The CHAIRMAN: (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): It is my duty to warn the committee once more, as I have done already, that we have wandered far away from the item under consideration and unless it is the wish of the committee to proceed I must call hon. members back to a consideration of the question. I will read the resolution, if necessary, unless the committee wants to suspend all rules and continue discussing the condition of agriculture.

Mr. McMASTER: I did not intend to take part in this discussion but there have been some observations made by the right hon. leader of the Opposition which impel me to say a few words. The speaker in one breath advised the farmers of this country to be more businesslike, and to get organized better both for production and for marketing. I would ask the House to consider whether there can be any organization of production if you are to remain in happy ignorance of the cost of production, and I would make the point that the experts who have come before the committee which has been examining into agricultural conditions have endeavoured to apply business principles to farming and to the question of whether or not it ever has been possible, is possible, or will be possible in this country to make farming pay on a purely commercial basis. It is well that the real facts should be known and that the people should find out where they stand. I always like to listen to the leader of the Opposition, and I felt a thrill of pride pass through me to-night when from his remarks I gathered that he had not been hearing my voice as often as he was accustomed to, and that he did not expect to hear it for some time to come on such a subject as this. That is one of the reasons why I hasten to correct that impression.

I want first of all to direct the attention of the committee to what I would call an historical inaccuracy in the argument of the leader of the Opposition. He will persist in his contention that free trade hurt agriculture in Great Britain. May I tell him and this committee that the agriculturist of Great Britain, that is the man who was actually doing the work on the land, the working agriculturist who had been an independent person for some generations before, by 1835 to 1840 was almost a serf working for another man, or as one of them said, "I be protected and I be starving." I do not forget that when I was a boy in Scotland, an old lady, who remembered those days, told me that before the abolition of the Corn Laws in Scotland, the people went hungry. That was the condition in which agriculture was before the elimination of the Corn Laws. It was such a condition that not only the intellectual people, but the sympathetic and kind-hearted people of England, rose in their might and did away with that economic injustice which then existed.

The right hon. gentleman went on to say—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the hon. gentleman proceeds, does he dispute the fact that practically the entire body of agriculturists of England resisted the abolition of the Corn Laws, just as practically the entire body is asking for protection on their products to-day.

Mr. McMASTER: The right hon. member is wrong in his history. I have given a certain amount of sympathetic study to the history of England between 1815 and 1846. During the Napoleonic wars the landlords of England made a great deal of money. The farmers of England occasionally made money, but in times of scarcity they made tremendous profits out of their poor fellow citizens. Then the landlords raised the rents and there was not any great profit for the farmers. The landlords got a great deal of money during the Napoleonic wars. After the Napoleonic wars were over after 1815, the cost of wheat, of corn, of other cereals, dropped in the old country; but rents did not drop. What happened was this, that the landlords of England, who controlled both houses of parliament, the House of Lords and the House of Commons in England, imposed by law, semi-starvation on the vast body of the English people, the poor folk. They prohibited the entrance of corn into England until corn was 80 shillings a quarter. That was the law of 1815. In 1827, they inaugurated a sliding scale which very little helped the situation. The British workmen always protested against that. Finally, after years of agitation, a few British manufacturers formed the Anti-Corn Law League in 1837 or 1838. After eight years of one of the most wonderful popular agitations that ever took place in any country, they converted the people to their views. First of all they had to convert the workmen in the towns. The workmen in the towns were not sympathetic to the Anti-Corn Law League at first. They thought it was a "bourgeois movement," to use the expression of to-day. They thought it was a "masters' movement." John Bright and Richard Cobden converted the workmen in the towns. Then they went out and they were able to convert the agricultural labourers. As time went on they were able to convert the farmers, and finally they were even able to convert a certain number of landlords, and certain great lords and territorial magnates rallied to their cause. A Tory premier, Peel, who had been elected in 1841 as a protectionist, against the Whigs, who at that time were more or less free-traders, saw that if Great Britain was going to be saved from the social disturbances which took place and which caused tremendous revolutions in 1848, if they were to preserve the British constitution, there was nothing to do but to do away with this economic injustice and to wipe out the Corn Laws. That is a plain, unvarnished and inadequate statement of what happened in connection with the elimination of the Corn Laws in Great Britain.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): History repeats itself.

Mr. McMASTER: History repeats itself but in a different fashion. The people who were suffering through economic injustice in England, were those who suffered from the power of certain people, who had a home market for all that they could produce, maintaining prices at an arbitrary level through legislation. To-day the revolt against protection, against a high tariff in this country, comes from people who are able to produce far more than they consume and who wish to compete in the markets of the world on a fair basis with their competitors from other lands, just as the British manufacturer or the British workman who at that time could manufacture far more than was required to supply the people of Great Britain, wished to send on equal terms his goods to South America, Europe and elsewhere in the world. Great Britain adopted a policy of free trade. Capital and labour were then free to seek the greatest economic returns. There has been a certain diminution of the rural parts of England; but the rural labourer of to-day is in an infinitely better position than his grandfather was when he and the farmer who farmed the land and the landlord who owned the land were protected by a high tariff on what they produced. If men came into the towns of Great Britain from the country places, that was not only because they wished to earn better wages, but because there was in many an English village—this did not apply to Scotland to such an extent—a petty tyranny of vicar and landlord, which the spirits that desired freedom could not endure. It was only in the eighties that the farmer had the right to shoot hares that were destroying his growing crop. If he did that before then he might find himself in difficulty before the bench of magistrates.

What is the fundamental cause of hard times among the farmers? The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) showed himself, as all men of sense should be, sympathetic with the conditions of the farmer. But he seemed to think that this was a world-wide condition. It is not, altogether. If you look at Europe you will find that the peasant is about the only man there who is really getting on at all well. In Europe a vast number of people have been reduced from the level of being able to eat bread to what in the old days of protection in Great Britain used to be known as the potato level, when people had to eat potatoes and rye because they could not afford wheat and wheaten bread. The fundamental difficulty of the situation to-day is that the purchasing power of Europe has depreciated because of the war and the inability so far of the European peoples to settle their disputes on a reasonable basis, in view of the fact that each one, afflicted with an extravagant development of the protectionist virus, has raised tariffs against the other and made the position much worse than it would have been had they only allowed trade to flow between the different countries on that continent. It was a fine thing in one way to allow the national aspirations of the different races in Europe to find expression in the formation of free states. But when these states have raised tariff barriers against the other they hurt themselves to an enormous extent.

I have just one more word to say. There is something in what the leader of the Opposition says, that there are a relatively smaller number of people required to grow food than was the case years ago, and that occupation for the surplus—those who are released from the land—is found in the fact that although people can eat only three meals a day—I think if they live in England they can eat five, although in this country they eat three a day—they can wear any amount of clothes and use any quantity almost of the necessities and luxuries of life all of which things must be manufactured. There is something in that. That may have something to do with the relative diminution in the rural population of any country. But I respectfully submit to the committee that Canada is about the last country in the world where that principle should have had application, because I know of no country, except perhaps the Argentine republic or Australia—and Australia only to a certain extent, for the whole northern half of that country is so warm that it is difficult for white men to live there—I say I know of no other country in the world where that principle should have been applied. It seems to me that it should have come into Canada later than it would anywhere else, and I am afraid that we have suffered concurrently with the rest. But what I would point out is that Canada has not only in the past forty years suffered a diminution in her rural population; we have failed to keep our immigration as well as our natural increase either in the cities or in the country. That is the serious question before the people to-day, The farm is the reservoir of man-power, says the leader of the Opposition. I agree with him. He and many other men in this country and in this House are striking examples of the contribution which the farm has made to the city. But it is a mistake to drain the reservoir too much; it is a mistake to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

Mr. ROBB: I do not like to interrupt the debate, but I would observe that there has been no criticism whatever of the item under consideration. It represents a reduction of $10,000 while we show an increase of business of $165,000,000. At this late hour I think we might adjourn the debate upon the fiscal policy of the country until the budget comes down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But it shows something more than that. The cost was the same when we had a business of several millions more than now, so that the argument of the minister would not be of much value. Possibly I might be allowed to move the adjournment of the debate after I have offered some remarks. I did not think I had ventured to discuss the fiscal issue as such; that was not my object. The part of my remarks to which the hon. gentleman took exception was my statement that the state of prosperity of the British farmer would, I thought, be better to-day had he had a fair preference in the market he himself contributed to build.

Mr. McMASTER: That is, the home market?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; the hon. member takes exception to that statement. He states that though the agriculturist was the last to be converted, he really was converted to free trade before it carried. Well, his statement is that of a man living seventy years after. I will refer him to a speech of a public man at the time that this contest was on, just about the period when the Corn Laws were abolished; and I will tell him where he can find that speech. This man was himself a free trader, and I rather think, had I been in his position at that time, I would have been one too. But I would not have been one had I been a British agriculturist.

Mr. McMASTER: You would have been had you been a farm labourer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know how the farm labourer would get on unless the farmer prospered.

Mr. McMASTER: The landlord took it mostly in the rent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think there was any great difference of view between the farmer and the farm labourer.

Mr. McMASTER: Oh yes, there was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. gentleman will read the speech of Thomas Babington Macaulay, after his election in Edinburgh, when he returned to his constituency to thank the electors, he will find one very significant commentary on the election which that gentleman had just been through, that being about the year 1849. Macaulay said: In my county I had the greatest difficulty in ascertaining where my opponents stood on the issue of free trade. When I got to the city I found large posters, "Vote for Smith and Free Trade," and as soon as I got into the rural districts I found equally large placards, "Vote for Smith and Protection."

Mr. McMASTER: But Disraeli said, within two or three years of that, that protection was not only dead but damned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, because the population of the cities was increasing rapidly, and was greater than the population of the country; and of course there were some in the country who were in favour of the other policy. But I was not arguing the general issue; I have done that before and I will do it again at the proper time. I only rose to furnish some evidence of what actually was the division of opinion in England at that time. I have done so, and the hon. gentleman can find the reference I have given him within a few yards of where I sit. As to the condition of opinion now on this question, I do not know that I can do anything better than point to the report of the committee established to look into the condition of British agriculture and to devise some means of extricating it from the calamitous situation in which it finds itself to-day. That report recommends one principle and one principle only, that of protection; and the committee heard British agriculturists fully before submitting its report. It may be that the peasant of Europe is in a rather better situation than the other stricken elements of that disaster-pursued continent. That may be true. But I wonder if that is true in Great Britain. Europe is not a free trade body of nations; it is a protected group of countries. It is only in Great Britain where we find a government appointing commissions to discover some cure for the distracted state of the agricultural population. And the cure they recommend is the one I have just outlined to my hon. friend.

Now, I always admire fidelity, even though it is blind fidelity, and I have no objection at all, in fact I hope the hon. member believing as he does—and I have not the least doubt of his sincerity—will continue to air his opinions in this House and to press them home. But I sympathize with him now in that whereas in the last parliament he enunciated and propounded those views to the applause of two parties, he has now to be content with the applause of only one.

Mr. FIELDING: Is it not also correct that the British government have declined to act upon the report to which the right hon. member refers?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think they have acted yet. I rather detect, though, in the interruption of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that he has no belief at all in tariffs.

Mr. FIELDING: No. it is rather a desire on my part to see that the facts of any given case are correctly stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not state what the British government has done. The report has only been in a week.

Mr. FIELDING: That happens to be important.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; but the report has only been in a week. If the government of Great Britain acted upon that report and introduced legislation within a week of its receipt they would be a great deal more expeditious than the government of Canada now is.

Mr. FIELDING: Hear, hear.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BIRD: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I think it is about time to call the attention of the committee once more to the circumstances that I allowed the departure from the rule in the first instance because I was told there was no objection to the discussion; but it is altogether irrelevant and out of order.

Mr. BIRD: I shall be very brief, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I must apply the rule.

Mr. BIRD: I was stimulated to rise by the remarks of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). I think his attitude of mind is to be commended, although the process of his reasoning is open to criticism. I think the spirit he has shown is what we want to see manifested to a greater extent in this House, where there should be a serious effort to settle the problem that confronts our agriculturists. However, we have had the experience of seeing the subject treated more or less lightly, and consequently the note of seriousness voiced by the leader of the Opposition is very welcome to my ears. I am one of those who admires the rare quality of the right hon. gentleman's mind, but listening to him to-night I regretted that it was not engaged in a better cause. Circumstances have placed him in a position where he has to maintain a dead issue; but I think if Providence had dealt with him differently we would have found him addressing his mind, as he did to-night, effectively to living problems, much to our satisfaction.

Now, he referred to the comparative conditions prevailing throughout the countries of the world with regard to agriculture, and he specified Great Britain in particular. I do not think that agricultural conditions in that country are commensurable with agricultural conditions in Canada. Farming is altogether a different proposition in the two countries. But there is one relevant point; the farmer in Great Britain believes he is the victim of fiscal conditions; the farmer in Canada believes the same. It makes no difference that in Great Britain the complaint is based upon the operation of free trade, while in Canada it is based upon the operation of protection, the principle is the same. Agriculture whether in Canada or Great Britain is suffering from the social policy of the respective countries. The social policy in Great Britain is free trade, and with all due deference to the member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) I must say that the British farmer has suffered from that policy.

Mr. McMASTER: If the British farmer suffered from the introduction of free trade, how was it that rents went up from 1846 until about 1870, when vast quantities of cheap cereals coming from the newly opened lands of the western part of the United States brought rents down?

Mr. BIRD: I think the hon. gentleman will admit that rents in Great Britain are not closely related to the prosperity of the farmer.

Mr. McMASTER: The British farmers have to make a certain amount of money before they can pay rent to their landlords.

Mr. BIRD: I think the hon. gentleman must admit that the present attitude of the British farmer is sufficient evidence that he believes the fiscal policy of Great Britain is detrimental to his interest.

Mr. McMASTER: Some British farmers want to keep our cattle out, others want to let them in so they can finish them. There is a difference of opinion.

Mr. BIRD: I do not want to delve into history, but I know that the British farmer since the abolition of protection has been a consistent supporter of the protectionist party. No matter where his labourer stood, the British farmer has always stood for protection. But that is not the point. I am trying to show that in Great Britain the farmer has been the victim of a social policy, and I contend that he was rightly asked to suffer because he was in the minority. The social prosperity of Great Britain depended at the time upon the acceptance of free trade; the social prosperity of Great Britain to-day depends upon the maintenance of free trade, and the British government has had to turn down the request of the farmers for protection on that very account. The present British government is a Conservative government, predisposed to protection, and yet it has said to the farmer: We cannot grant you protection because it would be against the social interests of this country. So the British farmer at the present time, no matter what he has been asked to do in the past, has for the moment been called upon to sacrifice himself for the social prosperity of his country.

Has not that been the case in Canada? Has not the farmer here in the last generation or two sacrificed himself for the social prosperity of the country? From the beginning this has been a social policy. The agriculturists of Canada have been asked and are being asked to sacrifice themselves for the social prosperity of the nation. I contend that whether in Great Britain or here what is wrong socially cannot be economically sound. That is the position the British government is taking now, and I suppose that the protectionist in this country takes the same attitude.

We ask ourselves, in the condition we are now in, in a preponderatingly agricultural country; can we afford to take that attitude? Can we afford in the interests of Canada as a whole to ask agriculture to sacrifice itself? When the farmers of England approached their government they said: Now, farming is either an economic or a social proposition. You have either got to let it rest on an economic basis and accept the results, or you have to treat it socially; and if you treat it socially you have to grant it either protection or a subsidy. Those are the two propositions that the British farmers put before their government. But the present British government, which is a protectionist government, said: "We cannot give you either a subsidy or protection, because we believe it would be against the best interests of the country to do so." In Canada we have to face the question of the social welfare of all the people. If it is the desire or if it is thought right that Canada should sacrifice the farmer for the rest of the people, well, we have nothing to say. The farmers in England have nothing to say. They have accepted the decision of the government and they have to govern themselves accordingly—to go out of business, if necessary, in order to save the country socially. Are you going to sacrifice the farmer of Canada economically in order that Canada socially may prosper? That is the position you are up against. You cannot laugh this thing out of court; it will come up recurrently and will have to be faced.

I shall not go into the argument of the right hon. leader of the Opposition in regard to the diminution of the proportion of the population engaged in farming. I think that in that respect he got beyond his depth. It was all very well for him to argue that agriculture had diminished relatively with respect to numbers, with respect to its size. That is to say, the more shoes you put on the people's feet the less food you have to put into their stomachs, or the more you amuse their minds the less you will have to satisfy their appetites, and so on. You can argue along these lines, but you do not touch the point we are dealing with to-night. It may be true that agriculture is diminishing proportionately, but why should that be the basis of a contention that agriculture should at the same time diminish relatively with respect to its economic standing. Why should the farmers be worse off than they are to-day, even though they are less in number? According to the usual methods of reasoning, if the farmer belongs to a more exclusive set and ministers to a larger body of people, he ought to be better off than he was before; but that is a point that the right hon. gentleman altogether shelved.

Let me say a word in conclusion in respect to the right hon. gentleman's remarks concerning organization. We all know on this side that organization is of great value to the farmer, as it is to any other class in the community. The right hon. gentleman is not here but I would like to ask him what his definition of economics is, and what his definition of politics is—where he draws the line between the two. He received a great deal of applause from his own followers when he deprecated the entry of the farmers of Canada into politics, and yet he wanted the farmers to organize in their own interests. Where, in his opinion, do economics end and politics begin? What is the theory of government and the functions of government? What does he expect the government to do for the people or for any class of the people? What is the duty of the government toward the farmers or the manufacturers or other classes of the community? Is it simply to prevent individuals in each class from picking the pockets of individuals in the other classes, or see that the individuals in one class do not brutally knock down members of the other class? I do not think so. The duty of this government is to adjust the relationship that exists between the different classes of this country, to see that one class is not unduly profiting at the expense of another.

The Farmers' party is here to-day because it has come to the point where it fails to see any dividing line between politics and economics. We are here as an economic group and not as a political group. We do not want political power; the aspirants to political power are opposite and to our right, not here. We are here as the exponents of certain economic principles, and that is what we stand for. We are not here in any narrow group sense; we are here with varied interests, but those interests all converge on the one principle of a proper adjustment as between the different classes that make up this Canada of ours. I would like to meet the right hon. gentleman on his own ground and ask him whether the manufacturers have not profited by going into politics. Why have other classes entered politics? Because they do not see any difference between their economic and their political interests. I suggest that there be a little more consistentcy in the definition of terms. We are living in the past when we think of politics as some sacred arena into which the ordinary people may not enter unless they take off their shoes at the gate. That belongs to the past—that policeman theory of government, that idea that the government has nothing to do with the real problems of the people.

It ill becomes the leader of the Conservative party to try to keep economics out of politics, because if any party were responsible for desecrating the sacred realm of politics by the introduction of economics, it was the Conservative party. When the Liberal government in England of the last century stood with arms upraised in horror at the invasion of economics into English public life it was the Conservative party that ruthlessly tried to bring it in, that tried to get rid of that theory of laissez faire and of the devil take the hindmost. The Conservative party in England tried to do that, while the Liberals were endeavouring to apply the policeman theory of government. We are not politicians in this group; you have noticed that many times. But we do pretend in a small way to be economists in a practical sense; that is, we know where the shoe pinches. You remember Kipling's story of the butterfly and the poor toad under the harrow. We have instances in this House of the butterfly giving good advice to the poor toad that feels every spike in the harrow. We do not pretend to be introducing radical notions into this House but we do pretend to be bringing the actual conditions to the notice of hon. members and of the government. You experienced politicians, you statesmen, you people who have been walled up here for years living in a false atmosphere —we are trying to let daylight into you. We are accused of preaching blue ruin in this quarter of the House. Why, in the last century every man who tried to get a square deal for the public was called a blue ruin preacher. Some hon. members say they think it is a pity that we should preach blue ruin: I say it is a pity we should have to preach it. I was back home for a few days last week, and I called my executive together. A man of long experience stood up and said: "I can tell you from my experience that more than fifty per cent of my neighbours are hopelessly insolvent, and mind you, I come from a place that is called one of the gardens of the West, where farmers might be expected to prosper." The galleries of this House have ears, the reporters' gallery has ears, and I hope that the benches on the floor have ears, but there should be a difference in the way our plea is heard when we come with our tale of woe. It should not be received critically on the floor of the House here. It should be received rather sympathetically and with some insight into the motive with which it is given, because we do not speak these things to the public. We forget the galleries when we speak; we do not know they are there. We do not know the reporters' gallery is there. We are speaking to you, and we do not expect you to blurt these things out all over the world. We are reasoning with you because you are the people with power in your hands to remedy these things. Who else can we go to for remedy? You cannot expect us to let these things ferment in our minds in silence. This is the place where complaints should be made, and this is the place where complaints should be heard, and heard sympathetically, with a statesmanlike breadth of mind and spirit.

I am sorry to have detained the House. I know a lot of this might have been said at another time, but it will not now be said at another time, so there is no time lost.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ROBB: There is an item in the Supplementary Estimates we might take up.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister will agree that we have had a long and perhaps more or less profitable discussion to-night not very closely related to his estimates, but we have passed a couple of items and as the hour is late, I think it would be a gracious act for him to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. ROBB: We will agree to that.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

Monday, April 16, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 106 (from the Senate), to extend the Right of Appeal from Convictions for Indictable Offences.—Mr. Sheard—for Mr. McQuarrie.

Bill No. 107 (from the Senate), to incorporate Montreal Finance Trust. Mr. Papineau.

Bill No. 108 (from the Senate), for the relief of Violet Gardiner.—Mr. Sheard.

QUESTIONS

DRAWBACK ON MATERIALS IMPORTED

Mr. FANSHER:

1. What was the value of the raw materials imported into Canada during the past fiscal year for the manufacture of goods for export?
2. What was the amount of duty paid on these raw materials?
3. What was the amount of money returned to the importers in the way of rebates or drawbacks?
4. What was the value of the raw materials imported into Canada during the past fiscal year for the manufacture of goods for home consumption?
5. What was the amount of duty paid on these raw materials?
6. What was the amount of money returned to the importers in the way of rebates or drawbacks?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

1 and 2. Information not available.
3. $9,405,949.57.
4 and 5. Information not available.
6. $1,481,793.07.

INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE AT NIAGARA

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. Is the new International bridge of the Michigan Central Railway Company at Niagara Falls to be constructed by Canadian contractors, either in whole or in part?
2. If in part, what work is being carried on by Canadian contractors?
3. What are the names and addresses of Canadian contractors taking part in the construction of the bridge, and the amounts of contracts awarded each?
4. What is the total cost of construction of the bridge?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Plans and description of the bridge in question were approved by the Governor in Council on recommendation of the Minister of Public Works as required in the case of navigable waters by section 248 of the Railway Act, and afterwards, as required by the same section, the plans were approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners and construction authorized.

The Engineering News-Record of March 1st, 1923, states that the contract had been awarded to the American Bridge Company for the steel work, which will require about 7,500 tons, contract price for which is about $116 per ton.

Abutments and other items of substructure, requiring about 11,000 cubic yards of concrete, are to be built under a separate contract as to which we have no information.

The Department of Railways understands that contract for the steel work was let after public competition in which Canadian firms participated.

TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEY EXPENDITURES
1900-22

Mr. FAFARD:

1. What amount of money has the Topographical Survey expended in the Dominion during the years 1900 to 1922?

2. What amount of such money was expended, each year, in each province?

MR. W. H. TRUEMAN

APPOINTMENT TO THE BENCH

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) I would ask the Prime Minister whether the report published in the press to the effect that Mr. W. H. Trueman, K.C., of Winnipeg has been appointed a judge of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba is true?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report is correct.

CATTLE SHIPMENTS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) the following question: I notice an interview in Saturday's Manitoba Free Press given by W. H. Forster of England, who came to Canada from England to purchase cattle. He intended purchasing about 2,000 head; he found when he came that all available space for ocean shipments had been contracted for.

It had been broadcast in England that Canada would have for sale this spring about twenty-five or thirty thousand head of cattle suitable for the British trade, and that the ocean freight would be about $15 per head. Now when a purchaser comes here, he finds all, or nearly all, space contracted for, and the ocean rate is $22.50 or $25 per head.

In view of the fact that the department has been urging farmers during the winter to have cattle ready for the market, had the department any knowledge that a condition such as exists might occur?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult offhand to answer all these questions.

Mr. FORKE: It is just one question.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But the answer to the one question does not do justice to the subject generally. My deputy is preparing a statement for the press that covers the whole question; it gives the sailings of all the steamers for the next four weeks from Montreal and St. John and shows that there will be a shortage of space for the first two weeks in May, that on the third week space will be equal to the demand, and that on the fourth week it will be greater than the demand. At the present time the space available is less than the demand. In a general way we had some information with regard to the number of cattle that would be shipped, but it was very difficult to get any exact figures. With the information furnished to us we have kept the shippers in Montreal acquainted with the requirements of this movement. That is all I can say in a verbal statement.

Mr. FORKE: Is the minister aware of the fact that by the end of May the proper time for the shipment of this class of cattle is nearly past and space will be of little benefit to the shippers after that date?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think we should carry shipping space in our vest pocket ready for immediate requirements? There were two schools of thought apparent in Canada in connection with cattle shipments to Great Britain after the removal of the embargo: One was to deprecate the removal and to point out that there would be nothing much going over anyhow; the other was to exaggerate the movement. Between the two it was pretty difficult for us to size up the situation. We kept the cattlemen fully supplied with information we gathered in regard to the situation. You cannot restore a trade that has been suspended for thirty years and expect to find everything ready for its resumption without some disturbance. Therefore it is quite natural that there should be a shortage of space for a brief period, but, as I have already indicated, in a few weeks there will be more than sufficient accommodation to meet the demand.

THE BUDGET

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rise to ask my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, whether he is going to fix this coming week for the introduction of the budget?

Mr. FIELDING: It would be a great joy to me if I could fix the date for this week, but I am afraid it will have to be postponed. I hope it may be during the coming week, but I do not desire to be too definite. I am almost as anxious as my hon. friend to have it off my mind.

Hon. F. B. CARVELL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Speaker, I would draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a despatch in the local papers from Vancouver dated April 10th, stating that a letter of protest has been sent to the Prime Minister by the Vancouver Board of Trade in which it characterizes recent statements of Hon. F. B. Carvell, Chief Commissioner of Railways, regarding the attitude of the province of British Columbia toward the freight rate question as showing disregard for the ethics of his position. Has the Prime Minister received this letter? If so, will he be good enough to lay it on the table of the House for the information of members?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I have received the letter to which my hon. friend refers and shall have pleasure in laying it on the Table before the House rises.

Mr. COOTE: Will the Prime Minister also be good enough to secure a copy of the letter sent by Mr. Carvell to the associated boards of trade in British Columbia, which is referred to by the Vancouver Board of Trade?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will not make a definite promise, but I think I can secure a copy of the letter, and if so I will have it placed on the Table with the other communication referred to.

SUPPLY—SALES TAX

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Supply:

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of bringing to the attention of the House the application of the existing sales tax in so far as it affects public libraries. I am impelled to take this action at this particular time because I read in the public press that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not averse to receiving suggestions from outside deputations with regard to the approaching budget, and it occurred to me that perhaps he might not be unwilling to view with favour suggestions made by members of this House.

Under the operation of the existing sales tax public libraries are subjected to a 6 per cent tax on books imported from foreign countries. And may I say at the outset that the majority of our books are imported? If these books are not imported directly they may be purchased, as they often are, from Canadian wholesalers, in which event a sales tax is charged the library of some 2¼ per cent; but in the price charged by the wholesaler is included the price which he must pay by way of sales tax, totalling 3¾ per cent. Therefore, in any event the library must pay a sales tax of 6 per cent on its purchases.

Another factor that is of great importance to public libraries is the matter of bindings, which they use very considerably. Bindings are subject to a sales tax of 4½ per cent. Now, it is rather a strange coincidence that while libraries have been exempted so far as their purchases are concerned from the operation of the customs tariff, they have not been exempted from the sales tax in their purchases of books and bindings. The operation of this sales tax, as I have indicated, constitutes a very grievious burden to public libraries. There is, as must be matter of common knowledge, an increasing demand on public libraries to-day, and it is also a fact that these institutions are receiving decreased appropriations. In the city from which I come we have a very efficient tax-supported public library officered by a very capable official indeed, a library which serves not only our city but a very large surrounding country. In the city of Calgary alone the operation of the sales tax during the present fiscal year will mean the payment by that library of about $1,000. During the year also there has been a decrease in the appropriations for this library totalling $2,000. In the western provinces the operation of the sales tax will mean approximately $10,000 to public libraries, of which amount $7,000 represents the tax on the purchase of books alone.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Inspector of Libraries for the province of Ontario, and I should like to indicate his views in connection with this matter. Referring to the libraries in Ontario, he says:

> Our libraries expended in that year $164,185.

That is, the year 1921. Continuing, he says:

> The sales tax is a heavy burden on our libraries. The prices of books have increased tremendously since before the war, and the libraries' incomes are decidedly limited. The Dominion government has always recognized the general public service of public libraries by permitting imported books to come to the public libraries free of duty. Surely the sales tax should be removed when it is in the general public's good that it should be removed. The Ontario legislature bases its grants largely on book purchases, and we find that our grants are not as effective by reason of the tax that is imposed?

It is apparent, therefore, to anyone who ponders the situation for a moment that the tax-supported public libraries find themselves ground between the millstones of heavy federal taxation on the one hand and a decreasing appropriation on the other, the latter due primarily to the financial stringency. While the tax does bear very seriously upon the individual library, I think it can fairly be said that the aggregate amount received by the government, so far as the application of the tax to libraries is concerned, is very insignificant indeed.

The special objection which I have to the particular tax that I am referring to is that it constitutes a tax upon taxation. This is a case of double taxation, and falling as it does upon a tax supported institution, it bears very heavily indeed. Strange to relate, when the statute was drawn the provincial libraries were specially exempted, but other public libraries, equally tax-supported, were not favoured with exemption. Under these circumstances I am asking the House in the form of a resolution to indicate that this tax should be removed, in its application to public libraries in so far as it affects the purchase of books and of binding supplies.

I know that I shall be met with one or two arguments. It will be suggested. I doubt not, that the matter should first be taken up with the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) or the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Bureau). But the library officials last year did take the matter up not only with the Minister of Finance but with the Minister of Customs and Excise, and they did not accomplish their desire. It will be urged, also, I assume, that to move an amendment when going into Committee of Supply constitutes a vote of want of confidence in the government. I have not any desire by this vote to indicate any such want of confidence so far as this particular item is concerned. I do want to suggest however, that there has not been any other opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the House. Had I brought it up by way of private member's resolution I should have been met with the suggestion that it constituted in effect a subtraction of the public revenue and consequently would not be legal under that head. Bringing it up at this time, I may be met with the suggestion, as I have said, that it is a vote of want of confidence. Well, it is about time that hoary tradition was dispensed with; and I notice that in the Mother of Parliaments itself, the most transparent technicality has lately been taken advantage of in order to obviate the application of that rule. Then again, it may be urged, "Why not bring it up in the budget debate?" But if ever there was a time for pious platitudes, surely it is when the budget is under consideration, I do suggest to the government that this is the time and this is the place to bring to the attention of parliament a matter which to my mind is of vital significance to our public libraries and also to the reading public.

But I may be met further with the argument: "Why pick out this particular item? Why single out the sales tax in its application to public libraries? Why not deal with a dozen other things?" Well, I want to say at the outset that the tax in its effect upon libraries is particularly vicious, particularly harmful. It is, as I have pointed out, a tax upon taxation; it is in a category by itself so far as sales tax is concerned. And not only that: while I have very serious objection to the sales tax in many directions, I sometimes think it is much more desirable to attack the enemy in detail rather than by making a frontal attack. I feel that it is going to be a great many years before we shall have in vogue in this country a proper, scientific system of taxation. No effort has yet been made to delimit, if you like, the various fields of taxation—Dominion, provincial, and municipal. Consequently I must take this opportunity of presenting to the House a resolution dealing with this particular matter. I move in amendment:

That all the words in the resolution after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

Whereas public libraries are necessary and valuable educational institutions not existing for profit and supported by public taxation,

And whereas, on account of the increasing demand for library facilities and the difficult economic conditions prevailing, public libraries in Canada are experiencing the greatest difficulty in financing their reasonable requirements,

And whereas the application of the sales tax on the purchases of books and book-binding by public libraries constitutes a heavy financial burden, limiting the usefulness and impairing the efficiency of such public libraries,

Therefore be it resolved that this House deems it advisable that public libraries in Canada, supported by public taxation, be exempted from the operation of the sales tax in so far as the same affects the purchases of books and book-binding by such public libraries.

The amendment is seconded by the hon. member for McLeod (Mr. Coote).

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on the question of non-confidence to which the hon. gentleman has referred I am reminded of the old lines, "It was all very well to dissemble your love, but why did you kick me downstairs?" I do not want to dwell on the question of non-confidence. I think I have a better reason for asking my hon. friend not to press his motion, or if he is to press it, for asking the House not to accept it.

With what he has said as to the importance of public libraries, the desirability of encouraging them and the hard times they are perhaps having, I am sure I can heartily sympathize, as I am sure most members of the House will, but that is by no means a conclusive reason why we should adopt this motion. I am not at the moment expressing any opinion whether it is or is not desirable that we should exempt public libraries from the sales tax. This is but one of twenty questions which are being presented to the government by hon. members on both sides of the House. I am sure I am probably within my facts when I say that I see before me on the two portions of the opposite benches at least a score of gentlemen who have done me the honour of calling upon me to impress upon me some particular thing in which they would like some reduction of taxation or some exemption from the operation of this or that tax. One gentleman here on this side of the House makes a habit of urging the exemption from the income tax where there are a certain number of children. Another hon. member brings forward some particular thing in which he is sincerely desirous of having a change, and no doubt they could all make a measure of popularity if they would get up in this House and become the champion of this or that particular thing. But why should we select among these fifty or more things—perhaps I had better be moderate and say among the twenty or more changes proposed—why pick out of the basket this particular thing and ask the judgment of the House upon it this afternoon? I fail to see the reason. I had a large deputation the other day urging very strongly that in the matter of income tax any man who contributes to charity or religion or any of the various noble causes which we are all asked to help should not be taxed on what he contributes for that purpose. That is perhaps as strong a case as my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Shaw) brings forward, but all who have these things in mind have been content to make their case and await the moving of the waters. I know of no reason why this particular case or fad, if I may dare call it that, and not offensively, for fads are good things at times, should be selected for us to vote upon to-day. If it is good policy to do that, then hon. gentlemen opposite—I am not designating any member—who have come before me and asked that a particular tax be abolished ought to get up and move in the same way and somebody else move for income tax exemption where there are children. Each of these things may be important in itself, but I submit to the House there is no good reason why we should pick out this particular thing and ask the House to pass judgment upon it this afternoon.

The sales tax is not a particular baby of my own. It was a system, and probably a necessary system, established by the former government. I have had the unpleasant duty of increasing the amount of it. That is my crime in the matter. When the late government devised the tax I know that they made many exemptions; some people think too many; I know there is something to be said against exemptions. But the late government did make a very liberal list of exemptions. They considered public libraries I have no doubt, and no doubt thought that taken all in all libraries could stand the tax as well as many other things. I am not declaring against the judgment of the hon. member for Calgary. I am asking him to consider whether it is wise to ask the House to select this particular one out of the many questions, anticipate the budget, and ask for a vote upon it now. I do not think that is fair. I do not think either party in the House should accept the motion.

Amendment negatived.

SUPPLY—SPECIAL DELIVERY LETTER POSTAGE

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the Acting Postmaster General (Mr. Graham) to a matter concerning which I should have spoken when the House was in supply, but being occupied in a committee of the House I was unable to do so. It is regarding the special delivery of letters, on which a stamp of twenty cents has now to be placed. Many complaints have reached me from Montreal on this subject, and I would like to call the attention of the acting minister to the matter so that he may investigate it.

When the special delivery was originally devised, the postage was fixed at ten cents; it is now twenty cents, in addition to the three cents ordinary postage. That makes twenty-three cents for a special delivery letter. Last Thursday I had occasion to send a special delivery letter to Montreal, placing twenty cents postage on it. The letter was wrongly delivered, but I am not complaining of that, as the address might not have been as perfect as it should have been.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. gentlemen to kindly refrain from conversation while the hon. member is addressing the House.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Montreal is now a very large city and it includes many outlying municipalities. When a special delivery letter, bearing a twenty-cent stamp in addition to the usual postage stamp, is brought into the post office it is handed over to a boy who is paid eight cents to deliver the letter in any part of the city which is served by the Montreal general post office. The government has received twenty-three cents from this letter and pays only eight cents to the messenger for its delivery. By common knowledge in the Montreal post office these messenger boys are the worst paid in the service, and I would ask the minister even if he cannot reduce the taxation on letters to at least give some encouragement to these messengers and grant them a better remuneration than they are receiving at the present time. Because these boys may have to go, in the course of their journeys, to almost the extreme end of the island of Montreal to deliver one of these letters for eight cents; they spend practically the best part of the forenoon and afternoon and are even employed late in the evening, at this work. If the ordinary postage rate is going to be reduced, at any time, from three to two cents, I would ask the government to consider whether it would not be possible to revert to the old rate of ten cents for special delivery letters from the present rate of twenty cents, and thereby increase the use of this facility which is not as well resorted to at the present time as it used to be in the old days. I hope the minister will give his attention to these matters and see if something cannot be done along the lines indicated to improve the service.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will bring the facts stated by my hon. friend, as well as his request, to the notice of the department so that they may receive full consideration.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

SUPPLY

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration contingencies and general expenses, including grants to immigration and colonization societies, or associations, as may be authorized by the Governor General in Council, $1,850,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand the minister has some information to give the House after long and deliberate reconsideration of his rather precipitate action in the first place. I heard with a good deal of satisfaction that he had indeed made some modification, some change, in his intention. Without going further into any criticism I would like to hear what the minister has to offer on the subject.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil) (Acting Minister of Immigration): Mr. Chairman, there are two items still to be passed in the estimates for immigration, one dealing with immigration contingencies. I take it that my hon. friend does not desire that we should cover any old ground in connection with the matter but that the information should deal with this item.

Mr. STEVENS: I was hoping and expecting for some decidedly new ground.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know how I could introduce any new ground. The estimates themselves are before the committee, and I shall give explanations as to this particular item. I may say that in the matter of publicity in Great Britain we have increased our expenditure from $77,000 to $303,000, and in the United States from $245,000 to $372,000. I propose to give an explanation of these items. For newspaper advertising in Great Britain we expended in the ten months of last year for which we have returns the sum of $5,302.62. We propose to spend this year $60,000. On pamphlets, booklets, maps, etc., we spent $58,000 for the ten months, and we propose spending $172,000 this year. We are increasing our expenditure for lectures and attendance at shows from $8,000 to $50,000, and our expenditure on exhibition motor cars from $4,000 to $15,000. The department has had one motor car going about with exhibits of Canadian products from town to town, accompanied by lecturers. The results that we have received from this form of advertising have been so good that we intend to equip and put another car on this work.

Mr. TOLMIE: How much of the appropriation is for the British Empire Exhibition?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No part of this appropriation is for the British Empire Exhibition.

Mr. TOLMIE: There will be a special vote for that?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, a special vote. The remuneration to journalists and special writers last year was $1,281. The expenditure proposed for the same purpose this year will be $6,000, making a total expenditure for these various purposes of $303,000.

We spent on newspaper advertising in the United States in eleven months of last year the sum of $125,447. We propose to spend $200,000 this year. On advertising pamphlets and booklets we spent $100,000 in eleven months of last year; this year we intend to spend $155,000. The expenditure on publicity bureau and special writers in eleven months of last year was $19,124. We intend to spend $17,000 for the same purpose making a total of $372,000 for these different purposes in the United States. For the getting out of sundry publications, to be mailed out of Canada but to be printed in this country, we spent in eleven months of last year $3,000; we intend to spend $10,000 this year. For the preparation of motion pictures and photographs for publicity purposes we spent $2,000 in eleven months of last year; we will spend $20,000 for that purpose this year. Office and travelling expenses at Ottawa and Winnipeg for the ten months of last year involved an expenditure of $3,926.89. We have appropriated $7,500 for that purpose this year. Special writers, for eleven months, $1,470; we propose to spend $4,000 this year. Newspaper advertising in Canada, required $374 last year; this year we will spend $5,000. On foreign and continental work we will spend $35,000. This is practically all new work; we had no vote for that purpose last year. This year we propose to spend $20,000 on pamphlets and booklets, and for publicity purposes in northern Europe, other than literature, $15,000. For newspaper subscriptions—these are newspapers sent out to our immigration agents—we propose to spend $3,000, and incidentals unforeseen $3,500, making a total publicity expenditure of $760,000 all told.

There is an item of $25,000 for general printing done by the King's Printer for the service outside of Ottawa. This is to provide for the printing of books, manifests, cards, indexes, forms, letterheads and questionnaires for the use of the various immigration agencies and detention hospitals, immigration halls and boundary inspection halls at points all over Canada. The expenditure in 1921-22, was $21,600, and for the eleven months ending February 26, 1923, $9,860.

Then there are some customs inspectors who are paid out of this vote who perform inspectional duties at the boundary. They are paid by the Immigration department, and the payments range from $50 to $300 per annum. These inspectors are at various places along the northern boundary where there is very little traffic over the line, and consequently receive a small remuneration from the Immigration department. Others are at points where there is heavier traffic, and receive a better salary. There are only two men on the paylist receiving $300 per annum. The majority receive $100, and quite a few $200 per annum. I have a list of the names of the custom house officers who perform these services. For general stationery supplied by the King's Printer for the service outside of Ottawa there is an item of $10,000. This item is to provide for the general stationery and supplies required at the various agencies, seaport offices, detention halls and boundary inspection offices, supplies consisting of typewriting machines, writing paper, envelopes, pens, pencils, fasteners, ink, travelling bags, etc. The item of contingencies and miscellaneous expenses in Canada, including salaries of temporary employees, amounts to $140,000. The largest portion of this item is to provide for the salaries of temporary clerks at Ottawa, stenographers, inspectors, guards, matrons, labourers and charwomen, at our various agencies, offices and boundary inspection points outside of Ottawa. For the salaries of the 110 customs officers I have mentioned and 4 p.m. immigration inspectors along the line between Canada and the United States we paid from $50 to $300 per annum for extra service. I am reading the same item as I read a moment ago in respect to the customs officers. My memorandum with regard to this item reads:

It provides also for the travelling expenses of investigating officers, for legal expenses in connection with the rejection of immigrants and other miscellaneous and incidental expenses, not chargeable to any specific service.

We spent on this service $125,000, and we are asking for an increase of $15,000 making $140,000.

Postage, telegrams, cablegrams, telephone express and freight charges in Canada, $25,000. This is to meet the cost of postage on parcels and letters addressed to points outside of Canada; for cablegrams, telegrams, long distance telephone tolls, freight and express charges on books, manifests, forms, stationery supplies, immigration literature and maps, etc., shipped to points in Canada and outside of Canada.

Inspection of British immigrant children, $15,000.

This is to provide for the cost of inspection of children emigrating to Canada under the auspices of the various homes and societies in the British Isles, these children being placed in Canadian farmers' homes. The cost of the first inspection is borne by the Canadian government and the cost of all recurrent inspections until the child has attained the age of 16 is recovered by the department from the British government.

There is a little change in this connection this year inasmuch as we are voting a sum of $200,000 which will be a grant for the purpose of paying the passages of these children. Formerly the British government contributed to some extent towards the cost of this expenditure, but their contribution will now cease, and we will have to bear the expenditure ourselves.

Mr. MANION: What arrangements are made for the children on this side of the water?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far we are utilizing the various organizations that have been engaged in this work. I gave a list of them when the vote was going through. In most cases though not in all, they have foster homes already located for those children. We are making inquiry as best we can, and as soon as possible after the child is settled we will make an inspection to ascertain the desirability of the home and what success is being made with the settlement of the child in the particular home.

Mr. MANION: You continue making inspection from time to time in this connection?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, if possible, twice a year.

Mr. GOULD: The minister spoke of special writers. What jurisdiction or supervision does the department exercise over these special writers?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are people who write special articles for advertising purposes which must pass the officer of the department who is in charge of publicity, Mr. Stead. They are all scrutinized before being sent out. We pay for those articles because they are written attractively, with a view of bringing settlement to the country.

Mr. GOULD: The reason I asked the question is that I would suppose that the articles are based on facts and figures supplied by the Department of Agriculture. Is that the basis upon which the articles are written?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The articles may be the experience of the writer himself not of necessity based on facts furnished by the department, because very frequently these articles are made very attractive for the purpose of publicity. Hon. members will notice that this amount was included in the publicity vote. The next item is:

Seaport agencies and detention hospitals and halls expenses, $85,000. This is to cover the cost of administration and maintenance of agencies and offices at the various seaports: St. John, Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Vancouver, Victoria, New York, Boston. It also provides for the equipment, administration and maintenance of immigration detention hospitals and halls at St. John, Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Vancouver and Victoria. The above expenses consist of cost of uniforms, telegrams, cablegrams, telephones, freight and express charges, wages of cleaners; travelling expenses of officers attached to these agencies; laundry, charwomen for the cost of board of immigrants temporarily detained for medical observation on account of minor contagious diseases, etc.

So far as detention while under medical inspection is concerned most of these charges are recovered, because in nine cases out of ten it is the fault of the medical officer on board the ship that proper inspection had not taken place prior to embarkation, and in every case in which that occurs the steamship companies are required to pay the cost while the patients are detained for medical attention in those hospitals, or until such time as they return to the country from which they came. This amount is about the same as we have had in former years. The memorandum continues:

In land agencies and maintenance of immigration halls in the West, $20,000.

This item is to provide for the expenses of our various inland agencies throughout Canada, and for the maintenance of immigration halls at certain points in the West, and especially at our agency at Winnipeg. These expenses consist of cost of uniform, telegrams, telephones, freight and express charges, wages of cleaners, food for deports and immigrants temporarily detained in the immigration buildings, laundry, pillows, blankets, and other expenses necessary for general upkeep and maintenance.

The expenditure for 1921-22 was $12,696 and for the eleven months ending February 28, 1923, $12,485.

Deportation expenses amount to $50,000. This is to cover the travelling expenses of the deportation officers, the cost of uniforms, and meals for deports on train, rail and steamship fares, in cases where the railroad and steamship companies are not liable for free transportation. The increase is due to the fact that by agreement with the Department of Health aliens convicted under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act and ordered to be deported have to be handled by this department under the provisions of the Immigration Act. Up to last year it was not the duty of the Immigration department to do this work but now all persons convicted under the Narcotic Drug Act and who are to be deported are handed over to the officers of this department. Frankly, I sometimes think that this is rather the duty of the Dominion police than of the Immigration department. However, for the time being we are performing this service.

The next item is $50,000 for boundary inspection expenses. It is to provide for the cost of uniforms of boundary inspection officers as well as to pay for meals, lodging and travelling expenses, for relieving inspectors and for overtime on Sundays and statutory holidays. It also provides for the incidental upkeep of offices on the boundary line between the United States and Canada. In 1921-22, we spent $42,785.06 and for the eleven months ending February 28, 1923, we expended $51,-955.62. We therefore expect to get along with a little less this year than we did last year.

For contingencies and general expenses in the United States the vote is $180,000. This item is to provide for the expenses of nineteen agencies maintained and operated in the United States. These expenses consist of rent of offices, furniture, typewriting machines, postage, telegrams, telephone messages, freight, express charges, light and fuel, stationery supplies, printing envelopes, cards and letterheads, and temporary assistance, and to provide for the salaries of fifteen new field men. The expenses in connection with this field work are estimated to be in the neighbourhood of $50,-000 for the year. I have some doubt as to two items here, this and the next one. When the items were inserted I did not know what difficulties would be encountered in the appointment of these agencies. What I intended to do was to revive the old system of getting farmers who had been successful in Canada to go to the United States and Great Britain and lecture during the winter months, but our Civil Service Act makes it somewhat difficult to carry out appointments of this kind. They would not be permanent, and you could scarcely call them temporary. So that there is considerable difficulty in making such appointments, and I intend to cut down the amount in connection with this work so that we shall need only three or four lecturers to go to the Old Country; and I shall abandon my intention of sending any to the United States.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would it not be difficult to get farmers who are successful to go abroad?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Not at all, any number of them. We are asking for $50,000 for field work in the United States, and $75,000 for Great Britain.

Then there is an item for contingencies and general expenses on the continent. This is to provide for expenses to be incurred in connection with equipment and maintenance of seven or eight officers in Europe to vise passports and see to the inspection of immigrants coming to Canada. The expenses will include rent, furniture, fuel, light, taxes, uniforms, inspection, freight and express charges, postage, telegrams, cablegrams, telephone service, salaries of temporary employees, typewriting machines, stationery and supplies, books, letterheads, travelling expenses, etc. I might say that this is entirely a new service which is being carried on on the continent of Europe. We have offices located at Antwerp and Warsaw, and we hope to be established in Prague. Our officers will travel to three or four other points to make inspections of people embarking on steamships and to advise them as to whether or not they are likely to be accepted in Canada on inspection. We do not, of course, guarantee that they shall be permitted to land, but we see to it that they shall have a fair idea as to whether or not they will be admitted. We are rapidly getting past the point where we find it necessary to reject people on account of the occupational test. Indeed, that difficulty no longer exists in regard to the northern countries of Europe, and not at all so far as Great Britain and the United States are concerned. This work is intended to apply only to people on the continent of Europe outside of the territory I have mentioned. We shall admit from the continent only domestic servants, farm labourers and those who can engage in farming; in other words, those who can buy farm lands. Our object is to obviate what has occurred in the past and has caused a great deal of hardship to people who upon landing at St. John, Quebec, or any of the other ports of Canada, find that they are not permitted to enter the country. I am told that on one occasion there were as many as 2,000 persons kept in detention and sent back to the country of their origin because they could not be permitted to land under the regulations. Last year, on the other hand, we never had at any one time more than five, and I hope that that condition will continue. This vote of $100,000 is an entirely new one and is experimental; and if we find that it is not warranted, then, of course, we shall withdraw the officers. I do think, however, that it will be of great advantage in preventing people from coming to Canada who have no chance of getting in. Such people might otherwise be unable to obtain adequate information regarding the conditions and the regulations, and we shall at least see that they do not make an unnecessary trip across the ocean.

The next vote is also a new one. It is one which I dealt with when speaking to the House on a previous occasion. It is to provide for the work of repatriating Canadians who left eastern Canada particularly. We have not been active in the eastern field, having had agencies only at Boston and Manchester. We are asking for a vote of $20,000 for the purpose of repatriating those Canadians who have left eastern Canada, as we think a useful work could be done in endeavouring to bring these people back into this country. This is to provide for the salaries and travelling expenses of colonization agents and to meet the necessary expenditures involved in connection with the work of bringing back into Canada those people who have gone abroad, especially French-Canadians. The expenses consist chiefly in travelling and living expenses of those engaged in this undertaking, and also provides for halls for lecture purposes, etc. It is intended to make a special effort in this field during the year 1923-24. The next item relates to the Women's Immigration Division. We are asking for $15,000 to provide for the expenses of conductresses on trains of parties of girls coming to Canada to engage in domestic service, and also to pay for salaries and uniforms for these women officers and to provide grants for women's hostels maintained in the principal cities in Canada, for temporary assistance and welfare of immigrant women, and for a per diem allowance of $1.50 to these free hostels for accommodation accorded by them to women immigrants coming into Canada to engage in domestic service, such free accommodation not to extend in any case over more than forty-eight hours; also for travelling expenses of women officers and of ladies attending the annual reunion or convention of the Canadian Council of Immigration. Then we have grants to immigration or colonization societies. We propose to increase the grant to the Salvation Army by $10,000, as they intend extending their work very materially in connection with domestic servants. To the Scottish Aid Society we are making a grant of $5,000. This is a new organization working in the north of Scotland, headed by the Reverend Father Macdonald, and supported by such prominent men as Mr. Burns and Mr. McBrien. Father Macdonald has been actively engaged in this work for a number of years. To the Union Nationale Francais we are continuing the grant of $1,000. Therefore I am asking for $4,000 in this connection that is not allocated and for $100,000 for the Canada Colonization Association.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister be good enough to let us have any more information than he may have on that particular subject?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think I gave the committee when the matter was under discussion before the names of those connected with the organization. Lest I forget, before leaving the matter of publicity, there is one very important feature that I must mention. We have an arrangement both in Canada and in Great Britain under which the transportation companies and the government have formed a publicity committee. This committee is for the purpose of preventing overlapping and getting full value for the expenditure on publicity, and to this end various fields of advertising are allocated to particular parties. This committee will co-ordinate our whole publicity campaign. In Canada the committee is headed by Mr. Stead, who is our chief publicity officer, and in Great Britain by Mr. Obed Smith, our superintendent of immigration for Canada in London.

I think I covered most of the field the other day in connection with the Canada Colonization Association. One of the features my hon. friend objected to was the commissions that were to be taken by the association. I may say that 5 per cent goes to the local agent in the United States, who is paid no other salary; and 2½ per cent goes to the local agent in Canada who secures the listing and the necessary information surrounding it. So that in all only 2½ per cent of this commission will go to the association. I told the committee that Mr. Everett, the manager of the organization, will confine the association's efforts almost entirely to the United States. I am advised that they have collected in all from their subscribers $160,000. They assure me that their subscriptions will still continue. They have a budget of some $15,000 per month, which includes the following salaries: vice-president, $500; secretary-treasurer, $500; general manager, $1,000; secretary to the general manager, $175; office manager, $250; sales manager, $416; manager of listing bureau, $291; four stenographers, $371; office boy, $60; office rent, $311; attorney's fees, $200; stationery and printing, $1,000; office supplies, $83; descriptive literature, $416; general advertising, $500; one field man, $275, his travelling expenses, $833; filing clerk, $100; postage and express, $416. Those expenses are for the Winnipeg office. For the St. Paul office the expenses per month are: superintendent of agencies, $500; office manager, $416; two stenographers, $225; one book-keeper, $125; office boy, $60; rentals, $100; office supplies and blank forms, $250; newspapers and magazines, $500; descriptive Canadian literature, $833; salaries of five field men, $1,375; travelling expenses, $1,458; railway fares and concessions, $1,200; postage and express, $250.

Mr. MILLAR: Who is to appraise the value of the land to be occupied by these settlers?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will give the information shortly. In order that we may have an understanding of the matter I will read the following list of tentative proposals made at the time:

1. The association agreed to continue to list and offer for sale lands along existing railway lines on their thirty-two year payment plan at 6 per cent interest.
2. Lands and location to be subject to inspection to determine suitability and fix maximum prices—this to be undertaken either by the provincial or Dominion government.

In answer to my hon. friend I may say that the Manitoba government have expressed their willingness to undertake this work. This is not true of the other two prairie provinces and it would have to be undertaken by a representative of the Soldiers' Settlement Board. In 50 per cent of the cases this board already have the values fixed upon lands adjacent to the railways, because I do not think it would be good business to permit the sale of lands at any distance from the railways, particularly where we are giving government assistance in the way of helping any organization to perform this service.

Mr. MILLAR: Who fixes the value of the 50 per cent, the Canada Colonization Association?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I fear I did not make myself clear to my hon. friend. At the moment almost 50 per cent of these lands within ten or twelve miles of the railways are already listed by the Soldiers' Settlement Board. If they have not been inspected by the officials of the board, they at least have a fair idea of their values and they could readily fix the maximum values. But in the case of Manitoba, if the provincial government assume that duty it will not be performed by the Soldiers' Settlement Board. But the point is that the company are willing to submit their listings to the government officials for the purposes of inspection as to maximum value and adaptability for settlement. This is important, because lands which are some distance from the railway could be sold more cheaply than those in its immediate vicinity. Then, we have large areas of free lands that would appeal to some people, lands which are a long distance from the railways. But the idea is to get settlers on lands that are contiguous to the railways, and also to prevent the foisting of poor lands upon people who have not had very much experience in that connection.

Mr. GOULD: This is a hypothetical case: suppose an individual in one of our villages in the West wished to go on the land; would the same conditions apply as to the Canada Colonization Association, percentages and so on?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know that I can answer my hon. friend in that respect, because the service is an outside service rather than one for people living in villages in this country who might be desirous of going on the land. But I can quite see the desirability of their securing a contract of this kind, at 6 per cent.

Mr. GOULD: Five.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The provision is for 6; it is doubtful whether that figure could be reduced. But I do not think the association should be entitled to receive the same remuneration from the individual who is in the country and who walks into their office as they receive in the case of those whom they have to bring into the country.

Mr. GOULD: The reason I ask the question is because I believe that the department should place restrictions in this respect in the agreement with the Canada Colonization Association. If no such restrictions are provided, I believe they should be.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is a perfectly reasonable suggestion—that a Canadian citizen in a town or city who desires to go upon the land and take advantage of this long term payment plan should be able to do so at reasonable cost.

Mr. THURSTON: Why confine it to cities? It might be a farmer from an eastern province who wished to take up the land.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Suppose we say Canadian citizen.

Mr. GARDINER: When were the values of these lands determined by the Soldier Settlement Board?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They have been operating now for over three years, and they have been placing these values right along ever since. If any information is found not to be authentic a reinspection would have to be made.

Mr. GARDINER: This is an important point. A valuation placed on a piece of land some three or four years ago by the Soldier Settlement Board might not be a real indication of the value of that land to-day.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Not if it was made three years ago—I agree with my hon. friend, because land was then selling at a higher rate than we do now. But no matter how much we may disagree about the Soldier Settlement Board or about its success, we know that after they became familiar with the valuation of land they valued it pretty closely. There has, of course, been a considerable drop in the price of land during the last three years. The memorandum continues:

> 3. The association agrees that all moneys received from subscribers, commissions on sales of land, or government grants, will be utilized to carry on settlement work.
> 4. The association agrees to furnish to the Department of Immigration monthly reports of their activities and a list of all lands sold and where located.
> 5. The association agrees to continue to employ a firm of chartered accountants, subject to the approval of the Minister of Immigration, to make monthly audits to accompany reports from the association, and that the books and financial statements will at all times be open for government inspection.
> 6. The Minister of Immigration to be satisfied from monthly reports that satisfactory progress in settlement is being made, and that the continuance of financial support by the subscribers will be maintained; and these reports shall be the basis upon which he shall authorize payments of the proposed grant of $10,000 each month.

That is, briefly, the plan adopted by the government in connection with the grant to the Canada Colonization Association.

Mr. BOYS: Would the minister inform the committee what he was reading from just now? Is that a written proposition that the association makes to the department, or what is the idea?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is the proposition that was discussed tentatively with the association when the grant was requested, though not so fully in detail. The arrangement made at that time was that the government should be assured that the association was being supported by its subscribers. There was no question in my mind at least as to the advantages of the scheme of settlement proposed by the association, but it was desired that there should be an assurance that the association was being supported by private individuals who went into this scheme for the patriotic purpose of settling lands in the vicinity of the railways. Every hon. member will admit that the question of dealing with privately-owned lands so far as settlement is concerned is a difficult one for any government. However, the idea that was had in mind when this matter was discussed was as I have stated it; it was desired that the government or the department should be safeguarded by the provisions contained in this memorandum.

Mr. STEVENS: Is there any written contract or agreement between the department and the association?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. We have no contract with the Salvation Army. Indeed, I do not know that the government would be wise in entering into such a contract with any organization. I make this statement to the committee in order to assure it that on the fulfilment of these provisions I shall be authorized to pay out the money and not otherwise. If patriotic citizens put up their money for the purpose of doing this work, it seems to me that they should be treated the same as any organization to which we give grants. As I have stated, upon these suggestions which I have read I shall be guided in the payment of any funds to this organization.

Mr. MacLAREN: I have a communication from one who is familiar with the organization of the immigration officers of the Dominion in Great Britain. He states:

> There are now thirteen offices of the department over here, including the London office, with nine officers in charge, and four new ones to be appointed. With two exceptions I understand all are western men, while one other has no Canadian residence.

I wish to ask the minister if that is a correct representation.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): He states that the offices are manned by western men?

Mr. MacLAREN: That is not the statement. He says:

> There are thirteen offices of the department over here, including the London office, with nine officers in charge, and four new ones to be appointed. With two exceptions I understand all are western men, while one other has no Canadian residence.

I take it that his meaning is that all are western men with one exception.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not give the particular province from which our agents in Great Britain come, but I do know this, that one of the most recent appointments was from Nova Scotia, that of Mr. Murphy who is working in Aberdeen. Mr. Obed Smith, I presume, was an eastern man, although when he went over he went from Winnipeg, I believe. My hon. friend will also recollect that we have one new man who has come from New Brunswick just recently. He was working for the New Brunswick government and has now been taken into our service in Great Britain. There are two new appointments pending and one of the men, I understand, though I have not been informed definitely, comes from Vancouver. They are coming before the Civil Service Commission for final examination within a few days. They are both returned men, majors, I think; so they will both be Canadians, but I suppose we shall be guilty of appointing a westerner again inasmuch as one of these men comes from Vancouver.

Mr. STEVENS: Scandalous!

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): These are the only two vacancies.

Mr. MacLAREN: I quite understand that the minister is favourable to appointing these officers so that the various portions of Canada shall be represented, but I believe that at the present time a very large number of the offices in Great Britain are filled by officers who come from the West. This letter is dated the 3rd of April, and I would be glad to hand it to the minister at any time if he cares to see it. At that date my informant was in a most favourable position for knowing the conditions. There is one other part of this letter I should like to read, because he is thoroughly conversant with the subject of immigration, especially as it affects the East, but before quoting further I should like to refer to the minister's observation that one of the new appointees came from New Brunswick. I think if the minister will recall what has taken place, the facts are, and the discussion in the House will show it, that the official to whom the minister referred has not been appointed, or rather he was not appointed at the time of the discussion in the House, and I have not heard of his appointment subsequent to that time; but rather he was there appointed for two periods of sixty days. There was some technicality in the act which prevented his appointment, and I believe still prevents it. At the present moment I am unaware of any official in Great Britain who is familiar with New Brunswick. I may be in error, but I think that is correct. The other portion of his letter which I wish to quote reads:

> I feel convinced that many of those who go West, especially married men with a young family, and who do not find conditions to their liking would settle down and make good in one or other of the Maritime provinces, but if you do not have anyone over here from these provinces to place before these people information concerning the East, I do not see how we can expect to obtain our share of settlers.

I do not think that what he states is anything different from the views we hold ourselves, but it is satisfactory to know that one on the ground and familiar with the subject of immigration takes exactly the same views as we have already had the opportunity of placing before the House and before the minister.

Mr. McMURRAY: In rising to discuss the issue to-day I prefer to deal more with the general question of immigration rather than with any particular item. I had the misfortune of being indisposed during the major portion of this debate, but I have read with care the contributions to the debate by the various members taking part in it. I have no apology to offer to the House for discussing at some little length, although it may be tedious, this question of immigration into Canada. It is undoubtedly the paramount question, of transcendent importance to this country. Considering the economic circumstances and financial conditions in which Canada stands to-day this is a very, very important question going really to the root of our economic existence, being second only in importance to that of confederation itself. Therefore the subject is worthy of long and careful debate. I spoke on this question last year at some length, and I propose to speak on it at some length again to-day.

What are the problems that are facing this government? When the government came into power the question of constitutional liberty was at stake. That was disposed of by the accession of this government to office, but on coming into office the government was faced with outstanding problems of an economic nature. This government has a business proposition to meet. There is a tremendous indebtedness hanging over the heads of the people of Canada to-day, amounting in the total to something like four billions of dollars That includes the national debt, provincial and municipal indebtedness. It does not touch the individual indebtedness, the money owed by the various citizens of the country.

The second great economic problem facing us is the railroad problem. Last year we went back some seventy-two or seventy-three million dollars on that account. This year in spite of a wonderful harvest in western Canada that probably saved the railroads, we went back some sixty million dollars.

The third great problem, which is subsidiary to the other two, is to alleviate the burden of taxation on the shoulders of our citizens and to give to this present generation in Canada a fair and moderate means of living. There is no question that the whole world to-day, the citizens of every country are groaning under a heavy burden of taxation. We in this country must expect no odds. Whatever advantage we may take of the circumstances, we shall still have to bear a very heavy load. The cost of the war must be paid and we in this generation must pay our share of it. This country faces a tremendous problem, as great a problem as Canadians ever faced.

The building of the Canadian Pacific railway in Canada was something that tested the metal of our people. To-day Canadians have a real and genuine test to undergo. I do not know how this burden of taxation can be relieved—how our people can be relieved from the heavy burdens that rest upon them, how industry can be relieved from heavy taxation—unless, by some means or other, there is created in this country a large amount of wealth that can be taxed. You can pass acts of parliament but parliamentary enactments will not create wealth; wealth can only be created by the application of labour to our natural resources. That must be done if we of this generation are to escape the tremendous burden that rests upon us. Supposing there had been a crop failure in western Canada last year—western Canada that has contributed six or seven hundred millions of dollars to the general body of wealth in this country? Had there been a crop failure last year our position would have been immeasurably worse than it is to-day. That may come, probably will come—we cannot expect a bountiful harvest all the time—and if it should come our position would be bad. The only way that we can possibly meet the situation is by creating wealth in this country.

The natural resources of Canada are great. It is almost tautological to repeat of what these resources really consist. There is land in this country of great fertility; there are some two hundred million acres suitable for agriculture that are as yet untilled. We have vast forests, which are yielding us to-day some $200,000,000 per annum. As to mines we are, as yet, only on the fringe of their development. The stage is set in Canada to-day to take care of a population of thirty millions. We have the railroads, we have the telephones, we have the telegraphs, we have the shipping lines, we have the canals, we have the elevators built far beyond the needs of our present population. Why? Because we are a widely scattered people. This National railway of ours, which showed a deficit this year of $60,000,000, has contiguous to it a great area of fertile country. It runs, probably, through the best area of fertile country served by any transcontinental railroad on the American continent. Between the city of Winnipeg and the city of Edmonton, within a distance of ten miles on each side of the railroad, there is asserted by competent authorities to be some ten or twelve million acres of untilled arable land.

Mr. GOULD: Will the hon. gentleman elucidate a little further his point as to the elevators being beyond the needs of the country at the present time?

Mr. McMURRAY: I will come to that later on. In northern Ontario there is asserted to be in the clay belt some twenty-five million acres of arable land. Those who have not seen that district would be well repaid by travelling over the railway which passes through it. Last year I went up into that country at the close of the session, and I saw white clover covering the hills down to the railroad track for miles. Where that clover flourishes agriculture will also thrive. The Canadian Pacific railway, which has grown to greatness on account of the land immediately adjacent to it and by reason of the development of the west, runs through a country which is comparatively poor compared with that which is traversed by the Transcontinental railway. The clay belt through which the latter railway runs will, in years to come, prove to be agricultural land of fine quality. North of lake Superior the Canadian Pacific passes through a rocky country. In the far West the land through which that railway runs is more or less drought stricken. On the other hand, the Transcontinental and Grand Trunk Pacific run through a country which is well wooded and well watered.

Where is the solution of the problem which confronts us to be found? If we have these resources, and no one can deny that they exist, what is it that we lack? We are simply short of man power to create that wealth of which I have spoken. Have we come to such a position in Canada to-day that we cannot bring together the two forces that are necessary to create that wealth? We have great natural resources, with all the appliances necessary for their development, and the man power can be got from the teeming populations of Europe. Can we get that man power that we need so much? Undoubtedly we can. The United States has had to close her doors against immigration—immigration that built up Canada in the past. In the last analysis Canada was built up by immigrants; we are all immigrants or the descendants of immigrants. In the cities of Canada to-day there are hundreds, yes thousands, of men versed in agricultural pursuits who could go on the land and work it if a proper policy were inaugurated to enable them to do so. Shortly before I came away I addressed an audience in my own constituency and spoke upon the question of immigration, a question of deep interest to those people, and a man rose in the meeting and said "There are two or three hundred of us here." Those people were Germans of the very sturdiest and finest stock of agriculturists that Canada ever had. He went on to say "If we were given that chance we would go out and we could make a success of farming. One thing we are short of is capital." I think you could go through the cities of Canada and gather together men and women who to-day are merely existing, who are agriculturists by profession but are to-day competing with labour in these urban centres, who would be glad to go on the land where they could produce wealth to the advantage of themselves and to the advantage of Canada as a whole. As a result of the Great War and the dislocation of economic and industrial affairs in Europe I believe there are to be found there to-day men and women of good calibre, the very best types that the countries of Europe have, agriculturists by profession, who have been broken, probably ruined, as a result of the great conflict. If these were brought to Canada they would be a great acquisition to the country.

What may we expect immigration to do for Canada? What did immigration do for Canada in the past? In the early years of the history of Ontario immigration, in the course of fifty or one hundred years, turned a wooded wilderness into a wonderful land. Many of the early settlers who came to the province of Ontario were disbanded soldiers of the agricultural immigrant type. Irish and Scotch soldiers who formed a large percentage of the British army. They came from peasant stock, they cleared the land; they remained where they settled; they never talked of leaving Canada; they built up a great province. The same is true of the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Whenever we brought the real agricultural immigrant to this country he stayed. The settlers who have not remained in this country, in my opinion, were not of the real agricultural type.

What did immigration do for western Canada? When Clifford Sifton became Minister of the Interior and took charge of immigration in this country it was as if a wizard had waved its wand over the land. In western Canada everything was in a state of stagnation. In the eastern parts of Canada, including cities, a similar condition prevailed. In a few years immigration began to pour into this country. The country seemed to spring to life. The prairie that was untilled and uncultivated began to turn into fields of grain. The cities of Canada began to grow and I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it was as a result of that policy and that policy alone, that the cities of western Canada were built up, and that the great grain industry of western Canada was developed, the growth of which is one of the marvels of the world. When Clifford Sifton commenced his immigration policy the province of Saskatchewan was producing some 5,000,000 bushels of wheat; to-day she is producing nearly 300,000,000 bushels—a marvellous thing—and based solely upon the immigration policy. The harbour of Montreal was choked with grain vessels last year solely because of that immigration policy. There is a real connection between that immigration policy and the growth of the great manufacturing cities of Ontario and Quebec. We need an immigration policy to-day far more than in the days of Clifford Sifton. At that time we could pick and choose. We were not burdened with debt. We were not under financial difficulties. We had a great country. We merely needed it opened up for the creation of wealth. But to-day we need more than that. We stand in such economic peril that an immigration policy is an economic necessity, and we are not in a position to-day to say that we will pick and choose. What we want to-day is a man who can make his way in the country. His passport must be his capacity to get through. As James Fitzjames said when challenged by the Highland chief:

> My pass in danger tried
> Hangs in its sheath and by my side.

The qualification of the immigrant into this country is his capacity to earn an honest living and to wrest it from the soil by toil and labour What has been happening in regard to immigration in this country in the last few years? To-day I am expressing my own ideas. I am not speaking in condemnation of the government, but I must say immigration has fallen away and fallen away badly. At the outbreak of the war there was an immigration of some 380,000 a year. In the year ended March, 1921, there was immigration of 148,000, and in the year ended March last the figure was 89,000.

Now, what is the policy of other nations situated as we are? New Zealand, Cape Colony and Australia have adopted a genuine policy of going to Great Britain and Europe, securing immigrants and settling up and developing their country. To-day the immigration of Australia is its biggest feature. There is a national spirit behind it, and it is backed with the national wealth. I think that should be the policy of this country. That is the policy that has the good will of the 5 p.m. Canadian people behind it, and that is the policy into which we should put our money.

If I were passing any criticism on the particular items under consideration. I would say they are too small. They should be multiplied by ten, and that the great desideratum for the consideration of this government, should be the creation of wealth in this country that will protect us and our children from the hardships under which we and they must exist. To the men of eastern Canada, of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, London, I would say that their manufacturing and commercial existence are at stake if wealth is not created in their great markets of western Canada. Anything that is injurious to that great market of eastern Canada, the great market being western Canada, reacts directly and instantly upon the manufacturing and commercial centres of eastern Canada, and it should be the policy of eastern Canada to do everything in its power to make conditions so that wealth can be produced readily and easily on the plains of the West. I would say to the people of western Canada, and to their representatives in this House, that unless you bring more people into this country to create a larger body of wealth to help to bear your burden, you cannot expect to get a reduction in tariff. How can you expect to get a reduction in railroad rates? This indebtedness of Canada must be met. It cannot be repudiated. If you do not create that body of wealth, if you do not bring more shoulders to bear the burden, then you yourselves must bear it. It is in vain to think you can throw it down and repudiate it. If you want lower taxes, then there is only one solution—bring in the thousands of immigrants that can be added to the population of western Canada. Let them till your fertile land, let them help to bear your burdens. We are not bringing these people here as servants or slaves. We are bringing them to a country where the national burden individually per capita is probably much lower than in any other country in the world, the United States being the only country I can think of where the national burden per capita is lower than in Canada. The majority of these immigrants are coming from a place of dire distress to a country not where money can be conjured up or created, but where honest, hard toil is rewarded fairly well, where they and their countrymen and countrywomen before them have done well and where they can do well, and can create a competency to provide for their ultimate comfort, well being and happiness.

Mr. CAMPBELL: How does the hon. member propose to settle all the thousands of people on the land unless they have the money to buy it? When the hon. member speaks of the power behind the immigration policy, the national wealth, does he suggest the financing of these people in the purchasing of the land?

Mr. McMURRAY: If the hon. member will be patient I will try to come to that in due course of time and will illustrate what I think could be done. Probably the hon. member will not agree with me, and probably few in the House will agree with me, but I am taking the opportunity of putting my ideas forward on a question that I think is of paramount importance to the whole of Canada and of transcendent importance in western Canada.

Who should these immigrants be? In my opinion the immigrants that should be brought to this country ought to be in the first instance agriculturists? I would not close the door to any immigrant who has the hardihood and the courage to cross the ocean to come to this country, but I would make a strong bid for men and women who can develop the resources of the country. And who are they? They are the sort of people who in the past made a success in Canada; they are the people who bettered their own conditions and therefore proved valuable and useful settlers in Canada. I am going to deal largely with western Canada, because it is of western Canada that I know most, having lived some twenty-six years on its plains. In the early days I drove over most of it on horseback and buckboard and I knew its people of the old time. I know the old time rancher and the large grain grower, and I know the people who have lived in the cities of that part of the country as well as the men on the frontiers. It is therefore of the development of that West, which I have seen unrolled like a panorama before me during some twenty-six years, that I wish to speak to-day.

I will deal, if I may, with the question of the financial conditions existing in western Canada as set forth at considerable length by some of my Progressive friends in this House. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. MacKelvie), speaking in this House the other day, suggested our keeping away from the people of central and southern Europe. The majority of us who have lived in western Canada, and I believe the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) particularly will join me in an encomium of those people of southern and central Europe for the contribution that they have made in labour and toil to the development of that part of our Dominion. The policy of Sir Clifford Sifton brought to western Canada the Ukrainians, many of whom came in their sheepskin coats and in their quaint European dress; and to-day in the University of Manitoba 20 per cent of the students are the descendants of those people of central Europe. The same is true in regard to the Agricultural College in Winnipeg, and I believe the same truth holds in Saskatchewan. I had the pleasure of travelling on the train with a leading educationist of Saskatchewan and he told me of two boys whom he had taught in a small schoolhouse near the town of Yorkton and both of whom are Ukrainians and to-day, university men. We have numbers of lawyers among these people, and the professions are filling up with them. They make good Canadians; they are the very best citizens; and I have never known in the hard two or three years that we have passed through in recent times of any of these people asking charity from municipality, provincial government or Dominion government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the member for North Winnipeg consulted the statistics of the Social Bureau of Winnipeg?

Mr. McMURRAY: I have looked over those statistics, and the men we call "foreigners" were largely conspicuous by their absence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I agree with the hon. gentleman in a general way, but a certain percentage of them undoubtedly sought relief.

Mr. McMURRAY: What I said was that I had not known of any of them who had done so. These people were settled in western Canada in some of the very poorest parts of the country, as my hon. friend for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) can bear me out. In his constituency they were settled in low swampy land out around Beausejour. The land was drained, the trees cut and the place was developed. Crops were produced and that section of the country was turned practically into an agricultural garden. This year I was near the town of Neepawa and along the mountain the grain was turning golden for miles and miles, so that one beheld a beautiful agricultural scene. That land was owned by Ukrainians who came to the country practically without a dollar; but by patient and diligent toil they built up a paying industry for themselves. A collector for a large machine company told me that he was able to collect far more money from these Ukrainian people than he could from the English, Canadian and American settlers. He could get ten times as much from these people, and apparently they were prosperous. They live simply, they are close to the soil, and so they create wealth. That is the story of the Ukrainian. You can find them between the lakes and north of Winnipeg where they were put into a country of wilderness, of swamp and poplar and stony ridge, a country in which I do not believe any people, even the sturdy French-Canadian frontiersmen could have lived under the circumstances. But these people have lived there, and it was a great mistake, in my opinion, that they were ever compelled to settle in that part of the country. It was a loss to Canada, and a waste of energy and time to put them in a country that should have been kept as a national preserve for wild animals instead of for these poor people to labour in. But they have made good, and men in this House can bear me out when I say that wherever these people have gone they have proved successful as settlers. Near Edmonton there are great settlements of them, and they are doing well. I have met many of them, and I want to deal later on with the case of one or two of them by way of illustration. Take also the Germans. I remember Germans north of Indian Head, away across the Qu'Appelle valley, bringing down loads of wood on their sleighs over a haul of thirty or forty miles, and selling it for a few dollars, and hauling their grain over the same distance. Nothing but hardihood and courage and strength of physique could have accomplished this. They made good, however, and to-day are prosperous. I refer to Lemburg and the surrounding districts. Take also the case of the Mennonites. These people have made a garden out of southern Manitoba, and it is a crying shame that a policy of bigotry should have driven from this country some of the best agricultural settlers Canada has ever had.

Mr. BROWN: They are going to stay there.

Mr. McMURRAY: I sincerely hope so.

Mr. LEWIS: Where, in Mexico?

Mr. BROWN: No, in Manitoba; only a few of them are going.

Mr. McMURRAY: These people came to Canada away back in 1872, and undoubtedly they had an assurance that they would be protected so far as certain of their tenets were concerned. That pledge, I believe, was absolutely and foully violated, and these people out of their strength of conscience and high resolve, which qualities, whether we agree with their tenets or not, we must admire, felt themselves obliged to leave. They had the courage to leave the land which they had converted into a garden, rather than break faith with those things which they valued more than wealth itself.

Mr. LEWIS: Does the hon. member think it bigotry on the part of our government to insist that immigrants shall conform to our educational laws? And does he think it a wise policy to bring people here who will not conform to such laws?

Mr. McMURRAY: I believe it is the bounden duty of our government to keep its compact. I think that duty is higher than any other.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What compact was violated?

Mr. McMURRAY: The compact violated was this: Our government sent representatives to these Mennonite people in Russia to induce them to come to Canada. One colony came here, and another went to Kansas. Those who went to the United States settled there on the understanding that they would have to conform to the school laws of the country. The colony that came to western Canada settled there under this compact—that they were not to be called upon for military service, that their religion should be preserved to them, and that they were to be at liberty to educate their children in their own way. Undoubtedly that compact with the Mennonites was made by the Canadian government. A policy of education in western Canada, dominated very largely by one man, forced a large section of those people either to educate their children in the public schools or to leave Canada. I may say that one-half of the Mennonite colony had pretty well dropped their own school system and were quite willing to adopt the Canadian system, in fact ten or fifteen years would have settled the whole trouble. But some men are impatient, they seem to think that a nation can be made in a day, and that immigrants can be persuaded to surrender their Old Country ideals in favour of Canadian ideals within a very short period of settling here. Well, rather than have our public school system forced on them these people left Canada.

Mr. LEWIS: Did the supposed agreement entered into by the government with these Mennonites apply to all of them or only to a certain section that came in a good many years ago? Moreover, has this government any right to interfere with provincial jurisdiction over education?

Mr. McMURRAY: My hon. friend is diverting me from the thread of my argument. I am not here to discuss whether the provincial government acted rightly or wrongly. I may tell him, however, that education is in the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman made a serious assertion: he said that a solemn compact had been foully violated. I know what the compact was, if you may call it that, having read it, and although the alleged interference with it was at the hands of governments that certainly were not Conservative—they were Liberal—I think his language is wholly too strong. Undoubtedly there was no violation of this so-called compact, by the government of Canada.

Mr. McMURRAY: Under a Liberal government I can hardly understand there being a violation of any compact. But that is as I understand it. My right hon. friend is entitled to his opinion, but until I am shown something to the contrary I shall adhere to what I have said. A prominent educationalist of Saskatchewan told me recently that night schools are being attended by these men up to thirty years of age. I know in the city of Winnipeg these foreign people eagerly seek these educational opportunities. In my constituency I was simply astonished when I became acquainted with these people to find all sorts of halls of learning among them—musical institutions, debating clubs, cultural clubs, surpassing anything that we have among the native born in the city of Winnipeg. In that city—and the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) no doubt will bear me out—the Ukrainians have a labour hall that cost them some $50,000. Other Ukrainians have built two large educational insitutions to educate, not their boys and girls, but their grown-up people. They also publish newspapers. As a result of this educational work these people readily become Canadians and are proud of the name. So I would say to the government: Make your immigration policy a wide one, make it an energetic one, throw open your gates and let those who have the hardihood to come to our shores enter and help, and those I have mentioned have helped in the building up of this country.

My hon. friend for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Marler) spoke of the growth of the United States immediately after the Civil War by reason of their immigration policy. To-day we need such an immigration policy in a much more marked degree than did the United States at that time. Our people are demanding immigrants. For the last two years I have talked with representative men whenever I had the opportunity upon the question of immigration, and invariably I found they were keen in demanding an energetic immigration policy. I think that is true of our business men, true of a large portion of our agriculturists, and true of many of our Labour leaders—of whom I have the highest possible regard and with whose aims and aspirations I sympathize—many of these leaders to-day are strongly in favour of a proper immigration policy. I think the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) is in favour of an immigration policy, in fact I heard him state so in this House, and I wish he had been more emphatic, but still I think he appreciates that our economic salvation can come only through bringing to this country strong, willing and intelligent workers to develop our resources. By that way, and that way alone, we will get lower taxes and lower freight rates and ultimately lower prices for the commodities that we must consume.

During the course of this debate several members of the Progressive group have apparently taken the position that because of the high prices of the commodities they must use and of the low prices of the products of their labour our farmers in western Canada cannot secure a return sufficient to maintain them. I am glad that that assertion has been made by only a limited number of Progressive members. I am glad that certain members of that party differed, and differed widely, with what I consider were extreme, exaggerated and fantastic reports of farming conditions in western Canada. I appreciate particularly the remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) in his very able speech the other day upon this question. I know the district in which he lives; it is a district that for some years has been stricken hardly by climatic conditions. I know the type of people who have lived there—sturdy and energetic and intelligent. In spite of the conditions prevailing there, he was one of those whose mathematics did not lead him to believe that the less was greater than the whole; he saw western Canada as a whole and he gave a fair and faithful report of the conditions existing there. The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Warner) and the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) bore witness to the conditions prevailing in that part of the country; they did not back up or approve the extraordinary assertions made by some other hon. members in that respect.

Now, what is the actual condition in western Canada? Is it a fact that the sturdy, hardy, intelligent agriculturist cannot live there? I went to western Canada twenty-six years ago and into the vicinity of Regina. Times were as hard there as they possibly could be. There was no market for what the farmer produced. I myself have grown and sold the finest of stock there at 2¼ cents a pound. Wheat at that time was selling at 54 cents a bushel. In the period from 1890 up to 1911, only in one year, 1904, was the price of wheat in western Canada ever a dollar a bushel.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What did the hon. member have to pay for binders at that time?

Mr. McMURRAY: We will come to that. We will deal with the wheat first; that is what we pay for the binder with. I give the prices of wheat per bushel in western Canada consecutively for the years from 1890 onwards: 90, 94, 74, 69, 54, 61, 68, 85, 69, 70, 88½ 67½ 68, 81.

Mr. DAVIES: Are these the prices at Fort William, or the prices obtained by the farmer in the country?

Mr. McMURRAY: These are the prices at Winnipeg—the price per bushel on the opening day of the market each month.

Mr. DAVIES: It would be safe to deduct 15 cents a bushel in order to arrive at the price actually received by the farmer. In fact, it is necessary to do that in order to be fair.

Mr. McMURRAY: Do that if you like; I am talking about what the West was built on before. Perhaps my hon. friend does not get the gist of my remarks on that point. The figures continue: 1904, $1.01½ and for the succeeding years: 76, 75, $1.03, 97⅜, 96, 98, and for 1913, 78.

Mr. GOULD: Are these the prices of No. 1 Northern wheat?

Mr. McMURRAY: Yes. These were the prices that prevailed; these were the prices that the men got who went there in those days who were successful and who have grown wealthy. The same figures hold in respect to oats, and in respect to cattle; I have the figures all before me, but it would be a waste of time for me to take them up.

Mr. GOULD: I suggest that my hon. friend might now make a comparison of the prices that these people paid for their binders or for their labour.

[Mr. McMurray.]

Mr. McMURRAY: I suggest that I make my speech in my own way; I will come to that in time. The hon. member will make his speech and I will make mine. These were the prices that prevailed in western Canada when there went into that country young men of Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces—bright, intelligent men. They toiled there and in the course of time they became prosperous. They own sections, three-quarter sections, half sections, good buildings; they have been successful because they have been thrifty. The prices of the goods they had to purchase were high; freight rates were high—higher than they are to-day, but up to 1913 these men were prosperous. I have been down in California at a picnic and have seen two or three thousand of them—farmers of western Canada, wintering in California.

Mr. FORKE: Do not overdo it.

Mr. McMURRAY: I heard it was five thousand, but I will leave it at two.

Mr. THURSTON: Were there any other Canadians there but farmers?

Mr. McMURRAY: Oh, yes. These are the facts. Up to 1913 the West was prosperous. the West did well. It might surprise my friends if I told them that the per capita wealth of the men on the western prairies to-day is nearly twice that of any other part of this country.

Mr. BROWN: Do you take off the mortgage indebtedness?

Mr. McMURRAY: I take off all the mortgage indebtedness. In dealing with this question I speak with deepest sympathy for the people of western Canada—and I consider myself one of them. I have seen them go through their struggles. I have seen them as pioneers develop a wilderness into one of the most remarkable agricultural countries on earth. It is a truism that the character of a people is affected by their environment and by their occupation, that it is developed and moulded, as individuals and as groups, by the country in which they are located and by the labour that they must perform. The pioneer is always a sturdy and a courageous man and the western pioneer, going to that land with its wide open spaces, took on something of the bigness of the country. The copper did not exist in the West until the days of Timothy Eaton, and the drinks were three for two bits. Everything was done in a large way. Having taken a quarter section of land, the settler wanted more; he got a half section, and his very virtues of enterprise, ambition and bigness ultimately became his ruin.

What has produced the conditions that prevail in western Canada to-day? Is it the high prices that the farmer pays for the goods he buys? Is it the low prices of the commodities he sells? Is it the tariff? Is it freight rates? My Progressive friends know that last year freight rates was the paramount question with them. I recognized, sitting in the committee that was inquiring into the matter, that freight rates meant more to western Canada than any question of tariff or the high cost of goods. But is that the cause of present conditions in that part of the country? Or must you go back to that man whom I described and loved, the western farmer himself? I think you will. What happens? Remember up to 1913 he was prosperous.

Mr. FORKE: This is getting embarrassing.

Mr. McMURRAY: I intend to make it more so before I am done.

Mr. FORKE: It is this love stuff I object to.

Mr. McMURRAY: You must have got over it. You were not always that way.

Then immigration came. The settlers came in and the western man got more land. He bought and he sold, and he sold and he bought. He became a speculator, and we know that the western man assumed a load of debt without any thought of the consequence, just as lightly as a darky would throw a turkey over his shoulder and start off home on Christmas night. The western man contracted liabilities in a free and easy manner without regard for the consequences, like the Irishman who gave a promissory note and said, "Thank God, there is another debt paid." What has been the trouble? Speculation, too much credit. My hon. friends over there are backing a system whereby the farmer of western Canada can get more credit. I put it to them as individuals, and as a group, is it not a fact that too much credit has been the curse of western Canada? It has been the curse of the city man, I know. Has it not also been the curse of the agriculturist?

Then the war came, with high prices. The farmer of the West flourished, or should have flourished. It is true he paid high wages, but when you consider the price he got for his grain he never paid as low wages as he did then. What was the result? Further speculation. Let me give an instance, and this is a typical instance, not an extraordinary one. Each and all of us in the West can call a case to mind. Down near the town of Morris, some forty miles from the city of Winnipeg in a good section of the country a prosperous Canadian had 960 acres of land. He had it partially paid for. He had earned it himself from nothing. He decided, good soul, that he would rest, and he bought a house for some four or five thousand dollars in the adjoining town. He sold his farm to some American at a high price, sixty some odd dollars an acre, the farmer receiving a small payment down on it. His brother, who farmed a half section of land some five miles from the town, persuaded the farmer to buy his land. He did so, putting the money he got from his own farm into this house and buying 1,100 acres from his brother from the proceeds of the sale of his farm. Speculating in land, the whole three of them. The war ended, the prices fell. The farmer gets back his farm at Morris. The 960 acres, which were in good condition before the war, come back to him in a dirty and filthy condition. He is not in a position to work the half section he bought from his brother and work the farm too. He has his money in that house and his brother, of course, has lost on the 1,100 acres. There is an instance of two farmers in a prosperous condition wiped out by speculation.

Mr. GOULD: Immigration?

Mr. McMURRAY: The next thing I believe that would be the salvation of the western farmer and of western Canada is not the reduction of tariffs, but a personal economic salvation. It has got to go right back to the farmer himself.

Mr. LUCAS: Would not that apply to every class of citizen in Canada just as well?

Mr. McMURRAY: Absolutely. We have all got to get back to that. Is there bad farming in western Canada? About the worst, I think, in the world. I remember twenty-six years ago, and my hon. friend for Brandon and the hon. member for Lisgar and older members among the Progressives will remember too, how when the soil of western Canada was first farmed there grew up no noxious weeds—nothing but the rose bush came through. But to-day go from the city of Winnipeg down to Emerson on the east side of the river and you will pass through a sea, yellow and golden, not with the grain, but with the sow thistle. Weeds of every kind you will find in that district. There is land that will produce eight or nine bushels of wheat to the acre. Is there any tariff policy, is there any government that can save men from themselves who farm under such conditions?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I know that the hon. member does not want to give a wrong impression. From his statement it might be taken that the weed menace was wholly due to bad farming. I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to convey that idea, that the weed menace is wholly due to poor farming methods.

Mr. McMURRAY: I would ask my hon. friend in reply, to what is it due?

Mr. FORKE: One crop methods.

Mr. McMURRAY: That is bad farming.

Mr. BROWN: If the hon. member has any method in his mind that will effectually combat sow thistle, I think it is a shame that he should keep it to himself.

Mr. McMURRAY: I will try and help my hon. friend out as I go along.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was not some of that prosperity of the earlier days due probably to the mining of the soil, taking off the cream of it at that time?

Mr. McMURRAY: I am coming to that. The hon. member for Centre Winnipeg is very suspicious as to the real cause, and I am glad that he caught my point and bears me out that the farmer's condition in western Canada is due to farm mining. These weeds are a terrific menace to the country. There is no denying that a system of farming must be followed that will do away with them. So long as the farmer of western Canada grows crop after crop and summer fallows year after year, so long will that land be dirty and so long is he going to seek in vain for an economic return from his ill-guided labours. There is a depletion of that soil. In the spring of the year you have only to go out through the country, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and you will see the air for a hundred feet—this may be an exaggerated case—simply filled with flying soil. You will find in places right even down there on the Mennonite reserve the soil piled up against the fences. In 1920 the Canadian Pacific Railway made a careful agricultural survey of western Canada, and estimated that the loss to the agriculturists of Canada that year by reason of weeds and soil thinning amounted to the stupendous sum of $200,000,000. There has been an agricultural survey made by the province of Manitoba which shows that a large portion of southern Manitoba and of southern Saskatchewan—from which my hon. friend for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) comes—has been depleted by improper farming methods. The land has been robbed of its fertility .

Mr. GOULD: My hon. friend will not go into that district and say so.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. McMURRAY: I had some trouble with coal miners out there some years ago; I do not know how I should find the farmers. Here is another thing: Can you farm for five or six months and rest the balance of the year? The farmer says that he is the only working man in the country; but those who grow grain very largely rest from the month of November until about the middle of April in the following year. What is there for them to do? On many of these grain farms a cow is a rarity, or at least two or three of them. That condition has got to change. Until that condition does change the cry that has gone up in this House—the wail from my hon. friend for Bow River like the wail of Rizpah; the lament of Rachel crying for her children and who would not be comforted—will continue.

Then there has been some extravagance—the rankest extravagance—on the part of the people of western Canada; and I do not differentiate for one moment between the farmer on the farm and the man living in the city. We have not yet had the iron driven so deeply into us that we have learned to forget the extravagance that existed before the war. There has been personal extravagance, there is municipal extravagance, and there is provincial extravagance. Take Alberta with an estimated expenditure this year of some fourteen millions; Saskatchewan about the same; and Manitoba even greater. I put it to my hon. friends opposite that the heaviest burden the farmer of western Canada bears today is the municipal taxation upon his land.

Mr. FORKE: For value received?

Mr. McMURRAY: For value received? But it is there. I know a little of what I am talking about. I farmed land in western Canada.

Mr. FORKE: You are more of a lawyer though.

Mr. McMURRAY: I farmed over one thousand acres. I farmed out there for some fifteen years. I was born on the land, I worked upon the land, and I know something about farming conditions out there.

An hon. MEMBER: You did not stay there?

Mr. McMURRAY: I did not stay there. But I am going to deal with the emigration of the Canadian from Canada and I will explain why I did not stay on the farm when I come to that branch of my subject. I repeat, the heaviest burden is the burden of extravagance—personal, municipal and provincial.

Now then as to the conditions that prevail in western Canada. My hon. friend for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and my hon. friend for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) touched upon the conditions that prevail in certain localities. Undoubtedly there are places in western Canada where drouth has been a serious menace, where sturdy, sterling working people could not make it go, where even the sturdy European with his reduced system of living would be handicapped and possibly could not succeed. But the story that my hon. friend for Bow River has told of his locality does not apply to western Canada at all. It is an isolated instance and as the member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) says "If you apply it to the whole of western Canada it is outlandish extravagance." I wish—in order that the members of this House may be truly and fairly informed upon conditions there, in the interest of those Progressive members themselves who have been fair in this matter, and above all in the interest of western Canada—to put the matter fairly and clearly before the public. There has been a decrying of one of the most fertile portions of this earth of ours; there has been a defaming of the sturdy men and women who have made western Canada and who are unequalled, or at least unsurpassed, by any other Canadians. It does greatly affect us in the West—the western men, big of heart and big of hand, sturdy and ambitious—to be represented in this House by men who wail and wail. The continual howling that has been indulged in has been overdone altogether. It is detrimental to Canada; it is detrimental to the people of western Canada; it is unfair and improper. I believe this thing started as a political cry. The people of western Canada protested against the tariff. That was all right but as a political cry it has been carried beyond the bounds of reason. It has become an obsession purely and simply with certain people; they remind me of what old Dodds said of his dog—he yelped when he tied him up and howled when he let him loose. To have to listen to this continual wailing in the House and in committee, I fear would have the effect of causing my hon. friend for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) to imagine he was listening to the wailing of his people when they were compelled by the Egyptians to make bricks without straw. There are many contented people in western Canada; many prosperous and well-to-do farmers. The West is not ruined or broken financially; the picture which has been drawn of it is totally unfair. I would like to give some figures concerning western Canada in order to show the general condition which very largely prevails there. When we hear such a loud cry of poverty, want and ruin from the West let me say that there are more telephones per capita in the province of Saskatchewan than in any other country of the world except Sweden. In the ownership of automobiles the province of Saskatchewan excels any other country with the exception of the United States, which it equals. My hon. friend for Bow River said they were closing up schools in the province of Alberta. Well, I want to tell him that in that province in 1921 they opened eighty-six new schools. In the province of Saskatchewan there were 61,000 automobiles. In the province of Manitoba there were 39,200 automobiles, 12,000 of which were owned in the city of Winnipeg, a wealthy city, and 27,000 owned by the farmers outside of Winnipeg, which, taking in the small towns gives a proportion of 1 to 18; in the practically purely agricultural province of Saskatchewan the ratio was as 1 to 12. The industries in western Canada grew from 1881 in 1915 to 4,535 in 1919, a remarkable growth in the space of four years. The employees in those industries increased in number from 29,000 to 49,000, and the product of those factories in the year 1919 was $307,000,000, or three times what it was in 1915. The per capita, or individual, wealth in the prairie provinces is $2,123, and in the East, from which we have heard no complaint or no prolonged cry, the wealth is $1,238, or pretty nearly one-half of what it is in western Canada. The field crops last year in the four western provinces amounted to 767,000,000 bushels valued at $455,000,000, and I defy any man in this House to show me a greater per capita production among any people on the face of God's green earth.

An hon. MEMBER: Who got the money?

Mr. McMURRAY: I will tell you who got the money. The farmers of western Canada paid a larger income tax than all the farmers of the rest of Canada, and the income tax of the farmers of western Canada in 1921-22 doubled the tax of the year before.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McMURRAY: When the House rose I was discussing the causes of the depression in western Canada at the present time. I argued, rightly or wrongly, that the major cause was the personal action of the farmers of western Canada, and in that regard I drew no distinction between the agricultural people of western Canada and the people of the cities. We were a free western people living in large open spaces and very readily took the opportunity of investment and speculation that presented itself to us there; and I allege that the cause of the condition in which many of the farmers of western Canada find themselves to-day is first and foremost bad farming, and secondly, personal extravagance, municipal extravagance and provincial extravagance. If you, Mr. Chairman, ever came to visit our western country you would be astonished at the magnificence of the public buildings there. In the city of Winnipeg we have public buildings far beyond anything that is fit and proper for a young and comparatively undeveloped country like Manitoba. We have a parliament building which, if it does not excel this magnificent structure in which we are seated this evening, is at least a very fair rival of it. It is splendidly furnished, and is of the very finest architecture. We have a court house which I am told is superior to anything in the British Empire. We have an agricultural college which, according to the information I have, and judging from the cost of it, has not its equal on the continent. We have also a deaf and dumb institute that is costly and marvellous and is beyond the capacity of the people of Manitoba to keep up. That story, Sir, as regards Manitoba applies to Saskatchewan and Alberta as well. We have gone into extravagance there, personally and publicly. I understand that farmers out in the West drive automobiles although they are unable to pay their taxes and supply the gasolene. Lastly, we went into speculation, and that has caught most of the farmers in the West. As a lawyer practising in the city I have drawn many deeds and agreements for city lots for farmers scattered far and wide over the prairies.

Now, as the cause is a personal one I do not despair at all and I think the people of western Canada do not despair either, because the solution is a story of their own personal economic salvation. This is a temporary thing in a way. After the Crimean war in old Canada and in the old province of Ontario many of the farmers found themselves stranded and in very difficult financial circumstances. Grain was high, as were all other prices, just as was the case during the late war. Farmers bought land for their sons, and they bought more land; and the result was that when the war was over they were stranded. The resulting condition was a temporary one that gradually righted itself, and from that time on the province of Ontario has flourished steadily.

The same thing I contend holds in the West. We are to-day in a period of transition in agricultural matters in western Canada. Some ten or twelve years ago the large ranch with its thousands of cattle disappeared. It was unprofitable, uneconomical, and it had to go. The large grain farms of western Canada are also going; there is a transition in process there. There is going to be no more grain mining, no more gambling in grain. The farmer now is not going to work five months in the year; he will be obliged to farm twelve months; he must get acquainted and shake hands twice a day with the homely old milk pail, and he must learn to hear the music of the friendly pig around the place; in other words, he has got to get right down to real genuine farming, and he must get a smaller farm. Does it not appeal to you as ridiculous that the farmer of Ontario, of Quebec, or of Nova Scotia, on a clay land farm not equally as fertile as the wonderful land of western Canada, farms fifty or one hundred acres, while the man in western Canada in order to make a living from a more fertile land must farm a half section, two or three sections and even as high as the American farmer who with his tractor machinery, and so forth, handles eight or ten thousand acres? Such a farm will speedily go to weeds and depletion; and these are farmers that cannot meet the situation in western Canada and who must therefore change their methods.

What is the immediate cause of the financial distress in the West? My Progressive friends from western Canada who sit opposite me heard repeatedly last year that, "The present crop is a debt-paying crop." It is not that you cannot farm to-day in western Canada. The difficulty in western Canada lies in the heritage of the past three or four years, and the money that should have been going to pay for the present year's operations is being extracted from the land to pay the debts accumulated in the period of extravagant expenditure and easy credits of three or four years before, and that in spite of the fact that the year before the province of Saskatchewan gave $403,000,000 worth of products and the other provinces equally proportionate amounts.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the conditions in the West to-day are the result of lack of business ability on the part of the farmers there? Is he making a sweeping charge in regard to the three provinces?

Mr. McMURRAY: I am afraid I shall have to go to the trouble of making my speech over again for my hon. friend's benefit. Had he thought it worth while listening to me I think that he would have gathered this and the other points as I went along. Now, I want to talk to my western friends through the mouths of western farmers themselves, and the hon. member (Mr. Irvine) can draw his conclusions from what I say. The first man I would quote is a prominent member of the grain growers' organization of Saskatchewan He gratuitously sent to me a communication which I presume my hon. friends across the way have also received. This man I remember came to the vicinity of Indian Head sixteen or seventeen years ago as a poor boy and worked on a farm there for his daily pay. To-day he owns three thousand acres of land, 1,800 acres of it under cultivation as agricultural land, and 1,200 acres of grass land for his cattle. Reciting the conditions in the West he says:

> What are the remedies? (1) Reduction of size of farms, even if we have to sell them at a loss; (2) better live stock; 85 per cent of the cattle in Saskatchewan are scrubs; (3) cheaper supplies; (4) more immigration.

Mr. IRVINE: Does he say lower tariffs?

Mr. McMURRAY: No, cheaper supplies.

> 4. More immigration: let us get thousands of those good agricultural people from central Europe out here on the land. They have proved among our best settlers to-day in western Canada. There are fewer of them in financial trouble than there are Canadians or English speaking people, because they are more careful and do not buy so extravagantly, do not go into debt.
> 5. It doesn't seem good argument to say we should bring in more settlers when those already here are not too prosperous, but it is good argument. More settlers, different methods and systems of farming will increase our production, reduce our debts and taxes, help to pay for our railways and war debts.

The second western authority I shall quote is a member of parliament in the Saskatchewan legislature.

Mr. GOOD: Would the hon. member give the name of the authority he has just quoted?

Mr. McMURRAY: I shall be glad to give it to my hon. friend privately. This member of the Saskatchewan legislature is Mr. George Spence and he sits for Noteku. I think that is somewhere in the constitutency of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis). Writing in the Regina Leader he says:

> A man in the southwest to-day who is building for the future wisely and well is a real "homemaker" and not a "fortune seeker."

I may remark in passing that the southwest is a district periodically troubled with drouth, and it is questionable if it should ever have been turned to agricultural purposes, for it is naturally a ranching country.

> This type of man is bound to win out because he is of the hardy pioneer stock that believes in individual effort and work. He knows that success or failure is an individual responsibility; that there is no "easy money"; that acts of parliament will not do for him what only he can do for himself. He is long on self-reliance and short on substitutes for that quality. We should be careful in our desire to help this type of man not to undermine this spirit of self-reliance. There is no substitute for it, whatever. The most effective and acceptable assistance that can be offered him is that which touches actual conditions and helps him to help himself.
> The statement can safely be made that large-scale farming and ranching have failed. They are both things of yesterday. The superiority of intensive over extensive farming has been definitely established. The big cow ranch is doomed to disappear and give place to the small stock-farm, as exclusive ranching is as lopsided a business as exclusive grain growing. To cheapen production, which is our only salvation in this crisis of low prices, we must have the greatest efficiency in feeding and caring for our animals. The brood sow and milk cow are foundation stock. The bacon hog and the stall-fed steer are great sources of exportable wealth.
> The next step in intensified agricultural development is an intelligent survey and classification of lands, showing which are and which are not suited to cultivation; and larger tracts of open range made available to communities of small farmers for summer pasture. As more and more corn is grown, stall-feeding to finish will become the practice as there will always be a shortage of summer grass.
> "Grain growing alone is a soil-robbing proposition, a seasonal occupation, and an intensifier of our farm help problem."

I commend that to the committee as being pretty sound advice. Now, this continued defaming—I was going to say slandering—by, I am pleased to say, a very limited number of the representatives of the West has not been received with any great cordiality in the prairie provinces. The depicting of our sturdy and courageous western men and women agriculturists as quitters and squealers has not met with much response, and I doubt very much if those who have given voice to such statements in this House will receive any very great welcome from their constituents.

The press of western Canada have taken the matter up and I have before me a list of replies received from substantial and responsible farmers in the West and published in the Winnipeg Evening Tribune of 10th, 12th and 13th April. As they are typical I will read two or three of these communications. The first comes from J. N. Christison, who farms eight miles from Morris, Manitoba. He writes:

> I have no serious fault to find with the present system of carrying on farming as any other business in this country. I came from Scotland and it seems to me that people here want to get rich too quick. They want to pay for a half section in five or six years. They ought to be willing to work half a lifetime to do this as they would have to do in most countries.

. I don't think a Western Canadian wheat board would be of any practical benefit to the farmer. Great Britain will not pay $1.50 a bushel for our wheat if Argentina will sell for 85 cents. The law of supply and demand must rule in the world's markets.

Everything costs more now than before the war and the rule should be economy until prices come down. The trouble with a lot of farmers is that they went in too far when wheat was $2 a bushel. They bought more land and now they are deeply in debt. The pay-as-you-go principle is the one to follow in farming and would save a lot of trouble.

The troubles of most farmers are largely of their own making. If they have not got too far into the hole they can pull out through practising rigid economy.

That is from a western farmer, not from a theorist. Here is another story which is really typical of many of our early farmers in the West. It is from Peter Goosen, a Mennonite, one of the class I referred to a short time ago. He lives nine miles from Morris. He says:

I began farming at Morris 30 years ago with $500 as my capital. Now I have eight and one-half quarter sections, 1,640 acres of land. I have my own threshing outfit and about $10,000 out at interest. My first wife died and I was left with nine children, the oldest 14 years. I was a widower for fourteen years and it was pretty hard raising all those children.

I don't work much now, but I supervise. Last year we made a profit. We make a profit every year. Just in March I sold a carload of wheat which netted me $1 a bushel and which showed a fair profit.

The greatest difficulty facing the farmer is the high cost of supplies and equipment.

Binders which used to be $150 are now more than $300. Seed drills have gone up 100 per cent. Oil and gasoline are much higher than they used to be. Labour is twice as high as it was before the war. Twine, which is essential, is much more costly than it used to be.

Careful economy until prices come down is the only thing for the farmer.

I don't think a wheat board will be of much benefit to the farmer. I ship my grain in carload lots and have no serious complaint to make. A man must handle his money for a good crop carefully. Some men think when they get a good crop that it will be the same every year. They spend money like water and buy more land. In the boom time during the war I bought only 80 acres of land.

If I were a young man I could start again with $500 in some new district and make just as good a success as I have made in Morris district,

I have a dozen such letters taken from the Tribune, but I will not weary the House by reading them all. These letters show the true conditions existing throughout western Canada, and this false election cry—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McMURRAY: —has been carried too far and has done more to break the morale of our farmers in the West than anything that has occurred there in a long, long time. As an instance of what can be done by settlers in the West I may refer to the Icelanders. They came from a poor land and settled as a rule in rather indifferent agricultural country between the two lakes. They raised sheep and carried on mixed farming; to-day they are prosperous.

Now, some of my hon. friends have referred to emigration from Canada. That apparently has always been going on. But who are the people that are leaving Canada? They are people of our own stock, Canadian and Old Country, and those of American stock. Very, very few of our agriculturists of foreign origin are leaving Canada. The trouble is that our present system of education educates our young people away from the farm—not the children of poor people but those of the well-to-do. A well-to-do farmer gives his boys and girls a good education, and they go to the cities. Our cities have grown in advance of the country, there is no occupation for these well educated young people in these cities and naturally they drift across the line into the United States and are lost to us forever. The same holds true of the skilled English mechanic. While our cities were expanding there was a place for him; when this expansion ceased or slackened he found himself without work and was attracted to the large centres across the line. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) spoke of our American settlers returning to the States. Probably the first and hardest hit in western Canada by the depression was the large farmer from the neighbouring republic. He came to western Canada with his tractors and other equipment, he was of a speculative type, and as soon as the depression came he was one of the first to leave. The people we are going to keep in this country, Mr. Chairman, are those of the real, genuine agricultural type. In this connection I would submit to the government the advisability of bringing here settlers of German stock, the Reusch Deutscher, the peasants of Germany and Austria. They have always made good in western Canada. They go on the land and stay there.

What ought immigration to do for this country? It ought to lessen the cost of production, to stabilize our industries, to improve our social conditions, to bind Canadians closer together. I was particularly struck by the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion). He appealed for immigrants to develop Northern Ontario. It is a very fine country with a harvest growing right there that any man with an axe and hardy enough can cut down. It is destined to become a very flourishing district and will yet supply much needed freight to the railroads which are our common property.

Probably the principal opposition to a vigorous policy will come from organized labour. Well, in the days of Canada's greatest immigration activity, when settlers were coming to us by their thousands, labour never enjoyed better pay, longer hours and more work.

An hon. MEMBER: Longer hours?

Mr. McMURRAY: Yes. You will have longer hours on the farm because you have to work all winter to make farming pay. If we bring to this country a sufficient number of settlers and place them on the land in western Canada the manufacturers of eastern Canada must immediately begin manufacturing to supply their wants; and the increased products that come from the West will flow down through our channels of trade to enliven and create greater industry here.

The government is endeavouring to bring in more immigrants, and I am now about to express my own idea of what I conceive to be a sound immigration policy. When I am told by a limited number of my Progressive friends—because I am glad to say that many of their colleagues have taken the opposite stand—when I am told that the immigrant cannot live and flourish in western Canada I refuse to credit the statement. When I think of the great fertility of that country, when I think of the thousands of immigrants that have settled there, when I think of the thousands of trainloads of grain that are yearly sent out of that country, when I think of over 150,000,000 acres of arable land in the West, a great deal of which is close to the railroads, I am convinced that the statement is not correct. I am confident that the hardy immigrant will prosper there in the future just as his countrymen did before him. These immigrants can be had in the shape of agriculturists from Great Britain, from the continent of Europe, and from the United States, and even from our own cities. But before any immigrant can be successful I think he ought to receive a reasonable degree of help, advice and instruction. If the Minister of Immigration were a clergyman he might very well take as his text—and I say it with all reverence—"I go to prepare a place for you; that where I am ye may be also."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McMURRAY: We have a preacher on our side too. As to our railroads, when Jim Hill was building the Great Northern railroad in the United States he found it necessary to give to the settlers along the line cattle, pigs and sheep. Surely we with a greater railroad system and with a finer country should not hesitate for one minute to fill it with sturdy, hardy people who will develop the land and help make our railroads a success.

I would suggest to the government that it would be good policy to buy one or two million acres of land immediately adjacent to the railroads for a settlement scheme similar to that which proved so successful for our returned soldiers. There is nothing to hinder us taking, as an experiment, 1,600,000 acres of land and settling 10,000 families on it. This would probably cost the government $24,000,000. Supposing twenty acres were broken on each farm, at five dollars per acre this would cost a million dollars more. Then supposing the government erected houses on these holdings at a further cost of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. As a result the settlers would have every prospect of success. I do not know whether the government is prepared to embark upon such a policy, but the land is there and will produce the wealth, now lying latent, if we bring settlers to it, for our earlier settlers in the West have proved that they can turn our prairies into highly productive land. This is no new experiment; it has been tried with the returned soldiers and has proved a success.

We have a great economic problem on our hands, Mr. Chairman, a problem greater than has ever faced us before probably. This problem has to be met in a businesslike way, and immigration is the only solution that I see. By a well-conceived immigration policy much of our western land can be made productive and so save the Dominion from severe economic stringency, if not disaster. This is not a governmental question, it is really a national question that affects each and all of us, and I submit that the government should not recklessly nor carelessly be condemned in its immigration policy for the sake of mere party advantage. Immigration vitally affects western Canada, and the government is entitled to the support of the West in its endeavour to evolve a satisfactory policy.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) has made a number of statements to which no doubt exception will be taken in some quarters, and I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen to my left are eager to get a chance to reply. There is one statement to which I would like to draw his attention in which he went further I think than we might have expected him to go in view of a previous statement made by him. He said, if my notes are correct, that he would not close the door to any immigrant who had the courage to cross the seas and come to Canada. I take it that my hon. friend really would not go so far as to make a statement of that kind after considering exactly what it means. I think that he would modify that statement to say that he would include only immigrants of the white race. The hon. gentleman says yes; I thought that would be his reply.

I am afraid it will be necessary for me to make a further statement on the question of oriental immigration. I have apparently, quite unintentionally, incurred the displeasure of the Japanese Consul General at Ottawa. Possibly it would be well for me to read the correspondence that has passed between us. The first is a letter dated the 24th of March, 1923, addressed to myself and signed by Hon. T. Ohta, Consul General of Japan:

The attention of this office has been drawn to Hansard of March 23rd in which the following remarks made by yourself are quoted:

Page 1507: Mr. McQuarrie: The Japanese Consul General was kind enough to send me a memorandum of the Japanese views, and I suppose copies have been sent to other members of the House. In that memorandum the details of this alleged gentleman's agreement are set out. It is stated in the memorandum that the arrangement was to the effect that no more than four hundred Japanese labourers should be admitted in any one year....

Page 1508: Mr. McQuarrie: ....I am opposed in the first place, to the agreement itself, and I am opposed also to any secrecy regarding it. There should not be any secrecy about it. We have received the memorandum from the Japanese Consul General as to what the arrangement is with Japan....

As the matter is of much importance in connection with the duties of this consulate, I would be much obliged if you would be good enough to advise me to what Japanese Consul General you refer to as having sent you the memorandum mentioned, and if possible let me have a copy of same.

For your information I am sending, under separate cover, a copy of a pamphlet issued by this consulate last year.

Thanking you in anticipation,

Your sincerely,

I replied as follows:

OTTAWA, March 28th, 1923.

The Hon. T. OHTA,
Consul General of Japan,
Plaza Building,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 24th instant referring to certain remarks made by me on the 23rd instant in the House of Commons and reported on pages 1507 and 1508 of Hansard.

I might explain that on the occasion in question, I spoke unexpectedly and without having my notes before me. Upon going through my files, I find that among others I have two pamphlets; one entitled "Facts About Japanese in Canada and Other Miscellaneous Information—1922" and purporting to be issued by the Consulate-General of Japan, Ottawa, and another one entitled "A short Statement of the Position and Facts Regarding the Japanese in Canada" which purports to be issued by The Canadian Japanese Association, 329 Gore Avenue, Vancouver, B.C., dated June 1st, 1921.

I find that, inadvertently, I attributed to the first mentioned pamphlet or memorandum a statement which is contained in the latter. The memo issued by the Canadian Japanese Association contains the following paragraph:

"Since Japan entered into a "Gentleman's Agreement" with Canada, restricting immigration from Japan to the number of 400 labourers per annum. Japan has not fully availed herself of this privilege, and for the fiscal year 1919-20 she has only sent 201. Not only that, but the Japanese government has exercised great care and vigilance in selecting the labourers allowed to proceed to Canada. These men have fair educational qualifications and are of good moral character, as is evidenced by their conduct in the country of their adoption."

This is the statement to which I referred. I am sorry that I mentioned the information as having been received from the Consul General of Japan.

I shall take the first favourable opportunity, when the oriental immigration question is under discussion again, to make the necessary correction in the House.

I trust this will clear the matter up to your entire satisfaction.

Yours very sincerely,

Then follows a letter dated April 3, 1923, addressed to myself from the Consul General of Japan:

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 28th of March, admitting your fault in connection with the statement made by yourself on March 23rd in the House with regard to the disclosure of details of the Lemieux agreement, and giving a promise that you will make the necessary correction at the first favourable opportunity.

While appreciating the circumstances under which you made the mistake in question, I would say that the circumstance itself has nothing to do with the fact that my reputation has sustained considerable injury by your statement. Under no circumstances are you entitled to any action which not only reflects on my integrity but constitutes itself a serious charge against my official duties as Consul General. I was quite surprised by this deplorable occurrence, as it was entirely beyond imagination that a matter which has grave concern with the integrity and honour of a representative of a friendly nation should be treated in such an irresponsible manner by a member of Parliament of any country.

I will, however, refrain from going any further in this matter as you say you are sorry, and I will accept your letter as a genuine expression of regret and hope that you will make the promised retraction in order to clear up the matter.

Yours sincerely,

I must say that when I wrote the letter of March 28th I did not do so because I feared any dire consequences which might have happened as outlined in the last letter from the Consul General, but did so in order to clear up a mistake which I myself had made. I do not know exactly what would have happened if I had not said I was sorry, but, of course, having made the mistake I was only too glad to admit my fault and to state that I was sorry. In this connection, and as an extenuating circumstance, I would like to draw attention to the similarity between the two pamphlets. I am not suggesting that there is any connection between the two; that is to say, I am not contending that the authors were the same, or even that the Consul General of Japan knew anything about the statements of the Canadian-Japanese Association, but it does seem to me that such a pamphlet would not have been issued by the Canadian-Japanese Association without the knowledge of the Japanese representatives in this country. The momorandum issued by the Consul General of Japan deals with a number of subjects. It takes up: The number of Japanese in Canada; the number of naturalized Japanese in Canada; acreage possessed by Japanese in Canada; Japanese passengers sailed to Canada since 1908; the classification of Japanese labour; summary of trade of Canada with Japan; Canadian commodities exported to Japan; Japanese commodities imported into Canada; the number of Japanese in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; also —and I would call particular attention to this —the amount subscribed by Japanese in British Columbia to victory loans.

There are other extracts in the same connection: An extract from the Vancouver Province of November 6, 1919, and then a passage from the Tokio Asahi of April 14, 1922, which refers to the reception given by the Prince of Wales to a Japanese-Canadian soldier who happened to be in Japan at the time. Then we also have "Japanese needed to work in Fish Canneries of B.C.," and certain excerpts from the House of Commons debates. I might mention that the pamphlet I have just been referring to is entitled Facts about Japanese in Canada and other miscellaneous information. The pamphlet issued by the Canadian-Japanese Association is headed A short statement of the position and facts regarding the Japanese in Canada. It goes on to give some statistics, and to refer to the part taken by Japan in the great war and it deals quite extensively with that. Then it takes up the question "Can the Japanese be assimilated?" and gives, as I said before, certain statistics as to the number of Japanese in Canada, the number of Japanese owning land, and so forth. I would like to question the propriety of propaganda of this kind being issued by the consular representative of a foreign nation, whether friendly or otherwise. I am forced to the conclusion that this pamphlet issued by the Japanese Consul General is nothing more than propaganda intended to influence the members of this House and the people of this country. If we examine the publication we find that no arguments are advanced, but that certain alleged facts are stated, and the conclusion to be drawn is that the Japanese in Canada are so few in numbers that they do not constitute a menace to this country in any sense of the word. On page 7 the number of Japanese in Canada are given in comparison with Canadian population as follows:

Canada, population, 7,206,643. Japanese, including those naturalized, etc., 17,691, or 24 in 10,000.

British Columbia, population, 392,480. Japanese, 16,867, or 420 in 10,000.

Alberta, population, 374,663. Japanese, 375, or 1 in 10,000.

Saskatchewan, population, 492,432. Japanese, 147, or 3 in 10,000.

Manitoba and Yukon, population, 464,126. Japanese, 86, or 2 in 10,000.

Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, population 4,878,495. Japanese, 216, or .04 in 10,000.

Mr. BALDWIN: When was that pamphlet issued?

Mr. McQUARRIE: It bears the date of 1922. Now, as to the number of Japanese passengers that sailed for Canada since 1908—the details are given here on page 9, but I will not read them—the total is stated to be 17,570. Then on page 12 the number of Japanese passengers that returned from Canada from 1908 to 1921 is given as 17,683. These tables will show that more Japanese have returned from Canada than came to the Dominion during the same years. In that connection we all know that there has been an increase, quite a marked increase in the Japanese population of Canada, and particularly in British Columbia in that period. In the same pamphlet we find an extract from the House of Commons debate of May 8, 1922, purporting to be a statement by the Prime Minister. I think it is unfair to publish a portion of the speech of any hon. gentleman in this way so as to indicate to the public that he—in this case the Prime Minister—was favourable to Japanese immigration whereas, as a matter of fact the Prime Minister in the speech which he gave on that occasion stated emphatically that he was very much opposed to oriental immigration, and, that the government proposed to take effective measures to prevent it. An extract is also given from the speech delivered by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie.) That also is misleading and again I say that it is unfair to quote any member of this House in that way. The same thing was done in the case of the hon. member for Nanaimo as in the case of the Prime Minister and I submit that such a procedure is not justified. If the Japanese are going to quote a member of this House at all they should either give his entire speech or such parts of it as fairly represent what he actually said. There are other features of this pamphlet to which reference may be made. It purports to set out what the rights of foreigners in Japan are. From this pamphlet it would appear that foreigners are welcome in Japan and are given very extensive privileges. My information—and I may say that I obtained it from people who have been in Japan—is that that representation is rather misleading; that the foreigner is not welcome in Japan, that he is not given a chance in any line of business, and that he is discouraged in every possible way. So much for the statement of the Consul General of Japan.

I also have to take exception to propaganda which is being carried on by the Consul General for China, Mr. Chilien Tsur. In this connection I would like to read a short extract from an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of March 24, of this year. It says:

Hon. Chilien Tsur, Consul General for China, in his address to the Ottawa Canadian Women's Club, deprecated the tone and character of some of the remarks made in parliament by honourable members regarding the question of Chinese immigration. "Is that the Christian way of expressing cordiality and peace?" he is reported to have said.

Then there was a statement made by the same gentleman in Victoria as to the segregation of school children there; another statement made by him in reference to the immigration sheds in Vancouver; and a statement in regard to the head tax. The gentleman has been going from one end of Canada to the other criticizing the government and the people of this country in regard to the laws which are in effect here. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that that kind of thing contravenes all the ethics of international usage. I do not think it is right or proper for this gentleman to issue propaganda of this kind, but I must say that it appears that that kind of thing is pretty general throughout this country, I should say throughout the North American continent, and that there is a very strong concerted movement going on at the present time to put before the people of this country the right of the Japanese, particularly, to equality of treatment. I have certain extracts here from San Francisco papers which I should like to read in this connection. It seems they are going to have very shortly a convention composed of representatives of the various Japanese associations of America, including the Japanese Association of Canada, the object of which is to enforce race equality on the people of this country. I will read from the Sacramento Bee of March 19th, 1923, the following:

The New Anti-American Agitation in Japan

To Force Race Equality Through Treaty Revision

Is the Japanese government quietly encouraging a popular outbreak of anti-American feeling preparatory to diplomatic demands on the immigration question? We know that the Japanese associations in this country are under the direct control of the government. These organizations are now making plans for a large scale agitation in Japan for "race equality" (in America only—not in Japan and her territories). A powerful "Society to enforce Race Equality" was organized in Tokio last January. Among its promoters are many influential merchants, members of parliament, preachers, and other leading men who have lived in America and are co-operating with the Japanese associations. This agitation menaces the peace of America and Japan. Its object is to "Enforce race equality." Race equality with the Japanese means wresting from America something which the people of the Pacific coast will not concede. The Japanese are raising an issue which would mean war. Tokyo knows this. Tokyo controls the Japanese associations in this country and can control agitation in Japan. Why is this rising tide of mischief-making not controlled at the start? In my last report I dealt with the American influence and significance.

The following editorial refers to the Tokyo end:

(Translation, Japanese American News, March 16, Editorial)

Treaty Revision and the American Brotherhood

Never before has there been such sharp debate on the Japan-American question as in the Japanese parliament this year. There have been discussions before but they never rose to the proportions of the debate this year. And this vigorous debate was mainly the result of dissatisfaction over the discriminatory treatment of Japanese in America and the desire to correct it. The government's replies were mostly irrelevant but nevertheless they showed a hesitating desire to comply with this demand. The interpellations and answers were necessarily formal but the debate was wholly different from the usual noisy wrangling of the opposition. For this reason this debate will have a certain degree of influence and significance.

Not that we think that this debate in parliament will produce immediate results. It goes without saying that the Japanese-American question will not be settled in this way, but there is not the slightest doubt that parliamentary discussion will have an influence on the government, on the people,, and on one element of the international situation. For this reason we have taken much interest in the parliament this year-and we think we have much to be thankful for.

We think also that one reason for this happy phenomenon in parliament was the opportune effort to arouse public sentiment by the "American Brotherhood" now called the "Society to enforce Race Equality," organized by men who rose to prominence in America or have interests in America. The personnel of the organization of the Society to Enforce Race Equality and the main features of its work have been reported already in numerous telegrams and other communications. Probably most of the people in Japan who are deeply sympathetic with the Japanese in America in their present situation are connected with this society.

We may presume that these persons organized the society and undertook to arouse public sentiment, not merely out of sympathy for the Japanese in America, but from the broad standpoint of the Japanese nation and Japan-American relations, recognizing its necessity for our nation and race. But in its work and effects thereof, in its motto—Equal treatment for the Japanese in America—it is absolutely at one with the earnest desires of the Japanese in America. Therefore we tender to the Society for the Enforcement of Race Equality our deep respect and gratitude.

The 100,000 and more Japanese in America to-day are at the parting of the ways. In the midst of terrible anxiety they are seeking a way out of darkness into light. To put it concretely, they earnestly hope that when the treaty is revised the discriminatory treatment they now suffer in immigration, in the land question, and other matters, will be abolished. And in order to attain this hope we must start a nation-wide popular movement, organizing public opinion for stimulating the government, helping and compelling it to act. And in this popular movement our first reliance for sympathy and help is the American Brotherhood. It is no simple matter to start a nation-wide movement

We cannot do it by sending hundreds of telegrams. There must be an organized body of confreres in Japan. The debates in parliament have prepared the people by giving preliminary information. The Japan-American question has blossomed out in this parliament. We truly rejoice in this. But we must add to this preliminary knowledge by giving more detailed and reliable information on the Japan-American immigration question, showing how equal treatment for Japanese overseas is necessary for the honour and interests of the national people. If we do not arouse public sentiment to this extent we can not escape from our present sad plight.

I have also another quotation from the same paper of date March 17th, 1923, which reads:

A Trouble-Making Body of Immigrants

Japanese Determined to Override Wishes of Western America

Scheme to Compel Government to Demand "Equal Treatment"

No other immigrant group in this country has ever undertaken so persistently to evade the laws of the land and override the will of the American people as do the Japanese. At this moment they are forming plans for a combined movement for the avowed purpose of forcing the Japanese government to take a stand which would mean war or the over-riding of the will of the people of at least nine western states. This movement has already begun in Tokyo and the American end is being organized by these peculiar agencies of the Tokyo government, the Japanese associations. For the first time in the history of the Japanese colony, if the scheme carries, the entire group will be organized for joint action. What they propose to do is brought out in the following translations from a local Japanese paper. The Japanese-American News of March 15, 1923, in its Los Angeles column under the date of March 13, has the following:

Japanese All-American Conference

We have already reported that at the meeting of the managing staff and the standing committees of the Central Japanese Association (Los Angeles) day before yesterday, it was decided that a proposal be made that this year's regular meeting of the affiliated Japanese associations of the coast be deferred and a general conference of all the Japanese associations in America be held in Seattle after the decision of the Anti-Japanese land cases, set for hearing April 16 in the U.S.A. Supreme Court, has been rendered.

Yesterday the following letter, accompanying the resolution, was sent to the Japanese Association of America; the Japanese Association of the Northwest, Seattle; the Oregon Japanese Association, Portland; the Japanese Association of Canada; the Japanese Association of New York; the Japanese Association of Chicago; the Japanese Association of Hawaii; requesting approval of the proposition.

Greetings:

At a joint meeting of the managing staff and standing committee of this association on the 12th instant the following resolution was adopted and we respectfully ask your prompt consideration and approval of the same.

Japanese Association of Southern California.
Ginnosuke Yuass,
President.

March, 1923.

Proposal of an All-American Conference of Japanese Residents

Said conference to be held after the decision has been rendered in the land law appeal cases set for hearing April 16th in the Supreme Court. In addition to the delegates of the affiliated Japanese associations of the coast, delegates to be invited from all Hawaii and from the New York and Chicago regions. The conference to discuss preliminary investigations regarding the revision of the Japan-American treaty and the effect of the Supreme Court's decision.

The calling of the conference is to be left to the Japanese Association of the Northwest, Seattle.

Following up the matter editorially the Japanese American News (March 15) says:

ALL-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF JAPANESE RESIDENTS

Extremely Proper

The Central Japanese Association of Southern California has proposed an All-American conference of Japanese residents. The plan is to hold a convention after the decision of the land law cases which are to come up for hearing in the Supreme Court April 16th, the convention to be made up of representatives of the Central Japanese associations of Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, B.C., New York, Chicago and Hawaii, for the purpose of considering

1. Preliminary investigation regarding the revision of the Japan-American treaty, and
2. Effects of the Supreme Court's decision.

The motto of the association is "Abolish discriminatory treatment". There follows this paragraph to which I would call the attention of the committee:

If our government is not firmly resolved—

By "our government", they mean the Japanese government—

If our government is not firmly resolved on revision every means should be employed to make them so. We cannot easily do this by ordinary methods. We Japanese in America to whom it is a question of life and death should determine to accomplish our object at any sacrifice.

It appears that something is being done to endeavour to arouse public opinion. I am not prepared to say that the pamphlet issued by the Japanese Consul General was part of that general movement, but I do say that its tenor is the same; and if that pamphlet had never been forwarded to me the Japanese Consul General would never have had occasion to take exception to my remarks in the House of Commons, because there would have been no opportunity for me to confuse pamphlets issued by him with those issued by Japanese associations. The situation in California is very serious; but considering the population of the United States as compared with that of Canada, the number of Japanese in Canada is much larger proportionately than the number of Japanese in the United States. It has been pointed out on many occasions by interested persons that the number of orientals in this country is very small. But the same thing applies to the United States. The trouble is the same here as it is in the United States, and that is that the oriental population is not properly distributed. We have them on the Pacific coast while there are very few in other parts of Canada. In British Columbia as well as in California there is a very significant feature of this question which has many times been referred to. I refer to the birth rate of the Japanese. I have here a pamphlet, a short extract from which I should like to read; it deals with and possibly explains this question. I am reading now from a pamphlet issued by the North American Commission of the American Legion. This pamphlet is entitled The Oriental Question Report presented by the National Oriental Committee of the National Convention of 1922, which report was unanimously adopted. At page 30 there appears the following:

In order that the seriousness of the Japanese question may be understood it is necessary to obtain the Japanese point of view, which can be had in no way better than from the statements of prominent Japanese and the editorial comment in Japanese newspapers. One of the most instructive of such editorials, appearing in the "Shin Sekai" or "New World" of San Francisco, in October, 1919, said:

"We should advance and not recede. To stop is to retreat. While we push forward boldly the enemy has no chance to form plans.

"What can Phelan do? What can Inman do? When we of the Yamato race arise with a mighty resolve their opposition will be as futile as an attempt to sweep the sea with a broom.

"Even if photograph marriages should be prohibited, we cannot be stopped from leaving our descendants on this American continent. Even if not a single Japanese woman comes it is not possible to prevent the seed of our great Yamato race from being sown on the American continent by marriages with Americans, with French, with Indians and with negroes, especially since there are already 100,000 Japanese here and 5,000 are born annually.

"Supposing that we Japanese were prohibited from owning or cultivating the land. Even the laws of California are not forever unchangeable.

"The day will come when the real strength of the Japanese will make a clean sweep of all laws."

"The far-seeing nature of the Japanese designs is attested by their not infrequent allusion to the plan of one hundred years. An album of scenes depicting the Japanese farming activities which was published in Sacramento in 1915 contained a preface which said that it would serve not only as a souvenir but for the larger purpose of contributing to the formation of the great colony scheme of 100 years". An article in the Sacramento "Daily News", a Japanese newspaper, discussing the then pending alien land bill, said:

"It is impossible to escape anxiety because of the many serious matters which arise, one after the other, in connection with our plans of resistance in the present crisis and their relation to our compatriots' plan of a hundred years."

The importance of propagating the Japanese race in furtherance of this plan of one hundred years is emphasized in the following article which appeared in the "Nichi-Bei" of San Francisco, in October, 1919:

"The Americans wish to kick Japan down to international isolation and confine development of her people to one small island country. Truly it is a laughable and villainous plot. Awake! Even if we cannot expand our country's borders let us expand with all speed the Yamato race of which we are justly proud. Beget! Beget! Beget!. It is only by the propagation of our Yamato race by every good Japanese that we can solve the anti-Japanese, nay, the American-Japanese problem. For the next ten, twenty, fifty or one hundred years, beget! beget! Children, boys and girls, will be treasures more valuable to your countrymen than hundreds of millions of gold. And at the same time they are the supreme treasures for the development of our race".

A quotation from a Japanese language newspaper, identity not given, read into the record of the Congressional investigation of 1920 says:

"We must send for wives. We must raise as many children in America as possible, so that we shall acquire a stability and strength which no amount of anti-Japanese agitation can shake. Land can be had by legal invasion of the spirit of the laws. But without children to inherit, what hope for the future of Yamato-America? Land, broad acres settled thick with Mikado's subjects, children to inherit the land, mothers to bring forth the children."

Protesting against the suppression of photograph marriages the Osaka Mainichi Shimbun quoted in the San Francisco Nichi-Bei of January 17, 1920, says:

"The annual migration of women to America by photograph marriages numbers more than 1,000. At the present time the single prefecture of Hiroshima has 44,155 of its people residing in America. Of these 15,592, not more than one-third, are women. Yet our government, ignoring or glossing over these facts, dares to suppress photograph marriages in a cowardly truckling to America, injuring the national dignity, and adopting an expedient of suicidal repression of our overseas development."

The use which the Japanese hope to make of the voting power vested in the thousands of American-born children of their race who are now rapidly approaching twenty-one years of age is a matter of grave concern. Before quoting the Japanese on this point a short extract will be given from a letter to the Portland, Oregon, Northman by Miss Francis Hewitt, recently returned from Japan, where she had spent six years teaching English to Japanese school children. Referring to the misinformation relative to the Japanese purposes conveyed by the missionaries who dare not write anything displeasing to the Japanese censors of their letters, and by tourists and notables who go to Japan on trade or other commissions and are so entertained "that they seem to lose all sense of sane observation." Miss Hewitt says:

"They do not learn that every girl is thoroughly drilled in the doctrine that should she become a "picture bride" in America or an immigrant to other lands her loyal duty to her emperor is to have as many children as possible, so that the foreigners' land may in time become a possession of Japan through the expressed will of the people".

The Nichi-Bei of San Francisco, in an editorial translated in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of July 4, 1922, comments enthusiastically upon the voting power of the 40,000 American-born Japanese in California, not to mention that of the 49,000 in Hawaii and the other thousands scattered along the Pacific coast, and still other thousands who are being born each year. This editorial indicates the means whereby the Japanese, as stated in the editorial herein quoted from the Shin Sekai, expect that the "real strength of the Japanese will make a clean sweep of all laws." It argues:

"If the Japanese now here settle down where they are, and the number of American-born Japanese grows gradually, it may be presumed that in the next ten or twenty years the number of second generation Japanese in this state, who will have the right to vote, will reach a large figure. Then will the political influence of the native-born Japanese be recognized; then will probably come the time when the attitude of the American-born Japanese will decide the course of an election. Even 5,000 voters among the Japanese five years hence will be able to accomplish a great deal. But with twenty or thirty thousand of them—then a great change will have come in the situation of the California Japanese. At any rate, no person with political aspirations will be able to ignore the voters of Japanese descent."

Anticipating the possibility of the denial of suffrage to American-born Japanese whose births have been registered in Japan as required of Japanese subjects, the Japanese Sacramento Daily News suggests the discontinuance of the practice of sending such birth notices to Japan, saying:

"Hereafter the omission of the notice to Japan is just the way for Japanese subjects, by securing American citizenship, to lay the foundation of a great development. And another day, when the opportunity comes for them to reinforce the Japanese residents in America who have no citizenship rights, they must, on behalf of His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, become the loyal protectors of the race. Even though they are not registered in Japan, if they return to Japan and have documentary evidence that their parents are Japanese they can register at any time."

I would like also to refer to an editorial published in the Vancouver Daily World of recent date, under the caption, "An Ungrateful Guest." It says:

After spending three years in Ottawa as a guest of Canada, Mr. Kosaku Mizusawa, late of the Japanese Consulate general, has gone to the United States and there delivered an attack upon this country, its people and its laws. Such a gross breach of hospitality and of etiquette deserves notice.

Mr. Mizusawa is described in the Japanese language paper which prints his interview as being an "Eleve Consul." The admixture of French and English is apparently intended to convey the idea of a student-consul or consul in training. As a student-consul Mr. Mizusawa has at least one thing to learn and it is to be hoped his official superiors will promptly teach him the importance of keeping a still tongue in his head. Such an official, breathing such sentiments under such circumstances, is a danger to international good-will. The circumstance that the interview was printed in Japanese in a Japanese language paper circulating up and down the Pacific Coast aggravates rather than mitigates the offence.

The charge made by Mr. Mizusawa that "Canadian anti-Japanism is far more cruel than the California anti-Japanese laws" is based on a recent immigration measure offered at Ottawa by Mr. Neill of Comox-Alberni, which never reached second reading, a land bill said to be offered by Mr. H. H. Stevens, which had a similar painless death, and the refusal by the Dominion authorities to add to the large number of Japanese now controlling the fishing industry of this coast.

Then there is a part here that I cannot make out—something about an actual grievance. Then it goes on:

It is true that the officials of the Fisheries department are, on instructions from Ottawa, refusing to grant more licenses to Japanese fishermen than were held in the season of 1920-21. That number comprises roughly two-thirds of all the licenses issued on the B. C. coast.

Says Mr. Mizusawa: "The Japanese engaged in that industry in that country are largely naturalized citizens of England. It is difficult to understand how any law can be passed to stop them from fishing. But they are doing it by administrative process in connection with the issuance of licenses. The Canadian anti-Japanism is far more cruel, in my opinion, than the California anti-Japanese laws."

Mr. Mizusawa has, during his three years' stay in Canada, become so accustomed to seeing his countrymen displace Canadians and British in the industries of British Columbia he cannot comprehend that a halt has been called in the work of Orientalising the coast fisheries. That new Japanese who have never fished before cannot be admitted to the fisheries fills him with a sense of outrage. He finds it difficult to understand how any law can be passed that can stop his countrymen from fishing here. In this disability, his countrymen are at worst only sharing the fate of white fishermen who cannot get permission to fish or operate canneries, of white citizens who own hotel bars and cannot operate them, of white trappers and loggers and manufacturers and a host of other people who at some stage or other find their activities curtailed through the paramount right of the state.

I suppose this gentleman will be even more pained to hear that a cut of 40 per cent has been made in the number of Japanese licenses issued this year.

Now, the claim is made that these Japanese are naturalized British subjects and as such are entitled to all the rights and privileges of British subjects. I had occasion to point out a few days ago the case of a Japanese who was naturalized when he was very young. I have under my hand the evidence which was given before the British Columbia Fisheries Commission in this connection. Hozumi Yonemura, who was assistant secretary of the Japanese Association, District No. 2, was examined and presented a memorandum which is included in the evidence. During the course of his examination the following questions were asked:

Q. Were you born in this country?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you come to the country?—A. 1911.

Q. You were naturalized then?—A. The same year, I think it was.

Q. How old are you now?—A. 21.

Q. You were naturalized in 1911; you would only be ten years old then. It seems you have to be 21 to be naturalized.—A. I have been told by my father.

Q. Was your father a citizen of this country then?—A. No.

Q. Is he here now?—A. Yes.

Q. When did he come to the country?—A. About 18 or 19 years ago.

Q. He came here and then he sent for you?—A. Yes.

Q. Is your father naturalized?—A. No, I don't think he is.

Q. What is your father's name?—A. Koshiro Yomamura.

Q. Where does he live?—A. New Westminster.

Q. What business is he in?—A. Contractor.

Q. Have you ever become expatriated from Japan?—A. No.

Q. You never made any application for expatriation?—A. I did, but I could not succeed. That expatriation is in question now in the House of Commons in Japan.

Q. So that you still are a citizen of Japan according to the Japanese law?—A. Yes.

Q. And the same thing applies to all the Japanese in this country?—A. Not those who were born in this country.

Q. All the naturalized Japanese in this country are still citizens of Japan according to the law of Japan?—A. Yes.

Q. You had to make an affidavit saying you were in the country three years before you could be naturalized, and you had to swear an affidavit of allegiance to the British Crown which you did not understand. What I am asking you is this, were there many Japanese who were in the same position?—A. There must be many others.

Now, in this same connection I also have the evidence of P. E. Kuwabara, who said he was secretary of the Steveston Fishermen's Benevolent Society. He was examined before the commission at Vancouver. The following is part of the evidence:

Q. Now, when we were up at Essington we were told by a Japanese there—he was secretary of the Japanese union for No. 2 District—that he came to this country in 1911 and that he was naturalized the same year. At the present time he is only 21 years of age and consequently he was naturalized when he was 10 years old. He said he had been told by his father that this was quite the proper thing and he said there were a great many other Japanese who were in the same position, who had been similarly naturalized in an illegal manner. Now, would you contradict that gentleman?—A. That is correct.

Q. Therefore there are a great many Japanese whom you refer to in your document who have not been naturalized at all?

Mr. Martell: There are also a great many Japanese not expatriated by the Japanese government.

A. That is correct. I can say so.

If these statements are true; if these witnesses knew what they were talking about, then we have a peculiar situation in British Columbia in that a great many of these Japanese were naturalized in an illegal manner, and if these naturalizations were questioned they would have to be revoked.

Mr. CARROLL: Is the hon. member criticising now the judges who have recommended naturalization, or the minister who has charge of that kind of thing?

Mr. McQUARRIE: What was recommended in the report of the British Columbia Fisheries Commission, of which I happened to be a member, was that all these naturalization certificates should be called in and that only those should be issued in cases where the applicants were bona fide entitled to certificates. I am not criticizing anybody.

Mr. CARROLL: Does my hon. friend mean to say that the judges of the various courts of British Columbia have granted certificates or recommended the granting of certificates to the Secretary of State which are wrong?

Mr. McQUARRIE: These certificates were issued some years ago, and I must say, from information that I have, that naturalization certificates were granted in a somewhat loose manner.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Mr. CARROLL: The hon. member must then be criticizing the judges of the British Columbia courts.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am criticizing no one; the hon. member is trying to put words in my mouth. I am simply stating the facts, nothing more.

Now, as I have stated previously, it is suggested by the propaganda to which I have referred that there is really no oriental menace in British Columbia; that the members from that province have been making a great fuss about nothing; that there is no danger there at all, nothing we should get excited about, nothing in respect to which we should take action. Well, in that connection I would say, as I have said previously, that this is not a political question or rather it is not a party question. I suppose it is a political question, and for that reason I resent interference by the representatives of foreign nations. But it is not a party question; and I am going to quote from statements made not by members of my own party, but by ministers of the Crown in British Columbia who, of course, are Liberals. The first is a statement made by Hon. E. D. Barrow, Minister of Agriculture in British Columbia. I read from a despatch published in the Vancouver Province of November 23, 1922, dated at Victoria. It says:

Figures showing the extent of the penetration of Japanese and Chinese into the fruit, vegetable and general market gardening industry in British Columbia were given the legislature yesterday by Hon. E. D. Barrow, Minister of Agriculture, in the debate on Mr. Ian Mackenzie's resolution calling for amendment to the B.N.A. Act to give the province power to control oriental ownership of lands or other natural resources and employment in industries connected with them.

Ninety per cent, of the local produce furnished in the city of Vancouver supplied by orientals and 55 per cent, of the potatoes of the province are produced by orientals, Mr. Barrow said.

To present the seriousness of the menace, Mr. Barrow quoted figures which he said were collected two years ago by the department of agriculture in its survey of the yellow peril. This survey showed that there were 14,050 acres of agricultural land owned by Japanese and Chinese and 12,000 acres leased by them.

"That was the condition two years ago and we are satisfied that the acreage held by orientals has been increased since that time," Mr. Barrow said.

At the time of the survey, out of the 4,500 acres in the province devoted to small fruits, the Japanese hold 2,341 acres, or more than 50 per cent. He declared that this added to the problem of the berrygrowers in connection with economical marketing on the prairies.

For truck farming the Chinese own 1,632 acres and lease 8,184 acres, the Japanese own 281 acres and lease 560 acres, a total of 10,097 acres, Mr. Barrow said.

"This is the time to take a definite stand to prevent orientals from acquiring any more of our farm lands," Mr. Barrow went on. "It is now practically impossible to buy any produce not grown by orientals. If the oriental were not producing our vegetables the white man would be. The same method is to enact legislation to prevent them from acquiring more than they have."

Mr. Barrow pointed out that the greater proportion of the hothouses near Victoria were owned or run by orientals and they are aggressive on the north side of the Fraser in the berry districts. There was concern that some of them would indirectly get some of the rich Sumas lands being developed by the government.

There are no orientals coming into Chilliwack, however, Mr. Barrow said, as in that district the community spirit is too strong against them. There is no real estate firm in the district that would dare to sell land to orientals. But there is fear that some of the fertile alluvial lands nearby, which are held in big blocks, might pass into the hands of Orientals.

Here is a statement by the Attorney General of British Columbia, the Hon. A. M. Manson, and this I take from the Vancouver World which is the Liberal organ in the city of Vancouver:

That in the shingle mill industry in British Columbia the oriental had already secured the balance of power and that to-day 54 per cent of the shingle mills in this province were controlled by Asiatics, was stated to the House yesterday by Hon. A. M. Manson in seconding the motion of Hon. William Sloan, calling upon the federal government for total exclusion of Asiatics from Canada.

"And that is not all," he said. "It may be interesting to this House to know that 7½ per cent of the industrial workers in the logging industry are Asiatics: that 41 per cent in the lumber dealing industry belong to the same race; that 16 per cent in the baking industry; 39 per cent in the fish canning industry; 39 per cent in the vegetable canning business; 15 per cent in the coal mining industry: 37 per cent in the pulp and paper industry and 39 per cent in the saw milling industry are also Asiatics."

The attorney general did not mince words in dealing with the problem. "The story of the oriental in British Columbia has been the story of a progressive menace," he said. "He came to us first as a hand laundry man. Then he became a factor in the fishing industry. Next in the logging and lumbering industry. Then he invaded mining and farming and now he is a menace in the wholesale and retail merchant business."

While seconding the motion for exclusion of entrance into Canada he stated that he thought we should go still further and adopt a policy that would compel the oriental already here to leave Canada.

I have here a statement by the Hon. William Sloan, Minister of Mines in British Columbia. This is taken from the Vancouver World of November 11, 1921:

In the face of all the facts that I have been able to assemble it must be clear to us that the industrial and economic life of British Columbia is already endangered by Asiatic competition and that the white people cannot compete with this foreign population for the chief reason that orientals are, as has been repeatedly emphasized, accustomed to and contented with a much lower standard of living. In the final analysis it must be admitted that while a single state may continue to contain two races, it cannot long continue to contain two conflicting and distinct civilizations.

Mr. Sloan goes on to give a statement which is very interesting. He says:

I wish to submit some very interesting figures which have been compiled with regard to the activity of orientals within our province and which indicate serious inroad in our industries of fishing, agriculture, lumbering, mining and also in respect to business and trade.

In 1920, 2,227 gill net licenses and 519 trolling licenses a total of 2,746 licenses were issued to Japanese by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

It may safely be said that there were 5,492 Japanese fishermen at work in British Columbia in 1920, which number certainly has not decreased in recent years.

The Asiatic Exclusion League of Canada points out that the total number of births in British Columbia in 1920 was 11,192, that the Japanese births aggregated 657, making the proportion of Japanese to whites one in seventeen.

Statistics also have been compiled which indicate that the proportion in 1921 was about one in 13.

Out of 438 grocery licenses issued in Vancouver in 1920 over 171 were granted to orientals. There were 80 oriental laundries. In restaurants 713 orientals were employed and 50 per cent of said restaurants were owned and operated by orientals. There are 62 oriental barber shops in Vancouver.

Sixty per cent of the merchant tailors in Vancouver are orientals. In the present year these numbers have grown alarmingly. Japanese and Chinese merchants now hold 1,656 trade licences in the city of Vancouver.

In my own constituency in Nanaimo, an industrial district, it is noteworthy that orientals also have been obtaining a footing, as is indicated by the following facts: In that city there are three Chinese laundries, two Chinese barbers, five oriental merchant tailors, three Chinese fruit, and vegetable merchants peddling from door to door, and at least 75 per cent of the truck farming of the district is controlled by orientals.

He goes on to show how the orientals are also invading the coal mining industry. I have also some information contained in a memorandum of the Steveston Fishermen's Benevolent Society, a Japanese organization, which was presented to the British Columbia Fisheries Commission, and which deals particularly, of course, with my own district.

I would like to draw attention to the condition which exists in the town of Steveston, which is at the mouth of the Fraser river. A few years ago this town had a population of some three thousand, the majority of whom were white. Now it has a population of about the same number or a little larger, but practically all of them are orientals. I will give you the Japanese gentleman's own figures. There are about 600 married couples living in Steveston and its vicinity with approximately 1,200 children, together with about 700 single fishermen, all engaged "in fishing and the subsequent industries on the Fraser." That would make an oriental population of some 3,100. Then he goes on to say that these fishermen have invested in their business a large sum which is stated to be $1,694,900 and is made up as follows:

870 gas-engined fishing boats (under 10 B. H.P.), valued $1,000.00 per boat, and $500.00 fishing nets and other gears	$1,305,000
50 fish-carrying boats (from 10-20 B.H.P.), valued at $3,252.00 per boat	133,900
38 fish-carrying boats (over 20 B.H.P.), valued at $6,500.00 per boat	256,000
Total..	$1,694,900

Then, in the same document, we are told about the trolling and other operations, which give employment to a great many more Japanese. There is one statement here, and I would like to call attention to it because it seems to convey the idea that these men think they are really helping the country by engaging in the fishing. It says:

> We are all working to promote the production of one of our national products, namely, fish.

They think they are really helping us by doing this fishing. I take it that they are not doing anything to help the country but are rather taking advantage of our natural resources in a way that should not be permitted and in a way that would not be permitted to us in Japan. There is another peculiar thing about this statement and that is, it is contended that by catching fish on the west coast of Vancouver Island they are doing a patriotic work inasmuch as they are catching the fish which otherwise would go to the Americans. It says here:

> If this observation is correct, which we presume it is as far as the present stage of biological observations are concerned, we are not killing any Canadian fish, but are killing our competitors' fish for the benefit of the nation. We are not very familiar with the political aspects of fisheries in connection with United States, but we presume we are doing a very beneficial and rather patriotic work for our adopted country, especially when fisheries authorities in the state of Washington are apparently taking an attitude that they are very little interested with the question of the conservation of salmon, but only concerned to put up as many cases of canned salmon as they possibly can by almost any destructive means of fishing.

Now, I think, we are telling these Japanese that we do not need them in our fisheries.

I would like if I may be permitted to do so to read another editorial from the Vancouver World.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid that the hon. member in his elaboration of citations is getting beyond the provisions of the rule which declares that speeches in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the clause or item under discussion, which in this case is immigration. I am drawing my hon. friend's attention to the rule so that he may be guided by it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I think the editorial I am about to quote is really relevant to the subject under discussion. It summarizes very well the conditions that we are faced with in the city of Vancouver to-day and is entirely relevant, particularly in view of the fact that the government proposes to admit merchants to Canada although other immigration is to be excluded. Now, this editorial from the Vancouver World which, of course, is a government organ, is to the following effect:

> The Army of Asiatic Retailers
> The figures, printed elsewhere in this paper, showing the extent of the Chinese and Japanese competition in the retail merchandizing and general occupational businesses of this city, will come as a startling revelation to many people.
> Within the past year a general branching out of Chinese and Japanese stores has taken place all over the city. There is hardly a business block, either in the down-town section or in the outer districts where the local tradesman is not suffering from the effects of Asiatic competition. But until The World secured the returns from the City Hall records, who for one moment imagined that 1,658 Chinese and Japanese were holding trade licenses within the city limits?
> Nor has the worst been reached, by a long way. Six months ago The World pointed out the menace which would come within a few years from the admission of last year's army of 1,445 qualified Chinese merchants through the port of Vancouver. Not many of the 1921 class are yet in business. They came armed with the necessary capital to secure entry, but they are still busy learning English, studying Canadian business methods and preparing with patience for the time when they will be able to take their line in the ranks of the commercial contenders for Vancouver's retail trade.
> Many of the Chinese retailers are doing business under assumed names. Possibly out of admiration for one of the leaders of the Vancouver bar one Chinese tailor has taken the name of "Charles Wilson." His explanation is that this is his real name "in English." Another, a grocer, has paid a delicate compliment to the Scotch by taking the name of "MacLean." Others are content to take mere company names which sound like the names of Anglo-Saxon concerns, such as "The Royal" and the "North American," etc. But it would surely make the Bard of Avon turn in his grave to see who runs The Stratford Gent's Tailoring Club, or the Stratford gentlemen who patronize it.
> To-day the Victoria Chinese are using the strike, picketing and intimidation to prevent the principle of separate schools for Asiatics being introduced there. They and their mouthpieces are demanding that the Asiatic school populace shall be educated on terms of intimacy with the children of white people. Undoubtedly the equipping of their children with the fullest measure of intimacy with their white competitors in the business affairs of life is the governing factor in the refusal of the Chinese to attend the schools set apart for themselves.
> A study of the article referred to will show that there is no line of industry which the evergrowing tide of Asiatic invasion is not prepared to contest with the Anglo-Saxon in this province. The time has come for some enlightened self-sacrifice on the part of buyers as well as for the utmost efficiency on the part of the tradesmen to meet the situation which is probably destined to reach much more aggravated proportions before relief comes.

The statement referred to in the editorial is as follows:

> Over 1,600 Oriental Shopmen
> Stores of Asiatics Occupy 100 Blocks
> How many Chinese and Japanese are there in business in the city of Vancouver?
> The full total is impossible to state without a complete census, if such a thing were possible, but the records of Trades License Inspector Jones' office at the City Hall show that no fewer than 1,658 Chinese and Japanese have been licensed to carry on merchandizing businesses within the city limits.
> This does not include men who work for wages, and there are many such, but only those who are in business for themselves. As there are 18 stores with 25 feet frontages in an ordinary Granville street block, it would take nearly one hundred city blocks to house all the businesses run by Asiatics in this city, if each of them occupied 25 feet of space and all were hived together instead of being spread over the city.

All of them, however, do not occupy business premises. There are 152 Chinese hawkers and peddlers, who do business from carts and autos. In a few instances there is a duplication of names where a man may have separate licenses for selling stationery or confectionery and tobacco under the same roof.

The business of hawking and peddling is almost entirely monopolized by the Chinese with their 152 peddlers. Only two Japanese are as yet in that business. So, too, in regard to laundries. Out of the 55 laundries in the city 41 are run by Chinese.

Once Favoured by Widows

Candy, ice cream, fruit and tobacco—the typical small business which used to be the mecca of the retired workman or the widow with small means—is the chief business that has been attacked by the Asiatic in point of numbers. Of licenses in these lines, no fewer than 137 are held by Chinese and 197 by Japanese. The Greeks have made the candy, fruit and tobacco business their chief object of attack, but they hold only 103 licenses as compared with the 334 held by the two Asiatic races.

There are 97 Chinese grocers and 79 Japanese grocers in the list; 62 restaurants run by Chinese and 27 run by Japanese.

The Japanese have entered strongly into the rooming-house business, there being 69 lodging-houses run by Japanese as compared with 14 run by Chinese.

No fewer than 45 barber shops are now run by Japanese and 20 by Chinese. The jewellery business and the drug store business, both reputedly lucrative businesses, have attracted the Asiatic merchants, there being 22 Chinese jewellers and eight Japanese jewellers in business here and 27 Chinese drug stores and four Japanese drug stores.

Asiatic Penetration

The full extent of the penetration of the Asiatic merchants into various lines of retail business is shown by the following list: Autos for hire, 14; auto drivers, 15; garage and supply houses, 5; apartment houses, 13; billiard and pool rooms, 10; bootblacks, 1; butchers, 40; barbers, 65; brokers, 8; boot and shoe dealers, 27; boot and shoe repairers, 23; bath parlours, 12; candy, ice cream and fruit, 133; confectionery, 11; cleaners and dyers, 55; druggists, 33; dry goods, 38; dressmakers, 4; express and draying, 38; flour and feed, 8; fish dealers, 20; grocers, 172; greengrocers, 57; gents' clothiers, 63; hawkers and peddlers, 154; hardware, 9; jewellers, 30; lodging-houses, 83; laundries, 43; milliners, 3; miscellaneous, 52; printers and publishers, 5; poulterers, 17; photographers and photo supplies, 12; restaurants, 89; secondhand dealers, 14; stationery and books, 54; tobacconists, 201; wholesale dealers, 29. The above makes a grand total of 1,658.

I think I have shown that there is something of a real menace facing us, particularly in British Columbia, and I submit that immigration of this class should be excluded from Canada. I was very glad indeed to know that the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. McMurray) agreed with me in this particular. He said that we should encourage to come to Canada those immigrants who have the courage to work and face hardships, but he would not include in that class the oriental immigrant. Since this matter was before the House last year the agitation for the exclusion of orientals has been continued in British Columbia. I have before me a number of resolutions which have been passed by organizations at different times since I had the honour to place before this House last session the resolution calling for exclusion. I will not take the time to read these resolutions, but I would say that, irrespective of party, the demand from all classes that these orientals should be excluded from Canada is as strong as ever, and I hope that the Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) will endeavour this year to do something to meet the situation.

Mr. GARDINER: I listened with a good deal of amusement and not a little amazement to the address of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) this afternoon and evening, but I believe the most amazed member in this House was the hon. Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) himself. I will take up a little later some of the points the hon. member for North Winnipeg dealt with. But at the present time I would like to say a few words with regard to Canada as a country to live in. I believe that it is generally a well-accepted fact that, in so far as Canada is concerned, we have, perhaps, one of the best countries that can be found on the face of the globe. We have a country of large dimensions, and of very extensive natural resources. Those natural resources are so extensive that even the people who are living in Canada to-day do not know a tithe of their extent. Under these circumstances it would be quite natural, of course, for us to expect that immigration to Canada, would be almost spontaneous. But I find myself in a somewhat peculiar position, and that position is simply this, that, so far as the people of Canada are concerned, we must take the condition to-day and discuss it as it exists.

I regret that I had not the opportunity of listening to very much of this debate. I have been engaged in the special committee on Agriculture looking into agricultural conditions and consequently I may perhaps repeat some of the arguments that have been used and if so, I will have to ask the pardon of the House. It is proposed by the Acting Minister of Immigration on behalf of the government to increase the immigration grant in the effort to induce people to come to Canada, and I understand the bulk of the money is going to be spent in an endeavour to bring to this country farmers, agricultural labourers and domestic servants. In so far as the two latter classes are concerned, I believe the country can well afford to accept quite a few immigrants who come as farm help, that we can also afford to accept a number of domestics but I find myself in somewhat of a disagreement with those who propose to bring in people who will immediately go on the land. First of all let me say that I am not very well acquainted with conditions in the East, and consequently I must speak of that part of the country which I know best—western Canada.

We have heard many speeches in this House with regard to conditions in the West. We have heard some addresses which to all intents and purposes intimated to members of this House that conditions in western Canada were not nearly as bad as they were painted, but I may say that I listened to the address of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) some few days ago and I noticed that the press of this country got after him very severely because he chose to tell the truth as he knew it in this House. I am fairly well acquainted with the conditions in the district in which that hon. member lives, and if I can add anything to what he has stated, I would say that the hon. member told a part of the truth and not all of it. If he had told the conditions as they really exist in that part of the country, I believe the members of this House would be still more amazed than they were at what he said. I believe it is generally understood, so far as Canada is concerned, that we have in our cities, towns and villages, a greater population than conditions at the present time could justify. I noticed in one of the Ottawa papers the other day a statement by Mayor Plant that 20 per cent of the citizens of Ottawa have received some assistance during this last winter. That condition is more or less prevalent throughout the whole of Canada, and, it consequently is convincing evidence of the inadvisability of bringing in more people who would settle in the cities, towns and villages, and of the wisdom of bringing people who would settle on the land and become farm labourers or domestic servants.

We heard a good deal about agriculture during the war. Hon. members of this House will remember how the government of the day did everything in their power to induce the farmers throughout the length and breadth of Canada to produce and produce some more, and no doubt the farmers of Canada did all in their power to produce all they possibly could. As a matter of fact, some of the farmers in Canada got into financial difficulties because they undertook to produce more than their capital would allow them to produce efficiently. But the point I want to bring before the House is this: Hon. members will remember that during the war the people of Canada recognized the fact—and I believe it was stated on more than one occasion on the floor of this House—that agriculture was the backbone of Canada. I have here a summary of Canadian trade for the eleven months ending February 28, 1923, and I wish to call the attention of the committee to some of the items contained therein. If we look down the export column for that period we shall find that Canada exported altogether $854,893,844 worth of goods. The amount of agricultural products exported included the following items: First, we have agricultural and vegetable products, mainly foods, totalling $363,615,713; next, agricultural and vegetable products other than foods, $21,479,441; and there is another item, animals and animal products, amounting to $126,922,203.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all these products spring first of all from the farm. True, there are included in some of the items agricultural products which are partly manufactured, such as flour, and other articles which undergo some finishing process, such as bacon, etc. But the point I want to drive home is this, that agriculture as the basic industry of the country provided exports during that eleven months amounting to a total of $512,017,357, leaving for all exports of all other classes of commodities produced in Canada only $342,876,487. There is something else I would bring closely to the attention of the committee. Let us take fibres, textiles and textile products. During the eleven months I have mentioned Canada has exported $6,946,047 worth of these products. I hope that the House will bear these figures in mind, because they are important. Obviously therefore there seems to be no question about the fact that agriculture is the backbone of Canada; but, if I might say so, I think that Canada's backbone is broken and broken badly.

I have some information here which I might give to the committee relating to the economic conditions of western Canada, and I speak of a part of the country that I know very well. While it is admitted that during the past years we have had a dry area in western Canada, yet in the greater portion of the West we have had fairly good crops; and I do know from actual experience, in discussing various matters with farmers of western Canada, that even in those parts of the country where the people enjoyed good crops they seem to be as badly in debt as are the people where there were practically no crops at all. I do not know what the idea of the minister or the government can be in bringing more people into the country to go on the land. I cannot comprehend the reason at all. I do not know whether it is for the purpose of increasing the population or in order to increase production. No doubt the object is mainly to increase production, and if that is the case I desire to submit to the committee some evidence that has been given before the special committee on Agriculture, so that we may see whether we can afford to produce much more agricultural commodities than we are doing now.

The special committee, of which I happen to be a member, has taken a good deal of evidence and it appears, practically from every witness that has come before the committee, that the conditions in regard to agriculture are deplorable not only in the West but in the East as well; and even in Quebec the conditions appear to be as bad as they are in western Canada. The other day we had a witness from Montreal who stated that the farmers of Quebec are up in arms because they receive so little for their produce notwithstanding that they have to pay high prices for the things which they must have in order to produce farm products.

The committee will remember that at the last session of parliament we passed an act for the purpose of grading hogs, and the reason given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) for the passing of that act was its necessity in order that we might get a class of hog grown in Canada from which we could produce what he called "Wiltshire sides" that could be sold to advantage in Great Britain. I do not know for what reason, but I am told that that act has never been enforced in eastern Canada; it has been applied only in the West. Now, I do not know that the Minister of Agriculture under the act was allowed to discriminate as between the East and the West in its application, and whatever reason he may have had for not putting it into force in eastern Canada is totally unknown to me. Perhaps the Mininster of Agriculture may some time in the future explain this discrimination. The fact remains, however, that the real idea behind that act was for us to produce such a class of bacon hog in Canada as would enable us to compete with other bacon-producing countries in the world for the market in Great Britain. We were told that that was practically the only market available for bacon products, and consequently we must produce that kind of bacon which was desired there. I believe that the members of the committee will admit with me that we have produced what is termed "select bacon hogs." We have produced the best hog it is possible to produce in this or any other country. But what is the situation? We find that when the packing houses have taken the select hogs from our farmers and have properly graded them, when they have cured them and cut them up into Wiltshire sides, they sell that bacon in Great Britain at a loss. Mr. McLean, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Harris Abattoir in Toronto, appeared before the committee the other day and he was asked at what price they were selling this Wiltshire bacon in Great Britain. I quote from the evidence:

By the Chairman:

Q. Just let me ask you this question. What are you selling bacon for in England at the present time?—A. I should say that the average price of Canadian bacon sold in England last week was about 80 shillings per 112 pounds.

If we figure this out in Canadian money we find that the price is about 18 cents per pound for the best bacon Canada can produce. I might explain to the committee that this bacon is merely cured; it is not smoked. When it gets into Great Britain the people who get it smoke it and place it on the market. But the most amazing part of Mr. McLean's statement was that it cost the Harris Abattoir 96 shillings to produce that bacon which was sold for 80 shillings in Great Britain, or in other words, a loss of 16 shillings on every 112 pounds sold on the British market. The question is, how long can we continue to feed Great Britain at a loss with our best farm products? How long can that continue; and in view of that, would it be advisable to ask the people of Great Britain or the United States to come to Canada and start farming? Could we ask them to come here and farm in order to produce the best class of bacon so that it might be sold in the British market at a lower price than it is sold for in Canada?

Two or three days after Mr. McLean had given his evidence I looked up one of the Calgary newspapers. As hon. members know, we have a big packing plant in Calgary, which is one of the best in the country. I noticed that they were advertising the best bacon at 45 cents and best hams at 33 cents per pound. At the same time they were selling bacon in Great Britain at 18 cents a pound. I maintain that such a condition of affairs should not be allowed to continue any longer than can possibly be prevented, and until it is eliminated it seems to me to be futile to ask people to come to this country to engage in farming. I would suggest to the Acting Minister of Immigration that he might better spend some of this money which he is asking for immigration in advertising in the Old Country papers something along these lines:

If you purpose coming to Canada to farm, don't; stay in Great Britain, because we will feed you cheaper there than here in Canada.

That is not the only farm product, Mr. Chairman, that we are selling in Great Britain at a loss. Here is another very substantial item. We had before that special committee the secretary-treasurer of the Millers' Association of Canada, comprising the millers of Ontario and Quebec. This gentleman stated that wheat ground in Canada and shipped as flour to Great Britain was being charged from 2 to 5 cents per 100 pounds more in freight than the flour of wheat ground in United States mills. It seemed that it made no difference whether the boats were of British or Canadian registry, providing they sailed from a United States port they carried flour ground in United States mills that much cheaper than they would carry Canadian-ground flour. But the most amazing statement he made was when he was asked whether the mills that he represented were selling flour in Great Britain at a lower price than in Canada. He answered, "Absolutely, relatively we are selling flour in Great Britain at a lower price than we are selling it in Canada." And he had a most ingenious excuse to offer by way of explanation. He said, "If we were supplying the Canadian market alone we could only run our mills about 50 per cent of the time; by running our mills full time, even if we have to sell our flour at a lower price in Great Britain than we receive in Canada, this lower price provides a little profit towards meeting our overhead expenses. Consequently we do sell flour in Great Britain at a lower price than here." Now, it seems to me there is something radically wrong with any system that will permit the products of the Canadian farm and the Canadian mill being sold abroad at a lower price than what they can be obtained for at home, and I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the special committee will have some substantial recommendations to make to this House. and I hope that if those recommendations have any virtue they will be incorporated in legislation.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) dealt quite lavishly with conditions in western Canada, and told us that it was possible to get all the immigrants we require from continental Europe, and that they would naturally make the very best settlers. As far as I am concerned, I should like to say that if those people care to come here on their own initiative I would not wish to keep them out, but I do say that we farmers of western Canada—and I believe I may speak for the farmers of the East as well— have no desire to compete against this class of farm labour. We do not wish to have to accept their standard of living, and consequently we are opposed to any great influx of such immigrants. This very important fact must be remembered, that to-day we find a very much higher standard of living in our urban centres than in our rural, and this is really the reason why so many of our young people, and even of our older people, are being attracted to our cities, towns and villages. If we are going to keep our people on the land the living conditions in rural Canada should be made just as good as they are in the urban centres.

With regard to wheat production, the hon. member for North Winnipeg seemed to think that all we had to do in western Canada was to produce as much as we possibly could and we were bound to be successful. But there is such a thing, Mr. Chairman, as cost of production. If we take into consideration our cost of production we find that invariably there is quite a discrepancy between this cost and the price we receive for our products. We had before the agricultural committee a young man—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Casgrain): I would remind the hon. member of rule 57, headed "Reports from Committees." It provides that:

> Reports from standing and special committees may be made by members standing in their places, and without proceeding to the bar of the House. Until the report and evidence have been laid upon the table, it is irregular to refer to them in debate or to put questions in reference to the proceedings of the committee.

I would therefore ask the hon. member to refrain from quoting from the report of a committee which is at present sitting.

Mr. GARDINER: I will not quote the figures, then, Mr. Chairman, but I think I shall be quite within the rules if I give a summary of the results. This young man made a study of agricultural conditions in Manitoba. He took three specific points and got the farmers to keep exact cost accounts. After these accounts had been finally analyzed it was found that the cost of producing wheat at those three points was more, and in some cases very much more, than the farmers received for the product. In other words, the wheat was produced at a loss. Later in the session the House may have an opportunity of getting the actual figures, and it will then be found that my summary is borne out by the evidence. If we farmers in western Canada are producing our wheat and other products at a loss, what is the sense of bringing other people here to produce still more products to be sold at a still greater loss? Of course, it is well understood that so far as the price of our wheat is concerned it is set by the Liverpool market. Therefore our only remedy is to reduce the cost of production.

That is where the salvation of the Canadian farmers seems to lie in my judgment.

For the last forty or fifty years we have had a fiscal policy which seems to be based upon the principle that those industries which may be termed secondary must receive extra consideration. That is to say, these industries which are based on our primary industries receive protection, but our primary industries receive no protection whatsoever. Consequently we have to meet the competition of the world, and this coupled with the fact that our home manufacturers are enabled to set the price of their products means that what we must buy is at a price out of proportion to what we receive for that which we have to sell. The policy of the government seems to be to adopt immigration as a cure for the depression that we have in Canada at present. I remember that when I was a young boy I used to go to fairs, and there we would see gentlemen who were selling salves and lotions which they claimed were a cure for all diseases. It is possible that these remedies did do some good; but while they might heal a running sore for the time being it was invariably the case that the disease would break out in some other part of the body, so that the patient would have to consult a physician or surgeon before actual relief was obtained. No doubt the skilled surgeon, instead of using salves and lotions, would use the knife and with a few deft strokes cut out the offending part and afford real and lasting relief to the patient. We used to call the gentlemen who sold these salves and pills, "quack doctors"; and it seems to me that the remedy the government proposes for the present depression—immigration—is a quack remedy that will not satisfy the people of Canada any more than the remedies advocated by the quack doctors relieved their physical ills. I do not know whether the minister would give a name to the remedy which he proposes; he might call it "immigration lotion," to be well rubbed in—something of that description. I am satisfied, however, that it will not be a cure for the economic disease from which we are suffering at the present; some more specific remedy will have to be applied.

I would like to make a few suggestions for the consideration of the government as to what I believe would be advisable in the interests of Canada as a whole, and more particularly in the interests of the farmers. The first thing I regard as necessary is a reduction in the cost of living, that is, a lowering of the cost of the things we must have in order to exist. The prices of agricultural products have come down very substantially; as a matter of fact many of our products are down to the basis of pre-war figures, but we find on looking over the list of other things that we must buy, such as boots, shoes, clothing of all descriptions, furniture, etc., that the prices of these articles are high in comparison with the prices of agricultural products. I believe, therefore, that the House would be well advised to consider seriously ways and means whereby the cost of these commodities may be greatly reduced.

Our greatest disability in western Canada at the present time is lack of proper line of credit. I have nothing to say against the banks so far as the amount of credit they are giving is concerned, but hon. members will realize that the banks are not in the business of giving long-term loans; they are organized only for the purpose of giving short-term loans. While bank loans or bank credits, therefore, may be fairly satisfactory for seasonable loans they are not at all satisfactory for long-term loans. Our present long-term loan system is very expensive. We can get loans from the mortgage companies for a term of five years—sometimes we can get ten years—at a rate of interest of about 8 or 9 per cent. In the first place, agriculture cannot pay as high a rate of interest as 8 or 9 per cent, so that some means will have to be found whereby we can get cheaper money for long-term loans. When a farmer gets a loan of $1,000 on his quarter-section of land from a mortgage company, he finds that when he goes to the bank to get the proceeds there is coming to him only $940 or $950 instead of $1,000. In other words, it has cost anywhere from $40 to $60 to have that loan put through; the amount which he actually receives is reduced by that sum, and on the top of that he pays 8 or 9 per cent interest. But that is not all. If at the end of the five years he is incapable of paying off the loan, he has to incur practically the same expense that he incurred originally, in order to have it renewed. It seems to me that in any country which claims to be an agricultural country the first thing to do is to provide what we would call long term rural credits at reasonable rates of interest. I say that one of our greatest disabilities at present is our high interest rates. I trust, therefore, that before the session is concluded the House will see its way clear to make some provision along these lines.

I have said that we are paying too much for the things we must have in order to produce. I would like to see, when the budget comes down, a substantial reduction in the tariff duties. We are not asking the House or the government to take off the duties entirely, but a substantial all-round reduction would, I believe, be one of the best things that could happen to Canada. If there was a little more competition from outside sources we could realize the possibility of getting at a lower price the commodities that we must have in order to live.

A good deal has been said about the conditions in Quebec, which has been held up as a province where everybody is prosperous, particularly the farmer. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) came before the House with his estimates, he gave us a brief outline of his travels during last summer and he held up the province of Quebec, so far as agriculture was concerned, as the banner province of Canada. But we have had quite a number of witnesses from that province who seem to think that agriculture in Quebec is just about as badly off as it is in any other province, and that there is just as much dissatisfaction among the farmers there as there is among the farmers of the West.

We have in the past been spending millions of money to bring people to this country. We have held out to them the possibility of making a livelihood here, but circumstances and conditions which now prevail have placed them in a very precarious financial position. In view of the fact that these people have come here at the invitation of the Canadian government on behalf of the Canadian people, it seems to me that our first duty is to look after those who are already here. When we have made conditions livable for those who are now in Canada, that will be time enough to launch out upon a substantial immigration policy. Let me repeat, the duty of this House and the duty of Canada is to the people who are now here. I am convinced, of course, of the fact that immigration eventually will have to increase before Canada can ever enjoy that measure of prosperity that she should have, but our first duty, it seems to me, is to take cognizance of the conditions that confront us now and find a remedy, if possible, for those conditions. When we have found the proper remedies for the unfortunate condition that we have at the present time, there is no doubt in my mind that Canada will not have to spend very much money to induce people to come to this country. The moment people throughout the world realize that Canada is enjoying a substantial measure of prosperity we shall get all the immigrants we require without spending very much money.

Mr. MURDOCK: I beg to move that vote No. 53 for Immigration and Colonization be reduced by the sum of $50,000.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think perhaps we had better hear the reason for this amendment, and why it is only 10 per cent or less. How do we arrive at the $50,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I made the explanation this afternoon, but perhaps the hon. gentleman was not in the House. The explanation is that we voted a sum to send lecturers to the United States and Great Britain, which was the system pursued in the old days. Now under present conditions there is a very great difficulty in getting these appointments made, and I am therefore asking that the item be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

St. John Immigration buildings, $23,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is the item on which my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) wanted some details.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much was capital, and how much maintenance?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In 1920-1921 the principal paid was $17,609.66, and interest $4,842.65; in 1921-1922 we paid in principal $22,888.65, and interest $7,359.32; for 1922-1923 we are asking for $15,846.74 principal, and interest $6,488.30. Those are the three payments that have been made in connection with the St. John building. The total of principal is $56,345.05, and of interest $18,690.28. In 1921-1922 for repairs and extras, which included some extra stressing of the roof, we paid $6,946.09. For 1922-1923 we are asking for $275.61, making a total in all for repairs and extras of $7,221.70.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My recollection was that there were other operating costs included in the same account. I think the interest item possibly includes caretaking, does it not?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. I think this is where the difficulty arises. There was an item in the estimates for 1921-1922 of $43,000, and the question arises as to what proportion of that had been paid in that particular year. The vote in 1922-1923 is $25,000; is 1921-1922 $43,000, and in 1920-1921 $9,000. My hon. friend will notice that while there was only $9,000 voted in that year there was paid out $22,452.31, so that there was paid out of contingencies for that year the sum of $13,647.49.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is the caretaking, for example, carried?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In another item altogether.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The item for contingencies.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is where the trouble was. Last time we were told it was in this item.

Item agreed to.

Interior—salaries, $1,502,982; contingencies, $115,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I notice there are some rearrangements. Perhaps the minister could tell us what changes have been made. For example, he has a financial controller this year that he did not have before, and some other positions are apparently done away with.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This item was not the one I wanted called.

Item stands.

Immigration and Colonization—salaries, $272,325; contingencies, $60,000; total, $332,325.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister give us the details of the changes in this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I may say that there is provision here for sixteen new appointments. Ten of them have not been made and, probably, unless heavy immigration takes place we will not need to make them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had that information before.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, the following items are of interest: statutory increases $6,445; transferred from immigration to outside service salaries vote, $6,760; provision for promotions and increases due to reclassification $2,565; transferred from immigration outside service to the inside service $16,125, the total amounts to $32,160. There are a number of vacancies due to resignation or transfer, and the net increase is $28,790.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You spoke of transfers from the outside to the inside service How many employees were there?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Sixteen employees altogether. The positions filled are—Miss M. Purdy, Sr. clerk-stenographer, $1,320; Miss L. M. O'Connor, Sr. clerk-stenographer, $1,320; P. A. Casey, clerk, $1,005; Miss M. G. McFarlane, file clerk, $960; Miss J. Byers, file clerk, $960 Miss E. Morgan, Jr., clerk-stenographer, $600. The positions unfilled include, Inspector of British Immigrant children (female), $1,320; Inspector of British Immigrant children (male), $1,320. The rest are clerk-stenographers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the cost of the service last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The amount voted last year was $243,535 and the actual expenditure $206,282.08.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So that the minister is asking this year for an increase over his actual cost last year of some $65,000. I suppose that has been done on the supposition that his department is going to do a little functioning this year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It will be noticed that out of the sixteen positions six have been filled. If the others are not required they will not be filled.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is quite obvious that my hon. friend has a list there but it does not mean that the people referred to were employed or that the money for their salaries was paid. I make it out that my hon. friend is asking for $65,000 over his expenditure of last year. Am I wrong in that supposition? If so I hope my hon. friend will correct me.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Quite right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose that is because the minister expects to get going this year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If we do employ the number that is set forth here we will require the vote; if we do not need them we will certainly not employ them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is quite obvious that the number of new appointees is really not illustrative of the situation. The comparatively few employees would never make up that $65,000 increase. I notice there is a new official now, "Director of Publicity"?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is Mr. Stead.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was his former position?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I understand Mr. Stead was paid from the outside service last year, as well as Mr. James, his assistant.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Stead was in the outside service and is now included under Civil Government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And the same with the Assistant Director of Publicity?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I notice from what the minister said the last time this matter was up that there is still a further discrepancy in the amount, in that he transferred nine out of this total to Chinese Immigration. They would no longer appear in this vote. Is this correct?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend is not just correct in his statement. They were transferred as well from the outside service into the Chinese service. They were paid while working in the Chinese service from the outside service, so that they were not transferred from this staff. This is the inside service staff.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They were transferred from the outside.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions—further amount required—(Governor General's warrant January 30th, 1923), $12,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is item 400 in the supplementaries. This is a warrant that was taken for the expenses of Colonel Belcher, who travelled from Vancouver to Halifax, speaking in various towns and cities on his way, interesting people in the various provinces in the British Empire Exhibition which will be held in 1924.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the assistance the government gave to the exhibition.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Advances to soldiers settling upon the land and cost of administering the Soldier Settlement Act, including salaries, $8,400,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is an item of considerable importance, and I think the House would like to have full details in connection with the status of the undertaking, how many applications we still have, how many are still open, and generally the position of the undertaking. I expect there will be some discussion on this item. I do not know whether we will advance it much by taking it up at five minutes to eleven.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I might make the explanation and if there were any questions asked—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The only point about that is that if a statement is made and the matter is not proceeded with, it will all have to be gone over again. I do not think anything will be gained by it. If there are some small non-contentious items they might be put through.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do you wish to sit any later?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

COMMUNICATION FROM VANCOUVER BOARD OF TRADE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the House adjourns I will lay on the Table some papers I promised this afternoon relating to a communication from the Vancouver Board of Trade.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King, the House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Tuesday, April 17, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED

Annual Report of the Trade of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1922.—Mr. Robb.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. CLARK

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) for the second reading of Bill No. 23 respecting a certain convention of commerce between His Majesty and the President of the French republic:

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On Wednesday last I spoke to the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) with regard to the resolution that has stood in my name on the order paper since the 15th February, and discussed with him the possibility of bringing that resolution forward by amendment to a motion to go into supply. I spoke to him in order to meet his convenience and that I might give some members on his side of the House two or three days' notice of my intention to move such amendment. The minister advised me that he would see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). On the following day—that is, last Thursday—I wrote the minister the following note:

Have you discussed with the Prime Minister a suitable day for me to move my resolution on a motion to go into Committee of Supply? Could you agree to next Tuesday?

His reply, endorsed on my note, is in these words:

The government has no objections to your bringing it up on Tuesday next.

Thereupon I advised members in accordance with my undertaking that my understanding was this resolution would have right of way to-day. On Friday I noticed it was stated that the French treaty would probably be taken up to-day, but it was certainly my understanding and the understanding of the other members whom I advised that nothing would come on prior to a motion to go into supply which would prevent my moving an amendment to such motion.

I allowed my resolution to stand on various occasions at the request of the government before the date that government business was given precedence over private members' resolutions, and did so on the faith of undertakings given me by the government that a day would be found for the discussion of the resolution; but each time I have had an opportunity to bring it forward something has intervened to make it impossible for me to proceed. To-day of course it may be said that I can go on after the French treaty is disposed of, but obviously the whole day will probably be taken up with this particular business—my information is to that effect—and consequently consideration of my resolution is again postponed and the convenience of members on both sides is interfered with. I certainly feel that I am entitled to a statement from the government that either a day will be set aside for the discussion of my resolution as a private member's resolution or that on a given date an amendment to a motion to go into supply nothing will be allowed to intervene in the nature of government business.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: I do not know what happened in regard to the motion of my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, but so far as the French treaty being set down for to-day is concerned, there can be no misunderstanding. Several questions were asked as to the time when it would be brought forward, and a few evenings ago it was definitely stated that in all probability this treaty would be brought up on Tuesday, and last night it was more precisely stated, so there can be no misunderstanding with regard to the time. If there has been any misunderstanding on the part of my hon. friend with regard to his motion I am very sorry, but it is not within my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has stated the case exactly except for the inference he drew that nothing was to intervene on a motion to go into supply. I received a note from him asking if he could go on with his resolution on Tuesday. After consulting with the Prime Minister I informed him that the government had no objection to his bringing it up to-day. As a matter of fact there has been no attempt to shut off his resolution at all. But we ought to do everything possible for the convenience of the House generally. I am of opinion we will have plenty of opportunity to take up my hon. friend's resolution after the French treaty is disposed of. I certainly want to carry out any arrangement made with my hon. friend, for I would not wish him to think that I am attempting to sidetrack him in any way.

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, an undertaking that this resolution may be gone on with on motion to go into Committee of Supply involves that the government will not put any other motion in between or it involves nothing, because the member has the right to move his amendment on going into Committee on Supply without any concession at all from the government. Now, in view of the fact that he did so understand for to-day, and I think rightly so after the answer given by the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) by note to him, it seems to me the government should undertake that next Monday or Tuesday there will be no government business put ahead of supply in order that the hon. member may go on on an amendment to supply. I do not think there is any chance at all of his getting time for his resolution to-day after this French treaty resolution has been debated.

Mr. FIELDING: Rather than there should be the least misunderstanding in the matter I will withdraw the motion for the second reading of the French treaty and let my hon. friend go on. I will move immediately that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister shall have leave to withdraw his motion? Carried.

Motion withdrawn.

EQUALIZATION OF RAILWAY RATES

On the motion of Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Supply:

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Burrard): Mr. Speaker, the amendment I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) is as follows:

That in the opinion of this House all unfair and unjust discrimination against British Columbia as exemplified in the "Mountain Scale" of freight rates should be rescinded, and the special reduction made by the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates on the basic production of the prairie provinces be extended to the basic productions of all other provinces of confederation.

In presenting this resolution—

Mr. SPEAKER: When the hon. member a few days ago moved a similar resolution, I felt that under British parliamentary practice matters sub judice could not be brought before the House. The question was discussed by several hon. members on both sides after the hon. gentleman had agreed to postpone the consideration of his resolution. Many representations were made to me as Speaker from both points of view—that the subject matter of the hon. member's resolution should be considered as a question sub judice, and, on the other hand, that it should not be so considered. I invited the opinion of some of the oldest members of the House. I invited the opinion of the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), and of the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton). I asked for the opinion of the present Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, Hon. Mr. Carvell, and I also had the benefit of the views of two or three of the most experienced members of the House—because it is paramount to determine whether the Privy Council of Canada should be considered as a tribunal. The question has impressed me as sufficiently important to justify a formal ruling, which I give as follows:

On the motion that I do now leave the chair for the House to resolve itself into Committee of Supply, Mr. Clark (Burrard) moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Tolmie (Victoria):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out, and the following words be inserted instead thereof:—

"In the opinion of this House all unfair and unjust discrimination against British Columbia as exemplified in the 'mountain scale' of freight rates should be rescinded, and the special reduction made by the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates on the basic production of the prairie provinces, be extended to the basic productions of all other provinces of confederation."

This question is now before the Governor in Council on an appeal from a decision of the Railway Board which established, by a General Order bearing No. 366, dated 30th of June, 1922, certain scales of rates known as the "mountain scale," in British Columbia, on a higher basis than that charged for the same class of goods moving between points in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, known as the "prairie scale."

By petition dated the 1st of December, 1922, the Attorney General of British Columbia appealed from the said order to the Governor General in Council, praying that the same rates be charged on goods of like character from and to all points in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario as far east as Port Arthur.

The question was partially heard by the Governor in Council on the 3rd of February last, and it was announced that further hearing was postponed until after the prorogation of the present session of parliament.

My attention has been drawn to the circumstance that whilst this appeal is pending the question must be considered sub judice and therefore should not be debated in the House. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, No. 234, says:

Besides the prohibitions contained in this rule (our rule 19) it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:

"(c) refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending."

May, page 296, says:

Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate.

The precedents cited by May cover instances where individual rights are concerned and relate chiefly to election petitions. I have very fully scrutinized those cases. The point at issue may be briefly stated in the following proposition: Is the Governor in Council, in the exercise of his powers to review the decisions of the Railway Board, vested with a judicial rather than an administrative or executive function?

In the interpretation of the functions of the Governor in Council, one must bear in mind the provisions of the British North America Act, section 9 of which reads as follows:

"The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to be vested in the Queen."

Section 11:

"There shall be a Council to aid and advise in the government of Canada to be styled the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

Section 13:

"The provisions of this act referring to the Governor General in Council shall be construed as referring to the Governor General acting by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

There seems to be no doubt from the above citations that the Privy Council of Canada is vested with executive powers only and has no judicial authority whatever. We must realize that the Canadian government has no other powers than those conferred directly or indirectly by that Imperial statute called the British North America Act.

In England, there is a Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but there is no similar institution in Canada. Prior to the year 1903, the Privy Council of Canada had full control over all matters now dealt with by the Railway Board. Section 8 of the Railway Act, 1903, which created the board, says:

1. The railway committee of the Privy Council is hereby abolished, and, in lieu thereof, there shall be a commission, to be known as the board of railway commissioners for Canada, etc.

2. Whenever by an act or document the railway committee of the Privy Council is given any power or authority, or any duty is cast upon it, in regard to any company, railway, matter or thing, the power or authority so given, or the duty so cast upon the said committee, may or shall, as the case may be, be exercised by the board.

These provisions have been carried into sections 9 and 32 of the Railway Act, 1919.

The board itself is a court of record under section 9 of the act, but it has disposed of the case of the freight rates which is now out of its purview and engaging the attention of the Governor in Council.

The Privy Council has specifically reserved to itself the power to revise the board's decisions as to questions of facts. Subsection 2 of section 44 of the Railway Act of 1903, which is now subsection 1 of section 52 of the Railway Act 1919, reads as follows:

The Governor in Council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the board, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application, and any order which the Governor in Council may make with respect thereto shall be binding upon the board and upon all parties.

Subsections 2 and 3 of section 52 provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of law or jurisdiction.

It is therefore evident that the powers of the Governor in Council have not been abridged as to questions of facts, and they remained exactly the same after as before the creation of the Railway Board. They are simply administrative or executive as heretofore, just as if the Railway Act had never been passed.

The Ministers of the Crown are seized with the appeal for the purpose of advising His Excellency thereon. Their advice may be rejected and is not in the nature of a final judgment. Todd says, in Parliamentary Government in the British Colonies, p. 40:

In the ordinary exercise of his constitutional discretion the Governor is unquestionably competent to reject the advice of his ministers whenever that advice should seem to him to be adverse to the public welfare, or of an injurious tendency.

The question as it now stands before the cabinet, is not, in my humble judgment, sub judice as this legal term implies. It is being considered by the government under administrative powers which the Governor in Council did not delegate or alienate when the Railway Board was created. The fact that the cabinet hears counsel representing both sides of the issue does not constitute it a tribunal. The ministers are at liberty to take all the information required before arriving at a decision upon which they will base the advice to be tendered to His Excellency the Governor General. They may be guided by considerations of public policy quite foreign to the brief. Their decisions which take the form of orders in council and are signed by His Excellency, when accepted, are not, properly speaking, judgments, the ministers' functions in this regard cannot therefore be said to be in any way judicial. They are purely administrative.

One of the traditional rights of parliament is its expressive power. Any grievance, any complaint, any notion can be aired in parliament. It would be a breach against the ancient privilege of the freedom of speech, so essential to every legislature, for the Speaker to prevent a debate on a matter because it is being considered by the Governor in Council, and particularly in the present case, the hearing of which is being postponed on account of the session and will only be resumed after prorogation.

Todd, Parliamentary Government in England, Vol. 1, page 414, says:

Freedom of speech in parliament is an essential part of the liberties of Englishmen. This privilege was guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, and it includes a license to discuss all matters affecting the public welfare, whether the same have been commended by the Crown to the consideration of parliament or not. From the time of Edward III to our own day, parliament has freely exercised the right of tending advice to the sovereign, unasked, upon matters the final determination of which appertained to the sovereign alone. . . . The two Houses of Parliament collectively represent the whole community, and are the Great Council of the nation, while ministers are merely the council of the prince. They are, therefore, entitled to approach the sovereign with advice or remonstrance upon all affairs of state, and in regard to every grievance under which any subjects of the realm may be suffering.

I have given this point of order a great deal of attention. I have weighed the views expressed on both sides with care and concern. If there should be a doubt lingering in my mind—but there is none—I would give the benefit of that doubt in favour of the broad principle of the supremacy of parliament in all matters of public policy.

I have come to the conclusion that the motion of the hon. member (Mr. Clark) is in order, and I rule that debate thereon is allowed.

Mr. CLARK: In my presentation of this resolution I hope to be able to show to the House that so far as British Columbia is concerned we are not seeking any sectional advantage, but rather the removal of a sectional disadvantage from which the province of British Columbia has suffered since confederation. I also hope to be able to show that by the elimination of this sectional disadvantage the general trade of the country will be stimulated, and that immigration which we so much need will be thereby encouraged, and made posible by reason of the fact that settlers will be able to market their produce at reasonable rates, and be able also to purchase their necessities at reasonable rates.

I also desire to make it quite clear that my aim is to effect this correction by constitutional means, relying upon the fairness of the people and of this House, rather than upon threats that British Columbia will withdraw from confederation.

I also want to make it quite clear that I am not animated by any spirit of unfriendliness towards the Canadian Pacific Railway. I feel that we are fighting for a principle, and that we differ in principle from the Canadian Pacific Railway. I lay no blame upon them for fighting for their principles, but we propose in so far as it is in our power, to bring home to the people of this country that we have been suffering from a sectional disadvantage, the removal of which is in the interests of the whole of Canada, and which the interests of British Columbia absolutely demand if that province is to go forward and succeed.

It may be said that it is a strange thing for a member of this party to move a resolution dealing with freight rates after the stand that we have taken with regard to keeping our railways out of politics, and having regard to the fact that there is a judicial body seized with the power of dealing with the question of freight rates.

At the last session of parliament the government dealt with freight rates. At the outset I want to say and I say it with all frankness that if the government is prepared to withdraw that legislation I am prepared to withdraw my motion. In other words, I am prepared to go before the Board of Railway Commissioners and argue this case if the board is left free and unhampered by this House. But my point is this: At the last session of parliament this House undertook to fix the freight rates on two specific commodities namely, grain and flour, for three specific provinces. This House has gone into the rate-making business. The result of that legislation was to accentuate the discrimination which already existed against British Columbia. We were already suffering from discrimination by reason of the mountain scale, and the reduction of the rates on these two basic commodities merely served to accentuate that discrimination.

It may be of interest to know that British Columbia is supported in the stand it has taken by no less authority than Sir Henry Thornton who, speaking before the Board of Trade of Vancouver on January 18, of this year, said in regard to freight rates:

> If I were in your position I would adopt the same attitude as you have adopted and advance the same arguments. It does seem to me that whatever rates are to be applied on the transportation of grain from the prairies to the West should be based upon sound economic and scientific principles.

And he went on to say that the agreement known as the Crowsnest pass agreement did not embody, in fact, any sound economic or scientific principle, but was merely a matter of expediency based upon the situation which existed in 1897. He characterized that agreement as "a horse-trading proposition between the Dominion government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company."

For the purpose of rate making Canada is divided into three divisions—the East, the prairie, and the Pacific. The East embraces all of Canada as far west as Fort William; the prairie, the country from Fort William to the mountains; and the Pacific that portion of Canada west of the mountains. The eastern rates are the lowest; the prairie rates are the next lowest; the mountain rates are the highest. The eastern rates are the lowest because of the factor that enters into rate making in that portion of Canada, namely water competition. For the principles of rate making I refer to the judgment of the Board of Railway Commisioners of June 30, 1922, the last decision. In that judgment the board says it found "that in the main the rate structure of eastern Canada was justified on the basis of water and rail competition." These are the words of the Commissioners. Now then just what is the exact position of British Columbia in regard to rates? That also I will give you from the board's last judgment. These are the words of the Commissioners:

> Under the western rate case—
> Which was in 1914—
> —a basis of one and a half for one was adopted on the Pacific standard tariff.

That meant that one and a half miles on the prairie would equal one mile in British Columbia. In other words, for the same money you could haul the same commodity on the prairies three hundred miles and in British Columbia only two hundred miles. That was the situation. The judgment of the board last June corrected that to some extent in these words:

> The rates on the new "Pacific" standard mileage tariff are to be constructed by applying to the "Prairie" standard tariff, 1½ miles for one mile.

In other words we can to-day haul a commodity in British Columbia one hundred and fifty miles as against two hundred miles on the prairie for the same rate. That is the situation to-day, and that is the discrimination of which we complain—a discrimination that we say is unfair and unjust and should be eliminated.

I do not propose to quote figures giving the details of rates for the very good reason that I would be wasting the time of the House by so doing. I could quote rates which would show this discrimination, but nothing can be clearer than the general principle laid down in that judgment. I do not think it needs elaboration but I will say this: I could give you illustrations—and I have no doubt that members of this House in reply to me will use illustrations to the effect—that British Columbia has rates from Vancouver, and other coastal points, to the far East—and when I say "the far East" I mean Montreal and Toronto—a distance of 2,800 miles which are very favourable, which are more favourable than rates on similar products from the Maritime provinces for an equal distance. For instance, I can quote you rates on canned goods and fish from Vancouver to Toronto which are less than the rates from the Maritime provinces upon the same products for an equal distance which appear favourable to us. The fact remains, however, that it costs us more money to ship those very commodities on which the rates would appear so favourable from Vancouver to Winnipeg than from Vancouver to Toronto or Montreal—it also costs us as much, or more, to ship those commodities from Vancouver to Calgary as it costs us to ship them from Vancouver to Montreal. That is what we say is not scientific. That is what we say is preventing us from getting into those provinces which are our markets, namely Alberta and Saskatchewan. We have in Vancouver to-day six or seven hundred manufacturers who are clamouring for a market. Their only market is an export market; we are unable to get into the prairie market of Alberta and Saskatchewan by reason of that mountain scale, of that discrimination which exists against us. And yet the Canadian Pacific Railway Company tells us that we are being treated fairly; not only that but that other parts of Canada are being discriminated against by reason of the favourable rates given to us.

Another instance of that might be given in the case of rice. We can ship rice to Toronto cheaper than we can ship it to Winnipeg or prairie points. The reason for that is to enable the rice mills to meet the competition from New Orleans. All these things, I maintain, have no application to the general principle defined in the judgment referred to. That one and a quarter miles on the prairie is the same as one mile in British Columbia is the thing we complain of.

Mr. Carvell, Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, in a recent letter to the Associated Boards of British Columbia points out—and he also points it out in this judgment—that from 80 to 85 per cent of British Columbia traffic was carried at commodity rates. and that in the movement of the staples of British Columbia at commodity rates, the effect of the mountain scale is not apparent in many cases. I have given the House some illustrations of where, on some of our basic commodities, this discrimination is not apparent, but in every instance that discrimination is not apparent where the shipment extends over a long distance, it becomes apparent the very moment you examine shipments of our commodities into the prairie provinces where we want a market, and where we insist that we are entitled to a market, if trade is to flow in its proper and natural channel. I wish to quote from that letter which I referred to and I may say that it is difficult for me really to bring up such a letter in the House, because I am absolutely opposed to the principle of criticizing the members of any judicial body, but I think it is only fair to our province that I should quote from this letter, because it has been published broadcast throughout the country. In this letter Mr. Carvell says:

> Mr. Oliver fails to realize that in the class rate schedule for all points from the coast, east of the boundary, 134 miles are eliminated from the actual mileage across the mountain, and if these are counted it would then bring the class rates practically down to the prairie level.

I point out that is true so far as it goes, but he does not mention that the same condition exists between Fort William and Winnipeg, and has existed for many years, and that it has nothing to do with this question whatsoever. It is based on an entirely different principle, and does not deal with and has no relation to this question of discrimination. The letter continues:

> As I view it, the whole question is one of whether the coast wholesaler who can bring his goods in by water will be able to send them further east and thus displace the business which has heretofore been done via Winnipeg.

I do not know what he means by that, unless he stands on the principle that he is not going to see anything done which will interfere with the flow of trade to Winnipeg and the business now handled by the wholesaler of Winnipeg. That is an extraordinary principle on which to make rates, if that is the principle. Then he says:

> So far as the present programme of the province of British Columbia is concerned in freight rates, it is much more political than real.

That statement I object to most emphatically, because, irrespective of party in British Columbia, the whole public—100 per cent—stands for the removal of this discrimination, and we have fought as hard as we know how, ever since the board was constituted to remove that discrimination. We fought before that board in 1906, again in 1910, again in 1914, we have been fighting since 1920 till to-day, and we are still fighting before the Privy Council and this House for the removal of the discrimination.

The first contention of the province of British Columbia is that by the terms of union Canada undertook to build a railway, the Canadian Pacific railway, and there was nothing in that agreement upon which British Columbia came into confederation which would indicate that there was going to be any discrimination in rates over that road. I would refer members of this House to the original negotiations between Earl Granville and Governor Musgrave, in which it was stated:

> That the establishment of a British line of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans is far more feasible by the operation of a single government responsible for the progress of both shores of the continent than by a bargain negotiated between separate, perhaps in some respects, rival governments and legislatures.

And the extracts from the terms of the union itself reads as follows:

> Whereas the construction of a line of railway through British territory across the continent of North America, which, in conjunction with existing railways would afford uninterrupted railway communication between the Atlantic and Pacific seaports of the Dominion of Canada is a work of vast importance, not only to the political and commercial interests of Canada, as tending to the closer union of its several provinces, but also to the British Empire at large, as affording rapid and direct communication through British territory, Australian and Asiatic possessions and opening up for colonization an almost unlimited extent of fertile country.

Hon. members should note that this was for the closer union of the provinces. I ask you, do you expect closer union with British Columbia if you discriminate against that province? I also draw your attention to the fact that it is an Imperial project. Are we in British Columbia to pay additional rates by reason of the fact that this project was Imperial in its nature and for the closer union of the provinces of confederation? I merely draw attention to these terms. I think, perhaps, others will elaborate the point, but I draw attention to it for this specific reason: the Board of Railway Commissioners in their judgment of June 30, 1922, refused to consider that argument. They said that—

> In the present application, various additional contentions were advanced. Emphasis was laid upon the implications alleged to arise from the steps culminating in confederation.

They say that this case is analogous to a case of Attorney General for British Columbia vs. C.P.R. in which it was held that under the terms of the contract with the Dominion government for the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway dated October 21, 1880, the only party who could make any complaint as to the non-observance of the terms of union was the government of Canada. I present that argument because the Board of Railway Commissioners have refused to consider it, and here I have an opportunity of presenting it to the government of Canada for its consideration.

Mr. CARROLL: Do I understand the hon. member now to be criticizing the judgment of the railway commissioners?

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend can draw his own inference.

Mr. CARROLL: Does he know an appeal has been taken to the Privy Council on that question?

Mr. CLARK: The judgment of the Speaker indicated that I did.

Mr. CARROLL: Would the hon. member suggest that it would be a fair proposition in this House that the Privy Council should vote on this question before they have taken the whole evidence into consideration.

Mr. CLARK: The Privy Council can take care of itself, I have no doubt.

Mr. CARROLL: Does my hon. friend think it is fair to ask the Privy Council to vote on this question before they have concluded their judgment on the appeal?

Mr. CLARK: I am not advising the Privy Council. I am submitting the case for the consideration of the House.

Mr. SHAW: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member in his argument, but before he leaves that point, will he indicate whether or not the particular subject matter of his argument to date was under consideration by the Board of Railway Commissioners, I think in the year 1908, and if so would he be good enough to indicate to us the judgment of the board at that time?

Mr. CLARK: 1908?

Mr. SHAW: I think the case was brought by the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Mr. CLARK: I do not think I followed my hon. friend.

Mr. SHAW: I wanted to ask, simply for information, if the argument he has thus far addressed to the House with regard to the constitutional question was not involved in the question before the railway commission in 1908, and I think, if my recollection is right, the railway commission of that date refused to entertain the question.

Mr. CLARK: I cannot definitely answer that question, because according to the dates which I have, the applications were made in 1906, 1910, 1914, and the last two years. What I think, however, is that if the Board of Railway Commissioners had listened to that argument in 1908, they certainly would have listened to it last year, because it would have been considered a precedent. So I assume, because it appeared in the judgment of last year, that they did not consider it then, that they did not consider it even if advanced in 1908 or any later year.

The next point I wish to advance is regarding the guarantee given by the province of British Columbia upon bonds of the Canadian Northern through that province. In 1911, Sir Richard McBride, then premier of British Columbia, appealed to the electors of that province for endorsation of his railway policy. He asked that the government be authorized to guarantee the bonds of that railway company up to $35,000 per mile, and he was returned to power on that plea. Let me read this brief statement of Sir Richard McBride's, just one sentence, indicating the lines on which that election was fought:

> We believe that through the introduction of the Canadian Northern railway into this province with the control of freight and passenger rates in the hands of the government, there will be such an adjustment of railway freight and passenger rates throughout the province generally that it will place travel within the reach of the financial ability of the whole Canadian people.

The agreement between British Columbia and the Canadian Northern railway, which agreement was consummated after that election, gave control to freight rates to the Lieutenant Governor in Council of that province. In other words the control of rates within that province on that particular line was not in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and for that privilege British Columbia guaranteed those bonds to the extent of $35,000 a mile. That was the consideration we got for that guarantee—the right of making rates and the right of counteracting this discrimination about which we have been complaining ever since the Canadian Pacific railway was built. We lost out even on that, because in 1914 this House passed an act which declared the Canadian Northern railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. That immediately cancelled the main consideration which we got, and which we were relying upon for our guarantee, and it gave to the Board of Railway Commissioners the right to make rates upon that railway. It has often been stated that British Columbia has been relieved from the guarantee of those bonds. Not at all. We are liable to-day upon those bonds just as we were when we gave the guarantee. Further, let this be noted that if British Columbia under its guarantee had been bound to take over the Canadian Northern railway in British Columbia, that would not have perturbed us. It might have caused us some temporary embarrassment; but there we have the most wonderful piece of mountain railway construction in North America, and possibly through any mountainous country in the world. I have no hesitation in suggesting that if the Canadian Pacific at any time since 1914 had had opportunity of taking over that piece of the Canadian Northern railway, between Edmonton and Vancouver, they would have jumped at the opportunity, especially of taking it over at the full value of those bonds. It would have been for them the cheapest investment in the world, and furthermore it would have disrupted and destroyed absolutely our Canadian National railways, because this is the most vital and important part of that line to-day. In that connection, I should like to point out two or three facts of interest as regards the grades of that railway. This is a comparison between that portion of the Canadian National railway, that I have been speaking of, and six or seven other transcontinental railways. The Canadian National railway crossing British Columbia has a maximum grade of .7 per cent, but that is only for about twenty-eight miles. Practically throughout its length the maximum grade is ·4 per cent. The comparison is as follows:

Railway	Maximum grade Per cent	Maximum elevation Feet
Canadian Northern..	.7	3,706
Canadian Pacific..	2.2	5,321
Northern Pacific..	1.6	5,500
Union Pacific..	1.8	8,200
Great Northern..	2	5,202
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul..	2.5	6,322
Sante Fe..	2.6	7,421

The situation is most remarkable. We have there a railway which, with one engine can haul fifty loaded cars of grain from Edmonton to Vancouver throughout the length of that road, whereas these other roads have difficulty in hauling twenty-two loaded cars over their mountain grades, and in so doing the roads are obliged in many instances to use two engines, whereas on the Canadian National railway one will do for the whole route. So there is the road on which British Columbia has lost the right to fix rates by reason of the action of parliament. In view of what this House has done in the past, I think it is perfectly fair that immediate action should be taken to restore that agreement—if the Crowsnest pass agreement should be restored—or any part thereof. The latter agreement was made between the Dominion government and the railway company. Why should not an agreement such as I have described be restored, an agreement to which the Dominion government was not a party, but yet undertook to interfere with and thus take away from the province of British Columbia rights which existed thereunder and for which we paid in guaranties to the extent of $35,000 per mile?

Now, the stock arguments which are advanced against the removal of this discrimination are—cost of construction, cost of operation, density of traffic. I want to face every one of these arguments squarely. As to cost of construction, I would refer the House to Volume 12 of the report of the special committee on rates of last session, in which at page 475 the evidence of Mr. Lanigan will be found to the effect that the original cost of construction of the Canadian Pacific railway has long since been lost and is no longer a factor in rate-making. I would also refer to the fact that the Canadian Pacific railway was not built through British Columbia entirely at the expense of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. There is a very considerable portion of this line, namely, that between Emery Junction and Boston Bar on the North Thompson which was built at the cost of the treasury of Canada and handed over complete to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Why should we pay any extra rates because of the cost of construction? I would also refer hon. members to the evidence of the Hon. Mr. Oliver, the Premier of British Columbia, on the same point. At page 170 of Volume 6 he says:

> I want to deal with another phase of this matter: British Columbia was the only province from which a huge land subsidy was exacted in aid of the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. That land subsidy given by British Columbia in connection with the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway amounted to approximately 12,000,000 acres. I want to submit to this committee the view that if there is any merit at all in the plea of the cost of construction, that has been entirely offset so far as British Columbia is concerned by the huge land grant which was given in aid of the construction of that road. That land grant was a strip of land 40 miles wide through the entire width of British Columbia, and any deficiencies were made up out of the prairie lands of the Peace River district of British Columbia,—3,500,000 acres.

I also draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the cost of construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway from Winnipeg to Moncton was approximately $100,000 per mile. The cost of construction of the Canadian National railway through British Columbia was approximately $65,000 per mile, or considerably less. Yet we do not find any discrimination against the people who live along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific between Winnipeg and Moncton. Their rates are the same as the rates on the other roads in those provinces. I would also direct attention to the fact that there is no special discrimination against localities by reason of the expense of construction of the Quebec bridge or the $9,000,000 Montreal tunnel. These great expenditures are not considered, and I agree entirely with Mr. Lanigan that the cost of construction has nothing to do with the fixing of freight rates.

Now, with regard to the cost of operation, I would point this out to those who suggest that any definite figures can be given as to excessive cost of operation on the Canadian Pacific railway through the mountains, that since 1914 operating costs and operating revenues have been kept by divisions of lines east and lines west, and therefore it is impossible to analyze and determine the relative cost in any particular province. In other words, it is impossible for the railways to meet the onus which is placed upon them by the Railway Act to show that any special discrimination against a particular locality is not undue or unjust. In any case it is admitted by the same Mr. Lanigan, the general traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the cost of operation is no longer a basic factor in the making of freight rates. As to this I refer the House to the report of the committee on Railway Transportation Costs of last year. At page 573 the following examination of Mr. Lanigan by Mr. McMurray is found:

Q. Mr. McGeer during his evidence this morning said that rates had nothing to do with the operating costs on the prairie. I gathered that was a statement made by the Board of Railway Commissioners at some time or other. Do you agree with that statement?

A. I think there are three things that make rates, and those are what Mr. George Olds, a very old traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific railway, used to call the "Three C's": Conditions, circumstances and competition.

Nothing much to do with the cost of operation.

You cannot segregate the cost of carrying a certain class of traffic for one year as compared with the cost another year and build up any kind of a tariff under which these people are interested.

Q. I was not asking you for the argument, but whether you agreed with that statement?

A. I do not agree with that statement. That is, that the rates are built on the cost?

Q. No, that the rates are not built on the costs on the prairies?—A. They are not and cannot be built on the costs. The whole rate system has to furnish a certain amount of revenue to meet the cost of operation.

Q. Are they furnished on the costs in British Columbia?—A. No.

Thus we have the admission of the very man chiefly concerned with rates on the Canadian Pacific railway that rates are not built on the cost of operation.

Now, I think I can show this House that the basic factor in fixing freight rates in this country is the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am forced to that conclusion by the judgment delivered by the Board of Railway Commissioners on June 30, 1922. We have in that judgment a statement filed by Mr. Lanigan of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with respect to basic commodities. It was stated in the judgment:

At a hearing of the special committee on the 20th day of June instant, Mr. Lanigan, freight traffic manager for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, filed a statement showing what would be the reduction in the revenues of that company if the offer above referred to had been accepted.

It will be recalled that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company offered certain rate reductions and showed what they would mean in the way of loss of revenue. Then followed the statement filed by Mr. Lanigan showing what that loss of revenue would be. I shall not give the details, but the total, including international and interstate traffic, is $10,558,469. Now, the board goes on to say:

This showed a total, not including reductions on international traffic, of $8,338,469, and, of this amount $5,354,139 was the estimated reduction on grain. Taking this from the total reduction leaves a balance of $2,984,330 to be distributed among the other commodities. By the legislation hereinbefore referred to granting the Crowsnest pass rates on grain as therein provided, according to the evidence of Mr. Beatty as recorded on page 46 of the reports of the special committee, assuming the grain traffic of the Canadian Pacific railway to be the same as in 1921, the adoption of the Crowsnest rates would reduce their revenue by $7,159,537, which, taken from the sum of $8,338,469 would leave $1,178,932 is still available for reduction in rates on the above list of basic commodities, and the board, after very careful investigation, has concluded that this would be represented by a reduction of 7½ per cent on the rates now in existence on those basic commodities, less than the increases authorized by general order No. 308, not, however, including therein any reductions heretofore made upon any of the said commodities upon domestic rates in Canada.

Then they go on to say:

The Canadian Pacific railway figures are given above, as this company is taken as the standard in rate discussions.

What can be clearer than that the rates today prevailing are fixed on the basis of the revenue of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not on the basis of operating costs? I leave it to hon. members to draw their own inferences as to whether or not that is a sound method of fixing railway rates. I am drawing attention to it with a view to proving conclusively that the basic factor in rate making is not the cost of operation, but, as I have pointed out, the revenues of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, we come back to the operating costs of the Canadian National Railways. It is admitted—in fact, prominent officials of the Canadian National Railways have boasted that operating costs on their line through British Columbia are no greater than those in any other part of Canada. In that connection also I wish to refer to one brief sentence of Sir Henry Thornton's evidence before the Senate committee on the fuel supply of Canada, given on the 21st of March of this year. This appears to me to be very important as bearing upon a comparison of the cost of operation on the prairies and in British Columbia, or in British Columbia and in eastern Canada. He says:

I can move coal much cheaper in the month of May in the West than I can in the month of February, because on account of the cold weather, the snow, our train-load is cut in half. It costs, I should think, easily twice as much to move a ton of freight in the western country in winter time as it does in the spring or summer.

I would draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the climate of British Columbia is much more temperate than that of any other part of Canada. No part of that country, or at least very small portions of it, are subject to the extreme climatic conditions that prevail in the prairies and in central and eastern Canada. Therefore, according to Sir Henry Thornton's reasoning, the cost of operation in British Columbia should be about half the cost on the prairies over a great portion of the year.

Another factor which might be taken into consideration is the question of the earnings of these roads—western earnings and eastern earnings. I would refer the House on this question to volume 14 of the report of that special committee, page 554, where certain statements are filed in the evidence of Mr. McGeer, who was counsel for British Columbia in connection with this matter. In those statements he showed that the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia up to 1913-14 were very much greater than its earnings in eastern Canada. I will not trouble the House with the details, but the evidence is there and can be seen. I would point out also that at present this situation as between the East and the West, we can only compare the earnings of the railway companies on lines west of Fort William with those on lines east of Fort William. The accounts of the railways show that the net earnings per mile of line and per train mile are higher on these western lines than they are in the east. For instance, in 1920 the net earnings of lines east were $10,723,868 as compared with $28,311,645 on lines west. In other words, the net earnings per mile of line on lines east were $2,221 and on lines west $3,466, the earnings per train mile being 46 cents on lines east and $1.19 on lines west. So that the question of earnings does not operate against us in the fixing of rates.

Then we come to the question of the density of traffic, the other argument advanced against us. I ask hon. members to compare the density of traffic on lines through British Columbia with the density of traffic on lines from Winnipeg to Moncton. There is not a shadow of a doubt that the density of traffic on lines in British Columbia is infinitely greater than that on lines between Winnipeg and Moncton yet there is no discrimination against the people in this latter section. Now is there any discrimination against the people living between Fort William and Sudbury on the Canadian Pacific Railway, where the same condition exists. Furthermore, I would point out that the traffic in British Columbia is growing day by day; it is infinitely greater now than it was a few years ago. There are 700 manufacturers in Vancouver awaiting an opportunity to ship their goods into the prairies, and they will take advantage of that opportunity the very moment that equitable freight rates are given to British Columbia.

I come now to what I think concerns more particularly our friends in the East. I think beyond all question of doubt that the removal of this discrimination will react to the general advantage of Canada and more particularly the East, and more particularly still the cities of Montreal and Toronto. Our railways in this country have been clinging to the long haul instead of assisting in colonization and relying upon the increase in population to increase their general traffic and consequently, increase the prosperity of the country. The Panama canal since 1919 has become a great factor in the situation, and we see the railway companies to-day as a result of that Panama canal competition doing the most extraordinary things with regard to rates. For instance, on bar iron they have given a rate from Montreal to Vancouver of $13 a ton—not to help British Columbia, but to enable the eastern manufacturer to compete with the manufacturers in the United States and Great Britain, who enjoy rates infinitely lower than $13 per ton. They ship by steamship through the Panama canal and get their products into Vancouver for about $6 per ton.

I might give another instance. The rates on chemicals going to Vancouver have been reduced for the same purpose of enabling the eastern manufacturer to meet the competition of the American and the British manufacturer. There is a freight rate of approximately $20 per ton on chemicals going to Vancouver, whereas the freight rate on the very same commodity to Calgary is $30 per ton. Remember, that is not designed to benefit British Columbia. It is designed for the purpose of enabling our eastern manufacturer to compete with the American and the Britisher. I do not object to that. We in British Columbia want to do business with eastern Canada. We want to buy your manufactured articles, but we cannot buy them if you will insist on denying us the right of bringing them through the natural trade channels, and we are being denied that right to-day.

The other day the Minister of Customs was asked in the House whether he proposed to put a customs officer at the port of New York. He did not because it would take business away from the transportation companies. Now the fact is that that business is not travelling over the railways to-day, and that fact is evidenced by the figures of trade passing through the Panama canal. Just let me illustrate the effect of having a customs officer at the port of New York on the British Columbia purchaser of manufactured articles, particularly heavy machinery and such like. For instance I have heard our pulp manufacturers say: We are forced to buy in the markets of the United States because though we could buy as cheaply in eastern Canada markets, we cannot buy there because we cannot pay the freight rates; and they are denied the right of bringnig those goods through the Panama canal—denied that by the government of this country. But if we had a customs officer at New York we could buy those goods, ship them to New York, tranship them there into American or British bottoms, and bring them around to Vancouver via the Panama canal at rates which would compete with the rates we pay for the American and the British article. But the situation at present is that if we ship these goods to New York and then tranship them having no customs officer at New York we have to pay duty on our own Canadian manufactured goods, just as if they were manufactured in the United States. What I want to impress upon the House is this, that our transportation companies are not getting that business now. You are losing it here in the East, and losing it fast, and the following figures are the best proof of that.

In 1913 we had 132 deep-sea going vessels coming into Vancouver; in 1920, 333; in 1921, 496; and in 1922, 717—increasing at a tremendous rate.

Now what about the imports through the Panama canal? In the short period of one year these imports increased by 700 per cent. The imports in 1921 through the Panama canal amounted to 20,416 tons; in 1922 the imports amounted to 149,553 tons; our total imports through the Panama canal being greater than through the port of Montreal. That is what the eastern manufacturers have got to waken up to if they are going to retain the western market. They have to waken up to the fact that they have to allow freight to flow through the natural trade channels. The Americans have wakened up to that fact. They have their regular established steamship lines going through the Panama canal. Their railway companies are spending millions of dollars to-day on developing the short haul as opposed to the transcontinental haul, because they realize that they cannot haul a commodity across the continent in competition with a steamship travelling through the Panama canal. That is obvious and the sooner we waken up to it the better.

There is also the greatest opportunity here for the colonization and settlement of that huge western country. That western country cannot be settled unless you make it possible for the immigrant whom we propose to bring in to go there and prosper. In the first place the western farmer to-day—and you can sneer if you like; I have heard many jeers and sneers, and I take issue with them—the western farmer is suffering under a disadvantage, and that disadvanatge is this. It costs him too much to lay his grain down to the consumer. He is losing from six to ten cents a bushel on his grain by reason of the fact that we have not wakened up and are not taking advantage of the natural trade routes. If we take advantage of these natural trade routes he can then market his grain and obtain a reasonable return for his product. Furthermore, he would then be able to buy his necessities, his machinery and other things that he has to use in his business, at the lowest possible cost. Do not make it necessary for him to haul these things he needs right across the continent. Enable him to take them in by the shortest route, and then you will cheapen the cost of living and make the prairie an attractive place for farmers to come and settle and prosper. But if we insist upon these artificial trade channels we cannot hope to make the West a popular place for the immigrant to come and settle.

I am quite aware it might be said that the Americans to the south of us have higher freight rates than we have in the West on grain and some other commodities. That is true, but let it be remembered that these American farmers are in this position: They have at their door a huge local market—something we have not got. They can sell the bulk of their grain locally, but we are dependent on the price we can get in distant markets for our living. Furthermore, let it be remembered that they have a protective tariff. I know my friends to my left will not agree that that is any advantage to them, but the farmers of the United States see the special advantage that tariff is to them. They are the people who have promoted a tariff on behalf of the farmer, and they are the people who have got it.

Let us also take advantage of their disadvantage if such exists. If they are suffering under a disadvantage let us make our country more attractive to them and then we can bring into this country from the United States the most desirable type of immigrant. They will move across the line if we make our country more attractive and make it possible for the farmer in this country to prosper.

There is just one other point that I wish to draw to the attention of the House and it is this: The principle of equalization of freight rates, in so far as British Columbia is concerned, has already been recognized by the past government, and in the opening paragraph of the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners handed down in June, 1922, the commissioners recite the direction which was given by the Privy Council on the 6th October, 1920, after they had heard an appeal from the judgment of the commissioners. The Privy Council then said:

> The committee of the Privy Council therefore further recommend that as conditions have probably changed materially in recent years, tending more and more to make equalization practicable an inquiry by the board be directed to be held at the earliest date with a view to the establishment of rates meeting to the utmost extent possible the above requirement as to equalization.

Namely, the removal of the mountain scale. Now, I have various other arguments which I could advance but I feel that I cannot, in justice, take up any more of the time of the House. That it is a matter of the most vital importance to British Columbia is true, but I want to urge that I am not advocating this from the sectional point of view of that province. I believe that it is in the interest of this country, that if we are going to encourage people to come to Canada we must make the country attractive to them, we must make it possible for them to prosper. There is no question but that the high freight rates in Canada will make it impossible for a small population such as we have to prosper unless we largely increase that population. Furthermore, by increasing that population, by bringing in desirable immigrants and bringing them in as fast as we can, we will make it possible for these railways to prosper by hauling much greater quantities of freight, by moving much larger numbers of passengers; and that such equalization, and a broad-minded attitude on this question, will react not only to the advantage of British Columbia, to the advantage of eastern Canada and of the whole Dominion, but to the advantage of the railway companies themselves.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria City): I have a great deal of pleasure in seconding the motion so very ably presented by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark). This matter of freight rates is one of the most important that we have in British Columbia, situated as we are at the extreme western end of Canada. I feel that I will be quite safe in supporting the statements of the mover of the resolution to the effect that the statement of the Chairman of the Railway Commission, as it appeared in a western paper a short time ago, namely that the feeling in British Columbia was much more political than real, is not correct. The fact that we have fought this question of high freight rates for so many years should be ample proof for everyone that we are in earnest in our contention.

It is rather interesting, in looking back to the time when British Columbia was a colony and to the time when it was proposed that she should be taken into confederation, to observe that in the undertakings that were then being considered it was decided to construct a railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific with the object of bringing the provinces of Canada closer together, and increasing trade from east to west rather than from north to south, and that at that time Great Britain also encouraged this work with the idea that it would enable her to reach her possessions on the Asiatic side and in the Pacific, with much greater ease and safety than was previously possible. British Columbia cordially entered into this bargain and made very liberal grants of land, giving to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a grant of twenty miles wide on each side of that line from the Alberta boundary west, and also about three-and-a-half million acres of rich land in the Peace River district. I might also point out that in making the bargain the federal government took over the right to collect a tariff, at that time enjoyed by the colony of British Columbia, and in exchange the federal authorities gave to the province a grant of $100,000 a year in perpetuity. It is interesting to note here that while other sections of Canada east of the mountains made land grants towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway, the colony of British Columbia gave her own land for this purpose; the lands granted in other provinces belonged to the Dominion. At that time nothing was said concerning the extra cost of construction through the mountains; nothing was said about it being necessary to give the railway any undue advantage or any privileges or monopoly; the whole spirit of the bargain was that of equal treatment for all the provinces. No references, as I say, were made with regard to an extra tariff being levied in the mountain section; I am quite sure that it is very doubtful indeed if British Columbia would have entered into this bargain had any such proposition been initiated by the federal authorities. In the selection of the route the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had the whole country to itself. It could have selected a pass from the Arctic circle clear down to the American boundary line. As a matter of fact the company selected the route through the Yellowhead pass west of Edmonton. That route was chosen, in the first place, by the company's engineers on account of its better grade. After some little time the company changed its mind and decided to go west through the Kicking Horse pass, but it was necessary to obtain the sanction of the federal government to that change. In the Kicking Horse pass, as has been so well pointed out by the mover of the resolution, the grades were very much greater than the grades in the Yellowhead pass, the mountain at its highest point being some 1,650 feet higher in the former than in the latter. In addition there is also the handicap of heavy grades in both directions. Any of you who have been through that country will know that there is a huge depression lying immediately to the west of the Rocky mountains and to the east of the Selkirks—what is known as "The Great Dip." It was only at that point, where the Yellowhead pass crosses the mountains, that a first-class grade could be obtained.

Now, British Columbia urges this: That these routes having been clearly open to the selection of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the company having first made the selection of the better grade across the mountains and then having changed to the Kicking Horse pass, and this having been endorsed by the parliament of Canada, the province should certainly not be penalized for any mistakes made by the railway company, or by parliament on that occasion.

With regard to the mountain scale at present existing, which is one of our first objections, and which is one of the subjects behind the resolution of the mover, we find, as has been pointed out, that under present conditions it is possible to haul for 125 miles on the prairie, at the rate applicable to a 100 mile haul through the mountains. I am quite sure that this is not in keeping with the spirit of confederation where, as I pointed out a moment ago, equality in all the provinces was the prevailing question that was prominently kept before us. In British Columbia we want this corrected. We believe in the Railway Commission . We believe it is a very valuable body and one that is rendering a great service to this country under a very heavy handicap but during the last session the government according to its right thought it proper at that time to step in and over-rule the heads of that commission and make certain changes in what is known as the Crowsnest pass agreement, giving certain concessions to the prairie provinces. This, we claim, is an added discrimination against the province of British Columbia, and we ask now in this resolution that that privilege be not confined to the prairie provinces favoured last year, but that it be extended to all the other parts of the Dominion, including the province of British Columbia.

It has been clearly shown that there has been very little difference, if any, in the cost of transportation over the line of the Canadian National railway in the mountains and over similar distances on the prairie sections. In fact I am informed, taking the distance from Edmonton to Vancouver, and Edmonton to Fort William, that you pass over higher land on the way to Fort William than on the trip to Vancouver. It was also shown last year in the findings of the Railway Committee of this House, which sat during last session, that the cost of construction is no longer a serious feature in fixing freight rates over the Canadian Pacific railway.

The position in British Columbia is this: Here is a vast province of great resources, with plenty of goods for sale, timber, minerals, fish and agriculture, anxious to do business with the eastern section of Canada, particularly that section lying immediately east of the Rocky mountains, but severely handicapped by freight rates which have prevailed for a great number of years. We feel that if we are to have the proper development which we have a right to expect, we should have equal treatment, and that we should be placed on an equal footing with that country lying to the east of us and with other parts of Canada. The result of the high freight rate has been that we find a certain amount of business uncertainty and unrest. There is a lack of confidence among business men, capital is shy about investment, particularly since the increase of freight rates some time ago, and many of those inland towns built along the line of the Canadian Pacific railway at the time of its construction have practically not developed at all, handicapped, as they are very greatly, by the excessive freight rates which they have to pay. We find that our mills, particularly those lying inland, are not doing the amount of business that they would under more favourable conditions. I am quite sure that if these concessions asked for in the resolution were granted we would have immediately very much improved business conditions, which would not only be enjoyed by the great northwestern country, but by the people throughout the whole of Canada.

Take the matter particularly of the concession made last year under the Crowsnest pass agreement in the matter of grain and flour. which includes, as I understand, feed grain and mill offal, such as bran and shorts, a tremendous advantage would be enjoyed by our British Columbia friends if this material were permitted to go to British Columbia at a lower freight rate. You will understand in those western valleys we not only have an excellent growth of grass in summer, but we are able to grow a great deal of forage for winter use, ensilage and hay. If we could buy those cheap concentrates east of the mountains and have them delivered to us at a reasonable figure, we could extend our dairy operations much more. We have in that country as regards dairying, the finest possible conditions existing anywhere on the continent of America, and this has been proved on more than one occasion by our being able to produce cattle that have broken the world's record in dairy production. Looking at conditions generally in Canada, particularly agricultural conditions, while we all recognize the necessity of having a first class market, the first thing we need to encourage the farmer to produce is to guarantee him a first class market which will yield him some profit for his work. What do we find? When we consider these markets, we find we are very much handicapped by the heavy cost of distribution, and one of the principal causes is the heavy freight rates. I am quite sure that if the concessions asked for were extended to British Columbia, much more of the wheat would roll to the West than is moving at the present time. But why not? The development of our agriculture is far too important to have that wheat guided with a view to helping out any particular point. If we are going to make a great country of this Canada of ours, huge in extent as it is, populated with a virile people, and to develop it in keeping with its present place in the world and as part of the great British Empire, we must put aside any little feelings we may have about any particular section which we wish to boost, and let the grain and any other produce we have run along natural lines. We have two channels through which trade flows. One is the natural channel and the other is the boosted channel. If we want to stand on a sound foundation, we must always rely on the natural channels of trade. I will read to the House this statement from the Toronto Globe, a paper that I have not quoted very frequently since I have come into this House:

The Western Grain Route

If British Columbia in asking for a reduction of rates on westbound grain, were seeking simply to build up its own ports as against those of eastern Canada, its demand might be described as sectional. But what it contends is that the westbound movement is not artificial, but natural, and is economically the more profitable, at least for the grain of Alberta and western Saskatchewan. The vital question is not what is best for Vancouver or Montreal, but what is best for the grain grower in the West.

The western route to the Pacific has the advantage, for at least a large portion of the West, of a much shorter rail haul. Against this is the grade through the Rocky mountains. But here it is to be borne in mind that the National railway has a far easier grade than the Canada Pacific, and this advantage ought to be used to the fullest possible extent. This is not a sectional, but a national question.

I was just going to say that we are only in our infancy as regards agriculture. During the time that I had the honour to be Minister of Agriculture, I had a very careful estimate made by the experts of the Department of Agriculture, and I may say that while they were all recognized as experts, some were also agriculturists, and some even farmers. It was estimated at that time that by a slightly improved form of agriculture, the more strict selection of our seeds, better cultivation, the keeping of a better quality of dairy cattle, beef cattle, hogs and poultry, with very moderate estimates in all those particular lines, there would be an increase to the agricultural wealth of this country of not less than $503,000,000 a year, or enough to wipe out our national debt in five or six years without turning over a single fresh acre. This will show the possibilities. No single port is going to be able to take care of the produce of this country, when the western country gets into mixed farming as it will undoubtedly, because the history of some of the states to the south will be repeated. Their wheat production went down to only six bushels an acre, whereas now by the introduction of the dairy and creamery system on an extensive scale, they are producing more wheat to-day than before, and producing at a greater profit. Therefore, our agriculture being only in its infancy, all the good ports we have will be necessary to get rid of our produce as the quantity increases.

Perhaps the most important question to-day before the government and people of this country is that of making the business of the producer profitable. If we can do that, nothing else practically will matter because it will take care of itself. We are talking about immigration. We want more immigrants into this country; but I think simultaneously with any movement to increase immigration, we should certainly move along those lines that will better conditions for those people who are in the country already, and in that way improve conditions for any immigrants that might settle here.

One of the most important of those things is to keep down the cost of living and freight rates to within a reasonable figure, so as to enable us to place our goods on the market at a reasonable profit. While we recognize that one of the greatest handicaps in our development is cost of distribution, perhaps one of the greatest factors in that cost of distribution is the matter of high freight rates. Those freight rates affect everybody and everything. They increase the cost of living, and while we blame the railways, the railways blame their employees for the high wages they have to pay and also the high cost of materials. This matter should be sifted to the bottom, and whatever remedies can be adopted should be adopted for the purpose of relieving the situation. One thing that the public are dead sure of is that we are not going to enjoy the proper prosperity to which this country is entitled so long as those high rates prevail.

5 p.m.

Our transportation system was largely built up many years ago with the great centres in the East kept plainly in view at all times, such as Montreal, Toronto and other centres. Conditions have changed tremendously since that time. I think a point has been reached where it is almost time to review the situation and to bring to bear such reorganization as is possible, taking into consideration the tremendous growth of the prairies, the development of British Columbia, the development and great increase of our agricultural production of the plains, particularly wheat, and also the great possibilities of Pacific trade which cannot be overlooked now. This is increasing in importance every year, and we must always keep in view the competition which the Panama canal is going to give the railways crossing this continent. I am quite sure the development of British Columbia would be a great boon to our prairie friends. I have always felt that that great province, with its rich resources, will, once it is developed, provide at the door of the prairies, particularly Alberta and Saskatchewan a market that will be a very valuable one. There is nothing that will help out the development of that country so much as favourable freight rates. I am sure, once rates are reduced, we shall find a great deal of the grain in the prairies flowing over the mountains, not only for consumption in British Columbia, but for shipment abroad through our elevators which are built now, and increased elevator facilities which will be provided in the near future. The Pacific offers to the prairies an excellent way of getting rid of its grain all the year round with a very short haul and all down hill.

I do not propose to take up any more of the time of the House. The mover of the resolution has gone into this matter very completely and in full detail. I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, had my hon. friend had this motion presented to him two years ago, I am afraid he could not have seconded it in this House. He would then have been in the position of being a minister of the Crown with this case before him on appeal. He is fortunate, perhaps, in that respect to-day. The question of transportation, as hon. gentlemen have said, is one that directly and intimately affects the people. The method of moving from the point of production to the point of consumption the products of the people either on the farm or in the shop, to a large extent controls the returns which the people get for their labour or their investment. Neither the government nor parliament can minimize the effect of freight rates on the public business of the country, or on the private happiness, contentment and prosperity of the people.

But the question, so far as I can view it, is not one of freight rates, although that side of the question has been presented ably to the House. This country, years ago, rightly or wrongly, passed an act creating a body with machinery to which is referred the control of freight and passenger rates and movement of trains, together with the kind of equipment and standard of its repair. That was right or it was wrong. But to-day that is the law of the land. I know the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) stated that last year parliament interfered with the work of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I want to point out the inaccuracy of that contention. In 1897 the Crowsnest pass agreement became a part of the law of the Dominion of Canada. That implied a contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the people of Canada, and the government of Canada. From 1897 until 1918, I think I am safe in saying, the Board of Railway Commissioners never had any jurisdiction over the rates affected by that agreement, at least not legally. Those rates were according to a contract embodied in the agreement called the Crowsnest pass agreement. In 1918, by another statute, with the consent of parliament and with the approval of the people of Canada, that agreement was suspended for a term, and during that suspension those rates came under the Board of Railway Commissioners. That term expired last year, and it was in the hands of this parliament to say whether or not it would be extended for another term. Parliament was not interfering with the work of the Board of Railway Commissioners as originally intended by this agreement, because that board was constituted many years after this agreement was made and the agreement was never brought under the board's jurisdiction until 1918. If this House had not enacted legislation for the purpose last session the Crowsnest pass agreement would again have come into full force and effect, and accordingly parliament passed certain legislation allowing the main features of that agreement to again become operative. In other words, parliament refused to extend in its entirety the suspension of that agreement.

Now, the position to-day is altogether different. These rates have been under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners since its inception, and this House is now asked to say that it is opposed to the existing machinery for the control of rates. How far has that machinery functioned concerning this very question now before the House? The Railway Act provides that the making of rates shall be placed in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners. If I remember correctly, the procedure is this: The railway companies file their rates with the board, and if any objection is taken to those rates by any person or any organization the case is tried on its merits by the board. Under that statute the very case we are now discussing was heard before the Railway Board and a finding given. But the Railway Act further provides that in case any dissatisfaction exists as to a judgment of the board, appeal can be had on questions of fact to the Privy Council—the cabinet— and on questions of law to the Supreme Court.

This case was heard before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the judgment of the board was not satisfactory to the province of British Columbia, which thereupon lodged an appeal with the Privy Council. That appeal has already been partially argued, and the constitutional aspect, referred to by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) has been presented to the Privy Council by Premier Oliver and counsel for British Columbia, Mr. McGeer. The Speaker has ruled that if the Privy Council were a court this case could not be discussed here to-day, but in his opinion it is not a court. Of course I must accept the ruling, but I would submit that the Railway Act to all intents and purposes constituted the Board of Railway Commissioners a court of first instance and the Privy Council a court of appeal.

Now, the government is in this situation. We cannot discuss the merits of this case no matter how we may regard them. We are precluded in all decency from discussing whether British Columbia is fairly treated or not, for, as I have already stated, the case is now before the Privy Council and has already been half argued, and the attorney-general and the premier of British Columbia agreed that the completion of the argument should take place immediately after the close of this session. The government having within a few weeks to give a decision on this case, and not yet having heard all the argument, is it in the interests of the people of British Columbia, is it in the interests of those who wish to have freight rates reduced that this motion should be pressed upon the House? I submit that any vote on this question could not be absolutely on the merits of the case, because members of the cabinet are precluded from saying a word one way or the other. Therefore in my opinion this question ought to be left in abeyance until at least the Privy Council, as the appellate court to the Board of Railway Commissioners, has had an opportunity to hear full argument and give its finding. If parliament then comes to the conclusion that that finding is not in accordance with the facts or with public policy, it can always so declare.

Mr. T. G. McBRIDE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do not want to give the impression that I am asking for freight rates to be reduced. When I look over the freight rates that are charged in the United States and compare them with the freight rates that are charged in Canada, I find that on this side of the line they are about 25 per cent less. If we expect our railways to pay how can we consistently ask the government to cut freight rates? I believe in running our railways as a cold-blooded business proposition. In other words, I think our railways ought to carry at least their own overhead expenses and not expect the taxpayers to shoulder the burden. Why should we in the West pay taxes to make up an operating deficiency to get coal to the people of Ottawa? And why should the people of Ottawa be expected to pay taxes to make up an operating deficiency on the hauling of grain from the prairies to the seaboard? I do not think it is fair that those who are getting no consideration whatever from the railways should be taxed to make up these deficiencies. In my opinion freight rates should be fixed on a basis to cover overhead expenses, and indeed I hope to see the time when our National Railways will not only earn their overhead expenses but a surplus that will go a long way towards paying the debt of this country.

Now, when British Columbia entered confederation the government of Canada agreed to build a road to the Pacific coast. When that agreement was made nothing was said of discrimination in the way of freight rates. And here let me say that anything I am about to state in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway need not be taken as in any way condemning that railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway is an organization that I think every true Canadian has just reason to be proud of, and the same might be said of the Canadian National Railways. The officials and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railway are giving transportation service to this country that is not surpassed in any other part of the world. The steamboats of the Canadian Pacific Railway and also of the Canadian National Railways on the Pacific coast are the flower of the Pacific ocean and should be the pride of all Canadians. Therefore I repeat any remarks I may make in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway are not to be taken as in any way condemnatory of that railway but are intended simply to show the discrimination against the West in the way of freight rates as compared with the other sections of the Dominion.

Now, I see no reason why the people in the West should not get the same scale of freight rates as apply in the East. When British Columbia entered the union her people took into consideration the inducements that were then offered to them to take that course. As I have already stated, one of those inducements was a railroad to the Pacific coast that was to be started within two years and completed within ten. That railroad was not started, I may say, until eight years after British Columbia had entered the confederation. However, that is past history. There is not a vestige of the agreement under which British Columbia entered confederation that has not been fully carried out by the people of that province. Why, then, should this government not see to it that the railway companies carry out their part of the agreement and exercise no discrimination in the matter of freight rates? Why should it be that a manufacturer of roofing paper, for instance, in Victoria, can ship his product down the Pacific coast, through the Panama canal, up the Atlantic and back to Winnipeg at $9.20 a ton less than he can ship it direct across Canada by rail? Yet he can do it. It simply means that the people producing these articles on the Pacific coast cannot compete, owing to the freight charges, with those engaged in similar businesses in the East. Why should it cost 100 per cent more to ship a car of apples from Okanagan to Vancouver than it does to ship the same distance in Ontario? And yet it does. It must be borne in mind that the British Columbia government gave 14,000,000 acres of land toward the building of the Canadian Pacific railway; and not only that, the Dominion government built the greater portion of the line and handed it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company free of cost. Taking these things into consideration I do not think any person can justly say that the cost of construction of the Canadian Pacific railway in the West to the company has been much in excess of the cost of construction in the East. It is argued that the Canadian Pacific was an expensive road to build. I will admit that, but are the people of the West to be penalized for the mistakes of the C.P.R. engineers? That is the question that is before this House. The C.P.R. had the same right to go through the Yellowhead pass that the Canadian Northern had. But in 1882 the C.P.R. came to this House and asked permission to change the route from the Yellowhead pass to the present route through the Rogers pass, on the ground that the distance would thereby be made some 79 miles shorter. It was a more expensive road to construct and no doubt is a more expensive road to operate, but that is no reason why the freight rates should be held up on the Canadian National on the basis of what the C.P.R. charges. I do not suppose there is a member of this House who would say that the East should be charged a higher freight rate on account of the Quebec bridge or the Montreal tunnel. No person will say that the cost of building that bridge or that tunnel should be charged up to the people in Quebec; much less should we in the West be charged with the mistakes of the C.P.R. We in the West are paying taxes on the money that the government advanced to build these roads, just as well as the people in the East; why, then, should we have to pay an additional tax in the way of high freight rates?

Some people will say that it has cost a great deal more to operate the roads in the West than it has in the East. I think I can show by figures that the cost of operation is from 65 to 80 per cent more in the East than it is in the West, I am sure that anyone who is accustomed to railway operations will admit that it costs more to operate in the East than the West. Let us look at a few figures. The cost of operation of the C.P.R. per mile in Alberta and British Columbia in 1917 was $5,682, whereas in Quebec and New Brunswick the cost in that year was $10,000 per mile, or 76 per cent more. In 1920 the cost of operation per mile in Alberta and British Columbia was $10,830 and in Quebec and New Brunswick $17,913, or 65 per cent greater in the East. In 1921, Alberta and British Columbia $8,631 per mile; Quebec and New Brunswick, $15,560 per mile, or 80 per cent greater in the East than in the West. Why, then, are the freight rates in the West so much higher than they are in the East? Is there any just reason for it? Some people will say, "But look at the amount of freight that is handled in the East compared with the West." Well, let us look at the figures with respect to the density of freight as represented by gross ton miles in Quebec and New Brunswick taken together, and in British Columbia and Alberta, taken together. The figures are as folows:

	Tons
1917—
Quebec & New Brunswick..	54,572
British Columbia & Alberta..	56,431
1920—
Quebec & New Brunswick..	46,021
British Columbia & Alberta..	57,229
1921—
Quebec & New Brunswick..	38,411
British Columbia & Alberta..	42,891

This shows that in the West the volume of business for the railroad is much greater every time.

Some people think that the prairies are flat and that freight can therefore be handled much more cheaply there. But the prairies are not flat; at both Regina and Medicine Hat there are pusher grades on the C.P.R. Nearly a 2 per cent grade is encountered between Montreal and West St. John.

We hear a great deal about the mountain scale out West. The C.P.R. does pay its men a mountain scale of wages for 200 miles but it charges the people in the West the mountain scale on 4,500 miles. That is what is called the mountain scale. Is there anything to justify it? Not that I can see. As for the Canadian Northern, there is no such thing as a mountain scale.

I would now like to say a few words about the Canadian Northern. On that line out West for a distance of twenty-eight miles, up the North Thompson, the Canadian Northern has a grade of seven-tenths of one per cent, and that is the heaviest grade on the line. The rest of the grade is four-tenths of one per cent. In fact, the grade is such that you could start a train at Jasper or Lucerne and it would almost run itself without an engine to Vancouver. Indeed there is not one grade on the Canadian National railway that is not fully compensated. It is not so on the Canadian Pacific railway.

Some people may say: Look at the cost of construction on the Canadian Northern railway through British Columbia. Suppose we compare the cost of construction of the Canadian Northern railway through British Columbia and in the East. From Kamloops to Hope was the most expensive portion of the Canadian Northern road to construct, and that section of the road cost $133,563 per mile, whereas the road from Ottawa to Montreal cost $178,000 per mile; in other words that section from Montreal to Ottawa cost $44,430 a mile more to build than the most expensive portion of the line in British Columbia. Or again, take that section of the road between Montreal and Winnipeg. That section cost an average of $59,313 per mile, whereas the section from Winnipeg to Vancouver cost $55,572 per mile, or in other words, $3,741 per mile less. Why then, when we take these things into consideration, should the people out West have to pay the freight rates they are paying to-day? I might say that all these figures were taken from the official railway accounts and have never been challenged.

There is no reason that I can see why the freight rates in the West should be such as they are; it is a discrimination against western Canada, and one that is hard to explain. There is no reason that I can see why any railroad company should be entitled to hold up the freight rates to debar the people in the West from doing business with the prairies, and that is what they are doing at the present time. All we ask out West is a square deal. We have carried out, as I have already said, every vestige of an agreement with the Dominion government, and we ask the Dominion government to carry out their part of the agreement and give us the same freight rates as other sections of Canada enjoy. If the freight rates have to be raised in order to put the roads on a paying basis, we are prepared to pay our share of the cost, but let the rest of Canada do the same thing. That is all we are asking.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to review this subject briefly, Mr. Speaker, and to state where I stand upon the resolution of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark). To come to an intelligent grasp of the whole question embodied and involved in this resolution, one has to go back some distance in the history of our railway legislation. That history has been reviewed, but I do not think reviewed fully, and I am quite certain not reviewed fairly by the hon. the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham).

This parliament has had from its inception the power to control railway rates in this Dominion. In so far as the railways of Canada were Dominion railways within the meaning of the British North America Act, the control of rates upon them rested with the parliament of Canada, or with such body or committee or commission as the parliament of Canada chose from time to time to depute that jurisdiction to. Up till 1903 parliament had left with the Privy Council under the Railway Act the exercise of that control. The Privy Council had what was known as a Railway Committee, within which was placed the exercise of such review of the rates on our railways as was deemed in the public interest. While such was the law of the land an agreement was made by the Dominion government with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in 1897, whereby in consideration of a grant of money for construction of a branch line the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to give certain rates on grain and flour eastward and on other important commodities westward into and from the prairie provinces as a consideration for the aid so extended. Those rates were lower than had previously obtained on the goods affected.

In 1903 parliament decided on another body for the exercise of the control that had previously been in the hands of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Parliament constituted the Railway Commission, and by specific legislation in amendment to and added to the Railway Act of the time provided that this commission should have control of all rates whatsoever, as well as the supervision of improvements, the maintenance of equipment and other matters that theretofore had been otherwise controlled. To that general reposition of power there was in the clauses establishing the Commission no exception at all, and it is unnecessary to add that any exception would be wholly inconsistent with the spirit and purpose of the legislation itself. As a matter of practical effect for many years no exception arose for the reason that in the case of the only exception which afterwards was found to exist namely this Crowsnest pass agreement, the rates thereunder were such as really not to be affected by the practical operation of the Railway Board.

What I would like to call attention to now is this, that in the granting of power to the board there was no exception, and intended to be no exception, but afterwards it appeared that in the general Railway Act, aside entirely from the provisions constituting and empowering the board, there was a clause that nothing in this general Railway Act should affect the provisions of any special act, the intention being, should affect any special act incorporating a company and the granting of certain powers thereunder. However, the effect of that general clause in the Railway Act was such undoubtedly as to maintain intact the original Crowsnest pass legislation. Now that Crowsnest pass legislation was not the only thing that was in my judgment intended to be cast aside by the general provisions adopted in 1903 establishing the Railway Commission. Previous to that there had been many agreements entered into, not only by companies and by individuals, but by provincial governments, with railways whereby for a consideration the railways undertook to give certain lower rates; but because of the establishment of a general tribunal and the submission of all companies to that tribunal these agreements inevitably were swept aside. If they were to still obtain in their old force then the whole purpose of the railway legislation of 1903 would be to that extent defeated. In a word, grievances of any kind—

Mr. CAHILL: Was not the Manitoba agreement with the Northern Pacific also left as binding on the government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will come to that very fully. I undertake that the hon. member will be fully satisfied with my treatment of his question a little later on.

All previous agreements were swept aside for that reason. Once the railway companies submitted to the tribunal constituted by the parliament of Canada and said "We will let this tribunal fix rates herafter" what more could we ask of the companies? Very well. Upon the establishment of the Railway Commission in 1903—there having been up to that time a gradual general reduction of rates in Canada—the rates then obtaining under the Crowsnest pass agreement were only such rates, and no lower, as the Railway Commission anyway would fix. So it turned out. Indeed, as time passed the Railway Commission found it possible to assess rates even lower than the Crowsnest pass rates, and those were in effect for some years. This point the Acting Minister of Railways overlooked in his review this afternoon. He stated that the rates effected by the Crowsnest pass agreement had never been under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. They were; the Railway Commission actually dealt with them and reduced them below the Crowsnest pass level. Now, all the while legally, because of that exception in the general Railway Act, the Crowsnest pass legislation was in existence; but not until 1917 did the time arrive when the effect of that agreement actually and practically interfered with the operations of the Railway Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister smiles. I thought I was giving a fair review of the history of this subject. Is not what I have said the fact?

Mr. GRAHAM: I was smiling at this: I do not quite agree with my right hon. friend's position on the submission to the Railway Commission of the Crowsnest pass agreement. However, it is immaterial; the results were the same; the rates were lower than the rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is all I was endeavouring to point out.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not on account of the commission, however.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, the rates were lower and were approved by the commission.

Mr. GRAHAM: No doubt the rates were lower.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly and came under the commission just the same as any other rates submitted to them and assessed by them.

Mr. GRAHAM: Does my right hon. friend mean to say that those rates legally came under the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course they did, subject to the effect of the original agreement.

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, I have stated that, but the original agreement had no practical effect—the minister will now either contradict me or agree—the original agreement had no practical effect until 1917.

Mr. GRAHAM: When the rates became higher.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes—when the conditions were such that it would have been the duty of the commission, entirely aside from this agreement, to make the rates higher. Consequently, the act of 1897 was, in effect, a dead letter until 1917. This cannot be contradicted. If it can, I invite contradiction,—that the rates would have been the same if the act had never existed.

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good; from the time the Railway Act came into effect until 1917 the rates would have been just the same if there had been no Crowsnest pass agreement at all.

Mr. FORKE: Did not the Crowsnest pass agreement fix the maximum rates?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. FORKE: It had nothing to do with the minimum rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Quite right. What I have said is the fact all the same.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, it is the fact but there is nothing in the argument.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the Crowsnest pass agreement had never existed then, in so far as the period from 1903 when the commission was established up to 1917 is concerned, during those fourteen years, the actual rates in effect would have been exactly what they were.

Mr. GRAHAM: Would this not be the case: Conditions arose and it was found necessary to have higher rates than those in the Crowsnest pass agreement. Then was it not necessary to change the law?

Mr MEIGHEN: Yes, I am just getting to that point.

Mr GRAHAM: That is my case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the Crowsnest pass agreement and legislation was, so far as rates are concerned, a dead letter until 1917. But 1917 coming, the war conditions then prevailing necessitated a general rise in railway rates or the paralysis of the whole railway system of this country. So the Railway Board came to the government, and the government came to parliament, and asked that the Crowsnest pass agreement be removed and that the Railway Commission be free to fix such rates, everywhere in this Dominion, as, under all the conditions, were reasonable and fair. That step the government took.

Mr. GRAHAM: They suspended it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know the government suspended it but the government's legislation in the first place, if I remember correctly—I will be corrected if I am wrong—was for the abolition entirely of the agreement. There was an amendment proposed, I think, in the Senate—I am not quite sure of that— and the government as a compromise agreed to it; but the government adopted the principle which had always been in effect until then, that there should not be hampering restrictions upon the board when dealing with the general subject.

Mr. BROWN: Why the necessity for parliament suspending the rate, as you contend, if it was already suspended or abrogated under the original Railway Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member has not quite understood me. Legally the agreement was in effect—that is to say legally it existed —but it had no practical effect at all until 1917. In 1917 it came into practical effect because the time had come when rates had to be raised. Consequently then was the time, and the only time when if there was any need for it to be dealt with it would have been dealt with and dealt with by parliament. Because, I say again, I do not believe for a moment it was ever intended by the Railway Act of 1903 giving the Railway Commission this power, ever intended that there should be any exception under the Crowsnest pass agreement or any other agreement inconsistent with the provisions of the act. Remember I wholly agree that under the Railway Act by reason of another clause which had been always in effect—another clause intended to apply to legislation incorporating companies, the Crowsnest pass legislation was saved. It actually did save the Crowsnest pass agreement legally. However, I am now at the year 1917 when the suspension took place, the intention being at that time to remove the agreement so that the Railway Commission should be free. Then came the expiration of the suspension of the rates in 1922. Now I come to the argument advanced by the Acting Minister of Railways.

Mr. CAHILL: Was not the suspension for two years in the first place, and then for a further period?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Possibly so.

Mr. CAHILL: My hon. friend then agreed to have it suspended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think we asked to have the agreement removed first of all, but there were objections to that and the government agreed to the suspension instead.

Mr. CAHILL: On two occasions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well, the expiration of the suspension came in 1922 and then the Railway Commission—having already reduced the rates so far as they felt they could until they knew the fate of the Crowsnest pass legislation, and having to hold their hands from further general reductions which were due all over this country, until it could be known what was the decision of this parliament in respect of the agreement—came to the government and asked that the government declare, and that parliament declare, its position on the subject. The matter, as everyone knows, was referred to a committee and finally government legislation was introduced, the effect of which was to restore the Crowsnest pass agreement in part and let the rest of it go by the board, for another year. This legislation passed, the part restored being the rates on grain and flour moving eastward out of the western prairie provinces.

Now we must remember in this connection —though it is aside from my argument, and I ask that this interjection be forgotten as related to my argument, as soon as I make it— that there is no question that whatever may have been the result of the imposition of the Crowsnest pass rates on grain and flour eastward out of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, whatever may have been the result, below what the Railway Commission would have felt it should have done, so far as Manitoba was concerned, there was nothing effected whatever below what the Railway Commission would in any case have done. I say this on the authority of the evidence submitted to the special committee, which went to show the railways were prepared, under the better conditions that had been brought about, to reduce rates until they would equal in Manitoba the Crowsnest pass rates. It is presumable, however, that in Saskatchewan and Alberta the rates imposed by this parliament in restoring that portion of the agreement were below the rates which, under all the circumstances, the Railway Commission would probably have thought fair. How far below no one knows, but that they were below can be presumed from the subsequent judgment of the Railway Commission itself. As a consequence of parliament imposing those rates, in respect, we will say, of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Railway Commission were prevented from doing what they otherwise would have done in rate reduction in other parts of the country.

Now the hon. minister argues as against the present resolution—why reduce these rates? He says there is a board which has jurisdiction in railway rates that we should not invade that jurisdiction, and that to do so is to act on a false principle. Then he immediately sees in front of him the act of last session in which we did invade the jurisdiction by restoring the Crowsnest rates on grain and flour, in a word by fixing rates on grain and flour coming eastward, and he says that is an exception, because there was an agreement and we had to bow to it. That agreement he says was made in 1897. Its rates have always been out of the jurisdiction of the commission and consequently there was an exception based on the sanctity of such agreement. Now I ask if such is the case, why in the world was not the agreement wholly restored and its integrity respected? If it is a sacred agreement, all of it is sacred and one part is just as sacred as another.

If the hon. member wants to get behind the agreement as an agreement, let him get behind it. He wants to justify smashing the agreement in two, and then to be allowed to say "because it is sacred as an agreement, I will get behind a fragment of it and let the rest go by the board."

Mr. CAHILL: What would have happened if parliament had taken no action?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the Railway Commission would have been free.

Mr. CAHILL: No, because the Crowsnest pass agreement would go into effect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh yes, but if parliament had done what I said then, and say now it should have done, it would have left the commission free to reduce everywhere in accordance with the conditions obtaining, and to be absolutely fair between all parts of the Dominion. Now, let parliament do that, let parliament cease to hamstring the commission, let it remove the chains, and then representatives from all parts of the Dominion can fairly be asked to go with these questions to the Railway Commission of this country. But while parliament handcuffs the commission in order that it may fasten certain rates, how then can it ask members of this House, and representatives of other parts of Canada, to go to the commission—a commission which is tied hand and foot by the government itself?

Mr. FORKE: As far as I can follow my hon. friend's argument, it is that the Crowsnest pass agreement did not do very much good to the West at all, and how did it hamstring the commission so very much, if the rates were infinitesimally lower through the fact of the Crowsnest pass agreement being restored?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member is pleading that we may have done wrong but we did not do very much wrong because we did not make the rates very much lower any way. The fact of the matter is that parliament tied the hands of the commission. If we did not by so doing put rates below what the commission would have done anyway, what good did we do?

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member said we did not put them very much lower.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I said in Manitoba we did not put them lower than the commission would have done. I said they put the rates in Saskatchewan and Alberta presumably lower than the commission would have done. How much I did not say It is the principle that is wrong—the principle of tying the hands of the commission before which all parts of the country are asked to come, and by whose decision all parts of the country are asked to abide. The government having taken the responsibility of doing that must answer to representatives of other portions of the country when those representatives come to this House and ask the government to do the same in respect to their provinces.

Next they have argued—though the minister did not do so this afternoon—that valuable consideration was given for this sacred agreement of 1897. Well, consideration was given by this Dominion but similar consideration was given by one hundred other acts, and there would be just the same reason for statutorily fixing rates in lieu of that consideration. But if in the Crownsnest case there was any given, it was given by the whole of the Dominion of Canada and was not given by any one single portion.

Now I would come to the subject referred to by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) the agreement with the province of Manitoba made by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, an agreement for which consideration was given in lieu of control of rates being exercised by the province which gave the consideration. The province of Manitoba in 1901 made an agreement with the Northern Pacific to take over the Northern Pacific lines at a certain fixed rental for 999 years—a certain rental for ten years, a certain rental for another ten years, another rental for a third ten years, and then a rental of $300,000 for the balance of 999 years. The province immediately re-leased the lines to the Canadian Northern, and in that agreement re-leasing the lines they provided that Manitoba should guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Company on its line from Port Arthur to Rainy River, 290 miles, at $20,000 a mile, a liability of $5,800,000, and in consideration of such liability the Canadian Northern Railway Company gave to the province of Manitoba full control of rates on all its lines in Manitoba and on all its lines from Manitoba to Port Arthur, and from Port Arthur to Manitoba. There was valuable consideration and there was a sacred agreement, and the consideration came wholly out of the credit and out of the pocket of the people of Manitoba themselves. Now then, if agreements are sacred, surely they are sacred chiefly to those who give the consideration for them. Manitoba stands to-day with all its rights under that agreement intact. I call on the government of this country to restore the validity of that agreement to undo what was done by this House in 1903 and allow the people of Manitoba, through its government to exercise full control of rates as they have a right to do under the terms of the agreement. If this government comes in and says the Crowsnest pass agreement must be respected, then why not the Canadian Northern agreement? If the Crowsnest pass agreement must be respected, or a part of it, a piece of it, torn and extracted out of the rest, for the benefit of a portion of the country which contributed no more to the construction of the road than all the rest of the Dominion, how much more should the Canadian Northern agreement enure to the benefit of, and be restored fully to the taxpayers of the province who paid the whole of the consideration themselves?

Mr. CANNON: Does the hon. member contend that the provincial government of Manitoba would constitutionally have the right to fix rates?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The provincial government of Manitoba has the contractual right to fix rates. As between that railway company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, which is still a corporate company to-day, the government of Manitoba can force the railway company to put whatever rates in effect it wants, unless restrained by the parliament of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CANNON: Does the hon. member contend that a party to a contract can grant power to any party, outside the powers conferred on that first party by the constitution?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The province of Manitoba has the absolute right to exercise those powers unless restrained by this House. This House has the full right to remove the control it assumed by the act of 1903 and give complete effect to that agreement of 1901.

Mr. FORKE: Why did the hon. member not do that when he was in power?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because we do not believe in special agreements at all. I spent twenty minutes of my address endeavouring to show that the late government set its face against all special agreements and believed them inconsistent with the proper working of the Railway Commission.

Mr. FORKE: That is an excuse.

Mr. MEIGHEN: An excuse?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, I think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member thinks it is an excuse, I would like to know what he thinks is a reason. I do not understand the hon. member.

Mr. FORKE: The right hon. gentleman knows quite well that the province of Manitoba would like to put that agreement over; but it could get no help from the Dominion, and the Railway Commission fixed those rates over the head of the province of Manitoba altogether. Manitoba has now power to enforce anything the Railway Commission would agree to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman has not made himself quite clear.

Mr. FORKE: I think the right hon. gentleman understands perfectly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am trying to understand the hon. member. I fully admit that this parliament has power to fix rates or to authorize as it did in 1903, the Railway Commission to fix rates irrespective of this agreement of 1901 but this parliament also has power to establish this agreement as a binding agreement to enable Manitoba to get the full value of the consideration which it gave just the same as it did in part at least in the case of the Crowsnest arrangement. That very thing I call now on the government to do.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A matter was mentioned before six o'clock by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) the exact purport of which I was not sure that I caught. I think though he was endeavouring to make the point that the agreement between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Government of Manitoba was beyond the jurisdiction of that government to enter into; that is to say, that the government of Manitoba constitutionally could not fix rates on Dominion railways. True, the legislature of no province can, as a legislative act, fix rates on Dominion railways; that is very clear. Similarly a town council could not do things with a company by general by-laws unless it had a contract with that special company. Perhaps this illustration will not add to the clearness of my argument and I will not pursue it.

Mr. CAHILL: Not a bit.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman need not smile. I do not think it would be clear to him no matter what I did.

Mr. CAHILL: That is not a smart answer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I mean to say the hon. gentleman is hostile, that is all.

Mr. CAHILL: It is not even clear to himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it is clear to me all right.

Mr. CAHILL: Well, explain it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As a legislative act no provincial legislature can fix rates on Dominion railways; but as a contractual right it can. In a word, it can only base its power upon contract. If it attempts to fix rates without any agreement with the railway company, the company does not need to bother its head; but if the company agrees to submit to the rates fixed, then, aside from any interference by this House, undoubtedly the company would have to abide by those rates because it contracted to do so. This does not apply to us. We can fix rates by legislation. The company need not contract to abide by those rates for we have jurisdiction over Dominion railways. A legislature can fix rates only if the company agrees to abide by the rates so fixed; and the company is bound by those rates if it contracts to accept them, unless it is relieved by this parliament.

Then, it may be asked, how did this parliament relieve the company? It is very easy for me to answer. Remember when the provincial statute was passed there was nothing that prevented its enforcement. This parliament ratified the agreement, but at the same time reserved the right afterwards to come along and fix rates itself. The statute reserving this right is chapter 53 of the statutes of 1901. This parliament ratified the agreement. It did not need to ratify it in so far as the contract was concerned for the fixing of rates; there were other things, though, that had to have ratification to make the agreement binding. And in ratifying the agreement in toto parliament said "Nothing herein contained shall prevent the right of this parliament by commission or otherwise later on to fix rates itself." The clause I refer to is subsection 1 of section 3 of the statute.

Unless this parliament came along and itself got in between the railway company and the legislature of Manitoba and forbade the legislature to enforce its right, the legislature could do so. But parliament did come along and forbid the legislature to take action when it established the Railway Commission in 1903. Manitoba did not complain. Why? Because the Railway Commission did not establish rates higher than those that had been fixed by the province. The province had fixed rates in pursuance of this agreement in 1901 and right from the first day, the first of April of that year, the rates which the province fixed were in force, showing that the province had a perfect right to contract so to do. The province of Manitoba got the benefit of those rates, having given consideration for them.

This parliament came along in 1903 and put the Railway Commission in a position, if it chose, to override those rates. The Railway Commission did not do so, but now it comes along and does override those rates. It exercises its power and steps in between the legislature of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway Company and denies the right to the Government of Manitoba to enforce the contract that it made with the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Very well, if an agreement with the Crowsnest Pass Railway is an agreement, here is an agreement too. If one agreement is not to be swept away, why sweep away the other?

Mr. CAHILL: Because the company is swept away in one case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, the company is in existence to-day in exactly the same corporate position that it was in in 1901.

Mr. BROWN: It would follow then from all that has been said that the province itself has no power to enforce rates under the old agreement without the consent of this House?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right.

Mr. BROWN: Very well. That is not the position taken by many in Manitoba, including some of the right hon. gentleman's friends.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the position I understand to be the law. I do not know of any who take a different position. What is the position taken?

Mr. BROWN: If I mistake not, a campaign has been carried on in some quarters promising that certain individuals would restore the rates in Manitoba, and contending that the legislature has power to do so irrespective of the authority of this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, I think my hon. friend is misinformed. I do not think anyone would argue seriously that this parliament, in respect of Dominion railways that are works for the general advantage of Canada, cannot fix rates or establish a tribunal to fix rates over and above and operating beyond the contract of the province of Manitoba. Now, the province of Manitoba did not complain so long as this parliament did not in any way fasten chains upon the tribunal that fixes rates. But when this parliament, on the advice of this government, fastens chains on the tribunal and prevents them from making rates that they believe to be equitable, then the province of Manitoba is denied justice and is on good ground in calling upon the government to restore its rights as well under the 1901 agreement. I would like to know what the fault is with that reasoning. Because, this parliament, on the advice of this government, establishes fixed rates for wheat flour and grain westward, no matter what the Railway Commission should think would be fair, the province of Manitoba to-day is paying beyond the rates that would have been fixed and were fixed under the contract of 1901.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Were these rates not fixed by the parliament of Canada long before this government had anything to do with it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No; the Prime Minister has not followed me either. Not at all; the government of Manitoba fixed the rates. The hon. Prime Minister will remember it put wheat down to 10 cents, subsequently to 11 cents—that is, wheat out of Manitoba to Fort William. About three years afterwards the Railway Commission was established. That body was then given power to step in and fix rates irrespective of that contract. But the Railway Commission, exercising that power, did not disturb the rates fixed by the Manitoba government, not until in 1917. That was the only time that there would be any reason to do it. But in 1917, it was made free to fix all rates irrespective of all agreements, on an equitable basis, all round. In 1917 this parliament, wiping aside the Crowsnest and all agreements, effectively stepped in and prevented the province of Manitoba from executing its contract with the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The province of Manitoba submitted as long as the tribunal was a tribunal unrestrained by the arbitrary acts of this parliament, but when this parliament restores another agreement and thereby prevents the commission from getting back to the old Manitoba rates as soon as it otherwise would, Manitoba has just ground for complaint and has a right to come to this government and say, "Restore our agreement too."

So much for the Manitoba agreement. Manitoba is not alone in this matter; other provinces have rights as well. But before I come to them, does anyone seriously argue that the act of last session was based upon any other consideration than that this government—to put it on the very highest plane—this government and this parliament thought that the old Crowsnest pass rates were as high as the western provinces could stand? Now, that is the highest plane you can put it on. I am not saying they were not; that is not the point. When this parliament seeks to justify its conduct on the basis of the old Crowsnest pass agreement, that is the time this parliament takes a stand there is no defence for whatever. The old Crowsnest pass agreement, if it was an agreement, stood, and its integrity should never have been invaded. That is to say, if the fact of the agreement was to be a rock upon which we stood, then let the agreement remain a fact; do not tear it to pieces and then pretend there is a certain sanctity about what remains. Could any humbug be more manifest? That is what parliament did. But more: If this parliament felt that, no matter what the Railway Commission might think to be fair in the light of the circumstances in the Maritime provinces, in Quebec and in every part of this Dominion—if this parliament felt in the face of the serious conditions in the West that no higher rates could be paid—and that is the best footing upon which we could possibly put our conduct—then the duty of this parliament was to leave the Commission free, but to give power to the government of Canada to pay a part of these rates out of the public treasury. Would that not have been the straightforward conduct? It is what should have been done. If this government felt and this parliament felt—let me repeat—that the rates of the old Crowsnest pass agreement were the highest that could be paid if the West was to be saved from paralysis, they should not on that account have tied the hands of the commission; they should have let the commission do what they felt was fair having regard to all parts of this country. They should have left the Railway Commission a real tribunal with power to exercise its functions and then paid —as it could easily have done with the authority of this parliament—the extra freight out of the treasury of the Dominion. Very well, they took the other stand. They said definitely: "We are going to fix rates on wheat flour and grain going eastward, and we are going to do it even though it should be the opinion of the Railway Commission that such rates are inequitable having regard to the rights of other parts of this country in respect of freights." What was the result? One result which has been depicted in the strong speech this afternoon of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark)—the discrimination that all along had existed, justifiably or not justifiably, against the western passage out of the prairie provinces, was accentuated and duplicated by the conduct of this government and this parliament.

Ever since the Canadian Pacific railway was built, British Columbia has laboured under a discriminatory rate, always justified by the argument that British Columbia was a mountain province and that because of the grade of the railway and the cost of construction—chiefly because of the heavy grade over the mountains—it was only reasonable that a higher rate should be paid. The discrimination has existed all along. There were those who felt it should never have existed. There were those who ever since the Canadian Pacific was built have taken the stand propounded by the hon. member for Burrard this afternoon, who have argued with very much force that when this country undertook to build a railway through those mountains it undertook that the whole of that burden should be the burden of the Dominion of Canada, that no special part of it would be levied on British Columbia alone, and that when you fix extra rates over the mountain section you do impose a certain special part of the burden on the mountain province. There is great force in that argument, but it was resisted—resisted by the Special Committee of the Privy Council, and resisted afterwards by the Railway Commission, both of whom held that a certain amount of differential was justified. Rightly or wrongly, that view prevailed. But the condition against which British Columbia complained has been aggravated because this parliament came in and fixed special rates eastward and said nothing about rates westward. The differential against the westward rate is much greater than it was before. I want to know how the government justifies that. What answer have they to the hon. member for Burrard? What right has this parliament to come in and to magnify the differential under which British Columbia has laboured all these years? Now, let this debate proceed and let us listen carefully for the answer of the government to this contention. British Columbia has a grievance against this administration. British Columbia has been done a grave injustice; other parts of the Dominion have too, and the government cannot expect to be regarded as anything except a tribunal before which they all can come and demand redress at its hands If they had kept out of the jurisdiction that we stepped from in 1903, then they could maintain their position; but they did not keep out. They thought they would get in and get credit for reducing the rates on certain wheat and flour; they thought they would like to be called the party of low freight rates. All right; I say to them now: Be the party of low freights.

I say to this government: Come to British Columbia. Come to British Columbia and at least remove the extra differential you put against that province. Come to Manitoba and restore the rates you prevented Manitoba enforcing for the last fifteen years. Why don't you do it? Come to the Maritime provinces and listen to their complaint against the freight rates under which they labour. You cannot say you have nothing to do with it. You have already done with it. You went into two provinces and for one reason and one reason only, because you wanted votes in this House, for that reason and that alone, you went into two provinces and fixed rates below what the Railway Commission would do, and in that fact you imposed upon other parts of this country served by the railways, burdens that their people had no right to bear at all; you destroyed wholly the position upon which the government of Canada has stood for the last twenty years, that the matter of railway rates and railway control was for the Railway Commission alone.

Now the government is in the position of sheltering itself behind an agreement the integrity of which they claim is important. The shallowness of such position really hardly admits of serious argument. The idea of one party arguing that an agreement into which it entered is sacred and cannot be broken when the other party is at its door asking to be relieved! How foolish that is! The government cannot stand on such paltry talk at all. It cannot stand on it first of all because by the very Railway Act it broke down every other previous agreement. It cannot stand on it, secondly, because that very agreement they themselves took in their hands and tore to ribbons at the moment they were applauding its integrity. So I say, answer to the demand of British Columbia. Answer to the demand of Manitoba. Answer to the demand of the Maritime provinces. What you are ready to do for one part, be ready to do for all. That is the demand of this resolution. Pass this resolution, and the government must answer these demands, and there is no one who voted for the invasion of the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission who has any excuse at all for his vote against this resolution. And this government won't be through merely by voting it down.

Oh, we are told, the government is in the position of a judicial body, and they will be prejudicing the case if they vote on this resolution. They say: Inasmuch as we as a government must decide the appeal of the province of British Columbia against the judgment of the Railway Commission, inasmuch as we have to decide that, you should not bring the matter up in parliament at all until we are through. I would like to ask, what is the use of bringing it up after they are through? After they are through, it is hopeless. I know the government has an appeal to decide. I presume all the evidence has not been heard, but the time for parliament to speak is now. There is no use speaking at any other time. Why, this government has other things to decide besides this. It has to decide what it is going to do about the extension of the rest of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and I presume if we bring that question up hon. gentlemen of the government will say: Oh, please don't bother us with that because we have to decide it later on. There is no use in parliament waiting until the government has decided. The only time parliament can express its opinion is now. Therefore we are expressing it now.

The government members may vote against this resolution because they must decide the appeal. There may be some force in that contention, but there is no force at all to the argument that we should not discuss the subject and press our views on the attention of the government. That is what we are doing to-day and we will continue to press our views, we will continue to press for the government to do for every province what it did for two and we shall do so until the government leaves the proper tribunal intact to exercise its functions as a judicial body should.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have heard my right hon. friend on more than one occasion adopt the casuistical tone which he has adopted to-night, and I notice that he resorts to it particularly when railway matters are under discussion. I call to mind with what simulated indignation in 1917, when he was dealing with the railway problem of that time, he undertook to deny that in 1914 when he steered through the House of Commons of that day the legislation that forever fastened on the Canadian people the ownership of the Canadian Northern railway, he had told parliament and the country that the legislation which he was then introducing for the purpose of taking over the stock of that company, involving the security of the Canadian people by way of mortgage, would have this effect, that in case of default the Canadian people could at once take possession of the property. Yet three years afterwards he came to parliament and introduced a bill for the purpose of enabling the Canadian people to take over that property at a valuation to be paid which three years before he had said would be absolutely forfeited in case of default.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman permit me? I want to make one correction, not because the hon. gentleman particularly has made that statement, but others have. The legislation of 1914 provided that in case of default under the mortgage the government could take over the property upon such terms as parliament provided. Those were the exact words of the statute. When there was default, the government came to parliament to provide the terms upon which we took it over.

Mr. MACDONALD: I have not before me the statute, but I do not need to turn aside from this debate for the purpose of verifying what I say. I well remember, however, my hon. friend's attitude on those two occasions and of myself pointing out in 1917 how the arguments which he had used against the former Solicitor General, the Hon. Mr. Bennett, in 1914, had come home to roost.

You would think, Mr. Speaker, to hear my right hon. friend that we were discussing the question as to whether we should have passed the Crowsnest pass legislation last year. That has been the burden of his song. He has made his speech just one year too late. Why did he not when the report of the committee came before parliament last year stand up and say then in the same vehement tones the words he has used tonight? Why question to-night the action of the government in submitting that proposition to parliament a year ago?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did.

Mr. MACDONALD: But the right hon. gentleman did not do so. On the contrary. Let me call attention to the resolution which my right hon. friend's first lieutenant has moved, and to the resolution which my right hon. friend supported last year. What was that resolution?

That while the Board of Railway Commissioners remains as it is now a tribunal constituted by parliament to fix railway rates without discrimination and in accordance with changing conditions and to meet the needs of the country as a whole, it should be left free—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Reading):

—it should be left free to perform such duty—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friends are applauding too soon.

—without dictation from this House and subject only to review by the Governor in Council as in the Railway Act provided.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD: Yet my right hon. friend to-day puts up his lieutenant from British Columbia to say that that resolution last year was all tommyrot.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD: His lieutenant places on the order paper a resolution which says that notwithstanding the Board of Railway Commissioners, nothwithstanding the statute that deals with the railways of this country and that permitted the commission to deal with rates absolutely with the exception of certain special cases, that we should come in here and undertake to interfere and disregard the Railway Commission altogether. It is an absolute change of policy. Last year it was, leave everything to the commission. This year, play politics for British Columbia and leave nothing to the commission. That is the position my right hon. friend stands in to-day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he will accept now our resolution of last year, that is quite satisfactory to us.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My right hon. friend is at his old game; he knows the value of consistency too well. My right hon. friend is in this position: Last year he solemnly asked this parliament to commit itself to the proposition that there should be no intereference with the Railway Commission. This year he puts his lieutenant up to ask us to absolutely interfere with and disregard the Railway Commission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because you did last year.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Oh, because we did last year? Why, my right hon. friend has been talking for the last two years, day in and day out, about consistency to the extent of even excluding any of his followers from talking about it. Now we have a wonderful exhibition. The changed condition of my right hon. friend is a wonderful exhibition of consistency: Leave everything to the Railway Commission last year; leave nothing to it this year. That is where my right hon. friend stands. What does the resolution mean? My hon friend from Burrard (Mr. Clark) had a resolution on the order paper all during the session to this effect:

That, in the opinion of this House, railway rates westward from the prairie provinces should be reduced to an equality with railway rates eastward from said provinces for similar goods and distances.

Nothing about the Crowsnest pass agreement there; but in order to carry out the policy of my right hon. friend that there should be no interference with the Railway Commission the hon. member for Burrard, in amendment to a motion to go into supply, moves a resolution which declares that what is known as the "mountain scale" of railway rates in British Columbia should be removed, and secondly that the Crowsnest pass railway rates on grain and flour should be made applicable to the whole of Canada.

Mr. HANSON: That is not the resolution.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am quoting from the resolution which my hon. friend from Burrard sent to the Acting Minister of Railways.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not the resolution.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In terms it is. At any rate I will quote the other resolution. The one which I have just read deals with two subjects. The second resolution is thus worded:

That, in the opinion of this House all unfair and unjust discrimination against British Columbia, as exemplified in the "mountain scale" of freight rates should be rescinded—

Practically the same thing, only a change of language——and the special reduction made by the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates on the basic productions of the prairie provinces be extended to the basic productions of all other provinces of confederation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend for Burrard consulted somebody between twelve o'clock this morning and three o'clock this afternoon. The resolution I first read was the resolution which was sent by the hon. member to the Acting Minister of Railways. This is a quick change of policy on the part of this wonderful party. They completely reverse their policy solemnly resolved on last year, which was supported by my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) in a strong argument. All this goes to the winds, and again a policy inaugurated at twelve o'clock in the morning is changed at three o'clock in the afternoon.

The whole burden of my right hon. friend's attack was this: There was something done about the Crowsnest pass rates last year. Because there was something of that kind done you committed a horrible crime, and you now propose to say British Columbia must have her rates dealt with regardless of the Railway Commission or of what the law may be, and we will commit the same crime. That is the policy of my right hon. friend, and he undertook to argue with his usual ingenuity that the provisions of the act of 1897 relating to what is known as the Crowsnest pass agreement had not been maintained in existence or specially preserved because of the fact that the Railway Commission came into existence. I was very much surprised at my right hon. friend's argument on that point. All he needed to have done was to have turned up the statute passed in 1903 which dealt with the agreements which were to be preserved, and he would have found the provision clearly set forth as follows:

> Unless otherwise expressly provided in this act, where the provisions of this act and of any special act passed by the parliament of Canada relate to the same subject matter the provisions of the special act shall be taken to override the provisions of this act in so far as is necessary to give effect to such special act.

Could there be anything more definite, anything more clear laid down in the statutes —that the provisions of the Crowsnest pass agreement were to override the provisions of the general act relating to railways? I will cite the testimony of a witness on the point (Sir Henry Drayton), a gentleman who has had some experience in regard to railway matters. I would like to call this gentleman as a witness to substantiate the position which I have ventured to take in regard to this matter and also to show how the arguments the right hon. gentleman was advancing this afternoon and evening contrast with those of his desk-mate because that gentleman dealing last year with the question said in this House:

> We have had the very limited rate regulation imposed by this agreement in place of the broad and full regulation given under the Railway Act. The agreement here only has to be considered because under the scheme of the drafting of our general railway act, all the conditions of special acts are made to over-ride the general provisions of the Railway Act and to that extent limit its provisions.

My hon. friend went on to say that it was on account of the provisions of the statute of 1903, which preserved intact the Crowsnest pass agreement that parliament was dealing with that very question. My right hon. friend can turn up the debates of last year and see the arguments of his desk-mate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think my hon. friend has misunderstood me; I quite agree with that. I know the general provisions in the Railway Act cannot invade the provisions of special acts. I thought I had made that clear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My right hon. friend did not say that this afternoon. He was arguing that because the provisions of the Crowsnest pass statute were not preserved this government committed a great wrong last year in infringing upon the powers of the Railway Commission and providing the legislation that parliament passed; and because this government did that my right hon. friend says this year that British Columbia and every other province can come in irrespective of what the law may be to-day. That is my right hon. friend's position; there can be no mistake about that. As a matter of law there can be no doubt that since 1903, since the Act constituting the Railway Commission was passed in this country, under the powers of the commission in regard to freight rates—so far as the territory covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement so-called was concerned—the commission had no power to interefere with the provisions of that special act, and not having any power to deal with the matter parliament had to determine whether or not the provisions of that act should be suspended and if so in what degree. It so decided, as is very well known, and my right hon. friend bases his whole position in favour of this resolution of his colleague upon the fact that we did that last year; we violated some holy law; we infringed upon the powers of the Railway Commission; and that consequently British Columbia can come in and do the same thing although it had no Crowsnest pass agreement.

So also in regard to the Manitoba agreement. My right hon. friend is too good a lawyer not to know that when Manitoba came here with the Canadian Northern Railway Company with an agreement to be ratified in 1901 and submitted to parliament the act they did submit, the conditions which were attached at that time by this parliament to the provisions of that agreement were such as were only fair and proper. Let me say also that if the province of Manitoba and the Canadian Northern Railway Company did not choose to accept those conditions they did not have to come here to get legislation. But they did come, both parties came to an agreement, they accepted those conditions and those conditions were in force from 1903 on. To-day my right hon. friend, after a lapse of twenty years, says that the bond must be broken; that notwithstanding the fact that parliament imposed those conditions twenty years ago we must disregard them because parliament permitted the Crowsnest pass railway rates to come into effect last year. That is my right hon. friend's position when you analyze it. I would like to remind my hon. friend for Burrard in regard to his claim that British Columbia lost its control over C.N.R. rates by the action of this parliament and that the person who took away from that province its right to interfere with rates was the right hon. gentleman who is his leader. So that is the situation in which the hon. gentlemen opposite stand in regard to the matter.

Where do we stand on the whole question? The province of British Columbia has not the Crowsnest pass agreement to protect it. She stands like all the other provinces of the Dominion, subject to the provisions of the general Railway Act which deals with the way in which freight rates shall be fixed in this country, and the method by which they should be fixed, as parliament knows, is to go to the Railway Commission, and thence by appeal from that Railway Commission to the Privy Council. Let me remind hon. members what took place, Mr. Speaker. The British Columbia government, speaking through their Attorney General, and speaking formally for the people of that province, petitioned the Railway Commission, under the provisions of the act, and asked them to take up this question. The people of British Columbia went to the tribunal, but I fear—although I do not want to charge any bad faith—that my hon. friends have come here not so much with the idea of coming to a proper tribunal, but with the idea of making a little political gain out of it. That is so plain, in view of the situation, that there can be no answer to it. What occurred? The Railway Commission dealt with this matter fully and completely and delivered judgment on the 30th June, 1922. Then they came to the Privy Council of Canada, and they came in these terms:

> The petitioner the Attorney General of the province of British Columbia, acting on behalf of the province of British Columbia, hereby appeals, by way of petition under section 52 of the Railway Act of Canada and asks that that order be varied, and in part rescinded.

They set out twenty-two grounds upon which it should be varied or in part rescinded, and those grounds involved questions of law and fact. They involved the constitutional question whether the terms of union with British Columbia should be carried out, and various other suggestions as to the effect and the weight of evidence, and as to the law which should be applied in dealing with this matter, which inevitably involves the exercise of judicial discretion by the tribunal before which they came. Let me say, however, with the greatest respect for the decision you arrived at, Mr. Speaker, as to whether this motion was in order that I regard the functions which the Privy Council have to perform as being purely judicial. It is well settled law in this country that the king is present in the Privy Council and we inherit by precedent all the powers which the Imperial Privy Council have exercised. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was a development in Britain from original powers of the Imperial Privy Council and it was specially created for the purpose of dealing with questions of appeals to the council. My hon. friend may laugh at my argument, but I want to say to him that I would be very glad if it were necessary for the purpose of dealing with this question to discuss that matter at length. I could suggest to him some authorities which he has perhaps forgotten. However I do not want to be dragged into a question of that kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think you had better.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The provisions of the statute, and all matters that can be determined upon the appeal by the Privy Council, are of such a character that they demand the closest possible attention and a great amount of research, and the approaching of the consideration of the matter with those feelings with which any judge should be animated in endeavouring to do that which was fair, proper and right in the interests of the whole country. My hon. friend the former chairman of the Railway Commission last year pointed out the danger of any tribunal or any body attempting to deal with the question of railway freight rates without the fullest inquiry, with special reference to the costs of railway transportation, and yet his right hon. leader had the temerity to come to this House and, after an afternoon's debate, without any investigation, on a short statement such as we have been given here, to say that the Railway Commission did not know what they were talking about, that the whole rate question should be decided in this discussion. I believe that the right thinking people of British Columbia and Canada generally will be prepared to wait for that full and complete investigation which the Privy Council of this country will give to this appeal. It is conceded that this question was adjourned until after the session when it will be dealt with, as agreed with the petitioner the Attorney General of British Columbia, who is the legally constituted representative of the province for the purpose of instituting legal proceedings. And the government will approach the consideration of this matter with absolutely open and fair minds with the desire of doing that which is in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): The resolution before the House has two parts to it; one part refers specifically to a longstanding grievance of a province and asks for a statement or declaration by parliament that this grievance be removed. The second portion of the resolution asks parliament to declare that a certain action taken last year, giving certain advantages to a section of the country, should be extended to the whole of Canada. It has been held from time immemorial, as declared, Sir, by your ruling this afternoon, that the time for the people of the realm to submit their grievances to parliament and for parliament to hear and consider those grievances is when the motion is made for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

We have just listened for a very short time to the new minister without portfolio (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou). I take this occasion, the first I have had, of publicly congratulating my hon. friend upon having at last attained a longstanding ambition. Nevertheless, I want to say to him, as an old friend and associate in this House, that he scarcely did himself justice in the very brief but laboured argument which he has just concluded. I shall not deal with it more than for a few moments. First, I will remind him that it ill behooves the kettle to call the pot black. He rather twitted my right hon. leader (Mr. Meighen) with inconsistency. With that I will deal in a moment, but I would remind the hon. member that last year, in the special Railway Committee having this question under consideration, he fought day in and day out, and night in and night out, away into the wee sma' hours of the morning on one occasion at least, for a certain position that he had maintained, with a few others in his party and with some on the other side of the House, and supported a resolution in that committee for the continued suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement. It was stated through the House and the corridors that if he did not have his way there was going to be an upheaval amongst the supporters of the government, and there was, at least, a miniature revolt. Now he comes before the House to-day and puts up, as I have already said, an argument scarcely befitting his ability and experience in this House in support of the weak position the government find themselves in.

Before leaving my hon. friend's remarks, let me refer to what he said regarding my right hon. leader. He attempted to show that the right hon. gentleman this year is inconsistent with his position last year. Last year we stood behind the right hon. gentleman and declared ourselves in the form of an amendment to the resolution, and we stood behind this principle: That the Railway Commission, the properly constituted body, should be the body to determine railway rates. We stood there then, and we stand there to-night. But, Mr. Speaker, parliament, under the leadership, if not under the dictatorship of the government, departed from that principle, abandoned that position and arbitrarily fixed rates in defiance of law, or, at least, what was law previous to that, in defiance of this acknowledged principle and in absolute defiance of the Railway Commission and its long recognized power. That is the answer to my hon. friend. Now we come to parliament to-day and we say this —and I shall risk wearying the House by reiteration of what I have already said— "Restore untrammelled, unhampered and free, the jurisdiction of the Railway Board", or if you will not do that then we say, "Extend this rate-fixing power that you exercised last year to adjust grievances that we claim exist". There is a reason for that. I invite the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) particularly to give consideration to this reason.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where does my hon. friend find the first point he has just mentioned? He says to restore the power to the commission. Where is that in the amendment before the House?

Mr. STEVENS: We do not say so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend said so this minute.

Mr. STEVENS: We do not say so in the amendment; but my right hon. leader stated in his speech a few minutes ago: "Undertake to restore the complete jurisdiction of the Railway Board, and we will withdraw the amendment."

Mr. CAHILL: It was ever thus.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) interjected a remark in an Irish whisper. I did not quite catch it. I was going to say, when I was interrupted, that we have reason to appeal to my right hon. friend. I intend to deal with this matter as broadly as possible, but for the moment I intend to localize my argument. We in British Columbia had this matter before the Railway Board, not for days but for weeks and months. I understand the provincial government spent something over $50,000 in collecting data and in building up its case. That case was before the Railway Board; but we could not get a decision; we were denied a decision, and why? We were denied a decision because the Railway Board were awaiting the action of this government through its committee and its influence on parliament. As a result of the effect of the action of the government, through its members on the committee, and resulting in the action of parliament in the legislation to which we refer, what occurred? I ask my hon. friends, and particularly the Prime Minister, to follow this. If I had under my hand the decision of the Railway Board, I could read it; but it has already been read, and I am sure my word will not be disputed. In the official judgment of the Railway Commission delivered subsequently, they cite the figures submitted to them by the Canadian Pacific Railway traffic expert, Mr. Lanigan. What are the figures? They are an estimate of the losses resulting from the action of parliament. I want the House to get this. Upon ascertaining what that loss was, the Railway Board go on and give their decision. What is their decision? Their decision was based upon that loss; that is, they lowered the freight rates to a certain degree; but they said: "Because of the action of parliament in arbitrarily fixing the rates on the Crowsnest pass agreement, we can reduce rates only so much." Let us reverse the situation. Had parliament not acted at all in rate fixing, the Railway Commission would have given an altogether different decision as regards the case of British Columbia. They say that we have no grievance. Then it is stated that we did wrong in coming to parliament. It was parliament, the House of Commons that interfered with the just and fair decision by the Railway Board of our case, and it was because of the delay in parliament, a delay caused by the government, that we could not get a decision from the Railway Board until that delay was removed.

The Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) this afternoon, instead of complying with our request, instead of arguing the case, after the decision of the Speaker that the matter was properly in order, said that his hands were tied; that he was compelled to be silent, and that he did not dare to debate the question. My hon friend's attitude was not reasonable. In other words, last year they bound the hands of the Railway Board, and to-day the Acting Minister of Railways comes before parliament, and deliberately, voluntarily, shackles himself so that he cannot even discuss this question. We had a most lengthy, detailed ruling by the Speaker, and there is no reason under the sun why the question should not be debated in this House.

I wish to turn to the case itself, and I invite consideration of this problem on as broad and general a basis as I can possibly fix it. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) declared that this was an effort to make party politics. Let me say to him that this whole question was launched by the business men of British Columbia. Over fifty business associations were joined together in the associated boards of trade of that province, and they made their appeal. The Prime Minister received a letter the other day from the Vancouver board, setting forth the terms of this matter. There is no division of political opinion on this question in British Columbia, so far as I have been able to ascertain. The Premier (Mr. Oliver), the government, the boards of trade of British Columbia have all set themselves firmly behind this, as regards that province. What is the problem? I will endeavour to discuss it from the standpoint, not of British Columbia alone, but of Canada. Canada has grown just as a human being grows. In its early days, the strength, population, industry, development of the country were all centred around a circle, Toronto and Montreal, in Ontario and Quebec largely, and in the Maritime provinces. There was practically nothing in the West. I remember when I went West thirty years ago, there was very little there at that time. What happened? Eastern influences, eastern business thrust themselves into the West; transportation thrust itself into the West to take care of the business that developed, and it was perfectly natural that every consideration for freight rates should be based upon that movement of trade from the eastern part of Canada westward. As far as I have been able to learn, in the fixation of rates there has never been any scientific basis; rates on commodities have been fixed most unreasonably and illogically. Yet this was done for what reason? Generally speaking, in the interests of the development of the country, as I frankly admit. But as the country grew and developed, as the western part of Canada settled down, the Panama canal was opened, and an entirely new situation arose. It is about time that Canada recognized the economic effect upon this country of the Panama canal. For years the railway transportation system of the United States resisted the construction of the Panama canal and objected to it bitterly. Why? Because the United States transportation system had been developed exactly as ours was later—thrust from the east into the west. All rates, all movements, all centres of industry and organization were based upon that distribution from the east to the west. But they have abandoned that policy, with the result that they have established a new system, that is, a distribution from the two seaboards inland. That is the result of the opening of the Panama canal. We have a situation very much the same only less accentuated.

Now then, is it possible for Canada to develop its transportation along any logical or reasonable lines? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is. First, I would suggest to the House that we ought to take full advantage of our geographical position. What is that position? I want to impress upon hon. members that we are in a wonderfully advantageous position geographically, having in mind the new world that has been coming into being during the last few years—that really we might say, is just being born. In the last three years we have had a more rapid development of trans-Pacific trade than in the previous thirty years, I think I am safe in saying. On the Asiatic continent there is an opening up of trade that perhaps was not dreamed of ten years ago. There is a movement of traffic from Europe across this continent to Asia exceeding anything we have ever experienced in the past. Where do we find ourselves? We are on the highway between this new growing market in the Orient and Europe. And the part Canada ought to play in this transportation system is not only to develop its transcontinental business, but also to develop its distribution from the two seaboards inland, and, further, to develop this trans-Pacific business. By so doing we shall take advantage of our geographical position. We have the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence route—I refer to this in passing, not for the purpose of injecting it into this debate—and everything that we can possibly do to make that great waterway into the very heart of Canada a highly developed and valuable instrument of trade ought to be done. But I say to this House equally as vigorously that everything possible should be done to give to the centre of Canada—I speak as from the Great Lakes west and from the Pacific coast east into that great inland district, the vast agricultural plains of this country—free and untrammelled access to the seaboard in either direction.

Now, all we ask is fair and equitable treatment. So far as British Columbia is concerned we are not seeking any advantage over the rest of Canada; but we submit that we are entitled to fair and equitable treatment. My hon. friend for Burrard (Mr. Clark) made the statement this afternoon that the Railway Commission fixed the rates through British Columbia. How? On a ratio of one to one and a half. That may not sound very significant, but, as he pointed out, it means that for a given number of dollars you can go three hundred miles east of our boundary to two hundred miles that we can haul the same freight in our territory. It is an arbitrary arrangement. The Railway Commission gives no specific reasons for its action, it just simply says, "We will fix that ratio." That is what is known as the "mountain scale." I am going to deal with it very briefly.

I would ask the House to listen to me carefully at this point because I wish to make it quite clear. The argument is advanced that the excessive cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway over the Rocky mountains is accountable for this "mountain scale" or excessive charge. Let me state a simple fact; it will not require argument to emphasize its significance. Up to a few years ago, I think 1908 or thereabouts, a shipper in Montreal could ship a carload of merchandise—I care not what it might be—2,400 miles to the town of Golden, B.C., for exactly the same freight rate as a shipper in Vancouver could ship a similar carload 450 miles to the same point. Was that discrimination? It is true that that disparity has been lessened and we now can get farther eastward. But I want to make this point not so much to show the excessive discrimination as to answer the argument that the cost of the mountain construction was the reason. Here is my answer. I included in the 2,400 miles that the Montreal merchant shipped his goods was what is known as the Big hill; in other words Golden is west of the Rocky mountains. The mountain haul was included in the eastern end of the system. I am going to repeat that. You could ship a carload of freight from Montreal 2,400 miles westward over the Rocky mountains, that is, including the mountain haul, for the same freight rate that was charged you for shipping a carload of merchandise of equal weight 450 miles from the coast to Golden. That answer cannot be refuted as far as basing this mountain differential on the high cost of construction in the Rocky mountains is concerned. I might further inform the House that the two spiral tunnels—not then there, they have been constructed since—but the big Field hill, which I think had a 5½ or a 6 per cent grade, was included in the long end of that haul, that is, on the Montreal end. It is an absolute answer, Mr. Speaker, to the argument in support of the mountain differential. I assert that that differential is a purely arbitrary differential and should never have been imposed.

Another argument advanced is this: Why should the Railway Board—as is evidenced in the judgment referred to by my hon. friend for Burrard this afternoon—base its decision on Canadian Pacific Railway figures or facts; why should they be the determining factor? Why should they not take the Canadian Northern Railway cost of construction? Or let me put it another way: If they are going to take the Canadian Pacific Railway cost of construction through the mountains—

Mr. FORKE: If I may interrupt my hon. friend? I could not help remembering some of his arguments in the Transportation Costs Committee last year on this same subject.

Mr. STEVENS: The Transportation Costs Committee? What committee is that? I have great regard for my hon. friend and do not want to make him look ridiculous, but I am afraid he is tempting me seriously. I was not on that committee.

Mr. FORKE: Perhaps it was in the House. But I remember hearing the hon. member's arguments at the time, and I think I can find them in Hansard.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend will have difficulty in doing so, for I did not speak in the House on that subject. I will tell him why. I am glad my hon. friend has brought this up because it gives me an opportunity of explaining my silence. When this question came up in the House—and I am going to revert to my argument later nevertheless—Premier Oliver's counsel, Mr. McGeer was in the city. I had him come to my room and discussed with him the advisability of myself and others taking this position on the report of the committee coming before the House. He advised us not to. He said, "Our case is before the Railway Board, and we are well pleased to have it there. We expect a reasonable and fair decision, but if you people of the opposition take it up you will prejudice our case." We refrained therefore from taking any action. Where is my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald)? Was that political trickery, Mr. Speaker? We did not say a word. And what happened? The result was—well, I was going to use a term that perhaps is not quite parliamentary—but we lost an advantage because we tried to play the game above board. We lost an advantage—we lost a political advantage. And furthermore, we got what I shall not describe as unfair treatment, but we did not get anything like what we expected in the way of treatment in connection with freight rates.

Mr. FORKE: I want to be fair to the hon. member. My memory may have played me false; the argument was so familiar to me that I admit I may have made the mistake.

Mr. HANSON: It was the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that you had in mind.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has been mistaken twice; if he wants to try it again, I will give him an opportunity.

Mr. FORKE: Thank you.

Mr. STEVENS: I have no reason to hide anything, and I certainly cannot recall any such remarks as he has suggested. As a matter of fact I have always taken the stand, and I take it to-night, that this is the business of the Railway Commission, but now that the rights of the Railway Commission have been invaded, we are going to claim the protection of this House.

Let me come back to my argument, if I may be permitted to do so. If you are going to take the Canadian Pacific Railway as the standard or the basis or the determining factor in the matter of freight rates in the mountain section because its cost of operation is the highest and because the load to be carried is the smallest—if that is to be the basis, why not apply the same principle in respect to other centres of Canada? Why not apply it in the case of the National Transcontinental in eastern Canada, which unquestionably has a higher operating cost as related to traffic than that which applies to the congested area of the old Grand Trunk system? But that is not done. So I say that the action taken in this case is an arbitrary act which is not based upon any logical or reasonable argument. The National Transcontinental have a water grade from the mountains giving the people of the interior of Canada, western Saskatchewan and Alberta, access to the sea—and when I say access to the sea I refer to something more than the eastward movement of grain. During the last six months we have handled for the Orient 3,000,000 bushels of wheat. I would like the House to appreciate the significance of that. That is not wheat stolen from Fort William for the advantage of other ports; it is not diverted traffic; it is the development of a new market. Besides the 3,000,000 bushels actually handled in that period, about 2,000,000 are in prospect or are on order. That is an evidence of the necessity of recognizing the right—and this is my chief point—of the shipper in the interior to get to the seaboard on equal terms with other parts of Canada. May I pause to make this assertion—and I do not think even my good friend for Brandon, the leader of the Progressives (Mr. Forke) will dispute it: the main problem of Canada to-day, the greatest difficulty facing my hon. friends to my left in their dilemma in the West, is the transportation question. Their difficulty—let me put it a little differently—is the excessive cost of moving a product from the heart of Canada to its ultimate market, either in the Orient or in Europe. I had some figures here bearing on that point, but I will not weary the House with them. It is enlightening, however, to note that for the movement of grain from Edmonton to Fort William, a distance of 1,280 miles, it costs 15½ cents a bushel, while for the movement from Edmonton to Vancouver, 620 miles, or half the distance, it is 15 cents a bushel, or approximately the same. Do my hon. friends not see—I know they do—that if they had as fair and equitable a rate westward as they have eastward, there would be 7½ cents a bushel at once which would be coming to them? Mr. Speaker, that means the difference between success and failure, and they know it.

Let us look at the question from a slightly different angle. As the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) pointed out so eloquently a few weeks ago, you may have a measure of prosperity around, we will say, the province of Manitoba, because they have only a few hundred miles to go to reach the head of the lakes. But by every hundred miles a farm is further removed from the head of the lakes, the cost of transportation is increased and the value of the wheat to the farmer is lowered. So that when you get away up to Edmonton, the return to the farmer is very much reduced. Why, then, should he not have that outlet to the Pacific coast that it would be to his advantage to have?

I wish to turn for a moment to the letter of Mr. Carvell, the Chairman of the Railway Board, I want to preface my remarks in this connection by saying that I do not join with anyone in reflecting upon Mr. Carvell in any way; I have nothing to say on that point at all. But he makes two statements to which I wish to refer. I have already referred to one—he says it is a political move, and in that respect he concurs with the hon. member for Pictou. I want to say that it is not a political move—unless it is a political move by Mr. Oliver, and I have not said it is. There is no difference of opinion on the subject; it is like the oriental question—we are all heartily agreed upon it. However, because Mr. Carvell says it is a political move, are we to be spanked; are we to be punished as a naughty child, and are the farmers of Alberta to suffer, are the merchants of the British Columbia Pacific ports to suffer? Are they not to have the privileges that other sections of Canada have, simply because someone thinks we should be spanked or punished for doing something that is not quite right? But that is not the point to which I wish chiefly to refer. In his letter Mr. Carvell says that the basis of the rate question is the cost of transportation. I think I have dealt with that pretty fully, I have tried to show the House that the cost of transportation is not the factor in the fixing of a rate; an arbitrary method is taken to determine it. In connection with the cost of transportation you have the question of density of traffic. If you have 100 trains a month you can haul that much cheaper than if you have only 25 or 30 trains a month. It has been stated in my hearing that there should not be this lowering of the rates, because the result would be the movement of more cars westward and the hauling back of empties. As a matter of fact, last year and the year before and the year before that the Canadian Pacific Railway hauled thousands of empty cars westward to bring back the merchandise that came in for distribution, to take care of the haulage of lumber, and so on. They hauled these empty cars westward; would it not have been better to send them down loaded with wheat at a slightly lower freight rate, especially if in giving that freight rate no injury was done to any other part of the country? I may say that I sent out for some figures that would verify what I said a moment ago regarding the cost of moving wheat from Edmonton to Fort William and from Edmonton to the coast, and they have now come to hand. I think, however, I have quoted them sufficiently.

I have in my hand an editorial from the Montreal Gazette of March 14, 1923. I want to say that I have always had a very high regard for the Gazette. My hon. friends opposite will say: Of course you have, because you are a good loyal supporter of the Tory party. But that does not necessarily follow unanimously in recent months. However, I do have a very high regard for that journal, and its editorials ought to be given consideration. When it speaks, it speaks with some degree of knowledge and authority. The Montreal Gazette makes three statements to which I wish to refer briefly. I do not refer to them with malice. I refer to them because if they are answered, I think it will largely meet the arguments from many other sources.

They charge British Columbia with this. They call it "British Columbia's Ambitions: (1) To wrest authority from the Railway Commission and transfer it to Parliament." That has been pretty well covered already. My right hon. friend the leader of the government shakes his head, but I think it has been pretty well covered. I would like if it were possible to make that point clearer. I have referred to it I think three times, and I have referred to it with absolute honesty of purpose so far as I am concerned. There is no desire so far as we are concerned, to place in the hands of parliament the control of rates, but parliament having taken control of rates in some sections to the prejudice of others, then I submit that parliament is called upon to exercise that function in regard to these other cases. I repeat what we offered a moment ago; I repeat it to the Gazette and to all they speak for. Let parliament withdraw from the field; let parliament rescind its action of last year, and we will readily abandon this position and leave the matter to the Railway Board. That is all I think I have to say in regard to that.

Then they say next: "(2) to secure a transportation advantage for British Columbia at the expense of the other provinces." I think I have shown already that that is not the case. I repeat, we are asking no advantage over any other section of Canada, but we resent and we resist, and have done so for twenty-five years, the imposition of penalties upon transportation in British Columbia. That is what we resist. We say: Remove these impositions from us; place us on an equal basis with other sections of Canada, and we have no complaint whatsoever. Mr. Speaker, do not let this House think for a moment that we are just bringing this question up tonight. I insisted on bringing it up in 1912 and again in 1914. It has been brought forward half a dozen times, but we have not been able to persuade the board to meet us and largely because of the policy—shall I say?—largely because of the method by which rates have been fixed from time immemorial in this country, namely having regard to the things established during the growth of this country, and disregarding the effect of the Panama canal and the necessity for changing the basis of our consideration of the question.

In the third place the Montreal Gazette says: " to assert a dangerous political and sectional interference with the Canadian National Railway." That is a pretty serious thing. I answer that with a repetition of what I have already said: Is it fair to take the Canadian Pacific Railway with its expensive cost of movement of freight, its high operating cost, or to take the Canadian Natioial Railway with its best grade? Let me put it differently. Surely we can approach these problems from an economic standpoint. That I know will appeal to my hon. friends to my left, if it does not to the government. Is it not sound business, is it not common right, to base your legislation and your executive action upon that which is the cheapest and the lowest cost to the country? Is not that sound? Is it not good business for any section of the country to seek to move its commerce over that route which is the easiest from the standpoint of physical operation? If that is a crime then this charge or statement of the Montreal Gazette is correct. But I submit with all due deference to the strength and influence of that journal, that the case is not proven against us at all. We ask for the Canadian National Railway to be the basis, rather than the Canadian Pacific Railway, through the mountains, because it is the best and the most economical route.

I wish to conclude my remarks with just a brief summary of these facts and arguments.

We ask for consideration because under the general terms of confederation it was never considered that one section of Canada should be discriminated against by other sections. It was never intended under the terms of confederation that a customs duty, for instance, should be imposed by one province as against another. And what is the difference between the imposition of a customs duty and the arbitrary imposition of excess freight rates superimposed on the normal rate? Tell me that. If you move one hundred pounds of merchandise four hundred miles, and it is met at the boundary with a customs duty, that is an imposition of some kind. If you charge an excess rate of freight on that, amounting, we will say, to fifty cents per hundred over and above the rate charged in other sections, that is equally an imposition. So I say that confederation never contemplated the imposition of penalties on one section of the country as against another.

Then I make appeal briefly on the British Columbia government agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway. I do not make a very strong appeal on that ground, but it ought to be considered. They did guarantee those bonds. They did get control of the freight rates. It was taken from them by an act of this parliament, and I submit that consideration ought to be given to British Columbia just as well as to Manitoba, just as well as to the Crowsnest pass agreement. However, I am not stressing that as the basis of my argument, but I do advance it as a reason.

Then we ought to have the right to the full advantage of our geographical position. That should not be denied us; it should not be denied to any section of Canada. Whatever its geographical advantages may be, any section of the country ought to be allowed to take full advantage of its position. We appeal chiefly on the common ground of justice and for the purpose of promoting the spirit of unity and tranquillity,—shall I say?—and good feeling throughout the whole of Canada. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister and this House knows that no large section of this country can rest for any great length of time under a grievance, under an injustice, even though that injustice may not be very clearly defined, under a sense of injustice even—I will put it—and still maintain good feeling and unity throughout the country, and every effort ought to be made by the government and by parliament to remove any reason for a feeling of injustice remaining in the minds of the people of any province.

With this summary I ask the government to give serious consideration to this matter—not to treat this resolution as if it was either a want of confidence motion or simply a political dodge, as my hon. friend from Pictou contends, though not I am sure, with the authority of his colleagues. It is nothing of the kind. It is a seriously meant resolution. This matter must be brought to some sort of focus, and we submit it to the government and to parliament with the request that it receive the consideration which is due to it.

Mr. HERBERT MARLER (St. Lawrence-St. George): In rising to oppose this resolution I would like to make it abundantly clear to the House that I do not oppose it from any desire to see any province deprived of any just right. Nor do I oppose it on the ground that I desire to see retained to any corporation, railway or otherwise, any unjust privilege. Nor do I oppose it on the ground that I desire to see one section of the community preferred to another. On none of these grounds do I oppose this resolution; but I do oppose it because, in my opinion, it strikes at the very root of certain legislative enactments of this parliament and threatens the stability which this country is so much in need of at the present time.

It does seem to me, Sir, perfectly useless discussing on the floor of this House the question of freight rates, the question of discrimination, the question as to whether one province is preferred to another, the question whether the mountain scale should or should not be in effect. To my mind it does seem to be useless to do so and why? Simply because we are not competent in this House, constituted as it is, to discuss matters of that description. I doubt, Sir, if there are very many in this House, outside, the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) who does understand this most complicated question of freight rates, and who can bring to bear that intelligence which it is absolutely essential to bring to bear in a matter of this description. Therefore, it does not seem to me to be competent to take up this complicated question from the floor of this House. Of course it will be alleged, and it has been urged—and let me in the first part of my argument state only in part what I intend to say later on as regards this particular part of the subject—it has been urged I say that this House did interfere on another occasion with the making of freight rates. Sir, I absolutely deny that statement. The simple denial, I quite admit, is not sufficient and I will elaborate that theory later on. What viewpoint, therefore, should we discuss this question from? We must admit that if this amendment is adopted it must be given the force of law and if given the force of law, this House must of itself interfere in the making of freight rates. Therefore I say the amendment should not be adopted on those lines and this House should not interfere in the making of freight rates. If this House does that it immediately takes out of the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners all questions as regards the making of these rates. It establishes a precedent; it takes these questions out of the hands of this board which is clothed with most ample powers, which has functioned fairly and equitably in the Dominion, and places the making of railway rates in the melting pot of politics immediately; it places the making of rates—perhaps the most important part of railway management—as I say in the melting pot of politics. Now, if hon. members can view that situation with equanimity I certainly cannot do so, because I do not think that the making of rates should be taken out of the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The situation as brought forward in this amendment does not require a very difficult answer; it demands a simple answer "yes" or "no." If we answer "yes" what do we do? We constitute ourselves into a judicial tribunal to make and unmake rates at will. What will happen if we do? What will happen if we say to this demand of British Columbia "Yes, we will interfere; we will make these rates ourselves". Similar demands are bound to come from other provinces. Another province will come forward at a later date and say "We want relief from certain rates. We want rates fixed in a certain direction." Can we answer "No" to that demand? The reply would immediately come back "You interfered in the case of British Columbia, why not interfere in a matter of this description?"

The question has been stressed to-night, in discussing this amendment, on more than one occasion that last year this House did interfere in the making of freight rates. The statement has been made time and time again that if we did away with what was done last year this resolution might not have been placed before the House; that the government did come forward last year and did interefere in the making of rates. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that was not the case at all. The government did not come forward of its own volition and change the rates. The government came forward in a perfectly proper way and made an amendment to an act which they were requested to make by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. HANSON: How do you make that out?

Mr. MARLER: I will follow that up. The Crowsnest pass arrangement, as everybody in this House will remember, was made in 1917 between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the government of the Dominion.

An hon. Member: In 1897.

Mr. MARLER: I should have said 1897. At that time, in consideration of certain cash subventions amounting to about $4,000,000, the Canadian Pacific agreed that they would make certain fixed rates extending indefinitely on certain commodities. The company carried out that agreement. In fact they extended the agreement not only to the lines primarily affected but also to other parts of their system. In 1918 owing to the war, and the Chicago award in the United States, the Board of Railway Commissioners raised the rates under the Crowsnest pass agreement. In 1919 an amendment to the Railway Act came into effect; in fact a new act was made at that time. When that act was originally drafted section 325, I think it was, had no provision in it which called for the suspension of the Crowsnest pass agreement. As a matter of fact section 325, as originally drafted, gave the Railway Commission free and ample power to override that agreement. Now, if at that time it was desired to leave the Railway Commission free why was this suspension clause put in the act? My right hon. friend was in power at that time. Instead of that an amendment was brought down to that particular clause 325 which suspended the Crowsnest pass agreement for another three years. That clause could have been omitted at that particular time if it had been so desired.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member not know there was a division between the Commons and the Senate; I speak subject to correction and only from memory. An amendment was added in the Senate. It was not part of the government policy at all. In the collision between the Senate and the Commons the government accepted that. I explained the fact when I was on my feet this afternoon.

Mr. MARLER: I know my right hon. friend did explain it but nevertheless it was accepted by the government of which he was a member at the time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. MARLER: It is perfectly clear it was accepted at that time and it could very readily have happened that it would not have been accepted. But it was accepted and I think by the influence of the member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie). He recommended that the amendment be accepted at the time and it was accepted and was put into effect. The rates were altered, as I have stated in 1918, and then subsequently the 40 per cent rate case came up and the rates were again raised. That 40 per cent rate case was appealed. The appeal was heard and was dismissed by the Privy Council and the general rates inquiry was instituted. The general rates inquiry being instituted, the Board of Railway Commissioners found that they could not make the rates because of the Crowsnest pass agreement, and therefore they came to the government of the time, and stated that they wanted to know expressly what the government intended to do in regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement. The government took the matter up, appointed a committee of the House, the matter was gone into and an agreement was come to as regards grain and flour. That was not in any way a question of interfering with the Board of Railway Commissioners. That board came directly to this House, asking for advice, and they asked for action by the government under a special statute. But there was no similarity whatever, no parallel can be drawn, and it cannot be said that the government overrode the Board of Railway Commissioners, because they did not. It was distinctly and expressly at the request of the Railway Commission that the government acted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why did the government not leave the commission free? And the only way it could do that would be by removing the agreement from its path

Mr. MARLER: No reason why they should have left it free. It was left in the act, not by the present government, but by the government of my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member has been arguing that it should be free.

Mr. MARLER: I was not arguing anything of the kind. I was taking a specific contract—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then if there was a specific contract, why is it not continued?

Mr. MARLER: It was continued.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Only a part of it. Why was it not all continued, if there was a contract?

Mr. MARLER: No reason why it should have been continued. It was a special contract, but that is not the point. The Board of Railway Commissioners came directly to the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They had to.

Mr. MARLER: And asked the government to act, and they did act by way of a committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All of the hon. member's speech up to now has been that the Railway Commission should be free. It is true they came to the government because they had to, on account of it being only a suspension and not a removal. If my hon. friend's first position is right, that the commission should be free, how does he justify the government in refusing to make it free?

Mr. MARLER: They did not ask to be made free.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They could not ask to be made free. They simply had to know the will of parliament. If, as he says, and as he has argued up to this minute, that the commission should be free—and I agree with him—how does he justify the government in declining to take the only step to make it free?

Mr. MARLER: If the will of parliament had been made known by the government of my right hon. friend by leaving in section 325 of the act, which dealt with this particular agreement there was no reason why that will of parliament should not have been varied in whole or in part by parliament itself. This is an entirely different matter. There is no agreement at all in effect. There is not a shadow of an agreement in effect. This is an entirely new thing, and if this resolution is put through, they will have to act as if there had been no agreement at all. That is the difference, and I am surprised at my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no difference in principle. If the hon. member follows me at all, he will see that the suspension made it necessary to act. The fact that it was a suspension was in no way the will of the previous government. It was something it had accepted from the Senate, just as this government last session accepted what it would rather not have accepted from the Senate. That made it necessary to act. If, when it was necessary to act, the government agreed with what the hon. member has been arguing, that the right course and principle is to leave the commission free, why did they not take the step to leave the commission free?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government did take that step.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It did?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Left the commission free?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Left the commission free.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What about grain and flour?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It did not provide that the suspension should cease completely in one year, but in two years it would be at an end.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Crowsnest pass agreement will be removed at the end of two years?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government took the rational course of so legislating as not to embarrass existing industrial conditions; it certainly made it clear that after one year the government might have power by order in council to extend the period of partial suspension, but at the end of that time the suspension would be completely removed, and that leaves the commission exactly where it was before my hon. friend's government and his friends interfered.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How does re-imposing the agreement leave it free? The commission can only be free when all agreements are gone.

Mr. MARLER: It is not a question of re-imposing the agreement. The agreement was there all the time. The agreement was agreed to by the government of my right hon. friend. He talks about the senate bringing down an amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We had to agree to that amendment.

Mr. MARLER: The right hon. member did agree to an amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The agreement was made in 1897, and it was agreed to by those who made it. It was a dead letter till 1917, when we sought to remove it, but we accepted the compromise of the Senate suspending it. The late government was never a party to it in any way, and nothing was done till 1917.

Mr. MARLER: My hon. friend is going back to the old argument. I thought everybody in the House understood the matter clearly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So did I.

Mr. MARLER: How can my hon. friend say that he did not accept this amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie)? I thought I had Hansard containing his words, but I find I do not have it here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not want to take an advantage, I will admit it. I know there were some who wanted the amendment, but the government took its stand, and only accepted the suspension as a compromise with the Senate. It is unfair to try to make it a matter of government policy on that point.

Mr. MARLER: I am not trying to be unfair, but I think the argument the hon. member advanced to-night is fundamentally unfair, when it is suggested to us "You wipe out what you did last year, because you interfered with the Railway Commission, and we will then and there withdraw this amendment." The whole argument is absolutely and fundamentally unfair. I do not deny anything the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) has said, or anything my hon. friend for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has stated. All that they say may be founded on fact. It may be a necessity that they should have lower freight rates and that the mountain scale should be removed; all these things may be necessary, but what I say, and what I repeat, is that fundamentally the argument advanced by the other side of the House is unfair, when they try to impose on this side of the House, and on the government, by saying "Last year you interfered with the Railway Commission; go ahead and interfere with them this year." I say we did not interfere with them. They came to this House and asked for advice, and the agreement on the statute book was varied the same way as this parliament could vary any other act of parliament, and no regulation of the Railway Commission was varied in any shape. I think my argument is a sound one, and the position I still adhere to is that the Railway Commission should be left in charge of rates. It is no doubt the intention to leave them in charge of rates, and the government has no intention of interfering with them at all.

I wonder what attitude the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) will take on this resolution. What can the resolution do? What effect will it have? It will have one effect and one only, and that effect will be to remove from the Railway Commission the making of rates. I wonder what the hon. member will have to say in connection with a resolution of this kind. No man in the House knows the question of rate making better than he does. Is he going to support or to favour the resolution? Does he intend to make the Railway Commission into a dried up mummy or into a rubber stamp? What is his judgment about it?

The sum and substance of this resolution means nothing more and nothing less than that the Railway Commission should be done away with, and the railways thrown into the pot of politics. That is the meaning of this resolution and that is one of the reasons why I do not support it. Questions of discrimination and questions of rates have been taken up time and again by the Railway Commission and by no less than four chief commissioners. Starting out in 1909, Mr. Justice Mabee took up the question of western freight rates. My hon. friend from West York took it up, and in a most admirable manner went into the whole question with the utmost care, and brought down an admirable judgment in all respects. Then the 40 per cent rate came along. Mr. Carvell took the matter up in September, 1920, and later on the "General Rates Inquiry" was taken up. Why was the general rates inquiry taken up? It was taken up simply because certain provinces were not satisfied with the 40 per cent rate. I think the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) will correct me if I am wrong in that respect. What is the order of the Privy Council that was passed regarding the taking up of that particular matter? This is what is stated in Privy Council Order No. 2434 of the 6th October, 1920, passed by the government of my right hon. friend:

> In connection with this appeal it must be observed that one of the duties, if not indeed the principal task of the Board of Railway Commissioners, is to determine upon application, what are fair and reasonable rates to be charged from time to time for the various services performed by public utilities under the jurisdiction of the board. In such determination there must of course be taken into account, as has been done in the present case all relevant circumstances such as changes in the scale of wages and the cost of materials.

Then it goes on to say, and this is what I desire to point out:

> For Your Excellency's advisers to take upon themselves to weigh the evidence adduced and substitute their own judgment for the judgment of the board upon the question of fact arising on the issue and to be determined upon such evidence would defeat the purpose for which the Board of Railway Commissioners was created and would in the end be highly prejudicial to the public interest.

That is the order in council passed by the government of my right hon. friend, and that is exactly what this amendment to the motion to go into Supply means to take out of the hands of the Railway Commissioners, namely, the fixing of rates. It is not necessary for me to read to the House various extracts from Hansard as to the opinions of different hon. gentlemen opposite regarding the Board of Railway Commissioners, and I do not intend to speak at any greater length respecting this matter. What I wish to make abundantly clear is that, in my opinion, this is not the place to discuss the question of freight rates, nor whether there has or has not been discrimination. This is not the place to state whether the mountain scale should be removed or not. I do say that the question of the mountain scale or the question of discrimination should not be discussed in this House; but I say that these questions should be taken up at the proper time and in the proper place.

10 p.m.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend permit me? I do not wish to embarrass him. We were prepared to discuss this question two months ago; but at the request of hon. members opposite, and very largely for the convenience of the acting minister himself, it was put off repeatedly. It is not through any fault of ours that this question is coming up to-day instead of two months ago.

Mr. MARLER: I do not refer to the particular moment of its being discussed. What I mean is that the House of Commons is not the proper place to discuss freight rates. The proper place to lay a complaint with regard to freight rates is with the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. LADNER: Did the hon. gentleman think that way last year?

Mr. MARLER: Certainly I thought that way last year.

Mr. LADNER: Did he vote that way?

Mr. MARLER: Certainly I voted that way last year. I have been trying to infuse into my hon. friend the idea that last year we did not interfere with the Board of Railway Commissioners. Has he studied conditions himself? Is he aware what did happen last year? I am surprised at my hon. friend asking such a question.

Mr. LADNER: If my hon. friend asks for information, we certainly know what happened last year. We know that the effect of the action of the government made it impossible to give to British Columbia that degree of justice which was given to the rest of Canada.

Mr. MARLER: I cannot exactly follow the argument of my hon. friend. Last year we were dealing with a specific act, nothing more and nothing less, an act which had been on the statute book and which this parliament was perfectly right in changing in whole or in part, if it thought fit. Everything in connection with that act, the reason it was changed and the manner in which it was changed by a committee going into the whole question, was fair and equitable in every respect. I am opposed to this resolution, and I shall vote against it for the grounds which I have given.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks that I intend to make, I will endeavour to adhere to the resolution more closely than some of the members who have preceded me. There is no question that British Columbia is a unit in demanding justice as regards the discrimination of freight rates against her. She is practically unanimous in that matter; but I fear she is not and will not be unanimous in the presentation of this resolution in this way and in this manner and at this time in this House. British Columbia is as unanimous against the discrimination in freight rates as she is on the Asiatic question, and last year when that was brought up in the House, all the members from British Columbia got together and presented the case with a united front. I think this impressed the other members more because although of different political opinions, we were able to get together on a common ground. I think it would have lent more force to the arguments and prevented the suggestion of partisanship if that had been done in this case to-day; but I fear that would have been, under present conditions, almost impossible, because those members—what shall we call them?—who are non-conservative members from British Columbia, would hardly have lent themselves to the resolution as it is drawn.

A great deal of history has been given in regard to this case this afternoon, and I notice with some surprise that very little credit has been given to the Hon. John Oliver, Premier of British Columbia. I hold no brief for the Hon. John Oliver. He had the unpardonably bad taste to come into the district where I was trying to be elected and to canvass against me, with the result, no doubt, that he contributed to the sweeping defeat that I sustained on that occasion. At the same time, when a man has done a good and zealous work on any particular matter, it is only justice, whatever his political affiliations may be, that he should be given credit. The history begins in the time of Sir Richard McBride. His friends here were in political sympathy with him, but he was not able to achieve any concrete results. Mr. Oliver took the matter up on its merits; he engaged experts, and he spent, at the expense of the province, some $50,000. I mention this sum to give to the members of the House an idea of what an immensity of detail this highly technical question involved, the investigations that had to be, and the men who had to be employed, before a real grasp could be got of the situation. He employed one counsel to devote his whole time to the matter. Mr. Oliver, himself, spent weeks on the subject, and at last they got a grasp of it, held, I believe, by no other two men in Canada. Perhaps some members of the Railway Commission might have a greater grasp of railway matters as a whole; but on the subject of British Columbia rates, there is no question that the Hon. John Oliver and Mr. McGeer have a grasp superior to that of anyone else. They brought the matter by repeated hearings before the Board of Railway Commissioners, the hearings lasting over a period of weeks. There were no discursive speeches as we have here, but hard facts were brought out by a lawyer and one witness at a time. Finally they got a decision from the Railway Commission, not what they were contending for; but as regards this mountain scale which has been alluded to so much, the decision gave a remission of practically one-half of the discrimination. Where it was $2.50 before, it was reduced to $1.25. There were other matters of discrimination claimed as well; but on this mountain scale rate, Mr. Oliver by his representations before the Railway Board secured that reduction. Why have some of our members from British Columbia not given Mr. Oliver any credit in that regard? I leave that for them to answer. Not satisfied with that reduction of 50 per cent, Mr. Oliver appealed through his counsel to the only appeal he could get, namely the Privy Council of Canada. That case is now under advisement before them. It has been in a manner tried—half tried at any rate—and it is now awaiting further hearing after the conclusion of this session.

Now, I do not wish to reflect upon the motives—I have neither the right nor the desire to do so—of the introducer of this motion, the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark). In passing I may say that I know him to be in the town from which he comes a gentleman of the highest standing and most honourable character. But possibly being a somewhat new member he did not thoroughly appreciate the plow he was putting his hand to; I think he will realize that before the end of this debate. While this motion ostensibly seeks to be in the best interests of British Columbia, I submit that by its wording and the time of its introduction it can only have three results—first, to do considerable harm to the interests of British Columbia; second, perhaps to create a certain amount of embarrassment for the government of the day; and third, possibly—possibly I say—to manufacture a certain amount of political capital of very dubious value for the Conservative party in British Columbia.

One of three things must happen to this resolution: It can be withdrawn, it can be passed, or it can be defeated. I will deal with them individually. We will suppose it is withdrawn. Then we have wasted the time of this House for a whole day at an expense of something like $20,000. We have had no new light thrown on it whatever. The superficial manner in which we have had to deal with it has not affected the question in the slightest. Can we discuss in a few hours in this superficial way and with many of the members out in the lobbies taking no interest in the subject, give it that frank impartial consideration such as our courts will give it after weeks of study of the highly technical evidence submitted to them? It is impossible. We cannot come here and in a few hours decide such an important and intricate question like a meeting of a Young Women's Christian Association dealing with the academic question: Is the pen mightier than the sword? Or something of that kind.

On the other hand, if the motion passes what happens? The defeat of the government follows because the resolution is introduced as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and its passage would mean the defeat of the government. The question is under advisement by the government to-day. We in British Columbia are earnestly hoping for a favourable decision. Will we advance our case much by defeating the government on this motion? Surely it is the part of wisdom to afford them a chance to give us what we want. Why swap horses in the middle of the stream? We—and I am only speaking of British Columbia—have more to gain by letting this matter go on and seeing what we do get out of the decision of the Privy Council. Then it will be time enough to come to this House if we do not think we have got justice from the Privy Council.

So much for the passing of the resolution. Now, if it is defeated I submit the result will be to very much prejudice British Columbia's case before the Privy Council. The Privy Council consists of what—ten or fifteen men, some of whom are bound to be inimical to our desires, and if we defeat this resolution it will give those members of the Privy Council an opportunity to use this argument: Well, the House, the highest court of Canada, consisting of 234 men, have decided against British Columbia. Why should we, only a cabinet of a dozen or fifteen men decide differently? I maintain that if we defeat this motion to-night it will prejudice our case, and it is for that reason that I deplore the introduction of it, and state with all sincerity that, however innocently it may have been introduced, it was not introduced in the best interests of British Columbia.

I say that the net result of this resolution can only be the production of a certain amount of political capital. Just to show with how little consideration for the interests of British Columbia this matter was brought forward let me quote the original resolution placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark), which we would have been debating at that time if it had come up when he expected it would some weeks ago. It is as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, railway rates westward from the prairie provinces should be reduced to an equality with railroad rates eastward from said provinces for similar goods and distances.

That would mean that starting in the prairie goods would be carried westward to British Columbia for the same rates as they would be carried eastward from the prairies; but no provision was made at all for dealing with the vital question in British Columbia—the passage eastward from British Columbia of our produce, our fish, lumber, paper and other products. These would have been handicapped worse than they are now because it would have given an opportunity to the eastern manufacturer to ship his goods more cheaply west, whereas we would have had no reductions in shipping east. Take fish, some members in this House were attacked the other day because we asked that the fish canners of British Columbia should gradually introduce white men in place of Japanese in their canneries. We were held up as men trying to injure their business. But what greater injury could be done to them than that suggested in this resolution? Let me show how it works. There is a certain kind of herring—I forget the name—put up in British Columbia. It competes with a similar kind cured in Holland. A manufacturer in British Columbia told me that owing to the freight rates his product from British Columbia could not go any further east than a point some distance west of Winnipeg, say 100 miles, where it came in competition with the product from Holland. The Dutch product could be laid down at that point and the British Columbia product could not compete with it in the Winnipeg market. If this resolution had gone through at that time this point would have been still farther west and would have given a direct advantage to the manufacturer and producer in the East and a direct disadvantage to the manufacturer and producer in British Columbia. To show that that is the case I shall quote a few words from a telegram sent by the Board of Trade of Vancouver to the member for Burrard—and I am not, as was done in a provincial legislature, reading someone else's correspondence, because I am quoting from the newspapers. The Board of Trade of Vancouver is a body which with all moderation I might say contains its full share of gentlemen of the same political leaning as the member for Burrard. I will quote as follows:

> We would point out that this resolution,—

Referring to this resolution I have just read.

> —if carried, would be against the interests of British Columbia's industries. . . . The whole resolution, while greatly assisting grain movement westward,—

Mr. CLARK: I presume my friend is talking about the former resolution which was on the order paper, not the resolution which we are discussing to-day?

Mr. NEILL: My hon. friend is perfectly right.

Mr. CLARK: Then I presume my hon. friend knows that the argument on the other resolution would be exactly the same as the argument on the one under discussion?

Mr. NEILL: That is what I anticipated, that had this resolution in its original form been introduced—he himself has used the words that I intended to use—the argument would have been the same, and presumably the results would have been the same. His object in bringing it forward is, I presume, to pass it, and if it had been passed in its original form the strictures of the Board of Trade would have been justified for it would have had the effect I have been quoting. It would have created a most serious, if not disastrous, position for British Columbia. Let me quote further from this Board of Trade resolution:

> It would hamper British Columbia's industries. We would suggest that you refer to the provincial government application for removal of discrimination March 18th, 1921, in the hands of the Railway Commissioners—> —to which application we, as a board, are committed and feel that it is in the best interests to press for. Your resolution gives no consideration to goods moving eastward from British Columbia, which is absolutely essential.

That is John Oliver's kick

I only quote that to show how lightly this matter was decided to be introduced when the Board of Trade in the very home town of the hon. member—the centre and industrial capital of British Columbia—has come out and repudiated the action taken by the hon. member.

Mr. CLARK: May I interrupt again? My hon. friend does not suggest, does he, that my argument for the removal of the "mountain scale" could not have been considered by the Privy Council on the other resolution, which was originally drafted dealing mainly with the extension of the Crowsnest Pass legislation to grain and flour going westward? Does he suggest for a moment that the Privy Council could not have listened to the argument on the "mountain scale" and dealt with it just as they might deal with it to-day or after this session?

Mr. NEILL: I must frankly confess that I do not understand the hon. gentleman's argument, and I think other hon. members do not understand it either. It is an illustration of how incompetent we are in this House to go into a subject of such a highly technical character and lightly pass a resolution upon it.

There is another aspect of this question I want just to touch on—another thing that leads me to question the sincerity of this resolution. I refer to the attempt to wave the flag, as it is popularly termed. I have never known it to fail, when a man gets up to deal with a question that has nothing whatever to do with nationalism or patriotism and proceeds to what is known as waving the flag—that he has a rotten argument and is trying to cover it up in that way. There are some politicians who cannot discuss the removal of a dust-bin from a country post office without waving the flag and suggesting that the opponents of the proposed removal are animated by lack of patriotism. Nothing is more prejudicial to the true and real influence of patriotism than its being invoked in this way for political effect. We have had here to-day the usual flamboyant references to "The British Empire," to "this Great Canada of ours," and the "Virility of the race" that inhabits it. I assure the hon. member that the British Empire would probably have muddled along if this discussion had not taken place at all; that Canada would remain as great, if not have been even a little greater, had we not wasted the time and money that we did this afternoon on this subject, and as to the virility of the race, that, I submit, has nothing whatever to do with freight rates in British Columbia. When we take the facts as we see them here; when we realize that the withdrawal of this resolution renders it useless and that its passage or defeat is calculated to do actual harm to our best interests in British Columbia, I would ask hon. members of this House to consider—and I would go further than that; through the pages of Hansard I would ask the people of British Columbia to consider very carefully—whether this resolution was introduced with the idea of advancing the best interests of the province we come from, or whether it is a piece of political, shall I say, claptrap?

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in a rather peculiar position. Although a member representing British Columbia, I am not allowed to present the arguments that would be expected from one coming from that province. It has already been explained by the hon. Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) that the government of British Columbia, through its Attorney General some months ago made an argument before the Railway Commission of Canada dealing with what they alleged to be discrimination in the matter of freight rates. The government of that province, through its Attorney General, did not accept the findings of the Railway Commission. Appeal was taken to the Privy Council, and, as it has been explained by the Acting Minister of Railways, argument has been partly heard, presented by the Premier of the province and also by counsel representing the people of British Columbia through its government. Joined with British Columbia was the province of Alberta, Mr. McGeer acting as counsel for both provinces. Argument was heard extending over some three or four hours on just one phase of the question, the constitutional aspect. The government having received an intimation from the Premier of British Columbia and his counsel that it would take from two to three days to present fairly before the government the argument on behalf of British Columbia, it was by mutual consent decided that it would be inadvisable to proceed with the further argument at that time but that the matter should be delayed until after the session of parliament in order that the government might have an opportunity of giving fair consideration to the question, which is an important one to British Columbia and to western Canada generally. The district represented by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) has been agitating this question for a great many years, because it was the Vancouver Board of Trade which in 1912 presented the case to the Railway Commission. On that occasion the Vancouver Board of Trade did not accept the findings of the Railway Commission; they appealed to the government of which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) was a supporter—and with what result? The government of that day advised that the case be again referred back to the Railway Commission. It has been stated in this discussion that the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be taken as a standard or basis for the fixing of rates, but that the Canadian National, built on extraordinary grades through the mountains, four-tenths of one per cent grades —should be taken as a standard in that respect. But I am told that in 1912, when the government of the day referred that matter back to the Railway Commission, they indicated to that body that the Canadian Northern was a colonization road and should not therefore be taken as a standard, but that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be taken as a standard.

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend permit me? The Canadian National, or the Canadian Northern, as it was then known, was not completed for some years after that application was made.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I quite understand that. It is true that the Canadian Northern was not then a part of the railway system of Canada; it was then under construction. After it was completed it was under the control of the government of British Columbia in the matter of freight rates, but my hon. friends opposite took that control away from the province, saying that as the road was a work for the general advantage of Canada the Railway Commission should control its rates. Now, the hon. member for Burrard has projected a discussion this afternoon with a view, supposedly, of dealing in one sitting with a question which the premier of British Columbia and his counsel have had under the closest consideration for the last two years, a question which they advised the government it would take two or three days to argue. I say that the hon. member for Burrard this afternoon undertook, by an incomplete recital of argument, to convince the House that it should support his resolution—a motion which, if carried, meant the defeat of the government. Is my hon. friend playing fair with his constituents when he jeopardizes the case which the people of British Columbia through their Attorney General and their Premier have taken two years to prepare for the consideration of the Railway Board and of the Privy Council of Canada? I claim that he has not done so. I think it is most unfortunate that my hon. friend has had the hardihood or lack of judgment to throw this case on the floor of parliament with the incomplete study he has given it and the incomplete argument that he has been able to submit to the House this afternoon. He complained bitterly that he was not allowed to introduce the first resolution he had on the order paper earlier in the session because it was not convenient for the government, and he withdrew it. We find now that the resolution he originally intended to introduce was not in the interests of the province, and that his resolution presented to-day is an entirely different one. He did not tell us that in his argument this afternoon, but he insisted on bringing this matter forward on a motion for going into supply in order to force a vote of want of confidence in the government on this question. For what purpose? Surely he did not expect that the members from British Columbia who are supporting this government are going to vote for a resolution presented in the manner he has presented his resolution this afternoon. I think not, I think the people of British Columbia would have preferred my hon. friend not to meddle with this question; I think they would have much preferred that he allow it to pass through the ordinary channels of legal procedure and come before the Privy Council in the ordinary way, where proper argument could be presented. But he has failed to do that. I hope even now that he will have the good judgment and the good sense to withdraw this resolution, rather than let it go to a vote and receive the defeat which I am satisfied it will receive.

Mr. STEVENS: Is not my hon. friend aware that the Hon. Mr. Oliver has repeatedly complained because we have not brought this question before the House? In the same breath might I ask does the hon. member object to the discussion of this question by the House?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no objection to the discussion at all, and I have no control over Mr. Oliver. If Mr. Oliver wishes this to come before the House, I say that it is a perfectly proper question to bring before the House, but it never should have been brought before the House as it has been to-day as a want of confidence motion. There is a proper time and a proper place to bring it before the House, and if it had been brought forward at such a time I might have been free to discuss it. My hon. friend was in this parliament in 1912 when this question was before the Railway Committee, and referred to the Privy Council. Did he discuss it at that time?

Mr. CLARK: Is my hon. friend aware of the fact that the government of which he is a member prevented a discussion of this question on the floor of this House as a private member's resolution, and when my hon. friend might have taken part in the discussion? As a member of the government I think he might have tried to see that the matter was given an opportunity to be discussed in this House as a private member's resolution.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not so. My hon. friend's resolution stood on the order paper for weeks and was called and let stand time and again.

Mr. CLARK: That is not so. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): But we understand to-night that that resolution was not a fit and proper resolution.

Mr. GRAHAM: Good thing for him he did not get the chance.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He was taken to task for it by the Vancouver Board of Trade. It is not my purpose to continue this discussion. I repeat, I hope my hon. friend will have the good judgment to withdraw his resolution at this time rather than have it suffer defeat at the hands of the House.

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): The question of freight rates is one of the most interesting and I think all members will agree with me, one of the most complicated questions which might well be brought before this House for its consideration. With the political arguments which have been advanced I have little concern, but with the desire to secure legitimate reduction in freight rates so far as the western provinces are concerned I have every sympathy, and I am prepared under the proper circumstances to lend my every support. We in western Canada, especially in the interior provinces do, I think it must be admitted, suffer severely from excessive freight rates. But I recognize, that it is a very difficult and a very complicated problem. It is one which requires consideration, not for days, but for months by competent bodies to arrive at a proper conclusion.

The double-barrelled resolution introduced by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) this afternoon has two purposes: First of all he wants to eliminate the so-called mountain rate. Secondly in some mysterious way which I cannot comprehend, he desires to grant the benefits of the Crowsnest pass agreement to all the basic commodities produced in every part of Canada.

With regard to the first question, the mountain scale, or differential as it is sometimes called, hon. members will recollect that this differential has been in existence ever since the Canadian Pacific railway was constructed. I do not know where it came from. I suppose it was introduced by way of analogy from the American states to the south, but in any event in 1914, I think for the first time, it was placed upon a rational, logical basis. The then chairman of the Railway Commission, Sir Henry Drayton, in the judgment of the court gave as his reason the high cost of construction of the railway and the high cost of operation, and, let it be said that the British Columbia counsel who were associated with that case concurred with that particular view, that is, that there was a higher cost of railway construction in British Columbia, and in addition a higher cost of railway operation. I am satisfied that any hon. member of this House who has ever travelled over the Canadian Pacific railway in the province of British Columbia in the winter time or in the spring or fall cannot but have come to the conclusion that both these contentions are absolutely sound and absolutely justified. In that judgment the then chief commissioner of the Railway Board held that the differential was not only just, but that it was necessary. To that decision I have not the slightest objection. Not only did the judgment do that but it recognized the existence and the economic necessity of distributing centres not only in British Columbia but also in the adjoining province of Alberta. As a result of that long existing differential confirmed in effect by that judgment of the Railway Commission, distributing and jobbing houses have been built up in several centres in the province of Alberta. We have a large number of such institutions in Edmonton, we have them in Calgary, in Macleod and Lethbridge. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested on the strength of that decision, and hundreds of men have been employed. Now is this House, on a casual consideration of this question, going to imperil that investment, because that is exactly what would be done if this mountain rate were ruthlessly removed at the present time, and at the same time without giving to the consumers in Alberta or elsewhere any adequate compensation for such a removal.

Mr. LADNER: How does the hon. gentleman arrive at that in view of his statement that the elimination of the mountain rate will strengthen competition but will not help the consumer?

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend did not catch my remarks. I said the elimination of this mountain rate will imperil perchance—I am not suggesting that it will entirely—the existence of these institutions, and at the same time I suggest it will not give the benefit to the consumer which some people suggest.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does my hon. friend allege that Alberta has not had the benefit of competition?

Mr. SHAW: I am anxious to see competition; I am anxious that primarily consumers shall get the benefit of it.

Owing to the various rate increases this mountain differential was exaggerated; I think that British Columbia did so suffer as a result of these increases. In 1921 British Columbia took its case before the Railway Commission. That case, as hon. members will realize, extended over a period of some two or three months. During its progress much evidence was heard, much argument was given, and in every possible way the case received the fullest consideration. I think some twenty-six different witnesses were heard from the city of Vancouver alone. Representatives were also heard representing Kamloops, Calgary, Edmonton, and all the western centres. It was pointed out by the Vancouver representatives that the rates were so extremely burdensome, that the Vancouver industries and industrial enterprises could not do business under them. In the very next breath some of the witnesses told the commission that industries had increased in Vancouver five-fold since the year 1912; that there were 1,200 industrial enterprises in Vancouver at that time, and that new industries were being added every day. So that in one breath the witnesses told us about the tremendous rate burdens from which they were suffering, and in the next breath they declared they were making this very substantial progress—a progress, I suggest, which cannot be paralleled by perhaps any other comparable centre in Canada. The Railway Commission having heard that evidence came to the conclusion that the mountain scale should be cut in half. Subsequently, British Columbia appealed from that judgment and that appeal is the one that is now under consideration by the Privy Council.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has spoken of the very grave discrimination from which British Columbia suffers. I have no complaint to make with regard to the presentation of British Columbia's case. I have every sympathy with that province in its demand for lower freight rates; but I do ask the people and the representatives of British Columbia not to put Alberta in exactly the position they are asking to be relieved from. Let me illustrate. Under the conditions existing at the present time, owing to the fact that Vancouver has a special transcontinental rate compelled by water competition and although it is 640 miles farther west than Calgary we find that on all commodities shipped from Montreal, and similar places east, Vancouver has a much lower rate than Calgary enjoys. There is a very grave discrimination against Calgary so far as west bound products are concerned. I am not going to trouble the House with a whole list of these discriminations, but I do want to give just one or two illustrations which may be of some interest. Take the matter of bars, iron and steel bars, shipped from Montreal to Calgary, a distance of 2,240 miles. We have a rate on carload lots of 192 cents per hundred pounds. The rate from Montreal to Vancouver for the same material, a distance of 2,882 miles, is only 65 cents per hundred pounds by carload lots. Shipping the same goods in less than car-load lots to the city of Red Deer which, mark you, is some 95 miles north of Calgary we find that these goods can be shipped from Montreal, through Calgary, to Red Deer, a distance of 2,335 miles, for 222 cents per hundred pounds, whereas similar goods shipped from Montreal to Vancouver and back again, through Calgary, to Red Deer cost 185 cents per hundred pounds. The same situation exists with regard to wire rods, and I could go on and give several instances of such unjust discrimination in so far as the distributing centres of Alberta are concerned. If you take off this mountain differential, then you discriminate to just that extent further against the distributing centres in Alberta which have been largely built up on the faith of the judgment of a former Chief Commissioner of the Railway Board.

Mr. STEVENS: Is my hon. friend arguing for the permanence of the mountain differential?

Mr. SHAW: Not at all. What I say is this: If you are going to remove the mountain differential it is only proper, when these discriminations do exist, to consider the question as a whole and not only one phase of it. My suggestion is that in doing justice to British Columbia see to it that you likewise do justice to Alberta.

Mr. LADNER: Has my hon. friend read the resolution? That is exactly what it aims at.

Mr. SHAW: I am not so sure that that is exactly the terms of the resolution. The resolution does not say anything about giving the distributing centres of Alberta a rate from the east, so far as mileage is concerned, in comparison with the special rate which Vancouver enjoys.

I simply want to point out one or two other things. British Columbia has not done too badly so far as railway freight rates are concerned in comparison with the province of Alberta. I suggest to this House that no province has been discriminated against to the extent that Alberta has. In the first place, as I have mentioned before, Vancouver has the benefit of a special transcontinental rate, water compelled, by reason of her location on the Pacific coast. In the second place she has special commodity rates east bound which are much lower than any possible class rates, or any special consideration, received by the province of Alberta or any part of it. I need only instance the special rate which British Columbia enjoys with regard to the shipment of lumber, the special rate which that province has with regard to the shipment of rice, and several other commodities. In fact I gather—and I think I got the information from the 1914 judgment I have referred to—that 80 to 85 per cent of British Columbia's east bound products enjoy special commodity rates lower than any rates which Alberta enjoys. Not only does British Columbia have these special privileges but, in addition to that, she has her class rates on special constructive mileage. That is, British Columbia is given the right in fixing the class rates of considering 424 miles equivalent to, I think, 290 miles. These are some of the special considerations enjoyed by British Columbia which are not vouchsafed—certainly not to the same degree—to the province of Alberta. Therefore, I say that while I do not dispute the claim of British Columbia for the elimination of this mountain scale, I do say that it cannot be considered as a thing apart; the other provinces must have their special conditions taken into consideration if justice is to be done to the country as a whole.

Now, as to the point I was speaking about a few minutes ago with regard to the question of benefit to the consumer. In the judgment which is now under appeal the Railway Commission decided that the mountain scale should be reduced 50 per cent. I think that the percentage of mountain scale prior to that judgment was some thirty-three per cent. This judgment would reduce it to sixteen or seventeen per cent. One would expect that, with that substantial reduction, there would be a great benefit to the consumer. I have taken the trouble to look up the Labour Gazette containing the prices of many commodities, the prices prevailing so far as Calgary and Vancouver are concerned, and I find not the slightest difference between the months, say, of June and December, last. The consumer has not apparently benefited. despite the partial removal of the differential. I simply point that out. It may be that the removal of this differential, even the total removal, is not going to give the great benefit to the consumer which some hon. members of the House might suggest. Therefore, I say to this hon. House that to pass this resolution would simply mean that, in increasing the preferential treatment to British Columbia, just treatment may not be given to neighbouring provinces. We in Alberta are asking, and I think properly, for a special rate on coal eastward, in order that the product of Alberta may be placed in the markets of eastern Canada where it is so urgently required. How can we expect, under those circumstances, to receive any favourable consideration for that view, if at the same time we place an additional burden on the Transcontinental railway, and increase the deficit which they already labour under? The whole problem, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is a most complicated and difficult one, requiring months of study and of effort, and it cannot be determined adequately or properly by this House in one session, or for that matter, in many sessions. It occurs to me that the whole matter of fixing rates should be gone into scientifically by the Railway Commissioners. An effort should be made to iron out many of these difficulties and discriminations which undoubtedly exist, and unless this work is undertaken by the Railway Commission, I am fearful that we will never be relieved of the burden of considering rate difficulties in this House.

I have one or two further remarks to make with regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement. Much has been said about that agreement. I want to say frankly, as I have stated before, both in public and elsewhere, that the Crowsnest pass agreement must be preserved. I took the position in the Transportation Cost Committee last year that we should preserve every part of it, that if it is sacred in one part it is sacred in every other part, and it must be preserved in toto for the benefit of western Canada. If one considers the circumstances under which that agreement was entered into, one can readily appreciate how it can be easily differentiated from any other question of freight rates. In western Canada at that time—that is in 1897—the freight rates were excessive. The people of eastern Canada realized, even in those days, that the hope of Canada lay in the West, and it lay largely in the development of the agricultural resources of that territory, not only that, but they realized that, while eastern Canada had special rate controlling, geographic factors and as well American rail competition, western Canada was entirely deprived by nature of such rate controlling factors. We had no water competition in western Canada to save us from excessive freight rates. We had no American rail competition such as eastern Canada enjoyed, and so parliament said in 1897 "We will give these people a statutory rate-controlling maximum, beyond which the railway companies of Canada can never go." That agreement did operate for several years as a rate-controlling factor until 1903. Then subsequently, by reason of the competition induced by the Manitoba agreement referred to earlier in this debate, the railway companies had to meet competitive reduced rates, and as a result, until 1917 the Crowsnest pass agreement did not become effective, although remaining on the statute books, as a safeguard against increased freight rates. In 1917, however, by reason of the 15 per cent increase of freight rates, the Crowsnest pass agreement again became an effective barrier against increased freight rates. It did not long remain, however. The railway companies apparently saw to that, because under the provisions of the War Measures Act the statute was ignored, not by an act of parliament, but under the provisions of the War Measures Act, and then under that act the various increases took place. However, with the conclusion of the war the War Measures Act fell. Prior to its falling parliament suspended the Crowsnest agreement for a period of three years, and that explains why on the 7th July last it became necessary for parliament to determine whether or not the agreement should be further suspended. As I say, this is the only safeguard which western Canada has at the present time with regard to its basic production. That is something which we are not prepared to abandon, and is something which must be preserved in the absence of those natural geographic and competition-compelling factors we do not possess.

The resolution proposed by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) suggests that the benefits of the Crowsnest pass agreement shall be made to apply to the basic productions of all of Canada. I do not know how he is going to do it, but if you look at the agreement itself you will find that in connection with certain west bound articles certain stipulated percentage reductions on the then existing freight charges were provided for. With regard to grain and grain products, it was provided in that agreement that a reduction be made of three cents per 100 pounds. How does the hon. member for Burrard propose to apply that agreement to the basic commodities of all Canada? Personally, I cannot understand how he is going to do it. Does he mean that if there is a water-compelled rate from, say, some place in Nova Scotia to Montreal that he is going to reduce that rate, regardless of water competition? Is he not going to take into consideration at all the natural factors which fix rates, and simply impose an arbitrary rate of some kind or other, in some peculiar way or other, which I must confess I do not understand?

I want to make it perfectly clear in conclusion that, so far as the application for reduction in freight rates is concerned, I have every sympathy, and I will on the proper occasion lend every support. I think it is high time the whole question of freight rates be examined into scientifically and carefully and be placed upon a logical and rational basis. But I do not see how we can take a jump in the dark by accepting this particular resolution and hope to iron out the difficulties and the intricacies in connection with our freight rate problems in western Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, we are, perhaps, getting a little away from the resolution as a whole and what it is really aimed at. I am going to invite hon. gentlemen just to go back again to what was done and said last year and to what has happened since. Last year the government started out with the idea that they did not know anything about freight rates. They were right. They did not. Starting out with that idea, they had a committee sitting for weeks on the question of freight rates. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) was one of the members of that committee and he took a very strong stand in connection with the deliberations of that committee just upon the lines that the government did not know anything about freight rates and that the Railway Commission was the proper body to consider rates. In fact, the committee as a whole came to the same conclusion, and brought their report in to the committee;—it was never allowed to get to the House—to the effect that as regards basic commodities, reductions ought to be made on all of them, and that those reductions could not be got if the Crowsnest pass agreement was again made operative. That is the committee's report. Then we had a change, and the hon. gentleman representing Pictou suggests politics in connection with this motion. We had that considered report changed against all the evidence, simply because certain interviews had taken place with the government and with hon. gentlemen to my left, as a result of which interviews the government thought it would pay to disregard the evidence, disregard the claims of producers of basic commodities everywhere except in two provinces. So it was that last year we had rates, political railway rates, enforced as regards the very important commodities of wheat, other grain and flour on their eastern movement. There is also no doubt that, probably, of the different commodities that had claims for reductions, there were none that had greater claims—I want to be absolutely fair about this—than had wheat and flour, but after all no greater claims than had the basic commodities on which other provinces were depending, no greater claims, for example, than the claims regarding basic commodities of the Maritime provinces, no greater claims than those of the agriculturists of Quebec who showed that they could not sell their hay.

Hon. gentlemen say that the action of the government had nothing to do with the result as regards all these other claims. Let us see if that is true. Do we not all know that it is not true? In December of the previous year, a 10 per cent cut had been made in those wheat and flour rates without any cut being given at all on basic commodities in the other provinces. According to the evidence, that accounted for $3,000,000. The resumption of the Crowsnest pass statutory rates meant another $14,000,000. This meant a difference of $17,000,000 in revenue which was available for purposes of a reduction, and at that time it was said—I remember very well saying it myself—if this goes through, the suggestion that there will be other reductions made in the railway rates on other basic commodities, is nothing more than a pious wish; it will never and it cannot be carried out. What parliament said is this, that while during the inflation period, all railway costs were advanced as nearly as possible equitably, in the deflation period, the rate reduction shall be confined to the two chief activities of the prairie provinces. That prophecy, which anybody could foresee, has been absolutely borne out. The judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners themselves refers to it. The House has heard that judgment read this afternoon, and I am not going to take up any more time on it. The fact is that there was the sum available for reductions, and that sum was appropriated by this House for a specific purpose. There is no question that there were heavy advances in grain rates and I am going to give the House a few illustrations of increases in order to show exactly the result of their interference with the freight situation last year, just what the result of the political rate is. The grain rate from Saskatoon, which is pretty well in the centre of the territory, was 24 cents. It was increased to 33½ cents, or an increase of 39 per cent. The rate from Calgary was 24 cents. It was increased to 36 cents, an increase of 50 per cent. The rate from Maple Creek was 21 cents. It was increased to 33½ cents, an increase of 54 per cent. In each case we have the re-enactment, not, of course, of the lowest rate, which was two cents lower in each case, but reducing all those increases to an increase of only two cents. I want to compare that with another basic commodity. We will go back to this again a little later on. We have been told—and there is no doubt that this is true—that down in New Brunswick, where they depend just as much upon potatoes as the Northwest does upon wheat and flour. rates were such that they were digging the potatoes into the ground again; that they could not use them. Let us see how they were increased and whether the West was unfairly treated. The potato rate from New Brunswick shipping points—they take a common rate for long distances—to Montreal in 1917 was 19 cents. That was raised to 34½ cents, an increase of 81 per cent, as against a total increase at Saskatoon of 39 per cent, at Calgary of 50 per cent and at Maple Creek of 54 per cent. The only reduction that was made by the board at all, and apparently the only reduction that they could make, was one or two cents, making that rate as left by the Railway Board, an increase of 71 per cent as against a Saskatoon rate, which was reduced by the action of parliament, and which had been increased by only 39 per cent. Where is the fairness in this? What possible justification is there for it, if we are to bear honestly in mind the general provision of the Railway Act that rates are to be fair, just and equitable?

Just another illustration as to whether the western rate was so tremendously out of line. Let us take the Maple Creek rate. Maple Creek has a mileage to the head of the lakes of 1,013. Sweetgrass, Montana, is just south of Maple Creek and has a mileage to its distributing point, Duluth, of 1,004 miles. The Maple Creek rate before it was reduced was 32 per cent less than the Sweetgrass rate; after the action of the House the American rate is 87 per cent greater than the Canadian rate.

Mr. SHAW: Is that a grain rate?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAW: Is it not a fact that there is comparatively little grain moving from Sweetgrass in Montana to Duluth whereas there is a tremendous volume moving from Maple Creek?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All these rates are on a mileage basis. I do not care what points you take, the result is the same. I am only dealing with these two points because they have a similar mileage, that is all. Take any points he likes, the grain rates, as the hon. member knows very well, do not depend upon volume but upon mileage, both in Canada and in the United States. There is no doubt of course that the major portion of American wheat is grown nearer Duluth than is the major portion of Canadian wheat. Now then, I was dealing with potatoes and pointing out that, so far as the potato producer is concerned, he is still trying to do business at an increase of 71 per cent. That rate is not out of line with the others. Montreal was not the significant point, or a point that is treated differently from others. The rate to Toronto was 25 cents, it was increased to 45½ cents, or an increase of 82 per cent; to-day the increase stands at 69 per cent.

There is another feature to consider. We had any amount of evidence as to the great necessity of cutting down the costs of building and making building materials cheaper. The rates on building materials were increased from 61 to 133 per cent in eastern territory, with similar increases in western territory. There is no reduction whatever except some half a cent on building bricks.

Now take the British Columbia lumber rates. We were told they could not do business on account of the high rates. Those rates still stand. But let us get away for a moment from both New Brunswick and British Columbia. The situation is the same all over Canada. Supposing we take coal, which is something everyone is interested in here. The rates on anthracite coal were increased 71, 81 and 83 per cent, and still stand without a single cent's reduction. For example, from the gateway, Prescott, where you get your coal, to Ottawa, the original rate of 83 cents was increased to $1.39, an increase of 70 per cent. Let us take Renfrew, another point in this neighbourhood. The original rate was $1.12, it was increased to $1.80, or an increase of 60 per cent. But the increase applies not only there, but everywhere. Take the rate from the Niagara frontier. To Hamilton it was 55 cents, this was increased to $1.05, or an increase of 90 per cent—not one single cent taken off.

Now, basic reductions. What is basic in Ontario? Why, this action last year was taken presumably in the interests of agriculture. It covered just exactly one-fifth of our agricultural products, that is that part of it that was aided by the rate and prevented any possible relief being given to the four-fifths. Supposing you take butter in carload lots to Toronto from a point near here, for example, Smiths Falls, the rate was 30 cents, it was increased to 54 cents, an increase of 81 per cent. Let us go to another part of the province, Woodstock, the centre of the dairy industry. The rate to the same destination was 23 cents, it was raised to 41½ cents, an increase of 80 per cent—not one single sou taken off. Not only Toronto as a butter-collecting centre gets these rates; look at Montreal. Suppose we go back to Renfrew again which ships butter to Montreal. The Renfrew rate was 29 cents, it was increased to 52½ cents, an increase of 81 per cent. From Peterborough the rate was 33 cents, it was increased to 59½ cents, an increase of 80 per cent—not one cent's reduction. Take this commodity in less than carload lots, and you have the same story—the same increases and absolutely no reduction. Cheese is a commodity which we are all very much interested in. On this basic production the rate from Peterborough to Montreal for export was 25½ cents, increased to 46½ cents, an increase of 82 per cent—no reduction made whatever. From Finch to Montreal the rate of 15 cents was increased to 27½ cents, an increase of 83 per cent—again no reduction whatever. To Brockville, a large cheese centre, the rate from Finch was 17 cents, it was increased to 30½ cents, an increase of 80 per cent. Similarly the Peterborough rate of 22 cents was increased to 40 cents, an increase of 81 per cent. Eggs tell the same story. Everything the farmer handles in Ontario is left in the same position, everything the farmer raises in Quebec is left in the same position, everything the farmer raises in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is left in the same position—absolutely no reduction whatever made by the Railway Commissioners, just as was pointed out clearly and emphatically from this side of the House. Eggs in carload lots from St Mary's to Toronto enjoyed a rate of 19 cents which was increased to 34½ cents, an increase of 81 per cent. From Smiths Falls the rate of 25 cents was increased to 45½ cents, an increase of 82 per cent. If you are collecting at Montreal, your increased rate is practically the same: from Lindsay to Montreal, 29 cents, increased to 52½ cents, an increase of 81 per cent. From Renfrew, 24 cents, increased to 43 cents, an increase of 79 per cent. In less than carload lots the condition is the same; there are slight differences, of course, in amounts, but the percentage still increases; the additional burden placed upon the farmer stands about the same. St. Mary's to Toronto, eggs, in less than carload lots, 26 cents, increased to 47 cents, 80 per cent increase. Thamesville, 32 cents, increased to 58 cents, 81 per cent increase; Brockville to Montreal, increased from 30 to 54 cents, or 80 per cent; Renfrew, increased from 33 to 59½ cents, or 80 per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the inference my hon. friend wants us to draw from all this? Does he wish parliament to correct all these alleged injustices?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The inference is perfectly plain. It is just what I said last year: if you put through that legislation, if you tell the board that the whole of the difference, that $17,000,000, goes in one direction, do not expect anyone else to get any relief.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the bearing on the resolution? Does my hon. friend think we ought to remedy all these matters in the way the amendment proposes?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think none of them should be remedied that way, but if you start to remedy them you had better do it right through. If we are to have political railway rates for the voter here, the voter there has a right to ask for them.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend really mean what he is saying now, that if parliament made a mistake last year it ought now to repeat that mistake in as many directions as it possibly can?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What they ought to do is at least to try to have the matter dealt with with a semblance of fairness; at least to try to undo some of the wrong they did; at least to try to put production on something like an equal basis throughout this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is all very well; these are generalities. But come down to the concrete point: Does my hon. friend say that because, according to his argument, an injustice was done last year, this parliament should aim at repeating that injustice in many different directions?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Are you repeating it? If it is good business to say that railway rates shall be put into effect irrespective whatever of cost, irrespective of merit, irrespective of the demands of traffic or anything else, and for the benefit of one set of traders—if that is to be the rule, do the farmers of Ontario not require some assistance?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was not the ground on which any action was taken last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I fail to see, then, what possible justification there is for it. Let us go back to it; we have threshed it out so often that I thought it was clear. We started out with a declaration of parliament—I do not think my right hon. friend was in the government of that day; he was too young to be in it at that time, but he was a supporter of it. But that was a great declaration on the part of the then government. In other words, the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1903 said: "Special privilege is to stop; there is to be no further discrimination and unfairness in connection with the railway rates."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but if he is going back, why not go back to the obligations imposed upon the country by the legislation adopted by parliament in 1897?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, we will get there; I intend to deal with that. I just wish in the first instance to get my right hon. friend's attention centred on the time of the change.

Mr. GRAHAM: December 6th.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course it is only a matter of amusement to my hon. friend the Acting Minister of Railways. He can laugh about it; I do not suppose he is at all concerned about this tremendous increase that I have referred to in Ontario. We had that principle declared in 1903. Before that principle had been declared and before we had a method of general rate regulation, we had attempted—not only in this agreement; hon. gentlemen can find other agreements if they want to look for them—to make partial rate regulations. That is all we could do at the time; we had no general rate regulating facilities. Partial regulation was attempted in the Crowsnest pass agreement. Now, what does my hon. friend think would be the right and proper position? Where you have a general declaration of fairness, ought the government to be a party to the preservation of special privileges here and special privileges there, or should it be a case of general fairness everywhere? Should the people as a whole get anything like a square deal in railway matters, or is it right that the government should have special favourites here or there or anywhere? Does my hon. friend think it would have been right in 1917, 1918 and 1919 to increase further the rates on agricultural products everywhere else and leave them untouched so far as the Crowsnest rates are concerned? Was parliament wrong in saying that these necessary advances should be treated on the same basis? Why, they were not even then treated on the same basis, because it was recognized that the increases on the entire haul ought to be somewhat less on grain and flour than they were on those products. And they were—increases of 35 per cent, 50 per cent, as against increases of 80, 81 and 82 per cent; so that they were kept lower. But does my right hon. friend think there should have been no increases at all during that period and that the Crowsnest pass rate should have applied throughout the war? If as a matter of fairness he does not object to that—and I pause for an objection—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, in regard to anything that was done as a consequence of war conditions or arising out of the war situation, that was an exceptional case for that exceptional reason. When conditions were being gradually restored to normal it was reasonable that the government should seek to get back to the former legislation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, let us see. You work up to your peak as the result of war conditions; you are left on the peak—is that not the result of war? Is it not a fact that these high freight rates all over the country are the result of war and of abnormal costs? If it is fair to increase equitably, is it not fair to deflate with some regard to equity? That is what the commission is for. They put up those rates with that permission for that war purpose. That my hon. friend admits is right, and having been there, should not they come down in the same way?

The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) charged us with inconsistency today. I am only saying what I said a year ago, and I am in this happy position that I can turn to a tariff anywhere asked and absolutely justify every remark I made. That is the only difference. Why, it was simply extraordinary, Mr. Speaker, the way the demands of commerce, the way the demands of the farmer everywhere outside of the prairie provinces were absolutely disregarded—simply extraordinary. But to my mind the most extraordinary thing is the accusation made to-night by the hon. member for Pictou, that this talk is all politics when he himself attended on that committee, voted for that first report, supported it right through, and for political purposes turned right about in this House in two days and swallowed it all. And what did he swallow? Is there no trouble down in the Maritime provinces? Are not the rates out of line there? We told you what would happen if you did what you did. Are not the rates out of line there? I am just going to give the hon. gentlemen, the noble sixteen, the result of the wonderful work which they did for their province last year, and I shall take just the articles in which Nova Scotia is tremendously interested. I shall not give very many of them; it is not necessary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend does that, may I ask, does he propose to remedy the injustice he is now going to speak of in the same manner that he proposes to remedy this alleged discrimination?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would be all the same. There is only one source from which reductions can come. Surely my hon. friend knows this much about business, that there is only one way in which a railway can get its revenues, and that is out of the earnings it makes, and if you set to work and apply a whole lot of reductions here, unless you want to bankrupt your system you cannot give them over there. Nothing could be done, nothing was done, because there was an arbitrary withdrawal of funds to one purpose and one purpose alone, amounting to $17,000,000, as a result of the action of my hon. friend's administration. I am not saying that all these reductions would have been made. Of course they would not have been, but the people of this country at least would know this, that there had been a real survey of the railway situation, not a survey such as is shown in that judgment we had read to-day, just pointing out what the government had done, and as a result of what the government had done the impossibility of doing anything further. You would not have had that. You would have had something like a proper, honest survey of the whole thing, out of which perhaps something like proper equitable treatment could come.

Now as to these rates. I have given enough to show what Ontario and Quebec are suffering under. I am going to give one or two now for Nova Scotia. Fish is a very important rate in Nova Scotia. There is a general fish rate which applies to fish, dry salted, green salted, pickled, smoked, in carload lots. I am going to take a few shipping points given to me by gentlemen down in the district as being absolutely vital to the trade. I do not pretend to know myself that these are the correct points, but some hon. gentlemen in this House from Nova Scotia will correct me if they are not; but I believe them to be important points. The rate from Port Hawkesbury to Montreal was 38 cents; it was increased to 66 cents, a percentage increase of 73 per cent, and that increase stands to-day. From Lockport to Yarmouth the rate was 8 cents; it was increased to 18 cents, an increase of 125 per cent, and that still stands. Then on fresh fish, we will take the rate from Port Hawkesbury again to Montreal. The rate was 48 cents; it was increased to 83½ cents, an increase of 73 per cent, and that still stands.

We have heard a lot about coal, and about the needs of coal. I am sure if the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) were here he would have a fit to think he voted for something that left things in this position. Take the rate from Springhill to Montreal. It used to be 9½ cents; it was increased to 18 cents, an increase of 89 per cent, and every single cent of that still stands. Then suppose we go into business down in the Maritime provinces and try textiles. You have textile factories at Truro and Amherst. Your textile rate from Truro to Montreal was 38 cents; it was increased to 68 cents, an increase of 78 per cent. There is a similar increase from Amherst to Montreal of 78 per cent.

Iron and steel, a most important product in Nova Scotia, had a rate of 22 cents; that was increased to 40 cents, a percentage increase of 81 per cent upon Nova Scotia's biggest industrial activity. They are complaining that they cannot ship, that they cannot sell. Well, there is their increase, 81 per cent, and it still stands. That is on iron and steel, list "A." If you take iron and steel, list "B," which is a higher quality, it is worse. The old rate was 28½ cents; that was increased to 52 cents, a percentage increase of 82 per cent.

The whole fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that the results are just exactly what might be expected from the action that was taken. The government started out by saying: We know nothing about rates; we have no mind on this subject, and they sent it off to a committee. We had evidence taken for weeks and weeks pointing practically to all these conclusions, pointing to what was going to happen, and that was all thrown away. The political question was the only one considered, and if this discussion to-day does nothing else it will do a splendid thing for Canada if hereafter no government is going to try and make rates and take away from the board absolute and full jurisdiction in connection with the rate question. It would be a first-rate thing if it could do that.

Something was said about the inadvisability of making rates here. I would like to know how much better qualified the government is to make rates than is this House? Again, it was contended that the government cannot do anything with this question because it has to do something with it afterwards. Well, I would have thought the government would have welcomed action by this House. Generally it wants to know what the House thinks before it does anything on this, that and the other question. Why, even action upon the subject of oleomargarine has to depend on a resolution being introduced by a private member. I would have thought that the government would be pleased because this matter was being discussed by the House.

We think that the wrong thing was done last year; in fact we know it. We know that those who are producing these essential basic commodities are suffering. The government has put into effect an old statute and something was said about the matter of consideration. The consideration paid in connection with that statute was $3,600,000—that was the whole amount that was paid under the subsidy; and the losses in this one year under present conditions are infinitely greater. But the government brings that act into effect again when it need not. It is idle to say that the government is to be excused because it does nothing here. Surely if the government believes in fairness, and finds special privileges lurking here or there it is its duty to remove it. It is equally idle to say, if special privilege prevails by reason of the fact that we do nothing, that we are not to blame. The present position is entirely the result of the government's action. Even admitting that this House of all bodies, except perhaps the Privy Council is the most ill-fitted to consider a question of this kind, it has the right to ask something like a similar class of treatment for all the provinces. We were told last year that the action taken would help two important provinces. It did. Those provinces are important, it was right to help them; but there are a whole lot of other provinces that have not yet lost their importance and that are still highly important that require help just as much, and they have a right to expect equality of treatment at the hands of this government.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I am only to take up the attention of the House for two or three moments, and I want to make a suggestion which, I think, offers a practical solution of this question. That would be for parliament, and for the government and the Minister of Railways, to readjust the relations between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways in this direction: The Crowsnest pass agreement has produced a condition of affairs that is unsatisfactory to a great many people in this country, and in a great many different places in Canada. The way to overcome that, if the difficulty is based on the higher cost or alleged higher cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific, is not by lawyers' arguments or by reference to the commission and treating it as a question sub judice, but it is by giving the Canadian Pacific the right to run over the improved grades of the Canadian National. That is where the solution of the question lies. There are many grievances existing in this country to-day which are based on that. The greatest grievance in the province of Ontario is the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway maintain, in their approach to the city of Toronto, two one per cent grades that are absolutely a hindrance to improved railway service and improved railway rates. Neither company, as far as I can learn will agree on a settlement. The two railways are separated by a distance of four miles—perhaps not that much—and there is a half of one per cent grade between the two. They still fight and maintain those expensive grades and the cost of maintaining them falls on the public. Somebody has got to knock the heads of the two companies together and insist on their using the better grade midway between the two existing grades. That is the solution of the Toronto question and in the same treatment lies the solution of the Crowsnest pass question—simply make the two companies get together and if there is a superior grade let the road with the inferior grade have the use of the improved grade on reasonable terms. There are many similar difficulties all over this country and neither the courts, the Privy Council nor the Railway Commission will ever settle the abuses that are resultant from that difference of grades and that increased cost. The only solution is the one I have indicated. The settlement will not come by law, or by judicial decision, or by argument of lawyers; it will come by action on the part of parliament and leadership on the part of the government to try and find some arrangement for the removal of this grievance. Wipe out the Crowsnest pass agreement in so far as our grade grievance is concerned remove this difference of cost between the two grades and the great advantage enjoyed by the National railway by reason of its improved grade over the Canadian Pacific, and you will experience relief. As a matter of fact the Canadian National railway has absolutely the best grade between Montreal and Winnipeg. That question will come up some day and will call for settlement. The way to settle the matter is to have the two roads come to some kind of understanding. The unnecessary competition between the two roads and the cost which it involves is a source of much difficulty and much waste in the country. The Railway Commission cannot settle it, neither can the Privy Council, but this parliament can. Let me give another instance. Every day there is a great waste of money going on at the expense of the people by running two day train services daily between Toronto and Ottawa. One train would give a more satisfactory service and save expense to both companies. The companies have got to be compelled to get together and where there is an advantage in grades there must be joint use of them; where there is absolutely waste in passenger trains and unnecessary competition they must be forced to make a change. Parliament must force them; The Railway Commission cannot do it nor can it be done by any lawyers' arguments.

A quick settlement of this question of the Crowsnest pass agreement is for parliament to allow the Canadian Pacific to use the improved grade of the National road on suitable terms; perhaps to make some order by which the much better grade between Winnipeg and Quebec can be used over the National road for through transportation, and in many other directions. And if great relief to Canada in freight rates, or economy in railroad administration, is to be derived by using the Panama canal let that route be used, and let parliament give its assistance. The Railway Commission will never give it. It must come from parliament and by parliamentary action, by parliament taking the two roads, and wherever there is waste as between them, and where through or interprovincial freight is involved, and there is a better grade on one road than on the other, there must be common usage of the improved grade on terms. If we start in on that basis, instead of making it a fight between lawyers, or a question to be submitted to the Railway Commission or to the Privy Council, we may get somewhere, but if it is to be fought out between lawyers, as I suggest, we will have these discussions for a year or two. I do not think a discussion of this kind can accomplish anything; we must have direct action. The country demands it. We get that direct action in parliament.

I agree with the ruling of the Speaker that this question is a parliamentary one. It is not a question for lawyers, or the commission, or the Privy Council, but one for this House. A hundred railroad questions are pressing on the people of Canada to-day, and the solution is in parliament.

The responsible Minister of Railways should find a way to wipe out this differential based on the alleged greatly increased cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway over the Canadian National Railway. As a matter of fact, the Canadian National is prepared to have this Crowsnest pass discrimination wiped out. They know they can do the work for a great deal less and they are anxious to do it. I believe Sir Henry Thornton has said that he is anxious to do it, and if that is the case why leave it to lawyers? Why not let the department introduce an immediate and quick cure, not only for this question, but for a lot of others that may arise? Hon. members may say they do not want to bring up cases of individual rates. Neither do I, nor do I wish to see the time of this House taken up by somebody trying to get a little political advantage for his province or his business. This question should be settled in parliament and the responsibility is on the government, especially if there are two competing lines where the management of these lines will not come to an understanding. In such case let parliament wipe out the unfair condition of affairs and make them come to terms.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): I crave the indulgence of the House for about five minutes while I make a few comments upon the method in which this resolution has been presented and upon some of the arguments by which it has been supported. As I understand this question, it is a matter in which the twin sisters, or the two provinces of British Columbia and Alberta, are vitally interested, and so far the two governments have been working in partnership in order, if possible, to have the differential rates under the mountain scale removed, believing it would be for the benefit of both parties in that partnership, to enable those two provinces, and also the province a little further east, to trade together on the same terms on which the other provinces of the Dominion are permitted to trade. We believe it would be for the advantage of the province of British Columbia and the province of Alberta, and we believe also that the removal of that differential would enable the Alberta men to take advantage of their proximity to the sea, and on that ground I and the other Alberta members, and, indeed, I think most of the Progressives in this House, would be solidly behind any bona fide attempt to have this differential removed, whether it is accomplished in this House or outside of it.

But I must confess, Sir, that I somewhat resent the manner in which this matter has been presented to the House at this time. I believe as I said, that this is a matter of partnership between the two provinces, and yet what do we find in the presentation of the case this afternoon and evening? I am not reflecting on the sincerity of the hon. member (Mr. Clark) who introduced the motion, but we find on the part of many hon. members who supported the motion simply a camouflage attack on the Crowsnest pass agreement. That is all it is, and all it is intended for, to my mind, on the part of many hon. members. I think I can say that, and at the same time be absolutely fair in saying it, by simply referring to what was said by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and concurred in, as far as I could see, by the party who sit behind him, when he made the offer to the Prime Minister regardless of the other party to this agreement, regardless of the rights of Alberta, that if this government would cancel the Crowsnest pass agreement which it put in force last year, which meant more to Alberta than to any other province of Canada, he and his party would be willing to withdraw their resolution. Is that fair play? Or does it savour more of treachery to the other partner? I and others in this branch of parliament resent the attitude that has been taken, and the camouflage attack that has been made upon what we consider to be one of the charters under which we can work the charter of our liberty I was going to say, but, at least, one of the safeguards of our possible success.

Mr. STEVENS: Did the hon. member not hear the Prime Minister state that the Crowsnest pass agreement would die by effluxion of time next year?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If the hon. member understood the Prime Minister in that way, I did not. I understood him to say, in confirmation of what was done last year, that next year, if the Council took the action which they were authorized to do by parliament last year, the whole Crowsnest pass agreement would come into effect, and that the suspension in part would cease.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what I did say.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: And had the Prime Minister stated otherwise I certainly would have strongly resented any such statement, but the fact remains that the only members in this House who have suggested the abrogation of that agreement have been the hon. members to my right, as a camouflage for securing the differential freight rates as existing over the mountains to British Columbia.

I promised I would only speak about five minutes, but I felt it was necessary for some member in this House speaking for Alberta to take exception to that attitude, and that is why I have spoken to-night. I am not reflecting on the bona fides of the hon. member who introduced the motion. I believe he is sincere in his wish to have that differential removed, but I certainly do not think his judgment was equal to his sincerity in that respect. I believe that had it been the intention on the part of hon. members on my right to have this matter definitely accomplished, to have these differential rates removed, to have trading permitted to be carried on freely and equitably between one province and another, to relieve the province of British Columbia from the disabilities under which it laboured in consequence of that differential, to assist the province of Alberta which is the partner with them in this matter in securing access to the sea, and the use of the port of Vancouver on the most favourable terms, they would have brought forward a resolution worded in a different manner, because the resolution mixes up two distinct questions, first calling for the removal of the differential, calling for the reduction of freight rates over the mountains, to bring them in line with the freight rates existing in other parts of the country, and, second, attempting in a most peculiar manner to discredit the Crowsnest pass agreement.

That is all I need to say, all I wish to say, except that every Alberta Progressive in this House has been, is now, and ever will be, as far as I am aware, solidly behind those two provincial governments which are doing their best to have justice done to those two provinces. At any time in which this matter is brought forward in such a way, you will find us solidly in its support; but when an attempt is made, under cover of a proposed removal of the differential, to attack the legislation passed last year, when an attempt is made to take away from us the benefits of the Crowsnest pass agreement, we will oppose that attempt in this House and out of it at all times.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a very few words in support of the resolution. The last speaker (Mr. Speakman) is much concerned about what he calls the attack on the Crowsnest pass agreement. The resolution before the House is not an attack upon the advantages which the prairie provinces have received under that agreement; it is an effort to appeal to the justice of parliament for the same advantages and the same principles to be extended to the other partners in confederation. That is the whole proposition in a sentence. I venture to say that every member from British Columbia, faced with the issue involved in this resolution and unable to avail himself of any subterfuge, would have to support the resolution, because the 600,000 citizens of our province appreciate the injustices which have been perpetrated upon them in the past, either by chance or by design. The government last year did play politics, and now they are reaping the retribution of their wrongdoing. Until they rectify the mistake they made then, they will find themselves in continuous hot water from Halifax to Vancouver.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Does the hon. member mean by rectifying the matter, that they should cancel the agreement?

Mr. LADNER: No, I mean in rectifying it, you adopt the resolution before the House to eliminate the mountain differential, the discriminatory rates, and to give the same treatment to all the members of confederation on their basic commodities. What can be fairer than that? Can any hon. gentleman present stand up and seriously and honestly deny the merit of that contention? Certainly not, and least of all the government. What did they do? They took the first step last year to smash a well-balanced, judicial body in the way of the Railway Commission, and to substitute for that judicial machinery, political machinery in exactly the same way as we have seen one attempt after another, under different guises, to abolish the Civil Service machinery and to inject political machinery, a process which even now the government may be endeavouring to carry into effect. The duty of every member of parliament is to put his hand flatly against attempts of this kind.

This resolution is being brought before the House on this occasion, largely irrespective of the political aspect, in order to make bare and plain to the government the effect of their action of last year, and the fact that when they gave a special consideration, as they did last year to the prairie provinces—not that I would deny them that at all—they must in duty and justice extend that to the rest of us. What do we find as a consequence of this advantage that was extended to the prairie provinces last year? We find that in playing politics on those freight rates to move the prairie provinces, this year a Romeo left the family circle of the government in Ottawa, in the guise of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), and hastened away to Moose Jaw to sound his plaintive note; but sad as it may be said, Miss Moose Jaw hooked up with a Farmer. The result is that they are no further advanced than they were before.

Anyone who listened to the discussion last year, anyone who has heard the debate this year, the case ably presented by the hon member for Burrard (Mr. Clark), and the arguments brought out in some very able speeches, must, if he uses his intelligence, his heart and his judgment, admit that the case for British Columbia has been established to the full. We did suffer an injustice; we are under discriminatory rates; we are entitled to have that rectified, and the action of the government last year made it still more impossible to bring about the rectification of the situation in which our province finds itself. This year the government, through hon. members speaking on their behalf, say: "Keep railway rates out of politics; that is a matter for the Railway Board." Why did they not say that last year? This year they say: "We have the matter under consideration"; but for the past two seasons the government have been telling us that they are a democratic government; that when they have a complicated matter of interest to the whole people, they consult all the representatives of the people, they consult parliament, and when parliament has expressed its view, they formulate the conclusion into legislation. These are inconsistencies which must be apparent to every hon. member, and I wish simply to point out, with all due respect to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King), my good friend from British Columbia, that when he says that the people of British Columbia would prefer if the hon. member for Burrard had not meddled in this question, he is stating just the reverse of the facts. I believe the people of British Columia want every one of its members to advocate its cause before the representatives of the sister provinces of this confederation, because we know that from the time of our admission to the union by the act of 1868, enforced in 1870, we were protected under that act with respect to unfair discrimination. We know that when the Canadian Pacific built their railway, it was especially planned under the statutory laws of that time that that railway should pass through the Yellowhead pass. If it had passed through the Yellowhead pass, and somebody had not made a mistake during the survey and diverted the line to the Roger's pass, the advantages accruing now to the Canadian National would have accrued to the Canadian Pacific, and would have redounded to the advantage of British Columbia and the Dominion at large. These are facts, historical records.

We come down to the present time, and a last effort was made to preserve the protection we had in British Columbia in 1910 in the agreement with the Canadian National Railways. It is not my intention to go into that matter; but in that agreement a special, concrete provision was made that British Columbia would have on rates the protection which she had had in the past, and which she did not wish to be deprived of. The fact is—and no hon. member has made a suggestion to the contrary—that there are discriminatory rates, and we are handicapped without a just cause. Where is the remedy to be found? Parliament last year absorbed by its action $17,000,000 out of the revenues of the railways in order that the prairie provinces might benefit that much. I do not object to their having that; but that is what the result of parliamentary legislation was, and this made it impossible to remedy conditions in British Columbia and to give fair treatment to the other provinces.

So to-day, Mr. Speaker, the government find themselves in the predicament that having injected politics into the question they have to play politics to get out of it. And that is what they are doing. They are appealing to parliament and saying: "Gentlemen, do not treat this resolution on its merits. This is a want of confidence motion, and if you want to retain your seats support the government. Never mind the merits, support the government."

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. LADNER: I put it to the hon. member that shouts "Carried" that perhaps he is afraid of losing his seat. I say to hon. members generally, including my Progressive friends, that we must decide this question on the merits. The resolution simply asks for the elimination of the discriminatory "mountain scale" and the same treatment as the sister provinces of confederation in respect to basic commodities. The government seek to evade the issue by saying, "No, this is a want of confidence motion." I appeal to the conscience, to the political instinct and to the good judgment of all members to determine which course they take. I am confident that a very large number, including many in this part of the House, will determine this question on its merits and not as a matter of political expediency.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): Mr. Speaker, a general freight rate reduction is necessary for the economic life of the country. From what we have heard to-day we might think that only the province of British Columbia is being discriminated against, but let me assure my hon. friends from the West that the provinces east of the Great Lakes are suffering greater discrimination than any other part of the Dominion.

The question of freight rates should not be made a political football of this party or that; indeed it is a question which should not be brought up in this House at all. The gist of the general Railway Act as to rates is equality of treatment. Consequently the regulation of freight rates is an economic and commercial question, and if we are going to attempt to fix freight rates by legislation and so tie the hands of the Railway Commission, that commission will not be able to function as it should in preserving equality of treatment throughout the Dominion in regard to freight rates.

Last session it was contended that the prairie provinces should have special rates to the head of the lakes for their basic commodities including flour and grain. To-day grain is paying the lowest rates, and this is necessary. But it is not necessary, in order to give preferential rates on those basic commodities, that the other provinces should be discriminated against. We are reminded that when British Columbia came into confederation it was on the faith of an agreement which guaranteed her equal rates with the rest of Canada. Then the Maritime provinces have reminded us that under their agreement to enter confederation they were to have preferential rates in order to enable them to get their products to the centre of Canada. Thus we have the East and the West pressing for lower freight rates, but if parliament goes over the head of the Railway Commission and ignores the economic factor, then we might as well abolish the commission.

In my opinion the fairest solution of the question is to put all the parties back where they were before the war-time legislation which increased freight rates. Let us go back and restore confidence in the Railway Commission, because if this commission to-day is not fulfilling the functions for which it was appointed, if it is not ensuring equality of treatment to all localities, then it is time to get a new Railway Commission. As I read the Railway Act the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission cannot be interfered with. It is clothed with paramount control of freight rates, which it should regulate strictly from the economic standpoint. Its powers are largely similar to the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that commission is not interfered with by Congress or the Senate. It fixes rates in the United States according to operating costs. That is what should be done in Canada, and until it is done we are bound to have discrimination. To-day Canada has the highest average ton-mile rate in the world, ·751 cents. The next is the United States ·732 cents

Adequate and equitable rates depend very largely on the Railway Commission fulfilling its functions and powers and preventing unjust discrimination.

This question of the "mountain scale" was before the special committee last year. As the case was then pending before the Railway Commission it was urged that parliament should defer taking action until the commission had rendered judgment. Unfortunately, parliament interfered with the prairie rates, with the result that the Railway Commission has not seen fit to harmonize the mountain rate with the prairie rate. This unfortunate result prompts me to ask: Has not the time come for parliament to leave rate control to the Railway Commission? If the commission is no longer a competent body, then let us appoint a new commission. Let us repeal the legislation of last session dealing with freight rates and put all the provinces back where they were before the War Measures Act interfered with rates.

Let the Railway Commission go into this whole question as the Interstate Commerce Commission did in the United States. The Railway Commission of this country did not wait for parliament to tell them what to do in the matter of raising rates after the Chicago award and the McAdoo award; they made these increases of their own accord, but they are waiting for parliament to tell them what to do in the matter of lowering rates. I agree with the principle of this resolution, because this House laid down the principle last session that the prairie provinces should have special treatment in respect to their basic commodities. If they are to have special treatment, so should the farmers of British Columbia have special treatment, and the same applies to the Maritime provinces and the other older provinces of Canada for their basic products also. The people of the old provinces of Canada—Ontario and Quebec—have paid out their money in taxes for the building of railways to give the West the railway facilities that they have. Ontario has been discriminated against more than any other province in the matter of railway rates since confederation. I say, then, repeal the legislation of last session and put all the provinces on a parity so that the Railway Act can be carried out in its entirety. Equality of treatment should be the principle; no preference should be shown to any one province.

Mr. L. W. HUMPHREY (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a very modest member of this House I would like the privilege of addressing my few remarks from this seat. I have not been in the habit of contributing very much to the debates, and situated as I am in the far corner of the Chamber I fear that if I spoke from my own seat some of my remarks might not be heard.

I rise as a member from British Columbia to enter a most emphatic protest against this resolution. The member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) has said that as a member from Alberta he considered it was his duty to offer a contribution on behalf of that province. I as a member from British Columbia feel that it is my duty to offer a small contribution on behalf of British Columbia. Although my remarks may not meet with the approval of all on this side of the House, I feel that I have the welfare of my province as much at heart as any other hon. member of this House, and that I represent a class of people who are deeply interested in the welfare not only of their district and province, but of the Dominion as a whole.

Let us review for a moment the question that is the subject of the present debate. The resolution reads:

> That in the opinion of this House, all unfair and unjust discrimination against British Columbia as exemplified in the "mountain scale" of freight rates should be rescinded and the special reduction made by the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates on the basic production of the prairie provinces be extended to the basic productions of all other provinces of confederation.

If the hon. member for Burrard had been sincere in his professions of regard for the welfare of British Columbia—and I do not doubt his sincerity as an hon. member of this House—he would, in my opinion have been more consistent in the resolution which he had on the order paper under date of February 15. That resolution reads:

> That in the opinion of this House, railway rates westward from the prairie provinces should be reduced to an equality with railway rates eastward from said provinces for similar goods and distances.

I cannot see the consistency of the two resolutions, and I do not see how the hon. member is consistent so far as his alleged interest in the welfare of British Columbia is concerned. In the last several months all the organized bodies of British Columbia, in fact I may safely say 95 per cent of the population of the province, have given their loyal support to those who have been instrumental in setting forth the claims of British Columbia on this railway rate question. A large number of the boards of trade of the province have given their unanimous support to the Premier on the question. The claims of British Columbia have been carried from one stage to another until they are now before the Privy Council, and it is my opinion that this is not an opportune time for the House to take the matter out of the hands of the Privy Council and declare upon the merits of the discrimination so far as it affects British Columbia. If, on the other hand, we have a railway commission that is not doing its duty to the people, I and many other hon. members will be only too glad to see that that particular defect is remedied. But I say that this is not an opportune time to take the matter out of the channels in which it has proceeded. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) has said that the government last year played politics in respect to this railway question. Well, with all due respect to the hon. member and with no prejudice to other hon. members of the House, I would say that in my opinion this question as it is being handled is nothing else but politics, first and last.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman think that it should be the subject of political play, as he says it has been?

Mr. HUMPHREY: My remarks are addressed to the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver South that this railway rates question was made the subject of politics last year. I repeat that in my opinion the matter is being handled now as nothing more or less than a political question, and the result is only to prejudice the interests of the people of British Columbia and to bring about a state of chaos so far as their attitude on this question is concerned—and their opinion is now a unanimous one. They are unanimous in their opinion on this question and are giving united and loyal support to those who are taking a sincere and genuine interest in it. But I feel it is not right for any member to bring this question into parliament at this time to be made a political football of at the expense of the people of British Columbia. My experience as a member of this parliament has been short. Perhaps I have not contributed as much as many others to the debates. Nevertheless I have endeavoured as far as I could in my humble way and to the best of my ability to follow the questions that have arisen and to give my best judgment upon each, and particularly with respect to the questions affecting the Dominion. I compare this question to one that arose in the Chamber something like a year ago respecting the returned men of whom I am glad to say, without boasting at all, that I am one. Certain interests of the returned men were under consideration at that time, and I place this particular question on a parallel with that. I think this resolution has been introduced simply to further certain political interests. It has been brought in at this particular time and in this particular way not to further the interests of British Columbia because, however it is decided, it would not do that. If this resolution was carried by the House, we as residents of British Columbia would not gain anything. On the other hand would we gain if the resolution was not carried? I cannot see how in either event, from the point of view of those favouring the resolution, anything is to be gained. The question is entirely in the hands of the powers that have it under their consideration. I do not treat it as a want of confidence motion in any shape or form. I have little concern in that respect for the position of the government on this question, but I have a great deal of concern regarding the people whom I am endeavouring to represent to the best of my ability upon each question as it arises, and taking that stand I cannot in any way support this resolution as it has been brought forward by the hon. member for Burrard.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Progress reported.

SECOND READING

Bill No. 107 (from the Senate), to incorporate Montreal Finance Trust.—Mr. Papineau.

Bill No. 108 (from the Senate), for the relief of Violet Gardiner.—Mr. Sheard.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the House adjourned at 12.29 a.m. Wednesday.

Wednesday, April 18, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

EVIDENCE IN MARRIAGE OR DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 109 (from the Senate), to amend The Criminal Code with respect to Publication of Evidence in Marriage or Divorce Proceedings.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister explain this bill? It has a peculiar title.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The purpose of the bill is to prohibit the publication of evidence in marriage and divorce proceedings without authority from the House or the Senate. It is a bill which comes from the Senate.

QUESTIONS

BONDED LIQUOR WAREHOUSES

Mr. CLARK:

1. How many licenses for bonded warehouses for storage of intoxicating liquors in bond are in force in the province of British Columbia?

2. What are the names of the licensees and the dates of the licenses now in force and granted prior to 1920, and the locations in respect of which they were granted?

3. What is the duration of such licenses, and has the government power to cancel or revoke same, and if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

1. There are at present in the province of British Columbia 25 customs warehouses for storage of intoxicating liquor in bond, 9 of which, however are inactive.

There are 3 licenses for excise bonded liquor warehouses in force at present.

2. None of the customs or excise bonded liquor warehouses at present in force in British Columbia were authorized prior to 1920. The Provincial Government Vendor had been granted a customs bonded warehouse at Vancouver prior to 1920, but this bond now stands in the name of the Provincial Government Liquor Control Board.

3. A customs bonded warehouse for storage of intoxicating liquor is only granted upon unconditional consent of provincial authorities and remains in force until cancelled by the minister for cause or withdrawal of provincial consent.

License for an excise liquor bonded warehouse is granted under similar conditions for a period not extending beyond fiscal year in which granted, but may be renewed with consent of provincial authorities, and is subject to cancellation for any infraction of the Inland Revenue Act.

CATTLE DISEASES

Mr. SPENCER:

1. How long has the present system of condemnation insurance been in vogue in Canada?
2. Is the per cent dockage the same for both cattle and swine?
3. Is the per cent dockage the same for all parts of Canada?
4. Is it the same for cattle and swine of all ages?
5. What data have been collected to ascertain whether the amount of dockage collected is greater or less than the losses sustained because of condemnation?
6. What data have been collected to determine whether or not disease is more prevalent among cattle over 5 years old than among those under 5?
7. How is the loss sustained because of condemnation arrived at?
8. Have any data been collected with a view to ascertaining the average amount of salvage from a condemned carcase?
9. If so what is the approximate ratio of the salvage to the first cost of the live animal?
10. Is it the purpose of the system of condemnation insurance in vogue in Canada to reimburse the butchers for animals condemned whether the ailment for which the animal is condemned is visible to the buyer or not?
11. In what countries other than Canada, is a flat rate of dockage collected regardless of age, class, or point of origin of the animals?
12. What is the custom in Great Britain with respect to these matters?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Since 1907 or thereabouts when inspection of meats first become operative in Candian packing plants.

2. The tax works out at ½ of 1 per cent on both cattle and swine. At Toronto cows are docked 50 cents per head other cattle 20 cents and shop hogs ½ of 1 per cent.

3. Yes. It works out at ½ of 1 per cent.

4. Yes.

5. Understand that the packers have collected some data.

6. Nil.

7. Information available from the packers.

8. Nil.

9. Information available from the packers.

10. It may not be the purpose but it is the effect.

11. No information.

12. No information.

NOTE.—This is an insurance practice adopted by the packers and the trade generally at the stock yards to protect themselves against loss from diseased animals which disease is only revealed on post mortem examination. If it were abolished by law as it could be it is feared that it would only result in buyers reducing their bids by a greater amount than that now charged the producer on account of this condemnation insurance.

T. B. TEST

Mr. KELLNER:

1. What was the cost of the T. B. test in Edmonton from 1921 to date?
2. What was the amount of compensation paid to owners of reactors?
3. What was the amount paid to officials for service?
4. What was the amount paid to officials for travelling expenses?
5. What was the distance travelled by officials?
6. What was the number of cattle tested?
7. What was the number of reactors?
8. What was the cost per head of cattle tested?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. From the date of commencement, May 1st, 1922 to February 28th, 1923.

Compensation to owners..	$50,712.83
Salaries..	8,703.00
Travelling expenses..	6,866.00
Supplies, thermometers, tags, etc..	1,181.70
Tuberculin..	3,663.27
	$71,126.80

2. $50,712.83 obligation incurred but not all yet paid.

3. $8,703.

4. $6,866.

5. Mileage by road, 36,830; Mileage by rail, 4,031; total 40,861.

6. 11,817 cattle tested once, but 16,783 first and subsequent tests applied.

7. 1,381.

8. On first test alone including compensation, $6.02; On first test alone excluding compensation, $1.73; On first and subsequent tests including compensation, $4.24; On first and subsequent tests excluding compensation, $1.22.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS

Mr. COOTE:

What was the address and the occupation of each member of the Board of Railway Commissioners, previous to his appointment?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

Hon. F. B. Carvell, K.C., Chief Commissioner, Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

S. J. McLean, Asst. Chief Commissioner, Professor of Economics, and Transportation, University of Toronto, Toronto, Ont.

Hon. W. B. Nantel, K.C., Deputy Chief Commissioner, Barrister, St. Jerome, P.Q.

A. C. Boyce, K.C., Commissioner, Barrister, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Dr. J. G. Rutherford, C.M.G., Commissioner, Supt. of Agriculture and Animal Industry, Dept. of Natural Resources, C. P. Ry., President, Western Canada Live Stock Union, Calgary, Alta.

Calvin Lawrence, Commissioner, Legislative Representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Ottawa.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DIRECTORS

Mr. COOTE:

1. What are the names, addresses and occupations of the directors of the Canadian National Railways?
2. For what length of time are they appointed?
3. What is the salary of each?
4. Is the amount of salary fixed by the government? If not, by whom are these salaries fixed?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Major General Sir Henry Worth Thornton, K.B.E., President and Chairman, Canadian National Rys., McGill Street, Montreal, Que., Railroad President.

John H. Sinclair, K.C., New Glasgow, N.S., Barrister.

Major G. A. Bell, C.M.G., Vice-President, Canadian National Railways, Ottawa, Ont., also Deputy Minister Railways and Canals.

Gerard Ruel, Vice-President, Canadian National Railways, McGill Street, Montreal, Que., also General Counsel.

Richard P. Gough, Sellers-Gough Fur Company, Limited, 244 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ont. Merchant and Banker.

James Stewart, 500 Grain Exchange, Winnipeg, Man., Grain Merchant.

Ernest R. Decary, Director General, Title Guarantee & Trust Co. of Canada, 224 St. James Street, Montreal, Que., Vice-President and Director General Title Guarantee and Trust Co., of Canada.

Frederick G. Dawson, Prince Rupert, B.C., Merchant.

Tom Moore, President, Trades & Labour Congress of Canada, 172 McLaren Street, Ottawa, Ont., President, Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

Col. O. E. Talbot, 27 St. Stanislas Avenue, Quebec, Que., Collector of Porvincial Revenue, Quebec.

2. "The directors shall hold office from one annual meeting to another or until their successors are appointed, unless removed by the Governor in Council for cause,"—Clause No. 2 of the Incorporating Act, Chapter No. 13 of 1919.

3. The remuneration received by the directors has (provided in Clause No. 5 of the above mentioned Act) been approved at $2,000 each per annum.

4. The directors may be paid by the company such sums for their services as the Governor in Council may from time to time approve.

GRAIN SHIPMENTS

Mr. COOTE:

1. What was the amount of grain of each kind shipped from the port of Montreal in each of the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
2. How much of this grain was Canadian grown and how much American?
3. How much of the 1922 Canadian grain crop was shipped from Montreal in 1922?
4. How much grain was handled by the Grand Trunk elevator and how much by the elevators owned by the Montreal Harbour Commission in the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
5. Has the Montreal Harbour Commission recently purchased from the Canadian National Railway system the said Grand Trunk elevator? If so, what was the price paid for same?
6. What is the storage capacity of this elevator?
7. What is the storage capacity of the other elevators owned by the Harbour Commission and what was the total cost of these elevators?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE: The answer to this question involves a long statement. It would be a rather voluminous document to insert in Hansard, and I would ask that the question be changed into an order for return, which I now lay on the table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as order for return.

RELIEF OF BASIC INDUSTRIES

Mr. MAYBEE:

1. Is it the intention of the government this session to allow a further consideration of the motion of Mr. Hodgins, (Middlesex), re assisting the wool combing basic industry in Canada?
2. Will the government consider some relief of the duty on machinery necessary to be brought in for such a basic industry and elimination of the sales tax and duty on tops?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: There is no motion on the order paper in the name of the hon.

member referred to. I assume the reference is to a motion that stands in the name of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Drummond). In the opinion of the government we can hardly profitably discuss the motion in its present form. It speaks of certain reforms which are desirable, but it devises or suggests no particular means of carrying out the hon. member's desire. I suggest that if the hon. member will consult with the Law Clerk, who will be available, and will put his motion in the form of a bill, an opportunity will be given at a later stage to bring it forward.

MIRAMICHI SMELT FISHING

Mr. HANSON:

1. What number of smelt bag-net licenses were issued to fishermen on the river Miramichi and its branches for: (a) the season 1921-22, and (b) the season 1922-23?
2. On what date did the open season for smelt fishing on the Miramichi river expire in 1923?
3. Did any officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries patrol the river Miramichi after the close of the smelt fishing season?
4. If so, were any fishermen found to be engaged in illegal fishing for smelt?
5. How many, if any, were found so engaged, and were they all prosecuted for the offence?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. In Miramichi river and bay the number was 1,305 in 1921-22 and 1,756 in 1922-23.
2. February 20.
3. Yes.
4. & 5. No fishermen were so found; but seventeen nets that were being illegally used were found and confiscated.

OTTAWA RIVER POWER

Mr. BINETTE:

1. Is the government aware as to whether the Quebec and New England Hydro Company intends to develop the water power on the Ottawa river at Pointe Fortune?
2. If so, is it the intention of the government to encourage this project?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: The Quebec-New England Hydro Electric Corporation (formerly the Montreal Public Service Corporation) has secured the right to develop the water-power on the Ottawa river at Carillon, now leased to the National Hydro-Electric Company, Limited, under which lease development must commence on or before the 1st of December, 1923. Date of last lease, December, 1921.

LIQUOR WAREHOUSES

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. How many excise warehouse licenses for storage of intoxicating liquors are in force in the province of British Columbia?
2. What are the names of the licensees who obtained licenses prior to 1920 which are still in force, and the dates and the locations in respect of which they were granted?
3. Are such licenses renewable from year to year, and is the consent of the provincial authorities required before renewals are granted?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

1. Two.
2. None.
3. Yes.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

Mr. SHAW.

Does the government propose to repeal by proclamation or otherwise those statutory provisions in the Northwest Territories Act (Revised Statutes 1906, Chap. 62), relating to procedure in criminal matters, in so far as they apply to the province of Alberta?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The matter is under consideration.

RIORDON PULP AND PAPER COMPANY

Mr. SHAW.

1. Have the arrears of business profits and other taxes, payable to the government by the Riordon Pulp and Paper Company, and its subsidiary companies, for which promissory notes were taken by the former government, been collected either wholly or partly?
2. If so, when were collections made?
3. What was the amount of such collections?
4. What amount is now outstanding and unpaid?
5. If there are arrears unpaid, what action has the government taken to collect same, or what has it in contemplation?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: In view of pending arrangements respecting the Riordon business, it is not deemed expedient in the public interest to make any statement on this subject at present.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

GRAIN SHIPMENTS

Mr. COOTE:

1. What was the amount of grain of each kind shipped from the port of Montreal in each of the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
2. How much of this grain was Canadian grown and how much American?
3. How much of the 1922 Canadian grain crop was shipped from Montreal in 1922?
4. How much grain was handled by the Grand Trunk elevator and how much by the elevators owned by the Montreal Harbour Commission in the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
5. Has the Montreal Harbour Commission recently purchased from the Canadian National Railway system the said Grand Trunk elevator? If so, what was the price paid for same?
6. What is the storage capacity of this elevator?
7. What is the storage capacity of the other elevators owned by the Harbour Commission and what was the total cost of these elevators?

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

GOVERNMENT PRINTING

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

For a return showing the names of newspaper companies and printing companies who have received federal moneys for printing, since January 1, 1922, with the respective amounts received by each of said companies.

MEYER BRENNER

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, documents, letters, applications, petitions, and memoranda, leading to and concerning the release on parole of one Meyer Brenner, who was lately discharged from Prince Albert penitentiary after serving approximately one year on a seven years' sentence.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this motion should be adopted, because it would be a departure from a well established rule that has been in force in England for many years and in this country since at least the days when Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice. All the successors of Sir John Thompson—Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Sir Allen Aylesworth, Right Hon. Charles Doherty, and Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier speaking as leader of the Opposition, when they had occasion to express their views on the subject, were of the opinion that such documents should be treated as confidential and that it would not be proper or advisable to make them public. The practice in England is well defined by Todd, and I think that one citation from that authority will be enough to cover all that has been said on the question. I quote from Todd's Parliamentary Government in England, page 557:

No interference by either House of parliament with the exercise of this prerogative is justifiable, except under extraordinary circumstances. It was said by Macaulay, that he would rather entrust it to the hands of the very worst ministry that ever held office than allow it to be exercised under the direction of the very best House of Commons; and by Sir Robert Peel, that he would leave this prerogative in the hands of the executive considering that it was the right and duty of the House to interfere only if there be a suspicion that justice is perverted for corrupt purposes.

In this special case, Mr. Speaker, I have read the record. I do not see anything extraordinary in it, and I do not see why we should make an exception in this case. Taking into account such a rule and such a practice I would ask my hon. friend not to press his motion.

Mr. SHAW: In view of the authorities cited by the hon. Minister of Justice I have no desire to press the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

EMIGRATION TO UNITED STATES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. BIRD: I would like to draw the attention of the government to an article appearing on the front page of the Free Press of April 16th, in which among other things it is alleged that over six thousand people left Winnipeg for the United States this winter. It is also asserted that owing to the serious condition of agriculture in the West at the present time, trade is practically crippled in Winnipeg. The situation seems to be so serious that the article urges upon the three members representing that city, including, I suppose, the member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) to take urgent steps in order to right the wrongs of the farmers of the West. In view of this serious situation I am very anxious to know whether the government is fully apprised of the seriousness of these conditions, and also whether they are contemplating a policy to deal with them.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question of the hon. gentleman cannot properly be put on the Orders of the Day. Questions put on the Orders of the Day should be by way of personal explanation by members or questions asked by the leaders upon some pressing matter of public importance. I do not think that the present question is opportune at this stage.

SASKATCHEWAN WHEAT IN STORAGE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GOULD: I wish to draw attention to a reference made in the morning paper to an address alleged to have been delivered in the city of Montreal last night by one of the ministers in the Saskatchewan government. The despatch states that the minister said that the last Saskatchewan budget speech contained the statement that the farmers of Saskatchewan still had in their possession 505,000,000 bushels of wheat. This may be a clerical error, but certain it is that the farmers of Saskatchewan cannot have that amount on hand as the total amount they raised was only 300,000,000 bushels. I merely call the attention of the press to that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not think that is a proper question to put before the House on the Orders of the Day.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to refer to an item which appears in the public press to the effect that the government is now negotiating with a syndicate of ship owners for the sale of its entire mercantile fleet, and that a condition of these negotiations is that special arrangements should be made on behalf of the syndicate whereby it should carry on especially the business of the transportation of Canadian grain. I therefore wish to ask the Acting Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) if he can state to the House whether negotiations are going on for the sale of the Canadian mercantile fleet, if so what the conditions of the sale are and if it is correct that the arrangement will contain a special provision whereby Canadian grain will be accorded special treatment.

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (Acting Minister of Railways): As the House well knows the Canadian National Railway Board, with the consent of the government, is offering for sale 27 of the smaller ships. So far as I know there are no negotiations for the sale of the larger seagoing vessels.

Mr. MacLAREN: Can the minister state whether arrangements are being made between the government and the syndicate for the handling of Canadian grain?

Mr. GRAHAM: What syndicate? I understood my hon. friend to say that he based that part of his question on the answer to the other part—that is to say the reply to the question whether arrangements were being made for the sale of the merchant marine. My reply is that so far as I know there are no negotiations taking place for the sale of the larger vessels.

Mr. MacLAREN: As regards the 27 vessels which the minister spoke of, are special arrangements being made for the handling of Canadian grain?

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot say. Up to date, I think, no offer has been made for these ships, and the vessels of smaller tonnage, possibly, would not be suitable for the purpose to which my hon. friend refers.

CANADA COLONIZATION ASSOCIATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GARLAND: I wish to ask the minister concerned whether a formal agreement has yet been signed between the government and the Canada Colonization Association, and if so whether that agreement will be laid on the Table of the House.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I informed the House when the appropriation relating to this matter was going through that there would be no agreement signed. The only agreement is the provisions embodied in the memorandum for the method of paying out the moneys. That memorandum already appears in Hansard.

Mr. JACOBS: Merely a gentleman's agreement.

DEMAND FOR FARM LABOUR

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I desire to ask if the Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization is aware that there are a thousand families in Winnipeg, the heads of whom have had practical farm experience and are willing to settle on the land and if so, what steps are to be taken to settle those families?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In answer to the hon. member I may say that applications have been received from western farmers for nearly three thousand farm labourers and we would be delighted to send them out to Winnipeg if they are available. All they need to do is to apply to Mr. Jelly, immigration official at Winnipeg.

GRATUITIES TO GRAND TRUNK DIRECTORS AND OFFICERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN: Can the government tell us whether it has appointed the royal commission to make that inquiry into the gratuities granted to the Grand Trunk directors and officers, and if so who are the fortunate appointees?

Mr. GRAHAM: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment has not yet been made but those appointees will be in the singular—one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just one?

ECONOMIC AND IMPERIAL CONFERENCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask next when the government will give us some information as to the agenda of the Economic Conference and of the Imperial Conference. The Prime Minister states that as respects one he could lay the papers on the Table; as respects the other he needs some authority. None of the papers are on the Table yet although the question was first asked about a week ago.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I may say to my right hon. friend that when I spoke with the deputy of the department as to the papers requested, he mentioned that he thought it would be advisable to ask the permission of the British government before any of them were brought down. That permission was asked immediately but no response has been received as yet. I will have a further cable sent expressing a desire that consent be given as soon as possible.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to protest against this character of answer and against the suggestion that this House should wait for the permission of the British government before knowing the agenda of the Economic Conference. We have a right to know that and to know it at once. It does not concern the British government when the agenda of the Economic Conference shall be known to us.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very glad to hear what my right hon. friend has just said, because I have been protesting very strongly against having to ask for permission to lay on the Table of the House a great many of these documents which seem to me ought to be public property as soon as received. However, I am told that such is the method that has been customary as regards communications between the British government and our government, and that it has been so not only in recent years but at all times. I am simply following the procedure that has been held out as the right and proper one; but I may say to my right hon. friend that if the conference is held this year, as is anticipated, I certainly intend to have this matter brought up as one of the subjects for discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to point out again that what the Prime Minister states has not been the practice with respect to all subjects and I venture to say that if he will look at the records of two years ago he will find that at the first request for information as to the agenda I gave it and I made no prior application at all for permission to do so.

CORRECTION—HON. MR. GRAHAM

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: I wish to make a slight correction. On April 16th, in answering a question by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent) as to the Demers contract in Quebec I stated that the price was 60 cents per hour. It should have been 65 cents.

FRENCH TREATY

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the second reading of Bill No. 23 respecting a certain Convention of Commerce between His Majesty and the French Republic.

Mr. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): A few days ago, in discussing this treaty, I pointed out to the House the great disadvantage that certain of the farmers in the part of Ontario I come from would labour under if it went into effect in its present form. I have particular reference to the farmers in my district who are interested in the growing of grapes and in the manufacture of wine. It seems to me that a grave injustice has been done to these people. I cannot comprehend how any government would undertake to put the residents of a foreign country in an absolutely better position than their own people. In the present case the people in my district are paying to the revenue of the country a tax of 30 cents a gallon on wine, and under this treaty the French article is to be allowed to come in at a tax of only 15 cents a gallon. In other words, the producer in a foreign country is at a direct advantage in this country's market of 15 cents a gallon. I do not want to stress the matter but the thing is self-evidently unjust and I believe it must be taken care of.

I also referred briefly to a matter of importance to our particular section, and that was the silk industry. I do not want to unduly emphasize this point, but I want to look into some of the points of interest in connection with the treaty and ask this House to judge whether it is of any advantage to Canada.

The first part of the treaty I wish to take up is what is known as section A, which gives a list of goods of Canadian production that are allowed to enter France under their minimum tariff. I might say incidentally that while this schedule A is the minimum tariff of France, last year we had almost the whole of it as the minimum tariff of France. I mean, that all the goods that we wanted to ship last year of that class and variety entered France practically under the minimum tariff. Before I go into the details I want to point out that the imports to Canada from France for the year ending 31st March, 1922, amounted to $13,500,000, whereas the exports from Canada to France for the same period amounted to $8,000,000. I wish to explain to the House that, in making my calculations, I have not taken into account the colonies of France, for the reason that there were so many small items spread over half a dozen countries that it made the work too heavy, and I did not have any clerk from the department to help me. Just for comparison's sake, I wish to state that during the same period we exported to Holland $9,500,000. I am taking four or five countries with exports about similar so that hon. members can see at a glance what the significance is. During that period we exported $9,500,000 to Holland and we imported from Holland $4,000,000. I am only giving the round figures. Then we exported to Belgium $12,400,000 and we imported from Belgium $3,800,000. We exported to Italy $15,000,000 and imported $1,300,000. We exported to Japan $14,800,000 and imported from Japan $8,000,000. To these four countries we exported $52,000,000, and imported from them $17,000,000, leaving a balance in our favour for these four countries of $34,000,000, whereas the balance against us in France was $5,000,000.

I think possibly I will have to apologize to the House for taking up considerable time in going through these items, but inasmuch as the two ministers spent five months on the job, I think possibly the House can hear somebody else for an hour. The first item in schedule A is horses. We had the minimum tariff of France last year for horses, and there has been no change this year from the tariff of last year. We exported last year horses to the value of $1,000,000, but we did not send a dollar's worth to France. I ask the minister if he did not send any horses to France last year, and there has not been any change to our advantage, what chance will there be next year? The price of horses was low last year and we might have had an export.

The next item is No. 17 "Ham, boned and rolled, cooked ham, meats, salted," for which I could not find a number, but I can say that in all pork products, including bacon and sides, the total amount of import was $23,000,000, and we sold to France under all of these items $9,000 worth. The tariff has not been changed under this item but is the same as last year. We have no advantage at all under the treaty which we did not have last year without it. Poultry, truffled; we had no exports under that item. Meat, preserved in tins; we shipped $216,000 worth and France took nothing. There has been no change between last year's tariff and this year's treaty and we have no advantage under the present arrangement. Extract of meat, in cakes or otherwise; we exported $3,500 worth last year, and France took nothing. Under the next item, No. 20, we exported nothing. Bed feathers; we exported nothing. Lard; the exports were $691,000, and France took $44,000. Eggs of poultry and game; our exports were $2,050,000, and France took nothing. Cheese, Canadian; our total exports were $25,440,000, and France took $14. Belgium took from us 3,091,000 pounds of cheese and France took 40 pounds. We got the minimum tariff on that item. There is no difference between the tariff last year and the item in the treaty.

I will go through the different items and call attention to all items where there has been a reduction. Bone black (animal black) there were no exports. Fresh fish (fresh water and sea water) and fish, dried, salted or smoked; we exported $20,000,000 and France took $35. The next item will come under the head of "fish." It is lobsters, fresh, preserved or prepared. We exported under that item $5,181,000 and France took $820,000. Fish oils; we exported $141,000 and France took nothing. Spermaceti; no exports. Roe of cod and mackerel; there were no exports. Casein, hardened, etc.; our total exports were $1,400 and France took nothing, but we imported $20,000. It is a good thing to have the treaty because we import some of that product. Wheat, spelt and meslin (grain, flour); under that item our total exports were over $179,990,000, and France took $1,278.000. Just for comparison's sake, I will tell the House what Belgium took. Belgium took within the same period $5,557,000, and Italy $14,000,000. Of wheat flour, our total export was $53,000,000 and France took nothing. Then we have the following items:

No. of French tariff	Products	Total exports	France imported
69	Oats (grain, meal).. ..	$19,000,000	$455,000
	Oatmeal..	2,525,000	3,000
70	Barley (grain, meal) ..	9,000,000	nil
71	Rye (grain, meal).. ..	3,000,000	3,000
72	Maize (grain, meal).. ..	172,000	nil
73	Buckwheat (grain, meal)	362,000	"
84	Table fruits, fresh, apples and peaches..	8,856,000	"

This consisted principally of apples.

178	Emery paper, etc.. ..	nil	nil

This completes one page, and this one page represents of Canada's exports over $480,000,000, out of a total of $753,000,000, or practically 65 per cent of our total exports. I will give the items on which there is a reduction. All the items that I have mentioned went into France last year in exactly the same figures that they will go in this year when the treaty comes into force, with the exception of six items. The first one is truffled poultry, of which we had no exports. Imagine truffled poultry being exported from Canada. Yet this item has been reduced. The next item that has been reduced is casein, of which we exported $1,400 worth, but none to France, and we imported $20,000 worth. Yet this item has been reduced by France to bring it down to the minimum tariff. The next item is apricots. I come from a district in which we grow pretty nearly everything in that line, and we do not grow any apricots except a few trees for our own use. British Columbia may grow them, but they do not appear in our exports. Yet this item has been reduced. The next item is balsam, which is a resinous property found in trees. We did not send any to France, but France has kindly made a reduction in this item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Brought it down to the minimum tariff. The next item that has been reduced is sauerkraut, and this will be a great boon to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did we export any of that?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We did not export any cabbage at all. The next item is corundum, of which we exported $39,000 worth, none to France. The ministers who made these treaties might, as regards reductions, have just as well stayed at home. They did not need to spend five months on a page like that. On six items we get a reduction to the minimum tariff.

I might say further that in schedule A there are forty items of which we never exported a dollar's worth. Last year when speaking in this House, I got in wrong, and a gentleman from the West rose in his place on the Orders of the Day and complained, on a question of privilege, that I had used the word "padded" because he had done certain things in connection with the exports of Canada. I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will not call me to order for using a similar word. This list of forty items that we do not export is of no use; it is "padding," nothing more and nothing less.

As regards the next page, I will call the reductions as I go along.

No. of French tariff	Products	Total exports	France imported
190	Coal..	$13,000,000	$112,000
192	Coal tar..	248,000	115,000
194	Mineral wax..	12,000	591
197	Petroleum, schist and other mineral illuminating oils..	941,000	578
198	Heavy oils..	nil	nil

This is probably included in the previous item.

No. of French tariff	Products	Total exports	France imported
263	Aluminium..	$ 1,188,000	nil
221	Copper, pigs..	365,000	nil
	bars..	18,000	$1,600
	wire..	447,000	3,000
	Bronze powder.

I cannot imagine why on earth bronze powder should be put down in a treaty with France, when we never made the article and have always imported it. I have used it in my business for forty years, and we never bought any in the country. Nevertheless it appears in this list. We exported none of it, but we imported $45,000 worth.

No. of French tariff	Products	Total exports	France imported
222	Lead, pig lead..	$ 1,543,000	$2,500
	ore..	176,000	nil
224	Zinc, ore..	2,388	nil

Under the same heading as zinc comes the item of spelter. The minister has with him his expert, and I might suggest to the minister that, in looking up these items, I found a very inadequate index. I looked for zinc and I found it. I was amazed at the small proportions of the exports. Then I had to go all through the list and find what all the other things were, and I found that spelter was there, which the ordinary individual would not know was zinc. I found that of spelter, there was a total export of $2,246,000, of which France took none. I might make a further suggestion to the minister, seeing that his assistant is with him, and that is, that if he would only embody the two indexes in his book into one and use the middle of it for exports and imports it would enable anyone to see at a glance just what are exports and what are imports. This idea is carried out in trade returns and I find it very much easier under that plan to get at whatever information I need. The next item is antimony. Of this we had no exports, but we imported $37,000 worth. Why on earth we are allowed to export to France something that we have to import is a matter I do not quite understand; but possibly the minister or his deputy may be of the opinion that this is an article which we shall produce some time in the future. The next item is 021, other ammonia salts. We imported $75,000 worth of this, but exported none; and it is free of duty.

Mr. MANION: Free to France?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, and into Canada. Next, oxides of nickel, we had no exports, and of sulphates of nickel there were apparently no exports either. There were no exports of oxide of zinc, but this is free into France under the treaty. The next item is 0187 ethyl chloride, of which there were no exports, but of the next item 0194, methylic alcohol we exported $210,000 worth. Of item 0199 hexamethylenetetramine and its derivatives, there were no exports; the next item is solvents with an acetone and methyl acetate basis, of which there were no exports; the next is 0204, acetic anhydric, of which there were no exports; the next is 0373 wood creosote, of which we exported $82,000 worth, none of it going to France. Of chemical products not specially mentioned, there were no exports. The next item is 298, varnish and assimilated paints. We exported $17,000 worth of this but sent none to France. Of paints, we exported $283,000 worth and France took $700. Of talc pulverizer we exported $138,000, France taking nothing. Of soaps other than perfumed we exported $230,000 of which France took nothing; and of distilled waters there were no exports. Item 316 is "not specified", but we exported mineral and aerated waters to the value of $63,000, none of which went to France. Of starch we exported $1,000, but none of it went to France. We imported $130,000 worth of this article ourselves, but we are permitted to export it. Item 324 is glue, of which we exported $11,000, France taking none of it. The duty, however, has been reduced; that is one of the items they have reduced. We imported glue, however, to the extent of $218,000, and imported from France $47,000 worth. France has kindly reduced the duty on our glue going into that country. Item 347 relates to porcelain. Why on earth we have the right to export porcelain is something beyond me. So far as I can ascertain we had no exports, but the duty has been reduced by France. We imported $260,000 worth of this article, of which France supplied $157,000. The next item, 359, is bottles, etc. There were no exports of such but the duty has been reduced by France. Of glassware we exported $250,000 but none of it went to France. However, we imported bottles, table ware, chimney globes, etc., $460,000 worth, taking $18,000 of it from France. France has kindly reduced the duty on that article. The next item is 361, incandescent electric lamps, of which we had no exports. The French duty in my opinion is pretty high, although they have reduced it. But I want to give an illustration of how the minimum tariff works out on certain articles, of which this is one. I might observe that in seeking this information I found that although the book, apart from the particulars the minister has given us, was no doubt as complete as it could be made, it is difficult to ascertain what a tariff means precisely, when the duty is placed specifically on the weight of an article, for example, at so many francs per hundred kilograms. This article is an illustration of this point. I find that 700 incandescent electric lamps will weigh 100 kilograms, or 220 pounds. I take these lamps at a valuation of 15 or 20 cents each; I am putting it at the higher figure, taking it wholesale. The value of these 700 lamps, therefore, would be $114. Now, the duty on them, according to this new and improved tariff, would be 1,890 francs per 100 kilograms—that is to say, for the 700 lamps—which means in other words that the duty amounts to $132.30 as against a value of the lamps themselves of $114.

4 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the improved tariff?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, under the new treaty. I am not saying that I do not find some items here that will be of advantage to the people of Canada and to the manufacturers. I am neither afraid nor ashamed to point them out when I come to them, and I will say just where I consider the duty is fair. But this is one article in regard to which it is very much the other way. Of glassware for lighting we exported $55,000 of which $27, went to France; but at the same time we imported $575,000 worth of which $2,000 came from France. That item has also been reduced. Of linen yarns there were no exports, but we imported $165,000 taking $8,000 from France. This is one of the articles we are allowed to export to France. Of linen thread we imported $295,000 worth, taking $8,700 from France. That is another article we are allowed to export under a comparatively high duty. The next item is yarns of phormium tenax, etc. Inasmuch as that is an article we do not produce and of which evidently we have no exports, I could not find anything in reference to it. The next item is ribbons, inked, etc., for typewriting machines, of which there are no records of any exports. But France has reduced the duty on this article, of which we imported $48,000. Item 461 refers to paper board of which our exports were $2,306,000. Of this amount France took $383. Of writing paper our exports were $84,000, of which France took $175. Of other paper we exported $201,000 worth, of which France took nothing. I might say in reference to the paper items that a reduction was made on several of them, but the duty is yet so high that I doubt whether any exports will be made in those lines. Of duplicating paper we had no exports, but France has reduced its tariff. The next item is albumenised photographic paper, sensitised. We had no exports of this article, but France has reduced its duty. However, we imported of this article $268,000, of which France supplied $15,000, the idea being, I suppose that we could send it back to France under a reduced duty.

Cigarette papers: We do not export any to France, but France sent us $74,000 worth. The duty remains the same, and this item appears on the list of goods that we are allowed to export. I think hon. members will agree when I say that the list is somewhat padded. Cardboard: no exports, but we imported $125,000 worth. I assume that cardboard might also be included in item 461, paper and card. Artificial leather: no exports, but we import $26,000 worth. France reduces the duty on that article. Peltries, prepared, etc., that is, furs, skins and hides: we exported $19,376,000 worth, of which France took $48,000 worth. Movements of table and wall clocks: no exports, but we imported $132,000 worth. We imported clocks to the value of $576,000; France reduces the duty. Electrometers, no exports. We imported electrometers to the extent of $238,000; France reduces the duty on this article. Tower clocks, no exports from Canada, but France reduces the duty. Steam engines: we exported $106,000 worth, of which France took goods to the value of $7,000; the duty remains the same. Traction engines: no exports, but we imported $1,800,000; the duty remains the same. Tenders for steam locomotives: there is no such article exported from Canada so far as I can see, but there is an item of export designated as "locomotives and parts" of which we exported $1,317,000. France lets the duty remain the same, although we did not export any of these articles to that country. Printing presses and machines: of linotype machines we exported $163,000; France reduces the duty. We did not send any of these to France. We imported printing presses to the extent of over $1,000,000. Agricultural machines: total exports, $5,500,000; France lets the duty remain the same. France imported from Canada last year agricultural machines to the value of $675,000. Of machine tools our total exports were $438,000 of which France took $13,000, and she reduces the duty. On typewriters weighing 40 kilograms the new duty is 300 francs. On the basis of 7 cents that is a duty of $21 on a 40-kilogram machine, which is the ordinary typewriter. That is a pretty stiff duty. The next item is 525, machines for rinsing, corking, etc.; no exports. Open boilers, 526, no exports; duty reduced. Item 533, component parts of machines, no exports. Item 535, copper: I gave the figures respecting exports of certain classes of copper, but they did not include manufactured articles.

Of all copper, and that would include brass and brassware, we exported $6,329,000 worth, of which France took goods to the value of $5,200. The next item is dynamo armatures and component parts; it is one item in connection with which it may be possible to do some business. Our total exports were $171,000, and the duty is now about 2½ francs per 100 pounds. I do not understand therefore, why we do not export more of these goods to France. Item 537, tools with or without handles: we exported $195,000 worth, of which France took nothing. I wish to give an illustration here in connection with mattocks. It takes about two dozen and a half mattocks to weigh 100 kilograms. On 2½ dozen the duty is 72 francs, which, at 7 cents a franc, is $5.04, figuring out at about $2 a dozen. Two francs duty on an article like a mattock is a pretty heavy duty. Item 539, stereotype blocks, plates, etc.; we exported $37,000 worth of which France took $50 worth. Pins: our total export was $50,000; France took nothing. Buckles and clasps: the duty is 325 francs per 100 kilograms, which at 7 cents a franc is $22,75 per kilogram, or 220 pounds. In other words, the basis of duty on an article that is worth 18 or 20 cents a pound is 50 per cent. Just here I want to say that this very same item of buckles and clasps appears in the list of goods that France sends to us. They are admitted into Canada on a 25 per cent tariff, and on the same class of goods exported by us to France, a duty of 50 per cent is paid. And that is not the only case of that kind.

The next item is, manufactures of case-hardened cast-iron: no exports. Building materials, structural steel: our exports were $160,000, nothing went to France; the duty is reduced to $44.10 per 100 kilograms. That figured out on a 100-pound basis, is 20 francs or $1.40 a hundred on structural steel. That is a pretty stiff duty. Is it any wonder that we could not ship any structural steel to France? And I do not think there is any more chance of doing so under this tariff than there was before.

Iron works for carriages: no exports. Locks and padlocks; a manufacturer in my district advises me that under the tariff as it exists he thinks he can do some business. I did not stop to figure it out at all; I am satisfied to give that information to the minister. Household wares and all artticles of iron, steel, etc., exports, $32,000; France took $800. Coffee-mills, no exports. Apparatus for water closets, no exports. Lamp-makers' and tinsmiths' wares, no exports. Detonators for mines, and the next item, miners' fuses, under the head of fulminates and explosives, we exported $2,200,000 worth of goods, France took nothing. The duty has been reduced, but it is still very high. Furniture: the duty remains the same in some cases; in other cases it has been reduced. But even as it stands there is no chance of doing business in this line. The minimum tariff of France does not mean anything if the duty is an adequate protective duty, and that is what it is in very many cases. In the case of furniture we exported $239,000 worth, and France took nothing.

In doors and windows and stuff of that kind we exported $120,000 worth, and never sent France a nickel's worth. In small wooden wares, item 602, we shipped $602,000 worth, and nothing to France. In bobbins there was no export. Then we come to item 604, upright pianos, duty 35 per cent. Here is an article that is also on both sides of the treaty. France is allowed to send upright pianos and all kinds of pianos into Canada and we are allowed to ship pianos to France. When we ship pianos to France the duty is 35 per cent, and when they ship to us the duty is 25 per cent. I ask if there is any fairness in that? If there is to be a treaty, let us have a treaty on real reciprocal lines.

In musical instruments, including pianos, France took nothing of what we exported. We imported musical instruments to the value of $2,258,000. France sent us $61,000 of these goods under a 27½ per cent duty, less the 10 per cent tariff that will be in existence when this treaty goes into effect. The treaty tariff will be 27½ per cent, less 10, which is practically a 25 per cent tariff, against a tariff on our stuff going to France of 35 per cent.

Then we come to automobiles, item 614. We exported $14,596,000 of automobiles and France took $2,800 worth. Some Canadian over there apparently wanted a car. The duty on our automobiles going into France is 45 per cent, and when the minister goes over to France he makes an arrangement whereby France can send her automobiles into Canada under a 25 per cent duty. I ask again, is that a fair proposition? Is that a treaty or is it a give-away? Then we come to item 620, india-rubber sheets, pure, not vulcanized. We have no exports as such, but we exported India rubber manufactures not specified under that heading to the amount of $296,000 of which France took $191 worth.

In manufactures of asbestos, item 620, our total exports were $4,800,000, and France took $30,000 worth. The duty is the same as it was. Item 620, mica in sheets; our total exports were $240,000, and France took $2,000 worth. The French duty is too high, and they took nothing but the rough plates. With a duty of 87½ francs against us on every 220 pounds, it is no wonder we did not export any mica. Item 635, observation, geodetical and optical instruments; of these we exported $286,000 worth, and France took nothing. France has reduced her duty on this item.

The next item, No. 641, is small wares, of which we had no exports as far as I can see. We had no exports under the next item, No. 642, of tobacco pipes.

I have now completed schedule A, and on practically all the items I have read there is hardly a reduction that gets us any place at all; there is hardly a reduction that is worth anything to us. We had everything that this treaty provides so far as this schedule is concerned, before the treaty was made. All these goods with a few minor exceptions went to France this year on as good terms as they will under the treaty. The minimum tariff of France, as I have shown, is in my opinion an adequately protective tariff. What have we got that we did not have before? As far as this schedule is concerned, the ministers might just as well have stayed home, and if we do not get any advantage under schedule A where do we expect to get any advantage out of this whole treaty? It is only in schedule A, because that is the minimum tariff. When we get to schedule B, it is no longer the minimum tariff of France, but an increased tariff. So if we get no advantage out of the minimum tariff what good is the whole treaty to us? I ask again, where does our advantage come in? I am not one of those who in making a bargain wants to see an advantage for us in everything. But we in this treaty are giving substantial advantages to France, deducting 10 per cent from the duty in a whole list of goods, and giving them low specific duties on other articles. We have given them substantial advantages as will be shown by the imports from France into this country in the past, and we are not getting any countervailing advantages in return. I say that in making a treaty it is only reasonable for those making it to look for some countervailing advantages.

There is another thing to be taken into consideration, and it is this. In giving this reduced tariff to France you are depleting your revenue. Now where is the advantage going to accrue to this country by taking so much off your revenue? Who is that going to accrue to, and where is that going to be made up? The only thing that I can see is that it will have to be made up by somebody else doing some business as against this extra business France will do, and if France does extra business with us under this reduced tariff will not that still further deplete our revenue? If France by these concessions that have been made does further business with us, that must necessarily take the business from another quarter which would yield us a higher revenue. I do not know, but it looks to me as if the loss of revenue alone will be over half a million dollars, and probably more. Then, of course, there has to be added the loss of inland revenue on wines, because I cannot conceive that this government and this parliament is going to fasten that wine duty upon the wine producers of this country. I cannot understand how they can do anything else but place our own wines on the same footing as French wines coming into this country. So, as I said before, unless we get some advantage out of schedule A, which is the minimum tariff, surely the minister will not claim that we are going to get any advantage out of schedule B, because that is an awful lot worse than the other. If you think some of the items I have read are bad, I think I can show as I go on that this new diplomacy probably of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not do us an awful lot of good when he was over in the Old Country helping to make this treaty. Now I want to go through the list of items in schedule B.

An hon. MEMBER: Brass tacks.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not catch my hon. friend's remark. Although what I have already said is probably painful to my hon. friend; he will find it even more painful when he hears some of the criticisms I am about to offer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is not painful at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is not painful yet? Well, let us take items 4, 5, 6 and 7 dealing respectively with oxen, cows, bulls, steers, bullocks and heifers.

An hon. MEMBER: "Bulls" is the right term.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I thought the Minister of Agriculture was in his seat but that is not his voice. Our total exports of live stock in these classes amounted to $8,538,000 and France took none. For fear they might take some the Minister of Finance and his confrere, who says it does not hurt, signed a treaty under which the tariff is raised. They raised the tariff from 20 francs per kilogram to 21½ francs. It was impossible for us to do any business with France in any of these items out of a total of $8,000,000 but we will do a lot now, I suppose, when the duty has been raised 1½ francs per kilogram against us. Now let us take item 8 dealing with calves. The duty on calves has been lowered from 40 francs per 100 kilograms to 27·2 francs which still leaves the duty at practically $2 apiece. The next item is rams, ewes and wethers. Our total exports amounted to $600,000 and France took none. The duty has been somewhat reduced but it represents $1.50 apiece. The duty on lambs has also been reduced. However, we exported none of these classes of live stock last year. Our total export of pigs amounted to $70,000 but we exported none to France. France has reduced the tariff a little and we may do something yet. Of live poultry our total export amounted to $798,000 but we sent none to France. But the Minister of Finance, with his confrere, signed a treaty by which the duty on poultry is raised from 20 to 25 francs. I would like to put this proposition to my hon. friend: If we do not sell any live poultry under a tariff of 20 francs how much can we sell under a tariff of 25 francs? I now take item No. 16, meat, fresh, including meat preserved by freezing. Our total exports of this commodity were $4,670,000 and France took none. The duty has been raised on pork from 25 francs to 27¼ francs, and on other meats from 35 francs to 37¼ francs. The same proposition could be propounded to the two ministers: How much more pork will we sell to France because of the higher duty? Of pork products we sold $23,000,000, and France took altogether $9,000. Poultry, dead; we exported $872,000 and France took none. For fear we might sell them some poultry France has raised the tariff from 20 to 25 francs. Now we come to margarine. France lowered the duty on margarine probably because we were not exporters of that commodity. I would not like to make that statement definitely. We did import $260,000 and we did not export any. However, France reduced the duty on margarine from 35 to 29 francs per 100 kilograms. I would like to know which of the two ministers agreed to the reduction of the duty on margarine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope the hon. member is aware that he will not be even allowed to manufacture it by the end of next month.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Item No. 35 is of condensed milk of which we exported $4,881,000. To France we sold $568,000 of condensed milk and I guess we must have sold that country too much because the tariff has been increased 50 per cent, from 5 francs to 7½ francs. Still it does not hurt. Butter: fresh or melted, or salted; we exported of butter a total of $3,228,000 and France took butter to the value of $45,000. On the fresh butter that we do not ship to France the duty is reduced from 30 francs to 22½ francs; on the salted butter that we do ship the duty is raised from 20 to 22½ francs. Still it does not hurt. Honey: We exported honey to the amount of $12,000 and sent $500 worth to France. We imported $86,000 worth of honey; the duty remains the same. Fish: preserved by pickling, or otherwise prepared; I note that our exports amounted to $6,400,000, principally canned salmon. France took $1,700,000 worth of this canned salmon and the duty is promptly raised from 25 francs to 35 francs per 100 kilos. I do not know whether the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is responsible for that or not, and probably it does not hurt, but still it is a fact just the same—the duty has been raised from 25 francs to 35 francs on a commodity that we sell a fair amount of in France. Probably France thought that she was buying too much. We exported malt to the amount of $237,000. France took none but raised the duty from 15 to 21 per cent. Groats, grits, (coarse flour) pearled or clean grain; we have no export of these commodities as such. Neither have we any exports under the head of "Pulse" which is a mixture of grains. Now we come to item No. 83, Potatoes, and I am sorry that the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Caldwell) is not here. We exported potatoes to the amount of $2,938,000. France did not take any but nevertheless raised the duty from .40 to .79 francs, pretty nearly doubling the duty. With a little more effort they would have doubled the duty exactly. Seeds for sowing; we exported $1,810,000 worth of clover seed and France took $11,000 worth, and promptly raised the duty from 25 to 30 francs per hundred kilograms under this treaty. Of other seeds we exported in all $615,000, and France took $2,000, and the duty remains the same. Chocolate; we had no exports, although the item is there to provide for them, but we imported $202,000 worth, and France let the tariff remain, probably with the idea that we will send some chocolate back to them. Under item 110, fixed oils, boiled and oxodized our exports were $146,000. The duty had been lowered from 300 francs to 172½ francs. The duty is still high—too high for us to make any export into France. Of alimentary vegetable fat; we exported $86,000 worth, and none went to France. That fact may account for the reduction of the tariff. We got a reduction from 35 to 29 francs because we did not export any. Wood, squared or sawn, less than 80 millimetres but exceeding 35 millimetres in thickness was given in full under another heading. Of paving blocks there were no exports. Straw or wool of wood; there were no exports, but the duty has been raised by the treaty from 4 to 6 francs per 100 kilograms. Of vegetables; fresh, salted or pickled, preserved, dried, we exported $1,104,000 worth, and France took nothing. The duty has been raised from 48 to 54 francs. Hops; we exported $381,000 worth. The duty remains the same. We did not send any to France. The duty is the minimum tariff. Imagine, 35 francs on 220 pounds. That is a pretty fair duty and it is no wonder we did not export any. Under item 160 we imported $742,000 worth; exported none to France. Under item 161, lupuline, we had no exports.

Bran, from any kind of cereals; France let the duty remain the same. We exported $1,104,000 worth and France took none. The duty is high enough to prevent us sending any bran. Cement; we exported $578,000 worth and France took none. The duty is the same. Bitumen and asphalt tiles, paving blocks or slabs; we had no exports, but we imported of bitumen and asphalt $515,000 worth, and France reduced its tariff on an article on which we had no exports. Paraffin, vaseline; the tariff has been reduced, but we had no exports. We imported $343,000 worth of it and the tariff has been reduced. Of cast iron, we exported $50,000 worth, but sent none to France.

Under the item of white-manganese iron, the tariff was reduced, but we had no exports. We exported $54,000 worth of ferro-silicon, but none to France. The item has been very materially reduced, and it is quite possible that article might go into France. Of ferro-manganese we exported $26,000 worth but none to France. Iron, crude steel in ingots; we exported $912 worth. The tariff on this item has been reduced by France. We imported $331,000 worth. Iron or steel, rolled or forged in blooms, billets or bars; we exported $303,000 worth and none went to France. The duty has been slightly reduced but not enough to be of any benefit. In regard to item 207 special rolled articles, I can find no exports. Of fine steel for tools, and special steel, there were no exports. Iron or steel, machine; no exports. Hoop iron or steel not rolled; no exports. Flat sheet; we had total exports of $5,000. Now they have reduced the duty on iron and steel hoops but the minister and the House know that there is no hoop steel or band steel made in this country. There is only one small mill making parts of sheets in the whole country. It seems to me it is all very well to have this listed in exports It does not do any harm, but it certainly does not do any good. Iron, tinned (tin plate) coated with copper, lead or zinc; we may be able some day to export some tin plate. We have not made any yet. Wire of iron or steel; we exported $271,000 worth, but none to France, and France raised the duty 3 francs per 100 kilograms. Iron shavings; we exported $707,000 worth. Being scrap, France reduced her duty, but she does not take any and did not take any last year. Rails of iron or ordinary steel; our exports amounted to $719,000 worth—none to France. The duty has been considerably reduced and may result in some benefit. Wheels, tires and wheel centres of iron or steel; there were no exports. The next two items 215 and 216 are "Straight-axles for railways and tramways, axles not specially mentioned, of iron or steel" and "Crank axles for locomotives, of iron or steel". Under the heading of "Locomotive parts," I gave this item before. Our exports were $1,317,000 worth but France took none. As to axles for automobiles, of iron or steel I can find nothing.

Now hon. members will notice that when you get to item 217 you come to a different class of items. The minister, in giving us the particulars of the items under this treaty, mentioned:

> —a few chemical products which are of importance to the Canadian trade.

I want to go over this list first, and pick out some of the things he left out. The first item referred to is ·019 in the book of particulars, sulphate of ammonia, crude. Our total exports under this item were $785,000 and France took nothing. The duty is $11.25 a hundredweight, although the minister told us that these were items that were important to Canada. It does not look to me as if he thought so when he was overseas, because I do not see any chance of our selling any of this product to France.

With regard to the next item 033, carbide of calcium, he said it was an important item to Canada. Well it was important. We imported $2,261,000 worth, and France took nothing. So important was it that the minister signed the treaty with France increasing that duty 50 per cent.

The next item is 0197 "Formic Aldehyde in solution of 40 per cent." I could not find that item, unless it had some connection with formaldehyde. The next item is 0198, an item with a long name. It is not indexed, and it is not in our exports. I cannot find it. The next item is acetone, of which we had no exports, but we imported $8,000 worth. The next item is 0203, acetic acid; we exported $22,000 worth and none went to France. The next item is 0210, acetate of pyrolignite of sodium, crystallized or hydrated. I might say that this comes under the item of sodium. I am going to treat all the sodium compounds as one, and we will come to that presently. We exported of sodium compounds $1,493,000 worth, and none went to France. The last item which the minister referred to as being important is guaiacol, which I cannot find as being exported at all and which I do not believe is made. This takes us down to about the middle of page 21 of the treaty.

I want, however, to go back and consider some of the items of the treaty which the minister has missed, or to which he has made no reference in his book of particulars. Of item 04, soda and sodium compounds, we exported $1,493,000 worth and France took none. Of nitric acid we had no exports. Of sulphate of ammonia we exported $151,000 worth, and France took none. Borate of sodium (refined borax) is down on this list as an article that we can export. I do not understand why anybody should insert borax as an exportable article from Canada. We have never made it. I have used that article in my business for forty years in large quantities, and I have always imported it from Holland or Britain. Lately one has been able to get it from the United States. Why is that article put down as an article that we can export, when we imported $132,000 worth.

The next items are 038, cyanide of potassium, and 039 cyanide of sodium, which are inserted as articles which we can export. As a matter of fact, these are in exactly the same category as borax. We imported $380,000 worth, and yet we are allowed to export these to France. The same thing applies to chlorates of borium, out of which peroxide of hydrogen is made. We had no exports, and we imported $29,000 worth. Chloride of calcium we did not export; we imported $48,000 worth.

Let us take the next item, iodine, crude and refined, and iodoform in another place down the list. We did not export these; we do not make them. We imported $30,000 worth. Yet in this treaty we are allowed to export these to France. Of phosphorus and chlorides of phosphorus we imported $40,000 worth. We did not export any. Those are in exactly the same category. Of sulphuric acid, on the other hand, we exported $63,000 worth and we did not export any to France. Bismuth salts are inserted in the list of articles which we can export. We imported $5000 worth.

The next items are 0118, 0119 and 0120, and as regards these I should like to get some information from the minister, because no information is given in the book of particulars. These are oxides and other salts of cobalt. What I should like to know—and the minister can give me this information another day—is whether any change has been made as regards cobalt or any of the oxides or other salts of cobalt in going to France. Are there any changes up or down? This is an important matter to us as we are exporters of these articles.

The next item, 0130, is oxides of iron. We exported $63,000 worth, and of this none went to France. The next item is 0139, sulphate of magnesium, of which we exported $5,000 worth and imported $35,000 worth. The next item is salts of mercury, of which we had no exports, but we imported $11,000 worth. The next item is carbonate of lead, of which we exported $84,000 worth, none going to France. The next item is crude potash, of which we exported $5,000 worth, and the next caustic soda, of which we exported $542,000 worth.

The next item is bicarbonate of sodium, of which we imported $147,000 worth, and we had no exports. Radium is inserted in this group as an article that we can export. As a matter of fact, we did not export any radium, and on the contrary we imported $72,000 worth. Of coal oil we exported $850,000 worth, and France took none. Chlorals and their derivatives are inserted as articles that we can export, but as a matter of fact, we imported $248,000 worth. Iodoform comes under the same heading as iodine which I mentioned a little while ago. Of glycerine we exported $5,000 worth. Glycerine is inserted as an article we can send to France. We imported $88,000 worth, and of that $88,000 worth we took $66,000 worth from France.

I have now come to practically the end of page 20, of the treaty and at the top of page 21, we find item 0237, sulphate of methyl. I am not going to weary the House with a description of the different chemicals and drugs contained on pages 21 and 22. I said a little while ago—and I think I have already demonstrated this—that I thought a good many of these articles were padding. I looked up my Webster's dictionary, because I must confess I was not acquainted with many of these articles, but I could not find them here. Then I got a friend of mine to consult the British Pharmacopoeia, and he could not find them. I applied to a gentleman in one of the best chemical importing houses here, and I sent him a list of the articles on page 21, beginning with 0237 and ending on the next page with 0379. This is what he says:

> Regarding the list you have sent me, there is hardly need of my answering each question individually according to the list.

I sent him a list, each with a number of it, so that he could give me a detailed answer.

> The items on the list you have sent me are practically all coal tar derivatives, and none of them made in Canada. The only exception I would make is that of collodion, which is made in Canada from materials brought from the other countries. These coal tar derivatives I think are now all made to a certain extent in the United States, but up to recently in England and on the continent, mostly in Germany. Of course, I do not know for what reason you require this information. If it is for the purpose of buying I could perhaps put you in touch with some of the better places either in the United States or abroad.

Mr. RYCKMAN: We are allowed to export them now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: These fillers represent articles that we are allowed to export to France. They clutter up the book and incidentally give some of us a great deal of work.

Mr. FIELDING: That is the sad part of the matter.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Now we come back to item 300 on page 22. I have few words to say on these articles with the long and unpronounceable names. Item 300, however, refers to blacks of different kinds, such as ivory, bone and lamp-blacks of different descriptions. We are allowed to export these articles to France. But we made no exports at all, while on the contrary we imported $258,000 worth of them. France has kindly reduced the duty, possibly hoping that we might send some of these things back. The next item, 301, is pencils of which we had no exports. We imported, however, $721,000 of which a few thousand dollars' worth came from France. Item 302 relates to carbons. I find no exports of this article, but on the other hand we had imports amounting to $58,000, and, as usual France when we have nothing to export, reduces the duty. The next item is 308, colours ground in oil. Of this we exported $238,000 worth, and again France has reduced the duty. She bought only $700 worth. I am not thoroughly acquainted with this line, and we may perhaps be able to do some exporting under this item. I doubt it, however, speaking from my experience in regard to other items. The next item is 311, under which the same duty obtains as previously. Of soaps we shipped altogether $225,000, but France took nothing. France may well keep the same duty, because she is herself a soap manufacturer and perfumery maker, and she is likely to keep the duty she has so that her manufacturers may not be jeopardized. Of chicory there are no exports, although this is one of the items on the export list. On the other hand, we imported $15,000 worth of this article, and as usual France has reduced the duty. The next item refers to dextrine. We had no exports of this article but we imported $90,000 worth. The duty has been reduced in France, but it is still too high even if we could export this article. Of candles we exported $2,000 worth. France has reduced the duty, but we imported $131,000 worth, a quantity of it coming from France. The duty on item 322 has been reduced. This relates to wax and stearic acid of which we exported $10,000, but none of it went to France. The next item I gave before, but it appears again. This is casein, of which we exported $1,400 and imported $20,000. None of what we exported, however, went to France. Under item 330, blacking, we had no exports. The French duty has been reduced very much on the item but we have no exports, although we imported $253,000. I come next to insulators of porcelain. Under this item France has reduced the duty. We had no exports, but we imported $625,000. I understand that it may be possible for us to do some exporting in this line. This article has been made in Canada during the last year, but whether we can export it or not I am not able to say. Item 349 refers to glass articles for electric lighting, of which we had no exports; and the next item 359 relates to bottles. France has reduced the duty, but we had no exports while France supplied us with a lot of bottles. I regret to say I have lost the figures in regard to this item. The next item on the list is in regard to glazed yarns, which article comes under item 367. We had no exports of this but we imported large quantities. The next item is 404, tissues of pure cotton. We exported $75,000 worth of this. France has reduced the duty, but she took nothing from us. You will observe that while we had no exports France has reduced the duty. In all the reductions that France makes in this schedule there is not one item in regard to which she brings her duty down to the minimum. Everything is above the minimum, because it would be in the other class if it were not so. And I can say to the House and to the minister without any fear of successful contradiction, except in reference to a few lines, that that minimum tariff of France without any addition to it is in every case, or almost in every case, an adequate protection. Let us take the next item, blankets of cotton under 418. We had no exports of this, but France has reduced the item. Of other manufactures of cotton we exported $422,000, of which France took the sum of six dollars. Of incandescent mantles under item 428 we had no exports, but we imported $70,000 worth. France has reduced the duty, but she does not reduce it to the minimum. Under item 441, tissues of pure wool, we exported $139,000. France reduced the duty somewhat on these items. Under item 451 we had no exports, but we imported $150,000 worth, but none from France. Of the next items in cloth we had no exports but we imported $1,600,000. We exported nothing to France in either case. Of wall paper we exported $445,000 of which France took $317. We had no exports of cardboard under that name; but of paper board we exported $2,306,000. Of this sum France took $383. Under the heading "paper" our total exports were $69,000,000, and of that amount France took $8,000. The duty on paper has mostly been increased, as it has been increased in the case of any article we are exporting in a large way. The next item is 469, rolls or bands for cinematographs. We imported of these articles $1,727,000, some of which we took from France. On the other hand, we exported $2,300,000 worth of which France took $1,800. This article comes into Canada from France on a basis of so much per foot. When it goes into France, however, it goes in on a weight basis and no one has any chance in the world to keep any check on it. It pays at the rate of $14 per pound, and if anyone can tell me what a particular film weighs I may tell him whether the duty is large or not. But I think the minister might get us the information on that score; I should like very much to have it. From my experience in regard to other things which I do know about I am quite sure that France is not allowing that material to enter that country at as low a rate as we are allowing the same thing to come in here. Item 476, skins and hides prepared; in this case France has lowered the duty. Our total exports were $19,000,000, of which France took $48,000 worth, principaly in furs. But even now, with the reduction, the duty is equal to 25 per cent. Item 477, artificial leather: we do not make it here, therefore we do not export it. On the other hand we imported it to the extent of $26,000. Why artificial leather should be included in the list of articles that France is allowing us to export is beyond my comprehension.

5 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the result when articles appear in two and three different schedules with different rates? This article has been in at least one schedule before.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If my right hon. friend will examine closely the book of particulars he will find that several things may come under that head; they are different articles, but they come in the same class or category. You will find a number in both A and B, but they relate to different classes of the article —perhaps different stages of manufacture, one more advanced than the other.

Item 484, gloves. The duty is reduced; our total glove export was $10,000 of which France took nothing. Our imports from all parts of the world were valued at $430,000; we took from France $53,000 worth—and France reduced the duty on gloves. Items 485 to 489, harness and saddles: our exports were $36,000 of which France took $55 worth. Of harness and leather goods we exported $360,000 worth, principally in leather, of which France took nothing. Item 511, steam engines: our export was $106,000; France took $7,800 worth. The duty on these articles has been considerably reduced. Internal combustion engines: we exported $285,000 worth of which France took $12,000 worth. Item 520, paper making machines, and 521, machines for folding, etc.: no export, but we imported $2,075,000 worth—and France reduces the duty. Item 522, sewing machines: we exported $746,000 worth of which France took nothing. There is an increase of duty from 32 to 41 francs to 143 to 205 francs, according to the grade—a very considerable increase. Item 524, dynamo-electric machines: we exported $171,000 worth and France took nothing. As I have said, I think there is a possibility of doing some business in this line. Item 524, electric apparatus: exports, $686,000, of which France took $788. The duty has been reduced; I think there is a chance here also. Item 525, general machinery: exports, $2,400,000 of which France took $100,000 worth; the duty remains the same. Item 526, heaters and stoves, exports amounted to $68,000 of which France took $35 worth. Item 527, refrigerating apparatus, no record of any exports, and the same is true of shafts. Item 533, balls for ball bearings: we do not make these in Canada. We imported $38,000 worth. I noticed in the book of particulars that in connection with this item, 533, schedule B, under the head of balls for ball bearings there are two or three interrogation marks; the minister might take an opportunity to explain that later. Item 534, springs of steel for carriages, no exports, but the duty has been reduced. Item 535, wires and cables, insulated; in this case there has been a reduction of duty. We exported of these articles $439,000 worth of which France took $3,000 worth. Item 536, electric arc-lamps: the duty has been increased. Wire gauze of iron or steel, item 541, no exports. The French duty has been increased 50 per cent on these items; we imported $158,000 worth, and we took some from France. This is another case in which we are allowed under the treaty to export to France and France is allowed to export to us; and the goods come to us at a different rate of duty from that which applies when the goods are imported by France from Canada. I do not think that is fair; it would not be considered fair by anybody. The same remarks apply to wire gauze of copper or brass, item 542. Although we have no exports, France increased its tariff 50 per cent, and we imported $289,000 worth, and some of it came from France. We exported of cutlery $813,000 worth; we imported, on the other hand, $1,500,000 worth. The duty is reduced; it now stands at 600 francs per 100 kilograms, which is equal to $19.25 on every 100 pounds. That looks to me like a very heavy duty. What chance would there be of our doing any business with France, even with the reduction? Item 552, railway chairs, no exports reported. The next is item 554; the duty has been increased. Our exports were $210,000, none to France. Item 562 chains. Chains of 15 millimetres or more carry a duty in France of about 50.4 francs, equal to $3.53 for 220 pounds. That makes the duty on chains about 1½ cents a pound. With a duty of 1½ cents a pound there is not much chance that I can see of doing business.

The next item is horse nails, No. 563. We exported nothing. Of other kinds of nails, Item 564, we had exports of $105,000, and nothing to France. The duty has been reduced on that, and under the reduced tariff of France the duty is 45 francs per kilogram or 220 pounds, which is about $1.40 a keg. We understand it better when it gets down to that basis. That is a pretty good duty.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What would they be worth?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I took one of the medium nails, so it would probably be something around a 2½ inch or a 3-inch nail. I cannot tell you what they are worth.

Item 565, wire nails; the duty on this has been increased 50 per cent. We exported $123,000 worth, and none to France. The duty is 66 francs per 100 kilograms, or 220 pounds; that is equal to $2.10 a keg. That gives you an idea of how the thing works out.

Our exports of screws, eyebolts, scrap hinges, etc., under item 566, was $14,000 worth, and France took nothing. The duty has been reduced, but I know that the rate as compared with other articles is too high. The treaty might go into effect, but we would never do any business under that duty.

The next item is 567, tubes of iron and steel. We exported $1,250,000 worth. What I want to convey to the minister is this, and it is significant. We were working under an arrangement last year and we exported $1,250,000 worth of tubes, but not a dollar's worth went to France. On the other hand, we imported some seamless steel tubing at 10 cents per pound. Our duty is 5 per cent, and the French duty on this article is 20 per cent. Now I ask if that is a fair proposition? Is that a treaty or is it another hand-out?

The next item is 571, buckles for saddlery. We had no exports. The duty has been reduced to 133 francs per kilogram. That will amount to $4.25 per 100 pounds. I was informed by a maker of these buckles that if they were saddlery buckles of some dimensions the price was about 15 cents a pound. That looks a pretty good duty. I do not know whether I skipped an item inadvertently, but there was an item for small buckles that I seem to have passed over. There are two items for buckles in the list, and on the small buckles I was told by the same manufacturer that the duty was 50 per cent of the value—and this is supposed to be a duty on which you can do some business. If the duty France imposes is altogether protective, one that keeps us out entirely, why that makes all the difference in the world. It is no treaty at all then; it is worthless. The next item is lead pipes and manufactured lead. Our total exports were $1,718,000, and France took $2,518 worth, and she raises the duty. The next item, No. 577, is tin pots and other manufactures of tin. We exported $33,000 of these goods, but none to France. France reduces the duty under the treaty, but it is still too high to do business.

Of aluminum articles or products we exported $1,500,000, and France took nothing. The French duty has been reduced on this article, and it may be that we can do some business, but I want to point out to the minister that we are still a long way above the minimum tariff of France on this article, and if other countries that are supplying aluminum happen to be on the minimum tariff basis, what chance have we got? That is an article of some consequence to this country.

The next item, No. 590, is furniture. We exported $239,000 worth, and France took $200 worth, and that $200 item came to us through the United States. It was not of our manufacture, but came from the United States for re-export. The tariff on furniture, as I said on another item, is too high. You could not send furniture to France under the present tariff at all. Item 597, builders "and cartwrights" wood; we had no exports, and the duty has been raised. Item 603, handles for agricultural instruments; of these we exported last year $240,000 worth, and France took nothing. Judging only from what appears in the tariff I cannot see why we should not sell France some of these goods. The duty is only 10 cents per dozen, and I do not see why we should not sell something under that duty. There may be some mistake. I would like to have the minister look at that item and see whether I am wrong. Item 614, carriages; we exported $11,000 worth, and France took nothing. Of cycles, under Item 614, we exported $10,000 and France took nothing. The next item is vessels. We exported several vessel products. In one group we exported $3,242,000, and France took $3,000 worth. In another group we exported $45,000, and France took nothing, and in another group, motor boats, we exported $82,000, and France took nothing. On two of these groups the duty has been reduced, and on the other it has been raised. Of manufactures of rubber, item 620, we exported $4,248,000, and France took $18,000 worth. Now in the face of that large export and a not too large import by France, France raises the duty on these manufactures 50 per cent straight. Of braces, the next item, probably under item 620 also, we exported $52,000 worth, and France took nothing, and immediately raises the duty 50 per cent higher. Of boots and shoes we exported $358,000 worth, and France took $500 worth, and promptly raises the duty 50 per cent. The next item is inner tubes. We have no exports of such, but under the head of tires we exported $2,700,000 worth, and France took $69,000 worth. Of solid rubber blocks under the very same item there are no exports. Of felt we exported $56,000 worth. France took nothing and the duty has been reduced. Of the items from 621 to 625, dealing with manufactures of felt, our exports amounted to $98,000 but France took nothing. The duty has been reduced but is still too high, much higher than the minimum tariff. Take item 644, paint and other brushes; we exported these goods to the value of $94,000. The duty has been reduced but France only took articles under that head to the value of $34. We exported corsets to the value of $710,000 and France took none. We imported corsets to the amount of $272,000 and some of these came from France. The duty is still there although it has been considerably reduced.

Now, that exhausts the two schedules of goods that we are allowed, under this treaty, to export to France. I now wish to refer for a moment, but only in a general way, to some of the articles that France is allowed to sell Canada under this treaty. I would ask the Minister of Finance why shrubs, grape vines, gooseberry bushes, and trees of all kinds of which we have good growers in this country and of which we export considerable quantities are allowed to enter Canada at two cents apiece whereas similar provision has not been made for Canadian trees and shrubs on the part of France. It seems to me that there should be extended to us the same privileges that the other party to the treaty enjoys, otherwise this arrangement cannot be considered in any sense as a treaty. The same thing applies to other articles. The Minister of Finance admits French automobiles to Canada at a duty of 25 per cent, whereas the Canadian automobile going into France is subject to a duty of 45 per cent. The French piano is admitted to Canada at 25 per cent, but when the Canadian piano goes into France it must pay 35 per cent duty. In view of this discrimination, this arrangement does not look to be very much of a treaty. Now take buggies. The rate of duty on a Canadian buggy entering France is 35 per cent; the duty on the French buggy entering Canada is only 25 per cent. The same thing is true of buckles, needles and pins, braces and suspenders. The duty is lower on the French articles entering Canada than it is on the Canadian articles entering France. Why is it that buttons that are manufactured in this country cannot enter France on the same terms as French buttons are admitted to Canada? There is no use in going over the entire list of articles that enter Canada from France. All these goods that I have enumerated enter Canada under special terms. Now this is going to have a prejudicial effect on the revenues of Canada and we shall not enjoy any countervailing advantage, because, as I have shown, under this treaty no greater volume of Canadian goods will be admitted to France than went to that country last year What advantage are we going to get in return for this loss of revenue? I can quite understand that there might be some advantage to us if the effect of this treaty would be to increase the volume of our exports to France, but such will not be the case.

Having occupied so much time in dealing with this matter I feel that I owe an apology to the House. However, as two members of the government went to Europe and spent some months in the negotiation of this treaty, perhaps not very much complaint can be made if a few hon. members should occupy an hour or two in criticizing the provisions of that agreement.

Mr. FIELDING: I shall not at this late hour enter into any lengthy reply to my hon friend. I will deal only with one or two points and then ask that six o'clock be called, because if I got into a detailed discussion of the question at this period of the afternoon it might be inconvenient.

I have difficulty in quite understanding the basis of my hon. friend's criticism. If I may sum it up—and I hope I sum it up correctly—what he means to argue is this: Our trade with France is so inconsiderable that it is not worth our while to have a treaty with that country. I think that is a fair summary of my hon. friend's statement. If I have correctly defined his position in that regard all I have to say is that holding that view he will be wise if he records his vote when the time comes against the adoption of this treaty; there is no other course open to him. But in doing so my hon. friend will cast some little reflection upon some distinguished statesmen who have figured in this matter in the days gone by. Hitherto it has been assumed in Canada by every government, by every party, that it was desirable to have a treaty with France. It was for that reason that, long ago, Sir Charles Tupper was sent over to negotiate a treaty. It was for that reason that other members of the Conservative party were sent to negotiate a treaty with France. It was for that reason that the late government, not many months ago, made a treaty with France, a treaty to which some of the hon. gentleman's criticism applies today. It was for that reason my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) declared in this House that it was desirable we should have a treaty with France. It was for that reason that they put in their last trade agreement the announcement that such treaty was only of a temporary character, and that there were to be negotiations for a larger and more comprehensive convention. So when my hon. friend has established to his own satisfaction that owing to the inconsiderable volume of our trade with France we should have no treaty at all, then I say, he has done it at the expense of the reputation of the distinguished statesmen of the Conservative party in years gone by.

My hon. friend has talked about another question. He repeatedly said that in this treaty we are giving a certain rate of duty to French goods coming into Canada, while France will not give us the same rate of duty. "Why," he says, "Is that fair? Is it fair that France should send an article into Canada at a rate of 20 per cent while our goods from Canada are charged 35 per cent?" Triumphantly my hon. friend asked that question and I suppose he thinks he has got the answer to it. Well, Canada has her own fiscal policy. She has a moderate tariff policy with an inclination downward. France, on the other hand, has a high protective policy with an inclination upward. Does my hon. friend think he can change the whole fiscal policy of France at a breath? We have the greatest respect for his knowledge, and even for his skill, as a business man. But does he think that if he had gone over to Paris, like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) and myself, he could have changed the whole fiscal policy of France, and that he could have got France to say, "We made a mistake. We are a protective country and, owing to the war, and other reasons, we had to increase our tariff on account of the conditions which resulted, but we were wrong and we are quite prepared to revise our whole tariff policy." Does my hon. friend think he could have accomplished that in Paris? If he does not think so then his criticism with regard to the inequality of the duties falls to the ground. Canada is a low tariff country. My hon. friend opposite may not think so; but we think we have a moderate tariff policy as against the high tariff policy of France, and if we are to trade with France in any degree we have to accept that condition; we have to accept the conditions she lays down and that is one of the vital things that my hon. friend has ignored.

The one great object, and the greatest object we had in negotiating the treaty, was this; we knew very well that we could not get low rates in France, but there was the danger that our great competitor and rival, the neighbouring republic, would get better rates, and the main policy we had in view in the negotiation was to be in a position to declare that, though the rates were high, we got the best rates that were going, the best rates granted to our competitor, the United States. That was the main feature of our tariff policy in the treaty negotiation and that has been carried out to the uttermost. I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At 6 o'clock the House adjourned, without question being put, pursuant to rule.

Thursday, April 19, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. BAKER, M.P.

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi) moved:

That the first report of the special committee appointed to confer and act with the like committee of the Senate in further considering and determining the form of the memorial to be erected in the Parliament Buildings to the late Lieut.-Col. George Harold Baker, M.P., for Brome, be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: This, of course, must be by leave of the House.

Motion agreed to.

PAPERS PRESENTED

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table

copies of correspondence and agenda of the Imperial Economic Conference, 1923, and of the Imperial Conference, 1923.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PENSIONS

MOTION FOR PRINTING INTERIM REPORT

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): By leave of the House I beg to move:

That 1,000 copies in English and 200 copies in French be printed of the interim report of the Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-establishment, and that Rule 74 of the House of Commons be suspended in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to.

IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES A. STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 112, to amend the Irrigation Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Explain, please.

Mr. STEWART: This bill is for the purpose of making a slight amendment to make it clear that there shall be no conflict as between the rights of lease holders for mining purposes and the provisions of the Irrigation Act as they apply to streams, lakes or even sloughs. Some difficulty has arisen with respect to the claims of parties holding leases having the right to mine under existing water courses, lakes and sloughs, and this amendment is for the purpose of clearing the matter up.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 110 (from the Senate), for the relief of Frederick Fong Young.—Mr. Stewart (Hamilton).

Bill No. 111 (from the Senate), for the relief of Thomas Percy Eversfield.—Mr. Ryckman.

QUESTIONS

DUTIES ON AGRICULTURAL AND ANIMAL PRODUCTS

Mr. ANDERSON:

What was the amount of duty collected in the first eleven months of 1921-22 and 1922-23 respectively on the following:—(a) Agricultural and vegetable products mainly foods; (b) agricultural and vegetable products other than foods; (c) animal and animal products?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

Customs duties were collected in the eleven months ended February, 1922 and February, 1923 as follows:

	Apr. 1, 1921, to Feb. 28, 1922	Apr. 1, 1922, to Feb. 28, 1923
(a) Agricultural and vegetable products, mainly foods.....	$18,535,282	$23,191,974
(b) Agricultural and vegetable products, other than foods..	12,639,691	13,481,762

HON. WILLIAM PUGSLEY

Mr. CHARTERS:

1. Has the Honourable William Pugsley, late Minister of Public Works for Canada, been recently engaged by the Dominion government?

2. If so, for what purpose has he been engaged and what are his duties?

3. Who has been performing these duties up till the time of Mr. Pugsley's engagement?

4. What remuneration is Mr. Pugsley to receive, from what source; and what amount, if any, has he already received on account?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. The Hon. William Pugsley was appointed a commissioner under The Inquiries Act by Order in Council P.C. 165, dated the 13th of March, 1923.

2. The Hon. William Pugsley was appointed a commissioner to investigate and report upon:

(a) Claims of persons residing or carrying on business in Canada who have been subjected to loss and pecuniary damages arising through the destruction of life and property through the illegal warfare of the enemy; and

(b) claims for damages to which persons residing or carrying on business in Canada have been subjected for breaches of contracts, which contracts were prevented from being carried out owing to the operation of the statutory list of persons in neutral countries with whom such contracts were declared illegal;

for the purpose of determining whether such claims are within the categories in the first annex to section 1 of part VIII of the Treaty of Peace with Germany, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof.

(c) applications from ex-enemy nationals for the release of their property upon the grounds that they are necessitous, suffering and in hardship.

3. The Hon. Sir John Douglas Hazen was appointed a commissioner under The Inquiries Act for the first two of the purposes above stated, but requested to be relieved of his duties shortly after assuming them.

4. The sum of $500 on account of travelling expenses has been paid out of the appropriation for the adjustment of war claims and no further sum has been paid to the Hon. Mr. Pugsley.

The remuneration payable to Hon. Mr. Pugsley has not yet been fixed.

SALES TAX ON AUTOMOBILES

Mr. ANDERSON:

1. What is the regulation governing the sale of automobiles which have been used as demonstration cars by dealers, with regard to the sales tax introduced in the budget of last year?

2. When was such a regulation passed by the department?

3. Were automobile dealers notified by the department of such regulation? If not, what means were taken by the department to inform dealers of the existence of this regulation?

4. How many dealers paid the sales tax introduced in the budget of last year on cars in their possession on May 24, 1922, and what was the total collection from this source?

5. Has there been any organized protest from automobile dealers against the payment of this tax?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU:

1 and 2. No regulation was issued in respect of demonstration cars. Each case was dealt with separately after being reported upon by the local collector of customs and excise.

3. A circular dated 23rd May 1922, was issued to collectors of customs and excise containing instructions to have officers assigned to call upon dealers in their port and secure an inventory of all taxable automobiles on hand on the 23rd May, 1922. Each dealer was required to submit a statutory declaration in support of such inventory.

4. 613 dealers paid excise tax on cars on hand on the 23rd May, 1922. Excise tax collected, $90,661.70.

5. No organized protest made to Department of Customs and Excise against payment of this tax.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY—PURCHASE OF TORONTO PROPERTY

Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. Has the Canadian National Railway Company bought or given to the owners an offer to buy the block situate at the northwest corner of King and Yonge streets, Toronto?

2. If so, what is the purchase price or price offered?

3. Why is the Canadian National Railway at this time buying this exceedingly high priced property?

4. Is the company not now the owner of property situate opposite the King Edward Hotel, Toronto?

5. Is it not quite ample for, or easily made quite ample for the needs of the railway company?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. The Canadian National Railway Company is arranging to buy the property in question.

2. Price must be approved by Exchequer Court, and nothing definite can be announced at this time.

3. It is essential to the interests of the Canadian National Railway, if it is to continue in passenger business in Toronto, to be as well located as its principal competitor. Under the circumstances, the property is not regarded as high priced.

4. Yes.

5. This property is not satisfactory for purposes of passenger ticket office.

L. R. STEEL COMPANY, LTD.

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. Was the L. R. Steel Incorporation incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to do business in this country?

2. If so, what steps, if any, does the government intend to take in order that in future any similar companies may not take advantage of the people of Canada in canvassing to buy stock without first assuring the public that said companies are organized on a sound basis.

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. (a) The L. R. Steel Company, Limited, was incorporated by letters patent issued under the Dominion Companies Act on the 28th October 1919, on the application of Peter White, James Moffat Forgie and Craig Allan St. Clair McKay, barristers-at-law; Willis Bertram Sturrup, office manager; Thomas Stewart Hagan Giles, accountant; James Ramsay Morris, student-at-law, and Annetta Rose Brown, stenographer, all of the city of Toronto; the company was capitalized at $2,000,000 divided into 20,000 shares of $100 each, of which 10,000 shares were preferred under conditions set out in the charter.

[Mr. Bureau.]

(b) Supplementary letters patent were issued to the company on the 6th January 1921, increasing its capital from $2,000,000 to $8,000,000, by the creation of 40,000 preference shares of $100 each and 20,000 common shares of $100 each.

(c) The Steel Realty Development Corporation, Limited was incorporated on the 23rd of December, 1920, on the application of Peter White, Bert Henry Luther Symmes and William Osmond Gibson, barrister-at-law; Thomas Stewart Hagan Giles, accountant; Willis Bertram Sturrup, office manager; Millie Croucher, clerk, and Annetta Rose Brown, stenographer, all of the city of Toronto, with a capitalization of $10,000,000 divided into 50,000 preference shares and 50,000 common shares.

(d) Supplementary letters patent were issued to the Steel Realty Development Corporation, Limited, on the 18th August, 1922, extending its powers to enable it to act as agents or brokers, etc.

2. Under the provisions of the Companies Act, chapter 79 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, companies incorporated thereunder selling securities to the public are required to file prospectuses, for the purpose of assisting the investing public to form a judgment upon the financial standing and future prospects of such companies. The said act further provides penalties for infractions of its prospectus clauses. The act makes such provisions as parliament considered effective for the protection of the public, and if its requirements are not fulfilled, or if misrepresentations are made, the enforcement of the statute is in the hands of the parties interested therein. There is no provision in the said act casting upon the government or any department thereof the duty of enforcing the clauses referred to.

DUTY AND DRAWBACK ON STEEL, COAL AND WOOLLEN IMPORTATIONS

Mr. BANCROFT:

1. For the last fiscal year, what was the amount of duty paid on steel, coal and woollen goods, and what drawback was repaid on steel, coal and wollen goods, imported by: (a) International Harvester Company; (b) Ford Motor Company; and (c) Massey-Harris Company?

2. What other drawbacks, if any, were allowed these companies?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: I do not think this question ought to be answered as it appears on the order paper, for the reason that the answer would disclose the private business of the firms that are mentioned. The question calls for the importations made by the Massey-Harris Company, the Ford Motor Company, and the International Harvester Company, and the drawback paid. It has always been deemed advisable to keep information of this kind within the department. If my hon. friend wants any particular information, I shall be willing to give it to him at the department for himself, but I do not think it would be advisable to answer publicly the question in the form in which it is.

Question dropped.

LABRADOR GOLD RUSH

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GAUVREAU: I would like to ask the government a question on what I believe to be a matter of public interest. In view of the fact that a rush will be made this spring to the Labrador coast by many thousands who are attracted by the gold fever, and in view also of the fact that the money of the people is pouring into the pockets of gold schemers in this country, does not the government think that a statement should be given to the public at large by the Department of Mines as to the possibilities of finding gold in Labrador? A true statement by the Department of Mines would be a safeguard for many people who are blinded at the present time by companies desirous of gathering money for their schemes

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can scarcely answer the hon. gentleman's question, but I may say that the department has taken this precaution: We have at the moment an inquiry in progress to get as far as possible any information that may be available with respect to the reported discovery of gold in the area referred to. The report of that investigation is not yet in my possession but I expect to receive it within a short time.

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GAUVREAU: Is it the intention of the Prime Minister that the House shall sit on Wednesday evening commencing next week?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think there is a disposition on the part of a number of members of the House to have Wednesday evenings retained for a little time longer. The government had not thought it advisable to sit next Wednesday evening. However, as to the time of resuming the Wednesday evening sittings the government will be pleased to consider the general wishes of the House as they may be represented to us.

CLOSING OF BRANT HOSPITAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ANDERSON: I would like to ask the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment if the article appearing in the Hamilton press intimating that the Brant military hospital is to be closed in July next is correct?

Mr. BELAND: This question, Mr. Speaker, is now under consideration, but no definite decision has, as yet, been arrived at.

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 18, the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Fielding for the second reading of Bill No. 23, respecting a certain Convention of Commerce between His Majesty and the French Republic.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks which I made on this motion last evening I pointed out that the only logical conclusion to the criticism offered by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) must be, first, that this treaty is a very foolish one, and furthermore, that in view of the inconsiderable volume of trade with France it is not worth our while to make a treaty at all. I think I was not mistaken—

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I be allowed to say to the minister that I do not want the impression to go abroad that I am not in favour of a treaty with France. On the contrary, I am in favour of a treaty provided it is a fair one.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member will have the opportunity of recording his vote against this motion and I hope he will remember that when the division comes. Let me say, though, that if I have the misfortune to run counter to the views of my hon. friend in this matter I can comfort myself with the thought that in endeavouring to make an arrangement for trade relations with France I am but following the example of the distinguished public men of this country for the last forty years. Though I have, with great reluctance, to differ with my hon. friend from Lincoln, I comfort myself with that thought.

I pointed out last evening the importance of recognizing the difference between the French fiscal policy and the fiscal policy of Canada. My hon. friend again and again quotes cases in regard to which he says "The duty which France imposes is high and the duty which Canada imposes is low," and on the assumption that that is wrong he denounces the present treaty. Now, it is utterly impossible to conduct treaty negotiations with France upon any such basis. My hon. friend's argument, again and again, is this: He quotes some item in which the duty in France is high and the duty in Canada is moderately low, and he triumphantly asks "Is that a fair treaty?" I want to remind my hon. friend that under the existing condition of affairs he has himself voted for a treaty which controls the present relations between Canada and France, and if he will examine that treaty he will find that there are frequent cases where the duties which we impose in Canada are very much lower than the duties which are imposed on the other side of the Atlantic. So that this idea of reciprocity in duties which the hon. gentleman had in his mind, and on which he bases much of his argument, is utterly untenable; it is not tenable as respects our present condition, it cannot be tenable as respects the future.

Let me take one single item, which he mentioned himself in his speech, that of automobiles. Our rates of duty are 22½ per cent under the preferential tariff, 30 per cent under the intermediate tariff, and 35 per cent under the general tariff. According to my hon. friend's contention that must be the same condition in France. We must have the same rates as in France otherwise he would not support the treaty, otherwise he would say "How can this be a treaty at all when the rates are so unequal?" Surely the rates granted in France were the same, were they not, before my hon. friend consented to vote for that treaty?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would just point out to the hon. minister that I was not here when the other treaty was made, and following the continuance of that treaty my understanding of the matter was that there was to be a new convention by which some of these anomalies would be corrected.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. gentleman says he was not present on the occasion referred to I must accept his statement. My impression was that he was here when the new treaty was adopted. I accept my hon. friend's statement. At all events the treaty was made by the government that he supported. Although he may not have voted for that treaty himself the party which he supports made and supported it. But let me give an illustration, and I can give it in a minute.

[Mr. Fielding.]

We admit automobiles into Canada to-day at the rate of 35 per cent, and if a Canadian automobile goes into France the duty is—these duties are specific but by converting this into an ad valorem duty it is approximately 180 per cent. That is the condition existing to-day under an arrangement made by the government of which he was a supporter even if he did not himself vote for it. My. hon. friend surely cannot realize the utter impossibility of doing what he asks us to do and that is ask the French government to fix the same rates as we have in Canada. I could give the same illustration for many other items but that one is sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister succeeded in getting that duty, under this treaty reduced to 45 per cent. Why not have had a little further reduction, if he could accomplish that much.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is entitled to put a question, with the consent of the member speaking, but he cannot indulge in discussion.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not object to my hon. friend's interruption. There are many other cases to which I could apply the same illustration. However, my point is this: The argument advanced by the hon. gentleman, that because the duties imposed in France were higher than the duties we imposed in Canada the treaty is unfair, is utterly unworthy of him and should not have been used. If my hon. friend will apply the same test to other classes of articles to which he referred he will find that the existing order of things is entirely against his own argument.

Now, I do not want to dwell too much on details of that nature. My hon. friend has quoted repeatedly the high duties that are imposed on articles in France and he asks with an air of triumph "Can we expect to do any business under these terms?" Well, I frankly admit that when we are doing business with any protectionist country the restrictions on trade operate to our disadvantage. I grant at once that we are not likely to do as much business with France under the present treaty, under the existing arrangement, or under the new treaty, as we could if France had a moderate tariff. But is that a reason why we should not endeavour to do what we can. We cannot undertake to change the whole fiscal policy of France; we must do business with France on the basis that she has that protective system, that her duties are high. But surely because we cannot do all the business with France that we would like is no reason why we should not endeavour to do whatever is possible. What concerns us most is to see that we get the best terms that are offered to others. I suggested that yesterday but I want to repeat it again. I realize that under the high duties of France we cannot expect to do a very great trade, but certainly we will do less trade if we are placed at a disadvantage as compared with foreign countries. Our great competitor in Europe is, and will naturally be, our neighbour to the south, the American republic, and if we cannot get low duties in France surely it is worth our while to see that nobody else gets any better treatment than we do. That was one of the vital points of our object in going to Europe and that point, as I shall show further on, we have fully accomplished. The United States now has some advantage over us. I will take occasion to refer to that later. Our object in this treaty has been to terminate these disadvantages under which we suffer, to get the best terms that are now available, and to get a guarantee that in the years to come the United States shall get no greater advantages than are given to Canada. Is this not a worthy object?

My hon. friend made a passing allusion to a question of perhaps local importance to him, the duty on wines. He points out that under this treaty we are reducing the duty on wine. That is absolutely correct. We did so before. You could not make a treaty with France unless you were prepared to make some concessions in the matter of wines; but the hon. member talked of the Canadian wines and the duty imposed upon them. That is a different question. I stated in the first stage of the discussion of this measure that the duty set forth in the treaty with France might necessitate some readjustment of other duties, and I still stand by that statement, but we are not called upon to deal with that to-day. We are dealing entirely with the duties imposed on goods from France, and the taxes we shall impose on commodities made in Canada or any goods imported from other countries into Canada is another question, which we are not called upon to deal with at this moment.

My hon. friend for Lincoln said we should have had in a larger degree the French minimum tariff. I agree with him that that was desirable. It would have been a good thing if we could have had the whole minimum tariff and not have had to resort to the schedules at all, but we cannot get that minimum tariff from France. France will not grant the whole minimum tariff to any country. She uses her tariff as the instrument for commercial negotiations. Since we cannot get the whole minimum tariff, what should we do? Should we endeavour to get as much as possible, or should we let the whole matter alone and say that it is not worth trying to get? Our view is to get as much of it as we can, and if we have some articles mentioned in the list that are of no great importance, putting it at the lowest point of argument, what harm can come to any Canadian if we put in some articles which we do not export?

The hon. member spent a great deal of his time in dealing with the character of our exports. He mentions a number of things we do not export. He says there are certain articles which we export to other countries, which we do not export to France, and why bother with France at all? That is his argument. Well, it might strike most of us to look at it the other way. If there are articles which to-day we are exporting to other countries, there seems to be a fair chance that we might export them to France. That looks logical and reasonable, and we are desirous of the opportunity of exporting them to France. In the second part of my hon. friend's argument he read page after page, for hour after hour, of a long list of items which we do not export. He tells us of some things which he knows about personally. He says "We do not send these things to France" and therefore the inference is: Why bother about them at all? According to his argument, the proper preparation for a treaty would have been that we should have looked at the articles that Canada is exporting, and we should have said that if we provided for these, that was all that was necessary. That was not our notion. I am glad to tell my hon. friend that we proceeded along a different line. We thought it would be wise to ascertain by inquiry, not only what we are exporting, but what we might hope to export if the trade came to us. We were making a treaty not for to-day alone. True it is terminable on short notice, but we hope it will last a long time, and so we are putting in a list of articles which we might possibly export in the future. He speaks of many things with scorn and derision. He spent a large part of his time mentioning certain articles, and getting the laughter of his friends, and saying "We do not export a dollar's worth of that particular article." I do not think that was a sound argument. It might afford as much amusement to the friends of the hon. member when I tell him that some of the very articles he spoke of with scorn and derision were put in that list at the request of the Manufacturers' Association, of which he is a member. My hon. friend was content with a small, narrow vision. If we are not exporting a thing to-day, we never will export it—that is his method of argument. That does not suit us on this side of the House. If he has the idea that the manufacturers of Canada are standing still and are not expanding, we differ from him. We think the manufactures are expanding to-day. We think they are making many things to-day they did not make before, and there are many things turers are expanding to-day. We think they will make in the near future. At any rate we think we are right in trying to open the doors of the French market to these articles. However, if our anticipations and expectations are too great in this regard, what harm is done by putting them in the list? Surely it is our duty to provide, not only for the things we are exporting to-day, but for the things we hope to export in the future, having regard to Canada's expanding manufacturing industries.

My hon. friend made merry for a long time when dealing with the articles we were not capable of exporting. I have already stated that some of the things were put in the list at the instance of the great association of which he is a member, but I think I will have to get a little closer to show how rash he is in his efforts to find fault with this bill. I know in his heart he believes in this treaty. He must approve of it in regard to the business with which his own community is connected, but he has allowed himself, for party purposes, I regret to say, to be carried to extremes. He referred to the articles that are mentioned in this long list—this padding as he calls it—and he says "I cannot imagine why on earth bronze powder should be put down in the treaty with France, when we never made the article and have imported it. I have used it in my business for forty years and we have never bought any in this country. Nevertheless, it is put in on this list." That is one of our crimes. We put in this list, as a possible thing which may be made in Canada, the article of bronze powder, and my hon. friend laughs us to scorn because we did so. I will give him an answer to that statement. Here is a telegram, addressed to myself, dated, Montreal, April 19th, which reads:

> Bronze powders have been made continuously in Valleyfield since you were there in 1906 on tariff inquiry. Our business increased with France in consequence of French treaty, and since opening office there, exporting 80 per cent of our product to foreign countries and increasing our capacity.

[Mr. Fielding.]

That is signed by R. E. Thorne, president of the Canadian Bronze Powder Works, Limited. I think my hon. friend would have been wiser if he had given a more thoughtful study to these matters before he made the rash statement which he did make. Only one day has elapsed since my hon. friend made his speech and this telegram reached me this morning, but I suppose others who have heard the criticism may be moved to say "We are not accepting his views, but we are going to give a chance to the Canadian manufacturer to make the things which we are not making to-day but which we may make in the near future".

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I ask a question?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the hon. minister say, if bronze powder has been exported, why it is left out of both the customs and export returns?

Mr. FIELDING: The export returns have not been prepared by me, but have been prepared by the government which the hon. member supported. If he has any criticism to offer on that score, I would remind him that the last public returns produced were made under the direction of my predecessor, and I am not going to find any fault with them. I suppose they did what they thought to be best. My hon. friend spent so much time in dealing with those goods which are of no importance that he forgot the larger question which he might have taken up. I will put the question to him. What odds, if all these things which he calls padding are put into the treaty? In this case we show him why, and in many other cases we can show the reason. But suppose he is right, suppose we not only do not export but cannot export, will you tell me what harm comes from putting them in the treaty so that if our manufactures develop we will have the opportunity of exporting them. What harm comes from it?

I want to put a better question that he might have put. He might have asked us why we have not inserted this, that, or the other item in the treaty. If my hon. friend can show that one single item of importance to the export trade of Canada, an item that we are exporting to-day or have a fair chance of exporting, is not covered by this treaty; if he could ask me that question and I was not able to answer it, then I would admit that we were open to criticism. This treaty may err in the matter of covering too much ground; but I state with confidence that there is not an item that Canada is exporting to-day or has hope of exporting in the early future, that is not covered by this treaty. If it is covered and if we get the best possible terms as compared with our neighbours in the United States, why should we complain of that?

My hon. friend asked some questions. He said: "We are to have no advantages over the present treaty. What have we that we did not have before? We have everything now without the treaty. Why then," he argues, "make a treaty, if things are as they are?" The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), in his speech delivered in this city yesterday evening, according to a report in the press, fell into the same fallacy. He said: "Mr. Fielding took over to France a better French treaty than the one he brought back."

Mr. MEIGHEN: A better French tariff.

Mr. FIELDING: I beg pardon. A better French tariff. That is to say, better rates as applied to Canadian produce than we have to-day. In a few cases that is correct.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In virtually all that count.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend has overlooked a very important thing. He speaks of the tariff that I took over, meaning the present rates. My right hon. friend, like his friend for Lincoln, forgets that these are dead or under sentence of death, because notice has been given by France that these rates are no longer to apply. He assumes that these rates are going to continue. He should have remembered that the French government long ago gave notice that they were not prepared to continue these rates. They denounced their treaties in all quarters, and they increased their tariffs as it was their right to do. We are, therefore, not justified in making comparisons to-day between the present rates and the rates that are going to be put into effect, except in a distant way. The great question to-day is not a choice between the duties set forth in this treaty and the duties we have to-day; it is a choice between the duties set forth in this treaty and the duties of the French general tariff which are very high duties. If this treaty fails, then we fall under the French general tariff which is a very high one. It is more important to Canada to-day to have this treaty than it is to France. Why? The differences between the French general tariff and the French minimum tariff are very large. The difference between the duties of our intermediate tariff and our general tariff are small. They run from 2½ up to 5 per cent, and in a few cases probably more. If we make no treaty with France to-day, all that happens to France is that she comes under our general tariff, which is a moderate tariff, while we come under their general tariff which is in most cases an exorbitant tariff, in many cases four times as much as the duties under their minimum tariff. Thus the right hon. gentleman will see that it is vastly more important to us to make this treaty with France to-day than it is for France to make it.

The hon. member for Lincoln said that the French minimum tariff gave what he called adequate protection. There is force in that. As a rule it is a higher rate than ours, and if we can not do business under the minimum tariff of France, what chance shall we have of doing business when their general tariff, their maximum tariff, is applied? If this treaty fails to-day, France need not worry much about it, because she would come under our general tariff which is a moderate tariff. My hon. friend for Lincoln would say that it is too low. At all events France would get the benefit of the moderate tariff. But if we do not adopt this treaty to-day, we come under the provisions of the French general tariff which is, in many cases, four times the rate of the minimum tariff.

It is true that our relations with France are good—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the hon. gentleman leaves that point, has he brought down or submitted to the House a notification, if there is one, from the French government, terminating or expressing an intention to terminate the arrangement that was in effect when he went over?

Mr. FIELDING: The notice to terminate the treaty between France and Canada? I know of the notice to terminate the original treaty that was passed years ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I mean the notice to terminate the arrangement in effect when he went over, to succeed the original treaty.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know if there was any formal notice; but the terms of the treaty set forth that it was only a temporary arrangement and that representatives of the governments were to meet together for the purpose of drawing up a larger and more comprehensive treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was a status quo with continuance for a certain time. A certain time was to be given in case of a desire to cancel the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING: The first clause reads:

Pending the conclusion of a new commercial convention, with a view to which negotiations will begin immediately, the French and Canadian governments have agreed to the following provisions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there not a clause providing for cancellation of that?

Mr. FIELDING: The agreement was made by the French government only on condition that it was a temporary agreement, and that both governments were to commence negotiations for a broader treaty. Is that not a notice to quit? My right hon. friend knows that the French consul in Montreal applied to his government for a resumption of negotiations; but they were postponed. The agreement itself shows that it was only a temporary thing, and that it was the duty of both governments to enter into negotiations respecting a more comprehensive treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I referred to it in that language myself; but I do not see any reason why Canada should press the temporary part of the clause, especially to get a worse condition of affairs than we have under the present agreement.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend does not see any reason why Canada should fulfil her obligations to enter into negotiations.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. FIELDING: I do. I think there is an obligation on the Canadian government to enter into negotiations, although the right hon. gentleman neglected doing so. I do not blame him for that, because he was busy with other things. Although he neglected this, we on our side did not neglect it. We felt that that was an obligation which we were called upon to fulfil and we have done so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I asked the hon. gentleman, I thought in courteous language, if there was not a clause providing for termination of the temporary agreement. Instead of answering me, he entered into a round of something pretty nearly abuse. I will now read the clause, if he will permit me.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. gentlemen do not want to hear this.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not object.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. gentleman has allowed the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Strange proceeding, I must say. Article 6 reads:

[Mr. Meighen.]

The present arrangement shall remain in force until the conclusion of a new commercial convention, but either of the high contracting parties may denounce it after four months' notice.

I asked if either of them had denounced it or expressed an intention to do so.

Mr. FIELDING: Speaking from memory, I do not think any formal denunciation took place. But I say that we are bound by the first clause of that agreement, which distinctly declared that it was of a temporary character, and being so bound we agreed to enter into negotiations to make a more comprehensive treaty. I know, as a matter of fact, from information given to me that the French consul in Montreal desired to enter into negotiations in the time of the right hon. gentleman's government. I am not complaining that my right hon. friend did not do so. His government were engaged with important matters. But when we came into power and the French consul asked us to resume negotiations, we felt that that was an obligation, and we gave him the assurance that we were ready to fulfil it.

I have pointed out that under the high French tariff, the volume of trade that we can hope to do is not very big. I have frankly said that from the beginning; but that is not a reason why we should not make an effort to do what we can in the matter. Our chief objective in this matter was to get on even terms with our brethren of the American republic. If we could not climb over the French tariff, you may say that they could not. Well, they are very energetic, very enterprising, and their agents are scouring the continent of Europe to-day in an effort to make favourable trade arrangements. My hon. friend for Lincoln said that we already have everything that we shall get under this treaty, and the leader of the Opposition said last night that I took over a better tariff arrangement than I brought back.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A French tariff.

Mr. FIELDING: I am glad my right hon. friend does not dispute that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But I do. What I said was that the Minister brought back a higher French tariff than existed before.

Mr. FIELDING: Well, the tariff I took over was a dead one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, yes. It was absolutely dead; sentence of death had been carried out upon it. The only question we have to consider is whether the terms and conditions of this treaty are better than the general tariff of France under which we shall operate if we do not accept the treaty. Now, the hon. member for Lincoln said, and he repeated it half a dozen times, that we have more to-day than we shall get under this treaty, and he wanted to know of what use the treaty was. "What do we want with it?" —he said; "we have everything already that we can get under it." Have we? I will give my hon. friend some evidence on this point. I think he had better attend the meetings of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, of which he is a member. He occasionally gives expression to some of its views, but evidently he conveniently forgets many important things that they say. Here is a statement which was made by representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association who waited upon the government of Canada on February 22nd, 1922:

French Treaty

The French government, although not obliged by treaty to do so, has exempted United States goods from increases applicable under the French general tariff, while it continues to apply those increases against Canadian goods.

The result is that on Canadian goods (other than the few lines which, by treaty, are subject to the French minimum tariff rates) France levies double to three times as much duty as she levies on similar goods imported from the United States.

That is the condition to-day, which the hon. member for Lincoln thinks is all right, and he tells us that we are not going to get anything as good as that now.

We placed these facts before the previous government (see appended copy of letter to Minister of Trade and Commerce) but, so far, France has made no change in these arrangements of her tariff.

The following Canadian products, among others, now suffer under this tariff discrimination if shipped to France:—wrought iron, iron bars, steel bars, tubes welded or not, furniture, pianos and organs, phonographs, varnishes, machine tools, locks, many forms of hardware, metallurgical alloys and substances, spirits, valves, brass goods, agricultural implement parts, shafts, screws, bolts, link belting, spark plugs, etc.

Follows a list of details bearing on this representation. The representation then concludes:

We respectfully urge upon your government the necessity of pressing for the immediate removal of said tariff discrimination.

That is what we have done by this treaty. Every item mentioned in this list submitted by that representation of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and which has been subject to discrimination in the past, is now placed upon even terms with the same article coming from the United States. That is one of the conditions that will exist under this treaty; and perhaps my hon. friend would like further information along the same line. Well, let me show him how the present condition of affairs, which he says is so satisfactory, applies to one particular industry in this country. Here is a comparative statement showing the difference between the duty levied on parts for agricultural machinery imported from Canada and the same duty on these machinery parts imported from the United States. This is a statement of the tariff now in force:

	U.S.A. Francs	Canada Francs
Binder canvasses	211.20	654 70
Canvas straps	312.00	832.00
Magnetos	300.00	840.00
Ordinary cast iron spares	25.00	80.00
Straight solid steel shafts
10 kilos or less	90.00	240.00
10 kilos to 100	72.00	192 00
Tubular bored straight shafts, also bent and crankshafts, any description
10 kilos or less	135.00	360.00
10 kilos to 100	90.00	240.00
Parts composed of two or more metals
1 kilo and under	40.00	100.00
1 kilo to 10	35.00	87.50
10 kilos to 50	30.00	75.00
50 kilos to 300	20.00	50.00
Screws, bolts and rivets not lathe turned, cotter pins:
less than 3 mm	126.00	336.00
3 to 8 mm	108.00	264.00
8 to 12 mm	81.00	204.00
12 to 18 mm	63.00	168.00
Articles in iron or steel
Link chain belting	44.20	137.02
Seats, Mower tool boxes	46.80	105.08
Coil springs	52.00	161.20
Spark plugs, each	0.36	0.96
Spirit levels	180.00	480.00

That is the present condition as affecting one particular industry in this country, namely, that engaged in the making of agricultural implements. For some years past, under an arrangement which my hon. friend for Lincoln evidently supported and with which he seemed to be so well pleased yesterday, every one of these items has suffered from a heavy discrimination against Canada. Under the present treaty every one of them will go into France on even terms with the United States' product. And that was really the main purpose of the agreement. We knew that France was a high tariff country and that in all probability we should not be able to do a great deal of trade with her. But in view of the representations made to us in regard to the disadvantage under which we were labouring, we considered, in face of the fact that France was a high tariff country, and in the face of our knowledge that the United States was enjoying a great advantage over us, that it was well, in justice to Canada and all interests in this country, that that discrimination should be removed; and that is one of the features we present to the House in the present treaty. That was the main object we had in negotiating this treaty, and in that we have accomplished all that can be reasonably desired. I think, therefore, that my hon. friend for Lincoln, on reflection, will discover that a good many of these items in this tariff are not padding after all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, what a great pity it is that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not the diplomat and the negotiator that he is the orator and the debator. But after all, is it not a very easy thing to seize upon a little slip here and there and exploit it? Take for example, bronze powders. Apparently the amount of this article exported is so infinitesimal as to make it not worth while devoting a line to it in the customs papers. The minister seizes upon something here and something there of this description and takes the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) to task, the whole offence of that hon. gentleman having consisted in giving the exact facts regarding the different items covered by my hon. friend's treaty. The hon. gentleman for Lincoln did not say that there were no items of any use in the treaty. He said in connection with several items that there was an opportunity for trade. But the hon. member for Lincoln took a position that the Minister of Finance cannot understand.

Mr. FIELDING: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He took an honest position against the interests of his own trade because he thought the general good of Canada demanded that he should take that position. That is what he did. But I know something of the inception of this matter, and my hon. friend could have gone further. He could have shown that in connection with some of these items, purchased at such great cost to the common people of this country—purchased at the sacrifice of the interests of our agriculturists—he could have shown, I say, other items, especially asked for by the hon. member for Lincoln, which would have tremendously helped him in his business. Is it a very, very heinous offence for an hon. member of this House, forgetting his own personal interests and the interests of his association, to say something on behalf of the rest of the people?

4 p.m.

Now, let us take the hon. minister's next point, it is that the attitude of the hon. member for Lincoln was that our trade with France being so infinitesimal it was not worth while trying to develop it. So far as we in this quarter of the House are concerned, we have not taken that attitude. The Minister of Finance is perfectly right—our government wanted a treaty with France, some tariff arrangement that would enable the commerce of both countries, not of one country alone, to be advanced. It is quite true that we always wanted such an arrangement; but it is entirely another thing to say that we wanted something which involves all that this treaty involves against the interests of Canada. We would like to do everything in our power to help the French republic. I do not know whether the hon. minister is advancing this treaty just on that score alone, or whether he thinks that the benefit the few favoured manufacturers who are helped is the real ground why this treaty is brought down. I repeat, we would like to help France as much as we possibly can, but we still think that our first duty is to Canada—helping France as much as we can without the direct sacrifice of Canadian interests. That was our attitude then, and it is our attitude to-day.

We find, Mr. Speaker, some extraordinary things growing out of this discussion. Why, we have learned from the mouth of the Minister of Finance that Canada is a low tariff country; that we have no excessive tariffs, simply low tariffs. When my hon. friend said that he was dealing of course with his own tariff, because it has always been continued. And he was telling us the truth about that tariff. For it is a low tariff. It is high in regard to some items, I admit, one or two here and there that might be lowered, but it is a low tariff. It is a great thing to get the truth sometimes. Look at the records of this House and observe how often my hon. friend has moved resolutions demanding the reduction of the tariff which he and his supporters then described as high and extortionate. Why, what was the last election fought on? In some districts it paid my hon. friends opposite to fight it on the ground that our tariff was a high tariff—as high as Haman's gallows. But once anyone takes the trouble to look into our tariff he must admit, if he would be honest about it, that it is dwarfed into pallid insignificance compared with tariffs elsewhere. That is one thing we have learned—ours is a low tariff.

My hon. friend makes a lot out of the treaty of 1921. Well, that was a temporary treaty. It was not a treaty that we took five months to evolve, anyway, nor was it a treaty that we sent emissaries overseas to look after. That treaty negotiation was merely incidental to other work and was the best we could arrange. And certainly it is much better than the treaty now before us. My hon. friend says that France wants to have a tariff that will enable her to negotiate proper business transactions. Very well, why should not Canada have a similar tariff? Why should not Canada look after herself just as well as France looks after her own interests?

Mr. FIELDING: Why did you not do it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend asks: "Why did not we do that?" Of course, that is the cheapest of all kinds of questions. Had we been given an opportunity, had we come back to office, we would have done it.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says, "Oh, yes." Does he give me no other reason why Canada should not look after her own commercial interests except that we did not do it?

Mr. FIELDING: Oh no, I do not give that reason.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very good. France is looking after herself, and that is not a crime. But just let us look at the spectacle that is presented to us. Here we have these two gentlemen going over to negotiate a commercial treaty with a view, presumably, of doing something to help Canadian trade; going over to deal with a country which, according to the Minister of Finance, was already committed to high tariffs. Without the slightest preparation, without the slightest thing to help them in negotiating, they go over, committed by their public utterances here not to any higher tariff to enable Canadian trade to be looked after, but committed to a lower tariff. Then the French ministers, who understand their country's business so well, say to our representatives, "Well, yes, your tariff is coming down instead of going up, but ours is going up, and if you wish to do any business with us you have got to come up so much." And then we are told by the Minister of Finance that it is impossible to do anything. The representatives of France are business men, men looking after the interests of France, and for my hon. friend to tell me that he cannot do anything when France has a very large balance of trade in her favour is equivalent to saying that either the French representatives care not for that balance of trade, or else that he never appreciated the strength of his position. Generally when you have one country with a heavy balance of trade in its favour, and the other therefore with a correspondingly adverse balance, what is tried to be done is to adjust those balances so that interchange of commerce may be rendered more easy. But what my hon. friend has done is to make very sure that the adverse balance will be greater than it has been in the past. It is perfectly true so far as the particular lines of activity which my hon. friend has referred to are concerned we will sell more of them, but so far as the big, basic exports of this country are concerned, if this tariff has any effect, we are going to sell far less of them. I only know one real argument, that is, if the good of the majority be served here, in favour of this treaty, and that argument is the Liberal platform. I am going to refer to that dishonoured and much abused document again, Mr. Speaker. One solemn resolution read:

> Be and it is hereby resolved (1) That the serious nature of the country's financial situation calls for the profoundest consideration of all patriotic citizens, and the exercise of the severest economy by the government.

I am not now pointing out that economy is entirely forgotten and that the only change in the situation is that we are just so much more in debt, but I have to give the House the run of the whole resolution:

> (2) That increase of revenue must be sought from an equitable and effective imposition and collection of graduated taxes on business profits and income applicable to all incomes above reasonable exemptions; (3) Taxes on luxuries—

Taxes on luxuries. You know, Mr. Speaker, we are told that there is so much bad in the best of us and so much good in the worst of us that I would point out to my hon. friend, although he had nothing whatever to do with that platform, although he has on the floor of this House discarded it, that there may be something good even in that platform, even in that awful document so inimical to the real fiscal interests of this country. There was, I think, something good in it. I think that taxes on luxuries are right. But this French treaty absolutely forbids them. It is the one argument in its favour. Not only does it forbid it by making its reductions of ten or fifteen per cent off the low intermediate tariff, but it also goes further and provides for specific duties tying the hands of this country. I do not know whether his abhorrence to that platform had anything to do with my hon. friend's treaty or not, but it is really a very apparent argument in favour of the treaty from his standpoint.

My hon. friend opened up the discussion of this treaty I think very fairly. He said in opening that he did not know that it would amount to very much; I think those were his exact words. He did not know if we would do very much business under it; he was not sure. He said at page 464 of Hansard:

> France will not make as generous a treaty to-day as she did in 1907.

So we have it from the lips of the real negotiator, because I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) had some other business to look after—for example, he was looking after all the cables dealing with that most important question the appointment of his friend Mr. Talbot as a director of the Canadian National Railways, and other large matters of state administration—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where did you get that fine piece of information?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was in the press. Of course, if my friend tells me he had nothing to do with that nomination, why, he knows; I do not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The press stated in the month of February that the name of Mr. Talbot came as a surprise.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The press, I think, said that cables had been sent over to my friend about it, and that he cabled back that a representative of Quebec would be appointed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is different.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I quite admit to my hon. friend that he may not have thought then that he was going to so greatly advance one of the minor employees of the Quebec government. That was never publicly talked about then. I admit freely and frankly that everybody was amazed when the appointment was mentioned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, here we have the statement of the chief negotiator that this treaty is not as good as the last treaty. Let us just look at the last treaty.

Mr. VIEN: The dead one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says the dead one. I do not know exactly why he says that. It may interest him to make use of the word "dead."

Mr. VIEN: Let us say dying.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose we take that treaty of 1907, not the treaty of 1921, and if my hon. friend wants to call that treaty dead I do not know but what he is right; if he had gone still further and said it never should have been made, it would have been much better, and if it never had been made there would have been a great deal more money in Canada to-day. But let us look at that treaty of 1907. A fair way of looking at the effect of a treaty of that character is to examine its results after it has got into operation: I think my hon. friend will agree with me in that statement. It is also fair to deal with it for a term of years, and the usual term for purposes of comparison is five years; most statisticians use that term. I am going to give the House figures showing how well the old French treaty worked out, not for Canada, but for France, and I do not think I am fair to France in saying France in that way—not fair to Canada, but most advantageous to the most favoured nations. For the five years from 1909 to the year 1913 the total French imports into Canada were $56,991,000 odd. The total of Canadian exports to France as against that $56,991,000 of imports amounted to $11,883,000 odd. The yearly average for the period was $11,398,000 of imports and $2,376,000 of exports, resulting in an average yearly unfavourable trade balance against Canada of $9,000,000 odd, or an adverse trade balance against us for the five years under consideration of $45,107,000 odd. It paid, did it not? A wonderful contract got by my hon. friend, and the sad part of the thing is that instead of improving our sad position he comes back and admits that he has made a worse bargain.

Now let us go back to the year 1909 and take the imports from France for that year and those for the year 1913, and just see what happens. The imports in 1909 were $8,197,000 odd. The imports for 1913 were $15,375,000 odd, or an increase of $7,178,000 odd, or 87·56 per cent. That is what the treaty was doing for France. Now let us take the exports and see what the treaty was doing for Canada. The exports to France in 1909 were $2,341,000 odd, and in 1913 $2,357,000 odd, an increase of $15,647, or ·66 of one per cent. That is what my hon. friend's diplomacy does for Canada. On the one hand it gives an increase in the French business of 87.56 per cent and on the other hand an increase in the Canadian business of just .66 of one per cent. Take it in another way. Just look at the adverse trade balance that he manages to work up. In 1909 the adverse trade balance was $5,855,000 odd. In 1913 the adverse trade balance was $13,018,000 odd. There was an increase in the five-year period under my hon. friend's treaty of $7,162,000 odd in Canada's adverse trade balance, or an increase of 122 per cent. And, Mr. Speaker, the minister says that this new agreement is not a good contract, that is not as good as the one entered into before. Of course, it is true that France's imports per capita are less than ours. Her duties are higher and that is one reason why we should have been granted more favourable terms. For example in the Book of Statistics of the United States for, I think it is, 1920, the last year for which the figures have been compiled, the imports per capita for France are given as $84.71, while Canada's are $131.88; and this condition is to be aggravated by this treaty. "What harm is it," asks my hon. friend. My hon. friend says the Americans are busier. I wonder if my hon. friend could not have hired an American to look after this treaty for him. He has only got just what the Americans have, and they have given nothing, no concession, and they have entered into no contract or no treaty. France just simply gave the United States favoured rates. When he says that he has put Canada in the same position as the United States is it true? Why, the United States gives nothing, but Canada ties her hand and says the duties shall be thus and thus—

Mr. VIEN: Does my hon. friend contend that better terms could have been obtained from the French government?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not the slightest doubt of it—not the slightest. I cannot imagine anything worse than we have in this arrangement of ours.

Mr. VIEN: On what does my hon. friend base that view?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: On the basis of common sense. On the interest France must have in maintaining this trade so advantageous to her, and the unnecessary and extraordinary concessions which France enjoys under this treaty. Does my hon. friend want any other reason?

Mr. VIEN: Why did you not get a better treaty in 1919?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had some reverence for the work that had been done before. I have always had tremendous regard for the Minister of Finance. I had no idea until I looked into this treaty how horribly the contract he has made works out for us. I do not think the hon. gentlemen opposite had any idea either. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries looks at me incredulously. I do not think he knew what the trade figures were when he went over to France or he would not have come back with such a contract as this.

Now, let us see what we are giving up? Of course, we are giving up our fiscal independence—that is independence in the matter of framing our own tariff. We grant specific duties which we cannot raise. France does nothing of the kind, absolutely nothing. We give a contract to the effect that the percentage between our intermediate and general tariffs shall be maintained. France does absolutely nothing of the kind. Canada is tied; France is free. My hon. friends opposite applaud a treaty of that kind. I wonder why? In addition to that let us see what we are giving up in connection with tariff rates in some instances; I do not pretend to have mastered all the items covered by this treaty. However, it is not necessary to deal with the whole of it; a few citations will be enough. First let us see what comes in from France below the British preferential rate. Item 156 covers cognac, brandy and armagnac brandy, something that will come into direct competition with Quebec in so far as their local production is concerned. Perhaps they think there should be no local production in Quebec. I do not know.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If they do think there should be no local production in Quebec, my hon. friends opposite would be quite right in voting for these duties. The British duty is $10. The intermediate duty is $10, but under this tariff it is reduced to the most favoured nations to $9, a difference of 10 per cent. Take another item, champagne. There also the French rate is 10 per cent below the British rate. Now let us take castile soap.

Mr. VIEN: You need it more.

Mr. CANNON: You are blowing bubbles.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here also France gets a reduction of 10 per cent. The British rate is 10 cents and French soap pays but 9 cents. I could take also item 81, trees, etc.; item 86, canned vegetables; item 169, novels or works of fiction; item 182, printed music and music for mechanical piano players; item 262, olive oil; item 264, essential oils; item 583, manufactures of silk; item 657a, moving picture films, all of which made as low as the British rate. We are indeed doing something; we are giving specific rates to France and entering into certain covenants advantageous to her and receiving nothing in return. The whole effect of this treaty is to aid the commerce of the "most favoured nations." That is what my hon. friends have managed to do, and in addition, to increase the French rates against us and to curtail Canadian business.

Now let us see what we are really interested in in the export market. I would have thought my hon. friends opposite would at once have said "Agriculture" but all they have done for agriculture is to have the rates put up against it, nothing else. Where my hon. friends get the minimum rate for agricultural products it is only because the general rate of France is just the same, that is speaking generally. I will try to be a little more specific.

Let us run over our chief agricultural activities, and see how tremendously the ministers in the city life of Paris, had forgotten that there was such a thing as the Canadian farmer. In item 68 wheat (grain flour) there is no difference at all between the minimum and the general tariff. We get nothing there. Item 69, oats (grain, meal) is in the same position. Then we come to items 70, barley (grain, meal); 71, rye (grain, meal); 72, maize, (grain, meal); 73, buckwheat (grain, meal); 91, sugar; 93, syrup, and 95, preserves. In all these items we find no concessions, no reduction from the general tariff.

These other agricultural items that we are largely interested in, I think, perhaps, were pretty well covered yesterday by the hon. member for Lincoln. The others all go up. Now let us see what is going up. I think I can say to my hon. friends, without wearying the House that in the list—and he will correct me if I am wrong—there is not a single agricultural product of Canada that has not been increased. If I am wrong I hope my hon. friend or his expert will tell me, so that I may be corrected. I think the only agricultural items which are not increased are lambs and calves, which are not exported. The rates on all the items of agricultural export outside of the ones I have mentioned, which take the general rate, there being no difference between that rate and the minimum have been increased. In the absence of denial or challenge of that statement, I will not weary the House by reading the list. My hon. friend contends that apparently the idea of the hon. member for Lincoln was that what ought to be done in making this treaty was simply to have gone to the French ministers with a long list of the articles that we were exporting and not bothered about anything else. I would like to ask my hon. friend, would it not be better to get proper rates on the present business than to speculate on business in the future, which may never arise in 20 years? Is it not better to deal with real issues than possibilities? Is not my hon. friend interested in the trade balances of to-day, or is he looking forward to bringing in a budget 25 years hence, when by some extraordinary accident this treaty may be helpful?

But he is wrong, I think, when he says that the point made by the hon. member for Lincoln was that we are not now manufacturing these articles. His point was not based so much upon that Mr. Speaker, as upon the fact that in connection with the great majority of these items, Canada was importing. Canada got her supplies from the outside. We have one exception to that —bronze powder—but that is so infinitesimal that no one can find it. In so far as the rest of it is concerned, I think he will have difficulty in showing that this country is not importing. I would like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) however, to write to his optimistic friend who got started so well after his former trade inquiry making bronze powder. I have discovered that there is something said about it in the return of the Department of Customs and Excise in connection with this article, and I would point out to him that while he may be getting on well, this is an article which is not very much used and there is not a tremendous volume of it. Although there is not a tremendous volume of it, this report for the year 1921-22 at pages 248 and 249, shows that we are importing $46,000 worth. I would point out to the House that we should not quarrel with these figures. They are figures laid on the Table of the House by the present minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Bureau), and although laid on the Table by him, we have absolutely no quarrel with them. I might further point out to my hon. friend that he must know about this item, because that self-same minister collected a duty of something like $15,000 on it. There is just one further thing I should emphasize and bring to my hon. friend's attention. Notwithstanding that glowing letter, this return shows there are no exports at all. So much for that.

I have no doubt there are other things to be found which are just as unimportant.

Suppose my hon. friend had taken up Canada's real business, and had bothered himself about it. Take the figures for the year 1922, our chief article of export to France was canned salmon. The rate on canned salmon —and I hope the hon. member will correct me if I am wrong—was increased from 25 francs to 35 francs per 100 kilograms—35 as against 25. Wheat is just left where the hon. member found it, and there is no change or help at all. Canned lobster remains where it was, with the general tariff 40 and the minimum tariff 25. The old tariff which my hon. friend had in his hand under the former arrangement was 25, and the present tariff is 25. The next largest is sugar, 2 cents, and of course nothing is done there. All the sugar rates are the same. France needs sugar. Her minimum tariff is just the same as her general tariff. Of course if it had not been so my hon. friend would have expected a higher rate there. Condensed milk is increased. I am just taking the things of importance and I may say that there is an increase of 50 per cent on condensed milk, the former tariff being 5 francs and the present tariff being 7½ francs. The next item in order of importance is wood pulp and in this there is no change.

In the next item, oats, (grain, meal), there is no difference in any of the tariffs. It is impossible for Canada to be charged more than anybody else there, and there is no change. The next item, asbestos, is just as it was. We sent over a lot of raw asbestos. The tariff under the treaty is the same as the tariff now in effect. Then I come to mowing machines. That was one of the things my hon. friend was talking about a good deal this afternoon. As regards the manufacture of agricultural implements, my hon. friend forgets that, under the temporary treaty, that wrong was largely righted. On mowing machines, the rate is just the same as he found. It was 24 per cent, and it is now 24 per cent. The same is the position in connection with wood pulp chemical. Harvesters and binders and also ploughs are in exactly the same position, the rate now being 24 francs. Coal tar and pitch are still free and always were free. Coal is also free; there is no change. Then we come to machinery with varying rates, and I think my hon. friend has got something here. This is the first item of any importance in which there is any change for the better. I think this item of machinery covers some of the articles in which our manufacturers are so largely interested. I have no doubt there is an improvement. The next item of importance is apples, and the rate on this is just as it was before. As regards pneumatic tires, the next item of importance, there is an increase of 50 per cent. The old rate was 150 francs per 100 kilos. That becomes 225 francs. The next is match splints, and there is again no change. Then we have butter, lard; but I am, perhaps, getting below an item which my hon. friend would think of immediate importance. I have gone down the list in order from exports of $1,774,316 to $68,182. If my hon. friend had concentrated on those really important matters and could have got some decreases instead of increases, that would have been a great thing for his treaty. A very different course of action was followed by the French. They have not a long list. They did not want anything in the treaty for political purposes. They were making a business treaty like business men, and every one of their items is a real item. If my hon. friends think there is any doubt about that, I invite their attention to a list prepared by the Bureau of Statistics showing the principal commodities imported for consumption in Canada from France during the year ended March 31, 1922, and my hon. friends will find that the French negotiators did exactly what the hon. member for Lincoln suggested that the Canadian negotiators could do, should do, and ought to do, namely, look after the real business of this country.

It is a great mistake to describe this treaty as a treaty with France. My hon. friend did a very good thing some years ago when he denounced the most favoured nation clause with Germany. That was a splendid bit of work, and I wish he had only gone on with his good work before he took up the question of this treaty. I suppose my hon. friend's answer will be: "Why did you not do this?" But let me say that I should have done it, and I would, had I had an opportunity. But supposing we forget the tu quoque argument for the moment—I consider that Canada is in an anomalous position at this time in that, while she wants to help France, as I think most of us do, on something like terms that we can stand, she cannot do so without giving the same terms to a number of other countries, and without getting any trade concessions from them whatever. I want to point out to the House a few of these instances, showing exactly how this works out, and suggesting that, as regards results, this contract might be better described as a contract for the benefit of Switzerland, Japan or some other country. It is not necessary to go through all the items, but let me take a few of them. Item 575, braids, cords, fringes, tassels, is one of those items as regards which my hon. friend has made the mistake of adopting that vicious principle of a fixed rate. The intermediate rate is 35½ per cent. He fixes a rate of 27½ per cent. In the year 1922—and I take that year because I can get complete returns for it—under this item of braids, cords, fringes and tassels, France sold us $46,847 worth of goods. Switzerland sold us $112,407 worth, and under this treaty she gets the benefit of that fixed rate, for 2½ times the amount that France sold. As regards item 653, brushes, under my hon. friend's treaty he takes 10 per cent off the intermediate scale of 25½ per cent. In 1922, France sold $42,941 worth of brushes, and Japan sold us $114,415 worth, again considerably more than twice as much. Under tariff item 651, dealing with buttons, where the treaty clips ten per cent off the intermediate rate of 30 per cent, France sold us $11,332 worth of buttons and Japan sold $107,761 worth. Does this not seem perfectly ridiculous when one comes to examine it? For the purpose of assisting the trade of France, Canada makes a special rate on buttons for some real or imaginary—I think, imaginary—benefit to the country, when France is selling only $11,000 worth of them and Japan $107,000, and Japan gets the benefit of that rate.

Item 368 deals with clocks and watches, and the treaty takes 10 per cent off the intermediate rate, which is 27½ per cent. France sold $3,829 worth whereas Switzerland sold $75,586 worth. Yet there is no concession at all to Canada in connection with the sale of that $75,000 worth of goods in our market. In item 453, electrical apparatus, telephones, etc., 10 per cent is cut off the intermediate rate, which is 25 per cent. In this case France sold $1,231 worth; Japan, $18,180 worth, and Switzerland $12,915 worth. Yet they all get the same reduction.

Let us take embroideries, in connection with which we have a low rate. There is an omnibus section, 575, which embraces a lot of different embroideries, handkerchiefs, etc. Take embroideries, white or cream coloured, in connection with which my hon. friend fixes a specific rate of duty. France sold us in these embroideries $6,039, and Switzerland $423,092. So here is Canada violating all proper principles of her own fiscal policy in fixing a duty apparently at the behest of France, when France sells us $6,000 worth of these particular goods as against some $423,000 sold us by Switzerland. Of other embroideries France sold us in the same year, $17,700, while Switzerland sold us $100,598. In handkerchiefs France sold us $5,629, Japan sold us $77,050, and Switzerland $225,823. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he had any idea what he was doing when he was opening Canada's doors to that outside trade in that volume in luxuries, not only to France, who supplied only a fraction of the trade, but to other countries as well? Did he realize what he was doing? I am sure he did not. Let us take lace, white or cream coloured. France sold us of lace $68,474 worth; the Netherlands sold us $36,736; and Switzerland sent us $241,915. Next take lace nets and netting, not otherwise provided for. In this line France sold us $186,568 and Switzerland $72,879. So that under that item, 575, France sold to Canada in the year 1922, $284,480, while Switzerland sold us $1,064,307.

I wonder whether my hon. friends really realize what the treaty does, and what further excuses we are going to have for letting in this large amount of articles which can be described only as luxuries, under such circumstances as indicate that the contention that this treaty is for France is very largely absolutely wrong. France is not getting the benefit of it. The next item I would point out is 120, anchovies and sardines. In this case there is another of those precious fixed rates of duty. France sells us $36,639 worth of this article, while Norway sells us $246,613. Some people will say, of course, that anchovies are a good thing to have and are not luxuries, although some of us describe them as such. However, let us proceed; let us take item 581, silk fabrics. This is something that is pre-eminently in the class of luxuries and there is a fixed duty of 20 per cent against the intermediate tariff of 27½ per cent. France sold us $1,006,000 worth of this article as against $3,970,706 worth supplied by Japan. In other words, Japan gets this amount of silks in under a fixed duty, giving nothing in return for the advantage. Switzerland under the same item supplies, as against France's sale of $1,000,000, the sum of $4,093,000 again giving no concession for it. Take item 582, silk ribbons. The fixed duty is 25 per cent as against the intermediate duty of 32½ per cent. Under this item France sold us $248,656 worth and Switzerland $692,408. Item 624 refers to toys and dolls, 10 per cent off the intermediate duty of 27½ per cent. Of these articles France sold $23,173 worth as against Japan's sale of $187,150.

The next item is wearing apparel—but what is the use of going on with the list? What is the use of proceeding with these figures, Mr. Speaker? Here we have a treaty which of necessity, with matters as they are now, and as my hon. friend admits, extends automatically these great concessions granted to France by Canada to all these other countries, without the slightest advantage in return to this country. I am again sure that the hon. the Minister of Marine, in view of his studied declarations in this House, could never have had these figures before him or have known what he was doing. It is really very hard even to begin to cover the objections that one may raise to this treaty. I am not going to try to do it. I have pointed out a few of them, but there are so many more that it would be entirely beyond my power to enumerate them. Let me, however, indicate something else. When the hon. member for Lincoln was speaking yesterday he was showing what the result would be calculating on the basis of 7 cents to the franc. We are not doing very much business, if any at all, in many instances, with this rate. But I wonder whether my hon. friends have really considered what will happen if the franc goes up. If the franc, which is to-day valued at 7 cents for purposes of the calculations made by the hon. member for Lincoln, should go up, you might just as well try to do business with the moon as with France. It would be just as reasonable. Take canned vegetables. I am going to ask my hon. friend to correct me if I am wrong. The Canadian rate on canned vegetables works out at a cent a pound; the French rate works out at 1¾ cents per pound, on the basis of 7 cents to the franc. The franc at par represents 20 cents. Supposing it never goes back to 20 cents but just rises even to 14 cents, which would still give a big discount, I should like to know from the Minister of Finance whether he honestly thinks he could do any business at all under these rates. My hon. friend says nothing. He knows he could not do any business under such conditions. No reasonable man in the world would suggest that business could be done on these precious rates. Of course, I am referring to the rates on the various articles that we have been considering. Take the agricultural rates, so far as the minimum and the general tariffs are concerned they are left as they were originally. But with the franc worth 14 cents, or a depreciation of 33-1/3 per cent of its real value, does my hon. friend honestly think any business can be done with France in canned goods? Why, we are not doing any business now except to a very small extent.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the whole effect of this treaty will be to make trading with France more difficult except as to articles in which the Canadian manufacturers are specifically interested. And I am not saying that our manufacturers ought not to be considered; they ought to be; but they should not have any exclusive consideration in a matter of this kind. Nobody is helped except our manufacturers. And the stand of the hon. member for Lincoln instead of being a matter of reprobation, I again submit, Sir, ought to be heartily approved. He stands against his self interest, recognizing what this treaty does to primary and other productions, recognizing what it does in reducing the duties on and the revenues from luxuries and the like, recognizing that such reduction must be made up at the expense of the rest of us, recognizing that every single cent taken off here—and there will be a lot—simply means a little more charged elsewhere on the necessities of everyone. I repeat Mr. Speaker, that instead of being disapproved the course of the hon. member ought to be very much approved.

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion we should praise the government for their recent activities in the development of our foreign trade. Everyone will admit that an increase in the volume of this trade will help to solve the important problems that are now confronting us—emigration, immigration, the reduction of our national debt and the lightening of the burden of taxation. An increase in our foreign trade implies the revival of our industries and the exploitation as well as the further development of our natural resources. In a word, Sir, if we create or enlarge new markets it will be a great incentive to further production, whether agricultural or industrial. This government has only been in power for a little over a year, and already trade agreements have been made with France and Italy, and similar agreements are in process of negotiation with Belgium and Australia.

International trade is based on the same principle as private trade, and cannot be promoted by inactivity. You may have the best of goods to sell, but if you do not approach the consumer you will find no market. The best way to create international trade and reach the foreign consumer is by the governments of the various countries of the world making treaties, advertising their goods and employing active trade commissioners. It must be admitted, Sir, that when the government assumed office the conditions surrounding our foreign trade were chaotic. Having no commercial treaties with other countries meant instability of commercial conditions, and manufacturers and merchants were chary about engaging in foreign trade. Our importers and exporters were similarly affected. There was always the menace of a sudden change in the tariffs of other countries and this uncertainty paralyzed our foreign trade. Therefore the results of the first year's efforts of this government to stabilize our foreign commerce are in striking contrast to the nonchalant and indifferent action—or shall I say, inaction?—of the late administration.

The former Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir George Foster, who at the time had assumed a new and pleasant responsibility, and already had delectable visions of a comfortable seat in the Red Chamber, could not attend to the proper development of our trade with foreign countries. And probably his colleagues were too busy preparing for the magnificent electoral triumph of 1921. The only effort apparently of the last administration to revive our foreign trade manifested itself in the baneful loans to Greece and Roumania. These, it is true, meant a revival of trade for certain companies of which members of parliament and even ministers were directors; but they meant also a practical loss of nearly $35,000,000 to the Dominion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How does the hon. gentleman make that out? Does the government not intend to collect or does it not expect to collect this money?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: We intend to collect it, but we do not say that we are sure to collect it..

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman, then. is just counting the money as lost, which is a mere guess.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It is not a guess. It is based on facts. We have been trying to collect the loans made by the late administration. My right hon. friend did not succeed in collecting one cent of interest from Roumania. It is true that now, through the wisely directed efforts of the government we are beginning to get some interest from Greece and Roumania.

5 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear. You will get every dollar.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised to hear the long and undigested protest of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), who was well satisfied when the late administration confined its efforts to promote our foreign trade, into buying goods from the inner circles and selling them to bankrupt countries at the expense of the people of Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman not tell us the value of the agricultural products which were financed by those loans?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: From the reports that were made to the House I understand that out of some $27,000,000 a little over $3,000,000 was devoted to the purchase of wheat. Most of the money was lavished on axes and saws manufactured by companies of which the hon. member for Lincoln was a director, and upon roofing and other articles of merchandise manufactured by companies of which some members of the then administration were directors.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman has no right to make any such statement. It is absolutely contrary to the truth.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Does not my hon. friend remember that I based my accusations a year ago on a return which was made by the late administration, and which showed that quite a number of members of parliament supporting the late administration, and even a minister of the Crown, were directors of companies that sold to Greece and Roumania to an amount of something like $20,000,000? My hon. friend cannot deny that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is very different from what the hon. member said. He said that most of it was that. Only a small fraction of it was that, and what was obtained by such companies was obtained in open competition just as any other company got it. My hon. friend knows that. He knows as well that similar companies in which hon. members no doubt are interested, perhaps in which they are directors, will benefit under this treaty. It is exactly the same thing. The hon. member is only trying to create a prejudice upon what he knows is a false premise.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I am not trying to create a prejudice. I only wish to show to the House that the hon. member for Lincoln is much more particular and exacting when we are trying to make a treaty with France than he was when we were selling goods to Roumania and Greece. The hon. member first objected to the tariff on French wines, and he submitted that it was unfair to allow French wines to come in under a tax of 15 cents a gallon while Canadian wine was paying a revenue of 30 cents a gallon to this country. Well, first of all, my hon. friend forgot when he made that statement that the Minister of Finance when introducing his bill stated that on account of the treaty, re-adjustments would have to be made that would be announced in the budget speech. But there is a second answer. Coming from a province where it is a misdemeanour even to think of wine except when it is made within the province and is unpalatable, is it not amusing to hear the hon. member protest against advantages given to the importation of French wines? If I am well informed French wines cannot be sold legally in Ontario except for religious and medicinal purposes. True, intentional ailments are very numerous, but there is hardly any consumption of Ontario wines in the other provinces, unless one is willing to take a chance of getting permanent headache.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman has no ground for that statement. It is not the fact.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is it not a fact that there is hardly any Ontario wine sold in the other provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think I can show that over half of the sales of Ontario wines is in the province of Quebec and the province of British Columbia.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How much does it amount to?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not the figures but I can get them. But that is the percentage; something over half is sold in these two provinces, Quebec and British Columbia.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: My point is this, that the reduction of the tariff on French wines will not interfere with the sale of the native wines of Ontario. It is admitted by everybody that a person who has been in the habit of drinking French wine will not drink Ontario wine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I cannot dispute that.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Perhaps, but judging by the remarks of my hon. friend for Lincoln he takes the ordinary, narrow stand that because some other provinces allow their people legally to consume imported wines, he should step in and impose upon them the narrow and illogical views of his own province. So much for the hon. member for Lincoln. I am not going to go through the whole schedules like he did.

The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) who spoke in very dramatic tones, praising, unnecessarily I may say the well known unselfishness of the hon. member for Lincoln, did not answer the unassailable argument made by the Minister of Finance, and which is the gist of the question, that in making this treaty with France we get the best possible conditions under the circumstances. By this treaty we get trade conditions with France better than the United States has.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Better?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Better than the United States, as I shall be able to show in a few moments. Suppose this treaty is not passed. Trade conditions between Canada and France as respects the tariff would be in a much worse condition. The hon. member for West York also indulged in some reproaches regarding the platform of the Liberal party in which it was stated that we would not make any reductions on luxuries. The hon. member must remember that we are dealing with France. He must remember that we are making a trade agreement with a country, and that the agreement must therefore deal with articles produced by that country; otherwise it is useless. Everyone knows also that France produces luxuries more than any other goods, such as wines, perfume, silk and many other articles. The hon. member for West York also stated that the old treaty was better than we have now. Suppose that is true; the old treaty is dead. As my hon. friend said, the old treaty of 1907 is dead.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, it just dies when this comes into effect. This kills it.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The treaty of 1907?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, I thought you meant the one that went into effect in 1921.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The old treaty was buried three years ago. Perhaps my hon. friend has not waked up to that fact yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the Minister of Finance said was that the temporary treaty was dead.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I am speaking of the treaty of 1907, and there is good reason why the present treaty may not be as advantageous as the old treaty. In 1907 France was not the high tariff country that she is now. There was no such high protection in France then, and the reason why France is more protective to-day is because she has incurred such losses during the war that she wishes now to have an increased revenue in order to recuperate.

I may have been mistaken when I said that we have better trade conditions with France under this treaty than the United States has, but I refer to the particulars of the products under this convention. The first item is horses. If the new agreement goes into effect the rate on horses from Canada will be 150 francs and on horses from the United States 225 francs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then it was better with the United States before, because the duty on horses is not changed?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It is better now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No it was better before.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I repeat that it is better now. The figures speak for themselves. I do not know that I need say anything further in reply to the speech of the hon. member for West York, but I wish to place before the House another aspect of the question, and it seems to me that this point should have been brought forward by some hon. members opposite if we consider the speeches they used to make five or six years ago. I submit Sir, that out of sympathy and friendliness every facility should be given to France in her tremendous task of reconstruction. It is true that we should approach the consideration of this treaty from a business point of view but, under the circumstances, that consideration should not be absolutely freed from sentiment. Let us consider what the losses and sufferings of France have been. She lost a million and a half of men killed, 750,000 crippled, and 2,000,000 dangerously wounded. She spent a tremendous sum of money in resisting the invader; and what have her losses in property been? The Germans destroyed or devastated seven of her departments, 4,000 cities and villages, 550,000 houses, a territory of 6,300 square miles whose population in 1914 was 4,700,000, 94 per cent of her woollen industries, 90 per cent of her steel works, 55 per cent of her electrical industries, 70 per cent of her sugar refineries, 35 per cent of her coal mines, 2,500 miles of her railroads, 670 miles of canals, and 450 bridges. When we consider the suffering she has undergone and the martyrdom that she has endured we should have every sympathy for her. She is the nation which has suffered most gravely during the war. She has set herself heroically to the work of rebuilding her devastated areas. When one considers all these things and also remembers that we are dealing with an ally and a friendly nation it seems to me that an element of helpfulness and of sympathy should be added to our strict sense of business in endeavouring to arrive at a proper conclusion. Moreover, this fact, also, should not be forgotten: In dealing with Canada France is dealing with a nation comprising over two and a half millions of citizens in whose veins her own blood flows, and who have sacredly preserved for her a love born of the ties of kinship, a love that will never die.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the speech of the hon. memer for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) yesterday afternoon, without having had an opportunity of looking into the French treaty, it seemed to me that he made out a rather serious case against the convention as it now stands. However, since then I have had some little time and opportunity to examine more carefully into the details of the treaty and to form some conclusion as to what the arrangement means. As a consequence I have altered my opinion to some extent. While article after article was mentioned that we never exported to France it really seemed as if the treaty did not amount to very much after all.

Listening to the speeches this afternoon it strikes me as very peculiar that so much effort should be made to enter into treaties and build up international trade, while all the nations of the world are devoting themselves assiduously to the erection of tariff walls to exclude that very trade. I think, perhaps, a period will come in the world's history when the inhabitants will look back to the present era and wonder how much wisdom was displayed at this time in the promotion of treaties for developing international trade.

The hon. member who has just resumed his seat remarked that international trade was just like private trade. I cannot see the question in that light. I never saw people who wanted to do private trade endeavouring to construct obstacles for the purpose of hindering it. The same may be said of international agreements for the promotion of commerce. Seemingly nations are engaged in building tariff walls with the object of hampering trade with other nations as much as they possibly can.

The ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) made what I call a high protection speech. He came out very plainly and disclosed where he himself stands at the present time in regard to tariff matters. One of his main arguments was that if we had a policy of really high protection then we would have a weapon in our hands which would be of value to us when we came to bargain in trade matters with other nations. I do not place very much reliance on that sort of argument. If that is the only reason why we should have a high protective tariff then I think we might just as well leave the matter alone.

The argument has been made that the present treaty is not as good as the one previously arranged. I do not think that is a very strong argument to put forward at the present time. The two ministers of the present government who negotiated the present treaty may have found obstacles in their way which prevented them from concluding an arrangement as favourable as the one it replaces. The French government, in its wisdom, has seen fit to increase its tariff, and has acted within its rights in so doing. Of course, Canada had to make the very best bargain possible under the circumstances. The French general tariff is not very much higher than the one which will be operative under this treaty, but it seems to me that it is advisable for us to have a treaty with France.

Looking over the list of articles that we have exported for some time past, I find that the chief items have been lard, lobsters, wheat and wheat products, oats and oatmeal, table fruits, sugar, wood and manufactures of wood, and smelts. On all these articles there is practically no change in the tariff. Another product that we export is canned salmon. We export a large amount of canned salmon and there has been some increase in the duty. However, there is not much change in the duties on the main articles that we export to France, and it is quite possible that in the future there may be some increase in our exports.

On the whole I do not believe that this treaty is one of supreme importance to Canada. However I take the ground that it is well that we should have a treaty, and that it should be just as favourable a treaty with France as it is possible to get. But we know the circumstances. I do not believe the Dominion of Canada and France are ever likely to have what may be called a treaty that will be of tremendous advantage to Canada, because the articles we are likely to import from France are largely articles of luxury, which, perhaps, I would be in favour of taxing pretty highly before allowing them to come into our daily consumption. I think perhaps the most important part in the whole treaty is the fact that Canada is placed on an equality with the United States in regard to her imports into the republic of France. It seems to me, in looking over the list of the old treaty, that on a great many articles the United States had a more favourable rate than Canada. That feature has been entirely removed and to-day we occupy just as favourable a position in that respect as the United States. This matter is intricate in many of its details, and yet, in looking over the treaty carefully, I do not believe it is of very great importance after all, other than that it is desirable that Canada should have friendly relations with France as far as possible, that we ought to have a treaty to understand just in what position we are placed, and that we should be placed in the most favourable position we can possibly occupy in our relations with that country. I have no doubt the minister made the best possible bargain. I do not say it is a splendid bargain. I do not think it is. I really do not think we have got very much that will prove to be of any great benefit to us as a dominion. However, I intend to support and vote for the treaty.

Before concluding I would like to compliment the Minister of Finance on his virility and the way in which he has presented this matter. I am sure we are all pleased to see him able to take care of himself and to defend what he has been doing in so able a manner.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I join gladly in the last words of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). I am not certain that I will be able to agree with him in any other sentence he uttered. The minister's defence did not fail in vigour or in point of ingenuity. The minister was at his best in selecting the unimportant and magnifying it into great consequence, particularly when he had something at hand that reflected upon it, and then proceeding to its destruction with animation, with some threatenings of attitude, but with meagre success. The minister's favourite habit of argument is to state his opponent's case not only in language but in substance to suit himself, very often wholly at variance with the realities of the case, but in such form that his powers of abuse and of ridicule may be exercised against his opponent.

Mr. FIELDING: Abuse?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, abuse. If I may depart from the subject in hand, I could give an illustration very recent indeed, and I can produce the absolute proof for what I say. The minister went into the constituency of North Essex and proceeded to reply to certain arguments that he stated I had used in an address in the town of Walkerville. He stated that I had made an attack upon a reduction of $3,000,000 in the estimates of the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment, that I had declared that this was done at the expense of the widows and orphans, and he held me up to ridicule as one who could not be relied upon at all, because as he stated, he knew I was intelligent enough to understand that the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment did not deal with widows and orphans. I knew he added that reduction was merely due to contraction of responsibilities consequent on getting further away from the war. But he portrayed me before his audience as a misrepresenter of the truth, willing to take an advantage not based on facts. His work of destruction was well done. Give him a wind-mill to his liking and he is able to tilt against it with wonderful display. The fact was that I had stated exactly the opposite of what the hon. minister said. He took his account in that case from a Globe report, written by some one who never was at the meeting at all. What I stated was reported verbatim, and there was no variation in the matter of the reports of the press representatives. I had stated in answer to a question from the audience that there was a reduction of $3,000,000, and that I would do full justice to the government. I stated there was probably reason for the reduction, because we were getting further from the war and the responsibilities were less and I made no criticism of it whatever. This is all reported in the paper that is published in the city of Windsor in the clearest language and was at the disposal of the minister. But the correct report would not have suited his powers of destructive argument. He went further. He stated that I had attacked the administration of pensions and the Pensions Board. This he drew from his own imagination. I did not criticize the administration of pensions and never mentioned the Pensions Board. I give these instances as illustrations of the habit the minister has, which I do not think he wholly got away from in his address this afternoon. They have nothing to do with the case.

Mr. FIELDING: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes and the minister is glad to get rid of this exposure, but he was very glad to use that style of argument in the county of Essex and again to-day. I do not think it befitted the minister, or the post he fills.

Now as respects the French treaty, I do not at all dispute the sincerity of the position taken by the hon. member for Brandon. I think though he has come to his decision a little hurriedly, If I am to regard myself only as the leader of a party opposed to his, I would not want anything better than that his party should support this treaty. He seems to think it does not make very much difference about the treaty anyway. It is not a matter he says of very great consequence, and we should support it, because, the minister did the very best he could. Now let us inquire into that position. In the first place, the treaty means a loss of $500,000 a year to the revenue of Canada and that is $500,000 collected off the users of luxuries. Let us not forget that. I think $500,000 is a minimum figure, and that time will show that it is much too low, but using the figure, and placing the loss of revenue paid by those who consume conspicuous and undoubted luxuries at $500,000, is it of no consequence to Canada? That $500,000, now has to be paid out of the pockets of the great mass of the people of Canada using the necessaries of life. There is the loss on the consumption of luxuries imported not only from France, but imported in far greater quantities in many important instances, from Switzerland, Japan, from Sweden, the Netherlands, and from, I think, in all, eleven favoured nation countries.

Switzerland, Japan, Belgium and the Netherlands, are some of the countries which now have the right to come with their goods into this country under a tax the same as in the French treaty. Wait until all this works out, and we shall see our $500,000 loss in all probability much magnified. That will inevitably be an added tax or a failure to reduce taxes on the consumers of necessities in this Dominion. I submit in the first place, in no strong language, this suggestion: It is surely incumbent upon us, before we make that sacrifice, to see that we are getting something worth while.

I want to examine the member's second argument. He says, "Well, the minister did the best he could, and we had better take it at that or France will do something still worse to us if we do not submit to her terms in respect of this treaty now, pay what we are paying and impose the tax we are imposing on the consumers of necessities of life in Canada." Why should Canada be in this position? Is it necessary that Canada should be in the position where she has to go over to any country, go over to France, and make a treaty admittedly worse than were conditions that obtained before, just for fear France would raise her tariff? Have we reflected on why it is we are in such a position? Is Canada going to be always in such a position? I suppose, a year or so from now, if France gives notice that this treaty does not suit her, the minister will go over again and France will say, "Now look here, if you do not make a treaty and raise duties on meat exports again, on vegetable exports again, on stock and farm products again—if you do not come across and submit to these terms, we will put the duties on those goods far higher still." The minister will go over and do this, and he will come back and say: "This is the best I can do. If I had not done it, you would have a worse duty still." Is Canada to be continually in that humiliating and helpless position? Let us reflect why she is in it to-day and see where the blame lies. I do not think hon. members of any branch of this House want this country to be in such a position continuously. Assuming that we do not, what is the reason that the minister was in it? The minister was in it just because of his own fault, just because of his own election commitments in this Dominion, just because of his own professions and just because of his own failure in office. Those are the only reasons. He was not in it because of any natural conditions of trade. Trade conditions were quite the reverse. French trade with Canada is of more value to France than Canadian trade to France is of value to Canada. Their exports to us are about $13,000,000, while our exports to them are about $8,000,000. In that fact, a natural condition of trade, the minister had an advantage. Where he was at a disadvantage was his own fault. He left this country in such shape that he was handicapped in negotiations. Why was he? He was handicapped because he had gone up and down this Dominion for months making pledges of tariff reductions here, there and everywhere, a general reduction all round, and the French statesmen knew that. Certainly they knew in France that he had been a party, although he denies this now, to tariff commitments at a convention, commitments which, if they were carried out, would be of great advantage to France, and that, whatever else might be said about the party to which he belongs, there at least was a general commitment of the majority of them for tariff revision downwards. Thus the French people knew that no matter what they threatened, the hands of this government were tied; they could not do anything. Their hands were tied by engagements which they made in order to lure the people of Canada into voting for them, commitments made to get alliances and to get into power. These commitments no one knows better than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) as he sits in front of me, were against the interests of this country. We should not be tied to general, sweeping commitments of that sort. I do not favour any high tariff and I never did. The minister does not contradict me now. Why? A year and a half ago he was calling me a high protectionist; he was crying out to get into office to reduce the "high protectionist" tariff of the late government; but he comes here now to make out a case on this treaty and he says: "We have been a low protectionist or a low tariff country all along." Under those circumstances he never should have made the commitments he did to revise our tariff lower still and in so doing he stripped from his hand every weapon that he could have had to negotiate with the statesmen of France.

But his fault does not end there. He knew last session that negotiations with France were going to be necessary and that France under this treaty was entitled to negotiate. She was not entitled to any treaty with us if she was not prepared to give us a fair tariff as regards articles that we export. Under those circumstances we were not bound to make a treaty with her; we were only in honour bound to negotiate for a treaty, and we were to be the judges whether or not the offer was fair. The minister knowing that and knowing the general inclination of the French tariff upward should, before he went over to France, have placed, not the general tariff of Canada, but our tariff on luxuries, higher than it was. If he had done so, he would then have been in a position where he would not have had to bring back this abject surrender of our fiscal position to France. Our tariff on luxuries was then a comparatively low tariff for luxuries. He left it where it was. They had raised their general tariff, and he went over in that position and he did so, not because he did not think it would be in our interest to raise our tariff on luxuries under those conditions; he did it, because he had not the courage to come to this House last session in the face of his commitments, and propose any addition at all to the tariff. That is why we are in the position we are in to-day. Those are the two principal factors, the two principal faults that placed the minister in the position in which he was. I ask again: Do hon. members really think this country must continuously be in the position that France or any other nation can hold the big stick over our heads and say: "Here, though we sell you $13,000,000 worth of goods now and we buy only $8,000,000 from you, if you do not join with us to raise our tariff on stock, meats, poultry, vegetables, butter and various things which really count, chiefly agricultural products, and if you will not at the same time agree to lower yours on what we sell you, all right, we will do worse still. We will raise our tariff four times as high and you will have to stand for it all." I want to put the situation before hon. members and to ask those who have thought out this tariff subject; if you admit that we are in that position, do you think this country ought to be continuously there?. Do hon. members opposite think we should be? There is surely a tariff lesson to be learned from reflection on the experience of the Minister of Finance in France. I do not think the treaty is in our interests at all.

I said last night that the minister had now negotiated and obtained a higher tariff against us on the goods we sell, or can sell, than existed when he went over. He managed to come back with a higher French tariff against us and a much lower Canadian tariff against France. I do not think the minister is an unintelligent man by any means so far as tariff matters are concerned. It was not his will that such a folly as this be perpetrated; it was simply through his fault that he had to do it. It was because of the campaign he had conducted and the commitments he had made, and because of his failure last session to have the courage to do what was in the interests of the Dominion. I do not think the minister would refuse to admit right now that under this tariff we are not in as good a condition to trade with France as we were under the temporary tariff that he has put out of effect. Where the items are lower they are trifling; they relate merely to fanciful exports from Canada in almost every case, and in those cases where they are not such, the export is so small and the possibility so negligible that it does not weigh at all as against the price which the minister has paid in relation not only to the revenue of this Dominion but to the interests of the agricultural producers of this country.

I shall now make a short reference to the minister's reply to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin). I do not think that I have ever seen the minister more heated in the House than he was in his reply to the hon. member. Why was he so heated? The hon. member for Lincoln had certainly made no provocative speech. His speech was merely a statement of figures from beginning to end, a statement of the conditions of our trade and the exact operation of the treaty upon those conditions. I think, however, what stirred the minister was the revelation which the hon. member made of the inherent weakness of his performance. The minister seized upon one alleged error in regard to which the hon. member for Lincoln was not in the least to blame at all, even if he was wrong; and I doubt to this moment that he was wrong. The member for Lincoln said that, among other things,—and this is only one, out of over a hundred cases he brought forward, this government had got the admission of bronze powders into France at a lower rate than before; and the hon. member pointed out that we did not export this article but on the contrary imported it. He said that he had bought it himself for forty years and had always had to import it; while the trade returns published by this government, over the signature of a minister of the same government, indicated that we exported no bronze powders. The article appears in the trade returns. The trade returns at page 248 show that we imported $46,000 worth last year of this article, while there are no bronze powders in the export list at all. It may be this statement is an error, although I do not think that I have ever found the trade returns in error before. But if there is an error, well, I am not so trivial as to attribute it to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau), whose signature appears as authority for these trade returns. But such was the kind of argument the minister indulged in; he snapped back to the member for Lincoln the retort that if it did not appear in the trade returns it was the fault of the government which that hon. member supported. What does the minister mean by an answer of that kind? The trade returns are prepared by the officials.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member was saying that the matter was not to be found in the trade returns, to which I correctly replied that these trade returns were prepared by our predecessors. I found no fault with the returns, but when the hon. gentleman stated as a fact that something was not to be found in them I had the right to inform him that we had not prepared the returns.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, for that matter, the present government did prepare the returns. They could not have been prepared until the year was out, and the year did not expire until the 31st of March, 1922, when they had been in office three months. The trade returns would be prepared on the year's results and besides they are signed by the present Minister of Customs. I know that the first part of the work would be for a period before the minister took office, but the compilation would nevertheless be under the direction of the present Minister of Customs, who had been in office three months before the year expired. But if there was an error it would obviously be childishness for me to attribute it to the Minister of Customs or to any other member of the government; the fault would not be any minister's, no matter what government was in office. Now, here are these official returns showing no exports of this article, while they show imports amounting to $46,000; and the minister triumphantly presents a telegram, contradicting the trade returns of his government.

Mr. FIELDING: The point was this. It was alleged that this article was not made in Canada, whereas the telegram which I read to-day, and for which I am no more responsible than anyone else, simply stated that it was made here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I quite agree; but—

Mr. ROBB: I wonder if the leader of the Opposition would take my word for it. I live in Valleyfield and I know the Canadian bronze powder industry carried on there. I was mayor of Valleyfield when it was established there and I know that that industry exported millions of dollars' worth of bronze powder to the British Admiralty during the war.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know whether the article is exported or not, but every member of this House has a right to rely on the trade returns; and it would have come with better grace from the minister, if he found a telegram which contradicted the trade returns, simply to have stated the fact. The hon. member for Lincoln was quite justified in using the returns. It is just possible that the bronze powders which the minister referred to are known as something else in our trade returns, and may not indeed come in under this treaty at all. I fancy that if that is not likely it is at least possible; and I venture to suggest that it is not unlikely. But of bronze powders, as known in the trade returns, we have no exports shown; we have imports. I should think that in relation to an article which we have to buy from outside to the amount of $46,000 a year, it would not be necessary for an operator in Canada to look for it in a market across the ocean if he could get it in his own country. It may be that it is the same article, and it may be, on the other hand, that it is a different article. But in any event, whatever it is, it is one selected out of a hundred or two hundred and presented by the hon. member for Lincoln, who was absolutely right in his facts based upon the trade returns of Canada. I do not see therefore that there was much excuse for applause and noisy ecstasies as of victory won because somebody sent a telegram conflicting with the trade returns. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is with the consent of the whips that I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. FIELDING: With a view to resuming this evening?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was not the understanding; but I do not wish to adjourn the debate unless the whips agree.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not think there was any arrangement with the whips.

Mr. BOYS: I think my right hon. friend must have misunderstood me. No doubt that arrangement was made, but I went and told him that it had to be changed. My hon. friend must have overlooked what I said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right; the whip so informed me, but I understood that he was going back to discuss the matter further.

Mr. FIELDING: Would my hon. friend prefer to adjourn the debate, to resume some other time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but I do not wish to do so if there is any objection.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. gentleman desires it I offer no objection.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

SUPPLY

SOLDIERS' LAND SETTLEMENT

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

Soldiers' Land Settlement—advances to soldiers settling upon the land, and cost of administering the Soldier Settlement Act, including salaries, $8,400,000.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What are the salaries paid to the members of the board administering the act?

Hon. CHARLES A. STEWART (Argenteuil), (Minister of the Interior): With the exception of field supervision, which is a separate item, the amount required to pay the salaries of the staff is $500,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What does the chairman of the board receive?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The chairman receives $7,000 and the other members of the board $5,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the position of chairman of the board more important than that of deputy minister? What reason can the minister give for his salary being $7,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): These were the salaries when I took charge. I have not changed them at all. The work is pretty much the same, although perhaps not so much is being done, but no changes have been made in these salaries since I took charge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Owing to the natural contraction of the work, because there are really very, very few being placed now, if any, certainly very few as compared with those before, is the minister effecting a corresponding reduction in the expenditure?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is a reduction in the expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it corresponding?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): For purposes of comparison it might be well for me to give the figures for the last three years. The general office expense, including travelling expenses of inspectors and appraisers for 1921-1922 was $285,777.23; 1922-23, $200,700; for 1923-1924 estimated $180,000, Salaries exclusive of agricultural supervision for 1921-1922, $823,189.26; 1922-23, $711,600; 1923-1924, estimated $500,000. Legal expenses and disbursements, 1921-1922, $37,220.23; 1922-1923, $28,000; 1923-1924, estimated $20,000. Printing and stationery, 1921-1922, $32,022.88; 1922-1923, $27,300; 1923-1924, estimated $20,000. Advertising, 1921-1922, $5,190.39; 1922-1923, $3,600; 1923-1924, estimated $3,000. Miscellaneous, 1921-1922, $2,418.55; 1922-1923, $7,600; 1923-1924, estimated $5,000; making totals of expenditure for the three years respectively $1,185,818.54, $978,800, and $728,000. The figures for agricultural expenditure—will the totals satisfy my hon. friend?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think so now.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Agricultural expenditure including salaries, travelling expenses, motor car accessories, and home branch courses, for 1921-1922, $869,525.45; for 1922-1923, $695,900; for 1923-1924, estimated $672,-000. Now I will give the totals of all these items; 1921-1922, $2,055,343.99; 1922-1923, $1,674,700; and for 1923-1924, estimated $1,400,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The reduction is far from a corresponding reduction. The number of soldiers now being placed on the land is relatively negligible, but the cost is keeping up pretty well. Of course, I admit that in respect to the supervision work that would not be expected to contract very much. The minister's figures show a very small diminution from last year and the year before, but I would not criticize that. I would think that only a small diminution could be made, but I really think that as to the rest, the amount of machinery and the expenditure of the organization is away beyond the actual work being performed. It would seem to me that way. Could I get these particulars, for example? The minister gave the figures for legal costs. They seem to be keeping up magnificently. Could the minister tell us how many loans were made on land in 1922-1923, and the cost per loan, also how many were made on land, say, in the year 1919-1920, and the cost per loan? I was in charge at that time, and I know we made very stringent rules as to legal costs.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The explanation that I get for the legal fees is that this seems to be a sort of continuing business; that is it is not cleaned up in the years in which the men are established but goes on from year to year. I am informed that some of the legal business even of 1919 is still unfinished in that respect.

In answer to my right hon. friend's criticism as to reductions in the staff I may say that one could expect that there would be a reasonable reduction in the inside staff. In so far as the outside inspection is concerned, however, I am rather of the opinion that until these settlers are firmly established they will require supervision. It would not be good business because of the mere fact that you are not settling very many men to reduce the field inspectors or the officers who are supervising the work of these men.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I admit that.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think that is the strongest feature of the whole scheme. Indeed, I would go as far as to say that if these men were withdrawn we would perhaps have a great many more salvage cases than we otherwise would have. On the other hand, in making inquiry from the board with respect to the probable cost of carrying on the soldier settlement work—that is provided we could reduce the field staff, the agricultural staff, or the inspectional staff almost to a minimum—I am informed that the cost of collections and of the general work of the staff necessary to carry on the salvage work, and of their salaries, will amount to a very considerable sum. In all probability it will take more than half a million dollars annually to carry it along. That may seem to be rather a large figure for that kind of work, but there is not any doubt that a very large amount of salvage work is required in connection with carrying out this scheme. That is very evident now, although an adjustment last year has had the effect of reducing it very materially. I think I have the figures in that connection. I do not think, however, it will be possible to make a success of this work by making a very serious reduction in the inspectional staff, or a reduction beyond a reasonable number for the carrying out of the scheme in its entirety until such times, at least, as these men have more than half paid up the loans they received from the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In what I said before I admitted what the minister had said that the supervisory work—which, as he well remarks is one of the best features of the whole plan—cannot be contracted proportionately at all to the contraction of the placing of men. Indeed, I do not think it can be done very rapidly at all. I fancy that it would be bad policy to look for a rapid reduction in the staff of professors, collectors, and instructors, but what I had reference to were other expenses. For example, I could not understand why now—as against two or three years ago when we were placing at the rate of 10,000 men a year on the land and the legal expenses were under some $30,000—when we are placing almost none those expenses still keep up to about $20,000. That did not seem reasonable to me. The minister is informed that the legal fees drag on. Well, they will if they are allowed to. For the life of me I do not know why they should.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the bad feature of the legal business.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and there is need for control by a strong hand. As to the loans that were made in 1919-20 there would not be a loan made until the title was passed. It is true that the matter might drag until this year but it would not be in the 1919-20 loans; it would be in the loans this year. The loans would not be made until the title was passed. There might be cause why the title could not be passed and it might drag on to this year, but that would not be counted in the loans for 1919-20. I think we had a comparison of the cost per loan in 1919-20. We had it figured out and it was all, I think, given to the House; it was very low indeed. I would like to see if it is the same for last year, when probably another class of lawyers got in and handled the soldier settlement work.

While I am on my feet I wish to express gratification at the results considering all the conditions under which this work has been conducted. The whole soldier settlement scheme encountered just about as heavy obstacles as any plan ever launched by the administration encountered. No one, who was not through it, can realize fully the pressure that was brought upon the government after the return of those hundreds of thousands of men—pressure for one form of enterprise one day, another form of enterprise the next; very heavy pressure for entering upon a scheme of land purchase and loans for the purpose of colonizing the returned soldiers. It was indeed a dangerous enterprise; there was risk at every corner. I do not think any government launched anything in which it was more difficult to select sound and true lines in order to avoid error—I had almost said at a thousand points—in entering upon that work. It encountered a diminution in land values. That is, perhaps, the biggest obstacle the work has faced. Well, it has gone through that. Concessions had to be made because of that—concessions made a year ago which I think were right. They were very simple; they merely meant a grant out of the treasury, that was all; it was not a very great one. But when we consider that obstacle, when we consider as well, and associated with it, the lowering of farm prices not accompanied by any lowering of farm costs proportionately—when we consider that while the soldier settlement scheme, a new scheme, has to be made to go while farming, in general becomes more and more a matter of standing still, of loss rather than of gain, and that through it all this scheme survives to a very satisfactory degree of success, I think it indeed reflects credit on those who worked it out; and I am not saying this without mentioning the man who chiefly did it. The loans were mainly devised by Dr. Black, now the minister's deputy for the Department of Immigration; and the soundness of the policies adopted, the various safeguards instituted, and the strong features that have saved it through these very difficult years, are attributable to the good judgment of Dr. Black. Now, I merely say that had the years been even years—that is to say had conditions been normal; when we put in the work we could not wait, we had to do it then, there was no option on our part—had they remained the same in the matter of land value, in the matter of farm sale prices, and farm purchase prices, then unquestionably the whole soldier settlement organization to-day, and the men who have been placed on land under it, would be a very pronounced success. At the present time I think it can be said that the soldier farmer, taking all things into consideration, is in a better position relative to that in which he was when he started than the other farmer relative to the position he was in at the same time. I do not think there is any dispute about that. Consequently the scheme has been a success, and if we have an improvement in time, which I look for myself, then the whole advantage that this country has any right to expect will be harvested. I only hope I can get the figures of the cost, because I would like to be sure that it is being run on the same economic principle and being watched as carefully as it was some years ago.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): With regard to the legal part, I think perhaps my hon. friend is expecting too much of a reduction in the legal costs, owing to the fact that we were not establishing as many men as we were in the years he speaks of. The legal officers are on salary. This applies to Ontario, Quebec and the eastern provinces, but not to the West, and there is a considerable amount of salvage. True there is perhaps not a great amount of legal fees involved in the matter, still there are bound to be more or less legal costs, and the board must protect themselves against any action that might be taken against them for various causes. I can only assure my hon. friend that we will exercise the utmost caution in connection with these fees that are paid to solicitors. The chairman informs me that exactly the same fees are being paid as were paid formerly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The same scale?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, same scale.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have every confidence in the chairman. He has been a lawyer himself, and could not be imposed on unless he comes under the malign influences of party favoritism.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Having had considerable experience in farming, I am not unmindful of the fact that in establishing a soldier upon the land, making the loans that have been made and will no doubt be made in the future, considerable care will have to be exercised to keep out of difficulty, and I am of the opinion that due care should be exercised in connection with every loan made, as well as due care exercised when salvage cases occur, and they are occurring to a considerable extent. But I will tell my hon. friend that I do not want to be criticized by him, and I am willing to give him and the Conservative party full credit for instituting the establishment of the soldiers upon the land. I do not want to interfere in any way with the scheme, and I wish to assure him that I think the board to a man would be prepared to say that in no way have I myself interfered, or permitted anyone else to interfere, with the settlement of a single man or made any suggestion in regard to it. I have not interfered in any way. I have simply allowed the board to carry on as they have been doing in the past. In other words, I have left it entirely to the discretion of the board in dealing with these cases.

Mr. HANSON: Who selects the legal men in the various provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Justice department I am told have made those appointments and that has been the rule, but the fees that are paid are taxed by the members of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, and adjustments made if necesary.

Mr. HANSON: Then the patronage system is still in force in this department, as in other departments?

Mr. GRAHAM: Being continued.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have no knowledge of any change, if it was patronage. I wish to assure my hon. friend that I did not know there was any change, and I do not know of any change in the method of selection.

Mr. MANION: I was very pleased to hear the minister state the policy has not been changed in any shape or form. That is a compliment to my right hon. leader who really originated the scheme, or, at least, as minister put it into effect. I should like to have the minister make some statement as to the general condition of the soldiers now on the land. When the question was before the House last year we discussed the conditions at some length. I well remember that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) described the very serious condition of men in the prairie provinces who were put on the land, and I think it might be well for the minister to give us some idea of the number of men now on the land, as compared with, say, a couple of years ago, and as to their general conditions of prosperity or the reverse, because I am sure not only the House but the country generally is interested in the question of the soldier settlement scheme as a whole.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I, perhaps, cannot answer my hon. friend any better than to give him the comparative statement of the financial condition as it appears by our returns. I will be unable to give my hon. friend a statement as to the actual conditions on the land in comparison with a year ago or two years ago.

Mr. MANION: The minister can tell the condition by the number who wish to get out of the contract which they made. In that way we will be able to get a very good idea as to how they are doing.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will give my hon. friend the report of salvages but I wanted first to give the collections because they are a pretty fair indication of how the men are progressing. The date of last year's report is April 14th, 1922, and this statement I have before me is from October to April in both years. I am quoting this year's report as against that of last year. Last year the collection was $1,537,158.88 or 37.7 per cent of the amount due. This year, 1923, for the same period, the total is $1,662,778.99, or 55.6 per cent of the amount due. Therefore we have an increase of 37.7 per cent to 55.6 per cent for the same period, which is the heavy collection period.

Mr. MANION: I would take it that, from the financial statement the minister would probably say that conditions of men on the land are improving. Is that not correct?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. Still, if you take certain areas in Canada, for instance the northern portion of Alberta, while that was fairly prosperous last year, their returns do not show up as well. But the totals, taking Canada as a whole, show that conditions are improving. This is a statement of the totals. No doubt hon. gentlemen will say that the statement does not show up as well as the statement of last year; but as a matter of fact, that is the complete statement.

Mr. BANCROFT: Will the reductions in payments this year make some difference in those percentages?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, that is true.

Mr. MILLAR: It must be remembered that, as was to be expected, some returned soldiers were placed on land where they could not succeed, but not through any fault of their own. Take those soldiers and others who had a better chance and who still did not succeed, that is all the class of salvaged soldiers. After they have left their land, what is the policy of the government as regards the debt? I find some of these returned soldiers, after they have been salvaged, are in fear and trembling lest when they start to work elsewhere, their salaries or wages will be garnisheed. I find it is in the contract that they are liable; but in talking with some of the officials of the department, I have heard them say that this debt could not be collected. If it cannot be collected, would it not be wise to cancel the debt entirely and thus free those men from that fear?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The chairman assures me that no man has been pressed for the deficit that may in some cases accrue. In most of the cases upon which I pass, or where salvage has taken place and the resale of the property has been completed, there is sufficient to cover all the advances made by the board. But there are, of course, and will be a large number of instances in which that will not be the case, in which even after salvage has taken place, the individual will still be a debtor to the government. I would not like to say that in cases where fraud has taken place, we would not pursue; but speaking personally, I would not want to pursue a man who had done his best, but who had made a failure. I do not think that would be a proper thing to do.

Mr. MILLAR: Could the minister say positively that in no case any of this debt had been repaid by such returned soldiers? I am not positive; but I think I have heard of at least one case where some part of this debt has been repaid. Again, can we take it from the minister that in every case where a returned soldier has tried to do his best, it will be the policy from now on that he will not be pursued for a return of that debt?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I presume, as long as a man is liable, the act would make it possible to endeavour to collect, if he were able to pay and if it were wise to endeavour to collect. I am simply making the statement personally that unless a man deliberately committed a fraud, if he had made an honest effort and had made a failure, I think it would be very unwise to pursue him for a debt he might owe in that connection.

Mr. LEWIS: I should like to ask the minister a question regarding the authority of the supervisors in certain connections. What are the instructions as regards possessing or repossessing a crop? The reason I am asking this question is because certain supervisors have been in my district, for instance, and they have been dictating to these men what debts they shall contract in regard to living. Moreover, I find that on certain farms, they actually possess practically the whole of the crop, with the direct result that these men are not able to pay any store bills. In my particular district, there are three or four returned soldiers who have incurred debts to the local stores, and when they have gone to pay them, they have found that the Soldiers' Settlement Board have taken all the crop and that they cannot pay these debts. The result is that these men are simply getting off the land, not because they feel that they cannot make it pay, but because it is impossible for them to get any more goods at the local stores.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I had the same opinion as my hon. friend that, perhaps, there was over-supervision; but one must remember that pretty generous loans were made to these men. I will say very frankly, I think too generous loans were made. That, however, was the judgment of the people who were in charge at that time. I am not criticizing that; but I am saying that this increases the responsibilities and it naturally must increase the supervision, because if a man is lent, say, $5,000 or in that vicinity, I mean his total loan, on a quarter section of land, I think a farmer would call that a rather risky loan. Therefore, supervision must play a very important part. That is why I say I think it is important that supervision should continue; and if it appears at times to be of a character that is burdensome, interfering too much even in the home life of the settler, perhaps, after all, in many cases this is for his good. Instructions, however, are given to the inspectors to use their best judgment. The board inform me that they have had a good many men pass through their hands, and they have now after their experience chosen the men who have shown the better judgment and discretion in dealing with matters of this kind. I have heard the statement made that a settler could not sell a pig; that he could do nothing without the consent of the inspector. We must bear in mind that where a considerable amount of risk is involved in a loan, fairly rigid supervision is necessary.

Mr. LEWIS: I am not objecting to the fairly rigid supervision; but if the supervisor comes and takes all a settler has, you simply force the man out of existence, so that he cannot remain on the land. I can give two instances in my district where they took everything, when a man had incurred a debt of three or four hundred dollars. I am informed this year from home that the man has removed from the land simply because he cannot live.

Mr. STEWART: (Argenteuil): It must be remembered that there are 22,000 loans. I do not wish it to be understood that I hold any brief for the inspectors. I would rather encourage reasonable judgment being exercised in connection with all these matters; but undoubtedly there will still be men whom it will be impossible to continue who perhaps are disregarding every advice given by the inspectors, and who find themselves in a serious condition which jeopardizes the loan as well.

Mr. LEWIS: Of course I would say that the crop in that district was not a heavy one, and the total crop would possibly not more than pay the interest.

Miss MACPHAIL: I think I have heard from possibly 400 or 450 of the soldier land settlers in Ontario. Of that vast number I do not think there were more than half a dozen who had any criticism at all to offer concerning the Soldiers' Settlement Board or the work of supervision. It has indeed been very pleasing and encouraging to hear the very hearty approval of the supervisors which the soldiers and their wives in many cases have expressed. While some did say that they rather chafed under the supervision, they felt that the government were only doing what they must do in view of the large amount of money that has been put up, sometimes without any very great security.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to know whether the conditions portrayed by the member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) prevail to any extent now in regard to the settlers who are unable to pay their store bills. We know that this condition prevailed very largely two years ago, but that was precisely one of the disadvantges which we had hoped to meet by the amendments passed last session when we took the accrued interest and subsidiary loans and consolidated them afresh in a new loan, thus relieving the men of immediate payments. I do not think that the condition the hon. member refers to can be widespread at the present time, because there is practically nothing new save the small first payments. This condition must be considerably relieved since last year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Soldiers are only human, like other people in Canada, and there will always be individuals among them who will be improvident, get into debt and run up heavy bills, always of course against the advice of the supervisors. There can be no question about that, and that is one of the things which the supervisors endeavour to keep the settlers from doing. Perhaps they persist in doing it, however, and when adjustment day comes it is quite likely that they feel they are being hardly used. I can quite understand that; but in answer to my hon. friend I would say that so far as I know the condition mentioned has been reduced to the minimum.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the minister doing any advertising now for the board?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have almost ceased to advertise; I believe we are advertising in the veteran papers only.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no particular objection to advertising, but I might observe that we did cease it altogether some years ago, because there seemed no need for it; the facts and all the features of the policy were known. What was done years ago was to put in the Veteran and other papers—very few—a mere succinct statement of what the law provided in order that fit men might apply to come in and benefit thereby. But we stopped advertising. The minister, however, revived it, and the reason I became a little doubtful as to what influences were at work was the character of the advertising that he had adopted. It was indeed a remarkable advertisement I saw in one of the papers in which he advertises; this particular advertisement was not of the nature of those inserted when the work was first started, namely, a mere statement of the facts. This was the character of it. In the middle of the page was a letter from a veteran telling how much better things were now; he did not have as much to pay this year on account of the legislation of last session, which he used special language to describe; consequently, he was thoroughly well satisfied. Then an explanation was given, at the bottom, of what had brought all this about; it was all due to last session's legislation of the present government. In a word, the minister was spending public money to insert a political advertisement, for it was nothing more, because it had nothing whatever to do with the work of the Soldiers' Settlement Board. The advertisement was in a veteran paper which I have filed. There is no question about it; I remember it distinctly, for I was astonished at the character of the advertisement the minister was sending out. It was merely a method of using public money to give political éclat to the government.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Let me assure my hon. friend that this is the first intimation I have had of the letter in question: I did not see it. There has been no increase in advertising in the veteran newspapers or elsewhere. The advertising never ceased; it is just the same as when my right hon. friend had charge of the organization.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is the information I get from the chairman of the board. However, suffice it to say that I have never interfered with the advertising. I want my hon. friend to understand that it is my desire to have this work carried on just as he started it; I want to carry it out in every detail just as the hon. gentleman originated it. I want to carry it on as economically as I can, and when the time comes that we should curtail expenditure with respect to it I shall be glad to do so. I do not, however, want to be criticized for having interjected into the scheme anything that might interfere with its success; and I have never done so. I have every confidence in the board and I never suggested any advertisement to them. I never knew of this particular advertisement, never solicited it and will not do anything of the kind at any time. I want to give the scheme every chance to succeed, and I can assure my hon. friend that I have no desire to take any political kudos out of it. The hon. gentleman is welcome to it all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not seeking any credit whatever in the matter. I accept the minister's word that he did not father the advertisement, but I am curious to know who did. There must be someone who is attending to that phase of the operations. The minister is wrong, though, when he says that he is merely continuing what we did in respect of advertising. I cannot say what took place after I left office, but I am quite sure from memory that we ceased advertising. That, however, is not what I object to, if the minister feels that some good can be done by merely letting the returned soldier know what is available for him. If he thinks that advertising of that character should be revived, very good; and the veteran papers would be the ones to use. But I certainly do know that to utilise advertising space at the public expense for the character of advertisement I saw is wrong, no matter who is responsible for it. I take the minister's word that he is not.

Mr. KNOX: I rise to add my word of commendation to what was said by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I have been keeping close watch on the operations of the soldier land settlement scheme ever since its inception and I can heartily commend the working out of the operations of the board so far as I have observed them. I do not view this matter from the political standpoint at all, nor from the standpoint of those who originated the scheme; nor am I looking at it from the point of view of those who are at present carrying it on. I am speaking entirely from the standpoint of the observer who has been watching it closely, and I can speak particularly of the work done in my own district of Prince Albert in Saskatchewan. I have visited these men in their homes, and have been in all corners of that district where they are established. I might give a few figures I have compiled in reference to the men who have been established there and also show the extent to which salvages have occurred. In that district 2,338 applications were made to the qualification board. Of this number 1,800 were passed as qualified, or practically 77 per cent. Some of those disqualified have gone into training; that is to say, they are working for farmers in the district with the intention, which will no doubt be afterwards carried out, of again coming under the qualification board and being passed and established on the land. There have been established some 1,509 soldier settlers, of which number 136 or 8 per cent have since been salvaged. That percentage is very small indeed as compared with the number of failures which may have occurred with the original homesteaders, men who went on the land and tried to establish themselves independently, and long before the organization of the Soldiers' Settlement Board. On the first of October last there were 1,281 with payments due. Of these 624 have since met their payments in full. I think that is a very good showing. Three hundred have made them in part. In spite of the fact that last year not very much money was made on the farms, indeed a great many farmers who were thoroughly established previously went behind, we find that these men under proper supervision have done particularly well. The applications in hand for the present year show that at least 150 new settlers will be established in this district. I would point out that this is entirely independent of the number who may be brought over from the British Isles by Major Ashton. These one hundred and fifty men made application on the spot and are likely to be established. The payments this year stand at 55.1 per cent of the amounts due; but there have also been pre-payments made that is to say payments not yet due, sufficient to bring that percentage up to 61.8 per cent. Considering these figures, and remembering what I have seen of the supervision exercised by the inspectors, as I said before, I wish to add my word of commendation. The project is working out particularly satisfactory, and I think it should get every assistance that we can give it.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to call the minister's attention to one point in regard to the soldier land settlement scheme. Many of the soldiers when they returned already possessed land, but in order to get re-established they made application to the Soldiers' Settlement Board for loans to buy stock and implements. I understand that the board took security for these loans on practically everything the soldiers had, irrespective of the amount advanced. In many cases this has placed the borrowers in the unfortunate position of not being able to do business with their local stores, implement dealers and banks. I have come across a few cases where the amount of security is out of all proportion to the amount loaned. I agree that the board should get adequate security for repayment of the loans made, but thus protected I think the board should be content and should release the balance of the security in order that the soldier settlers concerned can do business along the ordinary lines usual in farming communities. Having all their security tied up with the board these men cannot function as they should.

Mr. KELLNER: I am frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my district this scheme is not the great success that it seems to be in some of the other districts about which we have heard. I think the comparatively marvellous success which has attended the scheme in certain districts is largely attributable to the fact that a good many of these soldier settlers are receiving a pension and were granted certain concessions by the government last year. Had they been operating entirely on their own resources it is questionable whether they would have made a success of their operations. However, I do not wish to say anything very detrimental, because coming from the province of Alberta it would be dangerous for me to suggest that there is anything the matter with western Canada—I might be considered a degenerate, and I should not like to take such a chance. But I should like to hear the right hon. leader of the Opposition and the minister deliver the speeches we have listened to in this House to returned soldier settlers in some of the districts in Alberta; I think the reception they would get would be wholly different from that which was accorded them here.

In regard to the supervision exercised over these soldier settlers, it is all we could wish. I believe the inspectors almost go around to watch the settlers gather their eggs! It is my opinion that almost the entire inspection might be eliminated. I think the municipal councils could look after the interests of the government a whole lot cheaper and more satisfactorily than the inspectors are doing. We hope that eventually the loans will be paid back to the government, and these soldier settlers are the ones who will have to discharge them. I wonder if the collections at present are sufficient to pay the administration costs.

There are many districts to-day in which the school authorities find themselves in a serious condition because of the heavy arrears of taxes. I took the matter up with the minister some time ago, but I have not heard as yet from him as to whether the government intends to do anything. In the province of Alberta there has been I think 14.6 per cent of abandonments. That only tells part of the tale. We have a large number of farms on which there are arrears of taxes, and as these farms are mortgaged to the government it is impossible for the local authorities to collect their taxes. I do think the government should guarantee payment of taxes on such land so that the district schools may function; otherwise many of them will have to be closed.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The reason for the delay in replying to the hon. gentleman's question in respect to taxation is that I wanted to be sure of my ground with regard not only to municipalities in his province but elsewhere. The Justice department has advised me to the effect that where lands are held by the Crown parliament has no authority to pay or guarantee taxes to the municipalities, crown lands being immune from taxation. So the matter would require readjustment and I am so informing the municipal authorities who have written me in connection with it. This government has no control over the collection of taxes from the man who is on the land, and can do nothing towards assisting him in their payment. I am speaking more particularly of lands salvaged and returned to the control of the Dominion government. I admit frankly that it is a hardship, and I sought for some way to assist the municipalities, but that is the answer I have received, and I am giving it to the committee in order that hon. members may convey it to the parties interested.

10 p.m.

With respect to my hon. friend's suggestion that we might abandon inspection, I must say that I do not agree with him, and I so stated at the beginning of my remarks this evening. I believe the success of this undertaking depends largely upon the inspection that is exercised over our soldier settlers. I do not mean to say that it should be of a kind that would be arduous upon the settler, but I do think that this inspection and advice that is given to the settler when the inspector visits him is a feature that can be commended. I did not know until informed by my hon. friend that they were there every morning when the hens laid. That is news to me. However, if such is the case, it only speaks more highly of the very efficient manner in which these men are doing their duty.

Mr. GRAHAM: It speaks well for the hens too.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I would like to say just a word about the way in which the soldier settlement scheme is working out in my part of the country and in some other parts with which I am perhaps somewhat familiar. For some time I have taken a good deal of interest in the working of this board, and I have had an opportunity of meeting a good many returned men who are working under the provisions of the act. I know, and no one who comes from our part of the country but must know, that conditions among the soldier settlers are very hard in those parts, but I am not attributing that to the regulations of the Soldiers' Settlement Board or to the act under which they are working, or to the method under which the act is carried out. The condition of the soldier settler to my mind reflects the condition of agriculture as a whole in that part of the country, and if the conditions of agriculture as a whole are bad, as they are, the condition of the soldier settler will be bad also. But that can hardly be laid at the door of the board or of the scheme itself. I think that differentiation ought to be made. My own impression is that on the whole the soldier settlers are doing remarkably well considering all the circumstances. We have to remember this, even when we compare them with other farmers who are in debt, that the soldier settler is more heavily indebted than the average civilian farmer. He has the advantage of better terms, lower rates of interest, but on the other hand he owes practically 100 per cent, and in some cases over, of the value of his property. So he has a larger percentage of debt as a rule.

I was gratified to some extent to see that the percentage of collections had risen during the past year. I expected that of course due to the fact as has been stated that the total amount called for was much smaller, but what was much more significant was the fact that the actual amount realized was greater than last year. To my mind that carries far more significance than the percentage itself. How was that done? I do not believe it was done because the men themselves were making more money, because I do not believe they were. They could not make any more money than the farmers around them made during the last year. But I do believe this. It was due in part at least to the greater heart and the better spirit with which a great many of these men went at their work after some of the amendments that were made to the act last year. I am not speaking for political purposes at all. As a matter of fact, I have read a number of letters similar to the one mentioned by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, which did not attribute the entire credit to the Liberal government, but the fact remains that the effect of these amendments was somewhat belittled, I think, in saying that it was just a slight grant from the Treasury Board. It did not really take the form of a grant at all. What was done as far as the relinquishment of money was concerned was the cancellation of some $12,000,000 of interest due in the next four years. It was not money paid out by the Treasury Board as a grant, but money coming to the board by way of interest which was cancelled. That is something different from a grant. But more than that, I believe that a different principle was established in the loaning of money. We found, and I think any hon. member who followed the work last year and from his own experience at home knows that the principle of having the heavier payments come due during the first years of a man's settlement, due to the short term for live stock and the long term for the land, was not a safe principle, and in my opinion not a right principle, because it is in the first years that a man finds it most difficult to make his payments. Parliament therefore tried to establish the principle of making the easy payments come first and the harder ones towards the end, when the settler would be more properly settled on the land.

I simply rose to mention these two points. One was to explain a little more closely what had been done, and the second was to draw that distinction between the conditions under which all agriculture was suffering and the conditions which were due to the Soldiers' Settlement Board itself. I can say in all fairness, as a somewhat disinterested though not uninterested observer, that I believed the act is working out fairly well, that the work is carried on fairly efficiently by the men employed, and that on the whole a very fair spirit exists among the returned soldier settlers towards the board under which they work and the officials with whom they come in contact.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not want to be misunderstood. Like the hon. member who has just taken his seat, it was the working of the board of which I was speaking, and not of the wisdom of the act itself. I believe it is much too soon to say whether the land settlement scheme for soldiers has proved to be a success or not. It may prove to be; it may not. This is true. It came at a time when it was exceedingly hard for people going on the land. I notice in many of the letters I have received that the men who have made the fewest payments are the most optimistic about the scheme and those who have paid the most are the most pessimistic. That struck as being an odd thing. But we should give praise where praise is due, and I think that the Soldiers' Settlement Board, taking them in the large, have been very kind and considerate, and those who went to visit the soldiers on the land must have done so in a humane and kindly way since the expression of opinion regarding them is so unanimous.

I rise to ask the minister if it would be possible to have the settlers in Ontario, for instance, make their payments in the spring instead of in the fall. In grain growing provinces, such as in the middle West, to pay all debts in the fall when the grain is to be sold works out very nicely, but not in Ontario where in the fall there is very little to sell. Besides that, there are debts coming due which would take what little the soldier settlers have to sell. Possibly a couple of hundred who answered me asked for that change to be made; at least, they said it would mean a great deal to them if they could pay their debts in the spring instead of in the fall, because under the present method they were forced to sell their grain which they wanted to feed. I do not know whether it would be possible for the minister to make the change. I know it is difficult to have one method apply in one province and another in another province, but they do ask me to express that wish for them.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I may say in reply to the hon. member that in cases where the settler is desirous of feeding his grain to stock it has been the custom to defer the payment. The question of a general setting back of payments has always been more or less a contentious one. I know that it has been a contentious matter even in the West because it has been felt that the farmers have been forced to sell their produce at a time when it was perhaps inconvenient, and that it would be better to defer payments, but unfortunately no one has taken the lead in the matter particularly, and until all are agreed to delay payments there is always the fear of the first creditor getting away with the bulk of the crop and leaving all the others in the lurch. Therefore, payments are usually all set for one period. I might say, however, that where the soldier desires to feed his grain to stock rather than market it in order to pay his debts, we will be very glad to extend the time in cases of that kind whenever application is made.

Mr. KELLNER: The minister answered my question in regard to the gathering of eggs but he missed the other one. He did not tell me whether the receipts were sufficient to pay the administration costs of the board, and I suppose that would include capital expenditure and depreciation. I would like to make another remark as to the payment of these taxes. The minister tells us that according to the information which the Department of Justice has given him the government cannot make the payment. In that case I would like to submit that possibly they could make a grant to the school district. The only alternative to the government not pursuing either course would be to close the schools. I do not think this government would regard that with favour, at least I hope not.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can answer one of my hon. friend's questions. He asked whether we were getting any money in to pay the cost of administration. The cost of administration is estimated to be $1,400,000 and we have collected already over $1,600,000. I am informed that the collections are coming in at the rate of $40,000 each two weeks.

Mr. FORKE: It seems to me it is rather a strange statement the minister made, that it is not within the power of this parliament to pay taxes on land that was patented before it came into the hands of the soldier settler and then was abandoned. Does the minister say that parliament has no power to make any provision of that sort?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is the opinion of the Department of Justice with respect to any land. No difference is made once the land becomes the property of the Crown.

Mr. FORKE: It would require an amendment of the British North America Act to make such provision?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Apparently; that is the answer I get.

Mr. FORKE: It seems a funny thing.

Mr. LEWIS: Did I understand the minister to say the cost of administration and supervision was $1,400,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is for this year.

Mr. LEWIS: And the amount collected was $1,600,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is what we have collected already this year.

Mr. LEWIS: It would seem that the cost of administration and supervision was almost equal to the amount collected, taking the salvage cases into consideration. It would seem to me to be far better to cancel the whole debt altogether than to spend money that way and take it out of the soldier on the land.

Mr. KELLNER: In view of the minister's statement as to the cost of administration, and keeping in mind the interest charges, if I am right in supposing that the loans amounted to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100,000,000, there must be some depreciation in capital expenditure in view of the large number of farms that have been abandoned.

Mr. MANION: I would like to get a little more information from the minister; I do not think he quite understood one of my questions. Could he give the number of soldier settlers in the different provinces, and also, if possible, the number that have had to be salvaged? I would like the figures for this year and also for the past year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The figures are as follows:

Province—	Adjustments
British Columbia	490
Alberta	944
Saskatchewan	549
Manitoba	575
Ontario	234
Quebec	135
New Brunswick	101
Nova Scotia	53
Prince Edward Island	53
	3,134

The number of cases completed is 906, and the number pending 2,228.

Mr. MANION: I do not quite follow the minister. I take it that "adjustments" are salvage cases, are they?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister give the total number of soldier settlers in each of the provinces so as to distinguish between those men and the number who have been "adjusted," as the minister expresses it, or salvaged, for the past year? I would also like the figures for the previous year, just as a matter of comparison in order to ascertain how the men are doing on the land.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can give my hon. friend the number settled in each province.

Mr. MANION: That will do.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The total number settled under the act—

Mr. MANION: May I suggest to the minister that if he would first give the total number settled under the act in each province, and immediately follow that with the number of salvaged cases, it would be a little more convenient for us.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There are two kinds of settlers. There are a few without loans. I will give my hon. friend the number of settlers who have received loans in each province, and follow it with the number of salvage cases in each case.

Province—	Settlers granted loans	Salvaged
British Columbia	3,211	490
Alberta	6,623	944
Saskatchewan	5,631	549
Manitoba	3,508	575
Ontario	1,759	234
Quebec	459	135
New Brunswick	630	101
Nova Scotia	429	53
Prince Edward Island	355	53

Mr. LEWIS: Is that the number of salvage cases from the time they were first settled?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. LEWIS: As a rule do the salvage cases pay back the expense of salvage and the original loan, or not?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I mentioned a short time ago that out of the total number about one-third of them have been completed and they do not in all cases cover the entire loan.

Mr. LEWIS: Can you tell me the total indebtedness of the soldiers to the board, taking the whole range, outstanding at the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The total amount loaned was $94,993,421.38.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): In the case of lands that have come into the possession of the board, through salvage or otherwise, what steps have been taken to dispose of them? In any case are they being held for a rise in price?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No; they are open for sale from the moment they come into the hands of the board. Of course, in every case an endeavour is made to secure, at least, the amount against the property. Sometimes the proceedings are delayed on that account. In some cases we have accepted less than the amount owing against the particular property in question.

Mr. KNOX: Is any effort made to have returned men placed on these lands?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, wherever it is possible to do so an endeavour is made to get returned men on this land. In a few cases where men were liable to get into difficulty, others stepped into their shoes and prevented salvage cases occurring; indeed where salvages had already taken place this occurred.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): How many settlers were placed on the land during 1922.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): 1,359 new settlers.

Mr. MANION: How much longer is permission to be given to the returned soldiers to settle on the land? I presume there is some specified plan, and that it is not for an indefinite time.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have discussed that matter with the board. It was rather a difficult thing to decide when we ought to cease receiving applications and settling men upon the land. I may say frankly I have a feeling that perhaps all the men who wish to avail themselves of this settlement scheme have pretty well made application. I think those figures will give the committee an idea. The total number of returned soldiers who have been qualified by the board up to January 1923, is 46,692. These men passed the board and were qualified to get loans, if they were desirous of accepting them. The loans granted to January 31st were 22,222, so that there were 24,000 who really qualified who did not avail themselves of the opportunity. There are at present in training 532 ex-Imperials, Those who completed training and have not taken up land number 774. So that, aside from the men who drifted out after qualifying and did not settle on the land, we still have 1,276. One would expect a fair number of them, at least, to apply for settlement.

Mr. MANION: Out of the 22,000, would the minister tell us how many took up land in each of the years since the beginning I would like to know how they are diminishing at the present time.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not the number of settlers, but the actual amount expended will give a fair indication. I have not the number of men established opposite the amount of money. The amount of money expended in loans was:

*Year	Loans
1918-19	$ 1,383,391 82
1919-20	42,715,374 34
1920-21	22,833,186 29
1921-22	11,501,160 09

That would give my hon. friend a fair indication of it.

Mr. ANDERSON: Is the office in Toronto supervising the whole of Ontario? Are there other offices besides the Toronto one for the enforcement of the land settlement scheme?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, Toronto is the only general office for this work in Ontario. They do not report directly to Toronto, but the office is in Toronto.

Mr. GARDINER: When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) had his estimates before the House he told us about the fine condition of agriculture in the province of Quebec. I noticed by the report of the minister to-night that, out of 459 grants made in Quebec, there have been 135 cases of salvage which is over one-third of the number of loans made in the province of Quebec. Can the minister tell this committee, in view of the splendid conditions obtaining in Quebec, according to the Minister of Agriculture, why there are so many salvages in that province?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am afraid I cannot answer the double-barrelled question.

Mr. GARDINER: Try and answer the single-barrelled one.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, I could not give that information. I have no knowledge as to just what brought about the salvage cases in Quebec, or indeed in any of the other provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: Would there be any possibility of getting that information from the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. ANDERSON: What was the cost of the Toronto office for 1921-22?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can give my hon. friend the total cost in Ontario, which would include the field supervisors and the whole staff of the Toronto office. This is taken from the salary list so that it would include all costs at Toronto. The amount is $70,940.

Mr. ANDERSON: How many officials does that include?

*For corrected statement see page 2207.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Forty-six all told.

Mr. ANDERSON: How many supervisors are in that number?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Fourteen supervisors in Ontario. That was the situation on the first of January, and there are still fourteen.

Mr. ANDERSON: Has the minister the figures for the year before as well? I want to make a comparison. Is the figure the same for the year before?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have not last year's figures here.

Mr. MANION: Has there been a decrease or a marked decrease in the expenses?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The decrease in cost of field supervision this year will be $14,700, so that we are reducing expenditure. I may say frankly, I do not think we should reduce materially the inspection work of the board, because that, after all, is the important work if we are to do our best by the soldiers on the land.

Mr. MANION: I quite agree with the minister in that regard. But as regards office staff, legal expenses and that sort of thing, since the expenditures of the department are going down and as this probably means a considerable decrease in a number of applications for settlement on the land, the general expenses, aside from the inspection work, should also decrease. I was wondering if there was any decrease at the present time.

Mr. ANDERSON: I notice that out of 1,759 soldier settlers in Ontario, 234 gave up their holdings. What was the amount of the holdings, and what was the loss in Ontario, if any, to the government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It would be almost impossible to give that, because many of these cases are not completed, and it would be difficult to ascertain the estimated loss or actual cost while cases are still pending completion. My hon. friend will remember that taking the whole of Canada, we have completely salvaged only a little over one-third of the cases, and there are still two-thirds to be completed. The figures I gave some moments ago would indicate that.

Mr. ANDERSON: How much were the loans and how much had the soldiers paid on their holdings?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I shall be glad to have that statement prepared, but that will take some little time. In answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Manion) as regards a reduction in staff, in July, 1920, the staff was 1,580, all told. At the moment the staff is 690, all told.

Mr. MANION: The minister means the whole staff in the Dominion?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In addition to salaries paid to members of the board, what extra amounts were paid and for what?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Nothing except their travelling expenses.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What amounts?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not a statement of the actual travelling expenses of each member of the board.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the percentage of salvaged cases in Alberta appears to be 14 per cent, and in Manitoba, 16 per cent. Can the minister explain why the percentage of cases in Manitoba is greater than in Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not explain that; I frankly say so. I could not attempt to explain why the numbers should be greater in one province than in another. All we know is that when it becomes necessary to salvage, action must be taken. I would not attempt to analyze the cause of this.

Mr. CALDWELL: Of the salvaged cases which have been completed, how many have reimbursed the government in full, and refunded to the soldier the payments that he has made?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The number is very small. Perhaps one influence that contributes to that is that land and stock were at a very high point when the soldier was established. Now deflation has set in, and while he might have had a considerable amount of value represented by his investment, owing to that deflation and to the fact that he is being salvaged just when deflation is at its height, in many cases there is not much salvage to repay the man who made the investment.

Mr. CALDWELL: I realize the condition that brought that about, and I am not blaming the Soldiers' Settlement Board for that condition; but it would be interesting to know in how many of those cases there was salvage enough to pay the soldier back in full, or in part, or even anything?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The chairman of the board informs me that there are a considerable number of cases in which money has been paid. I have not that information here, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. LEWIS: I should like to share the optimism of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman); but after listening to the figures given regarding the total indebtedness, the amount of money received and the number of cases that have been salvaged, I do not think the outlook is very bright either for the soldier settlers themselves or for the government. If the figures given by the minister are correct, approximately $94,900,000, and in view of the fact, of course, that interest has been cancelled at the present time, the fact remains that interest is to be charged on over $94,000,000. This would mean that $4,745,000 would have to be paid yearly to meet the interest, without taking into account any of the capital investment; and when we consider that last year only $1,600,000 was collected and it took $1,400,000 to get it, it does not seem to me that this is very good book-keeping. I am just wondering what the end is going to be.

Item agreed to.

Grant to H. H. Moss, to cover expenses in connectior with his illegal arrest, $595.58.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister explain what this amount is for?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have here a written explanation of the matter. There was one Harold Moss, whom the department were seeking to prosecute. He went to the United States and an arrest was made, but unfortunately we arrested the wrong man, with the result that there was a protest from Washington from the Secretary of State, who suggested that the government of Canada make a compensation to one Moss, an American citizen who was arrested instead of the man we were after:

A letter was received by His Majesty's Embassy at Washington from the United States Secretary of State, suggesting that the government of Canada make compensation to one Harry Moss, an employee of the National Board of Fire Underwriters of New York City, who was wrongfully arrested in Chicago on the 3rd November, 1921, at the direction of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, on being erroneously identified with Harold H. Moss, who was wanted on charges of false pretences and fraud in connection with transactions with the Soldier Settlement Board.

From the board's records, it is clear that one Harry Moss of Chicago was improperly arrested on an infomation laid and warants secured by the board for the arrest of Harold H. Moss, formerly of Winnipeg. The Board is not in a position to say what injury Harry Moss suffered by reason of the improper arrest.

nor if injury was suffered, is it in a position to say what compensation should be paid, or how the matter should be disposed of. It would appear to the board that the entire matter is one involving the administration of justice, and must be determined by the opinion and recommendation of the Justice department.

Should it be determined by the Justice department that compensation should be paid by the Canadian authorities, it will be necessary to determine on which department the responsibility rests for the improper arrest, and the board on that ground does not accept the responsibility.

In order that full information may be available for the proper consideration of the legal and international questions involved, a brief history of the case as it appears in the board's records, is given herewith.

As a result of certain information placed before the parliamentary committee on Re-establishment, the board instituted an enquiry under Section 55 of the Soldier Settlement Act, into certain land purchases in the province of Manitoba. At this enquiry, taken under oath, it transpired that in 1919 one H. H. Moss of Winnipeg had sold to the board certain farms, and the evidence thus taken established, in the opinion of C. H. Locke, legal counsel employed, a prima facie case against the said H. H. Moss of perjury, obtaining money by false pretences, and other criminal wrongdoing. Moss was a witness in the early stages of the enquiry. On the advice of counsel the board placed the facts before the Attorney General's department of Manitoba, and in consultation with the Deputy Attorney General of Manitoba, laid certain informations against H. H. Moss and had warrants for his arrest issued. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police had been employed to assist in gathering evidence for the enquiry, and the warrant for arrest was placed in their hands. On attempting to execute same, it was ascertained that H. H. Moss had fled from justice, and was somewhere in the United States.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police pursued their attempts to locate H. H. Moss in the United States, and their agents finally reported that he had been located in Chicago, and they asked the board to undertake to defray the expense of their sending a police constable to Chicago to verify the reports of the police agents. The board agreed to do this, and constable Downey was sent from Winnipeg to Chicago by the R.C.M.P. authorities. The board supplied the R.C. M.P. with a good photograph of the accused and with a full description and other means of identification. Constable Downey reported that he had definitely located the accused in the offices of the National Board of Fire Underwriters in Chicago; that he had personally seen the accused; and that there was no doubt of his identity. On the advice of counsel, the board submitted the facts to the Department of Justice, and obtained authority to commence extradition proceedings, and the R.C.M.P. were therefore authorized to make the arrest. This was done and Mr. Locke having acted as counsel at the board's enquiry and being conversant with all the facts, was sent to Chicago to direct the proceedings. On his arrival he immediately discovered that the man arrested was not H. H. Moss, the accused, and consequently ordered his release. The whereabouts of Harold H. Moss, the accused, have not since been discovered.

We are asking for this sum because we believe we shall be liable for the wrongful arrest of the American citizen Moss, who was not the man we were after.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is it proposed to give this amount to him?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The matter is entirely in the hands of the Justice department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is to be done with the money?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are assuming that we shall have to make some restitution for the wrongful arrest of this man, and as he is an American citizen the matter is more or less of an international character.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amount is odd; it must have been decided upon in some way.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The man has agreed to accept that amount as restitution.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And in the meantime the minister says his department has not been found liable in any way by any tribunal, so that it is a matter of negotiation between the man, Moss, and the department.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Well, that is partly right, and perhaps my explanation is only partly right. The man has agreed to accept this amount and we have practically agreed to pay it in settlement of the case. The money has not yet been paid, but undoubtedly it will be.

Item agreed to.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Trade and Commerce—salaries and contingencies, $498,490.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps the minister will explain the cause of the increase of some $50,000 in this item.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This is accounted for partly by requisitions and partly by transfers and some increases of the staff. There have been transferred to the permanent those who were on the temporary list. Under the act of 1918 the statistical work of all the various departments of government was transferred to the Bureau of Statistics. So we have transferred some of these employees from other departments, and to carry on the work it is necessary to make these employees permanent in accordance with the requirements of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What strikes one at first glance is the very substantial increase in the number of employees in this department. An increase in a single year from 300 to 345 employees is rather staggering, while the increase in the cost of administration as a result of this increase in staff is from $425,000 to $476,000. What was the necessity for this enormous increase in the staff?

Mr. ROBB: As I have just explained, it does not necessarily mean that there is this enormous increase in the staff nor in the cost of administration. Under the system of book-keeping, to meet the requirements of the auditor general moneys must be voted either for temporary or for permanent employees. The Civil Service Commission refuses any longer to grant certificates for the temporary employees who have been in this department for a number of years, and this necessitates their being made permanent. As a matter of fact I think the increase in staff is warranted in view of the statistical information demanded. My hon. friend will observe that 37 of these 45 additional employees are in the Bureau of Statistics. There are only two additional employees in the administration branch of the department, and under readjustment during the year these will disappear. The other six are in the commercial intelligence bureau.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Were they not all in the department last year?

Mr. ROBB: Some have been transferred from the Department of Labour, some from the Interior department, and some were on the temporary list and had been there for a number of years. If we had a system of book-keeping whereby we could have a lump sum to run each department during the year it would not be necessary to vote so much, but when we have to provide for those who are now temporary employees and will be transferred and made permanent after this vote is passed, my hon. friend can see the necessity for putting through these different votes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Turning to page 66 of the Main Estimates, where the various activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce are set out, it will be found that for the carrying on of that department last year we voted $3,252,000. This year all the minister asks is $3,029,000. He proposes a reduction of $222,000 in round figures. No new services are enumerated on page 66, apparently no greater activities are contemplated over last year, if anything the work of the department will be decreased this year because about a quarter of a million dollars less is asked for in the Main Estimates. Notwithstanding that, on turning to civil government we find this increase of 45 in the number of employees and something like $50,000 in salaries. You can go over all the details of civil government and though we are year by year getting farther from war activities, when so large a Civil Service was necessary, it is strange that the cost of civil government seems to increase. This year there is an increase of $252,000. This is one of the departments of civil government. If we may judge by the Main Estimates its activities will be less even than they were last year. But whatever we may provide in the estimates, for some reason or other the cost of the staff of the department goes up, and as a result we are asked to provide by taxation a quarter of a million dollars more than we did last year. It is all very well for my hon. friend to say that these clerks have been transferred from some other departments, but those other departments do not show a decrease, and the Main Estimates show that the amount in excess of last year for civil government is just a shade over a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. BELAND: Mr. Chairman, as my hon. friend has referred to all departments of civil government, and he has confined himself to a study of the civil government estimates, I think you will agree with me that it is not the proper manner in which to examine the expenditure for administration so far as salaries are concerned. Take the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, almost all the employees are temporary and do not figure at all in the civil government list. There is this year in the estimates for salaries for the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment department a reduction of $1,000,000. Now, my hon. friend I know wants to be fair. He says there is an increase in the civil government expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars. I grant that it may be so, but even if it is, if there is a reduction of salaries in my department of $1,000,000, there will be a saving of three-quarters of a million dollars this year in salaries. My hon. friend will admit that—yes, he has to admit that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is as to temporary employees. I am talking of those on the permanent list.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend says these are temporary employees. What did he mean when he referred to the war? He said the farther we get away from the war the more we pay in salaries. The Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment department is a war department if it is anything at all. There was a reduction last year of $1,000,000 in salaries. This year there is a similar reduction. My hon. friend fails to take that into account, but he should do so if he wants to be fair.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is a different proposition.

Mr. BELAND: No, it is not a different proposition at all. My hon. friend intimates that there is an increase in the amount for salaries for administration while there should be a decrease because we are getting farther away from the war. I agree with him. But when he confines his remarks to civil government he becomes—unwittingly I am sure—unfair and states the position wrongly, and I think he will admit it because he wants to be fair. This is for the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment department—a reduction of $1,000,000. What about the Defence department? I think 1,600 temporary employees have been dispensed with there. That does not appear in the civil government estimates. There is also probably over a million dollars of reduction in salaries paid. My hon. friend says it seems that the expenditure is increasing all the time. No, it is decreasing every year, and by large amounts. The cost of civil government, no doubt, remains much about the same in almost every department, and it will remain about the same no matter what government is in power. I rose mainly for the purpose of pointing out that it is very unfair to confine one's observations to the civil government estimates; it is absolutely unfair because really there is a decrease of over $2,000,000 in salaries paid by this government this year for employees all over the country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This item that we are discussing now is the civil government vote. It has nothing to do with the temporary employees which the various departments of the government employ and have employed since the war. It was not only in the war departments, such as the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the Department of Militia and Defence, that temporary clerks were taken on. Why, they were almost innumerable in the Finance department and in every other department of the government owing to the war. But this vote we are discussing now, and in regard to which I charge there is an increase when there should be no increase, is a permanent vote. There is no cutting down in this vote. These men are simply appointed to the permanent staff and there will be more of them there again next year and the year after that again. Instead of decreasing the cost of civil government this government is increasing it. I am aware that there is a vanishing expenditure, or should be, in my hon. friend's Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I know that in one year or a year and a half we let out from the Militia department 8,000 temporary employees. I should think we are within reasonable distance now of closing up the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment altogether; but the fact that we have let many hundreds of war employees go who are no longer necessary, is that a justification for increasing the permanent staff that governs this country? That is my point, and the only point I wish to make. Instead of retrenchment we have increase. The times do not justify increase; the activities of the government do not justify increase; the business of the country being done to-day does not justify this increase. The fact is the civil service of Canada is being loaded up in this way with permanent employees, and you cannot dispense with them as you can with temporary employees by simply telling them to go. They obtain a fixed place in the service of Canada. Next year I am willing to predict there will be no decrease in this particular vote, but that the cost of civil government in Canada will be more than it is this year.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend knows that under civil government we have employees classed as temporary as well as those on the permanent list. There are in all departments many employees who have been on the temporary list for years, and the Civil Service Commission have ruled that they should be put on the permanent list. I think it is only reasonable when a man has been in a department five, ten or fifteen years and it is evident that his services are required that he should be put on the permanent list. You have to pay him anyway.

My hon. friend, on the other hand, referred to a reduction of $222,000, and he takes that as an indication that we propose less activity during the year. That is not true. We anticipate greater activity during the year. I can show my hon. friend where these reductions were made. In the first place there is the census staff, which my hon. friend knows is taken on every ten years. Those are temporary employees. There is a reduction of $115,000 there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That will not appear in this vote, will it?

Mr. ROBB: No, but it was in connection with this vote that my hon. friend anticipated less activity during the year. Then $85,000 was spent for improvements to the elevator at Vancouver. The department had nothing whatever to do with that. It was all handled by the Board of Grain Commissioners. We are also making a reduction of $10,000 in the Commercial Intelligence department, travelling and miscellaneous expenses in connection with the junior trade commissioners. There is a reduction of $15,000 for exhibitions and publicity; a reduction of $5,900 in the Weights and Measures branch; $6,330 in the Gas and Electricity branch; and $50,000 through printing now being done elsewhere. This does not in any way affect civil government, and no person knows it better than my hon friend, who has been in charge of a department himself and has had considerable experience in parliament.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It strikes me that the reductions in all the services my hon. friend has just enumerated must mean less work than there was to do formerly with a larger expenditure. When the expenditure was greater and there was more work to do, more clerical assistance would of necessity be required—more men to do the work. I think it is quite clear from these estimates that there is going to be a considerable reduction in the work of the department. Then why add forty or fifty to the staff of a department to do less work? Let me put to my hon. friend the case of a business man doing a business this year entailing an expenditure of $3,000,000. He has his staff and does the work satisfactorily with the number he has. Next year he is going to do a business of $2,500,000. Do you think he is going to add fifty clerks to his staff to do a less amount of business? It strikes me as too obvious for argument that with a smaller expenditure and less departmental activity, the department should get along at least with the same staff it had last year. Does not that seem reasonable? Instead of that the minister proposes a large increase in the staff and an additional expenditure of $50,000 to pay for it. It may be that he has been loaded down in his department with other services he did not have last year, but I doubt very much if there is any saving shown in these other departments from which his additional staff has come. I have not looked into the estimates and I cannot say as to that, but my experience of nearly thirty years in this House has been that the cost of civil government has gone up under every government. I do not believe there ever was a time when the need for retrenchment was as great as it is to-day, and surely it is not a matter for censure that one should point out this substantial increase which the government proposes for the coming year when we cannot afford the money, when every dollar of the increase has to be met by taxation of the people. What I protest against not only in the Department of Trade and Commerce but in all the departments of the government is that the temporary staffs are being carried on. The war staffs are certainly being reduced from year to year, but the temporary staffs of the department still exist and they are paid out of special votes in the case of almost every department. They have them there and year by year they get them wedged in as permanents, whether by the aid of the Civil Service Commission or in defiance of that body I cannot say, but the result is seen in the estimates brought down to the House. There is an aggregate increase of—I said $250,000—but it is an increase of $265,000, in the cost of the clerical work, practically, of the government of Canada.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister tell us how many temporary employees in the department have been placed on the permanent staff?

Mr. ROBB: They have not been put in yet. We cannot put them in until this vote goes through.

Mr. MANION: What are the details?

Mr. ROBB: The statutory increases amount to $16,000, and there are 45 to be transferred.

Mr. MANION: From temporary to permanent positions?

Mr. ROBB: Yes; some of them are transferred from other departments.

Mr. MANION: I notice that the minister mentioned the Department of Labour. I looked up the appropriations for that department and I found there had been a decrease in the staff of about 27; that is about 20 less than the increase in the department. I should like to say just one word about the Statistical branch. It is now, and has been for some years—two or three years I think—entirely in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. ROBB: Since 1918—no, prior to that. In 1918 there was an act passed transferring the statistics of every department to the Dominion bureau.

Mr. MANION: I do not recollect the exact date but I knew it was back about that time. I simply wish to say this: The Bureau of Statistics, since that unity has been brought about, is a department which is of great use, not only to the members of this House but to the people of the country in general. I remember that when I came into this House first, about 1917, if you wished to obtain any statistics regarding minerals, for example, or grain, or any other department of government, you would ring up the department, perhaps the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, or some other department. You would probably be referred from the one to the other and from the other back to the one. I remember on one occasion being referred by telephone to seven or eight different offices when I tried to get certain details. At the present time one can ring up or write to the Bureau of Statistics and get—on most occasions, and on most subjects concerned with government—the figures or statistics which one desires, and I have yet to see them pointed out as given in a mistaken way. I just wished to put myself on record as expressing on my own behalf alone, but I am sure it is the opinion of many in this House, an appreciation of the work that is being done by the Bureau of Statistics under Mr. Coats. I believe that once in a while—in the Civil Service as in other branches of life—a few words of commendation where they are well deserved, as they certainly are in the case of the Bureau of Statistics, are decidely in place.

Mr. ANDERSON: I would like to ask the minister how many of the forty-five employees referred to have been transferred from the Department of Labour?

Mr. ROBB: Nine.

Mr. ANDERSON: From what departments were they transferred?

Mr. ROBB: I could not give that information. I should say that nine is the total number that were transferred. I think most of them came from the Labour department, but some of them may have been transferred from the Forestry branch.

Mr. ANDERSON: I notice a reference to "office appliance operators". What work do these employees do?

Mr. ROBB: They are the men who run the multigraph machines in the Statistical department and other branches.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the minister what other items in the Department of Trade and Commerce remain to be dealt with? Has he nearly finished the estimates of that department?

Mr. ROBB: No, there are some steamship subsidies yet to be dealt with.

Mr. MANION: I would like to point out that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), as the minister knows, having been formerly Minister of Trade and Commerce, usually looks after those estimates in the interest of hon. members on this side. The hon. gentleman is not in the chamber to-night, unfortunately he is engaged elsewhere, and I would like to have these items held over. I would prefer if the minister would do that until the hon. member is able to be present I do not know that there is any special matter that he wishes to take up, but I should like the minister to hold these votes over for the time being.

Mr. ROBB: I would like to get them cleaned up but I will say this: I did defer other estimates to suit the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, my immediate predecessor, and it is quite likely there will be some small items in the supplementaries. I will allow the hon. member for Vancouver Centre wide discussion on those.

Mr. MANION: If the minister agrees that on some other item we may come back to these particular appropriations, if we wish for further details, I think as far as we are concerned we will be satisfied.

Mr. ROBB: Anything you wish.

Patent and Copyright—salaries, $175,865; contingencies, $35,000.

Mr. ROBB: There is no change in the number of employees, but there is a slight increase in the amount for salaries owing entirely to reclassification.

Item agreed to.

Canada Grain Act—additional amount required, $200,000.

Mr. MANION: I should like to suggest to the minister that this is a large item to be taken at this late hour, and that as there is likely to be some discussion it had better be left over.

Mr. ROBB: I do not object strenuously to letting it stand but I will explain this: The Board of Grain Commissioners estimated the amount required last year at $1,342,869. It was reduced in the department some $42,000. There were some accrued payments for the previous year, 1921-22, amounting to $50,000 and there were certain increases of salary endorsed by the commissioners. Furthermore we had an additional expenditure owing to having to handle last year almost the largest crop in our history. That explains the increased amount required. The elevators administered by the Board of Grain Commissioners are a paying and not a losing proposition, and this is the estimate which has been prepared by the board and sent down to us.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What effect would the possible establishment of a wheat board have on this matter?

Mr. ROBB: None whatever. We would administer this act just the same.

Mr. MANION: There have been some changes in the personnel of the grain commission. Would the minister tell the House what changes have been made and what appointments have been made since last year?

Mr. ROBB: The Board of Grain Commissioners are appointed for a period of ten years. The term of Mr. Staples, one of the commissioners, expired last year, and the government appointed in his place Mr. Mat Snow, a well-known western gentleman. Then Mr. Jones resigned voluntarily. His time was up this year, and, incidentally, I want to pay a tribute to Mr. Jones whom I regarded as a man who thoroughly understood the grain business, but he voluntarily retired and the government appointed to replace him Mr. Robinson, who had been associated for a number of years with the Saskatchewan Co-Operative Elevator Company. Mr. Hetherington is now replacing Mr. Jones as general manager. Previous to that one of the commissioners, Mr. Jones, was manager of the system. Mr. Hetherington, who had been for many years secretary, is now general manager. I am not sure who succeeded Mr. Hetherington as secretary. It was on the recommendation of the commissioners, and Mr. Leslie Boyd still remains the chairman.

Mr. MANION: Any present indication of making any more changes?

Mr. ROBB: Not the least whatever.

Mr. MANION: I am very well acquainted with Mr. Jones, and I agree with the minister that his retirement is a great loss to the board because he is a very able man. I wish to ask the minister a question in regard to the different elevators that the Board of Grain Commissioners are handling for his department. There is one at Port Arthur and one, I think, at Saskatoon. Will he give us the details as to where they are and the business done at the present time?

M. ROBB: I have not the records before me as to the details of the business they are doing. In addition to those mentioned by my hon. friend, there is an internal terminal elevator at Moose Jaw, one in Saskatoon, and there are also elevators at Vancouver and at Calgary. The elevator at Vancouver has been putting through a lot of grain this season. Indeed, last year we put more grain through that elevator in Vancouver than during all the years since its construction, and this year I think we will put through more than twice as much as we put through last year. We were operating it and using the Calgary elevator as a reservoir, so that when the superintendent at Vancouver was able to see by the ships coming in, that he was going to empty his elevator in Vancouver, word would be sent down to Calgary to send on the reserves that were there, and in that way we have been able to handle the crop with satisfaction.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister any information as to the amount of grain going through the government elevators at Port Arthur, Saskatoon and Vancouver?

Mr. ROBB: I have it here:

	1920-21	1921-22
Port Arthur..	13,439,586	14,018,826
Moose Jaw..	4,161,870	1,527,367
Saskatoon..	5,360,152	5,254,197
Calgary..	4,317,795	3,138,319
Vancouver..	1,082,438	6,621,474

We have not the figures for the crop of the year we are in now.

Mr. MANION: In most of the elevators except the Vancouver elevator, and I think the Port Arthur elevator, there has been a decrease.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, last year.

Mr. MANION: With the large crop from the prairie provinces, why was there a decrease?

Mr. ROBB: These figures are for the crop of the previous year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister informed the House that this propostiion was self-sustaining. Can he tell us the revenue and to what account the money went?

Mr. ROBB: Would the hon. member like to go back several years?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, just two years.

Mr. ROBB: In 1921-22 the revenue was $1,937,325.02 and the expenditure $1,235,000, leaving a surplus of $702,325.02. In 1922-23, up to February 28th—that is part of this year's crop, the revenue was $2,080,348.75 and the expenditure $1,231,667.80 leaving a surplus $1,848,680.95.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That goes into the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. MILLAR: From a rumour circulating some few years ago, which seemed to me to be very well founded, it appeared to me the department might suffer a loss in regard to a carload of grain shipped to the United States, passing out of the mixing elevator. The purchaser in the United States refused to receive the grain on the ground that it was not up to grade. The department had it inspected at Buffalo, and I believe by the order of the grain commissioners it was stored at Buffalo, and the new sample being graded by the inspector, he found the grade No. 3 and 4 tough, where the cargo was in fact graded out at No. 3. I understood the ground taken by the mixing elevator was that they had received from the government a regular certificate, and that they were therefore, not liable for any loss because the grain was not up to the mark. The purchaser took the stand that he would not accept it, and I understood there was some good reason to believe the loss might possibly fall on the department. Could the minister give us any information as to whether that matter is settled or how it stands?

Mr. ROBB: No, there has been no record of any claim coming in to the government. My recollection is that the matter was adjusted. I am glad my hon. friend has mentioned that, because it did not occur to me when I was answering some other questions. This complaint of a shipment of grain going out from Fort William to Buffalo was brought to my attention some time last summer. I ordered an investigation, and as a result of that, I instructed the commissioners to fire two of the employees who were grain inspectors and who, we had reason to believe, had, to say the least, neglected their duties. This had a wholesome effect on the others. I have heard of no complaint since then.

Mr. MILLAR: I am glad to hear that. I do not know whether the minister will have this information or not. Some years ago there was a heavy loss owing to the difference in weights between the elevator at Fort William and the transfer elevators at Owen Sound, Collingwood and other places, of about 50,000 bushels a year. Changes were put into effect in 1908 which remedied that matter, and for a year or two conditions were all right. I was wondering whether that remedy has been effective up to the present time or not. Can the minister state whether there is any discrepancy or not in the weights of grain shipments as they arrive at Owen Sound, Collingwood, Port Elgin and, in fact, Buffalo as well?

Mr. ROBB: There are very few complaints coming to the department now as regards either inspection or weight. We recently had some complaints from overseas regarding the weight of a cargo of grain shipped out of Montreal. We are going to send a couple of men over there. We will send one man from the inspection department, and I think the Montreal Harbour Commissioners are going to send a man to look into this. We want to satisfy our customers on the other side that we in Canada have every desire to see that business is done right, upon a fair basis. As my hon. friend knows, the grain is weighed out in this country in large draughts; on the other side it is weighed in smaller draughts. Then there is a question as to what may have happened to some of this cargo in transit. The boat may have sprung a leak. There may have been some wet grain in the bottom, dumped over. We are going to look into this matter in an endeavour to satisfy the claim on the other side.

Mr. ANDERSON: Are there any elevators in Ontario under the control of the department?

Mr. ROBB: No. The grain commissioners have a certain supervision over these elevators; but we do not own any in Ontario.

Mr. ANDERSON: There is one at Port Colborne.

Mr. ROBB: That is under the Railway department.

Mr. ANDERSON: Has the department not been requested by some interests in Ontario to establish an elevator?

Mr. ROBB: We have from time to time such requests from all parts of the country, where people imagine an elevator would be a very nice proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON: Within the last year?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, we had a request from Ontario.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the total value, roughly, of these elevators, including plant and equipment?

Mr. ROBB: In my judgment, these elevators could not be built to-day for their original cost. The capital cost of the Port Arthur house is $1,415,336.31; of the Saskatchewan elevator, $1,134,745.73; of the Moose Jaw elevator $1,322,725.50. Of the three houses I have cited, the capacity is 3,250,000 bushels, 3,500,000 bushels, and 3,500,000 bushels respectively. There is at Calgary a smaller house with a capacity of 2,500,000 bushels and costing $884,564.35. The house at Vancouver, with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels, cost $837,351.71. The total capital investment is $5,594,723.60, for a capacity of 14,000,000 bushels.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The minister, I think, said that there was no write-off for depreciation for buildings or plant.

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If a proper depreciation were set up against this capital invested, and if the profits were only as stated by the minister, namely, as I recall, $700,000 one year, and $800,000 last year, this would mean that this business is not being very profitably carried on.

Mr. ROBB: The accountant at Fort William has prepared a statement which has been sent here; but I cannot find any statement of interest, although he has an item of $294,000 under profit and loss, which might be attributed to interest. That shows a percentage of profit on the capital investment in plant in the Port Arthur house of almost 5·32 per cent.

Mr. CHURCH: As this is an elevator appropriation, the minister might tell the committee what has been done since last session regarding the promise made then by the minister in answer to a question asked on this side of the House as to a terminal elevator for central and western Ontario. A few years ago there waited upon the government a deputation consisting of representatives of, I might say, all the farming and business interests of central and western Ontario. I understand the policy in relation to elevators is that there shall be equality of treatment; that where a government elevator is erected in the West, an elevator shall be erected in Ontario. A memorandum was presented by a deputation of 200 people including the United Farmers of Ontario, the Grain Growers of the province, the late Lieutenant Governor Clarke of Ontario, Mr. Manning Doherty, the harbour commissioners of five or six very important harbours, representing that Ontario had been discriminated against as regards a terminal elevator to serve the farmers of that province. Ontario is suffering under a handicap in the matter of transportation. There are many flag stations where there are no elevators, and the United Farmers of Ontario and the harbour commissioners of Toronto in a very elaborate memorial which I read last session, pointed out to the government the necessity of such a terminal elevator in central Ontario. This is very much needed from the farmer's standpoint, because he has no place to take his grain crop, and he loses a good deal of the price, his time and so forth. The need of such an elevator is, indeed, apparent to everybody. Years ago, in my city there were a number of elevators on the water front, but now we have none. There is an elevator at Port Colborne and one at Fort William, and I agree with the minister that there is no need for another elevator for through-going crop. But this elevator is not for through crops going to the Old Country via Buffalo. The need in Ontario is a local one; the farmer needs some elevator where he can put his crop in the winter and leave it until such time as water-going traffic can take it to its proper destination. A return brought down to the House some time ago showed that there are a great many elevators in the West. Well, the people are not objecting to that. Rather, they are encouraging the government to put up these elevators; and the minister since taking office has been active in many branches of his department. I commend him as far as this goes. But so far as Ontario is concerned I want to urge upon him the great necessity that exists for terminal elevators for the farmers of this province. The deputation that waited upon a former government was drawn from Peterborough, Stratford and from the whole northern division of the Grand Trunk, as well as from central and western Ontario. This large deputation waited upon Sir Thomas White, but the government of that day could not see its way, owing to the war, to take practical action in the matter. They admitted the necessity there was for an elevator of this description but they attributed their inability to do anything to the financial stress of the time. A hundred and twenty farmers' organizations petitioned the government, and I shall not read the memo to-night, because the minister has a copy of it. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) asked the minister last session to give this matter his consideration and the minister promised that during the recess he would look into it. The question was discussed the other day in the Ontario legislature, but it was found that that body could do nothing in the premises, because the matter was a federal one. Now, I may say that while the United Farmers of Ontario have no particular love for the city I come from, nevertheless they recommend that the elevator be established in Toronto. I am not asking at this moment that this recommendation be acted upon; all I ask is that an elevator be established somewhere in the province to meet the economic and transportation necessities of the farmers of Ontario. It is not so much the site of the elevator that matters; what is important is that one be established. We want a terminal elevator for the small farmer so that he may have somewhere to take his crop for the winter months, because as things stand at present he has no such facilities. I know that the minister is sympathetically disposed to this question and while I do not want to delay the committee on this item to-night, I hope that the minister will give us an assurance that he will take steps to meet the representations that have been made by the farmers of Ontario. I believe he will be waited upon by another deputation and I trust that he will give them a chance to put their case plainly before him. I think it is in the interests of the country that he should make a declaration of policy with regard to the desirability of establishing this terminal elevator on lake Ontario or lake Erie for central and western Ontario. This is an important matter and I sincerely trust that the minister will give it his most careful consideration.

Mr. ROBB: While I am always glad to meet a deputation from Ontario and Toronto particularly, I think I would rather go up to Toronto and look into the matter there. I have been promising my hon. friend a long time to go there, and I think I can assure him now that before next session I will go to that city and look the thing over. I might point out that the way freights are arranged in this country, working west to east, there is considerable elevator capacity at Depot Harbour, Owen Sound, Midland, Goderich, Port Huron, Port Credit and Port Colborne. I am inclined to think there is need of more capacity at Port Colborne. I would point out to my hon. friend, however, that while there is considerable elevator capacity up there, perhaps not enough for their requirements, there are at Kingston two very large houses in addition to one at Prescott, which were practically idle during the last few years. However, I renew my promise to the hon. member to visit Toronto.

Mr. MILLAR: The minister, having had a conference with the Grain Commissioners in the last few weeks, said that some complaints were made during the year with regard to screenings. Possibly the point may have been raised in the course of the conference, and the minister may be able to give us information. The point I refer to is this. The farmers were in many cases paid very small amounts, sometimes even so low as 50 cents or $1 a ton for screenings of excellent quality. I am not referring to screenings that are so cheap to-day that they are thrown into the lake. I know there is a quantity of that class of screenings. I am referring, however, to valuable screenings; what I have in mind particularly is white cleaned oats. This should have been worth $12 or $15 a ton, but the farmer received only $1 a ton for it. If that point arose during the conference perhaps the minister can give us some information in reference to it.

Mr. ROBB: We discussed that, and the Board of Grain Commissioners are now preparing for me a complete statement. I intend that that shall be one of the questions to be inquired into during the summer.

Mr. MANION: I was going to mention something about screenings myself when my hon. friend (Mr. Millar) brought up the point. I was pleased to hear him refer to it because there has been a good deal of dissussion at the head of the lakes with reference to that question. As the minister knows, both the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and myself have asked questions regarding the disposal of screenings because charges have been made that the screenings have not been turned back in the condition in which they should be. In the old days before the amendment to the Grain Act, the overages were mixed up with the question of screenings, and they are yet to a certain extent. But the main charge seems to be that instead of people getting back the screenings as they should really get them, in their original condition, they receive, as a matter of fact, refuse screenings. I am not making a positive statement of fact, but this charge appears in the press occasionally, and one hears it on the street too; and sometimes as a member of the constituency I get letters in reference to the question. It is stated that when anyone asks for screenings he simply gets refuse screenings, instead of the original screenings which are worth a great deal more. The matter is very much as the hon. member has stated. I asked some questions of the minister, by correspondence and on the order paper, regarding this matter with a view to obtaining further information. At present the question seems to be in a rather hazy state. I do not say that as a criticism of the Board of Grain Commissioners, because I believe they are an able body who are trying to carry out their duties as well as they can. But in the past the question of screenings and dockage has been allowed to drift along, and now there seems to be coming from the prairie provinces, as well as from some dealers at the head of the lakes, who wish to buy screenings, the charge that they cannot get what they are entitled to receive. I would suggest to the minister therefore that it would be a good idea to have the whole question thoroughly investigated. I might mention a concrete circumstance in reference to this matter. A man named Harvey from one of the prairie provinces came to the head of the lakes about a year and a half ago bringing in unfinished sheep which he fed there on screenings. He brought them in very ordinary selling condition and he fed them during the winter on screenings he obtained almost for nothing, because the refuse screenings at that time were really used for fuel in a number of the business blocks of the city. I have forgotten how many sheep he had, but I think the number was around 10,000; and he fed them on the refuse screenings which he got practically for a song. He sold those sheep in the spring very much fattened and in excellent shape for market, and he made a very profitable deal in the transaction. This winter he has increased the number of the sheep he is feeding there, and although I cannot give the exact figure, I think it is around 20,000. This winter, although he has had to pay a higher price for these refuse screenings, he is fattening a large number of sheep in the same way as he did last winter. So it shows the possibilities for the future from the live stock standpoint, which is probably one of the most important branches of agriculture not only in my section of the country—in which naturally I am interested—but throughout the whole Dominion. Formerly these refuse screenings were of no value to the elevator people and were taken out and dumped into the lake. According to replies given by the minister to questions placed on the order paper, and to letters written by myself, the Board of Grain Commissioners claim that the elevator companies have been losing money in handling these screenings. Then it is claimed in rebuttal by one of the dealers at the head of the lakes in letters to me and to other members in this House—at least I assume so from some of the questions put on the order paper—that if he could get these screenings at a fair price he could make a very fine stock feed out of them. And the fact that last winter so many sheep were fattened simply on the refuse screenings shows that they contain very good feed for stock.

Mr. MILLAR: Could the hon. gentleman tell us whether the owners of those sheep sustained any loss by reason of some of their stock being attacked by disease, said to be due to their being fed on these screenings?

Mr. MANION: No. I know the gentleman quite well and his first lot were a great success. I believe this winter—I have only a hazy recollection of it—some disease did develop, but it had nothing to do with the feeding. The first winter he fattened ten thousand sheep very successfully with very little shelter—only an old plant which had been built for another purpose; but this winter I am not sure that he has any shelter at all for his sheep, and the last I heard they promised to be as successful a lot as he fattened the previous winter. It was a very unexpected result, and if my hon. friends on my left do not know about it I imagine they will be more interested in the success of the experiment than any other hon. members. Mr. Harvey is the gentleman who has made such a success in the use of these screenings for the fattening of sheep. Therefore, this whole question of screenings might very well be thoroughly looked into not only from the standpoint of the fattening of sheep, but in relation to stock feeding generally. I might add that I have been told someone is going to bring in a number of cattle next winter to fatten on these refuse screenings and counts on having the same success as Mr. Harvey has had with sheep. But there is also the phase of the question which my hon. friends to the left have brought up on several occasions this session, namely, that the grain trade was not treating the wheat growers fairly. The remarks of my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Millar) show that he at least is thinking of that phase. From what I have read in the press many farmers feel that they have not been able to get back, even from the government elevators at Saskatoon and other points, the screenings to which they are entitled. I read an article recently in a newspaper in which a farmer stated that he had shipped a car of wheat from one of the prairie provinces to Vancouver, and that by the time the car reached Vancouver he had lost money on the shipment owing to the freight he had to pay on the dockage. He claimed—and he is supported by others—that if he had got back what was coming to him—I do not say this positively for I am not a grain man, but I have heard it said at different times by experienced grain men—that if he had got back the broken wheat and various other grains and seeds in the screenings of value as feed he would have been in a position to gain very markedly on his shipment. I only refer to that in passing. My hon. friends to my left probably are very much more familiar with the question than I am and will be able to judge as to the correctness of the claim, but I know it has been very much discussed among grain men at the head of the lakes.

I repeat, I think the minister would do well to have the whole question investigated, because I do not think it is the policy of those in charge of the government elevators to treat the farmers of the West unfairly. Certainly those elevators were not only built for the convenience of the western farmers, but also for another purpose—that of acting as a check upon the privately owned elevators. In the past at least there have been vast amounts of overages which were very, very valuable in nearly all the elevators, including those operated by the government. So the minister has within his power an opportunity, through the Board of Grain Commissioners—and I am sure he will be glad to take advantage of it—to look into this whole question and see that justice is done. That is all I am asking. I have no interest whatever in any shape, manner or form in the grain business except as a citizen of this country, but I am slightly familiar with it as a resident at the head of the lakes where we have such immense elevator capacity.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. STEVENS: Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, no. The minister was to give us an answer.

Mr. ROBB: May I repeat again that it will be a subject for inquiry. Already the Board of Grain Commissioners have suggested to Mr. Clark of the Department of Agriculture, who has charge of the administration of the Stock Feeds Act, that he should go up to Fort William and ascertain the real value of these screenings.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish the minister would be good enough to refer the observations made by my hon. friend for Fort William (Mr. Manion) and those I am about to make now to whatever body is going to consider this matter. The crux of the screenings problem was I think brought up in a question asked a few weeks ago by one of the members from Manitoba—I have forgotten his riding. It is so difficult sometimes to approach a question of this kind without appearing to be more or less viciously attacking the elevator interests, and therefore I should like to make it perfectly clear that that is not my object at the moment. There is a statement of fact, however, which I desire to make, and I am sure it cannot be gainsaid. It is this, that when a car of wheat is first cleaned dockage is made because of the presence of a certain percentage of dirt—chaff, seeds and so forth. In that first dockage there is a large proportion of broken wheat, oats, buckwheat, flaxseed and purposes. That belongs rightly to the other grains that are very valuable for feed farmer, and he should get full value for it.

That fact, I think, is admitted, and this is what I want my hon. friends to my left to get as well: That it is not the screenings that are sold at $1.50 a ton that was referred to the other day. The screenings sold for $1.50 a ton is the residue after this first screenings has been put through a second process and all the valuable wheat, oats, buckwheat, flaxseed and other grains taken out. Then the residue, weed seeds, chaff and stuff of that character is sold for $1.50 a ton. The point I want to make is this: There is no justification for any company doing that, retaining the full value of the broken wheat and such like grains taken out of the first screenings. That is the justifiable complaint that my hon. friends to my left and the farmers they represent in the West have. I pointed out in 1919 and in 1920 in the House, as well as on other occasions, that it was an injustice to the farmer. It was a loss of valuable grains which belonged to him, and he had a right to complain. I think that we ought to find some way, and we had this in mind a little over a year ago when the other commission was working upon this, of so adjusting the regulations and controlling the terminal elevators that the farmer would get the full value of these screenings.

There is another feature. According to the law, when a dockage is made the shipper or farmer gets the value or warehouse receipt for the wheat less the dockage. When the dockage is ascertained the shipper is supposed to get credit for that. Now through ignorance very frequently, and when I say ignorance I mean simply ignorance of his rights, the shipper does not claim that credit, and it has not been made obligatory upon the elevator actually to make the entry and advise him of it. In other words, a great many elevators take the stand; It is there, if they like to claim it, well and good. But if they do not know enough to claim it they do not get it. That is one complaint the farmers have which should be corrected by regulation.

Then next is this, and it is even more important. I have already cited the process of a second cleaning. What the shipper or the farmer is entitled to from the elevator is the full value of the screenings from the first cleaning, less, of course, the charges for cleaning, which charges are fixed by the schedule. He is entitled to the full value, but he does not get it. That is the point I want to make, and I would suggest that these references of mine, perhaps imperfectly made to-night, should be brought to the attention of whoever is going to investigate the matter and a serious effort be made to adjust that problem.

Mr. ROBB: Does the complaint apply only to the government elevators? Does it not apply also to the Saskatchewan Elevator Company?

Mr. STEVENS: To all elevators. I will speak with absolute positiveness up to 1919. It included all elevators at the head of the lakes up to that time. I cannot speak with the same positiveness since, because since 1920 I have not personally checked up the figures, but I know that the conditions are the same; there has been no change. I asked some questions in the House the other day. I am not in a position nor do I wish to weary the House with any detailed analysis of these questions and answers—

Mr. MILLAR: The remarks my hon. friend has just made do not apply to the mixing elevators, do they?

Mr. STEVENS: No, because the mixing elevator must own its grain. It purchases it outright. I am referring to the public terminal elevators. I could name them. I have a list, but my hon. friend knows them. It is practically all the elevators at the head of the lakes, those known as public terminal elevators operating under license from the Grain Commission. The mixing or private elevator purchases its grain outright, and of course once in full possession of it, it can do what it likes with it. I do not want my hon. friend to think for a moment I am discussing now the question of whether it is advisable to permit mixing. I know the problem and would be prepared to discuss it, but I do not think it is germane to this question.

I asked certain questions which will be found on Hansard on page 1661. One was this:

> What is the information as applied to public terminal elevators and the government elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur:—(a) Total amount of wheat scalpings shipped from same: (b) total amount of oats scalpings shipped from same.

The answer to that is this, and I want to submit to the minister that I am not particularly complaining about the answer other than to say that I feel that more accurate information ought to be in the possession of the commission or the department:

> The board is unable to furnish the amount of wheat or oat scalpings shipped or received as they are included in the records of the board as elevator scalpings. In consequence no separate record is available showing the composition or quantities of either wheat or oat scalpings handled by terminal elevators.

Frankly I question the correctness of the answer. If it is correct, I would suggest that some record be kept of these important matters? I also asked this question:

> (c) Total amount of second recleaned scalpings shipped from same.

To which the answer was:

> From public terminal elevators, 3,705 tons; from government elevators, 633 tons.

From further answers it will be noted that there were 7,000 tons and 44,000 tons, showing that there is a very large quantity of these screenings and scalpings dealt with by the elevators.

What I am going to say now is not assertive; I am not in a position to assert, and yet I am fully satisfied in my own mind that it is the case. The cream or the valuable grain seeds in these screenings is appropriated by the elevator companies, and pooled by them and shipped to Minneapolis. I wish the minister would note what I say in that regard. I want just simply to assert that as in my opinion correct, without having under my hand proof. The minister will find if he will request his commission to make an investigation that what I say is true. If it is true, then it is not a square deal to the shipper; that is all there is to it.

Let me turn to another phase of this elevator question, and again I do not advance what I am going to say in the way of an attack on the elevator companies so much as an argument on the question of system. Under the Grain Act the grain commissioners fix a charge for the use of the elevators—for the elevating of the grain, for fifteen days storage, and so forth. Now, under the figures that I gave this House, over a period of years, it was shown that the elevators got a return on capital invested of about 8 per cent without taking into consideration either overages or screenings. Plus screenings, and leaving out overages, their return amounted to about 13 per cent. Taking an average through, including overages, their return ran into enormous sums which varied and went as high as 75 or 80 per cent—very high earnings. Now, what I am getting at is this: Those screenings did not properly, in equity, belong to the elevators. They may by the distortion of the law, perhaps, establish an ownership; but I want to say that in the spirit and intent of the law, and in equity, they did not properly belong to them. That being the case, I am perfectly sure of my ground in that regard, what I am getting at is this: If the elevator companies can show that if they are deprived of the revenue from screenings they cannot earn what is a reasonable return, then it is the duty of the Grain Commissioners to fix their fees so that they can earn a reasonable return. But I know this, that if you add the overages to the returns by fees their earnings are not only sufficient but very very large. I argued in 1919 and 1920, and I argue to-night, that the duty of the grain board is to fix the elevator fees at a figure that will give to the elevators a proper return for the services they render, whatever that may be decided upon; but in so far as the overages and the screenings are concerned, they should not be permitted to become a part of the revenue of the elevator companies.

Mr. BROWN: If I understand rightly there was an amendment to the Grain Act that allowed the government to appropriate all over a certain percentage of the overages. Is that being carried out?

Mr. STEVENS: As far as I know it is.

Mr. BROWN: Then, of course, the overages cannot now be anything like they were in former days.

Mr. STEVENS: I am glad my hon. friend—

Mr. ROBB: Before my hon. friend deals with that, I should like to mention that the government owns but a very limited percentage of the storage at Fort William and Port Arthur; there is a large part of it owned by the men who ship grain there from co-operative companies.

Mr. STEVENS: I want the minister to realize that I am not directing this as against government operation at all but against the system.

Mr. ROBB: The elevator system?

Mr. STEVENS: Against the whole elevator system, the control and handling of grain at the head of the lakes. In answer to my hon. friend for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) I may say that in 1919 I brought to the attention of the House this frightful abuse of privilege, and I showed by figures definitely how these overages were made up and the enormous quantity. I showed, I think, beyond contradiction—in fact the figures were never questioned—that something over $15,000,000 worth of grain in the preceding few years had been appropriated at that time contrary to the act. I took the stand at that time that I take to-night—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Is that in overages?

Mr. STEVENS: In overages. I took the stand then, and I take it to-night, that we as a parliament should never have allowed the elevators to retain those overages. I am aware the elevators will say, "Oh, we are making a shortage and we require overages to make up the shortages." But the figures I gave were the net figures, after allowing them to cover their shortage. As a matter of fact, the amount of shortage returned is only a modicum of the amount of overage that yearly accrues, and if the House, or any member interested, will take the two, from 1912 down to the present time, the last 11 years, I venture to say the shortage will not amount to two per cent of the overages so that it is a negligible quantity. Well, I argued that those overages should not be allowed to be retained by the elevator companies, and I showed at that time that the permission to retain them was in itself an inducement to create the overages—

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: That was the crux of the whole business, and that was why I sought to have the law, as it was then, observed, because according to the law they were not permitted to have them. However, in 1919 the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), Mr. Maharg, then member for Maple Creek, Mr. Reid, then member for Mackenzie, and some other hon. gentlemen questioned the advisability of the stand I took and they attacked me. Well, I am of rather a forgiving and merciful nature; I desire to forget those things. Anyway, they took exception to my stand and they made this declaration: They said that speaking for the farmers of the prairies they felt there was no particular abuse in that regard, and they suggested that one-half of one per cent should be permitted to the elevator companies. Well, that did not seem very much and when one says it quickly, without giving it any thought, one-half of one per cent sounds a pretty small quantity. But now what do we find? We find this: Not only do they retain one-half of one per cent, but there is an impression that they do something else. The one-half of one per cent has no basis in law or in equity; it is simply an arbitrary figure fixed; there was no logic in fixing it and no reason; there were no previous figures on which it could be based; there were no lack of earnings on which it could be based—there was absolutely no basis for it at all but an arbitrary basis. Well, they not only take their one-half of one per cent, but there is a grave suspicion that some at least—I will not say all by any means—that some at least treat the excess, or much of the excess above the one-half of one per cent in other ways more devious and dark than visible, and the practice of dockage is going on to almost as great an extent, I think, as ever. Therefore, when this commission sits

I believe the main question for it to consider is the making of such regulations, and the providing of such fees, as will remove this abuse and remove the temptation—shall I say?—the inducement to extract from the grain at the head of the lakes this illegal tribute—or inequitable tribute because it is made legal by the amendment I referred to.

But that is not all. You have got to go further back than that. You have got to go back to the country elevator and you have also got to meet a similar situation there because, as anybody knows, the grain is frequently either bought outright there or, if it is not, a dockage is made on the country elevators. So that the commission has a very important duty to perform, and I believe this: It will be found, without very much trouble, that a substantial increase of the return can be given to the shipper; and after all when you take into consideration this great problem—and I think that most of us realize that it is one of the most gigantic problems we have facing the commercial life of this country—after all there is no short cut to the increase of value to the farmers of the plains; there is no mystic wand that you can wave to get them a higher price for their wheat. You are going to get a higher price for the farm products of the prairies by lowering the cost of moving the goods to the seaboard, more perhaps than in any other way, and it does not matter so much whether that is in the way of lowering freight rates, or lowering of handling charges, or what not, but what I do say is this: we have got to check every detail of the process, and it is quite an expensive process.

You take your grain from your threshing machine, you haul it to the country elevator, and there is a certain amount of leakage, shrinkage, and such like, and fees charged for. It is shipped then to the terminal, and there is a certain amount of dockage, transfer fees and so on. It comes down the lakes and is retransferred at Port Colborne or some other point, and there you have another charge. It goes to Montreal, and must be loaded from the ship, transferred to the elevator there, and after that, if you follow the thing through, and you have charges for warehouse receipts, bank interest discount and insurance, it will soon mount up to a measurable margin between what it brings in the ultimate market and what is received by the farmer. So that the duty of the department, and what we were trying to get at two years ago through the commission which was appointed, and what I hope we will accomplish by the next commission, is to so check over the process so that the actual cost will be reduced to a minimum, safeguarding the legitimate rights of those doing the business, but that every measure of waste that is now going on, every shrinkage, every dockage that is not absolutely essential shall be eliminated, and where any dockage is made that every pound that belongs to the farmer shall go back to him.

Take a carload of wheat of, say, 1,000 bushels; there is a 5 per cent dockage which means 50 bushels. Fifty bushels in comparison with 1,000 bushels is very small, but there is no reason why it should be ignored. Or, we will take it another way. Suppose that out of that 50 bushels there are 30 bushels of good grain—and I believe I am about right in suggesting that that is the case in most intsances—that 30 bushels of good grain may be cracked or it may be this, that and the other, it may not be No. 1, but it will be, at least available for first class feed. That is of value to the farmer. It might only represent a few dollars and may not seem a very serious matter, but when you add to that, as I have already pointed out, a little shrinkage here and a little overcharge there, it means a big thing in the long run and in the aggregate to the farming community.

Mr. LUCAS: In the hon. member's opinion are the elevators entitled to any dockage whatever?

Mr. STEVENS: The hour is getting late and I really do not want to pursue the subject. I will say no. In making that categorical answer, I am quite aware that I am opening up quite a field of discussion, but the point I have been endeavouring to make—and I think it ought to be the objective of any inquiry—is that the elevators are entitled to a fair remuneration for the services rendered. That remuneration ought to be fixed for them under the Grain Act. It is always a dangerous thing, I do not care what business it is, to permit any person to have the privilege of extracting a portion of a commodity handled as a part of his fees for handling it, whether it is wheat or any other commodity. It is not done in any other line. You do not let the railway company take part of the goods as a fee for transportation. We fix a rate for them to charge. We do not let a railway company take part of a carload of wheat to pay for possible losses on the trip. We say to them "You deliver that cargo at the head of the lakes, and deliver it at so much a hundred pounds." That is all they will get. I do not see why an elevator company, which is a common carrier, should have any different method of remuneration than a railway company, because both are common carriers.

Mr. FORKE: There is this difference, that there is a loss in weight in handling grain that must be provided for.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a loss in weight in transportation.

Mr. BROWN: You would not approve of the regulation of the grain commission whereby, in the case of a car carrying 3 per cent dockage, the elevator remunerates itself by taking the 3 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think it is fair to the shipper at all.

Mr. BROWN: It is a question of toll or money charge.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me put it in this way: if you ship a car load of goods to a man, it may be boots or shoes or anything else—let us forget wheat for a minute—and he has the privilege of dealing with those goods, and of retaining for himself a certain quantity, say 3 per cent, he is going to see that he gets the 3 per cent, if he can. If there is any possibility of him getting it, he is going to get it. If you eliminate that feature you eliminate the temptation to him of extracting anything.

Mr. ROBB: I shall direct the attention of the commission to the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): What is the status of the Manitoba litigation in regard to the Grain Act?

Mr. ROBB: It is before the court.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ROBB: There are some steamship subventions not yet voted, but perhaps we might adjourn now.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King, the House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.
