Information in connection with farming in this province. As many of your young men have gone west, the farming section has been depopulated, and there are many farms available that the old folk want to dispose of. We are hoping to influence agriculturists to come here and settle on these farms. From what we are able to find out, they are very good farms, and are more suitable than what could be obtained in the west, as they could be purchased for what it would cost to put up buildings alone out there, at the present price of lumber.

A crowd of boisterous youths assembled about the home of the bride and were making themselves generally offensive. The clergyman who performed the ceremony is an exponent of muscular Christianity and undertook to disperse the crowd. One man claims that he received a violent blow on the jaw from the fist of the minister against whom he laid information for assault. THE NEW CAMPANILE TO BE BUILT IN VENICE

Famous Old Structure to be Re-produced With Hidden Modern Bracing

(From the Tablet).
When it was decided to rebuild the fallen tower of the Campanile of St. Mark's an estimate of £72,000 was accepted for the entire work, of which some £40,000 had already been spent. It is now calculated that the total cost will be about £80,000, and ample provision has already been made for the whole of this sum. The total height of the Campanile from the level of the piazza to the top of the angel which will surmount it will be 225 feet 3 3/4 inches, of which up to the present moment 179 feet, or somewhat more than half, has been finished. That is to say the base and the shaft are now complete. There still remains to build the belfry proper; the dado ("die") or oblong slab immediately above it, the cupola, or pyramidal roof; and the acroterio, or pinnacle at the top of that again, which will support the angel that is to crown the whole edifice. It is calculated that if there are no more Byzantine questions such as delayed the reconstruction of the tower in the earlier stages, questions as to quality of brickwork and number of steps, the work can be inaugurated in from eighteen months to two years from now; that is, in the jubilee year of 1911.

By Our Formula

This medicine makes healthy and strong the "Little Soldiers" in your blood—those corpuscles that fight the disease germs constantly attacking you.

founded as late as 1810 during the days of "good Kaiser Franz" she escaped, as by a miracle, almost intact, and this bell, the largest of the quietest, the campanone or "big bell" as it is called, will be used again in the new belfry. The four other bells, all new, the gift of Pius X., who has thus once more shown his love for the city of which he was Patriarch, have been founded out of the metal of the old four. All the five are now standing side by side in order of size. Each of them bears the Latin inscription, "Sanctus Deus, Sanctus fortis, Sanctus et immortalis, miserere nobis. Verbum Caro factum est." Below this inscription and a dedication to the Trinity, which is common to all five, there is a line containing a dedication to the saint, who vary in each case. The second bell, the largest of those presented by the Pope, contains an exact reproduction of his official signature, together with the inscription in Latin recording the founding of the four new bells out of the old materials on April 24 of the present year, in the reign of Victor Emmanuel III.—whose name is thus harmoniously united. Vatican and Quirinal for once in unison for the second bell of St. Mark's. While the papal signature and inscription are confined to this bell alone, all four new bells bear the portrait and armorial bearing of the Venetian Pope, their donor, together with the date. Between them and five bells weight ten tons; the only absolutely new portion of them consists of the clappers.

BRIGGS' 23 THE PHARMACEUTICAL

TAKESPOISON ON EVE OF EXPOSURE
(New York American)
It was definitely established yesterday that William H. Purdy, manager of the Hotel Grosvenor, at No. 37 Fifth avenue, was found dying in his apartments in the hotel on Wednesday afternoon, committed suicide by taking cyanide of potassium, and that when he swallowed the drug he was aware that his employers, Arthur J. Baldwin and Leonard D. Baldwin, of the law firm of Baldwin, Griggs, & Baldwin, had made an investigation of his books which disclosed he was a defaulter for many thousands of dollars.
The exact amount could not be ascertained last night and will not be known until the chartered accountants have made complete analysis of the books. Arthur Baldwin last night was shown a press report to the effect that Purdy received a salary and emoluments about $10,000 a year.
"This is hardly true," said Mr. Baldwin, "but he was in receipt of a very comfortable income and from a cursory inspection of the books it looks as if he obtained much more than the sum named."
Mr. Baldwin said Purdy had come to him and his brother as a legacy from the Mutual Life Insurance Company about three and a half years ago following the insurance investigation, the trustees of the Mutual Life Insurance Company had concluded that the running of a high class hotel was hardly compatible with life insurance business, and it was disposed of to the brothers Baldwin. Purdy had been manager of the hotel under the Mutual Life, and when the change in ownership was effected, he continued in that capacity.
Mr. Baldwin said he had figured out that the apartments in the hotel occupied by Purdy and his wife were of the value of $2,500 a year, and that his table expenses amounted to another $1,200 a year. The amount of Purdy's salary Mr. Baldwin declined to state.
"When I say it cost the owners more than $10,000 a year for Mr. Purdy's services, in view of the investigation just made," he said, "some idea may be gained of the extent of the discrepancy in his accounts."
"What did he do with the money? I really do not know. It was the old, old story. He just lived beyond his means and when he was brought face to face with the inevitable he took refuge in death."
"Mrs. Purdy has our greatest sympathy. We believe absolutely that she knew nothing of her husband's business affairs."
"Purdy was summoned to our law offices at No. 27 Pine street on Tuesday, when the books were being gone over. It was practically an all-night session. He promised to return on Wednesday afternoon when the investigation was to be continued. He failed to appear and we learned from telephone calls that he was found dying in his apartments."
Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon performed the autopsy and reported that Purdy died from acute toxic gastritis, probably due to cyanide of potassium. Coroner Shady then gave a permit for the removal of the body, which was shipped to Troy N. Y., for interment.

MORALS OF YOUTH LOW
Alarming Conditions Shown By Y. M. C. A. Inquiry in Detroit—Girls as Much to Blame as Boys
Moral conditions among the youth of Detroit are described as exceedingly lax and are severely arraigned in a report made public by the National Y. M. C. A. committee appointed to investigate.
Detroit was selected as a typical American city where such a research would not only benefit local conditions, but aid the work in all other cities of the country. The committee does not consider Detroit either worse or better than any other American city in respect to conditions among the youth.
The result of the investigations can be summarized in the following conclusions:
Boys of wealthy parents are no better morally than those from poor homes. Middle class boys are better off than either.
Girls are in many cases as lacking in morality as are boys.
Newsboys and boys of the industrial districts patronize saloons and cheap theatres freely.
Girls at amusement parks lure boys to evil.
Suggestive and immoral pictures are displayed for the temptation of the boys who visit penny picture booths.
Poolrooms are a stepping stone to evil.
Fifty to 75 per cent. of high school boys are habitual smokers.
Indecent literature and pictures are circulated freely, especially among high school boys.
Boarding houses should be regulated.
Information was largely sought from those whose official or professional duties placed them in a position to have the largest possible knowledge of conditions. A limited amount of time was spent in the streets in the "red light" district observing those entering known disreputable houses, but no conversations or interviews were held there. Some calls were made at "rooms for rent" houses to discover their character.
The report says:
"Actual observation revealed the fact that of those entering disreputable houses only about 20 per cent. are from 14 to 17 years of age. It is significant, however, that fully 60 per cent. are between 18 and 21 years of age, making a total of more than 80 per cent. under 21 years."
"It is astonishing to discover that girls engaged regularly in many lines of employment, and who live at home meet boys of all ages in the public parks, amusement parks, dance halls, picnics, and on the streets. The boys implicated are of classes of society from those from the poorest homes to those of the most influential and wealthy. The free and easy intermingling of the boys and girls without proper training and supervision seems to lend itself to the development of these undesirable conditions."
Every first-class Hotel, Restaurant, Hospital and Mercantile establishment requires their attendants to be clothed in "wear CAPSAY RIBBON" HIBBY because they are restful to the feet and are safe and noiseless. All shoe makers and repair shops.

HALLEY'S COMET

By Frederic Campbell, Sc. D. President of the Department of Astronomy, Brooklyn Institute.

SUMMARY OF THIRD ARTICLE.

Tracking a Comet.—Comets originally visitors from abroad—"step-lively" or be arrested—Periodical comets adopted children—Did Neptune play the policeman to Halley's comet—Comets as airships—Where and when to look for this celestial prodigy—December leads it out and May covers it with splendor.

(Copyright, 1909, by Frederic Campbell.) It is one of the many triumphs of modern astronomy that it can track a comet, when out of sight, almost as well as when "blazing its way" among the stars before our very eyes. A comet is always found following one of three kinds of orbits, and three observations, on as many nights, are all that are usually needed to determine in the astronomer's mind, which orbit it is pursuing.

It is supposed that all comets come from a distance and were originally visitors. Where they came from and how they came to be no one knows. Counting through space, a comet comes toward us, constantly of our stars attraction, turns out of its course to salute the sovereign of the solar system, swings about that body and flies back into space. Commonly its path is found to be either a hyperbola or a parabola, each an open curve, the two sides of the curve of the former, constantly diverging; in the case of the latter converging into approaching parallel lines, but in neither case completing the curve. Such a comet will never return.

But a comet, entering the solar system on such a curve, "step lively" or have its curve altered. If, at the earth's distance of 93,000,000 miles from the sun, it is captured, it will be bound to the sun, and will return.

Bound and Gaged Her In spite of her terror Mme Steinheil watched the movements of the trio. They had attempted to gag her, filling her mouth with cotton, and had bound her to her bed, passing the cords around her hands and feet. They demanded where the money was kept by Mme. Steinheil indicated a bureau in her room and also pointed to her husband's room. They dealt her two blows on the head and she fainted, not regaining consciousness until daybreak.

It was Remy Couillard descending to his morning work who discovered the tragedy that had taken place. Mme Steinheil says she managed to work loose the cotton gag that had been in her mouth and called to the servant. He found his mistress lying on the bed bound, and he notified the police. She had been strangled so lightly that he was easily able to release her. In the adjoining room was Mme. Japy on her bed, with a cord around her neck. She had been strangled to death. And on the floor of the little office that was called M. Steinheil's work-room, he was found with his feet and legs bent under him and tied to his neck. He, too, had been strangled.

Mme. Steinheil lay moaning and apparently helpless on the bed, but it is now cited against her that, according to the servant, the telephone rang while he was still in the room and he was astonished to see her bound from her bed, reaching the telephone before he could get there, and answer the communication. Remy, frightened, gave the alarm calling in the neighbors and procuring the services of a doctor. Mme. Steinheil was attended by two physicians, Dr. Lefevre and Dr. Courtois-Suffit.

The testimony of these physicians will be most damaging for Mme. Steinheil, for they assert that, although she spoke of having been hit on the head, she bore no bruise whatever and the rest of her body showed no sign of any struggle. The cotton gag, placed under the microscope, showed no traces of saliva. Even her wrists and ankles were not marked by the cord, proving that it must have been tied very lightly indeed; there was only a slight redness which faded and disappeared even as the physicians were making their examination.

King of Savages Smitten Only a few months ago she sat in President Fallier's box during his official visit to the Grand Prix, and not long since the picturesque King Sisacathar's harnes that France was glad when theoyal guest left with his troupe of dancers. The "acte d'accusation" rehearses the case briefly. The painter Steinheil, a man who had been decorated with the Legion of Honor, lived with his wife and his wife's mother, Mme. Japy, at Nobis Impasse, Paris, a little street in the Latin quarter where several American painters, among them Seymour Thomas, the painter, had their studios. In May 30, 1908, the house was inhabited by Mme. Steinheil, her husband and mother, and a servant, Remy Couillard, who on the third floor in an attic. Mme. Steinheil had come to Paris from the "nry, her mother had also arrived from country intending to stop with another sister, but Mme. Steinheil persuaded her to remain at the house in the Impasse Romain. A few minutes after the clock struck eight, according to Mme. Steinheil, she can fix the hour, for she Trail of Ink Spots But just at the end of the left knee on the under side was a stain of ink, and later in the accusation, the prosecutor makes this ink spot play an important part, for the physicians observed on the floor small spots of ink that made a trail from the title office to Mme. Steinheil, where an ink bottle was upset and led to a closet where Mme. Steinheil kept her dresses. Dr. Balazard, the great expert, made a microscopic examination of these ink stains and pronounced that they were undoubtedly made by a dress that had been stained by ink, at the time while it was being worn. By this black trail the experts will seek to lead Mme. Steinheil to the guillotine, but, as for their plans, the evidence must remain circumstantial, for soon after her husband's death, and long before her arrest, Mme. Steinheil had all her garments dyed black. So that all hope of finding the fatal stain upon any garment belonging to her has disappeared forever.

The Hidden Life Gradually hidden parts of the woman's life were revealed. It was shown that she had from her girlhood led a wayward, nervous existence, continually entangled with men. It was shown, further, that with the knowledge of her husband's death, in Bellevue-Mendon, suburb of Paris, a villa known as the Vert-Logis where she received men of wealth and position. This house was rented in the name of Mariette Wolff, who variously posed as the aunt, chaperon and servant of Mme. Steinheil. Testimony is forthcoming, according to the public prosecutor, that when a visitor was to be received at the Vert-Logis, Mme. Steinheil would pack up and disappear, leaving Mme. Steinheil alone with Mariette Wolff. Mariette, it is alleged, had told all that there is to tell of the Vert-Logis, and it was a recital that will take its place among the chronicles of Boccaccio. There was constantly mentioned in connection with the place an "Aunt Lilly," whom Mme. Steinheil referred to as her relative she was visiting, using her name in many ways as a shield, but "Aunt Lilly" turns out to have no more substantial identity than Remy Camp's "Auntie."

Jeweller Punctures Story Then came the sensation, for when this time she appeared with apparently said that some two weeks after the murder Mme. Steinheil had brought him certain jewels to have dismounted, maturing him to place them in new settings and to melt the gold. These jewels, it was discovered, were the very ones she had described as having been stolen, having sent a list to a private detective agency in fulfillment of her intention to hide down her husband's murderer. Confronted by this, Mme. Steinheil admitted to the police that her story had been false, giving no other excuse than the morning; but with sunset at 6 p. m. we should still see the sun-star shining on till 11 at night. An electric message between the comet and the earth would at the same time require about as many hours for its transmission, regardless of the usual delays in office and delivery. When these comets are sighted it is seen in the direction of certain stars, and appears to be actually among them. It is, however, countless millions of miles nearer than they. Thus the comet's light now comes in only about half an hour because of its proximity; but Sirius, brightest of all the stars, seen in that same quarter of the heavens, requires eight and one-half years for its light to travel to the earth.

There is nothing in modern British politics to compare with the rapidity of Mr. Lloyd-George's advance into the central places in his party and government, says H. W. Massingham, editor of the London Nation. Mr. Chamberlain's career, with which Mr. George's is sometimes compared, contains nothing so dramatic and so significant, while the far slower developments of great party leaders like Gladstone and Disraeli seem tame in comparison. Both the political and the social conditions of Mr. George's sudden advent are remarkable. Thus far every one of our political leaders has come from the upper or the upper middle classes. Mr. George comes from neither. He is "lower middle" in descent, unblemished by the private fortune which Mr. Chamberlain enjoyed, and without the support of any organization, such as the Midland Caucus, which in behalf of the great Birmingham politician all but snatched the reins of power from Gladstone himself. Alone he has done it.

Four years ago his admission to the second rank of cabinet ministers seemed a proper reward for his brilliant criticism of the Conservative Education bill and his assaults on Mr. Chamberlain, full of wit and sprightly raillery. But though he at once succeeded at the Board of Trade, which his inventive, penetrative genius transported from one of the least fruitful of the most enterprising departments of government, he made no great figure in the cabinet. That body contained a majority of moderates, and Mr. George, and later on Mr. Churchill, formed the Radical minority. But he was powerful enough to claim on Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's death and with Lord Morley's strong sympathy, the historic office which Mr. Asquith relinquished and which offers the most usual stepping-stone to the premiership.

Not a Fanatic Not that he is a fanatic. He has been called a Socialist, but he is not. Primarily he is not a theorist at all. He is a campaigner, a man of action, whose intellect works through its vivid apprehension of popular needs and its instant power of adapting and assimilating fresh knowledge. It was a motor car ride through Germany which gave him his first idea of fitting the great German scheme of industrial insurance to British policy. His resourcefulness indeed yields him his most conspicuous power of handling political problems. It saved him during the serious differences on naval policy. It won him a complete victory in his struggle with the railway interests. When he met the railway magnates in conference before the Board of Trade, they were all prepared to demand an absolute denial of the demand which they thought he was about to make on them—namely, a request for acknowledgement of the men's trade unions. Suddenly, Mr. George drew from his pocket a complete plan, developed in the most secrecy, for the formation of a conciliation board for the entire British railway system. Had this been refused, he could have produced the cabinet's authority for the passage of a bill constituting such an authority. But the directors yielded the throat was too sudden and unexpected.

Adaptive Power It is the "game" deftness of adaptive power which has practically carried so complicated a measure as the budget, through the cabinet, and through the House of Commons. It was clear that his earlier stages men doubted whether Mr. George had quite grasped his own bill. Today no one equals him in the power of expanding it; and his speeches in the country appeal to the popular imagination rather than to trained intellects, his work in the House of Commons has been an almost perfect exhibition of the difficult art of carrying a bill through committee. Subtle and swift of judgment, ready to concede, but ruthless in seizing an advantage, he gives his party what it most enjoys, a fight with no point yielded to the enemy.

Surveying Broad Issues To these qualities of the political combatant Mr. Lloyd-George adds the larger gift of surveying the broader issues of politics. He sees that England is a democracy, and that the social order in the industrial and protection on the other, a large and impressive advance must be made in the direction of social reform. Emphatically he is the trump card of both these parties. Mr. George has made it his own, the basis of his budget and a victory against the lords. He has many enemies. He holds aloof from society, still so powerful in our politics, and it from him. His main of personal and journalistic friends. His private life and surroundings are those of a middle class man in moderate circumstances. Although master of the greatest issue raised in British politics since home rule, he retains the air of a stranger at our gates, almost, on the breadth and moral grandeur of Lincoln. Meredith's phrase, of a "Conqueror."

Deep Debt Mark The character of the man who, while still in the forties, has left this deep mark on political life, is as much of a riddle as that of all men of genius. Its defects are on the surface. Mr. George is neither a thinker nor an orator of the type of Gladstone or Bright, nor a personality of the breadth and moral grandeur of Lincoln. Meredith's phrase, of a "Conqueror."

Card Easily Explained The card was easily explained. It was an invitation to a woman who has not seen the Steinheils for years, but the customer's ticket made matters more complex, for investigation showed that the customer had, three days before the murder of Steinheil, rented several long black gowns to members of an amateur theatrical society which met near the Impasse Romain. And, strangely enough, three of these costumes had never been returned. As a matter of fact, they are missing to this day. The customer testified that at the time he rented these costumes there was present in his room Frederic Burleigh, who had been the murderer of Steinheil, and that he had entered her house, a guard on the underground railway found a ticket bearing the name of a woman and an invitation from the Steinheils, and near by, so circumstances arranged themselves, was a ticket showing that certain garments had been rented from a customer.

Government's Theory There, then, was the dilemma, and it is the theory of the government that, in order to free herself from her husband's sin at the same time escape the opprobrium that M. Borderel attached to divorce. Mme. Steinheil, it is asserted, planned the crime of the Impasse Romain. As to Mme. Japy, it is pointed out that by her death Mme. Steinheil would inherit 30,000 francs ($48,000), which she could use for her own well or as a dot for her daughter, who was then engaged to Pierre Buisson. In all the tangled case the figure of this daughter is the one that gains sympathy and admiration, for she has been throughout dignified and loyal, and when the notoriety of her mother's career covered her name, she publicly released her fiancé, who belongs to a distinguished French family.

PROSECUTION'S CASE AGAINST MME. STEINHEIL IN SENSATIONAL TRIAL

Occurrences Which Led to Woman's Arrest in Paris On Charge of Murdering Her Husband and Mother—Yesterday Brought More Dramatic Scenes

Paris, Nov. 5.—After having withstood for nearly three days a merciless examination by the presiding judge of the court of the assizes, where she is being tried on a charge of murdering her husband and her stepmother, the iron nerves of Mme. Marguerite Steinheil gave way late today, and she was led from the witness stand and out of the court room in a state of utter collapse. Several times before the climax came, restoratives were administered when it seemed as though she might faint, but his solicitors for her evoked from her the unhesitating statement that she was not at all fatigued. M. Devalles thereupon led her through a labyrinth of questions surrounding the case, with his wonted relentless, and Mme. Steinheil, with her ever-ready wit, answered them quickly and to the point, or when they seemed unduly compromising, pleaded for justice and not vindictiveness.

When today's recess was taken the court began, M. Devalles was fearful lest the strain upon Mme. Steinheil had been undergoing for two days was proving too much for her, but his solicitors for her evoked from her the unhesitating statement that she was not at all fatigued. M. Devalles thereupon led her through a labyrinth of questions surrounding the case, with his wonted relentless, and Mme. Steinheil, with her ever-ready wit, answered them quickly and to the point, or when they seemed unduly compromising, pleaded for justice and not vindictiveness.

As to her accusation against Remy Couillard, an American newspaper man, and others, whom she had charged with complicity in the crime, Mme. Steinheil said that in her frenzy she had taken recourse in anything that seemed to promise clearing herself of the charge. It was this alleged savage attack had been made upon her veracity by the judge that the climax came. Mme. Steinheil's attorney protested but the judge retorted hotly that the accused woman had lied throughout—that her story was a tissue of lies. A short recess was taken, but when Mme. Steinheil returned to the stand again she was unnerved by the ordeal and was fainting from the room.

(New York World) As related in cable despatches to the World, Mme. Steinheil's arrest Nov. 28 of last year, opened the long closed door that had hidden the skeleton of Felix Faure, once President of France, about whose sudden death while in office, no more have been persistently whispered, but no one was bold enough to tell about the story until Mme. Steinheil was behind bars. It was then alleged that President Faure had died in her presence, and from the effects of a drug that she had administered, and that while he was in office Mme. Steinheil had been his confidant, sharing grave state secrets and obtaining preferment for her husband, who although her strange career seems to have kept his eyes closed to his wife's disguise. After Mme. Steinheil was safely in prison a formal accusation of participation in the murder of President Faure was made against her, but it is highly improbable that the coming trial this week will be touched on for there is manifest in official circles every desire not to rake up old scandals in which the "Red Widow" she is sometimes called, has been involved.

Trail of Ink Spots But just at the end of the left knee on the under side was a stain of ink, and later in the accusation, the prosecutor makes this ink spot play an important part, for the physicians observed on the floor small spots of ink that made a trail from the title office to Mme. Steinheil, where an ink bottle was upset and led to a closet where Mme. Steinheil kept her dresses. Dr. Balazard, the great expert, made a microscopic examination of these ink stains and pronounced that they were undoubtedly made by a dress that had been stained by ink, at the time while it was being worn. By this black trail the experts will seek to lead Mme. Steinheil to the guillotine, but, as for their plans, the evidence must remain circumstantial, for soon after her husband's death, and long before her arrest, Mme. Steinheil had all her garments dyed black. So that all hope of finding the fatal stain upon any garment belonging to her has disappeared forever.

The doctors will further testify their belief that the illness of Mme. Steinheil after the tragedy was feigned, and that she gave way to paroxysms which, although admitted that she was in a highly nervous state, they declare were sham.

Gradually hidden parts of the woman's life were revealed. It was shown that she had from her girlhood led a wayward, nervous existence, continually entangled with men. It was shown, further, that with the knowledge of her husband's death, in Bellevue-Mendon, suburb of Paris, a villa known as the Vert-Logis where she received men of wealth and position. This house was rented in the name of Mariette Wolff, who variously posed as the aunt, chaperon and servant of Mme. Steinheil. Testimony is forthcoming, according to the public prosecutor, that when a visitor was to be received at the Vert-Logis, Mme. Steinheil would pack up and disappear, leaving Mme. Steinheil alone with Mariette Wolff. Mariette, it is alleged, had told all that there is to tell of the Vert-Logis, and it was a recital that will take its place among the chronicles of Boccaccio. There was constantly mentioned in connection with the place an "Aunt Lilly," whom Mme. Steinheil referred to as her relative she was visiting, using her name in many ways as a shield, but "Aunt Lilly" turns out to have no more substantial identity than Remy Camp's "Auntie."

When the police first began to suspect Mme. Steinheil, which was not for weeks after the murder, they cast about for a motive, and this motive is laid bare in the "acte d'accusation." Mme. Steinheil it is said, hated her stepmother, General that she had for her parent a great affection. But she did love a Monsieur Borderel or, at all events, she wished to marry him. M. Borderel is a wealthy country gentleman of such simple stovicity and

LLOYD-GEORGE, DOMINATING FIGURE IN BRITISH POLITICS

Chancellor of the Exchequer Whose Napoleonic Strategy is Now Directed Against the House of Lords Described By Editor of the London Nation.

There is nothing in modern British politics to compare with the rapidity of Mr. Lloyd-George's advance into the central places in his party and government, says H. W. Massingham, editor of the London Nation. Mr. Chamberlain's career, with which Mr. George's is sometimes compared, contains nothing so dramatic and so significant, while the far slower developments of great party leaders like Gladstone and Disraeli seem tame in comparison. Both the political and the social conditions of Mr. George's sudden advent are remarkable. Thus far every one of our political leaders has come from the upper or the upper middle classes. Mr. George comes from neither. He is "lower middle" in descent, unblemished by the private fortune which Mr. Chamberlain enjoyed, and without the support of any organization, such as the Midland Caucus, which in behalf of the great Birmingham politician all but snatched the reins of power from Gladstone himself. Alone he has done it.

Four years ago his admission to the second rank of cabinet ministers seemed a proper reward for his brilliant criticism of the Conservative Education bill and his assaults on Mr. Chamberlain, full of wit and sprightly raillery. But though he at once succeeded at the Board of Trade, which his inventive, penetrative genius transported from one of the least fruitful of the most enterprising departments of government, he made no great figure in the cabinet. That body contained a majority of moderates, and Mr. George, and later on Mr. Churchill, formed the Radical minority. But he was powerful enough to claim on Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's death and with Lord Morley's strong sympathy, the historic office which Mr. Asquith relinquished and which offers the most usual stepping-stone to the premiership.

Not a Fanatic Not that he is a fanatic. He has been called a Socialist, but he is not. Primarily he is not a theorist at all. He is a campaigner, a man of action, whose intellect works through its vivid apprehension of popular needs and its instant power of adapting and assimilating fresh knowledge. It was a motor car ride through Germany which gave him his first idea of fitting the great German scheme of industrial insurance to British policy. His resourcefulness indeed yields him his most conspicuous power of handling political problems. It saved him during the serious differences on naval policy. It won him a complete victory in his struggle with the railway interests. When he met the railway magnates in conference before the Board of Trade, they were all prepared to demand an absolute denial of the demand which they thought he was about to make on them—namely, a request for acknowledgement of the men's trade unions. Suddenly, Mr. George drew from his pocket a complete plan, developed in the most secrecy, for the formation of a conciliation board for the entire British railway system. Had this been refused, he could have produced the cabinet's authority for the passage of a bill constituting such an authority. But the directors yielded the throat was too sudden and unexpected.

Adaptive Power It is the "game" deftness of adaptive power which has practically carried so complicated a measure as the budget, through the cabinet, and through the House of Commons. It was clear that his earlier stages men doubted whether Mr. George had quite grasped his own bill. Today no one equals him in the power of expanding it; and his speeches in the country appeal to the popular imagination rather than to trained intellects, his work in the House of Commons has been an almost perfect exhibition of the difficult art of carrying a bill through committee. Subtle and swift of judgment, ready to concede, but ruthless in seizing an advantage, he gives his party what it most enjoys, a fight with no point yielded to the enemy.

Surveying Broad Issues To these qualities of the political combatant Mr. Lloyd-George adds the larger gift of surveying the broader issues of politics. He sees that England is a democracy, and that the social order in the industrial and protection on the other, a large and impressive advance must be made in the direction of social reform. Emphatically he is the trump card of both these parties. Mr. George has made it his own, the basis of his budget and a victory against the lords. He has many enemies. He holds aloof from society, still so powerful in our politics, and it from him. His main of personal and journalistic friends. His private life and surroundings are those of a middle class man in moderate circumstances. Although master of the greatest issue raised in British politics since home rule, he retains the air of a stranger at our gates, almost, on the breadth and moral grandeur of Lincoln. Meredith's phrase, of a "Conqueror."

Deep Debt Mark The character of the man who, while still in the forties, has left this deep mark on political life, is as much of a riddle as that of all men of genius. Its defects are on the surface. Mr. George is neither a thinker nor an orator of the type of Gladstone or Bright, nor a personality of the breadth and moral grandeur of Lincoln. Meredith's phrase, of a "Conqueror."

A WORD TO THE BOYS

To the Editor of the Times:—

Dear Sir,—I read in the Times a few evenings since about how some of our High School boys fared at the football match at Fredericton recently and was sorry to hear that they as a whole were not given a fair show, as the boys sent to Fredericton belonged to some of our best families, and of course they were all honorable boys. When we send a delegation of representative citizens anywhere whether to Ottawa to interview the government or a football eleven to represent our first-class sporting fraternity there we expect a first-class reception accorded them, because they are our best and who are left behind are anxious continually if we apprehend any violence to them. I read my boy, whom I love with a deep passion, away to play ball. "Win if you can, but do so honorably." But what do I find? I find he did his best but failed and, not only that but he was half killed at the game, arms twisted, one leg broken, one eye gone, hair-pulled out, and a sorry sight to behold. I'm only sorry to think that my own home town should have a boy in it that would so far forget himself as to use a strange boy in an ungentlemanly manner. To the St. John High School football team I extend my handshake, congratulations to you who went to Fredericton and did your best to win. All the odds were against you. The Fredericton boys were surrounded by many rovers, whatever that means, and you, well, you not only had to fight against the boys but you had to bear the additional burden of their rovers, and the absence of your own who were far away. Why did you not take up Roy Robertson with you? He could root some. I wish I could have gone with you. We admire you as much in your defeat as we would in your victory. The next time you play them wallop 'em good and hard, but do so honorably. Then you will have praise in the gates or halls of the city.

Now I want to give you some wise counsel. Have you followed the Every Day Club sports this summer? Now I've been around a good deal in 30 years, and the E. D. C., has surpassed everything I've seen to give plenty of good, clean sport. The club started out to help men to be men, but they have surpassed themselves for they have made gentlemen. For all the sports in the maritime provinces this year had gentlemen from the E. D. C. to compete. Now, boys, you better take lessons from the club and shape your future sports on their lines of good clean sport. What we men love in a youth most is truth and honesty. You may make a temporary gain or an advantage over a friend through falsehood, but my dear boys, it will come back upon you like a catapult and knock you down as you would the smallpox, and you will be forever honorable.

I am and always was the boys' sincere friend.

C. P. R.'S BEST RECORD

For the ten-day week which the exigencies of railway accounting render necessary once a month the Canadian Pacific earnings in the last ten days of October surpassed all previous records with the great total of $3,224,000.

This is the first time that $3,000,000 has been reached and passed. The earnings were $73,000 in excess of those for the same period last year. The best previous record of the road was that of the ten-day week in the end of September last, when the total was $2,783,000. Prior to that the biggest figures were $2,494,000 for the last week in October, 1907.

AIRSHIPS AND WIRELESS

To the Editor of the Times:—

Sir,—With the rapid improvement in the scientific field it may be possible in the future that airships may be propelled by electricity as, if once controlled it would be the medium of power through the air. This is a subject I have not yet seen any mention of, and having been a worker in electric machines in my youth in making electro-magnetic batteries for rheumatic affections I offer my thought extensively for consideration of present-day scientific experimentalists. I was a boy in my teens when making these batteries or galvanic machines, now sixty years ago. The magnetic spark was then very small, about the size of a pin's head, when my tutor, a scientific and mechanical pupil called Corin, under the direction of a nephew of Sir Humphrey Davy, named Pidwell, said to me:

"Sonny, if we could get that spark big enough to light a large space millions could be made of it."

About that time I left my tutor for the printer's vocation. In those machines at that time the spark was evolved by a magnet surrounded by a copper wire dynamo of extremely thin copper threadlike wire, and was very tiny in size. Today that spark now the electric light of our city, is produced by simply enlarging the tiny wire of the past to many hundred times larger wire in the dynamos of today—hence the larger light.

The Sir Humphrey Davy mentioned above and his nephew, Samuel Pidwell, were natives of Penzance, Cornwall, Eng., as was Corin, my own tutor. In experimenting these men met with many mishaps. Davy blew the roof of his laboratory off without accident to himself, and Pidwell, in an accident, where two large bottles of acid each of a different composition were broken, thus generating prussic acid, was compelled to jump through the window of a second story large mansion in which he was experimenting; the height being great and the fumes partially breathed made him sick and injured man for some time, but he recovered.

For, through an accident, gave the basic foundation of photography to the world, and which was followed up and completed by Niepce St. Victor and Daguerre, on a silvered copper plate. Pidwell was the discoverer of a new salt of iron, now in general commercial use; Corin invented the bottle and water gradator conducting the electricity between platinum points, replacing the old sudden-jolt brass button gradator.

On the Frenchman's part their discovery of the impression or development of the Daguerreotype was through an accident. They had exhausted all their resources, after several months of labor experimenting on Davy's accident of spilling salts of silver on a white paper which turned black on the sunlight beaming on it, and from which the Frenchmen took their cue of forming a picture. In their little studio they had cast all the plates worked on to a corner, above which was a bottle of mercury, which by some means fell among the undeveloped plates and looking for the mercury spot they discovered traces of partially developed images on the plates, and thus ever after was the Daguerreotype developed by mercury.

The French government pensioned the discoverers, and in one of the most noble of actions gave the secret to the world.

Respectfully,
J. S. CLIMO.

TRIBUTE TO DR. J. S. MURRAY

Hampton, N. B., Nov. 5.—(Special)—The citizens' dinner given here this evening in honor of Dr. J. Scott Murray at Heath Hall on the eve of his removal to the province of Alberta, was a very successful function in every respect, it was also a distinctly representative gathering.

The guests were seated at four tables which were adorned with tall sprays containing flowers, chrysanthemums, white carnations and other blossoms. Mrs. Wm. Langstroth, who catered for the occasion, provided a full six course dinner. A handsomely hand-painted bill of fare was found with the place card at every plate which were greatly admired and will be cherished as souvenirs of the occasion. The service was prompt and cheerful, Mrs. Langstroth being assisted by a body of charming young ladies, namely, the Misses Margaret Evans, Ella Murray, Mabel Scovil, Mons. McMann, Marjorie Barnes and Florence Prichard, who were indefatigable in their efforts to please.

The second part of the programme was no less to the purpose, the list of toasts being: The King, Our Guest, The Governor General and Parliament, The Lieutenant Governor and House of Assembly, The Clergy, Our Visitors, The Medical Profession, Absent Friends, Our Host and

TRAVELING COOKING SCHOOLS

Traveling cooking schools have recently been instituted in Germany for the benefit of farmers' daughters. The Bavarian Farmers' Association was the first to establish these schools and they chose nuns as teachers. The association pays the teachers and most of the other expenses, so that the cost of the pupils is very small. It is said that these traveling schools have several other advantages besides their accessibility. The teachings can be adapted to local conditions and the pupils can at once put into practice what they have learned.

The Jones-Crawford orchestra, of St. John, furnished a fine selection of music. In addition there were a monologue and song by Mr. Gardiner and recitations by E. A. Schofield and J. E. Angvine, as well as a song by R. A. March. The whole closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Dr. Murray modestly responded to all the good and kind words said to and about him by his enthusiastic friends.

On Thursday evening Miss Ella Murray was visited by about a dozen of her young lady friends at her home on Main street, Hampton Station, who showed her with a variety of pretty and useful gifts in token of their friendship and esteem for one who has entered fully into the social life of Hampton since, with her mother and brother, she came among them.

NORDICA'S EVIDENCE IN CONTEST OVER $1,000,000 WILL

Boston, Nov. 6.—Miss Lillian Nordica was the star-witness in the Supreme Court at East Cambridge in the contest of the will of her aunt, Mrs. Vannie E. Allen, who left everything to a niece and nothing to the prima donna.

Miss Nordica gave her name as Lillian Nordica Young, of New York. She was dressed in a black velvet suit trimmed with white lace. She carried a gold chaine bag and wore a blue turban hat trimmed with feathers. She was questioned by her attorney, Robert F. Light.

She declared that ever since she could remember she understood that the fortune of her uncle, John Allen, was to be distributed equally among his heirs.

"The heirs," she said, "were my uncle's own sisters, which included my mother, Mrs. Annie Baldwin, Mrs. Imogene Costello and Mrs. Jane A. Walker. They sent Uncle John to college, and made it possible for him to make his fortune. My uncle and his wife frequently called to see me whenever I sang in Boston. Four or five years ago my uncle, who was an insurance broker, said: 'Lillian, why don't you take out an insurance policy?' I told him I was already insured."

"Why not take out a small policy for $25,000?"

"I replied $25,000 was a considerable sum of money and that the premium would be large. I asked him if in the event of my failing such a policy, he would divide the commission with me, so that the premium would be smaller. He said that was against the law."

"What he said: 'What is the difference whether I have this money for a time or not? Eventually it will come to you and the other heirs, Lillian.'"

"Under his pressure and advice I took out the policy for $25,000. In later conversation with him he told me that the money that he would leave would go to my mother and other relatives on the death of his wife. At one time he told me that he was going to leave his wife a life interest in the estate, so that she could go to Europe and study art. He consulted me about that and asked me to sign a document which would be very expensive and it would encumber the estate. He replied: 'Oh, there will be enough left for you and the rest.'"

On cross-examination Mrs. Nordica admitted she was paying the expenses of the contest.

Decision was reserved.

SLEW WOLF WHICH FLEW AT HER CHILD'S THROAT

Kanashak, Sask., Nov. 6.—To the south of this place, a thriving little town on the Canadian Northern Railway, and about twelve miles distant, lives a settler named Ransen, with his wife and two small children, about five years of age and one respectively. One evening recently the mother placed the youngest in the baby carriage and with the eldest went out for a stroll on the prairie. Two young collie dogs, and Nago, a wolf found, accompanied them.

The little party had not gone far before the quick eye of the hound caught sight of a wolf some distance away, and with a bound it was off, followed by the yapping collies. The dogs kept on the chase, spreading out, as if by instinct to surround the foe.

The chase was getting warm for the wolf and he suddenly turned direct towards the woman and children who were a mile away. The hound saw the change, and with his long leaping bound was gradually lessening the gap.

The plucky mother realizing the danger, picked up a stout stick of willow and stood awaiting the attack. When the wolf with its wailing teeth was within 20 yards, the wolfhound was still yards behind, and the collies 100 yards away. With a bound the wolf flew at the throat of the child clinging to its mother's skirt, but the woman felled him with the stick, and before he could regain his feet Nago hit him by the throat and never let go till the wolf lay dead at the woman's feet.

SUES FORMER BABY, STOLEN 17 YEARS AGO

New York, Nov. 6.—The gravest of a mother for the baby she was told had died seventeen years ago was made this week in Supreme Court by Emma Bock, the wife of Henry Bock, of No. 70 West One Hundred and Thirty-third street.

The child, the mother swears, was stolen soon after its birth by its father and in its place a bogus child was substituted. The mother insisted caused her to suspect that the second baby was not her own, but she nursed it till death took the little one away. Then it was buried under her name, and at its father's expense, in Greenwood Cemetery.

In 1890, after she had parted from the husband she is now suing for a separation Mrs. Bock visited an army to see the soldiers drill. Across the hall, she declared, her husband, his mother, and a five-year-old boy. The child, she is now convinced, was her own baby, whom she supposed had been laid at rest in Greenwood.

With a scream that startled the spectators at the drill, Mrs. Bock darted from her seat toward her boy. She alleges that her husband slipped out of the hall with his son before she could reach them. She found out his address, and had him brought into court, but he convinced the judge that the genuine Henry George Bock was dead.

Following this incident, Mrs. Bock asserts her husband and his mother, with the boy moved to Newark, and lived under an assumed name. The boy is said to be living with his father now at the One Hundred and Thirty-third street residence. Mrs. Bock demands that the court give him back to her, and that his father pay her alimony. The latter plea was denied yesterday by Justice Blinn.

Bock's says his wife abandoned Henry George Bock when the boy was two weeks old and that it was impossible for him to live with her because of her conduct. The separation action will be tried later.

COMMON COUNCIL REBUIRRIED AFTER 500 YEARS

Same Religious Order Chants Over Body of Monk of Chaucer's Time

Some 500 years ago, in the Black Friary of St. Mary and St. Nicholas, in the ancient city of Stamford, (Eng.) the Brothers buried one of their order—a certain John Staunford.

In the coffin with him, upon his breast, a parchment had come to him all the way across the mountains and the plains from Rome—an Indult of Pope Boniface IX., granting to Staunford permission to choose a confessor. Why he obtained this privilege, why it was so precious to him, is not known, but it is conjectured that he had committed some sin, and that he had the Indult buried with him in order to prove (in case the Indult were ever opened) that he was absolved.

Recently there was another funeral there, and again the Black Friars chanted the mass for the dead. Again the four candles were lighted around the body, again the priest, in his cope of black and with its wailing teeth, was within 20 yards and sprinkled the corpse, and then ceased it.

The reports that the same—that of John Staunford, who lived when Chaucer was writing his "Canterbury Tales," when the dawn of the Renaissance was breaking on the "occidental world," that he was buried in the Roman Catholic church in Broad street. A short sermon was preached by the Rev. Father West. Then the coffin was again placed in the hearse, and with cross-bearer, acolytes and priests preceding it, was taken to the Spanish cemetery, where it was buried in the Roman Catholic quarter. A bottle containing an account of the discovery and reburial had been placed on the body that brought the Black Friars from Leicester to perform the solemn funeral rites of their church and of their order over the remains of their long dead, long forgotten brother. The leaden coffin containing the body was found by workmen who were digging a trench in Adelphi street on September 9. The spot was once the burial ground of the Black Friars. The parchment found within the folds of the robe was taken to the British Museum, and the Rev. G. F. Warner, the keeper of the manuscripts, deciphered the inscription.

As far as can be ascertained the date is March 28, 1399. For a time it was thought that the body, which was in a partially mummified condition, was that of John, the "Pope's man," but when the wooden coffin in which the remains had been placed was disinterred from the field where it had been temporarily buried it was definitely ascertained that the remains were those of an elderly man.

HALLEY'S COMET SEEN ON THURSDAY NIGHT

Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 6.—Professor E. L. Yowell reported yesterday that Halley's Comet "was observed from Mount Lookout Observatory on Thursday night. The comet came into view about 10:30 o'clock, and appeared to be a small speck of light pulsating towards the sun at the rate of a million miles an hour. According to Professor Yowell, the comet will be brightest on May 18, but will be observable to the naked eye long before that."

Charles Long and Long Fung, both of the Society of the Four Brothers, are held as suspects. Both the wounded are members of the On Leung Tong, which figured in former murderous battles with the "S" Sing Tong.

FASCINATING if FRIVOLOUS FOOTWEAR for WINTER.
Dressmakers, always willing to lend a helping hand to their close allies, the shopkeepers, have been displaying, along with the new Louis XV. and XVI. costumes, queer, long-toed shoes with high heels, supposed to be exactly the style of foot-wear worn in the days of the incoherent Louises. These long-tramped shoes and slippers come in all sorts of rich brocades, in embroidered and beaded satin and even in velvet—the latest slipper material—and usually there is an enormous buckle of rhinestone or hand-wrought metal set below a high tongue on the instep.

SHEELY REMANDED

Put Up Wild Fight When Arrested in Depot by I. C. R. Policeman Collins

Wm. Sheely, a fence-builder for the C. P. R. at Vancouver, was remanded by Judge Ritchie in the police court this morning on the charges of being drunk, using profane and abusive language and resisting I. C. R. Policeman John Collins. The latter said that about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon he was called by C. P. R. Conductor McGovern to eject the prisoner from his train, as he was creating a disturbance. Sheely put up a stiff fight, struck Collins a severe blow on the head and quite a struggle ensued. Detective Killen and Policeman Lawson arrived, and the prisoner was locked up.

Detective Killen and Policeman Lawson testified. Conductor Thomas McGovern said that he had considerable trouble with the prisoner before he was arrested, and with his companion, named Sullivan, who succeeded in getting away. Asked by the judge if he could explain his conduct, the prisoner said he was going back to work at Vancouver and yesterday afternoon he was very drunk and forgot most of what took place.

TALK OF SCHOOLDAY FIGHTS BROUGHT ON FISTIC BATTLE

North End Fight Case in Police Court Today-S.P.C.A. Case Against Coal Team Driver

In the police court this morning, John Campbell, charged with drunkenness, was fined $4 or ten days and on George Davidson was imposed a like penalty. Campbell's face was cut. He explained that he had been fighting near the Marsh Bridge. He was employed with Mr. Conlon on the Marsh Road and had come in town and taken a little too much whiskey. The fine of $4 was allowed to stand as Campbell promised to go back to his work and not return to the city for two months.

John McCausland forfeited a deposit of $28 on a charge of fighting in Main street last night.

Charles Rogers charged with kicking McCausland and Noble Clark charged with fighting were both remanded. Policeman Hamm said that about 9:30 last night he was informed that two men were fighting near Harrison street. He went to the spot and found McCausland and Clark in a fight. McCausland's face was badly bruised and bleeding. Hamm said that the two men had been talking of the golden days when they were schoolboys together and of the fistic encounters in which they then engaged and the result was that the argument became too strong and each determined to test his superiority with his fists. Rogers managed to get away but was arrested later.

Benjamin Goodine, aged 18, reported for ill-treating and over-loading a horse on Nov. 2 in Delhi street said that he had 12 bags of coal on his sloven and their weight was about 1500 pounds. He said that he had been instructed by Mr. Gibbon, for whom he worked, to have his cart loaded this way and to go the shortest way possible with the load. He had beaten the horse with his whip three times.

Sergt. Kilpatrick said that there were ten or eleven bags of coal on the sloven and they would contain about one ton. About fifty people were taking in the scene and a number of them were helping Goodine with his weapon up the hill. Many expressed their feelings strongly.

J. King Kelley, addressing his honor, said that the S. P. C. A. had more trouble with Gibbon & Co. than with any other company in town.

Judge Ritchie said that as none of the company was present, it was not fair for the speaker to talk of them.

Mr. Kelley said that it was not fair to criticize Messrs. Gibbon, but they were more guilty than the boy who was reported. In future they should be summoned instead of the drivers of their teams.

Young Goodine was fined $5 but told that he was liable to a fine of $40. With the consent of the S. P. C. A. the fine was allowed to stand.

BARTENDER FINED

Robt. Finnigan Asked to Pay $19 For Selling Lager to Intoxicated Man

The case of Robert Finnigan, charged with selling liquor to an intoxicated man, John J. Hoddy, was heard in the police court this morning and a fine of $10.00 or thirty days in jail imposed. It was intimated that while W. L. Hogan was on the stand, the witness was John A. Warnock, a bartender in a saloon in Water street. Nothing more was said of this however. Deputy Chief Jenkins said that about noon on Thursday he saw three men going down Union street, one of them staggering as though he was drunk. He saw them go towards Brussels street and enter Warnock's bar, evidently to get more liquor. Jenkins went into the bar and found these same men drinking. One man had a filled glass in his hand and it was taken from him by Robert Finnigan, who set it underneath the counter.

At the request of the witness the glass was brought to the surface again and proved to contain lager beer. Finnigan was then told by the witness that the man who had been about to drink was too drunk to be served, and replied that he had not noticed it. The witness answered that the bartender, Finnigan, must have known it, or he would not have removed the glass. John J. Hoddy was the name of the man who was about to drink the liquor. A man named Murphy was also present.

Finnigan said that three men, one of whom was Hoddy, went into the barroom, he would take lager beer. The witness filled a glass and set it on the counter. He said that he thought that the latter had had enough, took it away and placed it beneath the counter just as Deputy Chief Jenkins came in. His honor read the law to Finnigan, section by section, and said that the purchase of liquor would not have to take place in order to be considered unlawful under the act. Even the placing of a glass of liquor before an intoxicated man in a barroom, was considered, as against the law. His honor said he would strike a fine of $10.

POLICE ASKED TO END DANGEROUS PASTIME

The police are asked to put an end to rowdianism of boys at the corner of Richmond and Exmouth streets. Their sport is dangerous. Stone throwing by hand and sling shots formed part of their amusement and serious consequences nearly followed yesterday afternoon. About four o'clock schools were just dismissed, a young woman was returning to her home when she was struck a severe blow under the eye with a stone. She was stunned for a time and her eye is injured. An arrest or two and a term behind bars would help to make it safe for people to walk in this neighborhood.
