The Wreck on the G. T. R. Near Sarnia Tunnel.

The above picture is from a photo of the two freight engines which figured in the wreck on the Grand Trunk about two miles east of Sarnia Tunnel yesterday morning. The force of the collision was so great that the cab and the tender of the front freight engine was driven on to the top of the boiler. It was on the front engine that Fireman Crapp lost his life. He was carried up with the tender and crushed to death against the dome of the locomotive.

Fireman Hughes was on the second engine. The latter was a much heavier locomotive than the first, and the effect of the collision on it was very different. The boiler, front trucks, and driving wheels were lifted up about a foot, while the trucks of the tender remained on the rails. The tender was wrenched from the trucks and jammed into the cab. Hughes was caught between the tender and the London, March 23.-It is reported that the Porte has sent a formal note to the British ambassador at Constantinople refusing to withdraw the Turkish troops from Tabah, near Akabah, in accordance with Great Britain's request, which was based on the contention that Tabah is in Egyptian territory. The Porte insists that it is Ottoman territory. It is also reported that a British naval demonstration at Smyrna is expected.

REGICIDES NOW HAVE AN ORGAN

Belgrade, the Capital of Servia.

Belgrade, March 23 .- The new regicide organ, which is named the New Movement, has made its appearance, and must have more than pleased its founders. The first page contains a harrowing description of the strangulation of the Czar Paul; the appreciative greetings of European sovereigns to his son Alexander, who had been privy to the deed; and the immunity of the executioners. Further, the journal enlarges on the thoroughness with which the Servian officers accomplished a similarly heroic act; and the noble disinterestedness with which they view the cold attitude of an ungrateful nation. They demand neither public testimonials nor hymns of praise; they only ask to be let alone but this is denied them. A group of the late King's sycophants, subventioned by English gold, are said to be poisoning the minds of the people against their deliverers, and trouble is ahead. The executioners of King Alexander do not blush for what they know to have been a patriotic, praiseworthy act; they would do it again for the sake of

License Legislation.

The Hanna bill represents the maximum of temperance legislation that may be expected from the Whitney Government. Mr. Spence, Dr. Chown, and other temperance leaders, say that the favorable features of the bill are outwelched by the provision that three-fifths of the vote polled is needed to give effect to a local option bylaw. In their opinion the temperance cause las received a setback at the hands of the Government.

The sun, the ruler of the day, shone then as he shines now, and all eyes Mrs. Newrich-"Is your husband beheld his splendor, but what he was, or what was his relationship to the earth, was, to all, save the handful referred to, a profound secret.

> It was Copernicus, who first made the formal announcement of the Hellocentric idea-the idea that the sun, rather than the earth, is the center of our planetary system.

The Ptolemaic theory, which had remained practically unchanged and unquestioned for fifteen hundred years taught that the earth was the center around which all the heavenly bodies

The Ptolemaic idea is, in a way, the most natural thing in the world. To the unscientific mind, nothing appears truer than the statement that the earth is the center around which the sun revolves, and that the moon and stars are but the embellishment of its "firmament."

Such is the idea taught in the Book of Genesis, and such was the idea in which all Christendom firmly believed in 1473, the year of Copernicus's birth. The work that forced men to substitute the Heliocentric for the Geocentric idea was Copernicus' immortal book, "The Revolutions of the Heavenly Bodies," published in 1543, with a groveling preface and cowardly apology by Copernicus' friend and literary executor, Osiander.

It was the 24th of May, 1543, and Copernicus was on his deathbed. For more than 40 of his three-score years and ten he had thought of his book! The mighty discovery had lain in his mind for a whole generation; the work itself had been ready for the press for many years, and now at last it was printed: printed with that mean apologetic lie of Oslander that its great author had propounded his doctrine, not as a fact but as a hypothesis!

On his bed, Copernicus lay dying; the eyes that had so gloriously swept in the world than book had ever made

Copernicus touched his book, seemed to realize what it was, closed his eyes again, and died. But the truth had been proclaimed: and as soon as men should once fairly see that truth, they would be obliged to admit it. In a way it was a humiliating

The result of the discovery of Copernious was to bring the earth to her real nosition of subordination and inferiority. So far from being the universe, the earth was soon to appear at her true value, as being but one of the smaller satellites of the sun, the sun himself being but one of the millions of other suns, all of them, perhaps, the satellites of some as yet undiscovered mass.

How big is a man, anyway? Well, he is bigger, somewhat than a mosquito, but he is not so big an an elephant, and the elephant is small in comparison with a mountain, and the mountain is a mite beside the earth. and the earth is but a speck in the Solar System, and the Solar System itself is as a single leaf in a mighty forest compared even with that which is revealed by our present-day telescopes!

The great Hegel is said to have penly regretted the overthrow of the ancient astronomy, "because it was more dignified for Man to occupy the center of the universe."

Be that as it may, the fact was shown pretty conclusively by Copernicus that man did not occupy such position; that his earth-home was but an insignificant member of the hierarchy of worlds, and that his highsounding theories about his importance had unquestionably been woven out of his own immeasurable self-

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unquali-fied endorsement, or has such a record of cures of female troubles, as has Lydia in the British empire. It turns out

When Poggenburg made his run of 112 in the national billiard tournament Thursday afternoon, surpassing by just one point the high run of the Rournament previously established by Wright, the failure of the easterner Further to surpass the score caused a comment as to how frequently curious results of this kind in the realm of sport lead to suspicion on the part of Ithose not familiar with sports. For example, the outsider, who is always licoking for something wrong, would declare the athletic-looking New Yorker fdid not care to demonstrate the full extent of his skill, and having beaten the high run felt satisfied to stop. Of course, no one who saw the gamefor, for that matter, no one capable of expressing an opinion on the subject-would suspect for a moment anything of the kind. But to a novice lit might seem queer that Poggenburg could plug along, one point at a ffime, until he had scored 112 times, just the exact number, apparently, to scoure a prize, and then be unable to add a single point. But it is just These "queer" things which make sport so attractive. Often, however, one scannot convince skeptics of the fact. Induced by instances of hippodromling, which sometimes do occur, these persons always are ready to believe ia fraud is perpetrated. A baseball team which one day beats another 14 to o and the next day is beaten by the same team 3 to 2 is "throwing" games that is all there is to it, according to the belief of these suspicious tones. To these the eccentricities of horse racing even where the racing is best are entirely incomprehensible, yet were horse racing ever to reach a Istage where the result could be foreshadowed with any degree of certainty It would cease altogether to be a sport. Even the late Eugene Field, who twas anything but a novice in estimating the character of men and in a iknowledge of wholesome sports, was led to make a direct reflection against the honesty of the billiard match between Schaefer and Ives at Central Music Hall several years ago, in which Schaefer, after having been hopelessly behind for two nights, finally won out on the closing night by just one point. But those close to the table where this famous match was pplayed saw that Ives was almost insane from rage and disappointment during the closing innings of this game, in which fortune suddenly turned iagainst him.
