The annual masquerade and calaco ball came off last evening in St. Nicholas Hall, and was a great success. The ball room, which was tastefully decorated with festcous, dags, banners and transparencies, was crowded from 8 o'clock, p.m. until a late hour this morning with a fashionable company composed of pgople from all parts of the county and Province. The costumes of the massqueraders were as usual of that varied and unique as well as rich and becoming character that always marks these assemblies. Kings, dukes, nuns, pages, Spanish beauties, sailors, shepherdesses, Swiss girls, and a conglomeration of characters representing almost evering and calico dresses, took part in the merty cannival, and enjoyed themselves thoroughly during the evening. Some Notes from Bruce. This locality, which rejoices in the uphonious name of the County of Bruce, which, when fully developed, ous and healthy. Lying as it does southeast of Lake Huron, a portion of the great salt vein, which extends from Goderich along the Lake shore in an easterly dietion, is found at Kincardine in abundance, and in great purity, where there are three establishments for the manufacture of salt, in which a thriving business is done, rendering the town and neighborhood both active and prosperous. How far inland the vein reaches is not yet known, but it appears to have been found at Teeswater, which will also make that village a place of some importance.

Walkerton, the county town, which is surrounded by a fine farming country, has a large business in all kinds of produce done in it, which has chiefly sprung up since the Wellington, Grey & Bruce was constructed. The rativacy certainly pays the farming community already.

Northern Indians, who alone committed the recent depredations, have all gone to Tongue River. The Ogallallas have faithfully guarded the agency since Appleton was killed, and they will prevent Northern Indians from coming there. The Indian who shot Appleton was killed by the Brules, who also re-captured Mulassioln taken by the Minnecejuis from Charles Green, agent. White wheat has been the chief product of the soil on which the farmer has relied, and for which the land is highly adapted, as well as for other kinds of crops. Stook of improved breeds is beginning to engage the attention of not a few of the farmers in this locality. Mr. James Tolton, your old acquaintance from Eramosa, who is Deputy Reeve of Brant, has some fine stook on his farm, and Mr. Rivers has some fine animals from the herd of Mr. Stone, Guelph; and Mr. John McQueen has a heifer from the herd of Mr. Stone, Guelph; and Mr. John McQueen has a heifer from the herd of Mr. Stone, Guelph; and Mr. John McQueen has a heifer from the herd of Mr. Stone, Guelph; and Mr. John McQueen has a heifer from the herd of Mr. Stone, Guelph; and Mr. John Reading, Guelph Township, which cannot be easily equalled in these parts. ELOPEMENT AT LUCKNOW .- The Sentinel Alex. McNevin, better known as "Peter Hammer," with one Eliza Reed, a servant at Mr Charles Mooney's, a few days ago. About eight months ago McNevin came to Lucknow from Harriston, leaving his wife behind, and went to Mooney's to board. Owing to at. intimacy between Reed and McNevin, Mooney sent him away, at the same time cautioning her against the man, as he was married; but the girl only grew angry. Two weeks ago a friend wrote to McNevin's wife, and she came over. McNevin was to all appearance as constant as ever, and persuaded her to go out to Culross, to her day. He came back to Lucknow alone, and a number of persons anticipating an elopement, watched McNevin, but notwithstanding the vigilance of the watchers, the wily secondrel avoided them all, and about four o'clook tus morning went to the house of DEliza, when the two decamped for parts unknown. The girl's parents reside in Bay-field, and are very respectable people.

The Hon. E. Blake is suffering to some extent from the same cause which led him to seek relaxation and restoration of health by his visit to England, long continued mental over-exertion, cansing nervous irritability and sleeplessness. His retirement from Mr Mackenzie's Cabinet, though the general topic of conversation, createsno surprise here, as the cause for his not wishing to assume the responsibilities of a public office are well understood. The rumor of his being dissatisfied with the Government policy or on bad terms with any of the leaders of the Reform party is utterly false and without foundation.

The New York Tribune of Sa contains a letter from its London cor-respondent which furnishes some cu-rious information concerning the dis-cordant political elements in existence We have received a copy of the its provisions will be of interest:

Each organization fought for turnames. Each of the Returning its own peculiar creed, and looked afwas no cohesion, no discipline, no subordination. The consequence was that the Liberal ranks weakened, disorder reigned though-out, and defeat was the result.

The correspondent mentions no few-er than twenty-six of these parties or organizations. Among the principal is the Manchester Nonconformist Association, which was pledged to give no aid to candidates who would not vote for a national system of unsec-tarian education. Next there is the imark his vote, on the ballot paper furnished to him, screened from observation and without interference or interruption; and containing materials for marking the ballot paper. This section also provides that on the commencement of polling the returning officer shall show the inside of the ballot box, to prove that it is empty, then lock it up, seal it, and keep it in sight during the polling. The only persons allowed in the polling place are the returning officer, poll clerk, constable, the candidates, or one agent representing each, and voters actually voting; and the returning officer shall direct that no person remain in any position where he can observe in what manner a voter shall mark his ballot paper.

The manner of voting is set forth in sections 4 and 5. When an elector comes up to vote, his name is entered in the poll book, with a consecutive number against it. The returning officer then takes up a ballot paper, marks it legibly on the back with his initials and the consecutive poll-book number of the voter; who theap proceeds to the compartment and marks a cross on the right hand side lagainst the name of the candidate for whom he votes; he then folds the ballot paper across, so as to conceal his marks on the front whist exposing those of the returning officer when the keep the paper at once to the returning officer when the work. CHAPTER XVIII.

PEANNING A MIDNIGHT ATTACK—A TERRIBLE MOMENT.

The conversation then turned away into those pleasanter channels more appropriate on the eve of their nupital day, and sweet and confiding words were poured into each other's ears. They spoke out of the funess of hearts swelling with a rich and overflowing love, and while there was little vivacity and little sparkle, there was a deep, refreehing surrent of pure and holy thought, which strengthened and cheered their spirits.

But as they sat and talked, the bright fire which had burning in the grate had become reduced to a few smouldering cinders, the shadows of the night had closed around, the wind had increased in fury, and the fastly drifting snow was being dashed against the indow panes with violence.

Suddenly realising these things, Hector sprang to his feet and exclaiming, "It is a dreadful night outside, dearest; let us go to the supper table," he drew her arm within his, and led her from the room.

As they passed out Hector stumbled up against a man who was in the act of approaching the room door. He seemed to have been walking in a stealthy manner, as if courting concealment, and appeared to be much contused when he recognised Hector and our heroine.

Quickly recovering himself, however, he hastily begged pardon, adding that he was proceeding to replevish the fire and light the room. Hector replied that no harm had been done, and passed on without taking further notice of the fellow, who, when they had left, turned and looked after them with a deep scowl on his face, and then, with a chuckling laugh, opened the door and entered the room they had just left.

"He is a strange looking fellow, that new servant," observed Flora, as soon as she and Hector had passed out of carshot. "There is something about the expression of his face which seems familiar to me. I always famy I must have met him before, and yet I cannot recall where or when."

"Like, you I, too, fancied when I saw him first that his face was familiar to me, but I could not be certain, and I thought no more of it. He seems a harmless sort of fellow—in fact, I think, a little silly or half-witted. I did not care to engage him at all, but he had such a forlorn, woe-begone appeas annee, that I felt pity for him, and could not turn him away."

There was no more said on the subject and in a few minutes they had joined Ame M'Leod at the super table. It was evident that the dark cloud of sorrow which had enrapt the spirit of Anne M'Leod when her brother died was not yet dispelled, even though she now found herself on the eve of the happy and promising day. But she had put on an outwardly cheerful appearance, and seemed as if she were about to banish the sorrow for a season and mix freely in the joys of those around her.

Supper passed pleasantly—the conversation pointing away from the troubles of the past to the happy future which seemed to be before the youthful pair True, a looming shadow was here and there apparent, but these seemed to do nothing mo

Good Doctrine: first rate; Admirable Philosophy; more good sense and economy in these few words than most people are aware of.
