Spectacles unequalled by any for their Strengthening and Preserving Qualities.

Too much cannot be said as to their superiority over the ordinary glasses worn—there is no glimmering, wavering of the sight, dizziness, or other unpleasant sensation, but on the contrary, from the peculiar construction of the Lenses, they are soothing and pleasant, causing a feeling of relief to the wearer and producing a clear and distinct vision as in the natural and healthy sight. They are the only spectacles that preserve as well as assist the sight, and are the cheapest because the best, always lasting many years without change being necessary.

LOVE AND HONOUR. A TALE OF THE CLYDE. CHAPTER XXIV.

SQUIRE OAKLEY OF OAKLEY GRANGE—A VISIT TO MANDERLAIN... Punctually at the hour of the next day, Edwin and Ritchie entered Mr. Weggate's private room, and found that gentleman again alone, reading, not as on the former occasion a musty manuscript, but that morning's letters.

"Good morning, gentlemen, good morning," he exclaimed, rising to meet them. "Sorry the Squire has not turned up yet. I have sent along to his hotel in the Strand to learn if he has come to town, and—ha, perhaps that is the messenger returned. It was the tinkle of the bell which caused the lawyer to break off so suddenly, and sent him to the speaking tube, where he laid his ear to listen.

A loud boisterous voice was at the moment heard in the office, followed by a heavy tramp of feet towards the outer door of the private room, which seemed to burst open through the application of vigorous force, and the Squire bounded in as large as life. This term in reference to Squire Oakley meant something considerable. A big, burly, round-faced man was he—baldly to richness, with full cheeks, a donkey chin, large full eyes, and bushy hair, that had once been yellow, but was now well mixed with grey, though he was scarcely yet turned fifty. A strong, jovial, boisterous, healthy man he was—frank, hearty and loud spoken—the very best ideal of a full-blooded, jocular, English Squire.

"Ah, Mr. Weggate, my boy, how are you?" he shouted, as he burst in among them. "Got your message yesterday, wondered what the deuce was up, started for town by last train, stayed at Briggs' all night, and here I am. Oh, by Jove, you have gentlemen with you. Never mind, I can kick my heels in the clerks' room, and have a talk with old Price till you are ready."

"Not at all, Squire," exclaimed the lawyer, catching his visitor by the arm as he was on the point of dashing out again. "These gentlemen are waiting to see you. It is on their account I have asked you to come up."

"Oh—oh—didn't know that. I don't think—(this to Edwin)—I don't think I have seen you before, sir; have I had that pleasure?" "No, Squire, I think not," interposed Weggate. "This is Mr. Allerton, of Merton Hall, Herefordshire."
