THE ARNCLIFFE PUZZLE, BY GORDON HOLMES

Author of "A MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE."

(Continued.) Lester promptly tucked that nervous hand tightly under his arm. There was nothing of familiarity or presumption in his action. It was, in his conception, the sure protective instinct of the strong man as free from any thought save friendship as Edith's own involuntary movement. Presently, indeed, he began to feel a magnetic glow from the hand. He was filled with a vague desire to slip unfeignedly down. So that his arm tightened to his side somewhat - since man cannot harbor such strenuous thoughts without some notion of the smother. And Edith would have slipped her hand away, only that her action would have seemed like a marked repulse, and that was not her intent. So the hand remained. "I am very stupid to give way in this fashion," she faltered at last. "But it has been such a trying day. And people say you think such dreadful things of me."

"My dear Miss Holt," protested Lester, "you must not notice all the vulgarities of a coroner's inquest. It is not considered according to ordinary regulations, and any idiot can make himself as offensive as he pleases. I wouldn't give another thought to the matter." "There is one thing I must think of, of course, Dr. Lester," Edith suddenly regained possession of her hand - the appearance of Lord Arncliffe's nephew will make a great difference to me." "But why?" "Oh, you see," she cried, almost breathlessly, "I dare not keep all this money when I know that Lord Arncliffe would have given it to his nephew if he had lived long enough to meet him."

"Well," admitted Lester, "I suppose the meeting might have brought about some change in the bequest; but, under the circumstances -" "I shall hand over the estate to Mr. Bradshaw," said Edith with determination. "I want you to believe this, because I would not have you think me careless of seeing disbursement." "You may count on my implicit belief," he exclaimed so earnestly that she gave eyes full in confusion. "Of course," he added hurriedly, "you are right, in a way, but from the little I have seen of him, Bradshaw does not impress me as a man to take anything he is not legally entitled to. In any case, it is not quite certain that Lord Arncliffe would have made hand some provision for you."

"That is another matter," rejoined Edith. "But the real fortune must go to Mr. Bradshaw. I shall never accept it. I am coming to think really, I shall be happier without such a great responsibility." "Lester, ordinarily so self-possessed, began to feel a delicious tremor of anxiety. He had regarded Edith's result as offering an insuperable barrier to his suit. Although not so foolish as to prefer a dowryless maid to one who brought an income which should preserve her from want in the event of his death, he never contemplated marrying an heiress, a woman who would rank with the town's really wealthy people in the land. Now, Lord Arncliffe's determination to bequeath the estate to Bradshaw opened up infinite vistas.

"Perhaps you are right," he said quietly, though his heart went pit-a-pat in the most unprofessional way. "After all, a lot of money must be a temptation to about fifteen hundred a year." "Yes!" "I made fifteen hundred last year, but I shall do better next. And -" "He had managed to take her hand again, and with it seemed to go all the trouble which he had been so sorely. He was big and strong and trustworthy -" "Yes," she whispered softly. "But Edith's fortune was not destined to end that night on the terrace. A door opened. They heard Mr. Angier's voice. "Oh, there you are, Miss Edith! Come here and convert our American cousin. He says that most of this money ought to be put on the equipment. Really, he is terrific!"

CHAPTER XX. HARRY WARREN SUBSTITUTES A FRESH SENSATION. The shadows were lengthening, and the soft suggestions of evening's hush were softening the vivid hues of the summer landscape, as Harry Warren strode through the Arncliffe grounds on the day following Bradshaw's arrival. There was a hint of uneasiness in his gait. His face was unsteady flushed. The sagged misery in his eye was of that enduring type which may be dulled, but cannot be driven, by potatoes. He was talking to himself like a child, blaming himself for his own folly, and almost ready to weep at the monstrous injustice of it all. He was indeed a child, in the sense that the average is childish, an overgrown Gooty, absolutely deficient in self-control, and ready to gratify any passing fancy without a thought for the propriety of doing so. And now, when that most unpleasant date in the calendar of life loomed dangerously near, he was moving himself to meet it, not with calm front and cool judgment, but with the fortitude of the brandy bottle. He walked on, shading at leaves and twigs with his hunting-crop, and muttering inarticulate threats against every one in general, and Edith Holt and Lester in particular. So oblivious to his surroundings was he that he almost ran into his mother, who was making her way in the direction of the village. If Harry Warren's vices far outweighed his virtues, let it be placed to his credit, nevertheless, that there was no alloy in the gold of his affection for his mother. Her austerity saved him a little, though to him she sometimes went unheeded sufficiently to show the woman's heart hidden beneath the exterior of marble placidity. And if Warren loved his mother, she devoted herself to him with the intensity of which perhaps, only the self-contained are capable. She was under no illusions as to his intellectual gifts, and his very eagerness seemed only roughness. She now realized that without the assistance of a firm, unfeeling hand, he would be submerged by the flood-tide of misfortune creeping in on him. The pitifully weak link in the chain of her calculations was that she might never consider the possibility of Edith Holt, whether rich or poor, in goodness or in sorrow, hesitating to embrace eagerly the prospect of ultimate bliss opened by marriage with this paragon. Warren's greeting to his mother was a scintilla of contentment. He was wondering how he had been the witness of his efforts to quench the fire in his breast by pouring spirits into it. "But if Mrs. Warren saw she did not comment. She slipped her arm within that of her smallest son with a gesture, half of motherly protection and half of normally approval. "Now, my boy," she said quietly, "tell me all about it."

"There is nothing to tell you," was the calm reply, "excepting that I have been beaten at every turn by that cursed meddling Lester." "Oh, I have no patience with you!" exclaimed Mrs. Warren, her words and actions nevertheless betraying an acidity of patience. "Haven't you the soul of a man in that great body of yours? Why should you fear Dr. Lester? You are younger, better-looking, and you might have secured Edith's affections a dozen times over before this interloper came from the African swamps. But of course no girl of Edith's position would consent to your phantasies with the labels and Gertie and Mays of the village. Why, I am told that she would not have a word of conversation with a man who had the impudence to report that she is engaged to you."

A Good Reputation is worth a lot to any man, woman or article. The high reputation which "FIVE ROSES" FLOUR has obtained through honest merits alone is unequalled by that of any ordinary brands, and has been achieved by years of the most careful study and endless and costly experiments in milling. The reputation of "FIVE ROSES" is of the greatest importance to us, as our guarantee as to quality and purity goes with every bag and barrel we sell. Such a guarantee, backed by our reputation, should be considered by all housekeepers when ordering flour.

"FIVE ROSES" FLOUR is now recognized as the standard from which the quality of other brands is judged. No housekeeper can afford to ignore such a reputation when buying flour. She should, therefore, ask for "FIVE ROSES."

book. This, however, Warren noted with the quick appreciation of nerves at full tension, was as yet unexplained. How long would it remain unexplained? And then there came to him an insane desire to scream out - to do anything that might do it all, and relieve the stress that was making an inferno of his life - but he checked the mocking flood of consciousness and stooped lightly up by the French windows which gave access to the library from the garden. He turned the book over. Even now he had not decided on any course of action, though he had some vague hope of engaging the lawyer's attention, perhaps till dinner time, when the book might be left unguarded. So he advanced across the soft carpet, trying to frame a greeting with his dry lips.

The old man's back was toward him, absorbed in his work, at that he did not look up, because, as it chanced, he thought the newcomer was a servant. (To be continued.)

THE DIFFERENCE

Louis XVI was king until the army abandoned him; then he became "Citizen Capet" and the nation pushed him slowly toward the scaffold.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THEM

A grim record is that relating what befell the various persons prominently connected with the Dreyfus case:

Major Esterhazy—Real author of the bordereau (or incriminating document); tool of the conspirators; died in exile and wretched poverty in London.

Colonel Sandherr—Chief of general staff, who first accused Dreyfus of writing the bordereau; dismissed from the army in disgrace.

Major Du Paty De Clam—Officer who placed Dreyfus under arrest; dismissed from army.

Colonel Piquart—Chief of general staff succeeding Sandherr; discovered that Dreyfus was not author of the bordereau; driven from army by the conspirators; reinstated.

Colonel Henry—Chief of general staff succeeding Piquart; confessed that he forged documents used as proof against Dreyfus; committed suicide in prison.

General De Boisdeffre—Chief of the general staff who had charge of the "dossier"; retired from army in disgrace.

BIT NURSE ON THE ARM

Injured Victim of Framingham Disaster Became Insane and Tried to Eat His Nurse.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, July 25.—Among the many deeds of tireless sacrifice and noble endeavor that followed the catastrophic news were more heroic than those of Miss Frances White, a nurse of the Framingham Hospital, and Dr. Mary A. Sweeney of Sherborn.

Dr. Sweeney is one of the efficient women physicians attached to the Worcester Reformatory Prison in Sherborn, just across the Framingham line.

Miss White was on Alexander street at the home of Frank Howard, but when the news reached her she left her patient and hastened down town.

One Italian laborer being led away by Miss White, apparently unharmed save for bruises, suddenly swung insane and bit deeply into her forearm.

It was some time before Miss White could get the nurse to the hospital and helping Drs. Benner and Glass perform operations.

SLAPPED IN THE FACE Major Dreyfus Thus Insulted in Exclusive Paris Club Yesterday—He Did Not Retaliate

NEW YORK, July 26.—A special cable to the New York Herald from Paris and dated Wednesday, says: Just after being honored by President Fallieres at the Elysee Palace today, Major Dreyfus was publicly insulted in the Cercle Militaire, one of the most exclusive clubs in Paris, by a commandant who slapped him in the face.

It was at a reception at the Cercle Militaire to the Thirtieth Regiment of Artillery that Major Dreyfus and Commandant Large made their first appearance in a military gathering since the recent court verdict. As Major Dreyfus came into the room an officer, whose name is not yet known, ran up and slapped him in the face. The major did not reply. Instantly there was almost a riot in the club rooms, two groups being formed of sympathizers and opponents of Dreyfus. It appears that the incident was prearranged and the officer who attacked Dreyfus is said to have declared that he would refuse to resign in order to bring opprobrium on Major Dreyfus and force him to retire from active service. Several other disagreeable incidents are said to have occurred in the club's rooms tonight and a great crowd is in front of the doors, which were closed.

PARIS, July 26.—An official denial was issued today regarding the rumor that Major Dreyfus had been assaulted yesterday by a brother officer at the military club. The official statement says: A denial of the rumor formal kind is authorized concerning the incident which is rumored to have occurred last night at the military club, during a dinner, at which Major Dreyfus was present. The facts are as follows: According to custom, the officers of the First Cavalry Division gave a dinner to two newly appointed lieutenants, and the minister of war authorized the officers, upon their unanimous request, to invite Major Dreyfus. The dinner occurred and was marked throughout by animated sentiments of the most perfect good fellowship. The officers separated at 9.20 p. m. without the occurrence of anything which could give rise to the rumor put in circulation.

'FRISCO READY FOR STRANGERS First Hotel Since the Fire is Operated for the Benefit of the City.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—One of the most striking examples of the public spirit that has characterized the rebuilding of San Francisco is shown in the opening of the St. Francis Annex. Although a temporary structure, this first of San Francisco's new hotels will be fitted with every modern convenience and will afford the traveler the same luxury of service that was formerly obtained in the famous St. Francis. A peculiar interest is attached to this enterprise in that the hotel is situated in the centre of San Francisco's famous tropical park, Union square, and that the site was obtained from the city through the efforts of the Park Commissioners on the grounds that it was the broadest civic policy to make it immediately possible for the better class of travelers to visit the city and to enjoy every comfort to which they were accustomed.

In return for this privilege the hotel company are pledged to turn over to the city all profits returned from the operation of the hotel, these profits to be used for the future improvement of the park. This is probably the only case on record of a hotel built and operated on private capital for the benefit of the city.
