PELLY'S BRICK

Has been used in the erection of every brick building of any importance put up in Newfoundland since the Great Fire of '78. Each brick has our name stamped on its face.

We regularly supply the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. and the Anglo-Nfld. Dev. Co. Have been doing so over 20 years.

Brick are so uniform in color and size a handsome building can be erected without the use of imported face brick. The following buildings have been faced with our brick: Horwood's, Angel's, Delgado's, both Clothing Factories, Smyth's, Royal Stores, General Hospital, Annex, General Post Office, Cable Office, Bank of Nova Scotia and Public Building, Harbor Grace; The Dominion Power House at Bell Island. The Lunatic Asylum Building recently erected by the Hon. W. J. Ellis is built entirely of our brick. We can ship by rail or water direct from our kiln to your job, and if satisfactory service is given, will wait until your job is finished and paid for for our money.

A NEW NOVEL

by Harold Bell Wright. A stirring romance of American life 80-90 years ago. The scene of the story is not localized but brings to mind almost any manufacturing town or community. The chief character, "Helen of the Old House," represents the finest type of American womanhood. A beautiful love story in a colorful setting, "Helen of the Old House," sweeps to a climax that leaves one impressed anew with the vitality and force of Harold Bell Wright.

Clothes and the Woman

Clothes and the woman—one and inseparable—always will be—and always should be. But, my, how thrifty they are getting nowadays and yet they continue to dress just as well.

Other women except Daisy Doreddy have learned how to make last season's suit meet this season's requirements. They have learned of our superior cleaning and drying facilities, and they are taking advantage of them—so are the men folks.

YOUR-TEETH

PYORRHEA AGAIN. Pyorrhoea is so insidious that we want to repeat again and again our former warnings against it. It is not painful as a rule, and that very fact makes it all the more dangerous. Watch for those bleeding gums, they are your warnings. Do not give your body a chance to absorb poisons that come from bad teeth or diseased gums. Anything from a headache to a serious illness may result from your neglect. Pyorrhoea is a dreadful disease.

Sinn Fein Leader Telegraphs Lloyd George.

De Valera Expresses Surprise at Premier's Action--Irish Press Has Divergent Views--Aerial Round-the-World Voyage--U.S. Race Committee Agree to Barring of Mayflower.

DE VALERA'S LATEST.

LONDON, Sept. 16. Eamon De Valera telegraphed Premier Lloyd George at Gatwick, Scotland, to-night, expressing surprise that the Premier did not see that Ireland's cause would be fearlessly prosecuted if she entered the proposed conference without making her position quite clear.

Mr. De Valera's telegram said, "I received your telegram last night, and am surprised that you do not see that if we, on our side, accepted a conference on the basis of your letter of September 7, without making our position quite clear, Ireland's representatives would enter the conference with their position misunderstood and the cause of Ireland irreparably prejudiced."

ROUND THE WORLD AIR ROUTE.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16. The first round of the world trip by aerial is contemplated by Sir Ross Smith, British airman, who last summer successfully negotiated a flight from England to Australia. The starting point is not yet announced, but it is understood that the trip is to be made before winter sets in.

THE UNLOVELY HOHENZOLLERN.

DOORN, Holland, Sept. 16. The strong feeling against Ultra-Conservatives in Germany, which has manifested itself since the recent murder of Matthias Erzberger, is believed here to be the cause of several members of the Hohenzollern family leaving Germany and coming to Doorn, where they are expected to remain until they consider that conditions in Germany are favorable to their return.

CORK EXAMINER'S VIEW.

CORK, Sept. 16. In commenting on the latest exchange of notes between Premier Lloyd George and Sinn Fein leaders, the Examiner emphatically refused to believe that the deadlock is the last phase of the negotiations, which every sane person in both countries hoped would end in agreement.

A SIGNIFICANT CRITICISM.

DUBLIN, Sept. 16. Premier Lloyd George is blamed by the Freeman's Journal for the cancellation of the proposed Inverness conference. The newspaper declares, "Lloyd George made an extravagant inconsideration of cancelling the Conference on the ground that to confer on the terms of De Valera's note would be to recognize Ireland as an independent Republic, free to disassociate herself from the Empire."

WHOLESALE LIQUOR FRAUDS.

MONTREAL, Sept. 16. The Montreal Star to-night publishes the following, under date of New York: "A large liquor manufacturing organization, employing hundreds, and operating illicit wholesale drug stores, has been discovered by the Federal Prohibition leaders here. It was learned to-day, this organization has been feeding the entire United States with whiskey, gin and rum, supposed to have been smuggled into the country, but which, in reality, was manufactured here and sold with fake London and Cuban labels. One arrest already has been made and the entire band is under surveillance."

PHYSICIANS AT GATLICOCH.

INVERNESS, Sept. 16. Lord Dawson, physician extraordinary to King George, has been sent for, to attend Mr. Lloyd George, Premier, who is suffering from chill and neuralgia at Gatlicoach. His dentist also has been summoned.

ULSTER COMMENTS.

BELFAST, Sept. 16. Appeals to Premier Lloyd George and leaders of Sinn Fein to make every effort to solve the Irish question are made by the Northern Whig of this city in commenting upon the critical situation which developed yesterday, when the proposed conference at Inverness was cancelled.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

LONDON, Sept. 16. The Committee, appointed by the Indian Government in October, reports that the Indian Railway system is entirely inadequate and that drastic reforms are urgently needed. The Committee also condemns the system of management by companies domiciled in England, but is divided on the question of State ownership.

THE STILL-VEXT BERMOUTHES.

HALIFAX, Sept. 16. Bermuda Hotels, the Belmont, Pointe St. Charles, and the Belmont, Pointe St. Charles, are still vext with the question of the transfer of the hotel to the Government.

BELLOCOS BELFAST.

BELFAST, Sept. 16. Encounters between opposing factions in the interior of Ulster were reported here this afternoon.

WHAT ULSTER LEADERS SAY.

BELFAST, Sept. 16. Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, commenting on the hitch in the Irish State negotiations, declared to-day, his belief that the questions at issue did not affect the Northern counties, but were matters for adjustment

Pleasant, and Colonial have been unroofed. The Princess Hotel Bathing Pavilion, and the Hamilton Hotel grill blown away, and many small crafts have been sunk or driven ashore as the result of the hurricanes which has been sweeping the Islands since late on Wednesday night according to a cablegram received here to-day over the Halifax and Bermuda cable.

LOOKING FOR TROPHY DEFENDER.

GLOUCESTER, Sept. 16. The action of the Nova Scotia trustees of the North Atlantic Fishermen's Trophy, in barring from this year's races for the International fishing vessel championship, the schooner Mayflower, selected as the American defender, was accepted to-day by the United States Race Committee. It was decided also to defend the trophy now here as the result of the Esperanto's victory at Halifax last year, but the meeting of the Committee was adjourned without a decision as to whether the next choice of the defender would come by selection or in a race.

THE ARBUCKLE TRIAL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16. Roscoe Arbuckle will go on trial on the same charge in connection with the death of Virginia Rappa, within the next three weeks. District Attorney Brady announced to-day. He said, "I am going ahead with the prosecution of this case with all speed possible. I expect to be ready for trial in about three weeks, and I believe the defense will be too."

Two New Books.

"The Master of Man" by Sir Hall Caine. The Eyerson Press, Toronto, $1.75.

In "The Master of Man" his first novel since 1912, Sir Hall Caine has given us a situation melodramatic in the extreme. So much so is it, in fact, that whilst it will undoubtedly please the taste of the general reading public, it can by no means be called true to life. It would indeed, be difficult to picture a scene more dramatic than that of a judge compelled to pass sentence for the murder of her child on the woman whom he, himself, has betrayed. Yet this is what Sir Hall Caine does in "The Master of Man," and he uses it to point a moral, and that moral is, "Be sure your sin will find you out." Like most of the author's former works, the scene of the novel is laid in the Isle of Man. Victor Stowell, son of the Deemster, falls in love with Fenella Stanley, daughter of the Governor. She, however, had decided to devote her life to work in a Woman's Settlement and accepted the position of its resident, Lady Warden, binding herself to remain there for seven years.

"Helen of the Old House" by Harold Bell Wright. The Eyerson Press, Toronto, $2.00.

It has not been the writer's privilege to read any of the previous works of Mr. Harold Bell Wright although the name is a familiar one in the realm of books. If, however, all his former novels are nearly as good as "Helen of the Old House" then they are well worth reading. Mr. Wright reveals a real knowledge of human nature in this study of the mill girl who through one of those strange streaks of fortune, becomes extremely wealthy and yet, allowed her sympathies to remain with the humbler people with whom she had spent the earlier years of her life. "Helen of the Old House" is a book which should do those who read it a tremendous amount of good, showing up as it does, the failings and virtues of human life.

Glencoe's Passengers.

S.S. Glencoe arrived at Placentia from the Westward at noon yesterday and the following passengers transferred to the local train reaching town last night: Mrs. Capt. Blandford, George LeMessurier, C. Rose, Dr. O'Connell, C. May, Rev. H. Martin, F. Bennett, Mrs. Melvin, F. Hewitt, G. LeFevre, Mrs. B. Holden, Miss A. LeFevre, Miss H. Lorenson, Miss N. Dwyer, Miss N. Dobbin, Mrs. A. J. Mosley, Miss H. Chesseman, A. Blandford, R. Rowell, Miss L. Parsons, L. German, C. Carter, Miss Pratt, Miss E. Bennett, Miss Pierce, Miss E. Turpin, T. LeFevre, J. Highlanders Defeated.

STAR AND RES. MUST PLAY OFF. By three goals to all the Star defeated the Highlanders in the last scheduled game of this year's League series. A play off for the championship is now necessary between the Star and B.I.S. Last evening's game was played under difficulties, as the ground was not in a condition conducive to good football. The Star had the best of play throughout the game. The championship game will be played on Monday evening and great excitement prevails over the probable result.

GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS. THE GENUINE GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS. PREPARED BY DR. J. H. BROWN AND DR. J. H. BROWN.

The Good Old Days.

We often read in the papers and hear people say with a certain amount of earnest in their voices, "When I was a boy—or girl—things were very different," and invariably they mean that things were much better.

Now I would like to give those, no doubt, well-meaning people a taste of "Black Magic," or by some miracle let them experience again some of those "better times" of which they tell about.

Now, in every department of life, the conditions to-day—excepting those caused by the recent trade depression—should be better than they were a quarter of a century or more ago, and we should have only our own selves to blame if such were not the case.

Look back in imagination—if you are able to do so—at the shopping facilities of, say, thirty years ago. Compare them with those of to-day. Compare the old style shop with the present-day department stores.

TRINITY.

The story of the Indians at Trinity two hundred years ago, is continued from last week.

The first halting place of the Indians after they left Trinity, was at the side of a small pond at the top of the pinch. (God's Cove Pond). Here fire was kindled, and a hasty mid-day meal was prepared, and partaken in silence. The Medicine Man, however, was by no means silent, and his shrieks and the rattling of the ring bolts could be heard, as he ran in a circle around a clearing to the North West of the pond. Just as the others were ready to continue their journey, the Medicine Man appeared, and approaching the Chief he asked that the land he had just gone around be given to him as his own possession. The Chief granted his request, and from that date down to the present, it has been known as the Doctor's Farm. Passing hurriedly along the shores of another pond, to which was given the name of Indian Pond, the setting sun found them at the foot of a large sheet of water where a halt was made, the evening meal prepared, and then, all were soon asleep.

In the morning a pow-wow was held to discuss future action. It was decided that the shores of this pond to which they gave the name of Trinity Pond—should be their present camping ground. The flat, level country was claimed by the Chief as his own, to be known as "Pea-Owl's (Powell's) Country." The hills in the distance were given to the braves, who at once proceeded to take formal possession of them, indicating the same by hanging their large powder horns on the highest points, and thus naming them for ever as "The Powder-horn hills." The Chief then spoke loud and long upon the causes that had led to their having to leave their old camping ground at Three-Waters; and there and then they registered a vow that six moons from that date, they would return by the way they had come, and scalp every mother's son of them—be they from Devonshire or Limerick.

Just then a shriek and a splash were heard. The Medicine Man who had been practicing a war-dance on a boulder not far from the shore, had lost his balance and fallen into the water, the heavy ring bolts around his neck carrying him quickly to the bottom. His body was recovered during the day, but before it was consigned to the earth, the ring bolts were removed from his neck. One was embedded in a rock, at a point of land where his body had drifted on shore, and the other was driven into a crevice of the rock from which he had fallen to his death; to mark the spot and (though not a part of the Indians plan) to keep the white man guessing as to why the ring bolts had been placed there.

A long winter gave place to spring, and in spite of the secrecy maintained by the Indians as to their presence and intentions, the settlers at Trinity suspected a treacherous raid some day, and they prepared accordingly. Some cannon were mounted on a point of land at the entrance to the Harbour, and elevated to sweep the hill-side to the north-west, at a moment's notice. Twenty "youngsters" from Devonshire, clad in moleskin, and hobnailed bluchers kept continuous watch—except during meal times and at night. They could not think of allowing anything to interfere either with their food or their sleep.

No one could be happier than they were, for their daily rations per man were, a bushel of peas, two halfpints of small bread, and a quart of rum. One night, as they lay prone upon their backs, snoring to beat the fog whistle, and when it was too dark for them to see the toes of their bluchers, they were surprised by the Indians; and all, except one man (who took to the water on an empty peasant barrel) were scalped and clubbed to death. The Devonshire, however, had used their hobnailed bluchers with such terrible effects during the attack, that the Indians, though victorious, gradually succumbed to their bruises, and when the dawn broke, there stood one solitary Indian—the only survivor of his tribe.

Looking across the water he saw the man who had escaped on the peasant barrel, trying to climb the Nordic cliff. The Indian, with a muttered curse, elevated a loaded cannon which he found at the fort, and pointing it towards where the man was climbing, he fired. The aim, however, was not correct, and instead of hitting the moleskin jumper, the ball embedded itself in the cliff, and there it still remains to bear witness to the Indian's bad shot, and to attest the truth of my story.

Then seeing a oodlesine skiff putting off from Slade's, propelled by six stalwart Irishmen, and Major Kelson in the bow, armed with a cocked hat and a crooked sword, the Indian declined to quit. As the skiff grounded on the mussel-bed, a hundred feet from the shore, the Major called upon the Indian to surrender, and all the Irishmen jumped overboard to catch "the miserable haythen." The Indian, however, sprang into deep water, and swimming across the Narrows, he disappeared into a cove, at the base of Skirwink. As a rolling sea filled the mouth of the cove, one of the Irishmen was heard to say: "Be gob that's the last of he, and he's drowned like a rat in a hole." The Indian, however, did not think so, for he had been there before, and within an hour he came out of the other end of the cove at Dog Cove, as dry as a bone, and taking to the woods he was soon lost to sight.

During the summer, some men who were deer-hunting came across him, and as he was still suffering from the effects of a kick he had received during the night of the fight, he was captured, and brought back to Trinity, where, he was born some twenty years before, and where, during the balance of his life he was employed as a servant. He was taught the rudiments of Christianity by good old Parson Clinch, and at his baptism he was given the name of John August. John after Parson Clinch, and August after the month in which he was captured. He did not live long, and when he died he was buried in the old Church-yard at Trinity—the last male of the Beothics who had been civilized. His grave was not marked, but in the burial register of old St. Paul's is the entry: "October 28th, 1788. Interred, John August, a native Indian of this island, and servant to Jeffrey and Street." The bodies of the Devonshires, together with those of the Indians, were buried where they fell—on the shore of the Port Point—and to this day the rough mounds tell the sad and silent story, and an occasional bone coming to the surface, or washed out by the tide, proves how true it all was.

Whilst preparing these notes, my thoughts went back some sixty years ago to the old fire engine that was brought to Trinity from England by John Bingley Garland, Esq., a hundred years ago, and which was one of the wonderful things of my boyhood days. The little yellow painted cottage-roof house that still stands between Ryan Bros. office and "the Big House" was built for its home, and was known as "the Engine House." There is its brilliant colours of red and green; with metal joints and axles; always carefully oiled; the yards of rubber suction pipe, and the discharge pipe, with its long brass nozzle, coiled ready for use at a moment's notice; there, surrounded with some twenty or thirty hardwood buckets hanging on the walls of the building, it stood (to us as boys) a thing of wondrous beauty and of most wonderful construction! As boys, we were not often privileged to see it. Occasionally, on some fine day in summer, the man in charge of it, would throw open the front doors of the Engine House, to let the air blow through it, and then, as soon as the boys heard of it they would hurry to the spot, and—into the Engine House!—Oh! no. We were not allowed even inside the fence, so with open mouths we feasted our eyes upon what we could see by peering between the palings of the fence. There were two occasions when all our boyish delights were rolled into one, and these were, when the engine was taken out for the man to practice with, and when it was called into action to assist in putting out a fire. Even then, as boys, we had to keep out "on a wing," as the only use the man in charge of the nozzle had for us was to pretend that he thought we were the fire centre, and then to direct the water accordingly. He was always a good shot, and many a boy had the fire of his enthusiasm put out by a stream of water that soaked him from head to foot, and sent him home to be dealt with by a higher Court, where, from under the blankets, as a part of his sentence, he could listen to the shouts of the other boys, who had sense enough to keep out of "gun shot" from the nozzle and were still enjoying the fun.

We did not have many real fires in those days. The only one that I can remember, at which the Fire Engine was called out, was that on the present premises of Mr. Joseph Morris, when it was owned by Mr. James Verge. Then it did good work, and the buildings were saved, largely because of the presence of the engine. When it was too far from a well to enable the firemen to fill it by means of the suction pipe, the tank was filled and kept filled with water by the use of buckets that formed a part of the outfit. I had not seen the engine for nearly fifty years, so last week I asked Mr. Ryan if I might see it, to find, if possible, the date of its construction, and the name of the builder. Mr. Ryan kindly sent a man to show me where it is kept, and the sight of it brought back such a flood of memories, as were overpowering in their variety and reality.

Owing to its having been well nigh surrounded by other things stored in the building, I could not manage to get a good view of its different parts; hence I did not find the brass plate with the date, etc., on it—if there is such a plate—but I found the maker's name and address painted in large white letters on the front panel, viz., "Hopwood, Black Friar's Bridge, Leedes." I should like to be permitted to have charge of it for a while; long enough to get the engine in working order; to paint it up in its pristine beauty of colour; to start a fire; (by permission) to call for volunteers; and to run it around the harbor to the scene of the fire. Well! all this may be the foolish yearning of one, not so young as he used to be; and reality might not equal anticipation; but I believe it would be interesting, to both participants and spectators. The Trinity Indians who remember the old Engine, will kindly hold themselves in readiness to respond to the call for volunteers, when I get it all ready for action.

Some people who come to Newfoundland from other countries, often laugh at words used by Newfoundlanders, under the impression that all the words so used have had their origin in, and are peculiar to Newfoundland. I admit, that with our habit of running two or three words together sometimes, it is difficult for a stranger to understand some sentences of ordinary conversation—and yet even that habit was brought to Newfoundland from Devonshire, and is by no means unknown there to-day. It is the same in respect of names by which certain things are known to us. For instance, the berry known in Nova Scotia as the "blue berry" is known to us as the "hart," whilst it is spelled "whortle." There are those who would tell us that hart is a word invented by Newfoundlanders, and unknown in England. This, however, is not so, for as I write I have before me a report of one Edward Hale, the only survivor of Sir Humphrey Gilbert's expedition to Newfoundland in 1583. In that report he says: "The soil along the coast of Newfoundland is not deep. Berries, passing 'wrests' grow there, and a berry which 'we call harts, good, and wholesome 'to eat.' This was in 1583 and those berries were then known as harts in Devonshire. Hence the word hart (right or wrong) did not originate with Newfoundlanders.

WHAT ONE OF THE BEST KNOWN TRAVELLERS IN CANADA SAYS.

"Now I am going to give you an uncollected testimonial as they say in the patent medicine advertising. Heretofore I have had a profound contempt for patent medicines, particularly so-called 'Lantic.' Perhaps this is due to the reason that I have been blessed with a sturdy constitution, and never have been ill a day in my life. One day last fall, after a hard day's tramp in the slush of Montreal, I developed a severe pain in my legs and of course like a man who has never had anything wrong with him physically, I complained rather boldly. The good little wife says: 'I will rub them with some Lantic I have.' 'Go ahead,' I said, to humor her. 'Well, in she comes with a bottle of Lantic's Lintment and gets busy. Believe me, the pain disappeared a few minutes after, and you can tell the world I said so.' (Signed) FRANK E. JOHNS, Montreal.

Do You Use Many Words?

What is the extent of your vocabulary? Have you ever tried to estimate it? A certain learned professor, after carefully studying for nearly a year the speech of some farm hands, estimates that they manage to make themselves understood perfectly on a vocabulary that embraces about 3000 words.

The majority of educated citizens confine themselves to no more than two thousand different spoken words. The average literary man uses about double this number. If you write a book or play of any considerable length.

This seems to show that modern writers are sparing in the respect of comparison with the earlier ones. Shakespeare, for example, whose vocabulary has been laboriously checked by scores of enthusiasts, used just over fifteen thousand different words. Milton comes second with about eight thousand.

What makes these records the more surprising is that the English language has grown enormously since their time. Samuel Johnson, who published in 1773 the first complete English dictionary, managed to collect no more than 50,000 words. Webster's dictionary, published seventy years later, contained 100,000.

Towards the close of the nineteenth century the English language passed the 200,000 mark, and dictionaries today contain nearly half a million words.

Samoa, the Island of Romantic Glamour

Washington, D.C., Sept.—The reported desire of Samoans formerly under Germany to be assigned to Great Britain rather than to the mandate of New Zealand, as provided in the Peace Treaty, is of interest to Americans since the other half of those far away Pacific Islands belong to the United States.

"The romantic glamour more recently cast about the Marquesas has been attached to Samoa ever since Robert Louis Stevenson penned his "Footnote to History" and "Vermilion Letters," says a bulletin from the Washington, D.C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

"Other visitors than Stevenson sing most extravagant praises of Samoa's charms. A New Zealand soldier pictures one of the archipelago as 'an island where a heavy odor of green foliage pervades the air, where there is laughter at the bathing pool, and mellow harmonies at the meeting places where at every turn the guests meet the glint of the sun on warm, reddish waters or travels languorous along the graceful lines of magnificent brown men and women.'

Nature Plays Queer Pranks. "Unusual physical features have much to do with the happy first impression Samoa makes upon its guests. The islands are surrounded, in large part, by coral reefs. Those mark out the ribbons of acid water—canals of amethystine blue—which skirt the shore lines.

"On Savili, largest island of the group, is a volcano which began an eruption in 1906 and continued for four years. Volcanoes are responsible for the quaternary effects along the exposed coast of Tutuila and the southern slopes of Savili. Liquid lava cooled in places overhangs the ocean, forming caves with vertical fissures. Giant boulders beat upon these caves, forcing air and air to emerge in soda fountain fashion, through the upright apertures.

"Jet black rocks mark a part of the Tutuila coast, and the white foam of the breakers against these affords another striking natural spectacle. "The first enemy territory to be occupied by the British in the World was Samoa. Upon arrival of New Zealand forces, the Germans announced they would neither surrender nor retreat. Announcement was made in the albatross that the Pearl of the Pacific had been invaded.

"The people of the island add to its lure—whether it be the natives, pure Polynesians of splendid physique and character unspiced by alien stock; or the beach combers, those living story books of the South Seas.

Islands Bilk at Prohibition. "New Zealand's rigid enforcement of prohibition is cited as one reason for the agitation of European settlers for British rule. The United States was a party, with Great Britain and Germany, to the treaty of 1889 which made the islands 'dry.'

"But neither treaty nor the eighteenth amendment apply technically to the Samoan national drink, Kiva, which is non-alcoholic, but intoxicating. Its effects are discernible, however, only from the waist down. He who imbibes too freely may lose the use of his legs, but retain his wits. Wherefore sailors mixed the Kiva with gin to insure a 100 per cent. 'jag.'

"Gentle, too is the method of compounding this beverage. The roots of a sort of pepper plant are chewed by young girls and deposited in bowls, where male youths may pour in water to the proper dilution. The chief Kiva chewer in a native village is a sort of permanent Queen of Love and Beauty.

"The liquor leaves an enamel deposit in the bowls which is susceptible of high polish. The natives believe a similar encrustation occurs in the stomachs of consumers. Indeed, one visitor was told that a native addict died because he snoozed too vigorously, and his stomach had become so brittle that it cracked.

Beauty Aids of Samoan Belles. "Dainty Miss America deubs her nose with a powder puff when she goes forth to conquer; the Samoan belle oils or greases her head and body from the waist up when she appears in evening dress. A closer likeness arises, however, when the latter bleaches her hair with lime, or stains it with red clay.

"Not only are Samoans physically attractive; they are mentally alert, tractable, and bear no grudges, though easily swayed by emotions. One phase of their social organization, a sort of communism which calls for the sharing of any property with him who asks for it, is accounted a handicap in efforts to better their conditions. But it has been said facetiously that their political campaign methods might be worthy of emulation. For when a leader of a movement desires to gain support, he goes to the abode of the head men of the opposing faction, prostrates himself, and goes through many postures of humiliation, until assent is forthcoming. However, the assent of the petitioner is considered an insult and may lead to fighting.

American Interest in Islands. "Of the fourteen Samoan islands, but four are important. Of these four, Savili, the largest, and Upolu, the most valuable commercially, now are under New Zealand mandate. Tutuila and Manua are possessions of the United States. Tutuila is reckoned the most beautiful of the group, but its significance, especially in view of present day political interest in the Pacific, lies in its possession of one of the best and safest harbors in all the South Seas.

"The establishment of a naval station at Pago Pago, on Tutuila, was not the first contact of the American navy with Samoa. Rear-Admiral Charles Wilkes, discoverer of the Antarctic Continent, to whom was paid belated recognition when a monument to him was unveiled in Arlington National Cemetery last year, made surveys of the islands on his famous Pacific voyage.

Cheaper Flour in Sight.

(Trade Review.)
There has been a steady decline for many days, and we are now in sight of $12.00 flour per barrel, and may hope before Christmas to see the price of good flour go down to about $10.00 per barrel. There is a very close adjustment of supply to demand in flour the world over and as long as Russia is unable to feed her many former customers we must not hope to have any settled conditions in the wheat market. Should anything untoward happen in the crop situation in Argentina and Australia during the coming winter the situation would of course undergo a radical change and may become unpleasantly sensational. The wheat crop in India is another factor of supply to be reckoned with and in view of the political disorder in that country, we must look for rapid fluctuations there. Here we see another instance of the inflexible law that the development of commerce and industry depends almost wholly on having a contented people with political stability.

Quality of Labrador and Shore Fish Good.

The first fish cargoes are reported to have sailed from the Labrador Coast direct to the Mediterranean market this week, and no doubt, will have arrived there before our foreign readers get this paper. We feel confident that they will be well pleased with the quality of the Labrador fish shipped this year. In some localities on the Labrador Coast, the fishery opened early and the weather being suitable for curing, the shippers were enabled to despatch their shipments fully a month earlier than in recent years. Let us hope that it will mean an increased demand for later shipments, especially when it is realized what an excellent quality of fish we have to go forward this season.

We are pleased to report that the quality of shore fish this season is exceedingly good. Last year we had an extremely hot summer, and it was estimated that 5 per cent, at least of the early shore fish was sun-burnt. This summer the weather was cool with many north and westerly breezes, which was the very condition needed to cure fish properly. The weather still continues good and every fine day now means thousands of dollars in the fishermen's pocket. We confidently expect to see a very large proportion of strictly first class merchantable prime fish this season. This is a fact that should be widely known amongst foreign buyers, and we can assure them that they can rely on this information as being strictly correct.—Trade Review.

Peculiar Death Prophecies.

Coleridge and Keats, two of the greatest poets of the last century, met only once. The meeting took place close by Parliament Fields, and Coleridge said afterwards: "There is death in that land." Keats died within a year.

After George Fox, the founder of the Quakers, had met Cromwell riding in Hampton Court Park, he wrote to his diary, "Before I came to him, as he rode at the head of his Life Guards, I saw and felt a wail of death go forth against him, and when I came to him he looked like a dead man." The great Protector died a few weeks later.

Lincoln, the great President of the United States, had a premonition of the tragic fate which was in store for him on April 14th, 1865. At a meeting on the morning of the fatal day he was observed to wear a grave and troubled look. When General Grant asked what was the matter, Lincoln replied that he had a strange dream. In the afternoon his mood changed to one of extreme gaiety, and his wife remarked, unusually: "I have seen you thus only once before, and that was just before our WHITE died." Lincoln was shot the next night.

First a naval officer and then an astrologer, Richard James Morrison, otherwise "Zadkiel," scored at least one big success in the realm of prophecy. In his almanac for 1881, published in the autumn of 1880, was the passage: "The position of Saturn in May will be evil for all persons born upon August 26th. Among the sufferers I regret to see the worthy Prince Consort of the realm." The Prince Consort died in December, 1861.

Wedding Bells.

St. Thomas's Church was the scene of a very pretty wedding at 7 p.m. Thursday, when Miss Agnes Hazelton of Briggs and Mr. Sandy Downton of Mr. A. G. Carnall's employ, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony was performed by Rev. (Capt.) Clayton, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives of the contracting parties. The bride wore a travelling costume of navy blue with hat to match. The bridesmaid was Miss Clara Downton, sister of the groom, and Mr. Wm. Downton, his brother, performed the duties of father giver, while the groom was ably supported by Mr. P. Dwyer. After the customary the bride and groom drove to the groom's residence, 17 Flemming Street, where a reception was held and the happy couple received the congratulations of their friends. After supper, which was an excellent one, an enjoyable evening of music and dancing was spent. The presents were valuable and numerous owing to the wide popularity of the young couple.

How Cameos Are Cut. Girls Will Be Girls.

Cameos are cut from onyx and sardonyx stones, which are said to be so plentiful on the Uruguay River in Brazil that ships often carry them away as ballast. Nevertheless, perfect pieces of large size are costly. This stone is preferred for cameos because of its hardness and durability and is suitable for such work owing to the fact that it comes in layers of contrasting colors as black and white, black and cream or red and white. When the cut figure is sunk into the stone instead of being raised the cutting is called an intaglio. The cost of these gems is due to the time and skill required in the work. Formerly a small gem might occupy an artist for a year or more, but with modern appliances the work can be done more rapidly. Still the ancient work bears the palm for artistic excellence. The cutting is now done by holding the stone against a revolving drill, whose steel face is covered with diamond dust. No steel is hard enough to cut the stone. The utmost patience and caution and delicate handling are required, as the slightest slip may spoil the work.

Mrs. Froble, of Marblehead, Mass., 70 years old, declares that the young women of to-day are "brazen ladies" with their short skirts and short hair and peek-a-boo waists, and goodness knows where the mighty things are headed for. Mrs. Packard, of Brockton, Mass., 84 years old, declares that the short skirts are much more sensible than the trailing skirts she was bothered with as a girl, that the peek-a-boo waists are really pretty, and hobbles of hair is both comely and comfortable. "People are just beginning to learn how to live," remarks this octogenarian. "When I was a girl there were always a lot of old folks standing around saying that girls shouldn't wear such clothes and carry on so, and they didn't know what was going to become of the brazen hussies."
So there, as the philosopher says, you are. It is a difference in temperament.

ARTICLE IV.

THE MAN CLEARING GROUND.

In my last article I stated that the young French lad who made his home at Salmonier, had cleared some ground and enlarged his homestead. In that act of clearing ground he proved himself a benefactor; and not only a benefactor to Salmonier, but a benefactor to Newfoundland. His industry in this direction brought to him boundless living, and he always had enough and to spare. His work was really the basis of trade; for the basis of all trade lies in the tilling of the ground, and in the delving of the mine, and upon these industries the great fabric of commerce largely depends. Where tillage of the ground is, there cannot be much poverty; and one reason why there is so much poverty in the world, and so much congestion in the cities, is because so many people have forsaken the rural life, and have crowded into the cities, and over-taxed the city's resources. This is the weak spot of modern industry, and until it be remedied, it is vain to hope for much better conditions. The cities are piling up debt and taxation, and the cost of production is constantly advancing; and in the meantime the question is everywhere heard "What is the matter?" The matter is, we have got to live a simpler life. The present conditions of city life the world over are not congenial to the physical development of the people, nor are these conditions the best for their higher and spiritual development. They cannot be the best, because the extremes are too great, and the statistics of modern life indicate the deterioration of the race.

NEGLECT OF AGRICULTURE.

Much could be said upon this matter; but as it applies more to other countries than to Newfoundland, we shall not now treat it further, as our present observations are about our own country, and they apply to our own people especially. We have lots of things in our favour in Newfoundland that we do not avail of; and among them is our soil, which should be a great adjunct to the life and homes of the people. Hence our interest in the man whom we saw clearing ground. We halted in our journey and questioned him, and learned from him his condition. He was an industrious man, and the owner of his house and the ground about it. He was blessed with a healthy wife, and with sons and daughters, and his family was what one would call large. For several summers he had worked at Sydney, but of late he had stayed home. From his ground he got fair returns, and by clearing an acre or two more he greatly increased his returns. The new ground, which he was breaking just at the time we passed, was excellent soil, and the work was done between whistles. Thus he was able to enhance his earnings, and to pull along fairly well. His lot was that of homely living, and one hundred dollars was as good to him in his station, as two hundred would be to one of his class living within the city. By his industry and manner of life he was a producer, and was helping to solve the problem of the day, and to relieve the strain of taxation; but his neighbour who had sold out his little estate, and had gone to the city to live, had increased the strain of taxation, and had done so in a two-fold degree: first by ceasing to be a producer, and secondly by swelling the idle multitudes of the large cities are the parasites of the state, and the over-crowding and congestion of our capitals constitute the menace of the times.

THE REAL PRODUCER.

Thus the man whom we saw clearing the ground was helping out the problem of city congestion. Perhaps he was unconscious of the part he was playing, or of how far-reaching his industry was. It was in this light that we saw him and wrote of him. The man who sold out his little homestead, or who closed it up, came to the city, and being unable to get a house to live in, was obliged to make a shift by getting two or three small rooms. He, therefore intensified the discomfort of some other family, to oblige him, inconveniencing themselves by taking him in. Half of what this man could have earned in the city, would do him at home was comparatively well off. Yes, dependent upon the fluctuations of the labor market, and upon daily wages, and was without any source of additional revenue. His position was that of living from hand to mouth, while his neighbour who worked his ground at home was comparatively well off. Yes, the man clearing the ground was a real producer. His newly-cleared acres added to the earning power of the state, and increased his own means of living. The country and the world at large want more of this class of man; for the congestion of city life has reached its zenith, and sooner or later the line must be drawn. Taxation is almost at its limit, and if financial collapse is to be avoided, the simpler rural life of two generations ago will have to be considered. Men the world over are clamouring for labor; but the cities cannot create labor beyond their regular routine. The cities thus falling to provide labor, the Governments are being appealed to, but even Governments cannot create constant work. They may do so for awhile, but it finally ends in increased taxation, which further increases the burden as the years pass. Taxation has reached its limit, we say. What then is the solution? or is there any solution to it? We think there is; and that among others the man clearing the ground, represented the most fundamental of them all.

Hard Facts for Hard Heads.

It is gratifying to find that the appeal on behalf of starving Russia is meeting with a noble Christian response in all lands which can spare a little of their already attenuated wealth for those needs are greater than their own. Britain will do her share, and in doing it she will be sowing seeds of future good-will, as well as helping to save Europe from the pestilence which is always bred from wholesale famine. We did our best to prevent Russia falling a victim to the false doctrines of Bolshevism, but our failure in that respect must not make us hard-hearted in the presence of actual disaster. Our generosity now will prove the sincerity of our counsel in the past.

There is very little doubt, in our opinion, that the tragedy of Russia is having a sobering effect on our own would-be extremists. The Caspian by-election has exposed the numerical weakness of the noisy sect who call themselves Communists, and who derive their inspiration mainly from Clydeside. Barely a tenth of the electors of that somewhat advanced South Wales mining centre have any sort of sympathy with Leninism; the other 90 per cent are solid for constitutionalism, which means progress, but a progress that is orderly and evolutionary rather than violent and revolutionary. It is fortunate for us that it was Russia, not Britain, which made the great experiment that has resulted in such an unparalleled catastrophe. We are in the fortunate position of being able to benefit from the lesson without having to bear the cost of it.

We are at last, there are grounds for believing, getting into a somewhat saner state of mind, politically and industrially. Hard facts are appealing to hard British heads, and it is to be hoped the Irish people will permit us to include them in the compliment.

Ireland's reply to the British offer, does not effectually close the door to further negotiations, although we could have wished that it had been couched in more conciliatory terms.

Time, as ever, is on the side of conciliation, and Irishmen, however bitter and unaccommodating, cannot escape the influence of the new era which is at hand—an era, we believe, of peace, friendship, and co-operation, not only between class and class, but also between race and race.—Liverpool Weekly Post.

De Valera's Only Chance.

(Mail and Empire Toronto)
It must be plain to De Valera that the officers which have just been announced for the British Prime Minister are the best word in the way of cooperation to the Sinn Fein movement. In what party or composition of parties may hold the reins of power in Britain, there can be no hope of anything from it more than has been volunteered by Mr. Lloyd George. No future British Government will go farther than he has gone to satisfy the Irish demand for self-government. De Valera and his councillors know this. We feel sure therefore that unless they allow themselves to be pushed on by the wild men of the Sinn Fein movement, they will bow to the logic of the situation and accept the statement that has been proffered to them. What alternative have they? There is the arbitrament of arms, but what sane man in De Valera's place would entertain the idea of so deciding the issue, especially when there is no hope left to contend for? Nearly everything about the Sinn Feiners is a mystery. To be sure, the full Sinn Fein program is ready to accept, but it does not go to the length of permitting the establishment of an Irish Republic. Government of the Irish Dominion would have to be under the British Crown and on the lines of the constitutional system established in Britain and the overseas Dominions. No secession of Ireland will be allowed either now or in the future. There must be no coercion of Ulster. With these reservations and with the further condition that the waters about Ireland remain under the control of the British navy, everything the Sinn Feiners want will be granted to them if they will at once give up their strife, revert to an orderly state of society and contentedly settle down under the new scheme of government. No force that an intransigent Ireland could employ would avail to win more than what Ireland has now the right of. Further resort to futile force would only have the effect of cancelling the large gains scored by negotiation. The Sinn Feiners know that, though they themselves have resorted to force they had hardly yet begun to taste the effects of coerced British force. They have surely not the madness to suppose that they can wrest their country from British occupation and can compel Ulster to submit to Dublin rule. They must know what short work would be made of such an attempt. Having set out so far as to carry on negotiations with De Valera, the leader of a rebellion, and yielded very largely to the rebels' terms, Britain has impressed the rest of the world as the United States, where the Sinn Fein agents and their adherents have been doing their best to breed war between this country and Britain, with her desire to please the Irish.
If De Valera does not accept terms that have now been offered to him the result of the conference will be a moral defeat for him and his cause. Sympathy in the United States will fall away. Not only so, but the mass of the peace-loving people in Ireland who have been terrorized into countenancing the murder campaign of the Sinn Feiners will turn against the latter as will public opinion everywhere else. De Valera will be a failure then if he does not embrace this opportunity of continuing at the head of the Southern Irish people. Therefore we have hopes that the negotiations will not end in failure. In other words, we assume that De Valera has sense enough not deliberately to wreck his own future as well as to frustrate the hopes of his party. If he does only the British Empire that all eyes are fixed upon him at the present moment. In the United States as well his measure is being taken. If he elects wisely now, he will begin the government of Southern Ireland with the goodwill and confidence of millions of people. If he makes a wrong choice and prefers continued warfare to acceptance of the terms of settlement that are extended to him, he will be condemned everywhere as a reckless and incapable leader, and will in times to come be pointed to as one of the demagogues who have come to grief.

MY COLUMN

(By the Club-Editor)
THE STOLEN BRIDE.
Last Spasm.
CHAPTER IV. (Continued)
All eyes audibly moved in the direction of the speaker. Jacks creaked as their owners craned them in their efforts to have a look at the unknown. A sudden stillness, broken only by the splashing of the tears which fell from Sairy's eyes, lay over all. At last Bill Blood, hardly desperado that he was, found his tongue. (Where had he lost it?—Editor) "Who be yew, he started in the manner usually affected by modern outlaws. The unwelcome stranger turned his piercing gaze on the speaker. "Blood," he said quietly in a husky voice which rang out sharply in the still morning air. (Something wrong here.—Editor) "I am come for my revenge. I am Jim Gunchew."
CHAPTER V.
THE END OF BILL BLOOD.
Astounded for the moment Bill Blood was at a loss for something to say. Suddenly, recollecting his scattered senses, he drew his gun and fired point blank at where Jim Gunchew stood. But, Jim was not there. Quick as a flash, he ducked, and his head took Bill Blood full in the solar-plexus. With a sickening thud, and an awe inspiring screech, Bill fell heavily and losing consciousness, lay quite still without uttering a word. (How eloquent.—Editor) The remainder of the outlaw band, seized to action by their leader's fall, drew their guns and knives which they prepared to level at our hero. Even as they did so, a volley rang out and the leader of the right ear of each bandit disappeared. The hills surrounding the valley were bristling with shining pistol barrels. Jim Gunchew had made his plans well. In the meantime, what of Sairy? She had been a silent witness of the whole proceedings. Now that it was over, she fell with a heavy sigh into the arms of the man of Jim Gunchew. "Has yew got a stick of gum?" asked Jim as he smothered her in his embrace.
Half an hour after Jim was explaining his timely arrival while Bill Blood and his gang were being hung by the feet to a hastily erected gallows.
"But Jim, dear, I thought yew was dead," muttered Sairy, smiling up to her husband.
"Now, Sairy, I fell into a pond and I came to the surface where I found a cave," replied Jim. "I entered it and found it contained a heap of golden bars and what war more to the point, plenty of food and drink. I followed it up and after a long time, (it seemed like years), I came to an opening near this valley and there I found the boys looking for yew. There is no whole

RED DISCUSSES LIFE.
It's a funny-old world, as my father has said.
And I can't understand it at all.
Whenever there's sugar spread over my bread.
That's the time it is certain to fall.
When the tablecloth's soiled and an accident then.
Wouldn't matter, I'm next as can be.
But I'm bound to spill over the gravy boat when Ma's put on a clean cloth for tea.
There's nothing goes wrong when we're living alone.
But whenever there's company here.
And Ma wants my good bringing up to be shown.
I've got to do something that's queer.
I can play all day long, and not get in the dirt.
The times when I really am all right.
But when Ma rigs me out in my best suit and shirt.
There's always wet mud where I fall.
There's always a lot of folks hanging about.
When I'm not doing things as I should.
But nobody's looking at me, I've found out.
The times when I really am all right.
If I can be neat when there's no one so near.
Why must all of my badness be seen?
Why can't I be good when it's proper to be.
And clean when the tablecloth's clean?
24 Persons Drowned.
By a Collapse of Bridge at Chester, Ohio, 47 Persons Dead in the San Antonio Flood.
Chester, Ohio, Sept. 11.—Twenty-four persons were drowned, and five others seriously injured in the collapse, last night, of the bridge spanning the Chester River, at Chester, Pa.
A small wrought-iron girder, part of the support for a foot path along the side of the structure, which had been half eaten by rust, gave way under the weight of nearly a hundred persons who were attracted to the spot by the cries of a drowning boy, and precipitated the victims into the river.
SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Sept. 11.—The list of known dead from the flood of early Saturday was 47 late today. The dead and missing are estimated at approximately 250.

Newfoundland and its Blind.

(By J. M. HOWLEY.)
ARTICLE V.

THE NEED FOR SYMPATHETIC INTEREST IN THE CAUSE.

Without attempting a discussion of economics, which I am ill qualified to do, I wish to lay before my readers what I consider good reasons for our sympathetic interest in the Newfoundland Training and Employment Institution for the Blind.

The state owes every man a living. The prosperity of every country depends on its population, and Governments use their utmost endeavours to foster increased population, as well by immigration as by natural increase. It is a natural corollary therefore, that the state should be obliged to find a means of supporting that population which it hopes to attain. Hence the truth of the statement that the state owes every man a living. But in so far as the liberal sense of the nation is concerned, it is not entirely true; for the living to be expected from the state by the individual really means "the facility for making a livelihood." The state recognizes this principle and strives to give the fullest effect to it. As witness the endeavour on the part of the authorities to provide work for the unemployed at the present time. Of course the benefit is not entirely to the individual, but is in part reaped by the state itself, as it should be. Continuous work and continuous earning by the individual are reflected in the assets of the state treasury, both fixed and liquid. Money in circulation makes for greater consuming power, and in turn, for larger revenues. In endless chain fashion, increased revenue to the state sets the means for further public works, and further benefit to the individual. So that the interests of the individual become those of the state, and those of the state revert to the advantage of the individual.

Now, as I have said, the state recognizes its liability to its members, and for such as are able bodied, it provides the means of making a living, so far as in its power lies. For those who are incapable of self support it provides various homes: for the destitute, the Poor Asylum; for the insane the Hospital for the Insane, for the temporarily incapacitated, hospitals, and so on. Besides these homes, monetary assistance is granted to others of the poor, and old age pensions provided for those who have lived beyond the age at which they can continue their ordinary occupations.

In this country, however, the state has neglected to provide for at least one section of its members, what may reasonably be expected of it. And that section is its blind. The expenditure of some $70,000.00, spread over a period of thirty five years, for the education of some of the blind at Halifax, is all very well in its way, but can hardly be claimed to be a liquidation of the debt owed to these unfortunate members of the state. Consequently I claim, that the state should do more for them, and should show that it recognizes its responsibility to them fully, and that without undue delay.

From another point of view, the state benefits by the labour of its members, and the more members that can be placed on the active list of workers, the better for the state. It is quite apparent to the simplest mind that any man who is self supporting contributes to his own and to the revenue of the state, whilst he that has to be supported at state expense is a burden to the state and its contributing members. Therefore, if one person, presently incapable of supporting himself, can be changed to become independent of state support, a gain is made by the state, and the burden of the individuals comprising the state correspondingly lessened. And the decrease in the burden becomes greater in proportion to the number so raised to the position of independence.

If this principle be applied to our blind, a great gain could be shown. We are spending a considerable sum of money—about $5,000.00 per year—as poor relief to blind people. Of course the greater portion of this is in all probability paid to aged blind. But let us assume that but one bodied blind person is receiving the pauper dole, and that the amount he receives is but $25.00 per year; and let us further assume that this individual is changed to become a self supporting member of the community, earning say $1,000.00 per year. It is quite to imagine that his contribution to the revenue is twenty five per cent. of his earnings. This would mean a saving from a monetary standpoint of $275.00 per year on one individual and a proportionate decrease in the contributions of all other members of the state. Apply this to some one hundred and seventy blind people who are probably eligible to become independent, and the result is astonishing. This deals only with the monetary point of view. The sympathetic person will see an even greater gain in the change from dependency to the comparative happiness arising from the metamorphosis; and who can gauge the value of this gain?

All this advantage can be brought about by the co-operation of the members comprising the state, and this co-operation is what my efforts are designed to accomplish. But I have neither wit nor words, nor worth.

Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech to stir men's blood, and I would that those who are more competent to deal with the subject in its various aspects, should, with the power of voice and pen, give impetus to the smouldering passion that I know exists in the hearts of our Newfoundlanders, in the matter of the care of our unfortunate.

Ye men of God! Will ye not lend this cause the might of your eloquence? Ye leaders of thought and literary men! Bring to bear the power of your pens. Yet statesmen and men of prestige! Permit the strength of your positions to help the work. And all ye men and women of Newfoundland! Urge the force that democracy gives you, so that the work for the blind as already outlined in my weak articles, may reach its accomplishment. Your reward will surely be in a great work well done.

Wedding Bells.

HAYES—WALSH.

The Oratory of the Presentation Convent, Cathedral Square, was the scene of a very pretty wedding at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Catherine Mary Walsh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Walsh, and Mr. Patrick J. Hayes, of Messrs. Bowring Bros., Drapery Department, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony was performed by the Right Reverend Monsignor McDermott, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives of the contracting parties. The bride, who was beautifully gowned in a dress of Duchess Satin with Georgette and Pearl trimmings, wearing a veil with wreath and carrying a bouquet of white carnations, was given away by her father. She was attended by her sister, Miss Madeline Walsh, and Miss Mary Ererard, both of whom looked charming in dresses of pink silk with hats to match. Misses Alma Driscoll and Gertrude Locke were flower girls. The duties of groomsmen were ably performed by Messrs. Wm. J. Walsh and Thomas J. Flynn. After the ceremony the wedding party drove around Bowring Park, returning to the residence of the bride's parents, Lime Street, where a reception was held, and the usual toasts were duly honoured. At 6 p.m. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes motored to Waterford Bridge, where they joined the evening train en route to Holyrood, where the honeymoon will be spent. The groom's present to the bride was a set of pearls, to the bridesmaids signet rings, to the flower girls gold bracelets, and to the best man gold cuff links. The presents received were both numerous and costly, testifying to the esteem in which the young couple were held, and in company with their many friends the Telegram joins in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Hayes many years of wedded bliss.
