MASCALBRUNI. (Continued.)
The next we hear of Mascallbruni is his being at Cheltenham. There he frequented the rooms of a certain order of players that he had been in the habit of dipping. He was narrowly watched and detected in the act of pocketing a guinea from a gentleman's pocket. His punishment was his expulsion from the club with ignominy. His name was pleaded, and his name, or rather infamy, united with a winged speed all over the United Kingdom.

For some time he never went out at night excepted for insurance to be made in writing.

described rushed from under the shadow of a portico, and, without a moment's delay, he fell without a groan, and by the time the patrol passed when he was conveyed, cold and lifeless, to the arms of his bride, who was anxiously awaiting his return. Her agonized shriek made the attempt to depict: there are some sorrow that defy description.

Notwithstanding the boasted excellence of the Parisian police, the arrest of the assassin, who had not yet been discovered, remained undiscovered. Strange as it may appear, I am enabled to connect two more links in the chain of this ruffian's history, and thus as it were, to become, his biographer. Having been in town at the period when he was in the zenith of his glory, and being slightly acquainted with the family, like a pestilence, it was his lot to destroy and blight. I was well acquainted with his person, and he with mine; indeed once, it was not easy to mistake him.

At the time of the execution, a few moments being granted him in his request, he offered up a fervent prayer for his persecuted brethren, and commended his soul to Jesus. He then with perfect composure lay himself down, and was immediately put to death. He was 25 years of age, and of a respectable family. He was not baptized, and did not take a prominent part in the promotion of Christianity, until after the commencement of the persecutions.

After this execution the persecution was pressed with still greater rigor. The government determined, if possible, to secure all the companions of the Martyr. Several of them were seized, and afterwards made their escape. Many incidents, showing the distress to which the Christians were reduced, are too numerous to detail. It is sufficient to say, that the Christians were obliged to conceal themselves in the houses of their friends, some in the forests, numbers were sold to slavery, and some were in iron. The Queen proposed to the chief officers to put every one of the Christians to death—to destroy completely all the roots, that no spirit might spring up hereafter.

perpetrating an act, no doubt long planned, which was neither more nor less than despatching his master. It was a solitary place, and fit for the deed of blood. A narrow path had been worn in the side of a precipice, which yawned to the depth of several hundred feet over a torrent that rushed, as though impatient of being confined, foaming and boiling through a narrow chasm opened for itself through the rocks. I could show you the spot, for I know it well, having the right of commons on the mountains; and have often driven my cows, after the melting of the snows, up the pass, to feed on the herbage, that, mixed with heat and rheodendrons, forms a thick carpet under foot. It is a pasture that makes excellent cheese.

But solitary as the place looks, the Italian did not know that there are several chads, mine among the rest, in the Alps; and he had been told, that he had to be down in the plain, or I might have been an eye-witness of much of what I am about to describe. I was saying that the spot seemed to suit his purpose; and his impatience to ease his master of his gold was such, that happily for the ends of justice, he could not wait till night-fall, or none but (and here he pointed to the sky) He was, however, to have been privy to the crime. It was, however, mid-day. Into the deep-worn pass I have mentioned, he rushed, with a look of defiance on his face, and a sword in his hand, and, together, with the lifeless corpse of his master, transported him to the spot, where he entered into the trial, he was condemned to death.

of the good old man at our final interview.—May God have mercy on his soul!"

THE MOURNER'S RETURN.
BY P. H. WRIGHT, FLEETWOOD, BART., & C. P.
I have written after accompanying the remains of a loved and last child from London to the family resting place, in Lancashire, were deeply affected for private personal among those interested in the beautiful, too highly-gifted deceased.—Lancaster Herald.

Home of my happier days! I meet once more, yet most we not as we have met before—Alone and desolate thy hall I tread. Widowed and childless mourning o'er the dead, yet unmarred not that all have passed away. I know 'twas right, and though I feel—oh!

There was a time, recall'd by clinging thought, when children clustered round the early dawn, and when I saw thee, my dear child, in the arms of thy mother, and thou wert so young and so true. I know 'twas right, and though I feel—oh!

there, could not detain the warrior's spirit, ever glow in its earthly tract, unbending its patriotism, flouting its Heaven-ward flight; and Nelson, the celebrated, the first of naval chiefs, in their despairing presence, drooping gradually more and more, died away with a generous absorption, which shewed, that his heart was immovably resolute in his character of a dauntless warrior, impeded by no difficulty applied by no danger, it was, nevertheless, whose love from each charge, abundantly bearing with humanity's kindest feelings and truest affections. In fact, it was the heart of a man, permitted by Providence, at a critical period of its history, to do something for his country, and, by scoring some and suffering every privation incidental to his profession, to build up a name for himself, famous to all ages. A man, indeed, whose greatness of character, warlike genius, and many distinguished actions, have rendered him pre-eminently deserving the public national monument, his countrymen are at this period, contemplating to erect to his memory, and to place conspicuously in the capital of the nation—the proudest city of the civilized world. This being the case, let it then, by all means, be united to the grandeur of such a metropolitan; and, properly, to fulfil their laudable design, be its construction and execution like the battles of the hero, it is not only to commemorate—all perfect—all glorious—a thing to be extolled for ever. Then will it shine forth, indeed, a production of art which future generations of Englishmen will be enabled proudly to point, and exultingly say, "Behold, our grand and beautiful! Behold, how Britons revere their illustrious dead! Behold, too, the exquisite art of their sculptors, the admirable display of their genius, and the mastery of their hands!"—Hampshire Telegraph.

He was not baptized, and did not take a prominent part in the promotion of Christianity, until after the commencement of the persecutions.

After this execution the persecution was pressed with still greater rigor. The government determined, if possible, to secure all the companions of the Martyr. Several of them were seized, and afterwards made their escape. Many incidents, showing the distress to which the Christians were reduced, are too numerous to detail. It is sufficient to say, that the Christians were obliged to conceal themselves in the houses of their friends, some in the forests, numbers were sold to slavery, and some were in iron. The Queen proposed to the chief officers to put every one of the Christians to death—to destroy completely all the roots, that no spirit might spring up hereafter.

At the time of the execution, a few moments being granted him in his request, he offered up a fervent prayer for his persecuted brethren, and commended his soul to Jesus. He then with perfect composure lay himself down, and was immediately put to death. He was 25 years of age, and of a respectable family. He was not baptized, and did not take a prominent part in the promotion of Christianity, until after the commencement of the persecutions.

During the last spring about three thousand tons were sent down the St. Lawrence...
The Collector received information of the seizure of two brass pieces (a 6 and 1 pounder), in the cedar mill, adjoining the bridge, in East Oswego, upon which is requested Capt. Gray, who is stationed here with a company of the 5th regiment, to place a guard over the guns until the next morning (yesterday) He did so—putting 1 believe, two sentries upon the post. Captain Gray, yesterday morning the Collector and one of the officers went with a sergeant's guard and commenced taking out the guns, when they were assailed by a few persons who had by that time collected upon the scene. After hearing their insults for some time (the mob constantly increasing), the Collector sent for the commanding officer, who came down with his whole company. The mob at this time amounted to between two or three hundred. After the soldiers had removed three or four pieces of a gun, they returned to their barracks—leaving the mob to triumph. The "patrol" then had their own sport. They obtained a supply of powder, mounted the guns and kept firing till dark. Last night, to crown the whole, the mob burned the Collector and deputy Marshal, Turner, in a cage. N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.
