition of investment that jobs be created in Canada.

We do not have those conditions any longer, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we have nothing but takeovers, acquisitions, and shake-downs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil), on a question or comment.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, as one who comes from an area of the country with the highest unemployment rate in the nation, I cannot help but be struck by the dogma, the ideology which is being put forward to Canadians and to all Members of the House today. Surely there is no serious debate in this country or in this House about the preference for Canadian ownership, Canadian control. I am sure it would be the wish of all of us that all of the products and services we consume be made in this country. But, the reality is that, in my part of the country, as in other parts of the country, Canadian investors did not come forward to develop our human resources, Canadian investors did not come forward to put the unemployed to work.

We are being asked to live with 20 per cent unemployment so that the ideological fantasies of some political Parties in this country can be satisfied. Those with two cars in the driveway and a VCR and a colour television can read their novels and think about lofty subjects, but some Canadians have great difficulty meeting their basic economic needs.

For those people to stand today and suggest to Canadians that we do not need stable and secure trading relations with the United States to protect the economic opportunities that we do have and to build upon them is blatantly dishonest. It is well known even in my riding, Mr. Speaker, that much of the employment is dependent upon, not only the presence of foreign corporations and foreign investment, but also the export of products. This kind of rhetoric serves the philosophers well, but it does not serve the interests of ordinary Canadians.

Ordinary Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are seeing this to be nothing more than a philosophical debate, and not a debate about the needs of ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's talk about the view of ordinary Canadians. I take the Hon. Member to be an honest representative of his area. What is he talking about in terms of ordinary Canadians. According to an opinion survey published last week, 65 per cent of Canadians, or approximately two-thirds of ordinary Canadians, do not want further takeovers and acquisitions.

Let us also take a look at the statistics—

An Hon. Member: What was the question?

Mr. Axworthy: The question was, "Are you in favour of further takeovers and acquisitions?"

Mrs. Mailly: But that is not what he is talking about. He is talking about jobs for people.

Mr. Axworthy: I am coming to that. The Hon. Member says, "We want to create new jobs." Of the $22 billion in foreign investment, only 5 per cent went to new businesses. It had nothing to do with creating new jobs in Cape Breton. It went to the takeover and acquisition of large companies. The only employment created was for a bunch of lawyers in New York, those working out the mergers and acquisitions. That is where the jobs were going. They were not going to Cape Breton, or other areas of Canada.

I can sympathize with the heartfelt sentiment expressed, Mr. Speaker. As a former Minister of Employment, I worked very hard to create jobs in Cape Breton, and elsewhere. I can only point out that the unemployment rate now is no better than it was back then. In fact, it is a little worse in many regions of the country. What has happened is that this Government has allowed a concentration of wealth in the central part of Canada, leaving the regions to fend for themselves. It is a Government that has no regional development policy. It is denuding and shearing off the capacity of the federal Government to provide instruments of public policy to ensure that there are investments in the regions. This Government is shrinking the capacity of the federal Government to ensure that there is equal distribution of rights and benefits for Canadians.

The Government of Canada is simply becoming a rubber stamp for American acquisitions and is doing nothing to direct both Canadian and foreign investments such that the country generally can equally share in those investments.

The figures are in front of us. I sympathize with the Hon. Member, but I say that if he wants to solve that problem, he has one choice, and that is to leave the Party he belongs to and join a Party that knows about regional development—not one that turns its back on the regions.

An Hon. Member: You created the problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), on debate.

• (1500)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Government's position on foreign investment seems to be extremely naive. We are not entirely clear where it stands on the free trade negotiations. We have heard many ridiculous statements on what exactly is being demanded of Canada in order to get an agreement on free trade with the United States.

Certainly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and government Ministers generally have been very strong on the idea that foreign investment, whatever kind, whatever limitations or no limitation, just totally unfettered foreign investment, is good for the country. They seem to think that the more foreign investment we have, the more employment we will have.

We had a completely naive suggestion from the Prime Minister the other day that, for example, the City of Windsor, because it has a lot of foreign investment in the automotive industry, has very low unemployment as a result of the benefits of foreign investment. However, the unemployment rate in Windsor is just at the national average; it is not lower at all.

Let us think of single industry towns where the industry is a foreign-owned company. If there are shut-downs, slow-downs, lay-offs, or basically the company shut down the entire operation to buy a company or to move the manufacturing or processing back to its own country, the jobs are gone.

In the case of research and development we know that foreign-owned companies do not do their research and development in Canada. Financial services and management services are done in the home country, not in the branch plant. This means the more foreign investment, the fewer the jobs, the fewer high quality jobs, research and development jobs, highly skilled jobs, well paying jobs, and more secure jobs in Canada.

With the present foreign investment in Canada today, we should have the lowest rate of unemployment in the entire world if the Government thesis is correct that foreign investment necessarily creates more jobs. It does not. It depends upon the industry. It depends upon many situations.

We need investment. There is a place for foreign investment. We must make decisions to ensure that in any particular case the investment will be good for the country. If it is not, we need the power to say no to that foreign investment and, instead, to encourage Canadian investment.

What do the Americans want in the free trade negotiations and what is the role of investment? I want to talk particularly about the cultural industries. This is an area in which the Americans make a lot of money in Canada. They make their money largely through sales, because in most of these areas there are not any tariffs, quotas, or trade barriers. Free trade negotiations do not mean reducing barriers because there are not any. We have had the anomaly of the book tariff. Fortunately that has gone.

The Americans sell an enormous amount in film, broadcasting, television programming, books, magazines, video cassettes, and so forth to Canadians. They are making a lot of money in trade already.

What they want, realistically, is not more trade or more sales, although they would like that. What they really want is to be able to invest more in our cultural industries. In some of those industries we have limitations on foreign investment. Those limitations on foreign investment have been excellent for Canada. This is the irony.

If the Government took its own advice on this point, it would get rid of all those limitations on foreign investment, if foreign investment were so good for the country.

I want to look at these different industries and at the roles of foreign investment and Canadian investment to see how foreign investment has either served or not served Canadians well.

Let us look at book publishing and magazine publishing. Canadian book publishing is not a strong industry. The most successful, the largest companies, the companies with the largest revenues, the big sellers to our educational network, to provincial boards of education, have been foreign-owned, foreign-controlled companies. They are the big money makers. In fact, most Canadian-authored books are produced by a small number of Canadian-owned companies. If we want to talk about developing our own culture, if we want to talk about access of Canadian authors to getting their works out there to be read by people, we must turn to the Canadian-owned sector.

Canadian-owned companies published 85 per cent of Canadian authored books. Most of the books sold in Canada are foreign produced, so most of the revenues from book sales go back to other countries, and that is largely the United States. The Canadian owned companies happen to be the companies which export the most too.

We are not very big in exporting books, but Canadian-owned, small publishing houses exported 7 per cent of their sales. Large Canadian-owned publishing companies exported 12 per cent of their sales. However, when we look at foreign-owned companies, we see that their exports were only 1.7 per cent of sales. In short, there is scarcely any export from these foreign companies.

If we are to think about a vital industry, an industry which will be exporting, producing jobs in Canada, and getting the creativity and ideas of Canadian authors out to the rest of the world, we must look to the Canadian-owned companies. The American-owned companies are not doing that. If we depended, as the Prime Minister would want us to do, on more foreign investment, we would lose what we have already.

The Government has admitted that Canadian ownership is a good thing in publishing. We have a policy statement dated July 6, 1985 from the previous Minister of Communications in favour of greater Canadian ownership in this industry. The policy statement is a good one, and I commend the Government on it. However, I have to fault the same Government for not implementing or acting on the Canadian book publishing statement. It remains a statement on paper. The reality is that Investment Canada has been weak. It has not forced the divestment which was called for under the policy. It allowed for a considerable period of time to say that it could not act retroactively and that it would not insist upon divestment when there are foreign takeovers.

Even this very weak policy has been objected to by American publishers, by the American Government, and by the American trade negotiator on behalf of American companies. The United States has objected. The Americans are making a fortune in selling books to Canadians. They would like to make more money. They do not want to see these investment opportunities curtailed.

We have a policy to encourage Canadian periodicals and Canadian magazine publishing. We have various subsidies such as a postal subsidy. The Americans have objected to that and said that it is unfair. However, most magazines sold in Canada are not Canadian. Most of them are still foreign. We have an industry which is trying to grow, and it is extremely important that it be given various advantages.

We have requirements on advertising to encourage advertisements being placed in Canadian-owned periodicals as opposed to foreign periodicals. The United States has objected to that. That amount of protectionism, the kind of protectionism which the Government says is evil, has resulted in a thriving industry. It has resulted in Canadian writers, printers, binders, and all such people getting jobs and getting their ideas out there to other Canadians; in uniting Canadians from coast-to-coast; and in getting ideas around. It absolutely requires some rules, regulations, and controls. These are dirty words to the Conservatives, but the results are not bad at all. They are not unfortunate or miserable results; they are excellent results. Ideas are getting around. People are getting jobs. Authors are getting paid. Royalties are being paid. All this is very healthy for that industry.

Another area has actually shown a great deal of success for Canadians as a result of having a Canadian ownership policy. It is something that we would like to be much stronger in the case of publishing. I am referring to broadcasting. It is a success story. It did not happen by accident. This was an area in which investment was largely American. A policy decision was taken by the previous Government back in the 1960s to limit foreign investment—it was in fact American, but the limitation was on foreign investment—to only 20 per cent of broadcasting companies. In short, there must be 80 per cent Canadian ownership and control of these companies.

There was a gradual period of divestment. Instead of Canadian banks lending money to Americans to buy into the industry, they lend money to Canadians to buy into it. Now we have a solidly Canadian-owned industry. In the period from 1968 to 1973 earnings in broadcasting increased 700 per cent, thanks to these rules, thanks to this protectionism, thanks to this control. Jobs in broadcasting at least doubled in that period.

We would like to see more of the revenues produced in this very important industry go into Canadian production. There is certainly room for much more Canadian programming on the air. It is not perfect, but we have made some progress. We have made that progress by having Canadian content regulations.

We have had regulations on border advertising in television stations. The Americans are objecting to these regulations. They say that they are unfair. Fair or unfair, it is extremely difficult for a small country, a country one tenth the size of the United States, to compete. There is no level playing field when one team has 10 times the number of players on the other team. Thanks to these regulations, we have a thriving industry.

The Americans make a lot of money on Canadian broadcasting. They make it largely by selling programs to Canadians. Canadians are major purchasers of American programming, but the Americans want more because broadcasting is a very lucrative industry. Canadian-owned companies are expanding and making lots of money and the Americans would like to be able to buy into it. The Americans are not content simply to make money on sales; they want money from investment. The Americans want to be able to buy in. I very much expect that if they were allowed to buy in, we would have a reduction in Canadian programming, whereas we need an increase. If we did not have Canadian ownership and strong measures for Canadian content regulations, we would have even less. With more American ownership, we would not be able to strengthen our position with programming on the air.

• (1510)

Film is an area which is not a success story. Film is a sorry failure. Here I have to blame the previous Government—which I would compliment for its decisions on broadcasting—for its reluctance and refusal to act. Task forces, the arts community and experts in the area have explained what the problem is. For decades the problem has been known, that is, that distribution is controlled overwhelmingly by Americans.

Let me quote from the Raymond Roth report on the film distribution industry:

> The Consequences of Foreign Domination.
> Distribution feeds the markets. It determines who can see what, when and how. It chooses the films to be imported, thus determining what products the Canadian public will have access to. It determines the marketing strategy for film in the various medias: theatres, videocassettes, pay and free TV. It determines the scope of their reach across various regions of the country. All of these decisions affect the cultural life of the nation. It is unacceptable that they be made by non-Canadians, purely in their own economic interests.

That analysis is absolutely clear. In the case of film, 97 per cent of the revenues from film go to the United States. They go into film production in the United States. We have some very good Canadian films being produced in Canada, not a large number, but we have some. They scarcely get into the distribution field because the distributors are American-owned. Even Canadian films have to go through an American distribution company to be shown in theatres in Canada. This is a situation that is not allowed in any other country. Canada is simply considered a part of the American market for film distribution purposes. The result is that $1 billion a year gets spent by Canadians going to movies. Instead of the profits from that money going into Canadian production, into hiring Canadian writers, directors, actors, technicians, camera people and so forth, it gets plowed back into American production. So there is a vicious circle and you get more American films which are distributed by American companies.

This task force report came up with some very good recommendations on what to do about it. The first recommendation was for Canadian ownership and control of the Canadian film industry. It states very clearly that it is essential that to have any kind of sane distribution policy there has to be Canadian ownership and control. But what does the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) do about it? She has come up with a different scheme. She has suggested instead that there be a licence import system. This licence import scheme is certainly better than nothing. It would probably mean a reduction in about 10 per cent of the control of Americans in our Canadian film distribution industry. Instead of getting 97 per cent of the profits from Canadians going for films, they will be getting roughly 10 per cent less than that. Roughly 10 per cent of that would then be going to Canadians. That is better than nothing. However, that is a denial of the first principle of the Raymond Roth report which says that we have to have Canadian ownership and control.

When I asked the Minister in committee about it, for example, she pretended not to even know about this recommendation. Her Assistant Deputy Minister seems to have rewritten the report. When he discussed the recommendations of this task force report, he managed to drop the most essential one, the one on Canadian ownership and control. He only talked about the other ones, the ones that are a little bit easier to implement.

Other countries have much better control over film distribution. They have various measures of requirements, quotas and so forth because other countries, small countries like Canada, small relative to the United States at least, have realized that if they want to have a film industry they need to have some rules to protect it. Small countries simply cannot compete with that massive American market, the massive advantages that that society has in producing and distributing its own films.

We have this excellent report. We have strong recommendations for Canadian ownership and control, but nothing has happened on it. The Minister is not even sure whether Canadian ownership and control ought to be an objective. In other statements that she has made, and when I have asked her, she says that she is going to talk to the American majors and ask for their co-operation. She is going to ask for the co-operation of people who are making a fortune in distributing American films in Canada. She will say: "Please stop making a fortune. Go away. Let Canadians do it". That is not the nature of the beast, Mr. Speaker. Businesses are in business to make money. They make money by distributing American films.

Why should they, out of the goodness of their hearts, simply quit making money in Canada distributing American films? They are not going to. Instead they are lobbying very hard to get rid of or not to have put into place—because it is not quite there yet—the licence import system. They do not even want that, which is a very, very modest measure. They are fighting very hard for it, and we worry about how much influence they will have on this Government. We know that President Reagan himself has raised the issue with the Prime Minister, protecting his old buddies in the Hollywood film industry to see that Hollywood continues to dominate the Canadian film system. So Canadians get very little chance to see the excellent Canadian films that, in fact, are being produced.

I would like now to make a few remarks about the music recording industry, another cultural industry over which we do not have much Canadian control, ownership or presence. An interesting thing happened a number of years ago. The CRTC came up with a requirement for Canadian content in sound recordings for popular music broadcast on the radio. Suddenly, as a result of this regulation—and this is a Government that thinks regulation is evil, awful and does all these terrible things—what happened? We began to get a popular music industry. Our songwriters and singers began to get an outlet for their creative work. People got jobs. Records were produced, thanks to this regulation. But we did not have anything comparable for classical music. We do not have any kind of Canadian classical music industry. Here you can clearly make the comparison. You make a requirement that stimulates an industry. The people are there. They can do it.

We have talent in Canada. It is not as if we are talking about a situation where we have to depend on foreigners to create our culture. We have all kinds of creative talent in the country, singers, directors, writers and all of these people who want to work. We simply require that they be given the opportunity. They will not get the opportunity so far as the distribution companies are concerned because they are controlled by people who are promoting the work of artists in another country. It is the legitimate right of companies to promote the work of their own artists, we don't dispute that. But we do not want our country to be run to the tune of the United States or to the tune of any other country.

One of the speakers this afternoon on this subject of foreign investment talked about the very difficult situation of high unemployment in Cape Breton. The speaker said that we in the New Democratic Party were being ideological in being concerned about foreign investment and seemed to take this very simplistic approach that the more foreign investment there is, the more jobs there are going to be. Unfortunately, that is not true. I was part of the jobs action group that went to Cape Breton and listened to people in local communities. They said very strongly that they wanted to see Canadian control so that money made in the community would stay in the community, be recycled and produce other jobs there. If you have a foreign-owned company, the money goes out in profits. Some of the jobs stay out of the country because they remain in the head office. These are the research and development and the managerial jobs. All of those jobs never get into the community in the first place.

Of course, there is always the risks of shut-downs and lay-offs. Foreign ownership means a great deal of vulnerability to a community. The people of Cape Breton told us that they wanted to see more Canadian control so jobs would be created and produced in Canada for Canadians. It is a very practical matter. It is not a matter of ideology. Where we see it will be harmful, we must limit it. Where we see it is going to be useful, where the benefits outweigh the disadvantages, we can make a decision. However, we must retain the power to make that decision.

• (1520)

There are some areas in which we do not allow foreign investment, such as culture and communications. We have these restrictions in broadcasting and are demanding more of it in publishing. We should be demanding more in the film industry. If we give it away in free trade negotiations, we will not have the power to make those kinds of decisions. We have to control these industries and build jobs in them because they are very important. We must have Canadian investment and control so we can promote our own artistic people and our own creative life. We cannot do that if we give away the power to other countries.

[Translation]

I blame this Government for having betrayed its mandate, for having betrayed Canadians in the free trade negotiations. We do need investment, but the kind that will create jobs in Canada, good jobs. For that we must have control, we must be able to choose among purchasing offers; we must be able to say no to banks and private companies like foreign companies—

—the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, there is an old saw that wishing will not make it so. I am afraid the Hon. Member has just proven that her speech was based on wishful thinking. Wishing will not change the fact there are 25 million people in Canada stretched over a vast area and 250 million people in the U.S. Wishing will not allow us to say that we do not want to trade with the Americans because they are so big and powerful and everywhere. Wishing will not change the fact that Canadians seem to be enamoured with things American. When the best seller list comes out at Christmastime—and I know because I am a published author and I went through it—you will see at last some Canadian authors who make it to the top and even stay there for a few weeks. However, as soon as the Christmas rush is over Canadians rush to buy American books. Is it because the big bad Government does not support the Canadian industry? No. As a matter of fact, this Government has supported the industry even more than previous Governments in spite of the need for cutting our spending and trying to bring down the deficit.

What happened when we put a tax on imported books because the Americans were taxing shakes and shingles? The NDP and the Liberals got up in the House and screamed because we were limiting the importation of American books. Why did they do that? Because Canadian booksellers, not big bad American booksellers, were worried about their bottom line. They were selling fewer books because Canadians, in spite of the fact that our books were cheaper, were not buying more Canadian books.

As I say, wishing will not make it so. We are living in the real world. What would the Hon. Member have us do? Should we scramble the airwaves and stop all American influence in Canada? Should we tell Canadians who love to watch American sitcoms that there will be no more cable, no more Cosby Show or all the other shows they love because it is considered unCanadian to look at things American?

That is the kind of policy recommended by the NDP. It would lead us to a controlled environment, a closed society, and we would not be able to enjoy the marvellous outpouring of culture from other countries, including the United States. The Americans are our friends and they are just as interested as Canadians are in their own culture. However, we are 25 million people living next door to a giant. Our very intelligent way of dealing with this problem is not to stick our head in the sand, not to be worried or scared, but to say we will negotiate. These people want something from us, we want something from them.

It has been said all along that our culture is not on the table. All kinds of measures exist in our legislation to protect those industries from being taken over by anyone, including the Americans. I do not understand why the Hon. Member chooses this unrealistic approach to what is a very serious problem with a great potential for creating the jobs we need in Canada, including the Atlantic region which has had an outpouring of billions of dollars and has not been able to create jobs.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mixes up a whole lot of different issues, but I will try to deal with them one by one.

First, yes, I am very well aware that we have 26 million people and our market is effectively much smaller because we have a francophone and an Anglophone population. For practical purposes, the number is much smaller compared to the U.S., which is 10 times our size. That means we must have practical measures to deal with this enormous imbalance. No one is suggesting that we try to close the borders or scramble messages. This is totally ridiculous. My concern is that we get good Canadian programming on the air which Canadians want to see. It is not a question of being negative about programming from any other country. It is a question of Canadians having the opportunity to see good Canadian programming in Canada.

In being so negative about my remarks, which were about the benefits of having Canadian investment in our cultural industries, is the Hon. Member saying she does not want Canadian investment? Does she want to see more foreign control? It is quite clear that the areas in which we have predominant Canadian investment are thriving. Where we have foreign investment are the areas with a great deal of difficulty.

The Hon. Member raised the matter of book publishing. She said her Government has supported it. I remind her that with the tariff the Government took $12 million from that industry.

Mrs. Mailly: On American books.

Ms. McDonald: Not just on American books. It was on English language books which could come from any country.

Mrs. Mailly: American books.

Ms. McDonald: It discriminated against Canadian authors published in the U.S. or in co-production arrangements with Canadian and American companies. Canadian authors were discriminated against by this measure.

Mrs. Mailly: Wishing will not make it so.

Ms. McDonald: I certainly would like to see more Canadian control and investment in our cultural industries, but I do not want to close the door to people being able to buy what they want in the way of books or magazines from other countries. My concern is that there be good Canadian books and magazines and films that they can see. I do not think there should be a tariff on American, British, French or any other books that come into this country. I do not think there should be taxes on books. I was appalled that the Conservative Government would put a tax on books.

Finally, I simply want to say that if the Hon. Member's point is that she wants to see a loss of control in our cultural industry then she should make it very clear that she is repudiating government policy of increasing control in those areas.

Mrs. Mailly: You know very well that that is not what I am saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wish to thank the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for putting forward this motion today. I am delighted to have the opportunity to set the record straight on the Government's policy on investment.

Let us start first with statistics which have been tossed around this House over the last few days by some members of the Opposition.

[Translation]

It has been asserted, Mr. Speaker, that according to Investment Canada's 1986 Annual Report, 95 per cent of all foreign investment has been acquisitions and only 5 per cent has been new businesses.

Mr. Speaker, this is playing with figures. Those figures are based on asset values, which, taken by themselves can be distorting. Acquisitions involve a mix of small, medium and large businesses with well established asset bases. By contrast, new business values reflect only short-term start-up estimates. These are typically modest and in no way reflect the potential growth and future of the new business. A more accurate way of expressing what is happening in the economy is to state that 60 per cent of the investment transactions recorded by Investment Canada were acquisitions and 40 per cent new businesses.

We all know that new businesses are the major source of new jobs and new technologies. In many acquisitions, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian corporation has been in financial difficulty and the foreign investor has been the source of job preservation.

Foreign investors also bring new capital, new management, new technologies, and access to new markets and thus contribute to Canadian corporate growth.

Using updated figures (July 1, 1985 to March 31, 1987), the number of new businesses coming under the Investment Canada Act totalled 631 and not 573 as previously mentioned. The value of short-term planned investment associated with these proposals amounted to over 1.4 billion dollars with planned employment creation of 10,240.

• (1530)

[English]

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) mentioned that foreign acquisitions amounted to $20 billion and that once again the Government was selling Canada out. The Member should know that more than $10 billion worth was already owned by foreigners and is only moving from foreign hands to foreign hands. That leaves only $10 billion of foreign acquisitions. The Member should know as well that this has allowed the Government to maintain jobs which were in difficulty.

I should mention as well that the total stock of business capital in this country is $1.5 trillion. When he said that we are selling Canada he should be more informed on economic information. Once again, members of the Opposition are good at playing with figures.

[Translation]

And I have to stress that Investment Canada's figures record only a fraction of the investment that is made in Canada. Investment Canada does not take into account either investments by Canadians or investments by the very large community of international investors that are already operating businesses in Canada. The best example, Mr. Speaker, is General Motors' $2 billion investment to modernize its two assembly plants in the riding of my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party, that is Oshawa.

Of course, this investment is not included in the Investment Canada figures mentioned by my hon. friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

I would point out as well, Mr. Speaker, that for 1986, international capital flows into Canada, for direct investment, amounted to $6.8 billion. This, as all Hon. Members should know, is an indisputable record for Canada. Moreover, foreign portfolio investment in Canada almost doubled in 1986 to $25 billion.

Much has been made of the fact no Investment Canada case has been turned down. It must be remembered, however, that the mandate of Investment Canada is to promote investment by Canadians and non-Canadians alike. It is not to block investment, Mr. Speaker, but rather to ensure that foreign investment meets our country's objectives and our government's objectives, that is the objectives Canadians have set for us. Investment Canada encourages international investors to discuss their proposals prior to filling a formal application for review. Numerous investors are taking advantage of this service thus resulting in cases which have a high probability of approval. Frequently there are also informal discussions with investors who are interested in making investments in policy sensitive areas such as the cultural industries and the oil and gas sector. In these areas we have enunciated clear policies.

As a result of discussions involving proposals in these sectors, some investors conclude that their proposals are unlikely to meet the net benefit test and therefore decline to file a formal application. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a much more positive and businesslike manner of safeguarding legitimate Canadian interests.

[English]

Now that I have clarified the misunderstanding which has arisen in the House over the past several days I would like to remind opposition Members, who may have forgotten, of what the economic situation was like before September, 1984. In 1984 we inherited an economy in which the unemployment rate was close to 12 per cent. It is now slightly over 9 per cent. Labour productivity was low, interest rates were high, and the chartered bank prime rate was 13 per cent. It is now 9.5 per cent.

The perception of Canada as a place to invest and do business in was, as we remember, very poor. In 1984, the World Economic Forum ranked Canada eleventh of 22 OECD countries in a competitiveness study. In 1986, Canada had improved its position to sixth. That achievement cannot be attributed to the efforts of the former Government and its policy.

The Government has contributed to a significant recovery in our business and investment climate. Over the past three years Canada's gross domestic product has grown at a rate second only to Japan. Employment growth has been first among all OECD nations. Corporate profit has become stronger and stronger. A recent survey reported that first quarter profits were 55 per cent above the level of the first quarter of 1986. All this has occurred, and yet our inflation rate has remained relatively stable at approximately 4 per cent.

When the Government came to power in 1984, we set out a national agenda which was outlined in two separate Throne Speeches and in the Agenda for Economic Renewal of November, 1984.

[Translation]

Canadians are all familiar with the basic elements of this broad policy. Let me mention them briefly: a basic assault on the federal deficit; a redefinition of the role of Government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation; privatization of companies no longer serving public policy needs; comprehensive tax reform; improved incentives for small business and entrepreneurs; a new science and technology policy; removal of obstacles to growth through deregulation, especially in such areas as investment, energy policy, and transportation; a basic reform of the financial services sector; new initiatives in intellectual property rights, including patents and copyright; a new Competition Act that has been introduced and which takes into account the new competitive environment; trade initiatives including strong support for new bilateral discussions at the GATT. In all of this, Mr. Speaker, what we have actually done is to make international competitiveness the conterpiece of our economic policy.

• (1540)

[English]

Yes, the centrepiece of this agent for economic renewal is to increase the international competitiveness of the Canadian industry.

Recognizing the importance of investment to Canada's international competitiveness, our Government introduced the Investment Canada Act as its first major piece of legislation. It was designed to address the irritants which had arisen abroad as well as in Canada with regard to the treatment of non-Canadian investors. As well, the Act was drafted taking into account the new realities of the 1980s and the 1990s. It was not based on the fears of the 1960s and 1970s, which are being recycled in this motion moved by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Investment Canada, a new agency established by the Act, has a threefold mandate. First, it is to review major investment in Canada by non-Canadians, to ensure that they are of net benefit to Canada. The factors used by the agency in examining those investments are: The effect of the investment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada; the degree and significance of participation by Canadians; the effect of the investment on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, innovation and product variety; the effect of investment on competition within any industry or industries in Canada; the compatibility of the investment with national and provincial industrial, economic and cultural policies; and the contribution of the investment to Canada's ability to compete in the world markets.

In determining the relative merits of investment proposals, the Investment Canada Act calls for a net benefit test. The simplicity and clarity of rules, the timeliness of the decisions, and the fairness of the test have all served to improve greatly the climate for investment, while safeguarding important Canadian interests.

Investment Canada has two more very important functions. It has a role to encourage more investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians. In that regard it works very closely with representatives of the provincial Governments and the private sector and has developed a very good relationship with those partners. Here, the emphasis is on technology-bearing investments and on joint venturing, two areas which are critical to Canada's future international competitiveness.

[Translation]

Furthermore, we have witnessed a slowing down of the growth of foreign direct investment, and a change in its sources. Japan has now displaced the U.S.A. as the number one source of foreign direct investment. As well the U.S.A. is now the predominant destination for investment. All of this has resulted in much increased international competition for new foreign investment.

I would like to say a few words about the new international investment environment which has changed considerably over the last two decades. In today's more competitive international environment, the very definition of investment has been broadened to cover the commitment not only of tangible assets such as capital and equipment, but also of non-tangible resources like production know-how and management talent.

What are the implications for Canada? Mr. Speaker, it means that we must become more focussed in our approach. We are concentrating on four main elements which affect our international competitiveness.

Firstly, technology. In today's international economic environment, rapid technological change coupled with the skyrocketing costs of basic research have driven even the largest companies into partnerships. For example, the new global standard for the compact disc is the result of collaboration between Sony of Japan and Philips of the Netherlands. Many corporations, universities and governments create consortia just to spread the costs of basic research and to focus the strategic technologies which underly progress in this industry.

Secondly, entrepreneurship. The entrepreneur manages technology and resources in an innovative way to bring products to market. According to a 1984 OECD report, of the total number of Canadian companies engaged in R&D, 77 per cent are entrepreneurial firms with fewer than 100 employees.

Thirdly, global orientation. The global market-place is a reality. Companies are adopting global strategies that allow them both to source and market on a global basis. Sony's Walkman and Ford's international car are good examples of products made for a global market.

The fourth element is new forms of investment which contribute to the Canadian economy without increasing external control over it. Technological change today demands flexibility which can be better served by various forms of industrial co-operation in order to share and exchange information, to secure a broader supplier base, to spread the costs of basic research, to penetrate foreign markets, or to undertake projects beyond the capacity of any one company.

[English]

Contrary to the allegations of the Opposition, Investment Canada does not encourage takeovers. While takeovers have increased in Canada, we are not unique. This is part of a world-wide trend. It is the nature of the current business climate and Canadian businesses are taking part in it as well. McCain's, Papier Cascades, Fleet Aerospace and Peoples Jewellers are only a few examples I could use of dynamic Canadian firms expanding abroad. By focusing only on acquisitions in Canada, the Opposition is ignoring the important new investments which are being made by non-Canadians. These are investments which are creating new jobs and fostering economic growth. The list is very impressive.

Our record in promoting and protecting the interests of Canadians through investment is clear and it is good. We have not only created new jobs, we have also saved jobs which would have been otherwise lost. We are increasing our efforts to attract technology intensive investments that make important contributions to Canadian industrial development.

As the Trade Minister has told the House on several occasions, the kind of disastrous scenario portrayed by the scaremongers on the other side of the House would never be acceptable to us and has never been put to us by the Americans. Ultimately, our new investment policy is the best symbol of our country's fitness and economic success.

The fact that Canada has an agency dedicated to promoting investment represents a new national self-assurance about Canada's economic dynamism. It reflects a powerful impulse to co-operate and to compete in the markets of the world. Canadians are looking for partners. They are willing to forge new economic alliances. They are fit and ready for the challenge of a global economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before questions and comments, I would like to recognize the Hon. President of the Privy Council.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF STANDING ORDERS—WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with House Leaders with regard to business for next week and also in connection with the provisional Standing Orders which would expire on May 29, 1987.

I think you will find there is agreement, Mr. Speaker, to the following motion:

> That, the order adopted by the House on Tuesday, April 14, 1987, in relation to the Standing Orders, which was to expire on Friday, May 29, 1987, be extended to expire when the House adjourns on Friday, June 5, 1987.

While I have the floor I would like to indicate to the House the order of business for next week. Monday, of course, we will meet to hear the President of France, Mr. Mitterrand, at 3 p.m. That will be the only order of business for Monday. Tuesday will be an allotted day. Wednesday we will proceed to Bill C-57. I understand there have been some discussions among all Parties to dispose of that item in all its stages on that day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, the President of the Privy Council, have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—FREE TRADE—INVESTMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Langdon:

> That this House condemn the Government for its refusal to reject flatly U.S. demands for unlimited investment freedom in Canada as part of the free trade negotiations, since these demands would threaten Canadian sovereignty and cultural integrity by removing Canada's ability to review and limit U.S. investment, so as to promote Canadianization and to ensure that U.S. investment does benefit Canadians by creating jobs, enhancing exports, expanding research and development and increasing sourcing from domestic suppliers.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the comments of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté, Langelier). I am disappointed that the Minister has not taken up the main bulk of my criticism of Investment Canada with respect to this motion, which is the very poor record, as we have been able to judge it, of monitoring and follow up by Investment Canada to see to it that companies from other countries which make commitments when they come into Canada stick to those commitments.

I cited this morning three particularly dramatic cases of which I will remind the Minister. Sheller-Globe of Canada Ltd., despite stating its commitment to great expansions in Canada, shut down just in the last couple of weeks in Windsor. Cross-LaSalle was taken over by the Cross and Trecker Corporation with the approval, in this case, of Investment Canada. This was a case which came under Investment Canada. It too was shut down in the middle of a strike despite commitments it had made to expand employment. Shortly thereafter it expanded its facilities in the United States in areas represented by right to work laws. I also mentioned the case of the Gulf and Western takeover of Prentice-Hall in which Simon & Schuster promised to promote 10 Canadian authors per year. In committee sessions last week, Investment Canada admitted to us that it has been well over a year since the takeover was approved, but no arrangement has yet been worked out with Simon & Schuster, and, of course, the catalogue of its books for this year, of which I have a copy, do not include any of these promising Canadian authors.

[Translation]

I also have, Mr. Speaker, another question that was put by a man who worked for the Department three and a half years, that is Mr. Paul Stothart who recently left his job with the Department and stated in a study on 21 foreign subsidiairies that those companies provide much fewer jobs in proportion to their sales than do parent companies. This is a question which I have to ask. Is it not possible for Investment Canada to enforce regulations and monitor the situation so that such subsidiaries will create more jobs in Canada because otherwise the lack of job increase will be the consequence of foreign investments. I think that this is very important and this is the reason why such a motion has been introduced. It is essential to have some control over foreign investments, but it does not mean that all investment will be denied. However, we need an effective control.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will not have time for a supplementary. Are there any other Members who have questions or comments for the Minister? The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté, Langelier).

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by correcting some of the statements made by the Hon. Member. When we are talking about records or statistics that do not appear to be favourable, I may remind the Hon. Member that the prime objective of Investment Canada is to promote foreign investment in Canada, by Canadians and non-Canadians.

As I said earlier, this year, because of certain changes and a new climate of confidence the Government has been able to create, not only with our American allies but throughout the international scene, we have had record investments totalling nearly $7 billion.

The Hon. Member referred to certain commitments that were not met by companies that acquired certain interests in Canada. He was referring to the publishing industry and to Prentice-Hall and Gulf & Western. The Hon. Member pointed out that the duration of the commitment to retransfer equity into Canadian hands was one year. Mr. Speaker, the company's commitment is for two years. The Government's policy to protect our cultural identity says that companies that take over another company must divest their interests within the two years following the takeover, and that is exactly what we are trying to enforce. In the cases mentioned by the Hon. Member, it is exactly that commitment we are trying to enforce, and that is why negotiations are still going on.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that 75 per cent of Investment Canada's budget goes to promotion instead of regulation. Previously, the latter activity tended to stop investment instead of promoting it. When these commitments are made, the Government's reponsibility is to ensure that they constitute a net benefit for Canada. But how do we determine this, Mr. Speaker? It is not uniquely and necessarily in terms of shareholdings, but can be translated into increased productivity and job maintenance, and I wish, just as the Prime Minister himself did so eloquently a little earlier this week, to mention the case of Versatile which has had benefits throughout Canada. This allowed us, among other things, to maintain in the riding represented by my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), over 1,000 jobs which would have been lost otherwise. That is the kind of responsibility and commitment which Investment Canada must pursue to ensure a net benefit for Canada.

In other areas, Mr. Speaker, its mandate will be to protect Canadian ownership of our technology where we already have the expertise. This is something we feel should be protected and which will indeed be protected.

For his information, I would like to indicate to my honourable friend that total investments in Canada amount to $75 billion a year. When considering statistical data, therefore, it is important to keep such things in their proper context. A while ago in my speech, I pointed out that over half of the takeovers these past few years had been of foreign-owned businesses. This means simply a property transfer from one foreign owner to another, Mr. Speaker.

It is therefore necessary to look at the figures and statistical data with the right outlook.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allocated for questions and comments has elapsed. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this afternoon's debate on the motion moved by our colleague of the New Democratic Party on this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Government of Canada, and especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have neglected their duty throughout this whole free trade exercise. I am not saying this to rile my colleague opposite. I say so, Mr. Speaker, because it is true. I urge the Hon. Member opposite, when he goes back to his riding this weekend, to consider what I have just told him and especially to listen to what I am about to say. I am sure he will agree with me that once again the Prime Minister did let Canadians down.

And the Minister on the other side, who will soon climb aboard his limousine which in all likelihood is parked in front of the building, might consider as he rides in his limousine these very important issues which we—

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: Will you shut up!

• (1600)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but you were distracted in speaking with the Minister—

Mr. Boudria: The Speaker was not distracted.

Mrs. Mailly: The Member opposite has just used language that is not acceptable in this House. He has referred to the fact that the Minister is leaving, and made some derogatory remark about his personal behaviour.

I do not think that is acceptable. He is already deteriorating in tone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will check the "blues". If the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who has been here now for a couple of years, did say something that he in his own mind thinks was unparliamentary, I invite him to withdraw it.

If not, I will look at the "blues" and deal with the matter at the next sitting of the House.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, first let me say to the Hon. Member across that I totally disagree with her claim that you were distracted. As we all know, the Speaker is never distracted. It is contempt for the Chair to suggest that the Speaker is distracted. We know that that is not true, and I resent that being said of you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: You are an embarrassment to this House.

Mr. Boudria: To come back to the point she has raised, as insignificant a point as it is, and as is usually the case when that Member speaks, I merely brought to the attention of the House that I hope that the Minister this week-end, when travelling around in his limousine, would think about the issues that I am about to raise.

Mr. McDermid: What limousine? He drives a Chev.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, what is unparliamentary about a reference to the Minister's limousine, which is probably double-parked or triple-parked outside, in the way that the limousines of Ministers usually are?

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the Hon. Member opposite—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. As I said previously, I will examine the "blues". The debate has been running well this afternoon. It is Friday, May 22, and we still have 50-odd minutes to go. I would hope that Hon. Members would carry on in such a way that we could close off the week in a nice, friendly way.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I promise to speak more slowly in order not to mislead the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). If I speak more slowly, perhaps she can get a better grasp of what I am saying, and so a better understanding. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to quote the Prime Minister, things he said in the past but, as you will see, did not happen quite the way they should have.

[English]

What we are talking about today, Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister's failure to address the issue of the United States wanting what I would consider to be unfettered access and unfettered limitation in terms of investments in our country.

Mr. McDermid: Those are your words.

Mr. Boudria: I wish to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the comments of the Prime Minister in the days when he was the MP for Central Nova. On June 1, 1983, he said, as reported in The Globe and Mail:

> This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. I'm all in favour of eliminating unfair protectionism, where it exists. This is a separate country.
> We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch-plant economy, in many ways, in certain important sectors. All that would happen with that kind of concept would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It's bad enough as it is . . . "

Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that the same fellow who is Prime Minister today is quoted as having said that in 1983! He said further, and again I quote:

> And things like auto pacts and fishing treaties, to name but two, are a small price to pay to have a wonderful country like Canada sitting on your doorstep. And so I limit my free-trade concept to strictly bilateral issues that benefit Canada and serve the relationship with the United States too.

Mr. McDermid: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Boudria: The Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) says that that is great.

Mr. McDermid: I did not say it was great. I said that that is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Boudria: Well, it is not great, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is not living up to commitments that he himself made.

I know that even the Hon. Member opposite knows better than what he is saying now. Let me again quote the words of the Prime Minister. These are comments made to The Ottawa Citizen by the Prime Minister on July 4, 1985.

We know, of course, the transformation that happened on his taking power. When he took power, his views of Canada and of the world, and particularly his views of the United States, changed dramatically. After all, the United States is very important to the Prime Minister. And even then, Mr. Speaker, he was a little bit more Canadian than some would believe he is now. I read from The Ottawa Citizen article of July 4, 1985:

> Mulroney corrected a reporter who asked about the Government's plans for free trade with the United States—"we never discuss free trade," the Prime Minister said.

That was his position at that time: "We never discuss free trade". Remember that, Mr. Speaker, because I will be coming back to it later. He went on to say:

> Enhanced trade or trade agreements impact not only on the United States but on our trading relations with allies, upon GATT—(in which Canada is a participant).

[Translation]

I will quote some more, Mr. Speaker. A little later, as reported this time in Le Devoir on July 8, 1985, the Prime Minister said: "I agree—with the term "enhancing in trade relations", but not with the term "free trade"". It is interesting to note how much this Prime Minister has changed.

Let us now see, July 18, 1985—

• (1610)

[English]

On that date the Prime Minister was saying: "In a discussion paper released last January that formally launched a debate on free trade, the Government stuck to its terminology of a comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement".

Let us see what we have here. We went to improving trade; we went to saying that we were not discussing free trade; we went to amélioration des relations commerciales; and then we went to a comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement. This was in the space of about a year and a half. We see that the Prime Minister's position has gradually changed.

We had a debate on free trade in March of this year. I should like to paraphrase what the Prime Minister said at that time about what we were undertaking with the United States: "We are engaging in negotiations for a trading arrangement under Article 24 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade".

When I heard the Prime Minister make those remarks in March, I immediately left my chair—and I am sorry that I missed part of his speech, but I read it the next day—and went to the Library of Parliament to obtain a copy of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Mr. Speaker, do you know what Article 24 is entitled? It is entitled "Territorial Application, Frontier Traffic, Custom Unions, and Free Trade Areas". That is not bad for a fellow who only some time prior was not negotiating a free trade agreement at all. He did not even want anyone to use the term in his presence because it offended him. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, that he said that to The Globe and Mail on June 1, 1983? We were not to discuss free trade in front of him. He did not want to talk about it.

What happened to the Prime Minister over that interval? Obviously, when he was singing with the President on March 17, 1985 in Quebec City that famous song which did irreparable damage to my television set, something happened to the Prime Minister to make him change so that his view went from what it was in 1983 to what it is today.

Mrs. Mailly: I hope you do not have any Irish constituents because the song was "When Irish Eyes are Smiling".

Mr. Boudria: Again I hear the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) making unusual noises across the way. I am sort of looking forward to her contribution in the House, but not all that much because it will probably not happen.

Yesterday the Government released a little booklet, a copy of which I have in hand. It is entitled Trade Negotiations, Securing Canada's Future. It contains the following subtitles: "The Talks: What's at Stake, Jobs for the Future, Opportunities Nationwide, Setting Rules for Services, Improving the GATT". This booklet will be used to stuff shopping bags at shopping centres.

Last night I thought I would read it and that I would be enormously well informed after doing so. However, when I first saw it, I asked myself: Why is the Government exposing itself at this point in the free trade negotiations? Government Members have been telling the House of Commons that they cannot reveal what is in the negotiations because they would be damaging their negotiating position. If that is the case, why are they publishing this booklet on trade negotiations?

Further, seeing that the negotiations are not finished, I really wonder about the wisdom of the Government of Canada spending $12 million of taxpayers' money to convince us that selling our sovereignty to the Americans is good for us. I have some difficulty understanding that.

Nevertheless, I read the booklet last night. I wanted to see what was in it for the people I am called upon to represent in the House of Commons. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent an agricultural riding in which there are many dairy farmers, some farmers in the business of egg production and poultry, and generally supply-management agriculture. I had heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) tell us in the past that supply-management would not be negotiated away. We heard the Prime Minister sort of weasel around it but not really ever say that supply-management was not on the negotiating table.

I said to myself that surely the booklet would tell me about supply-management. I turn to page 15, to the paragraph entitled "What About Agriculture?", which reads as follows:

> To the extent we can make progress in the Canada-U.S. negotiations in defining allowable subsidies or reducing other non-tariff barriers such as health and technical regulations, it will contribute to the resolution of these problems in the multilateral negotiations.

So far I am wondering what that has to do with agriculture, as you probably are, Mr. Speaker. Further it indicates:

> In the bilateral context we are not negotiating the status of farm marketing boards.

A little further on it says:

> Both Canada and the U.S. have their own unique systems for marketing farm products in a manner that is responsive to their domestic constituencies. Essentially, agricultural trade issues are global in nature.

I am sure you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere in there does it say that supply-management will not be negotiated away.

It talks about marketing boards but not about supply-management. Obviously you know, Mr. Speaker, as do all Members of the House, that that is not necessarily the same thing. Many marketing boards have nothing to do with supply-management at this time.

For instance, there are dairy marketing boards, and that is a supply-management commodity. On the other hand, there are marketing boards like the flue-cured tobacco ones, if that is the proper name for them, which do not have a system of supply-management. There are others like the pork producers marketing board which do not have a supply-management component.

This brochure itself cost $350,000 to publish. However, the publicity surrounding this exercise will cost some $12 million, as I said before. Those funds are being spent, and the farmers of my riding do not know whether the Tories across the way will negotiate, give away, and surrender our supply-management system. I say that to the Hon. Member for Gatineau and other Hon. Members across the way. They should be concerned about it. It is important for all Canada.

I should like to refer to another group which is very concerned about free trade. It is not getting any satisfaction from the Government. I am referring to egg producers. I received a package of information from them which contained a subparagraph entitled "Impact: 47 per cent of producers at risk" and indicated:

> In order to determine the effect of free trade, the Canadian egg industry compared domestic farm costs with the cost of U.S. eggs transported to major Canadian markets. Canadian producers with costs above those of imported American eggs are at risk. Canadian producers with costs equal to or less than the U.S. landed cost are competitive.
> If American eggs were allowed free access to Canada, 47.5 per cent or 930 Canadian producers would be at risk.

I do not want 930 farmers to be put out of business. It is bad enough that the present Government ended the moratorium on farm foreclosures. In the next 12 months 1,000 farms on which the Farm Credit Corporation holds mortgages will end up being the property of the Government of Canada, according to the information given by the FCC at committee yesterday. With that sad state of affairs, I do not want to see any more farmers in trouble.

[Translation]

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, farmers producing commodities that are now dependent on supply management do not want to see their marketing system traded away or otherwise dismantled in those free trade negotiations.

This is why it is important for this House to take a stand on this issue. It is important that I bring it to the attention of all members in this place.

Mr. Speaker, in October 1986, I received a statement from the Dairy Farmers of Canada, from which I will quote this one paragraph:

"Dairy Farmers wish to express hereby their solid conviction that any dismantling of or disruption in the overall policies and programs currently in place, including the milk supply management program, would be totally unacceptable."

This shows, Mr. Speaker, I am not alone in wanting to keep that system—producers themselves want it. And I urge the Government once more to state once and for all whether their industry will be protected. I note unfortunately that my time is coming to an end, or very nearly so. I wish I had more time to comment on that important matter today.

• (1620)

[English]

I would like to bring another issue to your attention, Mr. Speaker. People in the dredging business in Canada have not been getting fair access to contracts in the United States or elsewhere. Most countries have protective measures to protect those who are in that dredging business. Here in Canada we do not. People in the dredging business in Canada, because of the Jones Act and other legislation in the U.S., cannot work in the U.S.A. At the same time, the Americans have free access to come here and they do so in connection with many large contracts. I invite the Government of Canada to think about issues like this. It is fine to talk here, as the Conservatives do, suggesting that we will give away this and that to the Americans, but it is time that we started to think that we do not have unfettered access to the American market. It is important for Canadians to assert our sovereignty and to ensure that the Government and the Prime Minister get the message that Members of this House do not want the PM to give away our country.

There are many important issues to be talked about in the free trade negotiations. I am not satisfied with the way things are going. The people whom I represent in the House of Commons are not pleased either. It is time that the Government started to sharpen up in the way it is handling this issue.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, it continues to amaze me to hear the indignation of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and members of the Opposition when they hear that the United States is speaking publicly about concessions that it wants to gain in these negotiations. It seems to me that that would be most predictable and it would be quite surprising if we did not hear Mr. Murphy, the U.S. negotiator, indicate what it is he wants from Canada. When Members speak in this House in the manner in which they do, such as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, really they are helping Mr. Murphy in great style in his negotiations.

The Hon. Member spoke about the dredging problem. He makes the point about the need for stable, increased and ongoing access to the American market. That is what the negotiations are all about. There is no agreement to criticize. We were in the process of reaching an agreement. To suggest that Canadian farmers or any other group of Canadians will lose a, b, or c as a result of these negotiations is not only premature but it is also blatantly dishonest. These negotiations are taking place in an effort to achieve for all Canadians the opportunity to maintain and enhance economic opportunities.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there was a comment by the Member but no question. However, I will comment briefly on what the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) has said.

As to the first part of the Member's comment that somehow Mr. Murphy or his cohorts in the U.S. are supposed to be making these public declarations the way they are at the same time as our negotiator is supposed to be keeping quiet, the logic of it somehow escapes me. If they are negotiating in private, they should both do it, and if they are negotiating in public they should both do that as well. It should not be one person operating under one set of rules and another person operating under another set.

In terms of my making comments here in the House of Commons, I would suspect that an American congressman speaking in the United States probably would want to ensure that his area is well protected. He has the right to do so. I have the right just as well to speak here to ensure that the interests of the farmers, the shoe manufacturers, the factory workers and everyone else in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell who asked me to represent them in the House of Commons are heard here, and that is exactly what I intend to do.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. I appreciate the Member's representations on behalf of his constituents in the rural communities. I have met with many farm groups, including the milk farmers, not only in my area but across this province and from across Canada.

One of the good things about these negotiations is the consultative process that is going on. It is the biggest consultative process ever put together for a project such as this. It has proved very beneficial and has provided the Government and our negotiators with some very pertinent information.

The final sentence in the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell was that the Government had better smarten up and do something. The Government is doing something. We are having negotiations on a bilateral trade agreement with the United States.

The Liberals have not yet decided what their policy is on trade. We hear from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on one side that he is against the negotiations. We hear from the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) that he is in favour of the negotiations. The Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) agrees with both of them. We are not sure exactly where the Liberal Party stands or what it would do differently. Would the Liberals negotiate a bilateral agreement with the United States, our largest trading partner and the largest trading bloc in the world today? Or would the Liberals stick with the GATT process, which is a long drawn out one, probably four years to negotiate and a number of years to implement after that? Just exactly what would Liberals do when it comes to trade negotiations? Would they have them or would they run away and hide?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the people who have chosen to run away and hide when issues become a little too contentious are those across the way. They are the ones who made 338 promises and have tried to weasel out of most, if not all of them with the exception of capital punishment, which is probably the only one they should not have delivered.

I do not apologize that we here on this side of the House of Commons are trying to hold this Government accountable. We are trying to tell the Government that it cannot say something in 1983, something different in 84 and something yet different in 1985 and then talk about free trade in 1986. The people of Canada just will not go for that. What we need from the Government is a Government that is honest and sincere with the people, telling them exactly what is going on every step of the way, recognizing that some of the things being negotiated have to be done in private. Any negotiator knows that and all Members of the House of Commons know that.

We need, nevertheless, some basic assurances from the Government. We are not getting them. Not only that, but we are not getting what the same Government and the same Prime Minister promised some time ago. I could reread every single one of those contradictory statements that I read 10 minutes ago. That is not what the Government was elected to do. It was not elected to say one thing and do the opposite. The Government is elected to govern.

Our role here in the House of Commons is to hold the Government accountable. I intend on my part to continue to do that. I do not want to see the supply-management system given away by this Government when it has so far refused to give the assurance that it will not be. I challenge the Hon. Member across the way to show me in the documentation given out in shopping centres yesterday where it says that supply management will be protected. I will even lend him my copy of the document if he does not have one.

• (1630)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a short comment and a question. It seems to me there have been three aspects to this debate. The first is a fight over what the free trade negotiator, Mr. Reisman, has been saying. The Minister claims the Government and Mr. Reisman have been consistent. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said they were inconsistent and that this was hurting negotiations.

The second aspect is a debate on Investment Canada itself. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) made a case for the fact that Investment Canada is not working properly in monitoring the commitments made by foreign firms involved in takeovers of Canadian firms.

The third aspect is the broad ideological debate on foreign investment. The NDP has, I think, a fairly straightforward position on that. We are not against foreign investment but we think it needs control. The investors have to be forced to reinvest their profits, do research and development in Canada, get Canadians on their boards of directors and as partners, they have to try to buy Canadian, and finally they have to employ Canadians and act like good corporate citizens of Canada.

I have set out what I think is a reasonable position with respect to foreign investment and I point out to the Hon. Member that we are going to have a lot more of it. When the British rule over Hong Kong ends we are going to get a lot of investment from there. That is already happening in western Canada.

Does the Hon. Member agree with those kinds of provisions for the control of foreign investment? Would he take away or add to them? Does he have any further policy suggestions we could use?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I will address what the Hon. Member has referred to as the ideological debate over control of foreign investment. As he will know, and I think one of his colleagues raised it, as did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), Investment Canada has not refused any applicant, according to its annual report. That tells me something. On the one hand, applicants were so fantastic no one dared to refuse them, which is somewhat unlikely. Or, the more likely scenario, the Government has a deliberate policy of not refusing any application. This is for two reasons: First, its own ideological bent; second, because the Government did not want to offend Americans when it was negotiating this trade agreement. Both reasons are wrong, in my view. You never negotiate from a position of weakness no matter what you want to do. To bend over backwards before you start or in the middle of the process is not doing this country any good. The Americans sure did not stop imposing countervailing duties on us while they were negotiating.

As to control, not that I was a part of it but the previous Liberal Government enacted the Foreign Investment Review Act. It may have had flaws. It certainly made a few people in the U.S. get their backs up. Perhaps amendments were required. Some people brought to the attention of this House that someone opening a hotdog stand or what have you had to go through the application process. That may have been unreasonable sometimes, maybe not. After all, the largest chain of restaurants in the world is McDonald's and they sell hamburgers and other fast food. It is an important business. Nevertheless, we need foreign investment legislation similar, perhaps not identical, to FIRA. We need some form of protection.

Second, with respect to research, it is important to note that since the Government has been in office, 94 per cent of the foreign investment went to takeovers only. The Science Council of Canada said quite clearly that in those circumstances you do not get research in branch plants. That is not good for our country. In the debate on Bill C-22, the drug legislation, we wanted guarantees there would be research and not just branch plants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to represent the Minister of Communications (Ms. MacDonald) in this debate on a question of historic significance for this country.

[English]

I am also proud to stand in this House and speak about the achievement of our Government in building a stronger, healthier and more vibrant nation, more secure in its identity than ever before. A nation whose cultural sovereignty has never been more cherished. A nation which recently reached a new maturity, as witness the responsible way the 10 Premiers of our country, representing all of the people of Canada, dealt with the inclusion of my native province in the constitutional Accord. It is also a nation whose artistic and cultural communities have never been accorded a more important place in the priorities of a Government.

Unfortunately, we are debating today a motion which is both misguided and mischievous on such a crucial matter as the economic future of our country. The motion is fundamentally flawed. Why? Because it is intended to create uncertainty. However, I have faith in the people of Canada, unlike the NDP which fears the free expression of the public's choice. I believe in the common sense of the people of Canada and in their sense of purpose and pride. I also believe these grow stronger every day, not weaker.

I am not a timid soul. Neither are most Canadians. Therefore, I am saddened that this motion pretends there is a threat to our nation, that Canada has been presented with demands by the U.S. Government for "unlimited investment freedom in Canada". What absolute nonsense. Yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that our neighbours had asked for "a total unfettered right to buy up any Canadian business they want". Then he said "wide open investment". What do we hear about today? We hear about "unlimited investment" that would "threaten Canadian sovereignty and cultural identity". Yesterday he cited newspaper reports of an interview with our chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, and asked why the Government had not said no to suggestions that the American investor should be able to buy Canadian newspapers, radio and television stations, or publishing firms.

The Leader of the Opposition did not read the newspapers very carefully yesterday. I think that happens to him more and more often these days. He should look more closely at those reports, as should all Canadians who are interested in the trade negotiations and the firm commitment of the Government to strengthen and enhance our cultural industries and our national identity.

I would like to quote briefly from an article by Terrence Wills of The Gazette. It reads:

> Reisman's mandate does not—

—and I underline the word "not"— > —include bargaining the removal of restrictions on U.S. ownership in areas like Canadian chartered banks, newspapers or radio and TV.

This is a person from the media speaking. The article continues:

> Nor is the Canadian team authorized to negotiate elimination of such policies as ensuring Canadian control in book publishing, or a majority of Canadian directors on the boards of foreign companies.

All the poppycock from the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who has now left after giving a very low-quality speech as always—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that she should not reflect on attendance in the House. The Hon. Member could be in the lobby watching the Hon. Member on television. I do not think a reflection upon who is and who is not in the House is necessary at this time of the day.

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I got carried away. However, I must note that there is no one on the other side and yet this is an NDP motion. I find it rather spooky to be speaking to my own people. I am preaching to the converted.

As I was saying, the article is quite clear. Mr. Reisman has a clear mandate to maintain and protect Canada's cultural industries. They are not an issue in these talks. This is not news. This has been the stated position of the Government from the very outset of the trade negotiations. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and many, many Members on this side of the House have made our position known to Canadians, to Americans, and to Members opposite on countless occasions.

Let me remind Members of the words of the Prime Minister in this House in September, 1985. He said:

> Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

[Translation]

I repeat that neither our political sovereignty nor our social programs nor our commitment to fight regional disparity—this on-going Canadian problem we have tried to resolve by spending enormous amounts of money but which is still with us—and certainly not our cultural identity or our language, Mr. Speaker, none of these are at issue in the trade talks.

[English]

The motion before us suggests that the Government has not been firm with the Americans on this issue. The movers have surely forgotten the message that the Prime Minister took directly to the American people in his speech in Chicago in December of 1985 when he said:

> When it comes to discussing better trade rules for cultural industries, you will have to understand that what we call cultural sovereignty is as vital to our national life as political sovereignty . . . . In the United States you cast the net of national security over more areas than we; in Canada we cast the net of cultural sovereignty more widely than you.

[Translation]

That is also what the Minister for International Trade had in mind when she said last October that a clear message had been sent to our negotiators that the present Government's ability to protect and enrich Canadian culture would not be on the table. The essence of our Canadian identity cannot and must not be compromised. That is clear. Or, as was said in this respect by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on another occasion: The question whether certain Canadian cultural industries require certain specific support measures is a matter of internal policy falls outside the purview of trade negotiations.

[English]

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Government's position has been unequivocal. To suggest otherwise is, as I said, mischievous, which is a polite way of saying that they are stretching the truth. All Members know how many times this matter has been raised in the House and how straightforward we have been in reiterating our fundamental belief in the need to maintain and enhance support measures for the arts in our cultural industries.

Only eight weeks ago the House spent a full day debating a motion of the Minister for International Trade in support of the negotiations. That motion specified very clearly that the Government would continue to protect our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

During that debate the Minister of Communications spoke of the new maturity of our nation, of the inherent strength of our national character, of the self-confidence of a country whose identity is no longer in question. She reminded us all of the richness of our heritage, of the broad sweep of history that has brought together peoples from many cultures to form a unique society proud of its heritage and distinct in its social, cultural and political traditions.

Ours is an outward looking country, a nation whose voices are heard and whose presence is felt around the world and in many fields; in architecture and the arts, in music and dance, in science, in medicine, in engineering and in commerce, to name but a few.

[Translation]

Communications and other cultural ties that are crucial to the unity of our country arise from the make-up of our population, our cultural heritage and the special cultural mosaic and diversity that people from every part of the globe have brought, and continue to bring, to this vast country of ours. Canada plays a unique role in the world, a role of which it can be proud. In fact, our country is both a member of the Commonwealth of English-speaking countries and of La Francophonie, so that it has a privileged relationship with about one hundred countries.

Mr. Speaker, we are also developing privileged ties with the Pacific Rim countries, another group that shares some of our goals and aspirations, including trade and even a desire to improve the standard of living of their people. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) mentioned earlier that he saw this new burst of agreements with Pacific Rim countries more or less as a threat. Mr. Speaker, I can say quite frankly it is not a threat, any more than Quebec's pride and its desire to express its distinct identity within this great country of ours was a threat to this country, and we have acknowledged as much. We know today that by strengthening our regions, our provinces and our cultures we are strengthening the country. So we should not fear the influx of ideas from afar or new alliances that, in fact, can only strengthen our culture and our identity, not harm it.

By recognizing the need for an ongoing dialogue with Quebec, our Goverment was able to achieve a historic breakthrough in its relations with this province. Decisions relating to culture and communications are now prepared in a spirit of cooperation and cordiality, a spirit that never existed previously between Ottawa and Quebec. Indeed the signs are there, Mr. Speaker: the second francophone summit will take place in Canada, yet for 20 years we had not managed to hold such a summit, and here we are working on our second!

Our Government has every reason to be pleased about its record with respect to support for cultural endeavours. It has created cultural agencies, launched assistance programs and adopted regulations and tax measures in this field. There is no denying that such initiatives play an essential role by encouraging and supporting cultural achievements in this country. Our negotiators have said so to the Americans in no uncertain terms. There is no question of putting on the table either these institutions or our sovereign power to take fresh or different measures as the evolution of our situation may require.

• (1650)

[English]

Members of the Government have spoken often of the special needs of our artists and creators, and of the need to maintain support programs for the cultural industries. We have done much more than talk. We have demonstrated our commitment through thoughtful, well-planned and concrete measures designed to respond directly to the concerns expressed by the artistic and cultural communities.

When the Government came to office it launched a thorough and intense program of consultations, touching on almost every aspect of the cultural portfolio. We have seen the several reports which have been presented to the House by the standing committee studying the various aspects of culture and communications. They are very thoughtful reports that are very useful to the Minister in preparing legislation. Some of this legislation has already been introduced and more will come soon. We are doing more than talk in our attempt to help cultural industries.

We did much more than consult, we acted. Through those actions we have made it clear to Canadians and to the Americans, who are listening, that the ability of Canadians to express themselves to Canada and the world is not negotiable.

Let me remind Members of the House of some of those initiatives in order that we might better judge the motion before us. The Investment Canada Act itself was one of the first major legislative initiatives of the Government. In that Act, cultural concerns were of central importance. Cultural industries have special status under that Act and are subject to more stringent review procedures. The message is very clear.

In a similar vein, the Government adopted a publishing policy to protect the health of the Canadian publishing industry. We have also introduced a strong new book publishing development program, and have increased funding for the Canada Council to support Canadian writers. The Government also introduced a new feature film distribution and production fund and created a fund to support dubbing and subtitling.

We opened the doors to allow the film industry to benefit from other government programs to which it did not have access before. For example, Employment and Immigration Canada's training funds were made available to help Norman Jewison establish a film institute in Toronto.

[Translation]

We have set up the sound recording industry assistance program to encourage the Canadian record sector to produce and market musical programs and products. We have set aside additional funds for the Canada Council to improve access to performing arts throughout Canada, and as much as possible to stabilize the financial situation of artistic concerns. We have approved royalties which compensate Canadian authors when their works are loaned out by public libraries. This had been unheard of, Mr. Speaker. We created a special fund designed to increase the efficiency of and the access to public archives and libraries. We have adopted new measures concerning French language television. We acknowledge the distinct character of French language radio broadcasting, and we give priority to the need to design specific policies to take these realities into account. The Government firmly believes that the choice of French programming available throughout Canada must be improved. Not just in Quebec, everywhere else in Canada! This is why we are involved in TV Ontario's French network at the Canadian level and, at the international level, in the TV-5 network whose programs are aired in Europe and Africa. Mr. Speaker, we belong to the world's great French fraternity.

[English]

At the moment, the Government is preparing legislation to license the importation of films into Canada. This legislation will permit Canada, for the first time in almost 60 years, to exist as a distinct national film market. Previously, Canada did not exist as such a distinct market.

In the field of broadcasting, where the need for balance between Canadian and foreign cultural productions is most critical, we will be conducting a fundamental overhaul of the Broadcasting Act. In a matter of days we will be introducing new copyright legislation.

All of these initiatives cut across the full spectrum of the cultural portfolio. They nurture individual creators and performers, and they foster the economic health of the cultural industries. They are not meant to restrict freedom of choice but to enrich it, by ensuring that each of us as consumers of art work and cultural products will be able to choose from Canadian images, ideas and music as well as from the best from other countries.

These measures are not the work of a Government that takes cultural sovereignty lightly. They are not the work of a Government that would sacrifice national identity for political or economic ends. These are measures that are testimony to the Government's commitment and it is a testimony that has been heard and respected by both sides in these trade talks.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) for her thorough, well researched speech on the negotiations with the United States. I am particularly pleased to hear her references to cultural institutions and the cultural fabric of this country, representing, as she does, a culturally unique part of our Confederation.

Does she foresee a trade agreement to be something analogous to the trading arrangement that is reflected in the Auto Pact? When we in eastern Canada hear the negative remarks about a trade agreement, we look at the Auto Pact and wonder how the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) can stand in the House to oppose a trade arrangement that will benefit Atlantic Canada in the same way as the Auto Pact benefits his constituency.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, while these two subjects are of different magnitude, they do have many common elements.

The first reaction of the Opposition, including the former Liberal Government and the socialist Opposition, to the proposition of an Auto Pact was one of great dissension, fear and doom and gloom. That is in common with what is happening in this case. There are similarities with the Auto Pact. There is also a great resemblance in the benefits to our country of both arrangements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

Pursuant to Order made Thursday, May 21, 1987, this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, May 26, 1987, at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SEVENTY-SEVENTH INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the Seventy-seventh Interparliamentary Conference in Mango, Nicaragua on April 27 to May 2, 1987, in both official languages.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a stack of petitions from residents of Falkland, Avola, Lions Bay, Sorrento, and Monte Creek, British Columbia.

They are concerned about the proposal of the federal Government to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1990 for the Canada Post Corporation and believe that it will result in cutbacks, in deterioration of service in the Post Office, and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadian consumers, particularly those in rural areas.

They also believe that proposed measures have already resulted in the closure of many rural post offices and the cancellation of routes in rural communities, which will mean a drastic reduction in services in these small communities.

Therefore, they call upon the Government to make improved service the highest priority for Canada Post and to instruct the Government to abandon the policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural postal routes.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to table the following petition which indicates in part that all human beings are deserving of legal protection from unjust attacks upon their lives and that the present law regarding abortion does not provide such protection; wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code so that unborn human beings are protected by law from abortion.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this morning to present petitions signed by residents of Fort Frances which call upon Parliament to support the passage of Motion M-37.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

I would ask the attention of the Chamber and I assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that I will not be overly long.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED BREACH OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on Thursday, May 21.

[Translation]

I have studied quite carefully the question which the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) asked and about which the Minister complained, as well as the exchange which then followed. I am grateful to all Hon. Members who took part in the discussion, because they dealt with points which go beyond the narrow limits of a definite issue, points which interest us all considerably and which I shall deal with in this ruling.

[English]

In a previous ruling, which I delivered on May 5, I warned against the over extended use of our absolute privilege of freedom of speech. At the time, I said:

> Questions concerning conflict of interest guidelines are, of course, legitimate. Members are entitled to use facts they have been able to obtain and verify as the basis for such questions.

The question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway was clearly related to conflict of interest, although he stated by way of a supplementary question that he was not suggesting that the Minister was in a conflict of interest situation. He did, however, in the course of his question, refer by name to an individual who was involved in fund raising for the Hon. Member's constituency association. This led some of the Hon. Members who participated in the discussion to express concern with regard to the potential for abuse of our absolute privilege of freedom of speech, particularly when individuals outside this House are referred to by name. It is not simply that such people could be slandered, with impunity, without any redress available to them, but that wrongdoing may be implied simply by making a personal reference.

The media are swift to report any matter which smacks of scandal or impropriety, and false impressions can be created, not necessarily intentionally, by reporting parliamentary questions of the kind put by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway to the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I think I should repeat what I said before, that the absolute privilege of this place is something that is necessary for free speech. It is necessary because Members of Parliament have to be able to speak freely without fear. That, of course, is why we have this privilege and its history is clear. But we are living in a day when anything said in this place is said right across the country and that is why I have said before and why I say again that care ought to be exercised, keeping in mind that the great privilege we do have ought not to be abused.

The Hon. Minister in raising his complaint, did so not only on his own behalf, but also in defence of the gentleman referred to in the question. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) echoed this concern in referring to "the phrasing of questions which slander within the walls of the House not only the Minister but innocent people out there".

The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) as chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, has a particular interest and concern in this fundamental area of our responsibilities and expanded on this aspect of the matter. Frankly, I appreciated his thoughtful exposé of the problem, and the concern he expressed over what he described as "an evolving practice in the House of Commons of using names in here of people who are not Members of the House and, therefore, have no opportunity, no right and no chance to defend themselves."

I am sure that all Hon. Members would agree that we have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander, but from any slur directly or indirectly implied.

With the indulgence of the House, I should now like to refer to the issue of conflict of interest in the context of a Member's relationship with those who are active in fundraising on behalf of his or her constituency association. These remarks, of course, can apply to the relationship between any Member and any person in a riding association of that particular Member having to do with whatever activity might be in support of that Member.

The Hon. Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs freely acknowledged that some Members of his riding executive were employees of oil companies. He also said:

> I suggest that there are in this Chamber over 100 Members who have farmers as members of their associations but who nevertheless regularly participate in agricultural debates and vote on agricultural measures. I submit that there are at least 30 Members opposite whose association memberships include union executives, and yet they regularly participate in discussions and votes pertaining to labour matters. In no such instance would it occur to me to suggest a conflict of interest.

Those are the words of the Hon. Minister during the discussion on this particular point.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) agreed with the Minister that members of oil companies are entitled to be members of his organization. The Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), in what I think can be said a forceful intervention, endorsed these views and pointed out that many of the members of his own riding executive were farmers. Presumably no one would contest the propriety of the inclusion of doctors on the riding executive of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), of lawyers on that of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), or of women on that of the Minister of State for the status of women. Reductio ad absurdum perhaps, but I think this illustrates the point.

[Translation]

Before going into the question of privilege itself, I felt I had to express a few general considerations on the points connected with it. It is always useful to set guidelines and I feel that we should avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people who are unable to defend themselves in any context whatsoever against innuendos. I suggest also that in the absence of any concrete evidence, we should avoid suggesting that there might be a conflict of interest simply because a member of a county association is involved in an activity of some sort or is a member of a given profession.

[English]

I come now to the complaint of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have already stated that questions concerning conflict of interest guidelines are legitimate, and I did not rule out of order the question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. The Hon. Minister, nevertheless, saw in the question an implied slur against himself and another individual named in the question. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway assured the House that he made no accusation either against the Minister or the other person. His assurance was quite unequivocal, and I must take this into account. In addition, the Minister's direct and forthright statement, and the contributions to the discussion made by other Hon. Members, satisfy me that the Minister's reputation has suffered no damage and that no one is likely to question his integrity.

I, therefore, find that I cannot accord this matter precedence over other business. However, I would again remind the House that while questions concerning conflict of interest guidelines are legitimate, great care should be taken in framing them. I would particularly exhort Hon. Members to avoid referring by name to persons who do not enjoy our immunities. There may, from time to time, be exceptional circumstances in which the national interest calls for the naming of an individual. Such circumstances are rare, however, and I am sure that none of us would wish to take the slightest risk of harming an innocent person.

I would, however, like to add something. As I indicated before, matters like this are giving the Chair considerable difficulty. Of course, the Chair must, when a question of privilege is taken arising out of questions which offend someone, keep in mind that the question I have to decide, on a question of privilege, is whether or not the question has reduced the capacity of the Hon. Minister to do his or her duty as a Member of this place. That is the narrow question I have to face, and in this case I have no hesitation in saying that, as a consequence of the questions and the exchange that followed, the Hon. Minister's integrity is left without any question at all.

In my view, there has been no damage done to the Hon. Minister. As I have said, no Minister could have made a more frank response to the alleged innuendo of the question. Free speech in this place is dependent upon order. It is very important, especially when considering the extraordinary privileges we all enjoy here, that a lot of common sense be used.

I also want to say something else. I said the other day that the Opposition has the undoubted right to ask questions and to probe, and I also said that the Opposition has the undoubted duty to do so. I do not think there is any student of parliamentary history who would quarrel with that affirmation. I intend to be very vigilant in ensuring that those rights and duties are properly protected in this place. However, if ever there is an occasion when a Member feels very strongly that something should be revealed here, then I would ask that Hon. Members pursue that particular issue through a fact-finding mission of some care. If it is not required to do so in this place, then the appropriate procedure is to lay a charge and there are procedures under our rules providing for that.

In the interests of order, common sense and some concern for each other, I would ask all Hon. Members to be extremely careful on these matters. I thank all Hon. Members for their interventions the other day which, frankly, I found helpful.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—POSTAL SERVICE—LABOUR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House condemn the government for allowing the deterioration of Canada's postal service by undermining the principle of fair and equal services to all Canadians through the substitution of "super mail boxes" for door to door service and by the closure of rural post offices, and by exacerbating already disintegrating labour-management relations within Canada Post by removing labour representation from the Corporation's Board and by other confrontational actions, thereby increasing the threats of postal service disruptions or even shutdowns.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when we became a nation, a confederation, the Government had two principal roles; the first was to protect and defend the realm and the second was to deliver the mail. This Government cannot even deliver the mail.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in our view, which is supported by our spokesman and colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), home delivery is an essential service that must be reinstated in Canada. When establishing the Canada Post Corporation in 1981, the then Liberal Government recognized that mail is an essential public service. It is neither an extravaganza or a luxury—it is a basic service that should be available to all Canadians.

[English]

In 1981, the mandate given to Canada Post was threefold; it was first to improve labour-management relations, second, to increase productivity and better postal service and third, to reduce the deficit. Each of these priorities was to be given equal weight. Thanks to that clear mandate, we saw for a while some progress in improving labour-management relations in the post office and on the deficit-reduction side. However, in the Budget of February 1984, the Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), made it clear that the main priority of the post office was not to deliver the mail but to balance the books.

[Translation]

All that, Mr. Speaker, without any discussion here in this House, without any debate, without any regard for service improvement, without any regard for the improvement of management-employee relations. One thing only is all-important: to balance revenues and expenditures. We also want Canada Post to eliminate its deficit. But let us not forget the American experience. Their postal service needed 14 years to achieve that goal. It did not happen overnight.

[English]

By redirecting post office management to dwell almost exclusively on cost-cutting, the Government threw out the baby with the bath water. Services are being cut and Canadians are being short-changed. There has not been a postal strike since 1981. Now, because of the almost exclusive concentration of the Government on cost-cutting, labour-management relations have deteriorated to the point that there is talk of a strike. If there is a strike, the responsibility will rest clearly on this Government, because it has so reordered the priorities of the post office that management and labour are finding it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to work out their differences.

There are even some who hold the view that the Government wants a strike in order to make massive reductions in post office staff. Surely that would be too callous and too stupid even for this Government. However, we are putting the Government on notice today. It had better get its act together.

[Translation]

The Government should first reinstate the mandate given to the Canada Post Corporation in 1981 to improve labour-management relations, increase productivity and provide a better service, while reducing its deficit. Let us give management and workers the tools needed, and they will fulfil their mandate.

I am not blaming today the management of Canada Post Corporation, nor union leaders. Members of management are working within a framework. The Government directs them to make every effort to achieve savings. They try to comply with instructions. Their actions only reflect the mandate given to them.

[English]

Prior to Canada Post becoming a Crown corporation, the Liberal Government of the day had an interim policy of providing community mailbox service to new communities awaiting door-to-door delivery. It was never intended, and I repeat, it was never intended, that this temporary service should become a permanent replacement for home delivery. However, in June 1985, in response to the Government's fiscal instructions, the Post Office made supermailboxes a permanent feature. From that point forward, no Canadian who moved into a new subdivision in any part of Canada would receive door-to-door delivery.

By the end of 1991 there will be close to one million supermailbox addresses. At an average of two people per address, that means that there will be about two million second-class Canadians. That is unfair, unjust and discriminatory. We believe that every Canadian deserves fair and equitable service, every Canadian deserves equal treatment from his Government, particularly in the postal service, and every Canadian pays the same 36 cents for a postal stamp and so deserves the same delivery and the same service.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In addition to unfairness, my colleagues have reported to the House repeatedly that the boxes do not even work. Some have been broken. For some, one key opens every box in the neighbourhood. Some were frozen over. Some could not be opened. Snow made some boxes inaccessible in wintertime. Surely one is not constrained from asking, did no one in the Government recognize that we still have a rough Canadian winter?

• (1130)

Some time ago in this House I asked the Minister responsible to get rid of the supermailboxes. I asked him to restore door-to-door delivery. In response all we have had is a massive advertising campaign to convince Canadians that the supermailboxes are a great idea. They are not a great idea. They are not even a mediocre idea. They are a lousy idea and we ought to get rid of them.

How are the physically handicapped supposed to get to these boxes to pick up their mail? What about shut-ins? What about the elderly with low incomes who want to keep in touch with their families and who may not be able to use long distance? It is totally unacceptable that the Government is going to force an 80-year old widow to trudge through the snow in 40 degree weather to try and get her mail from a frozen supermailbox. That is assuming the mail is even there. Her pension cheque may not even have been delivered. She would then have to trudge back empty-handed after exposing herself to that kind of deprivation and sometimes risk. That is not the sort of thing

Canadians want to tolerate, and that is the sort of thing we are calling the Government to account for, and about which we are putting it on notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if that is the Tory vision for the future, I want no part of it, nor I am sure the majority of Canadians.

Let us look at other "bright" ideas put forward concerning rural mail—the elimination of home delivery, that is delivery to roadside boxes, and its replacement by superboxes at major intersections.

[English]

Our farmers are already in deep trouble. A way of life in our rural communities is being threatened by the crisis in agriculture. Yet the Government now proposes to make it more difficult by forcing them to drive 10 or 15 miles a day, every day, just to see whether they have any mail. What about the closing down of rural post offices? We could see as many as 5,000 rural post offices being replaced over the next five years. these are social centres in many rural communities.

In The Ottawa Citizen this morning I noticed a letter from a former parliamentarian, in fact one of the greatest parliamentarians in my day in the House of Commons, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill. His letter dealt with this very subject. He pointed out another aspect of closing down rural mail and I quote him:

> But it is not as great a hardship as Canada Post is perpetrating in rural areas, by closing post offices in small settlements and by eliminating rural mail delivery. Closing public post offices and substituting wickets in stores or private houses will be deeply resented because of the loss of privacy by the users. Canada Post should not have the authority to do that.

We agree wholeheartedly with Mr. Pickersgill.

The issue before you and the House is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Canadians want the mail delivered. They want it delivered daily. They want it delivered door-to-door. That is the issue and we put it before this House. When Canadians mail a letter they want it delivered, they want it delivered personally, and to the person to whom they sent it.

It is not complicated, yet what do we see? We see rates going up and service going down. We have one of the most expensive postal services in the world and we are not getting value for money. The reason is that the Government does not seem to understand that the Post Office cannot cut its mandate to deliver the mail.

What good does it do to balance the books by eliminating services? That is the easiest strategy in the world and it is also the stupidest. It does not take any planning at all—just cut the service. We suggested and the unions have suggested to the Government that the way to balance the Post Office's books is to improve the service, make it more imaginative, modern and competitive. That is the way to balance the books, not cut service to Canadians from one end of the country to the other.

The Government, through the Post Office, cuts the mail service. Who cares if a few million Canadians are short-changed? Who cares if a few million Canadians are turned into second-class citizens because they are not getting the same standard of service? Who cares if the elderly or handicapped cannot get to those supermailboxes? Who cares if in the process the Post Office loses its credibility? Who cares, the Government says, if other competitive services arise because people simply stop using the Post Office? Who cares? Obviously the Government does not care, but I believe most Canadians do care, and deeply. They feel this is fundamental. They pay taxes and, once more, they pay for stamps and they want equal service right to their door.

We believe that door-to-door mail service is an essential service, a basic service, that should be available to all Canadians in every part of Canada. We intend to see that basic service restored and that is a clear, full, and unequivocal commitment to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be utter confusion in the House today and I think we better get the record straight. It was the Liberal Government which stopped expansion of home delivery in 1974. We had cold winters in 1974. It was a Liberal Government that started the supermailbox program in 1982. The Liberal Government gave full authorization for that. The Liberal Government allowed Canada Post to develop and build these supermailboxes at a cost of millions of dollars. They were first installed in 1983 under a Liberal Government. I checked with Canada Post and not one letter or any other objection whatsoever came from any Liberal about the supermailboxes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: I think it is facetious of the Liberal Party to condemn the supermailboxes when they are the very people who authorized them to be designed, built and installed.

I read the letter of Mr. Pickersgill today. He was here 30 years ago when they started to install green mailboxes. I did not hear him object to that. The green boxes were first used by the Post Office over 30 years ago. The corporation under the previous Liberal Government used green boxes in both rural settings and to service urban growth. There is nothing new about these boxes other than the fact we have made improvements to them.

Another issue I did not hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) talk about was the cost. Where is the money for door-to-door delivery going to come from? I did not hear one word about that. It is going to cost something like $500 million to $1 billion to provide door-to-door service. I would like to see it back, but we also have to talk about where the money is coming from.

• (1140)

The Leader of the Opposition also mentioned that there are no improvements in the Post Office. That is not correct. There have been a lot of improvements at Canada Post since Mr. Landers took over. Over the last two years the volume of work mail has increased by 6.8 per cent while the number of employees has decreased by over 2,000 at a savings in excess of $60 million. This represents an efficiency improvement of 7.5 per cent. During the same period the over-all efficiency of the service sector in Canada increased by only 2 per cent.

Since 1984, 206,000 homes and businesses, a number equivalent to a city the size of Ottawa, were provided with service using 750 fewer people. That is efficiency. This represents an address growth of 2 per cent with 4 per cent fewer delivery people. We must all act in a responsible manner. If we are going to restore door-to-door mail delivery for all of these homes we will have to discuss the cost.

One of the issues that has been discussed in the Government Operations Committee is declaring Canada Post an essential service. We have heard from many witnesses over the last two years that they could not survive another strike. Dozens of small businesses have had to close down. They just cannot afford another strike. We have seen the evidence.

I have recommended to the committee that we get quotes from the private sector for delivering mail in the new urban areas which are serviced by the supermailboxes. That is an alternative which I have offered. It costs $25 an hour to put a postman on the route. If we want to have postmen in all these areas we will have to discuss the cost.

Is the Leader of the Opposition proposing that we borrow money or that we have a 50-cent or 60-cent stamp to pay for the additional cost of door-to-door delivery? He has a responsibility to tell us what he wants done. Does he want us to borrow the money and have a bigger deficit, or does he want us to increase the price of stamps to pay for the door-to-door delivery he has requested?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has not recognized the fundamental thesis I was advancing, which is that Canadians are entitled to equal postal service for the 36 cents they pay for a stamp. It is the Government's responsibility, through the Post Office, to improve services and labour-management relations, to widen the variety of services available through the Post Office, and to balance the books through improved service and not by cutting service, potentially at the expense of two million second-class Canadian citizens, and that will be the result of the Government's practice.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the support of the Leader of the Official Opposition for door-to-door delivery. I heard what the Member on the government side said with regard to costs. The adoption by the Liberal Party of the policy of door-to-door delivery is different than its policy was when it was in office. Are the Liberals now also prepared to enable the Post Office to be involved in revenue-generating activities? This is a strategy for solving the problem of costs which the Government has failed to examine and pursue. In fact, when the Liberals were in office they failed to pursue that as well.

Does this new Liberal thinking involve not only fairness in terms of door-to-door delivery, but also a realistic look at revenue-generating activities for the Post Office so that we can balance the books while delivering service?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in our meeting with the postal unions we said that we were quite willing to look at constructive ways of widening the range of postal service in an imaginative, revenue-producing way.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. I am interested in the so-called Liberal doctrine of fairness and equity in terms of access to the service of the Post Office and the cost. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) knows that not all people live in Vancouver Quadra or Rockcliffe. If the Liberals have that kind of doctrine, why is it that all Canadians who live in rural areas and have to pick up their mail in rural post offices are required to pay a fee for maintaining a box in addition to the expense of having to drive to the Post Office to pick up their mail, often in 40-degree below temperatures?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who lives in Prince George in the constituency which he represents, he will know that I am speaking for people in his area too when I ask for better service. Surely he does not deny that the quality of service should be a mainspring of the postal commitment to the country.

Without being overly critical, I must say that it takes 14 days for a letter to be delivered from Vancouver Quadra to the House of Commons in Ottawa. I do not know whether he receives any better service in Prince George, but when I am up there later in the summer I will travel some of the rural routes with him. We will see what his own constituents want. I think he will be convinced of the argument I am making.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I know the right hon. gentleman has developed a sizable reputation for his involvement in business. He has been on the board of directors of a number of corporations. I suspect that during those days corporations were going through what we now call down-sizing because of increased expenses and reduced cash flow. In view of his experience in the private sector, how would he advise the corporation, which one might say is bankrupt every year since it needs a cash infusion from taxpayers, to expand its services in the way in which he asks it to?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The experience I had in business indicates to me that if you want to balance the books of the business or increase its profit potential you do not cut its main product.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my formal remarks I would like to comment on some of the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition. He says "do not cut the deficit". He says, "above all, meet the demands of the Opposition first and foremost". He implies that we should not worry about the deficit. When challenged on it he says that he would do this through better management, better services, by somehow being more efficient and so on. As my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), pointed out, that is precisely what is happening. In fact, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) had done a little homework he would be aware of it. I suggest he might have started by reading the report of the review committee on the mandate and productivity of the Canada Post Corporation, the Marchment Committee, which is a very simple, very terse, very complete description of the problems of the Post Office and the solutions to those problems. If he examines what the Post Office has been doing vis-a-vis this committee report he will see that that is precisely what the current executive of the Post Office has been doing.

The situation in the Post Office really started during the time that the first Government of which he was a member was in power, in 1970 and 1971. As a result of innovations brought in by his colleague, the Hon. Erik Kierans, presumably with the blessing of the Cabinet of which he was a member, the staff of the Post Office increased from 40,000 to 60,000. That was a 50 per cent increase with no equivalent increase in the amount of mail. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that full well. He knows that until then, the Post Office had a good delivery record and was well respected as an organization. It only deteriorated as a result of the innovations brought in by the Government of which he was a member. It is only in the last two years that we are beginning to get the operations back on track.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition also said that everyone must have the same service. Again, he knows that since the Post Office was created almost a century ago there has never been one uniform service for everyone in the country. There has been general delivery, rental boxes, green boxes, delivery door-to-door and rural routes. The Hon. Member is advocating a change from what has been in place for almost a century, by calling for uniformity.

Finally, let me respond to his comments that the handicapped, elderly, shut-ins and others do not get door-to-door delivery. If he were to check with the Post Office he would discover that everyone of those persons receive door-to-door delivery in their area, even those areas of expansion where supermailboxes are being put in place as a result of the policy began by the Liberal Government in 1983. The fact is that those people in the category described by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition receive door-to-door delivery. Those who are physically incapable of getting to the box will receive door-to-door delivery.

The motion put forward by the Opposition today represents a flagrant disregard and lack of understanding of the challenge that Canada Post Corporation faced after years of Liberal mismanagement. The Opposition let the postal service deteriorate to the point where it was abominable. The labour relations environment has been poisoned, and the management of the Corporation has not been given the freedom to act on its mandate. It is a postal service that was driven into the ground by political interference, more of which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is proposing. The most blatant example of this was the absence of a clear delivery policy.

The Opposition talks about fairness. Is it fair that the Liberal Government froze the extension of door-to-door delivery some 24 years ago, then refused to direct the then Post Office Department to implement a permanent alternate delivery system for Canadians? In fact, green groupboxes were installed all over the country as a temporary measure. While those temporary measures began rusting away, and postal customers grew more and more frustrated, the Liberal Government refused to direct the Post Office to develop a delivery policy. Instead, it applied band-aid solutions.

Through the 1970s, the Post Office Department knew well in advance when an election was about to be called because the Liberal Government would thaw its freeze on letter carrier delivery just before the election or by-election. That was its policy. This is but one area of the Liberal Government's abuse of the Post Office that left Canadians frustrated and postal employees equally frustrated.

Delivery was not the only area where the Liberal Government failed the Post Office Department. There was no clear rate policy, except that there should be no talk of a rate increase at any time that could impact on an election. Rate increases came after the election, never before. Rates lagged to the point where there was no increase in revenue while the Treasury Board marched on, buying peace and making outrageous settlements with the postal union that included restrictive clauses that effectively tied the hands of the postal management. The House will recall Joe Davidson of CUPW who said in the 1970s: "The public be damned". That is the legacy that the Liberal Government gave to Canadian postal users.

The fact that the Leader of that Party can stand in the House and say that this Government allowed the postal corporation to deteriorate is evidence of how the Liberal Party thinks. Now they believe it is perfectly acceptable to ask their children to pay for postal service to make up for their mismanagement. There was a $500 million deficit in 1982-83 as a result of mismanagement for which future generations will have to pay. In essence, the position of the Liberal Government, and now apparently the position of the Liberal Party, is that future generations will pay for the cost of delivering the mail today. That is not responsible.

I could go on to talk about the travesties of the Liberal Government, but that is not constructive. Constructive is the approach of this Government to the woes of the postal service.

Let me deal with some of the progress Canada Post has made. After that 42-day strike in 1981, there was a consensus in the House among all Parties that it would be preferable to have the Post Office become a Crown corporation, to remove it from political interference in which Treasury Board Ministers would weigh the political costs versus taking the responsible action vis-à-vis management. There would not be as much opportunity for political interference by Members who wanted to assure their re-election or damage the opposition Party by using the postal service to do so.

The Crown corporation was created in June, 1985. A few years after its creation, one of my predecessors, as Minister responsible for Canada Post, announced the Marchment Committee to study the mandate and productivity of Canada Post Corporation, to see how the system was working after four years of operation as a Crown corporation, and to determine what changes would need to be implemented to ensure that the system would be there in the 20th century.

Members of that committee were drawn from the private sector. The committee travelled across the country and consulted extensively with all interested groups, especially postal users. Following the hearings, the Marchment committee made 43 recommendations to the Minister with respect to Canada's postal service. The Government passed these along to the board of directors of Canada Post Corporation. The recommendations of the Marchment committee were the basis of a five-year plan tabled in the House in November.

The Government is not running Canada Post by ignoring it, or by directing the corporation to act in the Government's political interest. The Crown corporation is expected to manage its operations in the same way that we expect the management of Air Canada to manage its responsibilities, the management of CNR and Petro-Canada or any other Crown corporation to manage their operations. We expect the corporation to manage its operations properly, in the interests of the shareholder and not for the political benefit of the politicians who happen to be responsible at any particular time. That is the only responsible mandate that a government could or should give to a postal service.

I want to deal with some of the recommendations of the Marchment committee, and compare them with the direction Canada Post has taken. The first recommendation of the 43 made by Marchment was that the primary goal of the corporation should be the provision of a consistently reliable service within acceptable standards for first and second-class mail. We agree absolutely. The major thrust of the entire 1986-87 corporate plan is more reliable service, including more reliable service to more points of call. Every year some 130,000 new addresses are created in Canada as people move into new homes and open new businesses. Canada Post moves promptly to serve all these addresses in ways that are both convenient to the customer and efficient in terms of costs. Canada Post is moving to end long line-ups at general delivery counters where people pick up their mail, and to get rid of the green boxes that people say they do not like.

Canada Post will make it easier to buy stamps and other postal products, by using the expertise of the private sector to sell stamps and other postal services in places where postal customers shop and at times that are convenient to postal customers. In fact, over the next 10 years the number of places where people can buy stamps and other postal products will increase by 50 per cent, bringing the total number of locations to approximately 18,000. I was surprised that the Leader of the Opposition said this was a retrograde step which will mean less service. There will be a 50 per cent increase, with 6,000 new postal outlets at places where people shop, whether they live in the country, the city or the suburbs. Those who go to the drugstore, to the supermarket or to the shopping centre will be able to buy stamps at retail outlets that are open until nine o'clock or ten o'clock at night, as are other shops. Presently, stamps being sold through Post Office operations alone are only available between nine o'clock and five o'clock, when customers are also working. Therefore, this improved service can only be an improvement. This has to be nothing but an improvement. Furthermore, it will in fact improve the service and, indeed, be more beneficial financially to the corporation and to the people of Canada.

• (1200)

The second recommendation of the Marchment Committee was that an acceptable level of service be defined as two days maximum for local mail and three days maximum for mail within the same province and four days maximum from coast to coast. The second page of the corporate plan of Canada Post Corporation, which was tabled in the House in November, reads:

> Canada Post will adopt minimum standards for the delivery of properly prepared first class lettermail, all to be measured from after the date of mailing: of two days within the same city, three days between major centres within a province; and no more than four days between major centres from province to province.

That is a realistic commitment to service, service which is being met constantly. That service has improved and is consistent and reliable is evidenced by the fact that Canada Post now handles a greater volume of mail than it ever did before. Customer confidence in Canada Post has increased and the volumes are there to prove it.

The Marchment Committee also recommended that Canada Post develop a more reliable system for measuring on-time delivery performance from mail box to recipient and that this performance measurement be done by independent external researchers. Canada Post is in the final stages of negotiating a contract with Clarkson Gordon, a respected independent auditing company, which will audit its performance on a quarterly basis and report that information to the public. The Opposition, or any other critics will then not be able to make the claim: "The service is going to pieces", because the evidence will be there by independent auditors. That will remove a political arrow from the quiver of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, so he should bear that in mind as he writes his notes for the next election campaign. We will have independent auditors to challenge any assertions of poor service he might make.

Those are the plans of Canada Post for consistent, reliable service which postal customers told the Marchment Committee is the number one priority. The number one priority is to know that when a citizen mails a letter it will be delivered within a certain period of time. That is being addressed and we will all be able to know it.

The Marchment Committee also told the Government that the corporation should continue to be financially self sufficient in order to relieve taxpayers of the need to subsidize users of the postal system, beyond those subsidies specifically provided by Parliament. The corporate plan is aimed at ensuring that Canada Post will not require Government operating funds beyond the fiscal year ending March 1988. This financial turnaround which will ensure that future generations do not have to pay the postal costs of postal users today, will not be achieved through excessive increases in postal rates.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, postal rates, as the price of any other service, have to be increased from time to time. However, Canadians will no longer experience any large and unexpected increase in the cost of mailing a letter.

Canada Post has undertaken to base its future rate increases on inflation rate, that is the rate of increase of its own costs, and to limit the increase to 1 or 2 cents per year.

[English]

The other two factors which enter into the break-even equation are improvements in the efficiency of the corporation's operations and increased volumes, which translate into increased revenues. As I heard the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, that is what he was suggesting the Post Office should do. In fact, it is doing that. Increased volume comes from greater reliability and the two go hand in hand. The better the service you give the customer the more business the customer gives you. However, increased volume creates a net contribution only if additional costs incurred are significantly lower than additional revenues. To spend $1 million to gain an additional $500,000 worth of revenue is not really a paying proposition. Yet, that in essence is what the Opposition is talking about.

Price control through reductions in operating and overhead costs have been successful in the turnaround to date. These reductions occur as the amount of mail which can be processed mechanically increases. To this end the corporation is improving the processing capability of current equipment through modernization. The corporation is also purchasing state of the art equipment which reduces the number of times mail must be passed through it to be sorted. Improved productivity and improved reliability go hand in hand.

Introduction of state of the art technology is only one part of improving productivity. The other part is eliminating many of the restrictive practices which now prevent Canada Post from running its business on the same basis as any other business or industry. Those restrictive operating practices were embedded in the labour contracts Canada Post inherited from the previous Liberal Government when Canada Post was launched as a corporation five years ago. They stem from the days when negotiations with postal unions were not carried on by the people who actually managed the postal operation, the only people who could really know the full implications of a proposed contract change. Those restrictions also resulted from legislation which was used to end postal strikes. Peace at any price was the motto, anything to make certain there was no postal strike while the Liberals were looking to re-election. In this round of negotiations, the corporation is seeking to end these restrictive practices.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition thinks increased efficiency and better operation are the ways to get better service and reduce the deficit. That is in fact what I am told the post office is attempting through these negotiations, so I presume the Opposition is supportive of that initiative.

The Marchment Committee recognized that in years prior to becoming a Crown corporation, years of Liberal Government, wage increases in the Post Office outstripped those of both the private sector and other elements of the Public Service. The report also recognizes that we have to bring the over-all costs into line, not by asking employees to take salary cuts which would not be fair. I would not advocate, nor would the management of the Post Office, that anyone take cuts in wages won by hard bargaining in the past. However, Canada Post is asking for more flexibility to manage the corporation like a business so it can achieve the efficiency talked about by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and we can provide the increased service for which everyone is asking.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Marchment Committee has also recommended that the Corporation should review its management structure in order to reduce the number of levels between its employees and senior management. This is the recommendation that has been acted upon the most rapidly by the Corporation. During the first year of its five-year plan, the Corporation has reduced to six the number of levels of its management. During the same year, it has cut the highest level of its management by 26 per cent.

[English]

Canada Post is cutting into the overhead. It has made a 26 per cent cut in upper management, as an example of the kinds of things it expects to happen so we can reach the efficiency and better service called for, while at the same time breaking even.

The Post Office is on the right track. We cannot cure 25 years of mess in just two years. Most importantly, we as responsible parliamentarians have to give Canada Post the opportunity to do that. We cannot continue to interfere politically for short-term political objectives or for short-term political motives and expect that this long standing problem will cured.

I ask all Hon. Members to try to be responsible and understand what is happening. I ask them to learn more about the Post Office and recognize we all have a responsibility. Yes, we have a political responsibility to try to get re-elected and form governments, but we have a bigger responsibility to this country to act responsibly in regard to important institutions such as Canada Post.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize first the Hon. Member for Saint-Leonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the offset that I will have the opportunity during this Opposition day on the Post Office to put the facts straight from the record rather than from the Minister's opinion. However, I would like to ask the Minister if he would like to answer a question which is being asked ever since Canada Post introduced the supermailboxes in Canada, with the concurrence of the Conservative Government . . . In committee, we put the question to the President of Canada Post Corporation and to the former Ministers responsible for postal services. I wonder if the present Minister could tell us as well as Canadians how much it costs to put the superboxes in place, how much it costs to build the small sidewalk and the box itself and what is, for example, the expected life of these boxes? Has this been planned? How long will it last? What is the maintenance cost? As Canada Post has always told us, the cost of home delivery of mail by letter carrier is $113 per home per year. However, if mail is delivered to superboxes, the cost is around $80 per year and if mail delivery to superboxes is contracted out rather than left to unionized letter carriers, then the cost would be 45 $.

If Canada Post is accountable, as it says, could we be told how much these radical changes, these changes in essential services, which it would want us to get used to will cost? What is the true cost? Is there a plan? Has the whole question of superboxes been examined? We must remember that not so long ago, as soon as the supermailboxes were introduced, a number of problems surfaced. It seems that Canada Post did not even have a safeguard program. Could the Minister tell us exactly what the status is on superboxes and what is their cost? Unless the intent is to play around with an operating deficit and a capital budget . . . We know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has the habit of presenting a Budget but we would like him once and for all to talk in terms of accountability and about the fact that Canada Post is accountable to Canadians . . . But we would also like Canada Post and the Minister in charge to tell us the truth.

• (1210)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, while I do not have on the tip of my tongue all the figures, my understanding is that the capital costs associated with supermailboxes can be recouped in about three and one-half to four years as a result of savings. So there is a three-and-a-half to a four-year recovery cost which means that this is a very good investment. I say that to comfort the Hon. Member who seems worried about the amount of the capital expenditures.

I should also point out that we can have some comfort in this fact because the United States has used superboxes since 1978. It ceased any expansion of door-to-door delivery at that time in terms of new suburbs. Again, in this area, as in a great many others, we have the American experience from which we can learn. That is one of the reasons why the Post Office is quite confident that this move makes good economic sense. I think the figures are there, if the Hon. Member wants to pursue the matter further.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister with regard to the issue of door-to-door delivery in suburban areas. A number of weeks ago the Minister responded to a question in the House from a back-bench Member of his own Party. The question was about the need for service in suburban areas. The Minister seemed to have left the door open at least a crack regarding the possible provision of door-to-door services. He indicated that this year he was focusing on costs and deficit reduction. He pointed out that next year he would be in a position to look at service.

What I want to know from the Minister is this. In attacking the Opposition today, which advocates the provision of door-to-door service, is the Minister slamming the door shut on the whole question of door-to-door delivery in suburban communities? Is he abandoning the possibility that suburban communities will receive treatment equal to the rest of urban Canadians?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the supermailbox, the community mailbox, has been around for some time in the United States, which was ahead of us. We have had them in Canada for a number of years. When a survey was carried out of people who received service in this fashion it was found that 93.4 per cent were very or somewhat satisfied with that type of service.

Mr. Orlikow: That is nonsense!

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member likes polls which support his position—

Mr. Orlikow: I will send you my correspondence on it.

Mr. Andre: His correspondence results from the fact that he and his colleagues went around knocking on doors saying, "Look, its outrageous that you are not getting door-to-door service. You should write a letter". So the person says, "Well, what the heck, I will write a letter". Then members of the New Democratic Party count the letters and say, "My goodness, people are outraged".

The fact of the matter is that if members of the New Democratic Party think it is time to get ready to move their Leader into 24 Sussex and that door-to-door service should be provided everywhere where it is not in Canada now provided, I think they have a responsibility to explain where the additional $1.5 billion will come from over the next four years. Will they take a responsible position and tell the House from where that money is to come? Do they want stamps to go up the 10 cents or 12 cents that is required? Are they prepared to see income taxes go up? Are they prepared to see money come out of unemployment insurance? From where are they prepared to see the money come?

The Marchment Committee established that what people want is reliable service. They want to know that the mail will be delivered. They want to know that when it is posted it will arrive at its destination within an appropriate period of time. That is the first priority which they set out to the Marchment Committee.

Mr. Keeper: Answer the question directly.

Mr. Andre: That is what is being worked on. If the Hon. Member thinks, never mind that, it is important that it be put into a mailbox on the fence or the side of the house, even if it is two weeks late, then let him advocate that position. Otherwise I think he can only responsibly say from where the money will come.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Minister. It was certainly interesting this morning to listen to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the architect of our debt. We will never forget his performance as Finance Minister when he turned a $700 million surplus into a $5 billion deficit. He talked about providing service and doing this and doing that. I did not hear one word from him about from where the money would come. We now know why we are in such a mess today. He made irresponsible comments this morning. I see that he has left the Chamber with his tail between his legs.

I am glad the Minister talked about the size of the executive. That is an issue I worked on in 1983 and 1984. The size of Canada Post's executive was allowed to grow to a size of four pages when listed. It had something in the order of 30 vice-presidents. The list of executives went on and on. Since we formed the Government we have reduced the size of the executive, thus saving a tremendous amount of money for Canadian taxpayers.

There has been a lot of false and misleading information spread around about rural mail delivery. Can the Minister enlighten us fully on what will happen with rural mail delivery?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, there will be no closing of any rural routes, contrary to the accusations made by members of the Opposition for their own political purposes. If any changes are made to rural post offices, they will be made after consultation, first with the Member of Parliament, and then with the community. Things will have to change. I suppose I should have brought with me the name of the community in Manitoba in which the postmaster retired and did not want to do the job any more. There was no one in the town who wanted to handle the post office. There were no businesses in town. There was no choice. There are only seven families left in that community. There was no choice but to set up a group mailbox. People had to go to the next town, where they bought their groceries anyway, to buy their stamps.

That situation goes into the statistics. Members of the Opposition say, "Aha, Canada Post shut another post office. They said they would not do it and they did it". That sort of thing happens as demographics change. I guarantee that the net result of any changes will be improved service, not reduced service in those communities, because a good chunk of those 6,000 new postal outlets that will be opened will be opened in rural Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as of a year ago I had 1,500 suburban residents who did not receive door-to-door delivery of their mail, as do residents in the older part of my constituency. These people are angry because they believe they are being treated as second-class citizens. They can only get their mail from supermailboxes. They are no different from suburban residents in the area of Winnipeg—Assiniboine or of Winnipeg—St. Boniface. They want to know why they are being treated as second-class citizens and why they cannot get the same service as that offered to residents in the older areas. If it is too expensive for them, they ask, is it not too expensive for people in the older areas? What would the Minister tell these people? They believe they are paying their fair share of taxes and, despite that fact, they are being treated as second-class citizens.

• (1220)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, if one lives on a farm—

Mr. Orlikow: I am not talking about the farm.

Mr. Andre: We are talking about classes of citizens.

Mr. Orlikow: I am talking about city residents.

Mr. Andre: We are talking about classes of citizens. If one lives on an acreage outside of town, if one moves to the country for its clear air, one is not attached to the sewer system or to the water system. One needs a well and a septic tank.

The fact of the matter is that one cannot guarantee the same services to everybody in the country, wherever they live, be it in downtown apartments in centre-town areas, in the suburbs, or in acreage areas around cities.

Mr. Orlikow: We are talking about urban residents.

Mr. Andre: The fact of the matter is that it has never been that way.

It used to be that the New Democratic Party was the Party of the future, the Party of change. Now it is the most reactionary Party in the House. I am surprised the Hon. Member is not on his feet decrying the fact that we no longer have daily milk delivery. How about the handicapped people who no longer have milk delivered to their houses? Should he not be on his feet raging? They do not have daily bread delivery any more. I mean, it is outrageous that people must go out in the cold of night and winter to buy bread. Oh, my God, is that not a terrible thing?

Mr. Orlikow: Answer the question.

Mr. Andre: The NDP should be outraged at this terrible reduction in service, that we no longer have bread and milk delivered to our homes. It is a scandal. We should do something about it.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by making it quite clear that the New Democratic Party feels that door-to-door delivery should be extended to all suburban residents, that all urban residents should be treated equally.

I personally made a tour across the country and visited various suburban locations. I consulted with the people about mail delivery and discovered that a very significant proportion of the people living in suburban locations felt betrayed by the Government. They felt that they were being treated as second-class citizens and that it was simply unfair that they should be denied the service which their neighbours or people across the street received. I visited communities in which the entire communities were surrounded by residential areas which received door-to-door delivery. It is incomprehensible to these Canadians why they should be treated as second-class citizens when they pay the same taxes and the same postage rates.

I welcome the conversion of the Liberal Party to this policy. I welcome the fact that the Liberals have seen the light. They have come out clearly as saying that they favour door-to-door delivery. In fact, they went a little further in the House today, saying that they would support revenue-generating activities at the Post Office. I welcome the Liberal Party catching up and taking this policy stand.

I am a little shocked by the Government's attack on the Liberal Leader for the adoption of this policy. It is interesting that the Minister said that the old policy of the Liberal Party was to freeze the extension of door-to-door delivery until an election and then make it available when an election was coming. He indicated that that was how we knew an election was coming. Rather than criticizing the Liberal Government for doing that, Canadians want the Minister to thaw. They want him to change his policy. They want to be treated fairly. They would like door-to-door delivery extended to all urban residents, so that it is not an election issue and cannot be played with, sort of like turning on the tap a bit when we are approaching an election and shutting it off when the election is over. I call upon the Minister and the Government to treat Canadians fairly. I call upon the iceberg to thaw.

We in the House are addressing the question of postal service by way of an Opposition motion for the third time in the last few months. It is a measure of the failure of leadership on the part of the Government when it comes to postal service. In fact, it is an indication of the false leadership which it is providing in this area. The Minister has become the "Pied Piper" of the postal service. He plays a beautiful tune and he promises to deliver the mail, but he is leading us down the garden path.

What I want to examine thoroughly today is just what the Government is saying with regard to postal service and what it is saying in the present context. I will deal with what is the Government's policy with regard to the Post Office and then the politics of the whole question of postal service.

I will begin by looking at what the Government is saying. It is quite simple. The Government is saying that if only the unions would give in people would receive service. The management of the Post Office has said that if only the unions would give up clauses in their collective agreement everyone would have service and the deficit of the Post Office would disappear.

It is a rare occasion when the President of the Post Office speaks out. He is usually closeted away. He has a reputation for being like an oyster, for keeping his thoughts to himself. However, when did he choose to speak out? He chose to speak out in the middle of the negotiations which are ongoing right now and said in effect if only the unions would give in, we would solve the problems of the Post Office.

Rather than playing the role of mediator, rather than problem solving, rather than finding a way for the negotiations to come to a successful conclusion so that people would be assured of continuing service, the Minister jumped into the fray with his big boots and tried to kick the unions while they were down. He said that if only the unions were not so powerful, if only the unions did not have such restrictive collective agreements everything would be fine at the Post Office and everybody would get service. He indicated that there would be no cost problems and that everything would be hunky-dory.

If three parties are involved in providing a service, is it credible to think that only one of them is to blame, that only one of them is responsible for the lack of adequate service? In this case we have the Government, the management of the Post Office, the unions, and the workers. Is it really credible to pick out one party and say that it is the one to blame? Is it credible to say that management's hands are clean, the Government is virtuous, but the unions are to blame? The Government is seeking to blame the unions for its own lack of leadership in the area of providing postal service.

I know from my experience as a parent—and I am sure it is the case with any Canadian parent—that when there is a squabble going on, usually it does not make any sense to blame one of the people involved. My two young boys are very energetic. They often play very co-operatively with each other. However, when they get into a fight, when they are screaming and yelling and I cannot take it any more, I rarely find it productive to blame one of them, to say that it is David's fault and not Eddie's fault. This is the approach the Government is taking. It is trying to take the approach that one party is to blame. That is not realistic. It does not fit with human experience.

• (1230)

Let me give another example, Mr. Speaker. When we are talking about labour-management relations and service at the Post Office—and obviously to provide service we need successful labour-management relations—we are talking about making a deal. Usually a deal is between two Parties, but in this case there are three Parties because the Government is directly involved. What is a deal? It is the result of give and take. It is not the result of one party giving in and the other party taking, because you cannot make a deal that way.

Let us look at the most recent deal with which Canadians are familiar, namely, the Meech Lake Accord. That is a deal. We can criticize it, we can say it is inadequate or it is great, but fundamentally it is a deal. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to bring Quebec into the Constitution. Quebec had its five demands. Other provinces had different demands. There was give and take.

If we are to have continued service at the Post Office we have to bring about a negotiated settlement. We have to have a deal, which means give and take. What the Government is saying up to now is take, take, take, that the only one to blame for the lack of service at the Post Office is the unions. That is what the Government is saying in the present context. Is it any surprise that the unions feel they have their backs up against a wall?

Management at the Post Office is asking for the elimination of the cost of living clause, which is a normal part of most collective agreements these days. The cost of living is going up, but if the Government is successful in its economic policy presumably inflation will not rise at an exorbitant rate so this clause will have no impact.

The Government is asking for the elimination of 8,700 jobs. If you were working in a situation in which 8,700 jobs would be cut from your workplace, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would feel insecure, just as I am sure most Canadians in a situation like that would feel insecure, and can understand why people are asking for job security. So it is not surprising that unions feel they have their backs up against the wall. It is necessary for us to have a negotiated settlement in this area for service to continue. Just blaming one of the three key parties involved will not bring us the solution that we need. Nor will it assure continued service.

It surprised me to learn that the Government was using a part-time conciliator in the negotiations between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Government. The Government had appointed someone who had no time available on his calendar until October and could only make time available when other items were cancelled. Is that a serious approach to important negotiations? The Government should have appointed someone who was available full time, the best conciliator available in the country, because these negotiations are crucial to Canadians.

Let us now look at this situation in a broader perspective, the perspective of Government—Post Office policy. What choices do we face with regard to Post Office policy? Do we go with the Conservative Post Office policy or do we continue with the drift established under previous Liberal and Conservative Governments, a drift that has got us nowhere, or are there other alternatives?

First, what is the Progressive Conservative policy? It is to put the priority on eliminating the Post Office deficit and consequently cut service. While the Government is seeking to eliminate the deficit it is preventing the Post Office from getting involved in revenue generating areas. Not only is the Government seeking to eliminate public subsidy of the Post Office, it is also seeking to eliminate the possibility of cross-subsidization, which is another way of paying for the service. The Government has put the priority on deficit cutting rather than on service.

The Government has substituted mailboxes for home delivery. The Government is treating Canadians in suburban locations as second-class citizens. We heard the Minister justify this today by saying that the Americans have done it first. We know that the Prime Minister is an admirer of Ronald Reagan, but surely we do not have to follow, lock, stock and barrel, what the Americans do.

With regard to rural service, the Government has over the last few years been cutting back on rural routes and it has been closing post offices. There has been no firm indication up until now that the Government is willing to change its policy regarding rural Canada. This whole question of reduced service has spawned an organized protest movement throughout rural Canada, demanding that the Government cease to be a threat to rural life. It is time that the Government woke up and took rural service seriously.

The Government, to reduce service in the rural area, is following a policy of privatization, a policy it is following in the urban areas as well. Customer services are being turned over to the private sector. The Minister said that you can get more convenient hours that way. Then why not change the hours of the existing post offices if that is the key? In the process of franchising post office outlets, what the Post Office and the Government is doing is giving away revenues. The only post offices that you can franchise are those making money. No one will want to take on a franchise for a post office if it is losing money. The ones that you can franchise are those presently making a profit. Revenues will be given away which will further starve the Post Office, aggravating the deficit situation. Along with that will be a continued policy of service reduction at the Post Office.

Another area of policy which the Government has made clear by its actions rather than its words is in the whole area of on-time delivery. How fast do you get your mail? We see letters take a week to go across town or a couple of weeks between cities. Instead of tackling that problem and finding out how to solve it the Government has watered down standards. Instead of same day delivery the Government has gone to second day delivery. The Government has sought to produce statistics of reliable service by watering down the service.

What we have is a government policy which is one of reduction in service, of increase in postal rates and of focusing on the deficit rather than on service. Service is what Canadians want. Over the last 20 years under Liberal and Conservative Governments the quality of the postal service has gone down.

But there is an alternative, Mr. Speaker. We should decide once and for all why we have a Post Office and recognize that it is a public service. We no more expect the Post Office to make a profit than we would to expect health care to make a profit or airports to make a profit. We subsidize the transportation industry which ties the nation together. It is legitimate to use taxpayers money to subsidize and pay for a public service. Why do we pay taxes if it not for public services? The Government wastes a great deal of money in certain areas. What about taxation write-offs? I am thinking about the closets of the Prime Minister, money that came out of public funds. What about the capital gains write-off that gives money to very high income earners? The Government wastes money but when it comes to a public service such as the Post Office, an essential communications service, a legitimate use of taxpayers' money, not much is done. Let us not run away from that. At the same time, let us enable the Post Office to compete in areas in which it can make a dollar, gain revenue and cross-subsidize. This is a policy common to transportation and communication systems in Canada and could work for the Post Office as well. There is an alternative to what the Government has proposed.

I would like to step back from this question and take a bird's-eye view of the politics of the situation. The Government is seeking to blame the unions for the lack of adequate postal service. By using the unions as a scapegoat, it is hoping to gain public approval. The Prime Minister is trying to play Ronald Reagan. He is trying to take on the big unions and whip them into line in order to gain public approval for himself. He is pretending to be the champion of the public when in fact he is avoiding the real issue. This approach will not provide the kind of service we need. By blaming the unions, the Government is trying to satisfy its back-benchers, those people who are willing to use the Post Office as a whipping boy.

Canadians want results. They want good postal service. They want their mail to be delivered on time. They want the same kind of service as their neighbours receive. They want rural communities to be supported rather than undermined by reductions in postal service. Canadians want the Government to take a problem-solving approach to postal service rather than one of blame. They want the Government to look seriously at the Post Office and to establish a bottom line for service, the kind of service Canadians want. Canadians want the Government to structure the postal service so it can be paid for adequately, recognizing that it is a public service.

Once again we find ourselves addressing the question of postal service because nothing has changed since the last time we addressed it. Nothing has changed because of the lack of leadership of a Government that is seeking to take us down the garden path. The Minister responsible for the Post Office has become a Pied Piper who is singing a sweet tune but is not delivering the mail.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) talked about fairness. I would like to make a comment or two and then ask him a question.

In my riding there are hundreds of farmers who have to drive anywhere between one mile and 25 miles to get their mail. They do so at their own expense. If they do not want to stand in line at the post office or if they want to get their mail after hours, they have to pay $10 or $15 per year for a box.

In my riding, there are hundreds of people who live in towns and villages and have to walk to the post office. If they do not want to stand in line or if they want to get their mail after hours, they too have to pay $10 or $15 each for a box.

There is a city in my riding of about 11,000 people called Airdrie. It is located on both sides of the main highway going through that area. Nobody there gets their mail delivered. They have to go either to the main post office or to the sub-post offices to pick up their mail. Again, if they do not want to stand in line or if they want to pick up their mail after hours, they have to pay $10 or $15 for a box.

There are about 7,000 people in the City of Drumheller and the rural population around the City of Drumheller is another 5,000 or 6,000. They too have to pay for boxes. They do not get their mail delivered to their homes.

When the Hon. Member is talking about fairness, I wonder how he rationalizes the fact that thousands of Canadians get their mail delivered right to their homes without paying one cent. They do not have to pay for boxes, nor do they have to pay extra taxes for that service. It is an extra service. Is that fair?

Is the Hon. Member prepared to try to make the situation fair by recommending that all city dwellers pay $10 or $15 per year so that they are paying the same as people in rural areas? We talk so glibly about fairness, but I would like to hear the NDP Member indicate how fair he is prepared to be. Is he prepared to recommend that city residents who get mail delivered right to their homes pay $10 or $15 each per year?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question because I think it is a good one. What I find unfair about what the Government is doing right now is that it is cutting back on rural postal service in different ways than it is cutting back in urban areas. However, the common element is a watering down of service.

The Government has said that those living in new suburban developments will not get door-to-door delivery and will have to have a box. Canadians who live in those areas obviously feel slighted, that they are being treated unfairly, because just down the street others are getting their mail delivered to their doors. In fact, there are suburban communities in which those living on part of a street have to go to the box and those living on another part of the street get door-to-door delivery. That is where that resentment and feeling of unfairness comes from.

What is unfair about the Government's policy is that it is not only reducing service in the urban areas but it is also reducing service in the rural areas. I know from my visits to rural communities that the post office is seen as being an essential element of a rural community. If the post office is pulled out, one of the essential services of a rural community is pulled out. I find it unfair that the Government is closing rural post offices and is shutting down rural routes, home delivery in the rural areas.

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is a government Member. If he feels that paying $10 for a box is unfair, why does he not get the Government to change it? If he thinks, as he has suggested to me, that urban residents should pay $10 for home delivery, why does he not get the Government to do that? He is the Member who is in Government. He is the Member who has the power and the responsibility. I would ask him to ask the Government why it continues the policy of reduction in rural services. Why does he tolerate that?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from today's debate that many members of the Opposition are not aware that in small-town Canada and rural Canada, for decades many people have walked a mile or so to the community post office. Door-to-door delivery in those areas was never contemplated.

I would like to follow up on the question put by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) which was not answered by the critic for the New Democrats. How can the Hon. Member justify the preferential treatment given to urban dwellers? Perhaps he can respond by saying that in Mulgrave and Port Hawkesbury, which are in my riding, door-to-door delivery should be introduced. However, my constituents are far more realistic than that. They expect responsible Government and fiscal management.

If I went to my home village of 1,000 or 1,500 people and said we are going to have two or three postmen delivering mail every day to their door I do not think they would be very impressed with our fiscal responsibility. They are well aware of the financial position of the country—not of the Government but of the country. They are well aware of the debt load that not only they but their children carry. They are well aware that the greater the financial burden on all Canadians, the greater the risk to important social programs. They are well aware that the greater the resources freed up for social programs, the greater the security for their long-term social well-being.

I have to say to the NDP critic that his Party cannot have it both ways. They either want to put in place a sound financial structure for the people of this country to ensure the long-term future of important social programs, or they do not. It seems to me that what I continually hear from the NDP is nothing more than the case being put forward on behalf of the big unions. I can tell him that no union dues are checked off at the pay office and directed towards my campaign.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the last comment of the Hon. Member. He says no unions give money to his campaign.

Mr. O'Neil: Union dues.

Mr. Keeper: I wish the Hon. Member had balanced that by indicating what the banks gave to his Party's campaign. The major banks gave $50,000 to the Conservative campaign. If the Hon. Member wants the debate to consist of those kinds of insults, we can do that. However, I think this is a time to deal seriously with the question of postal service.

The Hon. Member talked about a strong financial structure for the country. I agree with that. I agree that there should be an end to waste in the spending of public money. It should start with the tax system. Why has the Government insisted that anyone who makes capital gain of $500,000 can do so without paying any taxes? That is an unfair use of public money. Why do we have $30 billion or $40 billion a year in tax write-offs? The Auditor General has asked if this money is being used effectively. Those are serious questions concerning whether we have a sound financial system and whether we can provide the services we need, including postal service.

The Hon. Member talked about preferential treatment for urban dwellers. I wish he would get up in this House and fight for adequate service for rural residents rather than seeking to divide and rule and sow the sentiment that somehow urban dwellers are getting special service—

Mr. O'Neil: It is true.

Mr. Keeper: —and therefore it is all right for his Government to continue to cut back on rural service, savage his rural community, and undermine the existence of rural Canada. If he wants to address a postal service issue, that is the issue he should address.

As everyone knows, Britain is a country governed by a right-wing free enterprise Conservative Prime Minister, yet that country has postal service twice a day. It is taking on thousands of new workers in the Post Office in order to deliver the mail. It is possible to have a sound financial structure and even a Conservative philosophy and still give good mail service. Why does the Member not take up that challenge and fight for rural postal service rather than trying to create negative attitudes towards urban dwellers?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are about to resume debate.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—RETURN OF CARMEN QUINTANA TO TESTIFY AGAINST SOLDIERS WHO SET HER AFIRE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Carmen Quintana, a university student who was savagely beaten last July 2, will be leaving Canada to return to Chile next month. She will be testifying against the soldiers who doused both her and a friend with gasoline and then set them afire during an anti-government demonstration in Santiago. They were then wrapped in blankets and driven to the outskirts of town where they were both dumped in a ditch. Carmen survived but her friend died four days after this horrendous display of cruelty.

Carmen Quintana's courage to face her adversaries now in a court room is to be admired and honoured because she is returning to a terrorist regime where the word justice has a definition other than that with which Canadians are familiar. The Chilean system of justice violates the dignity of their people which is seen in how Pinochet's Government is handling Quintana's case.

The lieutenant in charge of the army patrol that attacked Carmen and her friend was freed on $25 bail after the army prosecutor reduced the charge from manslaughter to negligence for failing to take the youths to hospital. In other words, the brutal and deadly burning of youths who are seeking democracy is endorsed in this terrorist country.

Carmen Quintana testified before the United Nations in February and is calling on Chileans and Chilean sympathizers to unite against the dictatorial regime of Auguste Pinochet. I now call upon the Government of Canada to do the same and let the Government of Chile know that Canada is watching Carmen Quintana upon her return to testify in Chile.

CHALLENGE '87

EMPLOYERS URGED TO HIRE STUDENTS DURING SUMMER

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, Canadians do not usually forget their first jobs. In less than one month as Canadian schools terminate for the summer hundreds of thousands of students will be looking for summer jobs, usually their first job which often has a tremendous impact on a person's future.

This tremendous energetic resource should be encouraged and promoted whenever possible. If businesses small and large, and private individuals across the country, would make a small effort to hire a student for a full-time or part-time job this summer, the rewards would benefit Canada as a whole.

I encourage all individuals to remember their first job and hire a student this summer, which will result in tremendous rewards.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

DEMAND THAT SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE BE CONVERTED TO TRANSFER NATURAL GAS LIQUIDS—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister of Energy stated recently that if the National Energy Board turns down the application to convert the Sarnia—Montreal pipeline to natural gas liquids, first, Montreal East will lose petrochemical investments to the tune of $750 million, and the 20,000 petrochemical jobs in Quebec would thereby be in jeopardy.

The Quebec Minister also stated large oil corporations oppose the project and multinational corporations would rather have the pipeline carry to Sarnia the oil delivered by tankers in Montreal, which would mean for the short term, mainly the medium term and the long term, the death of the Quebec petrochemical industry and the loss of thousands of jobs.

It is important and urgent, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) make representations to the National Energy Board, as requested by his provincial counterpart.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, unemployment in Atlantic Canada is unacceptably high. In some areas the official unemployment rate is 30 per cent. The unofficial rate is much higher. Since September, 1984, the Conservative Government has slashed its budgets for regional development and job creation. Atlantic Canada has been hardest hit by these cuts.

However, what did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently say? On Tuesday of last week he claimed that his Government had created jobs in Atlantic Canada at twice the rate of the previous Government. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. Then, on Thursday, the Prime Minister gave a regional breakdown of his Government's job-creation record. He seemed to have forgotten what he said only two days before. On Thursday he said, "Some 46 per cent of the jobs created were in Ontario, 28 per cent in Quebec, 22 per cent in western Canada, and so on". The "and so on" is Atlantic Canada.

The figures show that three regions got 96 per cent of the jobs created while the "and so on", the Prime Minister's new description of Atlantic Canada, got only 4 per cent of the jobs. The words "and so on" are an insult to our region. The unemployed in Atlantic Canada are fed up with the Prime Minister's exaggerated rhetoric. What they really need is concrete action by the Government to create jobs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION BETWEEN FRANCE AND CANADA

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the visit of the President of France is a historical, major event for Canada, and testifies to relations of trust with our Government.

As a Member for Quebec, I am pleased to see that the French President recognizes that Canada is a bilingual country, while recognizing Quebec's cultural identity.

If the representative of a French unilingual nation reached that conclusion, I sincerely believe it is because of the efforts of this Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who recognizes Quebec's distinctive nature, what with Quebec's entry into the Canadian Constitution.

Moreover, as the Member for Drummond, I can testify to the economic co-operation between France and Canada, in view of the recent location of a number of French industries in my constituency.

For example, Société Yvan Paques Inc., Sopréma, Disque Américc and Fromagerie Lemaire, who just reached an agreement with France, are concrete examples of that co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by referring to the partnership started in 1985 between Cascades Corporation and Béguin Saye, which now benefits the economies of both countries by creating jobs on both sides of the Atlantic!

WELFARE

FOOD BANKS IN CITIES—NEED FOR CHANGES IN WELFARE SYSTEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in Toronto, Canada's most prosperous city with the lowest unemployment rate, there are now 180 voluntary agencies doling out food baskets to people. In my city of Winnipeg there are now 98 groups doing a similar job. Many of the people who need help from these food banks are children. The same situation is happening in every city and town in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

People do not want to depend on charity to meet their needs for food. Surely it is time for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to meet with his provincial counterparts in order to assess the reality of the disaster which has befallen us, and to realize that the present welfare system is not working. Surely it is time for him to work with his provincial counterparts to change the system so that people will no longer have to depend on charity as they do at the present time.

TOURISM

CAPE BRETON—EXTENSION OF FLEUR DE LIS TRAIL URGED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Fleur de Lis Trail in Cape Breton is a major tourism issue. This tourism issue does not only get support from opposition Members of Parliament, but also from municipalities, including the Municipalities of the County of Cape Breton, the Town of Louisbourg, the Municipality of the County of Richmond, the Cape Breton Island Mayors and Wardens Council, as well as the Cape Breton Island Tourism Association.

All of them have called upon the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia to provide the necessary funding for extension of this very famous and highly scenic trail. Unfortunately, the Government of Nova Scotia, aided and abetted by the federal Government, has done absolutely nothing.

We have called upon the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to consider the possibility of providing moneys under the Federal-Nova Scotia Agreement on Highway Strengthening. Unfortunately, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Transportation in the Province of Nova Scotia have turned thumbs down to thousands of Canadians in that particular region of our country seeking assistance to build an extension to the Fleur de Lis Trail.

I call upon the federal Government to reverse this negative decision and to come through with some positive contributions in order to increase tourism opportunities in industrial Cape Breton.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY OF CAPE BRETON—ASSISTANCE FOR LAND OWNERS ADVOCATED

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, in my riding the forest industry is critical to our long-term economic health, to the maintenance of jobs, and to the creation of new employment. Forest management practices are therefore of utmost concern to me.

In Nova Scotia approximately 75 per cent of the land is owned privately. This contrasts with the situation in other provinces where most land is Crown owned.

To address the management needs of private wood-lot owners, the Government of Canada is funding forest group ventures. The province is also a sponsor. These are co-operatives formed by wood-lot owners. Land owners receive financial help to administer land management programs and to cover the cost of the silviculture work itself.

Today I want to recommend to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) that a group venture application to be submitted by more than 80 Antigonish County land owners receive early approval.

This group is aggressive and responsible and knows from first-hand experience the benefits of good forest management.

Since my election, four such ventures have been established in my riding. I look forward to announcing funding for this group as well.

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE—NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, our Government has clearly demonstrated its commitment to combating drug abuse in Canada, with a new five-year plan announced yesterday. I wish to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on this comprehensive action plan.

For years Canadians have expressed concern over drug abuse. Unfortunately, they have not known where to get accurate information, or where to turn for support and assistance when dealing with drug related problems.

The federal Government has taken a leadership role in educating Canadians on this social menace with the Action on Drug Abuse plan. I know that these measures will give parents in Canada hope for a better future for their children.

The national PRIDE office located in my riding, a drug education organization comprised of parents, teachers and police, has witnessed drug abuse by children at the elementary school level.

• (1410)

I might add that last week it had its national convention in Saskatoon, attracting over 1,600 people from across Canada. PRIDE estimates that nearly 600 children have dropped out of school in Saskatoon, a majority of these cases a result of drug abuse.

Attacking drug abuse is not only important for the preservation of our society as a whole but it is important for those Canadians who may, like these children, become victims of drugs. It is for these children that I give my fullest support to the plan of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

DEPLETION OF OZONE LAYER—PARLIAMENT URGED TO ABOLISH USE OF STYROFOAM CUPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, you will know, as other Members know, that growing attention is being paid to what is known as the depletion of the ozone layer.

Although I know that Governments are working in a co-ordinated fashion around the world to arrive at the policies and steps which need to be taken, one thing we could do right now would be to diminish the production and consumption of commodities and substances associated with the depletion of the ozone layer. One of those commodities is known as foam plastics or styrofoam.

S. O. 21

I ask all Hon. Members to consider that Parliament and many other institutions across the country contribute to the problem of the depletion of the ozone layer by persistent use of styrofoam cups and foam plastic containers.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and other Members of the House to consider whether or not in the very short future we, as the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, could set an example for what Canadians could do collectively and individually in the short term in respect of this environmental problem, and consider the use of alternatives in this case.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ARRIVAL OF DANYLO SHUMUK IN CANADA—ROLE PLAYED BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, for many years the imprisonment of Mr. Danylo Shumuk, a Ukrainian dissident, was a matter of concern in the House. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and other Members of Parliament, including myself, brought his plight to the attention of the Canadian people and the Soviet authorities on many occasions.

Mr. Shumuk was the longest prisoner of conscience in history, having spent over 40 years in Nazi and Soviet prison camps.

This past Saturday I had the pleasure of welcoming Mr. Shumuk to Canada on behalf of the Canadian Government. He will be living with his nephew and family in Lumby, a community in my riding of Okanagan North.

Upon his arrival, Mr. Shumuk acknowledged publicly his debt of gratitude to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and particularly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as to other Members of Parliament who supported his cause. He said:

> I came to Canada because freedom is the very essence of life. I have abandoned my own country. I came because I was not free. I am here because, despite all my losses, I gained freedom which means everything to me.

Members of this House can be proud of the role they played in helping Mr. Shumuk achieve that freedom.

CHILDREN

NATIONAL MISSING CHILDREN'S DAY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 24, the Child-Find organization released 15,000 balloons in Montreal on the occasion of National Missing Children's Day. A photograph of a missing child was attached to each balloon. Several fathers and mothers launched balloons bearing photographs of their own children. The release of these balloons was a very moving moment for all who took part in a ceremony that was repeated in all Canadian communities where Child-Find is represented.

Mr. Speaker, sad to say, a considerable proportion of missing children are children who have been abducted by their own parents. Abduction of a child is illegal and should not be condoned, whether by strangers or by a divorced parent.

Although the Divorce Act has been amended, it does not have enough clout to prevent this kind of thing from happening. We think it is important for the Government to act with greater firmness in this area.

I therefore urge the Government to act quickly to enforce the new Divorce Act more rigorously, in order to stop the abduction of children, and I also recommend setting up follow-up and support programs for the parents of missing children.

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

IMPACT OF VISIT BY PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, we had the pleasure of welcoming to the House Mr. François Mitterand, President of the Republic of France. The speech he gave on this occasion was one of the best speeches we have heard here for some time. I may add that his speech and his visit mark a major chapter in our history, and I am convinced that there will be lasting benefits as a result of this visit by France's number one man.

Personally, and as Chairman of the Canada-France Interparliamentary Association, I am delighted with the new direction that Mr. Mitterand's visit has given to relations between our two countries, and I trust that in future, they will draw their inspiration from the humanitarian ideals of this great politician.

Friday, I am going to France to head the Canadian delegation to the Twentieth Annual Meeting of the Canada-France Interparliamentary Association. I may say that after the President's speech, I am looking forward with even greater enthusiasm to this official visit.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDATION CONTAINED IN REPORT OF WORLD COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this morning Jim MacNeill, Secretary General for the World Commission on Environment and Development, appeared before the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry. We discussed what Canada can do in the implementation of the Commission's report.

For instance, Canada can speak strongly in favour of the implementation of the recommendations when the General Assembly of the United Nations meets next October. Or, the Government can have the report examined by each federal Department and agency. Such a review may reveal policies that are not sustainable. For example, on energy we might find out that instead of promoting fossil fuel combustion, namely, coal, gasoline and the like, we should instead promote energy efficiency and the use of renewable sources of energy. Or, take agriculture. We may find that Canada's existing policies are incompatible with sustainable development as indicated already by the Senate report on soils. Or, take the flow of Canada's foreign aid. We may discover that the quality of assistance needs to be substantially improved in order to sustain development.

I urge the Government of Canada to elevate the environment and sustainable development to the centre of the decision-making process if we are to ensure economic growth for generations to come.

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE PLAN WELCOMED

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Government's move to act against the serious problem of drug abuse. This problem was brought home to my attention recently by information concerning problems in the Niagara Peninsula in our schools. We, as parents, were warned that our small children might be given stickers that apparently transmit LSD type drugs through a child's skin. The stickers were in the form of a star or cartoon characters.

What kind of individuals do we have in society that would jeopardize the health and life of our children in this way? In the midst of this, I am disappointed to see reports from the Opposition's critics questioning both the seriousness of the drug problem, and even the Minister of National Health and Welfare's (Mr. Epp) sincerity in trying to deal with it. I would suggest to them for once forget such partisan comments and co-operate with the Government. Everyone must realize that drug abuse among children and, indeed, Canadians, threatens the well-being of all of us.

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE PLAN—COMMITMENT CHALLENGED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I, for one, would like to challenge the Government's commitment to fighting drug abuse.

Last night in our committee we heard from the Native Council of Canada which has been seeking a meeting with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for over a year, a meeting to discuss the very serious problem of those teenagers in Alberta who died after drinking photocopy fluid. The Minister promised them a meeting last year.

He still has not had the guts to meet with the Native Council of Canada which Council pointed out that half a million native Canadians living off reserve and non-status Canadians will not be covered by his drug abuse plan, half a million Canadians who have been ignored by this Government, half a million Canadians among whom the level of substance abuse, both through alcohol and drug abuse, is three times the national average.

Why would the Minister refuse to meet with the Native Council of Canada? Why has he ignored the tragic deaths of those teenagers in Alberta who died after drinking photocopy fluid?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS—EAST COAST FISHING RIGHTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are delighted with the presence of Signor Fanfani here and we are pleased that President Mitterrand of the Republic of France is also in Canada. I think all of us appreciated very much his thoughtful speech of yesterday.

• (1420)

I would like to ask the Prime Minister what progress he made with the President of the French Republic on the serious issue of France's completely unacceptable claims to fishing rights off the East Coast. Did the Prime Minister get any commitment from President Mitterrand to accept the simple fact that the waters off Newfoundland are Canada's waters and Canada's waters alone?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we had some very good discussions with the President and with his ministerial group on a number of occasions yesterday and today in regard to this problem which I set out here in the House, and which the Minister of Transport addressed directly to the President of France at a luncheon meeting yesterday. We conveyed very directly and very seriously the concerns of Newfoundland and Atlantic fishermen, the questions of importance to them and to the sovereignty involved in this matter, and I certainly got the strong impression from the President that it was his desire to co-operate by attempting to seek a satisfactory resolution to a very difficult problem.

FISHING QUOTAS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—ATTITUDE OF FRANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has been unable to settle the dispute over the 200-mile economic zone, that is obvious. So I wonder whether he did manage to solve the overfishing problem created by the French in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is a different but related question. Will France put an end to such overfishing, or should the Prime Minister again admit that no progress was made yesterday or today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition seems to suggest that no progress has been made unless one's interlocutor did accept one's position at a meeting. He knows very well that this is not at all the way international relations are conducted. We do have a serious and very complex problem on which the Canadian delegation focused during yesterday's constructive debate.

I got the impression that the President of the Republic fully appreciates the significance of this problem for Newfoundland fishermen. The Minister of Transport could not have been more direct when he raised this question and its social implications for Newfoundlanders, as well as the overfishing problem. All aspects of this matter were vigourously dealt with by the Canadian delegation and hopefully we are getting closer to a solution. As a matter of fact, both Governments are negotiating and we hope the presidential visit will help solve this problem in an efficient manner.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE SUBSIDY WAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister appears to have had about as little success with President Mitterrand as he usually has with his good friend President Reagan.

May I turn to the agricultural trade war? Did the Prime Minister succeed in obtaining any commitment from President Mitterrand to use his influence with his European partners to bring an end to the hazardous and very costly trade subsidy war with the United States that is wreaking havoc with Canadian farmers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend is worried or concerned about progress with President Mitterrand. He was a member of previous Governments and I think he would be the first to admit that the very presence of the President of France yesterday and his comments to this nation indicated that there has been tremendous progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In regard to the specific question of the agricultural trade wars and the subsidies, that too was raised not only in a bilateral context and alluded to by the President himself yesterday in his speech but in the larger context of the Venice Summit where Canada and the other industrialized nations will hopefully be making progress toward the elimination of what has become a completely unacceptable situation for our farming community.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH OFF EAST COAST

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with foreign powers this Government, to date, by allowing the French to overfish, has behaved like the wimp of the western world. Now for the first time it appears as though the Prime Minister understands the seriousness of the French overfishing on the East Coast. Yesterday he said: "France must surely be aware of the seriousness of the issues it raises for our fishermen in Atlantic Canada as well as for Canadian sovereignty." Did the President of France, after listening to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport, say that he is now aware of the seriousness of the issue and that this country considers French overfishing to be a threat to our sovereignty? If so, what was his response?

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the President of France, after having the opportunity of listening to me putting before him the situation as seen from the point of view of a Maritime Canadian and a Newfoundlander, and after having explained to him the position of the Newfoundland fishermen and the dependence of Newfoundland upon the fishery, displayed sympathy with and a sensitivity for our position. He indicated he thought with goodwill on both sides and good political management this is an issue that can be successfully resolved.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, a government official is quoted as saying following the meeting that the Minister of Transport spoke eloquently for 15 minutes. I wonder in which language.

PRESENT SITUATION BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the President of France said: "I want to come close to the soul of the Canadian people". We are not worried about the soul of the Canadian people. The Government should be concerned about the salt-water sole and the codfish and the herring that the French have so blatantly overfished this past year.

I ask the stand-in for the Prime Minister whether we are now any closer, even a small step closer, to preventing the French from overfishing Canadian waters for the next four years while the negotiations are ongoing, like they did this past year? Were they even asked to stop overfishing? Or, are we just to be content with the impotent act of closing our ports like big tough guys, whoop-de-do, ports they do not even use in the first place?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, certainly La Comédie Française could use the hon. gentleman. As to my language, I assure you it was one of the official languages. I pointed out to the President of France, who I found to be very sensitive on all sides—

Mr. Waddell: He is a socialist.

Mr. Crosbie: Socialists outside the country are usually much better than the ones you find inside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Absence makes the heart grow fonder, I suppose.

I suggested to the President of France that there was no connection between the need to go to arbitration on the question of the boundaries of St. Pierre and Miquelon and the question of quotas. They are not linked. I suggested that the arbitration matter should proceed without attempting to use it as a reason to get greater quotas from Canada.

With respect to the question of the closing of ports, the effectiveness of that step is shown by the fact that the French delegation on many occasions, both yesterday and before, have asked us to rescind that measure. They would hardly ask us to do that if it was such a no-account matter as the Hon. Member says it is. It is a sign of an erect and capable Government pursuing a vigorous policy.

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM—POSSIBLE PETRO-CANADA BID

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources by saying that it was certainly a pleasure to see the Conservatives rise in the House and give a five-minute standing ovation to a socialist, whether Canadian or otherwise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The recent issue of the Financial Times reports that Petro-Canada is considering making a bid for Dome Petroleum along with other corporations.

The Minister stated in the past that Petro-Canada could make such a bid if it did not include Government funds. Is this still Government policy?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the way of a comment on the preamble of the Leader of the Socialist party, I would like to tell him his Party could take a lesson from the Government on how to welcome foreign heads of state, whether socialist or capitalist, Mr. Speaker.

Second, in direct answer to the question, I explained on a number of occasions in this House that Petro-Canada has a business mandate. That mandate was given by this Government, and the mandate is there. Within that mandate, it behooves Petro-Canada to make decisions pertaining to its business operations.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the Minister correctly the Financial Times may be on to an important Canadian development. Is the Minister now saying that it is government policy that Petro-Canada can go ahead, perhaps with two other companies which are mentioned in the same story and, if it is deemed to be in its commercial interest, can make a joint offer for the purchase of Dome Petroleum?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this Government's position has been clear and specific. First, we want to solve the Dome problem through the private sector in Canada. Second, we also stated that Petro-Canada has a business mandate.

I intervened in no way for or against, as to the direction Petro-Canada should take.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be quite clear? Is he saying that because the Government prefers a private sector solution Petro-Canada cannot, even if it deems it to be in its commercial interest, participate in such an offer? Or is he saying something which could be in the Canadian interest, that if Petro-Canada so decides, and if it has the capital at its disposal, it can, in conjunction with TransCanada Pipeline or some other companies, make an offer for Dome?

Will the Minister clarify this very important commercial and energy question now?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the socialist Party is raising a whole series of ifs. It is not for us at this point to answer all the ifs that may come up in the matter of Dome.

I will repeat for your benefit the principles on which we work—we have ensured, by our action, by the policy we developed, that other corporations would bid for Dome. We ended up with three bids. Dome as a corporation is reviewing those bids with its lenders, its shareholders, and as everyone else the Minister is looking at and monitoring the process.

We are seeking a solution by the private sector. On the other hand the Government, a number of months ago and indeed at the beginning of our mandate gave Petro-Canada a mandate to operate as a business concern. It is its responsibility to make day-to-day judgments regarding its action, Mr. Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF PARTS INDUSTRY—MINISTER'S ASSURANCES—DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On February 16 at hearings held by the committee of the House looking into the automotive industry the Minister, in response to questions, said, "You talk about threat of jobs, overcapacity—but I disagree with that. Here we have jobs. We know that".

At that same time his own Department had prepared studies which show that we are facing a loss of a minimum of 15,000 jobs in automotive parts manufacturing and the automotive industries. Why would the Minister give a committee of this House those kinds of assurances when his own Department had prepared studies showing the absolute opposite to be the case?

Can he tell us now whether he will start listening and responding to the reports of his own Department and come clean with a policy which will respond to the severe crisis being faced in our automobile industry?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there have been many reports issued by different associations. The Government is very sensitive to the industry. We have demonstrated our intention of dealing with that and to issue a policy on the auto industry.

However, before we do that we want to consult and really answer the needs of the auto industry. We want to do that after full consultations with the mayors and the industry itself. We want to establish a policy which will answer the future needs of this industry and ensure that Canada will be prepared to answer future challenges.

TIMING OF POLICY INTRODUCTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Minister that we are not talking about studies of some group or association. We are talking about a report which was prepared by his own Department. If I can offer a small suggestion, it might be worth while reading that report because it suggests that we are facing deindustrialization of the automobile industry unless the Government does something.

At the same committee hearing the Minister promised that there would be an automotive policy in two months. That was in February—four months have gone by. Can the Minister tell us now when the Government will present to the industry and to this House a clear statement on automotive policy? Will it be this week, next week or mañana, or never?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Government is well aware of the problem faced by the automobile industry, and we have expressed our intent to settle this problem after carrying out a thorough consultation of the industry. Everybody knows that the industry will be faced with over-production in 1989-90 and it is the Government's responsibility to set up policies which can help Canada and the industry to meet these needs in the future.

That is our intention, and as soon as we have fully consulted the industry and received its recommendations, we shall develop policies which meet the needs of the industry.

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM—INVOLVEMENT OF PETRO-CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my questions are in fact supplementary to those of my Leader, the Member for Oshawa. I listened carefully to the answers of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He indicated that the Dome matter was one for the Canadian private sector. He, of course, is aware that Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation.

Has the Government told Petro-Canada not to get involved in this deal? If that is not so, if Petro-Canada decides to get involved in the deal, does it have the green light from the Government to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government's position is clear and definite. We are seeking a solution of the Dome problem through the private sector.

Second, Petro-Canada has a commercial operation mandate.

Third, the Government has received no application from the Petro-Canada board of directors about the Dome issue.

[English]

PROPOSED PURCHASE BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the solution so far is that Amoco, the large American oil company, is still the leading candidate to buy Dome. Is there any truth to the remarks in the article in the Financial Times which says that federal officials have been advised by Mr. Simon Reisman, Canada's free trade ambassador, not to interfere in the sale of Dome to Amoco? Is that true? Is that the real reason why the Government, in spite of public opinion polls, in spite of Canada's future energy security and in spite of demands by the Canadian people for a Canadian solution, is still favouring Amoco, the large American oil company?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is a clear and definite no.

INDUSTRY'S RECOMMENDATIONS TO MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He has just told the House that he is waiting to consult with the auto industry before bringing down a new automotive policy. Is it not a fact that he met with the industry on April 16, over a month ago, and that he received recommendations from the industry?

He has had reports from his own Department in his hands since 1986, saying that if the present situation continues, under which Japanese and other offshore manufacturers are not compelled to obey the requirements of the Auto Pact on jobs and content, it will displace jobs in Canada? What is he waiting for? Why does he not act now? Why is he putting at risk the most important manufacturing sector in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I said and I repeat that the Government is well aware of the particular problem of the automobile industry. We intend to act after having fully consulted the industry and the organizations concerned. This means the automobile industry and all politicians concerned with this issue. On April 16, as mentioned by my hon. colleague, I met the industry representatives and we agreed to hold a series of consultations and meetings to talk and deal with the conditions and recommendations raised by the industry. On the basis of these discussions, we shall submit a policy to the Government and indicate later on what are the terms of this policy.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is it not true that the real reason that the Minister is not announcing an automotive policy is that the whole thing is being held up so as to enable the faltering free trade negotiations to continue? If that is the case, will the Minister abandon that approach, bring down the policy, and not continue a position in which he is saying that the Government wants the United States and Japan to write Canada's automotive policy? Will he do his job and act now in the interest of Canadian jobs, and not let someone else in another country write our policy for us?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Again, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply repeat to my hon. colleague that we are in the process of developing policies after having had consultations with the industry, in contrast with what happened in the past when, on many occasions, the previous Government established, without consultation, policies which did nothing to meet the needs of the industries concerned.

GOVERNMENT'S ACTION ON DRUG ABUSE PLAN—COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am sure most of us welcome the long awaited announcement of his National Drug Program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Of course the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has found in its consultations that this program is designed not to attack an epidemic but an endemic which is characterized chiefly by abuse of alcohol and over-the-counter prescription drugs.

Now that the Minister has announced his program, will all of the work of the standing committee and the report that is to be published in September be trashed, or will the committee have a role in developing the details of this new national program?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for its support and the Hon. Member for his comments. The work of the House of Commons Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has not been pre-empted by yesterday's announcement as a result of the work done on behalf of the Government, by the leadership the Prime Minister gave on the issue, or by the further details that will be given by various members of Cabinet this week.

I believe the Hon. Member also knows that there are a number of issues with respect to treatment, prevention, and education which will need the co-ordination and help of members of the standing committee, of provincial Governments, of various Departments within the federal Government, and especially of people who work in drug and alcohol addiction centres across the country.

Yesterday we gave a very clear indication of the finances and the various amounts of money that are available for different programs.

As the Hon. Member will know, the provinces have primary responsibility in much of the treatment area. We have indicated to the provinces that we are putting this money forward to develop programs, especially where youth treatment gaps are identified. I very much look forward to recommendations from the standing committee in that area.

Mr. McCurdy: I hope the Minister will provide the standing committee with the details of his program.

NATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question derives from the committee hearings last night where we learned that the Native Council of Canada has been denied programming funds to address the problem of alcohol and drug addiction in off-reserve native communities. In view of the emphasis placed on that problem in his program, why has the Minister refused for the last year to meet with this group which is involved in the problems of a half million off-reserve native people?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, I would be very pleased to appear before the committee, not only to discuss the program but to table the various details, as my colleagues are presenting the various aspects of the program this week. I look forward to an invitation to discuss them.

With respect to the Native Council of Canada, let me say to the Hon. Member that I identified one of the problems in my first answer. The Hon. Member will know, as will my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that we have the NADAP for on reserve alcohol and drug programs. He will also know that there are treatment gaps for off-reserve native people, both status and non-status. As well, there have been problems as to provincial and federal responsibility.

I do not think that is a proper response and that is why the program was designed in such a manner that we can give youth treatment and other treatment to those very people.

I am willing to meet with the Native Council of Canada. Quite frankly, I think that is a spurious argument in an attempt to deflect from the real cause of the issue.

USE OF PAM PRODUCT IN AEROSOL FORM—DEATH OF TEENAGER

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning off-the-shelf items. About two weeks ago in the City of Mission, we lost a young teenager as a result of using a product called Pam in the aerosol form. This has taken the lives of several youths in this country.

Will the Minister take these particular commodities into consideration when he is dealing with this problem, because it is one that has been brought forward to me and to other Members of Parliament?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing that matter to my attention. I was aware of that, as well as the whole area of glue sniffing and gasoline sniffing. The program which we put forward was not only a drug abuse strategy, but an alcohol abuse strategy and a substance abuse strategy.

The point I am making to the Hon. Member and the House is that we want to make the programs that were outlined most effective, knowing that the best way to do so is by working with those people who work with Canada's young people, who work in the addiction centres and who know the streets and know the issues and who, frankly, need the money and programming. That is the manner in which we designed the program that I announced yesterday.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—OVERFISHING BY FRENCH FLEET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said in the House a few minutes ago that the presence of President Mitterrand in the House of Commons yesterday was an indication of progress.

I want to tell him that the people of Newfoundland regard the Government of Canada's veto of President Mitterrand's planned stop in Gander, Newfoundland, as an indication of a lack of will by the Government of Canada in resolving the Canada-France fish dispute.

Given that measures were announced, including the closing of Canadian ports, as a means of pressuring the French to stop illegally overfishing in Canadian waters and the French have continued to overfish illegally, what new measures are being considered by the Government of Canada to be implemented to stop illegal French overfishing in Canadian waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were two allegations in that question. With respect to the stop-over by the French President, the news report on which the Hon. Member is relying is inaccurate. It is false. It is wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Prove it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My word is being called into question, from her seat, by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. If she wants to follow a formal procedure in the House and find the courage to do that, she may do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have just stated the facts, and I know the Hon. Member will accept them.

Second, it has been our view that one of the important things to be accomplished in moving this file forward in a way that will be helpful to both Canada and to France is to have the French understand clearly the importance of this problem to Canadian fishermen and to the people of Newfoundland.

There can be no doubt that after the presentation by my colleague, the Minister of Transport, yesterday, the President of France and his Ministers understand very clearly the depth and the importance of this position to the people of Newfoundland and Canada.

CLOSURE OF CANADIAN PORTS TO FRENCH FISHING FLEET

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, unless the line that was established by the former Member for Yukon is still in place all the way into Liberal caucus meetings, then it is hardly befitting the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tell us what is true or not true and what was said or not said by representatives on behalf of the Government of Canada—

Ms. Copps: That's right.

Mr. Tobin: —with respect to the veto of a planned and requested stop by the President of France at Gander, Newfoundland. Those are the facts, and the Secretary of State knows it.

I repeat the question. The Government of Canada announced closure of Canadian ports as a measure to force the French to stop illegally overfishing in Canadian waters. The Government said at the time that it was the first measure to be taken to try to impose the law of Canada. It has failed.

What new measures are going to be implemented, and when are they going to be implemented?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member had support, from her seat, from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East for his allegation. She was the only one to support him because his facts were simply wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Is there still a wire-tap into Liberal caucus meetings now?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East will restrain herself, Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the restraining should probably be left to the Chair. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I wish you well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, there was no veto. Second, as I said in reply to the earlier question, and the second was a repetition of it, it was our view that it was very important that the French understand clearly and directly the importance of this issue to—

Mr. Tobin: Why didn't he go to Newfoundland?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —Canadian fishermen. The question is: "Why didn't he go to Newfoundland?" That was a decision taken by the French. What we did was bring Newfoundland—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What we did was bring Newfoundland and Newfoundland's concerns directly and personally to the attention of the President of France through the eloquent person of the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TANYA INWOOD—REFUSAL OF EXIT VISA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure he is aware that Tanya Inwood, the Russian wife of Kirby Inwood, a resident of Toronto, was again told yesterday that she and her eight-month old son, Misha, would not be able to leave the Soviet Union to live with her husband here in Canada.

The Soviet authorities have alleged that Mrs. Inwood possesses "Soviet defence secrets". I just returned from the Soviet Union last week. I spoke with many refuseniks who have also been denied exit visas with the ludicrous and cruel excuse of state secrecy.

Surely this case warrants a strong intervention by the Government, by insisting that the Soviet authorities allow Tanya Inwood and her son, Misha, who incidentally is a Canadian citizen, to emigrate to Canada.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I think the visit made by the Hon. Member and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville on behalf of Parliamentarians Interested in Soviet Jewry was a very helpful and constructive visit. I want, as Foreign Minister, to express my appreciation to them for their work.

I agree with the Hon. Member. This question deserves, as it has received, very active intervention by the Government of Canada. We have made representations on at least 12 occasions.

As the House knows, this issue is one that is of deep concern to the Government. It is an issue of great emotional importance to the Canadians involved. It is an issue of general importance to everyone in the House. We have worked hard on it, on the Inwood case and on other cases. We will continue to work hard on that and on other cases.

In some circumstances we succeed. We have not yet succeeded in this case, but we intend to continue to try.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

DIVERSIFICATION OF WESTERN ECONOMY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I realize that the Minister knows western Premiers are meeting in Humboldt today and that part of their agenda includes diversification of the western economy.

I have here a document from the Minister's Department which outlines the marketing strategy of the new program called Industrial Horizons, which is yet to be announced and launched by the Department.

Why is there this delay in the launching of the new Industrial Horizons Program, a delay which concerns me because the western diversification initiative is a very important component of the Industrial Horizons Program? Why is there this delay? Does the Minister not realize that the economic problems in western Canada are extremely serious?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think it can be said that the Government has been moving towards regional diversification as he had indicated in the last Throne speech. Since then, the Prime Minister has stated, and repeatedly so, his intention to see that Government deal with this issue as fast as possible.

Mr. Speaker, we have announced our intention of formulating policies with regard to the problems facing Western Canada. If I were the Hon. Member, I would also examine the record of the Government since it came to power in September 1984, particularly with regard to projects in Western Canada, and more specifically, what has been done for example in the riding of Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the announcement to the effect that Versatile will remain open and that Ford New Holland will open for business, the assistance to Cominco, which was also directed to Western Canada. Numerous projects have created and maintained employment as a result of policies of the present Government which address these concerns.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, he still did not tell the House why he has not launched the Industrial Horizons Program, or do I have to announce it on behalf of the Government?

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. I also have here an internal departmental description of the western diversification initiative, along with the different task force sectors which are described. When I go through the document I see no suggestion whatsoever of new funding or fresh money for western diversification.

What I want to know from the Minister is whether or not the Government is now going to commit itself to a lot of new money to diversify the economy of western Canada, because the document does not say that? Are you going to do it or aren't you?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is again engaged in mutterings similar to what he engaged in during the course of the debate last Thursday. That is all they are, Mr. Speaker. I want to be as charitable as I possibly can to the Hon. Member. I can tell him that the documents he has represent the fact that he is out of touch, out of date, and he speaks for no one but himself and his group of leakers.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: They are all Tory leakers, Don.

SPECIAL GRAINS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He told the House a few weeks ago that when western Premiers called and demanded help for western prairie interests that he would respond.

Today Premier Grant Devine of Saskatchewan called on the federal Government to give a commitment of a minimum of $1.6 billion in a special grains program for the 1987-88 crop year. Now that the Premier has called on the Prime Minister to provide this assistance, will he respond in the way he said he would in the House and give a commitment to provide this additional assistance in the 1987-88 crop year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the point that I made earlier, I think last week or the week before, was merely that in contrast to previous administrations, of which my hon. friend was a member, when western interests were involved and telephone calls were placed from western Premiers to the Prime Minister in Ottawa they went completely unnoticed and unanswered, I indicated that when western Canadians were in difficulty and through their Premiers they communicated with me, there was a response on behalf of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: And what is your response?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend asks what is the response. I am trying to give it.

I was out in Saskatchewan, in his province last week. There was, I think, a recognition by the farmers in Saskatchewan of the tremendous assistance that had been brought about by the billion dollar deficiency payment introduced last autumn which is the largest deficiency payment, I am informed, in the history of western Canada. There was an acknowledgement that that was very helpful.

There was an indication that there were problems coming up next year. We committed, of course, to try to work through the Minister of Agriculture with the farm groups, with individual farmers and with the Governments in this regard. We continue to do precisely that. I think that is the spirit which will solve these problems.

UNITED STATES AND EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY SUPPORT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The United States, France and the EEC countries all provide a commitment to their farmers as to the level of financial support they will provide over and above the market value of the grain.

Why is it that the Government is not prepared to give a commitment now for the new crop year, the crop coming off this fall, to provide at least the same returns from the marketplace and the financial assistance provided by the Government as other countries are doing for their farmers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been, as my hon. friend knows, very helpful to agriculture in western Canada. Agricultural assistance has, by and large, increased by some 350 per cent since this Government was sworn in. I think farmers are—

Mr. Benjamin: Where's the answer?

Mr. Mulroney: I am trying to provide an answer.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell us about the next crop year.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the larger implications, surely my hon. friend is not suggesting that this Government undertake the kind of policy that exists in the United States and in the European Common Market which has given rise to an agricultural trade war, which is precisely the kind of instrument that is debilitating western farmers.

We are working through the Cairns Group, through the OECD last week, through a meeting yesterday with the President of France, and we are meeting today with President Fanfani in regard to the Venice Summit, to take corrective action to ensure that this crippling artificial trade subsidy practice on the agricultural side, which is literally stealing Canadian markets and lowering Canadian commodity prices, ceases. My hon. friend should not be recommending the kind of solution which causes the problem rather than solving it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: It is a no, a firm no.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that while we got started late today, we are now pushing it a bit. I would ask Hon. Members to make their questions very short and that Ministers respond likewise. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

FISHERIES

RESOLUTION OF CANADA-FRANCE BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of Fisheries. The Minister of Transport made an eloquent statement of Canadian concerns about the boundary dispute and the depletion of cod stocks off Newfoundland to the French President yesterday. President Mitterrand himself made a reasoned response indicating that he favours a speedy bilateral solution, and if that is not forthcoming, an early reference to third party arbitration.

In light of this expression of reason and eloquence, what steps does Canada now plan to take to make sure that France is more forthcoming in the negotiations on the boundary dispute so that we do not have to be involved in this continued depletion of our cod stocks and that we will not get involved in any further sell-out of those stocks?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member comes so late with his question on behalf of his Party, the Party which advocates forceful gunboat diplomacy in dealing with this issue.

I would remind the Hon. Member that a process of negotiation is under way and that this week's visit by President Mitterrand to Canada will give the President a perspective on Canadian concerns, as was indicated by the Prime Minister and described eloquently yesterday by the Minister of Transport. We expect that to have a very salutory effect on the solution which we seek to this serious problem.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary, please.

EFFECT ON CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Government has indicated that it is only going to have more of the same. Did the Government make it clear to President Mitterrand that it regards the St. Pierre-Miquelon boundary dispute and the implications for Canadian cod resources as being absolutely central to Canada-France relationships, not peripheral, and that if there is going to be any improvement in those relationships, that that depends upon a satisfactory solution to the boundary dispute, satisfactory to Canadians and to Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the House will find that question rather repetitive as it was answered by the Prime Minister in more than one way in this House today that this issue is, indeed, a serious concern to Canada and was well addressed in the meeting with President Mitterrand yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East. One question, please.

MEDICAL CARE

NON-COVERAGE OF CERTAIN SERVICES IN ALBERTA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. More than two months ago I raised concerns in this House about the dismemberment of medicare in Alberta. The Minister to date has sat by and done nothing while we see the Government of Alberta cutting out eye examinations, foot care, and birth control counselling from its medicare plan.

Can the Minister stand in his place today, as he did last week, and justify these cut-backs, suggesting to the women of Canada that birth control counselling should not be a medically necessary service? Is that the position of the federal Minister of Health? If so, he should resign.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have always wondered why Premier Peterson was so pleased when that Hon. Member left his caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): She is demonstrating every day why.

We have not stood idly by, Mr. Speaker. I will inform the Hon. Member again, and the Liberal caucus if they do not know, that medically insured programs under agreement between the Government of Canada and any provincial health care system are maintained under the Canada Health Act and the block funding under the EPF about which all of us know.

With respect to other services, some provinces go beyond contractual arrangements. They can decide whether or not they will be covered directly by the province or paid by the person who accesses the system. It has always been that way.

Further, with respect to the Alberta situation, we have asked for a list of services which it now intends not to cover under its insured program. To date there has been no indication that Alberta is outside the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the time for Question Period has now gone by. I have a question of privilege by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH STANDING ORDER 99(2)

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from a statement by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) in this House on May 15, 1987. I served notice on you, Mr. Speaker, as soon as possible following the statement of the Minister.

• (1510)

The question of privilege I will try to present here this afternoon arises from certain statements made by the Minister on May 15.

First, on March 19, 1987, the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration tabled its report in the House. At the very end of that report the committee indicated to the House and the Government that the committee requested that the Government respond to this report in accordance with Standing Order 99(2). Standing Order 99(2) reads as follows:

> Within 120 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the operative word, "comprehensive".

Having said that, I want to point out that on May 15, the Minister tabled his letter to the chairman of the Standing Committee in which he said that, "the Standing Committee has suggested that we consider the recommendations as a package and we have done so".

There is nothing in the Standing Committee report that asks or even suggests that the Minister deal with that report as a package. There is no package deal. In fact, the Standing Committee's report to the House and the Government asked that the Government respond under Standing Order 99(2). We wanted a comprehensive response.

Furthermore, the only mention of the Standing Committee in the Minister's statement appears on page 8 of the statement where he said:

> Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank each member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration for their work on the Unemployment Insurance Program.
> Their report was most helpful in our consideration of not only the current program but the other proposals for reform we received.
> The committee suggested we consider its recommendations as a package and we have done so.
> I am tabling today a letter to the Chairman of the Standing Committee reflecting the contents of my statement which will serve as the Government's response to the Report in accordance with the Standing Orders.

In other words, the Minister said that his statement of May 15 is to be considered the comprehensive response to the Standing Committee.

First, we did not ask for a package deal or for a package consideration. Second, we asked that the Minister and the Government respond under Standing Order 99(2) which calls for a comprehensive response.

Furthermore, as recorded at page 6145 of Hansard of May 15, 1987, the Minister said:

> In the past six months the Government has considered carefully the advice of all of the commissioners. As well we have studied the recommendations of the Royal Commission in Newfoundland, the Macdonald Commission recommendations and those of the Standing Committee. Members of this House will know that there are sharp and irreconcilable differences among these studies.

Again, that is a false statement. In fact, the Standing Committee made a comparison between the Standing Committee's recommendations and the Forget Commission's recommendations, and that study was available to the Minister. I have it here and I will table it so that the Minister may peruse it if he has not yet seen it. We found that there were 22 areas in which we reached agreement. There was no disagreement between Forget, Macdonald and the Standing Committee on 22 areas. When the Minister said that there were irreconcilable differences, he knew not of which he spoke.

We asked for a comprehensive response. Let me take a look at some of the recommendations. We recommended that there be a common entrance requirement of 10 weeks of insurable employment. Was there a comprehensive response to that in the Minister's statement? We recommended that a common two-week period be retained. Was there a comprehensive response to that recommendation? We recommended that the benefits remain at 60 per cent of weekly insured earnings but that the possibility of phasing in an increase of up to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent in the future be explored by the new commission. There was no comprehensive response to that recommendation. We recommended that the waiting period be eliminated entirely for maternity and adoption benefits. Was there a comprehensive response to that recommendation in the Minister's statement? No way. We recommended that the current practice be retained for work-sharing arrangements. Was there a comprehensive response to that in the Minister's statement? No way. I am simply picking some examples out to build a case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is listening very carefully. I think the Hon. Member is probably straying into debate. I would ask that he stay clearly on the point.

I am sure the Chair will appreciate the point when it comes to the time when I will have to reflect upon it and respond. However, I think the Hon. Member is perhaps going over into debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to stray from the point. The point I am trying to reinforce is that we made recommendations with respect to benefits, with respect to the administration of the program and with respect to the structure of the Unemployment Insurance Program. In fact, the Minister's statement of May 15 did not respond to that in a comprehensive way. In fact, it is in contravention of Standing Order 99(2).

I believe the Standing Order is being abused. The Minister said, for example, that the Standing Committee requested a package consideration, but it never did. There is no evidence to suggest that we asked for a package consideration. The Minister also suggested that there were irreconcilable differences in our reports. As a member of that committee, I cannot accept that the Minister could so breach the rules and get away with it.

I believe that there are some courses that may be followed. You may want to ask the Minister to table a new report, Mr. Speaker, or else apologize to the members of the committee for his misleading statements. Finally, I am prepared to move a motion, which would be seconded by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), that the whole question of response by the Government to Standing Committees be examined by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure and that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) be called to that committee to answer charges that he misled the House by saying that the members of the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration wanted a package deal and that he blamed the members for the non-reform of the Unemployment Insurance Program as enunciated in his statement of May 15. I am prepared to move that motion. My hon. colleague from La Prairie, a member of the committee, is prepared to second that motion.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I consider it my duty to rise on this question of privilege, since I am a member of the Standing Committee of the House on Labour, Employment and Immigration, a committee that submitted a report to the Government on the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) gave notice of the motion he has just read and described. He claimed that his privileges as a Member of this House had been infringed upon, basically because of the Government's brief response to the First Report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration on the Unemployment Insurance Report and the reference to the Committee's 90 excellent recommendations that formed an indissolvable unit and were in fact supported by a various employer and employee organizations and other groups.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to mention the fact that 89 of the 90 recommendations received the unanimous approval of the three Parties represented on the Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Government Members on the Committee, including my colleagues from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn), Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie), Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), myself, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Member for the Liberal Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) worked for a total of nearly 100 hours, examining unemployment insurance in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it would have been a lot easier to consult the back-benchers of all three parties in the House, to find out whether their recommendations were to be seen as a unit or as separate entities. Mr. Speaker, no one bothered to. No one came to see any of the members of the Committee. No one asked any questions. Nobody made any enquiries. No one contacted me personally to find out whether the recommendations formed a whole or were to be seen separately. And by the way, I have been sitting on committees ever since I was elected to this House in September 1984, and I have never seen a committee report that received full approval.

Mr. Speaker, not quite like the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, I am not so sure whether it is the Minister's fault, or whether senior officials failed to recognize the essential role played by the Parliament of Canada and the Members in governing this beautiful country of ours. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I have to go along with the premises of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. We must demand a full and frank response to our recommendations and to those made by other standing committees of this House. Otherwise, we should ask the senior officials to govern without a democratically elected Parliament. Mr. Speaker, I will never and cannot tolerate the perpetuation of a parallel authority, which became a practice under the previous Liberal Government that let officials dictate how to organize and administer the country.

Mr. Speaker, we, Members of this House, were democratically elected, and we make recommendations for good government. In this case, we have the Members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration who were working morning, noon and night, and sitting six, seven or even eight times a week, with each sitting lasting for five to five and a half hours.

Let me tell you: When the President of the Commission on Unemployment Insurance, Mr. Gaétan Lussier, who, as it turns out, happens to be Deputy Minister of Employment—

Mr. Speaker: Please. I appreciate the seriousness of the problem—a complaint with some difficulties; however, we should not stray away from the core of the argument and I think that, just like the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the Hon. Member is now straying into debate. The Chair therefore suggests that other Members might be willing to conclude their remarks, for as I said clearly, the Chair fully appreciates the point of view of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). There might also be no point in making lengthy speeches. The Hon. Member for La Prairie may therefore wish to conclude his remarks, and I suggest that this might be done briefly.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I understand your decision and your suggestion. It is however important for me to document the points on which I am presently seconding the motion of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

I was saying that when the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission was heard by the Committee, I asked him personally what would happen with the report of the Unemployment Insurance Commission that we were studying and dealing with, whether it was going to find its way to the circular file, to file number 13, or whether he was going to submit it with suggestions to the Government. If I remember well, he just shrugged his shoulders and smiled. Nothing, no answer.

Mr. Speaker, when 90 equally important recommendations are tabled and recommended in a report, I firmly believe that they deserve a little more than those two little pages as an answer. But mostly with respect to the question we want to have debated, those recommendations which were not presented as a package should not have been considered as a package deal. Mr. Speaker, a department with nearly 25,000 employees and, believe it or not, 214 vice-chairmen, 214, could have tried a little harder.

That was not the greatest effort at productivity I have witnessed in my life as an Hon. Member, a businessman or a public man. It is the duty of the House, Mr. Speaker, through the Committee of Elections, Privileges and Procedure, to ascertain what a Government should do with respect to the recommendations of a Standing Committee within reasonable limits.

You have advised me, Mr. Speaker, to keep it short, but I cannot help mentioning that when I am sitting on that Committee and I ask precisely the Deputy Minister what he is going to do with the report, I always get the same answer: He smiles and shrugs his shoulders! All his face is saying: Out the garbage!

Maybe we should indeeed call as witnesses in this House all the senior officials responsible for the vagueness of the Minister's answer. They are his advisors. Therefore—

Mr. Speaker: I am really sorry to interrupt, as I consider the argument of the Hon. Member to be quite serious. It is an argument which concerns other Members of the Committee also, and I can assure you that the Chair fully appreciates the argument, and therefore there is no need to keep on with this matter as it is clear that the Hon. Member is now debating the matter.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I believe questions of privilege are a good safety valve. However, the basic rule is that the question must be raised reasonably close to the time of its alleged occurrence. It is a little difficult for me to understand why, 11 days later, my hon. friend from Nickel Belt has awakened to the fact that his privileges have been breached. To have such a lengthy debate on an 11-day-old committee report is a bit beyond me.

• (1530)

Having dealt with that, it is quite clear that, if anything, this is a point of order rather than a question of privilege. You have made the point twice now, Mr. Speaker, that you have heard the case and that it has been made. I submit that there is no evidence of a breach of privilege of any Member of this House from any Party.

In closing let me say that comprehensive responses to committee reports are one of the key elements of the parliamentary reform which was brought in by the Government. It is a new effort to recognize the efforts of committees in preparing reports. Those responses are coming forward, either in direct response to a committee report or as part of, as in this case, a government response to another committee report, one independent of Members of Parliament.

We are breaking new ground with comprehensive reports. My hon. colleague may have an objection to it being «packaged» with other things, but I suggest that there has been no breach of privilege. As I understand it, there has been no breach of the Standing Orders by the Minister bringing forward his response as a «package». In fact, the report of the committee has been responded to by the Minister. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no breach of privilege and that absolutely no prima facie case has been made.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help Hon. Members. The Minister, of course, has every right to respond if he wishes. The Chair has the point.

I do want to inform the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) gave me notice of this a number of days ago and I agreed that I would hear it later. If there is fault, it is with the latitude allowed by the Chair, not with the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will obviously respect your decision as to when questions of privilege are heard. I suggest that under parliamentary tradition the very reason for a breach of privilege taking precedence over all other matters is that a Member's ability to act as a Member of Parliament has been impeded. I suggest that these items are to be heard as quickly as possible rather than when it is politically opportune for someone to make the argument.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I think the last comment of the Parliamentary Secretary does not become him nor does it become the role which he plays as the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I discussed the issue of raising the question of privilege with you and we agreed that I should raise it today. The fact is that the long-term performance of Members of Parliament has been impeded by a practice which has become very prevalent in this House. Committees work very hard and they table reports, and then the Minister stands up and gives a blanket statement that nothing will change or that the Government will do a particular thing. However, the Government never, never comes to grips with each of the recommendations made by a standing committee.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That's not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister went on in his statement to make all sorts of untrue statements.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are going to try to be more concise, but also more substantial than those who raised that question of privilege. I think that things have been clear from the start. I regret, however, that House procedures should be used to try and transmit messages that cannot get across any other way because the other side does not care.

Well, things are very simple. I will quote our Standing Orders on the tabling of documents in the House.

In French it reads: "Dans les 120 jours qui suivent la présentation d'un rapport d'un comité permanent ou spécial, le gouvernement dépose, à la demande du comité, une réponse globale."

[English]

In English it reads:

> Within 120 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

I think that is very clear. That was done before and there was no question of privilege raised at that time. I would like to refer to something which can be found in the report tabled by the committee.

[Translation]

The Committee considers that its recommendations should be taken as a package. I think the question is clear, it is quite obvious. I repeat: The Committee considers, and on that committee, Mr. Speaker, sat—

Mr. Rodriguez: On what page?

Mr. Bouchard: I let you speak without interrupting.

[English]

I allowed the Hon. Member to speak. I understand that that is the way of the NDP. They speak but do not allow others to speak.

Mr. Keeper: Tell us what page you are citing.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I will just repeat what I said. The committee requested that we give a comprehensive answer, and that is exactly what we did. As long as we are in government we will have the right to use the word "comprehensive" as we believe it should be used. It is the right of the Government to say that the answer it has given is a comprehensive one.

Finally, exactly the same answer was given to the sixth report of this standing committee on the backlog in the treatment of the status of refugee claimants. Exactly the same response was given one year ago and my friend did not raise a question of privilege. The Hon. Member need only look at his files. When the Hon. Member has something to say which he would like to be heard all across the country, there are ways to do it other than through a question of privilege.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two brief contributions to this discussion. In the presentation of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) he referred to a document, and he may have left the House with the impression that it was a committee document comparing the Forget report and that of the committee. It is in fact a working paper prepared for committee members by a researcher and not a document approved by the committee.

I see that the Hon. Member is indicating agreement. I believed that since the Hon. Member had offered to table the document, if you accept it, it should be labelled clearly as the production of a single researcher for the benefit of committee members rather than as a document approved by committee members.

I would also bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in the two sessions of this Parliament the committee has presented a total of seven substantive reports to which there has been a differing pattern of responses. Some have been very detailed, indeed recommendation by recommendation, and one at least, to which I think the Minister referred, was very similar to this particular response.

I think you will find that that response was raised by the Member from Scarborough on a question of privilege in the previous Parliament. The previous Speaker in the previous Parliament dealt with the issue of a similar report. I just bring that to your attention as a potential precedent that you might wish to consult.

• (1540)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I was surprised that the Hon. Minister tried to excuse his conduct on May 15 by pleading precedent. I happen to be concerned with the fifth and sixth reports, having worked on them for well over six months. It is similar to the situation that the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has described with the report on which he worked.

In fact, the then Minister treated this House shabbily by simply refusing to answer the fifth report within 120 days, at which time he tried to excuse himself by saying that he would answer that in conjunction with the sixth report. The fifth report was primarily on refugee processing and the sixth report was on the backlog. I objected at that time but was overruled by the Speaker. However, it is untrue to suggest that no complaint was made when the then Minister played fast and loose with the Standing Order.

When the time came due for a response to the sixth report, the then Minister gave the same shabby answer that he was not ready to answer. He simply said, in effect: "I have not done my work and I will not answer now, notwithstanding the rules". I objected again and was again put down by the then Speaker.

However, I did object and in fact retained a lawyer to take an action of mandamus against both the Minister of Employment and Immigration at that time and the Minister of State for Immigration. Procedural games were played by the Justice Department to prevent my entering that action, which were finally defeated. The action was entered, and within two days, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration was asked by a government Member what he would do about an answer to the report. She replied that the Minister of State for Immigration would be answering soon.

Against that background, the Minister of State for Immigration made the May 21 announcements. Not only were they incomplete, they also instituted new regulations that were operative as of that day, so that it was impossible to deal with both the question of privilege and the new situation created by the new regulations announced on that day. At that time I concentrated on trying to respond as positively and constructively as possible on behalf of my Party to the new regulations, which were unclear at that time and are unclear to this day. At that time they were not even made known to the officials who had to carry them out. That has been the subject of a complaint.

I consider it most inappropriate and most misleading, however unintentional, of the present Minister, who does not even have the courtesy to stay in the House to end the trouble he started. I would quote that as a precedent for his misconduct.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would realize that it was only inadvertence that led him to comment on the absence of the Minister. The Minister was only briefly out of his seat and was actually coming back to the Chamber. It only shows why we have the rule that we do not comment on the absence of an Hon. Member in this place.

In fairness to the Official Opposition, since it is an allotted day of the Official Opposition, I think I must advise Hon. Members that I have the point. I believe the Chair has certainly given sufficient latitude to hear the argument. I think some of the argument is debate.

I want to assure the Hon. Member for Spadina, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) that as far as the Chair is concerned there was an arrangement made to hear the matter today, or this week if not today. That arrangement was made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and the Chair, and that must stand. If there is any complaint from Hon. Members, the complaint must be brought to the Chair.

With respect to the issues that have been aired in these interventions, the Chair will consider it all very carefully. I shall report back to the Chamber as soon as I can. I assure Hon. Members that I have the point and that I treat it as a serious complaint on the part of those who brought it. I will consider very carefully whether it is a point of order or a question of privilege.

I do caution Hon. Members to remember that there are limitations on the extent to which the Chair can interfere with proceedings that are either in a committee or proceedings that are sent from a committee to a Department. However, I have the point and I will deal with it fully. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and others that the Chair clearly understands what the complaint is about.

Resuming debate. I would ask the co-operation of Hon. Members. There is no need to continue the debate on the question of privilege. Unless the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais)—

[Translation]

—the Hon. Member for La Prairie on another question of privilege or a point of order.

Mr. Jourdenais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for La Prairie has the floor.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask you for some guidance. Can I still raise a point of order about the statement by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary who said a moment ago that the opposition and the Hon. Member where involved in petty politics. I stood up and supported him. I do not belong to the Official Opposition, but I want the work done by Members to be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the point raised by the Hon. Member for La Prairie has already been raised by another Hon. Member. Naturally, it is not acceptable, in the House, for an Hon. Member, whether from the Government or the Opposition side, to talk about the motives or the honor of another Hon. Member. That rule is very, very clear and as far as the Chair is concerned the matter is closed.

[English]

I should also advise the House that there was another question of privilege to be heard this afternoon. The Hon. Member has very kindly deferred it until tomorrow. In fairness, I think the Official Opposition Members should be allowed to continue their debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA POST—POSTAL SERVICE—LABOUR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That this House condemn the government for allowing the deterioration of Canada's postal service by undermining the principle of fair and equal services to all Canadians through the substitution of "super mail boxes" for door to door service and by the closure of rural post offices, and by exacerbating already disintegrating labour-management relations within Canada Post by removing labour representation from the Corporation's Board and by other confrontational actions, thereby increasing the threats of postal service disruptions or even shutdowns.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): This morning, Mr. Speaker, we began today's opposition debate on the postal service in Canada. To us Liberals the postal service is very important, and we have shown this earlier today when the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) set the tone for this very important debate to express the views of the Liberal Party on the Canadian postal service.

Of course the position of the Minister responsible for Canada Post has been a great disappointment to me. Instead of taking this opportunity to unveil new measures to establish fair postal services he did nothing but level criticism at the Official Opposition, asking us to be responsible when in fact he himself has taken irresponsible action in the past few weeks, Mr. Speaker. Not so long ago the President of Canada Post stated—we must remember, Mr. Speaker, the context of very tense labour negotiations when he made his speech—the President of Canada Post said: "Strike or no strike, we will deliver the mail." A few days later the Minister responsible for Canada Post endorses the position of the President of Canada Post.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister responsible—in this context, irresponsible might be more fitting—for Canada Post is asking us in the Opposition to be responsible, I wonder to what extent he understands what is at stake here, the seriousness of the situation facing us today when, in a few weeks and possibly sooner, our postal service may come to a full stop.

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker, in order to set the record straight, I will begin with the second reading debate on the Bill which established the Canada Post Corporation. In this regard, I refer to the Debates of the House of Commons of October 24, 1980, page 4075. At that time the Postmaster General, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) said, and I quote:

Had management explained more clearly to the employees what it intended to do, had it involved the employees in the change, had it guaranteed, from the very start, everyone's job security, the employees would have understood that the machines were not meant to replace them but rather to help them in their work, and union leaders would have taken part in the operation rather than opposing it.

In the same speech, he added:

Crown corporation status will not remedy all our ills or difficulties. Every organization, be it government or industry, faces normal operational problems. However, with the streamlining of many of the facets of our operations and the support and good will of the employees, the Canada Post Corporation will be able to provide all Canadians with the postal service to which they are entitled and which they deserve. I want now to reiterate what I have said—

Those are the words of the former Minister.

—publicly and privately to union representatives, that is, I intend to have union representatives on the board of directors in order that they can get directly involved and participate fully in the good administration of the corporation.

That is the spirit in which the Canada Post Corporation was established in 1980-81, Mr. Speaker. It was precisely in the spirit of a full co-operation between management and staff. No modern and aggresive business can implement a successful corporate plan without a full co-operation between management and employees.

We only have to look at facts, Mr. Speaker. Since 1981, there was no strike. The reduction of the deficit was one of the goals, as well as to provide a better service and improve labour relations. Even as regards the reduction of the deficit, Canada Post made improvements since 1981 and the corporation improved its services in some areas.

But in 1984, Mr. Speaker, Conservative Members tried to imitate the Liberals during the election campaign and they promised the moon, the earth and everything else. But once in Government, they took off their masks, became real Conservatives and started to cut in services.

The excuse was that these cuts had to be made for the sake of deficit reduction, Mr. Speaker. We are very much aware of the problem and we agree on the necessity to work towards that reduction. However, we must not place the burden on ordinary people only, on those who are less fortunate than others, but we must call upon everybody. Mr. Speaker, what have we seen since 1984? Those who have been called upon to reduce the deficit are older people, handicapped people and small business people who have no alternative but to use Canada Post, whereas larger businesses can well afford private couriers . . . It is a truism to say that if postal workers go on strike, small businesses will be the first ones to be penalized. Mr. Speaker, these people will suffer because the Government, by not allowing Canada Post enough time to reduce its deficit, will be forcing a strike, and these groups will bear the brunt.

However, again for the sake of reducing the deficit, the Government had no hesitation in guaranteeing bank deposits over $60,000 in two Western banks. Of course, no small businesses had deposits over that amount, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, the Government did not hesitate, despite the fact that the operation cost us perhaps six or seven times the amount of the Canada Post deficit. I could give lots of examples, such as the Reisman Brothers case, the Port-Cartier penitentiary and so on. We know that in many instances this Government has been squandering public funds! But it has to make cuts when ordinary Canadians, and a service that everybody needs are concerned. I would hate to forget as well the Old Age Security pensions de-indexation.

So, Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants to reduce the deficit, it must ask all Canadians to tighten their belts. But in the case of Canada Post, only the elderly, the small businesses, the handicapped, the housewives, will suffer from the poor postal service resulting from the policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who said in his 1986 Budget that Canada Post must get rid of its deficit and balance its books by 1988.

Mr. Speaker, just this morning, my Leader, the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, said that it took the United States 14 years to achieve that result. But in Canada, a country so diversified, with only 25 million people and a territory larger than the United States, we want to reach in four to five years an objective that the Americans took 14 years to achieve. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. But in that case, the Minister of Finance decided to axe expenditures at Canada Post, and the management of the Corporation—under the direction of the Minister, has decided to cut the services, and we see the results.

Canadians are not satisfied with the service. We cut the door-to-door delivery by installing supermailboxes which are far from being "super", Mr. Speaker; they open by themselves, one key can open many of them, and there are also snow removal problems. Not long ago, a committee showed us pictures of the supermailboxes which had been installed for four to five months, and they were in a poor state. After only four to five months . . . Imagine how durable these boxes are! Just this morning, in response to a question, the Minister said that the investment will be paid for in four to five years thanks to all the savings made.

Mr. Speaker, we must analyse and put into perspective a number of things; since the effects of savings cannot be felt immediately, cuts have to be made. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the March 25, 1987 editorial of Le Droit, dealing with Canada Post Corporation:

> How important is postal service in our society? If one is to believe the complaints of users, it is one of the rare issues which concerns everybody—the role of the postal service is similar to that of public transit, but it is of greater importance. After all, some people never take the bus or the train, but very few people do not receive mail.
> However, given the size of its operating budget, Canada Post—is the least costly among Crown corporations. Given that the Government has had to provide 184 million dollars to Canada Post in 1985-86 fiscal year and that this accounts for only 6,2 percent of its operating budget, one is led to believe that no other Crown corporation of comparable scale (60,000 employees) has been able to match such a performance in modern day Canada . . .
