WAS BURIED ALIVE FOR NEARLY ONE HUNDRED HOURS

London, Ont., June 30.—The rescue of Joshua Sandford from a living tomb forms the most thrilling of incidents. After a struggle lasting one hundred hours, except a few minutes, the young well digger was brought safely from his horrible prison, on the Skelly farm, near Paris, at 5.35 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Without a cheer, or other than the slightest show of emotion on the part of the assembled hundreds of people, Sandford was raised above ground, into the pure fresh air and warm sunlight that for days had been denied him. The doctors had enjoined that silence reign. But two and a-half miles distant, in the town of Paris, joy bells rang and whistles screeched and the whole countryside gave vent to long pent-up feelings.

"Yes, Sandford will get better," said Dr. Dunton, late Sunday afternoon. He had just come from the sick room at the Scott farm-house, and though his remark was not uttered in tones of the most perfect confidence, still it was good news. The brave Sandford is a very sick man. He requires the greatest care, and probably will for some time to come. This he will have. Mr. John Penman, the Paris woolen mill owner, has ordered that Sandford want for nothing. Nor would he, in any event. Trained nurses and the closest medical attention are constantly at hand. The patient rests in bed in the cosy guest chamber of the old stone farm-house, literally surrounded by loving hands and hearts, all moving on tip-toe and speaking in whispers, all eager to do something. Only the patient's nurses see him regularly; his immediate relatives have visited him once or twice.

THE RELEASE.

For more than twenty-four hours, Sandford's release had been looked for. His rescuers had been in close touch with him. They had been talking to him and he to them. They had been slowly, and they believed, surely, effecting his release. A provokingly small thing was preventing the consummation of their desires. The left foot of the imprisoned man remained stoutly held. Try as they would, the brave men struggling in aid of their unfortunate fellow could not work the foot free. Sandford himself worked at it. But all to no purpose. The thing became disheartening. Extreme measures were talked of. One was to place a harness about Sandford and pull him up with the power of a steam engine. Another was to break the leg and reset it immediately upon release being effected. Yet another was to perform an amputation. While some minds were engaged with these thoughts, others ran in a different and happier direction, and the scheme was devised that brought Sandford to the top, uninjured, save from the effects of his long and terrible imprisonment. Not a bone in the man's body was broken. His face was scratched and scraped and a cut on the head had bled some. But otherwise there were no marks upon him. His hair had not changed a particle, though surely here was cause if one's hair will turn white in a night. The man was pale and possibly a trifle wan. But he was never the same as would have been anticipated of one who for four days and four nights had existed in the very bowels of the earth, held, as in a vice, with quicksand more plentiful than air itself and of water not one drop to quench his fevered thirst.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

To dig a second well three feet distant from the first was but the smallest part of the work of rescuing Joshua Sandford. With great speed, as it seemed, was the well sunk. Down it went beneath the efforts of busy men armed with well-diggers' tools that were kept sharp as razors. Fifty feet and more it sank, ten feet too low if it proved. Sandford was located higher up, and the real work then began. John Carnie was the first man to catch a glimpse of the prisoner in his fearful tomb. It was an elbow of the wretched man that met the gaze of Carnie as it appeared against an aperture in the disordered bricks of the old well. The question at once was the position in which Sandford was held. If he were in an upright position the difficulty attending his release was increased an hundred fold. "I was satisfied we would never get him out if we did not find Sandford in something of a reclining position," said John Carnie yesterday, in relating the story of the rescue to the Free Press.

But fortune favored the brave, as it proved. Sandford's position was akin to that of a man in a reclining chair.

SANFORD RESCUED SATURDAY FROM HIS LIVING TOMB

In a Few Weeks Will be Himself—The Terrible Experience of a Young Man in a Well on a Farm Near Paris Ont., the Preservation of Whose Life and Final Rescue was Truly Marvellous.

A Driven Pipe Served as an Air Shaft—The Imprisoned Man Worked Patiently, While Heroic Friends Labored Unceasingly to Secure His Release—Thrilling Narrative of John Carnie.

His feet were probably three feet lower than his head.

The men at work in the new well, when they had found Sandford, quickly yet with great caution, made an opening two feet square into the new well. A strongly made box calculated to fit the opening was let down from the top of the well and inserted, and through this the rescuers were able to talk with Sandford, and also to take hold of him. The story is best told by John Carnie, CARNIE, THE HERO.

While Sandford's conduct throughout the horrible ordeal was simply marvellous, his was a wonderful fight for his own life. John Carnie's struggle was the self-sacrificing fight for the life of a struggling fellow whose face he had never seen. All the countryside, who know what Carnie's fight meant, are talking of it and of him almost as much as of Sandford. Carnie is a hero in everybody's mouth. A very modest hero is Carnie. When questioned he gave in graphic detail the story of the last two days, but always put in front of the names of the brave men who labored with him, and he specially requested the newspaper men to say little of himself.

Mr. Carnie is a trusted employee of John Penman, the mill owner. He is respected by everyone in Paris, and is the superintendent of one of the large Sunday schools. To the Free Press, he said:

"Between three and four o'clock Friday morning I first went down. The well had been carried down, and Sandford said he thought we were ten feet below him. George Blanshard, the fish man, and he is a good one, was with me. We brought down Henderson, the well digger, and he thought Sandford was above us. I thought that when we got opposite the man in the other well that he would know it, and we would. I ran a bar through into the old well and Sandford heard me. He

TOLD ME TO QUIT.

That was the first intelligent word heard him utter. We were working in hard pan, and I found by putting my shovel in that just below us was sand. This was all right. So we notched some more plank into the side of the well to brace it—you know how well diggers do. I am not a well digger at all. We went down five or six feet, and then I put another hole through. What little noise Sandford was making sounded a long way off. We went down three or four feet more, and into gravel. We made a hole through to the old well, but there was no space as when first we made a hole. The bar of iron did not find easy access to the well. All at once the rubbing in the old well was resumed. It seemed that Sandford was careful not to strike the pipe for fear of loosening the earth and causing another cave-in. So he just rubbed the pipe. The noise was shoulder high. We tore out plank in the side of our well about ten inches square and made a hole through to see if we could see him. We could hear Sandford's voice quite plainly when we put a little box through. His talk was like a delicious person speaking. I did not know the man, but called to him. 'All right, Josh; we'll get you,' I said. 'You don't need to get me. I am not in the well. I got out two days ago,' was his reply. Not many minutes afterward he spoke to us rationally. It was the fresh air getting to him that awakened him, I guess. The poorest fellow's voice was pretty feeble. "When we got into the old well, we could see just a rick of brick. They had fallen in a heap, resting upon one another. Sandford called out, that he was in pretty bad shape; that we had better get in.

AS QUICK AS WE COULD.

Blanshard got in first through the box, and he saw that we had to do something to hold the loose work there. We could see Sandford's elbow sticking through a hole in the brick. The right arm was loose, and he was able to rub the pipe just over his head. He put his arm into the box, and asked us to put something over his face. He was lying with his face upward. I gave him my cap, and he tried to put it on his head. He could not tell where his head was; could not feel it. With his own hand he handed back the cap, with the remark: 'Well, you must have an awful small head.' We got a towel down from the top. It was a big one, and I said to Blanshard that he had better tear it. We wanted to put the towel over his face to keep off the dirt while we worked. 'No, don't tear the towel,' Sandford spoke up.

"The man's body was completely buried. His head lay in sand, and only from his lower lip running at an angle above his ears was he free. With the free hand he was able to rap on the pipe, and also to keep brushing the sand away from his nose and mouth. He had just a very small space above his nostrils in which to breathe. He told me he was choking. The sand was

TRICKLING DOWN ON HIS FACE.

I cleaned his face and eyes. He was trying to spit out sand. But his lungs would not work. I put my hand in and cleaned out the sand beneath his shirt collar. Then I put the towel over his face and told him if a little stuff fell I would take it off. I had to uncover his face three times, because of the sand that fell on the towel. "Well, we found there was a piece of board sticking on the brick at the side of the well, to help to support this had kept the mass above from crushing the life out of Sandford. We put through a support to the other side of the well, to help to support the roof and make it safe for him while we worked. We wanted to hold the brickwork up. I held a light in to see where he was. I thought perhaps he was upright, and if he was, I did not see how we would ever get him out. He said the pressure between his back and his lungs was catching him worst. I managed to pull a brick from under his back, and he gave a sigh as of relief. I got another brick out, and he said, 'My, that's all right.' He began to help himself with his right hand. Then as he straightened up, he came around in front of the hole we had made. When the second cave-in occurred Sandford was in a stooping position. We pulled out a pair of overalls he had around his neck, and also a smock he had with him."

Mr. Carnie said he did not know how it happened, but Sandford worked himself up probably ten or twelve feet after the first cave-in, and so had brought down the second load of gravel, hardpan and sand.

"He must have worked like a ground hog around that iron casing," he said. "I think he had been sleeping and the stuff came down from behind him."

GOT A ROPE AROUND HIM.

The brave rescuer described how, lest some fresh danger should occur, they had placed a rope around Sandford's body, so as to hold him and in the event of a fresh cave-in, to keep in touch with him. He told of the hanging in to Sandford of a chisel with which to work in removing the debris that held him. Once Sandford handed the tool back with instructions that it be sent to the top as it was not sharp enough. Blanshard, one of the men in the well, wanted to go in to the old well to help Sandford, but he would not allow him, remarking that it was enough to have one man buried there."

And so the efforts were continued. Every moment it was hoped to effect Sandford's release. Finally, one foot remained to be freed. To do so seemed impossible. Two bricks were securely wedged across the instep with a third just behind the heel, forming a terrible vise. Another rope was placed around Sandford, and the rescuers pulled hard but in vain.

About this time an incident occurred to vary the excitement. William Thompson had gone down into the well to give assistance, but found he could not withstand the changed temperature and gases at the bottom of the well. He told Carnie of his trouble and called to those at the top of the well, "Send some one down to take my place." Immediately the quit-witted Sandford called out "Send a man down to take my place." Thompson said he felt like fainting and Carnie told him he had better faint in the well than in the bucket. Thompson was anxious to get up, however, and got into the bucket. Carnie was standing on the timbers of the well, ten feet from the bottom, and as Thompson was raised saw the man keel over. In an instant he would have fallen head first to the bottom of the well, probably with fatal result. Carnie grasped the timbers, and in place of avoiding a shock braced himself for it and Thompson alighted on Carnie's neck and should-

FOUND DEAD

Sudden Demise of Joseph Tucker, an Old Ridgeway Veteran.

Joseph Tucker was found dead in bed Saturday morning. Friday he worked at his trade as carpenter. He ate a hearty supper and went to bed in good spirits. In the morning he was found lying on his side, sleeping peacefully the sleep that knoweth no awakening. His son slept in the room next and the fanlight was open but he heard nothing during the night. Mr. Tucker was a Ridgeway Veteran and was in his 70th year. Two sons, Joseph and Will, besides the widow, survive. Dr. Hall was called and pronounced death as caused by heart failure. The man suffered from heart disease and Dr. Hall had told him that he would pass away suddenly.

TO ERIEAU

24th Kent Regiment Will Visit Summer Resort To-morrow.

The plans in connection with the outing of the 24th Regiment have been changed on account of the rain. The program was that the Regiment should go to Blenheim in the morning, and march to the cottages at Erie Beach for dinner. In the afternoon after target practice, they were to march back to Blenheim and go to the Eau. To-day's rain has made it too wet to go to the cottages, so the Regiment will parade at the drill hall at 10.15, entrain at the C. P. R. depot at 10.30 and go straight through to the Eau. The commissariat department will arrange for two meals at Harry Hall's, or somewhere else. Target practice will be indulged in during the afternoon.

LOOKS BAD

"Do you know," said Lieut. Coltart this morning, "that I am beginning to think that the soldiers in the Regiment are a pack of scoundrels."

"How is that?" asked The Planet.

"Well," resumed Will, "they say fortune favors the brave, and you see how torturing us for our excursion to-morrow." And then he gazed wearily out of the window at the rain which was coming down in torrents.

FAREWELL SERMON

Dr. Hannon leaves this week for Exeter, where he will assume his new charge as pastor of the Methodist Church in that place. Last evening he preached his farewell sermon from the text, "This, My commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." Dr. Hannon said that the mutual love of Christians, like the love of Christ, should be sincere. The climax of man's love was to lay down his life for his friends. The climax of Christ's love was that He lay down His life for the world.

The choir, under the direction of Miss Ethel Webster, rendered excellent music. Miss Webster took the solo obligato in the anthem with marked musical effect.

Feeding Young Pigs.

The young pigs at three or four weeks old will begin to nose around the trough where the old ones are feeding and try to pick up a little corn or mash as it gets thrown out. Then is the time to prepare them a trough by themselves that they may reach by going through a hole not large enough for the old ones to get through. In this put skim milk or a little warm fresh milk, and if one has his nose poked into it the sound of his eating will quickly bring the others to see what he has found. After a few days make a slop thin enough to pour well of two parts of shorts and one part of bran, mixing with warm water, and for a few days add a little milk. Try not to give more than they will eat clean, and if there is any left give it to the old ones. Feed only when the old ones are fed until they are weaned, and then three times a day until they weigh about 100 pounds, when twice a day will be enough. A part ground oats might be better when oats did not cost as much more than bran as they do now. Do not crowd them with too much or too hearty food, but about a month before killing one-half cornmeal and one-half shorts will serve to make the meat firmer and add fat rapidly. Keep a lookout for the scours and give a little charcoal to assist digestion.—American Cultivator.

The civic Finance committee is in session this afternoon with Ald. McCaig in the chair.

The object of the meeting is to go over the estimates with a view to recommending the rate.

At 4.05 this afternoon the aldermen had practically decided that a 25 mill rate was necessary.

SATCHEL

SATELLITE

It must have been a winter like the present one that inspired "Our Lady of the Snows."

There was one thing about that man buried in the well at Paris. He ought to have felt well.

The weatherman seems to have prescribed one hour of sunshine to every ten hours of rain.

The saving of that man who was buried in a well at Paris, merely proves what I have always maintained, namely, that Parisites are hard to kill.

This may not be regular old fashioned winter weather but, noting the number of deaths, I think there is some allying. The dampness is responsible.

During July and August, the Satellite intends to vacate. Lord Salisbury, the Governor-General and all other celebrities take a vacation, so nobody would know that Satellite was great unless he did likewise. As you may have perhaps guessed by the preamble, I am going to say something. During July and August, the Satellite is going to take a holiday. Owing to the lack of postal facilities from the place to which he says he is going, the Satellite vagaries will only appear in this G. H. J. once a week, on Saturdays.

S. B.—I haven't taken the advice of my enemies and I am not going where they have so often told me to go. I am seeking a cooler place. It's not heat I'm after. I also want to go to a place that has postal communication with the outside world, even if it is full of mosquitoes and things.

THE BULLET FROM AFAR.

New Modern War Methods Try the Soldiers' Nerves.

Today a man may die as soon as the enemy's guns, hidden away in the distant, cloud topped mountains seven miles away, begin to talk. And over that seven miles he must walk with caution, with a wide interval between him and his pals on either hand. He must lie down at every short halt and scratch the ground hurriedly with his little spade at every long one, for the great shells are sailing toward him, and he sees by his officer's eye and hears by his commands that it is considered that he may perish at any moment and that precautions are necessary to preserve him. He sees, moreover, how futile those precautions must be if one of those monsters howling overhead should land as near to him as the last one did to that blasted tree, for instance, with its scorched, dangling limbs and the huge charred in-sign in its stout trunk, or as the one before did to the team of mules in the stubble waste, now a screaming, struggling jumble of harness and bloody flesh.

All this is dispiriting and appears unnecessary. The country on all sides is as peaceful as his native dale, not a sign of an enemy. Even the great blue hill ahead, on which he is told the enemy's long guns are posted, looks as quiet as the mountain on a Christmas card. Yet for two miles he walks through death, thinking only of it because there is nothing else to think of,
and then as twilight falls throws on the extended line, sees his friends run for their tea between the fall of the shells, notices one of them time his run back badly and meet a projectile in full career, to part from it an awful and disgusting offense, and then lies down in the darkness with shaking nerves and the thought that five worse miles still intervene between him and the guns he knows he is intended to take.

Next morning he is awakened by a shell, is shelled even in his bivouac by the light of the moon and as he watches the projectiles bursting like water-sprouts of fire along his hillside is glad when he is told that tomorrow will be the battle, after which if he wins and if he lives he may be able to walk and sleep in peace for a space.

LINCOLN'S DISPATCHES.

Why Many of Them Were Dated
From the War Department.

Surprise is often expressed by very intelligent people that so large a proportion of President Lincoln's most important telegrams and some of his letters are dated from the war department instead of the executive mansion and none of them from the navy, treasury or other administrative bureaus.
This is generally deemed a very singular fact, and from it writers have plausibly drawn the conclusion that Lincoln personally liked the secretary of war better than any of the other cabinet officers. While this indeed appears to have been true, it does not necessarily follow. He certainly held Mr. Seward in high regard, yet he seldom went to the state department.

In the circumstances it was not at all singular. The explanation is easy. War was the business of that time, and Lincoln's eyes were always bent to the army, especially when great military events were impending. He habitually haunted the adjacent war department and army headquarters, where about General Halleck, his military adviser, for news and views. Head and heart were strenuously concentrated on the fight, wherever it might be. His fertile brain saw, too, the critical points in the game oftentimes far more clearly than some of his so-called "ablest generals." He not only wished to know what was going on in the field, but performed his own part nobly. In the heat of action or at crucial moments his orders, suggestions, and inquiries were fired off spontaneously from wherever he might be at the moment, and at such periods he was generally "over at the war department" with Mr. Stanton. That is the chief reason why so many of his dispatches are dated at that department and not because he perhaps held Stanton in higher esteem than the secretary of the navy or state or treasury.

Recommending Coal.

A promoter of a recently discovered coal mine in Rhode Island sent a quantity of the material to Professor — of New York university. Afterward he asked for a certificate of its quality, whereupon the professor wrote:
To Whom It May Concern:
This is to certify that I have tried this coal in my fireplace, grates and stoves for several weeks, and having found it can confidently recommend to all my friends that they hurry into the state of Rhode Island on the day of judgment, being well satisfied that it will be last portion of the earth to burn.

The Useful Man.

Encourage the useful men in the community. Don't start foolish and untruthful stories about them and discourage the work they are doing. If you cannot do anything for the public good yourself, don't discourage those who are willing to give their time and money toward developing the community in which you live.

She Did.

"Auntie, Charles Glass proposed to me last night."
"The impudent fellow! Somebody ought to sit down on him."
"Why, auntie, I rather think somebody did."

Some people seem to think they have to prove they have a mind by speaking it.

Never Say Die

You may be weak, miserable, nervous, sleepless, your digestion may be poor, and you despair. Never say die, until you have used Ferrozone, the most wonderful blood maker, nerve strengthening and brain invigorator.
It tones up the whole system. You can eat anything and digest it if you use Ferrozone. You sleep well. You make blood quickly, strength increases daily, in a short time you're well.
Try Ferrozone, which you can ob-

Many a boy thinks he will be his boss when he reaches man's estate, but when he proceeds to get married it's all off.

The popular view of the relation of the blood to human character and conduct is marked in many a familiar expression. We speak of there being "bad blood" between people at enmity, of "blue blood" as indicating ancestry, of "black blood" as describing a treacherous nature, and in many another phrase mark our belief that in the mental, moral and physical man,
"the blood is the life." The one basis of a healthful, happy and useful life is pure blood. With the blood purified there is no permanent lodging place in the system. For this reason the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery rids the body of diseases which have their origin in impurity of the blood. It absolutely purifies the blood, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter, increasing the action of the blood making glands, and building up the body by supplying the blood in quantity and quality such as is essential to a condition of health. It cures ninety-eight people out of every hundred who give it a fair trial.

The bucket was stopped, and a man was sent up with the willing but weak Thompson.

SECOND SHAFT WORKED QUICKLY.

Finally, Carnie made up his mind that Sanford would never be rescued through the aperture made. His foot remained fast. When release seemed certain, the gripping of the bricks stood in the way. Carnie had worked eighteen hours without rest, in the perpetual hope and determination not to leave Sanford until he should be rescued from the well. When the efforts put forth yielded no fruit, he came up for a rest and a lanchon of hot coffee, eggs and toast that the good farmer's wife had ready.

The civil engineers who were called in—Messrs. Jones, of Brantford, and Pierson, of Toronto—came in for a good deal of criticism around Paris. They did not direct action according to the views of the well diggers and other experienced men, and there was friction. Eventually Carnie refused to have anything more to do with the matter unless the two men with whom to work, and according to their own views, whom Mr. Penman did not want. The crisis resulted in a yielding of the point to Carnie, and he went below again, and in a very few minutes had a second shaft driven into the old well immediately beneath the first. The object was to loosen the earth beneath the imprisoned foot. The plan worked like a charm. As the sand was carefully removed through the somewhat larger lower box into the new well, the bricks gripping Sanford's foot fell away.

A remarkable fact in a series of most extraordinary occurrences is that Sanford was finally taken out through the lower shaft. He was lowered fully three feet in his position in the well by removal of sand and debris beneath him, and was brought to a point opposite the bottom shaft through which he was easily drawn.

SANFORD FASTIDIOUS.

When Sanford found himself free in the bottom of the new well, he saw active preparations for his removal to the top. A chair with a high back had been arranged, attached to ropes, in which he was to be placed, secured and drawn up. He refused to go up at all, until a pail of water and a towel had been let down. "I can't go up and face that crowd with my face all dirt," he said.

Sanford had his face and hands washed, and was then tenderly dried upwards. It was his desire that he go up in the bucket in the ordinary way. At the top he looked about in a dazed sort of way. He was smiling, "Hello," he said, as a sort of general salute to the strangely moved crowd. He looked around for the men who had spent so many long, long hours in the bottom of the well close beside him. He grasped the hand of George Blanshard and inquired for Carnie. As the latter came forward, Sanford said in quite a strong voice, "Boys, you are a lot of bricks. You have done a lot for me." In a characteristically modest way Carnie replied, "Yes, we have done what we could, but you are the biggest brick in America."

It was a pathetic incident. Strong men wiped their eyes in a suspicious way. Sanford was placed on a cot in waiting, and was quickly removed to the farm-house only a few feet away. He was at once put to bed.

PATIENT'S TREATMENT.

When his rescuers first reached him, the doctors sent down some very hot water. "This is pretty hot," said Carnie, and proceeded to give it to Sanford. "Don't," said the prisoner. "I burn my tongue easily." He was given a spoonful of water at brief intervals. The warm water did not please him. He said it was only fit to wash his mouth out. He wanted cold water, but this was withheld. Malt extract and milk were administered in small doses. Sanford declared if cold water was not sent down to him he would go up after it.

a remark akin to his declaration upon being released that he intended to walk from the well to the house.

Once in the house, Sanford was placed under the immediate care of Dr. Duntun and Nurses Gamble and Lily Craig. He is kept as quiet as possible, and no one aside from his sisters has been allowed to so much as see him. Dr. Duntun said his face was somewhat marked, and there is a cut on the head which Sanford said he received when first caught in the well. He says he believed he would have bled to death had he not stopped the bleeding by burying the wounded part in the sand.

It will be many weeks before Sanford will be himself again. He complains only of great soreness.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Joshua Sanford is not a well driller by profession. He is a smart young man of less than thirty years. This was his first season at drilling wells. Having had some previous experience, he took it up as the quickest way to earn money with which to put himself through business college. He engaged with Mr. Hendrickson, and was in a measure overseeing the work at the Skelly farm.

An old well, 86 feet deep, and bricked, stands on this farm close to the road. The occupant of the farm is George Scott. He was not satisfied with the small flow of water, and the proprietor, John Penman, decided to engage the drillers. The well was not safe for further digging. The drilling had been going on four weeks when the accident occurred. A good deal of trouble was experienced in consequence of the casing striking boulders. Several times it was stuck, and had to be drawn up. Each time Sanford was sent down to put in braces. Finally, a four-inch casing was put down inside the five-inch casing. The latter extended to where Sanford was imprisoned, and probably accounts for his being able to breathe fresh air while being strangled.

SIGNS OF A CAVE-IN.

and called loudly to pull up quickly. The well filled in from the bottom, but Sanford was almost fifty feet from the top when the well fell in on him. He was caught like a rat in a trap. What his emotions were can only be imagined. Sanford, though willing enough, has not been allowed to speak of the occurrence, or what were his sensations during the four days and nights of his imprisonment. He has stated that he removed bricks with his teeth and has told of fighting his way upward in an effort to dig himself out. He says he could hear the men above him quite plainly, and knew most of what was going on looking to his rescue. He complained that a piece of string was not let down to him through the pipe, so he could have shown the exact depth he was in.

When the cave-in occurred the horror-stricken men above looked down upon the solid bed of gravel fifteen feet from the top of the well, and thought that Sanford must have died. They were not allowed to think so for long, for Sanford was heard calling for help. The work of rescue was at once begun in digging out the cave-in. Help was sent for in all directions and came quickly. The civil engineers undertook to dig in a slanting opening toward the well, but this was eventually abandoned, after two men had had a close call from being caught in a cave-in. Old well diggers proposed the second well, which brought success.

Once there was a serious delay in operations. It was due to the second cave-in. No sound came from Sanford following it, and he was given up for dead. Work was stopped, and some of the men had already left, intending to return on the morrow to rescue the supposed dead body of Sanford. Farmer Scott late in the day thought he heard Sanford again. Others were called, and it was established that the poor fellow was still alive. A second alarm was sent out, and soon all hands were again at work.

Dr. Duntun went down in the well while Sanford lay held by one foot. The idea of attending a patient under such circumstances was a novel and decidedly unpleasant one. "Sanford was going fast when rescued," the doctor said, "and could not have held out much longer."

The fact that will lie warmest at the core of Canadian rejoicings to-morrow is that the dark shadow is lifting from Buckingham Palace, and that our king may still be expected to wear the crown which is his by the will of his whole people as fully as by inheritance.

Is the price of safety, so it is said. If you want good Portrait work that will last without fading and that will never have the sting of "crudeness" in it to spoil its value for future generations get

Westlake Brothers Fotoz

These are thoroughly up-to-date, made and finished by experienced workmen and are "money-back" Portraits. We skimp no work. Nothing is allowed to leave our office unless it is absolutely up to the mark. Call and see our samples.
