ITS MANY TROUBLES.

Cushing's Pulp Mill and the Disadvantages it has had to Work Under.

More than an ordinary interest is taken in the affairs of the Cushing pulp mill by the people of St. John because of the encouragement given the promoters of the enterprise by the corporation.

When Mr. George Cushing thought of a pulp mill one of the first difficulties that presented itself was the scarcity of fresh water. The main from Spruce Lake that supplied the people of Carleton was only 12 inches in diameter, old and hardly sufficient to give an adequate quantity to the people of the West Side with the ever increasing demand caused by the extension of winter port facilities.

The story of the pressure brought to bear upon the city to go to large expense and lay another and much larger main to Spruce Lake need not be repeated here. It is sufficient to say when Mr. Cushing found that the necessary capital would be forthcoming he brought sufficient influence to bear to induce the city to guarantee him all the fresh water he required at a cost purely nominal.

The conditions of the formation of the company are simple. A large capitalist interested in the manufacture in England named Capt. Partington agreed to take two thirds of the Capital stock providing the balance was subscribed here. This was easily obtained and a number of prominent and energetic local men became interested in the success of the undertaking.

Mr. Cushing had chosen the site adjacent to the large mill property in Lancaster on Union point where the natural facilities could hardly be excelled. But not depending upon his own judgment he sought that Mr. Beveridge who was then engaged on the North shore in the manufacture of pulp. The report of Mr. Beveridge was most favorable and gave such impetus to the undertaking that he was commissioned to make a set of plans for a 20 ton mill. When these were submitted to the English captain and his advisers on the other side, they did not seem to suit; in fact for some time on the other Mr. Beveridge's report did not please Capt. Partington so he requested a man to look over the site and make an exhaustive report upon the advantages of position, the supply of material and all other conditions necessary to the success of a pulp mill. This gentleman, whose name is not recalled, did not prove to be the expert he was represented to be. He knew nothing of local conditions, found fault with the site and made some of the most amusing objections that could be imagined. He was given every opportunity to get information and returned to England only to make a report against the site.

Almost everything he saw in connection with the enterprise. The effect upon Capt. Partington was to make him hesitate if not decline to have anything to do with the business. Then it was that the incompetence and unfairness of the report was made manifest to him and he was so impressed with the justice of the representations that he withdrew his refusal and agreed to go ahead.

Up to this time Mr. Cushing had been at much expense promoting the enterprise and he was naturally anxious to see it in operation as soon as possible. The plans were made in England and although they had to be much altered and then sent back for approval the mill was constructed as Capt. Partington wished. Everything was English; the machinery was bought under his direction and from time to time he sent over expert men to oversee the construction, make suggestions and improvements.

Few indeed knew of the difficulties under which the local men worked. The expense of construction was large of course owing to the cost of machinery and that time but the expense of undoing the mistakes made by so-called experts was large too.

Capt. Partington was president of the company and Mr. Joseph Allison was president while Mr. George Cushing was managing director. Under this arrangement Capt. Partington was to take four fifths of the output of the mill and pay at the same rate for it as the company could get for the balance of the output on this side.

With a view to using the large quantities of slabs that were produced by the Cushing saw mill and which formerly entered into the manufacture of smaller lumber, the machinery in the mill in part at least was adapted for pulp wood of this size and shape, while the rest was fitted for ground wood, as it was not expected the mill would be able to supply sufficient for 50 tons of pulp a day. There was a great advantage Capt. Partington said at the start by using slabs. This part of the tree made better pulp in the first place and in the second was free from knots to say nothing of its proximity to the mill.

It must not be understood that all of this was "refuse" wood. Part of it undoubtedly was, but the large size of the lumber sawn in the mill and the fact that much of it was what is known as "dimension stuff" gave the pulp mill a great advantage.

There was no particular agreement PROGRESS bears between the company and Mr. Cushing the understanding being that the saw mill would supply the pulp mill with all the material possible and of course be paid at current rates according to the amount of pulp produced. It may be said that the saw mill also supplied the fuel for the furnaces.

The manufacturer of pulp was begun and apart from the difficulties that usually accompany the first efforts of any enterprise proceeded satisfactorily. Capt. Partington was here and looked things over and returned to England apparently satisfied.

Then sometime afterward to the surprise of those acquainted with the start of the mill Mr. Beveridge arrives upon the scene as the representative of Capt. Partington. Then the trouble began. Without considering his first report to Mr. Cushing and his glowing ideas of the possibilities of the site he could see no good in any thing now. The piece of wood was too large and it was not adapted for a good quality of pulp in his opinion. He made such reports to the other side that sharp correspondence resulted and the recent visit of Capt. Partington was the outcome. Before this however, the vice president, Mr. Allison, and the managing director, Mr. Cushing had received and Mr. Beveridge was allowed to have sole control.

Mr. Beveridge represented to Capt. Partington that the expenses were altogether too large; that Mr. Cushing was paying too much for coal for wood and for labor compared with other industries here. These statements were shown to be so contrary to the actual facts that a good deal of feeling was aroused. The price of enough pulp wood to make a ton of pulp is

WHO WILL HE BE?

The Office of Sheriff and the Many Candidates who are in the Field.

The office of High Sheriff for the City and County of St. John is one of the best in the gift of the local government. Now that it has again become vacant through the lamented death of Mr. Sturdee, much interest manifests itself as upon whom the position will fall.

Like all vacant public offices of course the names mentioned in connection with the place are numerous. Those most prominently mentioned are Hon. Mr. Dunn, Hon. Mr. McKeown, Mr. George Robertson, Mr. John A. Chesley, Mr. Rudman Allan and Dr. J. M. Smith.

It is pretty well understood that neither Mr. Dunn, Mr. McKeown nor Mr. Robertson are applicants, nor would they accept the position if offered, and this is not surprising. No doubt either one of the first two gentlemen could have the office if he desired it. Being members of the government their claims would probably have the most weight. Mr. Dunn's present position of Surveyor General, is a far better and more lucrative office than the Sheriff of St. John. It is not perhaps as sure as the latter, but by the look of things, Mr. Dunn can feel quite certain that the surveyor generalship is not in much danger for sometime to come. Then

Mr. McKeown as a member of the executive is doing well and being yet a young man he may quite naturally feel that politics has far better things in store for him in the future. He would hardly retire from his present bright outlook even to accept the sheriffship of St. John. Mr. Robertson it is said has stated emphatically that he is not in it. He has the building of the Dry Deck on his hands, an undertaking which he intends to carry out and he is determined to accept no position for the present at least.

The names then that the government has to consider, barring of course any dark horse that may creep up, are those of Messrs. Chesley, Allan and Smith. The claims of Mr. Chesley can hardly be said to be as strong as the others. Up to the last Dominion election he was known as a conservative and an opponent of the government. The liberals might well think that he has yet to work longer in their ranks before he should be looked after. On the other hand Mr. Allan and Dr. Smith have for years been strong supporters of the Administration and have worked hard in their party's interest. Their claims are certainly very strong. Mr. Allan particularly has fought hard for his party. He was a candidate in one of the local elections, and though his ticket was defeated, there is no doubt his popularity brought considerable strength to it. Besides all of the candidates who ran with Mr. Allan, namely Messrs. Trueman, Carleton and Hetherington have been well looked after in the past by being given good offices and so Mr. Allan's friends feel now that that gentleman should be considered. Mr. Allan's appointment would be a popular one irrespective of politics and he would make a good sheriff.

Dr. Smith it is said is urging his claims and has the support of Dr. Peggley. It is likely that the government will lose no time in filling the position, but until that time arrives, the office will remain one of much interest.

It is learned as PROGRESS goes to print that Mr. R. R. Ritchie has become an applicant for the position of Sheriff. His friends claim that the office should be filled by a lawyer and as Mr. Ritchie possesses the qualifications, his chances are considered good.

A SUCCESSFUL SHOW.

The Fair at Moosepath Large and Well Attended.

The fair at Moosepath on Tuesday was a success in every respect. The attendance was good, the exhibits large and well selected and the judging satisfactory.

The excellence of the vegetable exhibits was remarkable considering the season which has been thought so unfavorable. There are plenty of good farmers in St. John county and those who take an interest in all that is best in agriculture were well pleased with the interest shown by the exhibitors in the fair.

There were more cattle than at two or three recent shows of a semi-provincial character; the horses were well worth seeing and there was plenty of speed.

Mr. W. A. Jack who judged the poultry was an enthusiast in that direction and found that some of the men who cultivate large farms find some time to indulge in the hobby business. There were splendid specimens of all kinds of poultry and the people seemed to be quite as much interested in them as in the other exhibits.

All in all the directors of the association were to be congratulated upon the success of the fair which was on a larger scale than has been attempted for some time.

The late Fall
September has been a month of Wednesday and failures. The former have had nothing to do with the latter, or the latter with the former. They have just so happened to be together. The young people of St. John seem to have lots of faith in the City's future in spite of past disasters that might have resulted in having faith in the future.

PHILLS OF FASHION.

Latest Bridal Fashions.

There is a new departure abroad in wedding gowns. The robe is made entirely of white satin; the skirt has no lace at all upon it. On the back breadth are heavy garlands of orange blossoms, which are carried to the side breadths and meet long perpendicular scarves of chiffon coming from the waist and caught with a rosette, the pleats below being allowed to flow. The bodice is made high and pointed, with an important yoke a part of the collar band, and a pointed belt of lace. The elbow sleeves end in a deep double puff.

Brides are adopting the new fashion of wreaths, which they are wearing very far forward on the head like a chaplet. The lace is formed into a pouf at the back of the head, mingling with the bows of hair, and many are introducing the royal fashion of leaving the face uncovered during the ceremony.

The Fashionable Trimming.

Russian lace, it is predicted, will be one of the most fashionable trimmings of the season. The lovely cararia of Russia is an enthusiastic admirer of Russian lace, the kind that is made only by the Russian imperial family. Years ago a tribe of lace makers lived near Archangel, one made by hand, a deep yellow lace of lovely design and texture. The Empress Marie, wife of Alexander II. developed a passion for this lace, and being a woman of whims, sent for the lace workers, about 200 in all, and forced them to leave their homes and settle in Petersburg.

The story of their captivity and homesickness is a pathetic one. The older women died, one after another, of homesickness and age, but the younger, less submissive, were in perpetual rebellion. Many of them escaped and rejoined their husbands and lovers, and the emperor threatened to send the couples to Siberia, but the empress intervened. The girls who stayed in the palace married and were well provided for, but only a few of them are still living, and they are kept busy making lace for the czar.

The contemplated visit of the czar to France, has given a Russian turn to French fashions, hence the favor shown by the courtiers for Russian lace and embroideries which appear on many of the new fall gowns.

Handkerchiefs and Neckwear.

Some very pretty new ideas in lace-trimmed handkerchiefs are now on the market that are all right. These differ from the ordinary run of goods of this character in the style of lace trimming used. Heretofore vales and similar sorts have been the most used for this purpose, but now we have effects trimmed with honiton, a lace something on the renaissance order, and still other effects new to this class of work, says the Philadelphia Record. The appearance of the goods is indeed striking and the most casual observer can see at a glance that they are something out of the ordinary. These effects are confined principally to the medium and better grades, although a few are seen in the low-priced numbers.

The automobile tie which is going to be about the strongest thing in neckwear in the market this season, is really a new comer, having been only introduced the past spring, and of course, the styles for the fall show material differences from those brought out in the spring. Now it is all elaborately adorned effects, with many of them with heavy collar pieces; some gathered some plaited, tucked or otherwise adorned. Then, too, the ends are much more elaborate than were the summer ideas.

Trimmed with lace or else with a little openwork hemstitched embroidery they are certainly very attractive, and in all grades of silk, particularly, are going to be very much the vogue. Taffetas will possibly be the strongest of all the materials, but lighter Japanese effects. Louisiana and other silks will not be left out.

In colorings, the light shades, such as ink, blue, etc., handsomely trimmed with colored laces, are among the head liners, while black and white effects are not far behind. There really is an immense variety of these automobile ties, every manufacturer showing a score or more of entirely different designs, which, while they are the same in general contour, differ somewhat in the minor points.

Another class of neckwear that is going to hold over and be very strong is the lace and silk collars. In white taffeta, trimmed with ecru lace, this is an especially pretty article and admits of considerable elaboration. The silk is almost invariably tucked or otherwise adorned, the tucking, however, being far the most seen.

Pretty applications of lace, frequently cover the entire collar, while in other instances they simply border it. Then, besides these are the all-lace collars. These also are shown in a considerable variety of laces—renaissance, Arabian and other descriptions—but they are almost invariably ecru in shade.

Newest Collar Bands.

Pearl and diamond dog collars are to be exceedingly fashionable again, both for evening wear and for smart occasions, like weddings and receptions, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Many of the newest dresses have no collar bands, a little tight edging of lace finishing the chemisette.

Above these, of course, a dog collar makes a magnificent finish, but necklets of pearls are still extremely modish.

But the very newest thing in collar-bands is the lace one, studded with jewels, which may cost almost anything.

Pretty Nightgown.

A pretty nightgown is of finest white nainsook, decorated with a handsome collar of drawn linen work, lace edging and lace insertion. The front and back are enriched with tiny vertical tucks, and the shield is of tucks and lace insertion. The sleeves are finished with a wide flounce matching the collar, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Hints Of the Fashion.

The felt shirt waist hat is with us. Cut steel buttons are used with nice effect on autumn gowns.

What should we do without black velvet bows?

Gray pocketbooks and chatelaines are in modish taste.

The oxchild is a new and odd cut glass pattern in a circular spiral effect.

Handsome coffee services are in the Empire style.

Among fall colors, the greens and reds promise to have a decided vogue.

A touch of scarlet or a touch of white oft times proclaims the modishness of the walking hat.

Silver upon black is a chic combination for evening toilettes.

A travelling coat of fashionable distinction is of shepherd's check in black and white with strappings of black taffeta stitched in white.

The new flounced skirts and the many variations of flounced treble and double skirt effects are satisfactory if not popular.

The very narrow lingerie tucks now used on waists, negligee jackets and skirt tops have changed their name from 'welt' to pinch tucks.

The crepe de chine tie claims a large share of fall favor. One design is made in all the delicate tints, the ends being enriched with tiny diamond-shapes embroidered in white. This, too, admits of different ways of tying.

Another crepe de chine tie is made of varying tints, with a hemstitched border of contrasting color. For example, a plain white tie has a black border; another is edged with lavender, and one of plain black relieves its sombre effect with a border of white.

A new hatpin which will be worn with the fall outing hat is of sterling silver, in French gray finish. When it is thrust through the hat an art nouveau head in the French grey finish is found reposing on the crown.

A new chain for the watch or lorgnette is made of gold links, with large, artistically colored Venetian beads placed at regular intervals.

Another daintily conceived neck piece for the fall is made of two bands of ecru insertion. Narrow blue ribbon is interlaced along the edges of each band, finishing in a large rosette in front, the neck piece being similarly completed in the back, where it fastens. The top band of insertion separates in front, revealing a blue satin pleating, caught at each side with a tiny good buckle.

Economy In Stockings.

A woman who is very particular about her hosiery gives the following practical points as to the care of stockings:

Stockings too small are soon worn into holes.

Stockings too large make the feet tender.

Cheap black stockings are a delusion and a snare.

Thin stockings should be darned with fine wotking.

Try tacking a piece of net—old veiling of plain net will do—across a large hole; then take the threads in and out through this.

A good plan is to strengthen the knees and heels of children's stockings by darn ing them for some distance on the wrong side when they are bought.

It saves stockings to wear them systematically, each pair in turn.

As to washing stockings—

Don't use soda; have the water moderately warm for both washing and rinsing.

Wash lisle thread stockings in tepid water; use a little soap on the feet only. Rinse in hard water. Dry quickly in the breeze and press with a warm iron.

Silk stockings should be washed in tepid water with mild soap. Rinse them in several waters. Shake them well, and roll them in a cloth to dry, after pulling them into shape.

A Roosevelt Story.

Theodore Roosevelt, the new President of the United States, was not always the mighty hunter he is now. He has had his day of being afraid of his game. But that was many years ago, when he was a wee little boy in short trousers and used to play tag in Madison Square in New York.

Opposite the square on the east side stood a Presbyterian church, and the sexton, while airing the building one Saturday, noticed a small boy peering curiously in at the hall open door, but making no move to enter.

'Come in, my little man, if you wish to,' said the sexton.

'No, thank you,' said the boy. 'I know what you've got in there.'

'I haven't anything that little boys mayn't see. Come in.'

'I'd rather not. And the juvenile Theodore cast a sweeping and somewhat apprehensive glance around the pews and galleries and bounded off to play again.

Still the lad kept returning fence in a while and peeping in. When he went home that day he told his mother of the sexton's invitation and his unwillingness to accept it.

'But why didn't you go in, my dear?' she asked. 'It is the house of God, but there is no harm in entering it quietly and looking about.'

With some shyness the little fellow confessed that he was afraid to go in because the zeal might jump out at him from under a pew or somewhere.

'The zeal? What is the zeal?' the mother enquired.

'Why,' exclaimed Theodore, 'I suppose it is some big animal like a dragon or an alligator. I went there to church last Sunday with Uncle R—and I heard the minister read from the Bible about the zeal, and it frightened me.'

Down came the concordance from the library shelf, and one after another of the texts containing the word 'zeal' was read to the child, whose eyes suddenly grew big and his voice excited, as he exclaimed: 'That's it—the last you read!'

It was Psalm lxxix. 'For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.'

HEALTHY BABIES.

Watobul Mothers Can Keep Their Babies Healthy, Rosy-cheeked and Gappy.

Nothing in the world is such a comfort and joy as a healthy, hearty, rosy cheeked happy baby.

Babies can be kept in perfect health only by having at hand and administering when needed some purely vegetable, harmless remedy, and of all this class of medicines Baby's Own Tablets are conceded to be the best.

For constipation, colic, diarrhoea, simple fevers, sour stomachs, teething babies, indigestion and sleeplessness, these tablets are a really wonderful cure. You can give them to the smallest baby without the slightest fear. Dissolved in water, they will be taken readily. They contain absolutely not a particle of opiate or other injurious drug. They are small, sweet lozenges that any baby will take without objection, and their action is prompt and pleasant. They will tone up the whole system and make the little one as hearty and free from infantile disorders as any mother could wish.

Mrs. Walter Brown, Milby, Que., says: 'I have never used any medicine for baby that did him so much good as Baby's Own Tablets. I could not be without them.' This is the verdict of all mothers who have used these tablets.

They cost 25 cents a box. All druggists sell them or they may be secured by sending the price direct and the tablets will be forwarded prepaid. The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Dept. T. Brockville, Ont.

DR. A. W. CHASE'S 25c. CATARRH CURE... It is sent direct to the diseased parts by the Improved Blower. Heals the mucous, clears the air passages, stops droppings in the throat and permanently cures Catarrh and Hay Fever. Blower from All Dealers, or Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Toronto 2nd Bldg.

Sunday Reading.

A Cure for Spiritual Poverty.

The poverty of modern Christian life will never be cured until a far greater portion of time, until a far greater earnestness, is put into the hard and happy work of praying. It is instructive to read in the life of Frederick Maurice how he would often be engaged in prayer all the night through; and if everything were known, it would be found that all Christians who have made a deep mark have sought and found the Lord in a like manner. To live in the atmosphere of prayer is to live in the atmosphere of miracle, in the atmosphere of the New Testament, and it is in this way, and in this way only, that faith in the divine manifestation is kept alive and burning. When the strength, the joy, the peace, and the power of the Christian church are unimpaired, it is because her ministers and her people are proving that through Christ we have access in one Spirit to the Father, and confessing that Jesus is Lord in the Holy Ghost. Then there is no complaint of failures to attend Christian worship. There is a longing even on the part of those out side to touch the hands of those who have walked with the Most High. The brethren are able to speak to one another of what the Lord has delivered unto them, of their comprehension of the supernatural revelation. They shine with the divine splendor which fills each star, one star differing from another in glory. The Holy Ghost comes upon them, and the power of the Highest overshadows them. So confessing with their mouths the Lord Jesus, and believing in their hearts that God has raised Him from the dead they are saved.

Loyalty to the Pastor.

We would love to see a revival of loyalty to the pastor as pastor. Many love and respect him as a man, but care little or nothing for his office. The present age rapidly growing away from the old idea of respect for the cloth. The pastorate suffered in consequence. The young have not been trained to honor it as a heathen-ordained and God-given relation. It is true the minister should commend himself to the good will and respect of the community, and he generally does it; he is made of true stuff; but God's people should recognize and honor his calling, and stand by him as the ambassador of their heavenly King and Lord. They should speak of him and act toward him in a way to show their spiritual regard for him as a religious teacher, who stands in Christ's stead to beseech men to be reconciled to God. They should admit him to their homes in the name and in the spirit of the Master. They should remember him around the family altar as God's servant. They should train their dear ones to love and honor him, not only for his worth's sake, but for his office's sake.

Living Prayer.

After a prayer-meeting, at which a woman had been among those who spoke aloud in prayer, a person slightly observed, 'As for that woman, she could pray all night.'

'Yes,' replied a devout friend, 'and I have no doubt she has done so.'

This was a first-rate reply. Of how few would it have been spoken! Yet those who are much in prayer alone are those who pray to purpose in the assembly. You can tell the other sort, however ready their utterance. It is as per usual. It is parrot—to glib to be earnest too professional to be deep. This kind of prayer is a mist which does not wet you, a fire which does not warm you. You could sleep from 'Our Father' to 'Amen' under such a performance. Yet it is very good and proper. There is nothing the matter with it except that it is dead dead as the woman's child, which in either of the two mothers cared to own in Solomon's court. Oh for more living children! We mean true, crying, struggling prayers. These can only come from those who in private wrestle, and weep, and prevail. An occasional breakdown is very refreshing. To observe a heart too full to express itself with the tongue is most arousing to the soul.

Heavy Traffic.

The Intercolonial Railway Station is a busy place these afternoons. The number of persons who seem to be on the travel is very large. The westward traffic particularly has been very heavy, so large that it has been found necessary to put two engines on the Pacific express. The C. P. R. for the west on Tuesday was one of the biggest passenger trains that ever pulled out of St John all the cars being crowded. The opening of the Fredericton exhibition had much to do with the increase.

Do you believe you will succeed in having your man acquitted? asked one lawyer. 'I haven't given much thought to that phase of the question,' answered the other. 'But I am absolutely confident that we can have the trial postponed often enough to prevent a conviction.'

Who is the August Offender? Major MAUDE might be a great man, but his actions at the present time do not seem to be making him very popular in Canada.

Insolence, which the city of Ottawa as well as its Chief Magistrate has a right to resent, is apparently accepted by the Journal as the impulsion of a power whose judgment admits of neither criticism nor appeal.

Considerable interest and perhaps some uneasiness has been aroused of late by criticism, widely reported and discussed of certain well-known and popular church hymns.

Objections of this kind—and they are not made for the first time—are usually made by men who are better known for their literary attainments than for their religious experience.

It is not what the hymns are, but what they do that counts. Think of the hymns "Rock of Ages," "Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah," "Lead kindly Light, Jesus, Lover of my Soul" and so forth of others which have inspired the religious life of a whole English speaking people.

VERSE OF YESTERDAY AND TODAY

Co-ly Millinery. 'Twas perfection 't the hat that Geraldine wore, Grand a slave of millinery and wiles; The hat she wore for five dollars or more, And also such accessories.

But what matter? Fair Geraldine's hat was it? And the birds on the crows—beautiful pair— For to the public had once been; Their yellow glass eyes seemed on me so fairly glared, As though looking for pity or aid.

Some arches and; some sparrows chaff; A robin chirps sweetly; A couple turns to look and laugh; A merriment smiles discreetly. And I, in noting the embrace, A sigh would vainly smother, When Arabella smiles at me, And her hand has found each other.

God's silence waxes the world assuage— The willow, soft and still; 'Tis on his breast, or in his eye, Field, hamlet, grove and hill. Love whispers in the foliage, And in the sweetest breeze, That calmly floats in silver boat Above the peaceful scene.

The happiest heart is simple, None dreads to call it wise; It gets the beauty of its life With frank and truthful eyes; It has a knack of loving, Or, who's a fool about it, The wordlier people say!

A joke is no good unless even a blind man can see it. 'Tis no excuse for the torpor that he was 'rased on the bottle. Mrs. Trickett is very ill. 'What ails her?' 'She has been living on health foods for several months.'

'What is bad form?' 'It is doing things in a way other people have stopped doing them, or doing them in a way they have not yet heard of.'

'You hesitated when I asked you if I were the only girl you ever loved! Yet I couldn't tell from your expression was you wanted me to say no, or yes. Johnny—Mother, quick, send for doctor! Why—why—what's the matter? Who is ill? Mr. Algernon is going to die. He said he would it either would not marry him, and sister says she won't.

What was the trouble his time? I believe she got mad because he was so quick at remembering her age. That's funny. She quarrelled with him the first time because he forgot her birthday.

Mrs. Hook, mamma wants to know if you'll lend her your ball net this evening. Certainly. While you're at it, handle it intelligently. I will. Ever so much—Oh by the way, Wine. Yes, ma'am. Ask your mamma if she would like to borrow our perfume, candle, etc.

up has been putting some of the finishing touches on many of his past actions during the week. Tuesday and Wednesday were the days to seek for many happy events and quite a large number of persons were made happy.

One of the prettiest weddings that has taken place in St. John for some time past was celebrated Tuesday afternoon at St. James Episcopal church was the Rev. A. D. DeWolfe officiating in marriage Mr. Richard Dole of the Bank of New Brunswick, of this city, and Miss Nellie Y. daughter of Mr. Samuel T. Vaughan of Portland town.

Miss Vaughan was a bride in plain-colored cloth with velvet trimmings and hat of corresponding shades. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Jessie Vaughan, of Portland, N. S. Miss Vaughan was accompanied in a car of lawn material and a big team. The bride carried cream cakes, the big musical team carried. Mr. Gilbride, Jordan, supported Mr. Dale. At the ceremony a reception and luncheon were held at the residence of the bride's father. The happy couple left later in the day for Boston and New York on their honeymoon. HOPELESS CASES.

When the doctor leaves and says the case is hopeless, what remains to be done? Nothing; if the doctor's word is final.

One who has been cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Nothing is more sure than that thousands of men and women with diseased lungs, obstinate coughs, emaciation and night-sweats, have been restored to perfect health by the use of the 'Discovery.' Will it cure you?

It has cured in ninety-eight cases out of every hundred where it was given a fair and faithful trial.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser containing over a thousand and large pages is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of postage and mailing only.

A Ten-Thousand-Dollar Joke. A witty remark does not always result so satisfactorily to the perpetrator as in the case of the young curate who obtained a valuable living in the west of England by means of a pun.

The rector who held the living had died, and there were many applications for the place, which was worth ten thousand dollars a year.

The young man instantly replied: 'You are mistaken my lord; it is not for the dead they weep; it is for the living.'

An amusing controversy has sprung up in Paris over the gender of the 'automobile,' which the French Academy has solemnly declared to be masculine.

THINGS OF VALUE.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently located diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, a remedy obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use, the weakest systems are led into confidence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those who, from chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquillizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy natural functions of the system, thereby making a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite, Northrup's Quinine Wine of Toronto has given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate and earned by the opinion of scientists this wise approach nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Ko'loze's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as cases of dysentery, cholera, etc., frequently bring on summer complaints, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy at hand, which oftentimes saves great suffering, and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has a reputation for relief from all summer complaints.

EASING THE CHEST.

It is the cold in the chest that scares people and makes them sick and sore. The cough that accompanies the chest cold is racking. When the cold is a hard one and the cough correspondingly severe, every coughing spell strains the whole system. We can't stop it, but we can get over the cold, but we try everything we know of or can hear of in the shape of medicine. We take big doses of quinine until the head buzzes and roars; we try to sweat it out; we take big draughts of whiskey, but the thing that has its grip on the chest hangs on, and won't be shaken loose.

Admission to the White Plague Advance. Consumption is gaining headway. Why? Bad colds are allowed to run on neglected. Catarrh sets in, is not checked, and Consumption is the result. Why not use Catarrh's regular? It cures colds in a few hours, and no case of Catarrh can stand it. Catarrh's cures by the inhalation of medicated air which goes to all parts of the lungs, throat and breathing organs. A pleasant, certain quick cure follows the use of Catarrh's which is guaranteed under all conditions to cure Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption. 22c. and $1.00.

THAT'S THE PASS.

In Both Cases the Gratitude Was a Tribute to the "Gals."

You may have heard the story of how Commodore Vanderbilt issued a pass to a certain man, said the general passenger agent of a Western road as he fingered gingerly a defunctly tinted piece of paper.

No? Well, an early country acquaintance of the old Commodore, whom he had known since he became a millionaire, was in New York City, and thought he would pay his friend a visit.

On what do you base your request for a pass? he asked. Have you rendered the road any service, or is it indebted to you in any way?

No, replied the man, it does not owe me anything. I have not had any dealings with it.

Then why do you ask a pass? Well, I told you, I am going to Albany, and I don't want to pay for the trip if I can ride free. It just occurred to me that you might furnish me transportation.

My friend, remarked the Commodore, you are the first man who ever asked me for a pass and told me the simple truth about it.

I have had a parallel experience to that of the Commodore. The note is from a student at one of our high-toned country women's seminaries, one of whom I had no knowledge before the receipt thereof.

Yes, she replied, I would consider it a favor if you will be kind enough to furnish me with one.

Well, no, I do not think I ever thought I should have ever thought of applying for a pass. Had not several of my classmates been provided with them, and I do not see any reason why, when they had them, I should not have one too.

Do you know on what grounds they receive their passes? Oh, the father of one is a railroad director. He got his daughter her pass.

And your father? Oh, my money is in other kinds of investments. He is not a railroad man.

Well, you see, your case is a precedent for all those you have mentioned. Yes, I know it is, but I want to do away with at least some of the difference.

You would hardly think it reasonable to ask for transportation for the whole school year, would you? I never thought of the reasonableness. All I thought of was that unless I could get a pass I would have to pay while some other girls could ride free.

But if I should give you a pass you would be riding free and some other girls would be paying.

Oh, yes, but I do not care about that kind of a difference. I want to be always classed among the most fortunate.

Well, you are candid about it, anyway. I'll be that. Strictly speaking, you are not entitled to any pass, and I should turn down your application with a cold refusal.

THEY LIVE BY CRIME.

Not less than 100,000 of the good citizens of this broad land live by crimes which they do not commit.

Along the law-abiding and often most respected citizens of their several communities, they are supported entirely by their living depends on the energies of 250,000 other persons who commit the offences.

It is true that there is honesty among thieves this time cannot be as far distant as it appears that the country is rapidly approaching a time when all the inhabitants shall be malefactors.

In 1850 but one out of every 3,422 inhabitants was a criminal. In 1870 thieves and other evil doers had increased so that one out of every 1,171 inhabitants served a term in jail.

To look after these evil doers the United States maintains a police force estimated at 78,000 men, costing annually more than $90,000,000 for their support.

The average of 100,000 men engaged in catching, trying, guarding and watching these evil doers, reckoning at the present rate for the country of one to a family of five, is the support of 500,000 persons.

If these 100,000 men were not engaged in catching, trying, guarding and watching these evil doers, they could be put to other use.

When Royalty Travels.

A trip around the world is a less wonderful exploit nowadays than it once was but under certain conditions it is still unusual enough to attract a great deal of attention. Thus, if one chance to be a hardy seaman he will win a measure of fame for himself by circling the globe in a forty foot sloop, or if he be a duke his passage over the same waters in a royal yacht will awaken intense public interest both in himself and his journey. The sea man, however, sails for the glory of the thing; the duke sails for a more imperial purpose. His journey means something, and even his own pleasure is not without a sense of public duty. Thus the colonial tour of our future Prince George of Wales and the Princess Victoria Mary is in itself an event of importance because it is a very extensive tour, and doubly so because of the fact that our Prince of Wales to be will some day be our king.

House-Keeping on the Ocean.

But aside from all that such a tour as this means in an imperial and political way—for a royal visit within the bounds of the British empire is always a bond of union, so intended and recognized—there is much interest centring in the details of the journey itself. Kings and queens, princes and princesses, do not travel quite as other people do, although the same kind of steam power puts them on their way. Here is the situation; the heir apparent of the British throne and his gracious consort start on an ocean voyage of some thirty thousand miles; accompanying them is a party of two score lords, ladies, titled and untitled personages, and a servant list of twenty-seven; the trip is to last from the middle of March to the first of November, and some seven or eight colonies are to be visited; once on shore at any of these colonies, the royal party are to be guests of the King's faithful subjects, but provision must be made at home for the sea voyage. This is to be no ordinary journey, and preparations must be in keeping. The distance to be covered necessitates so long a time upon the water that the question resolves itself into one of housekeeping proportions, and for all practical purposes the ship is to be for half a year a royal residence afloat, with its own details of furnishing, cuisine, and social entertainment. This was the problem that faced the committee of arrangements—to put it in popular phrase, and how well they succeeded with it may be seen from a description of the floating palace that brought the royal party on their way to Canada. Millionaire yachtmen have furnished dainty crafts before this and made extended tours in them, but never before was such a vessel as this put upon the ocean.

Fitting Up a Royal Yacht.

When it had been definitely decided that the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York should make a colonial tour, the good ship Ophir was selected as the means of transit. She arrived home from a trading voyage shortly before Christmas, was docked, and an army of eight hundred men set about to transform her from a mercantile marine to a royal yacht. In eight weeks the metamorphosis was complete. The great black hulk had been changed to a dainty boat of white and blue, and her funnels to a light buff. Even the cordage was replaced by new. But the greatest change was inside, where the ship was practically re-made, and specially decorated and furnished from stem to stern. The Duke and Duchess interested themselves largely in the designs, and made many suggestions concerning the fittings and choice of colors. It was their delicate desire that everything should be delicate and refined in the different decorative schemes, and that British materials and British labor should be employed in every part of the vessel. Artistic simplicity was the keynote of the furnishing scheme from first to last, and a delicate green is the dominant color throughout the royal apartments. Everything is of the best British make; there is nothing in the ship on which foreign labor of any kind has been employed, and, consequently, the Ophir is a travelling proof of national artistic taste and ingenuity.

The drawing-room of the Ophir is a beautiful apartment, 1,200 square feet in area, situated on the promenade deck, and approached from either the private suites of the dining-room. This room is panelled in rosewood and satinwood exquisitely inlaid. The satinwood furniture is upholstered in a special design of blue silk damask, with a white pattern, which was selected by Her Royal Highness. The two shafts that pass through the room have been covered with engravings, and round the sides are hung a choice selection of black-and-white pictures sent from York House and other Royal residences. One of these, which is placed immediately outside the apartment, is of particular interest, and has, it is stated, never been copied. It is a beautifully drawn crayon portrait of Queen Victoria, showing her late Majesty as she appeared in the early years of her reign with the ribbon of the Order of the Garter. The soft camel-colored Saxony carpet, of quite new design, was specially woven.

Immediately aft of the drawing room on either side of the grand staircase, are two writing-rooms, the seats being of blue leather. Amidships, and therefore aft of the drawing-room and the dome of the dining-saloon, is the smoking-room, running the whole width of the ship. It is covered with green corduroy, and provided with four double writing-desks, in inlaid oak. The panelling and chairs are also of oak, the latter covered with a subdued shade of green Morocco.

A Magnificent Saloon.

The dining room is lighted by large square windows at the side and a lofty dome with stained glass. The dome has an outer roof of pi reed steel, and between the inner and outer roofs are electric lamps fitted to give a very effective and subdued light. Under the arched space at each end of the dome are the shields of Great Britain and the Australian colonies, supported by figures representing English and colonial industries. The floor is covered with the finest of Turkish carpets. The mahogany dining tables are designed in the Renaissance style, so planned that they can be arranged with one centre table to seat twenty six of the Royal party, or joined together, and set out in horseshoe fashion, to accommodate fifty six. They are also made to slide in or out, so as to enable their width to be increased to four or five feet, as may be desired. The armchairs at the main table have been made from an old richly carved Chippendale model, and are upholstered in red post-leather, as are the other thirty chairs and the lounges on either side of this large and handsome apartment. The walls are hung with a number of interesting pictures, and the decoration is in white and gold. This saloon also serves as concert-room and theatre, and the transformation can be effected in less than an hour. The after-part is admirably suited to the stage, which has been constructed in sections; curtains are handy, ready to be hung at the shortest notice; the trunk of the dome forms an excellent proscenium; there is a gallery for the band; and thus there are present all the essentials for a place of entertainment, with exits giving direct access by two stairs to the main-deck cabins.

The Private Suites.

The most interesting parts of the ship, however, are the apartments devoted to the use of the Duke and Duchess themselves, particularly as these rooms were arranged especially under their own supervision. Each of these suites consists of sitting, bed, dressing, and bath-rooms, and simplicity, elegance, convenience are their main features. For the Duke there is a bed-room with a white swing cot, above the head being a portrait of the Duchess and another of Queen Alexandra and Prince Edward of York, with the inscription 'Grannie and baby,' and in his private sitting-room, furnished in oak, are many pictures, including a good portrait of her late Majesty. The dressing room, with its onyx basin, and the bath room are models of purity and comfort.

The Duchess's bed room is in white. Her Royal Highness has her own clock dial with watch mechanism behind, which can be illuminated by her from her bed by electric light at a moment's notice. The bedstead is of silver plated metal; the hangings are of chiniz in delicate tones. In her dressing room, again, the basins and the ewers are of onyx, curiously translucent and beautiful, and there is no end to the little contrivances by of additional comfort. Her boudoir, which is perhaps the prettiest room of all, is in a subdued tinge of green, with walls and ceiling encased in white and finely figured satinwood furniture. Each room has an electric fan in the centre of the ceiling. All the private rooms are covered with Saxony carpets, of soft delicate green, with a simple marginal band of darker tint. They are laid upon a foundation of thick native cork, and the combination of the two semi-elastic surfaces produces a most agreeable and restful impression. The furniture in these apartments was specially designed and manufactured.

Servants' Room and the Kitchen.

On the bridge two cabins are fitted up as a sitting room for His Highness, the remainder of the bridge house being devoted to the captain, the commander, and the navigating officer. So much for the royal apartments; of those set aside for the servants are suitably accommodated so as to be readily within call.

The kitchen arrangements of the Ophir are of the best, and the workshop of the chief cook and his staff is fitted up in a way that would make envious almost any housekeeper on shore. The stock of provisions that was laid in at London, and replenished from time to time en route, was of course on no such extensive scale as the larger equipment of a great passenger steamer, but it was selected with special care, and in this respect the house-keeping arrangements of the Ophir are of a model kind. Perhaps not the least important feature of the ship's furniture are the stalls on one of the upper decks which were erected for the accommodation of two cows, in order to provide fresh milk during the voyage.

In short, the Ophir is inside and outside a picture of a boat. She is an ideal craft for the purposes of a royal tour, and her decoration and furnishing, as described above, make her quite unique among the ships that sail the sea. The entire trip is, indeed, unique; the world has never before seen just such an event as this, and its real significance will be appreciated at some future day. Just now, loyal Britishers are taken up with the picturesque side of it.

The Ophir's Passengers.

The party which accompanies the Royal Highnesses of Cornwall and York on their tour of the colonies is a most distinguished one. It numbers nineteen altogether, with about twenty-seven servants. There are three ladies in waiting, one lord in waiting and head of the household, a private secretary and an assistant private secretary, two equeiries, four A. D. C.'s, a representative of the Colonial Office, the naval officer commanding H. M. S. Ophir, two artists, a domestic chaplain, and a medical man.

Prince Alexander of Teck, who travels with the royal party, is a brother of the Duchess of Cornwall and York.

Lady Mary Lygon, one of the ladies in waiting, is a sister of Earl Beauchamp. She was appointed to the post she now holds in 1895. Lady Katherine Coke another of the ladies in waiting, is wife of the Hon. Henry J. Coke who is a brother of Earl Leicester. She is a daughter of the Earl of Wilton. The Hon. Mrs. Derek Koppel, the third lady in waiting, is a daughter of the second Baron Safford.

McKinley and His Cigar.

How He Got a Smoke in a Town of the strictest morality. Oberlin, Ohio, in the centre of the Connecticut Western Reserve, is probably the most puritanic spot in the entire United States. A large university gives the town its being, and so jealously have the college fathers guarded the morals of their young people that not only is the sale of liquor prohibited in the village limits and for miles around, but the tobacco, whether for smoking, chewing or snuffing, is unknown in the stores, with playing cards are even scarcer than the proverbial hen's teeth.

Once Mr. Monroe, formerly a Congressman from the Oberlin district, was the leading R-publican of the village, and usually entertained political orators of the party when they visited 'the city.' During Mr. McKinley's first gubernatorial campaign Prof. Monroe had the pleasure of entertaining the candidate. After dinner on the evening preceding the address Mr. McKinley took a cigar from his pocket, and casually remarked:

'You don't mind if I smoke, do you, professor?'

Mr. Monroe was aghast. He didn't wish to appear inhospitable, yet dreaded the almost certain social ostracism due to following the discovery of a smoker on his piazza, even be he the prospective Governor of the great State. He compromised by conducting Mr. McKinley to the second floor, through a long hall to a back balcony where, safely screened from public view, the weed was enjoyed. As the smoke curled upward instinctively Mr. M. Kinley looked about him for cuspidor.

'There isn't such a thing in town,' said Prof. Monroe.

A coal bucket was finally impressed in to service as a compromise.

Two days after the Oberlin meeting Mr. McKinley spoke at East Liverpool, the great lottery centre. Chancing to mention the Oberlin experience to his friend Col. John N. Taylor, the proprietor of one of the big lotteries, he said:

'By the way, Taylor, just for a joke send a gross of your china spittoons to Prof. Monroe. Don't tell him where they came from or he'll suspect I had a hand in it.'

Following the suggestion Col. Taylor rated up an assortment of really beautiful chinaware and sent it to Oberlin. A year later Mr. M. Kinley was again Mr. Monroe's guest. Forewarned and consequently forearmed with a liberal supply of good Havanas, he again sought the vine-clad balcony. Lighting his cigar, he said, with a twinkle of his eye:

'You haven't a cuspidor in town yet, have you, Monroe?'

'It's mighty funny,' was the response, but a few days after you were here last year some one sent me a whole crate of those things. Of course, I hadn't any use for them, and they were such nice china and so prettily painted that my wife used them all for flower pots. There isn't one about the house now in us.'

HE DRANK ALONE.

After Pledging His Seat-Mate Not to Yield to Temptation.

He got on the train at a way station and sat down beside me. He long, was lean and lanky. First he looked out of the car window and then at me. Settling deeper into his seat he suddenly remarked:

Dry d-y, eh?

I merely nodded my head affirmatively. Do you drink, young man?

I said I didn't mind if I did.

He said he would mind, though. Furthermore, he continued, I am surprised that a man of your modest appearance, with eyes denoting Christian breeding, a forehead denoting good moral character and a mouth too pure to withstand the taint of intemperance, should be willing to indulge in the flowing bowl.

I could only quirm about in my seat and prepare myself for an 18-carat temperance lecture about to be thrust upon me.

'And, young man, do you know that hundreds of homes have been devastated by strong drink?'

I knew.

'Do you realize that the idols of manhood have been shattered and wealth squandered by liquor?'

I realized.

'Are you aware that wine is a mocker and drink is the national curse?'

I was aware.

'Are you cognizant of the fact that every glass is the foundation stone of intemperance?'

I was cog.

'Do you know that wines, liquors and cigars are the advance agents of inebriety? And young man, for the sake of your parents, and the good of your wife—'

if you have one; for the respect of your children—if you have any. I want you to make me one promise—

'And that is?' I hurriedly interrupted, willing to promise anything, for his words had aroused me, and I knew I had been grovelling in the dark and that every drink was a blot on the sunshine of my home.

'I want you to promise me that you will not let another drop of liquor pass your lips.'

'I won't,' I almost shouted, extending my hand as a seal to the faithful adherence to my promise.

'And you will not yield to temptation?'

'I will not.'

'And you will not ask for a drink should you see some one else imbibing?'

'I give you my word of honor I will not.'

'Thanks, young man, thanks,' and with that the grovelling, contemptible, long, lean, lanky hypocrite put his hand to his side pocket, brought forth a pint flask of whiskey and drank to his heart's and stomach's content, while I sat up like a buncoed commutator amid the giggling occupants of the train.

MILLARD'S HOODOO VOTES.

Has Voted for But Three Presidents, and 11 Were Assassinated.

Thomas Millard, a Boston travelling man, says that never again will he vote in a Presidential election. He considers himself a 'hoodoo.' Mr. Millard and two or three other travelling men, all bound for St. Louis, were waiting at the Seventh St. station, Louisville, for their train. In talking of the assassination of President McKinley, Mr. Millard said:

'In all my life, and I am 60 years old, I have voted for only three Presidents, and, gentlemen, I swear to you that I'll never vote for another.'

'What's the matter? Can't you pick winners?' laughingly queried one of the crowd.

'I voted for Lincoln and he was assassinated. The next man I voted for was Garfield and the same thing happened to him. McKinley was the last one, and you know what befell him.'

'Everybody seemed interested in the travelling man continued: 'That is only half the story. I never have cast but three votes. When Mr. Lincoln was first elected I stayed away from the polls. Then I joined the army of the North and was wounded. When he was elected for his second term I cast my ballot for him. He was assassinated. Well, I didn't vote for several years after that. There was always something that didn't suit me. One time I didn't like the candidates. But when Garfield was nominated I was enthusiastic. He was a personal friend of mine and I went to the polls early. That night I was the proudest man in the country; it tickled my vanity to know that my friend was elected. Then he was shot. I began to think. Only twice had I voted and both times my favorites were murdered. Of course I didn't hold myself responsible.'

'On the day of the next Presidential election I was out on the road. The next time I was displeased with something or other and did not vote. So it went until last November. Things were pretty warm all over the country and I thought I'd give M. Kinley a little lift. Then I thought of what had befallen my two other candidates and I debated a long time whether I would vote, but I finally decided that I was a fool to think of those things and I voted just to show myself that I had overcome my superstition.'

'And the first thing I said when I heard that the President was shot was: Don't you vote again.'

DEAN, CITY MARKET,

ran away from her home with a scoundrel who afterwards left her and her child to starve, while he went to prison as the thief and impostor he was. She died of a broken heart, spurned and neglected by all her relatives, excepting my mother, who had loved her when she had been girl together, and who, after her death cared for you. You have lived always upon our charity, you owe me for every morsel you have eaten, every garment you have worn, since your mother died in a garret twenty years ago."

He did not speak loudly, but his voice rang out clearly in his fierce intensity, and the grim story seemed all the more terrible to Mayla, because of the tone in which it was spoken.

It was one which carried conviction with it; she fought against the dread that possessed her and yet she could not conquer it.

Deep in the heart she felt there was truth in every word he said, even while, with white lips, she murmured—

"The proof. You must give me some proof."

He laughed again, and flung her from him with a half-contemptuous gesture so that she staggered back and sank heavily upon a couch.

All the time her eyes were fixed upon him in a fixation of terror.

She saw him cross the room to an old bureau, which stood in the recess by the fireplace, and there was a little delay as he took his keys from his pocket, and searched for the one he wanted.

It was found at last. A particular drawer in the bureau was opened, and from it he took an old letter which was still in the original envelope.

The paper was yellowing with age; the post-mark bore a date of twenty years before, and it was evident that the hand which had traced the words had been trembling and weak with illness.

"Read this," he said curiously, and he flung the letter into her lap. "That was written by your mother on her death-bed. You can hardly doubt me now."

"My Dear Cousin"—so the letter began—

"My father, my brothers, and all my old friends have cast me off, and I should not dare to write even to you if I were not in the last extremity. Fanny I am dying, dying here alone, and my little child is crying for food while I am writing this. When we were girls together you loved me; will you, therefore, be good to my little Mayla when I am gone? Save her, care for her, and I will pray that, when she grows up, she may pay the debt I owe to you. I tell her nothing of her father; she must not know of him. Only, as you hope for mercy yourself, be merciful to her and help her."

"NEEL!"

That was all, but from within the letter a small slip of folded paper fell, which had been written by the same hand, though it had evidently then been weaker than before.

"To Mayla, my child."

That was written outside, and within was the address the other letter bore, with a date three days later.

"MY DARLING CHILD—I am writing this almost at the moment of my death, so that, when you are old enough to understand, it may be given to you, and you will know that my last thoughts were of you. I must leave you, my dear one, but my last hours have been made happy by the knowledge that your future will be cared for. I can write no more; only, when all is told to you, as some day it must be, try to realize how great a debt I owe to Mrs. Maine, the one woman who still was kind to me, and if ever, by any sacrifice, you can repay her or hers, I call upon you from my grave to do so. Good-bye."

"YOUR LOVING MOTHER."

It was a letter which few could have read unmoved, and Mayla's eyes were overflowing with scalding tears ere the last words were reached.

There was a moment's silence, then she knew that Simon Maine was standing tall and grim, before her.

"You have read the letter?" he asked curiously.

She bowed her head in answer—she could not trust herself to speak—and she continued in the same hard, cold tone.

"Then you can guess your mother's story?" he said. "What I have told you is the truth, and now the time has come when if you will, you can pay the debt. I can tell you no more now; only, I swear to you that what I say is the truth. If you will be my wife, that old debt of the past will be more than repaid."

Again it was his voice rather than his words, which carried conviction with it, and as she heard she started to doubt.

She rose to her feet slowly, one hand pressing her dead mother's letters closely to her breast, while, with a trembling gesture, as she held her other hand out to him, she said slowly, "I must obey her," she said slowly. "If this will pay the debt, I dare not draw back. I—I—will—be—your—wife."

Slowly, yet clearly, although her voice trembled, the fatal words were spoken, and as he looked at her then, Simon Maine knew she would keep her promise.

her breast.

"O! mother, mother!" In a wild, half-strangled cry the words broke from her trembling lips. If only heaven had been merciful and let me die with you so long, long ago!

CHAPTER III. HER DARK ORDEAL.

Leonard Frankford had gone back to the Manor that night half determined to give up Mayla for ever, because of the social gait between them.

All through the night indeed he hesitated; but when the morning came the time of doubt had passed over.

In the hours of darkness he had weighed his love in the balance, and he knew that it weighed more than the social disgrace.

He was the victor; the victor, the victor! He would not let his love be quenched in the sea of social disgrace.

It was the quietest of all the things that he had done, and he had done it with a calmness that was almost surprising.

He had done it with a calmness that was almost surprising. He had done it with a calmness that was almost surprising.

He had done it with a calmness that was almost surprising. He had done it with a calmness that was almost surprising.

Court Presentations.

Since it is the pleasure of King Edward VII. and his lovely queen to revive gorgeous court ceremonies, more than ever it will be the desire of all the mothers to have their fair to flout their beautiful costumes to one brilliant hour at these dazzling functions.

Mabel Haskell, describing the delightful and different attending a court presentation at Buckingham Palace, says in the Home Companion that, while it is a desirable privilege and a patent of respectability, it is no longer a mark of social standing nor a privilege attending a long pedigree.

A certain great lady said in court the word is "dash" and there is an awfully springy stillie in the throne-room when drawing room is being held. Everyone is right with dignity, and etiquette is carried out to the finest degree. No laughter, no conversation, nothing but the rustle of silken robes, and the voice of the lord chamberlain as he announces in grand stage tones the name of the lady moving toward the throne.

No one is ever presented at court without a thorough training for the event. To make a mistake is a serious matter, and usually the name of a blunderer in the royal presence is erased from the books. Every step, every motion, is prescribed by the debutante over and over again before the great day.

The slow gliding step, the profound courtesy before their majesties, and the dignified movement of the mass of court trainees are things of serious moment.

A fencing scene.

His face a picture of grief, Senator Hanna sat dejectedly in the corner of the Arlington hotel the other afternoon after the funeral services. Heavy lines etched his usually placid and smiling face. His eyes were sunken and lustreless. Efforts of senators to cheer him were unavailing.

Without even a glance of interest he shook hands with them as they came up. To him it was not only the funeral of the president, but of a very dear personal friend. He took no interest in the conversation of senators who sat among his closest friends.

As he passed out of the corridor he met Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York, formerly secretary of the interior.

Without a word the two men threw their arms about each other's necks, and tears streamed down their faces.

"I'm glad to see you," exclaimed Mr. Bliss.

"Terrible funeral," sobbed Senator Hanna, an together they walked out.

Since the death of President McKinley Senator Hanna has aged perceptibly. His step is slow and halting and he leans more heavily upon the stout staff he carries. His long knee is a sad thing to see, and he is not the man who was once so full of life.

He is not the man who was once so full of life. He is not the man who was once so full of life.

How any man may quickly cure himself after years of suffering from sexual weakness, lost vitality, night losses, varicocele, etc., and enlarge small weak organs to full size and vigor. Simply send your name and address to Dr. L. W. Knapp, 2009 Hull Bldg., Detroit, Mich., and he will gladly send the free receipt with full directions so that any man may easily cure himself at home. This is certainly a most generous offer and the following extracts taken from his daily mail show what men think of his generosity.

"Dear Sir:—Please accept my sincere thanks for your recent date. I have given your treatment thorough test and the result has been a credit to you. It has completely traced me up. I am just as vigorous as when a boy and you cannot realize how happy I am."

"Dear Sir:—Your method worked beautifully. Results were exactly what I needed. Strength and vigor have completely returned and enlargement is entirely satisfactory."

"Dear Sir:—Yours was received and I had no trouble in making use of the receipt as directed and can truly say it is a boon to weak men. I am greatly improved in size, strength and vigor."

All correspondence is strictly confidential, mailed in plain sealed envelope. The receipt is free for the asking and he wants every man to have it.

busy man these days Dr. Stockton is in demand it would seem and it being impossible to be in more than one place at the same time the moralists have been the persons who have to wait.

Nothing more definite is known about the charges, but it is said a large number have been summoned to give evidence and some rather spicy testimony is expected. All parties now seem to be in earnest and proceedings when they get started will no doubt be interesting.

Mr. Tweedie says that the case must go on next week and he will hear of no more postponement. This is a good stand to take for the sooner these affairs are cleared up the better.

THEIR LAST WORDS.

'Good bye; good bye.' President McKinley's last words were: 'It is God's way. His will be done.'

The President died with resignation, but still thoughtful of others. His dying words indicate that his wide sympathy with his fellow-men was genuine and heartfelt.

In the majority of instances, writes John Timbs, F. S. A., 'The ruling passion strong in death is found to be exemplified.'

Charles II., although his assumed air of frivolity remained with him until near the last and he apologized for being such an 'unconscionable time in dying,' grew serious at the end.

Many men have died with religious sentiments on their lips. 'Lord receive my spirit,' were the words of Cromer at the stake, of Hooper, of Ferrar, and of G. Herbert.

'I saw one fellow do a thing that knocked me. He stopped half way across a timber not over eight inches wide, took out his matchbox, stood on his right foot, and struck a match on his left heel.

'Why didn't he wait to light his pipe until he got across?' The foreman shook his head: 'I give it up. He just happened to think of it then, and he did it.'

Alphonse Duhamel of Paris has made a time piece that stands twelve feet high, and is composed entirely of bicycles or their composed parts.

The framework is a huge bicycle wheel around which are arranged twelve ordinary sized wheels, all fitted with pneumatic tires.

A rim within the large wheel bears the figures for the hours, the figures themselves being constructed of crank rods. The hands are made of steel tubing, which is used for the framework of bicycles.

The minute strokes on the dial are small nickel-plated spokes. The top of the clock is an arrangement of twelve handle-bars. The clock strikes the hours and the quarters, bicycle-bells of course making the chimes.

The pendulum is made of a bicycle wheel and the pendulum rod of various parts of a bicycle frame.

It is said that the clock, besides being a curiosity, is an excellent timepiece. It is to adorn one of the public buildings of Paris.

He summoned a clerk and told him to telephone to the bank to inquire if he had five thousand dollars on deposit, as he desired to contribute that sum, if possible, to a worthy object.

In a series of articles on 'Careers of Danger and Daring,' in the St. Nicholas, the description of the bridge builder is mostly confined to the workmen on the great bridge over the East River, New York.

'See those timbers right at the top that come together in a point? Well the boys walk those cross timbers all the time. It's nothing on the ground, but up there, with the wind blowing—well, you try it!'

Prizes Catch many women. What do prizes amount to? Not worth considering. Cannot pay you for poorer work, greater expense and risk to clothes, which you get with an inferior washing powder. Any woman who uses PEARLINE has a prize, and will save enough to buy more and better knick-knacks.

BENUMBED LIMBS. A TROUBLE RESEMBLING PARALYSIS IN ITS EFFECTS.

The Victim Loses strength in his Limbs and is Unable to do any Work. The Story of a Former Sufferer, Showing How This Numbness Can be Overcome.

There are few men in the city of Kingston better known than Mr. H. S. Johnson the genial proprietor of the "Bon Ton" barber parlor, on Brook street.

For several years he had been in failing health, being obliged to give over the entire work of his busy shop to his assistants.

But this spring his health is so wonderfully improved that his many friends have been congratulating him on his restoration.

In conversing with a reporter of the Whig recently Mr. Johnson had the following to say concerning his illness and cure:—'For many months I was practically paralyzed.

Numbness took possession of my limbs, especially of my hands. From my hips down my body was without strength and despite all that I could do, I was unable to keep my hands and feet from becoming icy cold.

My appetite left me, and soon I had to give up work. My general health was of course failing, and I lost flesh. As you know, I am sixty-five years of age, and when a man loses strength at that age, it is a hard thing to build him up again.

I tried several kinds of medicine, but they all failed to benefit me. The doctors whom I consulted were also unable to help me. I was discouraged when some one of my old customers advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

At first I refused for I did not believe any medicine on earth could help me, but at last friendly persuasion had its effect, and I bought a supply of the pills and began taking them.

I soon found that they were benefiting me, and continued their use until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made me a new man. I feel stronger and better day by day; I am gaining in weight, and once again am able to attend to my old customers without the least trouble.

I consider the pills my best friend and would not be without them.' Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the friend of the weak and ailing. They surpass all other medicines in their tonic, strengthening qualities, and make weak and despondent people bright, active and healthy.

These pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or can be had by mail, post-paid, at 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The national game is frequently productive of 'home runs,' and one of the most interesting of this variety of tallies was made by a Philadelphia batsman in Chicago.

He hit the ball squarely, and drove it over the right field fence. It entered the window in the second story of a house, rolled down the back stairs into the kitchen, and lodged in a pan of dough under the stove.

The natural inference is that the family partook the next day of ball bearing bread.

'I see that a fortune teller has informed Sarah Bernhardt that she will live to be 90. I suppose about that time she will insist upon playing Juliet.'

When Rheumatism Doubles a Man Up physician and sufferer alike lose heart and often despair of a cure, but here's the exception. Wm. Pegg of Norwood, Ont., says: 'I was nearly doubled up with rheumatism. I got three bottles of South American Rheumatic Cure and they cured me. It's the quickest acting medicine I ever saw.' Sold by A. Chipman Smith & Co.

Heart Relief in Half an Hour.—A lady in New York State, writing of her cure by Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, says: 'I feel like one brought back from the dead, so great was my suffering from heart trouble and so almost miraculous my recovery through the agency of this powerful treatment. I owe my life to it.' Sold by A. Chipman Smith & Co.

VOL.

The outbreak of the war has stirred the public mind to a new sense of the value of the ambulance. It is now recognized that the ambulance is not only a means of transport, but a means of saving lives. The ambulance is now a part of the military equipment, and its use is becoming more and more important.
