"You are the world to me," he whispered. "All right," she answered; "you can be the sun, I'm going to marry your father."

BEHRING SEA.

The matter of arbitrating the differences that have arisen between Great Britain and the United States regarding Behring Sea has progressed so far that the dates have been fixed for the submission of the case and counter-case of the respective nations with the arguments of counsel, and the representatives of the United States have been selected.
 It is true, as a general proposition that international arbitration would be useless as a system, for the reason that there could be no way of punishing bad faith on the part of the contestants and no way of enforcing the decrees of the tribunal of arbitration. But when two nations like Great Britain and the United States, with whom fidelity to an agreement is a cardinal article of the national creed, decide to submit questions in dispute to an impartial tribunal, it is certainly infinitely better than to run even the chance of an armed conflict. Some of the newspapers of the United States complain that that nation has permitted itself to be out-generaled in this matter of arbitration, but when they see the case of the United States, as it will no doubt be prepared and presented by the men who have been chosen they will probably alter their opinion.
 This arbitration will establish a precedent which may be followed to advantage, at intervals possibly long, but every case will add to the possibility of others. The example which will be set by the two greatest nations of the world cannot fail to exert some influence, and it must be on the side of a resort to peaceful means rather than warfare for the present generation in two such countries as France and Germany would consent to submit their differences to arbitration, but a new generation will soon be on the scene and in control, and it may see its way clear to follow the precedent set by England and the United States.
 The report comes by cable that the Imperial Government has appointed John Thompson one of the British arbitrators in the Behring Sea matter. Hon. C. H. Tupper, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been selected to prepare the case on the British side. All the appointments, made on either side, would point to a satisfactory settlement of this tedious affair, and it will probably not be very long before matters are amicably arranged.

AUTHOR SULLIVAN.

John L. Sullivan, the pride of Boston, seems determined to assemble the fragments of the Shakespearean adage that one man in his day plays many parts. He has attained a world-wide celebrity as an exponent of the noble and manly art of self-defense; he has done his best to elevate the stage and preserve the best traditions of the robust school of acting, and now he is announced he has just completed a book of 800 pages, which is a history of his own life, and in which are related wonderful tales of adventure told in language no less remarkable.
 This is certainly a laudable ambition, and nothing should be said or done to balk it. Every man's life has something of interest and wonder in it, and some of the most successful biographies the world has ever seen have been the plain and unbelieved accounts of the daily and weekly and yearly transactions of men not half so remarkable as John L. Sullivan.
 Sullivan has been a good deal of a traveller, and has been received with a distinction equalled by only one other American—and he, too, wrote a book—U. S. Grant. Wherever Sullivan has gone he has mingled in the very best society, at least the masculine portion of it, and has hobnobbed with princes and peers on the most familiar terms. Why, then, should he be neglecting the world the benefit of his observations and experiences in his own way, which, while it may not be strictly classic, will doubtless be forcible and impressive?

DEATH OF JUDGE SKINNER.

The sad drowning accident, which occurred on the Miramichi one week ago today, by which a highly respected and popular St. John man, Mr. R. C. Skinner, Judge of Probates, lost his life, was an extremely melancholy affair. The late Mr. Skinner was very widely known and much beloved not only in St. John but throughout the whole Dominion, and the blow to his many friends was a severe one indeed. It seems most unfortunate that accidents of this kind do so often happen, and although the victim of this sad accident was an excellent swimmer, yet it did not save his life under comparatively fair chances. Fishing parties cannot be too cautious in their selection of crafts on these streams where it is not the easiest thing to find too safe ones.

The rain of the past few days has retarded the growth of vegetation, and the appearance of Fredericton is every day improving. The beautiful trees are putting on their summer garb and the green fields of the surrounding country present a handsome picture. With such attractive features this city should be a rendezvous for thousands of tourists during the next three months—but there is something decidedly wrong here, or it could be a magnificent summer resort. This paper has several times called attention to the necessity of advertising this place, and as they are the ones who must derive the benefit of an increase of travel, they should exert themselves to their utmost. Nothing can be done without advertising and this applies most particularly to summer resorts.

It is stated that the applications for space in the machinery hall of the Great Columbian World's Fair, to be held at Chicago, are largely in excess of the amount of room provided, although the building and its annexes are on a much greater scale than those of any previous fair, not excepting the centennial exhibition held at Philadelphia in '76. The dilemma is to be met by constructing another special building in which only exhibits requiring the use of fire will be made. These and similar facts indicate that the Chicago fair is bound to surpass in every respect every previous exhibition held in the United States at least, and that it will probably be rivalled for very many years to come.

A Fine Company.

The amusement loving people of St. John are enjoying a real treat in the production given by the Summer Stock Company now playing at the Opera House in that city. The plays so far include the latest and best American successes, such as Shrew Lavender, "Kleptomaniac", "All the Comedians of Home" and "The Marquis". The company includes in its number some of the very fine people and in the regular theatre season in the States the combined salaries of such a company would be in the vicinity of two thousand dollars a week. From this it may be understood that the engagement of so strong a company cannot fail to give the greatest satisfaction from the accounts of the daily papers such would appear to be the case. The company includes among its number Mr. T. D. Frawley, H. D. Blakmore, Eugene Lapan, Miss Emma Madden, Miss May Hampton, Mr. William Lee, Miss Marion Carl, Miss Jennette Lowne, Mr. Hudson Linton, Mr. E. Hastings, Miss Harriet Ford, Mr. E. S. Mackay and Mr. George S. Fleming. Several Fredericton people have seen the show company and pronounced it the best they have ever seen in the province. Arrangements are being made for a visit from this company to Fredericton, sometime soon, and our citizens will undoubtedly show their appreciation by a most liberal patronage.

Will Astetic Cholera Follow?

Mr. Joe Howard's theory that one horror of a similar nature follows another to the number three, has a chance for confirmation in this coming spring if certain predictions prove true. First it was La Grippe, "A white" the French define it. Second came cholera by scores from its after effects, or from the many atmospheric changes of the past few months. Severe cases of pneumonia, bronchitis, latent catarrh, and general loss of strength were the results, until death was almost welcomed as a relief to the sufferers. So that this epidemic and its sequence has proved to be the most terribly realistic vision that ever infested this country. And now for number three; the theory is said to be advanced that the Cholera is very likely to find fertile soil in the generally debilitated conditions of our people resulting from the effects of such a winter and spring as has just past. Whether the theory of three will be confirmed in this case or not, remains to be seen. At any rate it behoves every active person still affected by any of the complaints due to these climatic changes and epidemics such as catarrh or bronchial troubles, to look well to themselves and see that every trace of the trouble is removed this present month; before the heat of summer still more debilitates their system. For years we have found that simple old remedy Johnson's Anodyne Linctum used as directed, to be the most certain remedy for all forms of lingering, summer odds, catarrh or bronchial affections, as well as preventive and cure for all kinds of summer complaints. It is absolutely certain that a remedy that has survived for eighty years as Johnson's Anodyne Linctum has done, must have more than average merit. We suppose there is not a family in this country but what has this good old fashioned remedy in the house. If there is not we advise them to get it at once or write the manufacturer I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet describing its various uses for the last eighty years. Now is the time. Cholera is dangerous, and an ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure.

NOTES AND NOTIONS.

Running Comments on Passing Events.
Sundry Ebulitions in Prose and Rhyms.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Wagging.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, who recently died in Glasgow, left $250,000 to charitable institutions in that city.
 Jane Hading, the famous French actress, receives on an average thirty manuscript plays a day from would-be dramatic authors.
 Miss Grant, the niece of the late president of the Royal Academy, has just completed a bust of Parnell, which is said to be competent authority to be an admirable likeness.
 The jewels of Mrs. Astor, widow of the multi-millionaire who has just died in London, are probably the finest in America. At times she has appeared in public wearing precious stones valued at between $50,000 and $100,000.
 Mrs. Lynn Linton has almost finished a new novel to be named, "In Haste and At Leisure." She has been working at it nearly two years. "In Haste and At Leisure" will be a study of the dramatic woman at school and college.
 Mrs. Cornelia K. Hood of Brooklyn, who is well known as a lawyer, writer and lecturer, is a woman of charming personality. She has soft, brown eyes, a wealth of dark hair, and is a gifted conversationalist. She is president of the Temple club, the only women's law club in New York.
 The woman in Memphis who was reported to have given birth to six children one day last week, sends word to the North that the story was a "false" and that she had twins—merely twins. Moreover, that she wouldn't have had more if she could. And this after the many pleasant congratulations of the press!

General Telematic Notes.
 Fay Templeton is to sing Dreagan in a grand production of Genesivie de Brabant next season.
 Guille is the tenor of Herliac's grand opera company playing in Chicago. The White Rose, a free dramatic production of "Woodstock."
 Annie Clark of Boston is going to re-tour on the stage.
 Margaret Mather intends next season to revive A Winter's Tale on an elaborate scale and to produce the play Alexander Duman. She will go to Europe this summer.
 A leading European music critic, Otto Neizel of the Cologne Gazette, refers to "Madame de Pochmann" as "that talented piano clown."

Since the announcement that Fredericton breakfast, dinner and supper on eggs and ham was to be discovered that Rubenstein lives on tea and cigarettes.
 A second Joseph K. Emmet Jr. comes into view. The actor of the original Fritz Emmet is Mrs. Denis Devoy of St. Louis. She has a son, Joseph Emmet Devoy Jr., but not Joseph K. Emmet Jr., who has had a play produced before his St. Louis friends, and seems to have astonished them by his mimicry of Emmet's songs, dialect, dances and manners. This newest Emmet will make his appearance on the stage in fall.
 Shakespeare's birthday was celebrated at the Forest Home with a dramatic entertainment which delighted the veterans of the institution. The programme included Othello's defense, recited by Frederick Robson; Fortia's quality of mercy speech by Mrs. Book's recitation by Julia Arthur, card tricks by Burr McIntosh, humorous remarks by Marshall Wilder, and other pleasing features.

ZALDIVAR THE FRIEND.

Charges Against the Central American Expeditionary Force.
 The Diario Oficial, of San Salvador, publishes a list of the crimes for which ex-President Zaldivar was about to be sentenced by the Supreme Court of the Republic of San Salvador. The charges against him were: that he had caused the death of four men and twenty women were hanged. Of the women three died as the result of the flogging.
 Rafael Zaldivar was born in Central America about 1838. He was educated as a lawyer and soon took an active part in politics. In 1870 when the government of Andres Valle was defeated by the Guatemalan army, led by General Rufino Barrios, the Salvadorian Junta de notables assembled in accordance with the capitulation of April 18th and nominated Zaldivar as provisional president and in May he was elected. His administration was progressive and enlightened. He fostered the planting of coconuts, rubber trees and the mango or American agave for the fiber industry, and founded an agricultural college and a model experimental farm.
 In 1883 he was re-elected, and the next year made an extended trip through the United States, England, France and Spain, and when he returned in September, 1884, held an important interview with the Presidents of Guatemala and Honduras relating to a proposed union of the five central American republics. When Barrios suddenly seized on Feb. 18, 1885, his famous decree proclaiming himself provisional chief of the restored Central American Union, Zaldivar acceded to accept the idea cheerfully and came near forcing President Bogran of Honduras to subscribe to it, but was compelled to desist owing to strong opposition from his own country as well as Nicaragua and Costa Rica. War with Barrios was at once declared, and on March 20th battles took place at Chalchupala and San Lorenzo, in the latter of which Barrios was killed. On April 14th peace was declared and on the 21st Zaldivar proposed to Barrios, President of Guatemala, the formation of a Central American union with a congress of delegates to meet on May 15th at Santa Rosa. The proposition was rejected, when Zaldivar turned over the government to General Figueroa and left for France, where he has since lived.

TO LOVE HIS THRONE.

Emperor William Must Soon Retire for a Regency.
 A despatch from London says: Emperor William of Germany is a very sick man. A hope must be prepared for starting news concerning him: a high personage connected with the court in Windsor Castle is authority for the statement that the Kaiser is suffering not only a bodily ailment but also from mental derangement.
 By a special courier who arrived the Emperor was informed that her illustrious grandson was in a fainting fit for four hours from 1 A. M. to 5 A. M. on Friday of last week, and that the court physicians at one time feared he would not come out of the ordeal alive. The greatest consternation reigned at Potsdam when these facts were made known to them, his sickness occurring in East Prussia.
 On Friday morning the physicians held a consultation and it was their recommendation, it is understood, that formed the basis of the courier's message received in London.
 Briefly, the medical men advise that if the Emperor wishes to prolong his life he must temporarily resign control of the Government and retire for a long sojourn to the Swiss mountains, in absolute freedom from state business.
 After the doctors had heard of their say the Kaiser sent for Chancellor Caprivi, and the latter suggested a six months' regency by Prince Henry. Caprivi made his suggestions with evident reluctance, as he is deeply attached to the Kaiser, but the very reluctance led the ruler to consider the idea favorably. He said he would try to take his projected yachting trip, and if this did not restore his health he would yield to a regency.

The conductors on the Sunset route, in Texas, are a very bright set of men. A traveler asked one of them: "If you are not going any further on this train?"

VICTORIA MILLS BEHEEN.

The Victoria Mills, two miles below the city were totally destroyed by fire Thursday morning. At a quarter to four o'clock, Mr. Frank Carr, night watchman, discovered fire on the roof of the boiler house, when he immediately emptied the water in the barrels that were above the flames, on the roof, and then gave the alarm. The fire main system had got under good headway and all efforts to extinguish the flames proved of no avail. A number of firemen from the city took one of the Victoria Mills, and it is expected that in three weeks' time the docks will be again clear of water.

SPORTING NEWS.

THE RING.

Jackson Defeats Slavin in a Most Brutal Fight.

The contest at the National Sporting Club London, between Peter Jackson and Frank Slavin was a battle for blood from the first round to the last. Both men fought like lions. There was no shamming, no hogging, no falling to escape punishment, no fear on either side from beginning to end. Old and expert sportsmen say they never saw a better fought a fight between two men.

While the fight on both sides was as fair as could be fought, it was nevertheless one of the most cruel and brutal. When Slavin recoiled his coup de grace he would not give in, but dared and tottering though he was, a single thought remained in his mind—the must not fall. Receiving one after another the terrific blows of his antagonist, and fainting and bleeding he staggered from one side of the ring to the other, but would not go down.

Jackson realising the pitiful condition of his opponent, thirly turned to the referee to ask: "Must I hit him again?" Each time the referee was obliged to reply under the laws of the ring: "You must knock him out to win."

Slavin started up against the ropes, and Sir John Kelly, whose humane instincts overcome even his regard for the rules of pugilism, held him with both hands to prevent his falling over among the spectators.

Twice Slavin went down so far as to see the floor, while his black opponent with arms down, kept waving his rising to let him down.

When the big Australian finally fell into the evening his face and body were covered with blood, and his form was quivering.

It was three minutes after his seconds dragged him to his chair before he gave any sign of life. His left eye was closed and he lay on the side of a man's egg, his left ear was split up for half an inch and bleeding profusely, he was out on both sides of his face, and his nose and lips.

Two Murphys Stag Each Other.

Last Tuesday night, Billy Murphy of New Zealand and Johnny Murphy of Boston, fought a final at the Pacific Athletic club for a purse of $1,250.

The betting was 20 to 12 in Billy's favor. He scored a knock out in a 115 pounds limit. Time was called at 3:28.

The Australian looked like a fall grown man, beside a pigmy.

He scored a knock out in the wind and caught a left one on the chin, but a long swing landed on Johnny's chin and he staggered, dropping to his hands and knees.

A second clip near the end of the round also sent Johnny spinning. From the third to the tenth round the fight was little more than a boring exhibition.

In the tenth round Billy scored two hard punches, which looked for a time like a finisher. In the thirteenth round the Bostonian scored an apparent knock out, but when the referee stepped in to separate the two men, Billy came back with his right hand.

The New Zealander was in a bad shape, however, and had the Bostonian more length of hand, he might probably have scored a final in this round. In the fourteenth round Billy cut the Bostonian's cheek with his right hand, drawing blood.

Round 15th to 20th were marked by give and take fighting, and the many clever rallies were loudly applauded by the spectators.

In the 20th round Billy Murphy was knocked down and for nine seconds he was clearly down.

But he came up bravely inside the limit and was able to keep the eastern boy off for the rest of the round.

The 10th round of the 20th was fine fighting, and in the 10th the referee, Sullivan, announced that as no work had been done for a quarter of an hour or more, he would postpone the battle, which will be resumed some time later in the month.

KATE VALLIANT.

With -- the -- Circus!

This was not at all the way in which Lucy had intended to make known her betrothal. The event was denuded of its proper importance by being mentioned in this hurried and cursory manner. But what could she have done other than she did under the circumstances? So she threw aside the coy and bashful part which she had picked up just previously, and gave Mr. Valliant to understand that there must be no indecision, concealment, or delving in the dark, as regards herself. She did it, indeed, because she over-valued him, and thought other people would estimate her the more highly now that he had selected her to be the sharer of his future life. It almost irritated her to know that she was a middle-aged woman, and he an elderly man. She felt as if injustice had been dealt out to her by Fate, in that she had not been allowed to meet him and win him when she had been young and better worth meeting and winning than she was now. In fact, she felt disappointed with her age, and wondered that she had lived many years already in the world, and despaired at the conviction that she could not expect to live so many more. Feeling thus, it was no wonder that she wanted to have her engagement known and ratified, in order that she might get all the honor and glory out of it that was to be had, and gather it all to herself.

It is not conducive to a man's self-esteem that he should have to ask his mother-in-law's permission to be happy, is it? Mr. Valliant asked, with that familiar genial manner of his, which was as apt to impress the majority as being the direct essence of light-heartedness and good feeling. "But that is the position I am in with my good friend Dr. Dacres. He will assume me that he will compensate me for stealing my daughter by giving me his sister."

He took Miss Lucy's thin, nicely kept pale hand in his as he spoke, and pressed his lips upon it, and Lucy felt that this was indeed the realization of some old, long past dream. To have her hand kissed and solicited by a tall, good-looking, strikingly gentlemanly man of the world, was blissfully bewildering to the dear old lady, who had never been the object of any but the most blundering, honest, straightforward and unprepossessing advances in her youth. For one wild instant she hoped that Dick would prove an obstructionist, in order that Mr. Valliant—Leonard, she was beginning to call him to herself—might do doughty deeds for her sake, or at any rate, show himself ready to do doughty deeds. But Dick was almost heartily disappointed. It seemed to strike him as absurd rather comical, that was all.

"Dear old soul!" he said affectionately to his sister Lucy, leaning across to hold his hand out to her. "I don't see why Mr. Valliant and you shouldn't jog along together, if it pleases you. I'm sure there's no just cause or impediment on your side, Lucy."

They were idle words, idly spoken to fill up a little conversational gap, and it seemed, to Miss Dacres at least, that it was mere tactlessness on Mr. Valliant's part to cavil and seem annoyed by them. But this he did, in an affectedly hilarious way it is true.

"I hardly see why my dear friend Dacres should lay the stress he does on there being no impediment to our union on the lady's side. Even in joke I should shrink from asserting that my only child was a hindrance to my forming a second matrimonial alliance! But as Dacres is himself about to remove that charming obstacle from my path, I hardly understand (as I said before) why he should allude to her."

"Good heavens!" Dr. Dacres cried, "I wasn't alluding to Kate, or you, or any one or anything connected with you, Mr. Valliant. I merely meant what I said, that my sister Lucy has no back numbers of her autobiography to tear up and destroy before entering on the new life with you."

"Fair Portia's counterfeits was in the lightest cabinet of all, I believe, Mr. Valliant. You're not paying my assent much of a compliment in your round about speech!" Miss Dacres interrupted. "Dear lady, come with Lucy and myself into my little salon, where we will discuss the future arrangement and disposition of my little nest of rooms. You will soon realize that compliments between us would be an attempt to pass the base metal of conventionalities where the real golden coin of perfect love and trust are already current. Dacres, my dear friend, I leave you in Kate's charge. Make yourself quite at home—ah, indeed, you are. My poor roof is nothing if it is not a home and shelter for those who are near and dear to me."

"Doesn't he speak beautifully?" Lucy whispered to her sister, as they retraced their little warmly-carpeted and carpeted hall together. "What a lucky girl—woman I am, after all, Maria! I hope he means all he says, for your sake, Miss Dacres replied, looking round scrutinizingly on the luxuriant shaven countenance which distinguished Mr. Valliant's upbushy. "Dear me! she went on, critically, as Mr. Valliant, craving their pardon for absenting himself to write a letter or two, left the sisters alone. "Dear me! looking round this room it seems incredible that a man could have chosen the things; it all looks too womanish for me."

"You never said that Mr. Valliant's taste before, Maria," Lucy said, with asperity.

himself, she thought; but the prevailing taste here isn't the taste of Kate's mother, who died a dozen years ago. But there, Lucy, I'll confess I'm not in the mood to judge Mr. Valliant to-day. We've lived together all your life, my dear, and Mr. Valliant has been the cause of the first secrecy there's ever been between us! If he makes you a good husband, I'll forgive him for that, though, Lucy, I'll forgive him for that."

"Why, Maria, you're crying! What is it you can't forgive him for? If his attentions to the family for my sake have misled you, you must, in justice, at least, excuse him from any intentional—"

"Oh! yes. His has been the harmless-ness of the dove, of course, my dear, and I'm only a silly old woman for having thought so highly of him that I didn't fancy for a moment he was teaching my only sister to deceive me."

"I'm sure you can't complain. As soon as we understood each other, we told you and Dick of our engagement."

"I trust he values you for yourself," Miss Dacres said, sentimentally. "My dear Maria, if worldly good had been his object he would have chosen you."

"If I had thought of marriage, I should have done so earlier in life, Miss Dacres said resignedly. Young people have a chance of fittingly forming themselves to live with each other, and of perching off their rough edges, and learning to give way. But the chances are sadly against middle-aged and elderly people, Lucy, and I hope you won't start with any sentimental delusion as to Mr. Valliant caring for you for your own sake! If you want happiness, my dear, confide to his comfort, and leave him to look after his pleasures himself. A man who swatches the back of his piano in an Indian or Chinese chair, and burns incense in his dining-room, knows what he likes and will have it."

CHAPTER XXV. AN ACCIDENTAL LIKENESS. If there was one thing Kate Valliant disliked more than being in company with her father at this period, it was being left alone ostensibly—of an open purpose left alone—with Dick. At Blinton all the regulation lovers' attitude was allowed them by Mr. Dacres. Dr. Dacres was invited there twice a week, and after dinner the cozily-furnished and lighted library was at their service. He was invited there which to come to a clearer understanding and appreciation of one another.

Other incidental visits he was permitted, or rather expected, to pay, and then fortuitous circumstances generally brought about to him, delightful result of a quiet half-hour with Kate. But to Kate these quiet hours and half-hours were not delightful. She spent them chiefly in wondering what she should think to talk about when she lived with him all day.

Idea had flowed freely enough, and words to express them had fallen glibly enough from her lips, in the old days, happy, youthful intercourse with Charlie Glanville. But with Dr. Dacres, much as she really liked him grateful as she really felt to him for his goodness to her, silence always seemed the better part for her.

Therefore, this day, when she was left to do the honor of her father's table, Dick, though she had suffered a qualm of apprehension on first hearing of her father and Lucy having agreed to be man and wife, she was almost glad of having the engagement to talk about. It was something definite, something of material interest to Dick and herself, something that could be surmised about, hoped about, feared about, doubted about, perhaps even gently ridiculed. In fact it was a topic about which she had longed to talk. Kate felt quite at ease as she reflected thus, and addressed him with an air of happy confidence that cheered and refreshed him.

"What did you think when you heard papa and Lucy had agreed to be Darcy and Joan? I longed for you to be there when he announced it to Miss Dacres and me—when he and Lucy came in late you know, Dick? It was killing! My dear child you are no longer motherless; this dear lady has promised to be my wife! I believe I should have laughed if I hadn't felt furious with him for reminding me of my dear mother whom he neglected, and if I hadn't remembered that poor peace-loving Lucy will have a time of it between him and Miss Dacres."
