I appreciate the fact that no minister rose at the end of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition. In other words, others of us were also given an opportunity to speak. But I hope that the government will not sit this debate out. I hope that someone speaking on behalf of the government will deal with the issues that have been raised, will deal particularly with the question as to the moral authority of this parliament to continue. I say again it is an issue that is greater than the government, greater than any party or greater than the interest of individuals here. It is an issue that is of concern to the Canadian people who have the right to have sitting a parliament with a moral authority such as this parliament does not now possess.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I would not rehash the things that happened during the pipe line debate but that I would deal with the present situation. I hope I will not be accused of breaking that promise because of what I am going to say now. I want to make one reference to something the Minister of Finance said in his radio speech last Friday night and I make it because it seems to me it underlines my contention that the present situation is an unhappy one. I shall not go into the details of the speech he made. I am glad we live in the kind of country where he had the freedom last Friday night, as I had the same freedom a couple of weeks earlier, to express to the people of Canada by radio our views on what is happening here in parliament; but it did seem to me the minister made a very revealing statement when he told the Canadian people over a trans-Canada network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the purpose of the closure rule is to make it possible to bring to an end a protracted debate—and I emphasize this latter point—or to enable the government to meet a timetable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the revised version.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am talking about the present and I will not talk about the past or how the closure rule was used in the pipe-line debate. We have had a new rule given to us by the Minister of Finance who is the house leader. He has announced it to the entire country. We have had it announced that on any occasion when the government feels it must meet a timetable, or when it wants to meet a timetable, or when it has committed itself to some private corporation that it will meet a timetable, it has the right to resort to the use of the closure rule.

One of the strange things about rules—and I have discovered this in discussing rules with people outside of parliament who are showing more interest in them than they used to—is that all the rules of parliament are not contained in the standing orders. The rules of parliament consist in the standing orders and in the way in which those standing orders have been interpreted. That is the reason we get into these long debates. That is also the reason such big books as Beauchesne's third edition—and many others including May, Bourinot, Campion and all the rest—get printed. The fact is that the practices of parliament are determined not only by the simple clear-cut rules in our standing orders but by precedent and by interpretation. We now have a new interpretation and so far as the government is concerned it is just as much a part of our way of doing things here as if it were spelled out in the standing orders themselves.

I remind the Minister of Finance that actually there is nothing in standing order No. 33, the closure rule, which says what its purpose is. I accept the first part of his statement that the purpose of the closure rule is to enable the government to bring to an end a protracted debate. The reason I accept it is because, like the Minister of Finance, I have read just about everything there is to read concerning the closure rule. I have read in full the debate that took place in 1913 when the rule was written into our standing orders. I have read practically all the debates in which closure was applied in 1913, 1917, 1921, 1926 and 1932.

Mr. Chairman, nowhere in any of the vast amount of material that can be read on closure did any one ever suggest that the purpose of the closure rule was to enable the government to meet a timetable. Plenty of authorities, including Sir Robert Borden who introduced the closure rule, Mr. Arthur Meighen who appears to have had something to do with drafting it, and others who have used it across the years, admit, claim and affirm that its purpose is to enable the government to bring to an end a protracted debate. When those who gave birth to the rule and used it in previous sessions referred to it they gave as examples of protracted debate, two, three or five weeks on one clause of a bill. The occasions when it was used in the past, except for the most recent past, were occasions when debate had gone on for weeks or even months. In other words, Mr. Chairman, until 1956 there was no question about it; the only purpose of the closure rule was to enable the government to bring to an end a protracted debate and there was no question but that "protracted" meant weeks or months.

Now, however, we have the precedent established in the recent debate when the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave notice of closure at the end of the first speech at the first stage of the debate, plus all the precedents in the recent debate regarding closure, and in addition to that we have this interpretation given by the Minister of Finance: Any time the government is in a jam as to a timetable, any time the government has to meet a commitment it has made to someone else, it is justified in using the closure rule, because the Minister of Finance, the house leader, has personally told the country that is its purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say this parliament cannot continue under the direction of a government which thinks in those terms. I had dared to hope—yes, even I had dared to hope—that the government had learned some lessons because of the experiences we went through in the month of May and the early part of June of this year. If the government was not impressed by the arguments we were making from this side of the house I had hoped that it would have been impressed by the editorial comments in newspapers across the country, particularly editorial comments in newspapers like the Toronto Star and the Winnipeg Free Press which have been well known as supporters of the Liberal party across the years.

Lo and behold, Mr. Chairman, despite all these editorials, despite all the reasons we might have had to believe the government would have learned its lesson and realized that it cannot wound parliament and go on as if nothing had happened, when it is all over the Minister of Finance takes to the radio and announces to the people of Canada a new rule: From here on any time one man in the cabinet wants something that means meeting a timetable which is inconvenient for parliament, we have the right to use the closure rule.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly true there is nothing in the rule that says the government cannot use it for that purpose. The rule does not state what its purpose is either one way or the other but parliament is governed, as Beauchesne points out on one of his earlier pages, not only by its standing orders but by its traditions, practices and precedents, and by the interpretations placed on its rules and standing orders across the years.

Until this recent occasion there was no question as to what the interpretation of the closure rule was but now we have this disgraceful precedent which we went through so far as the use of closure is concerned in May and June of 1956; and we have this equally disgraceful interpretation which my friend the Minister of Finance has placed on the closure rule.

As hon. members are aware there are other aspects of the present situation into which I could go but I shall avoid confusing the issue at this time. It seems to me, in addition to the atmosphere in which we find ourselves, that this one point in the minister's speech which I have emphasized is an indication that the government feels it is authorized to take dictatorial action quite properly. Because that is not so, I think it is clear that this parliament should not continue.

As I indicated on June 11 in so far as interim supply involves the provision of money for the government to pay civil service salaries and wages, we shall of course support the bill, preserving the rights of any other members who wish to speak on this motion today and preserving also our right to discuss all of the items in the estimates as they come before us during whatever period this session continues. Nevertheless it is still our view, as I indicated on the occasion of the last interim supply motion, that the government does not have the moral authority to ask this of parliament in a routine way just as if everything had got back to normal. It has not got back to normal. The only way in which parliament can be restored to the position of moral authority which it requires to carry on its business is for this House of Commons to be dissolved and a new one elected.

Mr. Chairman, we are not in the position today on June 22—it should be borne in mind that we are discussing salaries to be paid on July 15—that we were in on June 11. As some newspapers have pointed out, the opposition had it chosen to do so could have forced the government that date into a very tight corner. Some newspapers even suggested that the opposition could have forced the government into an election.

We are not in that position today. We are not able to use what might be called force. We are putting it to the government on a straight moral basis as an appeal—I have strong suspicions that there are those on the government side who agree with us—that it would be better for parliament, better for Canada if the scenes we witnessed here and the experiences through which we have gone, and the atmosphere that now obtains, were wiped out by the dissolution of this parliament and the election of a new one with the moral authority to serve the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, before I proceed to discuss what I had intended to discuss on this occasion it becomes my responsibility and privilege to set forth in a few words the general attitude of the Social Crediters in this house respecting the subjects and the situations with which the Leader of the Opposition has dealt today at considerable length, and in connection with which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made certain additional remarks.

We Social Crediters feel that the government has brought this interim supply resolution before the committee in good time. We think there is nothing wrong or unusual or immoral in asking for interim supply in this manner and at this time. Hence this committee should pass the resolution after reasonable discussion.

There is a matter which I should like to raise which affects my constituency and I presume a good many others in the country. I should like to read a telegram which came to my office. It is dated June 15, 1956 and reads:

John Blackmore,
Member of Parliament,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Lethbridge confronted with serious shortage of mortgage money for housing can possibly mean 50 per cent labour layoff within 60 days your assistance urgently required.

Arthur L. Batty,
First Vice-President,
Lethbridge House Builders Association.

I suppose a telegram similar to that has reached nearly every hon. member of this house. I feel most unhappy about the condition which has developed in Lethbridge. I have already raised the question of the effect upon my constituency brought about by the increase in the rediscount rate by the Bank of Canada. I believe that the particular conditions which have been brought about in my constituency are absolutely and unqualifiedly unjustified in this country. If with all our modern means of managing finance we cannot prevent a suspected inflation in the country as a whole, without practically crucifying various parts of that country, then it is high time we adopted a different course in the management of the banks of this country.

Only this morning I received a letter which contains a statement indicating the kind of thing which has been brought about in certain other areas. This letter comes from Willowdale, Ontario, but it refers to conditions which exist in a constituency represented by an hon. member. The letter reads:

> Do you appreciate what the sudden curtailing of credit by banks and other financial institutions has done to the small builders of homes and their sub-contractors? The following is a typical example. John Doe of North York used to build four houses at a time. Previous to June 15th he had never experienced difficulty in obtaining mortgages. When he couldn't arrange mortgages on the last four he started building he couldn't pay his sub-contractors who had made the excavation, put in the footings, put on the floor joists and rough floor and done his brickwork and put on the roof. Because he couldn't pay the sub-contractors they couldn't pay their men, nor could they meet their payments on cars, trucks and equipment. One sub-contractor was only a few days overdue on his payment on his truck. He was working on my house when the finance company's bailiff seized it. I saved him by loaning him $50. If I hadn't he would have lost his truck, equipment and his means of earning a living.

May I interpolate, because of action on the part of the Bank of Canada! No effort has been made to prevent people being distressed by the seizure of their property. The letter continues:

> Economic conditions in North York are getting chaotic. Thus we see the international bankers ordering the national banks to call loans and restrict credits on the pretence that it is to halt inflation. All it does is shake down the little man. He is forced to liquidate many of his assets at half their value—

May I interpolate again, so that people who are interested in high finance in this country can buy them at half price, thereby enriching themselves to the extent to which the poor man is impoverished. The letter continues:

> —or lose everything he has because the banks suddenly and without warning shut off his normal credit. In other words the international bankers have ordered the Bank of Canada to create conditions which play right into the hands of the communist leaders in this and other so-called free countries. All the working men and little contractors are blaming the government for their present misfortune. May I ask what their elected representatives intend to do about it. So far I haven't been able to arrange a mortgage on my home although several real estate agents have appraised it as being worth $15,800. One big mortgage company told me "we are now restricted to giving mortgages on houses valued at over $25,000".

Before I unfortunately had to go away for two weeks, I heard one or two members of the banking and commerce committee, of which I am a member, who represented such areas complain about this very situation. But no ear was turned, no consideration was given to their complaints; these things were just shaken off as being just "one of those things". As far as I am concerned, the misfortunes which are being inflicted upon the Lethbridge constituency are not "just one of those things". Those are misfortunes which are deliberately brought on by the Bank of Canada at the instigation of international banking concerns. Until it can be proved otherwise, I make that statement, positive that I can prove it if given time.

We have heard already a statement, which I am not able to document to the date, but we have heard a statement that there is a trend in Canada toward greater international control of our finances. That is exactly the abomination which was attempted when we accepted the Bretton Woods agreement. We in Canada were no longer big enough and wise enough to manage our own financial system.

The first bank of this country was managed at a little place in New Brunswick, just a small province, and they got along splendidly. They did not have to have anyone from London or New York interfering with their affairs, to tell them how or how not to manage their bank and their economy. They could get along very well. They helped their people to finance production and consumption. They protected those who depended on their bank. In the light of that, can anyone conceive of a reason why the great Dominion of Canada in the year 1956, with all the economic power that it possesses and with all the experience it has had in banking, cannot run its own affairs financially? Now I think I have said enough.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: There are several people who want this closed off. Several people in the banking and commerce committee wanted this discussion closed off, but the simple fact of the matter is that the members of this house have the responsibility to see that this kind of thing is not closed off and that this kind of abomination is rectified before it goes too far. That is exactly the kind of thing that happened in communities all over the country when the great depression came. As a result of the first moves toward the great depression the wheels started running downhill, and no one knew how to stop them from running further downhill. We had the most terrible experience during the depression. We do not want to get into that condition again. We want the wheels to be running on the right hill, and we want the right wheels, and run by the right people.

I urge the minister to see that something is done without further delay to rectify the financial conditions existing in the Lethbridge constituency. It is not a minor constituency of this country; it is one of the best economic areas in Canada. It has splendid resources, splendid businessmen and splendid businesses, and it has fine industrial equipment up to a point. There is no reason why the city and district of Lethbridge should be plunged into a depression by some action down here in Ottawa. In the depression of 1935, when we came here to Ottawa and began telling the house the troubles we were having, most of the members in this house sitting on the Liberal side shrugged their indifferent shoulders and indicated that it was our own fault and that it was our own business to get ourselves out of the difficulty. Now we have got ourselves out of the difficulty, they want to push us back in again. This has gone too far, and so I ask the minister once more, not necessarily that he speak here, but that he speak to the right people of Canada to rectify the financial difficulties, not only of the people of Lethbridge constituency, but of the people all over Canada.

Mr. Hees: Since it is about three minutes to one, may I call it one o'clock?

An hon. Member: Go on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hees: Well, if you want me to put in time for three minutes, I do not intend to begin what I am going to say now and break it off at one o'clock. So if you want me to stand here and put in time for three minutes, I shall stand here. Shall we call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hees: I thought the speech the Leader of the Opposition gave this morning was one of the most thoughtful, one of the most well-directed, and one of the most concise speeches I have ever heard given in this house. It was a good lesson in directness, pointedness and in background for all Liberal members of the house. For instance, the Leader of the Opposition was able to stand up and say what he feels, directly and clearly, without any fear that he should not say certain things because they might hurt sensitive feelings, whereas when Liberal members speak they have to keep looking over their shoulders to see what the Minister of Trade and Commerce is thinking about them or what the Minister of Finance is saying. Even the Prime Minister used to cast dagger looks at some of these figures, but he has pretty well stopped doing that now because he is leaving things to other people to look after. But I thought the speech this morning by the Leader of the Opposition was a marvel of clarity and of directness.

An hon. Member: You are best known for your sincerity.

Mr. Hees: He told the government exactly what he thought in the minimum number of words.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Hees: There was no doubt in anybody's mind of what he wanted to say, and he certainly said it.

May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss for a moment the matter brought up this morning by the Leader of the Opposition regarding the phrase which the Minister of Trade and Commerce used on the television program "Press Conference" a week ago last night. There were many of us who listened to that program, and at that time we heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce clearly say: "We violated the rules."

An hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Hees: I have spoken to the gentlemen who interviewed the Minister of Trade and Commerce on that program and they are unanimously of the opinion that he used those words. All of them were very surprised that he should have used such a phrase and they discussed it among themselves afterwards. Mr. Bain said to the minister, "I was very surprised to hear you say 'we violated the rules' ". Mr. Bain says that the minister said, "Oh, did I say that?"

To make absolutely sure, Mr. Chairman, that my ears had not deceived me I have just spent the last hour or so at the C.B.C. studio and I have heard played back several times their recording of what was said during that press conference. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said: "We violated the rules".

An hon. Member: "No rules".

Mr. Hees: A tape recording has been made for me by the C.B.C. and it will be in this building very shortly. In fact, I am advised by my colleague the hon. member for York West that the recording is here now and I cordially invite any minister or any hon.

member who would like to hear the voice of the Minister of Trade and Commerce clearly say, "we violated the rules", to listen to him say it in the opposition lobby right now. That will clear up this whole matter for all time. It will clear up the Prime Minister's attempt to mislead the house with regard to this matter and also the very direct attempt this morning of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he denied having said these very damaging words. As I say, if there is any doubt in anybody's mind the tape recording made by the C.B.C. in the last hour from their own recording of the proceedings that took place on that evening is in the opposition lobby for anyone who wishes to listen to it. So let us have no more—

Mr. McCann: Oh, go out and entertain yourself.

Mr. Hees: I have entertained myself very much listening to the Minister of Trade and Commerce say what I said he said.

Mr. McCann: I heard it and he did not say it.

Mr. Hees: Then I invite you to go out into the opposition lobby and hear him say it over again for your benefit. Go ahead. You see, that is what we run up against. Ministers make statements—

Mr. Richardson: May I ask a question?

Mr. Hees: Certainly.

Mr. Richardson: Would the hon. gentleman excuse me? I would prefer to go out and hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce rather than to listen to the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: That suits me very well because I do not think—

Mr. McIlraith: You do not think, period.

Mr. Hees: —that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has ever added to the proceedings of this house either while speaking or while listening.

Mr. McCann: More than you.

Mrs. Shipley: A great deal.

Mr. Hees: I see that the member for St. Lawrence-St. George cannot even make up his own mind on the little matter of whether or not he will leave the house. He said definitely he would. Then he went outside and said to himself, "My gosh, maybe I have not done the right thing. I might miss something." So he turned right around and came back in. Now he is going out again. He cannot decide whether he wants to stay in or go out.

An hon. Member: He will not miss much.

Mr. Hees: That is a good example of the kind of decisions that are made on the other side of the house. The statement that the Minister of Trade and Commerce made, "we violated the rules", is nothing new in this house as far as the government is concerned, this tired, old gang of power-hungry politicians, because that is the concept of government that the cabinet has been developing over the past few years. That concept simply is that if the rules suit the government the government will abide by the rules, but if the rules do not suit the government they will change the rules without allowing one word of protest, one question of privilege, one point of order to be raised. They will summon their majority and by using the rule of might makes right they will bring about whatever rule change suits their desire at the moment.

During the pipe line debate we saw rules of parliamentary procedure that have been built up over several hundred years in the British parliament and during the past hundred years in this parliament thrown out the window. They did not suit the government's purpose. It became very clear that if a rule impeded the will of the government the government would simply change the rule. That is how dictatorships are born. That is how dictatorship became a reality in this chamber in the last few weeks. Of course, this could only be made possible by the complete subordination of the chair by the cabinet, and that all who were in the chamber during that debate or who were sitting in the galleries very clearly saw.

Mrs. Shipley: Oh, speak for yourself.

Mr. Hees: I am speaking for myself. I am at least doing what no Liberal member is allowed to do in this house. I am speaking my own views without fear of—

Mr. Sinclair: Of what?

Mr. Hees: —being told that I do not have the right to stand up and speak my views. I am doing exactly what the hon. member for Timiskaming has advised me to do.

Mr. Sinclair: What happened when the hon. member for Calgary South tried to get up to speak on the Tory roster?

Mr. Hees: When the hon. member for Calgary South rose to speak he was allowed to speak, and—

Mr. Sinclair: He was cut off.

Mr. Hees: —he was listened to. I believe he spoke oftener than any other Conservative member.

Mr. Sinclair: Oh, oh!

Mr. McIlraith: The Tories tried to cut him off.

Mr. Hees: I should like to ask the voluble Minister of Fisheries why more people on his side of the house, more Liberal members, did not have the courage to get up on their feet and speak on behalf of this measure that the government jammed down the throats of members of parliament and the Canadian people.

Mr. Sinclair: Fifty-three members did.

Mr. Hees: I noticed that the minister confined all his remarks to heckling and speaking from his seat. He did not have the courage to stand up and speak on behalf of the measure he heralded so widely. He simply sat and, with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, confined his contribution to snide remarks made from the security of a large majority and while sitting in his seat.

Mr. Sinclair: Fifty-three Liberals spoke; eight ministers.

Mr. Hees: As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the creation of this dictatorship in parliament was only made possible by the complete subordination of the Chair to the wishes of the government. It is very obvious that between ten o'clock on the night of Thursday, May 31, and eleven o'clock on the morning of Friday, June 1, a gun was put to the head of the Speaker and probably the Deputy Speaker. There is no doubt that the Speaker was told either to toe the line along with the rest of his colleagues or that his future in the Liberal party was through. It was a very difficult decision for any man to make, but by means of that threat he was obviously forced by the government to do their bidding. When he stood up at eleven o'clock on Friday morning, June 1, black Friday as far as this parliament is concerned, he carried out completely the orders of the government.

During the whole debate the operation of the telegraph system between the Minister of Finance, under the dictation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and whoever happened to be the occupant of the chair at any particular time, was very obvious. During the expulsion of the hon. member for Eglinton it was obvious that all moves were dictated by the Minister of Finance. During most of the rest of the debate the Chair obeyed the dictates of the government and the messages were conveyed to the Chair through the Minister of Finance.

What the people of Canada thought of the government's conduct in bringing in and jamming this pipe-line bill down the throats of parliament and of the Canadian people, their conduct in parliament, and the conduct they forced upon parliament was very clearly revealed by two Gallup polls, one taken immediately before the debate and one taken immediately after it.

I think these results are interesting. Immediately before the debate the Gallup poll reported the following: Of all the people asked which party they would support if a general election were held on that day, 48 per cent of the people said they would vote Liberal, 30 per cent Conservative, 13 per cent C.C.F. and 7 per cent Social Credit. In the poll immediately after this debate took place, these were the results: 43 per cent said they would vote Liberal, 34 per cent said they would vote Conservative, 15 per cent said they would vote C.C.F. and 6 per cent said they would vote Social Credit. Hence as a result of this debate the Liberal party lost 5 points, dropping from 48 to 43. The Conservatives picked up 4 points, going from 30 to 34. The C.C.F. who opposed the government alongside the Conservative party picked up 2 points, going from 13 to 15. The Social Credit party—quite deservedly for having tagged along hanging on to the coattails of the Liberal party on this matter—lost 1 of their few points; they dropped from 7 to 6. So, Mr. Chairman, that shows you what the people of Canada thought of the pipe line bill and of the way in which the government conducted itself in jamming it down the throats of parliament and the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hees: Do I hear some bold Liberals talking about any of the three provincial elections that just took place? Surely not. I am sure my ears deceived me. I am sure they would not speak of those sad matters at this present time. So, Mr. Chairman, I back up completely what my leader said this morning in dealing with this matter. I think that the opinions expressed by the people of Canada, as shown by the latest Gallup poll, describe more clearly than can any words just what the people of Canada think of the measure which this government has recently jammed through parliament and of the conduct of that party and this government in bending the rules to suit their wishes of the moment.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman,—

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member going to speak to the resolution?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise for the purpose of securing the confirmation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a voice reproduction of the interview which he gave over the C.B.C. a few days ago. I have before me a record of the press conference of June 13, 1956. I have read this record and now, in the last few moments, have been able to hear reproduced in the characteristically mellifluous language of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What was that word? Was it "meticulous"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ridiculous? I have no doubt that that applies.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I thought the hon. member said "meticulous".

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was trying to be reasonably restricted in my language, but I thank the minister for his contribution, because no word describes better the contribution that he made on that occasion. I have before me the transcript which reads as follows:

> Our guest is the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce. Our chairman is Robert McKeown, Ottawa editor of Weekend magazine. Members of the press are George Bain of the Toronto Globe and Mail, Arthur McKenna, Ottawa correspondent of the Wall Street Journal and Canadian Dow-Jones, and Stanley Burke of the Vancouver Sun.

And then as the matter goes on we come to page 15, towards the latter part of the questioning, where the following appears:

> Do you take the position that all the procedural wrangle that there was in the House of Commons was mere obstruction and wasn't based on violation of rules or attempted violation of rules by the government?
> Howe: Oh no, we violated the rules.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What I said was, "We violated no rules".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, the record out there reveals the truth. Just go out and listen to it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Read the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will read the rest of it, but it does not alter the situation.

> We—the closure is, well, it is in the rule book, it is put there—even Angus MacInnis said that it is the duty of the government to use it in the face of obstruction.

Those are all the words, but the material words are that admission and confession by the minister,—and he could do no other, Mr. Chairman—"We violated the rules". When the minister today denied having made that statement, it was either on the basis of the fact that he was trying to delude the house or he may have conveniently forgotten words that were heard everywhere in Canada, words that gave supporting evidence—if that was needed at all—of the fact that they had indeed violated the rules as they have never before been violated at any time in the history of representative government. I also note that he made a reference to myself —and I shall refer to that—at page 14 where he used these words:

> We anticipated the delaying tactics—the obstruction—and you remember that before the bill was ever debated, Mr. Coldwell stated that his party would obstruct by every known way in the rule book, and Mr. Diefenbaker stated that this would be the filibuster of filibusters, and you remember it took us several hours to even get the bill—to get the resolution introduced.

Mr. Chairman, I do not often deny statements that are made, whether loose or untrue.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is not safe.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the statement in question by my right hon. friend is not based on the facts. I have before me the only reference that I ever made outside of this house to the question and I read it now because I read it then during the course of a radio broadcast. The broadcast was given in the month of March. This is what I said:

> In July, 1955, the Conservative party fought, under the inspiring leadership and generalship of George Drew, for the restoration of parliamentary supremacy. That was when Mr. Howe tried to force through parliament the grant to himself of a blank cheque of absolute and dictatorial powers, under the Defence Production Act.
> That battle we won.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): This one you lost.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The next one you lost.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My right hon. friend says we lost the last one. We did so. They changed the rules between innings. They threw the rule book out. They did not dare to trust to the ordinary, traditional procedure of parliament. We lost the last one in parliament. We will give you an opportunity —as you were challenged to do over and over again—to go to the country now and let the people decide with regard to this matter.

Mr. McCann: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You answered us in parliament with your majority of automatons that jumped at your command. But no government in all the history of this country has ever been so taunted and challenged to go to the country as has this government in the last two weeks. How do they meet it? They meet it with fear, maintaining silence.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): How could anyone look across this aisle and fear?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will deal with that in a few minutes when I finish this quotation. I said:

> That battle we won.

That was one time when the Prime Minister was able to do what, in his heart of hearts, he has wanted to do and that is uphold parliament. It could only be done after my hon. friend went on a fishing trip. Then, when the hon. gentleman was away, parliament won. This pipe line debate took place at a time when the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not think it convenient to go on such a trip. I continue the quotation:

> But let me tell you that the fight we put on then will appear but a skirmish beside the battle we shall wage when the bill regarding Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, comes before parliament.

Those are the remarks I made. Nowhere was there any mention of a filibuster.

Mr. McCann: Now, you are getting funny.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was a declaration that the opposition was going to take its stand on behalf of the rights of parliament and on behalf of the things in which it believes. None of us expected then that this government would ever have done what it did. It tore up the rule book. Three hundred years ago a representative of the crown removed from the Journals record two pages concerning two certain dates. In this case all the government did, with the assistance of the Speaker, was simply something that can only take place in one part of the world and that is when crossing the international date line in an easterly direction; they said today is yesterday.

Yes, we have challenged you to go to the country.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In a feeble kind of a way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Feeble? What must we do? Tear up the rules and walk over there and shove you out? Is that what you want? We simply say to you, you dare not do it. You are afraid. You are silent. You tore up the rules and you destroyed the constitution. You did all those things. But, sir, never before has a government with such an overwhelming majority, as numerous as the sands of the sea, been taunted, challenged and dared so frequently. But there they sit. The interruptions in which they indulge are all we get. They dare not take the chance.

Now, sir, I am going to make a suggestion. We realize that the Minister of Finance is a great believer in cyclical budgeting, at least he inherited the mantle of the former minister and was a member of the government that brought forth the proposition that cyclical budgeting was indeed the essence of good parliamentary procedure. Cyclical budgeting in the last seven or eight years has consisted of reducing taxes just before an election. You reduced taxation in 1949 just before the election. I think some income taxes went down 30 per cent.

Mr. Harris: And in 1955.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1953; we will deal with that in a moment. In 1949 there was a big cut. Then, came the election with the attendant success and up went taxes. There was nothing more heard about it until 1953 when, as if again by coincidence, taxation was reduced. The trivial reductions in 1955 are meaningless. They do not win elections. This is my suggestion. If all you want is the opportunity to reduce taxation, to hold out the bait that you held out in 1949 and in 1953, let us have a baby budget. You will have the opportunity now to introduce one and also to interlard it with promises of health insurance. Bring those things in right now, and then go to the country. You will have all the benefits, all the advantages of cyclical budgeting. Besides that you will be able to go to the country now at a time when things are so favourable to you as you contend. We will support your baby budget. We will help it through. Then, you will have no other excuse for not going to the country.

They dare not go, Mr. Chairman; they know that across Canada the people are aroused as never before.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The voice of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend should not speak about that. The voice of Saskatchewan did not say anything particularly favourable to the Liberal party. The only thing it showed was that the ambitious plans and the promises of a few weeks ago were dissipated in the light of experience.

I again suggest this. Do not worry about Saskatchewan. You might also think of the province of New Brunswick. Some of my hon. friends over there are the ones who made such a magnificent contribution in the province of Quebec a few days ago.

Mr. Lesage: It was much better than the Tories in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not very much better.

Mr. Hees: How about the Tories in New Brunswick?

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend the minister interrupted me a moment ago. I say this for him. He was the last to see the light in the province of Quebec. He finally went down against his better judgment, and he and the other ministers who went into Quebec found that their interference there brought them dividends which they certainly did not expect. They were just going to wipe out that government.

Mr. Lesage: You do not know how to read the newspapers. You do not know what happened in my own constituency.

Mr. Hees: You get up and tell us what happened.

Mr. Lesage: I will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think my hon. friend the minister often trades in his constituency and that was the result that was achieved in his own constituency. But go to the country now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Who was elected in Prince Albert?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have often thought of my hon. friend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as a "Gliberal". He would believe anything twice, as Mencken once said. My suggestion is this. This parliament has lost its prestige. This parliament no longer speaks in accents of authority. This parliament no longer represents the integrity and dignity of the people of Canada. These things cannot be achieved by this institution in its present form, and I say that in no partisan sense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friends laugh. This is but a hollow shell of its former self. It has been discredited as no other parliament has been by the malicious actions of this government, two or three ministers, all of whom have contributed to reducing it to possible servitude because of the majority the government possesses. The Minister of Trade and Commerce with unaccustomed truthfulness admitted to the people the other day: "We violated—

An hon. Member: No rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the rules. Mr. Chairman, the Scriptures speak of those who have ears and cannot hear. Let those of you who have ears of that kind go out into the lobby and listen and be convinced.

Mr. McCann: You got that out of the almanac.

Mr. Hees: Ask the C.B.C., which made the recording.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the C.B.C. recording here. Out in the lobby is the recording—

Mr. Hees: Made by the C.B.C.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —made by the C.B.C., the sacred instrument which is under the direction of the Minister of National Revenue, and I say that with great respect for the C.B.C.

Mr. McCann: It is the first time you have ever had any respect for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that so? The C.B.C. does not deceive. I ask the Minister of National Revenue to go out in the lobby and get a photostatic copy by ear. He knows something about photostats and in the lobby he can get a photostatic copy by ear of what the Minister of Trade and Commerce actually said.

Mr. Hees: Go out and get educated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I mention photostats, Mr. Chairman, I speak of a subject I know the Minister of National Revenue will remember as long as he has memory.

Bring in the baby budget; bring in the taxes; make an alteration of the tax now imposed in connection with the C.B.C. Go to the country; see if we cannot restore this institution and give it a heart and soul, such as it used to have, rather than leaving it as it is, an empty shell consisting only of individuals; a parliament deprived of its great dignity, emasculated as a result of the actions of men who although they hold ministerial positions and give lip service to democracy have attempted to destroy it in the last few weeks.

I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance what would happen to justice in this country if every time you had a court case that was difficult you were permitted to say, "The rules of evidence do not apply here; let us set them aside. After all, we cannot win under the rules and that being so let us alter the rules or destroy them if necessary." I ask the minister how long justice would prevail in our country under those circumstances? How long would order exist? How long would decency be preserved? That is exactly what has happened here in this house. No one who went through the experience of two or three weeks ago can ever again feel as those of us who respect parliament felt concerning this institution, which was great in its achievements in the past regardless of what party was in power.

The Leader of the Opposition said that the Minister of Finance dared not deny collaboration on his part with the Speaker. He would not deny that ministers saw the Speaker between Thursday evening and Friday morning when the Speaker came into the chair. "Government and Parliament" by Herbert Morrison, regarding the Speaker in England, says:

> . . . but upon being appointed Speaker he rigorously cuts off his party affiliations. He declares his honourable intention of being the impartial servant of the house as a whole and that in particular he will do his best to safeguard the rights of minorities.

Today the Minister of Finance was given the opportunity by the Leader of the Opposition to deny that he had contributed his helpful co-operation to the Speaker—or that some ministers did—between 10 o'olock on Thursday evening and 11 o'clock on Friday morning. When the minister did not deny that today the whole picture became perfectly clear, a picture that is a negation of what parliamentary government should be. When a man in the high and honourable position of Speaker finds himself subject to the suggestions and the direct or indirect influence of ministers of the crown, such a thing reveals in its naked awfulness what happened to parliament only three weeks ago.

We vote you interim supply on this occasion—

An hon. Member: The house votes it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and we say to you and the house, "Take your supply; we give it. There is no means by which we can hold supply from you at this time". And that having been done, if you have an enticing, illusive or seductive budget to offer, bring it in, even in short form, Mr. Chairman, and then give the people of Canada an opportunity of seeing whether or not they condone the manner in which the rights of parliament were sacrificed three weeks ago and the means by which the individual and traditional rights of parliament were cast aside and destroyed.

You cannot change the rules between innings in an ordinary game. Parliament cannot survive if the laws and traditions based on hundreds of years of practice and experience and political wisdom are cast aside for the momentary advantage and expediency of a government that finds itself in difficulty.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal this afternoon as to whether or not the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that we—meaning the government—violated the rules of this house. As I listened today I wondered if perhaps it is not rather irrelevant whether or not the minister said that because I am sure no one, and least of all the Minister of Trade and Commerce, would presume to think of him as an authority on parliamentary procedure. I would think it would be very doubtful whether or not the minister would know if the rules had been violated. However, from the investigations I have made among those people who were present at the broadcast, I have no doubt whatever in my mind that the minister did say it, but I think there is a reasonable possibility that it was a slip of the tongue. But I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if it was the sort of slip of the tongue that psychologists would call a Freudian slip, and if the minister's subconscious forced him against his will to speak the truth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that slip of the tongue on the part of the minister also reveals a very dangerous attitude on the part of too many members of the cabinet opposite. I have an idea that somehow or another they have developed some rather dangerous conceptions of the role of parliament and its place in our national life.

I suppose most of us realize that here in this institution we are obliged to operate to some extent on the basis of a number of fictions, shall I say, although necessary fictions. They are perhaps somewhat the same sort of fictions by which a wise and prudent wife maintains the institution of matrimony, being so very careful not to reveal to the vulgar eye the realities behind that institution because if she did the institution would collapse.

I have listened with great interest over the past few weeks to citations of precedents in our parliament reaching back many centuries into the past. It has occurred to me on a number of occasions that these references were in some measure irrelevant to the present situation because parliament is not a static institution, it is an evolving institution. The time is not so far distant since the whole role of parliament was that of an opposition, opposition to the executive power of the crown which up until the beginning of the 18th century rested entirely outside the legislative body.

However, we find a different situation now, we have the executive power of the crown brought right into the legislature and those who wield it becoming part of that legislature. For that reason we have, as I say, a number of necessary fictions, necessary because there is always a possibility that the occasion may arise when the fiction has to be made into reality. One of those fictions of course is that parliament decides things. We all know that that is not really the actual truth. I think it is safe to say that we have reached the point where not even the majority actually decides.

The time may come at any moment when members of parliament, particularly the members who support the government, may be faced with such a situation that they have to use these powers which are now largely fictional. For that reason we have to be most careful about preserving these fictions in our parliamentary life. We have to be careful not to expose the real nature of parliament for most of its time and for that reason the government of the day has laid on it a particularly onerous responsibility, to walk delicately like Agag and not to create a situation in which the general public is revealed that not only are the opposition members in the House of Commons powerless against the government majority, but they must also not reveal to the public the fact that in order to maintain the stability of the government the members who support that government must do so willy-nilly.

There is a third responsibility on the government, and this is particularly applicable to Canada in distinction from the mother of parliaments, that is that the government must at all times and at all costs make sure that it does not place the presiding officer of this institution in such a position that he may be charged with partiality in his decisions. Those I think are the responsibilities that a government has and I have the feeling that our present government has fallen into the very bad habit of imagining that the sole role of parliament is to implement and endorse the policies and decisions of the executive. I think that is a most dangerous position for them to take.

It is understandable why this government has fallen into that position. For one thing, it has been in office for a great many years. For another thing, it has a large and overwhelming majority in the house. Another—I am going to mention again the particular factor in this government which I mentioned earlier in the session—is the make-up of the present government. When I say these things I do not want them to be interpreted as criticisms of individual members of the government, but I do want to point out that when many of the leading and most influential members of the government have reached their positions not by the traditional parliamentary route, there is very grave danger to the whole institution of parliament, very grave danger I think to the life and vigour of the party which supports the government.

Not only that, there is great danger—I think this danger has been realized to a great extent today—that we have in the House of Commons, wielding part of the executive power of the crown, ministers who have not been trained and acclimatized in parliamentary life, who have not had the necessary discipline of sitting as private members for a period of time and in this instance—this is no one's fault but that of the electorate—have not had the necessary discipline of sitting as private members of the opposition. I suggest to you that a government which has not gone through the traditional processes of parliamentary life is greatly endangering the future value and viability of this institution.

I believe seriously that if the present tendency continues much longer no one in this chamber will be in position to rise, as the Leader of the Opposition rose this morning, and suggest that there should be reforms in the other chamber. It is quite on the cards today that members of this house may be reduced to, shall we say, innocuous desuetude, as members in other places are commonly supposed to be. So for that reason I think the government should seriously consider what has happened in this parliament in recent weeks and realize that no matter what the measure was which they wished to pass through this chamber, no matter how valuable they might think it to be for the benefit of the people of Canada, the price they paid for it has been far too high.

Others have spoken today of the atmosphere in this house now. I do not think any objective observer can deny the fact that it is an unhappy atmosphere. There are some bitternesses and some resentments on both sides of the house. There are some doubts as to the moral right of this chamber to continue because of what has happened. I believe that if this government shoulders its major responsibility, and this I consider to be its major responsibility—the major responsibility of any government in a democratic society is the maintenance and support of democratic institutions—then it will leave no stone unturned to undo what has been done.

I suppose it is true to say that no one is particularly impressed with the efficiency of a democratic parliament as a means of carrying out positive policies. Someone has said that it would not exist at all were it not for the fact that other alternatives to it are far less desirable. I think that is true. With all its faults it is the best we can evolve, but to be maintained in public prestige—after all that is a most important factor in parliamentary life, that parliament should enjoy public prestige—it is most important that no steps should be taken in this chamber which cause doubts to rise in the minds of the public as to whether or not they are really represented in this chamber, whether they support the government party or the opposition.

For that reason I seriously urge the government to consider dealing with this situation in the only way it can be dealt with, and that is to give us a new parliament. I do not wish to rehash the past, but I should like to point out that as things stand at present the presiding officer of this chamber is left in an impossible position. Before the much-debated motion was moved the Prime Minister and, I believe, the Minister of Finance expressed the view in this chamber that permitting that motion to go to a vote would not solve any problem. I do not think that situation has changed at all. I think we are still in that situation.

I submit to you, sir, that if this parliament continues for another session it can only do so at the cost of a further decline in the prestige of parliamentary institutions in the eyes of the Canadian public, and I do not think we stand very high today. I would suggest to the government that they should accept as their major responsibility today the reinforcement of this focus of our democratic society, this House of Commons chamber.

Mr. Barnett: I do not propose to continue the analysis of the situation which I feel has been ably summed up by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo. Because of the fact that the Minister of Justice has regrettably been absent through illness and because of the fact that the Minister of Labour is absent on a mission, which we hope he will enjoy, in London, I should like to take this opportunity, before the resolution carries, of bringing to the attention of the house a matter which is one of some serious concern in British Columbia at this time. I may not have another suitable opportunity until we reach the details of the estimates of the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour and that may be some time.

I am referring to an investigation which is going on under the Combines Investigation Act into the activities of the fishermen's union of British Columbia. I might recall to the attention of the committee that on May 21, as recorded on page 4115 of Hansard of that date, I asked a question on the orders of the day of the Minister of Justice which was based upon a letter directed to the Minister of Labour, a copy of which I had received prior to asking that question. The Minister of Justice did make a statement which was related to the question arising out of section 4 of the Combines Investigation Act, which says:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

The Minister of Justice went on to point out that the matter was before the courts in British Columbia, inasmuch as the fishermen's union had applied for an injunction restraining the investigation. However, this matter seems to continue to be carried forward and, as I say, is causing quite a bit of concern, particularly in trade union circles in British Columbia.

To point out on what that is based, it might be advisable if I were to draw the attention of the committee to a joint letter which was addressed to the Minister of Labour from the secretary treasurer of the B.C. federation of labour and the B.C. trade union congress, which two bodies are in process of merging as the British Columbia element of the new Canadian Labour Congress. They addressed this letter, dated June 1, to the Minister of Labour, and a copy of it was sent to me:

> Dear Sir,
> We wish to bring to your immediate attention the joint views of the B.C. Trade Union Congress, and the B.C. Federation of Labour, re the investigation now being conducted under the Combines Act into the affairs of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union.
> 1. It is our contention that use of the Combines Act in regard to said union, or any union, is in direct contravention of the original intent of the act.
> 2. That, to preclude such use and abuse of the act, clause 4 was written into said act.
> 3. It is the contention of labour in B.C., that as Minister of Labour, it is your duty to protect any union from such unjust investigation.
> 4. Further, that the act will fall into disrepute, and will fail to fulfil its original intent if we allow it to become a weapon of persecution against the trade union movement to be instigated at the whim of any disgruntled or malicious minority.
> 5. According to our information the action taken by the chairman of the restrictive trade practices commission in instituting this investigation was not mandatory upon him. That he, as a public servant, should take cognizance of the implications and ramifications of his action before instigating such an investigation against a union. That, while his action is unilateral in scope at present, and impinges only against the union, and one primary product, carried to its logical conclusion it would include all unions concerned in primary production, and agricultural production, thus involving all phases of the federal government's own grain prices, and agricultural products price support policy.

The letter concludes by urging the Minister of Labour to intercede on behalf of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union. In this connection I must say that I was very much gratified to see what I considered a forthright statement from the Minister of Fisheries upon this subject, as quoted in The Fisherman, the union's newspaper, under date of May 22, 1956. They reprint in full a copy of a letter which was addressed to their organization by the Minister of Fisheries. In the course of that letter the minister has this to say:

I . . . took it for granted that it (the union) would be excluded under section 4 of the Combines Act.

Perhaps I should report the statement of the minister a little more fully. In part of the letter, he says:

I must confess my own surprise that the method by which the fishing companies and your union negotiate minimum prices at the beginning of a fishing season should be regarded as price fixing within terms of the act. I had always regarded it as exactly similar to wage negotiations between other companies and unions, and understood that the procedure for such negotiations was provided for in the Fisheries Act of British Columbia. I seem to recall that the provincial minister of labour has on at least one occasion acted as mediator in these negotiations. I therefore took for granted that it would be excluded under section 4 which covers union agreements.

The reference to the fact that the minister of labour of British Columbia has acted as conciliator is, I believe, quite correct. Also I might point out that, according to the information I have received, there have been occasions when justices of the province of British Columbia had acted in the same role and that this whole matter, as far as we in British Columbia understand it, has been a well-established practice for a period of the past 20 years or so and has been carried on under the authority of the British Columbia fisheries act. Consequently I think it is very understandable that the central trade union bodies of British Columbia should be gravely concerned at the rather sudden launching of this investigation.

I know when the Minister of Justice replied on May 21—and I have referred to this earlier—he indicated he felt that it was mandatory, when a request was made under section 7 of the Combines Investigation Act, that an investigation should be instituted by the director. Section 7 of the act reads as follows:

Any six persons, Canadian citizens, resident in Canada, of the full age of 21 years, who are of the opinion that an offence has been or is being committed against section 32 or 34 of this act, or section 498 or 498A of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, may apply to the director for an inquiry into such matter, and shall place before the director the evidence on which such opinion is based.

Then subsection 2 goes on to explain that the application must be accompanied by a statement in the form of a statutory declaration. Then section 8 says:

The director shall
(a) on application made under section 7—

Then it goes on to explain that the director can also do it on his own initiative or under the direction of the minister.

—cause an inquiry to be made into all such matters as he considers necessary to inquire into with the view of determining the facts.

It would appear from the way the act stands at the present time that certain action is mandatory as far as the director is concerned. But I would respectfully suggest that there is room for a good deal of discretion to be exercised by the director under the terms of section 8 of the act as to the type of inquiry that he initiates under certain conditions. It does seem to me that in view of the existence of section 4 of the act the director could very well have met the conditions required to be met by him under section 8 when he received an application made under section 7 by satisfying himself that the issue concerned was the proper activities carried on by a trade union in the protection of the workmen engaged in that industry, and that could have been done without taking the steps that have been taken in entering the union's premises and abstracting their documents and records.

It does seem to me that the union, in some of the correspondence they have sent to me and I think to a number of other members of the house, have made a good point when they state that their agreements made between themselves and the fishing companies of British Columbia are matters of public record, that they are on file with the Department of Labour in Ottawa and also with the department of labour in Victoria, and that it should have been possible for the director to carry on an investigation which would have satisfied him that the union was in fact carrying on its normal activities as a union organization under the particular conditions prevailing in that industry, without having to go into a full-scale inquiry.

That may be a point that can be argued. As hon. members know, I am not one who is learned in the law, but I would submit on the basis of what has been happening that if it is mandatory upon the director under the present law to engage in the kind of inquiry into the activities of a trade union which has been made in these circumstances, serious consideration should be given to changing the law to provide the kind of protection that I believe was in mind when section 4 was written into the Combines Investigation Act. I think either that is the case, or the discretion exercised by the director of the Combines Investigation Act in approaching this problem is open to question.

As I explained at the outset, Mr. Chairman, because of the fact that I felt it might be some time before I could properly raise this question on the particular estimates of an individual department I thought I should like to put this plea before the house this afternoon.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, this resolution offers an opportunity to draw the minister's attention to a certain action of his or rather lack of action which is causing considerable uncertainty and some unrest to a large and important segment of the business community of Canada. The situation has arisen in this way. On March 20, when the Minister of Finance brought down his budget, he announced the proposed imposition, provided the house would agree to it, of a 20 per cent tax on the advertising revenue of Canadian editions of United States magazines. Having made that announcement he took no further steps in that direction, and has consistently refused to give the house any indication as to when this legislation will be brought before us for discussion or when a final decision on it will be reached by the house.

Twice in the intervening months, and there have been three intervening months since then, from March 20 to April 20, from April 20 to May 20 and from May 20 to June 20, he has been questioned on the matter. The first time was on April 12, when he said he had received certain representations in connection with this legislation. He stated then, as found at page 2852 of Hansard:

> All of these representations are of course being considered by the government and will be dealt with when we reach the resolution stage.

Just a few days ago, on June 15, the Minister of Finance would give no clear-cut indication as to when we would reach the resolution stage on his budget resolutions so we could deal with this particular item, and when he was asked about the 20 per cent tax he said, as found at page 5061 of Hansard:

> I have made no announcement and would not do so until that time, sir.

It may seem to the minister and to the majority of the cabinet, who have been out of touch with the administration of a normal business operation for a good many years—in fact I doubt if some of them have ever been in touch with it—that when a decision is reached as to the imposition of a tax the point at which it is reached has no bearing on business plans whatsoever, provided that the tax is not imposed retroactively. My principal reason for rising this afternoon is to point out to the minister that in a case such as this uncertainties do arise from the time the tax is announced as a proposed imposition until it is finally endorsed by the house, if it is endorsed, and in that period there is great difficulty for business because of the uncertainty under which it must operate. I think the minister himself recognized that to some extent when he brought down his budget resolutions in their initial stage, because at that time he said with reference to this tax, as found at page 2334 of Hansard:

> It will not come into effect until January 1, 1957, so that those concerned may have time to adapt their affairs to it.

It is the final words in that sentence—"so that those concerned may have time to adapt their affairs to it"—which are important. At that point the minister gave some recognition to the fact that it is necessary to adjust one's affairs to certain types and levels of taxation. That is particularly so in a case such as this.

The minister should realize that while he may plan to impose his tax on January 1, 1957, that is not necessarily the time at which many business firms will make their decisions which are affected by the tax. Many organizations in this country establish an advertising budget period of one year, and they make their plans for the entire year in advance. In a great many cases that period starts in the fall. The result is that during the summer months—during the period in which we are now right through into August and September—corporations and advertising agencies and media suppliers across this country are all engaged in planning ahead. The media suppliers are engaged in selling their space. The advertisers and the agencies are engaged in deciding which media they will use, how much of each and in what form.

The tax to which I refer—without discussing its merits at this point, because that can better be done when the resolution is before this house—will have a great effect upon these particular plans. If it is to be a 20 per cent tax it is quite likely that the advertising rates of certain magazines will adjust themselves in accordance therewith. If, as is quite possible in view of the representations made to him and in view of the arguments made in the early days of April in this house, the minister is going to adjust his plans and reduce the tax or eliminate it completely, it will affect the entire advertising pattern of many of the major industries here in Canada.

At the moment, Mr. Chairman, all these organizations are completely unaware of what the government's plans may be. They know that the minister announced a 20 per cent tax on the advertising revenue of Canadian editions of American magazines. They also know that very strong, definite, well-substantiated and intelligent representations have been made to him, both in this house and outside it, which might very well lead him to adjust that tax downward or to eliminate it entirely. They know that the minister has evaded and sidestepped any inquiries in this house as to what may be his course of action.

Frankly, I am glad to see him sidestep, because I think it may indicate that he is coming to his senses, and that he realizes that he was led part way down the garden path by those who suggested that this tax be imposed. But be that as it may, that uncertainty exists and is going to exist until such time as this house resolves, through its action, the course which the government will be empowered to take.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is unfair to the business of this country to expect it to continue for two, three or four months in a condition of uncertainty brought about through no other reason than the government's fumbling and stumbling, and its unawareness of the normal operating methods of the business community of Canada.

I feel that it is a wise thing and a good thing that following the announcement of a proposed taxation policy or budget there should be an interim period in which business organizations and all those others who are affected may have the opportunity to make representations to the minister. I suggest that a normal period of that type might be some two or three weeks. But if within that period those organizations have not come forward and made their representations, I for one am not prepared to worry too much about them. It is their responsibility to get up here to Ottawa with great rapidity once they know the taxation pattern of the government, and to present their views on the subject to the government and to whatever members of this house they may wish to select.

Then it is the government's responsibility to examine those views. Then—and rapidly—it is the government's responsibility to bring to this house their definite final conclusions, to offer this house the opportunity to debate them, and to facilitate this house passing either the government's proposals or whatever amendments may be made to them by the house into the law of the country so that business knows where it stands.

As to this type of situation, I have picked out one specific instance, namely the advertising tax, because I am reasonably familiar with that field and because I know the uncertainties which the lack of action of the government are causing. This type of uncertainty seems to exist continuously in a great many fields as a result of announcing activities and then letting them hang around indefinitely.

As has been suggested many times, I think you must get your legislative pattern into the books early in the year. Some of it is going to have to be delayed. We admit that. But in the case of the budget, the thing that strikes right at the very vitals of the business economy of this country, I think it is the responsibility of the minister to stop horsing around, to stop living in his ivory tower so far removed from the everyday realities of the business man who must eventually pay his taxes, and to try to understand in some small way the difficulties which he is unnecessarily putting in the path of business in this country.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I should like to use this opportunity afforded by the introduction of the interim supply resolution to bring a matter to the attention of the government. I had anticipated bringing this subject up at a later period for discussion, particularly under the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It seems, however, that discussion of this department's affairs might be delayed somewhat, and I feel the subject is of sufficient urgency to merit the immediate consideration of the government.

It does not concern the subject of the rights of parliament, which was raised earlier in the discussion today. It does, however, concern the matter of the rights of a private citizen, who happens to be living in my constituency. The name of the gentleman concerned is August Fontana, who until the year 1940 operated a farm near the town of Virden in the province of Manitoba. Mr. Fontana was an immigrant from Italy to Canada, in the latter part of the last century. He became a naturalized citizen in 1903. After much hard work and careful saving, he was able to gather together sufficient money to purchase a half section of land in the Virden area. As I have indicated, he worked that land as a farm until the year 1940. During the period he established a solid reputation for himself and the members of his family in the district. Altogether 10 children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Fontana, seven of whom still survive.

Now, it has been brought to my attention, as it has been to the attention of other hon. members of the house, that a grave injustice has been done to this particular individual either by accident or by intent. I feel sincerely it deserves the attention of the ministers of the crown at this time. Around about August 20, 1940, I believe Mr. Fontana was approached by one named Clifford Johnston, who at that time was a land inspector for the Canadian National Railways. I believe

Mr. Johnston was representing the Department of Transport and was canvassing Mr. Fontana to see if that gentleman would be willing to turn his farm over for use as an airfield under the commonwealth air training plan. Expropriation action, I understand, was taken; but before that proceeded Mr. Fontana, being a loyal and responsible Canadian, was quite happy to transfer the land for the patriotic purpose of making possible the establishment of an airfield in this particular area. The transfer procedure took place. The necessary deeds were registered in the land titles office of the town of Virden. Shortly after the Fontana farm became an elementary flying school under the commonwealth air training plan.

The difficulty concerning this transaction has arisen over the mineral rights. There was no specific mention of expropriating or transferring the mineral rights under the action that was necessary in transferring these lands to the crown. I find Mr. Fontana made no specific reference to the mineral rights. However, Mr. Johnston, the agent who represented the crown, as indicated in the petition that has come into the hands of all hon. members, specified that he definitely informed Mr. Fontana that the government would not be requiring the mineral rights.

Mr. Lesage: Oh, no.

Mr. Dinsdale: They were interested only in the surface rights, and that of course is obvious because the land was to be used for an airport and the mineral rights had no specific function in the operation of the property as an airport.

At the time Mr. Fontana had been taking gravel from the farm, and he received permission to continue the removal of certain quantities of gravel from the property that had been formerly his. Gravel, of course, is classified as a mineral in Manitoba. The total price for the transaction was $9,000, and that represents $28 per acre. This was the going price for farm land in August of 1940. The price certainly does not include any compensation for the mineral rights.

In August, 1954, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources inserted an advertisement in the Virden Empire-Advance, as well as in other newspapers, inviting tenders for the purchase of a lease of the petroleum and natural gas rights which underlie this particular parcel of land under discussion here this afternoon. Several offers were received. One was an offer of $200,000 in cash, a royalty of 12·5 per cent and an annual rental of $1 per acre per year. Now, that is a fairly substantial return for the $9,000 invested, and by that action the government was indicating it was no longer interested in any claim that Mr. Fontana had as the former owner of this parcel of land. Mr. Fontana's legal advisers immediately placed a caveat against the land and there, I believe, is where the matter stands at the moment.

The legal advisers also commenced proceedings in the Exchequer Court of Canada. According to the petition that has come into our hands, an approach was made to the Exchequer Court of Canada on February 8, 1954, alleging:

> (a) That your petitioner was never compensated in any way for the alleged loss of his minerals;
> (b) That it was not the intention of your petitioner to part with, nor the intention of the crown to acquire the mines and minerals;
> (c) That in the result the crown was being unjustly enriched at the expense of your petitioner;
> (d) That the crown should be declared to be a trustee of the mines and minerals.

The petition goes on to say further:

> That the crown immediately launched a motion in court to strike out the petition on the ground that it was frivolous, vexatious and an abuse of the court's process, and the crown succeeded in that motion. A subsequent appeal by your petitioner to the Supreme Court of Canada met a like fate.

I want to emphasize the point that the merits of the case were never discussed, merely the motion that Mr. Fontana's appeal to the courts was frivolous, vexatious and an abuse of the court's process. There has never been any court hearing on the merits of this particular case. I think that is very important in view of the events that have transpired since that time.

Section 24 of the Expropriation Act, chapter 64 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, says:

> Whenever, from time to time, or at any time before the compensation money has been actually paid, any parcel of land taken for a public work, or any portion of such parcel, is found to be unnecessary for the purposes of such public work, or if it is found that a more limited estate or interest therein only is required, the minister may, by writing under his hand, declare that the land or such portion thereof is not required and is abandoned by the crown, or that it is intended to retain only such limited estate or interest as is mentioned in such writing.

Subsection 2 of section 24 reads:

> Upon such writing being registered in the office of the registrar of deeds for the county or registration division in which the land is situate, such land declared to be abandoned shall revest in the person from whom it was taken or in those entitled to claim under him.

Subsection 3 of section 24 reads:

> In the event of a limited estate or interest therein being retained by the crown, the land shall so revest subject to the estate or interest so retained.

Subsection 4 of section 24 reads:

The fact of such abandonment or revesting shall be taken into account, in connection with all the other circumstances of the case, in estimating or assessing the amount to be paid to any person claiming compensation for the land taken.

Under the Canadian expropriation law it is clearly stated that Mr. Fontana has a definite claim of continued interest in this land which was expropriated for war purposes. The petitioner has made his appeal to what we might call the last court of appeal, the parliament of Canada, which seeks to protect the rights of the individual citizen. Because he has been frustrated in seeking recourse through legal channels he has brought his petition to the House of Commons.

There is a precedent for this type of case in the mother of parliaments at Westminster in the famous Crichel Down case. It was written up in book form and has become somewhat of a classic. The Crichel Down case arose out of certain expropriation actions that took place in the old country in order to meet the demands of war.

As a result of Mr. Down's appeal to parliament the land which had been taken to establish a bombing range was revested in the original owner. It had been kicked around by government officials for some considerable time and had been removed entirely from any claim of ownership by the farmer, Mr. Down, and had been made into a solid parcel of land operated by the land ministry. Mr. Down brought his appeal to the House of Commons at Westminster through his member. There was a public inquiry, and as a result of that inquiry he received once again complete ownership of the land. I understand the minister concerned found it necessary to resign because of the nature of the proceedings that had taken place that had deprived Mr. Down of his normal claim to this property.

In the debate on the subject in the British House of Commons which took place on July 20, 1954, as recorded at page 1296 of the British Hansard, Sir D. Maxwell Fyfe said:

Every citizen of good will will see his land go in time of emergency for government requirements with as much good will as he can muster—

Certainly that applies to Mr. Fontana, a Canadian citizen of Italian descent, who in every respect has made an outstanding contribution to this country and to his community. When he was approached by Mr. Johnston there was no hesitancy at all in his letting the land go to meet the exigency of war. Continuing with Sir D. Maxwell Fyfe's remarks:

—but it is taken for a specific purpose, for a specific need of the state. When that purpose is exhausted, when that need is past, what is wrong, on any consideration of morality or justice, in allowing the person from whom the land was taken to have the chance of getting it back.

In the Crichel Down case only surface rights were concerned, and the surface rights were revested in the original owner. Mr. Fontana is not interested in the surface rights. The town of Virden is operating this particular piece of property as a flying club at the moment, and the crown is renting the property for that purpose. Despite the fact it is operated as a flying club only the mineral rights are involved. There has never been any specific need for the crown to usurp the mineral rights, which would still be in Mr. Fontana's possession had there been no war and had Mr. Fontana not been forced to turn over the land for the war emergency by the threat of expropriation proceedings.

I am not making this appeal from the standpoint of legal rights. I am making this appeal from the standpoint of very deep and sincere moral obligation. There is a genuine moral obligation involved in this case. The crown is receiving an advantage that was never intended and for which Mr. Fontana was never compensated in any shape or form. I suggest to this committee, Mr. Chairman, that is a violation of the rights of a private citizen of Canada. Revestment of the surface rights of the land is not possible, but under section 24 of the Expropriation Act reconveyance of the mineral rights is certainly quite possible. It is within the power of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to undertake that reconveyance, and certainly it is within the power of the government to compensate this very worthy Canadian citizen for the wrong which has been done.

All he has ever asked for in any action taken is that he be restored to a position of equality with his neighbours who were not asked to give up their land for the purposes of establishing an airport, and who are today enjoying all the rights and privileges and advantages of owning land in an area which has become a rich oil-bearing area. He is merely asking for simple justice, equality with his neighbours. He could have been enjoying that equality, he could have been enjoying that right had he not been sufficiently patriotic to yield to the demands of the emergency back in 1940.

I do not know whether this matter has ever been considered in cabinet council, but it seems to me that it is a case deserving of such consideration. If there is any sense of moral obligation, if there is any sense of justice, then this case demands the urgent attention of the ministers of the crown. Failing that, then, as was done in Crichel Downs case in the old country, this citizen as a free citizen of Canada deserves the privilege of having the merits of his case presented at a public hearing.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the request made to the committee by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. At the outset perhaps I should say that unlike the hon. member I am not personally acquainted with the party concerned. He does not live in my constituency, but there is a principle involved which I think goes much further than any individual case. I think it is from that point of view that my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, approaches this matter.

I note from the petition he quoted that the gentleman to whom he has referred, Mr. Fontana, came to Canada at the age of 21 and settled near Virden, Manitoba, some number of years ago. As was the case with many other immigrants who arrived in Canada years ago and were of more or less adult age, he did not have the opportunity or the free time to become educated. In many cases it was difficult for these people to even learn to read or write. That may not seem like a strong argument for what I am about to say, but it is something which those of us who have had the advantage of learning, the advantage of getting some sort of education, should always bear in mind. There are many thousands of people in this country who have made a great contribution to this nation through their work, through their production, and because of the families they have raised, who did not have the advantages which were open to those of us who were younger. That is one reason we as representatives in this parliament of the people generally should give a sympathetic ear when some person in that category feels that injustice is being done.

On June 12 last I addressed a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with regard to this matter, and then on the following day I wrote a letter to him setting out some of the considerations with regard to this case. I am glad the opportunity has now arisen to place the matter before members of this house in a more formal manner.

It seems quite clear from a reading of the petition which was sent to most members, and of the copy of the resolution passed at a public meeting on April 21 this year, and of the letter which accompanied the petition written by Mr. Riley, who apparently was acting for Mr. Fontana, that several things stand out. First is the fact that the land was required for the purpose of an airport. The government was not desirous of acquiring a piece of land for the purpose of speculation or with any thought of making a profit from the transaction. It was during an emergency when the government approached this farmer and asked him for the use of his land for war purposes, of course with compensation. For that reason alone I think it is quite clear that there was no intention on the part of the government to acquire anything more than surface rights and those for a specific purpose for a specific length of time, for the duration of the war.

Second, the compensation paid is clear indication that any other values or rights than the use of the surface of this half section were not a consideration. I was not in the real estate business in 1940, but I have been in it for quite a number of years since. I am thoroughly familiar with land values, not only in my own part of the province but in the area concerned. Certainly no one could argue that a half section of land in the vicinity of Virden which was sold for a consideration of $9,000 was being sold for anything but the surface use. It was not an excessive price; in my opinion it was quite a moderate price.

Third, it is now clear that by fortuitous circumstances the government stand to gain approximately $200,000 or some larger undetermined amount if they go ahead and accept the offer which has been made by an oil company, for which they paid no compensation. It could amount to a great deal more than that, but in any event it is in the vicinity of $200,000.

With these facts before us I think this committee should give consideration to the petition which has been presented. There is also the fact that the gentleman to whom the hon. member for Brandon-Souris referred, Mr. Johnston, who apparently acted for the crown in negotiating this purchase, wrote a letter dated December 6, 1955 addressed to D. O. Owens, Q.C., regional counsel, Canadian National Railways, Winnipeg, Manitoba, which I think should be placed on the record so we may know what we are referring to. The letter reads:

Dear Sir:

W 1/2 35-10-26-W 1st—Virden Airfield
August Fontana

I have read over the petition being presented on behalf of August Fontana in connection with the purchase of the above mentioned acreage in 1940 by the crown for airfield purposes; also statutory declarations by Jack Fontana, August Fontana and Deno Fontana, and to the best of my recollection believe the statements to be true.

I pause there for a moment to point out that he makes the definite statement that after carefully examining the statements made in the petition and the declarations accompanying it he believes those statements to be true. He was the one most intimately concerned in these negotiations. I continue:

> At that time mineral rights were not considered of any particular value and were not a factor in arriving at a valuation for the acreage. Some mention was made of sand and gravel and, to the best of my recollection, Mr. Fontana had promised delivery of some sand or gravel and it was suggested he had better remove same before acceptance of his offer to sell by the crown.
> Yours truly,
> C. Johnston.

The important parts of that letter, in my opinion, are the ones I have already mentioned; that in his opinion the statements contained in the petition are true and, second, that at the time of arriving at a valuation of the land, mineral rights were not considered. Under those circumstances the gentleman who represented the crown in the negotiations is giving us primary evidence that the mineral rights were not a consideration and therefore, of course, no compensation was paid for them in that sense.

I suppose the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources could argue as a lawyer that since Mr. Fontana signed an agreement under which he surrendered his interests in that parcel of land, even without any specific mention of mineral rights, by doing so he gave up all his interest in that land. I am not going into a long argument on the legal aspects of that position.

He could probably also argue that the courts would agree with his view. Apparently the courts have ruled that the claim should not be received, but I would point out that the reason this claim comes before this committee at all is that there is something much more than the legal considerations involved. Even if the minister were to argue that this has been before the courts and the courts have ruled that the gentleman in question has no claim, may I remind him that that has not always been the end of the line. Not so long ago on two occasions in this house I had to question the actions of the government in making certain remissions of taxation to certain corporations in the province of Quebec after the exchequer court had ruled that those remissions should not be made. In the wisdom or otherwise of the cabinet, the government decided otherwise. In fact they argued that there were other considerations than the strictly legal ones involved.

I should certainly think that, if the government is willing to make a concession to wealthy corporations, which after all are not in any great need of these tax remissions that run collectively in the neighbourhood of $6 million, then in the case of a family that has contributed to the welfare of this country, the gentleman himself being now 86 years of age, desirous of leaving a little nest egg for those who are inheriting his property when he passes on, certainly the government could lean over to the side of generosity. I am sure there would not be a word of criticism from anyone in this committee nor from anyone in the country if they were to pay that amount, even if the legality of the claim is in doubt. There is a moral obligation on the part of the crown to compensate the man who was the owner of these valuable mineral rights with which he parted without his knowledge.

If the feelings in the community of Virden, where after all the people are best acquainted with the circumstances and with the gentleman concerned, are any indication of how it would be taken by the public generally, I think the government has a clear duty to give sympathetic and favourable consideration to this petition. Perhaps it would be wise to place on the record also a resolution that was passed on April 21, 1956, in Legion Hall, Virden, Manitoba, by the citizens of that community. I might note that this was unanimously passed at this public gathering. Here is the text of that resolution:

> Whereas the west half section 35-10-26-W1st, Manitoba, was during the fall of 1940 expropriated by the government of Canada for an airport (or purchased under threat of compulsion) from August Fontana under circumstances in which it is now clear that the mineral rights underlying the same were never bought, were never intended to be bought, and were never paid for, and the said Fontana remains and is the true owner thereof notwithstanding that by a mistake or accident or inadvertence in the conveyancing the title to the said mineral rights became vested in the crown in the right of the Dominion of Canada.
> And whereas it also now appears that the said government of Canada proposes to retain and maintain the said airport for future purposes and that in order to do so the development and operation of underlying minerals may be carried out without interfering in any way with the operation of the said airport in accordance with the regulations pertaining to the same.
> Now therefore we, the citizens and ratepayers of Manitoba, having heard the situation and the history of this case fully explained in a public meeting and being convinced beyond all question that the said August Fontana is the true owner of the said mineral rights and being desirous of expressing to the government as such citizens, that we would greatly deplore any action or lack of action by the said government that would deprive the said Fontana of his just rights:
> We do hereby petition and request the said government and the minister having jurisdiction in the matter, that the said mineral rights be restored to said August Fontana and that advantage be taken of the provisions of the Expropriation Act, being chapter 64 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, which applied at the time of the said expropriation, and particularly section 24 thereof, and that the same be invoked to do justice to the said Fontana and to enable him to receive back the title to the said mineral rights.
> Respectfully submitted

It is signed by the chairman and secretary of the meeting. On the basis of the strict wording contained in this resolution I can immediately see a few loopholes, in that the minister might be tempted to point out that certain statements are made which are not supported in the resolution itself by any evidence. But, apart altogether from that, in view of the fact that the government, without going out deliberately to make a property purchase which involved the rights of mineral exploitation, happened to receive a piece of property which contains those mineral rights and were in line to benefit to the extent of about $200,000, what would be wrong with this parliament giving consideration to this request?

If the government feels that it cannot go the whole way and cannot revest the rights in the original owner, then perhaps it could suggest a compromise. I am sure those who are concerned are reasonable people and would be willing to give consideration to any reasonable proposal, but certainly the government should not simply slam the door in the face of a citizen and say, "Because, on a strictly technical and legal basis, you signed an agreement by virtue of which you signed away the interest in your property, then we have nothing more to consider," and turn their back on his claims. I think that would be morally wrong, and it would be setting a very bad example.

I think this is a case where the government would be very well advised to lean to the side of generosity. As I said at the beginning, there is a principle involved. This is not the only person in the province of Manitoba, or probably in Canada, who may be faced in the future with a similar situation. I know there will not be a large number of such cases, or we hope there will not, but there will be other cases. I hope the government, by turning down this case, by shutting the door and turning their back, will not say they have created a precedent upon which they cannot go back. I hope when the next one comes along they will not say, "We could not do it for Mr. Fontana; therefore we cannot do it for you." Let us start off on the right foot this time. Let us do something for a worthy cause, and then we will leave the door open for the future to give sympathetic consideration if and when the situation arises.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I regret that it is necessary for me to say a few words at this point. I appreciate the consideration that has been given by the opposition groups to the request for interim supply and their assurance that it would be granted. Some of the remarks that have been made have been, shall I say, of a grievance nature, but that is a matter of opinion. I can assure hon. members, in particular the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and the hon. member for Dauphin, who have spoken on one particular matter, that it will receive serious consideration and an answer will be given at the appropriate time.

I should also like to refer to what was said by the hon. member for Lethbridge and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I am sure the latter would expect the Minister of Justice to deal at some length with the question he raised on his estimates when he is back in the house, and I will bring that to his attention. The earlier part of the debate, however, was of a nature that I do not think I need say very much about, except that I am gratified at the attention paid to my modest effort on the radio last Friday night. I have nothing to add to that except to make a brief reference to the suggestions made by both the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Prince Albert, and in particular the conclusion of the hon. member for Prince Albert when he suggested some form of collaboration. He used the word himself, and I did not recall that the Leader of the Opposition had used it. Just by way of answer to whatever was said with respect to me during that time, I should like to put on the record again what I said on June 8, as found at page 4851 of Hansard:

> May I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, to deny at this point—
> May I interject that was the earliest time at which I could rise.
> —that I at any time influenced the Speaker in any manner whatsoever in the course of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

235. To provide for the Canadian forces, the defence research board and other expenditures relating to defence, including contributions toward the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; to authorize expenditures in the current year out of the amount hereby provided, not exceeding $143,000,000, under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and to provide that, notwithstanding subsection (3) of that section, where equipment or supplies are transferred, the estimated present value thereof shall be credited to this vote instead of being paid into the special account mentioned in the said subsection (3), and when so credited may be expended for the purposes of the Canadian forces; and notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize total commitments for the foregoing purposes of $3,470,423,461 regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,675,484,744 will come due for payment in future years), $1,722,797,717.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I might say that this is very much like coming to bat in every inning so far as this debate is concerned, and I would say that even if I take my full time I will still have another inning coming to me. Therefore it will be very difficult for me to carry on with, shall I say, any follow-through in connection with the remarks I started last night.

Perhaps, however, I might be allowed to summarize some of the things I said at that time. I said first of all that I was somewhat surprised that so little concern was shown on the other side of the house about an expenditure of $1,775 million. I also referred to the extreme interest that was shown during the pipe-line debate by all parties, by the galleries and by the press, when we were discussing an expenditure of only about $200 million. I think I also said that the government indicated that they hoped to get it all back. I said that up until that time yesterday, however, we had had a speech from only one other member of the government outside of the minister. As I was saying that I heard a remark in the distance "Give us a chance".

Mr. Chairman, those gentlemen are going to get the chance, but I wonder just what their interest is in this matter. When they get the chance—and I am assuming they are going to wait for the detailed estimates—I wonder whether they are going to tell us about some article like the coat of arms that needs replacing in the armoury at Podunk Centre or some place like that, or whether they are really interested in a complete and over-all defence policy which must be laid down sooner or later by this government.

I said—and I repeat it—that it was most difficult for us over here to break through and get the information we required. The chief reason was that it is a very illusory opponent with whom we must grapple. I said as well—and General Simonds referred to this matter—that there is a hard crust of experts who surround the minister and who are responsible for bringing in each year the items which are mentioned in this book. I think I should mention again that there is every appearance that the formula used is to arrive at a total figure which the government think they can get through the house, and then work back from the bottom of their work sheet to the top and reconcile the individual items with that total amount.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I quoted one example, and I recall that after I had spoken one of the members from the Waterloo area said to me, "That is the way business must be done; this is only an estimate of what we are going to use for this year". Mr. Chairman, how can we honestly back up an estimate—at a time when we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars—when the estimate comes out each time almost identical in amount with that which was spent in the previous year? I referred the other day to a specific item in these estimates—I think it is to be found at page 337—dealing with the repair of aircraft engines, where the total amount is approximately $119 million. I found that the sharp pencils this year have come practically to the same conclusion, dollarwise, as they came to last year; the amount of the estimate is practically the same. It seems to me that these are things that should be examined by a committee qualified to do that particular type of work.

Since I last spoke the Prime Minister has been on his feet. He is going away to a commonwealth conference. He was asked by my leader what commitments he could make to the house before he left on the calling of a defence committee here to review these expenditures. I think these are the answers he gave. He said this was not going to be possible because our constitution is quite different from the constitution in the United States, where such a committee is used. He said that all the expenditures in connection with the carrying out of the work of our armed forces in this country are recommended by the governor general. Then he said that in the United States the policy is to have these recommendations come from an estimates committee of the two houses.

Surely those are not adequate reasons for refusing to constitute a committee which for the first time could look behind the large and generous amounts that are set aside for this purpose. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are going along a road that has no turning. Up to this point we have never been allowed to get the information which the Canadian public deserves in connection with these amounts. If we approach too close to forbidden territory we are told by the minister that this is classified material, that this is an amount which cannot be discussed further because it will not be in the public interest to do so. Yet as I said last year, and I say it again this year, in connection with some of the information and in fact practically all the information that we are refused in this house, you can wait six or seven months and, if you follow the course of the news magazines, you can find the very answers that have been refused to us on the floor of the house.

Surely there is no longer reason to refuse us the actual unit cost of an aircraft or the actual unit cost of an engine for an aircraft. Surely there is no longer reason to refuse us the comparative figures in connection with what is paid for an article of that kind in this country and what is paid for an article of a similar nature in another country. Surely there is no reason for not giving us exact figures on the number of aircraft which have been produced. As a matter of fact, as I recall it, in connection with the CF-100 we were unable to get specific figures on the production schedule or the number of planes which have been produced. Yet the other day I read in the Montreal Gazette a complete breakdown showing how many planes had been produced. We can tie that information in, then, with the number that are operational.

When I think of the remarks made by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace last night I am wondering whether this refusal to give this information was not because of a dancing class mentality. That dancing class mentality is one which permits the expenditure of money for items which are not in fact contributing to the carrying out of an over-all defence policy, while at the same time we may be skimping on other items of an urgent nature.

I think the government must take the blame for the situation in which we find ourselves. I believe the people have reached the point where they feel that large expenditures of money on this type of equipment have in fact brought them along the road toward the achievement of a high standard of living, and they may be reluctant to turn back and examine them in detail. I believe that feeling has been enhanced, has been furthered, by the government; and behind it and keeping it high is a group who perhaps got their basic training during the period of depression, when one of their main objectives was to ensure that every article they could possibly squeeze out would be obtained for the particular branch of the forces they represented. As a matter of fact, at that time it may have been a very laudable effort on their part, but now that it has been carried forward into this period of inflation it may, in fact, cost us millions of dollars which are not required.

I wonder, sir, if at this time we can just take for granted everything which is set out in the white paper. It seems to me that a halt must be called at some stage, and we must ask the minister to back up the statements which are contained in this booklet. Surely parliament is entitled to some proof of the background that goes into the making up of this annual statement. I find it difficult to understand how the Prime Minister can go away at this time, with no commitments as to the calling of a committee such as has been suggested by my leader, in the face of these charges which have been published in various periodicals by the ex-chief of the general staff.

As I said yesterday, we do not have to say that these statements are true in order to call for the forming of that committee. Here is one man who should have known what the situation was and is in connection with our armed forces. Here is the only outside evidence that to date we in the opposition can look to as indicating what may be wrong in our armed forces. Yet the Prime Minister can say there are two or three differences between the system we have and the system in the United States which preclude the opposition from benefiting from the evidence of experts such as these.

Let us not make any mistake about it. While I was talking here last night we were having distributed about 250,000 copies of the Toronto Evening Telegram. In that newspaper there is almost a full page story by the retiring adjutant general on the sad state of the militia. Here is a second potent condemnation of the policy of this government in connection with defence matters.

I said last night that I would have preferred, sir, if the matters of principle which are set out in these articles had been great enough to the gentleman in question to mention during their tenure of office. Even though I may feel that way, that does not mean these conditions do not exist. Perhaps these same men—and we will be anxiously awaiting an answer from the minister—have made recommendations as set out here and their wishes have not been followed. We shall never know the truth or falsehood of those allegations without the committee that has been suggested. I am only going to refer to them very briefly, but I think they should be recorded in Hansard in the short form in which they appear in the Maclean's magazine article by Lieutenant General Simonds. I think they might be recorded point by point:

1. There is no co-ordinated effort to evolve a sound and comprehensive defence policy.

2. The Canadian chiefs of staff committee is "packed" to protect the government against the receipt of unpalatable advice.

3. Senior civil servants can, by deliberate and unwarranted stalling, defeat the recommendations of the armed forces even though those recommendations have been approved by the cabinet.

4. The . . . chiefs of the three armed services are denied an opportunity to confront those responsible for political decisions with objective military advice.

5. Certain politicians . . . have raised the bogey of a so-called military "junta" attempting to usurp political powers. Such fantasies . . . represent one of the most outrageous hoaxes ever inflicted upon an unsuspecting public and Canadian political twisting at its worst and most degrading.

6. There is no facet of our national affairs in which the stamp of a colonial mentality remains so deeply embedded as in that of our national defence.

These charges are going to require a lot of explaining. It seems to me, sir, that on this occasion we will require primary evidence, not hearsay. It will no longer be possible to get by on the production of a certificate signed by the minister.

May I call it five o'clock?

HAROLD BARNES

The house in committee on Bill No. 425, for the relief of Harold Barnes—Mr. Henderson—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, this is another bill that originates in the province of Newfoundland. The petitioner is from the village of Corner Brook, and I notice that both the petitioner and the co-respondent appeared before the Senate committee.

Some hon. Members: The city of Corner Brook.

Mr. Nicholson: It says the village of Corner Brook here.

Mr. Byrne: It is not out in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Stick: You should know your geography a bit better.

Mr. Knowles: Blame the Senate.

Mr. Nicholson: It reads:

In the matter of the petition of Harold Barnes, of the village of Corner Brook, in the province of Newfoundland; praying for the passage of an act to dissolve his marriage with Edna Barry Barnes, of the village of Stephenville, in the said province.

Mr. Chairman, this is another of the unfortunate cases which come to our attention every time we consider these bills. There is a little boy involved in this case. He has been passed from his mother to his father. I think hon. members of this chamber and of the other place really should not be called upon to take action in cases where small children are concerned. Surely there must be a better way in which to handle these problems than to bring a petitioner all the way from Corner Brook, Newfoundland to the Senate chamber, and to have the co-respondent appear and give evidence in the same room.

I am not in a position to question the accuracy or inaccuracy of the statements made by either the co-respondent or the petitioner, but I do feel that before many months elapse we should find some better way to handle these cases. I hope the chairman of the committee on miscellaneous private bills, the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill, before the end of the session will bring in some recommendations with a view to relieving hon. members of this house of the responsibility of deciding whether or not there has been collusion in these cases, and whether or not having the co-respondent and petitioner appear simultaneously is the best way to handle these problems.

NIAGARA LOWER ARCH BRIDGE COMPANY LIMITED

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls) moved the second reading of Bill No. 434, respecting the Niagara Lower Arch Bridge Company Limited.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are two important reasons why this bill is being brought before this honourable house, and I pray the indulgence of the house to make a brief explanation of the bill itself and to give a short outline of the history of the bridge.

This act respecting the Niagara Lower Arch Bridge Company Limited is similar to an act respecting the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company, which was passed through this house in February, 1953.

This federal act is necessary because the bridge is international, and simply corrects a technicality in the company's charter. The import of this bill is that the company is authorized and empowered to sell, assign, transfer and convey to any company, body or commission its bridge, the approaches thereto, all appurtenant structures, works, undertakings, franchises, privileges, powers, rights and property, real, personal, and mixed so far as the same are located within Canada, possessed by, vested in or to it belonging or heretofore possessed by vested in or belonging to The Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Company. However, may I state that any assignment, transfer or conveyance must first be approved by the holders of two-thirds of the shares at a special general meeting of the shareholders, duly called for the purpose of considering this sale.

Although there is no question as to the validity of the company's title to its undertaking, doubts have arisen as to its power to convey its undertaking, and more particularly to convey its franchise to operate a bridge and collect tolls thereon. Naturally, the purpose of this proposed act is to remove any such doubts.

I would now like to say a few words about the history of the bridge. In 1844 the Hon. William Hamilton Merritt of St. Catharines, who was one of the builders of the original Welland canal, conceived the idea of bridging the Niagara river near the falls. In the year 1846 an act of parliament of the province of Canada was passed incorporating the Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Company. There were ten original petitioners for incorporation. In the same year the Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Company was incorporated by special act of the legislature of the state of New York. By 1848 a wooden bridge was in operation across the river.

About this time railway building was becoming very active in southern Ontario. By a special act the company was given certain rights to erect a railway bridge. In 1853, the rights granted under the act having been allowed to lapse, a further act was passed increasing the capitalization of the company to provide for the erection of a steel bridge capable of carrying a railway. The new bridge was finally built, and certain agreements between the Canadian and American bridge companies and the Great Western Railway Company were entered into and were confirmed in 1875 by an act of the parliament of the Dominion of Canada.

By 1894 trains had increased in size and weight and it was found necessary to make extensive structural alterations to the bridge. In order to finance this, yet another act was passed authorizing the issue of bonds and debentures. In 1919 further extensive work was done on the bridge structure, but this time no legislation was needed. In 1929 the bridge company was reincorporated under the provisions of the first part of the Companies Act.

The bridge company pays it full share of municipal taxes to the city of Niagara Falls, Ontario. It is interesting to note that this bridge has been in continuous operation longer than any other international bridge in the world. Traffic has crossed the Niagara river on this bridge without interruption since it was opened in 1848, except for a few hours in 1948 during the celebration of the centennial. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will recall that day very vividly because he and the governor of New York state were the guest speakers on that occasion.

Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, the directors of the company were approached with respect to the sale of the bridge, but nothing resulted from this approach. At about that time counsel was instructed to consider the question of whether or not the company could sell or transfer its undertaking and especially its franchise to operate the bridge and to collect tolls. Counsel was of the opinion that in works, such as the bridge, in which the public have an interest, the corporation cannot delegate its powers or in any way divest itself of the obligation placed upon it by the legislature, except by express sanction of such legislature.

Someone might well ask about the capital of this company, and I just wish to state that it is divided into 15,000 shares, 7 per cent of which are held in the United States, 12 per cent in England, and the remaining 81 per cent in Canada. This stock is not listed on any exchange but it is traded on the unlisted market. This bill has passed the Senate and will of course go to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to raise any objection to the passage of this bill, but I would point out that the important words in the first part of clause 2 are "sell, assign, transfer and convey", whereas the word "sale" is left out of the subsequent part. There may be some particular reason for this, but when the committee receives the bill I think it should consider it.

Mr. Houck: That correction will be made.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

235. To provide for the Canadian forces, the defence research board and other expenditures relating to defence, including contributions toward the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; to authorize expenditures in the current year out of the amount hereby provided, not exceeding $143,000,000, under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and to provide that, notwithstanding subsection (3) of that section, where equipment or supplies are transferred, the estimated present value thereof shall be credited to this vote instead of being paid into the special account mentioned in the said subsection (3), and when so credited may be expended for the purposes of the Canadian forces; and notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize total commitments for the foregoing purposes of $3,470,423,461 regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,675,484,744 will come due for payment in future years), $1,722,797,717.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there are just one or two observations I should like to make with regard to the estimates now before the committee, which have to do in general with the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that having regard to the tremendous amount being expended for defence, which during the year will total some $1,775 million, a closer and more meticulous examination should be made of the defence expenditures than can be achieved through the medium of the committee of supply.

I was surprised today to hear the Prime Minister dismiss the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition for the setting up of such a committee on the grounds that our system is different from that of the United States. I can see no merit in the excuse advanced by the Prime Minister. These estimates are for a tremendous amount, and they cannot be given that examination which is necessary in committee of supply. This committee denies the calling of witnesses, and certainly there is springing up in our country a very strong feeling that in respect of the vast amounts being spent for defence, corresponding value is not being secured for the people of Canada. Only this evening there is an editorial in the Ottawa Journal which pretty well summarizes the situation. It is entitled "Too Little at Too Much Cost?"

I can see no reason why there should not be a careful examination; why these generals who enjoyed the respect of the government for so long and who are now freed from their shackles of silence should not be given the opportunity of appearing before a committee and being examined and cross-examined on their statements with a view to ascertaining whether or not there is foundation for their criticism. That to me would seem to be the logical course to follow, unless it is the desire of the minister and the government to conceal as far as possible the results being achieved by the expenditure of such vast amounts of money.

Indeed it is not so long ago that I saw figures which indicated that the cost of recruiting and training servicemen for the Canadian army was five times the cost in the United States per man, and even a greater number of times the cost of recruiting and training British servicemen. If that is the fact, and I think it is, there should be an examination to ascertain why. Laymen see expenditures being made for recruiting purposes in Canada, and the cost of advertising in order to secure recruits seems far beyond the needs of the moment if the government's attitude as revealed by the minister is to be taken as indicative of the present world situation. These and other matters deserve to be looked into and examined.

Mention was made by the minister of our responsibility to the NATO countries as one of the members of that great organization for peace. However, what do we know as a House of Commons of the attitude taken by NATO respecting the present world situation? What is the reason for the change of direction as announced by the minister, in that to a greater extent than ever before the emphasis will be on air troops and air facilities? These are questions that deserve examination.

What is the attitude of the Department of National Defence toward those nations that are doing their part to preserve our freedom in other parts of the world? What about the position today of Israel, standing in the Middle East with one or two others having a similar viewpoint toward democracy and freedom? Recently the consensus of opinion has been that Colonel Nasser no longer holds toward the free nations the friendly attitude that one would expect from the leader of a country that owes so much to Britain.

What attitude is the government going to take toward the calls for help on the part of Israel, for assistance in the form of jet aircraft? A few months ago there was uncertainty in regard to the attitude of Colonel Nasser toward the free world. Today, as we watch his activities from the shores of the Atlantic and thence through Iraq and Iran, this man shows more and more an attitude of disregard for the forces of freedom. Indeed, it would appear as though he had in mind the achievement by himself of an overlordship over all that area.

I ask these questions because they are material to our defences here in Canada. They are part and parcel of the problem of freedom being preserved in all parts of the world. Has the government as yet made a decision on the question of permitting the export of aircraft to Israel—not aircraft for the offensive, not bombers, but fighting aircraft whose business it would be to prevent, or at least to meet, any bombing attacks that might be made as against the state of Israel?

There in the Far East the situation is serious. Egypt has received colossal supplies of war material from the U.S.S.R. The man who negotiated the arrangements is the new foreign minister of the U.S.S.R., Dmitri Shepilov. He it was, who negotiated that nefarious agreement between Hitler and the U.S.S.R. in 1939. I ask the minister what is the attitude of the government to this problem, which becomes more pressing as days go by.

The Middle East is indeed the lifeline of the British commonwealth, and certainly of Great Britain herself. That area controls some 70 per cent of all the oil in the free world. Are we not now, in the light of the events that have taken place since January and February, in Canada called upon to do our part by way of assistance to Israel, to permit Israel as a bastion of defence in the Middle East to resist any aggression that may take place against her? That is a problem on which there should be information. It is one that is of challenging import to the preservation of freedom in that part of the world.

As I read the remarks of the Minister of National Defence, he glosses over the world situation. He warns here in one paragraph; he wavers slightly in another. In the light of the revelations that were made in the speech delivered about a week ago by Khrushchev during the visit of Tito to the U.S.S.R., following which there have been declarations between Yugoslavia and the U.S.S.R. that, to say the least, are not indicative of a peaceful attitude, what has been achieved in recent months by the turnabout in attitude by the leaders of the U.S.S.R.? Would the minister enlighten the house and the country as to the attitude of the government on the recent denunciation of Stalin by Khrushchev?

Has the world situation not been deteriorating in recent weeks? Are the forces of freedom not, in recent weeks, once more meeting a very serious challenge brought about by the deceptive propaganda of the U.S.S.R.? I have read that speech of Khrushchev, as the minister has. It contains 27,000 words, a saga of the assassination of Stalin, wherein he is described as a murderer, a mass jailer of free peoples, a torturer, an enemy of freedom, an executioner without trial, and a destroyer of oppositions. It is a dangerous thing to be a member of an opposition in the U.S.S.R., for it is revealed by Khrushchev that of the 139 members of the seventeenth people's congress of 1940, 98 were shot.

This speech by Khrushchev is a testament of tyranny and a catalogue of cruelty, designed apparently to delude the free world. One of the statements that clarifies the atmosphere is that the trouble with Stalin was that he used terror at the wrong times against the wrong people. Then in another place he said that Lenin only resorted ruthlessly to the most extreme methods in the most necessary cases.

Is there a change of front? What attitude will Canada take as one of the free nations to meet the economic challenge of the U.S.S.R. everywhere in the world? Is there to be a reassessment on the part of Canada and the other free nations respecting the amount to be devoted to defence as such and the amount to be devoted as defence by way of economic policies designed to offset or meet the challenge of the U.S.S.R.? We have none of that information. What attitude are the NATO nations to take to the mass challenge all over the world of the U.S.S.R. in trade?

In the United States expenditures for aid and the like as part of the general defence picture were reduced by congress by approximately 20 per cent against the wishes of the President and his advisers. What is Canada going to do along with the other NATO nations to meet the penetration in underdeveloped lands of the U.S.S.R., as she offers to trade capital goods for surplus agricultural products, cotton, rubber and the like? In the discussions in the United States Senate there has been a tremendous change in the viewpoint of the legislators of that country. The consensus is that the danger of all-out war has greatly diminished in the last year and a half. Apparently that view is shared by the Minister of National Defence, as one reads between the lines. But how are we to meet the challenge of the U.S.S.R.?

Mention was made of the D.E.W. line, a most costly project; but many of those who gave evidence before the United States Senate committee, and they were people in authority, seemed to hold the view strongly that the D.E.W. line is almost obsolete before it is completely constructed. In his speech the other day the minister expressed the view that there was no defence, that Canada was in the line of fire and that there was no immediate defence against a potential atomic air war. Has there been any reassessment by Canada and the other NATO nations of the problem of whether a larger or smaller amount shall be devoted to defence and, if a smaller amount, whether larger amounts shall be allocated to defence in the form of aid to underdeveloped countries and with respect to trade matters, the purpose of which would be to meet the challenge of the U.S.S.R.?

We are left in the dark. We do not know. In order to obtain information we have to read the reports of the United States Senate committee or the House of Representatives committee. Why does the government not permit men with the knowledge that General Simonds has and the former adjutant general and men of that kind, who enjoyed the trust of the government for so long, to come before a committee and place the facts before the Canadian people? Are we receiving value for our expenditures? One does not have to have the knowledge gained by committees to conclude that in too large a measure there has been a wasteful disregard of the requirements of the people as a whole and waste of the moneys collected from the people through taxation.

A committee would permit either a revelation of conditions that should not exist, which conditions were set out in detail by the Leader of the Opposition when he referred to General Simonds' criticism, or, on the other hand, those criticisms would be found to be baseless. Personally I believe that with the removal of immediate potential threat of war it is going to be very difficult to maintain the union of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It is going to be equally difficult to maintain the willingness to sacrifice on the part of the peoples of free nations unless governments take them fully into their confidence and give them the picture as it is, the assurance that for every dollar that is spent there shall be an equivalent value in defence.

In connection with the economic offensive of the U.S.S.R. I asked a moment ago, what is to be the attitude of Canada? Unsuccessful in breaking down the resistance of the free nations by force of arms, the U.S.S.R. now threatens to achieve that end by economic warfare everywhere in the world. Have the nations of NATO not met within recent days, and have they not redefined the respective proportions that the free nations should spend on defence as such, tanks, guns and the like, and what they should spend for humanitarian purposes? President Eisenhower, one of the architects of the preservation of our freedom in the last war, said just a few days prior to being hospitalized:

> Every dollar we put into this kind of thing, if it is intelligently spent, is in my mind in the long run worth any $5 we put just in sheer defence, because in the long run it is a constructive thing.

How are we going to meet the problem? Are we going to continue to expend amounts for defence such as we have spent in recent years in the face of an apparent change of front on the part of the U.S.S.R. that is equally dangerous to us? What are we doing to maintain good relations between Canada and the United States along the D.E.W. line, while at the same time assuring Canada's sovereignty in those areas where the facilities of the D.E.W. line are being constructed? Has the government given consideration to placing at each and every one of the stations along the D.E.W. line official representatives of Canada who will look after immigration, customs and other phases of civil government? However little they may be used, nonetheless the presence of Canadian officials there will give to these areas a realization that they are indeed under our sovereignty and will remove the danger of incidents that lead to disagreement which will otherwise be invited.

There are but a few questions that I would ask the minister to enlarge upon when he replies for, after reading the speech of the minister from beginning to end, one finds in it nothing to indicate that the government of Canada or the Department of National Defence is making plans to meet the changed world concept of the U.S.S.R. It is still maintaining that only by armed defences can freedom be preserved. That has been so, and it was so from 1945 to 1955. In no way suggesting a reduction in defence as such, I ask the minister whether or not Canada, in keeping with what the United States is now doing and what Britain herself is also laying plans to implement, intends to devote some portion—a percentage—of the amounts that are today being utilized for sheer defence in order to meet the world economic offensive of the U.S.S.R.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Certainly that offensive has paid dividends to the U.S.S.R. in the last year and a half. It has met with a far greater degree of success than its military threat and bluster during the period from 1945 to 1955. Are we to have a static Maginot line type of mind in connection with our defences? Or are we in Canada, as one of the major countries within NATO, to join with the other countries of NATO in meeting this new challenge which is as dangerous to our existence as, and in some ways more dangerous than the military challenge of the early years following the second world war?

These are matters that could be looked into in detail in a committee. These are questions that are exercising the minds of the ordinary men and women of our country who on the other hand from day to day, over the radio and in the press, hear and read propaganda to the effect that the danger of war is passing. If this is so, and if there is a change of front on the part of the U.S.S.R., are we going to meet that challenge? Are we going to realize, before it is too late, that economic war as launched by the U.S.S.R., constitutes a great challenge to our existence and is having an amazing effect in Asia and in Africa? It is deluding many people into believing that for the economic security of the present, they are making a fair exchange in giving up their freedom for generations to come.

I have not dealt with the purely military side of defence. What I have tried to do, Mr. Chairman, is place before the minister something of the world situation that we face today when communism changes its front, when it makes a detour from military activities to economic action but at the same time does not change its destination, which is the destruction of freedom everywhere in the world. I ask the minister when he replies to answer this question. Has the Department of National Defence viewed the change of front on the part of the U.S.S.R., and to what extent does it intend to meet that new challenge which is as dangerous as, if not more dangerous than, the military forces that previously represented the policy of the U.S.S.R. in the achievement of the destruction of freedom?

Then I return to the point from which I started in connection with aid to Israel in the fight she is putting up to assure the preservation of her freedom. Have not the events of the last three months—revealing as they do Nasser in a new light—given added emphasis to the necessity of an early decision being made on the question of the export of fighting aircraft—not aggressive aircraft such as bombers and the like—to Israel so she will be in such a position, if aggression does come for which she is in no way responsible, that at least we shall be assured that she will be able to maintain a defence, humble as it may be, against superior and threatening forces.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member for Prince Albert would not expect me to follow him and speak about the general strategy of our country on the high plane on which he has spoken in the last few minutes. Certainly in the short time now left to the committee one would not venture to raise such a matter even if one possessed the ability so to do. Hence for the few minutes which remain this afternoon, perhaps I might refer to some matters in a more mundane sphere, but ones equally important to the people involved.

I have the honour and the good fortune to represent a constituency which has within it three of the larger defence bases in this country. One of them is H.M.C.S. Cornwallis, which I believe is the largest naval training base in the British commonwealth. Another one is Greenwood, which I am told is the largest operational air base in Canada. Another one is Aldershot, an army base which, although much smaller, has a distinguished record and a great history. The name is associated with Aldershot camp in Britain which so many veterans of the first war as well as of the second war visited and at which they took training while there. Under such circumstances I come in close contact with the men at these bases and also with the civilian employees who are employed in civilian work there.

I certainly join with the minister in all he said on Wednesday with respect to the calibre of the men we have in our armed forces. I think we can be very proud indeed of the type of men who are found in each one of the three services. Of the quality of their training, their character, their morale and all the rest of it, one cannot speak too highly. When it comes to the civilian employees, some question has been raised—and I think questions can be raised—as to the amount of money which is paid for civilian employees in the over-all picture. It seems to be an extremely large amount. In some places I think real criticism could be levelled at that situation. But when it comes to those working at the lower levels, Mr. Chairman—the day labourer, so-called, or the hourly-pay man—I think perhaps a word could be said on the other side of the picture.

I have here communications—I am not going to read them all to the committee—from various organizations at both H.M.C.S. Cornwallis and Greenwood. I also have communications from Aldershot, though there the number of men is not nearly so large. I realize that there is difficulty in the administration of this department on the part of the minister. I realize it must work in co-operation with the Department of Labour. The Department of Labour is supposed to make surveys to establish wage rates. Then those wage rates, having been established or having been approved by the Department of Labour, are recommended to the Department of National Defence; the Department of National Defence approves them and finally recommends them to treasury board, and after a long period of months some adjustment may be made. As a result there are many inconsistencies creeping into the picture, and I think some real unfairness.

I have a letter here, but I do not propose to read it. I could give it to the minister if he would like to see it, because in the letter the man tells me that he has cleared this with the civilian labour officer there, who has suggested that the matter be dealt with at a higher level because he cannot deal with it himself. This is a case of an hourly-pay man working at a rate which pays him $39.60 per week. He is in charge of the inspection, maintenance and operation of eight boilers in this base where he is working. The men who are firing the boilers, and really working under him, are civilians getting $51.92 per week. He does not suggest for a moment that they are getting paid too much but it does seem rather strange in this particular case that a man who is actually a technician and has these firemen assist him when he is effecting repairs, gets that take-home pay of $39.60 compared with $51.92 for the others. The others, as he says, get the benefit of sick leave, vacations with pay and so forth, none of which he receives.

In the mail this morning there was a notice from the civil service, which all of us get every day, advertising the same type of position at Gagetown, a mechanic to supervise, repair and maintain furnaces and boilers. The salary is set at $3,150 per year to $3,600. It does seem to me there is an inconsistency there. Apparently this man has tried, the civilian boss has tried, without results. Whenever these men write me I warn them that I dare not use their names because they may get into trouble. Apparently ministers do not like these people writing to politicians, and perhaps rightly so. In this case I have been told I could use his name. That is typical of only one individual.

I have a petition here signed by the electricians complaining that they have been waiting now for a year and a half to have their wages raised. It is true that six months ago they received an increase of 10 cents an hour, but the rates are ridiculously low in comparison with the regular wages being paid electricians, even in that area. At one time the Department of Labour took a very small area, just the valley itself where there were very few tradesmen, mechanics or electricians, so the base was very small. Now it has been extended to some extent and they take some of the other towns within the province. There again, you get this objection from these men who say they have submitted briefs over the last two or three years showing the rates of wages prevailing in the same industry in the same area. Every time something happens. As I said before, we finally succeeded in getting them an increase of 10 cents an hour six months ago, but that does not go very far.

In so far as the day labourers are concerned, the situation is rather grim. I have a resolution, a copy of which I presume was sent to the minister, as the letter says. I shall just read one paragraph from it to show the feelings of some of these men:

> We, the labourers of Cornwallis naval base, are 100 per cent veterans.

I think that is a slight exaggeration, because I sometimes get letters from people who are applying for positions there who say they are veterans and they cannot get on but there are non-veterans employed. There is, therefore, at least an element of exaggeration in this first sentence, and I think there may be an exaggeration in the second sentence. This shows the extent of the bitterness that is creeping in.

> We are not getting used as human beings. Some of us labourers are renting homes; some are trying to buy their homes. We are married men with families trying to send our children to school. The ones responsible for this know very well that they cannot clothe, feed and keep up a comfortable home for their families on a weekly pay of $32.22—our take home pay.

That is for day labourers, the lowest class of pay at Cornwallis naval base. You get inconsistencies such as that, Mr. Chairman, and the men included in that day labour base are sometimes transferred to work with civil servants. As I said, they do not complain about the pay the civil servant gets, but they do feel that their own rate of pay should be raised.

I think it is time for the minister to take up very seriously with the Department of Labour the matter of a resurvey of the pay for hourly-paid men, and I presume the women. There are women employed in the canteens; some of them work as domestics, waitresses and so forth in the dining halls at both Cornwallis and Greenwood. This situation is one which causes friction and does not tend to improve the morale in any organization. I think the minister, if he asks for an investigation by the Department of Labour or for reports from his own representatives, might well find that some of these complaints are legitimate and that a slight amelioration of them could be made without any increase in cost.

There are other places where savings could be made. If time permitted I could point them out. I might point out one in the last minute available to me. I have seen bills of lading for kegs of nails which have been shipped 3,000 miles across this country. These ordinary nails have been shipped to a base in Nova Scotia from Alberta, and the freight transportation costs shown in the bill of lading were away beyond what one would have to pay for these nails at a local store in the community. I have a dozen documents of that kind showing that apparently there is a certain degree of inefficiency and a high degree of waste in expenditures such as that.

It is for that reason some of these men who are on prevailing rates are so angry. They see money being wasted on the one hand and they are being paid a pittance on the other. They feel that something should be said on their behalf, and that is what I am trying to do in the few minutes that are available to me.

May I call it six o'clock?

Progress reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 25, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ZAPLITNY—REPORTS OF WHEAT BOARD AND GRAIN COMMISSION

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On May 10 last I addressed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) as follows:

When does the minister expect to have the reports of the board of grain commissioners and the wheat board before the committee on agriculture and colonization?

In response to my question the Minister of Trade and Commerce replied as follows:

The reports of the board of grain commissioners and the wheat board are filed with this house and have been referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization.

I find that on Friday last the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) asked a similar question of the minister and received a similar reply. On conferring with the chairman of that committee I find these reports have not been referred to that committee. In view of that I suggest that either the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the chairman of the committee owes an explanation to this house.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I intend to move when we reach motions that these reports be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

AGRICULTURE

REFERENCE OF WHEAT BOARD AND GRAIN COMMISSION REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert H. Winters (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I move that the following reports which have already been tabled in the house be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. They are the report on the Canadian wheat board for the crop year ending July 31, 1955, the report for 1955 on the board of grain commissioners for Canada and a supplementary report of the Canadian wheat board on the 1954-55 pool account—wheat.

Motion agreed to.

TAXATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the Minister of Finance may pay to a province, out of the consolidated revenue fund, in respect of any fiscal year in the period commencing on the 1st day of April, 1957, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1962

(a) a tax equalization payment with respect to individual and corporation income taxes and succession duties;

(b) a provincial revenue stabilization payment with respect to such taxes; and

(c) a tax rental payment in accordance with a tax rental agreement that may be entered into by any province as an alternative to levying such taxes on its own behalf; and also to authorize tax collection agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

ALLEGED REDUCTION IN HOUSING STARTS THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could he explain to the house the reasons for the purported 20 per cent reduction in housing starts for the first 23 weeks of this year, as reported by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, from 28,258 in the first 23 weeks of last year to 22,618 in the corresponding period of this year?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Since the hon. member has asked that question, perhaps I should make a brief statement about housing, particularly having in mind the telegrams I have received recently which have alleged particularly two points about the house building program: first, that it is being seriously retarded because of the unavailability of mortgage money; and, second, that as a result large scale unemployment will develop. I think I can demonstrate to hon. members that both these statements reflect undue pessimism.

In centres of 5,000 population and over, as I indicated to hon. members on June 13, housing starts for the first five months of the year 1956 exceeded starts during the first five months of the year 1955. Up to the end of May this year, 30,687 units had been started, as against 29,669 last year. Completions at 35,322 exceeded those of the same period last year, which numbered 33,064.

As of the end of May this year there were in these centres 48,206 housing units under construction. Last year at the same time the number was 47,445. Hon. members will recall that in the year 1955 more houses were started and more were completed than in any previous year in our history.

I refer to centres of 5,000 population and over because it is in these centres that the dominion bureau of statistics and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation make complete enumerations.

As for the suggestion that significant unemployment will follow any likely downturn in housing, I would refer to the recent survey by the Department of Labour of labour conditions in Canada. At the present time there are more people employed than ever before, and fewer people without jobs. These statements have reference to the over-all labour force. The situation is that the construction industry is experiencing a shortage of manpower, and we are only now coming into the period when the demand for labour is at its peak. Thus anyone who might be laid off from house building would be apt without difficulty to find employment in other parts of the construction industry, where activity is at a record level.

While I believe that the complaints give an erroneous impression, I realize that difficulties are being experienced by some builders in obtaining mortgage funds. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, is in a good position to tell hon. members that the economy as a whole is moving at such a vigorous pace that there is keen competition for material, labour and financing. Some builders in the house building industry are feeling this competition, and particularly is this true in respect of those who have just recently come into the field. In no industry is it possible for everybody to obtain all the credit desired at all times. Government guaranteed loans under the N.H.A. are not available as of right to everybody who asks for them. It is a matter of the banks and lending institutions awarding credit on the same selective basis as applies for other industrial and commercial activities.

In the first quarter of 1956 expenditures on non-residential construction were 27 per cent higher than in the first quarter of 1955. Expenditures on new residential construction were up 7 per cent in the same period. These figures are tangible evidence of the increasing pressure of demand on the resources of the construction industry and the increasing competition which housing is encountering from other industries and other parts of the construction industry for materials, labour and financing. Hon. members will recall that in order to maintain the position of housing in proper perspective in relation to other investment opportunities we increased the interest rate on residential mortgages in March from 5¼ to 5½ per cent.

However, because of this competition from other industries and other parts of the construction industry, home building activity may be moderately retarded in the second half of the year. But the extent of this must be kept in perspective. In the first quarter of this year housing starts were at an annual rate of nearly 134,000 units. In the second quarter they will be an annual rate in excess of 120,000 units. Starts may drop below this rate in the third quarter, but for the year as a whole we are likely to have more starts than in any year, except the record year of 1955, and we will probably have more completions than in any year, including 1955. This means that the volume of labour and building materials going into new house building in the year 1956 will be very little different from the record house building year of 1955. Last year the number of families in Canada increased by 78,900, while the number of new houses completed amounted to 127,500. This year net family formation, which is a pretty good index of housing demands, is running at about the same rate as last year, while housing completions are running at a rate higher than last year. We are therefore increasing our housing stock at a much greater rate than the number of families in Canada is increasing.

To sum up, house building for 1956 will be at a high level. It will be little different from last year's record program and, in fact, completions will probably be higher and will reach a new record. Over-all employment in house building will be about the same as last year, but there will doubtless be some builders who will continue to experience difficulties in obtaining mortgage credit.

As I previously stated, this subject is kept under constant study both as to the present program and what is likely to occur in the next few months. In the light of activity in the housing field and in other parts of the construction industry, it does not appear that any special measures are desirable at this time. Should conditions change, the government will be prepared to take whatever measures are warranted by the changed conditions.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Might I ask the minister whether he has received a communication from the city council of Regina regarding the falling off of construction in that city due to government policy? I may say to the minister that the mayor and council of the city of Regina do not share the minister's confidence or optimism in this particular case.

Mr. Winters: I am not sure that I have seen a communication from the city council. I have received communications from Regina and I think included in them there was a telegram from the premier of Saskatchewan which, if I remember correctly, was directed to the Prime Minister. It is largely the same telegram that has been sent from some other areas in Canada and it does not alter in any respect the statement I have just made.

Mr. Ellis: Would the minister give the reason why there is a falling off in construction in those areas of the country to which he has just referred, including the city of Regina? Would he give an explanation?

Mr. Winters: I just gave a detailed explanation, and I stated therein that the housing program this year will be a very substantial one, as my hon. friend will learn in due course.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Is the minister aware that it is not only the large cities which are growing and need houses? Smaller, rapidly growing parts of Canada, such as the part I come from, are affected—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ferguson: The question is this. When can these people expect money at a reasonable rate of interest and in sufficient quantity to build roofs over their heads? That is what I am interested in. This running of the matter by rule of thumb is not the correct thing to do. There are people who need roofs over their heads.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Kamloops wish to pursue the same subject?

Mr. Fulton: No.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

OFFICER TRAINING PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question. Can the minister answer question No. 368 which was placed on the order paper nearly three months ago, namely on March 28?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to investigate with respect to the hon. member's question. I was not aware of the fact that it had not been answered.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER TAX COLLECTION AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question with relation to the resolution or rather the motion which he moved today. Can the minister give the house the figure which the government sets as the annual obligation on the dominion treasury which would result from the adoption of the resolution following upon the motion he made today?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the resolution relates to future years. One can only make an estimate of the amount based on a projection of the income from various taxes at that time. If my hon. friend desires it, I will, in moving the resolution, put that information on the record but I would not want at this time to mention a specific figure for any one of the three payments that are concerned.

Mr. Fulton: Then we may anticipate that this motion will be debated without closure?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

SHIPPING

SUPPLY SHIP "C. D. HOWE"—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, could we have a report on the fire which took place on the northern supply ship C. D. Howe in Montreal over the week end; in particular the cause of the fire, and to what extent it will delay her departure for the north?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will see that an answer is given.

GRAIN

WESTERN FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FREIGHT RATE ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. T. Purdy (Colchester-Hants): I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of Agriculture, whom I am glad to see in his seat again and able to report

"mission partially accomplished". My first question is this. Will the government take under consideration increasing the freight rate assistance on western feed grain to the Atlantic provinces in an amount equal to any freight rate increases? It will be noted that I refer only to the Atlantic provinces because they will not benefit from the St. Lawrence seaway and the pipe-line development.

My second question is this. Having regard to the motion of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters), who I believe is acting minister of agriculture, will an opportunity be given to general agriculture to present their problems before the committee on agriculture and colonization?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just arrived back this morning. Naturally I have not had time to go over Hansard but I shall look up the references that were made and answer either tomorrow or the next day.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES—INTERVIEW WITH BANKERS' ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and to ask him whether he would comment on the dispatch in the New York Times yesterday to the effect that in the last few months there has been a great increase in the amount of United States investment in Canadian provinces, cities and industries, the major reason for which is that the interest rate in the United States is lower and the increase of interest rates in that country has been less drastic than in Canada. Would the minister say whether or not consideration is being given to reducing interest rates in Canada to U.S. levels so as to make it possible for Canadians to borrow in Canada for the needs of expanding industries and of provinces and cities? Would he tell the house the result of the interview he had the other day regarding interest rates with the representatives of the bankers' association and other financial interests to which he made an allusion a few days ago?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather long question. I will prepare an answer and give it either on the orders of the day at a later time or on my estimates, whichever suits the hon. member.

[Mr. Purdy.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, I believe I could ask this question. Is the government giving any consideration to having the Bank of Canada reduce the high rate of interest that has been in effect now for several weeks, in order to bring about a better opportunity for investment in Canada and also an expansion of housing?

Mr. Harris: I think I can answer that by saying this. In so far as the United States and Canadian rates are concerned, they have not altered since, I think, the first or second week of April. At that time the discount rate at the Bank of Canada was raised to 3 per cent, and a few days later the discount rate in the United States was raised to $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent in New York and 3 per cent in Minnesota and California. These rates have remained constant since.

Now, my recollection is, in answer generally to the earlier questions, that the cost of money or the interest rate on borrowings in the United States was lower relatively than the Canadian rate earlier in the year, but at the moment the margin has narrowed somewhat and the difference now, the going cost on medium-term money, is ·4 or ·5 on the dollar.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has that made all the difference in investment?

SUPPLY

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

REQUEST FOR ELECTION—SENATE REFORM

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a supply motion it is particularly appropriate at this time that I should refer to the discussions that have already taken place here and their effect upon our present position in this house. I think it is the correct time to express our belief that this government has lost any moral right to govern this country. I know that this statement has been made, but I intend to emphasize, by reference to further material, the extent to which that moral breakdown has gone and the extent to which precedent has been abandoned.

We all know how precedents were broken in this house in a debate which took place not long ago. There was some discussion on Friday last about whether or not the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) had used the words in a television interview, "We violated the rules". There is no question that those words were used. I do not think, however, that the use of those words is so particularly open to criticism. In fact, it is the frankest statement that has been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce since this debate began. What is surprising is not that he made the statement but rather that there should be any question about the fact that he made the statement. What is important is not that the record available from the C.B.C. showed that he made the statement; what is important is the denial of the statement. The denial of the statement is consistent with the attitude of this government towards parliament.

It would have been quite natural, and quite a reasonable thing, for the minister to have said, "Well in an interview of that kind, without a text, it is easy for a person to use words which afterwards should be corrected. It is true that I did say he violated the rules, but I did not intend to say that." Nevertheless, I would think that in most interviews mistakes of that kind might be made if that was not what he intended to say. Now, if the minister had said that, that would have been a perfectly reasonable explanation. What is important is the attitude of the minister in regard to that statement. He has set himself up as the infallible director of the business affairs of this house. He has, in fact, set himself up as a virtual dictator. He is not prepared to admit that even in error he correctly stated the facts, and therefore he must repudiate what it is quite clear he said.

I am not going to say more except to repeat that the important thing is not that he did say the words; the important thing is that having said them he denied to this house that he did. It is only in keeping with many of the things that have happened. But I want to speak particularly of what has happened, not only to the House of Commons during those tragic weeks, but also what has happened to that other place which is also part of our parliamentary system. What a change has occurred from the original concept of the other place. How little it resembles in its function the purpose it was intended to serve by those who decided at Quebec when they were drafting the resolutions which were embodied in the British North America Act that we should have a second parliamentary body appointed and not elected. A high purpose was envisaged for that other place.

The fathers of confederation who met at Quebec in 1864 had an overwhelming feeling in favour of a second chamber. The possibility of a single chamber parliament was considered but, with the background of our own history, a considerable majority of those who attended that conference decided that they wanted the two-chamber system. They had, of course, the experience of a second chamber under two systems in this country. Under the old constitution of the united provinces there was a legislative council appointed by the crown. Then, there were the reforms of 1856 and the upper house of the legislature was made elective. Its members were chosen by direct suffrage of the people. They were entitled to serve for a term of eight years instead of a four-year term set for the members of the assembly, which was the lower house. The conditions of the franchise were the same for both houses. However, the members of the upper house represented much larger constituencies, as their numbers were smaller. At that time, strangely enough, when we had adopted an elective system, the constitution of the United States provided for the appointment of senators by state legislatures. Two were appointed from each state. That was not changed in the United States until the seventeenth amendment was adopted in 1913 to provide for the popular election of the senators to the upper body.

The system in the United States was the very opposite to what we had prior to confederation following the reforms I have spoken of. With those two systems before them the men who had seen both systems in operation decided they wanted an appointed body. In that they were undoubtedly influenced very greatly by the similarity of our parliamentary system to that at Westminster where the second and upper house, the House of Lords, was of course an appointed body. That has remained unchanged to the present day.

We have the reports of the opinions expressed by the men who made this important decision prior to confederation. The Senate, in the minds of the framers of confederation, was to consist not of partisans but of men who would deal in a judicial manner with the problems before them. Its members were to be selected from those who in one way or another had brought dignity or distinction to the public life of the country. They were to be chosen by the representatives of the sovereign for their acknowledged achievements or for their moral and intellectual excellence. They were to be placed in this position which was to keep them above the ordinary influences of party strife. It was thought at that time by the men who drafted our constitution that this would invest the members of the upper house with a moral authority which would make their decisions more acceptable when they became a body of review to consider what had taken place in the House of Commons. It was thought that the appointment in this way would detach them from those considerations which might affect their judgment in any way from a partisan point of view.

In order to better secure the impartiality and independence of those appointed, the appointees were to be appointed for life and not for a term of years so that nothing might influence the independence of their expression of opinion and their judgment. Such an upper house would in the first place exercise immense influence upon public opinion. That was the dream of those who drafted the constitution. It was also thought that they would exercise influence on any rash decisions made by the lower house under the pressure of urgent demand or partisan debate. In every discussion the power of the upper house to review the decisions of the lower house and the likelihood and certainty that they would give careful review to the decisions of the lower house was constantly in mind.

These people who were to be appointed to the upper house and were to occupy this position of dignity and independence were to have a freedom from any influence that might spring from their dependence on re-election. Never were high expectations of that kind more completely broken and shattered than they were within these past weeks.

Reform of the upper house has been demanded for generations. Every other parliamentary body or legislative body of importance in the world has carried out sweeping reforms of its upper house in the time that ours has been in existence. It is only in the upper house of Canada that we go on without any attempt to bring the upper house into harmony with the aspirations of the people in this modern and vital democracy of ours. Nevertheless, it is not in recent years alone that the demand for reform has been emphatic and urgent. For reasons which perhaps are perfectly natural, it was the Liberal party which first began to present demands for reform of the upper house. We find that Sir Oliver Mowat, a great and distinguished member of the Liberal party of those days, presented this resolution to the Liberal party convention in Ottawa as far back as 1893. Most hon. members of this house had not yet been born at that time. This is the resolution that was adopted:

> The present constitution of the Senate is inconsistent with the federal principle in our system of government and is in other respects ineffective as it makes the Senate independent of the people and uncontrolled by the public opinion of the country and should be so amended as to bring it into harmony with the principles of popular government.

Then again at the same convention, and speaking to this resolution, we find these words spoken by another very distinguished member of the Liberal party, Sir Richard Cartwright. These were his words:

> I think, sir, we all agree that the constitution of the Senate as it at present exists is a blot upon popular government and free institutions.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if those words had any meaning whatever in 1893 they certainly have meaning today because the upper house as it at present exists is precisely the same as the upper house was at that time except for the people who constitute the membership of that second chamber.

I am dealing with this subject at greater length today because I raised it briefly on Friday last and urged the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) before he left for the prime ministers' conference to initiate in consultation with the provinces a proper inquiry which would lead to a reform of the second chamber in keeping with the aspirations of our people for a democratic structure which has been brought into consonance with the development of industrial, economic, social and other conditions in this country. The Prime Minister made no response one way or the other to that request. Unfortunately, that is all too often the way in which proposals are dealt with when they are presented to this government. I am mentioning that now to point out that, when I raise this today, it might not have been necessary to go into some of the detailed remarks which I shall make had the Prime Minister acceded to what seems to be a perfectly reasonable request.

May I say at the outset, in pressing our demand for consideration of this subject, that I am not for a moment suggesting that the unfortunate features of our upper house, in so far as its composition is concerned, are not something in which both the major parties in this country have shared some responsibility over the years that have passed. The time is long overdue, however, for the implementation of the promises made by this government—and they were made by this government—to consider Senate reform and to take up with the provinces, in a manner which would lead to some positive results, this extremely important question.

On only one occasion has this matter been brought up in a comprehensive manner before a conference at which the federal and provincial governments were represented, and that was at the conference of 1927. At that time Mr. Lapointe, who was minister of justice, laid before the conference a summary of proposals which had been made by different people for Senate reform. He did so without any suggestion that he sought approval of any particular type of reform. However, these were the points he put before the conference for consideration, as reported in what was described as "A Survey of Dominion-Provincial Conference, 1906 to 1941", by Darrell Thomas Braidwood. I quote this from page 32 of the survey:

1. Abolition of the Senate,
2. Adoption of the elective principle,
3. A combination of both the appointive and elective principles,
4. A fixed and limited term of office,
5. An age limit with possible superannuation,
6. A bringing of relations between the Canadian upper and lower chambers into accord with the relations between the House of Commons and the House of Lords in Great Britain—with particular reference to the powers of the upper house in vetoing or amending money or general public bills.

That quotation indicated the breadth of the subject matter placed before the conference. Each of these proposals was discussed but it was not followed through, and no results flowed from that discussion, nor was there any resumed examination of the proposals.

I point out that this summary made by Mr. Lapointe in 1927 did review most of the proposals which have been made for the reform of the upper house. Since then still further proposals have been made. It seems to me that it would be neither desirable nor in keeping with the purpose of the upper house to lay down an arbitrary formula which must from necessity be followed if there is to be reform. I say that because our upper house in this country had a dual purpose. Its first purpose was, of course, the ordinary review responsibility of an upper house, which corresponds to that of other upper houses under a similar parliamentary system. The second, and in many ways the most important from the point of view of those who were discussing the possibility of confederation, was that an upper house in Canada would protect the constitutional rights of the provinces under the constitution which they were about to adopt.

I think it is quite certain that there would not have been anything in the nature of the confederation that we know unless there had been an upper house to assure the protection that it was intended to give to the provinces joining in confederation. The maritime provinces were urgent and emphatic in their demand that there be an upper house which would protect their rights. The province of Quebec wanted an upper house to assure the protection of its constitutional rights, no matter what might happen at any time in the House of Commons. Ontario as well looked to the upper house to protect its own traditional rights. All the provinces looked to the upper house as the guardian of their heritage, which they were preserving under their provincial legislatures but placing in substantial measure in the keeping of the federal parliament.

The very arguments that were made in support of a second chamber all indicated the belief that this independent body would at all times carefully consider and carefully review what took place in the lower house and particularly where there were matters of public importance, constitutional or otherwise. For that reason we must look with some very real concern at what has taken place recently here in our own parliament.

I indicated my belief that the Prime Minister should initiate appropriate steps, and I referred briefly to what had occurred in the upper house. I wish to do so now in more detail. I cannot read the debates which took place there, but under citation 293, appearing on page 95 of Beauchesne's second edition, we find this statement, which I believe is accepted without question. It indicates that there are certain things which a member may not refer to. It indicates that a member may not refer to any debate in the Senate, but then I quote these words from citation 293 (b):

. . . but he may refer to the official printed records of the upper house though they have not been formally communicated to the lower house.

Therefore I refer to those printed records and simply ask hon. members to bear in mind what those records indicate in regard to what took place in the upper house when a bill, which has been described by the government as one of the most important ever to come before parliament, was in fact being referred to the upper house. In the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate of Canada for Tuesday, June 5, 1956, as recorded at pages 486 and 487, I read the following:

Pursuant to notice of motion—

The Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien—

That for the balance of the present session, rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the said motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative, on division, and—

Ordered accordingly.

Then I refer to the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate of Canada for Wednesday, June 6, 1956, and I read from page 490:

A message was brought from the House of Commons by their clerk with a bill (298), intituled: "An act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation", to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was read the first time.

Moved by the Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Godbout, that the said bill be placed on the orders of the day for a second reading later this day.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the said motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative, and—

Ordered accordingly.

Then, as recorded on the next page, page 491, I read the following having to do with the same day:

Pursuant to the order of the day, the Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godbout, that the bill (298), intituled: "An act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation", be now read the second time.

After debate—

It being six o'clock, the Honourable the Speaker left the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock.

The Senate resumed. 8:00 p.m.

The debate continuing—

After further debate, and—

The question being put on the said motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative, on division.

The said bill was then read the second time, on division.

It was moved by the Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Godbout, that the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole presently.

The question being put on the said motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative, and—

Ordered accordingly.

The Senate was, accordingly, adjourned during pleasure and put into a committee of the whole on the said bill.

(In the committee)

The Honourable Senator Golding, chairman.

Title read and postponed.

Clause 1 was read and agreed to.

Clause 2 was read and agreed to.

Clause 3 was read and agreed to.

Clause 4 was read and agreed to.

Clause 5 was read and agreed to.

Clause 6 was read and agreed to.

Clause 7 was read and agreed to.

Title again read and agreed to.

After some time, the Senate resumed, and—

The Honourable Senator Golding, from the said committee, reported that they had examined the said bill and had directed him to report the same to the Senate, without amendment.

The said report was adopted.

On motion of the Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Godbout, it was—Ordered, that the said bill be placed on the orders of the day for a third reading tomorrow.

Then, on Thursday, June 7, 1956, the day that had been set by the government as its deadline date, we find the following at page 494 of the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate of Canada:

Prayers.

Pursuant to the order of the day, the Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godbout, that the bill (298), intituled: "An act to establish Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation", be now read the third time.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the said motion,

The Senate divided and the names being called, they were taken down . . .

I shall not read the names as they were taken down. The house divided on the measure in the way in which the members are recorded according to the political affiliations. I then continue reading:

So it was resolved in the affirmative.

The said bill was then read the third time.

The question was put whether this bill shall pass.

It was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house that the Senate have passed this bill, without amendment.

Mr. Coldwell: What time did the Senate adjourn?

Mr. Drew: The Senate adjourned at 11.45 a.m. Thus we find that this measure was dealt with in a matter of about ten hours. It is little wonder that about two days later an editorial appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail headed "Sic Transit . . ." "Sic transit gloria" is indeed an appropriate expression. Such glory, such tradition as remained, had indeed departed on that occasion. What had happened then was not merely the incredible expedition with which the Senate had moved under this unique form of closure. It was the fact that a minister of the crown, who sits as a member of the government, had placed the upper house in a condition of subservience to the government. I think it is appropriate that I should read what was written about this event, not for the purpose of taking issue with what took place there but so that we may know what the impact of this event has been on the minds of the people of Canada.

After all, at a time when we are considering ways in which democracy must be strengthened, it is vitally important that we should not ignore representative opinion which may be taken as indicating the attitude of a substantial part of the public to any function of this parliament of ours. On June 8, the day after this matter had been disposed of, I find that the Toronto Star had an editorial under the heading, "What Purpose Does it Serve?" The opening paragraph reads as follows:

The Senate is being criticized for taking only ten hours to consider the controversial pipe line bill. Ten hours admittedly did not permit anything but the most cursory examination of the bill.

Then I would read the closing paragraph of that editorial:

If, for the reason cited, the Senate cannot take more than a superficial glance at legislation as important as the pipe line bill, what real purpose does it serve? The answer is little if any.

I am not seeking to identify myself, Mr. Speaker, with the opinion of one newspaper or another in regard to the statements that they may make. I am simply seeking to indicate to hon. members of this house what has happened with respect to the attitude of newspapers in Canada towards a part of the bicameral system under which we take our responsibilities as members of parliament. In the Toronto Telegram for June 7, the same day as that adjournment took place, there was an editorial under the heading, "The Impotent Senate". I read the first sentence in that editorial:

> A meek and obedient Senate has suspended its rules and passed the government's pipe line measure in undignified and subservient haste.

Then I refer to the editorial in the Globe and Mail on June 9 to which I have already referred under the heading "Sic Transit..." I shall read two paragraphs from that editorial:

> The Senate is supposed to be detached from the hurly-burly of political seeking and striving. In that detachment, it is supposed to look calmly, carefully at legislation sent on to it by the Commons; having power, if it wishes, to amend that legislation or to reject it completely. The Senate did not reject the sinister pipe line bill, nor amend it by one iota. It did not even take the time to have a good look at it, but rushed the bill through in a day and a half, so as to meet the deadline imposed on it.

Then I read the last paragraph of that editorial:

> Sic transit gloria. Perhaps it is true, as some say, that the Senate no longer serves any useful function in Canadian life. Perhaps it does not even provide, as some say, security for deserving politicians in their old age. The Senate conducted itself this week as though it were anything but secure; as though, like the government majority in the House of Commons, it could only survive by licking the boots of its master.

Mr. Speaker, I wish just to read an editorial which appeared in the Calgary Herald, a newspaper which has been regarded as being very independent in the expression of its opinions. That newspaper is also situated in a province where there was reason for some particular interest in this issue. I should like to read that editorial because, even in that province where there could be many reasons for perhaps looking with more favour than elsewhere on some of the steps that were taken to expedite proceedings, we find this reflection of the impact on public opinion of what took place in the upper house at the bidding of one of the members of this government. The heading of that editorial is "How did the Senate serve Canada?" and it reads as follows:

> The pipe line deal is now the law of the land. It became law right on schedule, June 7.
> The schedule was maintained in the House of Commons by use of a battering-ram operated by the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, and Prime Minister St. Laurent.
> And it was speeded on its way to royal assent by a pusillanimous performance by the Senate of Canada.
> It is of this last phase that we propose to speak.
> The House of Commons has to its credit, at least, the fact that a valiant fight was put up, a fight to the finish for the traditional rights of parliament and for the good of the Canadian people.
> The Senate has nothing whatsoever to its credit.
> This vaunted Other Place of sober second thought, this guardian against tyranny and improvidence, this citadel of life-appointment independence, what did it do? It submitted to a gag to which it did not have to submit. Then it went tiredly through a few motions, as though it were really alive. And then, in unashamed subservience to its Liberal masters, it doffed its cap and did the government's bidding voluntarily, right on schedule.
> We say these things in bitter sorrow, for on repeated occasions we have come to the defence of the Senate as a valuable institution when others, many others, were baying for its abolition. And if the Senate of Canada conducted itself as tradition demands, we would gladly defend it again. The loss of a proper Senate would be a sore blow, a dangerous blow, to our system of parliamentary democracy. The loss of a Senate which bowed and scraped as this one did this week would be no loss at all. It is a mockery, a sham, an expensive luxury, far too expensive to keep around for minor chores like granting divorces.
> Can anybody point to one single useful thing the Senate of Canada did in this pipe line affair, the most controversial, perhaps the most significant decision this country has had to make in modern history? Can anybody point out one constructive thing it did? Did it probe, did it query, did it demand that it be satisfied that a great blunder was not being made? Did it appear to be protecting any Canadian against anything? The answer in all cases is a melancholy "No".
> It is understandable that Liberals in the Commons might have been reluctant, for obvious reasons, to step out of line no matter what their private opinions.
> No such practical pressures bear on any Senator. But still, with nothing to fear, unreachable by political vengeance, the Liberals in the Senate behaved like sheep.
> They ought to be ashamed. Meantime, we are ashamed for them.

Mr. Speaker, that is the impact this sorrowful event had on the thinking of one of the most independent newspapers in Canada. I could read a number of other editorials from other papers as well as articles which have been written which leave no uncertainty as to the shameful destruction of respect which has taken place at the instance of a member of this government who was able to persuade the subservient members of that Senate to follow the will of the government in a new form of blanket closure which disposed of any pretence that this is any longer a serious body of sober second thought. In this house opinions differ as to the desirability of continuing the Senate. I know that, in great sincerity, there are hon. members in this house—and they are not of one party alone—who believe that the time has come when the Senate might be abolished. I do not share that opinion. I believe that it is the opinion of the majority, if not all, of the members of the party to which I belong that there are strong constitutional reasons, as well as reasons of tradition and sentiment, why the second chamber should be preserved but in a form in which it will be permitted to perform the duties that were contemplated by those who brought it into being in 1867. Surely it is not reflecting upon any hon. member of that other place to say that the upper house needs drastic reform if their attendance there is to be justified. Let no hon. member in that other place who declares his allegiance to the Liberal party suggest that there is anything partisan in demanding that in the interests of respect for our parliamentary system there be reform. After all, who could make stronger statements on this subject than Sir Richard Cartwright who, in a very pithy sentence, said this:

> I think, Sir, we all agree that the constitution of the Senate, as it at present exists, is a blot upon popular government and free institutions.

That was the other place in the same form as it now is, without reform. If those words were not too strong then, still stronger words could be used today. Perhaps no stronger words need be used than those powerful words of the Calgary Herald which were unquestionably written with the deep feeling of someone who believes in and respects our existing constitution. I share the view of whoever wrote that editorial when he speaks of the danger of losing the second chamber unless there is a change.

If things go on as they are, if this government continues in power and imposes its will on the other place as it did on this occasion, then the demand for the abolition of the other place may come to the point where it might not be possible to stem the tide of that demand. I would hope, and I do hope very strongly, that it may be possible to take steps in time to stem that tide. I think there would be very grave concern in the minds of the members of our legislative bodies throughout Canada if the supposed protection, if the intended protection, of the upper house were completely removed. I am not putting myself in the position of suggesting that on recent performance they have any reason to believe that the other place, as now constituted, does offer them any real protection. For that reason I would hope that the members of the provincial legislatures are examining with care and with great concern what has happened to the upper house.

It was bad enough when they were denied the opportunity to do an effective job; it was bad enough when a one-sided chamber made any effective second examination no longer a possibility; but now we have come to something that is no longer a question of the composition of the other place, no longer a question of the opportunity it has to deal with legislation or the procedures which are followed, but the dignity, honour and independence of the other place have been destroyed in the same way that the dignity, the honour, and the independence of high offices in this house were destroyed at the same time. That is the serious feature. I would hope that we would hear an echoing demand from the other place. I would not wish any hon. member of the other place to think that I am reflecting on any individual. I believe that there are people of high integrity, of great experience, of long training, who could serve Canada well in that other place.

In Britain at Westminster the House of Lords, which is the corresponding second body, has been drastically reformed. A system has been established under which the House of Lords can have an effective voice, not only in regard to ordinary legislation but in regard to money bills as well under certain limiting provisions. The House of Lords cannot hold up legislation indefinitely. A recent provision makes it possible for the House of Lords to veto a measure, and then it would come back to the commons. When the House of Commons passed it a second time, it would become law. I believe that is the most recent revision. The House of Lords as an appointed body, for that reason, has a vitally important part in the functioning of parliament. It also has wider opportunities for the initiation and review of legislation, and for the consideration of many important subjects.

I believe that our second house, under our parliamentary system, could perform a most useful service. I believe there are types of legislation, other than divorce legislation, which they could handle with great expedition. They could discuss these subjects in that detached atmosphere which is supposed to prevail there, and then this legislation would be brought before this house with the advantage of the advice of experts in that field who would have been brought before the Senate committee before this house was called to pass upon it. I think an amendment of the upper house, which in no way changed its constitutional relationship to the provinces, could greatly shorten the sessions of this house and bring about a better balance between the work of the two houses than exists at this time. I hope that I will not be regarded as being unduly envious when I mention that there are many members here who wish they were members of the other place when it adjourns from time to time because there is not sufficient work before it. My comment is no reflection on the other place. There is no reason for them to continue in Ottawa when they have no work before them. I think that what is essential for the effective operation, not only of the other place but of the House of Commons, is that under a proper system of reform, which maintains the protective feature of the other place's constitutional relationship to the provinces, there will be a balance of work between the two houses that will keep them closer together in their time tables and not cause the members of the other place to move back and forth from time to time as they are called upon to do during the course of the session.

Mr. Lesage: Would the hon. member permit a question for the purpose of clarification? Would he go so far as to propose that in the division of work between the other place and the House of Commons, money bills could be initiated in the other place?

Mr. Drew: No, I am not suggesting that money bills, in general, be initiated in the other place. After all, if there is one thing that above all else does attach itself to the responsibility of the government, it is the initiation of money bills.

Mr. Lesage: Yes, that is why I asked the question.

Mr. Drew: There is every possibility of a reference of money bills in the way that has been established in the House of Lords at Westminster. It was in regard to such a reference of money bills that I made the suggestion that we might, perhaps with some advantage, consider what had been done there. I wish to leave no uncertainty, however, because I did say this before. I am not seeking to lay down any rigid formula. The provinces have a very important part to play in whatever is done, and while there must be a keen desire to work out a balance between the work of the two houses which will give to the very distinguished and highly trained members of that upper house a wider scope for their training and experience, we must also remember that there should be no diminution of the authority of the other place over the constitutional relationship between the provincial governments and the federal government which was contemplated in the original drafting of our basic constitution. That, of course, also is inherent in the fact that the members of the upper house are not appointed on the basis of representation by population. The numbers are fixed. There is agreement as to that. The appointments are made with recognition of the unique duality of its function, of the duty of the upper house in relation to the provinces and their constitutional position, and also the relationship of the other place to the ordinary business and proceedings of this house.

I mention that because the discussion that takes place should be brought forward, as it was brought forward by the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe in 1927, before a conference representative of the federal and provincial governments. My hope would be, though, that with what has happened and with the urgent desire to revive respect for the role of the upper house and its traditions, we should carry this forward, or see it carried forward, to a satisfactory conclusion which would be acceptable to the provinces and to both houses. I say this without in any way accepting the proposition that is sometimes put forward that when we urge a reform of the other place here in this house it would of necessity be repudiated by the other place. I cannot believe that, Mr. Speaker. I cannot believe that men and women of great ability, chosen to fill an honoured position in the upper house, would not welcome a reform which would give them an opportunity to play their full part in the operation of the parliament of Canada at this important time.

It is not only at Westminster that these reforms have taken place. In Australia they have had sweeping reforms and they elect their upper house. I have said I would hope we would not come to that point. In New Zealand, under demands such as have arisen here, they have abolished the upper house. I hope that does not happen here. The danger, however, will increase as events of this kind occur.

Now, Mr. Speaker, today on this supply motion I have dealt with one particular subject and I intend to move an amendment which does not relate to this subject alone but which does re-emphasize our belief that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should take those constitutional steps which would bring about a dissolution of this house and an election at the earliest possible date. We have emphasized that before. There was an interjection the other day that this was being done in a half-hearted manner. I have not heard anything half-hearted about the demands that have been made. We wish to remove any suggestion that there is anything half-hearted about our demand that there be dissolution and an election which will give the Canadian people the chance to express their opinions. We have spoken with deep earnestness, and we speak with deep earnestness today when we say that a great tragedy has occurred in the parliament of Canada, not only in this house but in the other place as well. Emphasis has been placed in this house on the tragedy to the House of Commons, on the events which placed the position of the Speaker, the chairman of the committees and the deputy chairman in question as the result of the action of the government. We have spoken of the concern and the grave concern we feel for the future, with the precedents that have been established in regard to a form of closure never before at any time contemplated which, in the hands of people who sought to destroy parliament, could be applied as effectively as measures were ever employed under any dictatorship. It may be easy to say, "Oh, well, that cannot happen here". This has been said in most countries where free parliaments were destroyed by the methods and procedure of democracy itself, and that after all is the way in which it has happened in many lands.

We saw a system adopted here which denied to the house the opportunity to discuss individual measures, and yet found a declaration made that we had given consideration to sections of a bill which were never before us for a moment. No; things have happened here in rulings in this house by the Chair and by the chairman of committees which could be very dangerous precedents for the years ahead.

After the debate closed here and the votes were taken, things happened in the other place which were a part of this whole evil attempt—and I confess, a successful attempt—to bend parliament to the will of one man, to the will of a man who does not like the rules of parliament, and the will of a man who has been able to get the support of the other members of the government as well as the members of his own party for the demands he has made. Only a year ago we sat here well on into the summer because of the demands that that man made for unprecedented powers which had never been exercised in peacetime and never written into the statutes as they then proposed to do. That debate came to a successful conclusion in so far as the people of Canada were concerned because the government finally acceded to our proposals that a limit be placed upon those wide powers, and in that way the law should not become part of the permanent statute law of Canada, which would have practically made it possible for the government by order in council at any time to have dealt with any aspect of our economy. We were successful then; we were not successful on this occasion except to the extent that we did arouse a public consciousness of what was taking place here.

I am well aware, as is every hon. member, that there is a large majority on the government side. Mr. Speaker, I think the free press of Canada—and I use these words without capitals—on this occasion did indicate clearly what the people were thinking. I believe that those of us who opposed the course followed by the government were in fact expressing the sentiment of the people of Canada. I believe the people of Canada were shocked and ashamed at the arbitrary action taken by this government to comply with a date line set by a company which was not even controlled by people from our own country. I believe that Canadians are sickened by what has happened here in this House of Commons and in the other place.

I urged the Prime Minister to take some action such as the Prime Minister could take and such as the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe obviously contemplated a few years ago when he presented these suggestions to a conference. There was no reply just as there was no reply on the other occasion to set up a committee on defence.

Before I sit down I just want to refer to that because I did not have the opportunity to do so and it shows exactly how far this goes. When I asked that the committee on defence be set up the Prime Minister said we could not have that committee because that was a practice followed in Washington. I then informed him there were inquiries of this kind in Britain. He said that was not his understanding but he would make inquiries. I need only remind him that it is done here and it is done every year by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) when he refers his estimates to a standing committee for that department. These are merely examples of the way in which this government denies to this house the opportunities to assume its responsibilities. I do not believe there will be a full acceptance of parliamentary rights nor will there be a parliament in keeping with the wishes of the people of Canada until there has been a change.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

in the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker I rise to support the amendment. It is perfectly obvious to me that the present House of Commons has lost the confidence of the country.

Mr. McIvor: No.

Mr. Coldwell: If a demonstration were needed as to how the control of this house and the use of the proper rules of this house have not been enforced at the present time it could be found in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon.

I want to say that you, Mr. Speaker, were in the chair and the Speaker also occupied the chair during part of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, and while I am glad the Leader of the Opposition was able to place on record the editorials to which he referred, I say that in placing those editorials before the house and putting them on the record the rules of the house were clearly violated and neither you nor Mr. Speaker dare to rise and interrupt the Leader of the Opposition and call him to order.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, may I just interrupt for a moment and say I think I was as conscious as my hon. friend of the violation of the rules, but I think in fairness it should be stated it occurred after the Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh no, some of them occurred while the Speaker was in the chair.

Mr. Harris: I am not suggesting, however, that the Deputy Speaker was not paying attention to his duties.

Mr. Hodgson: The Minister of Finance was shaking his head at the Speaker.

Mr. Coldwell: I will put it this way: the leader of the house dared not rise and call the hon. member to order.

Mr. Harris: I will say something about that later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should say something at this point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I listened to the editorials which were read by the Leader of the Opposition. These points are extremely difficult to adjudicate upon from this position. The rule is against the reading of editorials which reflect on a proceeding of this chamber or of the other chamber. I listened very carefully to the editorials and it seemed to me the editorials which were read did not so reflect. They reflected on the chamber itself but not on a proceeding in that chamber and for that reason I did not rise.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I accept your explanation so far as this chamber is concerned, but if the editorial in the Calgary Herald did not reflect on the other place I would like to know what remarks could reflect on the other place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It reflected on the institution, in my opinion, but did not reflect on a proceeding which took place in the other place. That is the line of distinction which I was able to draw.

Mr. Coldwell: I would say it reflected on the other place and at the same time it also reflected on the hon. members who constitute the other place. You cannot get away from that, Mr. Speaker.

What I was going to say is this. To my mind the dissolution of this house is essential because of the manner in which this house has been used over the past month or so. I do not think any reading of parliamentary history anywhere in the commonwealth or anywhere else with an institution like our own will give any support to the manner in which the rules of this house were set aside—

Mr. Byrne: By the opposition.

Mr. Coldwell: By the what?

Mr. Byrne: By the opposition.

Mr. Coldwell: Do not be foolish.

Mr. Gardiner: Certainly.

Mr. Coldwell: The opposition relies on the rules; we are the minority.

Mr. Byrne: You broke them.

Mr. Coldwell: The majority in this house requires no rules to support it because they can always enforce their will on this house so we could not be accused of setting the rules aside because we have no power to do so. How can anyone say such a thing? My hon. friend and others like him on the other side of the house have assumed an attitude toward this parliament which is the kind of attitude the followers of the dictators in Europe adopted during the 1930's, and I want to say that I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that we should have a general election and get this mess cleaned up, for it is a mess indeed.

Mr. Byrne: A mess of your making.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member can make his speech after I sit down.

An hon. Member: He could not make a speech if he tried.

Mr. Coldwell: If he can pull apart what I have said, he is perfectly at liberty to do so. I want to tell him he does not understand the rules of this house if he thinks the rules can be used as they were used by the government in the debate of recent occurrence and particularly in connection with the manner in which closure was enforced.

I may say I have never felt as strongly about anything as I have felt about this situation in our parliament.

An hon. Member: Too bad.

Mr. Coldwell: This is something that first of all grieved me and then angered me and the thing that grieved me most in all probability was the fact that over the years I have believed that many of the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite may have believed in democratic procedures, and to see them set aside by the people in whom I had some confidence as democrats was indeed a very sorry thing to observe in this house.

My hon. friend can make his speech when I sit down.

Mr. Ellis: He would not have nerve enough to.

Mr. Coldwell: I have no doubt that his remarks stem back to some of his background in the past—party solidarity. My hon. friend knows to what I am referring. It stems from some of his background in the past.

Mr. Byrne: My background will stand up against yours any time.

Mr. Trainor: He is an independent.

Mr. Coldwell: We take a somewhat different attitude to the other place from that expressed by the Leader of the Opposition. For many years we have seen no good purpose in continuing a second chamber which simply does the bidding of the government, and again if ever a demonstration were needed of the second chamber doing the bidding of the government it was in connection with this pipe-line matter.

When it comes to the Canadian Senate, I think we could modify a famous saying: Everybody talks about the Senate but nobody ever does anything about it. That is true of whatever party is in power in this country.

Right from the earliest days of confederation, the appointments to the Senate by Sir John A. Macdonald were being criticized by the Liberals of that day. Subsequently, when the Liberals were in power, the appointments to the Senate were criticized by the Conservatives. Today we have a Senate which is no longer representative of anything but itself and the Liberal party, a Senate which is predominantly Liberal and where the opposition members in the Senate—and I speak respectfully of them—mostly have reached an age where the long hours of parliamentary debate and so on cannot be sustained by them. The very fact that in ten hours they were able to put through the measure that they did put through in connection with the pipe line is, I think, sufficient evidence that the Senate is no longer functioning and indeed should be abolished.

As far as reform is concerned, I believe it would be much easier to abolish the Senate chamber than to reform it. There would be a long controversy in the country as to how it was going to be reformed, but a simple proposal placed before the people of Canada for the abolition of the Senate would, I believe, be sustained by the people of Canada.

True, we know that under the confederation agreement the Senate was supposed to protect the rights of minorities, but when at any time in recent years has the Senate protected the rights of minorities, and particularly the rights of those of the other language than the one I am using myself this afternoon? I think the answer is never. The Senate has never done anything, that I know of, to protect the rights of the French-speaking Canadians, and for a very good reason. The very good reason is that it is not needed to protect those rights. Those rights are amply protected now, first of all by the constitution of this country itself, the British North America Act; then, of course, by the courts of our country and particularly, perhaps, the Supreme Court of Canada; and then the manner in which the representation in this house is set up, guaranteeing representation as the population of the province of Quebec and the other provinces grows. Then, of course, another reason for the fact that protection is no longer needed is the growth of the French-speaking population in our country and the influence exerted by our French-speaking compatriots. Today the protection of those minority rights, as they were thought of at the time of confederation, is no longer needed from a Senate of Canada.

I am of the opinion that the people of Canada would welcome a proposal for the abolition of the Senate. It is true, as I think the Leader of the Opposition indicated, that in all probability, the consent of the Senate being required, it would be very difficult to pass legislation to bring that about by a joint address, shall we say, of both houses of parliament, but I am sufficiently democratic in my point of view to think that, if the Canadian people indicated in a very clear and certain manner that they wanted either to reform the Senate or to abolish the Senate, the democratic desire of the people of a democratic country would ultimately prevail.

As I see it, there can be no logical reason today in a democracy for an appointed institution of this description. As the Leader of the Opposition has said already—and I do not want to go into details, because he has done so—the House of Lords has been very considerably curtailed in its powers. The Senate of Canada, modelled on the House of Lords, still retains all the power that the British House of Lords had. It can veto any bill, if it dares to do so, and it can exercise powers that the House of Lords exercised once but can no longer exercise. It seems to me that, if the more, shall I say, traditional-minded British people can curtail the power of their second chamber in the manner in which they have done, we should be able to deal with our second chamber at least in the same manner.

Mr. Harris: Would the hon. member mind a question?

Mr. Coldwell: Not at all.

Mr. Harris: Is it not a fact, though, that the destruction imposed in the United Kingdom on the House of Lords is with respect to their powers, and not with respect to their composition?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, certainly with respect to their powers and not to their composition, but I am hoping that their composition will be changed. Let me say this to my hon. friend: that appointments to the House of Lords by all recent governments of Great Britain have not been made on a partisan basis. They have been very largely made of men of outstanding service to the country, of outstanding ability in law, in parliament, in the armed services, in education and in other places, whereas our appointments in this country have been made mainly on a partisan basis, and very often the people who have been appointed are people who tried to get elected in constituencies and could not achieve the desired result and were put into the Senate as a reward for their services to the party in power. It is predominantly now a Liberal Senate.

So I say that the hon. gentleman is quite right when he says that the constitution is different. Of course, we do not want the hereditary principle in Canada, and I think that sooner or later it will be dispensed with in the United Kingdom. At the moment it is there, but the hereditary peers do not play any very important part as a whole in the deliberations of the House of Lords. It is the appointed people, either the lords spiritual or the lords temporal by appointment, that exercise the greater influence in the British parliament.

I am not going to speak at any great length but I did want to rise in support of the Leader of the Opposition and say that, as far as I am concerned, I am wholeheartedly for this resolution. We have asked for dissolution, and I think that the only way in which we can once again get back to a proper atmosphere in this house and a proper respect for the Chair and all the rest of it is by electing a new parliament. I do not know what effect the situation in the house had on the recent elections in the country. Probably they did not have much effect on the elections of the legislatures in the provinces. I do not think they should; I think provincial matters and federal matters are somewhat apart. None the less, I think the Liberal party can take very little comfort from what happened in the provinces in recent days. Without prolonging the debate unduly—because a number of other members want to speak—I want to say that we are going to support this amendment.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I am rising to support the amendment moved by my leader. He dealt with one particular facet of this problem which I feel indicates that there should be an election, and a new government elected in Canada. I do not propose to follow him on the particular matter on which he laid special attention, the situation involving the parliament of Canada. I simply say that I agree entirely, of course, with the criticism which has been made and the documented evidence he has adduced. But there are many matters involving this country at the moment on which one can speak on this occasion because as a vote of confidence with respect to supply it involves all of the issues which confront the government of Canada at the moment. Therefore I propose to deal with one or two other facets of this problem independent of that which has been mentioned by my leader and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell).

The first one is one which has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) on various occasions during the past week or two but only with respect to one particular facet, namely, the increased interest rates throughout the country. Whatever may have happened in the past, whatever responsibility the government may assume for inflation, there is no doubt that a substantial degree of inflation does exist in Canada at the present time. There also can be no doubt that deflationary measures are always unpopular and sometimes are necessary. With that general proposition, assuming that these circumstances exist, one could not take issue. But certainly in a country as vast as this, with all the various conditions prevailing from the Atlantic to the Pacific—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but may I advise him that the Leader of the Opposition has moved an amendment dealing with the dissolution of parliament and that automatically prescribes our discussion at the present time. Therefore I do not think the question of interest rates would be in order under this amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, there are various other matters which one can discuss. I am raising this one for the very reason that you pointed out, because we are asking for the dissolution of parliament, because we feel that the way in which the affairs of this country have been administered by the government is such that dissolution is warranted, that an appeal should be made to the country and a new government elected to deal with these matters. On that basis, I suggest with respect, almost any criticism of the government with respect to administrative or policy matters is a fair field for discussion under this amendment, as would be the case on any motion to go into supply when grievances may be raised if it is a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree with the hon. member that once this amendment has been disposed of he may then, under a general discussion of grievances, raise this subject, but after all we are now dealing with the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member will recall that the two speeches made so far have dealt mainly with the question of Senate reform and other questions relating to the Senate and the House of Commons. I do not feel that we can depart from that subject in view of the amendment which is now before us. Of course, the hon. member will have his opportunity to deal with other matters once the amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I do submit that under a motion saying that the government has lost confidence and should be dissolved the mere fact that the Leader of the Opposition dealt primarily with the Senate and also with other matters which have taken place in this house surely does not narrow the scope of the amendment before us. There are various matters I want to bring up, including this matter to which I have made some slight reference. I say that surely on a general vote of confidence on a motion saying that the government has lost the confidence of the people one can raise almost any matter. It would be impossible, Mr. Speaker, for any speaker, for any speaker, even one as gifted as the Leader of the Opposition, and with all the time which might be available to him, to catalogue all the sins of omission and commission of this government. He just could not do it. Surely one is not going to be limited to the repetition of any statements he made. Therefore I do think, with all respect, that I am entitled to discuss other matters which have been brought up in the house before with regard to which criticism has been levelled at the government and changes have been suggested which the government has so far seen fit to disregard. Therefore, unless I have a positive ruling that I am out of order, I will proceed. I am only going to deal with this one matter for one minute because I am passing on to other matters which have been discussed and in connection with which criticism has been made at greater length. I wanted to deal with this one matter for a moment in opening, and in my opinion it is within the scope of the motion that I should be able to do so.

I wanted to say with respect to the matter of interest rates that protests have been made against inflexible principles as applied to flexible matters. We have heard it emphasized with respect to housing and the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance has been drawn to certain areas in this country with respect to which statements have been made that housing is limited, curtailed or prejudiced because of the policy of the government. In passing may I suggest—

Mr. Blackmore: On a point of order, it seems to me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member for Lethbridge is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blackmore: That is right. I think Your Honour was thoroughly justified in suggesting that the hon. member should discuss nothing else except the matter which the Leader of the Opposition used as the basis for his amendment. If he continues to discuss such matters as he is now discussing it will mean that when we come to the vote all those who may vote against the principle which the Leader of the Opposition has laid down could also be accused of voting against the representations on the various subjects which the hon. member wants to bring up, and that would certainly be unfair to hon. members. I think we should proceed and have the vote on the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I really feel that the point of order just raised by the hon. member for Lethbridge is well taken. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is now discussing the matter of housing. I agree that he is perfectly entitled to raise that point but only after the matter now before us has been disposed of. I think, as is our invariable practice in airing grievances, that on a motion of this kind we must confine ourselves to one subject at a time. I would invite the co-operation of the hon. member in confining himself to this subject at the moment, and I will be glad to recognize him later to raise his other point once the amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I think there is one point with regard to this matter which seems to have been overlooked in the remarks that have been made. The motion that has been presented to the house is clear and specific. It reads:

> in the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible.

I made it clear I was only referring to one reason why I thought this motion should be supported, and it seems to me that any subject in regard to which it can be reasonably contended that the motion itself is justified should be admissible and that the fact that I happened to raise the particular question of what had taken place in the other place, with a comment also in regard to a request I had made for an inquiry into the defence estimates as showing a certain parallel with my request in this case, should not place any limit on the subjects that can be brought 'orward.

After all, on this supply motion we have a certain limitation in any event. It is not like the debate on the speech from the throne or the budget debate where the debate goes on indefinitely or could until the rules were changed this year. This is limited by having to end tomorrow, and I submit that anything that can be reasonably put forward as justification for the contention that the Prime Minister should take the constitutional steps which would lead to dissolution should be admissible in relation to this motion. That is my contention, sir. I regret very much the fact that I limited my remarks to the one subject instead of saying that there are 15 or 20 and then mentioning them at least once, a procedure which would have brought them all in. I would regret very much if that fact were permitted to limit debate which seems to me to be a wide open debate of the subject as to why dissolution is essential in the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. Nicholson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. While I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) gave sufficient reasons for this motion to be accepted, I see no reason why at this stage Your Honour should try to bar other hon. members from expressing views. I think the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) is quite within his rights in presenting other reasons which should be taken into consideration with a view to getting favourable consideration for the motion which is before us. I hope Your Honour would not prevent other members from presenting other reasons which might be as valid as the reasons given by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. Nowlan: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think your difficulty is that you have suggested that on the matter of grievances, we follow one after the other; and the practice has been in this house that you discuss the one grievance and make sure that members have all spoken on that before we move on to another one. This is an entirely different situation, I suggest, this afternoon where we are not discussing grievances per se but where we are discussing a motion of want of confidence and are saying that this house should be dissolved and therefore it brings everything within its ambit.

I must say that if I had thought that, by continuing my speech on interest rates, I would be encouraging the hon. member who raised the point of order a few moments ago to intervene in this matter, I would willingly drop it and move on to some other matters, because I do not want to see what he suggests happen. But apart from that, I have other matters to raise anyway and I am saying with respect that I think you are confusing a grievance with a vote of confidence. With all the seriousness at my disposal I submit that under the rules it is open to us to discuss these various matters. I have one, two, three or possibly more. If this question is going to be raised again, perhaps I had better enumerate them so that there will not be this problem facing anybody following me.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, might I say this. While this may not in itself in any way be conclusive as to the interpretation of the motion put forward, in drafting the motion, it was done intentionally without any specific limitation. It was drafted as a bald declaration that there should be dissolution and an early election with the idea that different subjects could be discussed. I recognize that Your Honour is not in any way bound by what the intention was, but I thought I should explain that the motion was particularly drafted with that thought in mind. I myself indicated that I was merely dealing with one of the reasons that I thought it was so essential that this be done. I submit to Your Honour that, under the rules, we can only carry this forward I believe until 8.15 o'clock tomorrow night and that after that there is the open debate, at which time there must be continuity. The moment a change is permitted, then something else comes in, but I submit that until that time comes and a vote is taken on this motion certainly the intention was—and I hope the interpretation would be—that this is a motion calling for dissolution and that arguments put forward as to reasons why there should be dissolution—that is why confidence has been lost in the government to the extent that it is desirable that the dissolution—should be permitted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has quite rightly stated that once the amendment has been disposed of, then we deal with one subject at a time and we recognize speakers who wish to deal with a certain subject. I think that is quite true. In view of the fact that this amendment is a very broad one, perhaps I should hear the hon. member.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, when the point of order was raised I was referring briefly to the government's policy with respect to interest rates or the Bank of Canada policy in raising interest rates across the country. Whatever may be the justification for some broad general approach to an increase in rates, I was suggesting that such a policy must be flexible rather than inflexible, and must take into consideration various local conditions existing all across the nation. The justification, if any, for an increase in rates is to control inflation, to restrict borrowing and to accomplish what you might term something of a deflationary process. Whether that is justified in some places in Canada, I know not. However, I know that the very reverse position applies in so far as the maritimes generally are concerned, which have not benefited at all from any inflationary tendencies, and where there is a necessity to borrow money more cheaply and to borrow more money than has been borrowed in the past. I draw the attention of the house particularly to one area with which I am familiar, namely the great fruit growing district of Nova Scotia which suffered a tremendous disaster last year. As a result of that, the growers, the warehousemen and virtually everyone engaged in the industry is in a position where he will have to borrow money this year if the growing of this year's crop is to be financed and provision made for the cost of spraying, fertilizer and all the rest of it. At the moment they are precluded from borrowing or their borrowing is more limited because they are told by the bank manager that it is government policy that loans must be curtailed and that they will not be able to borrow as much as they borrowed last year. In fact, it is intimated that they will not be able to borrow one-half enough or one-quarter enough with which to finance the beginning of this year's crop, something which will produce millions of dollars in that area where it is so badly needed.

I say there is something radically wrong with a policy which is administered in that way and which is inflexible. The minister says they are giving consideration to this matter in so far as housing is concerned. He told us in a rather mysterious way about having a conference with bankers, and intimates that something may be done some time to change the situation. I stress now with all the point that one can that the time to do it is now, at least in so far as these areas in the maritime provinces are concerned which need this additional capital, and with particular reference to the great fruit growing industry of eastern Canada which is going to suffer disaster again this year comparable with that which it suffered last year because they will not even be able to finance the crop unless there is a relaxation of these banking regulations, and that within the next few days. By friends of mine who are close to the situation I am told that at the moment there are only about two in the whole industry of those who ordinarily finance their growers who are able to do so out of their own reserves. The others normally borrow from the banks and they have been told this year that they cannot borrow anything like what they borrowed before. Of course, any increase in the rates naturally adds to the cost but that applies to everyone in business and is not a particular grievance of those people.

I draw that matter to the minister's attention and to the attention of the house as one thing in which I suggest this government has failed, where they are administering an inflexible policy rather than a flexible one, and that you need a different approach to this matter. For that reason I think it well comes within the scope of the motion which has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon.

I turn from that, Mr. Speaker, to another matter which is of national importance, although it has a local application too, and one which I am certain that the government has failed to deal with as it should have on a great national basis. One could read editorial after editorial dealing with that matter but I do not propose to do that. I am referring now to the matter of education in this country and the responsibility of this government towards that educational policy.

There are two facets to it, of course. There is one dealing with the problem in the maritime provinces. The Minister of Finance has heard me stress that in times gone by. I am not going to repeat those arguments this afternoon because I still have the hope that someone who looks as intelligent as he does and who has some knowledge of conditions prevailing in local universities and universities generally throughout the country will reverse that iniquitous program or that faulty program—I will not say iniquitous program—which was inaugurated by his predecessor whereby grants to universities are made on a per capita per province basis. That results in the universities of the maritime provinces, where we have a smaller population and more students, getting relatively little government assistance. Practically every university, with the exception of one, is financed by private charity or by endowment. They are suffering tremendously in comparison with universities in the rest of Canada, and steps must be taken whereby that situation can be ameliorated.

I have suggested that before, and I should like to hear some effective answer. I have not heard one so far. In fact I give the minister credit, because I do not think he has ever tried to justify this policy. At least there should be a basic minimum per head established, and having got that basic minimum per student—which was the principle adopted by this government during the war, and which worked out so satisfactorily for the education of our returned veterans—then you superimpose upon it 50 cents per head of population. I believe in some provinces they get more than that, but you do get the absurd situation—I have not checked the figures this year, but speaking entirely from memory—that in one province at any rate a university was getting as high as $400 per student, while in Nova Scotia I think it was $88 per student. It varied within that fairly extreme range of $400 down to $88. If a basic minimum of $125 per student were financed by the dominion treasury it would be of tremendous help at least to universities in the maritime provinces.

This is only one segment of this important problem which is going to confront us within the next few years. My charge against this government this afternoon is that apparently it has failed utterly to realize the impact of that problem on our national development. You cannot open a newspaper in Canada today but what you will read statements from university heads, business heads, the Canadian Manufacturers Association or labour unions, whatever it may be, to the effect that Canada is facing a problem within the next few years in getting trained personnel, and that we have not had the facilities with which to produce that personnel nor have we been getting leadership from the government or any assistance whatever.

I was interested the other day in reading a speech given by Mr. Crawford Gordon, president of the A. V. Roe Company Limited, to the Canadian Manufacturers Association, in which he pointed out some of the problems with which we are confronted. He said that Canada was lagging farther and farther behind in the training of manpower. He quoted figures with respect to Russia, where apparently a few years ago we had the picture presented that they were all sort of stupid peasants going around in great fur coats whose educational system we did not envy. Now the emphasis has gone the other way, perhaps too much so, and we are suddenly being told, whether it be by James Duncan, a manufacturer, or Norman Smith, a reporter, of the tremendous progress which is being made in the educational field and how far we are lagging behind. Mr. Gordon said the other day that he is setting up a conference in September to deal with this problem. It has been suggested by many newspapers that we have a manpower conference—I have forgotten the exact name of it—which was constituted by this government several years ago to survey the whole problem of manpower. It had three or four meetings, but nothing has been heard of it since 1953. Now we are getting into a situation where everyone says something must be done and done immediately. I say the problem must be met.

I noticed a speech the other day by Dr. Sidney Smith in which he says the expansion of plant alone for universities within the next three or four years is going to amount to over $350 million. We will have this tremendous increase of student population starting within the next five years as a result of the increased birth rate during the war. This $350 million is for increased plant, but what about the training of personnel? Nothing is being done about it. The Canada Council was recommended five years ago by the Massey report, and we are told today that cannot be established because the Prime Minister cannot find the personnel. This is one of the problems that could have been dealt with by the Canada Council, the question of universities, of leadership and guidance. I suggest that if the Prime Minister finds it very difficult to get the personnel for the Canada Council, he might turn the problem over to the conference of presidents of universities, and within two weeks they would come up with satisfactory nominations.

At any rate, the situation is this. The universities of Canada are facing an important task, whether they are huge like the University of Toronto or relatively small like Acadia University, in my home town. They are confronted with a problem which none of them can meet. You have to have leadership, guidance and assistance from a government, and so far that has not been evident in any way whatever.

I am not blaming the government alone for this. I think we have all failed Canada on that score. I noticed the other day that in Canada, for instance, 878 corporations gave nine-eighths of one per cent of their income to education, but only one-tenth of that went to higher education, or roughly $3 million. At the same time industry in the United States gave over $100 million to higher education, and it was a smaller percentage of their entire income.

We need leadership in this sphere, and we are not getting it here. There must be a system of scholarships set up so we can provide this trained personnel. There must be general assistance given in the field of education because Canada is facing, and I reiterate it and stress it, a problem far greater than anyone here realizes. This is what Mr. Gordon said the other day:

> Unless an answer is found, and found quickly, we and the whole western world will start to slip behind in the race for technical and productive supremacy.

I am not only concerned about technical and productive supremacy, I am also concerned about the humanities, the arts as well as the sciences. Within the last two or three days I noticed that Premier Frost has spoken on the matter of education and research. He said:

> The matter of university education and research is not one which in 1956 we can relegate to the province by a clause in the confederation act, in the drawing of which the fathers of confederation could not anticipate world crisis such as 1914-18 and 1939-45, nor the battle of peace upon which the future of Canada, and indeed the survival of democracy depends.

The future of Canada and the survival of democracy—those are fairly strong words. I do not think they are too strong, Mr. Speaker. I do think a problem is presented to the government there with which it should deal and with which I have seen no indication of it dealing so far. I should like to see a government returned here, of whatever political party it might be, fresh from the people with a mandate to deal with matters such as this. Although the problem is somewhat indefinite and perhaps has no great popular appeal, yet I think it is fundamental at least to our national future if not to our very existence.

I am not sure what time I have remaining in view of the discussion which took place a while ago on a point of order, but there is another matter to which I want to refer. It is separate entirely from the one I have mentioned so far. This is a matter about which we have read in the press recently, the increase in freight rates which has been authorized by the commission, a temporary increase until fall. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that in so far as the transport commissioners are concerned, this government has no responsibility whatever. I think that would be the proper position for them to take.

My complaint in this particular phase, Mr. Speaker, is that for years some of us have been urging that the Maritime Freight Rates Act be brought up to date, not only be amended but be revitalized, be made to live in 1956. I spoke on that in 1949, in 1950 and in 1951. That is a matter in which this government has direct responsibility. Because it has failed to deal with it in any way I believe it does come within the ambit of this resolution. It is something for which this government must take full responsibility, and possibly needs a government with a fresh mandate in order to see that it is done.

I think it is worth while referring briefly to the record in this regard, Mr. Speaker. I have not time to deal with it at any great length but, as Premier Flemming said the other night in an address he made somewhere, sometimes you have the feeling, when you are referring to the Maritime Freight Rates Act, that you are a poor relative asking for charity at the hands of some wealthy person. That is far from the situation. Without taking the time of the house to put it all on the record, I wish to establish this point. Section 145 of the British North America Act is the keystone of this entire structure. This is what it says:

> Inasmuch as the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have joined in a declaration that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway is essential to the consolidation of the union of British North America, and to the assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick . . .

That is the prime condition on which they entered. It is interesting to see the technological advances that have taken place since 1867. Eight years later Prince Edward Island was brought in and virtually the same thing was said. However, they were then emphasizing telegraphs as well. We come to 1948 and Newfoundland finally comes into the dominion. The technological field has developed still further. Now we have airports, airplanes, railways, telegraph; the whole picture. As the technological field has developed so I suggest should the interpretation of this problem and what is envisaged by it.

The whole matter of the Maritime Freight Rates Act was considered many years ago, away back in 1926. It would be worth while, Mr. Speaker, if time permitted, to put on the record the preamble of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): It may be a little irregular for me to say so, but the hon. member's speech was interrupted. He has often referred to his time. For his information, may I say that according to our record he has 20 minutes of time still left.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not realize there was that much, Mr. Speaker. The Maritime Freight Rates Act was passed in 1927. There was a preamble to that act which is very important, and which for some reason has been left out of the printing of the act in the Revised Statutes of Canada. In order to find the preamble one has to go back to the original statute. I think it is worth while to put on the record what was said by the royal commission as a basis for the establishment of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It was as follows:

> Whereas the royal commission on maritime claims by its report, dated September 23, 1926, has, in effect, advised that a balanced study of the events and pronouncements prior to confederation, and at its consummation, and of the lower level of rates which prevailed on the Intercolonial system prior to 1912, has in its opinion confirmed the representations submitted to the commission on behalf of the maritime provinces, namely, that the Intercolonial Railway was designed, among other things, to give to Canada in time of national and imperial need an outlet and inlet on the Atlantic ocean, and to afford—

These are the important words, Mr. Speaker:

> —to maritime merchants, traders and manufacturers the larger market of the whole Canadian people instead of the restricted market of the maritimes themselves, also that strategic considerations determined a longer route than was actually necessary, and therefore that to the extent that commercial considerations were subordinated to national, imperial and strategic conditions, the cost of the railway should be borne by the dominion, and not by the traffic which might pass over the line.

There are several other sections, but this is the important one. One of the purposes of the railway was strategic, Mr. Speaker, which resulted in a railway 300 miles longer than was necessary. That is rather interesting today, Mr. Speaker, when we have our United States friends co-operating, in fact working, in the north country and taking over the D.E.W. line. One reason we in the maritime provinces are penalized in regard to freight rates is that when we entered confederation there was a real or imagined fear of the United States, and the Intercolonial Railway was built all the way up along that New Brunswick coastline, as far away as possible from the United States border. That resulted in an increased mileage of over 350 miles. Our goods have to move back and forth over these miles to get to central Canada.

Up to the early part of 1912, in fact up to the outbreak of the first world war, those rates were preserved at a proper level. The principle was maintained that the traders and manufacturers of the maritimes should get into the larger market of upper Canada. Those rates started to increase during the war. The Maritime Freight Rates Act was brought into effect in 1926. In effect they froze the rates at a certain level and gave a reduction of 20 per cent on goods originating within certain areas in the maritime provinces moving into the markets of Quebec and Ontario.

That seemed to be a satisfactory solution. Then what happened? We began to get these horizontal increases at one time and another, until recently it was computed that from 1948 to 1955, because of horizontal increases, the freight rates had increased over 98·7 per cent. When we take into consideration the 7 per cent increase which was authorized the other day by the board of transport commissioners we have had an increase of over 100 per cent since 1945.

What a bill to give to a territory which used to get a 20 per cent reduction. When the principle was established one might be paying $1, and with the 20 per cent reduction it amounted to 80 cents. That put us in a competitive position. In the meantime that rate has gone up to 82 and now we are paying $1.60. It is true that we are getting the 20 per cent reduction, but we are paying $1.60 instead of the 80 cents we were paying before because those horizontal increases have not applied to traffic in Ontario and Quebec where there is competition from water transportation and from trucks. Because of these short-haul, competitive rates which have been established, goods in this part of the country have not borne the same relative costs as they have in the maritime provinces. I could produce example after example of that but I am not going to do it at the moment because the situation is well known to all of us.

Now, someone has said, "You are getting special subsidies, a special benefit." Premier Flemming said, when he mentioned the Maritime Freight Rates Act, he sometimes felt like a poor relative looking for charity. I suggest to this house that in the short time I have been here we have provided special subsidies for transportation. We provided it in connection with the railway bridge across northern Ontario. We pay $7 million a year for the reduction of rates across that northern Ontario bridge. If you take the car loadings moving you will find that the subsidy per car on the so-called bridge is $48.44. I find that reference in the study made by the maritimes freight rates commission. The subsidy per car under the Maritime Freight Rates Act is only $29.25. Therefore I do not think anyone can complain that we are getting any great subsidy which puts us in a unique position when compared with any other province.

As I said, as the result of these horizontal increases a situation has been created which has entirely negatived the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act as it was envisaged by the Duncan commission and by this government. In 1927 this government, then led by prime minister Mackenzie King, brought in the legislation and said, "This is a solution of the problem for all time to come".

This is just illustrative of the problem which exists in my own constituency. When this act came into effect, and as late as 1937, a carload of apples going from Middleton in my constituency to Montreal cost $120 and in 1955 it cost $272. A carload of apples going from Grimsby, Ontario, to the Montreal market in 1937 cost $97 and that was increased to only $127 by 1955. In other words a carload of apples being shipped under the so-called benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act has had an increase of $148 imposed on it, and a carload getting standard rates from Grimsby to Montreal has had an increase of $30. So we are $118 worse off under the so-called benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act than under the other rates.

I can also quote figures for a carload of lumber from Ontario to New Brunswick. It was $80 in 1937 and it is $160 today, or an increase of 100 per cent. From Val d'Or Quebec to Montreal it was $86 in 1937 and it is $111 today.

One could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I think I have said enough to give some examples of the complete failure of the Maritime Freight Rates Act to operate under existing conditions. There are other phases one could mention. As a matter of fact, I mentioned this back in 1951, so I think we have a legitimate grievance in suggesting it is time the government dealt with this matter.

This act does not apply to shipments going to the United States. It goes back to the time of the building of the Intercolonial Railway, when the Duncan commission felt we could have nothing except what we were logically entitled to as the result of confederation. Back at the time of confederation reciprocity with the United States had just been abrogated and the maritimes were shipping very little to the markets of Massachusetts and New England. In 1926 the Duncan commission said, "You cannot get any benefit from goods going into the United States". Today, of course, we are shipping large quantities of apples and vegetables, some lumber and tremendous quantities of fish into the New England states, and thus we should get the benefit of that act.

For some strange reason which no one has been able to determine the act has been administered so that it does not apply to goods moving by C.P.R. into Nova Scotia, coming over from Saint John to Digby. As a result goods moved over that route by the Canadian Pacific Railway into Nova Scotia are paying the highest rates in the maritimes. No change has been made so far and apparently no change is being contemplated by this government. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say the time has come when that act must be revised. It must be brought up to date and applied to give us that to which we are entitled.

We do not want that to which we are not entitled; not charity or grants in aid or assistance of any kind except the fundamental matters which were guaranteed by the British North America Act, recognized by a commission appointed by this government in 1926, and written into the preamble of the act, all of which have been lost through technological changes in transport and freight rates by two innovations: (a) horizontal increases and (b) by creating special rates to meet competition by water and truck. The situation today in the maritimes is much more adversely prejudiced by the act being in existence than it was 25 years ago before the act came into existence at all.

As I said, that is only the third matter I want to bring to the attention of the house at this time. It is a matter that was outstanding long before I came to the house. When I first came into the house in 1949 the then member for Cumberland, Mr. Percy Black, moved an amendment on going into supply. The government said it would take it under consideration and something would be done. This afternoon I was looking at the speech made by the then minister of transport, Mr. Chevrier, in which he admitted there had been difficulties in the administration of the act and said something must be done about it.

That took place in 1949, and this is 1956. Is there any reason one should not say that is a matter on which there is a justifiable complaint? We in the maritimes believe this government has failed in dealing with this problem and that it is necessary to have a new parliament elected with a fresh government to deal with this and a score of other problems which may or may not be raised during this debate.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I must say that to some extent I have enjoyed listening to the Leader of the Opposition make his annual speech concerning why the Senate should be reformed. Listening to his address I admit I thought a logical amendment would have been to the effect that it was resolved the government should bring in a bill to reform the Senate, but the Leader of the Opposition did not bring that in. I am not championing the cause of the Senate because I want to go there. I shall be in the House of Commons for as long a time as the people of Fort William want me to be here, and while I am here I will not be in the Senate.

If I had been a senator sitting up yonder looking down on the Commons during the pipe-line debate there is one question I would have asked myself: Why does the opposition not debate the bill? Why are they moving so many motions for the adjournment of the house, and why are they raising so many points of order and questions of privilege? Why do they not debate the bill?

I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that when the pipe-line bill went to the Senate the Senate debated the bill with dignity, and in proportion to their number they said more in the discussion of the bill than did the opposition here. The opposition in the Senate did not get angry and rush out into the aisle calling the other side names and doing other undignified things. I must also confess, Mr. Speaker, that during that fracas I was the only one on this side of the house who did not act with dignity. When an hon. member over yonder called out, "Throw out the mace", and then when the leader of the C.C.F. and other hon. members came out in the aisle like a howling mob, I must say I stepped out into the aisle and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, though I might have gone down under the advance of the members, somebody else would have known the reason before I would have allowed anybody to touch the mace. I think the Senate would be well advised to send a bill down to this house for the reform of the House of Commons, after what the members of the Senate saw take place here.

The policy of the government was that we would have an all-Canadian gas pipe line for Canada. That was expressed in the speech from the throne. One hon. member who was not a Liberal said to me, "If the government does not pass this bill, if it allows the opposition to defeat it in this respect, it is not fit to govern the country". But the opposition did not win this time, and I would just like to remind the opposition that those who came out into the aisle using language they would never use to their better halves will regret that scene as long as they live.

Perhaps the Senate does need some reform, but I am not going to go into that now. I am going to say, however, I think the government stands high in the estimation of the people of Canada, and I am going to allow a cabinet minister to prove that.

Mr. Montgomery: Bring on an election if you think so.

Mr. McIvor: I am not listening to any questions from the opposition when a man does not rise in his place. I was home in Fort William. If we had not passed the pipe-line bill I doubt that I could have been elected again there. Perhaps I could not be anyway. But that is the government policy. When I think of the government of Ontario to a man standing for this pipe line and then the opposition here trying to do everything possible to defeat it, I think there is another thought coming to the opposition.

As I have said, I shall allow a cabinet minister to show why the government is held in higher respect in Canada today than ever before. We have better times today than ever we had before; unemployment is low; and today we have an atmosphere in Canada that many other countries in the world would like to imitate.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): The motion of non-confidence that the leader of the official opposition moved reads:

> In the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible.

It is one in which every Canadian should be most vitally interested. I listened with some interest to what he had to say with respect to the reform of the Senate. I must say that possibly much of what he said thereto was called for, and that our upper chamber was drastically in need of some reform. I am satisfied, too, that possibly the senators themselves desire certain changes to be brought about in the operation of that august chamber. However, I do not view this amendment as one that would be a vote of confidence in the government; rather I think it would indicate that it is a vote of confidence in democracy itself.

It would seem to me that here we have many instances where a minority group feels that because it has not had its way, the government is not rightfully in office. I listened with a great deal of interest some days ago when the Leader of the Opposition spoke in respect to the vote of censure on Mr. Speaker. The only fault I heard him find, was that Mr. Speaker admitted he had made a mistake and was trying to do something about it. I for one consider that when a man makes a mistake and is big enough in a chamber such as this to admit he has made a mistake, he should be given credit and not censured for it.

In dealing with the trans-Canada pipeline bill the official opposition and the C.C.F. apparently were ill-disposed to feel that the bill was a good one for this country. They have a right to their opinions, but I wish they had said more about the bill at that time and less about the rules of procedure, and had let us discover what they had to offer in place of it. Then possibly some of us might have been more prone to support them in that particular case.

In respect to the matter of education, raised earlier by one of the members of the Conservative group, I think he indicated he felt that the federal government should do more in respect to education. I have supported from time to time a plea that the federal government should assist in education to a greater degree than it is doing today, especially in the higher grades. That would not be a mistake. However, it would be a mistake on the part of this parliament to foist its ideas upon any of the provinces that do not wish us to assist in education at the federal level, and for that reason I again feel, much as I would like to see assistance in the education field by the federal authority, that it is impossible for me to agree that it should be forced upon any group in this country that does not wish it.

The future of democracy will not be met by this bigoted action but, I should say, rather by a moral acceptance of the responsibility of each member of this house that he has a job to do here. His job in the opposition, I should say, is to try to persuade the government that what it is doing is wrong and possibly might be amended, but certainly not to tell this country that after a government has been elected by the people for an understandable period of four or five years if it so wishes, it must do as the minority says it should do or else go to the country every time there is a contentious measure.

A year ago we in this group most heartily supported the opposition in respect to the defence production bill. Even on that issue, however, unless the people of this country are stirred up to the extent that they show they are absolutely opposed to the reigning government, I feel that no election is called for and we should carry on in a practicable way and let democracy function as it is intended to function, by the rule of the majority and not by the rule of the minority.

I think it is to our discredit that we should say that we as M.P.'s are not exercising the authority that is vested in the office we hold; that some of us are voting for a particular political machine. I am satisfied that each member of this house, including each of the hon. members on this side, when they took the oath of office agreed they would do as their conscience bade them, and I am not going to accuse anybody of not having done so. If it would appear that certain members have followed in the footsteps of their leaders and followed their suggestions, it may be that persuasion was the driving force that caused it. It is not a force of fists, but possibly a force of words and explanations that showed them the merits of what they were voting for.

The fact is that I find in my own area at least, for that is the area from which I get most of my correspondence, that there is no extreme discontent, and I consider that would be the prime reason for any election to be held in this country. Certainly at this time, in considering what has taken place in this country, no matter how badly we feel about the events that have taken place I cannot see sufficient reason for calling an election and so doing us out of the proper field of democracy as it is expected to function. Probably I should be the last to suggest that we should not have an election, for I am possibly one of the very few in this house who at this time have been favoured with a nomination to contest the next election. Personally I would be quite ready for it, but I see no reason for it. I am satisfied that those who are clamouring the most for it would be the most disappointed should the government call an election immediately.

An hon. Member: Nomination does not mean election.

Mr. Hahn: I take note of the interjection with respect to nomination not meaning election. There is no one more aware than I am of the fact that nomination does not mean election. I was one of the few who were declared defeated and later elected in the last election. However, it will remain for my constituents to decide, and I will be prepared to let them decide the issue in due course. But I do not consider that this is the proper time for such an election.

The question of freight rates was raised. As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings did, I should also like to indicate that I am quite opposed to the latest increase in the freight rate structure of this country. It is true that the board of transport commissioners determined that a 7 per cent hoist in rates at the present time was quite justified, having regard to the increases in wages that were given to certain railway employees. However, freight rates play such an integral part in this nation, especially in the parts that are distant from Ottawa and the central provinces, that they have a material effect upon the cost of living; in fact to such a degree that I am satisfied the whole nation may well suffer if we continue to have increases in freight rates every time there is an increase in wages.

Agriculture in Canada has suffered badly during the past few years. We have been told by members of all parties, and the statistics bear it out, that agriculture is suffering more at the present time and also suffered more last year than at any time since the depression years. In British Columbia we have a strong agricultural industry. It is the third major industry of the province, being surpassed only by logging and mining. There are certain branches of agriculture in that province which require a great deal of wheat. I refer to the poultry, dairying, pork and beef industries. We are not primarily a grain-growing area, so we have to import a great deal of grain into the province from our neighbours.

The increase in the price of grain brought about by the 7 per cent increase in freight rates is merely going to put our farmers into a 14 per cent cost squeeze. The farmer will have to pay 7 per cent more on domestic grain coming into his area and an additional 7 per cent on the other goods he has to purchase. The two combined add to 14 per cent. There is also the fact that we have to compete with produce coming into the province from outside markets, particularly from our neighbours to the south. Other countries are also favoured under the export freight rate, which makes a big difference with respect to the cost of production so far as poultry, pork, beef and dairy production particularly are concerned in the province of British Columbia.

A year ago or more, I believe it was in February, the government saw fit by regulation to reduce by $5 a ton the subsidy on feed grain coming into our area, and it now becomes apparent that whereas heretofore our farmers were just able to make ends meet, they are going to have to pay an additional 7 per cent for feed, which is going to put them in a position where they just cannot carry on any longer.

In my opinion an examination of railway operation methods is desirable at this time. It is desirable because we find that the railways today are giving agreed charges to certain particular industries in order that the railways may compete more favourably with the trucking industry and so get revenue they would otherwise lose. These agreed charges can run into the thousands, although they may not run that high at the present time, but by having more and more agreed charges it means that some other part of our economy must pay the difference between what the railways were previously getting from freight and what they are going to get in the future.

In other words, if we have a thousand agreed charges set up by the railways then products that can only be hauled by rail, such as grain or heavy steel products, must pay additional freight and thereby offset the loss under the agreed charges. During the discussion in the special committee this year of the affairs of the Canadian National Railways I remember quite well asking Donald Gordon where these agreed charges were in effect, how they became compensatory and how it was decided whether such rates applied between Hamilton and Toronto, Hamilton and Montreal, or any other two points. We always arrived at the same answer, that it was impossible to determine the exact cost from point to point. If it is impossible to determine that, how do we know that we are not losing money on agreed charges? If we are losing money on these agreed charges in order to be competitive with the trucking industry, and at the same time are taking business away from that industry, then certainly there is not sufficient derived from the grain trade at the old rate to keep up the revenue.

Therefore it becomes necessary in my opinion to examine again the problem of the railways, their handling of the business of this country and the special agreements they make with other industries in order to transport a major part of their goods and gain revenue that would otherwise go to truckers. I say that the farmer in British Columbia and in the maritimes is subsidizing the agreed charges, and we must not carry on in that fashion any longer.

It is high time we looked into this matter and stopped this indiscriminate method of just slapping on a 7 per cent or 15 per cent increase in freight rates in order to meet certain losses. It is time our railway industry woke up as to what its problem is, and it is not just the single problem of carrying freight at a nominal charge. There should be special privilege for none.

In the province of British Columbia we have other subsidiary industries that are going to be affected by the 7 per cent increase in freight rates. We have the gluten and adhesives industries. We have the edible starches, macaroni and paste foods, distillery products and other industries. With respect to the macaroni industry may I say that we had three or four factories not so many years ago that were busy all the time. Today we have but one. It is a plant which would normally keep 300 people busy. Today we find just a handful of employees working in that particular industry. The British Columbia farmers must compete with United States producers. They must compete with the foreign market completely.

We have the two freight rates. We have the domestic rate and the export rate in this country on our wheat, and this is what we find. I have a table which I took from a report given to the board of transport commissioners by the British Columbia government on February 7 of this year—it is known as Exhibit "C"—in which they take certain terminal points and discover the various costs in respect of the handling of grain. This is what we find. We find that the number of miles a car travelled to go to British Columbia was 780; the average number of tons per car was 50; and the average revenue per car was $571. These figures—the revenue figure of $571 and the mileage of 780—are important.

Transposing that, we find the following comparative rates. Exhibit "D" of that same report would indicate that on a 700 mile haul —taking other items as examples, in carload lots—aircraft parts would be carried for 700 miles for $330 as compared with $512 which might be computed on a 700-mile basis for wheat on the domestic freight rate. Ammunition pays slightly more by the carload for hauling on that same basis; it pays $660. And so we could go through this whole chart. I find, for instance, large bottles—breakable glass—being hauled over a distance of 700 miles for $369.60 while on the other hand we have $512 which must be paid for hauling wheat which is needed in order to keep our industry in operation on the west coast.

On the next page we have shown the revenue per car on coconut shells and skins, $327; ores and concentrates, $545—they too pay more—some grain products, $356; other grain, $396; hydrated lime, $320.40; old rails, $445. From studying these figures, Mr. Speaker, it becomes apparent that wheat, a commodity which is so simple to handle, is paying a rate out of all proportion as compared with that on any other product in this country for hauling to the west coast.

Exhibit "E" of this same brief deals with varying classes of freight and the distance hauled. I am just going to read one or two of these examples to illustrate the point. The chart is headed "Average revenue per car by classes compared with yield from domestic grain rates". First-class rate, special type, number of cars 89; revenue, $33,295; average revenue per car, $373; average haul, 731 miles. Mr. Speaker, on grain for domestic purposes, on that same basis, the revenue per car was $590. In other words we pay $217 more for the hauling of grain to be used to be fed to our stock in our poultry industry, our cattle industry and our dairying industry. Wheat pays $217 more than does the first-class freight into that particular area. The fact is that out of the ten examples we find given here, there are only two which pay more than wheat for domestic purposes.

Exhibit "G" is another of these charts which indicates a comparison of refrigerated and heated car prices as compared with domestic grain revenue. We find the cost for carrying commodities such as eggs, dressed poultry, cured meat, butter, cheese and so on. They are carried under very difficult circumstances. Yet in the case of eggs the revenue per car is $348; in the case of dressed poultry and dressed meat it is $350; cured meat, $382; butter, $320; cheese, $384; sheep, goats, cattle, hogs, $200; domestic grain, $540. In other words it costs more than twice as much to carry grain to the Pacific coast for the purpose of raising cattle and hogs than it does to send the animals themselves to the Pacific coast. That is something Mr. Speaker, that I consider is definitely wrong.

Earlier I indicated that I was opposed to the calling of an election on the premise the Leader of the Opposition indicated. While this is a particular problem that is prevalent in the province of British Columbia, and one which I am satisfied this government must examine into if they are going to keep the people of British Columbia happy and not discontented, at the same time it is not of such an extreme nature at this time, because the people in my province have not been stirred up to the degree that they feel that this government should be forced out of office after three years because they have not found a better solution to our rail problem in this country.

I would not agree that the government should permit an increase of 7 per cent in freight rates. I will not vote for such a thing. However, I am forced into the unhappy position where if I vote for the resolution I defeat my own purpose. As I said earlier, it is not in my opinion a motion of censure on the government, but is a motion of censure on democracy itself. I agree with democracy and believe in democracy; therefore as an individual I shall have to vote against the amendment.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, from listening to the young gentleman from British Columbia—and it was quite an interesting experience—I am not sure whether he realizes what he is here for. To hear him talk you would think that he was on the government benches. Judging from the remarks he has just made he does not realize that he is here for one purpose, namely as the representative of his people—a status he acquired the day after the election was over—in order to be the censor of this government and on all occasions to bring up everything necessary to throw not only this government but any government out of power after any length of time, whenever they deserve to be thrown out of power for mismanagement of the country's affairs.

He says the government are entitled, by virtue of their election, to a four-year term. Mr. Speaker, imagine a member of parliament saying that.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): He was trying to be fair. You could not understand that.

Mr. Ferguson: If I cannot, then nobody can. I am positive you could not enlighten anybody on anything yourself. We will hear you later and let you struggle and try to demonstrate your great ability to explain anything. At the end of it nobody will know anything. Thank you.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You are welcome.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, after that rude interruption I shall proceed. I shall endeavour to teach one of that gentleman's cohorts his position in parliament. His position in the opposition is to do everything in his power to enlighten the public. If he thinks the government is wrong, whether it has been in power for a week or for four years he has the right to call for an election. He should not sit back and say they have been elected for four years, because that is not so. A government is not elected for four years or four months—

An hon. Member: For five years.

Mr. Ferguson: —it is elected at the discretion of the public. The public will vote the government out if they see fit. The Leader of the Opposition has every right in the world, as has every man in this house, to call upon the Prime Minister, if he sees fit, to call an election. He may be wrong, but he has the right to say that the country has no confidence in this government and to ask the Prime Minister to adjourn the house and call an election; let the public decide. Now, the Prime Minister will decide whether or not that shall be done, but everybody in this house has a right to voice his opinion. This closure procedure has even reached the Social Crediters. They have even closed their own mouths for a period of four years.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): They were the ones who would let your member speak, when you would not; don't forget that.

Mr. Ferguson: I always like to let somebody speak who can speak. We have heard you speak twice during my brief—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was just trying to help you out.

Mr. Ferguson: —remarks. I have been here 12 years, and I did not need your help.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It is gratis.

Mr. Ferguson: Everything you get for nothing is not worth a cent, so we all know what it is worth. I wish that from now on you would refrain from speaking and let the public enjoy themselves. I would think we need an opportunity to consult the people on the serious questions confronting Canada today, and for these reasons. Never in its history has Canada enjoyed the prosperity it is enjoying today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ferguson: Look who gave it to you. Look who put the oil in the Alberta sand. Look who put the iron in the rocks of Quebec. As I said before, God had nothing to do with it; they did it all.

Now, we are enjoying the greatest prosperity we have ever had. The banks in Canada have been making more money. Last year was the greatest year in their history. Industry is busy. You cannot find labour. We have a country here that deserves a population now of 16 million, and if it were not for the lack of foresight of our forefathers, my own included, this country would have had 16 million people. This country would not be looking to a foreign country to defend it. We would not be making a loan of $119 million to a foreign country to build a pipe line across Canada if our forefathers had proceeded as they should have. I am talking about my own forefathers who sat in this house and the legislatures before this.

This government has about the same kind of vision. It should have a vision for the future. It is all very well to sit back and say we are enjoying great prosperity. Is that our yardstick, that we are enjoying prosperity? The yardstick of this country, based on the natural wealth we have discovered in the last 10 years, should have no limits. Immigration has been tossed around like a wet rag by every minister this government has had since 1945. It has been the sick dog that nobody wanted; give it to the other fellow. Each one has made a greater mess of it. Here we find ourselves in a great era of prosperity saying that we must charge the man who wants to build a home in Canada more interest. We must curtail these ambitious persons. On the one hand we talk about our progress and our wealth, the position Canada holds in this world, and on the other hand we are formulating the idea of burdening the home owner. That is one reason I say the government should not be in power today, but it is not the only reason.

Then we find a man who has borrowed money from coast to coast in this country. During the period of the loan he gets a very curt letter from his bank advising him that the bank is going to raise the interest rate. In the same note they give the reason for that, practically saying that it is on orders from your government. They are not going to live up to this contract; they are going to take a half of one per cent more on the loan that they agreed upon. They are going to put another burden on his shoulders during this great period of prosperity.

We are going to stop inflation. We are going to give the stockholders of the banks of Canada additional dividends. If they do not have the dividends they are going to have permission to buy up every vacant corner in Canada and build banks on them in order to squander the earnings forced upon them by this government. That is another reason why this government should not be in power.

There is too much control in the hands of the few banks in Canada. One bank has 600 or 700 branches across Canada. They write a letter to a young man who calls himself a bank manager in an area where we might discover oil or some other commodity in a year or two, and they limit his discretion. The manager may have knowledge of the integrity of the borrower, but they impose a rule of thumb by saying to the manager, "Your limit is $1,000." If he dares exceed it he loses his job, his pension and everything else. This does not enable a man to develop his brains. This is only a suggestion, but I would suggest that all banks in Canada should be made to have a director who resides within the province, in order that the director's nose would be close to where the money is needed. These banks are controlled from Montreal or Toronto.

A gentleman may live in Saskatchewan or Alberta because he believes that is the best place in which to live. He may go to the bank manager to borrow money but the bank manager will say, "No matter how much I feel you are worth, no matter how much I know from general observation that you will succeed, I can only lend you $500. I must send a letter down to head office to get you $625." It is a time for expansion in our great country. It is time a great country like Canada broke those shackles and went on with the prosperity that God gave us. Do not do like our forefathers did. There were many things we adopted from the old country that were great anchors and formed great foundations, and we should still remember them and use them for all they are worth, but we should develop some new ideas. This is a new country so far as development is concerned.

We should have an official in charge of immigration who is scheming and planning and successfully bringing immigrants of all classes and creeds into this country. We are short of labour in Canada today. We are lacking good competition owing to the shortage of labour. This country has been built largely on immigrants, the type who work. Surely when we are at the height of our prosperity that is not the time to tell the world we do not want them. We have missed the boat—

Mr. Byrne: That is why you just got back.

Mr. Ferguson: —on first class, selected people who have wanted to come here in the past 10 years. What is happening today? The people we wanted, the people we needed, are not permitted to leave their own countries because those countries are so busy. The present government had not faith enough to see or believe that this country would need manpower. Now we are curtailing construction. The brains that should be used in progress are now being used to curtail construction. Today the Minister of Finance spoke about 2½ per cent interest rates in New York and 3 per cent rates in Minnesota. What has Minnesota to do with the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. Harris: Because of the federal reserve bank. That is what I was talking about.

Mr. Ferguson: Let me say this to the Minister of Finance. The banks of Canada will not take and pay interest on millions of European dollars that want to come out here for investment purposes. That is the situation. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he can tell this house right now if any foreign bank or citizen wishes to deposit with or lend to any Canadian bank the sum of $2 million, will they pay 1½ per cent on that money? Can the minister answer that question?

Mr. Harris: I will not answer it now.

Mr. Ferguson: I know they will not, and I believe the minister knows they will not, but he is not quite sure and therefore he is quite right not to answer. I know they will not take a deposit of $1 million from a foreigner and pay him 1½ per cent interest. We are short of capital and foreigners want to invest in this country, but the banks will not pay interest on the money. The Bank of Canada should take that money and lend it to further justifiable projects.

That is the reason I call this government a gumbo government. May I say to those who do not know what it means that in the western provinces there is a soil that when you get into it you get mired and you cannot go anywhere. Progress stops. This government reminds me of a democrat and a pair of horses on the prairie out in the gumbo. They cannot get out and they cannot go any farther. They are gumboed by prosperity. Their great effort is to get out of the prosperity by increasing the interest rates, by decreasing the loans and by working in with the United States and charging a rate of interest equal to that charged in Montana. Montana is not Canada. Montana is not enjoying the prosperity of Canada. Montana has not the riches Canada has. There is no resemblance in the two pictures.

We are a nation on our own, and it is time we took the bit in our teeth and went forward. I am a Canadian who loves this country; I am a Canadian who wants my people to go forward. Whenever I hear of a discovery of natural resources I say, "This is my Canada". When I see shackles put on people in any way, shape or form, and on young people who are the future leaders in this country, I say this government has been in office long enough and I shall do everything within my power to see that it goes out as quickly as possible.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, in supporting the motion of the Leader of the Opposition that this government has lost the confidence of the people of Canada, I intend to show that this is particularly true in the maritime provinces. The New Brunswick election of June 18 has come and gone, and a great many things will be read into the sweeping Conservative victory of that day. I suppose some will say it was the personality of the premier and the other candidates. Others may say it was organization.

Mr. Byrne: No; it was Tom Bell.

Mr. Bell: The hon. member for Charlotte has certainly an awful lot of nerve to make any reference at all to the New Brunswick election after what he said.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Charlotte said not a word.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Don't blow your top. I did not say a word.

Mr. Bell: All I can say to the Minister of Public Works is that he may get his own due in Nova Scotia some time this year or next spring. I do apologize to the hon. member for Charlotte, because I know he would be much wiser than to say anything.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): On a question of privilege; it is not that I would be much wiser not to say anything. The fact is, I did not say anything. I shall have something to say later.

Mr. Bell: Will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Before allowing the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) to resume his speech, it has been brought to my attention that this afternoon while participating in this debate the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) made some reference to myself when I was away from the chair. I asked for the transcript of Hansard, and I find that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said this:

> I want to say that you, Mr. Speaker—
> Referring to the Deputy Speaker.
> —were in the chair and the Speaker—
> Referring to myself.
> —also occupied the chair during part of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and while I am glad the Leader of the Opposition was able to place on record the editorials to which he referred, I say that in placing those editorials before the house and putting them on the record the rules of the house were clearly violated and neither you nor Mr. Speaker—
> Talking about myself.
> —dared to rise and interrupt the Leader of the Opposition and call him to order.

I notice that just prior to that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, while the Leader of the Opposition was speaking and was quoting from the printed Journals of the Senate, asked:

> What time did the Senate adjourn?

I did not hear that interjection by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, which occurred much prior to the time the Leader of the Opposition began quoting from editorials, the first quotation being from an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star; therefore, not being in the house, how could I have attended to a violation of the rule and how could I have not dared to rise and interrupt the Leader of the Opposition and call him to order? I should just like to clarify the record in this respect.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, before supper I did not do very well—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell: —in my reference to an interruption. I confused the Lunenburg twang of the Minister of Public Works and the American-influenced drawl of the hon. member for Charlotte with a well-known interrupter from the western provinces, and I wish to apologize for referring to them in that regard.

As I was saying, however, the New Brunswick election was perhaps not a great surprise but it did show the feeling we have in New Brunswick toward the interest of the present federal government. No individual, with the possible exception of the premier, had a great bearing or influence on the results, and I think there was a noticeable trend as the election approached toward the attention or lack of attention we get in New Brunswick and the maritimes generally from the federal government.

If an election were called, Mr. Speaker, as is suggested by the Leader of the Opposition in his motion, I say that New Brunswick, and I think the other maritime provinces, would vote against this government and its so-called policies. It is not so much the discrimination and the lack of attention, perhaps, as the runaround we get with our proposals. Then afterwards comes the old salt in our wounds treatment, and it is rubbed into us as we go along trying to catch the elusive bait. It is somewhat like losing a deposit at election time when you know you did not have a chance anyway.

There is some history to this and I could go back over quite a few years, but the point I have in mind is illustrated very nicely by a statement made by the Prime Minister recently to the labour convention at Toronto. I was at this convention sitting there listening to his remarks on labour, and all of a sudden out of the blue came a reference by the Prime Minister to the maritime economic situation. I do not have the exact report, but the press quotes the Prime Minister as using these words:

> . . . economic redevelopment of the Atlantic provinces deserves consideration.

That was the first reference; later on the Prime Minister said:

> . . . special measures should perhaps be taken to improve the economy of the Atlantic provinces. This merits and is receiving attention from many of us. However, the initiative and the ideas, the energies and the determination to accomplish this redevelopment cannot originate in other parts of Canada; they must come from the Atlantic area.

The first part, where the Prime Minister recognizes the fact that we do need consideration in our economic development, is appreciated. We marvel at the innocent candor of it; we marvel at the fact that the Prime Minister is so late in recognizing this need; we wonder where his advice has been. We appreciate that these are the words of the Prime Minister, and the intention must be taken for granted. The respect the Prime Minister held at that time was possibly a little different from what it is now, but I have no quarrel with the thought behind those words.

The second part of the statement does give me some difficulty. First of all there is the fact that the Prime Minister suggests that we do not have and have not shown the initiative and energy in the past; that is confusing to me, and I could not let that part of his statement go unchallenged. There is also the fact that all the initiative must come from the maritimes rather than Ottawa itself showing some interest; that is another part of his statement the tone and inference of which I do not like. There is the further implication in his words that we must again come to Ottawa, when we decide what we have in mind, with our hat in hand. I do not like that principle, Mr. Speaker.

When the proposal was made and when we heard about it in the maritimes, there was generally a good response to it and it was a non-political response; I want that on the record. The premiers of all the provinces have shown a willingness to get together to see what can be done. They take this as a good omen for the future. The various boards of trade, the maritime transportation commission and A.P.E.C., the new Atlantic provinces economic council, have all increased their own interest as well. Even the few Liberals who are left in the opposition in New Brunswick have shown an interest in this and have gone on record as supporting it. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the latter part of the Prime Minister's words go unchallenged when he suggests that energies and initiative have been lacking in the past, and that we must come again with our hat in hand to Ottawa.

I ask the house tonight, Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister not heard of our efforts in the past with respect to various phases of federal aid? Has the Prime Minister not heard of Passamaquoddy, that project between New Brunswick and the United States that harnesses the tides which would give us power, the dream of the fabulous Dexter Cooper of the 1920's? The United States government have not followed along as well as they should, but they are moving on it. Canada now is forced to take part at least in investigations of that project.

Has the Prime Minister not heard of the Chignecto canal project, that shortcut between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that would mean so much to coastwise trade, that project that has been talked about since the late nineteenth century?

Has the Prime Minister not heard of our efforts to obtain atomic power plants in the maritimes? Nova Scotia, hard up as it is for power, approached the federal government very early in the proceedings with a request that it be given first consideration for an atomic plant there. New Brunswick is on the list, too, but what happened? It went to Ontario again. We are still on the list.

How about the dominion-provincial conference? Does the Prime Minister not remember the proposals we made there? Nova Scotia and New Brunswick again were in substantial agreement on the fiscal need factor. They asked only that the income of the maritimes be brought up to 85 per cent of the national average. Surely that is not too much to ask. That was another proposal about which it would appear the Prime Minister did not hear.

How about the coal industry and the efforts that have been made by Nova Scotia to obtain some help there? How about the request that we have made so many times for protection, for the protected industries to use Canadian ports instead of New York and other United States ports? How about the request we made for consideration for defence industry? Has the Prime Minister not heard of those proposals? Does he suggest, in his words to the labour convention at Toronto, that we did not make efforts during the war and afterward to obtain some defence industry?

Then, of course, there are the various appeals that have been made by the members from the maritimes over the years. I think those words are almost an insult to the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), 21 years here, speaking time and time again of the various needs. Yet it would appear that the Prime Minister had never heard of any of them, when he said at the Toronto convention that the initiative and energy must come from ourselves.

Then, of course, there is the final red herring and the final smokescreen with regard to the request of the New Brunswick government to obtain much-needed financial assistance for its power development. I refer specifically to the Beechwood project. I am going to take a minute to dwell on this, to show the way this government has confused and misled everybody with respect to this. We came up here in 1952 or thereabouts with this Beechwood proposal. True, we may not have been definite at that time. It was impossible to be definite about some of the various financial requirements that we might have, but it was an unpartisan approach. We gave credit to the old Liberal government in the province, which made some of the initial investigation.

We came here, we thought we saw the right people and we did the best we could. The thing has gone on and on. It reminds me of a fisherman who has a baited hook. Just as we get up to it, it is pulled a little further away and we lose sight of it. Then of course, the bait has been changed on the hook, and there have been different fishermen. I come to three statements that I think are pertinent and show the confusion that exists. They show the way the maritimes are misled and mixed up in these matters. We came up here with this Beechwood project, a project that is similar to the seaway and the pipe line. We have been all through that. This is the treatment we got. There were no efforts made in the house by the responsible ministers from New Brunswick or from the other parts of the maritimes on the treasury benches. The first we heard about it was in a radio broadcast made some two years ago by the Minister of Labour, and this is what he said about our request.

> Labour Minister Gregg told New Brunswick by radio Sunday the federal government can't help the province finance the Beechwood hydroelectric project on the St. John river.
> He said in his report from Parliament Hill that since confederation such matters have been reserved to the provinces.

There is the first reference. The Minister of Labour, our representative from New Brunswick in the federal cabinet, fell back on constitutional grounds.

The next reference that is important came on January 26 this year, when the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), asked a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage). I shall not go into the question, but it dealt with the possibility of obtaining co-operation, and particularly financial co-operation, in the development of the Saint John river. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources at that time fell back on the fact that we had not made a substantial request. I have the latest request here, and it certainly seems definite to me. That was another red herring and another act of confusion.

The final outrage in the whole treatment by the cabinet of this serious request of ours, which meant so much for our future, was given by the Prime Minister on May 8 in answer to a question by the hon. member for Royal. The Prime Minister at that time—I do not know whether it was through ignorance or in a deliberate attempt to confuse the issue again—referred to the fact that a loan had been undertaken. There has not been any loan undertaken by anybody, as far as I can find out, in connection with Beechwood. Then the discussion went on with respect to the loan for the Beechwood project. The Beechwood project has not been financed; the provincial government have gone ahead with it but they are meeting the cost from year to year out of their ordinary capital commitments.

I say that because I think it shows the confusion this government has always attempted to convey in connection with any legitimate requests of the maritime provinces. I mention this seriously because I feel that it is the reason there is such growing unrest in the maritimes against the policies of this government.

All the time the ministers were making these statements, the deputy minister of finance, in open letters to the government, was suggesting that it was economically feasible that Beechwood be proceeded with. Then the other part of the government which deals with such matters, the joint commission headed by General McNaughton, had this to say. In the committee on external affairs last year General McNaughton said that, as an individual, he saw no reason why Ottawa should not help New Brunswick in obtaining power. He said:

> After all, what have we got confederation for?

These are the reasons why, if an election were held tomorrow, the people of New Brunswick would show their indignation. Then I have another quotation from General McNaughton yesterday:

> The rapid construction of Beechwood following the recommendation of the international joint commission was a courageous act.

He gives us credit. A servant of the crown gives us credit for going ahead and attempting this development on our own. I suggest that this new statement the Prime Minister has made is another smokescreen and another red herring. We are taking advantage of it because we do not want to be accused of missing anything. I hope there is sincerity and good intention behind it, but I say to all the members in attendance this evening that if this house were dissolved tomorrow and an election held, the province of New Brunswick would vote 100 per cent against this government and the lack of attention they have given to our proposals. I would be willing to wager that the other maritime provinces would vote substantially the same way.

An hon. Member: Put up your money.

Mr. Bell: What is the reason behind this, Mr. Speaker? There is only one reason. The government has failed to recognize that Canada's resources should be developed by Canadians in every part of Canada. That is the crux of the whole complaint. There is a serious undertone in the air in the maritimes today. It is the reason Premier Hugh John Flemming was returned in the New Brunswick provincial election last week. He recognizes the principle that this government does not appreciate for one minute. That principle concerns the development of the resources of our province. The federal government does not appreciate that it should assist in such development in every part of this country.

The principle was established when we assisted jointly with the trans-Canada pipe line. It was also enunciated in the same degree when we went along with federal assistance to the St. Lawrence seaway. We have come forward now with our request, and it bears repeating and repeating because some people here cannot seem to understand what we want and they seem to throw up roadblocks and smokescreens. We want the same consideration in our part of the country that these other sections of the country are now receiving. I say that has not been given to us.

I go along with the motion of the Leader of the Opposition that the house should be dissolved so the people can voice their indignation against such sectional, discriminatory policies. This is the same old Liberalism to me. I do not care if it is Liberalism in New Brunswick or Liberalism across Canada. It is that Liberalism that thrives on sectionalism, on playing one part of the country against the other. We saw it in the election in New Brunswick. They pitted Saint John against Fredericton, one end of the country against the other, and when they attempt to do it in Canada by assisting in developing one part and not developing others it has the same old smell to me.

Finally, I say the government are on the wrong track. They refuse to recognize that this is a great country. We have a great future, and we have to go along with it. If the maritimes only want 85 per cent of the national average income I say they should get it, and we are going to voice our opinions this fall if this motion does not go through.

Mr. Speaker: I feel I must say a few words. The Leader of the Opposition made a speech this afternoon, part of which I listened to and the other part of which I have read. He spoke about Senate reform. He spoke about proceedings in the Senate and proceedings in this house, and concluded with a motion which reads as follows:

> In the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible.

I have listened reverently to the speech just made by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. He spoke of several projects which are of great interest to his native province and to the maritime provinces generally. I did not hear him say anything about the main subject which led to the motion that was moved as a grievance. I heard him refer to the Beechwood project, which I think was one of the hydroelectric projects included in a grievance motion earlier this session together with other similar projects, and therefore a matter which had already been discussed. But I will grant him this, that there might have been some new facts come to light since and therefore it might have been worth while airing them. But I am in the same position as I was in 1955. I see that citation 467 says:

> Whenever an order of the day has been read for the house to resolve itself into the committee of supply or the committee of ways and means, the motion "That the Speaker do now leave the chair" must be proposed, except on Thursday and Friday as provided by standing order 28.

That part has been changed by a new standing order. Anyway, I continue:

> When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance, and it is not necessary to move an amendment for that purpose; provided that the discussion and the amendment, if one is moved, shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

Then citation 468 reads:

> It sometimes happens, on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for committee of supply, that members air grievances without moving amendments. A member may speak on railway rates, another on naturalization, and so on. Five or six different matters may then be brought to the government's attention. But no member is allowed to speak more than once on the motion. He cannot discuss all the matters which may then come up, and when he has spoken on one of them he has exhausted his right to speak to the motion before the house, namely, "That the Speaker do now leave the chair".

It appears to me that if we are to follow the subjects that have been introduced so far during the debate, which is supposed to be one on a specific grievance, we can speak about Senate reform, we can speak about proceedings in this house and the proceedings in the Senate on the pipe-line bill, we can speak on all the projects which are of interest to the maritime provinces, as outlined by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, and there may have been other hon. members who have spoken and discussed other matters but whom I did not have the chance to listen to because I was absent from the chair from 3.30 until six o'clock.

Hon. members will remember that in 1955 the hon. member for Prince Albert made a speech on wheat and concluded with a motion having to do with the South Saskatchewan river dam. Members were puzzled. They did not know what they were going to speak about, whether they could speak on the South Saskatchewan river dam or on wheat or on both subjects at the same time. An arrangement was reached at that time whereby we would deal with the river dam project and later with wheat. That discussion of order, as it took place, appears at pages 3790 and 3791 of Hansard of May 16, 1955.

I expressed the view at that time that we should not get into another budget debate. I realize that this is the fifth supply motion and that there is just one left. Supply motions are opposition motions; they are want of confidence motions. There is no doubt in my mind that this amendment, as it is brought forward at the moment and as it is being interpreted by those who have taken part in the debate, does take in too much territory. In other words, during the rest of today and tomorrow we can have on this motion a miniature budget debate, and all this for the purpose of calling an election.

There is another point I want to warn the house against, and it is the terms of the motion itself. Should this motion carry the house would resolve that in the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible. I do not make this a major point, but I submit it to hon. members.

There are certain prerogatives attached to the office of the Prime Minister, and one of those is to advise that parliament be dissolved and a general election be called. According to the citations I have just read, is this matter, that is the exercise of the prerogative of the Prime Minister, one which comes within the jurisdiction of the house or is it one which comes within the category of affairs within the administration of the government?

I have made these observations not for the purpose of ruling the amendment out of order and not for the purpose of curtailing the discussion, but merely to warn that in the future if a similar motion were to be made under similar circumstances, with a speech of a certain type leading to the motion and other members speaking on many other subject matters; if it should come up again I may be in a position to deal with it. I hope that in the meantime I shall have had a chance to study the situation as it is presented and perhaps make a ruling.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while the last speaker was addressing the house I was of course reminded of the fact that both he and I are interested in certain parts of the country where there have been elections recently.

An hon. Member: Not with the same result.

Mr. Gardiner: While he had the privilege of assisting a government back into office, I had the opportunity to try to put one out, but was not successful.

An hon. Member: That is putting it mildly.

Mr. Gardiner: I took a considerable part in that campaign and was pleased to find, when I got back, that one of the important duties I performed while there brought forth quite an editorial in the local Conservative paper. I may say to begin with that the editor of the local paper is a personal friend of mine, in spite of the fact that we do not belong to the same political party.

He took the trouble to point out that I had been putting up bills. After all, putting up bills is an important part of a campaign, as a rule; and I must admit that I spent part of my time in putting up bills. But I had another matter in mind rather than just the matter of putting up bills. In the days when I came into politics first we had only two parties in Canada. When we put up bills our opposition left them up and when our opposition put up bills, we left them up. But in recent years we have had the experience that when we put up bills, they seemed to disappear; and I had the idea that maybe somebody took them down. Hence when I was out there in the campaign this time I took some equipment along with me and I put up a few bills myself. Then I drove around again the day after the election and I found that they were still all up.

I do not know whether or not it was some C.C.F. friend who reported back to Ottawa that I was out putting up bills and who might have been following me around, but I simply want to say that I am in doubt now as to whether the wind took the bills down in the past or whether somebody pulled them down. Those I put up—and I put them up in the proper way—stayed up. In that particular part of the country no C.C.F.'er was elected, so the bills might have had some effect.

The resolution before the house at the present time suggests that this government should go to the country. The motion of the Leader of the Opposition was as follows:

> I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Diefenbaker: "That all the words after 'That' to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> in the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible."

Your last remarks, Mr. Speaker, remind me of the fact that our system of government sets up a method under which elections must be called. The fact is that the only one who can form a government is an individual in the house who can command a majority of the membership of the house. It does not make any difference whether they are elected as Conservatives, C.C.F.'ers, Social Crediters, Liberals or what. If there is any individual in the house who can command a majority he is entitled to form a government, and he does so.

At the present time an appeal is made—and one was made the other day—to the Prime Minister to call an election. Surely there is not anyone in this house who contends that there is any other person in the house who can command a majority except the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Go to the people and find out.

Mr. Gardiner: Judging by what has happened in the past I think he would have good reason for believing that there is not much likelihood of an election bringing about any different result, namely that after the election the present Prime Minister would be the only one who could form a government.

An hon. Member: Wishful thinking.

Mr. Gardiner: Hence nothing much is going to be gained by yielding to the suggestion that we have an election.

The motion is based upon some remarks which were made by the Leader of the Opposition. He referred to a debate which had taken place in this house, but I think he lived within the rules in not quoting the debate and not trying to say what had been said during the debate. Probably that was just as well from his point of view, because in the period that I was here while that discussion was taking place I do not remember that anyone on the other side of the house said much about the pipe-line bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Some of my hon. friends are beginning to look up their notes. If they said anything about the pipe-line bill, it was only for the purpose of hanging on it a point of order or something else in order to get a vote.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Gardiner: That is one reason that is referred to as giving background for the calling of an election. The other is the possibility that something might have happened over in the Senate that gives some reason for discussion.

An hon. Member: Something will happen over there.

Mr. Gardiner: Let us see just what happened.

An hon. Member: Nothing has happened there in years.

Mr. Gardiner: Here is one thing that happened in the Senate:

> If the house is not agreeable to third reading now, I suggest that we meet tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock. I do not want the charge to be laid against this house that the bill was forced through in one day. That just is not done.

Those are the words of the leader of the opposition in the Senate.

Mr. Fulton: They forced it through in two days.

Mr. Gardiner: Then he went on to say this:

> With the consent of the house may I say a word before we adjourn? I wish to thank the leader of the government for the splendid way in which he has conducted this committee of the whole. It has been a very great pleasure to all of us.

Apparently the leader of the opposition in the Senate does not agree with the Leader of the Opposition in this house. He maintains that the discussions were what was expected in the Senate, and he thanks the leader of the government in the Senate for having so conducted those discussions. I venture to say that the leader of the opposition in the other place is not so much concerned about an election as is the Leader of the Opposition in this house.

This afternoon we listened to an outline of the democratic system as we enjoy it in this country, and the opinion was expressed by the Leader of the Opposition and by some others who have spoken that the conduct of the house during a certain period was not such as to inspire confidence in our system in the minds of people in Canada or outside of Canada.

In making these statements the Leader of the Opposition referred continuously to the subservient members of that part of the parliament of Canada, subservient to the members of this house, subservient to the members of the government. I submit, Mr. Speaker, if there is any term that should not be applied to the members of the Senate, it would be that term. I am inclined to think that during most of the discussion on the point, what we have considered to be the rule laid down with regard to mention of what goes on in the other place, although it is not a hard and fast rule, has been lived up to by members in this house and members in other houses where you have a secondary chamber. They do not make references to individuals or to the house as a whole such as were made here this afternoon. I wish to take some objection to those remarks having been made.

Our democratic system, as everyone in this house knows, is based upon the experiences they have had in the centre of the empire, in Britain. Those experiences run over a long term of years. The statement is made that our system of government is built up from precedent to precedent, and that is true. Practically everything which takes place in this house or in the parliament of the United Kingdom has also taken place at some previous time, and whatever is proper to do now has been established as a precedent. We go on doing things in accordance with those precedents.

So we have here the Commons and the Senate, and in the Commons we introduce legislation. Sometimes we introduce it in the Senate, but in this particular case it was introduced in this house. During the discussion members have been raising some objection to the fact that in the debate on the pipe-line bill the opposition took one point of view and the government party took another. This is the common thing in a house constituted as this is. On this occasion, of course, two of the opposition parties opposed the action taken by the government and one party agreed. The Prime Minister, therefore, in this particular action had more support than he has on ordinary questions that come before this house. On other occasions he has only had the support of the members of the Liberal party. He can only rest assured that he is going to have that support in the future.

Before the hon. member for New Westminster spoke on behalf of the Social Credit group just before dinner with regard to the matter there were very few, if any, on this side of the house who knew just how the Social Credit group might vote on this particular question. In other words, while they have supported this side of the house on the bill itself there was no particular reason why, on a motion of want of confidence in the government, they should be bound to support the government now. But at least one member of that party has indicated here that he intends to do so. He is not going to support the motion that this parliament be brought to a close and an election held. I presume there will be others who will do the same. I repeat, therefore, there is no indication in this house that the Prime Minister cannot control a majority of the house in connection with this or any of the other questions that may come before the house in the immediate future.

The opposition has stated time after time in this debate that the rules are made to protect the opposition. Well, that may be correct; and I will agree that they need some protection, Mr. Speaker. The rules may be made to protect the opposition. I think, as a matter of fact, they are made to protect all the members of the house.

Mr. Ellis: They are broken to protect the government.

Mr. Gardiner: It would require a very peculiar kind of rule to protect the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis). He just rushes in where angels fear to tread. Nevertheless he has a right to do whatever he feels like doing in the house, I suppose, as long as he stays within the rules. The rules of this house are simply based upon common sense. One does not need to study the rule book too much to know whether he is in order or out of order.

There are one or two members on this side of the house who may take offence at what I am going to say. I have sometimes thought if Cecil Rhodes had his life to live over again he would not send Rhodes scholars over to Oxford. One of the reasons I have come to that conclusion is that in watching the actions of certain members of this house I have noticed that the more time they have spent in a university the more difficulty we have in understanding just why they do certain things. As a matter of fact the only fellow who has done this, and whom I can really understand, is my friend the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor). He was in college when I started, and he was still there when I came out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: However, that was not because he was not passing his examinations but because he went through an arts course and then went through a course in theology. He was there just twice as long as I was because he went through that particular course.

I see my friend on the other side of the house who has done a similar thing, and I see another gentleman sitting across the aisle from him who was a Rhodes scholar. I am reminded that both of them spent most of the early part of their lives studying the rules in mock parliaments in a university somewhere, and they have been applying that idea to the running of this house during this session. You know, when we used to have mock parliaments in university—it does not make any difference where it was—our chief objective was to learn the rules. There was not anything else we could do anyway. We could not pass any laws that had any effect upon anybody, so we made a study of the rules by moving this and moving that, moving points of order and keeping everybody het up over something.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): You had closure, then, I suppose.

Mr. Gardiner: We had a demonstration of that in this house during this session. It was nothing more than that. I must say that I did not stay for all of it, but I did stay for half of it. During the time I was here I did make a speech on the bill, and I am sure none of my friends opposite read it because they were not interested in the bill at all. They were only interested in these points of order that they could bring up in order to take up all the time.

Someone says that public opinion was such and such as a result of this. Well, not being here but being out in the country I had a better opportunity of learning what public opinion was on the question. I had occasion to talk to people from time to time and learn what they were really thinking. You know, when I did discuss these matters with people from time to time I found they did not hold the same opinion as the hon. member who just sat down thinks they hold. I must say that out in the country where I was they did not vote for the government party either.

I do believe, though, there is a considerable number of people in Canada who believe that the old tradition, which is historical in this country, still lives. This old historical tradition is that it is easier for a provincial government to get elected when the federal government is on the other side of the fence. I think that is true, and has been true over the years. Probably our friends who are suggesting that because certain things happened over the country in connection with these provincial elections, that indicates some reason why the situation which exists is still going to exist when we have another federal election.

I am quite sure that is not the case. My hon. friends would be well advised not to build up their hopes too much, because an election will roll around soon enough. I am quite sure it will come a few months earlier than they expect it, and a few months earlier than is good for them when it does come.

We have had these men asking the government to resign, and my friends keep shouting "closure". What is the situation with regard to rules? There was a considerable time in different parts of the world when they copied the British form of government, whether it was within the commonwealth or outside of it, and tried to carry on in the same manner as they did in Britain. In all these countries they had rules, and those rules were made, as has been said, to protect the interests of the opposition. But in all those countries they eventually found that the tendency to take advantage of situations which might develop is not confined to government parties. It can be just as prevalent among opposition parties, and so other rules had to be added.

When people on the other side of the house talk about the rules having been used for certain purposes, they lose sight of the fact that such procedure as that was followed by practically every country where there is a democratic government. Some procedure of closure on debate is in force in most of the legislative bodies of the world, notably in Great Britain, Italy, France, Germany, The Netherlands, Portugal, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Switzerland and in the United States House of Representatives.

Now, this is a pretty complete list of the nations that have democratic governments and all of them have found it necessary to have a closure rule. Why have they found it necessary to have a closure rule? They found it necessary to have a closure rule because eventually, sooner or later, chaps like those on the other side of the house who are yapping all the time get into the house, and when they do they think it is their special privilege to hold up the proceedings of the house. They say, "If we can just hold it up long enough then we will be able to drive the government to the country and have an election. There are such a few of us here anyway that we cannot hope to be any worse off than we are now." When you get people of that kind in a house you cannot have government in this country, or in any other country, if it is not made possible for the majority who were elected in a previous election to carry on within the legal term as long as the Prime Minister has the support of the majority within the house.

Every speaker on the other side of the house who has been on his feet today, with the exception of my hon. friend from New Westminster, has referred to the Prime Minister as having gone through some rather difficult times recently. Well, may I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no one in this house who knows better when to speak and when not to speak than the Prime Minister. When a lot of people are falling over themselves in an effort to say nasty things about the Prime Minister he knows that the public in this country know him better than they do. He is able to sit here in his seat and listen to their twaddle no matter whether it means anything or not, when they are trying simply to use up the time of the house, as they did on the occasions referred to. I do know what happened in this house while I was here, anyway, and I understand it was worse after I left. While I was here the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose in his place and outlined all the facts in relation to this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Of course my hon. friends do not know, because they did not listen to him; and they will not know when I am through, because they are not listening, either. When they go back to the country the people will know that they do not know what they are talking about. But, anyway, the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave a full outline of the bill, what it meant and what was going to be brought before this house on second reading. Three days later I myself had the privilege of speaking, and if you read that speech you will know far more about the pipe line than you know now. After that a considerable number of the members on our side of the house made speeches in which they discussed the bill, but others did not seem to be interested in those discussions, and they went on discussing something else. Many other Liberals spoke on the bill.

Finally we got into committee, and it was realized that it was necessary to put through the different sections of the bill one after another and then bring the whole matter before the committee.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): What about the first three clauses?

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friends on the other side of the house thought they could block it, that they could make it absolutely impossible for this house to do anything. If they did that long enough they would do one of two things; they would either kill the bill that everybody in this country wanted or they would drive this government to the country. That was the objective and, of course, the reason for that was suggested here this afternoon two or three times. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned it. He said, "We drew blood last summer when the Minister of Trade and Commerce brought his bill down and then went away from the house for a time."

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Fishing.

Mr. Gardiner: "We carried on a campaign and with such effect that we were able to force certain things to be done."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gardiner: When you give an opposition of the kind we have here a taste of blood of that kind they are just like a pack of wolves, they are back for another taste of blood, and that is what they have been doing during the last while. They keep on saying, "What we did once we can do again". That is the reason there is a closure rule in all these parliaments of importance around the world; that is the reason there is a closure rule here. The fact that it has been applied only on a few occasions does not indicate that this house has always been of the same type that we have here at the present time; it indicates that it has been the very opposite. It has been used on only four occasions before. It has had to be used on the fourth occasion this year. Three of the four times the Conservatives used it. They brought it in the first place as a government in self-protection against the kind of thing my friends are talking about.

Mr. Dufresne: After a long discussion.

Mr. Gardiner: After a long discussion, yes, but not any longer discussion than we had during this session.

Mr. Dufresne: We never had any.

Mr. Gardiner: Just wait. My hon. friend chipped in once in connection with butter and took some of it out of Hansard.

Mr. Dufresne: You did.

Mr. Gardiner: Later I was accused—

Mr. Dufresne: You did.

Mr. Gardiner: You did, too. Do not make any mistake about it. I read Hansard before you took it out.

Mr. Dufresne: I did not. Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I absolutely deny what has just been said by the Minister of Agriculture. There was only one member in this house who had the nerve to take out of Hansard what he said, and that was the minister himself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. The hon. member has denied it and we must accept his denial, but that is as far as he is entitled to go on a question of privilege.

Mr. Gardiner: I must repeat that I read Hansard before and corrected my own speech, and I know he corrected his.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another question of privilege, and I ask one privilege from the Chair. I ask that the Minister of Agriculture withdraw exactly what he has said because I never tried—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order.

Mr. Dufresne: I never tried—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I rose myself on the question of privilege which affects the house as well as the hon. member. The hon. member for Quebec West has made a definite statement as to what he did or did not do. The house and the members of the house must, by the rules, accept that statement. I have not the citation before me, but it is well known that an hon. member speaking of his own personal actions, as known to himself, must have his word accepted by the house.

Mr. Dufresne: Does that stop the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Nicholson: On the question of privilege, the Minister of Agriculture must accept the statement made by the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I have made it perfectly clear, I hope to the Minister of Agriculture and to the house, that the statement made by the hon. member for Quebec West must be accepted by the house. I do not think it is necessary to pursue the matter further.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, you just said that the minister has to accept what I have said. I have spoken the truth and I want to repeat that I have never gone and made any change in Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order.

Mr. Dufresne: Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, the minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order, please. I think the hon. member is perhaps now going further than he should. The Minister of Agriculture made a statement—

Mr. Ellis: And he repeated it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite):— about the hon. member for Quebec West which the hon. member for Quebec West rose on a question of privilege to deny. The Minister of Agriculture indicated that he had not accepted that denial and I rose before the hon. member for Quebec West to tell the Minister of Agriculture and the house that he must accept it; and that, I submit to the house, settles the question. There was a statement made by the hon. member for Quebec West as to his own actions, which must be accepted by the hon. members of this house.

Mr. Dufresne: And withdrawn.

Mr. Gardiner: I accept the statement made by the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dufresne: And you withdraw.

An hon. Member: That is enough.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not withdrawing; I shall be back with it later, at some other time.

Mr. Dufresne: I am ready to come back any time you are; any time you feel like it.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure no hon. member should make that sort of correction, and the minister must withdraw the statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. Let me tell the hon. member who just interrupted, or who just raised this last point, that I stated that the minister must accept the statement made by the hon. member concerned. The minister has risen and said he has accepted it, and the question is closed.

Mr. Dufresne: He said he was going to come back with it.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the matter I was dealing with was the fact that we had closure and the reasons we needed it, and I am very glad to have the demonstration of the need for it that we have just had.

The members of the government, of course, are responsible for bringing down legislation. They are responsible for bringing in the votes that are necessary in order to finance the operations of this country, and if a few members of the opposition have conceived the idea they can absolutely prevent that from going through they have ruined every vestige of the fundamental principle that underlies our democratic system of government, namely the right of the majority to rule.

There has to be some one form of government in any country. Under the old form of government we had absolute monarchs. Under the democratic system the majority of those in the house have the right to form a government and see to it that it stays there as long as the law of the country makes it possible for it to stay. In this country that is five years during which they can stay if they can command a majority. The one individual who has the right to announce that decision either before the house or to the country is the Prime Minister himself, concerning whether or not he can command a majority, unless there is a vote called in this house as there is now.

If my hon. friends can command a majority on this vote when it is taken, as it will be under the rules tomorrow night, of course they can have an election; but if the Prime Minister can command a majority in this house then, of course, they cannot have an election and we will go on until such time as the Prime Minister says he thinks we should dissolve and go to the country.

That is our system of government, and if you are going to make that system of government operate in a manner that gets money voted for the carrying on of the activities of government in this country, and if you are going to be able to carry on in a way that enacts the laws that have to be enacted, then the government must have some authority within the rules of the house in order to take care of a situation such as that which developed here a few weeks ago in connection with the pipe-line debate.

I am quite sure my hon. friends—if and when they ever get on this side of the house—will take exactly the position I am taking now. It is the only means by which you can set up a government as was suggested by my hon. friend from New Westminster. This is the only way by which we can maintain a government in power to do the things the people ask the government to do.

Well, there was some laughing done and some comments were made by the members of the opposition with regard to the remarks which were contained in the speech of the member for New Westminster. That speech was sound in every sense. The only thing that was not stated by the hon. member—and though I do not believe he stated it I am sure he had it in his mind—was that that is a matter which rests with the Prime Minister during whatever time he can command a majority in this house; and that is the position we are in today.

If we are sitting here passing resolutions or attempting to pass resolutions based upon some things that happened in carrying out the obligation which the government had to carry out in order to put through legislation, we are simply begging the question and not getting anywhere so far as discussion is concerned.

Coming back to the matter of closure, the rule of closure is absolutely fair in every way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, my hon. friends will think differently if they are ever over here. Every government that has been here since 1913 thought so, and the only time the Liberals ever used it before was when we were sitting here with a majority of only one or two and we had to use it in order to get certain measures put through under those circumstances.

An hon. Member: You did a good job this time.

Mr. Gardiner: Others have used it under quite different circumstances, and I am not criticizing them for doing so. The words of Sir Richard Cartwright have been quoted here from statements he made when he was in the government of Canada a long time ago; and because he represented the part of Ontario I come from I have some respect for his opinions. There were also quotations from statements made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he was opposed to the bringing in of closure and putting it on the statute books. I am sure if my hon. friends had been sitting on the opposition side of the house they would have put up the same kind of argument; but why not quote Sir Robert Borden who brought it in? Why not quote the others who used it as well?

An hon. Member: Not the way you used it.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not going to attempt to explain the actions of the Liberals during that time, or admit they were the same as those of my hon. friends now, but the Liberals have had to take all the blame because the only opposition in the house at that time was a Liberal opposition and any opposition that was raised was raised by the Liberal party.

Returning to the most recent use of closure, there had to be four motions of closure made in connection with this bill. When each one was made, no matter whether there had been little discussion or a great deal of discussion—

Mr. Dufresne: There was none.

Mr. Gardiner: —the house had two days in which to discuss that particular matter on each motion of closure, and in addition to that they had three hours added on to the last day, more hours than they had at any other time. Therefore when closure was moved all anyone had to do was discuss the pipe-line bill for two days from every point of view, and then the vote would take place at the end of those two days. After they got through with that they could start all over again and cause some obstruction if they wanted to, which they probably did. When the next motion was raised they had another two days in which to discuss the pipe-line bill, but they refused to discuss the pipe-line bill.

Returning to my suggestion that we have had too much of a mock parliament here, I might point out that someone was spending his time figuring ways and means of holding up the passing of this bill until such time as it would be of no value to this country. They kept on with that and wasted the first four hours; then there was another motion made for closure and the third motion gave them another two days in which to discuss the bill—

Mr. Ellis: Who wasted five years?

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend wasted a lot of it, I might say. As I was saying, they did not discuss the bill at all. Instead, they discussed points of order, and every time a point of order was moved in committee the chairman could not put the point of order to the committee, he had to step out of the chair—

An hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Gardiner: There is no time limit to this.

An hon. Member: Closure again, eh?

Mr. Gardiner: The chairman had to step out of the chair and move over in front of the Speaker and read to him the motion that had been made by some member of the committee, after which he called the Speaker to the chair. The Speaker then put the motion and enough members got up on the other side of the house to call a vote, and when the bell rang nearly all the members on the other side of the house walked out. When they walked out I do not know where they went, but when they came back they were quite talkative, and they continued to talk a lot here. That may only mean that they just went and had a consultation and had more to talk about. I do not put any other interpretation on it.

Mr. Nicholson: On a question of privilege, the minister has cast a reflection on hon. members on this side of the house. He should either clarify or withdraw.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member has a bad conscience. I did not say anything in that way. I simply said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I wonder whether the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) would mind telling us the expression to which he raises objection.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister is well aware of the aspersion he cast on members on this side, and I suggest that he either withdraw it or clarify it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am asking the hon. member for Mackenzie if he will kindly advise the Chair what it is that he complains of.

Mr. Nicholson: He said something to the effect that hon. members on this side of the house left the chamber and, when they came back, they were much more talkative than when they left.

Mr. Gardiner: I said they were quite talkative.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Nicholson: I submit that is not a reference which should be permitted in this chamber.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am sorry, but if that is the aspersion of which the hon. member is complaining I am afraid I could not rule that it was an unparliamentary expression. I am not ruling as to whether or not it was a fact, but I am ruling that it is certainly not an unparliamentary expression.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, anyway, they went out, and we all know how long it took to get them back. The two whips had to walk down to the door every time and stand outside while the bell was ringing, and they eventually came back and we were ready to have a vote.

An hon. Member: You were in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gardiner: I was here for two of those votes, and I do not believe you were here. You stayed away after the margarine talk for some time. Anyway, the whips went outside the door; then they came back here together, one walked up that side and the other up this one, and then we had a vote. It just took about half an hour to go through all that proceeding. On the last or the second last day I was here they did that ten times, and I thought it was far more important for me to be hanging up bills in Saskatchewan than sitting here while that was going on, sitting in the house watching a bunch of fellows performing and trying to obstruct anything that came before the house. They did not start the obstruction there. I remember that back in the early part of the session, weeks before we got to this bill, my friends on the other side had this thing in their minds. The Minister of Trade and Commerce moved a motion with regard to bank loans, and how long did it take to get that through the house?

An hon. Member: Fourteen days.

Mr. Gardiner: I spoke for the second time on it 20 days after it was first introduced, trying to get it through.

Mr. Ellis: That is what we are down here for.

Mr. Gardiner: That is what you are down here for, but we are down here to see that legislation that is in the interests of the people concerned is put through the house. My hon. friend made a remark, and I took occasion at the time to remind him of the fact that there was going to be an election in Saskatchewan this summer, and I said to him that that question would not be discussed by the C.C.F. party, and it was not. It was discussed by the Liberal party, and every farmer in Saskatchewan who had a loan under that measure was an opponent of those who took that position in this house, and there were many of them.

Mr. Argue: Ten per cent.

Mr. Gardiner: The men who were talking here in the house were very quiet about that. But I am pointing out to the house that it took 21 days to get an obvious piece of legislation, the only kind of legislation that could do the job that was to be done, through this house. Why were they so anxious to hold that up? I know they were doing everything possible to lengthen the time until we got down to the pipe-line bill, when they were going to knife the government and finish the whole job.

Here they are moving a resolution of want of confidence based upon the actions of this government at that time. I am sorry there is one gentleman who is not here this evening.

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Gardiner: The leader of the C.C.F. party.

An hon. Member: He was here this afternoon.

Mr. Gardiner: I know he was here this afternoon, but he ought to be here now. He does not like other people being absent. It would be a nice time for him to be here, because I would like to tell him something, and this is the time to tell him. I was addressing a meeting out in Saskatchewan a short time ago, and when I finished a young lawyer got up at the front of the hall, pointed at me and asked, "Is everything as true as what you said about the university?" I said, "Yes, everything I said about the university is true, and everything else I said is just as true." Then he asked, "Were you in the house when the pipe-line bill was up?" I said, "Yes, I was there for the first and second readings; I was there for four or five days until the second closure vote was taken." Then I said, "As a matter of fact, I made a speech. You ought to read it."

Then he asked me, "Were you there on the third reading?" I do not know whether or not he had it right. I have not checked Hansard closely enough to know that myself, but I heard the hon. member for Fort William this afternoon describe the scene, and I am quite sure I was fairly accurate in what I said in reply to my questioner. I would like to have my hon. friend hear it. I said to him, "No, I was not there for the third reading. If the scene was on the third reading, then I am very pleased I was not there. I am going to tell you why. Because apparently an old friend of mine, 83 years of age, according to the newspaper reports started toward the gentleman who got up from his seat and went to the mace and shook his fist at the Speaker of the house." I said to the audience, "If I had been there I would not have pulled Dan back, because I know Dan, and in spite of the fact that he is 83 years of age the debate would have ended about then. That was one scene in this house. Then, while he was standing there—and this is in Hansard so I can read it—

An hon. Member: Did you lose that seat?

Mr. Gardiner: No, we won that seat; by a good vote, too. Another member, from Winnipeg North, I believe, said in the house, and it is in Hansard, "Throw out the mace." That means, "Throw out the sovereign of this country"; that is what the mace represents. He said, "Throw out the mace." Well, if my hon. friends—

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I do so in all sincerity. It may be a little academic, but I should just like to know your decision now as to whether the subject of the pipe-line debate and the subject of closure as applied are going to be allowed to be discussed by the other groups when the minister is finished.

Mr. Speaker: I am very glad the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) rose to raise the point. As I was listening to the remarks of the minister I was myself very conscious of the fact that if we start reviewing the proceedings in a previous debate already concluded we shall be spending our time repeating again and again what has taken place, and under our rules that should not be done. I just heard the minister seem to indicate that someone else, prior to his taking the floor, had referred to those proceedings. I do not know. As hon. members know, I took the chair at 2.30, left at the usual time at 3.30 to go to attend to other duties, and did not resume the chair until eight o'clock.

I said earlier that I do not want to curtail discussion, but surely that should not cover as much territory as to include reference to a debate already concluded. I have in mind, of course, that citation 244 reads as follows:

> A member may not speak against or reflect upon any determination of the house, unless he intends to conclude with a motion for rescinding it.

Then citation 245 reads:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

Citation 246 reads:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 41, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:
> (a) refer to any debate of the same session on any question not then under discussion . . .

I think that we ought to restrict ourselves to whatever latitude may be given under an amendment which is so wide in terms that we can cover a great deal of territory. But that should not include references to debates already concluded. The minister may perhaps argue that he is not reviewing the debate itself but the proceedings, that is the motions that were moved or the application of certain standing orders. I would imagine that the reference to a previous debate would include that as well. If that is not his view perhaps he could explain, but I would wish that he would come to my view.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, I of course have no objection to the general ruling, namely that I cannot quote from a preceding debate, but I did not. I quoted from a speech made this afternoon in this debate. As a matter of fact the words are not exactly the same, but they mean the same thing and they were said here this afternoon. I was quoting from the speech made by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor).

Mr. Nicholson: In a previous debate.

Mr. Gardiner: No, in this debate this afternoon, while I was sitting here listening to him. I was not here during the previous debate.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. Knight: On the point of order, the minister is up to his usual tricks. Of course he now admits that he was arguing on the basis of a speech that was made this afternoon, but he omits to mention that he has been talking about what took place in the house some weeks ago and, furthermore, things that took place when he was not here at all. May I say that I do not care what the minister says or what he talks about. I simply want to ensure our rights, so that if the minister proceeds along the course he is now pursuing we shall have equal rights in this house to discuss the whole question of the pipe line and the closure that took place.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon has heard what I have said?

Mr. Nicholson: The minister has not.

Mr. Speaker: Does he agree that what I have said establishes the correct procedure?

Mr. Knight: Certainly.

Mr. Speaker: He indicates his acceptance. The minister may be referring to a speech by another hon. member, but because the other hon. member was not in order in referring to a previous debate does not establish his right to do likewise.

Mr. Gardiner: I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, that there is some question about that and I am not going to question your ruling at all, but I would remind you on the other question with respect to whether I can discuss the incident that the ruling given before I got to my feet was that the incident I have been discussing was the incident upon which the motion is based, that is the incident during the pipe-line discussion in this house and following that the proposed reform of the Senate. Those were the two things that were used as the reason for this motion, and I am sure you have not made a ruling which is any different from that. I shall do the very best I can to keep within that ruling. Now, I think the situation is pretty much as I was describing it, namely that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) came right up the centre of the floor—

Mr. Speaker: Oh, no. Order. I am afraid the Minister of Agriculture does not fully understand the purport of my ruling.

Mr. Green: Oh, yes, he does.

Mr. Speaker: If he does, perhaps he has not grasped the full meaning of it. I said that we should not refer to a previous debate already concluded, and I do not think we can separate the proceedings, the attitude of members with respect to those proceedings, and the debate itself. They must be considered in a package, and I do not think we ought to refer to those proceedings.

Mr. Gardiner: As long as you do not rule that a man leaving his seat, walking up the centre of the floor and shaking his fist is part of a debate, because that is not part of a debate; that is an action taking place on the floor of the house.

Mr. Speaker: If it is not part of a debate then the hon. member is referring to an incident which might have taken place when the bells were ringing and at a time when the proceedings are suspended, no debate being permitted. The minister knows it is the practice for some members to sing, others to talk, and others may perhaps do something else.

Mr. Gardiner: I am sorry I cannot read from Hansard, because I could indicate to you what the time was.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the minister that he does not have to indicate to me what the position was. I was here and I know exactly what the position was. Therefore I would ask him to take the position as I see it and adhere to my ruling.

Mr. Dufresne: You were here, Mr. Speaker, and he was away in Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Gardiner: There is another incident which came up this afternoon to which I want to refer and which also has to do with the leader of the C.C.F. group. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) interrupted and after some little discussion it was suggested to him that he should be very careful in what he said about party actions because he had not always belonged to the same party. I think that was a rather unfortunate remark for the leader of the C.C.F.

party to make, because I have heard him on the platform many times and I have heard him describe his past.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I believe the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made reference to my background as being the reason I took the attitude I did during that debate.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, that is a little more damaging than what I said. Anyway, that remark was made. I recall that I have been on the platform many times with or in opposion to the hon. member in years gone by, and have heard him recite his past history. I have heard him say quite candidly that he was a strong Conservative over in the old land and he had—

Mr. Knight: Before he was old enough to vote.

Mr. Ellis: Before he reached the age of discretion.

Mr. Gardiner: Not quite that far back. In any case, he was a Conservative and he roomed with a gentleman who was a socialist. The two of them roomed together throughout their college course. Then at the end of that, at the time he was speaking, he said, "Here I am running as a socialist and my socialist friend over in England is a Conservative member of the House of Commons". Each of them converted the other; nevertheless he seems to have belonged to two parties up to that time.

I know he belonged to another one, because when I knew him first he belonged to the independent labour party which contested an election in Saskatchewan. At a later time he belonged to the farmer-labour party. Then later on he belonged to the C.C.F. party. As I have said in this house before, he and I had conversations quite a number of times as to why he should become a Liberal. He therefore has a background also. I would suggest to him that in speaking of backgrounds he should keep that in mind.

There are other members of this house who have believed in different political faiths at different times in their lives, and some of them have changed. Some of the greatest statesmen in the British Empire have done that. There is no reason for taking the position that a man on this side of the house has a background when others on both sides of the house have similar backgrounds, and I suppose they can account for the changes they have made. But that is much along the line of some of the things that happened. I did not finish my story from out in Saskatchewan. I do not know whether or not you will permit me to finish it.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Gardiner: My story out there was that I had always known our friend as a pacifist and that I could not understand his shaking his fist at anybody. I think my idea is the correct one, rather than the stories that have gone around as to what did take place in the house.

I should like to suggest to my hon. friends on the other side of the house that if they had an election there would be many things heard. The public would understand better than they do now what went on in this house for three weeks, and when they understood it as do those of us who sat here through the greater part of it and others who sat through it all and watched the performance go on, they would know who it was that placed the institutions of democracy in jeopardy in this house. It was our friends on the other side of the house. They will never be able to live that down as long as they are in politics, and there will not be many of them there too long after that experience.

The quickest way to get out of politics that I have noticed other people take—I have been in politics myself for 42 years without being out at all, and I have watched many fellows come in and go out—is to try to leave the impression that your opposition are doing things which they were not doing and get out in the country and try to convince the public. The public eventually will become wise. When they do, then it is you who will disappear, not the members on this side of the house.

The sooner an election comes the better I will be satisfied, but that may not be the best thing for the country as a whole. I know that the Prime Minister of this country will not yield either to my wishes or to the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite if in yielding to them he is going to do anything which is not in the interests of Canada as a whole. My friends on the other side of the house may from time to time think that because he sits here and does not reply to them, he has no reply to make. I should like to see their faces when they meet him out in the country in the next election campaign. They will be the most downcast individuals who will be met from one end of this country to the other. Just as in the past, they will find that the people of Canada have the same confidence in him now as they had on the two previous occasions—

An hon. Member: We shall see.

Mr. Gardiner: —on one of which they gave him the greatest majority any party ever had in this house up to that time, and on the next occasion they increased it. I think they will increase it again whenever they get an opportunity to do so.

As to development in this country, may I say this. Not only every person in this country but every person of any importance in the United States, in Britain and in the countries over the world knows that there is no comparison between the development that has taken place in this country during the last 10 years and that in any other 10 years in its history. During the past 10 years this country has grown into a nation recognized by all the countries in the world as one of the outstanding nations. We shall carry that reputation down to the next election, at which time I am sure we shall carry ourselves through at the polls and leave a few of our friends sitting on the other side of the house.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention and great interest to the diffuse and rambling speech made by the Minister of Agriculture, who I understand is tonight Acting Prime Minister, and which dealt so fully with bill posting, parliamentary procedure, Saskatchewan politics and the pugilistic ability of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor). I am not going to be like the minister and break the rules. I am, as usual, going to keep to the rules and apply my remarks to the amendment that is now under discussion.

I rise this evening particularly to bring to the attention of the house the neglect of this government in one respect of about 5,000 of my constituents. I have done it a number of times throughout the years, but I do so tonight again because I think this is an opportunity to focus attention on this injustice that about 5,000 of my constituents have suffered for some 30 years. Satisfactory radio reception has been available to the majority of Canadians for about 30 years; but, as I said before, I have about 5,000 constituents who are unable to hear Canadian radio during the greater portion of the 24 hours.

An hon. Member: They are lucky.

Mr. Herridge: I say that is unjust. We can spend millions of dollars on television and on the improvement of television. That is something I do not regret, though on two or three evenings when I looked at a program —I forget the name of it just now—on which they produce some rather queer plays from Toronto I thought that if they would spend the money it cost to produce one of these plays in assisting my constituents to enjoy radio, it would be to the better advantage of this country.

These people, Mr. Speaker, have a real grievance, and this is a time for bringing grievances to the attention of the house. That is why I raise it again. I have raised it year after year without results. The area affected —and I know there are other areas; there are, I think, about eight or ten other areas in Canada—that suffers in a similar way, and of which I am speaking, is the greater part of the Arrow lakes area, the north Kootenay area and the Slocan lake area. While other Canadians have been enjoying Canadian radio, these people for 30 years have been unable to enjoy radio the greater part of the time. I know that in order to overcome that situation low-power relay stations have been erected at Castlegar and Kaslo. That move has been much appreciated by the people who are affected. But this area of which I am speaking is still as it was 30 years ago, and that is why I raise the question this evening.

When I went into this question some half dozen years ago I said, "Is the situation caused by unusual radio interference?" I took it up with the then minister of transport, Mr. Chevrier, who very kindly agreed that he would have a thorough investigation made of the whole area by the officials of his department, and he did so. After that investigation was completed I received this letter, which indicated that the major trouble was not radio interference, although there is considerable of that. I read from the letter dated May 30, 1952:

> The provision of reliable radio reception throughout British Columbia is a very difficult problem. The mountainous terrain, which absorbs the daytime radio waves travelling along the ground, prevents reliable daytime reception in such areas. As a result radio signals are not strong enough to be clearly heard above the normal, irreducible background of radio noise from electrical sources and atmospherics. At night distant radio signals which travel far above the earth and are reflected back to earth by the ionisphere, cause interference to local stations occupying the same channels. There are in the neighbourhood of 3,000 broadcast stations on the North American continent, operating on only 107 channels. Thus there is considerable interference between stations transmitting on the same channel where the desired signal is weak.
> For instance Nakusp is not within the primary service area of any Canadian station. Nighttime secondary service may sometimes be had from Trail, Kelowna or Penticton, with occasional reception from CBR Vancouver or CBX Lacombe, but signal strengths are found to be very low.
> It is therefore apparent that the poor radio reception in Kootenay West is due to inadequate signal strength, and is not generally caused by excessive interference from electrical sources. In many areas which suffer in this manner, the C.B.C. has installed "booster" stations which are located at repeater points on the wire networks and which afford broadcast service to local communities where they are situated.

So we cleared that up, Mr. Speaker. I can speak from personal experience on this matter, because I live miles away from anyone else. There is no road access to my home, and my nearest neighbour on one side is seven miles away and 12 miles on the other. We therefore depend on the radio. One evening my daughters were trying to tune in some station and a United States station came in. They said, "Well, Daddy, we have got Charlie McCarthy." I said, "It cannot be Charlie McCarthy because he comes on Sunday evenings." They were insistent upon that, so we listened to that program for about 10 minutes. Then when it came to a conclusion we heard the announcer say, "You have been listening to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) broadcast from Lethbridge." I mention that to indicate the difficulty in radio reception in our area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter is of such consequence that it has been studied by all types of organizations in the area; the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade of southwestern British Columbia. They have taken up the matter and have asked the federal government to have a survey made of our district. This was last year. It has been discussed at many of their meetings. The local chambers of commerce in Kootenay West that are affected, boards of trade, farmers' institutes and women's institutes have had meetings and passed resolutions, but so far without effect. Then the local people have had petitions signed which I have sent to the chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Hundreds of people have written letters concerning these circumstances. In addition to that, those who operate air services in the area have written pointing out that they are unable to receive weather bulletins and on that account their flying is made much more difficult.

Now, in order to indicate the situation—and I bring it up because this is an unfair situation to these people—I am going to quote from one resolution that I received recently, which was sent to the chairman of the broadcasting corporation. This was a resolution passed unanimously by the Nakusp chamber of commerce. I might say here that is one of the beauty spots on the Arrow lakes, a very active, progressive and growing community. The resolution reads:

> Whereas the geographical location of Nakusp and its surrounding area is such that it is impossible to get satisfactory radio reception; and
> Whereas it does not appear possible to build Canadian stations of sufficient power to overcome those American stations in California and Seattle which are of the same wave length; and,
> Whereas the Canadian government is spending millions of dollars each year to provide television to people who have excellent radio reception; and,
> Whereas it is not possible to consistently receive Canadian news, Canadian civil defence instructions or warnings, Canadian political broadcasts or any Canadian cultural programs; and,
> Whereas as Canadians we feel that we have the right to know what is happening in Canada; and,
>
> Whereas the farmers of this district need the Canadian weather forecast if they are to properly take care of their crops; and,
>
> Whereas the farmers of this district need the Canadian market news; and,
>
> Whereas other areas and communities of less population are at the present time satisfactorily serviced by C.B.C. booster stations:
> Therefore be it resolved that this chamber of commerce recommend to the board of governors of the C.B.C. the installation of a booster station at Nakusp to serve the needs of the people in this area.

I just read that resolution to indicate they are concerned about this matter. It would not take more than three booster stations, one at Nakusp, one at Rosebery, and one at Balfour. To these repeated representations from organizations, petitions and letters, Mr. Dunton has replied in each case, and I am going to read his latest reply in this connection. He says in part:

> As we have explained before the difficulty about filling in some of the gaps in our coverage is that of finance. As matters stand now the outlook is that we shall be short of funds even to carry on existing services and it will be a question not of expanding but of reducing. It is possible, however, that some adjustment will be made in the methods of financing the sound broadcasting system, and with that in mind the corporation is going ahead with further study of coverage needs, and the costs involved, including southeastern British Columbia.

So we are told it is a matter of financing. I understand that nothing will be done to remedy this situation until a report is received from the royal commission on broadcasting. Well, it is unfair to ask these people to wait that long.

Then quite recently the present Minister of Transport had a survey made of the area to see if there was a great deal of interference that could be overcome by various measures. They come to the same conclusion, I think. There were three officials from the Department of Transport who made the survey in the area, and this is what they say according to a letter received from the deputy minister of transport, Mr. Brassard, dated May 9, 1956.

> The report indicates that the main reason for the complaints is not that the interference level is high, but rather that the strength of the broadcast signals received is extremely low throughout the Nakusp area due to the terrain.

That applies to the whole area.

> In the circumstances, it is not always possible to suppress interference to the point where satisfactory reception is attained, however, our staff will take all reasonable measures to eliminate preventible sources.

We appreciate what is being done in that respect. They did discover some sources of interference.

> We are given to understand that the Nakusp board of trade had previously approached the C.B.C. for the installation of a low-powered broadcast relay station in Nakusp, but that the request was turned down because program carrying lines were not available. It is reported that such lines are now available and that the board is making a new application.

I read that to indicate it is still not a question of interference but the low strength of the signals. We have Canadian Pacific lines going in which were not available some three or four years ago. The poles were old and the lines almost obsolete. Since that time there have been some severe storms and the Canadian Pacific has taken advantage of the situation to rebuild the line, so they are now in a position to give a wire service between Nelson and Rosebery and Nelson and Nakusp. There is also at the present time a B.C. telephone line between Nelson and Kaslo, and we would only have to take a feeder line off to serve Balfour, Procter, Crawford Bay and the Kootenay lake area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this does not seem a serious matter to people who enjoy good radio reception. In my opinion it does seem unfair that those people who are producing such a great amount of wealth should be denied the opportunity to listen to Canadian stations. They can listen to United States stations at Seattle, San Francisco, Portland and the south, usually in the evening. Rarely can we get Canadian stations. We can never hear them properly, or get a complete program.

There is tremendous production right within the area I am speaking about that does not receive radio reception at the present time. Just last year in the Arrow lakes area alone 100 million feet of lumber were cut. That is a great contribution to the production of this country and to the taxes of this government. In the area I am speaking of, the Kootenay lake area, 50 million feet of lumber were cut. There is a tremendous mineral production in the area concerned. I have not the figures, but they are included in the total area. In the Kootenay West area there is extensive agricultural production, particularly in fruit, dairying and poultry, and there is an extensive tourist trade.

While millions have been spent in developing the C.B.C. in other directions, the people I am speaking about, and I know some other groups in Canada, have been completely denied the opportunity of enjoying the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's radio facilities. At the present time, and until this situation is remedied, the people of whom I am speaking will be forced to obtain their news, their entertainment, their commentaries and programs they wish to enjoy, from United States stations.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do urge that the government give consideration to circumstances such as these and by the installation of the low-power relay stations that are necessary for these Canadians, good Canadians, largely living under pioneer conditions, to enjoy the Canadian radio programs and the benefits that the great majority of Canadians have enjoyed for over 30 years.

Mr. Byrne: May I adjourn the debate?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may proceed; it is only five minutes to ten.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, because of the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition, and because of the material he introduced, the debate tonight should rightly centre around the pipe-line bill and the other question of reform of the other place. I am wondering what will be the position of those hon. members who are sympathetic to questions such as those raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), if they are expected, as is usual, to support the government on a want of confidence vote.

The Social Credit party do not appear to be in such a peculiar position with respect to this omnibus motion. They have indicated they do not feel that recent actions should require the government to go to the country, yet they may be sympathetic with some of the questions that were raised this afternoon. It is for that reason that I feel the debate has ranged somewhat too far and too wide. Tomorrow, when I take my place in the house again, I expect to continue this debate. I intend to discuss the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition, and to show that if the rules of this house were broken during the pipe-line debate they were broken by members of the official opposition and by members of the C.C.F. party, not by any members on this side of the house. I hope I shall be allowed to continue in that vein, Mr. Speaker, as it will simply be answering what hon. members on the opposition side of the house said this afternoon.

On Friday last the Leader of the Opposition reiterated a speech he made on an earlier occasion, and I hope I shall be permitted to say that the opposition have been the ones who have broken the rules thus far in this session. May I adjourn the debate?

Mr. Van Horne: The hon. member's time is not up.

Mr. Byrne: If my time is not up I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Van Horne: The hon. member sat down. I wish to speak.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order. At the moment the hon. member for Kootenay East resumed his seat and asked me to call it ten o'clock I was about to rise in relation to his last remarks. He indicated what the content of his speech might be. If he recalls what I had to say earlier when the Minister of Agriculture was speaking he will know that his program is not quite in line with the ruling I made. I fully understand it may be very difficult for hon. members on both sides of the house to keep away from a debate that has taken place and that has been concluded; but if hon. members insist on reviving again and again matters that have been dealt with, well, I shall have to take a very serious second look at the whole matter.

Mr. Byrne: I certainly will not abrogate your rule in any way. I have many things to discuss tomorrow, and should you find that the tenor of my discussion is out of order I shall be pleased to conform to your ruling; but at this moment I wish to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Mr. Byrne the debate was adjourned.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

POSTAL SERVICE, MARYSVILLE, N. B.

Question No. 460—Mr. Van Horne:

What action, if any, has been taken to establish door to door mail delivery at Marysville, New Brunswick?

Answer by: Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General):

A survey has been carried out by field officers and instructions have been issued to provide letter carrier delivery service as soon as the usual conditions respecting letter slots, house numbers, etc., have been complied with.

C. N. R. APPROPRIATIONS, EDMUNDSTON, N. B.

Question No. 511—Mr. Van Horne:

1. Has an appropriation been made for a new Canadian National railway station and/or freight terminal at Edmundston, New Brunswick?

Questions

2. What action, if any, is being taken to build a new station and/or freight shed at Edmundston, New Brunswick?

Answer by: Mr. Langlois, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. No appropriation is included in the 1956 capital budget for the construction of a new station. Provision is made in the 1956 budget for the construction of five storage tracks and other track changes. This work is a continuation of extension and alterations commenced in 1954 and continued during 1955.

2. Plans have been prepared and are now being completed with a view to commencing construction of a new station and freight shed during 1957 if funds are authorized in that year's capital budget.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 26, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 26, 1956

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 26th June, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING DECISION TO DISBAND MOUNT HOPE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the representations which have been made in regard to the air station at Mount Hope, outside Hamilton, will the minister tell us whether there has been any reconsideration of the decision to disband that squadron, one with a well-remembered reputation and one which had been so well supported in that community?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the decision.

Mr. Drew: Can the Minister of National Defence indicate in what way the very elaborate and expensive establishment which has been created for the use of that squadron will now be used?

Mr. Campney: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position yet to give any firm answer. I presume we will be discussing the matter with the Department of Transport in the usual way as we always do when we cease to operate a station ourselves.

Mr. Drew: Has the Minister of National Defence not received a number of representations with regard to the disbandment of this squadron at Mount Hope?

Mr. Campney: Very few, Mr. Speaker. I may have a couple.

[Later]:

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence supplementary to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Has any provision been made to take care of the extremely important defence role being carried out by the squadron about to be disbanded? If so, what is the nature of the provision?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I clearly understand the hon. member's question. The work carried on by this squadron, as was the case with the work carried on by each of the auxiliary squadrons, was weighed, studied, and considered. The cost of maintaining the squadron and the alternative uses which might be made of the personnel of the squadron were also considered. The decision which was taken was based upon a consideration of all these factors. The existing air force units at Hamilton will benefit by the addition of a goodly number of personnel. The flying carried on by the Hamilton squadron has required the maintenance of a complete airport on the part of national defence at great cost, and because certain improvements had to be made it was decided—and I may say decided with some reluctance—that this squadron would have to be altered in character.

POSTAL SERVICE

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF MAIL DELIVERIES TO WAWOTA, WINDTHORST AND KENNEDY, SASK.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the minister state if he has received a telegram from the board of trade of Wawota, Saskatchewan, with respect to mail service and the condition arising out of the curtailment of train service and, if so, can the minister give assurance that satisfactory mail service will be re-established for the villages of Wawota, Windthorst and Kennedy?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, such a telegram has been received and authority has already been given to replace the curtailed train service by a road service so that delivery will continue on the same basis as previously.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF STATUTE TO PROHIBIT DUMPING OF FUEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or in his absence to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the terrible and sorrowful accident that happened to the Venezuelan air liner, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport would consider revising the act having to do with civil aeronautics to provide that no dumping of gasoline shall be allowed while aircraft are in flight?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Acting Prime Minister): In view of the absence of the minister I would suggest that this question be taken as notice.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING TAX ON CERTAIN ADVERTISING REVENUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether the government intends to proceed with the legislation providing for a 20 per cent special excise tax on the gross advertising content of Canadian editions of United States magazines?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last week I was asked the same question and I made the answer that I would have nothing to say on the subject until I introduced the resolution.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REGIER—REFERENCE TO NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL CONCERNING MR. SPEAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have in my hand an editorial, of which I sent you a copy, wherein, two weeks after a motion was decided by this house, you and with you the institution of parliament are still being attacked. To mention only a few of the terms used, you are referred to as "a crooked Speaker". You are compared to a bank robber. You are labelled "a self-seeking Liberal hack with the hide of a rhinoceros". You are accused of deliberately debasing an office.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

To my mind this is an attack on our institution of parliament, and I am appealing to you, Mr. Speaker, to say whether some action cannot be taken to maintain or to restore, if it has been lost, public confidence in this institution.

Mr. Fleming: Dissolve parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I am pleased to inform the hon. member that, according to a principle that has already been laid down and expounded in this house by other members who have risen on questions of privilege, an attack against the Speaker is an attack against the whole house. As a matter of fact, an attack against one member of the house is an attack against the whole house. See citation 157, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, second edition. Hon. members have risen from time to time on a question of privilege affecting the honour of a member of the house and have suggested or indicated that some action should be taken by myself. If the hon. member looks at May, fifteenth edition, he will find that whenever action has been taken it has never been by the Speaker but by members of the house themselves. See May's fifteenth edition, pages 125 and 126, also pages 138 to 142. You can find in May's fifteenth edition only one instance where the Speaker has acted himself, and that was when an officer of the house under his own jurisdiction had been attacked, and he came forward and submitted the matter to the house. In all other cases members have taken action themselves.

I must say that it has been quite some time since members have taken action with respect to these matters. The last instance took place some time ago. See Journals, page 108, 1894, and Journals, page 370, 1906. The proper procedure, which I explained myself on at least two previous occasions in the last month—see Hansard, 1956, pages 3563-6 and pages 4528-31—is that a member who wishes some action to be taken proceeds to indicate what constitutes the question of privilege and concludes with a motion. See Hansard, volume III, 1929, pages 2790-7, and Beauchesne's third edition, citation 273. That motion being privileged it may either be considered immediately or may be considered at a time appointed by the house itself. Once the motion has been agreed upon, if it is in order, then a remedy may be applied. That is entirely in the hands of the house and not in mine.

That remedy may consist of calling the author of the article or the publisher of the newspaper to the bar of the house and asking him for an explanation and apology. That apology or explanation may be accepted by the house. If it is not accepted, then the house may decide whatever punishment it deems advisable. Then it calls back the author of the article or the publisher of the newspaper to the bar of the house, and it is the duty of the Speaker to communicate to him what decision the house has reached. That decision may be a reprimand; it may be imprisonment. In certain cases it has been advocated that even a fine may be decided upon. That was the case in Australia not very long ago. That is the way in which these matters should be looked upon.

Mr. Donald D. Carrick (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order? I should like to ask you if the hon. gentleman, before taking the formal action you have indicated, should not consider whether or not the criticisms he has read arise out of the incidents in this house upon which this house has already passed judgment. You will recall, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member just to say that if a question of privilege is raised and it is not supported by a motion, there is nothing before the house and I would advise the hon. member not to pursue the point. He began by asking me a certain question. I would be pleased to tell him immediately that should that situation arise I shall have to deal with it when it comes up.

Mr. Carrick: I am only asking you, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman should not take that into consideration before he takes the formal action that you have indicated. On a previous occasion you indicated that certain members of this house had used very extreme language with respect to the conduct of the officials of this house. It may be that this article would not go beyond the language that had been used in this house by some hon. members.

GRAIN

WESTERN FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FREIGHT RATE ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Purdy) asked me two questions. The first one was:

> Will the government take under consideration increasing the freight rate assistance on western feed grain to the Atlantic provinces in an amount equal to any freight rate increases?

The answer to that is contained in order in council P.C. 1955-138, paragraph (d) of which reads:

> The rates of payment under paragraph (c) shall not be increased while this order is in effect irrespective of any increase in all rail through car lot rail freight rates which would result in the balance of such rate over the Montreal freight rate zone rate being higher than it is at the time this order becomes effective.

Then, in the letter which went out to the trade, there is this:

> The administration thinks that dealers will understand that no increase in rates of payment under the freight assistance policy by virtue of the increase in all rail freight rates will be made, but anyone who is in doubt should get in touch with us as soon as possible so that a clear understanding will prevail before the rail freight rates are increased.

I think it has already been indicated what the government's decision is in the matter and there is nothing more I can say on that point.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the date of the letter the minister is quoting?

Mr. Gardiner: The date of the letter is June 18, 1956.

The other question is this:

> Having regard to the motion of the Minister of Public Works, who I believe is Acting Minister of Agriculture, will an opportunity be given to general agriculture to present their problems before the committee on agriculture and colonization?

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is generally understood that any group that desired to make representation to the committee on agriculture and colonization would say so and the representation would be considered by the government and the house. The present position of the government is that we do have a conference every December to which all those who are interested in agriculture, including all the departments of agriculture, are invited. Up to now all matters that would likely be presented to the agriculture committee have been discussed there.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister regarding any possible change in government policy toward the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam. Has the federal government now decided that the building of the South Saskatchewan dam would be in the national interest? Has the government made any offer to Saskatchewan as to the terms on which it would agree to proceed with such construction?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Acting Prime Minister): As Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I shall take that as notice and refer it to the Prime Minister on his return.

Mr. Argue: The answer is no.

Request for Election and Senate Reform

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has he recommended any change in the policy of the government in connection with the South Saskatchewan dam?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to recommend any change. I am the first person who ever recommended the building of it, and I am still recommending it.

SHIPPING

SUPPLY SHIP "C. D. HOWE"—REPORT ON FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked a question with respect to the damage caused the supply ship C. D. Howe in Montreal on Sunday morning. There was damage done to about 15 or 20 tons of general cargo. The fire occurred in No. 2 deck area early Sunday morning, and was quickly brought under control. Loading operations had been completed for the dispatch of the vessel to northern areas when the fire broke out. The delay in sailing is one day, I am informed, and apparently no damage has been done other than to the 15 tons of general cargo. None of the mail has been disturbed and the rest of the cargo is intact, so there will be only a slight delay in the vessel leaving Montreal.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, June 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

REQUEST FOR ELECTION—SENATE REFORM

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, when I rose last evening and attempted to adjourn the debate at five minutes to ten I felt that I was in a position somewhat similar to that of the hon. member for Broadview on Friday, when he attempted to adjourn the debate at ten minutes to six. I, of course, wanted to do some research and gather more material. I suspect the hon. member for Broadview wanted to let the Prime Minister age another couple of hours so he would have something to talk about.

Mr. McGregor: That is pretty flat.

Mr. Byrne: Perhaps the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) would have filled in, but I was not disposed to accept his kind offer. When the Leader of the Opposition introduced the motion which we are now debating he used these words, as found on page 5330 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, on a supply motion it is particularly appropriate—

I want you to note the word "appropriate," Mr. Speaker.

> —at this time that I should refer to the discussions that have already taken place here and their effect upon our present position in this house. I think it is the correct time to express our belief that this government has lost any moral right to govern this country.

I say at this point that if there has been any immorality in action during this session in this house it has been on the part of the official opposition. The Leader of the Opposition went on to say:

> We all know how precedents were broken in this house in a debate which took place not long ago. There was some discussion on Friday last about whether or not the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) had used the words in a television interview, "We violated the rules".

I am sure if the Minister of Trade and Commerce said anything of that nature what he meant to say was, "We violated no rules"; or he meant to say, and should have said, "We applied the rules". The opposition do not seem to be able to see any difference between applying the rules and violating the rules. The Leader of the Opposition went on for over half a page and discussed proceedings in this house with respect to the rules and sought to indicate that the government, and the government only, had violated the rules. He said further, on page 5331:

> I am not going to say more except to repeat that the important thing is not that he did say the words; the important thing is that having said them he denied to this house that he did. It is only in keeping with many of the things that have happened.

All this is an attempt by the Leader of the Opposition to justify the motion he has brought before the house to dissolve the house. So far as his comments are concerned, that was as far as he went. Then he proceeded to attack the other place.

It has been said in the debate on the question to which he referred earlier, namely the debate on the pipe line, that the remarks have not been relevant and have been off the normal course of debate. I do not believe this party can be accused of such a type of debate. The opposition have tried to indicate that we have attacked the rules of the house and that we are undermining the pillars of democracy. From what has taken place so far I know that the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition generally, because they have been unable to force their will upon the majority, have moved on to a smaller group, the officials of the house, and have attempted to destroy them. That was not possible, and they have now moved on to the Senate and have attempted to destroy the other place. If there are destroyers of parliamentary and democratic systems in this house they are on the benches on the other side of the house.

An hon. Member: What a joke after your performance.

Mr. Byrne: For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I wish to prove that the violations of the rules have been entirely on the opposite side and not on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I refer for a moment to the discussion of order we had last night. The hon. member will recall that when he indicated that he wanted to refer to proceedings that took place in this house during a debate that has already been concluded I indicated to him, as I indicated to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), that the rules do not provide for such a course to be followed. I had to say if hon. members prior to his taking the floor had themselves referred to previous proceedings already disposed of, it did not give another hon. member the right to do so.

I must repeat what I said last evening and refer the hon. member to the citations in Beauchesne's third edition (see Beauchesne's third edition, citations 244, 245, 246 (a), (k)) which I quoted last evening, and ask him to address himself to subjects which have to do with the calling of a general election and as much as possible in line with the subject matter as it was introduced by the mover of the amendment to the motion to go into supply. I understand the difficulties of the situation, and it is only by hon. members co-operating with the Chair that we can achieve the results that should be achieved under the rules.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not wish in any way to encroach upon your good will or the rules of the house, but I submit that when the Leader of the Opposition introduced the motion he said:

> . . . I should refer to the discussions that have already taken place here and their effect upon our present position in this house.

From there on during his entire address he referred to matters that had taken place in this house of recent date; and for me to find anything else to discuss and remain within the rules of the house would be extremely difficult. Last evening Your Honour said:

> It appears to me that if we are to follow the subjects that have been introduced so far during the debate, which is supposed to be one on a specific grievance, we can speak about Senate reform, we can speak about proceedings in this house and the proceedings in the Senate on the pipe-line bill, we can speak on all the projects which are of interest to the maritime provinces—

And so on. I feel quite sure that when he introduced this motion the Leader of the Opposition was referring to incidents in this house. I simply say that if we are in a position that requires dissolution, and if it is because the rules of the house have been violated, I would like to point out that on May 31 the rules were violated and broken by the opposition seven times and I have material here with which I can prove that.

If I am not allowed to do that I shall bow to your ruling, but I feel that in all justice I should be allowed to say why I feel that the house is not in such a position as to require dissolution, and certainly if it is it is not due to any action on the part of the government supporters.

Mr. Speaker: I say immediately that I know the difficulty of the position because of certain pronouncements that were made. That does not alter the fact that the rules are exactly as I have stated. We are not supposed to refer to or reflect upon past proceedings.

There were proceedings in a certain debate which has ended. As a matter of fact the legislation that was then under discussion has become the law of the land. There were also proceedings that took place on Thursday, May 31, and Friday, June 1, which, as the hon. member knows, consisted in large part of a motion of censure against myself, which has also been voted by the house on June 8. If the hon. member wishes to deal specifically with either the proceedings in the pipe-line debate or the proceedings which were the subject of censure against myself, he will be not only referring to a previous debate already concluded but also reflecting upon proceedings of the house.

I realize the difficulty, and I do not mind at all, as far as I am concerned, if hon. members generally wish to have the rules dispensed with in respect to this particular debate. In citation 107 of Beauchesne's third edition I find the following:

> In all matters of doubt, the Speaker will consider attentively the opinions of members of experience, or sometimes, instead of expressing his opinion on either side, may ask instructions from the house or reserve his decision on the point in discussion, or suggest that the house may, if it think proper, dispense with the rule in a particular case. In doubtful cases, he will be largely guided by circumstances.

If hon. members insist on discussing previous proceedings already disposed of, I am in their hands and they may make their own decision.

Request for Election and Senate Reform

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling with great respect and I submit to the Leader of the Opposition that he might follow my example.

The motion before us is one to dissolve the house. The only real argument that has been put up by the official opposition as to why we should dissolve the house is that undoubtedly they could win a general election. Apparently the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) has 99·9 per cent of the vote corralled in the maritimes. Others seem to have the same type of stranglehold, through their distortion of what took place in the house, and feel that is good reason to have a general election. While this distortion of the facts is still widespread, I think we should take the time to let the actual facts be known before calling a general election.

There are important items on the order paper that should commend themselves to the Leader of the Opposition and to the leader of the C.C.F. party. One is what we believe to be an excellent arrangement with the provinces for a tax-rental agreement; another is provision for assistance to unemployed who do not otherwise receive assistance under the Unemployment Insurance Act. There are many pieces of legislation that are of importance to the country. I think the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the C.C.F. party should take these under consideration, rather than attempt to do something which will be particularly beneficial to their own political parties.

Since I have been unable to show why I believe the opposition parties violated the rules at least seven times in less than that many hours, I shall refer to something that took place in the debate yesterday. The leader of the C.C.F. party, answering an interjection by myself, at the time he was attempting to distort the facts as he has in the past, saying that we were responsible for the breaking of the rules—

Mr. Campbell: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for The Battlefords is rising on a point of privilege?

Mr. Campbell: On a point of privilege. The hon. member—has just said that the member for Rosetown-Biggar had distorted the facts yesterday as he had done in the past. I think that should be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: I am glad the hon. member rose, because I did not know whether he noticed but I suspected the hon. member for Kootenay East had said some words to that effect. If my recollection is right the hon. member for Kootenay East said, "The member for Rosetown-Biggar attempted to distort the facts as he has done in the past."

Mr. Campbell: I do not think he used the word "attempted".

An hon. Member: Yes, he did.

Mr. Speaker: Even if he used that word I do not think the hon. member for Kootenay East should accuse any other hon. member of attempting to distort the facts.

Mr. Trainor: On a point of order, I think the hon. member only intimated that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was distorting the facts as he saw them. That is not necessarily distorting the facts.

Mr. Byrne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and various members of the house who have assisted me in this matter.

Mr. Nicholson: Have you withdrawn?

Mr. Byrne: I am—

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful to the hon. member for Winnipeg South for having given his own interpretation of the expression, but I think I shall have to depend on the one I give to it myself. I should like the hon. member for Kootenay East to indicate that he had no intention whatever of accusing the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar of deliberately distorting the facts in this house.

Mr. Byrne: Well, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion they were not the facts.

Mr. Campbell: I insist that the hon. member withdraw that statement.

Mr. Byrne: I interjected and said that the opposition had broken the rules.

Mr. Speaker: It is not difficult to conclude an incident of this kind. It is just as simple as this. An hon. member who has used an expression which may be offensive merely has to say, "If I have offended any hon. member, I withdraw the expression." It is just as simple as that.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the assertion if it is in any way offensive. As a matter of fact I withdraw without qualification. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar had this to say, as found at page 5340 of Hansard:

> I have no doubt that his remarks stem back to some of his background in the past—

I did not hear him say "party solidarity", but it appears in Hansard and apparently that is what he said. The hon. member went on to say:

> My hon. friend knows to what I am referring. It stems from some of his background in the past.

I do not know to what the hon. member refers. I was born of humble parents, and I was born in the United States. That may be a crime in the minds of some of the members of the opposition these days, but it was simply an accident of fate and I take no responsibility for it. But since attaining the age of 16, when I was required to earn my own living, I take responsibility for everything I have done. Previous to reaching the age of 21 I became an adherent of the Liberal party and I have not deviated from that course to this moment. I have belonged to the one church and have had one spouse. I am in complete ignorance as to what the hon. member meant by my background.

Since the hon. member is not here and able to supply me with that information, may I say that there is only one other matter to which he could possibly have reference. I refer to the fact that I belong to and took a very active part in organizing a labour union in the province of British Columbia and, for that matter, throughout Canada. I took an active part in that organization, the mine, mill and smelter workers and, as a matter of fact, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), who is sitting in his place, is an honorary life member of that organization.

Mr. Herridge: That is right.

Mr. Byrne: So I find it difficult to see what there is in my background that would preclude me from receiving the confidence of the people of Kootenay East and therefore the right to sit on this side of the house until the Prime Minister decides it is time for another general election.

As a representative of the union I mentioned earlier I did considerable organizing. I am also happy to say that I took a leading part in negotiating agreements in the years from 1945 to 1949, and they were outstanding agreements. This union was the first and only union to break into the tough mining industry with such companies as Consolidated Mining and Smelting and International Nickel. They had been dominated by company unions for years.

When I first joined the union and began organizing I was working seven days a week every week in the month, and with no overtime pay. I mentioned that I have belonged to one church. Occasionally I would get a chance to attend the church of my choice on Sunday morning, but only occasionally when I was on another shift. As I have said, that cannot possibly be a reason for not enjoying the confidence of my people. The union has done excellent work in its fight to improve working conditions, wages and holidays with pay. As a matter of fact, the men with whom I work in the summer now get one month's holidays with pay. Many others get three weeks with pay and some with very short service two weeks with pay.

The basic pay is $2 an hour for miners, and as the result of efficiency bonuses there are many who make up to $8 or more. I am sure there would be no individual working underground on contract who would not be making in excess of $20 a day, and many $24 or $25 a day. These conditions have been obtained through union activity. I have not always agreed with some members of the union so far as their political outlook on life is concerned, but I have here the official organ of the union in Canada. To whom do they turn when they want political advice? I should like to refer to a section of the editorial to show to whom they turn when they require political advice. The headline is, "Scandalous Facts of the Pipe Line Sell-out". The editorial goes on to say:

> Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is owned and controlled by five great U.S. oil and gas companies . . .

Then they quote M. J. Coldwell, leader of the C.C.F. party and George Drew, leader of the Progressive Conservative party. I will admit I have never got along with them politically and I do not intend to. No matter which way they stray I shall go down the centre with the good Liberal party which can see both sides of a problem and is prepared to go forward on that basis. I am wondering who the opposition are going to attack next. They have tried the house, the officials, the Senate. I hope His Excellency is not next.

Mr. Castleden: Wonderful.

Mr. Fleming: How nauseating!

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I was taken aback last night by the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture. It is true that he may be a very excellent debater and he may quote good books very much like the devil can quote the Bible, but he gives me the impression that he has no more regard for the truth than a tomcat has for a marriage licence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask the hon. member to retract that statement? May I ask the hon. member to withdraw the expression that the minister has no more regard for the truth than—I do not know what the balance of the comparison was.

Mr. Van Horne: Apparently that remark is on Hansard some place else, but I should like to point out—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I told the hon. member for Kootenay East a moment ago when I asked him to withdraw a certain expression, it is very easy. The hon. member simply says, "I withdraw."

Mr. Van Horne: I withdraw.

An hon. Member: He did not want to insult the tomcat.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Van Horne: The Minister of Agriculture mentioned that all was calm and peaceful in the Senate when the pipe-line bill went there. It might be well to point out—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I heard some interjections indicating that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska might not have withdrawn as I requested him. The Clerk informs me that he has and it was also my impression that he had.

Mr. Van Horne: Senator Donald Cameron, a Liberal senator in the other place, made no bones about the fact and his statement is explicit. He said:

> . . . I want to say this . . . I hope that never again for any reason will any bill of this magnitude—

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think inadvertently the hon. member is overlooking the rule which says—

Mr. Van Horne: I was just following the precedent established last night by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: I was not in the chair during all the time the minister spoke. As I said earlier, if one hon. member has not observed the rule it does not give another hon. member the right to break the rule as well. At the moment I am looking for the citation which I should like to read to the hon. member. I am referring to citation 243, which reads as follows:

> Allusion to debates in the other house are out of order, and there are few orders more important than this for the conduct of debate and for observing courtesy between houses.

Mr. Van Horne: There is one thing the Minister of Agriculture and I had in common; and that was that we both came from a funeral, namely the funeral of the Liberal party in our respective provinces. In my province the funeral procession had bogged down on the way to the grave. They ran out of pallbearers. No sooner were the Liberal candidate pallbearers chosen than they approached the Liberal corpse and having had one look and one smell at it, ran away in horror. But as soon as they succeeded in getting enough pallbearers to rise and carry the flag the funeral procession kept right on going and ended on June 18.

Mr. Byrne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Kootenay East is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Byrne: Yes.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): He does not know what a point of order is.

Mr. Byrne: I should like to know how the hon. member can relate what he is saying to the motion which is before the house.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): You had better refer to your own speech.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member looks at the amendment, he will find that it deals with the calling of a general election. As I understand it, the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is relating his remarks to the amendment by discussing political conditions in the country and, more specifically, in his own province of New Brunswick at the moment.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, during the 17-year Liberal nightmare in my province which ended in 1952 the Liberal party lost no opportunity to broadcast with fervour that New Brunswick was indeed Canada's unspoiled province by the sea. The Liberal governments with which New Brunswick had been plagued for 17 long, miserable years lifted nary a finger to provide opportunities for our people in that hitherto barren and hard-scrabble land which was New Brunswick. But New Brunswick had become by 1952, as was confirmed by the Prime Minister in two recent statements, the most backward and most depressed area of Canada.

The Prime Minister did not stop to think that these very Atlantic provinces of which New Brunswick is a part, economically speaking and developmentwise, were saddled for the past 20 years—with the exception of New Brunswick alone—not only provincially but federally with Liberal governments. If the maritime provinces are the most backward provinces in Canada we have no one to blame but the Liberal governments that sat in those provinces and in this house during that time.

However, in 1952 New Brunswick changed governments. Hugh John Flemming and his administration have succeeded in reversing the downward economic trend that existed in our province for 50 years and we look forward to a new era, a new day, when progress and prosperity will replace the continuous economic depression with which we were saddled, and the dispersion of our industry; and the dispersal of our young people, driven from our shores to the long-Conservative province of Ontario in order to make a living.

But while our provincial government in New Brunswick is doing all it can to make New Brunswick the province it was destined to become in the Canadian federation, let us remember that the federal government is not doing its share and has never accepted its responsibilities toward the maritime provinces. Alas, Mr. Speaker, this attitude of the federal Liberal government toward the Atlantic provinces in the past 20 years has been one of neglect, laziness, indifference and downright cowardice.

The federal government has been steadily and actively selling the Atlantic provinces down the river. The federal government has never varied in its stupid and traitorous attitude of passiveness, laziness and indifference toward the stark fact that until we in this economic entity comprising the maritime provinces can adopt, adjust and enforce trade conditions and regulations to meet our needs and not only those of central Canada; until we can decide and determine ourselves how and where we will buy, sell, export and import; until we can regain our natural markets; until we can develop enough hydroelectric power to compete with the rates charged in other areas in Canada; until we can decide and determine ourselves how and where we will buy, sell, export and import; until we can regain the same advantageous trade position we enjoyed at the time of confederation in regard to our choice of buying and selling markets and our method of transportation, which was then mainly by water; and until we can overcome our power, transportation and market barriers, we are doomed to remain a lopsided economic entity, discarded by a federal government which is too blind to see the forest for the trees and which has been—whether or not it has enough brains to realize it—persistently selling the Atlantic provinces down the river.

How I was taken aback the other day by a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he mentioned that he had become enthusiastic about the pipe-line bill to the apparent extent that he was prepared to sell parliament down the road of dictatorship and sell the liberty of its members in order to bulldoze through this house a loan of $80 million to permit a United States company to have control.

Mr. Byrne: Order.

Mr. Van Horne: I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, how about getting enthusiastic about New Brunswick for a change? And I ask him now, how about getting enthusiastic about the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order—

Mr. Van Horne: One trouble with this government is—

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is not only out of order but he is reading his speech.

Mr. McGregor: Did you read yours?

Mr. Nesbitt: It is not a Cockfield Brown speech anyway.

Mr. Van Horne: One trouble with this government is that its Minister of Trade and Commerce will not get off his high horse to examine and recognize the horrible conditions his government has permitted to exist and develop in the maritime provinces. Mr. Speaker, the present Liberal government has no idea of what we need or what we require or what we want. It is blind and cannot see. It is weak and cannot walk. It is deaf and will not hear. It is lazy and will not work. It is indifferent and will not act. It fails to recognize the fundamental principle that indifference leads to death. Pilate was indifferent to the fate of Christ, and Christ ended by dying upon a cross. Indifference leads but to ruin. Indifference is the companion of chaos, and indifference toward the maritime provines is the main characteristic of the present federal Liberal government.

New Brunswick is now embarking upon a tremendous program of hydroelectric development. The first phase of the program is the Beechwood project, which will cost about $45 million. But the over-all program for hydroelectric power development on the Saint John river comprises four projects like Beechwood and will cost over $211 million. Yet in spite of the federal government giving $162 million to the Colombo plan to help develop projects like Beechwood in Pakistan; in spite of the federal government bulldozing through parliament this $80 million loan; in spite of the $4,044,200,000 lent or given away in the past few years to foreign countries—but mostly given away—many of them behind the iron curtain, this federal Liberal government refuses to endorse our note for $45 million to help us build Beechwood.

The answer given by the Prime Minister was that we did not need money; our finances were good. In making this statement the Prime Minister missed the point entirely. We could borrow the money, and we did. Our finances were solid because since 1952 we have had a Conservative government which re-established them. But, Mr. Speaker, in wishing to get the endorsement of the federal government for this loan we wanted to save the difference between the high rate of interest we have to pay without the federal government's endorsement and the rate we would have to pay with it. On the $211 million the difference in interest will be costing New Brunswick something like $3 million a year. This $3 million a year is what the government of New Brunswick wanted to save.

Furthermore, by saving this amount per year on the interest rate we would be in a position to offer rates on power coming from the Saint John river projects which would be much lower, and thus New Brunswick would be in a better position to compete with power rates charged in the other provinces of Canada. Those are the reasons this endorsement was requested from the federal government. There was no question that we could not borrow the money. There was no question about our finances. It was merely to give us a chance to save some money without costing the taxpayers of Canada 5 cents. It would not have affected the monetary position of Canada in the least. It would have merely given us the opportunity to develop our electric power cheaply and sell it at a much better rate.

Now let us pass to another example of what I would call a downright traitorous attitude toward the Atlantic provinces. The federal Liberal government has refused to build the Chignecto canal, giving the ill-thought out excuse that there is not sufficient need for that canal to build it now. Let me tell this house that if sufficient need does not now exist it is precisely because the federal Liberal government, by its stupidity, has driven those industries out of the maritimes which hitherto depended upon cheap water transportation to the main markets. The lack of cheap transportation is one of the main reasons why our industries, one after another, have been forced to close their doors, forced to the wall by the stupidity of a federal government which will not recognize our continually mounting transportation charges.

Before confederation our natural buying and selling markets were supplied by water, that is by cheap transportation. Confederation removed those markets but promised to bring about conditions in the Atlantic provinces which would permit us to trade profitably in the confederation-made markets of central Canada. Thus, like trying to change the course of the St. Lawrence river itself, confederation tried to make us change our natural trade routes. First came the tall tariff barriers, which removed our natural buying and selling markets to the east and to the south. Then came the mounting transportation costs which did not take into account the guaranteed freight rate differential promised by confederation. As a result we were choked and forced to the wall. Today many of our remaining industries, like Enterprise foundries in Sackville to recall only one, stay in the maritimes only because of a spirit of service and loyalty to the people of the maritime provinces. A location nearer to the confederation-made markets of central Canada would be much more profitable for them.

At the time of confederation it was recognized that the maritimes might gain advantages which would overcome the disadvantages resulting from the removal of our natural trade markets. We had that advantage, and could still have it in cheap transportation by water. In this connection the need for the Chignecto canal was recognized and the building of a ship's railway was undertaken but never completed. Now that power is coming to New Brunswick, industries are looking in our province for sites on which to establish themselves. So long as this federal government keeps killing our industries by "nickeling" us to death with ever increasing transportation costs, with staggering freight rates, and by using every possible device to increase those freight rates, industrial growth in New Brunswick will be stilted and our people will not share equally in the wealth which Canada offers.

Transportation is a federal matter. The Chignecto canal and the building of our much needed ports like Dalhousie, Jacquet River and Saint John, would permit the establishment of numerous industries because cheaper water transportation would be provided. Public statements have been made by leading industrialists in New Brunswick that refineries would be built if the Chignecto canal were built. The Chignecto canal would open up cheap routes to coastwise shipping, to all points east and to the markets to be served by the St. Lawrence seaway. No sooner would the canal be built than the once great need for the canal would become apparent and real again, for the new era of industrial development which has been commenced in New Brunswick would be augmented and given new impetus. The federal government is responsible if the present need for the canal has in part been removed, and it is responsible so long as it does not build this canal to restore that need and fulfil a promise made at the time of confederation.

Now let us look at the new increase in freight rates. Even before the commission decided on the merits of another increase, and before the evidence was presented to back up this new demand, an interim increase of 7 per cent was allowed. When is this government going to stop "nickeling" us to death in the maritimes? This increase is just another example of the contempt for the maritime provinces. But, Mr. Speaker, we know the real reason the government is denying us our right to the Chignecto canal. We know this government is blocking progress in the maritimes in order to keep the Canadian National as the only means of transportation. Does anyone think they can make our people swallow this ridiculous premise and pay the staggering freight rates which are being charged? This government knows that new industries would more than offset the possible but not probable slight, temporary lessening of freight business on the Canadian National if the maritimes were given a chance to prosper and develop by placing at their disposal cheap transportation by water and by rail.

I do not need to explain the guarantees given to the maritimes through the British North America Act, or at the time of confederation, for preferential freight rates to permit us to compete in the confederation-made markets which were forced upon us. Let me say this. This federal Liberal government has not recognized this guarantee and has done nothing to offset the ruinous position in which we are now. On the one hand we are prevented from dealing with our old buying and selling markets because of trade barriers and tariffs. On the other hand we are being denied a competitive trading position because of killing transportation costs to the confederation-made markets of central Canada.

We are blocked no matter which way we turn. We are caught in the vise of federal Liberal indifference. I, for one, am on the verge of crying out, like Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland, "Give us a square deal or count us out". Stop selling us down the river or get out of the way and let us look after our own affairs to our own best interests. Stop killing us, or make road for us to pass. It is a fortunate thing for us that the next elections are not far away, for as soon as this country gets the government it deserves, a Conservative government under the indomitable leadership of our leader, we will have a new deal and justice will be done to the Atlantic provinces for the first time in our history.

What else but laziness, indifference and apathy prevent the federal government from taking steps to bring about the building of that Campbellton-Cross Point bridge about which the Prime Minister encouraged us to talk five years ago? The Minister of Public Works himself has mentioned to me the enthusiastic letters he received from the premier of my province demanding the bridge, which would open up the whole north shore to more and more trade between the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick. It would be a tremendous defence asset, for the only link between Quebec and New Brunswick at the present time is that old, antiquated Matapedia bridge which threatens to collapse every spring and fall. Quebec farmers would find ready markets, and there would be an interchange of commerce which has never existed between our two provinces. The truckers of pulpwood to our mills would be greatly helped, not to mention the great opportunities we would have to use for transportation the new good roads of New Brunswick and Quebec.

The ferry service is most inadequate; it is outdated, a time killer; it is a danger every spring and fall. The bridge would cost hardly more than $1 million, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce says is nothing. The Sugar Loaf mountain, which contains millions of tons of solid rock, could be had for the asking to build the solid stretches of the bridge, and a comparatively small steel span is all that would be needed in the middle.

"What's a million dollars?", says the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Let me tell him that it is more than we ever got from this government, in my riding, until this year. This is, of course, also excepting the $100,000 or so the federal Liberals put into Madawaska county to try to defeat the Conservative candidates in the last election. This was the first sign of federal assistance we ever got in Madawaska, and it is too bad that it came in the form of gin, whisky, nylon stockings and boxes of chocolates. But our people were far too intelligent to sell their right to vote for gin or nylon stockings, and the Liberal candidates got what they deserved, a well earned and well merited defeat.

The position of this government is ridiculous in regard to the maritime provinces. I repeat what I have often said. A few men are running this country, supported by this tremendous Liberal majority. This government gives me the impression that it is running a school for trained seals, and so long as the Liberal members keep on acting like trained seals, bowing subserviently up and down for the herring held before their noses, they can expect to get the famous S.S.S., that great title in Liberal political life, the safe seat somewhere. For this long-sought S.S.S. and more and more election slush funds, they sell their constituents down the river. This has been the characteristic hallmark of Liberal representation by maritime Liberal members in this house. But by their silence and inactive conduct they give the erroneous impression that all is well in the maritimes.

Request for Election and Senate Reform

The Prime Minister has on two occasions now, once in his letter of January 14, 1955, and in his statement in Toronto at the convention some months ago, indicated in no uncertain terms the recognition by his government of the plight of the maritime provinces. This federal government, with the Minister of Labour sitting idly by, has on the one hand recognized the need for financial help and with the other hand has kept on slapping the maritimes in the face, as it has been slapping us in the face for the past 20 years.

Our Senate is hardly anything any more. It is just another S. S. S., another safe seat somewhere for Liberal politicians. It is the hallmark of Liberal service. Thus we have a Senate packed by old Liberal stand-bys and money-hungry buccaneers who are often in their dotage when they reach the Senate and merely act as a rubber stamp for whatever measures may be sent to it. It has become a tarnished badge of respectability for the whims of the government big-wigs in their puerile efforts to cover up their sinful inefficiency. We have no room in our democracy for such an expensive rubber stamp.

Certainly if we are to provide Canada with the government it deserves we must make the Senate a legislative body representative of the wishes of the people. This would only be brought about by an elective Senate, or in part an elective Senate. Let the Senators be responsible to the people who would elect them, and not be appointed to anoint with the cloak of respectability such legislation as the infamous pipe-line bill. Had we had a responsible, independent Senate, debate would not have been curtailed, and the Liberal members of the Senate would not have had to make the statements they did.

The need for Senate reform has been recognized by all leaders of all political parties, but so far the government has not shown the courage needed to call a conference of the provinces to deal with this very long-overdue reform. This is just another pitiable example of Liberal neglect.

It is most unfortunate, but there is one bright picture on the horizon as far as my province is concerned. I learned yesterday that the rat-infested station and freight shed at Edmundston will be replaced in 1957 and that the plans have now been completed. I wish to congratulate the Minister of Transport for having answered this request. Nevertheless I wish to say this. The jumping, squirming, flipper-flapping jack in the box, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, could very well hightail back to the squid-jigging grounds of Newfoundland and help some poor fisherman bail out his boat. He would be more useful there than he is in this house.

[Mr. Van Horne.]

There is one thing I wish to bring out at this time. I just returned from my riding. Some messenger from the Department of Labour, a Mr. Bosse, got up and made the statement at Edmundston before some Liberal assembly that there never would be a new station at Edmundston. He said, "Regardless of what the government wants to do, I am going to block it." Mr. Speaker, it has got to a sad point in the history of this country when messengers of the minister and his department are going to tell the people of this country what the government is going to do and what parliament is here for.

It is apparent that the federal government refuses to recognize the financial position which has been imposed by confederation upon New Brunswick, either through a refusal to learn the facts or because of a subversive attitude toward the government of the province of New Brunswick. Either reason, or a combination of both reasons, place the choking problem right on the doorstep of New Brunswick's representative in the government, the Minister of Labour. Either he has acquiesced where he should have spoken up and fought for the province, or he acted in unison with men like the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) in their expressed determination to block progress in my province merely because the people of my province had the good sense to throw out that decadent Liberal government in 1952 and replace it with the leadership we now have.

The Minister of Labour knew and was aware of the government policy, as stated in the Prime Minister's letter of January 14, 1955, which reads:

> The present government has no intention of abandoning the objective of the tax rental agreements which is to make it financially possible for all the provinces whatever their tax base to perform their constitutional functions themselves and to provide a reasonable Canadian level of provincial services without an abnormal burden of taxation.

We agree with this statement of policy. But here is where the Minister of Labour should have intervened with effectiveness. By the letters of the Prime Minister of January 6, 1956, and January 18, 1956, New Brunswick is being denied the right—and this was confirmed by the Prime Minister at the last interprovincial conference—to provide a reasonable level of provincial services without an abnormal burden of taxation. I have the figures here, with the schedules for all the taxes New Brunswick is forced to impose, and they prove conclusively that the over-all level of the New Brunswick tax rate is substantially higher than in any other province. Our premier, Hon. Hugh John Flemming, submitted to the last interprovincial conference schedules and tabulations which prove that the burden of taxation in New Brunswick is the most onerous of any province in Canada.

In relation to the personal income of the people of New Brunswick, figures for 1953 show that our people had to pay 41 per cent more in taxes out of personal income than the average Canadian. Again we hold the Minister of Labour responsible for endorsing a federal government which keeps in the vise of federal indifference and antagonism the very province he is appointed to represent. I should like to quote an observation by our premier during the last interprovincial conference, when he said:

> It is an essential requirement of any provincial government to so manage its affairs that the credit of the province is maintained on a sound basis. This is particularly true for a province in the position of New Brunswick which at the moment is faced with very substantial, indeed I might say staggering, capital expenditures for the development of electric generating facilities, both hydro and thermal, to meet the needs of the new mining developments, the expansion of the pulp and paper industry and to provide the power required for the increase in service and secondary industries which these developments will normally bring in their train.

This government, with the Minister of Labour acquiescing and sitting idly by, has thus on the one hand recognized the need for financial help and with the other hand has kept on slapping New Brunswick in the face as it has been doing for the past 20 years. This attitude of the federal government is crippling the economic development of New Brunswick. Our expenditures, which must not exceed our revenues from all sources, are so limited that urgent essential services must be denied the people of my province. Thus the province of New Brunswick lies crippled, maimed and limping while Canada goes ahead and the Liberal representation from New Brunswick, headed by the Minister of Labour, keep right on being good little Liberal boys, seen but not heard.

The plight of New Brunswick does not stop with the refusal of federal financial assistance to permit the development of hydroelectric power. The refusal of the federal government to help New Brunswick has resulted in a reduction or postponement of essential services involving real sacrifices for the people of New Brunswick. The premier of New Brunswick told the Prime Minister about this at the last interprovincial conference, and these were his words:

> However, the rebuilding of a bridge which is inadequate and unsafe can only be postponed by expensive and temporary repairs, and only for a time; there is a definite limit to overcrowding in schools and the making-do with untrained teachers and inadequate facilities; to the patching of roads which are too narrow and winding to take modern traffic, and have an inadequate base, and so on. This limit, in New Brunswick, has been reached. For instance, for the coming year, we have to postpone certain road construction which is very greatly needed.

Needless to say the premier of my province has performed a fiscal miracle in doing as much in the past three years as had been done in the previous 17. But quite apart from the crippling consequences to our physical needs, education in New Brunswick is forced to suffer from lack of sufficient federal aid. In 1951 New Brunswick was spending $126·70 per pupil against a national average of $166·31. The needs of education in New Brunswick are apparent for all to see; a visit to most any of our back-country schools will confirm this, but it is also an indisputable fact that on an average New Brunswickers are being forced to pay, on a personal income basis, almost twice as much as is paid right across Canada.

In other words we have reached the limit in our ability to be taxed in New Brunswick. Even with the tax burden we bear—sales tax 3 per cent, tobacco tax 10 per cent, gasoline tax 15 cents per gallon, etc.—we cannot ever hope to come even close to providing the services and facilities in New Brunswick which would put our standard of living and opportunities for our children on a par with the national level.

I wish to refer to the synoptic report of the provincial legislature of the province of New Brunswick. This report is prepared by A. Malcolm McGowan, who has done a magnificent job in preserving the record of the debates in the provincial house in New Brunswick. In 1953 it very conclusively showed that the per capita income in New Brunswick was $757 compared with $1,465 for the province of Ontario. In other words our per capita income is about half that of Ontario, it is about half that of British Columbia, and it is about 90 per cent that of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Quebec.

We can do all the wishful thinking we care to, but the conclusion remains the same. Because of the position into which the federal government has forced us, New Brunswick is unable to provide her people with the opportunities and services available to citizens in all other provinces of this country. Confederation guaranteed that we would not be in such an inferior position. Mr. Speaker, there is only one solution under our present set-up, and that is to help us attain the same standards of living and opportunity which are enjoyed in Ontario, for instance. In January, 1955, the federal government recognized this fact and said it was willing to do something about it for the four Atlantic provinces; but in January, 1956, it changed its mind and refused to grant the assistance needed and to some extent promised only a year ago.

There is only one answer to this attitude of arrogance and indifference. The time has come for the people of Canada to tell the federal government by their votes that if it will not do its duty toward the people of the maritime provinces, then it is time it must be made to stand aside and make way for a better government. Millions of voices across this great country cry for a chance to tell the government that we need a better deal.

Last winter I spent considerable time in the unemployment insurance office in Campbellton and Edmundston, and I personally looked into hundreds of cases where the fathers of hungry children had been waiting for weeks on end, in some cases for eight weeks, for the first unemployment insurance cheques. I personally visited homes all the way from Jacquet River to the far stretches of Madawaska county where the wives and children lived in abject poverty while the breadwinner waited patiently for the unemployment insurance cheque which never came until many weeks too late.

In many cases they complied with the very stupid directive forcing them to go to far-away places to cut pulpwood under conditions similar to those existing in Siberia. Some of them went; and quite apart from being forced to live under the most miserable conditions, they did not earn enough to pay their fares back home let alone provide for their families. Hundreds of men were ordered to go to La Tuque and many of them refused, and even the officials of the unemployment insurance offices themselves did not blame them in any way. Those who were smart enough to know what to answer were able to overcome the delay caused by the regulations and were able to get their unemployment insurance cheques after two or three weeks' delay, but hundreds of people who because of lack of education were not able to answer were cut off indefinitely and their cases originating many months ago are only now being settled. As the Minister of Labour himself answered me in writing, there were 7,102 of those cases which had to be referred to other offices where delays were encountered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my duty to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McGregor: Let us have a repetition of your 1935 speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): What was that?

[Mr. Van Horne.]

Mr. McGregor: You heard it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): No, I did not, sir.

Mr. McGregor: Give us a repetition of your 1935 speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to the same speech that has been delivered in this chamber on every occasion that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has visited us since he has been elected.

Mrs. Shipley: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not interrupt the hon. member, but he brought my name into this question and I want to deal with this matter for a few minutes. I have not interrupted anyone, so I shall just speak about this briefly.

Mr. Van Horne: Our problems have not been solved since I came here.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are a jumping jack, all right.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I realize that after sending his speech up to the press gallery last night the hon. member was very disappointed that he did not get an opportunity to speak. I realize it was a terrific disappointment, because he took three weeks at home to carefully prepare the speech; and because it is near payday we expected him to visit us again after spending those three weeks at home preparing the speech.

Mr. Van Horne: You know very well that we have more to do than to listen to this dim-witted, foul-mouthed saboteur of New Brunswick. You are a disgrace to this house. Your people will tell you what they think about you in the next election.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have heard that before.

Mr. Van Horne: You are a saboteur as far as New Brunswick is concerned; a traitor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member who has the floor may not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Ignorance never seems to affect me very much, Mr. Speaker, and there has been a great display of ignorance in the last two or three minutes. We have had similar displays on various occasions since the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska came here.

The hon. member mentioned in his remarks the 17 years of Liberal rule in the province of New Brunswick prior to 1952, but when he is able to advise me that they have been able to keep a Conservative government in that province for 17 years I invite him to come back to me and talk; because—although it takes a little time—they will be put out. When they do, it will be like 1952, when they had five members out of 52. I notice that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) last night spoke about this great victory they had. In New Brunswick in 1952 they were only able to elect five members out of 52, and that time will come again, because I have never yet seen the Tory that, given rope enough, will not hang himself.

The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has also been very critical of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I shall ask him to go back over the record since 1935, and then go back over the record since the time of confederation, and show me where any person in the political life of this country has ever made a greater contribution in that period of years or any other period of years. I feel that any member who criticizes the Right Hon. C. D. Howe is critizing a man who has done more to build this country of ours into what we have to enjoy today than any other Canadian in the history of this country. You may call it anything you wish; I have my opinion and many other Canadians have their opinions. When this election they are so anxious about takes place, he will be sitting over there with 175 Liberals behind him.

An hon. Member: But you may not be.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I shall take my chance. I heard the same thing before the last election, that the Conservatives would sweep the country, but when the smoke-screen had cleared we came back.

Mr. Van Horne: Give us a new speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not believe I have ever interrupted the hon. member as long as he has been here, but because I say something he does not like he does not want me to go ahead.

Mr. Van Horne: Give us a new speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am referring to the speeches the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has given us when he has decided to visit us on a few occasions. Again today it is the same old theme song, bitterly critical of the loans this country has made to the unfortunate countries of the world. We have heard that on half a dozen different occasions since he came here. I am sure that those sitting with him in that group do not sympathize with those ideas. Any contributions we have made towards countries less fortunate than ourselves are, I believe, a step in the right direction. If we ever hope to have peace in this world, the only way that can come about is by helping your friends and neighours; it can come about in no other way.

Mr. Van Horne: We want help in New Brunswick. Give us a square deal.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is all I have heard from the Tories down there since they took over in 1952. When they took over in 1952 there was more revenue than they knew what to do with. The Liberals were wasting it. Ever since then, they have been going around hat in hand.

Mr. Van Horne: They did better than the Liberals.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Just sit down and take it for a minute.

An hon. Member: Hornblower.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska informs us the financial standing of New Brunswick is very good.

Mr. Van Horne: Better than when your people were there.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You want to talk all the time. If you will listen for a minute, I shall explain what the position is. The position is better today because of the assistance the province is receiving from this government, and for no other reason. The subsidy payments to our province are nearly $7 million greater than in 1952.

Mr. Van Horne: Look what you are taking out of it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): We are taking nothing out of it. We put $70 million in last year and—

Mr. Van Horne: Why don't you go to school?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not have the opportunity to go to school like some people, but I can express my opinion as well as you can with all your schooling. In some cases an education is wasted, and I have seen examples of it in this house recently. The improvement financially, of which I speak in our province, is a result of the subsidy payments from this government to our provincial government in New Brunswick. Back in 1952 they wanted to do away completely with the sales tax.

Mr. Van Horne: That is another falsehood.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): In 1954 they took off 1 per cent of the sales tax.

Mr. Van Horne: You can tell more lies in a shorter time. I shall listen to no more.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am pleased you are leaving your seat.

An hon. Member: The train is leaving at six o'clock.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It is train time, I know. The train leaves at 4.25. The hon. member has also been critical of what he calls our normal trading relations, and he mentioned trade barriers. The party with which the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is associated are very strong believers in higher tariffs and have been since confederation.

Mr. Fleming: Don't be silly.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member for Eglinton says, "Don't be silly." Then I shall give one example. In the election that was called in 1911, what action was taken at that particular time by the Tories in this country?

Mr. Brooks: What action was taken by the people?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am not questioning that at all; they had a perfect right to do as they liked. What did the Tories do? The old flag was waved from Newfoundland to British Columbia, and they said, "No truck or trade with the Yankees." I remember that. Today, in every speech they make they are criticizing something in connection with the dealings between the United States and Canada. My hon. friend from Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) made the same reference. He said:

> . . . the American-influenced drawl of the hon. member for Charlotte . . .

Those are the exact words he used; I took them out of Hansard. My drawl may be American influenced, but I can assure this house I am not ashamed of that.

Mr. Van Horne: That is from smuggling cigarettes.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have smuggled as much as you have but not one bit more. But I am honest about it and you are not.

Mr. Van Horne: I do not smoke.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There are plenty of other materials you can take out.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, the member has just said that another member of the house is not honest. Surely we have not come to the point where that can pass.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I would like to say to the hon. member that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska spoke for 40 minutes and at no time did I interrupt him.

[Mr. Van Horne.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was a direct allegation that one member was not honest. Of course, that will have to be withdrawn.

Mr. Harris: On the same point of order, may I point out that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska said that the hon. member for Charlotte could tell more lies in one sentence, and I lost the rest of it after that. So I think he ought to withdraw that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not hear the remark to which the minister has just referred. If such statements were made, they will, of course, also have to be withdrawn.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I would rather have them on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps we can clear this up one stage at a time. I understand that the hon. member for Charlotte is withdrawing the allegation to which I refer.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should be pleased to, but I should like to have the other statement left on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska withdrawing his remark also?

Mr. Van Horne: No, I do not think I shall withdraw it.

Mr. Pickersgill: How about withdrawing yourself?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member has used the term "lie" or "liar" with respect to another member, he must of course understand that he must withdraw it, and I hope he will co-operate.

Mr. Van Horne: The hon. member for Charlotte made that remark—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member has withdrawn?

Mr. Van Horne: No, I shall let it stand. I am going to make a statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member used a certain expression which I am sure on reflection he will wish to withdraw. On several occasions this afternoon we have heard the word "falsehood". I think that on one or two occasions I have not objected to that remark, but I think most of us will agree that an allegation that another member is telling lies is not the proper kind of language to be used in this house, and I hope the hon. member will co-operate.

Mr. Van Horne: Well, we cannot stand this saboteur of New Brunswick. It has got to the point in this house that every time we get up to make a plea for New Brunswick this little pipsqueak gets up and tries to distort everything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We had a previous ruling this afternoon on the word "distortion". I am not going to object to it in the way the hon. member has just used it but I really think that he should withdraw the allegation to which the minister referred after the hon. member for Charlotte so freely withdrew his allegation. It is simply a courtesy between one member and another.

Mr. Van Horne: But Mr. Speaker, this man was talking about high tariff barriers and I asked him merely, was that a reason why he should have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Do I understand that the hon. member is withdrawing the words to which objection was being taken? If so, the hon. member for Charlotte should continue his speech, for after all he has the floor.

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, since this little tangle has been unravelled I will start again. The hon. member has said that he did not refer to trade barriers and to tariffs. I may have misunderstood him. However, I will read Hansard tomorrow. I was sure and I still feel quite sure that he referred to trade barriers and tariffs as they affect the province of New Brunswick and the maritime provinces.

Mr. Van Horne: That is why you said you had to smuggle.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am just suggesting that I thought that was what the hon. member said but I will watch Hansard carefully to see that it is as it was said. Why there is this attitude on the part of the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) and others in his group towards our friends to the south is beyond my comprehension. They fail to realize the fortunate position we in this country are in through having 160 million friendly people of our own kind and creed to the south of us with an undefended border of 3,500 miles, and why they try to criticize and make little of that fact is beyond my understanding. These people are friends of mine. They always have been and I hope they will continue to be for many more years to come.

I will leave that as it is. I want to deal for a few minutes with some statements made last evening by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). He made reference to my American-influenced drawl. That would prompt me to remind the hon. member that I was not born with a silver spoon in my mouth. Throughout my lifetime I have depended to a great extent for my bread and butter on those friends of mine to the south, and a great portion of the population of the county from which I come still depends on that same source for their living. That is why I have such a high regard for those people. In my dealings with them I have nothing to say but the best. Perhaps if the hon. member for Saint John-Albert had been obliged to go out and make a living for himself with his two hands in similar circumstances he might have had a different appreciation of those good friends of ours.

I have perhaps as many friends and relatives over the border as I have in my own country. I go back and forth over the border and I visit them. The only thing I can say is that two countries could not be found in any part of the world that are more alike than our two countries, and the closer we are together, the more friendly we are with one another, the better I like it. The more United States capital that comes in here to develop this country the better I like it. There is not a country in the world from which I would rather see capital come than from our neighbours to the south.

I have seen some of the efforts they have made in their own country, and in my opinion we are in the same position today as the United States was 30 or 40 years ago. We have raw materials which they need and we do not have the cash in Canada to develop all these raw materials and all the industries that we need in our country today. That capital must come from somewhere. Why should it not come from the United States, the people who are just across this imaginary line from us?

When the hon. member for Saint John-Albert was speaking last night he also made a few predictions about the result of the next federal election. These forecasts have been made on three different occasions since I have been here. I remember that prior to the 1953 election we were told that we might be able to hold two seats in New Brunswick. Well, we did a little better than that, and I would say without any hesitation in the world that when the ballots are counted after the next federal election we will have as many seats as we have now and I think one or two more.

Mr. Van Horne: Where?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Whistling through the cemetery may salve a fellow's conscience, but whistle as you like there is not a Conservative member from New Brunswick today who will get an acclamation. He will have to go out and fight.

Mr. Pallett: That is an admission by itself.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is an admission by itself, and I can assure you that the maritime provinces will return as many or more members after the next election as there are in the House of Commons today. There is every reason why they should do so.

Mr. Van Horne: Talk about the provincial election.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have talked about that and I will talk about it again. Don't worry. The citizens of the province of New Brunswick do not lose sight of the facts. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert may try to convince them of the lack of attention by the federal government to the maritime provinces, but the maritime provinces are like other parts of Canada. There is no question that there are things that we want and need, but when any member gets up here and says that the federal government has ignored the maritime provinces he is saying something that is not true because, as I stated a few minutes ago, in 1955 the federal government spent over $130 million in the province of New Brunswick. The provincial legislature took from the citizens of our province in taxes about $25 million. Therefore the federal government spent five times the amount in my province that the provincial government took from the taxpayers.

Mr. Van Horne: What did we give up with respect to Sir James Dunn's succession duties?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You did not give up anything because that has been paid over and over by the grant you have received. Let me tell my hon. friend that there will be $19 million that will be paid to the province of New Brunswick this year, but if these tax fields were given back to the province of New Brunswick the province could only collect about $6 million from the same source. Therefore the federal government is giving nearly $14 million as a gift. The hon. member cannot tell me what the tax rental agreement means to my province. He had better study it a little. Perhaps he would then be in a better position to discuss it.

Mr. Hodgson: How much taxes did the federal government take out of your province in the same period?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have the figures but I cannot quote them from memory. However, I will say that they took out far less than they turned back.

Mr. Brooks: On a point of order, the hon. member has said something that is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Not at all.

[Mr. Pallett.]

Mr. Brooks: The fact is that the province of New Brunswick has paid over twice what has been returned to it. I have looked up the figures myself.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that what the hon. member is saying is certainly incorrect because last year nearly double was put back into the province compared with what was taken out.

Mr. Brooks: I got the figures from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Hardie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are you going to allow the opposition to put closure on every Liberal speaker who stands up by making interjections?

Mr. Brooks: We are stating the facts.

Mr. Hardie: They are the ones who are putting on the gag.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There is one reason the citizens of my province are very much interested in a federal election and I want to explain it. I have spoken of the $19 million which we will receive this year under the federal subvention. Every member in the house knows that the agreements between the provinces and the federal government were opposed in every way they could be opposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). He used every argument he could bring to bear against these agreements. Therefore I take it that if he ever became prime minister he would discard them completely. Where would we be in New Brunswick without that subsidy payment from Ottawa?

Mr. Brooks: Don't talk nonsense.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am going to ask the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) to keep still for a moment and not interrupt. He loves to hand it out with that sanctimonious voice of his. He comes begging, begging and begging, but when the slightest bit of criticism is offered in reply to him he just cannot take it. He has got to sit there and growl, growl, growl all the time. I can assure you that all the people of New Brunswick do not have the opinion that the Tories have, and they will have a full realization of that when the ballots are counted in the next federal election. The people down there are not beggars. It is the provincial government that are the beggars. They have been begging ever since they took office in 1952. It has been a case of beg, beg, beg. I want to suggest right here—so it will be on the record—that if the provincial government in New Brunswick have an idea that all I am doing here is to be a tax collecting agency for provincial legislatures, they have got the wrong member to deal with. I did not come here to be a tax collecting agent for the provinces.

When people try to tell me—Tories or anyone else—that we are not being treated fairly, I must disagree. I know there are things that we need. I recognize that fact. But let me suggest to the hon member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) and the other Tory members here from New Brunswick that conditions are a great deal different now in New Brunswick than they were during the last five-year period that we had Tory rule, and no one can remember it better than I do. I want to mention one other fact when I speak about citizens in my province. Family allowances are of great benefit to the citizens of New Brunswick. No one knows that better than I do. That is another measure that was bitterly opposed by every means that could be found by the leader of the official opposition. It is on record all over this country. It is on the radio. It is in the press. It is in the records of the legislature in Toronto. It is everywhere. He said he would oppose it as long as he could stand on his feet. There are a great many people in my province who believe that if he ever became prime minister —and I do not believe he ever will—that is another benefit that we might expect to lose.

Mr. Van Horne: That is because of the lies you have told down there.

An hon. Member: Where is the withdrawal?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have suggested that this statement was made by the leader of the official opposition in connection with family allowances all across this country of ours. At this point let me say that it is not necessary to bring a tape recording into the lobbies in order to find out whether that is correct. It is in print on a good many different occasions, in radio speeches, in speeches in the legislature of Ontario and in other parts of Canada. Hence people down there are suspicious, and well they might be suspicious. I can look back on that period from 1930 to 1935 and what happened then. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska speaks about hard times. I can assure him that if he could only look back to those years, those hungry 30's, he would realize what real hard times were. In his remarks today—and he was perhaps out of order because he had been ruled out of order—he made mention of the fact of the money that was lent to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. We realize that has been an issue for the Tories for several weeks back. But I wonder whether he would ever stop to realize during this period I have mentioned—those hungry 30's—the loan that was given to the C.P.R. by the prime minister of this country at that time, that was made by order in council. It was not tabled until the next session of parliament but it constituted 20 per cent of the total revenue of this country, and as I stated in the house here a few days ago, the C.P.R. at that time was owned over 80 per cent outside of Canada. I never heard any criticism of that, but that is what transpired in 1933. It was not even of sufficient importance to call parliament together. The loan was made by order in council and, as I say, it constituted one-fifth or 20 per cent of our total revenue in that particular year.

An hon. Member: It was not the same thing.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): No; it was not the same thing because a Tory did it. That is exactly the point.

An hon. Member: They can do no wrong.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time than I had intended.

Mr. Brooks: I have heard all that so often. For 15 years I have heard the same speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I will suggest again to the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska, since he has been so sarcastic, that I did not have a written speech that I had sent up to the press gallery before hand and then had to call it back because I did not get a chance to speak. I did not have to write a speech.

Mr. Brooks: You make the one speech.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is all I am obliged to make to reply to the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska or the hon. member for Royal because they make the same speeches every time they get to their feet. All I ever hear from either of them is, in what is called plain language, bellyaching. I picked up a little note in the Citizen last night. It says that any fool can criticize and condemn and most fools do. That does not apply to my hon. friends, Mr. Speaker; but to me there is a great deal of food for thought in that statement.

Before I leave Ottawa this session I should like to hear one Tory member from New Brunswick get to his feet and make one single constructive speech before this parliament adjourns. I should like to hear one constructive speech instead of just criticism, bellyaching and begging all the time.

An hon. Member: What do you call it?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is all I listen to. I am obliged to get up after listening to some of the things that have been put on the record by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska which it should not be necessary that he put on the record because he has plenty of time at his disposal. He has plenty of time in which to prepare a speech. As to the one he made today, there was plenty of preparation put on it, but it is the same material he used on six or seven different occasions. He spoke about the money that was being spent down there at some particular spot in his constituency. May I tell him before I resume my seat that during this last provincial election campaign which just finished a week ago in the section from which I come the Tories put on lobster dinners and they put on turkey dinners. They put on any kind of dinner that they wanted. I was at Grand Manan island and I looked in the auditorium of the school and found they had prepared for 150 lobster dinners paid for by the Tories. There were free moving pictures. There was everything provided for free dances.

The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska tells about the great need of assistance down in the section from which he comes. I can assure him that if one-tenth of what they spent there on the election campaign had been used to alleviate that sort of situation, conditions in his own county might be a great deal better. I do not want him to tell me about where the Liberals wasted money because I was down there for a few days and in those few days I saw money being spent in an election campaign as it never has been spent before in the province of New Brunswick since it has been established. So do not tell me about what they cannot do, that they cannot find money for this or that they cannot find money for that. There is plenty to use in an election campaign. But after it is over, it is the same thing. They went down there and told us in New Brunswick that everything was well; that we did not have a worry in the world; everything was going well; we could finance the whole situation ourselves, we did not have to depend on anyone else. But the very minute the ballots were counted what do they do? They wait a few days, then prepare a speech, come back here, with the hat again to pass around among the federal Liberals here in order to get a little more assistance for our province.

In closing I just want to say again that I realize that we need assistance with respect to different things down there but I believe that those who are sincerely seeking that assistance might go about it in a different way. They cannot continually condemn, day after day and week after week. I have never heard one of them speak a kind word in connection with anything the federal government has ever done, not one single kind word. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) who is sitting there now has an enormous army camp down there where well over $100 million has been spent. But I have yet to hear him make a kind remark in connection with it, and it is in his own constituency. A great deal of the prosperity that is enjoyed in that area is based on the fact that we have that army camp there.

Mr. Brooks: And I suppose you did not want it in your constituency?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Who did not?

Mr. Brooks: You did not.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I certainly did want it. I fought as hard as I could for it, and I only wish it were in my constituency today. This is the thanks we get.

Mr. Brooks: Ah-h.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You heard that remark, Mr. Speaker. He said "ah-h". But if that camp had been built by the Tories he would be up on his feet now, flinging his arms around and shouting, "Look what we did for the province of New Brunswick". But because it was built while we had a Liberal government and it would have to be during that time because we will never have another Tory government—he is sore and it is just of no benefit to anyone. I am going to ask him again—

Mr. Brooks: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member says I said the army camp was of no benefit to anyone. He never heard me make such a statement and I never made such a statement in this house or anywhere else.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not say that. I said he had never given any credit to anyone for it. I did not say that you said it was no good.

Mr. Van Horne: That is another falsehood.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You misunderstood me.

Mr. Brooks: I want to correct another statement. I was the first one who requested that an army camp be established in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I want to contradict that immediately because I knew there would be an army camp in New Brunswick six months before the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) ever heard of it, so that little bit of political propaganda will not go over.

Before I resume my seat—

Mr. Brooks: The records can prove it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The records might prove it, but you know we who sit on the government side do not go around boasting. There are so many things we know about that we do not go around boasting. Questions are asked here in the house and we already know the answers. I have seen the hon. member for Royal get up and ask about the Passamaquoddy dam. He has no interest in the Passamaquoddy dam, not one-tenth of the interest that I have. He got up and asked a question and I had the answer. He thinks he is doing a great job when he gets up, as I have seen him do, and say, "I should like to ask the Secretary of State . . ." this or that. Then, the Saint John Telegraph-Journal headlines the question and says this shows the interest the member takes, but I had known two weeks before he asked his question.

Before I resume my seat I have these figures that I want to give. The total collections in the province of New Brunswick for 1954-55 from all sources amounted to $45 million. Now, that is what we took out from all sources, in taxation to the federal government. We put back $130 million and I will ask the member to judge if we are getting a raw deal.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask the hon. member where he gets those figures.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have them in my office, but I know they will be the same.

Mr. Brooks: He gets them from his office, but I got mine from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Of course, I would realize that the figures the hon. member for Royal has and the figures I have would not agree. I am going to suggest to him that he get up in a better mood than he is usually in and give us one speech, even if it is only for five minutes, giving this government which has done so much for the Canadian people one little bit of credit, and then I will go home happy.

Mr. Bell: You will never be happy after June 18.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): In rising to take part in this debate, I should like to take a little time to see if we cannot get away from the provincial elections. I have been sitting here wondering if possibly the purpose of this motion was the discussion of some of the provincial elections. However, let me read it to you so it will be on Hansard:

> In the opinion of this house the Prime Minister should give immediate consideration to the advisability of bringing about the dissolution of this parliament and the calling of a general election as soon as possible.

I just wish to say one or two words about the underlying principle of this motion, which is not that of non-confidence as we ordinarily understand it, but which is rather part of the unscrupulous behaviour of the Conservative party as expressed by them during the pipe line debate. We did not stoop to such low levels then, nor will we now, no matter what the disguise might be. Therefore, we Social Crediters will vote against this motion, knowing what it involves. We have voted non-confidence in this government and in the Liberal party on other occasions and we shall probably do so again but it will be done in a straightforward manner.

I can recall that during the first session we had after the last election the Conservative members were claiming that the government should go to the country. Last year I will bet there were 100 occasions upon which they said the government should call an election. I do not see what they hope to benefit from it, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure the people of Canada generally will not return as many Conservatives next time as they did the last time. I quite understand—

Mr. Hodgson: You cannot see it because you are in the same bed with the Liberals.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): —the eagerness of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) to go to the country now. The reason is apparent because he has failed in two general elections to make any material improvement in the Conservative party and if he does not make a better showing the next time then the Conservatives will kick him out. He need not think for one moment that we are going to be drawn into such a net as that and vote for this unscrupulous motion.

Now, I want to turn my attention to a problem which I think it would have been more in keeping with the Conservative party to have made a motion about rather than a motion asking for a general election, which they really do not want. I refer to the question of the recent increase in freight rates. May I say to some of the Conservative members from New Brunswick and the maritimes generally that what I am about to say concerning these increased freight rates applies just as much to the maritimes as it does to western Canada. I would have thought, since the matter is so important to the maritimes, they might have been giving some consideration to it and in that way help the people of the maritimes more by relieving them of this unnecessary increase in freight rates rather than appealing for another federal election.

This recent request by the railways for a 15 per cent increase in general freight rates is one that is going to affect all of Canada.

It is not going to affect central Canada, Ontario and Quebec as much as it does the other part of Canada, for very obvious reasons with which I shall deal later. The board of transport commissioners decided, without a full and complete hearing, to grant this interim 7 per cent increase. As I say, this was done without ever hearing the completed appeal from the provinces, seven of which were protesting. It is rather obvious how that came about. When this 15 per cent, seven per cent of which is already applied, is levied it is going to be levied not on the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, because they are in that area which is considered to be the competitive area. The railways are allowed by law, under any general freight rate increase, to apply that increase in the non-competitive areas. These non-competitive areas are the maritime provinces and western Canada. Once again we are going to bear the burden of these tremendous railway freight increases.

It would have seemed rather fitting, Mr. Speaker, if the board of transport commissioners had refused to grant any interim increase until the provinces were able to make their complete case. Of course, there were submissions made to the board of transport commissioners but it was on June 18 that this interim increase of 7 per cent was granted. As I say, seven of the provinces had protested, and the only ones who did not were Ontario and Quebec. May I just ask the Conservative members in this house from the maritimes why they have not heard their leader come out and complain against this increase? We have heard lots of complaints in the last few days about the pipe line because western Canada was going to get some benefit from that. Now, since Ontario and Quebec are going to get the major advantage from this increase you have not heard the leader of the Conservative party say one word and you will not either, make no mistake about it. He knows which side his bread is buttered on.

Mr. Van Horne: Don't be so foolish!

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Did you hear him say anything about it? Of course, you did not. The only reference made by Conservatives was a passing one. You were more concerned with your provincial political affairs than you were with national problems. Don't butt into me when I am talking.

Mr. Charlton: What about yourself on the pipe line?

Mr. Van Horne: You did not get very far in New Brunswick.

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): We did not do the political graft and skulduggery that you did, and I may tell you about that.

Mr. Van Horne: What do you mean?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What do I mean? You are more conversant with that because you were probably one of the ringleaders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I think perhaps—in fact, I am quite sure—that even in the heat of the political exchanges that we are having in this debate a direct accusation of political graft addressed to a member should be unequivocally withdrawn.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did not say that he did. I was saying there was political graft there and the evidence is very clear.

Mr. Dufresne: You said he was one of the ringleaders.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): He probably was.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. Perhaps I might draw the attention of both hon. gentlemen to the fact that I am on my feet. I would ask the hon. member for Bow River, since I have drawn this to his attention, to make it quite clear and specific that he was not accusing the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska of political graft.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did not say he was, Mr. Speaker. If I did not say it, how can I be expected to withdraw something I did not say. He was the one who was interrupting me; I was not bothering him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am not trying to put words in the hon. member's mouth. I am asking him to make it clear because the record will make it appear as though he had charged the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska with political graft. I am asking him to make it clear that he did not so charge.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Charge him with what?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): That he did not charge the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska with political bribery.

Mr. Fleming: And skulduggery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I do not know whether the other term is unparliamentary.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is right. I agree with that. I cannot say that he did not give the loads of gravel, but there were lots given.

Mr. Dufresne: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I do not want to be harsh in this, but I heard the hon. member for Bow River—and I do not know what was in his mind—and I do know how his words will appear when they go out in Hansard. All I am asking him to do, because I must ask him to do it, is to make it clear that he was not making a personal charge of political graft against the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I say unhesitatingly that I did not accuse the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska of driving those gravel trucks. I never saw him on them. I cannot say he had anything to do about political graft; I did not say that.

Mr. Van Horne: On a point of order—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Were you on the gravel trucks? Sit down.

Mr. Van Horne: All the members of the Social Credit party lost their deposits. The hon. member has no right—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order, If the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is rising on a point of order, he will please state it as briefly as possible.

Mr. Van Horne: I insist, Mr. Speaker, that he withdraw his entirely false accusation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member knows as well as I do that what he is doing now is debating. I will say this to the hon. member. If he considers that some statement which has reference to him or to his speech is being misinterpreted by the hon. member for Bow River he will have an opportunity to make his correction at the end of the speech of the hon. member for Bow River. I rose on the personal accusation. That has been made clear. The hon. member for Bow River should now proceed to make his speech.

Mr. Van Horne: He made another one.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was just trying to help those fellows out and they do not appreciate it. What I was trying to point out was that they should get some more support from the members of the Ontario Conservative party to fight this increase in freight rates.

Mr. Dufresne: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Who has the floor?

Mr. Dufresne: I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How many points of order have you?

Mr. Dufresne: The hon. member for Bow River said in his speech that there was some political graft in New Brunswick and that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska was probably one of the ringleaders. I am asking Your Honour to have the hon. member withdraw the whole statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member has clearly done so. He said that he did not make the statement that I accused him of making; that is, that he did not make the personal reference to the hon. member. I am not going to stand here and rule unparliamentary the accusing of a political party of things which perhaps are not too ethical because I am sure that every party in this house has been accused by every other party of doing what should not have been done on many occasions. The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, now that that little flurry is over I would like to point out to the house again that in my judgment one of the most important things that we should be discussing now is the increase in freight rates. I did point out that this increase affects the maritime provinces just as much as it affects the western provinces. I also want to point out that in the application of those freight rates one of the industries affected, particularly the one in western Canada that I am more closely associated with and therefore more familiar with, is that of agriculture. Agriculture stands to lose a great deal because of this increase in freight rates. Industry in central Canada is not in a position similar to that of agriculture because no matter what freight rates may be applied in those competitive areas there is an opportunity for industry to pass the cost along to the consumer, and they do that on every occasion. But agriculture has not that privilege, and therefore we must take very careful cognizance of the increase.

It has been suggested that in Canada the national product this year will be $28 billion. That of agriculture, of course, as everyone knows, is away down. An increase in freight rates at this time is certainly not going to do agriculture very much good. I doubt very much whether the railways really do need the increase that is being granted. Seven per cent has already been granted, and another 8 per cent will probably be granted after the final hearings in September.

Request for Election and Senate Reform

A good article appeared in the Western Producer dealing with whether or not the railways could have absorbed this increase. The railways claim that the increase was necessary because of the increased wages they had to pay to their employees. The Western Producer of Thursday, June 14, had this to say in an article entitled:

Pool Brief Says Railways Should Be Able to Absorb Their Present Increase in Costs

The article says in part:

In the application of the railway association for a 15 per cent increase in general rates, it is contended that railways are not enjoying their just share of the national prosperity. Nevertheless, operating income of the C.P.R., the yardstick company for rate-making purposes, amounted to $37,400,000 during 1955, the highest annual level recorded during the past 10 years with the exception of 1950.

Based on these railway operating statistics and the cash farm income position outlined previously, it is our contention that the Canadian railways are in a much better position to forgo increased freight rates at the present time than is the farm industry to pay another 15 per cent in general rates. We can see no reason why the farm population, which still constitutes a large percentage of our population, should be burdened with further increased expenses which they are unable to pass on to anyone else.

The wheat pool and other organizations representing farm people have appeared before your board in opposition to proposed freight rate increases probably more often than the representatives of most other major industries. The reason is the fact that farm people are much harder hit by increases in freight rates and increases in prices of consumer goods than any other group.

They were not the only ones who were concerned about this. Let me just refer to the Wheat Pool Budget of June 22, which says:

Freight Increase Protested

The Canadian federation of agriculture has protested the granting of an interim increase in freight rates, declaring such a move both unnecessary and unreasonable. In a submission filed with the board of transport commissioners the federation pointed out that the present failure of agriculture to share in the general Canadian prosperity means that a further rate increase would impose an unfair and unreasonable burden on the farmers. Farmers could not pass on the burden of increased freight rates to consumers of farm products, but as heavy users of transportation services, increased freight rates would place a double burden on the farmer. They would reduce the price he receives for his products, and increase the price of farm supplies and equipment.

The C.F.A. said that even if increases were granted they should not apply to farm products. It suggested greater efficiency on the part of the railroads.

I would like to emphasize that last sentence where they say that greater efficiency on the part of the railways might improve their position. Let us have a further look at the reason for this increase in freight rates. The railways have suggested that it was necessary because of the demand of the unions for increased wages; but, of course, in their submission that is not so. Not only do they outline the necessity for more revenue to pay wage increases but they contend, as they always have, that they want to maintain their fixed charges, dividends and surpluses and they want to have sufficient revenue for those purposes. It is not for the sole purpose of meeting the increase in wages which was the result of the last arbitration.

When we are considering the revenue of the railways it is most unfair of the board of transport commissioners not to take into consideration the tremendous amount of revenue which is derived through hotels, the oil rights held by the railways from which they are receiving millions and millions of dollars, and the smelters in British Columbia. None of these revenues are considered when we are granting this ultimate 15 per cent increase in freight rates. These are the sources—the hotels, oil rights, smelters and all the other subsidiaries—from which the railways are receiving a tremendous amount of money. When anyone says the railways of this country are hard up I suggest they have another think coming because the railways are better able to absorb this increase due to wages than are the farmers able to absorb an increase in freight rates on the movement of their products.

Let us just review for a moment the increases the railways have had since the spring of 1948. I refer again to the publication Wheat Pool Budget dated June 22, 1956, which contains a table showing the rate increases granted the railways since the spring of 1948 as follows:

	Increase Per cent	Cumulative Per cent Increase
April 8, 1948	21·0	21·0
Oct. 11, 1949	8·0	30·7
Mar. 23, 1950 (16 per cent in lieu of 8 per cent)	7·4	40·4
June 16, 1950 (20 per cent in lieu of 16 per cent	3·4	45·2
July 26, 1951	12·0	62·6
Feb. 11, 1952 (17 per cent in lieu of 12 per cent)	4·5	69·9
Jan. 1, 1953	9·0	85·2
March 16, 1953	7·0	98·2
July 3, 1956	7·0	112·1

Just see how the railways have been increasing their rates since 1948; and now they come and ask for a further increase.

Mr. Speaker, this is indeed putting western Canada and the maritimes in a most difficult position. It is putting us in a position which makes it next to impossible for us to develop our industries. Some of the maritime speakers referred a moment ago to the lack of industry in the maritimes. How can they ever expect to get an increase in the industrial field if they continue to have these cumulative freight increases piled on their backs? We have had that experience in western Canada. It has been most difficult for us to get any industries located there because of the unfair freight rates. These freight rates impose an unbearable burden upon agriculture, one of our greatest industrial assets in western Canada. There should be some decided improvement in these conditions.

I would like now, Mr. Speaker, to refer to a particular illustration or example of where this has created an unfair burden upon western Canada. I wish to refer to the agreed charges. It is not my intention to criticize the agreed charges at this moment but I want to show how they bear a direct effect upon the burden the maritimes and western Canada will have to carry when this further 8 per cent increase is granted to the railways in compensation, as they say, for the loss of their revenue due to wage increases.

It has been stated that the agreed charges and competitive rates represent about 30 per cent of the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway and that company is used as a yardstick in these arguments. If that is so it is clear that 100 per cent of the increase is going to be applied to 70 per cent of the traffic. In other words, that means that 100 per cent of this proposed increase is going to be applied on 70 per cent of the traffic and that 70 per cent lies in those areas which are in the non-competitive field. That does not include Ontario and Quebec because they are in the competitive area, as I stated previously in my remarks.

Let me refer to one particular item. In the case of farm machinery from Ontario to western Canada there will be charged 100 per cent of this 7 per cent increase—and ultimately of the 15 per cent increase—while automobiles shipped to western Canada from the east will get no increase because they are entrenched under the agreed charges contract. It is an amazing thing that wherever there has been competition from trucks on items that trucks can carry the railways have succeeded in putting all of those under agreed charge contracts, and now when they go to apply this 7 per cent increase in freight rates the agreed charges are not going to be touched because they are already protected by legislation and by contract. The entire 100 per cent of this new increase is going to be applied on these commodities which trucks cannot handle and which are not in the competitive area of Ontario and Quebec and therefore western Canada and the maritimes are going to be soaked the total increase of this new interim payment which the railways are receiving. Surely no one can consider this is a fair and proper deal to put over on other parts of Canada.

Again we have steel plate going to Vancouver which pays $1.10 and takes no increase under this "first aid" treatment, as it was referred to by Mr. Justice Kearney, but Edmonton and Calgary—paying $2.80, over two and a half times as much as Vancouver must pay—must pay the 100 per cent increase.

All this steel plate which is being shipped to the prairie provinces and the maritimes is going to pay the full 100 per cent increase but those commodities which are shipped through to Vancouver are going to get protection because of the agreed charges. No wonder I have condemned agreed charges ever since 1938 because I could see exactly what they were leading to. I ask you, where is the justice of this? How can anyone say this is an honest, impartial application of this 7 per cent increase? The method of applying the freight rates is making it impossible to establish industries in the maritimes and in the western provinces.

In a minute I shall have to conclude, but I want to say this. If there is to be an application of this increase, then it should be applied uniformly across the freight rate structure. That is pointed out by the Edmonton chamber of commerce in this resolution:

> Whereas the Board of Transport Commissioners has announced its plans to grant the railways an interim increase in freight rates, subject to review next September;
> Therefore be it resolved that the Edmonton chamber of commerce requests the Board of Transport Commissioners, in reviewing the general increase in freight rates, to order the railways to apply any increase which the board may see fit to grant, as uniformly as possible to all existing rates, excepting those rates fixed by statute; and
> Further requests that the railways be required to show cause where they propose any departure from such uniform application.

Without question, the last reference was to make the railways show cause and reason why these increased rates for which they are asking should not be applied on agreed charge contracts as well as on the general freight rate structure. If that were done, there might be some excuse for granting this increase. If the railways need it, and I doubt very much that they do, then every effort should be made to see that this rate is applied uniformly across the country except under those conditions where the freight rate is written out by statute.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Bow River, who has just taken his seat, seems concerned about the fact and he also left the impression that those of us in the maritimes are not worried as much as we should be about freight rates. Whilst I appreciate his interest on behalf of the maritimes, I would refer him to the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), the first speaker from the maritimes in this debate, who dealt extensively with the freight rate problem. In fact, he spent over half of his speech on this subject.

Mr. Donald D. Carrick (Trinity): I should like to take the opportunity of speaking shortly on this motion because I have a few ideas I should like to express that have been disturbing not only me but many members of the public in connection with the type of opposition that is being met with by this government in this house.

I read over the speech of the Leader of the Opposition today and I listened very carefully yesterday when he spoke, with a view to ascertaining exactly what the grounds were on which he supported this motion that the Prime Minister dissolve this house immediately and call an election as soon as possible.

The foremost ground put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, without referring to details of the recent gas pipe-line debate, is that the Speaker of this house and the Deputy Speaker and deputy chairman of committees were dominated by the government in this house and that their position has been called into question. Under the ruling that the Speaker has given, it is not permissible for me to refer to details of that debate, and I shall refrain from doing so. I simply want to make the observation that it is my firm conviction that any person reading that debate could come to no other conclusion but that the officials of this house whose position has been challenged acted honourably and impartially and free from any pressure by this government.

I also point out to the house that nobody has called into question the position of the officials of this house except the official opposition. It would be an absurd position if this house were in the position where, because the opposition calls into question the conduct of the officials of this house—and I may say, sir, calls them into question improperly—they could therefore, upon the basis of that demand, feel justified in obtaining an election.

The second ground advanced by the Leader of the Opposition is that a member of the cabinet, the representative of the government in the other place, has bent to the will of this government in the discharge of his duties in the other place and that he has procured the other members of the house to bend to the will of this government. I point out to the house that the Leader of the Opposition has not adduced the slightest evidence to substantiate such a charge. It is difficult for me to realize how a man could be in public life as long as he has and make serious charges of that kind without endeavouring to persuade this house in the slightest degree that the charges are substantiated by adducing any evidence to this house.

I am not permitted to refer to the debates that took place in the other place, and I do not intend to do so, but I want to say that from talking to people who heard those debates their reaction was that the other place could reach no other conclusion but that the gas pipe-line bill should be approved, and approved expeditiously.

The Leader of the Opposition has urged that this government has lost the moral right to govern this country. I say that that is simply not true. This government did nothing in the gas pipe-line debate and in the applying of closure that it was not entitled to do and that was not completely proper, and the people of this country are wholeheartedly still in favour of the present government continuing to administer the affairs of this country.

The last accusation of the Leader of the Opposition is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce bent this house to his will. This is another type of charge which it is difficult to meet, as many charges are when accusations of this kind are made, but it is completely untrue.

I point out to this house that the whole cabinet supported the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Eight members of the cabinet spoke in support of this resolution and the subsequent bill, and I estimate that about 60 members from the government side did so. I know that hon. members from time to time make light of the support given by backbenchers on this side to measures of the government. I ask them in all sincerity if it is not the practice in Canadian politics for members of every party to support their own party in so far as their conscience permits them to do so. I have not made a check on the debates and proceedings in this house, but I dare say that if a check were made it would show that the members of the C.C.F. party and the Conservative party support their leaders to just as great an extent as the members of this party support the government. I can tell them that, in connection with the gas pipe line, there was no doubt whatsoever about the sentiments of this party. They were wholeheartedly in favour of it because they believed that the gas pipe-line bill was a good thing and they realized that the only way of putting a bill through and having the majority express its wishes in this house was by the application of closure.

The matter that somewhat disturbs me and is disturbing to many other people in this country is what I describe as the evil tendency of the opposition to denigrate and belittle and attack the integrity of men who are occupying prominent positions in this government and this country. I simply point to this motion. The basis of the attack in this case is against the three officials of this house and against the government leader in the other place and, indirectly, against all members in that other place and against the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In any country this would be a serious enough thing, but this is not a sporadic, unpremeditated episode. It is part of a systematic attempt on the part of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) to undermine public confidence in the integrity of the men who are directing the affairs of this government. When I say it is not something unpremeditated and that it is a systematic attempt, I need only refer to what has happened in this parliament on other occasions. I will not go into the particulars of the debates because I do not want to transgress against the rules, but I point out that the same type of attack has been levelled against the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in connection with the debate on external affairs. He was accused of not being candid with parliament. I consider that an attack upon his integrity. He was accused of withholding information that the house was entitled to receive.

But there has recently been some little change of direction in the attack upon the Prime Minister of this country. The reason must be perfectly obvious. It must be realized that with the ordinary men and women of Canada his reputation is beyond reproach. As a result we see some of the second lieutenants called into action such as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees) who made a speech the other night in which he referred to the Prime Minister as being old and tired. On what basis? Because he only participated about four or five times in the gas pipe line debate. That may indicate weariness and lack of interest to some members of the opposition but I will tell you what it indicates to the public. The people of Canada believe that the Prime Minister of this country was too much of a gentleman, too much of a statesman, to stoop to lower himself to the political gutter because the Leader of the Opposition did in the pipe line debate.

Mr. Argue: Pretty feeble.

An hon. Member: Go on back to Saskatchewan where you belong.

Mr. Fleming: On a point of order, I am not sure that I heard all of the concluding remarks of the member for Trinity but if I did hear correctly it seemed to me he was saying that the Leader of the Opposition, in the course of a certain debate, had descended to the political gutter of debate. If I heard correctly, that is a completely unparliamentary remark—

Mr. Pickersgill: Nonsense.

Mr. Fleming: —and I am rather surprised to hear such a remark come from the member for Trinity. I ask you, sir, to direct the member to withdraw an aspersion of that kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: More of this thin-skinned stuff! Childish!

Mr. Carrick: I am willing to say that perhaps that was a little extreme. I do say, however—

Mr. Fleming: Withdraw it, then.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for Trinity should be allowed to explain.

Mr. Carrick: I withdraw it. I simply say that the Leader of the Opposition involved the house in a low level of debate, a level which it has not reached in many years and of which the country as a whole disapproved, and I lay that at his doorstep.

An hon. Member: Look at the Gallup poll, Don.

Mr. Carrick: Lastly, we have before us in this debate accusations levelled against the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). That is nothing new to the house. There has been a calculated attempt to destroy him in the opinion of the public which began last year with the Defence Production Act. We saw a follow-through on it in the external affairs debate and now we see a follow-through on it with the accusation that he has endeavoured to bend parliament to his will. I say, Mr. Speaker, that nobody in this country can say anything that can destroy what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has done for this country. I say to hon. members opposite: Let them contrast what happened during the last war, with not a breath of scandal even though millions of dollars were passing through the hands of the government, with what happened in the first war. Does anybody suggest for a moment that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not completely honest? Even the opposition sit silent on that question. They are willing to make charges on the public platform, to suggest by innuendo and influence that he is not a man of integrity, but I face them now with the actual charge and I say: If you do not believe he is a man of integrity and honesty, say so now.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): What about the Bren gun scandal?

Mr. Carrick: The Leader of the Opposition may be under the impression that these personal attacks upon members of the cabinet, officials of the house, the leader of the government in the Senate and the members of the Senate, are winning him some votes. I can tell the hon. gentleman that he is gravely mistaken. Millions of decent men and women in this country object to politics being conducted in that way.

Mr. Pallett: What is this, a personal attack?

Mr. Carrick: They say that the Leader of the Opposition or any person who conducts himself in that way is not a big enough man to be prime minister of Canada.

Mr. Churchill: That is a personal attack.

Mr. Carrick: Furthermore, they are suggesting what is obvious to everybody. If it must be the policy of the official opposition to centre their attack upon individuals—

An hon. Member: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Carrick: —and challenge the integrity of the members of the government, there must be an explanation. The explanation has been patent to everybody for the last twenty years. It is patent to them at the present time. The only reason they do it is that they have nothing else they can talk about to commend themselves to the voters and they mistakenly think that by making personal attacks on these people they are going to succeed in winning votes. I tell them they are gravely mistaken.

An hon. Member: Who is mudslinging now?

Mr. Carrick: Mr. Speaker, nothing has been advanced by the Leader of the Opposition or by his supporter, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), to indicate that the government should dissolve the house at this time and call an election. We are enjoying a period of prosperity unprecedented in the history of Canada.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): How about agriculture?

Mr. Carrick: The government has carried out the proceedings in connection with the pipe line bill, including closure, in a way that commends itself to every fair-minded person in this country.

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense.

Mr. Carrick: The attacks that have been made upon the officials of this house, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the government leader in the other place and the members of the other place are something that everybody in the country dislikes. I submit to you, sir, that it would be a catastrophe for the opposition if their request were granted at this time, but their request should not be granted for the reasons I have respectfully endeavoured to set before you.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are now debating is one which asks the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) to give consideration to an early election. I think the hon. member who has just taken his seat perhaps provided the best reason why the motion should be carried. It was his contention that everything the government has done in recent months and, in fact, in recent years, has been perfect and that every person who occupies the government benches is a paragon of virtue and all their officials are beyond reproach. If these are his opinions and if they are shared by the hon. members who support the government, I would think that they would support this motion with great alacrity, go to the people and reap the benefit of all this virtue.

But it seems that they are very reluctant to capitalize upon this great, virtuous government that they support. As a matter of fact, we are in a sort of curious position as far as this motion is concerned. If those members who support the government vote against the motion they are in effect voting lack of confidence in their own party because if they have the confidence in the party they support which they express in the house then they would of course vote for the motion and get their case before the people as quickly as possible, but by voting against the motion they will be expressing lack of confidence in their own party, showing they are afraid to go to the people.

Mr. Byrne: That is pretty muddled thinking.

Mr. Zaplitny: Yesterday the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Gardiner) endeavoured to give some reasons why he did not think it would be a wise thing to go to the people at this time, and I believe he more or less inadvertently gave the clue to the reluctance of himself, the government and their supporters to go to the people at this time. He said in one part of his speech that in his opinion certain things that had been said by the opposition were not properly understood by the public, and then he said: "Just give them a few weeks and then we will see what the people will say." Apparently he feels there is something that he wants the public to forget because he wants to give them a few weeks, or better still, a few months, and then go to the public. That indicates that the government is anxious that the people should forget certain things that have taken place. So far as the real issues are concerned, I propose today to give five reasons why I believe it would be proper and appropriate for this house to be dissolved and to go to the country at this time or in the nearest possible future.

The burden of the reply to this motion by the Liberal speakers so far has been the claim of prosperity. Again and again they have repeated that this country is experiencing the greatest prosperity in its history. Mr. Speaker, I think there is something a little bit rude—if I might use that word—about that kind of a boast made in this house. I should like to read to them a bit of scripture. I am sure they will not mind my doing so. I should like to refer them to the fortieth verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew, which reads as follows:

> 40 And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

Why do I quote that passage of scripture? Because when they make these boasts about prosperity, they back up their arguments by pointing to the business world, to the increased dividends being paid by the huge corporations, and to the huge profits that are being reaped by the huge corporations in this country. To them that constitutes prosperity. But to me, Mr. Speaker, and, I am sure, to my colleagues in this party and to a great many people in this country, many of whom at present are in the class who may not be even supporters of this party but who are of a sympathetic nature politically speaking, prosperity does not mean huge profits or huge dividends to the shareholders of our corporations. Prosperity means the well-being and the welfare of every citizen in this country. As long as there is one citizen in this country who through no fault of his own or her own is suffering, we cannot claim that we have achieved prosperity in this country. There are many hundreds of thousands—yes, perhaps millions—in this country who are today not experiencing anything like the prosperity we heard talked about by members on the government side of this house.

Even a quick look at the statistics will indicate that the average income of the families in this country is a long way from being such that they are in the position in which they can buy even the essentials of life such as the food, clothing and shelter which they require. Then of course we have the whole sector of our economy which comes under the general description of agriculture. Members on both sides of the house but particularly members on the Liberal side of it have admitted from time to time that, whereas we have this so-called prosperity, our agricultural section of the country has not shared in that prosperity. As a matter of fact, in the last few years, it has been getting a smaller share of the national income than before. How can members supporting the government say that this country is experiencing prosperity when the most important basic industry in this country upon which our whole economy is based has been experiencing a severe recession in recent years? How can members of the government say that all is well, that there is no need for a reference to the people, and that this government should carry on in its merry way, when they know that that part of our population which is engaged in agriculture is now receiving the smallest share of the national income, in proportion to its numbers, that it has received since 1933 when we were at the depth of the depression? Those are facts and figures they must face.

That is why I say it is a little bit rude and boastful to be talking about this prosperity when there are thousands, hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of people in this country who are not enjoying what is known as prosperity but who are struggling to make ends meet. There are many thousands who are living at a substandard level or a sub-subsistence level in this country. You have only to contact the welfare societies across this country and the various organizations which are interested in the welfare of the people, and they will point out to you people living in poverty, in hunger, practically in starvation in our midst, while we talk about prosperity and the members supporting the government use that as an argument or a reason why they should not go to the people at this time. I therefore say that my first reason why this motion should carry and why a reference should be made to the public at this time is that this government has failed agriculture. It has failed agriculture in several ways. I will mention two in particular.

First of all, I want to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) with regard to freight rates. Certainly the government has not protected the interests of agriculture by allowing freight rates to go hopscotching on their way year after year. Let me say this. The hon. member for Bow River has already drawn attention to the fact that one of the companies—that is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—without taking into account profits which they get from their mining interests, hotels and other interests but out of their transportation alone, accumulated a profit of $37½ million.

It may be argued that the Canadian National Railways from time to time require money because they have a deficit. I want to make it perfectly clear that there is a great difference between giving assistance to the Canadian National Railways and giving assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think a flat increase across the board in freight rates is the right way in which to come to the assistance of the Canadian National Railways. Certainly the Canadian Pacific Railway does not require it. The Canadian National Railways is partly if not totally owned by the Canadian people. We have an interest in it. We have a stake in it. We rescued several bankrupt private companies and formed them into a national railway system. That railway system is there to serve the people of Canada. It was not intended or designed to be a profit-making organization. Certainly we are happy and glad to see a surplus if they can operate efficiently and revenues are buoyant enough. We are glad to see the Canadian National Railways make a surplus. But that is not the reason why the Canadian National Railways was established in this country. It was established to provide service.

You have only to look at the map of Canada, particularly one of western Canada, to see the reason why the Canadian National Railways has a financial struggle as compared with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Here is a railway that had to run branch lines or spur lines into the most uneconomic parts of the prairie west, when the west was opening up, in order to provide a service—often at a loss—so that people would not be left isolated in communities without service. They were put there to provide service whereas the C.P.R. would not touch it with a ten-rod pole. For that reason the C.N.R. have had to suffer deficits. Any time that the Canadian National Railway system can show that they require a grant of money from this parliament or some form of assistance in order to provide a greater service for the Canadian people, I for one would be glad to vote such assistance. To lump them together with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is nothing but a purely commercial profit-making organization, and to say that because we have to give some assistance to the Canadian National Railways, we will raise the freight rates across the board and let this huge Canadian Pacific Railway system benefit also is going about the matter in the wrong way and doing it to the detriment of agriculture.

The government has also failed the farmer in a very important principle with regard to agriculture. In the last three or four years—and as a matter of fact, more than that, but more recently it has been given greater emphasis among farm organizations—my colleagues and I in this house and others have been fighting for the principle of parity prices for agriculture. I have heard many members—and many candidates who have not become members—who were supporting the Liberal party, speaking on the public platforms in western Canada in agricultural communities, pledge themselves to the principle of parity prices for agricultural products. Now, some of those gentlemen sit in this house now but every time that issue has come up in the form of a motion they have solidly voted against it.

The farm organizations across this country are getting a little tired of being told one story by the Liberal members out in the country and then told a different story in the House of Commons. This is a principle which I believe should be adopted by this parliament. If the members who support the government are in doubt about it, then what better way of finding out what the public reaction is could there be than going back to the people? This is a very important time for agriculture to establish the principle of parity. We are at the crossroads now. If we have even a slight recession in our general economy, and it seems to be on its way,—it is already affecting the housing situation—we know that agriculture will be the first to suffer a decrease in its income because that has been the trend throughout the years. It was what happened in 1929 and again in 1952, 1953, 1955 and so on. This is the time when this parliament should establish a basis upon which a sound and prosperous agriculture in this country can function. The only principle upon which it can function as a sound and efficient industry is the principle of parity prices.

I give as my second reason why we should now make a reference to the public the fact that this government has failed to promote social security for the citizens of this country. When we see the readiness with which the government can toss about $80 million in this direction and $130 million in that direction, it saddens me to think that looking back over the record I find the last time this parliament increased old age pensions was in 1949. For seven years now, with the cost of living rising, with production increasing in this country, with the gross national product climbing, with Liberals running all over the country crying prosperity, the older people who pioneered and built up this country, who made the greatest contribution to the welfare of this country, have had to sit back for seven years and beg the government time and again for a little increase in that pittance which they are getting in order that they may get a little share of this so-called prosperity, this great surplus they are crying about. There has not been a one cent increase for old age pensioners in the last seven years.

We come to family allowances, which is something that affects practically every family in the country one way or another, and nothing has been done since 1945. Here is this government which talks about prosperity, here is this government which feels it can shell out $130 million to a private company to establish a gas monopoly in Canada without batting an eye and even bulldozes it through parliament by gagging the members, but when it comes to the children of this country who are the greatest natural resource today and to the older people who have made the greatest contribution to this nation, they say no, we simply cannot afford it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris), according to the newspapers, expects a surplus of about $250 million.

Mr. Harris: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Zaplitny: I am quoting what appeared in the newspapers. I think $242 million was the figure and judging from the attitude of the minister I think it might go to $250 million. However, let us say it is $200 million. What is the government planning to do with that surplus? Are we going to be treated again to what is sometimes referred to as cyclical budgeting, and what I call cynical budgeting, by which they will dispose of some of this surplus in the form of tax reductions and other concessions? Should the government today not go back to the people and say, "This is your money; this $200 million surplus is $200 million more than we required for ordinary expenses. We have overtaxed you to the tune of $200 million; we have overcharged you for the administration of this country. This is your money and what do you want us to do with it?" That is the question that should be asked of the Canadian people. It is the people of the country who should decide what should be done. It should not be left to the treasury board or to the brain trust behind the Liberal party to calculate how many votes they can buy with that $200 million. This money belongs to the people who have overcontributed and they are the only ones who have a democratic right to decide.

Mr. Harris: What do you do when you have a deficit?

Mr. Zaplitny: That is another reason why there should be a reference to the public at this time.

Request for Election and Senate Reform

While I am talking about the question of social security let me add this. Our whole economic structure is such that from the financial point of view it is based on a foundation of sand. It is tricky and uncertain. Today we are talking about prosperity. Looking at the balance sheet of the business world we seem to be sitting on top of the world, but a slight difference in the stock exchange situation on Wall street or St. James street, or any other place where the financial world is really based, and we would find our whole economy begin to tumble like a house of cards. That is one reason why my colleagues and I have introduced this question of a sound basis for social security for all people in this country now, not only because it is the humanitarian and Christian thing to do but also because it is good business. It is the only thing which will save this kind of an economy from these booms and busts we have experienced in the past. So long as there is a steady flow of income into the hands of the people who need it most, who deserve it most and who will spend it most readily, then we have the soundest and the best insurance for the continuance of our economy.

We cannot measure the soundness of our economy by the number of our millionaires because they are few and they are not the main part of our economy. We have to measure the soundness of our economy by the citizens of this country who provide the goods and services, those who contribute so much to the welfare of this country, have a solid basis of social security upon which they can depend, then our economic future is sound. But if we leave it simply to a scramble for profits, leave it to those who are struggling to take advantage of the weaker ones, leave it to that method to carry on our economy, then we will have a repetition of the great depressions we have had before.

I give as my third reason why a reference should be made to the people at this time the fact that the government has failed to deal effectively with monopolies and combines in this country. One has only to read some of the reports of the investigators themselves of monopolies and combines in this country to realize how far behind anything the government has done heretofore is. They are behind the formation of monopolies and combines; they are merely scratching the surface. Once in a while we see in the newspapers that some huge monopoly or combine has been hauled into court and fined for breaking the Combines Investigation Act. We see that they are fined some $40,000 or $50,000 and some people looking at that think it is a rather stiff fine. If they look further behind that they find that the people who have been fined this $40,000 or $50,000, by virtue of having broken the law and formed a combine, have been exploiting the people unfairly and have been making anywhere from three-quarters of a million dollars to a million dollars a year profit more than they should. All this $40,000 represents is a licence to break the law, and that is all this government has been doing up to now. This country is more under the control of monopolies and combines today than it ever was before in history. The government must take the responsibility for that because it is their primary responsibility to use the Combines Investigation Act.

I give as my fourth reason the fact that the Liberal majority has failed to protect the democratic procedures in this house—I say the Liberal majority instead of the government, because I think that all that needs to be said has been said with regard to the actions of the government in the recent debate in regard to the pipe line. But I want to remind the private members who support the government—because it is by their support and by virtue of their majority that the government exists—that they seem not to have realized the responsibility which rests upon their shoulders for what has happened. They have only to look at the newspapers, to look at the editorial comments in the last three or four weeks. Let them go to the newspaper files in the reading room; let them leaf through the pages of the newspapers and read some of the editorials and then stop and ask themselves who is responsible for the disregard of parliamentary procedure in this house. Primarily, of course, the government is behind it and the main responsibility rests upon those members supporting the government who, meekly and with a subservience that is hard to understand, allowed the government to use them as an instrument for bulldozing their bill through the house.

There is only one final judge in this matter. We could argue about it here for the next six months or the next year; we could say that the government was responsible for the disregard of parliamentary procedure and the breaking of rules in this house, and members of the government could claim that the opposition was responsible. I think there is only one judge in the long run, and that is the Canadian people. Go back to the people. After all, this parliament belongs to the people of Canada. Ask them the question, do they believe the government was justified in using the tactics they used, in using the high office of the Speaker of this house, in order to put through a measure which under ordinary rules of procedure they would have failed to put through. Let the people give them the verdict. It is time that the people of Canada had an opportunity to pass upon what has happened here.

Then, as the fifth reason, I would give the one that was the chief reason, as I understood it, proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. He spoke about Senate reform. While he covered the subject rather comprehensively from the point of view of what is wrong with the other place, so far as I could see there was no specific proposal made as to what could be done about it. I think the people of Canada are getting a little tired of hearing about Senate reform. I can recall that one of the first things I heard in a political meeting in my life was about Senate reform, and that is quite a few years ago. It is more than 25 years ago. In 1919 the leader of the Liberal party at that time asserted, as part of his platform, Senate reform. We have been hearing about it and debating it in this house ever since, and nothing has been done about it. I think the people of Canada now have the right to state whether they want some finality on this question. The people of Canada feel that if this other place needs to be reformed certainly plenty of arguments have been brought forward to point that out. It is time that this house, if it has a responsibility in the matter, took some action instead of just talking about it for the next 25 years.

I am going to propose something which I think might be the solution. I believe that in conjunction with the federal election there should be a plebiscite, and the people themselves could have an opportunity to express their opinions directly on this question of Senate reform. I would prefer it that way, rather than making it a political issue, where one party would take a particular stand, opposed by another party, because I believe that this parliament, any part of this parliament whether it is this house or the other house, is so important to our whole democratic structure and to our constitution that any reform of our parliament should not be a political issue. I think it should be an issue placed squarely before the Canadian people themselves. Let them express their preference. I think a plebiscite would probably be the best way in which to do it. I would propose that a ballot be prepared at the time of the next general election and given to the public on which there could be four questions. If any one can suggest better questions or perhaps arrange them in a better way he is welcome to do it. I would start out by asking the question:

Do you prefer that:

(1) The Canadian Senate remain as presently constituted?

(2) The Canadian Senate be an elected assembly?

(3) The Canadian Senate be appointed by the provinces?

(4) The Canadian Senate be abolished?

I think that pretty well covers all of the proposals that I have heard in this house and outside as to what could be done to reform the other place. Obviously, if the majority of the people of Canada prefer to leave the Canadian Senate as it is constituted at the present time, then this house will have to honour it and we will know that nothing more needs to be done. If they choose one of the other three alternatives, then our duty will be clear, and it will take it out of the area of political discussion. It will not be a party issue. Members who are elected at the next election will feel that they have a mandate from the people of Canada, who are the sovereign body of this country, to take certain steps to make certain reforms in order that the other place will perform its function, if it is to exist. If the people of Canada feel that it no longer serves a useful purpose, then it will cease to exist and the question will be settled once and for all.

I have given these five reasons and I summarize them by saying this. I would suggest to the members supporting the government that they think very carefully before opposing this motion, because anyone who takes the stand in this house that this parliament should not be dissolved and an appeal made to the public of Canada for a new parliament is, in my opinion, taking the stand that the people of Canada should not be given the opportunity at this time to pass judgment on all those issues I have mentioned, plus the very unusual things that have happened within the last month.

No one will say, neither the government nor anyone in the opposition, that what has happened here within the last four or five weeks has been anything like normal in a Canadian parliament or in any democratic parliament. It has been something very unusual, and something which has disturbed the public mind to a great extent. I am not going to argue that all the people of Canada agree with what the opposition did. Neither will the Liberals, I think, seriously argue that all the people of Canada agree with what they did. There will be differences of opinion, but the fact is that the people of Canada today are perhaps more aware of the Canadian parliament than they ever were before, and it is a good thing. It is a good thing that the people of Canada are beginning to think in terms of this parliament, because it is their own instrument of democracy. What finer time could there be to appeal to the public than when interest in this parliament as an institution is at its peak, at a peak which it might not reach again for many years? This, I think, would be an excellent time to appeal to the public, to place the issues squarely before them and ask for their verdict, and then this parliament would come back refreshed, renewed, feeling that it had a mandate to carry out the wishes of the Canadian public.

(Translation):

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, the no-confidence motion now before the house and which was introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) could hardly have been brought forward at a better time. Public opinion is growing more and more alarmed at the unfortunate turn of events following upon recent happenings in this Canadian parliament.

Public opinion, forever alert, and at this time more wide-awake than ever, has been deeply moved—and still is—by the disastrous impact upon the future of our parliamentary system of the actions of a government whose sole object now appears clear. By any and every means, democratic or not, it intends to retain that power which it now feels slipping from its grasp. To this end it has resorted to sabotage, flagrant violation of our rules of procedure, abuse of the well disciplined numerical majority which it enjoys, and to any number of other actions which it would take too long to spell out at this time.

In this house, the official opposition represents a very important section of the Canadian people and it is its duty to exercise the right conferred upon it by popular consultation, conscientiously, strongly and firmly.

That right we are exercising today, convinced as we are that we speak for the majority of the Canadian people, who can no longer stand to see the party in power ill-use its prerogatives in order to prevent those sitting on this side of the house from fulfilling the mandate which they undertook to fulfil when they took their oath of office.

The Canadian people no longer have confidence in the democratically constituted authority and insist upon withdrawing, as soon as possible, the confidence which it had so generously bestowed.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, you ruled that we could not recall the events which occurred in the dark days of the passing, without proper discussion, of the pipeline bill. May I say, however, that the unusual, objectionable and dictatorial methods which were used on that occasion profoundly shocked all those who have any respect for our parliamentary institutions, in the defence of which so many Canadians have fallen, at the hands of those who sought to destroy them.

That sole reason is one which, in my opinion, justifies the public outcry which is being heard in all parts of our great country, for a general election which, I have no doubt, would condemn the undemocratic attitudes of this government.

By going to the country, we would also give the Canadian people an opportunity to express themselves on other very important issues to which the government failed to bring the promised solution.

The Leader of the Opposition has spoken about the reform of the Senate, which, in our view, has become a party to all the actions of the subservient majority the government commands in the House of Commons.

Mr. Boisvert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne) is violating the rules of this house. He is reading from a written speech. I have been watching him closely. He was very carefully following a written text and I saw how he manoeuvered a second page into view. Therefore I submit that the member for Quebec West should be called to order. He should do as we do on this side of the house and make his speech without reading it.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I heard the point of order of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert). He has attempted to imply that I have been reading my speech word by word. I would point to him, however, that I have extensive notes which I mean to use, and I do not believe this is against the rules of this house.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that my present statements are ill calculated to please the hon. member, but he will have to submit to them just the same.

As I was saying, the opposition has a part to play. I think I shall keep doing my duty that way, and to fulfil the task entrusted to me. More than ever it is time to undertake Senate reform, unless we want respect for the honourable upper house to become a thing of the past.

Far be it from me to demand the abolition of the Senate. This parliamentary institution, wanted and created by the fathers of confederation in 1867, i.e., more than 89 years ago, has never undergone any change that would adapt it to needs and requirements of our time. In its present form, it has lost the real purpose for which it was created.

At the time the Senate was established, it was meant to undertake a more meticulous and dispassionate study of any legislation passed by the House of Commons. It was, moreover, supposed to protect minority rights. As a matter of fact, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), whose words I am now quoting as they are printed on page 5331 of yesterday's English edition of Hansard, so rightly said:

> Its members were to be selected from those who in one way or another had brought dignity or distinction to the public life of the country. They were to be chosen by the representatives of the sovereign for their acknowledged achievements or for their moral and intellectual excellence. They were to be placed in this position which was to keep them above the ordinary influences of party strife.

Let me emphasize that last sentence:

> They were to be placed in this position which was to keep them above the ordinary influences of party strife—

—in order to show that today appointments to the Senate are made as a reward to those who have dedicated themselves to the promotion and triumph of political ideas for which they fought most of their life.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess, I was recalling some statements made yesterday by the leader of the opposition showing the necessity for Senate reform and the important role which devolves upon those who are called to the upper house.

To continue my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will say that the system has become dangerous, because today the Senate is considered as a single-party institution which reflects the feelings and ideas of those who are responsible for the appointment of its members. That abnormal situation, which jeopardizes freedom of speech, requires a long overdue reform, but the government, in its indifference, is opposed to the solution of that serious problem. The appointment of an independent committee to examine that reform and bring about the required changes is therefore most urgently needed.

I have already stated in the house and elsewhere that the provinces should have the privilege of appointing a great proportion of the members of the Senate, so that they may truly play the part assigned to them, that is to represent public opinion as expressed by those who elect the governments of the various provinces. I therefore urge the setting up of a committee and the appointment of representatives of all the Canadian provinces. We would then be sure that such a committee would be free from partisanship and could submit to the government such changes as would be in the best interest of the Canadian people.

It is becoming more and more imperative that the Senate be composed of members of unquestioned independence and impartiality. Their role would then be that envisioned by the fathers of confederation. They would protect minorities and be devoted to the Canadian people rather than to a political party.

A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, in three Canadian provinces, situated in various parts of our country, the people clearly and definitely rejected the policy of the Liberal party represented in this house by the government in power. It might be argued that provincial elections have nothing to do with the federal government and that Quebec, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan were called upon to elect a government to administer these provinces for the next four years. One could very well use that argument if the federal Liberal party had stayed away from these purely provincial elections.

Mr. Arsenault: Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Dufresne: Certainly.

Mr. Arsenault: Has the hon. member for Quebec West always stayed away from provincial elections?

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer that question from my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) as, in fact, I took part in all the provincial electoral campaigns in my province for 25 years.

An hon. Member: In Quebec West?

Mr. Dufresne: In Quebec West and I can tell my hon. friend from Bonaventure that I took no part, either directly or indirectly, in any provincial campaign since I have been a member of this house, because I feel that my first duty is to the House of Commons and not to provincial electoral campaigns.

Mr. Arsenault: Have the ministers and members of the Union Nationale party never taken part in federal elections?

Mr. Dufresne: As far as I can remember, Mr. Speaker, in a few isolated cases, some ministers—I know one of them—and some members have, in their respective constituencies, campaigned side by side with the opposition candidate, especially when the rights of the province of Quebec were at stake; they felt it their duty to ask the population of their respective constituencies to vote for those who would protect the rights of the province of Quebec so that the interests of that province may be upheld.

Mr. Arsenault: Does my hon. friend from Quebec West forget that the electors of Quebec West have returned a Liberal member, Mr. Jean-Paul Galipeault, general batonnier of the Quebec bar?

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, that question is quite amusing. I thought that my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) was perfectly acquainted with the Quebec city constituencies, but a little error has undoubtedly crept in the question he has put to me.

The constituency of Quebec West, which I have the honour of representing in this house, comprises, first of all, the provincial constituency of Saint Sauveur, where we have about 140 out of 150 polls. In this constituency of Saint Sauveur, which I represent entirely and which is known federally as the constituency of Quebec West, the Liberal candidate has lost his deposit, as my hon. friend would possibly be interested in learning.

Mr. Arsenault: Not in Quebec West.

Mr. Dufresne: If my hon. friend refers to Quebec West constituency, in which I count about 10 polls out of a total of 150, I do not think he can boast so much about that Liberal victory, for the new member in the Quebec provincial legislature, Mr. Jean-Paul Galipeault, to whom my hon. friend referred, obtained a majority of only 158 votes in the whole of Quebec West constituency.

Mr. Arsenault: Just the same he was elected.

Mr. Dufresne: Such was not the case however and members of the federal Liberal party, ministers and back benchers, co-operated closely with provincial organizations in order to dominate these provinces and to force upon them the dictates of Ottawa, in the interests of the Liberal party.

In the face of this centralizing assault for the benefit of a political party, the provinces concerned arose and convincingly indicated that they did not intend to accept orders from those who proclaim themselves to be almighty because they have been presiding over the destinies of Canada for the past 21 years.

The opposition is not alone is calling for a vote of non-confidence in this government, for such a vote has been registered in no uncertain terms in three Canadian provinces, the most important and the most populous being unquestionably the province of Quebec, part of whose population I have the honour to represent here.

What is the special meaning of the vote recorded in the province of Quebec on Wednesday, June 20 last?

It expressed the indignation of a whole people in the face of federal centralizing tactics. It showed that the people of Quebec want to look after their own affairs without having to follow the lines laid down by the federal Liberal party. It shows that they are bent on regaining the rights which are theirs and which were unjustly taken away from them by the central government, through the unpardonable complicity of those who used to get their orders from Ottawa.

Finally, it represents a repudiation of the laissez faire policy of the federal government in the face of the ever increasing activities of communists, who continually extend their tentacles and resort to all possible means to spread their nefarious ideology among the Canadian people.

The Canadian people have no longer confidence in this government, which permits the royal mail to be used for subversive and pernicious propaganda by those who want to enslave us and destroy the religious and democratic institutions to which we are so deeply attached.

(Text):

Mr. Boisvert: On a point of order, the hon. member for Quebec West is reading his speech, which was previously prepared.

Mr. Argue: A Liberal complaint.

Mr. Boisvert: He should not violate that rule of procedure. I am referring, Your Honour, to citation 314 in Beauchesne's second edition, page 103.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, that is the second joke of the same kind that the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert) has tried since I started to speak this afternoon. I would remind him and I should like the chair to know, as I said this afternoon, that I have many notes. I have certain expressions in French that I want to use and I do not want to forget them. That is why I have written them down, and I think this is very important, Mr. Speaker. After all, we are in the chamber of the nation, and I do not think I should use any words that come to my mind without thinking of them first.

Mr. Dickey: Definitely not.

Mr. Sinclair: Tell that to your colleagues.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the people have lost confidence in the government, which dares not do anything to check the progress of communism, and even allows the spread of that propaganda over the Canadian radio and television networks, as well as through its national film board.

Not only does the Liberal government keep in its employ civil servants of dubious reputation in this respect, but it indulges in shameful relations with certain people whose allegiance to the Kremlin was at one time recognized.

Any alliance whatsoever is commendable to the government, so long as the interests of the party are at stake. Let us save the Liberal party from ruin, disaster, defeat and annihilation, even at the sacrifice of the best interests of this our country.

In the past few weeks, especially in the province of Quebec, we have been through a critical period on which we ought to meditate, lest we forget.

We have seen a Liberal party, which once was great, happy to associate with people who have been exposed more than once for their past activities and who have even founded on October 10, 1936, in Quebec city, a communist politburo—

(Text):

Mr. Arsenault: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if I understand well what has just been said, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne) is trying to give the impression to the house that there are communist adherents or sympathizers among the Liberal members of the house. I would wish him to correct this impression.

Mr. Dufresne: I hope that the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) did not feel that he was being attacked. I have never mentioned anything of the kind. I have never thought for one moment that any hon. member sitting on the other side of the house could be a communist or a sympathizer. I never thought of saying that those on the other side of the house who took part in the last provincial election in the province of Quebec could also be communists or sympathetic to communist ideas. That is not my intention. I felt that none of them were and I hope that none of them ever will be.

(Translation):

We have seen the Liberal party which, as I said, was once a great party, gladly associate with people who more than once were denounced for their communist activities and who even established, I repeat, on October 10, 1936, in Quebec, a communist politburo. I have myself warned the government and the Prime Minister of what was going on; I called the attention of the house to a statement, among many others, from a party by the name of Jean-Louis Gagnon whose contempt for our democratic and parliamentary institutions was once well known.

Mr. Arsenault: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is now speaking under parliamentary immunity. Would he be able, outside this house, to prove the serious charges he is making against the well-known journalist he just mentioned?

Mr. Habel: No fear of his doing so outside this house!

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I have, on many an occasion, made charges in this house which, as a matter of fact, were never denied. Just now, I raise a serious accusation which I can prove at any time. And the matter is a timely one, for I have in my possession some authentic records written by the said Jean-Louis Gagnon when he had, on October 10, 1936, founded in Quebec the communist politbureau I just mentioned. I have here some photostats of papers signed by the man himself. My hon. friend must surely know that, at this moment, libel suits brought by the same Jean-Louis Gagnon against certain people are now before the superior court of Montreal.

Mr. Boisvert: Why, then, are you talking about them if they are before the courts?

Mr. Dufresne: I am talking about it merely because I wish one thing, and it is that the said Jean-Louis Gagnon, after the bitter defeat he suffered in Quebec, will be courageous enough not to drop his proceedings; there the truth will come out and the charge I am presently making in this house will prove to be true.

Mr. Arsenault: Did that happen about the time Mr. Camillien Houde was in a concentration camp?

Mr. Dufresne: No, I spoke of 1936. I thought the hon. member for Bonaventure was more conversant with Canadian history.

Mr. Gagnon: He knows Acadian history better.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, when I raised the matter in the house, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) only replied that Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon was well known to the Canadian people and that he did not need the help of the Prime Minister to defend himself. Neither the Prime Minister nor any member of his party have ever denounced the fiery remarks made by the chief publicist of the Liberal party and editor of the official publication of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, the newspaper La Réforme, which has never reformed anything, as you know.

On the contrary, in the last electoral campaign, the Liberal leader in the province of Quebec tried to defend him, and all the ministers and federal members did not fear to associate themselves closely with a man who once stated—and I have here the remarks made by Jean-Louis Gagnon, editor in chief of the Liberal newspaper La Réforme in the province of Quebec and lately chief publicist of the Liberal party of the province of Quebec:

"Bourgeois" are like pigs, and I am beginning to understand Lenin.

Lenin has never been the leader of a democratic party. Mr. Gagnon adds:

Gambetta is going right to my head. It will work out all right, and we will kill all the priests.

Mr. Speaker, I have here official documents which cannot be denied and which confirm what I say.

A Canadian political party which acts that way no longer deserves the confidence of the people, and it should have the courage of having its policies supported or condemned by requesting, as soon as possible, a new mandate.

If, as we have heard many times from the other side of the house, the majority must have its way in a democracy, it seems to me that a substantial part of the electorate has given an unequivocal verdict on June 18 and 20 last, a verdict which, in my opinion, should be heeded.

In order to avoid abuses and unworthy alliances, I once more urge the outlawing of communism in Canada. Let us put aside once and for all the interests of a political party. Let us be sincere with the Canadian people and let us put an end to the dangerous progress of the enemies of democracy.

In 1953, Mr. Speaker, a majority of Canadians put their confidence in the man who is now called the Prime Minister of Canada and entrusted him with the administration of this country. There is no question about asking him to act as a dictator since he surrounds himself with collaborators. He must however be the real leader of the government and not the servant of his cabinet ministers, especially the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

At this stage, even those who sit in this house are asking themselves who is the leader of the government. How then can we wonder if the people do not know who he is?

For these few reasons and many others, we urge the government to have enough courage to face the people as soon as possible. The people are looking forward to this opportunity to break the shackles tying them to a party which has shamefully failed to discharge its responsibilities and no longer deserves their confidence.

The Canadian electors want to rid themselves of those who, like chameleons, change their colour according to the conditions and the needs of their political party.

The people want real statesmen, conscious of their responsibilities and capable of sacrificing the interest of their party to save the threatened Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote with enthusiasm in favour of the non-confidence motion introduced yesterday in this house by the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

(Text):

Mr. Charles Henry (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we are in the 22nd parliament of Canada which normally should run for a five-year period. At the three-year point we find ourselves confronted with a motion of non-confidence in the government moved by the opposition and it is based on moral reasons rather than on legal reasons. This is an unusual procedure, to say the least; and we must examine into the circumstances surrounding the debate on the establishment of Canada's first natural gas pipe line in order to consider what underlies the situation. However, I think it is only necessary to say that in that debate the government enforced the rule of law to the distaste of the opposition, based as it is on Magna Carta and the British North America Act. In particular we enforced in this chamber that rule which is based on the common ordinary phrase "majority rule".

[Mr. Dufresne.]

To come down to the procedure in this house, the rule which was enforced was that the house is master of its own procedure in times of emergency as existed during that debate. If the government is immoral, Mr. Speaker, we should like to know the particulars. However, I think it follows, if the government is immoral because of what it has done in enforcing the rule of law, that we are in company with Premier Frost of Ontario whose support we had here, and in company with Premier Manning of Alberta and Premier Campbell of Manitoba.

Mr. Fleming: They did not support what was done by this government to destroy democracy.

Mr. Henry: The vast majority of Canadians supported us and indeed our mandate remains unrevoked at this time in the matter which was then before the house when the pipe line bill was under discussion.

But going abroad at this time, there are deliberations taking place within the sphere of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and I say to this house that if the government is immoral so is a very prominent member of the government, one who has certainly been honoured by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and has been praised and named in the public press of the world, as one of "the three wise men" in NATO. So at this time we find with regret, the opposition reflecting upon one of our most eminent Canadians as he goes abroad to reorganize and reorientate the functions of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. That is a strange situation. But we look forward to a reorganized NATO for better world trade and for better economic conditions. If NATO can be used for war prevention, it can be used for peaceful pursuits such as better trade and better economic conditions throughout the world. We are proud of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), past president of United Nations as he is, and we wish him well despite the domestic wrangle fomented by the opposition at this time on the home front.

However, I wonder about this matter of morality in public affairs, Mr. Speaker. We have noticed of late how queer it is that Her Majesty's loyal opposition, so firm in their moral position in this debate, boycott the ceremony of royal assent as we obtain assent to the legislation which has been passed by this house. Indeed, can we not say that their morals are a little bit weak on commonwealth relations, and matters affecting the crown so near and dear to us all?

Mr. Fleming: How silly!

Mr. Henry: But I think there is a story behind the story of this motion which is now before the house and I say it is a similar story which underlies the motion of non-confidence concerning the Speaker of this house. In my view, there is a new outlook as to sportsmanship on the part of the opposition because we can sum up their activities in this way: If you lose a game, attack the referee and the umpire and the officials; then you will feel better. This is indeed a new code of sportsmanship. But we see emanating from the other side of the house likewise a new code of political morals based on national disunity, minority rule and freedom of speech run rampant. Indeed, I see this once famous party which was the party of the fathers of confederation presenting to Canada in these months in this parliament a retrogressive Conservative new deal for Canada. Shades of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Robert Borden! If the day comes when we shall be unveiling a statue of Sir Robert Borden on parliament hill, I wonder how members opposite will be able to go and attend that ceremony for that great man, who was indeed a leader in the field of national unity.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal in January, 1956, reporting the proceedings of the Progressive Conservative party in Canada, and reporting an event which took place in the presence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and other top-ranking dignitaries of the party. On that occasion an address was delivered by Mr. Grattan O'Leary editor of the Ottawa Journal and he laid down, as do so many members of the party opposite, a policy for the party in his own way. I wish to quote in part as follows. He said to the party chieftains and the party followers on that occasion:

> Our task is to mobilize the spirit of discontent and channel it into support of the Conservative party and the people know we are the only alternative.

This indeed is a fine sounding policy for the successors to the fathers of confederation. As they sow, so shall they reap; and generally, if they are going to rely on disunity and discontent, that is what they will reap. One need only turn to the province of Quebec in order to see what has happened to the Conservative party there. It is practically extinct, save and except for the remnants which remain by way of alliance with Premier Duplessis, based as they are on supernationalism. We can look to the prairies and British Columbia. In that great part of the country Conservatives are not even an alternative; they are not even a desperate alternative. What are we to say of their position with Premier Frost, that great premier of Ontario who took a forthright stand on Canada's natural gas pipe line? What are we to say of the situation within their own party when they turned their backs on their adviser as to natural gas matters during the recent pipe line debate? I refer to the cleavage of opinion between the Conservative speakers in this house and their adviser the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Nickle).

On this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, we of the Liberal party have more things to do for Canada than to think about politics and elections at this time. We wish to see a better division of the tax revenues as between Ottawa and the provinces. This is a matter which will come before this chamber in due course. Perhaps at this session good results will come from the solution of this long-standing problem now that we have worked towards a better division of revenues than ever for the good of Canada. We wish to see brought before this house legislation which will enable unemployment assistance to be shared by the dominion and the provinces to cover those unemployed not covered by unemployment insurance. In addition, we believe that the government will bring before the house, before this session concludes, legislation to cover better unemployment insurance for those now entitled to it under the statute. Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is in the process of negotiation as between this government and the provinces the matter of health insurance proposals. Those proposals are of vital interest to the nation. They stand to be implemented and the optimistic spirit which prevails is at an all-time high. We look forward to stage one in the national health insurance before long. We look forward to nation-wide hospital insurance as a result.

Now, let me deal with the dominion-provincial fiscal arrangements briefly. This rearrangement of tax revenues could mean more revenue and better opportunities to fulfil provincial obligations in so far as the citizens of the provinces are concerned. In particular, I am one who looks forward in Ontario to better old age pensions for our senior citizens following upon these fiscal rearrangements. Every member in this house knows that in Ontario now the old age pension is up to $60 at age 65 by reason of joint co-operation between this government and the province. However, I must say that the top figure, $60, is only made available after the application of a very rigid provincial-municipal means test. I think of that great province of ours, Ontario, the industrial giant that it is and greater it will become, but I think it does not stand up by way of comparison in what it is doing for the old age pensioners when we compare what takes place in some of the western provinces. Therefore, I for one would ask the government to expedite the dominion-provincial rearrangement of fiscal revenues because I feel the government of Ontario under Premier Frost will take second place to none in lessening the rigours of the means test once more revenues as planned are made available in this manner.

I feel, too, that we can always at the federal level look forward to improving our pension legislation because in my city of Toronto there is much need amongst the pensioners. We must constantly be thinking of their needs and problems. They are our senior citizens. In particular, I wish to say a word about pensions for new Canadians. This involves the problem of obtaining more suitable immigrants overseas. If Canada is to succeed in this mid-twentieth century she must have good immigrants from places where immigrants will be found who are suitable to the political and economic needs of Canada. I mention the United Kingdom and I mention Europe. Those places are sources of immigrants, but they are places where old age security is a paramount problem and where good measures exist for those entitled to old age security. How can we expect the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) to obtain suitable immigrants in great numbers for Canada if when they arrive here they have to wait 20 years before being entitled to old age assistance or security? I think, Mr. Speaker, what the government should consider in due course, perhaps at the next session, would be a provision that after a new Canadian becomes a citizen following a five-year period of residence, then that new Canadian should be on a par with older Canadians in obtaining the old age assistance or old age security.

I wish to speak briefly on unemployment assistance and unemployment insurance. I say that it is always a problem with us because in Canada we are beset with problems that arise out of our geography and our weather so we do have regional and seasonal unemployment. This being so, I look forward to the measures which will be forthcoming concerning the sharing of unemployment assistance between the provinces and the dominion and also better unemployment insurance legislation.

Finally, as to health insurance: what is proposed by the government would absorb something like 50 per cent of the cost of hospitalization provided we can obtain the co-operation of more than half the provinces and provided those provinces represent more than half of the population of the nation. Now, the reason for the optimism as to the success of those proposals I think lies in the fact that a recent public opinion survey indicates more than two-thirds of the people of Canada are in favour of the government's proposals.

At the moment there are considerable health services in this nation of ours handled by public authorities. The indigents in the lower income groups receive a scattered type of health service throughout the country from governments at provincial levels. In 1952 there were limited schemes of health service for indigents in both Ontario and Nova Scotia. One cannot fail to note that according to the 1952 figures there was spent $9.96 per person in Ontario, and $10.84 per person in Nova Scotia.

However, turning to the western provinces, we find that services are much better. In the first place the western provinces had in force in 1952 more comprehensive programs than did Ontario or Nova Scotia. They spent anywhere from $50 to $75 per capita in this field. When I think of the great province of Ontario and the great province of Quebec! Those figures are an indictment against the province of Ontario in particular. Here, in central Canada, we have the great basic manufacturing industries, and yet we have this disparity as to the treatment in health services. This is a basic reason for proceeding with the first stage of a health insurance scheme now, namely nationwide hospitalization.

There are other inequities that we could mention. Hospital plans are to be considered. These plans for hospital services are operative in the middle and upper income groups principally. Private plans cover less than 50 per cent of the population, and this rate of coverage does not proceed at more than a snail's pace. In fact, I think the members of this chamber should be indebted for the research and the publications of Dr. Malcolm Taylor and also for the republication of summaries of his studies in this field of health insurance.

It is estimated that if the private plans were allowed to proceed with their coverage efforts it would take until the year 2000 to cover the whole of the Canadian population for hospital service under the auspices of private plans. Speaking personally, I say this is the mid-twentieth century which belongs to Canada, and it is unthinkable that we in this chamber should have to wait that length of time. Therefore, I see looming, the only way, public enterprise in the field of health insurance and particularly in the field of hospital insurance.

In the recent speech of Dr. Taylor before a national association a good analysis was given of many matters in relation to health insurance, and this was reviewed in the Toronto Daily Star editorial columns too. It was pointed out that the cost of administering the private hospital plans has proved to be greatly in excess of the charges experienced by the western provinces in their publicly controlled hospital plans. These are matters which we may well consider at this time as we watch the progress made by the government in the matter of its proposals to the provinces. We should consider also the British post-war experience in the field of health insurance. We know that the British government has had a lower cost per capita in the field of health than we have had in Canada, and in the United Kingdom they have an over-all health insurance plan in force. I think we should consider this as a safe guide as we in this young nation follow the experience of the British authorities.

It is noteworthy also that last year the medical authorities of the United Kingdom visited the Canadian Medical Association in Canada and gave every assurance to Canadian medical men that health insurance was something of which they approved in the United Kingdom. It was also discussed this year at the Canadian Medical Association convention and now we see in the daily press that the Canadian medical men endorsed in convention assembled the current proposals as outlined by the government. I would just say this too. We seem to be well supplied with doctors in Canada. The national average is one doctor for every 989 people. In Ontario, we have one doctor for 874 people; in British Columbia, one for every 866 people; in Quebec, one for every 1,012 people; and in Saskatchewan, one for every 1,288 people. I believe these to be 1951 figures, but they do indicate that if Saskatchewan can implement a hospital scheme with one doctor for every 1,288 people, surely central Canada can respond to the proposals of the government with safety.

However there is one slight reservation I have, and that has to do with our hospital resources. I find that 1953 figures disclose British Columbia operates with hospitals to the extent of 88.9 per cent of normal; Ontario operates with a figure of 67 per cent of normal; Quebec has a figure of 56.2 per cent; and Saskatchewan 87 per cent of normal.

It may be that the government should reconsider its policy of grants in aid of hospital construction, but before doing so I should like to hear from the minister, on his estimates, let us say, as to the state of hospital construction following these figures of 1953. It might be desirable to increase the grants to the provinces to the end that we might have a higher percentage across the board, and particularly in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario in the field of hospital construction.

As I conclude, may I say this as to the question of the motion of non-confidence brought against the government on moral rather than on legal grounds? Abroad we must consider the morality of federalism which is the dominating keynote of the NATO negotiations in these days of competitive coexistence. Through NATO, for Her Majesty the Queen and the commonwealth, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is seeking to marshal the forces of Americanism, Europeanism and Canadianism. This is an expanded partnership which will bring much good to the western world and, yes, to the world at large. There is the spirit of what Sir John A. Macdonald was pleased to call the grand design of confederation at home, and, in my opinion, abroad there is what is known as the grand design of NATO, and this must be extended in the spirit of federalism to the fields of trade and other economic matters.

Now, finally let me just speak about what I call the morality of federalism at home. The keynote of federalism at home, the keynote of the spirit of the grand design of confederation, is indeed national unity and not disunity. I for one am greatly put out that the great Conservative party of the past bases its activities in this year, 1956, on the mobilization of discontent, as outlined in the beginning of my speech. I say that on this side of the house we stand for matters which promote federalism in confederation and which promote in particular our national development, dominion-provincial reallotment of tax revenues, better old age pensions, better unemployment relief and insurance. Finally, we hope that in that way we shall attain for this nation health insurance. These things the people of Canada elect, and I do not think that we should elect for an election and play politics.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased indeed to hear the wonderful pre-election talk, that I have just listened to, by the hon. member for Rosedale. I have been worried about what he is going to do if, before that election rolls around, the C.C.F. in this house introduces another resolution asking for the immediate implementation of national health insurance. The curtain might be a good place to hide behind at that time, after the speech that has just been made. However, I do want to refer to one attack the hon. member made on the opposition in this house. Mr. Speaker, I no longer count the Social Credit members in this house as being in the opposition. They are now merely a poor second-hand rubber stamp for the Liberal or the Yankee party in Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: Pretty cheap.

Mr. Regier: I know the hon. member for Lethbridge is pretty good at interjections.

Mr. Blackmore: Pretty cheap.

Mr. Regier: The hon. member for Rosedale wondered why Her Majesty's loyal opposition had abstained from attending the granting of royal assent when it last occurred. I might reply for myself personally, and I think for the members of this group. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made very plain the other day, we feel this government no longer has the moral right to sit in office. We feel they absolutely emasculated all rules of decency, all rules of parliament, and that it was no longer a democracy that marched over to the other place to meet Her Majesty's representative. I felt that it would have been a disgrace to pretend to Her Majesty's representative that this pipe-line bill was the will of the Canadian people. Even such an honoured man as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) speaking as Acting Prime Minister yesterday evening—

An hon. Member: Ha!

Mr. Regier: —informed this house and the country that the people of Canada were not with the government on this pipe line deal when he pleaded, "Will you give us only three weeks of electioneering and then the people of Canada will change their opinion."

One of the reasons I rise at this time to express my motive for supporting the amendment that has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition is the matter of housing. As early as January 18, about a week after the opening of this house, we had an announcement by one of the leading chartered banks of Canada to the effect that they had arrived at a position where they would have to limit further investments in the field of housing and I asked a question about this on orders of the day. The bank—and I am referring to the Royal Bank of Canada—has supplied leadership among the chartered banks in the matter of financing new homes for Canadians. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) was not here on the 18th but on the 19th I again rose and in reply to my question the Minister of Public Works, as reported at page 281 of Hansard for that date, said:

> I understand that yesterday in my absence the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked the following question:
> "In view of yesterday's announcement by the banks indicating a decline in money being available for housing, would the government consider again supplying a portion of N.H.A. funds as it did before the first session of this parliament?"
> In reply, I should point out that I do not know of any general announcement by the banks regarding a decline in money available for housing. There has been no indication by prospective borrowers that there is a general shortage of mortgage money under the National Housing Act. As the hon. member knows, the act contains authority by which Central Mortgage may make loans directly to borrowers if loans are not being made available by approved lenders. If a shortage of mortgage money did occur it would be a matter of government policy, in light of the circumstances at that time, to determine to what extent the corporation's power to make direct loans should be used. At the present time this authority is being used in the smaller communities.

And then note this; the minister concluded with this statement:

> It is the government's intention to ensure that a high level of house building continues.

Only the other day, on June 21, the government having been severely reminded on several occasions of the growing shortage of mortgage money, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) about a statement of his and my question is reported at page 5238 of Hansard of that date:

> . . . I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would care to clarify what he said a few moments ago, that he had become aware of this shortage or apparent shortage only a few weeks ago. On January 19 the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) in replying to a question said that there was no indication by prospective borrowers that there was going to be a shortage. Was it only a few weeks ago that the minister became aware of a shortage?

The Minister of Finance replied:

> I think I can correctly say it was only about two weeks ago that I personally was informed of the difficulties.

At that point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked:

> Where has the minister been?

I should like some time to have an answer to that question posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre: Where has the minister been?

Mr. Pickersgill: Right here doing his work.

Mr. Regier: I think it would be only right if at this time we had a little review of what has gone on over the past few years in the matter of mortgage money for new homes in Canada.

Under the operation of the act prior to 1953 most of the mortgage money for new N.H.A. homes was supplied by mortgage companies and by the insurance companies of Canada with the government lending to these institutions 25 per cent of the money that was needed. The insurance and mortgage companies made a little bit on this 25 per cent in that they were able to obtain a higher rate from the purchaser than they had to pay the government for this share of the money. However, the time came when the investment houses of Canada felt they had invested a sufficiently large share of their capital assets in housing and henceforth they would have to limit their investments in new housing to the percentage they felt was safe to have invested in housing and that any new money they would have available for this purpose would consist only in the natural growth of the percentage in terms of dollars in line with the growth of the companies and with the repayments of the loans that had already been made.

The government had ample warning of this and looked around for other means of obtaining mortgage money and they decided to call on the chartered banks of Canada. When they did call on the chartered banks of Canada, however, they decided to supply no longer 25 per cent of the needed money and ever since that amendment to the National Housing Act the federal government has not supplied 25 per cent of the capital needs for new housing. The chartered banks of Canada, some of them rather reluctantly, entered the field of housing and on the whole I think perhaps all hon. members will agree that the chartered banks of Canada have done a significant service to the Canadian people. Many suburban areas in Canada which hitherto had been unable to lay their hands on N.H.A. mortgage funds were able to undertake housing programs because of the existence of chartered banks branches in the suburban areas simply because the banks proved themselves more accommodating and a little more willing to move into the suburban areas than the insurance companies had been. However, even the chartered banks, like the insurance companies before them, decided it would be safe for them to invest a certain specified percentage of their assets in housing.

The time has now arrived—and it arrived for some of the banks as early as six months ago—when that percentage allotment has been used up and last new year the banks gave warning to the government that henceforth their investments in new housing would be limited to the repayment on advances they had made in former years and the natural growth in the assets of the banks and to the extent that the percentage in the assets each year would be able to make more money available to them. The government had plenty of warning and yet the Minister of Public Works on January 19 saw fit to deny any knowledge of the impending shortage of mortgage money. As late as June 21, even the Minister of Finance denied that he had had several months of warning.

I feel the Minister of Finance, if indeed he is a minister of finance, had ample warning; he had at least six months' warning as did the Minister of Public Works. However, there were so many beginnings, so many new houses that had started, they felt the Canadian people would not notice this shortage of mortgage money with which they were going to be faced and they decided to wait and see what transpired.

If I read correctly the words of the Minister of Public Works as he spoke them yesterday on the orders of the day, it is his intention to have fewer new houses start in the last six months of this year than was the case in the first six months of this year.

The Minister of Public Works was very careful, when answering the hon. member for Broadview yesterday, to tell him that the number of housing starts had grown for the first five or six months of this year, but he very carefully avoided any reference to what has taken place within the last month throughout Canada. I am sure the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works have enough communications in their offices, both letters and telegrams, to indicate to them in no uncertain terms that the major source of mortgage money for new homes in Canada has to all intents and purposes come to an end and that a new way out has to be found by the government.

One of the recommendations I have made from time to time is that the government re-enter the field, at least to the extent of supplying 25 per cent of this money, as they did before the chartered banks were brought into the picture. I cannot blame the insurance companies of Canada, nor can I blame the chartered banks of Canada. After all, for many years during the hungry thirties we did not build any new homes in Canada, and yet the population grew. During the war housebuilding came to an end, so that at the end of the war there were from half a million to a million homes badly needed. We have never yet caught up.

The Minister of Public Works pointed out that last year we built some 50,000 more homes than new family units were formed. At that rate, 50,000 a year more new homes than new family units being formed, it would take us ten years before we came anywhere near to having an adequate supply of houses for the people of Canada.

Another reason why I feel that I at least have lost confidence in one minister of this government and that an election should be called—and I am again coming back to the same minister—is the policy he pursues.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh!

Mr. Regier: I notice the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration laughing when I say an election should be called. I would just love to see him contest any seat whatsoever in British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman accept my challenge and come and run against me?

Mr. Argue: How brave can you get?

Mr. Regier: I am not prepared to be a candidate in a riding where I know that some people have for so many years been held in subservience and slaves to the fish companies—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a nice way to talk about the free Newfoundlanders.

Mr. Regier: —and have grown old without ever having had a nickel in their pockets. They are slaves to the economic system that prevails there and to the Liberal party of Canada. However, I tell the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that on his policies of racial discrimination and on that one issue alone I will defeat him in any riding in British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that when the free Newfoundlanders hear that the C.C.F. calls them slaves they will know how to deal with the C.C.F.

Mr. Regier: I am afraid that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will not have any room to be a candidate in my riding because already I hear that the Minister of National Defence has selected that riding. If that should be the case, might I inform him that he may find a bunch of shipwrecked people in the slums of Vancouver centre whose vote he can buy at $5 a piece, which the Liberal party has always bought ever since they robbed Arnold Webster of that seat in 1935, and that in my riding the Minister of National Defence will be unable to win an election on that basis. There will be a thousand volunteer workers who will be worth more than $100,000 of Liberal bribe money any day.

Now I should like to come back to the Minister of Public Works. A year ago, Mr. Speaker, you will remember, we held up the prorogation or the adjournment of this house on the subject of federal aid to universities. That was sufficient cause to hold up the adjournment. That subject was worthy by itself. However, on the day following, as a result of our holding up this house for one more day, the member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) was able to ask the Minister of Public Works concerning the sale of veterans' houses to the veterans in Regina. When I got home after the adjournment of the house I found that there were also hundreds of people in the lower mainland who were very much interested in this subject. When the minister on that day—I believe it was July 29—replied to the member for Regina City, his reply was to the effect that the government, in selling these homes to veterans, was not planning on making any money. The plan was only to break even, but the government was not planning on making any money from the veterans.

I had noticed that the member for Regina City asked, "Why is it that the veterans of Regina are being asked to pay for these houses almost as much as the houses originally cost? When I came back to the lower mainland, I found that the veterans there in the Renfrew Heights subdivision were being asked to pay, not a little less than these houses cost, not what these houses cost, but much more than these houses cost. The Liberals who were at the mass meeting in Renfrew Heights repeated the minister's answer, "We are not making any money on these veterans' houses." However, I feel that the government may not be planning on making any money on these veterans' homes over the nation as a whole, but that is not interfering with the government's plans to make these veterans in this area and living in those homes make up the losses that the government will have to accept in other of the 92 cities of Canada.

The veterans in Renfrew Heights in Vancouver are being asked to pay thousands of dollars more for these homes than these homes cost, in order to help the government out of the losses it is experiencing on homes in other Canadian cities. That was one statement I made at one time at this mass meeting, and one statement that the government has never yet officially denied. The only answer government spokemen had at the meetings was that the veterans are buying these homes. I can list my home for sale, which is perhaps worth $15,000, and I can sell it for $30,000. As long as I am willing to take a $10 down payment, I can always find a fish who will buy that home and obligate himself and his descendants after him to pay interest for all eternity. The reason why the veterans are buying the homes is that they cannot resist buying them. The down payments are so low and, despite the denials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials, there is pressure exerted upon them to purchase these homes. They finally yield and buy these homes, simply because they have not the necessary down payment to go on the market and buy themselves decent homes at market values.

I feel that the Minister of Public Works should reassess the whole situation, and from the Vancouver people he should take only such money as these homes in Vancouver cost. If the government has made a blunder and perhaps lost a thousand homes in a swamp somewhere in northern Ontario, the veterans in Renfrew Heights should not be asked to foot the bill for them in the cost of their homes.

Then, coming back to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters), I am afraid time will not permit me to deal with everything I should like to concerning that minister.

Mr. Blackmore: You are wasting your time on too much boasting.

Mr. Regier: I am very glad to be able to represent such a progressive community as Burnaby in the House of Commons. We have there a voluntary organization known as the New Vista housing society, of which the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is a permanent member of the board of directors. This organization collects money throughout the municipality of 80,000 people for the purpose of building low rent housing for senior citizens and other people of equally low income. They obtain from the Social Credit government of the province, reactionary as it is, formerly a Liberal-Conservative coalition government almost as reactionary, a grant of one-third of the capital cost. Through tag days, service organizations and what-have-you the people raise as much money as they can. They receive one-third of the cost from the provincial government. But then does the federal government come along through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and make a grant? Oh no. It would be horrible to help our senior citizens and people on low incomes. We could not afford to do that. They will grant them a mortgage which has to be repaid with interest over a period of 30, 40 or I believe in some cases even 50 years.

When one looks at the resources of the various levels of government in Canada, I feel it is high time that the municipal government and the provincial government should be relieved of costs such as these. If they are not relieved, then their contribution should at least be matched by an equal contribution by the federal government. These old age pensioners are very fortunate in comparison to those who must rent on the open market. However, even to them $25 a month is a very large share of their income indeed to have to pay for rent. Why? In order to repay the mortgage held by the federal government.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) gets considerable publicity back home with his announcements each time the federal government helps with $100,000 for unit 6 or 7 or whatever it may be of the New Vista society. In the same publicity he does not inform the people of Burnaby that they themselves have made a cash donation and that the government in Victoria gives a donation but that the magnificent handout from Ottawa has to be repaid with its pound of flesh in interest.

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry) mentioned old age pensions. I am very pleased to say that we in western Canada take a little more progressive attitude regardless of the kind of government we have. I should not say "western Canada" because there is a Liberal government in Manitoba which still only pays a niggardly $40 a month to needy, old age pensioners. However, under certain conditions, and the conditions vary from one province to another, old age pensioners in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia can receive as much as $60 a month. But most of the old age pensioners live in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and I have no reason to believe that the cost of living in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto is very much lower than it is in Saskatoon, Edmonton or Victoria. The minister or his officials have indicated to the newspapers that they have a surplus for the last two months of $247 million. If they have such a surplus, I think one of the wisest ways in which they could invest at least a portion of it would be to make a little progress once and for all in the field of old age pensions.

In 1927 the federal government started to make a payment of $20 per month by way of an old age pension. In terms of the goods that old age pensioners have to buy the government, with its payment today of $40 a month, is paying less than it paid in 1927. We have made no progress whatsoever as a nation. We have gone backwards, and it is high time that another J. S. Woodsworth and a ginger group again had the balance of power in the House of Commons and forced this issue so that we might obtain $65 a month for men at age 65 and for women at age 60.

I think I have said almost enough. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has called for the dissolution of the house. I am looking at the seating plan of the House of Commons, and I see that we have a Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) who is doing practically nothing to find jobs for Canadians over the age of 35 who are unemployed. These people are left to the tender mercies of the municipal welfare officers back home. Then we have a Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) who unfortunately is ill at this time. Perhaps I should not say anything about him, but I have noticed that he is more concerned with maintaining friendly relations with the ten provincial attorneys general than he is to see that all Canadians from coast to coast enjoy at least some basic rights as Canadian citizens. That is a concept he has never yet grasped as Minister of Justice.

I see a Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) who still collects income tax from single citizens of Canada earning the magnificent total of $1,001 per year. We have a Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) who may know a lot about wheat although according to some of my colleagues he gets badly mixed up about wheat. However, as the farmers of the rest of Canada know full well, he knows very little about most of the farmers of Canada who do not grow a grain of wheat. We have a Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), or possibly I made a mistake. Maybe we have not got a Prime Minister. I have not noticed him for several years. However, we have an Acting Prime Minister who also acts as Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). He is more interested in maintaining the value of the Canadian dollar by the mass export of our raw natural resources south of the border to maintain employment there than he is in building up trade within the British commonwealth.

Then we have a Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). Someone once said that he is a small town country lawyer from Ontario. When it comes to matters of international affairs at least, I hope he never succeeds to the leadership of the Liberal party because I am afraid his concept of Canada's role and Canada's potentialities for world peace is very small indeed. We have a Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney) who I am confident knows no more about his department than I do. We have a Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) who just loves to take two steps forward and three back every time he makes a speech. Nobody yet knows what position he takes on any problem.

We have a Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) who will be perfectly happy to inaugurate a national health insurance plan in Canada as soon as all Canadians have asked for it. We have a Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) who I am told represents the province of Quebec, whatever that may mean. We have a Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) who, in my experience, is only too happy to let the harbours that are established monopolize the field and who is unwilling to undertake any harbour development except that which involves the well established vested interests in the major cities of Canada.

We have the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) whose citizenship I understand is based on a fishing village in Newfoundland. I do not know whether or not he was born there as a Canadian baby. However, the Canadian people are resentful of the fact that thousands of Italians, thousands of Chinese and, for all I know, maybe thousands of Janpanese are being allowed to immigrate into Canada. I am not for one moment going to oppose that immigration. However, to our commonwealth allies from Ceylon, from Pakistan and from India, 150 a year is the limit and no more. There is racial discrimination and the minister knows it. I will give him credit for this. I heard him admit racial discrimination.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never admitted racial discrimination.

Mr. Regier: At least he admitted discrimination on a television program. We have the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) and I will speak kindly of him. He used to represent the seat I have, and he did such a good job of educating my electorate to socialism that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney) will lose if he should decide to be a candidate there the next time. We have the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) who is overburdened. He is supposed to be licking postage stamps and to be running veterans affairs and looking after the war widows of Canada, all at the same time. Somebody mentioned that he was being appointed ambassador to France. I do not know whether he is planning on holding down all three jobs. We have the Minister of Public Works; I think I have said enough about him tonight. We have the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Prudham) who, I understand, knows almost as much as I do about mines in Canada. As to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) I wish him well indeed. I hope he can persuade the slow government—and I am not referring to the Socred government alone—of British Columbia finally to release Garibaldi park to the federal government so that we can have a national park for the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of standing order 56, paragraph (d), it is my duty to put the amendment to the main motion.

Mr. Martin: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the main motion lost. May I be so bold as to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that pairs are not announced until after the Clerk has given the results of the vote to the Speaker and the Speaker has announced the results.

Mr. Martin: I am very glad to accept your direction.

POWER—CONFERENCE ON DEVELOPMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there is one question I should like to raise before the motion is passed. It has to do with the conference which is to take place next week in Victoria between the premier of the province of British Columbia and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage). We were told that this conference would be concerned with the question of the development of the Columbia river in British Columbia and with other similar problems which have arisen between the federal government and the provincial government. I believe that because the future of the Columbia river is of such great concern to the whole of the coast province and of the nation there should be some consideration given to what is to be done at this conference next week before the minister leaves the house.

There have been earlier discussions in the house, but since then developments have taken place which have altered the situation considerably and which have made it even more important that a decision be reached by the federal government without any further delay as to just what part it is to take in the development of the power potential of that river.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, last year this house passed an act known as the International River Improvements Act. It contained a new principle in federal legislation in that it gave the dominion licensing control over most of the improvements which are placed on rivers flowing from Canada to the United States. That question had become of great importance because the government of the province of British Columbia proposed last year to enter into an agreement with the Kaiser interests in the United States for the construction of a dam near the lower end of the Arrow lakes in the Kootenay district of British Columbia. It was felt by the dominion government officials that the result of the construction of such a dam would be to prejudice the over-all development of the Columbia river system in Canada. As a result this legislation was introduced in the house and eventually was adopted with some changes which I think were very material.

Your Honour will perhaps remember that the stand taken by the official opposition on the second reading of that bill was that we believed the issue should be settled between the two governments concerned, and we asked that the bill be sent to the standing committee on external affairs for study and in order that the officials of the dominion government might be heard and also those of the provincial government.

The hearings held by that committee were very successful. As a result, quite a large measure of co-operation was reached between the two governments concerning the bill and, in its final form, the bill was modified a great deal from what it had been originally and much of the bad feeling between the two governments was done away with. I at least hoped that as a result it would be possible to have full co-operation in proceeding with plans for the use of the Columbia river. I am still hoping that that co-operation will be possible. It is only because I believe that the river cannot be developed as it should be for the greatest benefit of the people of my province, and incidentally of the Canadian people, unless the two governments can work out some co-operative plan, that I raise the matter now.

It has been recognized throughout that the key to the whole development was a dam and power plant to be erected at Mica Creek, which is up at the head of the Big Bend about 100 miles north of Revelstoke. There General McNaughton, as the leading dominion authority on the question, foresaw the erection of a very large dam, and last year, in the committee hearings, representatives of both governments admitted there was no reason why the construction of this dam could not be proceeded with just as soon as the final plans could be drawn.

A few days ago, in the sittings of the standing committee on external affairs, General McNaughton stated he was now positive that this plan could go ahead. I hold in my hand No. 15 of the proceedings of the committee for June 14 of this year. The general had this to say at page 416 concerning Mica Creek:

> We are well satisfied it represents a firm conclusion by the consulting engineers who have been doing the work for us. The Mica Creek dam, on the basis of 1,100,000 kilowatts installed would cost, including the power plant, $247 million, and it would give a firm power in kilowatts at the site of 625,000. The estimated head at the normal full pool would be 563 feet. If we include the diversion of 5,000 cubic feet per second by way of Canal Flats into the Columbia,—

There he was referring to a possible diversion of the headwaters of the Kootenay river into the Columbia. The general went on:

> —it brings the installed capacity to 1,320,000 kilowatts, and raises the firm power very considerably. The dam, according to lastest proposals, will be a rock fill which is much more stable than the original concrete structure which was proposed, and it has great merit in reducing the total cost from about $417 million down to $247 million for this dam.

That is a very substantial reduction in the estimated cost. In the next paragraph he went on to say:

> So, I think that all concerned, including the various other consultants to whom the matter has been referred, feel that we now have a completely firm proposition for Mica. Within a matter of a very few months the designs given in this book could be translated into contract drawings, and the matter could be launched.

Mr. Speaker, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the proceedings from which the hon. member is quoting have been reported?

Mr. Green: Yes.

On motion of Mr. Green the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with this debate and then take the resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to unemployment assistance costs.

May I raise a point of order at the moment, having to do with the length of the debate upon which we are now embarked. My understanding is that when we amended the rules last year we set out to give to those members who wished to raise grievances a period of two hours less 15 minutes, as I recall it, from the time that the vote was taken on the amendment. In other words, we said that the debate on the amendment would come to an end at quarter past eight and the vote on the main motion would occur at ten o'clock. We had that period during which time we assumed there would be a grievance period. If there has been any interference with that by reason of the royal assent, to the extent of perhaps eight or nine minutes—I am not sure—I would suggest in taking that into account tomorrow that extra time be allowed for the purpose of this debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk informs me, in relation to the point made by the Minister of Finance, that tomorrow for private members' grievances there is still available one hour plus 31 minutes—that is, altogether 91 minutes of debate—on this motion.

Mr. Green: Could we have the other business for tomorrow?

Mr. Harris: I gave it. We go on with this debate, and then take the resolution of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Green: The minister is not announcing any estimates for tomorrow?

Mr. Harris: I shall be glad to call the estimates of the Secretary of State if there is any time left after the resolution.

Mr. Green: In that connection, could the minister tell us what other branches under the Secretary of State will be handled, for example, the library, the archives or the national gallery?

Mr. Harris: The Secretary of State has the printing establishment as well as those estimates which are in the book in his name.

It being twelve minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

HOGS—FLOOR PRICE COMPLAINTS

Question No. 527—Mr. Zaplitny:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture and/or the agricultural prices support board received any complaints since January 1, 1956, from producers to the effect that less than the established floor price for hogs is being paid at stockyards in any of the three prairie provinces?

2. If so, how many such complaints have been received?

3. What action with regard to such complaints was taken by: (a) the agricultural prices support board; (b) the Department of Agriculture?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture):

1. No complaints have been received which applied to hogs sold over public stockyards.

2 and 3. See answer to No. 1 above.

INDIANS AND ESKIMOS—T.B. SURVEYS

Question No. 528—Mr. Weaver:

What proportion of the Indian and Eskimo population is being reached by the Department of National Health and Welfare in its T.B. surveys?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

The Indian and northern health services of the Department of National Health and Welfare is constantly trying to increase the numbers covered by their annual field X-ray surveys. During 1955 organized teams working out of the various departmental hospitals X-rayed about 50 per cent of the total Indian population. In addition many thousands of examinations were carried out on individual Indians between surveys.

Case-finding parties in the Arctic were able to X-ray 70 per cent of the total Eskimo population. In the eastern Arctic this figure reached almost 80 per cent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 27, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DOMINION DAY

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT OF HOUSE ON NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Next Monday is the day set aside to honour the founding of our nation. It is a day which will be respected as a holiday in every city, town, village and other part of Canada. This house will be sitting for some time yet. No question of urgency arises which would necessitate sitting on such a day.

There are many hon. members who, as part of their duties as representatives of the people, will feel called upon to attend ceremonies in their own communities. For that reason I think it would be appropriate that we honour that day by adjourning when we adjourn on Friday until Tuesday next. I think this would be in keeping with the respect for the day marking the beginning of the history of a country which we all revere. I cannot imagine that on corresponding days in the United States or in other countries, where they respect the day set aside to mark the beginning of the nation, they would sit under these circumstances and deny to any of their members who have the opportunity to do so the right to participate in such celebrations as may take place.

It may well be that there are those who will not be able to attend the ceremonies in their own communities, but may I say to any of those who will not that there will be ceremonies here in Ottawa which will permit them to indicate their respect for the nation which is honoured on that day.

Mr. Sinclair: Right here in this chamber.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter, though not with reference to this particular day, has been discussed on several occasions, but it has been the feeling of the house that we can best honour our country on public holidays by attending to the country's business. Many hon. members are here at great distances from their homes. They are here to attend to the country's business. If a few hon. members find it necessary to be absent from the house and in their own constituencies I think if they are able to do that during a provincial election campaign they can perhaps be absent on Monday next.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I raised this question as one of honouring Canada as a nation. The contemptible suggestion that this would be a political idea in permitting members to go to their homes is utterly unworthy of the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say that I made no such suggestion. The representation made by the hon. member is a gratuitous insult to me and he might very well withdraw. I mentioned that certain hon. members can be away without upsetting the business of the house. I again say that we can best honour our country by attending to our country's business which we are here to undertake.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to withdraw. It is not an insult to this house to suggest that we should honour the day on which Canada was founded.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I submit that what has been submitted as a question of privilege was really a matter affecting the business of the house. The suggestion having been made that an adjournment take place on July 2 next, and a reply having been made by the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Howe), I think the matter should be considered as closed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CRIMINAL LAW

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the special joint committee on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries. This report constitutes the committee's final report on the question of capital punishment only. The report being presented is in English. The French version will be presented later. No motion will be made for adoption of this report at this time.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Eighth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou).

Questions

STARRED QUESTIONS

PURCHASE OF FEDERAL PROPERTY, JOYCEVILLE, ONT.

Question No. 55—Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the federal government completed its purchase of certain property or properties at Joyceville, Ontario, from Mr. Benjamin Franklin?
2. If so, how many acres were purchased from Mr. Franklin, and what is the total price paid, or to be paid, for the same?
3. What is the average price per acre of land in this area?
4. Was the land purchased from Mr. Franklin clear of any encumbrances when negotiations for the purchase of the same were commenced? If not, on what date was the land cleared of all encumbrances so that a sale to the government could be registered?
5. Did the government purchase or agree to purchase from Mr. Franklin anything other than the land in question, such as stock or equipment? If so, how much was paid, or is to be paid, for the same?
6. To what purpose is (a) the land; (b) stock or other equipment, purchased from Mr. Franklin, to be put?
7. What are the names of any lawyers who acted or participated in any negotiations leading up to or relating to the sale of this property to the government, (a) on the part of Mr. Franklin; (b) on the part of the government?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to answer on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) starred question No. 55. The first question is:

1. Has the federal government completed its purchase of certain property or properties at Joyceville, Ontario, from Mr. Benjamin Franklin?

The answer is yes. Question No. 2 is:

2. If so, how many acres were purchased from Mr. Franklin, and what is the total price paid, or to be paid, for the same?

The answer is 450 acres more or less. The price paid was $123,000, which was based on valuation of buildings at $83,000 and land at $40,000. Question No. 3 reads:

3. What is the average price per acre of land in this area?

The answer is this. No average price is ascertainable, since prices depend on location, condition of land, state of buildings and similar factors. Question No. 4 is:

4. Was the land purchased from Mr. Franklin clear of any encumbrances when negotiations for the purchase of the same were commenced?

The answer to this first part of the question is no. The second part of the question reads as follows:

If not, on what date was the land cleared of all encumbrances so that a sale to the government could be registered?

The answer is: On June 11, 1956, the crown acquired title to the property free of all encumbrances except three small executions amounting in all to $1,261.32 in respect of which sufficient money was placed in trust to protect the crown. Question No. 5 is:

5. Did the government purchase or agree to purchase from Mr. Franklin anything other than the land in question, such as stock or equipment? If so, how much was paid, or is to be paid, for the same?

The answer to both these questions is no.

Then question No. 6 reads:

To what purpose is (a) the land; (b) stock or other equipment, purchased from Mr. Franklin, to be put?

The answer to both parts of this question is as follows: Both the land and the stock will be used as site and for the construction and operation of a new penitentiary.

Then question No. 7 reads:

What are the names of any lawyers who acted or participated in any negotiations leading up to or relating to the sale of this property to the government, (a) on the part of Mr. Franklin; (b) on the part of the government?

The answer is that the lawyers who acted on behalf of Mr. Franklin were Messrs. Arnoldi, Parry and Campbell of Toronto; and on behalf of the government Messrs. Gibson, Sands and Flanigan of Kingston.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Question No. 56—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou):

1. Are new federal-provincial agreements required pursuant to the amended Trans-Canada Highway Act which received royal assent on June 7, 1956?
2. If so, with what provincial governments have agreements been concluded to date?

Mr. Bourget, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works: The answer to the first part of the question is yes; and as to the second part, agreements have been concluded with the provincial governments of Manitoba, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and Alberta. Nova Scotia has returned a signed agreement but with a revision in schedule "A", the detailed designation of the route of the trans-Canada highway in the province. British Columbia has submitted only a revised schedule "A". Before agreements can be signed with these provinces, further clarification of the schedules "A" is required.

QUESTIONS

R.C.A.F.—AIR CREW RECRUITS, 1955

Question No. 407—Mr. Hamilton (York West):

1. What number of air crew were required to be recruited last year (1955) for the Royal Canadian Air Force to maintain the air strength necessary for present policy and commitments?
2. What were the actual enlistments for air crew during 1955?
3. How many applications for enlistment as air crew were received during 1955?

4. How many of these were rejected and for what reasons, under the following headings: (a) physical disability; (b) failure to meet educational requirements; (c) other reasons?

5. How many air crew passed their courses and qualified during the year 1955?

6. How many qualified air crew were discharged from the service during 1955, and for what reasons: (a) physical disability; (b) completion of term of service; (c) other reasons?

Mr. Hellyer, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of National Defence: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal orally with question No. 407, concerning R.C.A.F. air crew. In the opinion of the air force, to give such detailed information in the same form year after year would enable unfriendly countries to make fairly accurate calculations to their own advantage, and this is not desirable. I did, however, have the information prepared in the form requested by the hon. member and it was offered to him on a confidential basis, but this offer was declined.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

WAR CLAIM, BENJAMIN GODDARD

Question No. 529—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. Did Benjamin Goddard, of 1575 Sandwich street east, Windsor, Ontario, file a claim with the office of the custodian of enemy property, or with the war claims commission for the loss resulting from the death of his wife, her personal effects and other costs?

2. Did the said Goddard discuss this claim or any other claim with the custodian's office?

3. Did anyone on behalf of the government or the custodian's office or any other branch of government service represent to Goddard that the Canadian government would deal with his claim?

4. Did the Secretary of State on or about November 9, 1945, advise the said Goddard that his claim was under active consideration and that he would later be advised as to the result?

5. Did the war claims commission undertake to assist the said Goddard in establishing his admissible claims against the Canadian war claims fund?

6. Did the said Goddard file statutory declarations of his intention to claim pecuniary loss resulting from the death of his wife together with an additional claim for the loss of her personal property?

7. If the facts alleged by the claimant are established, what action will be taken?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION —DIRECTIVES ISSUED

Motion No. 84—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of any and all directives or instructions issued since the 1st day of January, 1955, by or under the authority of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, in any way connected with immigration or citizenship.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Before this motion is put, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I am quite prepared to make public any documents that in any way could be considered to be described by this motion which have been made public in any other way. There are about 275 such documents. But, of course, there are in addition to that a good many confidential instructions and directives to the staff which it is well understood are privileged and which would not be included in the return.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REQUEST TO POSTPONE DECISION TO DISBAND MOUNT HOPE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the representations which have been made to him on behalf of 424 squadron of the R.C.A.F. auxiliary, and in view of the outstanding record of that squadron during the time it has been training at the Mount Hope airport, will the minister postpone any decisions until an opportunity has been given to make representations to him and to the department in regard to that squadron, particularly in view of the outstanding safety record and the highly satisfactory surroundings of the Mount Hope airport and the fact that other squadrons come to that airport to do their firing practice, thus demonstrating the suitability of that airport for continued flying training?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since I dealt with this matter yesterday in answer to the hon. member's question I have received some telegrams dated last evening and this morning in relation to this matter. It is not a question of postponing decision; the decision has been taken. But I certainly would be always open to receive representations from any persons who feel that they would care to make them.

So far as the attributes of this airport are concerned, to which the hon. member referred, these matters were all considered. One of the salient facts in this case, which I think I might now indicate, is that in order to operate and maintain this airport solely for the support of the local auxiliary so far as flying is concerned, the cost to the Royal Canadian Air Force is well over $1 million a year. The personnel of the auxiliary are very fine, competent people and they have done a good job. It is felt, however, that other R.C.A.F. activities could be engaged in by members of the personnel of this squadron which would certainly not cost anything like the sum I have mentioned. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would agree with me that, all things considered, where we can save substantial sums of money we should do so.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, will the minister not agree that if this is a good airport it would be better to add another squadron there and make wider use of the airport which, after all, is apparently being operated at the cost of just over the cost of a single modern fighter aircraft?

Mr. Campney: Well, I do not know that we should proceed with a debate on this matter at the moment. All the relevant factors were very seriously considered, and if any persons or groups produce new arguments and new reasons which override what has already been considered I would be always ready to listen to them, but I have not heard any such reasons yet.

Mr. Drew: I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell the house whether the same practice was followed as was followed when there was a reorganization of the army, and whether there was consultation with the officers of this squadron to obtain their opinions and to hear the evidence before this decision was made?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest this is entirely irregular. I would submit that when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are before the committee of supply a matter of this kind could be dealt with.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I submit it is not irrelevant and I submit—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not say it was irrelevant; I said that at this period when questions are being asked it is not regular to debate a matter. This is the point I was stressing.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am not debating; I was asking a question in regard to a decision which affects the immediate use of an airport. If there is to be a decision it has to be made before the estimates can be dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Do I take it that the Leader of the Opposition does not accede to the remarks I have made?

Mr. Lennard: No.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to raise any questions about the remarks. I do not agree with your estimate of the situation. I think it was a perfectly proper question, but I am going to leave the matter there because it is clear the minister has no intention of doing anything about it.

[Mr. Campney.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton South.

Mr. R. E. Reinke (Hamilton South): My question was primarily the same as that raised by the Leader of the Opposition, but I might point out I thought I was on my feet first.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—INQUIRY AS TO REPLY TO LETTER OF PREMIER BULGANIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In his absence, perhaps the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs would care to take this as notice. Will the minister indicate whether a reply has been given to Marshal Bulganin's letter of recent date respecting disarmament? If not, why not? If so, what is the text of the reply?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I can deal with the question now. The letter to which my hon. friend directs the attention of the house was sent to the heads of six governments, including Canada.

The reply of Canada has been considered by the Prime Minister and will be given further consideration by him when he returns from the prime ministers' conference in London. In the meantime some aspects of this question will undoubtedly be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of the disarmament commission which takes place next Wednesday in New York at the United Nations.

[Later:]

RUSSIA—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Fisheries expressing the view of the government when he said in Kitchener last night, and I quote his words as reported by the Canadian Press: "No one can question the desire for peace of any Russian." Is that the view of the government?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Who was the speaker referred to? I have not seen the dispatch.

Mr. Hees: The Minister of Fisheries, speaking in Kitchener last night.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Perhaps the Minister of Fisheries will answer the question.

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): I was not speaking in Kitchener last night; I was speaking in Kitchener yesterday noon. I did say that after my experience in Russia no one can question the desire for peace of the ordinary Russian people after having lost seven million soldiers in the war. I hope the hon. member also studied the remarks I made about him during my recent speaking tour.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Press did not report that. They reported the minister as referring not to the desire for peace of the ordinary Russian citizen but as saying "any Russian", and that includes the members of the Russian government, Khrushchev, Bulganin and all the rest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED ISSUING OF AIR TRANSPORT PASSES TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Acting Prime Minister a question supplementary to what the Leader of the Opposition brought up at the commencement of the sitting. Has the government given any further consideration to the possibility of issuing air transportation passes to members, particularly those who come from the maritimes and British Columbia, so that they can make rush trips home occasionally? It takes all of a week to get to British Columbia and back by rail.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been discussed by the government. Certainly we could not issue passes to every member of the House of Commons to ride on Trans-Canada whenever he may wish. We would obviously be hauling plane loads of free travellers and I think that would be a little conspicuous. However, we will explore the situation to see whether any special provision for air travel can be made. Of course, the most satisfactory provision for everyone would be to expedite the work of the session and let hon. members get back home permanently.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO POSITION WITH RESPECT TO QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say what progress has been made in raising delivery quotas in southwestern Saskatchewan where the Saskatchewan wheat pool has recently pointed out the quotas are still substantially below average? Will producers in this area have an opportunity to deliver a quantity of grain similar to that delivered in other areas?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have made several statements during the prolonged absence of my hon. friend from the House of Commons. As I have explained on several recent occasions delivery quotas are being raised in southwestern Saskatchewan, and in other areas where quotas are relatively low, just as quickly as possible. In raising delivery quotas the wheat board, however, has to take into account the grade and kind of grain for which there is an immediate requirement in forward positions. Every effort will be made to achieve equality of delivery opportunities throughout the west, but the wheat board cannot give an undertaking that all delivery quotas will be at the same level at the end of the crop year.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that the first responsibility of the wheat board must be to move saleable grain into forward positions.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Has any further consideration been given to extending delivery quotas beyond the end of the crop year at points where the quotas are under the 7-bushel quota or the regular quota at that time?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, that matter has been fully considered and the decision has been made that delivery quotas will end on July 31.

WHEAT—ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS ON C.P.R. BRANCH LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question arising indirectly out of the question just asked. What has been done since the last report the minister gave to the house, in answer to a question I asked, to assure a reasonable provision of cars for the delivery of wheat on C.P.R. lines? Has the minister received telegrams such as I have received even today complaining against the calamitous shortage on C.P.R. lines of cars, and what is being done to meet that situation?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe that the car supply is seriously below requirements because the grain movement over the C.P.R. line is at record levels.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I meant to say C.P.R. branch lines.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I could not say about the branch lines. The tendency may be to direct cars to the competitive points. That is largely a matter for the agents of the wheat pools and the trade as to the localities where the shipping instructions are directed. However, we are having a record movement. Never in my experience has grain moved forward within this country and into export as rapidly as it has been doing for the past two or three months. All I can say is that I think everyone concerned is doing his best to deal with the situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister request the wheat board or the transport controller to do something to meet the situation on these C.P.R. branch lines, because it is serious? People are complaining and they are met with the usual answer that cars are not available on these lines. Will the minister do something?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I shall certainly do my best. I have been doing my best to bring the low quota points up to the standard of the other points. As I stated a week or two ago, alternate delivery points are being made available at high quota points that are accessible for delivery by truck from low quota points. We are doing everything we can to deal with the situation and I suggest that considerable progress is being made.

CHEESE

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CONTAMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he table the reports made to his department with regard to the cheese industry in this country during the past few years? Officials of the department have made alarming statements in public addresses regarding contamination. Will the minister table the reports made to his department by his officials, say for the last six years?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to look into the matter and see what can be done. In the meantime I wish the hon. member would let me have, either publicly or privately, details of the statements to which he refers.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Coldwell: I refer to a statement made by Dr. Thatcher at a meeting, I believe in Montreal, and published in yesterday's Montreal Gazette.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—REPORTED DESTRUCTION OF FISH BY AIR SPRAYING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, notice of which was sent to his office yesterday. Is the minister aware of the reports that have been made about unwarranted destruction of salmon by the spraying of forests in New Brunswick and more particularly spraying at or near a salmon hatchery where a large number of young salmon were destroyed? If so, what action is being taken to prevent a repetition of such occurrences?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice of his question in sufficient time to wire our scientists and to get a report. On Saturday, June 9, commercial planes spraying D.D.T. over the forests between the Northwest and Southwest Miramichi rivers crossed over the hatchery area of Miramichi hatchery. Definite oil slicks appeared on the pond and in the hatchery, and during the following week over 800,000 salmon and trout were destroyed. The fisheries scientists are well aware of the need for spruce budworm spraying and have tried to work out a program with the operators so that the hatchery areas will not be sprayed. The plans given to our scientists this spring showed that this hatchery area was not to be sprayed. This is the third such occurrence and this time we lost one-third of our hatchery stock and we are now examining the possibility of taking legal action against the firm concerned.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether I could ask the Minister of Fisheries a supplementary question with reference to the matter raised by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud). From his answer I understood that action was being taken against the aeroplane company which was spraying for the budworm. I would assume that to mean legal action. From the press reports that I have seen, it was stated that there was no carelessness on the part of the aeroplanes but what happened was on account of the storms and floods. I should like to ask the minister if carelessness has been found on the part of this company and whether legal action is being taken because, after all, as I understand it, these companies are the agents of the federal government and it would be a case of the federal government suing themselves.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, all I said was that our officers were studying the possibility of taking action because this is the third time this thing has occurred. It is quite true that in one paper there was a report saying that it was because of rain conditions and flood conditions after spraying that this thing occurred. Unfortunately many of our salmon and trout died before the rainfall. There does not seem to be much question at all that, whether through accident or by negligence, the actual hatchery area was sprayed by D.D.T. and over 800,000 salmon and trout died.

Mr. Brooks: Was there not any representation that the damage was not as great as we had anticipated and that there was such a large quantity of these fish that it would not make very much difference?

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, most of the maritime members feel that we should have many more fish in the streams. The loss of one-third of our hatchery stock in one week is a very serious blow to our program of rehabilitation of the salmon and trout fisheries in that province.

Mr. Brooks: I was quoting from the press report.

Mr. Sinclair: Press reports are not always reliable, as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees) has just pointed out.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BELLEFLEUR RIFLE RANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister please comment on the progress of the building of the Bellefleur rifle range in Madawaska county and indicate when it is expected the work will start and when we may expect it to be completed?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The plans and specifications for this range are completed and I understand that the Department of Defence Production propose to call for tenders very shortly. Barring any accident we hope the work will be proceeded with and completed expeditiously.

CANCER

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF HOXSEY TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister been advised that the Hoxsey cancer treatment is being advertised in Canada and that the department of health, education and welfare in Washington has advised United States citizens that this treatment is worthless? What action is the government taking to so advise Canadian citizens?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall take my hon. friend's question as notice and give him my usual complete reply later.

BUTTER

STATEMENT RESPECTING MAINTENANCE OF FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) on June 22. In my absence he put the question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the minister said:

> Since my hon. friend has directed the question to me, I shall answer it.

Then he went on to say:

> I shall draw it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. I expect he will be back in his seat next week.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has brought this matter to my attention.

Mr. Drew: Now that you are back.

Mr. Gardiner: Now that I am back, yes; and now that we are both back. The question was a follow-up on some questioning by different members that had been asked the previous two days. The first question itself is in these words:

> In view of the uncertainty left in the minds of both producers and consumers of butter by the answers given the other day by the parliamentary assistant with regard to the sale of 25 million pounds of butter at 2 cents per pound less than the cost to the government, what security has the butter producer that the floor price of 58 cents per pound will be maintained throughout June, July and August, the months during which I understand the delivery of the 25 million pounds is to be made?

The security is that the agricultural prices support board of the Department of Agriculture offers 58 cents a pound basis Toronto and Montreal and 57 cents a pound basis

Vancouver on the markets right across Canada every day, and no one is required to sell grade A butter at less than 58 cents, so that the price is secured in that way. The second question continued:

If the floor price is 58 cents and the government only buys about one-third of what the dairy producer produces, then what assurance has the producer that the 56 cents, which is the price at which the government is selling butter into the trade—a greater amount at 56 cents than they are buying at 58 cents—with no particular quality distinction—

The position in relation to that is, as I will show in a minute by reading the order in council, that the quality distinction in respect of the butter that the agricultural prices support board is dealing with is that it is grade A butter, all of it, that is being dealt with. The matter of the 56 cents is, I think, dealt with in the answer to the third question which was:

—and also what assurance has the consumer whether the consumer price is to be based on the 58 cents the government is paying for the butter or the 56 cents at which it is selling a larger amount?

The fact is that both actions are based upon 58 cents. In the first place, the 58 cents is always available for fresh butter coming on the market, and in determining the 56 cents at which butter was sold to the trade it was estimated—as a matter of fact, it was actually figured—that butter could not be sold by the trade at much less than 58 cents if they were going to make the usual profits in selling that butter. The cost of switching it from bulk butter to prints and putting it on the market is sufficient to take up the greater part of the difference between the 56 cents and the 58 cents, so that the 58 cents pretty well governs no matter whether it is the consumer or the producer who is affected by it. Fresh butter is available at 58 cents per pound and 1955 butter may be available at slightly less. I continue with question four:

I might also ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have the minister or his assistant tell us whether it is a fact that 5 million pounds of this butter has been sold in western Canada at a further reduction to the trade of 2 cents additional, with no assurance to the consumer or the producer.

The fact is, as I understand the situation at the moment, that no such sale has actually been made, but I suppose it could be estimated that the order in council itself governs the price to the extent that in some places the price obtained by the individual might be less than the basic price over a certain area, and I think I should read the order in council to make that clear:

Whereas under authority of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 9 of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, the agricultural prices support board proposes to offer to purchase from May 1, 1956 to April 30, 1958, Canada first grade creamery butter—

Because we do not deal with any other.

—and under authority of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 9 of the said act proposes to prescribe the following prices therefor:

58 cents per pound basis delivery Halifax, Saint John, Montreal and Toronto,

57 cents per pound basis delivery Vancouver, all purchases to be subject to such terms and conditions as may be specified by the agricultural prices support board.

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture and under authority of paragraph (a) of section 2 of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, is pleased to designate and doth hereby designate as an agricultural product for the purposes of the said act, Canada first grade creamery butter . . .

With regard to this last question, I would point out that the places at which butter would be delivered at the floor price, Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, are on the two sides of the prairie section of Canada. Butter goes west to Vancouver from Alberta and probably part of Saskatchewan. Butter goes east from Saskatchewan and Manitoba to the eastern market. Of course, the cost of moving butter from the prairies to either one of these markets is accounted for and it would be somewhere between 1 and 2 cents, and the butter will of course be sold under contracts, whether it is to the government or whoever it may be, at a lower price than it is sold at the two ends of Canada.

I would not be definite in saying that it is below the 57-cent price in certain sections of the west if the butter is coming east but it certainly would be lower than these set prices. I should like to point this out though, while I am dealing with the matter, and I suppose this is the question which is in the minds of some. The fact is that the 56-cent price at which the butter has been offered to the trade is 2 cents below the 58-cent price at which it was purchased last year. It is 1955 butter. In the first year that this plan was followed, two years ago, 2½ cents a pound was the difference. Last year it was 2 cents a pound. Last year we permitted the trade to buy butter at 56 cents during all the time the plan was in operation and the plan was in operation down until September. This year we decided that, in the interests of the producer—and, we think, in the interests of the consumer too—it was preferable that the trade should take delivery of as much butter as possible as early as possible. So we made a definite arrangement with them that they would take 25 million pounds, a large part of it—about a third of it—by June 15; probably another one-third by July 15 and another one-third by August

15. The matter of the cost of carrying butter under this plan would not be as great to the agricultural prices support board as it was under the plans followed in the previous two years. That was the reason for entering into the arrangement which we have entered into for this year.

Then there was the additional fact that every time we talked about marketing butter anywhere outside of Canada during this last six months or eight months, someone in the house somewhere—usually on the opposition side—suggested that butter ought, as far as possible, to be sold in Canada at any lower price at which it was going to be sold. We therefore thought that the arrangement made was such that probably more of the butter which we may have for sale would be sold and consumed within Canada on this basis than on the other. So we are proceeding to have it done in that way because of that desire. I think the policy will work out to the benefit of both the producer and the consumer.

Mr. Rowe: In view of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) may I ask him this question. He said that they are selling butter to the trade at 56 cents and are only buying one-third of what the producer produces during these three months. Is that not giving effect to reducing the price to the producer by at least 2 cents to 56 cents? If they can buy from you at 56 cents, what is to hinder them from buying from the producer at 56 cents, 2 cents below the floor price?

Mr. Gardiner: No. We do not think so.

Mr. Rowe: You buy only one-third.

Mr. Gardiner: Every day the price for that fresh butter is 58 cents.

Mr. Rowe: For how much?

Mr. Gardiner: For whatever they offer.

Mr. Rowe: You took only one-third last year.

Mr. Gardiner: If we took one-third last year it worked out that way. Some years it worked out less than that and some years more than that. One year we scarcely got any. The producer can always deliver his butter—that is grade "A" butter—to the board at 58 cents if no one offers 58 or more. He can sell it every day and every hour that the markets are open at that price.

On the other question—I just referred to it but perhaps I should have made it plainer—may I say this. As to the 56 cents, the price that the trade is going to charge for the butter will naturally be very close to the 58 cents—that is for the 1955 butter—because they have to convert solids into prints or forms of one kind and another in order to sell it to the retail trade. By the time they have done that, they cannot afford to sell the butter at less than about 58 cents. So an attempt is made to have all the butter that is going into the market at as close as possible to the 58 cents paid to the producer. We think it is working closely enough that there is not going to be any undue advantage to the trade over and above what one would naturally expect the trade to get in that kind of deal. When it is all worked out, I think you will find that neither the producer nor the consumer suffers by it. The quantity is only beneficial to us in the fact that the more the trade takes from us, the better we are pleased. We simply have to carry it over until the trade wants it again and pay the carrying charges. If the policy works out in the manner in which we hope it will work out we will save on carrying charges compared with previous years.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED IMPORTS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now that the election in the province of Quebec is over, with the result we all know—

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Dufresne: —is the minister now in a position to answer the question that I put on the order paper 27 days ago with regard to eggs imported from communist Poland?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I gave a verbal answer to a similar question. I dare say my hon. friend was at that time more concerned with the provincial election than he is now. Perhaps he was not here. I think if he will read Hansard he will find the answer.

Mr. Dufresne: I do not think the minister is obliged to make any statement of that kind because he knows perfectly well, as I stated yesterday in my speech, that neither directly nor indirectly did I participate in the election campaign in the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: You were afraid.

Mr. Dufresne: The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) says that I was afraid. May I say I was afraid that none of the votes would be left for the Liberal party.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply.

POWER—CONFERENCE ON DEVELOPMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask hon. members not to be too impetuous. When the deputy clerk was reading the order of the day, he had not concluded reading the order before several members were rising to leave the chamber.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, before I continue the remarks which I had commenced last evening, I should like to apologize to Your Honour for an inaccurate answer I gave to Your Honour when you asked me, after I moved the adjournment of the debate, whether a report from the standing committee on external affairs from which I had quoted had been reported to the house. I answered that it had. Unfortunately, that answer was wrong. Although the report in question has been distributed, the committee has not made a formal report to the house. I trust that no harm has been done. All of these reports from the standing committees are distributed at once and the members had the report. Furthermore, there have been quite extensive reports in the press of the statement by General McNaughton which I quoted. As a matter of fact, I had intended to quote from a press dispatch —it would probably have been more in order—rather than from the committee's proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: May I tell the hon. gentleman that I am always very sympathetic to those who admit they are wrong.

Mr. Green: I had pointed out last evening, Mr. Speaker, that a week from today the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) is to hold a conference with the premier of British Columbia in Victoria at which the problems arising out of the development of the Columbia river for power purposes and similar questions will be discussed. I had stressed the view of the official opposition that it is essential there should be the closest co-operation between the two governments on these questions, which I admit at once are difficult ones.

Then, I was going on to point out that there had been developments within the last few weeks which should be drawn to the attention of the house. They have to do primarily with the manner in which the dam and the power plant are to be constructed at Mica creek on the Big Bend of the Columbia river. I am quite sure that the minister will agree with me when I say that the Mica creek development is the key to the development of the whole of the Columbia river in Canada. This view is held by the minister's own officials, the provincial government officials and by the United States. I have here a report made by Senator Richard L. Neuberger of Oregon, to the Senate committee on interior and insular affairs as a result of his investigation last fall. He had this to say:

> But Mica is the key to the development of the Columbia river in Canada.

He also said, confirming the opinions of dominion and provincial authorities:

> And Mica is ready for construction in the immediate future.

Both of those statements are accurate. I explained last night that General McNaughton had taken the position on June 14 that someone could go ahead right away and make final plans for the Mica creek project. The following day there was a press report of the reaction of the premier of British Columbia to that statement by General McNaughton. I am quoting from the Vancouver Sun of June 15, which states:

> Asked to comment on a statement in Ottawa by General A. G. L. McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission, that engineers have deemed such a project feasible, premier Bennett said:
> "There has never been any doubt about the feasibility of this dam."
>
> "The Social Credit government of B.C. has always been in favour of the Mica creek dam. We've said all along that it was feasible."

He also said:

> The premier told a reporter he has made no definite plans as yet concerning construction of the power station.

Then, there is this further interesting paragraph in quotation marks:

> "'If it hadn't been for the interference from Ottawa, we in B.C. would already have the dam under construction."

The next day, June 16—

Mr. Lesage: You do not believe that.

Mr. Green: I am not saying what I believe at the moment. The following day a dispatch appeared in the Vancouver Province reporting that the B.C. Electric, which is the power company on the lower mainland of British Columbia, was seeking authority to build the Mica creek project at a cost of $247 million as estimated by General McNaughton. This was the first time that news had broken; it was something new in the picture. The dispatch contains two interesting paragraphs. The first one is this:

> Before work can begin, there must be agreement between Ottawa and Victoria on the development at Mica, 80 miles north of Revelstoke.

That, of course, is an accurate statement of fact, that there must be agreement between the two governmental bodies. Then it went on:

An understanding also is important between Ottawa and Washington on downstream benefits on the stretches of the Columbia in American territory.

That, too, is accurate, and those are the two vital factors to be remembered in this whole question. May I diverge for a moment to deal with this question of downstream benefits. As Your Honour knows, what is meant by downstream benefits is that the plant downstream which benefits by dams upstream and thereby can produce more power, should pay something for that situation. Canada has taken the position that payment must be in power rather than in money. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), when he conferred with President Eisenhower in April of this year, apparently did briefly discuss this question of the Columbia river. Then, on May 23 the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources made the statement that these officials in the higher brackets in Canada and the United States would be conferring about the whole question.

While there is great urgency about settling this problem of downstream benefits, it is obvious that nothing much can be done until the fall. I do suggest to the minister in this connection that it would be well for him to have a top level official of the British Columbia government sit in with him or with whatever other Canadian federal minister participates in the talks, because British Columbia is the province most widely affected at the present time. I think it would further co-operation if an arrangement of that kind could be made.

The B.C. Electric statement was made on June 16. Then, on June 21 Premier Bennett made a statement dealing with the proposal that the B.C. Electric should develop this project. He made it quite clear that he was hoping to have United States interests build that dam. I think he obviously intended the power plant would be built by Canadians, whether by the B.C. Power Commission or by private Canadians, he did not say; but he did indicate that he thought the best way to build the dam would be to have it done by United States interests, and he puts up quite a reasonable argument in favour of that proposal.

The dispatch reads as follows:

If power is to be developed on the Columbia, said the premier, then the cost must be kept low.

And, he said, U.S. financing of the dam would mean that this cost would not be charged against the electricity generated at the dam site.

In effect, the 20 per cent "cream"—

He has in mind that the United States should pay in the nature of 20 per cent of the additional power produced for downstream benefits.

—from the extra generation on the U.S. side would come to B.C. at a next to nothing cost.

He believes, and evidently sincerely believes, that United States interests are willing to build that dam without asking for any return, other than the fact that they will get more water through their plants in times when the Columbia river is low. The premier thinks that Canada and British Columbia, of course, will save that much money and therefore the users of the power will get it that much cheaper. The following day he was reported as having amplified his statement as follows:

The premier reiterated that he felt the downstream benefits would make it worth while for the United States to finance construction of Mica dam through formation of Canadian companies.

Then he is quoted verbatim:

We want to make sure the dams are paid for by the downstream benefits, that we get all the power at the dams, and that we get a minimum of 20 per cent of the extra power created downstream on the American side.

There is no room for middlemen in this hydro electric. The most likely development will be by large users of power on both sides of the border.

Now, of course, when he suggests the figure of 20 per cent for downstream benefits, that undercuts the negotiations that the dominion might undertake with the United States government on this very question of payment for downstream benefits.

The premier of British Columbia has taken the same stand before. He took it in May, and then his minister, Mr. Sommers, made a similar statement in the British Columbia legislature in February. It would appear certain they are hoping that the Americans will build this dam free and that someone in Canada can then go in and build the power plant. There is some reason for his contention, because I quote again from Senator Neuberger's report to the United States senate committee. Senator Neuberger had this to say with regard to the Mica creek project:

A second specific proposal is the offer of the Puget Sound Utilities Council to finance the construction of Mica dam, also in return for a share of the downstream power benefits realized by Bonneville power administration as a result of the storage provided by the huge Mica reservoir. This proposal was explained to me in Seattle by Dr. Paul J. Raver, former Bonneville power administrator who now heads Seattle City Light and is chairman of the Puget Sound Utilities Council, and Mr. Jack D. Stevens, consulting engineer for the Council.

The Puget Sound Utilities Council is composed of the Seattle and Tacoma city light systems, public utility districts of Snohomish and Chelan counties, Washington, and the Puget Sound Power and Light Company. Together, these five utilities propose to finance construction of the Mica project at an estimated cost of $250 million. Ownership of the project would then be turned over to British Columbia, which could arrange for the installation of at-site power. Storage from the Mica reservoir would be released to increase prime power at Columbia river plants in the United States now in existence or under construction by 1,100,000 kilowatts.

There would be that great increase in production in the United States by reason of the Mica dam. I continue:

Of this increase, the members of the Puget Sound Utilities Council would receive from Bonneville power administration the amount of power necessary to amortize the council's costs of financing the Mica project—estimated at about 800,000 kilowatts. The remaining 300,000 kilowatts would be added to B.P.A.'s power pool.

Then, the senator went on:

This plan has been proposed to officials of the Canadian government, of the government of British Columbia, and of Bonneville power administration. Like the Kaiser proposal, it depends on agreement with all three of these governmental authorities.

Incidentally, I believe that if a scheme of that kind were adopted the United States federal treasury, directly or indirectly, would be helping to finance that Mica creek scheme. Frankly, I am a little doubtful of the Americans being willing to put up $250 million for nothing, without being pretty sure that they get adequate compensation in one way or another.

However, these facts I have mentioned indicate that today there is great urgency to get this problem settled as between the federal government and the government of British Columbia. I hope the minister has something to offer to the premier of British Columbia in this conference and I hope that today the minister will give us some indication of the policy of the dominion government on this question. There certainly has been no clear-cut statement from the dominion as yet as to what this government is prepared to do.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, last year this government took a licensing power over installations on the Columbia river; in fact, it took a veto power so that any project brought forward by the province of British Columbia, or anyone else, can be vetoed here under the act of last year. The Vancouver Sun summed that up very neatly on June 15 when it said:

In bringing up this "completely firm proposal" by his engineers for Mica creek, General McNaughton provides a positive policy to set beside the negative, but vital, role played by Ottawa last year when it stopped the British Columbia government's plan to sell British Columbia water rights to United States industry at give-away prices.

It would be unfair for the federal government to sit back and exercise a veto and to say, "Here, you cannot do this and you cannot do that" without making any suggestion. There is a responsibility on the Canadian government to make its position perfectly clear and then do what it can to help. For example, what is the policy of this government on the question of United States control or United States participation in the Mica creek project? That has never been made clear. Personally, I have never hesitated to take the position that I believe this project should be undertaken by Canadians and for Canadians, particularly because all the rest of the development on the river depends on what is done at Mica creek. The Mica creek project will set the pattern for the whole river, and at least a billion dollars will be involved when the over-all plan has been completed.

Then, is the dominion government willing to give any help with the financing? It seems to me that is the way in which the dominion government can step into this picture. I do not believe there would be one cent lost if the dominion government placed its money-raising power behind the provincial government. The dominion can raise money at a cheaper rate than the provinces. We have now got to the position in this country where, in the case of public utilities of this type, the dominion I believe must help underwrite the financing. The same is true on the Saint John river in New Brunswick. On the Columbia the dominion government can very well help the province of British Columbia, with the result that that dam could be built at a lower rate, power would be cheaper, and Canadians could do the whole thing. I place that proposal before the government with all the earnestness of which I am capable. I asked the minister about it on March 20. At page 2298 of Hansard I said:

Is the government prepared to negotiate on the basis of a joint investment program?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to add at this time.

I believe the time is here when the minister can say whether the dominion is willing to co-operate on this basis to help out, or on any other basis. Above all, co-operation between the two governments is vital. If they go on sniping at each other from the distance of 3,000 miles, as they have been doing now off and on for many months, the Columbia river will never be adequately developed as it would otherwise be, and the people of British Columbia and, in the long run, the people of Canada will be the sufferers.

This scheme is the largest potential scheme there has ever been in British Columbia. I pointed out to Your Honour that the total cost of the developments on the river alone would be at least a billion dollars. In addition, there will be as much more spent on transmission lines and on facilities for distributing the power. In the end, it may mean an increase in the population of British Columbia of a million or 2 million people. No one knows just exactly how much it would mean. The possibilities are staggering; it is the greatest thing that has ever appeared over the horizon in the west coast province.

Because of these facts I feel it has been wise today to take the time of the house to bring up this question at this particular stage. I hope that when the minister goes to Victoria next week he will do his part to bury the hatchet—not to try to bury it in the premier's skull but simply to bury the hatchet—and if that attitude is adopted the result will probably be that the two governments will be able to co-operate and get on with some reasonable plan for the development of this Mica creek project by Canadians and for Canadians.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has made quite a comprehensive review of the Columbia basin development situation with particular reference to Mica creek. I do not intend to take the time of the house to repeat a great deal of what he has had to say but I do want to present to the house and particularly to the minister the point of view of this group on this very important question. Before doing that, Mr. Speaker, I might say that sitting here listening to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra I was thinking of 1915, 1916 and 1917 when we manned the trenches in France together and spent a good many wet nights and weeks in various trenches there fighting a common enemy and trying to achieve a common objective. I think we are doing that here today. I was thinking we belonged to a battalion that was in the habit of obtaining its objectives and I trust that is a good omen when we come to discuss this situation together; and more than that, Mr. Speaker, we are both very happy to know that one of our comrades whom we have not seen since 1919 is here to witness another attack on an objective that is of importance to the Canadian people by members of his old battalion.

This conference in Victoria between the premier of British Columbia and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) concerning the development of the Columbia river is one of prime importance, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra said, to the people of our province. I have been a resident of the Columbia river basin for 50 years and I have fully appreciated the intense concern and interest that has been shown throughout the whole district. In fact, I think Senator Neuberger mentioned it in his report, the alertness of the whole population to what this development means to that area and to British Columbia as a whole. We do hope that this first conference between the minister and the premier of British Columbia is a definite step toward one of the greatest developments in hydro that will occur in Canada. As never before, public attention is focused on this forthcoming conference in British Columbia. I have had letters from newspaper people, from a good many people throughout my own constituency and from a great many points in southern British Columbia. While in some cases the letters are written mainly on other topics, during the last month there have been written to me many letters in which people have made some reference to this forthcoming conference and expressed the hope that something fruitful would result from it.

Both governments, the federal and provincial, have a great responsibility to the people of British Columbia and to the people of Canada in this matter. If this responsibility is to be met, we in this group maintain that three things are essential and I mention them so that the minister will be well informed as to the position of this group with respect to this great projected development.

The first thing we say is necessary is a spirit of co-operation between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia. This thing is too big for party politics to enter. The future success of these developments will be determined by how big the personalities involved are on these occasions.

The second requirement for success in our opinion is the establishment for some type of Columbia basin authority either by the provincial government under the public power commission or as a result of the co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. If the entire water resources of the area are to be developed to the advantage of the people as a whole, in our opinion there will have to be some government authority, some control, some planning, some regulation and some logical approach to the development of the water resources in relation to the development of the forest resources, the mineral resources and the land resources.

When it comes to suggesting an authority such as the Tennessee valley authority or the great public developments on the Columbia river south of the line, I think the record clearly proves the great advantages of a planned development under public ownership or public control. I think anyone who has studied this question will admit the record proves that public control and planning provide certain things that are not possible under any other form of development.

First of all they provide for the scientific development of the water resources in question. They provide for low cost power such as we have demonstrated in the Tennessee valley development and in the United States public developments south of the line on the Columbia where we have the cheapest power on the North American continent. They also provide for a co-ordinated expansion of industry and agriculture, and to assist that expansion of industry a fair distribution of the power for industrial purposes and a fair and proper use of the available water for irrigation purposes. They also provide that water resources are developed to the public advantage without the waste that would occur through piecemeal development of a basin such as this. All these things, then, bring the consequent economic improvement and also the human welfare for millions that results from that improvement.

The third thing we in this group say is necessary—and I think we in this group are not alone in feeling this way; I am quite sure the great bulk of the people of British Columbia, and particularly in the south-eastern portion of British Columbia, share our view—is that action should be taken as soon as possible to implement what has been a dream for 50 years on the part of some people. We feel this action is necessary if we are going to take advantage of these resources at a time when they will be urgently needed.

The development of the basin has been the subject of discussion for many years in the Kootenay country in a general way without information. There were men, I remember 45 or 50 years ago, who could look forward and see the great possibilities for the development of the hydro resources of the area. I suppose the first general consideration of the problem occurred at the time of the 1944 Columbia reference to this house and to congress in Washington. I think that reference came about because of the realization on the part of those who were in this government at that time that the great development south of the line would soon mean the necessity for the development of our resources north of the line.

I pay a tribute to the farsightedness of those who worked for that reference to this house and to congress in 1944. At that time there were some people who thought that that was rather far-fetched, but the fact is that that reference was the first time that public attention was directed to the possibility of development in the basin. Since that time we have had twelve years of investigation, largely at the expense of the federal government. I think all Canadians who have been interested in this problem recognize the great contribution which General McNaughton has made to this investigation. We recognize his concern over the problem and to make certain that Canadian interests are protected and his farsighted and continuous application to the many aspects of this development.

We appreciate also the interest the minister has shown and his attention to the many unusual aspects of this question. I know personally that the minister is intensely interested in this development and has given a great deal of his time to a study of the situation. He has taken an active part in the development of public policy in this respect.

I think some tribute should be paid to the engineering staff of the water resources branch of the minister's department, the Department of Public Works and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. There have been some excellent men who have worked behind the scenes at most modest salaries compared with what some of them could get in private industry because they are interested in the development of water resources for Canadians. When I think of these men working behind the scenes and doing a lot of most technical work and applying their minds to the problem over a period of twelve years, I am always reminded of two lines in Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" as follows:

> Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
> And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

I feel that many of those men who worked behind the scenes do not get sufficient recognition. In some quarters there is a tendency to look upon civil servants as being people who are simply seeking security and who are anxious to earn a living with as little effort as possible. Civil servants as a group are human beings like us in this house and have the failings of human beings. I know of a good many civil servants of Canada whose contributions to the welfare of this country are unheard of, unsung and almost unknown. I think this is something that should be said because of the good work these people do.

The result of the reference and twelve years of investigation was climaxed I think by General McNaughton's announcement to the committee on external affairs recently that Mica creek was a positive plan which could be proceeded with. That was the first definite announcement of any large-scale development in the area. It represents a positive approach. Last year the government had to take a negative approach to protect the water resources on behalf of the people of British Columbia and on behalf of the people of Canada, and I think rightly so. I supported them in that effort.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has indicated, this announcement created a great deal of interest in British Columbia and has served to focus attention directly on the Mica creek dam which would be located geographically to act as a hub for the distribution of power over the whole southern half of British Columbia. This is a development which the general told us will cost about $274 million and will produce up to 1,100,000 kilowatts.

After twelve years of investigation we have sufficient information for the planning to commence and to unfold. This is the dawn of the day for which a good many people in our province have been longing. In the past the government did its duty by making the reference; the engineers and technicians have done their duty by producing the facts; the Creator provided the natural resources in abundance, and what happens from this time on will depend upon the capacity of this government and the government of British Columbia to meet their responsibilities to the people of this country.

The development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin in Canada should bring untold blessings to millions of people in days to come. From the point of view of this group it is the responsibility of the governments concerned to make sure that these natural resources will be utilized to the advantage of those millions of Canadians.

Some reference was made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to a statement from the minister prior to his leaving for Vancouver. I must say that I do not agree with that suggestion. I do not think it would be fair to ask the minister to make a statement in this house with respect to this question just before he is to meet the premier of British Columbia and carry on discussions and negotiations in Victoria. I can well understand his not being willing to do that at this particular time. I hope that in the days to come we shall have an announcement of government policy in clear terms. We in this group wish the minister every success in his trip to Victoria and in all he undertakes in connection with this great development which should be to the general advantage of the Canadian people.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) has raised this most important question at a time when the minister is preparing to go to British Columbia to discuss the Columbia river basin development. I certainly do not agree with the statement that it was federal government interference which delayed the development of the Mica creek. Undoubtedly the Columbia valley reference delayed some of the undertakings which might have taken place and which would have been of tremendous benefit to the United States only. With that contention I can wholeheartedly agree.

It is quite obvious, as the hon. member has pointed out, that this long-range sniping is not going to get us anywhere. To me it is quite obvious that the sniping has been from the one direction, from the west to the east, since this debate was concluded last year and the international rivers bill brought into being.

If this matter were one entirely of economics I would be in complete agreement with the submission that nothing should be done to develop either the Kootenay or the Columbia valley until we have absolute engineering data to prove that the Columbia can be diverted economically and feasibly into the Fraser river. There are already many political developments, and when I say "political", I mean developments which show that any such diversion would affect many thousands of people. For that reason it would require provincial legislation which might be held up for many years. The federal Department of Fisheries has gone along with the premier of British Columbia in saying that there shall be no diversion of the Columbia river into the Fraser until absolute assurance has been given that no fisheries will be destroyed. For that reason I am quite sure it would be quite a number of years before an official decision would be made on the diversion of the Columbia into the Fraser.

On the other hand I think there will be perhaps less difficulty in determining the feasibility of the diversion of the Kootenay into the Columbia river. This, however, would dislocate a large number of people in East Kootenay, would cause a great deal of hardship and would put under water very large tracts of land that have become well known as great farming communities and tourist resorts. I think that the opinion of the people of East Kootenay, and perhaps of the entire southeastern portion of British Columbia, is that this diversion should be avoided if at all possible.

I have a resolution here from the associated boards of trade and chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia which reads in part as follows:

> Whereas the proposed diversion of international waters in the Columbia river system is inconsistent with the spirit and terms of the said reference, adversely affecting rapid and rational development plans and good international relations, and
> Whereas in the development of the hydro power resources of the watershed, the free interchange of surplus electric energy is a factor of great economic importance . . .

I do not agree with the chambers of commerce that the diversion of either the Kootenay or the Columbia entirely within Canada is, as they say, inconsistent with the spirit and terms of the said Columbia basin reference. That has become the opinion of some of the leading experts on water power in British Columbia, but in my opinion it just is not so. The reference is quite defined, and certainly the boundary waters treaty of 1909 is entirely consistent with the views held by the federal government.

However, we have seen newspaper reports indicating that the British Columbia Power Corporation is prepared to proceed with a dam at Mica creek, but in announcing that determination they make no reference whatsoever to diversion of the Kootenay river into the Columbia. It appears that it has been determined that the project would be economic without the diversion of the headwaters of the Kootenay river, and therefore that is unessential to the plan. It has also been pointed out that the Mica dam might be built by Canadian corporations or by Canadian governments without jeopardizing the plan for the diversion of the Columbia into the Fraser. The Mica dam would be essential in any case and the water would be diverted some miles below the dam.

I think we are entitled to consider these two basins as separate entities. That contention is put forward by the chambers of commerce, and in this connection I find myself in agreement with them to some extent. In this regard I should like to refer again to the resolution which has this to say:

> Now therefore be it resolved by the associated boards of trade and chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia in executive session convened . . . that the policy respecting these important matters in international watershed development should be referred to and determined at the top policy level of the respective governments at the earliest possible date, thereby relieving the anxieties of the people of both countries, and the growing tension on international relations.

That, of course, does not have to do with the matter of separate entities but it does deal with the importance of having the matter discussed at a high level, and that is what the minister proposes to do very shortly. Further, and this is the part dealing with the matter of separate entities:

> . . . and the interest of British Columbia as a whole not adversely affected, that in the ultimate plans of development, the upper Columbia and the Kootenay rivers be considered as separate entities in accordance with the economics of the respective regions, and the hydraulics of the rivers themselves.

The resolution does not explain the matter of the hydraulics of the respective regions, but it is my opinion that the Kootenay river development and the Libby dam could be proceeded with at this time without jeopardizing the Columbia and its possible diversion. The development of the Kootenay river at this time would mean a dam at Libby which has been under consideration for many years. True, it will have the effect of flooding some 42 miles of land in British Columbia, but while the land in that area is good it is used more for cattle ranching and large farms. There would not be a very great number of people who would be required to move. If it is possible to arrive at some measure of agreement with the United States authorities for a return of power in that area, I think that we should come to some early conclusion.

There is one thing that has been overlooked in the discussions regarding the Libby project, namely, that the installations on the lower Kootenay between Nelson and Castlegar are at the present time developing one and three-quarter billion kilowatt hours annually. With the water storage at Libby released in co-ordination with the storage on other parts of this basin, this power capacity could be doubled which would mean that the lower Kootenay could produce three and a half billion kilowatt hours annually.

In addition, I understand that the commission has determined that there is a possible dam site on the Columbia just north of Trail at Murphy creek. A dam there would reimpound the water released from the Libby dam and the water could be used again at that site. Of course, as we heard in the discussion last year, a dam at Murphy creek would have the effect of adding one million acre feet in addition to what was anticipated on the Arrow lakes, bringing the total storage there to about 4½ million acre feet. The Libby dam would also have a very great effect upon flood conditions both in Canada and the United States. I understand that only this year 150 militiamen had to be rushed into the Creston valley to fight against the flood waters of the Kootenay river. These waters would be impounded at Libby and released at a more normal rate of flow. Thus the flood threat would be eliminated for all time. Incidentally, since the huge dikes have been built in the Creston valley they have been overrun at least twice since 1935, causing untold damage.

There is another matter that it seems to me has been overlooked, or perhaps not overlooked but not given enough emphasis. That is the question of integrating the Pend d'Oreille system with the Kootenay system. The Pend d'Oreille system, of course, in the United States is used almost entirely for storage in the lower Columbia. The Pend d'Oreille river enters Canada near Waneta and flows through Canada about 14 miles. There is no storage whatever on the Pend d'Oreille in Canada. There is, however, 5½ million acre feet annually stored on the Pend d'Oreille for the purposes I have previously stated.

Having regard to this situation, a power site was installed on the Pend d'Oreille by the West Kootenay Power Company at Waneta just before it enters the Columbia river. This dam cost between $30 million and $35 million and is making as much use as it can of the storage on the Pend d'Oreille in the United States. However, as I said earlier, that storage is released purely for the purpose of supplying a constant flow for the Bonneville and Grand Coulee power installations and so on down the line in the United States. For that reason the flow is extremely erratic. I believe it fluctuates between 4,000 cubic feet per second up to 36,000 cubic feet per second. Hence you can see that it is not possible to make the best use of that water. There are many days on which it flows over the spillway and is a complete waste.

The installations at Waneta at the present time can make use of 12,000 cubic feet per second, and of course there are times when they have available only 4,000 cubic feet per second. If the water from the Pend d'Oreille storage could be regulated to a mean flow, they could be provided with about 24,000 cubic feet per second, which would permit doubling the installation and doubling the output of that plant. One can realize that a plant that cost $35 million produces a fairly large amount of electricity. I believe it could produce somewhere near the amount that is already being produced in the lower Kootenay.

What would be required before this regulation of the flow from the Pend d'Oreille could be accomplished would be an integration of the West Kootenay Power Corporation system and the Bonneville Power corporation who I believe are responsible for the administration of the power that is produced at Grand Coulee. A power line joining these two systems would have the effect of integrating the entire system. Then the water releases from the Pend d'Oreille would be integrated with the water releases from the Kootenay and would maintain a constant flow. The turbines would be turning at all times. There would be no wastage of the stored water, and there would be available at certain periods of the year a flow of electricity to the south, while at other times of the year there would be a flow of electricity back into Canada. It simply means that until the energy and the flow of these systems have been integrated, there cannot be a complete and proper development of the Kootenay system.

I think the minister should keep that question in mind and to the forefront when he is discussing the whole matter with the premier of the province of British Columbia. If it is true that the diversion of the Columbia river into the Fraser river would be feasible only if it obtained the flood waters or the headwaters of the Kootenay, then I certainly would hesitate to recommend that we go ahead at this time with the development of the Kootenay. However, I do not think that is so. I also do not think the people of my riding would be too happy to go along with the idea of flooding this great area that has been built up. We realize the flooding that may come from the dam at Mica creek affects only about a dozen people at the most. That may be stretching the point a bit, but there is little habitation from Donald west to Golden and the Mica creek site. It is a large area that is uninhabited, and this flooding will cause little dislocation. We think this project should be developed separately and should be gone ahead with as soon as possible. On the other hand, I feel that the Kootenay river and the Pend d'Oreille basin integration can be proceeded with at once and give the very best return to the people of East and West Kootenay, to British Columbia and to Canada.

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words at this time to what has been said about the problem of power development. I am possibly more concerned with power development in the Columbia valley than any other member in the house, and I have possibly said the least about it. However, I have followed with interest the negotiations that have been taking place over the past six months, and I have felt that things were going along quite smoothly, something which I was glad to note.

First, I should like to say that I am in almost complete agreement with the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) in saying that the Kootenay river system and the Columbia river system should be developed as separate entities. The main reason for my belief is that when we start interfering with the flow of rivers, especially international rivers, we are going to bring about extremely serious results.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the hon. member. I did not catch whether he was disagreeing or agreeing with me.

Mr. McLeod: I was agreeing. For once I agree with you. The international complications that arise when we start interfering with the natural flow of rivers might have very serious consequences and delay the development of power that is so badly and urgently needed.

To me it was a source of pleasure to hear our Prime Minister announce in the house recently, after his return from Washington, that this matter had been discussed with the top level authorities there and that arrangements had been made for future conferences. I am very glad to know that our own Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be in Victoria for a conference with the British Columbia government next week. I am sure that much good will come from that conference. Then we understand that in the fall there is to be another conference to deal with downstream benefits. Of course that is the crux of the whole problem of the development of power on these international streams. I wish the greatest amount of success to the minister in his meeting with the British Columbia officials in Victoria and at the conference to be held this fall.

Now, I have here the last issue of the Revelstoke Review, a newspaper which is greatly interested in the Mica creek dam which will use the water of the Columbia river for power purposes. There are some important headlines in this newspaper. One of the first is, "General McNaughton confirms feasibility of dam site." He is referring to the Mica creek dam, and I think many months ago most of us were well aware of the fact it was a feasible site. The only comment I would make is that the length of time it has taken to put this decision before the people has been unduly long and has delayed this project to some extent.

Then there is another headline which reads, "B.C. Electric plans Mica dam construction". Now, the British Columbia Electric, we understand, are deeply interested in the development of the Columbia by means of a dam at Mica creek. They are planning a dam that will be some 700 feet high and will be capable of developing 1·5 million horsepower, at a cost in the neighbourhood of $247 million. The power from that dam will be distributed chiefly to the lower mainland of British Columbia over a power line 450 miles in length which will cost in the neighbourhood of $45 million or $50 million. You can see that there is a lot of money going to be tied up in this one project. However, there does not seem to be any question about the problem of financing in so far as British Columbia Electric are concerned. They claim that immediately the signal is definitely given to go ahead, they will be ready.

Before they can get that signal they have to clear five different hurdles. The first is the British Columbia government and compliance with the provisions of their water act; second, the federal government and compliance with the provisions of the International River Improvements Act; then the British Columbia public utilities commission; the United States government and the international joint commission. As I said earlier we hope, as a result of the conferences we understand are being arranged, these will present no serious obstacles.

Apparently the British Columbia Electric are prepared, immediately they receive the go ahead signal, to start exploratory engineering work which will take an estimated two years. Then a further eight years will be needed to complete the project. That is one plan that is being presented to the people of British Columbia through private enterprise, a local Canadian company. It might not be so "local" because it has ramifications from one end of Canada to the other, but it is a strictly Canadian company.

There is one other plan which I think might be worth mentioning at this time and which might command some attention from the people in this house. I have a lot of confidence, more so than possibly some other members who have spoken, in the government of British Columbia. The premier of that province has outlined a plan for the development at Mica creek. Under this plan the dam would be built by the United States with United States capital. Now, I do not want you all to get excited and say, "Here we are selling out to the Yankees". I do not think that is the idea. The United States would build this dam but the entire power developed at the dam site would be the sole property of British Columbia to do with as they saw fit. In return for control of the water flow on the Columbia river, which would result from the construction of the dam and which would allow a steadier development of power south of the border, the United States would pay the cost of the dam. In addition to that they would deliver to the British Columbia government, at the Canadian border, 20 per cent of the extra power which would be generated downstream as a result of this controlled flow.

I am not going to get into any arguments about the pros and cons of the various methods of developing the Columbia river. I am, and always will be, of course, a strong believer in private enterprise. As long as private enterprise is prepared to develop the river, I am certainly prepared to go along with them. We have these two plans; one where a Canadian company would develop it, and of course in that case the Canadian people, the users of the power generated at the dam, would have to pay for the cost of the dam. Then we have the plan of Premier Bennett whereby United States capital would build the dam, turn over the power to the people of British Columbia, and pay for the control of the river which that would give with 20 per cent of the extra power they would develop downstream. I say I am not entering into any argument on the pros and cons of these different methods at this time.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I can only reiterate the hope that the forthcoming conference of the minister in Victoria will be successful and worthwhile. We hope that the serious problems connected with Columbia river development will be settled around the conference table.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all hon. members who have spoken this afternoon on water problems, most of whose remarks have been directed to water problems connected with the Columbia river. I am thankful to them for the remarks they have made and the opinions they have expressed. I am sure that such remarks and opinions will be useful to me when I meet the premier of British Columbia in Victoria one week from today.

I have outlined on two occasions in the house the purpose of this meeting. The first occasion was March 20, and my statement can be found at page 2298 of Hansard for that date. Then on May 23 I made an announcement to the house, the text of which and the answers to questions concerning which by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Kamloops, can be found at page 4249 of Hansard for that date. I believe I should follow the advice of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I wonder whether it would be wise for me to add any comments at this time just before I discuss these matters, which I have outlined in these statements, with the premier of British Columbia.

In the last few months the officials of the Vancouver office of the water resources branch of the department have been in very close touch with officers and officials of the British Columbia government on these very questions. Moreover, one of the assistant deputy ministers of the department went to Victoria last December, and he went again at the beginning of June. He has had discussions with the officials of the British Columbia government preparatory to my meeting next Wednesday. One must not forget—and this is one of the reasons I believe I should not add anything at this time—that after all the water resources of British Columbia are the property of the province, and that the initiative as to their use and their development rests with the authorities of that province.

Really, in the circumstances I do not believe it would be wise to say anything more before I have the opportunity of meeting Mr. Bennett. I can say, though, I am going to Victoria with an open mind and in a spirit of co-operation, I assure the hon. members who have spoken this afternoon. I myself hope the talks I shall have will be successful, and that they will help in the economic development of the province of British Columbia. That is my aim in going to Victoria.

FREIGHT RATES—PROTEST AGAINST RECENT INCREASES

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to change the subject. I presume the discussion is over on this particular matter. I rise at this time to protest the increase in freight rates that will take place on July 3 unless something is done about it.

We have had a great many increases in freight rates since the end of the war. We have had one freight rate increase after another, until the increases before this most recent order amounted to a total of some 98 per cent. I do not think a good case has been made for an increase in freight rates. If one examines the financial position of the Canadian Pacific Railway I do not think he will find that the Canadian Pacific Railway can prove it is unable, in its present financial position, to absorb out of profits the increase in wages that has recently been granted to the railway employees. The railway workers were given an increase of some 11 per cent, but the railway company, following the award allowing the workers that increase of 11 per cent in wages, applied for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates. It is obvious that the amount of money used by the railways to pay wages is only a part of their operating costs. If they are to get a 15 per cent increase in freight rates on a very substantial part of their revenue traffic they will be getting more than has been given to the railway workers.

In recent years the Canadian Pacific Railway has shown very little change in its gross earnings. But while its gross earnings have not varied appreciably, its net earnings have been increasing. That, of course, is a natural thing when one takes into account the fact that the railway companies have been increasing their efficiency in recent years. The railway companies have been following a modernization program. They have been dieselizing their lines; they have been laying off thousands of workers; they have made tremendous savings in their wage bills, so that while gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1955 were $448 million, somewhat less than the gross earnings of $457 million in 1952, their net earnings on railway operations had increased from $28·9 million to $37·3 million. I think the railway companies, because of the savings they have already made, are in a financial position to pay the increases in wages that have been granted without any increase in general freight rates.

A number of briefs have been presented to the board of transport commissioners objecting to any increase in freight rates. A brief was presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and one by the Saskatchewan wheat pool. In those briefs they pointed out the position agriculture faces in relation to increased freight rates. The net income of the agricultural industry has been going down in recent years and they have said that an increase in freight rates will further reduce agricultural net income; that the farm industry, unlike any other industry, is unable to pass on its increased costs. Therefore the effect of an increase in freight rates will be a further decrease in the net income of the agricultural industry.

I agree with them when they ask that whatever increase in freight rates may be granted should not be applied to primary production of this country. One might extend that argument to primary production other than farm products, to forest products, perhaps, and certain other products. But as far as agriculture is concerned I certainly agree that the increase should not affect agricultural products.

As the cost of living goes up, as labour efficiency increases, I think the trade union movements are perfectly justified in asking for periodic increases in order that the labouring man can have his fair share of the increased productivity in this country. Labour has been able to increase its standard of living, though perhaps not as rapidly as it thinks it deserves, and for that I am glad. Industry has been able to add to its prices sufficient to cover any increased costs, sufficient to have a substantial profit, a growing profit; but in this same period of time the net income of the agricultural industry has been on the decline. This increase will add further to the decline. In a table in its brief at page 13 the Canadian Federation of Agriculture points out that the net income of the agricultural industry, in terms of 1955 dollars, fell from $1,700 million in 1949 to $1,189 million in 1955.

The Canadian Pacific Railway is not content with the 7 per cent increase that it is about to be granted. It has asked for a 15 per cent increase. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not content with a 15 per cent increase only because the company has put on a very direct campaign to get rid of the Crowsnest pass rates on grain. It is admitted that if the Crowsnest pass rates were abolished, and if the railway companies applied the same rates to the movement of grain that they apply to other commodities of similar bulk, but not necessarily of a similar value, it would increase the revenue they get for moving a bushel of wheat from 12 cents to 36 cents. In other words, if the Canadian Pacific Railway were successful in its efforts to get rid of the Crowsnest pass agreement it would reduce the cost of wheat to the producer by 36 cents a bushel. I wish to warn the government that any move to get rid of the Crowsnest pass rates will be resisted by every farm organization in western Canada. The briefs that have been presented protesting the impending increase in freight rates will be very mild reading compared to the briefs that will be presented and the action that will be taken to protest any tampering with the Crowsnest pass rates.

I rise at this time to ask the government to disallow the impending 7 per cent award. I think the railway freight rates in this country are already too high and that if the railways can prove they need an increase—and I do not think they have proved it yet—any increased revenue they may need should be obtained by some other method. I suggest the government should look very carefully at the question of using subsidies as an alternative proposition. Of course there is already a good precedent for using subsidies with regard to the railways, because of the $7 million subsidy that is now paid annually to the railway companies for maintaining their lines in northern Ontario. I am suggesting it is most unfair that the agricultural industry be further depressed by allowing a 7 per cent increase in freight rates. Unless something is done about it, in all probability this will be followed by a further increase in freight rates, and this will depress the agricultural industry worse than at the present time.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

PROVISION FOR FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO COSTS IN PROVINCES

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for contributions by Canada, to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, in respect of unemployment assistance costs in the provinces.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, at the resolution stage of this particular bill it is my intention to speak but for a few moments, as I have indicated to those who are charged with expressing the points of view of the various groups in the house. This resolution, nevertheless, is an important one and asks authority to introduce a bill which will authorize the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces of Canada to provide for contributions out of the federal treasury to be made for local unemployment assistance costs to those in need.

The details of this bill respecting unemployment assistance were worked out during the past year at a number of conferences with the provinces. There were at least, I think, six different conferences some of which, of course, were devoted to other matters but one of which was devoted exclusively to working out arrangements with the provinces, as a result of which we now have agreements with six provinces to share with them in the cost of assistance to needy individuals who may be characterized as unemployed employables or unemployed unemployables, that is persons who have been out of work or who are unable to work.

Unemployment Assistance

One of the clauses of the draft agreement provides that at the first session of parliament the government of Canada will seek authority to validate the agreements that have been signed with the six provinces which I shall enumerate, these provinces being Newfoundland, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Other provinces are giving consideration to the matter and at least one other is very close to signature.

The legislation which will follow upon the approval of this resolution will accomplish the following. It will provide the necessary authority for the federal government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to make agreements with the provinces for sharing unemployment assistance costs. Second, it will establish the basis of the federal contribution and will specify certain types of costs which may be included and certain costs which may not be included in the reimbursement claims submitted to the federal government. On all these matters, of course, the legislative provisions will conform with those set out in the agreements already signed with the six provinces, which were tabled in this house several months ago. Third, it will authorize these agreements to be given retroactive effect for a maximum period of one year, not back beyond a period of 12 months, so that in the case of those provinces with whom agreements have been finalized they will date back to July 1, 1955. Fourth, it will ratify and confirm any agreement already made prior to the passage of the bill itself; and finally it will authorize the federal share of unemployment assistance costs covered by the bill to be provided annually out of the consolidated revenue fund.

I am sure that when we get into the discussion of the bill, the discussion will perhaps take into consideration the proposals that were made by the federal government in 1945, and likewise recommendations that were made by a royal commission whose report was discussed at the dominion-provincial conference of 1941. I can only say that the provisions of the bill to be based upon this resolution will be found to go much further than the recommendations of the Rowell-Sirois commission, and further than the proposals made in 1945. These later proposals did not include unemployables, as does this measure, and the resolutions of 1945 did not cover special cases or local situations, as does this one. The proposals of 1945 did not cover the self-employed, and particularly they did not cover, within a certain context, fishermen and farmers.

Under the arrangement which this resolution and the bill to be based upon it envisage, which has already been endorsed by six provinces and is still under consideration by the others, I think I can say we will be able to write "finis" to the deadlock which has existed in this country for a decade or more on the subject of the responsibility of the several governmental jurisdictions for what we call residual assistance, and that henceforth there will be an assurance of organized assistance to persons in need in any part of Canada who cannot qualify for help under any of the existing social welfare measures such as unemployment insurance, supplementary benefits, old age assistance, disability pensions and so on. By this legislation we will eliminate the obstacle presented in the past by the fact that each jurisdiction has argued that responsibility belonged to another level of government. Now no excuse will exist for denying assistance to those in need in any province which has entered into an agreement with the federal government.

I believe this resolution constitutes a piece of important legislation which in its general context will win a wide measure of approval from most hon. members of this house and I am sure by those needy people in our country who have sometimes been made the victims, unwittingly perhaps, of governments which have sought to shift responsibility to other jurisdictions. I do not propose to say any more at this time in introducing this resolution. I am sure that as soon as we go into an examination of the bill we shall find there the greatest opportunity for fruitful discussion in respect of a measure which I think will win wide support.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, as the minister has said, he consulted with representatives of this and other groups in the house with a view to expediting the passage of this resolution today, and under the circumstances which he outlined to us we are quite willing to go along with that. Of course until we see the bill it is a little difficult for us to make any specific comments, but there are a few things that should be said.

The minister has made some remarks with reference to the shifting of responsibility or the failure of various levels of government to accept responsibility and the tendency to pass off responsibility to another level. It is true that even as far back as the tabling of the Rowell-Sirois report there were various opinions held by various groups as to who was responsible for what. As for myself, I have had very strong views on this matter and have expressed them on various occasions in this house.

The minister has listed the provinces which up to the present time have signed agreements. Of course they do not follow any particular geographical or political pattern. There are notable omissions from the list of those provinces which have to date made agreements with the federal government. I might point out that among those which have not yet signed agreements are the two largest provinces in Canada. Therefore in the implementation of any legislation such as this there will be a very large hole. I see that the minister is smiling and I presume he expected me to say that, but it is true that there will be a large part of our population which will not be covered by this legislation.

Just what the legislation will offer to the provinces remains to be seen. I daresay that the legislation will be pretty well along the lines of the agreements which have been made. It will have to be if those agreements are to be validated. When the minister is replying will he say whether special legislation will have to be brought down this session, or whether this legislation is all that will be required to validate the agreements.

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would expect also that the statement made in this house by the Prime Minister on June 21, 1955, would likewise bear some relation to the legislation which is being brought down and to the agreements which have been made already. I must admit that I have not studied those agreements, which is probably an oversight on my part, and perhaps the minister could indicate when they were tabled.

Mr. Martin: I forget the exact date, but about two and a half months ago.

Mrs. Fairclough: Since the start of this session?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: In his remarks at that time the Prime Minister referred to the proposals which had been made and said that the provincial governments had committed themselves to study those proposals and give answers to the federal government. I think it would be extremely interesting to know just what are the answers of those four provinces which have not signed to date; that is Alberta, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Martin: The correspondence has been tabled as well.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister indicated that from now on there will be no excuse for any province, and I take it for any municipality, to claim that any person suffering by reason of unemployment is not eligible for assistance of one type or another. Referring back to my remarks of a few minutes ago with reference to the big hole left in this scheme, I should like to point out that the municipalities have always carried a great load in the administration of assistance to unemployables. When occasion demanded that they offer assistance to persons who were employable but who were unemployed by reason of circumstances beyond their control, then the municipality had a double load. It had its usual role of administrator and also the responsibility of giving relief to these people. This constituted a financial load over and above what could reasonably be expected of the municipality.

The province would say, "It is not our responsibility"; the federal government would say, "It is not our responsibility," and the municipality would fall into the chasm in between. That has been going on for a long time. I do not intend to dwell on it at any length. It is a fact. That is the situation that has existed. Whether the new legislation the minister proposes to bring down will solve that problem, even in the provinces in which it will operate, is a matter for experience to prove. When the minister said that heretofore there had been no recognition given to unemployables at the federal level—I believe those were his words—

Mr. Martin: Unemployed unemployables, people who are unemployed, in need, and who are thought not physically capable of working.

Mrs. Fairclough: Unemployables as opposed to unemployed employables.

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister said that heretofore none of the legislation at the federal level had included these persons. But if it is proposed to go along with the assumption set out in the Prime Minister's remarks of a year ago and establish a basic load, then in effect they are still not being assisted as such by the federal authorities. You simply establish a basic load or a basic count and say to the province that you allocate that much as its normal load with respect to caring for unemployables. You have a floor under the assistance, in other words, and only when the assistance given in a province goes above that basic level does the federal government enter into the scheme. I admit I am anticipating, but I would think that is a fair assumption taking into account the Prime Minister's remarks of a year ago.

If that is so, then we at the federal level are still not contributing to the provinces or the municipalities for unemployables. We are simply saying that we assume that 0·45, or whatever the percentage figure may be, of your population are normally unemployable, are normally under the jurisdiction of the province and the municipality for purposes of welfare assistance, and therefore we take no responsibility for that percentage of your population. When your load goes beyond that, then we step in.

If that is the case, then the minister's assumption that these people would now receive assistance from federal sources is not in my estimation quite accurate. It is true also that the new formula suggested or proposed a year ago more or less wipes out the stand taken by the Rowell-Sirois commission when they said in their report, in defining employability and eligibility for unemployment aid:

> Our proposal is that a clear line should be drawn between employables and unemployables and that the dominion should assume responsibility for employables only.

By establishing a basic load you solve the problem of deciding who is employable and who is not employable. You merely set a norm and proceed from there. So, as all things change, opinion has changed in the last 10 or 15 years in so far as the administration of assistance for unemployed persons is concerned. I should point out, though, that there is one sentence in this report that may, it seems to me, be hard to overcome even today. With respect to any scheme where administration is at the municipal level they point out:

> . . . hardship might easily result from the reluctance of local authorities to accept the ruling of a local representative of a dominion service.

It will be interesting to hear from the minister just how he proposes to secure equality of treatment for all persons across Canada. I might say further that unless the Minister of Labour, in his submission with reference to the amendment of section 45 (2) of the Unemployment Insurance Act which is still to come before the house, comes up with a really workable solution, then undoubtedly the load with respect to caring for these persons who are disqualified by reason of the failure of the Unemployment Insurance Act will fall on this fund. I cannot see that it could be otherwise. It is to be hoped that the Minister of Labour will have a workable solution because, quite apart from the consideration of whether the load should fall on the unemployment insurance fund or whether it should fall on this unemployment assistance fund, the fact still remains that people who are insured like to feel that they are standing on their own two feet, that they have earned the right to benefit, that they have paid for it, and they do not want to be recipients of municipal relief, which is what this assistance will amount to.

I have a number of other things I should like to say, but I think when we get the bill and have the minister's further explanation some of these points will be clarified. Therefore, in accordance with my undertaking to him that I would not take too long this afternoon on this matter, I think I shall leave any further remarks until we have seen the legislation.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I would wait for the bill to discuss this matter in detail, but there are some thoughts in my mind that I should like to leave with the minister before the bill is introduced. If what I have in mind is constructive there will still be time to change the legislation.

There are a few things that I think should be clarified. I have had a lot of inquiries asking why this measure was in the hands of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and not under the Department of Labour. The answer is, of course, that taking in unemployed people who cannot perform any work whatever makes it a welfare measure.

Mr. Martin: I may say I wondered, too.

Mr. Gillis: That is the answer. You are going to take in these handicapped people who cannot find employment and are unemployable. I should like to leave this caution with the minister. There can be the danger in this legislation that those who administer the Unemployment Insurance Act will tighten up their administration so much that they will dump a load of unemployed into the hands of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. There were over 200,000 people disqualified under section 45 (2) and other sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act last year. To dump that kind of a load on this legislation would put quite a strain on it. Therefore you are going to have a lot of consultation with the Minister of Labour.

The second point I should like to make by way of a caution to the very capable minister is that this legislation could overlap the Disabled Persons Act. You know, a lot of the provincial officials who will administer this legislation can cut corners. If you are taking in handicapped, who should perhaps be under the Disabled Persons Act, the short-cut would be to throw them in here. The minister will have to watch that very carefully.

The matter of assistance to the unemployed is not a new question. It is a very old one. As the minister very well stated, there can be no more passing the buck. The responsibility is now fixed by legislation. The initiative must come from the province, and the federal government will match, 50-50, what the province spends. But the province must make the first move.

There are four provinces that are out or that have not signed agreements. In Nova Scotia their reason, in my judgment, is that they do not pay any unemployment assistance and that by signing the agreement they would be committing themselves to go into the field and take the initiative in setting up some kind of assistance to the unemployed.

The next point I should like to make is that this legislation, matched by the provinces, in my judgment is not altogether fair for the simple reason that the maritime provinces, for example, with the provincial incomes they have, are not able to spend the money necessary to relieve unemployment in those areas, whereas other provinces with greater provincial incomes can go ahead and spend, and have the amount matched by the federal government.

Another point I should like to make clear is that in the formula that was set up by the dominion-provincial agreements on this question, the qualification is set out for the rest of Canada, apart from Nova Scotia, as ·45 per cent of the total population of the province. Worked out, that percentage equals so many people. You must have that many people unemployed before you can qualify for this matching relief. I take British Columbia, for example, with a population of approximately 1,300,000. That figure, worked out, means that British Columbia must have 5,850 unemployed before it can qualify; and that formula applies to the rest of Canada. A special arrangement was made for Nova Scotia because they have no unemployment assistance there. It is ·30 per cent of the population which is approximately 750,000. That percentage would equal 2,250 people in the province who must be unemployed before they would qualify for any assistance. I thought I would put those two examples on the record because to the average person outside reading those percentages of ·45 and ·30 as applied to the total population, the formula does not make much sense. They would not understand the situation very well. However, it is a very simple formula once it is put in simple language.

To follow up the record of assistance I went all through this book I have in my hand. I may say that a great deal of study has been given to this matter of unemployment assistance. The book to which I refer is entitled "Dominion-Provincial Conference on Reconstruction, 1945-1946". The conference started back in August, 1945, and concluded in May, 1946. But in April of 1946 the official proposals with regard to assistance to the unemployed read as follows, and this will be found at page 387 of the proceedings of April 29, 1946:

Unemployment Assistance

In addition to unemployment insurance, the dominion will set up a system of unemployment assistance under which it will pay benefits equal to 85 per cent of unemployment insurance benefits, to unemployed persons able and willing to work who are not entitled, or who have ceased to be entitled, to unemployment insurance benefits. This assistance will be limited to two years of continuous assistance, but a person will again become eligible for this assistance following an approved period of employment.

I think the present arrangement the minister is making is a very much better one than that final proposal to that dominion-provincial conference, because the question of a person running off regular unemployment insurance benefits has been taken care of to some extent by the seasonal benefits that have been established for three months, namely January, February and March. This arrangement at the present time, in my opinion, reflects the best thinking that was done all during this conference. I have read over these proceedings, particularly on that question, and that was the final solution.

As I said before, I think the arrangement now being made by the minister is a better one, but still it is not an ideal arrangement. I can envisage a great many complications, particularly in its administration, because this type of legislation goes back to the provinces for administration. The provinces have to take the initiative in spending the money. The federal government will then reimburse them to the extent of 50 per cent of what they spend. But in provinces like Nova Scotia and New Brunswick you are going to find the situation rather difficult. They will not be bothered very much in Prince Edward Island and I do not think they are bothered too much in Newfoundland at the present time, because I think your fishermen are self-employed. I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration looking at me. Your fishermen are self-employed. Under this particular legislation they have not any protection at all.

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes.

Mr. Gillis: If they are self-employed?

Mr. Martin: This includes self-employed and any other individual, fisherman or farmer, who is in need and out of work. It includes fishermen and farmers as well.

Mr. Gillis: The qualification is "in need"; the qualification is "unemployed".

Mr. Martin: Unemployed, in need.

Mr. Gillis: That is where I think you are going to have difficulty. Remember your experience; and you have still to correct your disabled persons pension.

Mr. Martin: When we get into the bill I think we can deal with that matter.

Mr. Gillis: All right. I am just provoking your thoughts now so that you will be prepared.

Mr. Martin: No one can do it more nicely than the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Gillis: The minister's heart and head are in the right place but unfortunately he cannot be in 10 different provinces advising the people who will interpret and apply this legislation. In fact, if the Minister of National Health and Welfare were sitting down with any of the boards in any of the provinces when they came to the question of deciding this matter under the Disabled Persons Act, there would not be any trouble. But he is not there.

As he knows, this is another piece of legislation that is going to be handled by the same people who are interpreting the Disabled Persons Act. Your difficulty is going to begin when you reach borderline cases. It is all right if it is a straight matter of unemployed and you are registered for employment and you are able-bodied. That matter will not be difficult. But you are going to find hundreds of people who are handicapped, borderline cases, and the difficulty is going to come in there as to whether they belong under the Disabled Persons Act or whether they fit into this legislation as unemployables.

In provinces like Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and New Brunswick, provincial incomes are lower than those of Montreal, Toronto, maybe Vancouver and other cities. To maintain the services which they must maintain now, as in the field of education, with the limited income they have, a rather strict interpretation is going to be put on the qualification necessary to receive the benefits of this legislation. If the federal government were determining this matter, I would say that perhaps we would not have much difficulty. But when you have a province that is just going on a shoestring it is a different matter. There may be about 3,000 people unemployed, and they must take them and farm out $10, $12 or $15 a week to them. The amount of weekly benefit is going to have to be related to some extent to the unemployment insurance benefits. If there were 3,000 or 4,000 unemployed in a province, the provincial premier would have to decide whether he was going to spend $20,000, $50,000 or $100,000. He has to spend some money to get some back from Ottawa, but he is going to think it over very carefully. I think that is one of the reasons at least why Nova Scotia is out. They are being very careful to see they are not getting into something they are not able to handle financially.

Of course we will be in a better position to discuss this after we see the bill. However, as I said before there is no harm in pointing out some of the difficulties to the minister because the bill has not yet been introduced. We can point out some of the stumbling blocks we can see, particularly with respect to administration and with respect to provinces with low incomes. A concession was made in lowering the percentage of the population that have to be unemployed. There is still time for the minister to take another look at that bill and ascertain if there could not be some modifications made in it, particularly in connection with this matter of administration.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that so far as I am concerned I have always been of the opinion, and am still of the opinion, that the employable unemployed in this country are the responsibility of the federal government. I believe that in order to achieve equality in the matter of unemployment relief which is not covered by unemployment insurance, and recognizing the fact that provincial incomes are not equal, the federal government must accept the responsibility. They have the taxing powers necessary to raise the finances to bring about that type of equality right across the country.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I am going to withhold any suggestions or criticisms I may have until the bill is before us, and probably until we get into the committee stage on the bill. I will say that this legislation could, and probably should, fill the gap that has been quite apparent in the unemployment insurance program. It is one for which we have pressed before, because it was one of the points in the seven point program laid down by the hon. member for Bow River during last session. I cerainly hope this legislation is not going to be so restrictive or so niggardly that the proper number of people are not going to be able to get benefits under it. Some of the welfare legislation which has been passed in former years has been entirely too restrictive. For example, the disabled persons pension was such that the Alberta government either had to cut off some of those who were receiving aid under the provincial program or continue to pay on their own, as they were forced to do.

Other than that, I am not going to say anything. We hope this bill is going to be wide enough at any rate to fill the gap that exists in the unemployment legislation and give all Canadians the benefits they should get as the result of an unemployment program.

Mr. Martin: I presume there is no one else who wishes to speak, so I accept the invitation of the hon. member for Hamilton West, who quite properly asked several questions. I think the discussion this afternoon in this preliminary canter has been very helpful. I thank hon. members for it.

The hon. member for Hamilton West pointed out that although we do not have the bill before us, it was incorrect to say that the bill was to provide an assistance program by the federal and provincial governments to two classes of people, the unemployable and the unemployed employables, in all parts of the country.

Mrs. Fairclough: I just said it was incorrect to say it was for the unemployables.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is partly right, because the bill with which we hope to deal shortly provides for this assistance only in those provinces with which we have agreements, the six provinces I have named and in at least one other I expect will come in very shortly, and possibly two others. Of course the hon. member was right likewise in pointing out that there was a hard core in this problem that would be left either with the municipalities alone or with the municipalities and provinces.

To appreciate the significance of that, one has to recall the recommendations made in the Rowell-Sirois report which, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, recommended that the federal government should assume entire responsibility for the unemployed employables and should also bear the responsibility for administration in connection with this group. It is also true, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, that in the proposals made to the provinces in 1945 the impression was created that the federal government was prepared in that package deal to assume 100 per cent responsibility for the unemployed employables.

The real fact is that a careful reading of the minutes of that conference will show that the federal government did not agree to assume entire responsibility, in the proposals which were part of the package deal, for the unemployed employables. All the federal government did was to agree to assume responsibility for this group for a limited period, a period of two years, which was to be a period during which the Unemployment Insurance Act, which had been then in existence for five years, would be allowed to gather further experience, bring in other classes of workers under its coverage and generally profit by additional experience that would come from further administration of the act.

I think the value of this particular measure lies in at least the implication given by the hon. member for Hamilton West when she said that at no time—at least I understood her to say this, but perhaps it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South—was there ever any suggestion that the federal government should become responsible for those unfortunate fellow citizens of ours who are unemployed, and who even if work could have been provided for them were not capable of performing work. This legislation has, as I think its main value, that it reaches in very large measure that group of people once a certain condition has been met which we shall discuss when we come to the legislation.

I think we all felt—and certainly when we had a temporary period of unemployment about a year and a half ago—that it was unfortunate that in a federal state a situation should be created whereby needy individuals should go without assistance from the community in one form or another, simply because it had not been settled which jurisdiction was either constitutionally responsible or responsible because of the lack of agreement among the various levels of government.

Now, assuming the existence of the hard core problem which the hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned, this legislation will, in respect of those provinces with which we have agreements, remove that situation. By this legislation the federal government is not only agreeing to provide on a sharing basis for assistance for the unemployed employables once they reach a certain percentage of the population of the province, but it is also assuming a responsibility—and this is a new departure for us in Canada—once a certain proportion of the indigent group has been reached, along with the province, for that class of people. That is a new departure. It is one of the main purposes of this bill, and it is a purpose that we shall all want to bear in mind.

It is not asking too much that municipalities and provinces combined should continue to have some responsibility for those portions of the unemployed group in the country, whether employable or not, who are represented by the phrase "hard core". When we get to the bill we can indicate the extent to which we are relieving the provinces and the municipalities of a great responsibility in this particular.

My final observation is that I do not think my hon. friend should be concerned about the danger of dumping on to this legislation the responsibilities that should normally attend the Unemployment Insurance Act, because there is a check on that and that check will be the provincial governments, which will be called upon under this legislation to provide 50 per cent of the cost, either themselves with the municipalities or through the municipalities alone. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think the brief discussion that has preceded the introduction of the bill points out the value of this particular legislation, notwithstanding that we may have some disagreements on some details. This resolution does represent an important further step in the development of our social welfare program in this country.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question before he leaves? I have found some difficulty in outlining the definition of when a person is disabled under the disability act. When is a person unemployable, according to the minister's conception? Where is the dividing line between a permanent disability and unemployable?

Mr. Martin: Well, as far as this legislation is concerned, it will be up to the provinces and the municipalities to tell us, within the context of the legislation, which individuals come in that group. It will be a matter of administration, and I think we shall not experience any real difficulty. I shall go in to that further when we get to the bill.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question to ask the minister while the resolution is before us. I am wondering what provision is to be made in the legislation, or otherwise, for setting a floor or a ceiling, or both, upon the rate of assistance which will be paid?

Mr. Martin: The rate of assistance will depend upon the rates paid by the provinces, of which the federal government commits itself to pay not more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Barnett: Do I understand from that, that the level of assistance to be paid is entirely in the hands of the provinces?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mr. Barnett: And, under this legislation, the federal government will be prepared to match whatever rate the province pays?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister another question. I asked the Minister of Labour about it the other day. It has to do with the question of people who are over 40 years of age and who would be considered employable but who, owing to their age, cannot get employment. I have in mind a municipality. An industry closed up there and many of those people were left without work. The point I am coming to is this. When they apply for work they find that any person over 40 years of age is not considered employable. They were told that very nicely when they made application. Of course, at the bottom of it all was the fact that they were not considered as fitting into the pension schemes, or the training schemes, of those firms to which they made application.

A person 40 years of age is too old to get a job. I wonder whether that can be taken care of in some way. Do they enter into the unemployables? Would it be considered at any time that a man 40 years of age is unemployable? These people cannot get jobs; they are not considered employable in the eyes of the managers of those companies to which they apply. They are unemployable.

This is a situation we must recognize. It is happening all across the country. The situation exists in my own riding. These people simply cannot move out of the town in which they live. There is no possibility of them getting jobs. They have tried very hard to get jobs. Whenever they apply for a job they are asked, "How old are you?" If they are 40 years of age they are told, "We do not want you in our firm because you do not fit into the pension plan, and we like to train our own men". Therefore to all intents and purposes, no matter how we regard it, they are still unemployables.

This is a situation we should recognize, and something should be done for these people. Their unemployfent insurance ran out on May 1. They are quite without funds except what they saved from their earnings. At the same time, as I suggested before, they are unemployable by reason of the fact that no firm will employ them. If they go to the unemployment insurance people they might be offered other jobs, but you cannot ask a man to go out and do work on a highway or do other forms of labour when he has been a factory man all his life, or perhaps an expert mechanic. It just does not work out that way.

At the present time the situation exists, and I again call it to the attention of the government. I asked the Minister of Labour about it the other day and I now appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to do something for these people.

Mr. Martin: It will be covered by this legislation.

Mrs. Fairclough: In remarking on the date on which the agreement is to become effective the minister said it would be retroactive for one year but would not go back prior to July 1, 1955.

Mr. Martin: The agreements are retroactive for 12 months. In the case of the six agreements that brings them to July 1, 1955.

Mrs. Fairclough: Do all the agreements go back to the same date?

Mr. Martin: Twelve months from the date—

Mrs. Fairclough: Of signing.

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Martin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 436, to authorize contributions by Canada in respect of unemployment assistance costs in the provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

85. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,145,727.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I thought we were going to consider the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Harris: I am sorry I was not able to advise my hon. friend—I was able to do it with respect to other parts of the house—but the Secretary of State is not available and in view of the time I thought if the Minister of Defence Production would just make a statement which would be available for the record, in any event there would be no harm done.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Chairman, in introducing the estimates of the Department of Defence Production I would like to deal in general terms with Canada's defence production program which the department administers, in order to illustrate the scope of the work undertaken. From a defence production standpoint Canada has accomplished much in the last five years and developments have taken place which have strengthened and broadened our defence potential. In a number of fields new sources of supply have been developed in this country, and it is of interest to note that whereas in 1951 some 25 per cent of our defence orders, in dollar terms, were placed in the United States, last year this figure had dropped to 2 per cent.

An important factor in defence production is the state of the economy as a whole, and in this regard Canada has been most fortunate. Our industrial expansion and economic growth over the past years have added immeasurably to our defensive strength. Now that the initial build-up of the defence program has been completed, and re-equipment of our forces and maintenance of our defence production base have become the major considerations in the program, the underlying strength of the Canadian economy is of vital importance. It is against this background that the present program should be considered.

In carrying out its task of filling the defence requirements of Canada's armed forces, the Department of Defence Production has maintained a flexible production program which has been adjusted to changes in these requirements over the past five years. While this year's estimates of defence expenditures for equipment and services to be supplied by this department show little change, there are a number of adjustments and adaptations which I would like to discuss today, with some reference to the effect on the program of Canadian industry.

Five years ago I pointed out that there were certain phases of aircraft production in which it was felt that this country could make a contribution, not only to our own defence effort but to that of our allies as well. In some cases this meant using design and technical know-how of other countries and adapting them, where necessary, to our own needs. In 1951 deliveries of CF-100 all-weather interceptors and Orenda engines were just about to start, the F-86 Sabre was in quantity production powered by J-47 engines purchased in the United States, the Harvard trainer program was developing and there were plans for the production of the T-33 jet trainer.

Since then we have spent almost $2 billion on the aircraft program, more than three-quarters of it in Canada, and the tasks which were outlined in 1951 have been largely completed. A great number of CF-100 fighters have been produced, the majority being of the improved mark IV model, and further improvements are still being made. Canada has produced a very successful combination of the F-86 airframe and Orenda engine. The Harvard program has been completed and the Canadian manufacturer is now the sole source of supply for maintenance parts for this widely used training aircraft. The T-33 program has also been completed and current production is limited to replacement needs only.

During the same period we have for the first time established Canada as a producer of aero engines. The outstanding achievement, of course, has been the Orenda, of which improved versions are now being delivered. Rolls-Royce have completed production in their Canadian plant of Nene engines for the T-33 trainers, and the product has given excellent performance. In addition, a piston engine plant has been established near Montreal by Canadian Pratt and Whitney Limited which has supplied Wasp engines for both the Canadian and the United States governments and for supply under the Canadian mutual aid program to our NATO allies.

The production record of the past five years has borne out our expectation that a Canadian aircraft industry could successfully compete in certain fields with producers in other countries. The best evidence of this fact lies in the proven performance of the product. In the Orenda-powered F-86 Sabre, the Royal Canadian Air Force possess a day interceptor which is the equal of any in regular squadron service. The CF-100 continues to be one of the mainstays of the North American continental defence system, and will shortly make its appearance in Europe as part of the Canadian air division overseas. The success of this aircraft has demonstrated Canada's ability not only to build but also to design a first-class high performance aircraft. The same is true of the Orenda jet engine, which is so largely responsible for the excellent performance which the CF-100 and Sabre have given. At the same time, the Canadian aircraft industry has proven its ability to organize these complex production tasks quickly and to deliver at reasonable costs.

With respect to costs, we are satisfied that the decision to develop Canadian production has been justified economically. For various reasons, direct cost comparisons between countries are difficult to make. No two aircraft are identical and the types produced in Canada have been designed or modified to meet characteristic Canadian requirements. In addition, the size of the production run, which for Canadian requirements is bound to be limited compared with production runs in some other countries, has an obvious bearing on the element of overhead which must be borne by each aircraft produced. The record indicates, however, that the prices we have paid compare favourably with those we would have been required to pay for aircraft produced elsewhere.

But there is more than economic advantage to consider. A direct by-product of this policy is that we now have research and production facilities and engineering experience that did not exist in Canada before. From the point of view of our defence program this has been a major strategic gain. It has also added to our technological and industrial stature. It has provided challenging opportunities for engineers and to a large extent has helped stem the flow of our best skills and talents to other countries. The aircraft industry has now reached ninth place among all Canadian industries in terms of the factory value of its products, and third place in terms of employment. In the aero engine field particularly a whole new industry has been born. It has meant new plants and the expansion of old ones, new techniques, new skills, and new engineering facilities. All this industrial development may be regarded as an additional dividend on our original investment for defence.

In the interests of defence, the government has given assistance to the aircraft industry. As you will have seen from the annual report of the department, expenditures on capital assistance to the aircraft industry to the end of 1955 amounted to slightly more than $100 million. Assets acquired under this type of assistance remain, of course, the property of the crown, and the contractors to whom they are provided are held fully accountable for their proper care and maintenance. It has also been our policy, however, to encourage the industry to invest its own funds in plant and equipment, and to this end accelerated depreciation has been allowed in a number of cases.

The growing confidence of the industry in its future is reflected in the fact that it has purchased from the crown almost 60 per cent of the assets provided as capital assistance. The total capital outlay made by the industry during the five-year period is therefore appreciably greater than the net crown holdings. I should add that this ratio of industry to government investment is believed to be considerably better than that which exists in other major western countries.

Since the original program adopted in 1951 is now substantially completed, hon. members will be interested in the prospects of this complex new industry. For the future the main items to be produced in Canada will be the CF-105 supersonic fighter, the CL28 maritime reconnaissance aircraft and the CS2F anti-submarine aircraft for the navy. In the engine field we shall have the PS13 turbo jet for the CF-105 and the R1820 Cyclone engine for the CS2F.

It is of interest to note that of the three aircraft I mentioned one, the CF-105, is of all-Canadian design; a second, the CS2F, follows completely a United States design; and the third, the CL28 maritime reconnaissance, is based on the Bristol Britannia but has been modified by Canadian designers for its maritime role and for the installation of the Wright engines.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

The engine production program shows the same mixture of Canadian and foreign design. The PS13 represents an all-Canadian engine which is being developed for the CF-105, although the first aircraft to be produced will be fitted with J75 jet engines purchased in the United States. Hon. members will be interested to know that the PS13 has passed its 50-hour pre-flight rating test, which is the first milestone in the development of an airplane engine. The R1820 piston engine, being produced in Canada for the CS2F, follows a United States design and is being built in Canada under licence. For reasons of economy we are buying engines outright from the United States for the CL28, the number of aircraft being comparatively small.

It will be evident from this that we are continuing to follow a selective policy in the development and production tasks which are being assigned to Canadian industry. It would be a needless extravagance for Canada to attempt to meet the needs of its armed forces entirely from its own technological and industrial resources. The engineering experience and production facilities which we have developed will be employed to the fullest extent possible, but it is only common sense to adopt proven designs from other countries where it is to our advantage to do so, or to buy our aircraft or their components elsewhere where the numbers required will not warrant production in this country.

In the process of transition from the original program of 1951 to the new program based on the services re-equipment needs, one of the principal concerns of the Department of Defence Production is to ensure that there is as little disruption as possible in the industry. However, two important points must be noted. First, the phasing of the re-equipment program must depend, in the last analysis, on factors which are unrelated to the level of industrial activity. These factors include the delivery requirements of the services and the rate of progress achieved in development work. Second, it should be realized that the re-equipment program will not require production on a scale comparable to that of such peak years as 1953 and 1954.

The house will recognize that the aircraft industry is primarily a defence industry. Parts of it, and particularly such major concerns as Orenda, Avro and Canadair, depend almost entirely on defence orders. The production of military aircraft cannot operate on a stop and start basis, since there is no suitable civilian product to which it can be readily converted. During the past year we have had to resort to stretch-outs of production at reduced rates of output, where service requirements permitted, in order to keep production lines open and to stabilize future work loads. As a result some lay-offs have been unavoidable and there may be further contractions to come.

Subject to these limitations, the aircraft program will be conducted in such a way as to stabilize work loads and employment to the greatest extent possible. We do not expect, in the foreseeable future, to reach levels of activity comparable to those of world war II and the Korean emergency. On the other hand, we shall do our best to avoid troughs like that of the years 1945 to 1948, and shall endeavour to continue to keep the aircraft industry intact, as a going concern, in all essential respects.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall take second reading of the bill with respect to unemployment assistance and then the estimates of defence production.

At six o'clock the house took recess, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 28, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

INDUSTRY

KRUPPS—PRESS REPORT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF BRANCH PLANT IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I can assure him it has nothing to do with wheat or box cars. Can the minister inform the house whether there is any truth in press reports that the infamous Krupps intend to establish a branch steel plant in Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard no suggestion that Krupp is to establish a steel plant in Canada. I have read press reports, but I am quite certain that had there been any serious plans I would have heard of them, and I have not.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

A. V. ROE LIMITED—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister inform the house if he is taking any steps to ensure that A. V. Roe workers will not be laid off as the result of a cut-back in the production of the CF-100?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the government has found it necessary to cut back the production schedule of CF-100 aircraft at A. V. Roe starting later in the year. However, A. V. Roe is a private plant and the government would have no voice in the disposition of its labour; that is a matter for A. V. Roe.

Mr. Pallett: May I ask a supplementary question? Is the minister aware of the representation that was made in this house that steps would be taken to ensure that there be no troughs of unemployment in the aircraft industry or that the working force would be maintained?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am not suggesting that the cut-back represents a trough in aircraft work. I stated yesterday that the aircraft program initiated five years ago has now been completed and that the work of the aircraft plants will be to provide replacements for the aircraft that have already been built. In the case of A. V. Roe a new plane is coming into production in a year or two, but I would not regard the present lay-off as a trough. I think it likely that the lower level of employment will endure for some time.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Defence Production a question somewhat related to the questions which were asked earlier in regard to the cut-back of production in the A. V. Roe plant. Will the government call a conference, representative of labour, management and government, to discuss the situation involved in this pending lay-off, as is being requested by the union concerned, and in line with the previous undertaking given by the government in this connection?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I know of no undertaking given by the government that a meeting between A. V. Roe, its employees and the government would be called to discuss lay-offs. A. V. Roe is a private plant and has a contract with its employees, which contract I assume will be carried out. The Department of Defence Production orders the aircraft that the Department of National Defence indicate as required from week to week. The labour relations within the plant are not within the purview of this government.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the question I asked him a few minutes ago. Would the minister care to check with the Department of Labour with respect to the statement that the government gave no undertaking to call a tripartite conference in view of the information that has been received by hon. members today by telegram that in January 1955 such an undertaking was given with respect to the future lay-off plan?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to search my own files. I do not think I need to go beyond that. As far as I know, labour matters at A. V. Roe are handled by the province. I do not know of any labour agreement with the federal government.

ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES WELDERS INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister yet in a position to give any information to the house on the question of the issuance of permits to welders to enter the province of British Columbia to work on the pipe line there?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes, sir, I intended to speak to the hon. gentleman privately about this matter. We have had an interim report from Vancouver and I am expecting a more detailed report in the current mail. It does appear that the actual union which is the bargaining agent for these welders has no complaint whatsoever and that another association which is not the union in question has made some complaints. These complaints have been investigated and in the main they appear to be almost entirely without foundation. However, it has been the practice of employers to ask welders to go to the place where the work is to be done in order to have their tests and that has put them to some inconvenience. I am told arrangements have now been made to have the tests conducted in Vancouver.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister advise the house when he is in receipt of the detailed report to which he referred?

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to speak to the hon. gentleman about it as soon as it is received.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ICELAND—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF UNITED STATES FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, and to ask him whether he is in a position to make any observation on what the effect will be on North American defence should Iceland decide to cause United States troops there under the NATO agreement to withdraw? Would he also say what representations, if any, Canada by reason of its peculiarly friendly attitude to Iceland, is making in order to warn of the serious danger to North American defence should the course indeed be followed of causing NATO troops to withdraw from Iceland, rendering that country more or less vulnerable to communist attack?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend, I am sure, will appreciate the great importance of this matter and he will not expect me to deal with every aspect of his question. The defence agreement between Iceland and the United States which provides for the stationing of United States forces was concluded in 1951 as a result of a request from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I should have said at the outset that I am grateful to my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question, and having given me an opportunity thereby of discussing this matter with those whose job it is day to day to deal with this particular situation.

The secretary of state for the United States has recently stated:

> The United States has bases in Iceland, not in its own right but acting as an agent for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

I may say it is a question in which Canada and other NATO countries have a definite interest. The treaty provides that either the United States or Iceland may, at any time, on notification to the other government, request the NATO council to review the continued necessity for the facilities and their utilization, and to make recommendations to the two governments concerning the continuation of this agreement. If, six months after the review by the council, no understanding is reached between the two governments, either government may at any time give notice of its intention to terminate the agreement, which will cease to be in force 12 months from the date of such notice.

The resolution passed by the parliament of Iceland before the recent elections in that country, which called for a revision of the defence agreement, referred specifically to the appropriate article in the agreement, and at the same time reaffirmed the decision and the intention of Iceland to support NATO.

The Canadian government hopes that if a new Icelandic government should decide to ask for a revision of the defence treaty, as envisaged in the resolution of the parliament of Iceland, it will be possible to reach a compromise satisfactory to Iceland and all of the NATO partners.

We cannot know, however, what Iceland's policy will be toward the defence agreement until the government has actually been formed. I do not think it is desirable at this time that anything further should be said on this matter.

ATOMIC ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES BILATERAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether an amendment has been negotiated between Canada and the United States to the atomic energy agreement? It is reported in the press this morning that some change has been made.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I intended to make an announcement today. It is understood between governments that the announcement will be made at 2.30 this afternoon.

On June 18 I advised the house that the government of the United States had proposed that the Canada-United States bilateral agreement on atomic energy should be amended to provide for an exchange of information with respect to the development, design, construction, operation and use of reactors for the propulsion of naval vessels, aircraft and land vehicles. I am now able to advise the house that the amendment has been signed. Copy of the amendment will be tabled in the house in the next few days.

CHEESE

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORTS OF ALLEGED IMPURITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, during the last week there have appeared some very disagreeable reports in the press regarding impurities to be found in Canadian cheese. I would like to assure hon. members of the house and people elsewhere that cheese from Oxford has neither manure nor mouse hair in it.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—PROSPECTS OF FINANCING WITHOUT EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I did not give the Minister of Trade and Commerce any notice, but I do not think he needs any. I should like to know whether there is any foundation in fact for the article which appears on the front page of the Globe and Mail that there are enough orders for gas in Canada alone, without the United States, to make the gas pipe line pay?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that orders have been received for quantities of gas which promise to make the pipe-line financeable without recourse to export sales.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the hopeful statement he has made as to the economic possibilities of the pipe line with respect to Canadian sales alone, is he now considering revising the program of providing government finances for the pipe line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Speaker, when I reconsider anything to do with pipeline arrangements we will have another three weeks' debate.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED IMPORTS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the question I put on the order paper on June 1, and the answer he gave was as follows, as reported at page 5435 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I gave a verbal answer to a similar question.

I would like to remind the minister that my question was completely different from the one that was asked by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert), I think it was, some time early last week. Whenever it is possible for him to do so I would like the minister to answer the question I have put on the order paper.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, since I spoke in the house on this subject yesterday I find that my hon. friend's question is on the order paper. I have spoken to my staff about a prompt answer and I think the answer will be ready within the next day or so.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

PROVISION FOR FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO COSTS IN PROVINCES

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 436, to authorize contributions by Canada in respect to unemployment assistance costs in the provinces.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of National Health and Welfare intend to make any further remarks?

Mr. Martin: I had not intended at this time, Mr. Speaker, to say anything in addition to what I said in a preliminary way yesterday and by way of reply to certain questions. However, I shall be very glad to deal with any questions that may be put from time to time.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us has just been in our hands about an hour or so. As a matter of fact, I think I just received it about 12.30 p.m. today. We have not had too much opportunity to go over it and, of course, the actual bill itself is closely related to and almost dependent upon the agreements. It is merely an implementation of the agreements themselves which are of a rather technical nature. So apart from asking questions on the clauses as they come before us there is really not very much we can do at this time.

I should like to reiterate one statement I made last night, that when the major central provinces are not in this scheme, necessarily a large part of Canada is excluded. Therefore for the minister to say that there is now no excuse for anyone making remarks with reference to the participation of the federal government in unemployment assistance is scarcely true. I asked the minister yesterday for copies of the correspondence with the provinces, particularly of letters from officials of the non-participating provinces. If my memory serves me well the minister said that those had been tabled. I cannot find them; they are not anywhere. The only correspondence that I could find was—

Mr. Martin: Let me explain; I did not understand my hon. friend yesterday. There were no letters from officials tabled, but there were letters from the heads of governments and responsible ministers which were tabled. That is what I thought my hon. friend was referring to.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would be grateful if the minister would tell me when they were tabled. I searched all morning and so far I have been unable to procure them. In the absence of explanations from the premiers or their ministers of the non-participating provinces it is difficult to know just what are the reasons for their failure to participate. I would think that in a debate such as this the reasons put forward by the responsible ministers in those provinces would be vital. As a matter of fact there are a few thoughts which come immediately to my mind without knowing what the provinces may have said on the matter, and the first one is—

Mr. Martin: Would the hon. member permit me to see if I can help her in her presentation at the moment. When we get into committee I could deal with these specific questions. For instance, it is most difficult for me to do this now. The hon. member has asked me about these provinces and I shall be glad to answer when we get into committee. I think I can facilitate the matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the minister has the information at hand and can tell us precisely what objections were raised by the non-participating provinces, that would be extremely interesting.

Mr. Martin: I shall be glad to do that.

Mrs. Fairclough: Having had some experience in municipal affairs I know it is unrealistic to expect the provincial or municipal administrations to be responsible for the administration of this assistance. The government of Canada has set up right across Canada its own machinery to handle unemployment insurance benefits and it would seem to me that if the government of Canada intends to do something to assist those persons who are not otherwise covered, either by reason of failure to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits because of being in uninsurable employment or by reason of having made insufficient contributions, if the government intends to go along with some sort of assistance it seems to me it could have gone much further than is indicated here in administering these applications.

It is my opinion that the social security plan set out in what came to be known as the green book, the proposals of 1945, have been practically scuttled by this government in the preparation of the plan which has now more or less been forced down the throats of the participating provinces. The percentage which I mentioned yesterday and other pertinent factors again are set out in the agreements; they are not a part of the bill itself. Because they are part of the agreements, actually the attitude of the respective provinces to the agreements they have made, whether they have signed them willingly or reluctantly, enters very substantially into this particular bill and its enactment.

All of these things, it seems to me, are up in the air. They are matters on which we do not have too much information. I hope that the minister will be in a position to give us what information is at hand with regard to the specific reactions of the various provinces, when we come to the committee stage of this bill.

Since we discussed this in the resolution stage last evening and since I received the bill today at noon I have given it all the attention I could and I still take issue with the minister's statement that, in making his agreements with the provinces and bringing in this legislation to implement these agreements, the federal government is paying a share of what was formerly relief for unemployables. I take issue with that because I think it is now clearly set forth that the basic platform, if you will, below which the government does not participate still leaves the municipalities and provinces entirely responsible for what would be considered their basic load of ordinary relief. In addition to that, over and above the basic load, the provinces and municipalities are still paying 50 per cent of the cost, and the government is participating only to the extent of 50 per cent. Under these agreements it looks to me—and the minister can correct me if I am wrong—that the provinces and municipalities are also paying for all the administrative costs.

With these remarks I am willing to leave the introduction of this bill until we get to the committee stage, and then we shall try to pick up the rest of it on the clauses.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to speak for a few minutes on this bill, which I think we shall all agree is an important one. It was possibly only at ten minutes to five yesterday afternoon that the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced the resolution preparatory to the introduction of the bill. I listened very carefully to what he had to say and also to his request that, if possible, the members of the various opposition parties refrain from discussing it at the resolution stage but wait until the actual introduction of the bill, when we could then know the bill and be able to discuss it efficiently and with knowledge of what it meant. Possibly at about half past five last night the bill got its first reading. At six o'clock the leader of the house informed us that, after the orders of the day, it would be the first business this afternoon. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think it is a matter of disrespect and discourtesy to the members of the House of Commons, after meeting the request of the minister, that we members should not have been able to receive this bill and study it until about—as far as I am concerned—a quarter after twelve this afternoon. Time after time I telephoned in an effort to get it, because I am interested in this bill but I did not get it until a quarter after twelve, and it is called for second reading this afternoon.

I mention that matter in particular, Mr. Speaker, because, after reading the bill, I find it is almost impossible to understand its implications without any reference back to the appendix at pages 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30 of Hansard under date of January 11. The bill itself cannot be understood in any way whatsoever without reference to the appendix of January 11. Without that reference back to something prior, it is difficult to understand the principles of the bill when you get it only some 2½ hours before the house meets on second reading. Between the time I obtained the bill and now I have been trying to understand it in view of the appendix of January 11. That is all I am going to say about that matter. I think the minister will recall that he himself said it was one of the most important bills introduced. That is the only time before second reading that we have ever seen the bill and been able to refer it back. To be honest, I may say I am told that 100 copies of the bill were ordered before then, but I checked with all hon. members in our party here and found that not one of us had received one.

I want to say this. The bill itself, as we can now read it, understand it and tie it back in with what was placed on Hansard on January 11, is certainly a great advance by this federal government as compared with the federal Liberal government's attitude back in the hungry thirties. In those days the federal Liberal government answered, with a police baton, tear gas, riot acts and what I call concentration camps, the pleas of those who had nothing to eat and nowhere to go. I am not going to spend much time on this matter but I may say this. At that time I was a member of a provincial legislature and we were obliged to face the exigencies and problems of the moment. It was my hope that on reading this bill it would be made clear in the bill itself that the problems had been met. From the bill itself that is something you cannot tell. I want to say that it does help if you read the appendix of January 11. But even after so doing I am not yet sure in my own mind that the government has met the problems that can arise. Although it cannot be understood on a second reading of the bill, even tied in with the appendix, it is my hope that the minister in committee will make it clear that all the complexities that arose in what is the prime example, namely the hungry thirties, have been covered by this bill, by the regulations that are going to be made thereunder and by the contracts that have been or will be signed by the provinces.

From experience I can speak only for the province of British Columbia. Despite all the sincerity and integrity of the minister and despite the bill which he is now introducing and which is an advance, I am convinced that he is not going to be able to solve this problem of assistance to the unemployed who are not covered under other acts unless there is—as eventually there must be—an over-all security program on a federal basis. As long as we have a situation whereby an individual is covered under various jurisdictions and various administrations, I am afraid there will always be inefficiency, unnecessary duplication of costs and, unfortunately, those who may be obliged to suffer because they are caught, even after this bill is passed, between the varying governmental and administrative responsibilities. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I personally am sorry that the minister, in the introduction of this bill, has not given a lead with respect to an over-all security program for the entire Dominion of Canada.

I want to make this as perhaps a first major point. I know the British North America Act and I understand the allocation of jurisdictions and responsibilities as between the federal government and the provincial governments. All municipalities are children of provincial governments. I think it is wrong that, in the introduction of this bill and the principle of it, there is no acceptance by this government of the principle that municipalities are no longer in a position to be responsible financially—and should not be so responsible—for those who are indigent within their boundaries. In discussing the principle of a bill, as I am now doing, I believe the fact that the principle is not included there is something to be regretted by all of us and something which must eventually come about. Under the terms and principle of Bill No. 436, it is completely an agreement between the dominion and provincial authorities without any recognition of the fact that at the present time, as in recent years, with the additional costs of government, the powers of municipalities as far as the collection of moneys is concerned, have not been and cannot be extended. In this, the first time that the government have accepted any responsibility with respect to any government outside of itself, they have not made it clear that it is a responsibility shared between the federal and provincial governments for those who are not covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act which is federal, the Disabled Persons Act which is federal and the provincial acts on mothers' pensions and so forth.

Sir, I have tried to find, in the principle of this bill, just what is going to happen as regards those who have not established a domicile in accordance with provincial regulations. I can say to the minister that I have checked under the act and find that this goes back to the appendix which is found under section 10, subsection (i). I want to speak on this principle because—

Mr. Martin: I can assure my hon. friend there is no residence qualification at all.

Mr. Winch: There is no residence qualification. As I said, it refers back to the appendix. There is no residence responsibility so far as the principle of Bill No. 436 is concerned; that is left to the residence qualifications existing in the province. In British Columbia we have the residence responsibility act. It is my understanding, and I have checked this with the minister's own office, that irrespective of residence it is the intention of the ministry,—I hope he will correct me if I am wrong—that any person in Canada no matter what his residence is, so long as he resides in Canada, if he is not covered by any other act of the province must receive all the benefits of this act.

Mr. Martin: Section 5 of the agreement.

Mr. Winch: That is so, but is it clear? It is not clear to me yet. If a province does not accept complete responsibility of the cost but passes on responsibility to the municipalities, and if a municipality has, as we had in the hungry thirties not one but thousands coming into places like Vancouver, is it clear that they must give the benefits but not at the expense of that city, town or municipality. This is just one of the things I should like to have the minister make very clear because it is important to the municipalities. I can remember back in the hungry thirties when the British Columbia government and the municipalities spent $92 million before they ever got one cent from the federal government.

Now, again speaking strictly on the principle of this bill, I have tried since I got the bill to find out what it means. It is my understanding, if I may refer to the province from which I come, that when the agreement is signed, ·45 per cent of the population must be unemployed before the federal government comes into the picture. I am certain the minister does not mind that I phoned his department this afternoon, and I was informed that at the present time you are taking the population of British Columbia as 1,305,000. On the basis of ·45 per cent, there would have to be somewhere in the neighbourhood of just less than 6,000.

Mr. Martin: It would be 5,872.

Mr. Winch: Yes, just less than 6,000, before the federal government comes into the picture. When the federal government comes into the picture, it is on the figure above that. Let us say it is 6,000 just for a figure, and there are 1,000 who are not covered by anything else. Then the federal government, under this bill, comes into the picture. It is my understanding that then you will take the 7,000, that is the complete 7,000 who are unemployed, average the cost and multiply it by the 1,000, and you are going to accept 50 per cent of the responsibility. This, sir, as part of the principle of the bill, should be further explained by the minister.

It means this. If all those who are unemployed are eligible for any form of assistance, that is unemployment insurance, supplementary benefits, disability pensions, mothers' pensions, old age pensions, those unemployed are not in the picture so far as this bill is concerned. This bill only applies to those who are unemployed because they are unemployable or cannot meet the conditions of any other grant. We are not basing this bill on the principle of the number of unemployed, we are basing it on ·45 per cent of those who are unemployed and who are not covered. In British Columbia this means we have to have over 6,000 unemployed beyond those unemployed eligible for any other benefits before the federal government steps in and accepts any responsibility.

I want to say that, personally, I think much as I welcome this advance, that is unfair. It means, so far as British Columbia is concerned, that unless the proportion of unemployed who are not covered by any of the existing acts reaches ·45 per cent of the present population, which would be about 6,000, this government is accepting no responsibility whatsoever. I think, sir, definitely that the federal government of Canada is responsible to all those who are unemployed irrespective of the reason for which they are unemployed. This principle is not now being accepted, and I am certain of what I saying. I appreciate the fact, and I want to say so, that when you do start accepting responsibility, although you only do it under the principle of this act after you have ·45 per cent of the population unemployed, you will average the entire cost of all the unemployment; but you will only pay for those over ·45 per cent.

I want to give credit to the minister for the advances made. If I am making a mistake in my interpretation and analysis of this he will tell me. This is my understanding of the situation. Perhaps, sir, I have to go back, and I want to, on this matter of responsibility. I have mentioned it before, but I want to speak about it again. This legislation makes an agreement only between the federal and provincial governments. It is up to the provincial governments to decide what they do with their 50 per cent. I imagine that the majority of the provinces, if not all, are going to pass some of it on to the municipalities. I am sorry about that. As I see it, the minister should have worked out something different—I know the problem of the municipalities—under which it was the responsibility of the two governments. Eventually, I think it has to be the responsibility of one government, namely, the federal government, under a national security plan.

I emphasize the fact that this question of people moving from one province to another cannot be handled efficiently without one responsibility. We shall always have a problem, if there is a tri-partite arrangement and administration between the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipalities, especially, sir, when it is my understanding that the interpretation of this bill, when applied to the appendix of January 11, as it relates to people going from one province to another, is not dependent upon any decision or principle of the federal government, but is dependent upon an arrangement between the provinces. I see my hon. friend shaking his head. I can only read the principle of this bill, and on page 28—

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend think I was unfair to suggest that these questions, all of which are important, could be dealt with when we get into committee? He could put those questions at that time. I can only say at this time that I can explain that when we get into committee. I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend. I am trying to find a mechanism that will prove as helpful as possible to both of us.

Mr. Winch: In discussing the bill I am trying to raise the points as I see them. The minister can explain the principles in committee but, sir, it very definitely is my reading and understanding of Bill No. 436 that the federal government is prepared to pay 50 per cent of all the costs of transients from one province to another, but that the actual arrangement has to be made as between the provinces. I just cannot read the bill and the appendix of January 11 in any other way. If that interpretation is wrong I certainly hope we shall have an explanation from the minister when we get into committee.

Sir, this is a most important matter. I can assure the house and the minister that we welcome this completely new approach by a Liberal government, and it is a new approach. Previously, they have relied on the police, the tear gas and the baton. I know; I even tasted them myself. Up until now, even though we have had the problems of the unemployed in all provinces, not by any act could we get anything from the federal government. We had to rely on the provincial governments having some sense of responsibility. The minister now is introducing a bill. We welcome it. We are sorry that it is not a total security bill. We hope he will just go back in his mind's eye and perhaps check on some of his own civil servants, and perhaps check on one of his deputies, who was in British Columbia and who knows the problems, to make sure that when the bill is finally passed in committee, although it will not go as far as we in this group think it should, it will go as far as is humanly possible, with the limited vision of the Liberals, and do the best it can to see that no person who is a Canadian citizen, irrespective of where he is in any province or in any municipality, need not go hungry, unclothed or unsheltered.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I wish to say a few words on the principle of this bill at this time. Like others who have spoken, I found it a little difficult to find the time to go over the bill because—

Mr. Martin: I wonder whether my hon. friend does not think it would be better to have this general discussion in committee where we could all deal with it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I agree with what the minister has said, but the unfortunate part of it is, it only emphasizes what I am about to say, namely, that it was not until about half past twelve—

Mr. Martin: May I explain that. I know the house will believe me when I say I am not habituated to provoking any discourtesy. The house co-operated with me fully last night. I understand that we had placed—not in accordance with custom—100 copies of the bill on the table, and I had assumed they were distributed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why?

Mr. Martin: I did that as a matter of courtesy last night. It was not for want—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why does the minister not adjourn the debate so that the bill could be studied?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend knows the reason. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) and the house generally, with whom we discussed this matter, understand the reason. The bill in principle is precisely the same as the agreement, as the hon. member for Hamilton West will indicate. I just want to assure the house that there was no discourtesy.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not suggesting there was any discourtesy on the part of the minister. I am only pointing out the fact that it was not until half past twelve or a quarter to one that I received my copy of the bill, and it was not in the post office at that time. I had to phone up the clerk of the debates in order to find out where it was. I obtained it from the postmaster myself. Therefore, I say it is a little difficult for us to discuss a bill which we had in our hands only about an hour and a half before the house opened. While I am not putting any particular blame on the minister, the fact remains that that is so.

There are one or two things regarding this bill that I want to speak about. I may say to the minister that, like the other two hon. members who have spoken on this matter today, I am pleased that the minister has seen fit to bring down this bill. I think it is an improvement on what has existed in the past, and everyone in Canada will appreciate that. There are one or two things in particular that should be mentioned at this time. The 45 per cent which the minister referred to in his speech yesterday seems to me to be a little bit unfair.

Mr. Martin: The ·45 per cent.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The ·45 per cent, yes. I thought I had said "·45 per cent". It is a little less than one-half of one per cent. It means that in the province of Alberta there must be about 5,000 who would qualify under this legislation before the federal government would step in. That seems to me to be a rather large number, Mr. Speaker, because there are going to be some of the employable unemployed who will come into that figure. There are some who are permanently unemployable because of age or some other disability. All those under the 5,000—I am using the figure for Alberta of approximately 5,000—whether they are unemployable as the result of a shortage of opportunities or jobs are going to be the sole responsibility of the provinces.

There has developed in the last few days a condition wherein a number of people who have exhausted their unemployment benefits have become unemployed. Those people will be among those who will come under this bill. Do I understand the minister to say that is not so?

Mr. Martin: I think we could properly discuss this when we are in committee.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): In my judgment they will be because it includes not only the unemployables but the employable unemployed as well, and the provincial governments will be asked to carry that load. If that is so, and I assume it is so at this time, then what is happening is that the federal government is evading a responsibility which is entirely its own. I do not think the provinces should have to assume responsibility for any employable unemployed; I think that definitely should be a responsibility coming under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

There is another matter, too, which will cause us difficulty as time goes on. The federal government will make the regulations. It states in the act that the governor in council will be the body to make the regulations. I do not want to discuss the act because this is not the time to do so, but the governor in council will make regulations for the administration of this act and for the purpose of carrying its provisions into effect. No matter what the minister may say about it, the act is clear on that point. This means that the provinces are going to be charged with the responsibility of administration and paying 50 per cent of the costs of carrying out the regulations laid down by this government over which they have little or no control. It is true the provinces may be consulted before the governor in council applies the regulations, but it also means that all the blame for any maladministration or for inefficient payments to meet the requirements will be laid at the door of the provinces and the federal government will slip out from under this very much as it has done in the case of old age pensions. That is not right, to my way of thinking. If the provinces are going to have to accept the responsibility for the administration and pay 50 per cent of the cost of all those over the ·45 per cent then they should be the ones who make the regulations in the main and they should consult with the federal government. Instead of that it will be the other way around; the federal government will lay down the regulations. The provinces will probably be consulted but the provinces must bear the full responsibility that must be carried in connection with this. I do not think it is the responsibility of the provinces.

I am not one of those who look forward to a depression nor am I crying that at this moment; however, we are having a considerable number of lay-offs for one reason or another at this time. I am not suggesting that these people who are laid off are not going to find other employment but the fact of the matter is that this situation does exist at present. It means the provinces are going to accept the responsibility and the blame for all those who are not immediately re-employed or those who do not qualify under the Unemployment Insurance Act for one reason or another. In my judgment that is the responsibility of the federal government and not of the provinces. I think there should be some change in this act in that respect.

There are other parts of the act with which I should like to deal, Mr. Speaker, but I would have to deal with them clause by clause and, of course, this is not an opportune time to do that. Having said what I have already said, I will not go further at this point. I will say again, however, that I think, as others have said, this is a step in the right direction and as time goes on it may be possible to make amendments that will clarify it and put it on a fairer basis, and until we come to the point where we will deal with the bill clause by clause I will stop for the moment.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make a brief comment at this time. Like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) I wish to commend the minister for bringing in this legislation. In doing so he is simply living up to his past record of trying to help people who cannot help themselves. I remember when I brought in a resolution to provide help for the handicapped three years in succession it received splendid support from all quarters of the house. I remember, too, that when our hospitals had great difficulty in getting nurses the Minister of National Health and Welfare came along and suggested nurses' aids.

I expect to hear from some members of the opposition who have been asking the government to assist the municipalities. As the hon. member for Vancouver East has said, this is the first time the government has stepped out to help the municipalities, and it is to be commended. I would like to ask the minister one question. If a provincial government were unable to pay its share of 50 per cent of the cost, would the federal government pay the 50 per cent anyway?

Mr. Martin: Perhaps the hon. member would permit me to suggest what I have suggested to other hon. members who have asked questions. When we get into committee I will be able to deal with these questions and perhaps the hon. member will be glad to forgo his remarks until then.

Mr. McIvor: All right. I think the minister has just told us and the country through this bill that nobody in Canada shall go hungry and there is no reason why anyone should go hungry in Canada. I can remember a time in Fort William when our boys and girls and men and women could not get enough to eat and yet our elevators were full of wheat, the dairies were full and there were lots of groceries on the shelves in the stores. Despite this fact our people could not get enough to eat and they had to go on relief and do the things that were necessary in order to get the necessities of life. Without saying anything further I commend the minister for bringing in this bill because I know it will be of some help. It may not go all the way but it will go a long way toward providing a solution and I thank the minister for it.

Mr. W. G. Blair (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members, I received this bill at noon and although I have tried to interpret it since I find the bill confusing and difficult of interpretation. When this bill is in committee possibly I shall have some questions to ask of the minister explanatory of some of these clauses.

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Blair: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) made the statement that the government of Canada scuttled the proposals of 1945 in relation to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction. I happen to have this report in my hand and I think it would be interesting to read a part of it into the record. On page 42 of the proposals of the government of Canada of August 1945 there is a chapter concerning the necessary requirements of the dominion scheme for unemployment insurance and section (d), which is particularly interesting, reads as follows:

> (d) The plan proposes acceptance of dominion responsibility for unemployed employables, and provincial and local responsibility for unemployables, but it is recognized that this division presents problems of definition in some individual cases, and that in operating practice the only final test of employability is ability to get and hold a job.

Last night I brought before the committee and asked the minister a question concerning the situation of people 40 years of age who are unable to get a job. Those I submit are employables; they are not unemployables because of their age, they are employables. If, as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) has said, the dominion has scuttled the plans of 1945, the proposals of that year clearly set forth the division of authority because it was said that the plan proposes the acceptance of dominion responsibility for unemployed employables.

They are not part of this legislation and I should like to have an explanation by the minister, especially when we get into committee, as to where the dividing line should be. There are certain people who are under disability pensions at the present time and who are not unemployables. In looking at the proposals of 1945 I see it was said that the only final test of employability is the ability to get and hold a job. There are many people with slight disabilities which make it difficult for them to hold a job. Will they be considered as unemployables under this legislation? I would like the minister to give us a full explanation when we are in committee in connection with these people who are unemployable. I use that term because I submit that they cannot get a job. I repeat, the only test of employability is the ability to get and to hold a job. They cannot get jobs and they are precluded from employment for that reason. Will this bill cover those people? The minister said last night that this matter would be taken care of by the bill and I should like to know how the minister intends to deal with them.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have heard reference made to the fact that this is the first time that recognition has been given by the government to the plight of the municipalities, but I cannot go along with any feeling that this constitutes a substantial contribution toward a solution of the problem with which they are faced. Certainly in the province of Ontario there is not a municipality which is financially in a position to take care of one unemployed person if it is going to carry out its true role of providing essential services such as the provision of sewers, water mains, education and items of that kind for a rapidly expanding economy. I cannot see any indication in this bill that the municipalities will be spared this burden. I note in clause 2(d), the interpretation section, that reference is made to the cost to municipalities. It is referred to again in clause 4(c).

It is obvious that, no matter what the contribution by this government may be, the load is going to be too heavy for the municipality. I think we are putting the cart before the horse. It seems to me it is time that we divided up the taxation field once and for all as well as the responsibility for the collection of taxes and the responsibility for the spending of those taxes in order to provide certain services. If we do that, then I think we will find a great deal more reluctance on the part of certain taxing authorities to collect every cent they can get and then hide behind some other authority in so far as the administration of particular legislation is concerned.

Reference was made a short time ago to the fact that there is no doubt about who is going to be blamed. If this system is to be called upon to any great extent the municipality is going to be the level of government which will have to deal with the administration of the act. If it does not work satisfactorily the municipality will have to take the responsibility. The municipality now collects taxes from real estate and I am quite sure that houses are not going to be out of work. It will be the home owners and other people in the country and it seems to me that the administration should be the responsibility of and be tied in with the people who in fact collect the taxes which are eventually to be used for this purpose.

I do not think I can emphasize too strongly the fact that we have gone too far along the road of permitting the municipality to be put in the position where if there is any tightening at all of the expansion that is taking place in this country it is going to be bankrupt just as it was in the 1930's. If there is any responsibility for that condition it will belong right here in this house.

The attitude of the government in connection with the plight of the municipalities reminds me of the story of a man who had bought a burro. A friend admired it very much and he finally said, "You have a lot of children, you take it and use it, but always be kind to it, be good to it or it won't do things for you." The friend took it home and put one of his children on it and it would not move. He gave it sugar, he patted it, but nothing happened. So he phoned his friend and told him that he could not get the burro to do anything and the friend said he would come right over. He came over and he said, "Give me a piece of two by four." He then hit the burro right between the eyes. His friend said, "Oh, but you said to be kind to it." He said, "Yes, but first you must get his attention."

I submit that as far as the municipalities are concerned we are not going to get any help for them unless we keep on hammering away here day after day. If I were asked for a formula as to what should be done I would repeat: Let us divide the taxation field; let this government collect the money to do those things for which it is responsible; let the province collect the money to do those things for which it is responsible, and let the municipality collect the real property taxes to enable it to provide those services for which it is responsible. If we do that then once and for all we will get away from this type of piecemeal legislation, and that is all I can say it is.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could just say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the minister concludes the debate I should like to say a word or two in connection with this bill. I am rather surprised at the way in which the minister has introduced this legislation into the house. This is a matter of great importance and it deserves a great deal of study. The bill itself is complicated and when the agreements tabled in the house on January 11 are read over you find that there are still more complications; yet the minister is in a hurry to get this through. At the resolution stage he suggested that discussion might be postponed until we had the bill in front of us. Now that we have the bill in front of us the minister wants us to postpone discussion until we are in committee.

Mr. Martin: I am sure the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) could explain to my hon. friend the reason why. I would not want to mention the reason publicly as it does not concern me personally.

Mr. Churchill: The minister must accept full responsibility for anything in the way of legislation under his own department. He may have all sorts of reasons for haste in this matter, but this is a serious public undertaking, and I think the minister, who has been years in office, should be fully competent at the present time to carry on anything of this nature. If he is overly dependent upon other people, that is no concern of mine. The minister is the person to whom we look to support legislation that he brings forward, and I suggest this is not the proper method to use. Why did the minister not bring this forward in April or at some earlier date? Why was it postponed to the end of June?

Mr. Pickersgill: Why not debate it now that it is before the house?

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is interrupting again. I suggest to my hon. friend that he might very well pay attention to his own department and, if he has anything to contribute in this instance, he might perhaps rise at this stage and enter into debate rather than make his interjections. I am encouraged by the remarks of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I shall pursue my point that this is not the way in which to bring before this house legislation of this nature, trying to get us to pass it quickly, for some reason that the minister has in mind. I suppose that when we get to the committee stage later on today the minister will want us to hurry on to third reading so that that will be got rid of, and then, of course, the bill will be passed and sent over to the other house and within a minute it will be declared the law of the land. Why this hurry?

Another mistake I think the minister has made is that at the resolution stage, in connection with a matter such as this, the discussion should have been much more extensive. I think that is where a mistake was made with regard to this particular bill. The minister, in answer to questions on the orders of the day, frequently makes longer statements than he made on introducing this resolution. Why did he not refer the house to the papers that were filed here on January 11 and the draft agreements that are outlined there? Why did he not draw our attention to that, instead of simply saying that they had been tabled, without any reference to the date or where they might be found? That is a rather strange procedure coming from this particular minister, who generally—

Mr. Martin: Don't be too hard on the poor minister.

Mr. Churchill: I do not see any reason why I should spare the minister. He does not spare us on occasion. Why should I spare him now? My hon. friend who has just come in suggests that the minister does not know anything about this legislation.

Mr. Martin: Let us get into committee and then put all the questions you want and test his knowledge.

Mr. Churchill: The minister suggests that we should get into committee and all the questions will be answered. Why were they not answered at the resolution stage? I noted at the resolution stage that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) put forward very proper suggestions in the hope that, if they were acceptable, the bill might be altered accordingly. That is what the resolution stage is for. Matters are brought forward then which might have been overlooked in the drafting of the legislation and might subsequently be incorporated, but at the resolution stage we hurried along with that, and the bill was presented this morning, and very few people had time to do more than glance at it.

We have waited a long time in this country for an act of this nature. Its purpose is good. It is aimed to fill in the gap, with regard to people in need, that has not been adequately filled in during all these years. All of us are aware of the burden that has been placed upon municipalities chiefly and upon the provinces with regard to this type of assistance for people who are unemployed and have no recourse under those circumstances.

This bill is aimed at correcting that particular difficulty, but, as the hon. member for Hamilton West has pointed out, there is a floor placed under this. The assistance is not forthcoming until certain factors of unemployment are established, and it may well be that the bill is not going far enough in dealing with the question that it sets out to solve. Again, at the resolution stage, if this information had been placed before us it would have been very helpful. The minister has not given us any information as to the differences between the agreements with the provinces who have already signed; nor has he indicated any of the difficulties that are holding up acceptance of this proposal by other provinces; nor has he told us anything about the anticipated cost. Yet he is asking us to put through legislation here which leaves us in a state of indefiniteness as to the financial burden involved, and it is our job in this house to examine the financial burden. It may well be that that is not going to be excessive under present conditions in Canada. I think all of us are anxious to assist those in need in the country, but nevertheless the financial obligation under this legislation has to be examined and understood and fitted into the general picture. Why did the minister not give us some information along that line? Is the same thing to happen in the committee stage?

Mr. Martin: No. My hon. friend will appreciate that that figure could not possibly be given, because no one can tell what rates will be set by the provinces, who will be the only ones to set the rates.

Mr. Churchill: There is a point in question. At the resolution stage, if the minister had painted in the background and given us the figures that have been paid out under unemployment assistance by municipalities and the provinces, then we would have had one sort of yardstick to go on for a 50 per cent contribution by the dominion government. That is the type of information that should be presented to this house to fill in the background. Then we would have some idea of what the problem was. It is all in a state of indefiniteness now.

I cannot for one minute believe—I believe the minister's statement, but I cannot believe —that there has not been somewhere in his department a calculation of the amount of money involved in putting forward an unemployment assistance proposal such as this. That, it seems to me, is basic to the problem. In other words, the need must have been established over the years, and it was referred to back in 1945. That need would be expressed in terms of dollars, and on the basis of that need you gradually reach the stage now where you determine whether or not the dominion government can assist financially to provide for that need now being met by municipalities and provinces. But none of that information was forthcoming. So we are left in a state of indefiniteness with regard to this measure. I hope the minister will not think it amiss that I have offered some criticism of his method of introducing legislation. It may serve as a guide to him for anything he wants to bring forward in the future. The committee stage is being looked forward to with great eagerness. We expect there to have a comprehensive statement from the minister with regard to this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will conclude the debate.

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I simply want to say this to my hon. friend so that he will not be under any misapprehension. There is no limit on the time that he or anyone else can take on this measure. I am sure the minister will be able to handle himself just as he has, moderately well, in the past been able to deal with questions submitted by my very enlightened and honourable friend who has just spoken. I would not want to pit my talents against his but I want to assure him that he need have no particular concern in that regard.

Mr. Churchill: You are clearer on this matter than you were on civil defence, are you?

Mr. Martin: Yes. I well remember that occasion. I think my hon. friend and I will agree that on that occasion, helpful and constructive as he was, he was not overly knowledgeable in all aspects of that question himself.

With regard to the question raised at the outset by my hon. friend, namely the question of anticipated costs, may I say this to him. If he will look at the agreement which was tabled on the first day of this session and which is the same as the bill in principle, he will see that it is not possible to anticipate the cost unless one knew first of all the number of people involved and, second, the rates of assistance which the municipalities or the provinces, separately or conjointly, were prepared to provide for the beneficiaries. Under this measure the federal government is committing itself for not more than 50 per cent.

My hon. friend has seemingly criticized, as have some other hon. gentlemen—and this is an understandable criticism—the fact that there is going to be a hard core problem which will be looked after by the municipalities and the provinces themselves before the federal government begins to assist. I thought the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) had satisfactorily disposed of that matter herself, but I suppose hon. gentlemen have not had an opportunity of reading what she said.

What are the facts? This particular measure will authorize the federal government to pay out of the consolidated fund moneys in a sharing program with the provinces in order to assist two groups of people, namely unemployed employables, and those unemployed individuals who cannot work. What this bill does is to remove completely, in so far as the six provinces are concerned, the traditional distinction between those who are capable of working and are out of work and those who are out of work and cannot work for physical reasons or otherwise. That is the main feature of this bill and it is one that has won commendation from the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) who spoke last night and who has obviously given this matter a great deal of thought, as has the hon. member for Hamilton West.

I may say this with regard to what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who spoke with special emphasis on British Columbia. British Columbia is a good example of the situation. At the present time in the province of British Columbia there are about 20,000 individuals who are out of work—that is a rough figure, according to the latest figures available—and roughly about 5,000 of those are unemployed employables. Under this measure we will be taking care of three-quarters of that group. But for this measure the federal government would not have any authority whatsoever to assist this larger group.

Mrs. Fairclough: Will the minister permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: Would you repeat what you just said as to the percentage that you are now to be able to assist?

Mr. Martin: Yes. I was using rough estimated figures on the unemployment situation to date in British Columbia. I am going to take each province just in order to show the picture. In the case of British Columbia we estimate roughly 20,000 are unemployed but 5,000 of these are unemployed employables. The others are part of the hard core problem about which my hon. friend spoke last night. They are individuals who are deemed by the welfare authorities of the province to be incapable of work. But for this measure we would not be in a position, under our declared policies or under any legislation, to give assistance to those people.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do you mean constitutionally?

Mr. Martin: No, no. I said as a result of declared policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, declared policy.

An hon. Member: Liberal policy.

Mr. Martin: In 1945 proposals were made by the federal government. From what the hon. member for Vancouver East has just read, it is clear that it was never agreed that we should assume 100 per cent responsibility for the unemployed employables. Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) himself, in the references that will be found in the submission to that conference at page 247, clearly indicated that the federal government was not assuming 100 per cent responsibility for the unemployed employables. As is found at that page he said this:

> Under these definitions a large proportion of the cost of unemployment assistance to persons actually employable would fall on the provinces and municipalities.

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South said last night, it is clear that the 1945 proposals do not provide as generous a contribution as is envisaged in this legislation because it was to operate for a limited period. To the extent to which we were prepared to assist the unemployed employables, that was only to run for two years.

Mrs. Fairclough: Until the Unemployment Insurance Act became operative.

Mr. Martin: Yes; and it was to be 85 per cent of the benefits provided under the Unemployment Insurance Act, which percentage was increased in 1952, as my friend the hon. member for Hamilton West knows, to 100 per cent. So what we are doing in this bill is to wipe out—once we reach the threshold, ·45 per cent—the distinction, I hope for all time, between the unemployed employables and those who are unemployed and who cannot work. That is a great step, as any social worker in this country knows, and as the hon. member for Cape Breton South so well said last night.

Is it fair to ask that there should be a threshold? Under our constitution we have municipal governments, provincial governments and a federal government. Each has its responsibilities. On the basis of figures available, for instance, on June 1, 1955, in Newfoundland the number of individuals remaining as 100 per cent provincial responsibilities because of the ·45 per cent threshold was 1,854 out of a population of 412,000. That includes unemployed employables and unemployables. Having in mind the character of this confederation of ours, will any hon. member in this house deny that there is on the municipalities and on the provinces a responsibility to look after a certain group, up to a certain figure, of their own people? At one time that was done by the family, by the church and later by government, but it certainly is not asking too much that the province of Newfoundland and its municipalities should look after that number of people. Whenever it reaches beyond that, under this measure, the federal government will enter the picture.

In Prince Edward Island the number is 486; in Nova Scotia, 3,073; New Brunswick, 2,511; Quebec, 20,240.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does this include not only the unemployed employables but also those who, through disability, are incapable of performing work?

Mr. Martin: Both. The figure for Ontario is 23,323. The province of Ontario with over 5 million people is one of the wealthiest provinces in Canada. Is there any hon. member in this house who will suggest that the federal government should be expected to provide assistance for that number and that it represents a load too heavy to be borne by the provincial government? I am not suggesting this by way of criticism. I am simply expressing this by way of exposing the fallacy of the argument offered by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch).

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask the minister a question? These are the June figures, but you do not have the January figures, do you?

Mr. Martin: These are based on the June 1, 1955 estimate of the dominion bureau of statistics. The figure for Manitoba is 3,820; Saskatchewan, 4,000. I may say that the record of the conference will show that the province of Saskatchewan was amongst those who emphasized the importance of both municipalities and provinces not only having complete control of the administration of this matter, but they said they did not think we should tell them that they should assume full responsibility for all without exacting a contribution from the municipalities; if we did so, we would be creating for them and for us great difficulties. I think that is obvious. The figure for Alberta is 4,797 and for British Columbia 5,872. I think, therefore, no one will seriously contest that there is a point where, having in mind the proximity of the people in the particular context I am speaking of to the provinces and municipalities, the latter should have a responsibility up to a point, exclusively. Then, when that becomes abnormal, the federal government should intervene for the purpose of making a contribution at least.

We have intervened with the result that this formula will work once the assisted population of a province reaches ·45 per cent of the total population of that province. We will then share 50 per cent, on a basis to be determined, not by us even consultatively but by the provinces and the municipalities themselves. I do not know of anything that is more generous than that. I do not know of anything that is equal to it anywhere else. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough), or was it someone else, suggested that we should look after the administration of some phase of this question. She acknowledges she did. I doubt that any province would agree to that, and no province I think should ask that that be done nor should we accede to it because it would be impossible for the federal government to administer, particularly for that portion of the unemployed who are not capable of working. Those are the people whose circumstances are known by the welfare inspectors on the local level. It would not be possible, I believe, in a large state like ours, to embark upon a policy of centralization without doing great harm to the welfare of the individuals concerned.

Now, I will admit that there might be an argument with regard to the unemployed employables because of our having assumed responsibility for unemployment insurance. But there again I would think a different kind of situation prevails because if you want to add to the economic costs all you have to do is centralize your administration in respect of a small number of people. Let us remember that this whole act is operating at a time when we have the highest level of employment in our country. None of us wants to see a decrease in the present high level of employment.

I do not think one needs to spend any more time at this stage except to say this. At the time the 1945 proposals were embarked on, we had only five years' experience with unemployment insurance. We now have that operative to the extent where its coverage has exceeded even the fondest dreams of those who advocated the measure and were responsible for its enactment in 1940. In addition to that we have supplementary benefits now representing 100 per cent of the value during the period of benefit of the unemployment insurance provisions themselves. These supplementary benefits cover, in the peak season in most recent years, almost 150,000 Canadian workers. Now, that represents a tremendous measure of public assistance. On top of that we now have the disability pension; on top of that we now have an old age security program as a result of which 880,000 people of this country at age 70 and over, every month, are receiving without a means test assistance from the taxpayers of Canada. Through policies recommended by this parliament and this government, there is also the old age assistance program and the blindness allowance program. All these are measures which are very important and integral in the discussion that is before us.

I do not believe, therefore, I was in error last night in closing when I said that these measures, together with the proposal for hospital insurance, round out to a very complete degree a measure of responsible social welfare action in this country of which all of us in Canada can be proud.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister mean by that statement that this is the last one for this government?

Mr. Martin: No, my hon. friend did not hear what I said. I said that this government, by this particular measure, as well as the proposal for hospital insurance, has given an indication that it is the only group that will ever be in power able to do these very things.

Mr. Bell: May I ask the minister a question relating to the figures?

Mr. Martin: In committee.

Mr. Bell: Could he give those on a per capita basis, either now or in committee?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: Shall this clause carry?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman. We were very happy to co-operate with the minister last evening and again today in trying to get this bill through the house for the reasons which he explained to us. But I would think if the minister wants to get this bill through the house, he jolly well had better quit making political speeches.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is only the opposition who can do that.

An hon. Member: More threats of obstruction.

Mrs. Fairclough: Talk about biting the hand that feeds you! We have gone along with this and we have purposely refrained from dragging out the discussion on the bill which, as has already been said—

Mr. Dickey: Why drag it out?

Mr. Lennard: You are doing the dragging over there every time you interrupt.

Mr. Dickey: Drag him out somewhere.

Mrs. Fairclough: As has already been said, it is very difficult to understand information which was not in our hands until noon today. After obtaining the co-operation of this house, the minister believed that he could cram this down our throats in a very short space of time. I might say, the resolution was on the order paper on April 25. Since the minister knew the plans of the officials of his department I do not know why he could not have brought this bill down some time earlier than this. I would not have spoken in this vein, Mr. Chairman, had it not been for the smart Aleck interjection of the minister at the last minute. I think his attitude in that respect leaves much to be desired.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Bell: Can the minister answer the question I asked with respect to the per capita percentage of the figures he gave?

Mr. Martin: I shall have to get that information.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, when we are on clause 1 matters of general interest might well be taken up. I want to give the minister an opportunity to make another political speech. Encouraged by what I said here he extended his remarks on second reading. At this stage, can the minister give us a little bit of the background I was talking about? He did give us the figures for the provinces, and he is going to elaborate on that. How was the figure of ·45 arrived at as setting the floor? Can the minister tell us something of the burden of this type of unemployment assistance that has been on the provinces all those years? I suggested a few minutes ago that information of that nature must have been in the hands of the department before anything could be arrived at with regard to setting the figure of ·45, or setting the figure of financial contribution of 50 per cent. At the committee stage I thought the minister was going to tell us something along that line. This is his opportunity.

Mr. Martin: I want to say simply to the hon. member for Hamilton West I do not want her to feel that she did not have the right to say what she wanted to say. I would ask her to bear with me. What I said was in reply to a question. That is why I had to say what I did say.

[Mr. Dickey.]

Mr. Sinclair: You said it very well, too.

Mr. Martin: I am saying that because I would not want to break faith with the hon. member for Hamilton West who is always very courteous and co-operative in these matters. I would be the most unhappy man in the world if I thought I in any way offended her.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, if I might say so, the minister misses the whole point. There are a great many arguments we could bring to bear on this; there are many fields we could explore in the consideration of this bill. When the minister makes a provocative statement and when we are hampered by such procedure it is a little frustrating.

Mr. Sinclair: It was an accurate statement.

Mrs. Fairclough: There you go again. Do you want to discuss this next week?

Mr. Dickey: Political speeches are supposed to be made only by the opposition.

Mr. Martin: If I could pour oil on the troubled waters—

Mr. Lennard: You had better get the minister to keep quiet over there.

Mr. Martin: —the figure of ·45 was arrived at because it represented the figure at which it would be possible to provide for federal participation in all the provinces but one. At first we had in mind and had discussed with the provinces the figure of 1 per cent. My hon. friend will recall that the premier of British Columbia, who was among those who proposed some measure of federal assistance in the past year, along with others, had suggested that he was prepared to accept this as a possible basis. When we came to examine the figure of 1 per cent as the starting point for federal participation it became clear that the provinces of Ontario and Nova Scotia would not benefit from the measure in a substantial way. As a result of the discussion with the provinces it was agreed that we would for nine of them arrive at the figure of ·45 per cent, which enabled us to cover Ontario. Nova Scotia was recognized by all of the provinces as having a special situation. If the figures of ·45 were to apply to them, under the information that we had available to us, we would have been penalizing that province more than any other province. Therefore, we made the proposal to them which we are now considering, that instead of beginning in the case of Nova Scotia at ·45 we would begin with them in the first year at ·30; in the second year, at ·35; in the third year, at ·40; and in the fourth year at ·45. This was agreed to by all of the provinces. Everyone recognized that Nova Scotia had a special case and therefore the figure of ·45 represents, excepting in the case of Nova Scotia, that proportion of the unemployed population of each province, made up of those who are capable of working and those who, for physical or other reasons, cannot.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I ask the minister this question with regard to ·45. Is it clear that the federal government will not begin to participate until that figure has been reached, and that they will participate only when the figure gets above ·45; that is, they will not start from the bottom and go up, they will come in only when the figure is in excess of ·45?

Mr. Martin: Once the assisted population of a province with which we have an agreement is ·45 of the population of that province we start to participate.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): In the excess of the ·45?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Winch: Am I correct in what I said this afternoon, that the minister's idea of ·45 of unemployment is outside of any possible coverage of any act of the provinces or the dominion, unemployment insurance, old age pensions and mothers' allowances? The ·45 starts outside of that? Am I correct in that interpretation?

Mr. Martin: Except any additional assistance payments as provided in clause 9 of this agreement.

Mr. Winch: Except any—

Mr. Martin: Additional assistance payments and family allowances.

Mr. Winch: The ·45 is outside of all regular assistance. Then, you accept no basic responsibility for anybody else until unemployment is beyond ·45?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Winch: That is also correct?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Winch: I want to get this clear if I can. It is also clear, then, that if in British Columbia, as an example, the figure is around 6,000 as the normal, and if it hits around 7,000, under your interpretation, you average the entire cost of the 7,000 and you pay only on the 1,000?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mr. Winch: Is that correct?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Churchill: No. Just on that basis of ·45 and relating it to the figures the minister gave, if all the provinces were in under this scheme and the legislation were passed, what number of people would benefit from it? Has the minister those figures?

Mr. Martin: Well, that question cannot be completely answered, but on the basis of the figures of July 1, 1955, which would be the earliest month for the retroactive effect of the agreement now concluded, in the case of Newfoundland, the total assisted would be about 16,000; and in the case of British Columbia, 20,000. I have not before me the figures for the other provinces.

One of the difficulties here is that the only two provinces that have submitted claims to us as yet are the provinces of Newfoundland and British Columbia. Once this measure is passed we would be able on the basis of the claims to reimburse the province of British Columbia to date in the amount of approximately $1,300,000 or $1,400,000, and we would be able to reimburse the province of Newfoundland in the amount of approximately $720,000. I cannot say what the figures are for the other provinces because we have not yet received their claims. Some of the provinces do not have the complete reporting system they had at one time and which, I suppose, has fallen into disuse.

All I can say is that the only provinces which have submitted claims to us at the moment are those two provinces. We have asked the others to get them in, because once this legislation is passed we will be able to pay them whatever amount is owing; but we cannot do so until they put in their claims. On the basis of those figures it should be possible to make an estimate, but I would have to estimate very roughly. Eight million dollars is an extremely rough estimate of the probable annual federal cost because we have not received their claims.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the minister one or two questions in relation to the figures he has given? First of all, do the figures the minister has given—20,000 for British Columbia and I cannot recall what figure was given for the province of Newfoundland—represent the number of people for whom the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost, or do those figures represent the total number of people in the provinces who are unemployed?

Mr. Martin: They represent the total number of needy persons, either employable or unemployable; including dependents.

Mr. Barnett: In the case of British Columbia, then, the number of people for whose claims the federal government would pay part of the cost would be roughly—

Mr. Martin: In the case of Newfoundland, in the month of February, 1955, for instance, we would share in assistance for 18,115 people. In the case of British Columbia it is 13,449 out of 20,000.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering further whether the minister has a breakdown as to what would be the average payment per person for the provinces of Newfoundland and British Columbia respectively?

Mr. Martin: Well, the average payment in British Columbia would be around $30. In the month of January it would be $32.02 and in December $31.01. That is the average cost per person to be shared by the province and the municipality or by one of those two and the federal government.

Mr. Barnett: How does that compare with the figure for Newfoundland?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend knows, of course, that it is the province which fixes the rate, and consequently we have nothing to do with that. In the case of Newfoundland in the month of July, let us say, the average cost per person would be $11. It is a little higher in February, $11.21.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat hesitant about asking this question but I think it is one that has to be asked and I shall do so. As I understand this act it will now be possible, once it has been given royal assent, for those who are presently under the Disabled Persons Act to be brought under this act. As a matter of fact I think many who have been turned down under the Disabled Persons Act can now be brought under this act, but I also think the majority of those who are now drawing a disability pension are also eligible under this act. Would the minister explain what the situation will be under the two acts? As near as I can figure it out all those who are now under the Disabled Persons Act will be eligible under this act. That is my interpretation, and I would like to hear from the minister on that matter.

Mr. Martin: One or the other, but not both. In actual practice it would be wrong for a province or municipality to take a person who was properly in receipt of a disability pension and transfer him to this particular list. It is just as wrong as it would be to take a person who is in receipt of mother's allowance and put her on this list, as has been done; but the effect would be the same because it is a sharing program, assuming the monthly amount is the same.

Mr. Winch: Is the monthly pension exactly the same?

Mr. Martin: That is a matter to be determined by each province.

Mr. Winch: That is up to each province. In other words, if under the authority of this act which has an unlimited ceiling a province wants to give an allowance which is greater than under the Disabled Persons Act, the province could transfer the entire number of disability pensions to this act and it will be recognized by this government?

Mr. Martin: If it is greater, that is right.

Mr. Winch: If any province wants to give a greater allowance under this act than under the Disabled Persons Act you pay 50 per cent under this act; is that right?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend has taken a hypothetical case. A case that is properly under disability allowance should be paid under disability allowance. If the amount is less, obviously there will be no trouble; but as the rate is fixed by the provinces and as we are subordinate to it my hon. friend states the situation correctly.

Mr. Winch: Thank you.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I can foresee some difficulty arising out of the act because of its lack of universality. As I understand it there are four provinces—

Mr. Martin: No, six.

Mr. Knight: Six in and four out. In the case of transients or people who drift from one province to another—if people come, for instance, from Alberta to British Columbia—what is the situation? I take it these people will only be recognized if they come from a province which has signed the agreement with the federal government. What is the method by which these people can be checked or identified? When do they become eligible in their new residence?

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend will look at section 5 of the agreement he will find there are no residence qualifications. In this particular matter we have taken the position that as this is a bill to help people in need it is a mistake to insist that they should have a residence qualification. My hon. friend is quite right. This must operate, of course, only in those provinces with which we have agreements. We have not yet succeeded in obtaining an agreement with the province of Alberta. I am very hopeful that we will do so, but the reason we have not is that the government of that province feels there should be a residence qualification. We have had to take the position that in our judgment, having in mind the particular character of this legislation, that is not a fair thing to do; but as far as the participating provinces are concerned there will be complete reciprocity.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, there are two questions I would like to ask the minister, and one is with regard to the ·45 per cent. I believe he stated that in British Columbia there were about 20,000 who are eligible under this section. Can he tell us what percentage of that 20,000 are unemployed employables who would ordinarily come under the Unemployment Insurance Act if their benefits were taken care of?

Mr. Martin: About 2,000 of that figure were employable.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That means the province will be required to pay 50 per cent for those 2,000 persons, because the Unemployment Insurance Act has not sufficient coverage to take care of them?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend could argue that and I could not quarrel with him, but I think the fair thing to say would be that the federal government as a result of this measure will now be undertaking to pay 50 per cent of the cost of a group for which up to this time no one has accepted responsibility.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That brings up the point I mentioned a while ago. I do not want to be too critical of the bill because I think it is very good, but it seems to me that the federal government is evading its responsibility. Here is a case in British Columbia where 2,000 people should be receiving benefit from a fund to which they themselves have contributed, but because the federal government has not assumed responsibility and amended the Unemployment Insurance Act to provide for them they are now being shifted over to the province and the province not only is going to have to assume the burden of paying 50 per cent of their maintenance—I was going to call it relief, because that is exactly what it is—but the federal government also very nicely slips out of its responsibility in regard to these employable unemployed and places the whole blame on the province for that result. I think that is one thing that should not take place.

I am not saying that those who are not receiving proper payments under the Unemployment Insurance Act should be deprived of assistance, but I am saying that the blame should be placed exactly where it belongs, and that is on the Unemployment Insurance Act and the federal government. The federal government should not be allowed to slip out from under its responsibility.

The other question I wanted to ask was in regard to the length of residence. I recognize immediately that this would apply only to those provinces which are under agreement. Alberta has not signed, but assuming that Saskatchewan has signed and a person moved from Alberta to Saskatchewan, would he thus be deprived of any benefits?

Mr. Martin: The hon. member is asking about a person who moves from Alberta to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. Martin: As Alberta has not signed, obviously Saskatchewan is not obliged to pay.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Surely there should be some residence qualification. If a person moves into Saskatchewan he should come under the legislation after a certain length of time. Is there no provision made for that?

Mr. Martin: That is a matter entirely for the province of Saskatchewan. The governing factor there is the attitude taken by the government of Alberta. I am not saying that critically, because I have every reason to think we are going to—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The whole responsibility would rest with the province of Saskatchewan as to the making of residence qualifications if they so desired, and that would be agreeable to the federal government?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the question I wanted to ask was somewhat along the lines of that asked by the hon. member for Bow River. The minister has said on three different occasions that there is no residence requirement, but the word "if" in here looks pretty big. The agreement reads:

> 5. Length of residence shall not be made a condition for the receipt of assistance if
> (a) the applicant has come from a province whose government has entered into an agreement similar to this respecting unemployment assistance, and
> (b) such agreement includes a like clause as herein contained in respect of length of residence not being a condition for receipt of assistance.

That would cover, as the hon. member for Bow River points out, the province concerned if there was no agreement. But take the case where someone from Alberta moves into Saskatchewan and applies for assistance. The normal procedure followed in cases where a person from another province finds himself unable to support himself and applies to a municipality for assistance is for the municipality first of all to see if the person cannot be sent back to the place from which he came. According to this that condition does not change; obviously he could still be sent back to the province from which he came. That contention is further borne out by the provisions of section 10 (c) of the agreement which sets out the exceptions, as follows:

(c) all travelling expenses—

And then the subclause:

(i) returning a recipient of unemployment assistance and his dependents, if any, to his normal place of residence—

If a province were under agreement and received an application from a person who had lately come into the province, there is no stipulation here as to a time limit. The province could provide for a limit of five years if it wished, but a person who was within the time limit stipulated by the province might come from another province where there was no agreement with the federal authorities. He could be returned to that province and the federal government would share in the cost of returning that man and his family from the place where he had made application for assistance to his place of original residence. If I interpret this correctly, and I think I do, it means that it cannot definitely be said that there is no condition of residence, because it could be altered in every province that has an agreement with the federal government simply by stating the length of time during which it would accept responsibility for those people. That could be particularly true where the province of original domicile was not one having an agreement with the federal government.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister may recall that yesterday at the resolution stage I asked whether there would be any ceiling or floor in regard to payments to be made under the legislation to follow the resolution, and the minister replied there would not. I should like to ask him one or two further questions on that subject. I am wondering what consideration, if any, was given to that particular question in the discussions with the provinces, and with particular reference to the question of some form of ceiling or floor on the level of assistance that would be required to be paid if the federal government would participate.

I think perhaps the situation is highlighted somewhat by the contrast in rates that would be payable under the retroactive arrangement as between British Columbia and Newfoundland. I am not suggesting that there is any likelihood of there being an influx of people from Newfoundland to British Columbia. However, for the sake of argument let us suppose there was a contrast in rates as between British Columbia, which was paying $30, and the neighbouring province of Alberta where the rate to be paid was $11. In that case it would seem to me there would be a likelihood of a large influx into British Columbia as a result. While it is perfectly true that as far as the federal share is concerned it might increase the liability of the federal government, it is also true that it would materially increase the liability of that particular provincial government.

I am wondering whether there was not some general understanding reached among the provinces, at least those which are neighbouring provinces, as to some approximate level of minimum or maximum rates that will be paid. If not, what are the reasons for the decision? As far as the federal authorities are concerned there would be no provision made for a floor under the level of payments to the provinces that qualify.

Mr. Martin: I cannot add anything. What my hon. friend has said is right, but if we are going to avoid residence as a qualification—and I know my hon. friend will agree with that—you cannot do anything about it. You can only trust to the good sense of most people of this country, which I think is sound. There would be some people who would move from a lower rate province to a higher rate province, but I think that disadvantage is certainly countered by the great advantages of the terms of this legislation, so far as no residence qualification is concerned.

Mr. Knight: People going from the Liberal provinces to other provinces?

Mr. Martin: I would not want to make a political observation at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think what has taken place here today indicates that when there is too much rush in the examination of legislation difficulties arise. I think the time that has been made available to the house and the committee to review and consider this bill has been altogether too limited, and further limited by the fact that the bill was not made available until quite late this forenoon.

I have looked over this bill and it is unusual in many ways. Strangely enough there are no explanatory notes. Strangely enough there is nothing to indicate the need of uniformity, outside of the special case of the province of Nova Scotia. The bill as it is now constituted would leave the door wide open to the minister and the government to enter into agreements with other provinces that have not yet joined, to enter into agreements that would be materially different from those already entered into. The hon. gentleman shakes his head in the negative but, sir, that is what could happen under this bill as it is presently constituted.

Much has been made of the question of length of residence. The minister answers that by saying that length of residence does not enter into the question at all, but it clearly does.

To begin with I am going to ask the minister to explain why the draft agreement should not be attached as an appendix to this act. There is no reason whatsoever why this act should be as wide open as it now is to the interpretation that might be placed thereon by the minister at any time in order to achieve the consent of any province now outside the act. Whilst I am sure the minister would never allow political considerations to enter into his administration of this act, as it now stands he could do so. I never believed he would until the concluding words of his remarks on second reading. Those concluding remarks were not in keeping with the usually detached attitude the minister takes, except when he rises to those heights of eloquence when he forgets that this is the House of Commons and treats us as though we were individuals in an audience and he was on the political stump.

Mr. Martin: I am afraid that is a frailty my hon. friend and I share.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is one thing I do not share with my hon. friend, but it is a frank admission on his part—and he speaks for himself in that regard—that he does so on occasion. This apparently is one of those occasions when he allows himself to be carried away by generalizations regarding the meritorious nature of this and other pieces of legislation to which he made reference—that is, meritorious in his opinion.

I ask the minister first why the draft agreement is not attached hereto. There is no reason whatsoever why it should not be attached. In no way is it connected with the draft agreement which appeared in Hansard of January 11 at page 25; and the draft agreement as submitted to Nova Scotia is at page 27. I suggest first that in order to make this bill effective that draft agreement should be attached hereto, to set out in detail many of the items which at the moment are not covered by the bill and which to all intents and purposes, to use a colloquialism, are left up in the air.

I suggest that in order to better this bill, first these agreements should be attached. Otherwise in the preparation of the regulations the minister will be in a position—for after all he will prepare the regulations, irrespective of whether or not the governor in council has anything to do with that—to prepare them in such a general way that whatever measure he chooses will be in keeping with the provisions of the act.

We know what happened under the disability pensions act. That act was passed by this house—a very desirable objective to be attained—but when the regulations were brought in and parliament had no opportunity to consider those regulations, the result was that many thousands of people across Canada had been denied disability pensions because of the narrow definition that had been incorporated into the regulations. The minister has said on occasion that such interpretation was based on consultation between the dominion and the provinces, but that does not meet the criticism I have in mind.

As this bill stands today it is a mass of generalizations; indeed a hodge-podge of generalizations. It fails to bind the minister or the government in any way to carry out agreements similar to the draft agreement that is set out in Hansard of January 11. It leaves everything wide open. It makes it possible for the government by negotiation to enter into an agreement far different from the agreement of January 11, for the limitations under the bill as it now stands are not the limitations set out in the draft agreement to which I have already made reference.

I say first that unless this bill is intended when enacted to empower the minister and the government to enter into new kinds of agreements, expanded agreements, with the governments that so far have not indicated their acquiescence or desire to enter into agreement, then in order to ensure equality among all the provinces of Canada outside of Nova Scotia there should be the inclusion of the general draft agreement as an appendix to the bill.

Then we have another question that has been raised before but has not been answered satisfactorily by the minister. He answered it in that kindly way he has when he wishes to brush aside any criticism. When he wishes to get an item through he becomes the essence of urbanity. However, he has told my friend the hon. member for Saskatoon that there is no residence requirement. Let us read section 5 of the draft agreement and see what it says. Section 5 reads as follows:

> 5. Length of residence shall not be made a condition for the receipt of assistance if—

I may say that reference was made to the same point by another hon. member.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes; by the hon. member for Hamilton West. Section 5 continues:

—(a) the applicant has come from a province whose government has entered into an agreement similar to this respecting unemployment assistance, and . . .

You note how the door is left wide open. Suppose a person has gone from a province that has since entered into an agreement to a province in which the agreement applies, and has done so within the last year but certainly not with a view to securing any benefits under this act. The minister is in a position under the regulations to say that person shall not receive the allowance provided under this agreement. The section reads:

5. Length of residence shall not be made a condition for the receipt of assistance if

If the person has come from a province within the last year or two years, we will say, and in that province there is no unemployment assistance, all that will need to be done in order to defeat the person's claim will be to simply pass regulations to the effect that the period shall be two years or three years, or whatever the case may be. Section 5 continues:

—(b) such agreement includes a like clause as herein contained in respect of length of residence not being a condition for receipt of assistance.

That is the joker in this act, and it will remain a joker unless the minister incorporates this draft agreement into the bill as an appendix. If he does not do so, then the minister will be in the position of having an agreement that can be interpreted in a wide-open manner and in such a way as to defeat the just claims of individuals who should be entitled to benefits. I say the minister either should incorporate length of residence or, if he does not incorporate length of residence—and I am not supporting length of residence to be included—then in order to ensure that section 5 of the draft agreement is carried out, it must be made part of this bill.

To do otherwise is to place the minister in the position of having a power that parliament never intended to give him or never intended to extend. What the minister tells the house in committee will in no way enter into the interpretation of the meaning of any section of the bill. If in the event of a disagreement the matter comes before the exchequer court, the court will look at the bill by itself. It will say, "Parliament did not intend to refer to any draft agreement because, if it had done so, it would have included it".

[Mr. Martin.]

I make that suggestion to the minister. If this bill is bona fide, as I trust it is, and if it is not to be made a political football between now and the next election, let the minister—in his desire to have the bill improved and to have every province treated alike, outside of the province of Nova Scotia, which is a special case—say to the committee, "There is no reason whatever why the agreement in the form in which it was placed on Hansard should not be attached as an appendix". If he will do that, a major portion of my objection to this bill will be removed. If he will not do that, I say this. It is going to give him an opportunity of—

Mr. Martin: I have just been thinking. I have no objection to doing that very thing. As a matter of fact, I may say to my hon. friend that at one time we had discussed that matter with the provinces. At the moment I just cannot think what the reason was that it was not done but, as I remember it, it was not consequential.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister has no objection, would he at an appropriate time accept an amendment to that effect?

Mr. Martin: Yes. I will do it right now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think it should be in the form of a motion.

Mr. Martin: I have already asked my colleague and he is going to move one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine. In that way I feel that the ambit of the bill will have been restricted equally to all provinces, not only those which have entered but as well those that contemplate entering or may consider entering into an agreement.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day, at the second reading stage, I mentioned the fact that I had been unable to procure copies of the correspondence. The minister said that when we got into committee he would be glad to give me the information. In one of the letters from the Prime Minister to the premier of Ontario, dated December 5, I notice that he refers to earlier correspondence, and says this:

In revising the draft agreement, we have sought to meet all the points raised by provincial representatives . . .

I am now back on my original point. I should like to know what specific points were raised by the non-contracting provinces. From the minister's remarks yesterday I understand that one province is about to complete a contract. If he would do so, I should like him to deal with the other three provinces and tell the house just what were the main points of protest by the provinces or the reasons they did not feel that such an agreement was advantageous to them.

Mr. Martin: I have already dealt with the sole obstacle in the case of Alberta, so I do not need to deal with that matter any more. It was the question of residence. I cannot at this moment give you what were the reasons which persuaded the government of Quebec not to enter the scheme as of this date. I do not know what they were. As to the province of Nova Scotia, I have outlined that we were all agreed, all nine provinces, that Nova Scotia should be treated as a special case because ·45 per cent did not seemingly cover the normal statistic of unemployed in both categories.

Last Friday I discussed this matter with the premier of Ontario. If I may put it this way, may I say that I do not feel I should be called upon to reveal—it would not be fair for me to do so—the character of the observations he made, except that I can say I am hopeful that Ontario will come in. I must be frank and say that one of the reasons Premier Frost had in mind for not coming in was that he felt that, in the package deal in 1945, we had at least given the impression—that is the way he put it to me—that we were prepared to accept 100 per cent responsibility for the unemployed employable group not covered by unemployment insurance.

I was obliged to tell him that I could not accept that interpretation of the situation. I had to tell him that in 1945 what we had agreed to do was accept for a limited period responsibility for that group; that we had brought in unemployment insurance; and that while it was understandable to say there was a logical responsibility on us that flowed from that, we had not in fact in the proposals made that offer. I have already quoted references to prove that statement is not only borne out by my own interpretation but by the interpretation of others in this house.

What we are doing in this bill now, I think, is being appreciated by the province of Ontario to a greater extent, I think I may say, than when we discussed this matter at the full conference. Having in mind the basic figure on that date, and including the retroactive period, there will be some 23,000 involved in Ontario, and three-quarters of those would be unemployed unemployable people. Since that was a responsibility we had certainly not agreed to, whatever may be the argument on the other count in 1945, we certainly were entering a field where the provinces would receive at our hands a measure of assistance which was certainly not contemplated in 1945.

I do not know that, in the case of Ontario, in view of the discussions with the premier, I would be fair in going any farther. I do not know if I have satisfied my hon. friend, but if I have not she will be good enough to so indicate.

Mrs. Fairclough: I did not expect the minister to give me any information that was given him in confidence, but bearing in mind that this letter does refer to other correspondence, and also to the fact that when I asked the minister yesterday where the correspondence with the provinces was he said it had been tabled—

Mr. Martin: Was I in error?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. It has not been tabled. I cannot find it anywhere.

Mr. Martin: I am sorry.

Mrs. Fairclough: When I asked earlier the minister said, if my memory serves me, that he would deal with that and would have the correspondence here.

Mr. Martin: I thought it was tabled.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, it was not. When the minister refers to this I presume he means the 23,323 he mentioned earlier. He said, with regard to the 23,000, that a certain percentage were unemployed employables. I draw to the minister's attention that Ontario is still going to pay for all those 23,000, because 23,000 still does not come up to the ·45 per cent which is the basis on which the agreement was made.

Mr. Martin: The 23,000 is the hard core.

Mrs. Fairclough: But the ·45 per cent amounts to 27,000, so they could still have another 4,000 for whom they would have to pay on the same basis as they pay for indigents and other relief, before they would even begin to qualify for the 50 per cent of the amount paid over-all.

An hon. Member: The same as any other province.

Mrs. Fairclough: Somebody says, "The same as any other province." That is true. I am simply using it as an illustration, because those are the only figures I have here. I thought it would be interesting to take one of the provinces presently under the agreement and take the figure for those who are receiving assistance as of June, the same date the minister gave for Ontario, and then take the figures for the highest period of unemployment. That does vary by provinces. In Ontario it runs along about the middle of February, as a general rule. In some of the other provinces it runs as late, I believe, as the third week in March. But for most provinces, somewhere between February and March you would find the peak of unemployment. It would be interesting to have those figures.

I would think the minister would say that anybody left on the relief rolls in June or July would be definitely the hard core of persons seeking public assistance. They are probably the people who are never off the relief rolls of the province. I doubt very much if any province actually has a hard core of more than ·45 per cent of its population.

Mr. Martin: You mean normally?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Martin: That is right, and I think my hon. friend will agree we hope it stays that way.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, very definitely; but it changes the whole picture which the minister has given this house when he says that now, under this legislation, the federal government is invading a field that had never been envisaged by the 1945 proposals. He says they are going farther than they intended to go in 1945, but that is not true and for this reason. If the hard core which is always there does not in any case exceed ·45 per cent—in any event the province has always paid for them—and in the 1945 proposals it was agreed that the province would still care for the unemployables and that the only ones who would be considered by the federal authorities were the unemployed employables, then actually that is what is proposed under this bill.

But even so, even in extending assistance to the provinces to take care of the unemployed employables this legislation still leaves that hard core of ·45 per cent which, as I say, may be actually, as it is in the case of Ontario more than their ordinary welfare assistance, so it still leaves that in provincial hands, paid for by the province. Until the province goes over the ·45 per cent the federal government does not participate at all, and then only to the extent of 50 per cent of what is left over and above ·45 per cent. If the normal hard core of ordinary relief assistance is less than ·45 per cent, then under this agreement the province actually assumes something it did not assume before.

I do not say the province did not pay it. The province has done so and has taken care of some of these people, but it had no actual legal responsibility to them, and many provinces have refused to acknowledge it. Now under this agreement they must acknowledge their responsibility up to that basic figure. Then the government comes along and offers them 50 per cent of the amount expended over and above that figure, but the government is not paying 50 per cent of their cost of assistance. The province is paying 50 per cent of the cost over and above the figure that has been set, and in addition the administrative costs for those additional people.

I want to say something later on about administration costs, but at this point I should like to make it clear that I think the minister erred when he said the federal government, through this legislation, goes farther than had been proposed in 1945. I think a very good case could be made for that because, as I have said, that basis is a basis which, on the minister's own admission, is higher in most instances than the actual hard core of persons receiving indigent relief of one sort or another. Then, of course, the dominion does not participate until you go over that figure.

Mr. Churchill: If the minister is not going to reply, can we carry this a step farther? Somewhat earlier I asked the minister if he could give us the figures by provinces represented by this magic number, ·45 per cent. He did not have the information; yet when the hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned Ontario and the figure of 23,323 the minister promptly said that was the basic figure for Ontario. Well, if he has such a ready reply with regard to that province, can he not tell us what it is for the other provinces? This information put down now in the official record would be very helpful to anybody who is studying this matter.

Mr. Martin: I cannot give my hon. friend the figures for all the provinces. I remember the figure of 23,000 because I had been discussing and concluding this matter with the province of Ontario, as I indicated, just a few days ago. Those figures are there. Some of the provinces do not have a reporting system that justifies the acceptance of certain figures they present. We are waiting for their claims.

Mr. Churchill: Did the provinces, in correspondence with the minister concerning agreements that might or might not be signed, not have to indicate the situation with regard to unemployment in their provinces?

Mr. Martin: We are waiting for them now in four of the agreements.

Mr. Churchill: What about the six?

Mr. Martin: In the case of two we have those figures. I have given them for Newfoundland and British Columbia.

Mr. Churchill: Do the other four provinces not have them also?

Mr. Martin: We are waiting.

Mr. Churchill: The minister is waiting for the figures from them?

Mr. Martin: Waiting for their claims to come in.

Mrs. Fairclough: I take it the minister says some of the provinces do not have proper reporting systems or means of gathering this information. One more thing they have to do is put in a system of accounting which will give them those figures quickly and accurately.

Mr. Bell: When the minister on second reading gave the figures of the total unemployed employables in each of the provinces I noticed that the figures for the maritimes seemed to be proportionately high again. These totals as such do not give me any sort of relative comparison. I know there is trouble with unemployment in the maritimes on a scale that is far greater than anywhere else in Canada. The hard core that has been mentioned here is certainly to be found down there if it exists anywhere. I know there is a sectional aspect to it. The minister said the per capita percentage-wise figures would be available. Before this clause carries I should like to know whether they can be made available and when they will be made available.

Mr. Martin: Before we conclude this bill I shall try to get them. It is a matter of calculation.

Mr. Bell: I would prefer to have the section held over, because it means nothing to me to have figures as such. I had a speech ready; I was going to speak on the resolution stage and on second reading. I realize the minister made an appeal that perhaps we should not waste any extra time on this. Frankly I should like to get those percentage figures, because when we take the last issue of the Labour Gazette we learn that the maritime provinces is the only section of Canada that this year has surpassed the previous year's unemployment figures. That means only one thing to me, namely that the statement the minister made a few minutes ago about the high level of employment in Canada is not general. It does not apply to the Atlantic provinces. I think this section should stand.

Mr. Martin: That applies to your province.

Mr. Pallett: Can the minister tell the committee, if all the provinces sign the agreements, how much of the actual cost of relief, and that is exactly what it is, would be paid by this government? What percentage of the total cost would it be? Would it be 5 per cent of the total cost, 10 per cent or 11 per cent? What percentage of the total bill would it be? I do not want the minister to talk about percentages of contribution, or a percentage over ·45, but what percentage of the amount paid by the municipalities and paid by the provinces would be paid by the dominion? In other words, if the total relief bill is $100, how many dollars would the dominion contribute?

Mr. Martin: We cannot tell that figure because we do not know what the rates will be. They will be fixed by the province and the municipality, or both combined. The provinces have not given that figure, except in the case of British Columbia and Newfoundland. They are the only ones that know the rate. For instance, in the case of Newfoundland, if we take the month of February, 1955, the province is paying $203,000 and the federal government would pay $101,000. With regard to the other provinces, excluding British Columbia, we do not know what the rate is going to be; we have not received their reimbursement claims yet.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, that figure, quite unintentionally I am sure, is quite misleading. The minister said the province of Newfoundland is paying $203,000 and the dominion is therefore paying $101,000. What is the total relief bill? The figure of $203,000 represents only the amount over ·45 per cent. What is the total bill for the other provinces?

Mr. Martin: It would be the difference between ·45 and zero, which is about half of one per cent.

Mr. Pallett: It would be about another $203,000. Therefore, in effect, in Newfoundland you are paying half of $203,000. Their bill, as submitted to you, is about half what they are paying. Therefore you are paying about 25 per cent of their bill. I just wish to put that on the record as an indication of what the government is paying so there will not be any misunderstanding.

Mr. Martin: The province of British Columbia would have agreed to pay 40 per cent, and one other province recommended 60 per cent. We pay 50 per cent.

Mr. Pallett: Actually, the minister continues to say this government are paying 50 per cent. I wish to point out to the committee that they are not paying 50 per cent of the relief bill. In many instances they are not paying 25 per cent or even 15 per cent. This continual reiteration of 50 per cent is not correct. The dominion government are paying 50 per cent of—

Mr. Martin: It is 50 per cent of over ·45. Obviously, we are paying nothing toward that portion from zero to ·45. What the amount from zero to ·45 is I do not know.

All this bill is doing, and all I am saying, is that it authorizes us to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund not more than 50 per cent of assistance toward those in the two groups, provided that those groups represent ·45 of the population of a province. I have not said the bill does any more than that, but it is a great deal.

Mr. Pallett: No, I do not think the minister has said any more than that, Mr. Chairman; but I think the committee should know what is the over-all cost of helping these people, and how much of the over-all cost this government is paying. That is the difficulty the people of this country are concerned with, because they are the people who are paying it, and the municipal taxpayers are the people who are paying it. Let us not have any unintentional misleading with these figures. They say that figures lie and liars figure; nevertheless—

Mr. Martin: And that lawyers are liars.

Mr. Pallett: Since you are a member of the bar as well, it cuts both ways. There must be figures available, and surely to goodness the minister should be able to give them to the committee.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member is asking for the figures of the hard core in the provinces. I have not those figures.

Mr. Pallett: Is the minister saying that with all the machinery of this government, with the dominion bureau of statistics and all the rest of it, he is unable to say what the total cost of relief is in this country? That is a very sorry admission.

Mr. Martin: I did not say that; I said I have not those figures right here.

Mr. Fleming: Why have you not?

Mr. Pallett: Can the minister produce them?

Mr. Martin: Oh, certainly.

Mr. Pallett: Would you produce them?

Mr. Martin: Very gladly.

Mr. Pallett: When?

Mr. Fleming: Right away?

Mr. Pallett: Will you produce them before this clause passes?

Mr. Martin: No, I cannot.

Mr. Pallett: I think those figures are fundamental to the whole discussion.

Mr. Martin: I do not think they are fundamental to the title of the bill.

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Pallett: But the thing is that this .45 figure may be considerably too high, and perhaps we should be applying the .30 figure for all the provinces.

Mr. Martin: It might possibly help my hon. friend, who appears to be in a very unhappy state of mind, if we perhaps could stand clause No. 1 and go on to clause 2.

Mr. Fleming: As long as you do not move that further consideration be postponed.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin: I have suggested that clause 1 stand and I just want to make sure it is agreed to let clause I stand and go on to No. 2. Would my hon. friend like to ask a question on clause 2?

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 stand with unanimous consent?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): On clause 1, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Before it stands.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Before it stands, yes.

Mr. Martin: I have just made a proposal suggested by the hon. member for Peel, that we might let clause 1 stand and go on with the other clauses. I agreed to that, and I take it my hon. friend agrees that we will come back to that when we have the required information.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): What I have to say is designed to help the minister, if he will just let me conclude. If the minister wishes he can stand the clause immediately afterward but I am asking the indulgence of the committee at this point because the minister has indicated that he will bring in an amendment to the bill along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Martin: Making the agreement a partnership?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Yes. If the minister is going to do that perhaps the observation I am going to make will not require a further amendment, but on the other hand perhaps something else will have to be done. May I direct the minister's attention to the notice clause contained in the bill, clause 4, subclause 1 paragraph (e) and also the notice clause contained in the agreement in clause 17. It seems to me there is room for two different interpretations as to what may result from this notice clause. In the bill itself it would indicate that the agreement goes for five years and then from year to year as a lease might run on, whereas in clause 17 of the agreement it would indicate that on one year's notice from any time at all after the expiration of the fixed period the agreement could come to an end. It seems to me this might be subject to two different interpretations. I am only suggesting now that if an amendment is being made perhaps this might be done at the same time. If not, my observations will apply to clause 4.

Mr. Martin: Stand.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 stands.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Agreements for contributions.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on this bill.

Mr. Winch: On clause 3?

Mr. Carter: Since it has been agreed to let clause 1 stand I think my observations can properly be made under clause 3. There are three aspects of this legislation which are of particular interest to my province and my constituents. As the representative of a riding composed mostly of fishermen it is a source of great gratification to me, and I am sure it will be to all my constituents, to know that this assistance can be extended to the self-employed groups when they become unemployed, and that in the self-employed groups fishermen and farmers can be included.

Mr. Winch: Where is that in the appendix?

Mr. Carter: Pardon?

Mr. Winch: I see it is not in the bill; where is it in the appendix?

Mr. Carter: The minister assured us of that in his remarks yesterday and I think perhaps again today.

Mr. Martin: I wonder if I might say to the hon. gentleman that perhaps when we come back to the title, which we have asked to stand, he might find it a more convenient place to make the general remarks he is making now.

Mr. Carter: On clause 1?

Mr. Martin: Yes; we have let it stand.

Mr. Winch: Would the minister say where it is in the agreements and the appendix?

Mr. Martin: This applies to everyone; there is no exclusion in the bill.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this clause refers to the agreements with the provinces; therefore almost anything we intend to bring up with regard to specific clauses in the agreement should really come under this particular clause. The minister has said that payments will be made retroactive—

Mr. Martin: In the case of the existing agreements, back to July 1, 1955.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes; July 1, 1955. I notice in the agreements these claims must be in the government's hands within six months. I take it the provincial governments make their applications by the month but no claim should be more than six months old. How does the government propose to pay these? Are they to be paid on a yearly basis or will these accounts be paid on a monthly basis—that is every month—or paid on receipt and after consideration has been given to them? I presume these payments will be practically automatic, once paid, and then any audits that are done may provide subsequent adjustments. Is that correct?

Mr. Martin: That is correct.

Mrs. Fairclough: Here is the opportunity I have been seeking to speak about this matter of the cost of administration. I must say I agree with the minister, and I am sorry if I gave the impression that I did not think the actual machinery of administration should be in the hands of the provinces, because I know it is pretty difficult to handle these matters in any other way. When it comes to the cost of administration, however, I think it could be shared. I should think the minister would have in his possession some figures which would show the approximate cost of administration of relief assistance in the various provinces; that is, is it a percentage—

Mr. Martin: It is not uniform.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, it may not be uniform, but it would be a percentage of the funds expended, and in so far as their basic expenditures are concerned they should run on a fairly even tenor. I would think there would not be peaks and valleys. If there were gradually increasing costs that would be understandable because of the increases in all costs, but there should be a ratio by which it would be fairly simple to arrive at a split of the additional cost of administration.

If it were found, for instance, that the cost of administration of relief for a given province was 3 per cent or 1 per cent, whatever it might be, then if you applied the ·45 basis to that cost of administration you could probably add a proportion of the amount of the payment to the province to help defray the cost of administration. I would like to know whether the minister considered that and whether it was a subject of discussion with the provinces in the drawing up of these agreements.

Mr. Martin: As to administration costs in the provinces, the costs of existing public assistance programs are tied in with other measures and I cannot give that figure. We asked for that at the conference and some rough estimates were given, which I forget at the moment, but apparently there are no separate accounts. In the case of family allowances administration I know that in the case of the Department of National Health and Welfare it is 1½ per cent and for treasury it is a little higher than that, with the total being under 4 per cent. I used that amount at the conference, but I was not able to get from the provinces an exact statement because they do mix it up with other matters such as mothers' allowances, field investigations under the children's aid and so on. It is not segregated. Then there is the fact that some of the larger municipalities have extensive operations of their own.

Mrs. Fairclough: I realize that, particularly well-organized municipalities. For instance, applications for mothers' allowances, old age security and old age assistance benefits, and disabled persons assistance are usually filed with the local welfare office and I agree that it would be hard to separate those. But even taking that into consideration there must be a level at which you can arrive so you can say that the total cost of administration—I shall take a figure half-way between the two used by the minister—is 2½ per cent.

Mr. Martin: I would think it would be higher than that.

Mrs. Fairclough: The amount does not matter; let us say 4 per cent. Admittedly some of that cost would be as the result of applications being received which were not directly related to the local relief program. Even if you made allowance for some error and arrived at a figure which you could relate directly to the administration of the local relief problem, you should be able to apply that figure to the net amount which the province would receive from the federal government under this assistance, which would go a long way toward defraying the cost of administration. I do not think it would be too difficult.

Mr. Martin: We asked them and they could not give it to us.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister's own department should be able to arrive at some sort of figure. The municipalities could not give it because they have been doing a lot of federal government work in their own offices.

Mr. Winch: I consider that clause 3 is the important clause in the bill, the key clause, and I should like to ask the minister if my interpretation of the clause is correct. The clause is very definite. It reads:

> 3. (1) Subject to this act, the minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, enter into an agreement with any province to provide for the payment by Canada to the province of contributions in respect of unemployment assistance costs in the province.
> (2) The contributions to a province shall not exceed fifty per cent of the unemployment assistance costs in the province in respect of which Canada has, under the agreement with the province, undertaken to contribute.

It would seem to be quite definite that the minister can make an agreement with any province in any amount the province wants to pay, and the federal government will contribute up to 50 per cent of the cost. I think that interpretation is correct.

I am sorry I have to go back to what was said when we were discussing clause 1, but this seems to be the place at which to discuss this particular matter. There is nothing in this bill which has anything to do with a means test or as to who is covered or who is not covered, and I include in that a fisherman or a businessman who has gone broke or a farmer who is destitute. Do I take it that this clause actually means that the establishment of who would be entitled to aid would be decided by provincial regulations and provincial decisions or on the basis of an agreement signed with the federal government, and then the federal government would pay 50 per cent? In other words the minister is saying by this clause 3 that if a person is not entitled to benefits the province can actually lay down who has a right to receive aid outside of the present legislation, and the dominion will pay up to 50 per cent. Therefore the matter of aid to fishermen or to any other individuals would be something laid down by the province. Am I right or wrong in that?

Mr. Martin: I think when we come to clause 4 (c) the hon. member will see that the agreement contains provisions for the carrying out of assistance to persons who are in need.

Mr. Gillis: I would like to get some clarification of the agreement in connection with one or two points, the first being residence qualification. I am thinking particularly of Nova Scotia, which has not signed an agreement. The dominion government has assisted in the movement of some hundreds of people from Nova Scotia to British Columbia. Some have been shifted to Ontario, but as Ontario has not signed an agreement an argument in that connection would not be valid.

What I am bringing to the minister's attention is the fact that British Columbia is being reimbursed this year to the extent of over $1 million for its unemployment contributions over the past year, while Newfoundland is to receive some $750,000. I think that demonstrates the value of the legislation. Those provinces are getting back that amount of money which they would not get back if the legislation was not in existence or if they did not have an agreement. But I am concerned with that part of the country where they are moving out.

As I say, some hundreds of people were sent in groups from Nova Scotia to the lumbering industry in British Columbia. That is a highly unionized operation and if there are to be lay-offs, those who came on last will be laid off first. That means that those men who were moved out there are likely to be among the first unemployed when there are seasonal lay-offs. They will not be able to qualify for unemployment insurance, because they have not worked long enough to draw benefits. Under the residence clause these people will not be able to receive unemployment insurance or unemployment assistance, and this through no fault of their own. This is all assuming that Nova Scotia does not enter into an agreement. I just leave that thought with the minister.

The second thing I should like to get clear is that under the agreement—I am going to talk about Nova Scotia again—the formula is that there must be ·30 per cent unemployed as related to the total provincial population. In the case of Nova Scotia I think that would amount to around 2,500, which would be the number to be handled by the municipalities and the province. The minister has stated that there are approximately 3,000 unemployed in the province. As I understand it, that is where the federal government would begin to contribute.

As of now, if Nova Scotia had an agreement it would be absorbing 50 per cent of the cost of the 500. What I would like the minister to clarify for me is this. When you come into the picture and begin to contribute to the relief of that 500 on a 50 per cent basis, is that a straight provincial-federal proposition without any reference to the municipalities?

Mr. Martin: No, it could be the municipality entirely or the province and the municipality.

Mr. Gillis: Would they divide the 50 per cent?

Mr. Martin: Yes, they share the 50 per cent.

Mr. Gillis: Is that to be determined by the provincial or federal government?

Mr. Martin: It is to be determined by the two jurisdictions concerned. We do not have anything to do with that.

Mr. Barnett: I have just one or two questions relating to the question just asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. There has been a good deal of discussion on this question of entry into a province which has an agreement by former residents of a province which has not an agreement. I was wondering whether the minister has information he could give the committee as to what residence qualifications the various provinces have established at the present time with respect to eligibility for unemployment assistance. For example, in the province of British Columbia, how long must a former resident of another province have been in British Columbia before being qualified under the agreement?

Mr. Martin: In British Columbia it is one year. In some provinces it is three years; in some provinces six months; in some municipalities it is as high as seven years.

Mr. Barnett: My second question would be, was any understanding arrived at—I notice that it is not in the agreement—with respect to the maintenance of existing regulations by the provinces?

Mr. Martin: In respect of those provinces where we have agreements there is no residence qualification. The only test is one of need and unemployability.

Mr. Gillis: If you went in, you must have come from a province that had an agreement?

Mr. Martin: If a person, for example, came from Alberta to Saskatchewan and Saskatchewan was willing, there is nothing in the act to prevent that.

Mr. Barnett: Assuming, for example, that Nova Scotia for some reason or other does not conclude an agreement, there is nothing in the arrangement or understanding that would prevent British Columbia, for example, from increasing its residence qualification from one to two years?

Mr. Martin: As far as this agreement is concerned there must be no residence qualification. My hon. friend was referring to section 5, which refers to provinces where they both have agreements with the federal government. Where that is the case, each must have a provision for no residence qualification.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry if I am a little dense. If a province such as British Columbia, for example, had signed an agreement and agreed to continue, it has to accept anyone who comes in from a province that has not signed and pay the benefits?

Mr. Martin: That is up to British Columbia. We cannot impose it on them.

Mr. Churchill: On clause 3, with regard to these agreements with the provinces, could the minister inform us if the provinces, other than Nova Scotia, including those that have already come to an agreement with the federal government and those that have not yet concluded such agreements, are willing to accept the terms of the draft agreement tabled here on January 11 without further alteration?

Mr. Martin: We do not know yet. There is no doubt in the case of Alberta except for the residence qualification. I have indicated the situation as far as Quebec is concerned; we do not know what their reaction is. I have no reasons for believing that if Ontario comes in it would want a variation of the agreement. We have had no correspondence with them.

Mr. Churchill: The words "an agreement with any province" in clause 3 mean that an agreement that may be signed with other provinces may be quite different from the one we have in front of us here, tabled on January 11?

Mr. Martin: No. My hon. friend will remember that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre proposed that we make part of the agreement a schedule to the act and we agreed to do that; and one of my colleagues, at the appropriate moment, will move the amendment.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate that, but I understood the minister to say that even at that there might be alterations made by the provinces in the future. Do I understand him now to say that when the agreement is made part of the schedule to the act it will remain unchanged and the form will have to be accepted by the other provinces?

Mr. Martin: That is right; it could not apply to one province and not to the others. I am going to ask my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to be good enough to move that clause 3 be amended by adding thereto the following subclause as subclause 3:

Any agreement entered into under this act shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule A to this act, except that an agreement with the province of Nova Scotia shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule B to this act.

[Mr. Winch.]

I may say to my hon. friend that we have considered that and we thank him for his observation, but we think the situation is clear.

The Chairman: Mr. Pickersgill moves:

That clause 3 be amended by adding thereto the following subclause as subclause 3:

Any agreement entered into under this act shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule A to this act, except that an agreement with the province of Nova Scotia shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule B of this act.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: On clause 3, shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mrs. Fairclough: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is that? Is that the amendment?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has suggested this amendment—it just came to my notice a moment ago—with reference to the question I had raised. "I move that any agreement—"

Mr. Martin: It has been moved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. I was trying to analyse it in order to see how it would cover the situation. Perhaps I might read it. It reads as follows:

Any agreement entered into under this act shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule A to this act, except that an agreement with the province of Nova Scotia shall be in the form of and subject to the conditions set out in schedule B to this act.

I think that covers in every particular the suggestion I made, and I thank the minister for accepting it. I think it covers the situation perfectly.

The Chairman: The amendment is carried. Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder whether the minister could give us some figures as to the number of persons in Saskatchewan, for example, who might be covered by this legislation? At the present time the province and the municipalities are providing assistance for a certain number of our citizens on a 50-50 basis. I wonder whether the minister could give us some information in that regard?

Mr. Martin: About 4,052.

Mr. Nicholson: About 4,000 at the present time?

Mr. Martin: Four thousand and fifty-two.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder whether the minister could tell us how many there are in the province of Saskatchewan who would be eligible when this legislation is passed?

Mr. Martin: Four thousand and fifty-two—

Mr. Nicholson: I gather that is the base?

Mr. Martin: No. The base is 4,000. The total number as of February, 1955, was 8,052. The 4,000 represents the threshold, ·45.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 4—Contents of agreement.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have a question on clause 4, subsection (a). The matter is not included in the subsection. I presume this is the section which would cover the basis for the statistics on the population. Will the minister tell us how they procure the figures as to the population of the respective provinces, and how often they are changed?

Mr. Martin: The figures are changed every year; June 1, 1955.

Mrs. Fairclough: On what basis are they changed? Obviously there is no census.

Mr. Martin: Dominion bureau of statistics figures.

Mrs. Fairclough: Under this same section?

Mr. Martin: It is the same as in connection with the tax agreement.

Mrs. Fairclough: Would the minister give us an explanation of clause 8 (a) (iv) of the agreement?

Mr. Martin: Clause 8 (a) (iv), a charitable organization; it would be any kind of institution that is not normally within the control of the province such as, for instance, a mental institution like that at Whitby or Orillia.

Mrs. Fairclough: They are under provincial control.

Mr. Martin: That would not be included but it would include any other such as, for instance, a nursing home that was maintained by a church or by a municipality in conjunction with a church or by a voluntary organization; or an old age pension home, either one operating on its own under the old basis or one under the National Housing Act. In other words we seek to include those institutions that are not normally considered as provincial and for which the patients receive assistance through the provinces.

Mrs. Fairclough: Would that cover an institution or organization where the institution itself receives some assistance from the provincial authorities but the inmates receive none? That is to say, there are certain private hospitals which qualify under certain classifications in Ontario. I do not know about the other provinces, but in Ontario there are certain institutions which qualify for assistance on a per-bed basis, yet wherein the inmates themselves receive no assistance other than probably the old age pension. The minister says that if the inmates are not in receipt of provincial assistance the institution is covered. Let us take as an example the old age act, the provincial one. What do you call it?

Mr. Martin: Old age assistance.

Mrs. Fairclough: Let us take as an example old age assistance. Suppose a person is resident in one of these institutions and receives old age assistance, which amount then automatically goes to the institution itself. Would that fact disqualify that person under this act?

Mr. Martin: If the individual is receiving old age assistance he would not be included under the provisions of this act unless the province provided additional assistance to the old age assistance. In Ontario, for instance, under the supplementary old age assistance provisions that were recently announced, that would not preclude them because that is not a supplementary payment in the sense that it is in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. There it is really assistance. The municipality contributes $8 and the province $12. Under this act they would not be regarded as excluded for the purpose of what is called supplementary assistance in the province of Ontario but which we would regard as additional assistance. Section 9 of the agreement covers that matter.

Mrs. Fairclough: Without regard to section 9 of the agreement at the moment, may I ask this question. If the province itself is contributing to an institution wherein are resident persons receiving old age pensions or old age assistance, would the amount that is contributed by the province in excess of the amount which that institution would receive—provided it is operated on a charitable basis—from the old age pensions or old age security which is signed over to them be included in the total which the province includes under section 6 as the amount which was expended in the year for assistance by the province? Could the province include these contributions to the maintenance of that establishment as a part of its welfare assistance?

Mr. Martin: No. This is a program to assist individuals. If the money is paid by the province to the institution as such, then these individuals are provided for in that way. For instance, in my own community we have an organization that is run by one of the churches, and the province does pay some assistance to the individuals in that institution. That assistance to individuals would bring those individuals within the purposes of this act. But if it is a grant to the institution as such, that precludes them.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course that brings up this point. You may have assistance given to individuals which is in turn signed over to an institution, as is the case in a great many instances. In other words, in order to qualify the province would have to make this contribution to each individual resident of that institution, and they in turn would have to sign those contributions over to the institution in which they resided in order for the province to gain the benefit of assistance from the dominion?

Mr. Martin: The last condition is not necessary. That is a matter for arrangement between the individual and the institution. But if the province paid an assistance grant to the individual, we would share in that.

Mrs. Fairclough: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are splitting hairs here on this particular clause, because under clause 8 of the agreement there is set out in three or four very short paragraphs and in that one very long paragraph a description of the type of contribution by the province which is eligible for inclusion in the over-all total of assistance granted. I am sure we are all familiar with the type of institution which operates on a charitable or semi-charitable basis, which is not sponsored by the province but which gains some assistance by reason of the type of person who is there. Certainly this is true in the case of indigents who are residents in such institutions.

It looks as if it is going to be increasingly important to the province to include in its list of persons who are receiving assistance, both in so far as the number of persons is concerned and also in so far as the total expenditure is concerned, every single person and every single dollar if the province is going to benefit under the scheme. I just wonder whether or not this section 8(a)(iv) in the agreement is a loophole. I do not say it is deliberately so, but I have had so much experience with regulations which are brought into effect under legislation that I wonder if there is not an escape there from a large expenditure of federal funds which would otherwise benefit the province and the municipality.

Mr. Martin: I cannot say any more than I have said. What we are seeking to do is assist the province in respect of assistance which they provide to individuals. In one section of the bill we do include the kind of institutions which would not bring all individuals in that institution within the purpose and coverage of the bill. Then we make, as my hon. friend calls to our attention, in section 9 of the agreement an exception, and that would cover such things as nursing homes, hospitals for indigent transients, homes for the aged, poorhouses, alms houses and hostel dormitory accommodation for the aged provided under the National Housing Act.

Mrs. Fairclough: Excuse me; what clause is the minister quoting from?

Mr. Martin: I was just giving the kind of institution. If my hon. friend will look at clause 4, subclause 4 of the bill, the institutions are cited there. Individuals who receive assistance from the provinces for themselves, and are in these institutions, are covered by this bill. But if the grant paid by the province is to the institution as such, they are not included any more than the people in mental institutions or T.B. sanatoria.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is quite true; but after all the bill in itself is enabling legislation, more or less, and the actual terms are set out in the agreement. Therefore when you consider clause 4 you must, of necessity, turn to section 8 of the agreement which it is proposed to sign with the provinces. It is for that reason I wonder about this, because when it comes to setting out the regulations which are going to govern the administration of this act, and particularly since the agreements are now to be incorporated as a part of this act, then it is very important to tie the two together.

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend will look at the agreement, section 8 (iv), all the exceptions there she will find conform with clause 4, subclause 4 of the bill.

Mrs. Fairclough: Which one?

Mr. Martin: In the agreement, section 8 (a).

Mrs. Fairclough: You mean section 8 (a) (iv)?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is the one I was talking about.

Mr. Martin: Those are the exceptions.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is precisely the clause I asked the minister to explain.

Mr. Martin: That is what I was covering. Section 8 of the agreement, in part provides:

> There shall be excluded from the reimbursement claim any person, together with any payment made to or on behalf of such person, who is > (a) an inmate in any institution maintained in whole or in part out of funds appropriated by
> (i) the parliament of Canada,
> (ii) the legislature of the province,
> (iii) a municipality, or
> (iv) a charitable organization;
> except that there may be included in the reimbursement claim payments made by the province or by a municipality for the upkeep of inmates in homes for special care . . .

Then homes for special care are defined in clause 4 (4) of the bill, which include nursing homes, hostels for indigent transients, homes for the aged, etc.

Mr. Trainor: I should like to ask the minister if that does not constitute an incentive for the provinces to make their contributions to individuals rather than to institutions?

Mr. Martin: Well, in some cases it may. I do not think it really will, because those institutions will continue to require assistance at the hands of the provinces for their maintenance. If the individuals in the institution need assistance they can be brought, as I have indicated, under the exception provided for in the agreement and in the act, and obtain assistance under this measure.

Mr. Trainor: Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that this assistance will be forthcoming from the federal government to the provinces provided any portion of the assistance given by the province is given to the individual rather than to the institution; it does not have to be all given to the institutions.

Mr. Martin: According to the act.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to raise one or two questions in regard to subclause 3 of clause 4 of the bill. One of my questions is in connection with homes for special care which, as I understand it, is defined in subclause 4 to cover the term as used in subclause 3. Included in that definition in subclause 4 is the term "nursing homes". Now, I should like to know just what the definition is and what distinction is going to be made as between nursing homes and convalescent hospitals in the various provinces. What is the distinction between a nursing home and convalescent hospital? Apparently a nursing home can be included but a convalescent hospital is excluded?

Mr. Martin: A convalescent hospital is defined in the British Columbia hospitals act. It is something that is specifically included in the hospital coverage. In addition to that, there are places called nursing homes which are really homes for the destitute or indigents, people of that sort; people who normally would be requiring assistance, but not health care. This is not a health care provision. This is a welfare measure to provide assistance for the maintenance of people. People in convalescent homes are in a hospital as defined under the hospital insurance of British Columbia. They are provided for under that measure.

There are places in British Columbia, two that I know of in Vancouver, called nursing homes which are really places where aged people and people who have another kind of infirmity are maintained. They are not really in there for hospitalization purposes, but are in there for the keep that is provided for them by those who run the place, charitable organizations of one sort or another. People in this latter category are included in the act if they receive assistance for themselves from the province.

Mr. Barnett: Is it not likely that people who are in the category which the minister described as being in these nursing homes are people who are apt to have to move back and forth between the category of people in nursing homes and those in convalescent hospitals; people who are aged and perhaps somewhat infirm?

One reason I raised this question is that earlier in the discussion of the bill the minister did make reference to the fact that in his opinion this measure was going to go a long way toward closing the remaining gaps in our social security legislation. As I understand it, the proposals for national health insurance are not going to cover convalescent or chronic hospitalization.

Mr. Martin: Yes, it will cover chronic cases.

Mr. Barnett: It will cover them?

Mr. Martin: That is part of the proposal.

Mr. Barnett: It is part of the proposal?

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes.

Mr. Barnett: I may be in error, because it appeared to me there was a very narrow distinction—

Mr. Martin: Chronic hospitals are covered.

Mr. Barnett: —between nursing homes and chronic hospitals that look after people with chronic illnesses who may be needing care.

Mr. Martin: Chronic hospitals are covered.

Mr. Blair: May I suggest to the minister that the term "nursing homes" requires further definition. These homes are springing up all over the country. I am aware of two of them in my own town. We have nursing homes that take in old people. They take in people who are on a prolonged recovery basis; they take in people who cannot get a room in a hospital but who require prolonged treatment. In the main these nursing homes are licensed by the Ontario department of health. Two of the qualifications are that they must have fire protection; they must have fire escapes, and must have registered nurses on duty at all times. They are commonly called nursing homes. They have a mixed variety of cases at all times. The definition is assuming another name, another position.

Mr. Martin: In Ontario the nursing home is defined under appropriate legislation.

Mr. Hahn: I have another matter in mind. Probably it should come under subsection 2 of this section, but perhaps not. At this time we do have a high level of employment. If we have a bit of a decline in the employment level what will happen? During July and August of each year a great number of students take up employment. Their parents may be unemployed and not qualified for unemployment insurance. Would these students be considered as eligible for relief assistance under this legislation?

Mr. Martin: They would if they were in the normal work group. A group of students who work for a couple of months, of course, are not part of the working force, and this legislation applies to the individual.

Mr. Trainor: It seems to me, as the hon. member for Lanark has pointed out, that the term "nursing home" really demands more definite definition, because in most provinces of the country the nursing home is to a degree synonymous with a hospital, perhaps a hospital of a lower grade. Most of the people in a nursing home are ill. Some of them, or a fair proportion of them, care for the chronically ill but not the acutely ill. Nevertheless they are people who require nursing and medical care. Unless this legislation is going to conflict with the proposed hospital legislation I think there should be a complete definition of the term "nursing home".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, certainly if the draftsmen of this section had tried to be incomprehensible they could not have done a more complete job. I suggest that no one reading section 4 subsection 2, with subsection 3 (a) could really understand what this means. Subsection 2 says:

> Except as provided in subsection (3), an agreement shall, for the purposes of this act, exclude from unemployment assistance costs
> (a) payments made to or on behalf of persons who are inmates of any institution or class of institution maintained in whole or in part out of funds provided by Canada, a province, a municipality or a charitable organization.

Then I pass the paragraphs without comment because they do not come into issue. Subsection 3 reads:

> An agreement may include as unemployment assistance costs
> (a) payments made to or on behalf of persons who are inmates of homes for special care and who would not normally be cared for in general, acute, chronic or convalescent hospitals, tuberculosis sanitoria, mental institutions, institutions for incurables, orphanages or child welfare institutions.

The minister mentioned that there is an example of this in British Columbia. He did not say whether institutions of the kind mentioned in 3(a) are exclusive to British Columbia. Could this subsection not be simplified if it is to cover only certain institutions in British Columbia?

Mr. Martin: It is to cover not only British Columbia. I just took that as an example because I was addressing myself to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. It applies to every province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly the minister could clarify it in this way, because to read 2(a) with 3(a) is to muddle any person who believes in careful language in definitions. Would the minister give an example of the kind of institution which would be operated under 3(a)? He indicated that there was one in British Columbia and possibly in some other province. It does seem that whoever drafted this did not himself clearly understand the meaning of section 8(a) of the draft agreement, now schedule A. The wording is almost the same as in 2(a), except that it says "payment to or on behalf of persons who are inmates of homes for special care".

What persons do receive any assistance because they are in homes for special care? What is the nature of the legislation in existence in any province that allows a person who is not in a general convalescent hospital, or in a sanatorium, a mental institution, an institution for incurables and the like, to qualify? What are the institutions; what is the nature of the institution; what is the qualification for payment to that institution; because the payment to that institution must be made by the province or by the municipality.

In an ordinary rest home a person pays for his or her keep. In these rest homes, or these convalescent homes, or homes similar to those referred to by the hon. member for Lanark and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, ordinarily the individual pays; but apparently there are some institutions in existence in which people who are not sick, mentally afflicted, or do not have tuberculosis and the like, may be placed, and payment is made either by the province or by the municipality. Will the minister outline under what legislation provision is made for such an arrangement, because on the face of it these two sections look as incomprehensible as faulty draftsmanship could possibly achieve.

Mr. Martin: Well, I think I can understand the feeling of my hon. friend in the matter, but it may be because of dealing with this thing more regularly that I feel it is not as difficult as my hon. friend says. I shall do my best to explain the situation again. My hon. friend has directed our attention to clause 4, subclause 2(a), which reads:

Except as provided in subsection (3), an agreement shall, for the purposes of this act, exclude from unemployment assistance costs—

Then paragraph (a) is set out, and that is the one he dealt with. It reads:

(a) payments made to or on behalf of persons who are inmates of any institution or class of institution maintained in whole or in part out of funds provided by Canada, a province, a municipality or a charitable organization.

The people in that group are out, so far as this act is concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Right.

Mr. Martin: So far my hon. friend and I are in accord?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend then says, "Look at subclause 3," which reads:

An agreement may include as unemployment assistance costs

(a) payments made to or on behalf of persons who are inmates of homes for special care—

The words "special care" are to be underlined.

—and who would not normally be cared for—

This is descriptive.

—and who would not normally be cared for in general, acute, chronic or convalescent hospitals, tuberculosis sanatoria, mental institutions, institutions for incurables, orphanages or child welfare institutions.

The group of institutions that are described after the words "who would not normally be cared for," etc., are institutions that are maintained by the province. My hon. friend spoke of chronic cases. They would be covered, for instance, under the hospital insurance proposal as a hospital that would qualify the patients therein for the benefits of the hospital insurance program as is now the case in British Columbia. But my hon. friend says, "That may be true; that may be all well and good," and he says the thing that concerns him is what we mean by "homes for special care". Now, if he will look at clause 4, subclause 4—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know that.

Mr. Martin: —he will see where the words "homes for special care" are defined. They are defined as meaning:

. . . nursing homes, hostels for indigent transients, homes for the aged, poorhouses, almshouses and hostel facilities provided for the aged within housing projects constructed under the National Housing Act.

The hon. member asked me to give him examples of these institutions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could I interrupt for just a moment. Would these nursing homes, hospitals and homes for the aged and so on be nursing homes, etc., operated by the province?

Mr. Martin: Not necessarily, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well—

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend wishes to listen to me I think he will follow this. For instance, there are Salvation Army hospitals all over the country. There is a Union Mission here in Ottawa, and there are homes for the aged. In New Brunswick I think they call them poorhouses or homes for the poor.

Mr. Gillis: Yes.

Mr. Martin: People in those institutions are not in hospitals. They are individuals who sometimes are destitute for one reason or another, but they do not need regular hospital care and they are people for whom the hospital is not prepared to provide assistance. That is the type of person who is covered. In every province there is a licensing inspection system under which they license (a) hospitals and (b) nursing homes. We accept the provincial definitions, and if we were to define "nursing homes" ourselves we would run counter to the definitions prescribed in provincial acts in all the provinces. Those are defined.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned a possible complication. He mentioned that there might be an individual in one of these nursing homes who was indeed a chronic case. If that happened to be the situation the proper governing authority would see to it that he was provided for in an institution covered by the hospital insurance act in the province of British Columbia; but nursing homes are not hospitals as such. We have perhaps allowed ourselves to be confused by this phrase. Many of us are familiar with the type of nursing home which exists in the old country, which is in fact a small hospital. We ourselves have small institutions which are called nursing homes and are in fact hospitals, but it is not those about which we are speaking; it is the nursing home that is defined in the provincial acts for which there is a proper licensing system.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the minister. As I think he knows, in the province of Saskatchewan we have what we call hospitals which are provided by the provincial government in the first place. They are occupied by old people but not by aged people who live in old age homes as such; these are people who are in need of hospital care. For example, in my own city we have what we call the Saskatchewan government hospital. This is a hospital; they have trained nurses in attendance, and the patients receive a call every day from a qualified doctor.

I cannot for the life of me see how the definition of such an institution would be any different from that which is laid down in subclause 3 (a),—"persons who are inmates of homes for special care"—because that is why they are not in a place like Melfort where they have an old peoples' home. These are really old peoples' hospitals.

The institution was originally under the care of the province, but these aged people contribute to that institution probably from their old age pension or, if they are not of pensionable age, they pay a certain amount from their available funds. Does subclause 3(a), cover these people?

Mr. Martin: I do not have that particular institution in mind, but I take it from what you said that it would be covered. We are covered by the licensing system of the province. The province defines what is a hospital and what is a nursing home, and if it is a nursing home which is in fact a hospital it will be exempt from the sales tax, for instance. That comes to us on the basis of a certificate from the province. We depend on the regulations of the province, but in the case you mention I would not think there would be much difference.

Mr. Knight: In the case I mentioned these people are in this institution because of the fact they need medical care as opposed to simply being chronic old age cases. I do not know what the technical terms are, but I think those are the correct terms.

Mr. Jones: I wonder would the minister define "charitable organization"? I have in mind the fact that at Kelowna the Rotary club is going to build several homes for the aged as they are referred to in this act, and they are going to put up $15,000 or $20,000 and borrow the rest from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The homes are more or less held in trust by a body set up by Rotary on a charitable basis with the idea of continuity of occupancy—

Mr. Martin: These are homes for the aged?

Mr. Jones: Yes.

Mr. Martin: They are included.

Mr. Jones: Would you define them as charitable organizations?

Mr. Martin: Yes, definitely.

Mr. Jones: There is no question about it?

Mr. Martin: Definitely not.

Mr. Jones: How is it, then, that the income tax department says they are not; it says they are a business?

Mr. Martin: I do not know—

Mr. Jones: That is what I want to find out. I think you are right; they are a charitable organization. These people are putting up $20,000 out of the goodness of their hearts on a charitable basis and the income tax department insists they pay tax, but it is a charitable organization.

Mr. Martin: Under the description you have given, they would probably come under this agreement.

Mr. Jones: Well, I am glad to have it on the record, anyway.

Mr. Martin: It covers any home for the aged in which assistance is provided for aged individuals by the provinces.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, there is a question I should like to ask the minister concerning clause 4, subclause 2(a), where it is stated that an agreement may include special cases as unemployment assistance costs. In a case where the patient is in one of these homes to whom is the payment made, to the individual or to the institution? Are there cases where payments are made to the institution and where payments are made to the individual? I can understand that in an asylum or a mental home payments might be made to the institution, but there are other cases such as hospitals where people are paying part of the expense themselves. Surely in that case the payment would be made to the individual rather than to the institution.

Mr. Martin: Our money is paid on the basis of the number of people who are declared by the province to be on their public assistance rolls. We are seeking authorization under this bill to pay not more than 50 per cent, and that money would be paid directly to the province.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It would be the responsibility of the province to determine whether it would be paid to the individual or to the institution?

Mr. Blair: I come back again to clause 3 of the bill, and I still think there will be confusion under that section. In the first place the word "inmates" is used. The usual meaning, at least to me, of that word is a person who has been committed to an institution. If it is a mental institution he would be committed on the certificates of doctors. Or an individual might be sent there by a municipality because he was suffering from some form of chronic trouble. Otherwise the word "patient" should be used.

I come back again to nursing homes. You might find people there who are there simply because they are old. You will find other people there who have been transferred from hospitals because there is not room in the hospitals for them. It may be less expensive to go into the so-called nursing home.

Then you have various classifications here. You speak of institutions for incurables. Some people are in nursing homes because they are incurable and cannot be taken care of at home. They might occupy a bed in a hospital, and it is more expensive for them to be there. To my mind there are three or four classes of patients, and I think in carrying out this legislation sooner or later there will be difficulty in interpreting 3 (a).

Mr. Martin: I always rely greatly on what my hon. friend says, but I am sure that if he will look at the Ontario nursing act he will find precise provisions to cover these cases. We may have some difficulty but, if so, we will have to bring it back for amendment.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister has the advantage of legal training. While the hon. member for Prince Albert seems to be satisfied, I would ask the minister to clear up for those of us who have not been through law school the distinction between 2 (a) and 3 (a), so we will not have any trouble in explaining this to lay people.

Mr. Martin: Subclause 2 (a) and subclause 3 (a) are not to be contrasted. Subclause 2 (a) simply says the following are excluded, while 3 (a) says that if individuals are in homes for special care, notwithstanding the above, they may be included provided they come within the definition in subclause 4 which defines what is a home for special care.

Mr. Trainor: This provides that if the money is paid by the province or the municipality directly to the hospital, the institution is not eligible. When it is paid to the individual, then the institution becomes eligible. It seems to me that this will greatly encourage the use of subterfuge on the part of municipal and provincial governments, which might switch from a method of financial support directly to the institution to the individual, and in that case the individual would be required to pay directly to the institution.

Mr. Martin: This is not a scheme to provide assistance to the individual. If a province did what my hon. friend suggests of course we would have to point that out to it.

Mr. Zaplitny: Subclause 4 defines the meaning of homes for special care. I should like a further clarification of that subclause which reads:

> In this section, the expression "homes for special care" means nursing homes, hostels for indigent transients, homes for the aged, poor houses, alms houses and hostel facilities provided for the aged within housing projects constructed under the National Housing Act.

Do the words "within housing projects constructed under the National Housing Act" refer to the whole subclause or only to what comes after the word "and" in the third line of the subclause?

Mr. Martin: After the word "and".

Mr. Zaplitny: They do not refer to any words before that?

Mr. Martin: No.

Mr. Bell: If that is the answer to the question perhaps the draftsman might decide to put in a comma after the word "almshouses" just to clarify the subclause.

Mr. Martin: I think that is a good suggestion. I may say that was put in at the request of Saskatchewan where they have some of these homes.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am still concerned about the remarks the minister made earlier with regard to chronic cases. When he was replying to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni he said that chronic cases would be taken care of under clause 4(3)(a), which reads:

> An agreement may include as unemployment assistance costs—

And then later:

> —and who would not normally be cared for in general, acute, chronic or convalescent hospitals—

Then the agreement in section 8(a)(iv), which is the long paragraph to which I drew the minister's attention earlier, says in part:

> —together with any payment made to or on behalf of such person, who is—

And then later:

(iv) a charitable organization; except that there may be included—

And further down:

—provided further that said inmates are not such as would normally be cared for in general, acute, chronic or convalescent hospitals.

Both in the bill and in the agreement it specifically sets out chronic cases as being ineligible, whereas the minister told the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that such people would be taken care of under this bill.

Mr. Martin: I said they would be taken care of under the hospital insurance proposal. When the hospital insurance proposal was announced there was some question as to whether it included chronic and convalescent patients as opposed to acute patients, and I pointed out at the time that it was intended to cover chronic as well as acute cases. I was referring to the hospital insurance act of British Columbia and to the proposal made by the federal government for hospital insurance. I was not referring to chronic cases under this bill; I was referring to the chronic cases under the hospital insurance provisions of a particular province.

Mrs. Fairclough: Chronic cases are not taken care of under this legislation?

Mr. Martin: Chronic hospital cases are covered by the act dealing with hospitals, but this legislation does not deal with hospital cases in a nursing home or who may be having special care. There may be the special case of an individual who is chronically ill and who is transferred to a proper institution. There are some borderline cases like that, but this bill is not intended to cover people who are in convalescent or chronic care hospitals. I think the best example would be St. Mary's hospital in London which is one of the outstanding and more recently constructed chronic hospitals. This act does not cover people in that institution. That is a hospital under the hospital act of Ontario and would be covered under the hospital insurance proposal that we have in mind.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yet the care of these people in these hospitals is undertaken by the provinces.

Mr. Martin: Not necessarily; not in the hospital I am thinking of. If there are indigent patients they are taken care of in Ontario by the municipality with assistance by the province, but that is assistance given for medical care. This is assistance given for welfare generally and not for medical care.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Mrs. Fairclough: Does the minister then mean that in the costs that are tabulated by the provinces under section 6 of the agreement, those costs which relate to medical or hospital costs, if they are assumed by the municipality or provinces as the case may be, will not be included?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: Under provincial care for these people—

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend will look at 4 (2) (d) of the bill, it says, "Payments made in respect of medical" and so on. They are excluded.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is what I wondered. I point out to the minister that under care which is given to persons who applied to municipalities for assistance there is included, as there is in the case of persons under blindness assistance, old age pensioners and so on, certain medical and hospital assistance. These charges are borne jointly by the municipalities and the provinces.

Mr. Martin: In some cases.

Mrs. Fairclough: In some cases, yes, but even in some—

Mr. Martin: I mean, in some provinces.

Mrs. Fairclough: Does the minister tell me that in calculating the cost of assistance under clause 6 of the agreement it is going to be necessary for the province to exclude therefrom any medical costs?

Mr. Martin: They are not included.

Mrs. Fairclough: Your 50 per cent is dwindling rapidly. By the time you cross out all the things you are now excluding, I do not wonder that Ontario and Quebec do not want to get into the agreement. They may just as well stay where they are. You start out with a basis of .45 per cent, and you admit yourself that none of the provinces actually come up to that basic .45 per cent.

Mr. Martin: I did not say that.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, you said that before dinner.

Mr. Martin: No.

Mrs. Fairclough: If you will consult Hansard you will see that you said this afternoon before dinner that the figure of .45 per cent was higher than had actually been established by any province as its basis for welfare assistance.

Mr. Martin: If I said that I certainly did not mean to convey that impression. I can assure my hon. friend that is not the case.

Mrs. Fairclough: If that is not the case I should like to hear the figures that actually apply. Certainly the minister made that remark, and a great deal of what I had to say was based upon that premise. If that is the case, and you start with your ·45 per cent, which represents in effect your basic hard core—it is said that the poor are always with us, and undoubtedly some of these are always with us, and the provinces and municipalities always have to include charges for them—you wipe those out and then you start chopping at the additional assistance which must now be given by the province under the terms of these agreements. You say you cannot charge this, you cannot charge that and you cannot charge something else.

You put a person on your relief rolls. I do not care whether or not the federal authorities co-operate in it; you put them on your relief rolls, and there is much more to be provided for them than merely food, shelter and clothing. They are bound to be ill. For one thing, they do not get the nourishment they ordinarily would have. If the breadwinner for the family has no job and is not making normal wages they get by on a mere subsistence. So naturally they are going to be ill; they cannot help it. All those costs are added to the municipal costs, which in turn are shared. Granted they have not been heretofore, and I am talking of cases of unemployed employables. Those costs have not been shared heretofore by the province or the federal authority. If the municipalities out of ordinary humanity, took care of these people, then they were saddled with these costs. They were a 100 per cent charge on the ratepayers of that municipality. That is one of the things that has obtained and one of the reasons why all along we have tried to urge the government to do something for the municipalities in this regard.

It is not right that ordinary care for people who are unable to take care of themselves should be a charge solely on real estate, and that is the only place where the municipalities gain their income. If you start to chop off these amounts here and there and say that you will not allow medical costs, you will not allow hospital costs, you will not allow this and you will not allow that, this is not 50 per cent even of the amount over and above the basis of ·45 per cent. You take the amount you refuse to allow, and then you saddle the provinces and municipalities with the cost of administration. I do not know how far down the scale you are going, but it will be a long way.

Mr. Martin: If I gave my friend that impression about the effect of the hard core figure, I certainly wish to correct it at once. Take the province of Saskatchewan. The ·45 per cent would represent a figure of 4,000. From the figures given to us by Saskatchewan for February, 1955, the total was 8,052.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister is quoting the figures for February. What about the June figures? Those were the ones you quoted as hard core.

Mr. Martin: Those were the last figures given by the province.

Mrs. Fairclough: You are now quoting the figures for which I asked you earlier and which you did not have.

Mr. Martin: You mean June of—

Mrs. Fairclough: Any year. Get into the summer months, when unemployment is at a minimum.

Mr. Martin: In June of a previous year the total was 72,118.

Mrs. Fairclough: What year?

Mr. Martin: The same year, 1954. We would be paying on that for about 3,200. In the case of Newfoundland, the latest available figure I have is for March, 1955. The hard core there would be 1,854, and the total persons involved would be 21,419.

Mrs. Fairclough: We are getting nowhere. You are taking one of the worst months we have had for unemployment in the history of this country for many years, March of 1955. You are quoting the figures of persons on assistance for that month, and you had previously said that the hard core is in the middle of summer, which anyone should know. You told me that ·45 per cent was the top figure. Now you are starting to quote the middle of the winter figure. Let us have them all in one month.

Mr. Martin: Would July satisfy my hon. friend?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Martin: Let us take July, 1955, which is the last retroactive payment period. The hard core would be 1,854. That is the ·45 per cent.

Mrs. Fairclough: This is Newfoundland?

Mr. Martin: Newfoundland; and the number shareable is 13,878.

Mrs. Fairclough: Give us some other provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Take them all. Let us have the figures for the same month all the way through.

Mr. Martin: Prince Edward Island.

An hon. Member: Let us get them all.

Mr. Martin: I shall be very happy to give them, because I think it is very valuable information.

Mrs. Fairclough: As a matter of fact the Ontario figure is 23,323 for June and the hard core is 27,000, which is quite a different picture. Four thousand are not even in there.

Mr. Pickersgill: That shows how lucky you are in Ontario.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is all right.

Mr. Martin: In June in Prince Edward Island the ·45 figure would be 486 and the actual number is 647 so we would be paying on 247 in that province. In Manitoba the hard core figure is 3,820 and the total is 6,943. In the case of British Columbia the hard core figure—this is for June—is 5,872 and the total is 17,773. In other words we would be paying a share, in the case of British Columbia, on about 14,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: Twelve thousand.

Mr. Martin: Excuse me. I quoted the wrong one. British Columbia, 5,872; about 12,000. In the case of Alberta the hard core figure is 4,797 and as of July of 1954, 5,032.

Mrs. Fairclough: Just a minute. Some of these figures are for 1955 and some are for 1954.

Mr. Martin: I am quoting the latest figures we have. The one I am giving you now is for 1954.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is 4,797?

Mr. Martin: It is 4,797.

Mrs. Fairclough: What is the other figure?

Mr. Martin: It is 5,032.

Mrs. Fairclough: You have given us a few odd provinces.

Mr. Martin: I have given you British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I have given you Prince Edward Island and I have given you Newfoundland.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Martin: The other provinces are Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Of those provinces, the only one with which we have an agreement is New Brunswick. We have not yet received the reimbursement claim from New Brunswick, and obviously we have not had it from the other three provinces with which as yet we have no agreement.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, this just shows you how these figures get twisted around. Take for instance the province of Newfoundland. There are about 7½ or 8 times as many obviously on assistance as in the hard core who would come under this ·45. In Prince Edward Island there are a matter of 15 per cent more than ·45. Then in the case of Manitoba you have about 60 per cent more. In British Columbia you have three times as many. In Alberta you have almost even-stephen. But in Ontario—and the minister says he has not the figures for Ontario or any of these other provinces—according to the figures the minister gave us earlier the hard core would be 27,000, of whom the number receiving assistance was 23,323, or about 90 per cent. Obviously the figures are entirely different in these various provinces. That fact certainly points up the reason some provinces wish to participate in this scheme and others do not.

Mr. Martin: I am sure my hon. friend will agree that none of us wants to see these figures—I know my hon. friend would be the first to join with me in this—any higher.

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Martin: We are fortunate that in Ontario they are not higher. That is not to be complained about. Surely that is a satisfactory situation. But the fact is that under this bill we are getting authority to share with the provinces in the cost for a substantial number of people, including a group beyond the threshold for whom it was never recommended or suggested that there should be any provision made by the federal government. That is the advantage of this act, and I think it is a very big one.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, we come right back again to the minister's pious hopes or expostulations of the pre-dinner hour. They just do not hold water. I come back to this clause which I started to talk about, clause 4 (2) (d) of the act. I asked the minister what happened to the medical costs, hospital costs and so on which have been incurred on behalf of these people, and he told me they were not payable under this act.

Mr. Martin: That is right. I forgot that. I agree with that. My hon. friend did raise that matter. This is not a health insurance measure. It is a public assistance measure. My hon. friend will remember, because of her municipal experience, that under the unemployment relief and assistance act that came into being some time between 1930 and 1935 and was carried on until 1941, I believe, provision was not made for medical care. It was made for food, clothing and shelter, just as is done in this measure. The proper place to deal with medical care and expenses is under a health insurance measure.

The fact that the federal government is engaging itself to share in public assistance, as it is traditionally understood, does not mean that under this act provision should be made for medical care. There is a proper way to deal with medical care. In any event, I do not think that we should assume that because the federal government gets into this particular field it should be obligated necessarily to get into other fields. There are fields for the federal government, for the provincial governments and for the municipal governments. In the absence of a hospital insurance proposal, I believe that is the proper field for the responsibility to lie where it does. In any event, it is not included in this act.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, in one breath the minister tells us that here he is exploring a field that had not even been anticipated in 1945, that he is doing far more than was asked of the federal government in 1945. In the next breath he says, "No; we are not going to countenance the payment of 50 per cent of the amounts that are ordinarily expended on persons who must apply for municipal relief". This is not a case of supplying hospital insurance or medical care to people who are normally employed. When you undertake to look after a person who is unable to provide for himself, you provide for him the things he needs, whether it be a doctor, medicine or whatever it may be.

The municipalities have always done that. They provide, for people who are unable to look after themselves, their total requirements. They provide them, it is true, at the basic level. That is what you get there, and you are always going to get the basic level. In other words, so long as the municipality and the province carry their share they are not going to splurge. In so far as moneys are concerned, the municipalities get their money only from real estate.

Now you are telling me in one breath that you have invaded a field that you never expected to invade and that you are doing far more than you ever expected to do and far more than the 1945 proposals set forth. On the other hand you say, that you are not going to allow this, you are not going to allow that, and you are not going to allow something else; and you differentiate again between the people who are unemployable and those who are employable but who, by reason of circumstances, are now unemployed.

I tell the minister to cut out this nonsense. I tell him either to lay no claim to these false virtues or else put in the act something which will actually give the provinces the thing which he claims he is giving here and which he is not giving.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Pallett: In support of what the hon. member for Hamilton West has stated, I may say that I took the figures the minister has given us this evening and by my computation, allowing 5 per cent deduction for the exceptions which are set forth in the act, it appears that he is giving Newfoundland 40 per cent of the cost of their relief; Saskatchewan about 15 per cent; Manitoba about 18 per cent; British Columbia about 28 per cent and Alberta nothing. I think this is something which has been rather clouded over today, but actually the contribution this act is going to make is not quite as much as the impression which has been given.

I think a comparison should be made of the figures on unemployment in Newfoundland. I believe such a comparison of the figures will show that something is strangely amiss. Either this government's statement about Newfoundland is wrong or else they are not fully participating in the benefits of this country along with the other provinces. I think the figures the minister has given us show that. I believe it is something the house should be considering very seriously, to see if any steps can be taken in that province to improve its position. I think the Newfoundland members as well as the minister from Newfoundland might well take some steps in this house to rectify that situation.

Mrs. Fairclough: I wonder if the minister would explain what is meant in section 8 (a) (vi) of the agreement, when it speaks of a supplemental allowance or cost of living bonus?

Mr. Martin: Yes. That simply means this. Those who are in receipt of old age assistance are excluded because they are already the recipients of provincial or federal grants; that is clear. For the portion of the supplementary payment that too is excluded in the cases I have mentioned, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, because those are supplementary payments across the board. However, in the case of Ontario the supplementary payment is of a different character. It is a payment in which the municipalities pay $8 and the province $12, and it is paid to a limited group of people, actually some 1,500.

Mrs. Fairclough: Under the old age assistance?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Now, that supplementary payment in Ontario does not exclude them from this act for the reasons I have given, but it does exclude the supplementary payments in the other three provinces I mentioned. In those three provinces, in addition to the supplementary payments, the province might pay assistance over and above that, and that would bring the persons affected under this act.

Mrs. Fairclough: In other words, anything in which the federal government does not participate.

Mr. Martin: Or the provinces; it is under the old age assistance act.

Mrs. Fairclough: You say if it is directly a provincial payment it can be included?

Mr. Martin: If it is a public assistance payment over and above the old age assistance.

Mrs. Fairclough: Anything in which the federal government assistance is excluded.

Mr. Carter: We in Newfoundland are very happy to have this legislation, even if the people do not want it in Ontario. Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Oxford asked a question which was intended to point out that the percentage of the total cost under this legislation that would be borne by the federal government would be, in many cases, less than 50 per cent. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is obvious.

Under the formula set forth in the legislation the percentage cost must vary from zero up to 49·9 per cent. If one approaches this legislation from the viewpoint of sharing the percentage cost, in my opinion one is tending to obscure its true value. When the percentage cost borne by the federal government is zero that means we are having prosperity and there is no burden to carry above the ·45 per cent. For my part, I hope the federal share under this legislation will always be zero, because that means we will always be having the same high level of prosperity we are enjoying at the present time. The present government is doing what it can to maintain this prosperity. It is trying to steer a course between recession on the one hand and inflation on the other. But hon. members must remember that there are certain things outside of the control of even this government.

Mr. Churchill: Name one.

Mr. Carter: There are conditions in the outside world which can adversely affect the economy of this country over which we have no control whatever. We do not pretend to be able to control the weather. Hon. members can turn their minds back 18 months and they will recall that we were faced with a paradoxical situation in which unemployment figures soared to a record level at the very time the country in general was enjoying unpredecented prosperity. At that time in my own province of Newfoundland the number of people receiving relief rose from ·6 per cent of the population in September, 1954, to 4·4 per cent in March, 1955. During that same period in my own riding of Burin-Burgeo the number of people receiving relief rose from 1·8 per cent of the population in September, 1954, to 9·63 per cent in March, 1955. It is at a time like that when the true benefit of this legislation can be appreciated. It provides assistance at a time when assistance is needed most.

Some hon. members have indicated that the federal government should make itself responsible for 100 per cent of the cost of the unemployed employables. I believe that stand was taken by Ontario when these things were considered at the provincial conference. I do not share that view. In the first place, to do this you must separate the unemployed employables from the people who cannot be employed because of their physical condition. One of the things about this legislation which appeals to me very much is the fact that it wipes out that distinction completely and for all time; I think that is as it should be.

Another reason that I do not agree with the government taking 100 per cent responsibility is that I do not think it is in the national interest. Since I came to this parliament in 1949 we have passed numerous laws in which we have removed responsibility from individuals, organizations or some levels of government and placed it on the federal government.

In Canada we are building a nation. We are developing a Canadian way of life. I think we are developing patterns of government that are distinctly Canadian. If we are to do a good job and make Canada a good nation the way to do it is not to remove responsibility from the places where it belongs. The proper way to do it, I submit, Mr. Chairman, is to acknowledge a joint responsibility and a joint sharing of the burden, and that is what this legislation does.

Mr. Trainor: Also a joint sharing of the tax revenue; don't forget that.

Mr. McIlraith: In Manitoba?

Mr. Carter: When the great province of Ontario puts the same tax on its gasoline as the province of Newfoundland has to, then the province of Ontario will have plenty of money to pay the ·45 per cent and the rest of the formula required in this legislation.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a question of privilege, the hon. member who has just taken his seat kept referring in his remarks, I believe on two or three occasions, to the member for Oxford. Perhaps he should get his members sorted out, because I have made no comment on this bill so far.

Mr. Carter: The hon. member for Peel is the member I meant.

Mrs. Fairclough: I wonder whether the minister will explain the meaning of clause 4(3)(b) of the bill, bearing in mind that clause 4(2) says:

> Except as provided in subsection (3), an agreement shall, for the purposes of this act, exclude from unemployment assistance costs—

And so on; and then (b):

> Payments made to or on behalf of persons—

And so on. Then subclause 3 says:

> An agreement may include as unemployment assistance costs
> (b) relief payments made to or on behalf of the persons referred to in paragraph (b) of subsection (2)—

And so on. In other words, subclause 3(b) says that those persons may be included in the computation who are specifically excluded in subclause 2(b). Will the minister please explain that.

Mr. Martin: I explained that a moment ago, but I suppose my explanation was not as clear as I hoped it would be. Under subclause (2) (b) or under all the subclauses (a) (b) (c) (d) and so on there are provisions which are taken outside the legislation. My hon. friend directs my attention specifically to (2)(b). The governing part is:

> Except as provided in subsection (3), an agreement shall, for the purposes of this act, exclude from unemployment assistance costs
> (b) payments made to or on behalf of persons who are in receipt of financial assistance under any act of the legislature of a province the cost of which is shared by Canada under an act of the parliament of Canada other than this act, and payments made by way of supplemental allowance or cost of living bonus to those persons or to persons who are in receipt of financial assistance under any act of the parliament of Canada.

Then subclause 3 (b) is the exception:

> An agreement may include as unemployment assistance costs

Then (b):

> relief payments made to or on behalf of the persons referred to in paragraph (b) of subsection (2) in addition to the payments herein specified.

These are relief payments, as I said a moment ago. I took the case of the three western provinces where supplementary payments are made to old age assistance. As far as the moneys paid by way of old age assistance or supplementary benefits are concerned, they do not qualify under this legislation. Simply by way of parenthesis may I say that these supplementary payments are made to a special group of people, the recipients of old age assistance; but if on top of that a province pays public assistance to a wide group of citizens, including this particular group, to the extent of that additional assistance over and above the supplementary payments and the old age assistance itself the federal government, under this legislation, is prepared to share in the cost of that extra assistance provision.

Mrs. Fairclough: Then this is merely a subsistence payment, is it; food, lodging, and so forth?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: Heat, and so on?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: As differentiated from any amounts paid to them as pensions or old age security payments?

Mr. Martin: Or supplementary payments.

Mrs. Fairclough: Handicapped persons' allowances, and so on?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: Now that the minister has explained it, it becomes a little clearer; but I must say it is a very badly drawn piece of legislation.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): As I look at the clock I think there is an object lesson here for the minister. Because you are fast off the mark it does not mean you are going to win a fast race.

This matter of when bills come to us came up before. I might repeat, sir, that even though they require a date and a number it seems to me that the officials of the department have them prepared long in advance. I ask again that some consideration be given to having them sent around in draft form so this last minute examination might not be necessary, and perhaps the minister would get along a little better than he has tonight.

I cannot help but think that the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton West, added to by the hon. member for Peel, confirm to a great extent what I said on second reading of this bill, namely that in so far as the province from which I come is concerned, this bill does absolutely nothing at the present time. If I understand the figures as I heard them read out it would appear that the idea is to indicate that Ontario is going to be permanently in a state of prosperity. If I understood the remarks of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, according to these figures Newfoundland will continue to be in a period of depression.

The hon. member for Peel has certainly indicated that the government might seriously consider whether some additional measures are not required to see that those other areas of the country, whether it be by decentralization of industry or otherwise, are given an opportunity to get into the positive class in so far as figures are concerned. Then, of course, the minister could be extremely happy. He would have sold a bill of goods to the Canadian people to show that he is looking after 50 per cent of the unemployment costs when, in actual fact, if some efforts were extended along that line he could get along without spending anything.

It is easy enough to talk about whose responsibility the problem of the hard core is. To say that the people at the municipal level know their neighbours and know what hardship arises and that they are the people who can carry on the job is ridiculous. How ridiculous can they get, Mr. Chairman? This government is the body that is collecting practically every cent it can get from everyone. Then it is attempting to get by, by putting on someone else the responsibility of looking after people out of real property taxes.

Those taxes were never designed at any time to take care of people in this category. They were designed to provide the services, the educational costs, the fire protection and the police protection. Certainly real estate was not designed to assume this burden. What happens? What do you do? This government takes as much of the taxes as it can possibly get. It brings new people into the country and the first time they get a pay cheque the government makes doubly sure that it gets its share but it leaves it to the municipality to build the schools, to provide the roads, the police protection and the fire services for them right away, and the municipalities do not get any tax revenue from those people until long after they have arrived.

I mentioned education. It is probably the most important of all, because it is one thing that must be looked after for all the people, and we must provide for them the best education we can. As I said this afternoon, sooner or later we are going to have to make a permanent division of the sources of taxes in this country and leave the responsibility of disbursing them with the people who collect the taxes. Only then will we catch up with this problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Just let me finish, will you please?

Mr. Pickersgill: All right, I would like to ask it then.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I notice that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration had his conference outside and got his answer across here very well through his spokesman, so perhaps he would let me finish my remarks.

It is very easy to see why the province of Ontario has not accepted this formula as yet, because obviously there is going to be no contribution to that province under present conditions; and if the municipalities are now all bearing a share they will continue to bear it. None of them has the revenue to take care of even one unemployed person. This legislation is a very nice thing to sell to the people; it sounds as if we are doing a great deal, but in actual fact we are doing practically nothing to ease the burden on the municipal governments.

I would like to refer again to the technical problem I brought up before the dinner hour; perhaps there is an answer to it, but I would like to hear some of the lawyer members of the house express an opinion concerning it. Clause 4, subclause 1(e) of the bill, is worded in a way which would indicate that it was the intention to continue this legislation for a fixed period and then from year to year. I would assume this would be done on a 12-month basis from whatever time the agreement was signed. Clause 17 of the agreement indicates that the agreement can be terminated one year from any date. The minister has said that by attaching this agreement to the legislation it would clear up any apparent inconsistency, but it does not seem quite right to me yet, sir. Surely it is not the intention—

Mr. Martin: May I just point out that my hon. friend mentioned this matter this afternoon. We have now passed that clause and we can look at it again when we come to third reading, but I do not think we are in order in discussing it now. I shall be pleased to discuss it again on third reading.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Why is it out of order to look at clause 4?

Mr. Martin: We have passed it.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): No, we have not passed clause 4.

Mr. Martin: We have passed the amendment to clause 3 by which my hon. friend was provoked to make his observation.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): That may be so, but I am now dealing with clause 4, subclause 1(e), and if in fact the amendment which was passed does not clear up this confusion then this is the proper time to discuss it.

As I see it, it does not seem reasonable, notwithstanding the explanation that has been given, that one of the contracting parties could give notice in the middle of the year and end this agreement to its advantage at a time of high or low unemployment, as the case might be. It seems to me what was intended here was a continuation of this agreement in periods of 12 months after the original agreement was signed. I feel there may be some confusion in connection with that matter at the present time.

Mr. Martin: Perhaps I did not understand the suggestion made by my hon. friend earlier. Is my hon. friend suggesting we make clause 4, subclause 1(e) conform, as it must, to the agreement, because we have an agreement that may be changed; I mean, it could be changed. Is my hon. friend suggesting that the clause of the bill with regard to termination notice should conform to clause 17 of the agreement?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): That is right.

Mr. Martin: Clause 17 of the agreement reads:

> This agreement shall be deemed to have come into force and shall bind the parties from the -- day of -- 19 , and thereafter until terminated by either party giving to the other party one year's notice in writing.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): That is right.

Mr. Martin: I would agree with that. I did not appreciate the point raised by the hon. member earlier. I would ask the Minister of National Defence if he would now move that clause 4, subclause 1(e), which reads—

> Fix the time of the agreement at not more than five years and thereafter from year to year subject to termination by either party.

—be amended by adding thereto the words "on one year's notice in writing".

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I think, Mr. Chairman, it might be done by deleting all the words after "thereafter" and substituting therefor the words "until terminated by either party giving to the other party one year's notice in writing".

Mr. Martin: That is acceptable. Would my hon. friend move that?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Yes.

Mr. Martin: I thank my hon. friend.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Pickersgill—

Mr. Fleming: It was moved by Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Campney.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Hamilton.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Hamilton (York West) moves:

> —that all the words after "thereafter" in the seventeenth line be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:
> "until terminated by either party giving to the other party one year's notice in writing".

I am inserting the words "in the seventeenth line" for clarity.

Mr. Carrick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word or two at this stage. It seems to me the government has attempted to solve a very real problem in introducing this legislation. All hon. members will remember the difficulty that most of us experienced last year when there was considerable unemployment during the winter season and the people who were entitled to some assistance from either the municipal, the provincial or the federal level were unable to obtain it.

The difficulty in each case was that at that time there did not seem to be any way in which the three levels of government were able to get together and see that assistance was given. This legislation should certainly have the effect of making it impossible for any level of government to say that it is not responsible for the assistance that is needed within the class of cases covered by this legislation.

This legislation has the virtue of abolishing a distinction that has been troublesome throughout the history of the administration of unemployment assistance; that is the distinction which has always existed as between persons who were unemployed and not capable of being employed and persons who were employable.

There has been introduced in this debate some discussion which really turns upon the fiscal relations between the provinces and the dominion. As all hon. members know, there is other legislation before the house at this time which deals with that, and everyone who has endeavoured to ascertain what are the proper payments to make to the provinces and what are the proper sources of revenue is constantly aware of the complex nature of this problem. It is obviously impossible for the government at this time to endeavour to change immediately the traditional relations between the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government.

The hon. member for York West has referred to the difficulties the municipalities have experienced and with which we are all familiar; but this legislation, of course, has to proceed on the basis that that relationship is in existence at the present time, and it is an attempt to take care of a group that is going to need help under the existing relations.

It is inevitable in legislation of this kind that having laid down the general principle as to all persons who will be entitled to assistance, those persons who will not be entitled to assistance because they fall within the exceptions have to be defined, and it thus gives an appearance to some extent of complexity. However, when it is explained it is really not too difficult. Many of the questions which have been put to the minister arose from the fact that this is a rather complex subject we are dealing with, but I suggest that the legislation has been drawn with reasonable clarity. This may not be the last word on this matter, but it is my submission that the government is to be commended for bringing in the legislation at this time and making a bold attempt to meet a serious problem.

Mrs. Fairclough: There is just one question I should like to ask with regard to section 8(a)(i).

The Deputy Chairman: An amendment has been moved to one of the other subclauses; shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the amendment carries I want to put in declarative form a question I wish to ask the hon. member for York West. In Newfoundland unemployment assistance is not paid by the municipalities. Up to the present time it has been paid exclusively by the provincial government. Of course this legislation will provide for a considerable federal contribution. I see no reason why the provincial government of any rich province like Ontario should not do what we can do in a province like Newfoundland, which has nothing like the sources of revenue Ontario has.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): As the minister made a speech rather than asked a question I do not think I need say anything.

Mrs. Fairclough: Surely the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is not serious, as Ontario is not even a party to these agreements.

Mr. Pickersgill: Newfoundland has been paying it entirely for years.

Mrs. Fairclough: Newfoundland is a party to these agreements and Ontario is not. Obviously the minister does not know what he is talking about. I should like to ask the minister if section 8(a)(i) of the agreement refers to members of parliament?

Mr. Martin: I do not believe so.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have a serious question I want to ask now. Section 15 of the agreement reads:

> Canada shall, on receipt of a reimbursement claim that has been prepared in accordance with this agreement, pay fifty (50) per cent of the total claim.

[Mr. Carrick.]

It seems to me that the word "total" is scarcely descriptive of a claim which would be made under section 6 of the agreement, which provides that a monthly statement shall be made to the federal government. That would indicate the number of persons on assistance and the total amount which had been paid to those persons. Subsequent sections of the agreement set out the deductions which are to be made according to the formula. It seems to me that section 15 should provide for the payment of 50 per cent of the amount arrived at, or whatever description might be given to it, but certainly a total claim would be the total amount expended by the province before it started to make the deductions set out in the agreement. To me the word "total" means a grand sum, and I do not think it is descriptive of the amount to be paid by the federal government.

Mr. Martin: It is the total amount claimed by the province. In any event that is the agreement.

Mrs. Fairclough: I presume that under the regulations definite forms will be drawn up to indicate the deductions and other statistics necessary and then finally the net amount, which I suppose would be called the total claim. Am I correct in thinking that it will be so designated on whatever forms are available to the provinces for the making of their report?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mrs. Fairclough: It certainly does not seem clear to me.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Has the minister any formula which would indicate the percentage that will be required for administration? Has the government arrived at a figure which they think might be spent in this regard or which under this legislation must be expended by the municipality or the province?

Mr. Martin: No, I have not. My hon. friend asked me that question before, and I have not that information.

Mr. Fulton: May I refer to clause 4(2)(d) and I do not intend any levity when I ask why funeral expenses are excluded. It seems to me that such expenses would be a very serious burden and I should like to know why they are excluded.

Mr. Martin: They were not included in the agreements under the Unemployment Assistance Act, and they are not included in most public assistance legislation.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Regulations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This clause would appear to be weakly worded; as a matter of fact it is meaningless in its present form. It reads:

> The governor in council may make regulations for the administration of this act and of agreements and for carrying their purposes and provisions into effect.

I think it is bad grammatically. Apparently it was an endeavour on the part of the draftsman to give power to draft regulations, but as it is worded I think it would require something in addition. What it means apparently is that the governor in council may make regulations for the administration of this act and of agreements entered into hereunder and for carrying the purposes of the act or the agreements into effect.

As it stands it is a rather meaningless clause. If what it means is that the governor in council may make regulations for the administration of the act, that is all right; or of agreements entered into in connection herewith for the purpose of carrying the provisions into effect. I think the minister should give consideration to rewording the clause, because as it stands now I do not see how you can make provisions about agreements.

Mr. Martin: All I can say is that I discussed this with the officials of the Department of Justice and they were satisfied that it was proper draftsmanship.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Payments under prior agreements.

Mrs. Fairclough: Could the minister indicate what provinces are presently operating under agreements and how long they have been so operating?

Mr. Martin: Agreements have already been signed by Canada, on the one hand, and by the provinces, on the other, and this merely validates them.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is the purpose of the whole bill, so why was it necessary to set it out specifically? The agreements necessarily go back further than this, and obviously they cannot go back beyond July 1, 1955.

Mr. Martin: For these, but for the others it will be twelve months.

Mrs. Fairclough: Back twelve months?

Mr. Martin: In the case of a province where there is now an agreement there is retroactivity to July 1, 1955, except in the case of New Brunswick, where they wanted to go back only to January 1. In the case of the other five it was to July 1, 1955. In respect of the other agreements, it will go back 12 months from the date of execution.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Report to parliament.

Mr. Fulton: It seems to me that it is usual to provide a definite period after the end of the fiscal year within which such reports must be tabled, whereas this clause simply says:

> As soon as practicable after the end of each fiscal year the minister shall lay before parliament a report of all proceedings under this act for that fiscal year.

Would it not be possible to put in a definite time limit?

Mr. Martin: It might be possible but it would not be desirable, for this reason. This provision applies to family allowances, old age assistance, disability allowances, blind persons allowances and so on. Particularly with regard to sharing legislation, we have to get accounts from the provinces. I am not going to suggest that they are dilatory, but there are occasions, and this is a practical necessity. We gave consideration to this, but we had the same discussion, as my hon. friend will remember, on the Old Age Assistance Act.

Mr. Fulton: What is the experience?

Mr. Martin: We have had some delays.

Mr. Fulton: Does it run into six months or a year?

Mr. Martin: We have had six months' delay. We have had one delay of seven months, getting in the claims.

Mr. Fulton: Has any difficulty been experienced in getting them within one year after the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. Martin: I do not recall any.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Martin: Before we proceed, I wonder whether I might ask my colleague the Minister of National Defence to move:

> That the bill be further amended by adding thereto the following schedules as schedule A and schedule B.

This is in accordance with the suggestion made earlier.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Campney moves:

> That the bill be further amended by adding thereto the following schedules as schedule A and schedule B.

—it being understood by the committee of the whole that schedule A and schedule B are the agreements referred to by the minister earlier.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mrs. Fairclough: Before clause 1 carries, I wonder whether the minister has the answers to the questions asked previously by the member for Saint John-Albert and the member for Peel?

Mr. Martin: I forget the question asked by the member for Peel, but in answer to the question put to me by the member for Saint John-Albert I should like to point out to him that he asked me, if I understood his question correctly, how the actual unemployment figures in New Brunswick compared with those in the other provinces. I may have given him a wrong impression when I was talking about the significance of the ·45 per cent, which was a figure arrived at with the provinces as one that represented the normal situation that attended in most provinces other than the province of Nova Scotia.

The national employment service statistics respecting applications for employment are compiled regionally rather than by provinces, and the maritime provinces are taken as a single region. These figures show that applications on hand at national employment service offices for employment in the Moncton and Saint John offices combined totalled 6,301 on May 17, 1956, compared to 10,529 on April 19, 1956, and 6,345 on May 19 a year ago. While these figures may be significant as indicating the number of individuals seeking work in New Brunswick, they do not reflect accurately the numbers of the needy unemployed, which are much smaller in number.

The labour force survey for May, 1956, and for earlier months, published by the dominion bureau of statistics, does not contain figures relating specifically to the province of New Brunswick. I was looking that up during the dinner hour to make sure. The statistics produced in the labour force survey for the maritime provinces lump together Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The labour force survey, like national employment service figures, relate to the numbers of individuals seeking work, not to the number of individuals in need, which is the concern of this present legislation.

So far as the statistics relating to the needy unemployed are concerned, we have made every effort to obtain reliable figures from the New Brunswick authorities themselves but, owing to the fact that the province neither contributes to local assistance costs nor collects statistics from the municipalities—though they are starting to do that now—regarding municipal case loads and payments, we were unable to obtain, even with the full co-operation of the New Brunswick authorities, any figure whatsoever on the numbers of individuals receiving local assistance in that province. Some dollar expenditure figures were produced by the New Brunswick authorities, showing that for the full year of 1954, the highest year of cost in the six-year period 1949 to 1954, $349,108 was spent on assistance for unemployables by New Brunswick municipalities, while $138,111 was spent for assistance to employable persons.

New Brunswick has entered into an agreement effective January 1, 1956, and we expect very shortly to receive the first claims to be submitted under the agreement with the province. Only then will I really be able to give an accurate estimate in reply to my hon. friend's question. I thought I was going to be able to, but when I looked it over during the dinner hour I found there would be an inadequacy in these figures.

Mr. Bell: I appreciate the effort the minister has gone to, and I understand he did some work during his supper hour. However, I only wanted the percentage of the total population of the various provinces with respect to the figures he gave of unemployed employables. I wanted only a relative comparison. In other words, the figures you gave on second reading for the various provinces started with Newfoundland at 1,854, Prince Edward Island at 486 and so on. I only wanted to know what percentage those figures were of the total population of those various provinces, so I could have the relative comparison to find out how many would possibly be eligible under this bill.

Mr. Martin: I see. Except for Nova Scotia, it is .45 per cent, which was the figure agreed to at the conference as the official figure. It is what I indicated this afternoon. We had thought of 1 per cent, but 1 per cent would have left out Ontario and Nova Scotia completely. So then we lowered the threshold figure from 1 per cent to .45 per cent, which met the situation of all the provinces except Nova Scotia where, on the admission of all provinces, there was a special case.

Mr. Martin: I can simply thank the house for passing this very good legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall this bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Martin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.
