LAI D AT REST.

Impressive Funeral of the Late Archbishop Purcell—Solemn Ceremonies—Eloquent Eulogy of the Deceased by Bishop Gilmour—Manifestations of Grief.

CHICAGO, Ohio, July 13.—At half-past seven o'clock yesterday morning people who had been provided with tickets began to crowd around the Cathedral gates to gain admission to the funeral services of the late Archbishop Purcell.

At half-past nine o'clock the bishops and clergy were in the sanctuary and the bell tolled the first notes of the ceremonies upon a profoundly silent audience.

ARCHBISHOP CROKE!

The New Church of St. Brigid, at Sarsfield's Rock.

IMPOSING DEMONSTRATION.

ADDRESS BY HIS GRACE.

On June 24th the corner stone of the new Church of St. Brigid, Sarsfield's Rock, Ballyneety, Co. Limerick, was solemnly blessed by the Archbishop of Cashel.

At twelve o'clock High Mass was celebrated at the foot of the rock on the open hill side, the worshippers stretching over the greater part of the meadow.

GLADSTONE AND THE LAND ACT.

Panic Among the Radicals—Fears of an "Unholy Alliance" of the Irish Nationalists with the Tories—The Union of the Orange and Green—The Parnell Testimonial.

LONDON, July 14.—The Monaghan election has already produced most important results in political circles.

Gladstone's declaration was regarded as a pledge that action will be taken by the Government by which the benefits of the Land Act will be extended to the leaseholders.

The landlords are alarmed at the rapid growth of Land League views among the Protestant farmers.

The brother of Mr. John E. Redmond, who was for New Ross, has been nominated for the borough of Wexford.

DEFEAT OF THE GOVERNMENT

DUBLIN, July 10.—James Carey, the approver, has been declared bankrupt, owing to his failure to pay his rates.

THAMES, July 10.—The sentence of Edward Harrington, publisher of the Kerry Sentinel, for printing a notice inviting the people to join the Invincibles, was confirmed today.

LONDON, July 10.—The report of the committee of the House of Lords which had the Irish Land Act under consideration, finds that the emigration clauses of the Act have failed.

In the House of Commons to-night Mr. Chaplin (Conservative) moved that in view of the prevalence of foot and mouth disease the importation of live cattle should not in future be permitted from countries whose preventive laws or the sanitary condition of whose cattle did not afford reasonable security against the extension of the disease.

LONDON, July 11.—In reply to Sir Stafford Northcote in the House of Commons this afternoon Mr. Gladstone stated that when the French forces occupied Tamatave, Admiral Piere proclaimed a state of siege.

At the conclusion of his Grace's address, a collection took place, and in a very brief period, £700 was subscribed.

The Archbishop, addressing the vast multitude, said:—Mr. Mayor and fellow countrymen, it is now twelve months, or thereabouts, since I first set my foot upon Sarsfield's Rock.

ADOPTING THE BEQULEM MASS.

RECTOR BITCHIE'S INTENTION TO CELEBRATE MASS FOR THE DEAD IN AN EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

On Sunday, July 9.—The Episcopal Church controversy, which has grown out of the High Church tendencies of Arthur Ritchie, pastor of the Church of the Ascension, and which has already served to draw out a letter of protest from the Bishop of this diocese, had another sensational feature added to it yesterday.

Reverend Arthur Ritchie, pastor of the Ascension Church, announced that at the conclusion of the morning service a requiem mass would be said for the repose of the soul of Daniel Fountain, son of Capt. Fountain, both of whom were drowned in the lake in May last. The body of Daniel was recovered two weeks ago.

Mr. Ritchie made the announcement a very audible buzz ran through the edifice. The junior warden looked at his neighbor of the vestry in amazement. The established vestryman returned the look with interest. Pillars of the church reached over to one another and asked:

"What will he do next? Is he crazy to thus defy the Bishop? Does he intend to break the church up entirely?"

Meanwhile the rector sat outside the chancel railing. Several members of the congregation who side with the Bishop in the controversy arose from their seats and left the church. Other members looked around as though undecided, and then arose and left, until half the congregation had fled out. The great body of strangers present remained.

Just as the voluntary was completed a young man entered, carrying in his hand a note to Mr. Ritchie. The rector opened the note and read the contents. It was a communication from Mrs. Fountain, saying that the body of Captain Fountain had just been recovered, and requesting Mr. Ritchie to postpone the service in order that her wish to bury father and son together might be carried out. Mr. Ritchie announced the mother's desire, and said that the mass would be postponed. The congregation then dispersed. The indignation of some of the members was very great. One member said that if the mass were celebrated, Bishop McLaren would have no excuse for failing to present Mr. Ritchie forthwith.

Mr. Ritchie, after the service, seemed unconcerned about what people thought. He said that the requiem mass had been celebrated in the Episcopal Church, and cited a celebration by Bishop McLaren, who said mass for the repose of the soul of Dr. Land, at Kenosha. He asserted that it was not unusual, and that the service over the remains of the Fountains would probably be held on Tuesday. The Bishop's position was thoroughly aroused by this proceeding, and it is said that if the mass is held on Tuesday, some very decided action will be taken by them.

The message which Mr. Ritchie contemplates is identical with the high mass of requiem celebrated in the Roman Catholic Church, with the exception that there are no deacons or subdeacons, and there is an abatement of the pomp and display of that service.

IN MY SLEEP.

Mark! 'tis the Old Sea sighing; Don't leave the easement ajar, That opens where the white-capped billows are; And the sunny latices, The one where the rose-vines creep, For I have the voice of the ocean— It means all night in my sleep.

Down in the peaceful meadows The robin's whistle is shrill; And I know their long lost faces; They beckon me now with a smile; And I would that the weary presence, Whose broken bones, like a broken life, Are covered by hope's bright pall.

I could count the shadows that flutter Like phantoms down by the stile; And I know their long lost faces; They beckon me now with a smile; And I would that the weary presence, Whose broken bones, like a broken life, Are covered by hope's bright pall.

Down on the beach one morning, Washed by the ocean's spray, I named my old sea-billows, And I knew their long lost faces; They beckon me now with a smile; And I would that the weary presence, Whose broken bones, like a broken life, Are covered by hope's bright pall.

EDITH YORKE.

When Dick Rowan came home the first time after his mother's marriage, both she and her husband had desired him to select a chamber in the house which should always be his. He chose an unfurnished one nearly at the top of the house, and after several playful skirmishes with his mother, who would fain have adorned it with velvet and lace, fitted it up to suit himself. It was large, sunny and quiet, and there was but little in it besides an Indian matting, an iron bed, a writing table, wicker chairs, and white muslin curtains, that did not even pretend to shut out the light. There was nothing on the walls but a bookcase and a crucifix, nothing on the mantelpiece but a clock. The young man's tastes were simple, almost ascetical, and he protested that he could not draw free breath in a room smothered in thick upholstery. Sunshine, fresh air, pure water and cleanliness—these he must have. Other things might be dispensed with.

In this chamber Dick lay now, his body a prey to fever, his mind wandering in wild and tumultuous scenes. He was at sea in a storm, and the ship was going down; he was wrecked, and perched with thirst in a wilderness of waters; he was sailing into a strange port, and suddenly the shore swarmed with enemies, and he saw huge cannon mouths just breaking into flame, and flights of poisoned arrows just twanging from their bows; he was at Seaton again, a poor, friendless boy, and his father was reeling home drunk, with a rattle shouting at his heels. And always, whether awake or in his fancy might conjure up, his ears were deafened by the strong rush of waves, adding confusion to terror and pain.

One day, when he had been crying out against this torment, a pair of cool, small hands were clasped lightly about his forehead, and a voice asked, low and clear, "Doesn't that make the waves seem less, Dick?"

He left off speaking, and lay listening in terror.

"There are no waves nor storm," the voice said calmly. "You're not at sea. You are safe at home. But your head aches so that it makes you fancy things. What you hear is blood rushing through the arteries. I am going to put a bandage round your head. That will do you good."

Dick turned his head as Edith took her hands away, and followed her with his eyes while she went a few steps to get what she wanted. She smiled at him as she stood measuring off the strip of linen, and making up little rolls of linen to press on the arteries of the temples; and though her face was thin and white and her eyes filled, in spite of her, when she smiled, the image was a cheerful one in that darkened room. She wore a dress of green cloth, soft and lustrous, and had a rosebud in her hair. The effect was cool and sweet. As she moved quietly about, the patient gazed at her, and his eyes seemed to be wondering and confused rather than insane.

She drew the bandage tightly about his head, pressed hard on the throbbing temples, and sprinkled cold water on the linen and his hair. She had observed that he started whenever ice was put to his head, and therefore kept it cool and avoided giving a shock.

"You are sick and I am going to make you well," she said. "You are not to think, but to obey. I will do the thinking. Will you trust me?"

"Yes, Edith," he answered, after a pause, looking steadily at her, seeming in doubt whether it were a real form he saw, a real voice he heard.

"This is your room, you see," she said, laying one hand on his, and pointing with the other. "That is your book shelf, there is your table and your crucifix. You know it all; but sickness and darkness are so confusing. Now, I'm going to give you one little glimpse of out doors, only for a minute, though, because it would hurt your head to have too much light."

She went to the window, and drew aside the thick green curtain, and a golden ray from the setting sun flew in like a bird, and alighted on the clock. Those sick eyes shrank a little, but brightened. She returned, and leaned over the pillow, so as to have the same view through the window with him. "That green hill is Longwood," she said; "and there is the flagstaff on the top of Mr. B.'s house looking like the mast of a ship. Now I shall drop the curtain, and you are to go to sleep."

So, as his feverish fancies rose like mist, her calm denial or explanation swept them away; or, if the delirium fit was too strong for that, she held his hand, to assure him of companionship, and went with him wherever his tyrannical imagination dragged him, and found help there. When he sank in deeps of ocean, he heard a voice, as if from heaven, saying, "He who made the waves is stronger than they. Hold on to God, and he will not let you go." If he feared, threatened him, he heard the reassuring text: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the protector of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" If he groined in delirium and cried out that every one had deserted him, she repeated: "For my Father and my mother have left me, but the Lord hath taken me up." "Except the Lord, do menfully, and let thy heart take courage, and wait thou for the Lord."

She followed him thus from terror to terror, imagining all the bitterness of them, trying to take that bitterness to herself, till they began to grow real to her, and she was glad to escape into the wholesome outer world, and see with her own eyes that the universe was not a sick-room.

Reverend Arthur Ritchie, pastor of the Ascension Church, announced that at the conclusion of the morning service a requiem mass would be said for the repose of the soul of Daniel Fountain, son of Capt. Fountain, both of whom were drowned in the lake in May last. The body of Daniel was recovered two weeks ago.

Mr. Ritchie made the announcement a very audible buzz ran through the edifice. The junior warden looked at his neighbor of the vestry in amazement. The established vestryman returned the look with interest. Pillars of the church reached over to one another and asked:

"What will he do next? Is he crazy to thus defy the Bishop? Does he intend to break the church up entirely?"

Meanwhile the rector sat outside the chancel railing. Several members of the congregation who side with the Bishop in the controversy arose from their seats and left the church. Other members looked around as though undecided, and then arose and left, until half the congregation had fled out. The great body of strangers present remained.

Just as the voluntary was completed a young man entered, carrying in his hand a note to Mr. Ritchie. The rector opened the note and read the contents. It was a communication from Mrs. Fountain, saying that the body of Captain Fountain had just been recovered, and requesting Mr. Ritchie to postpone the service in order that her wish to bury father and son together might be carried out. Mr. Ritchie announced the mother's desire, and said that the mass would be postponed. The congregation then dispersed. The indignation of some of the members was very great. One member said that if the mass were celebrated, Bishop McLaren would have no excuse for failing to present Mr. Ritchie forthwith.

Mr. Ritchie, after the service, seemed unconcerned about what people thought. He said that the requiem mass had been celebrated in the Episcopal Church, and cited a celebration by Bishop McLaren, who said mass for the repose of the soul of Dr. Land, at Kenosha. He asserted that it was not unusual, and that the service over the remains of the Fountains would probably be held on Tuesday. The Bishop's position was thoroughly aroused by this proceeding, and it is said that if the mass is held on Tuesday, some very decided action will be taken by them.

The message which Mr. Ritchie contemplates is identical with the high mass of requiem celebrated in the Roman Catholic Church, with the exception that there are no deacons or subdeacons, and there is an abatement of the pomp and display of that service.

EDITH YORKE.

When Dick Rowan came home the first time after his mother's marriage, both she and her husband had desired him to select a chamber in the house which should always be his. He chose an unfurnished one nearly at the top of the house, and after several playful skirmishes with his mother, who would fain have adorned it with velvet and lace, fitted it up to suit himself. It was large, sunny and quiet, and there was but little in it besides an Indian matting, an iron bed, a writing table, wicker chairs, and white muslin curtains, that did not even pretend to shut out the light. There was nothing on the walls but a bookcase and a crucifix, nothing on the mantelpiece but a clock. The young man's tastes were simple, almost ascetical, and he protested that he could not draw free breath in a room smothered in thick upholstery. Sunshine, fresh air, pure water and cleanliness—these he must have. Other things might be dispensed with.

In this chamber Dick lay now, his body a prey to fever, his mind wandering in wild and tumultuous scenes. He was at sea in a storm, and the ship was going down; he was wrecked, and perched with thirst in a wilderness of waters; he was sailing into a strange port, and suddenly the shore swarmed with enemies, and he saw huge cannon mouths just breaking into flame, and flights of poisoned arrows just twanging from their bows; he was at Seaton again, a poor, friendless boy, and his father was reeling home drunk, with a rattle shouting at his heels. And always, whether awake or in his fancy might conjure up, his ears were deafened by the strong rush of waves, adding confusion to terror and pain.

One day, when he had been crying out against this torment, a pair of cool, small hands were clasped lightly about his forehead, and a voice asked, low and clear, "Doesn't that make the waves seem less, Dick?"

He left off speaking, and lay listening in terror.

"There are no waves nor storm," the voice said calmly. "You're not at sea. You are safe at home. But your head aches so that it makes you fancy things. What you hear is blood rushing through the arteries. I am going to put a bandage round your head. That will do you good."

Dick turned his head as Edith took her hands away, and followed her with his eyes while she went a few steps to get what she wanted. She smiled at him as she stood measuring off the strip of linen, and making up little rolls of linen to press on the arteries of the temples; and though her face was thin and white and her eyes filled, in spite of her, when she smiled, the image was a cheerful one in that darkened room. She wore a dress of green cloth, soft and lustrous, and had a rosebud in her hair. The effect was cool and sweet. As she moved quietly about, the patient gazed at her, and his eyes seemed to be wondering and confused rather than insane.

She drew the bandage tightly about his head, pressed hard on the throbbing temples, and sprinkled cold water on the linen and his hair. She had observed that he started whenever ice was put to his head, and therefore kept it cool and avoided giving a shock.

"You are sick and I am going to make you well," she said. "You are not to think, but to obey. I will do the thinking. Will you trust me?"

"Yes, Edith," he answered, after a pause, looking steadily at her, seeming in doubt whether it were a real form he saw, a real voice he heard.

"This is your room, you see," she said, laying one hand on his, and pointing with the other. "That is your book shelf, there is your table and your crucifix. Mr. Ritchie, after the service, seemed unconcerned about what people thought. He said that the requiem mass had been celebrated in the Episcopal Church, and cited a carriage at the curbstone; he was so absorbed in reading, as not to know that she was looking up at the window where he sat. The book rested on the wide arm chair, his elbow near it; the hand supporting his forehead. His hair had been cut off, and his face was clearly displayed. His hands were beginning to look alive, his cheeks to get back their color. So he leaned and read, and she drove away.

She was going to meet Carl, and she was glad of it, though at Seaton she had thought that she must not see him again. The second thought had shown her how unnecessary and Quixotic this resolution had been, made in the first shock and confusion caused by Dick Rowan's distress, and her own discovery of the depth of her affection for Carl. She had since then put aside her own imagination and that of others, and examined her heart as it was, not as it might become under circumstances which she no longer expected to find herself in. She and Carl were nearly related by marriage, and he had been her teacher, and kind and delicate friend. She had lived in the same house with him seven years, a longer time than she had been associated intimately with Dick Rowan, and her intercourse with him had been such as to call out all that was most amiable in his character, and that at a time when her own mind was maturing, and capable of receiving its most profound impressions. She asked herself what the charm had been in her intercourse with him, and the answer was immediate: a quick and thorough sympathy in everything natural. For the supernatural, so careful had he been not to offend her conscience, and so highly had he appreciated religion in her, she had felt no sense of discordance, but only that he lacked a faith which she hoped and expected he would one day possess. Carl had never intruded his scepticism on her. What she asked herself then, was the wished regarding him? and the answer was no more doubtful, she had wished to be his most confidential and sympathizing friend, and to quiet his mind with the thought of any one coming nearer to his heart than herself, or as near. Even of these wishes she had been almost unconscious till others had forced them on her attention. Of Dick Rowan's friendships she could never have suffered from them. Here she stopped and set her Christian will and her maiden reserve as a barrier against her own imagination or the intrusive imaginations of others taking one step further. She was ready to fling her Iloni soli qui malis genit in the face of any evil speaker.

"Dick Rowan was a good friend to my childhood," she said, "and protected me from all physical danger and insult, and petted me with childlike fondness; and I have been grateful to him beyond the point of duty and to my own hurt. Carl Yorkie helped to form my opening mind, and patiently and carefully strove to endow me with his own knowledge, and may debt to him is a still higher one. I have a right, when he is going away, to bid him a friendly good-bye, and I should be ashamed of myself if I were afraid to do so."

Carl stood in the door of his old home, and came down the steps, hat in hand, to assist her. She saw in his face that he felt doubtful whether his presence might not displeasure her.

"I am glad to see you, Carl," she said cordially. "I could not believe that you meant to go away without bidding me farewell."

"I would not have gone away without seeing you," Carl replied quietly; and they went into the house together. His face had lighted at her greeting. Evidently he liked its frank kindness, and the entire setting aside of all embarrassing considerations. He had been in the cruel position of a man who, with a high natural sense of honor, has suffered himself to be betrayed into an act which he cannot justify and is ashamed to excuse. Silence was best.

Edith was delighted with the homelike look of everything in the house and the good taste displayed in its arrangement.

"I can easily understand," Carl said, "why you and my mother wished to have as little new furniture as possible. I think we all prefer that which has friendly or beautiful associations."

He led her to a portrait conspicuously placed in the sitting room.

"I hung dear Alice's picture here," he said, "because I thought that her place was in the family circle." He staid. "It is astonishing how cruelly selfish men can sometimes be, without knowing it. Poor, dear Alice thought of me and I thought of myself. Well, she is safe dead, with no more need of me, and I am left with an unfeeling regret."

Edith was grieved and touched by his self-reproach, and was about to say some comforting words, when he turned to her with a smile. "And I am committing again the same fault which I confess," he said. "Edith comes out of a sick-room, weary and depressed, and I sadden instead of cheering her. Shall we look about the house?"

"They went up stairs, and he showed her the different chambers. "But we all concluded that you would prefer the one I used to have for my painting-room," he said. "It is up another flight of stairs, but well repays you for the climbing. You are an early bird, and there you will have the morning sunshine. It is the largest chamber in the house, and has the best view. How do you like it?"

Edith exclaimed with delight. Nothing could have suited her better. Through the windows were visible a wide sweep of sky and a pretty city view. Inside, the room was large, charmingly irregular, with alcoves and niches and the partial furnishing was fresh and of her own colors. Sea green and white lace made it a home fit for a mermaid. It was evident that a good deal of care had been used in preparing the place for her.

"You are so kind!" she said rather tremulously.

He affected not to notice her emotion. "All I have done in this house has been a labor of love and delight," he said, and led her to a picture which bore the mark of his own exquisite brush, the only picture on the walls. "This is to remember Carl by," he said. "It is painted partly from nature, partly from a description of the scene. It is a glimpse into what was called the Kentucky Barrans."

An opening in a forest of luxuriant beech, ash and oak trees showed a level of rich green, profusely flower-sprinkled. The morning sky was of a pure blue, with thin flecks of white cloud, and everything was thickly bedewed with dew. The fringe of the picture glittered with light, but all the centre was overshadowed by a vast slanting canopy of messenger pigeons, setting toward the earth. The sunlight on their glossy backs glanced off in brilliant azure reflections, looking as though a cataract of sapphires were flowing down the sky. Here and there, a ray of sunshine broke through the screen of their countless wings, and lit up a flower, or bit of green. An oriole was perched on a twig in the foreground, and from the hanging nest close by, his mate pushed a pretty head and throat. Startled by the soft thunder of that winged host, they gazed out at it from the safe covert of their leafy home.

The two went downstairs into the sitting-room again. "Now, I want to tell you all my plans," Carl said.

They seated themselves, and he began: "I have thought best to make now the tour which I contemplated years ago. It must be now, or never, and I am not willing to relinquish it entirely. But I am not sorry that I was disappointed in going when I first thought of it, for I was not then prepared to derive the benefit from the journey which I now hope for. I should have gone then for pleasure and adventure; now I make a pilgrimage to gather knowledge. I tell you of this, Edith, but I have concluded not to tell my mother. It seems cruel, and there has been a struggle in my mind, but I cannot do otherwise. I well remember how hard it was to win her consent before, and I believe she was truly glad of our loss of wealth, since it kept me at home. If I should tell her now, the struggle would be renewed and she would be ill. I am afraid, too, that I might be impatient with her, for I have no more time to throw away. So I shall let her suppose that I am going to make a short visit in England, which is true. Once there, she will not be disturbed at my going over to France for a few weeks. After France, Switzerland follows of course, Italy is next door, and the East is not far from Italy. I have always observed that, when a thing is done my mother makes up her mind to it with fortitude; but if it is left to her to decide on anything painful, she is unable to do so, and the suspense is terrible to her. My father knows that. When he really means to do a thing, he is prompt and makes no talk about it. And, Edith, I shall not tell my sisters nor father, because it will seem more unkind if she is the only one who does not know, and it might compel them to practise evasion. I tell you alone, and I want you to promise me that, if my mother should begin to suspect, you will at once tell her all, and do what you can to quiet her."

"I promise you, Carl," Edith answered.

"You can also tell Mr. Rowan, if you have occasion to, if you wish to," he said, looking at her attentively.

She merely bowed.

"I think that you will approve of my plans," he went on with earnestness. "I have found what I believe to be my place and work in this vortex of the nineteenth century, and I wish to fill that place and do that work in the best manner I can. I have been offered a position as attache at one of our embassies, but I am not ready for that yet. I am not fit for anything that I wish to do."

Warming with his subject, Carl stood up, and leaned on a high chair-back opposite Edith while he talked. His face became animated, his manner had a charming cordiality and frankness. When his time should come for speaking or writing, or taking any part in the affairs of his country, he wished to be considered an authority, and to deserve that consideration. To that end, he must have more knowledge, not of courts, or camps, or books, though these were worth knowing, but of people as they live in their own homes, in their own lands, under laws strange to us. He wanted to know the world's poor, and the world's criminals, and the world's saints, wherever he could find them. "You have observed in drawing faces," he said, "how one little line will alter the whole expression. It is the same with arguments. A great, loose, superficial generalization may be as completely upset by one sharp little fact, as Goliath was by David. I want to have a sling full of those facts. A plain hard truth may be made attractive by a single beautiful illustration; and I wish to gather illustrations from the whole world. I hate a sour patriotism, and I would not think, nor speak, nor write narrowly on any subject."

"I can perceive, Edith, that we have much to learn in this country, and I wish to be first taught myself, then to do my part in helping to teach others. We need to learn that the order of society, as well as of the heavenly bodies, depends on a centripetal, not less than a centrifugal force. At present we are all flying off on tangents. We need to learn that there is beauty and dignity in obedience, as well as in independence. We should see that it is better for a people to be nobler than their laws, than for laws to be nobler than the people; and that the living constitution of a living nation is not found on any parchment, but is the national conscience brought to a focus. Why, Edith, those very persons who boast themselves the most of the glorious fathers of our country are, perhaps, the persons of whom our country's fathers could they behold them, would be most unutterably ashamed. I do not mean to be presumptuous, dear; but I see which way my influence should go, and I mean to do my best to make that influence great, first by leading an honest life, and next by polishing my weapons to the utmost. I am talking confusedly. I give you but a rough sketch of my design. Two years, I think, will be the limit of my stay. I am so well prepared by my studies that I shall lose no time, and I have every facility of access to all places I wish to visit. What do you say to it, Edith?"

"I say God speed, with all my heart, Carl! Your aims are noble. I like to see you in earnest."

"I am in earnest, dear," he said. "I feel as a new planet might, that has been turning on its own centre without progress, and is all at once set spinning off on its orbit."

In the momentary silence that followed, Edith went to a book shelf filled with pamphlets, and looked them over. "O Carl!" she said brightly, "do you read these?"

"They were the numbers of Brownson's Review."

"I have read them more attentively than anything else," he answered, "and learned more from them. An American best understands the American mind. Pure reason is, of course, cosmopolitan; but reason is seldom so pure but a colored ray of individual or national character intrudes; and I like to choose my color. I think," he said, smiling, "that I have been quoting that Review to you. I leave them for my father to read."

Edith's eyes sparkled. "I think God you are on this track, Carl!" she said. "The first I ever read in this Review was an article on De Maistre, and it solved for me a great difficulty. The fragments of truth that I had seen in the mythologies of different nations, and the beautiful Christian sentiments I had found among the pagans, had been a stumbling block to me; but when I read that all became plain. You make me very happy, dear Carl!"

"I do not think that I am pious," he said, after a moment. "My mind is clear on the subject, but my heart is unmoved. I do not wonder at that, and I am not sure but I prefer it so; to have light poured over my mind till my heart melts underneath, rather than have a mind imperfectly illuminated, and a heart starting up at intervals in little evanescent flames, which die out again, and leave ashes. The former is light from heaven; the latter suggests the Lucifer match to me. As I the time shall come, which I calmly await, when I have a clearer realization of the necessity of baptism, I shall ask to be baptized. Till then, I wish my intellectual convictions to be getting acclimated. My sacrifices must be ready before I invoke upon it fire from heaven."

"Oh! you remind me of St. John of the Cross," Edith said. "He says, 'Reason is but the candlestick to hold the light of faith.'"

"Precisely!" Carl replied. "Behold me, then, illuminated by a candlestick instead of a candle, but—aware of that lack. A friend of mine, a convert, told me lately that he had always regretted having hurried into the church, and to the sacraments, as he did. He did not realize anything, but received supernatural favors like one in a dream. He said that, though he was sincere, and would have given his life for the faith that was in him he was for a long time tormented by the habit of doubt. When at length that habit was broken he used some times to long to receive baptism over again or wished at least that his first communion had been postponed to the time of peace. A strong movement of the heart might perhaps have saved his trouble; but neither he nor I have been so favored."

"And yet," Edith said thoughtfully, "I should have supposed that the first conviction of truth would have moved your feelings. When my mind pointed that way my heart followed quickly, and pretty soon took wings, and flew along by itself, and left my thoughts behind. I am not sure that I have any intellect left in religion. I can think of reasons for anything, if I try, but it does not seem to me worth while, unless some one outside of the church wishes to know."

"That is a woman's way," Carl said, pleased with her pretty earnestness. "A woman goes heart first, or her head and heart go hand in hand, and her finest mental power is the intellect of noble passions. A man goes head first, and his highest power is reason." The silver bell of a clock warned them how long their interview had been. Edith rose. "I must say good-bye to you for two years, then, Carl; but you have taken away the sting of parting. While you are on the road to truth, I am not afraid of any road for you as sea or land."

She gave him her hand. Large, bright tears stood in her eyes.

"Dear Edith, good-bye!" he said, and could not utter another word.

They went down the steps together. The carriage-door opened and closed, there was one last glance, and they lost sight of each other.

They parted with pain, yet not unwillingly; for duty and honor yet stood with hands clasped between to separate them. Dick Rowan's pale face, as they had seen it that night sinking backward into the river, could be forgotten by neither.

When we have wronged a person, though it were unconsciously, we can no longer take the same delight in that pleasure which has given him pain. The pleasure may be no less dear to us, but the thought that it is to be reached only through the sufferings of one who has a claim on us, makes renunciation seem almost preferable to possession.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

GOOD NIGHT AND GOOD-BYE.

It is well for us that faith is able to decipher what De Quincey calls "the hieroglyphic meetings of human suffering"; and that, though the interpretation should not at once be made plain to us, we may, at least, be sure that it is merciful. As St. Peter stands supreme, holding in his hand the shining keys of heaven, which none but he can set in the wards and none but he can turn, so each Christian on earth is given the golden key to a personal heaven, and none but he can open the door, and none but he can close it. Within that door sits the interpreter, and when the soul is still it hears his voice reading, with praise and amen, both day and night; and some riddles he makes clear, and on some he sets the seal with his Holy Name; and that is God's secret, and one day he will speak to the soul concerning it. He who seeks to tear away that seal finds only darkness and confusion; but he who folds his hands above it will at last be illuminated.

Never once during his trial had Dick Rowan rebelled against God, or questioned him. Nature might writhe in pain and forget for a time the words of praise, but it submitted; and, according to the tumult and darkness that had prevailed, so were the light and peace that followed. It was thorough work, as all the work in this soul had been from the first, and his convalescence was like a new birth.

On the morning after Edith's parting with Carl Yorkie, Dick remained in his room unvisited, keeping all his strength for that first drive. At length the carriage came to the door, and Mr. Williams, who had insisted on remaining at home to superintend what he called the "launching" of his step son, came down stairs with Dick. Mrs. Williams, all smiles, followed after, rustling in silks, donned in honor of this great occasion. Edith and Ellen Williams stood in the entry, awaiting the little procession. Miss Ellen, blushing and huddled, was to accompany the two on their drive. Edith had preferred to stay at home and prepare for her evening exodus to Hester's.

"Why, Dick, you look like an Esquimaux!" she exclaimed. "I cannot even see your nose. How are you to get any fresh air?"

He laughed. "I told mother that I could not breathe anything but fur; but she is a tyrant."

"It isn't often I get the chance to play the tyrant over you," Mrs. Williams remarked, and began giving orders to have starchy hot soap-stones, and gay garters put into the carriage.

"Mother," her son exclaimed, "I am ashamed of having such a fuss made over me! I will run away. I will leave the country. I will go back to bed."

He really blushed and seemed annoyed.

They went out, and there was the parade of getting settled in their places. Mrs. Williams pleasantly conscious and her son distressfully so, that several of the neighbors were looking on with interest. The inquiries for Dick had, indeed, been constant from all the neighborhood, even from persons with whom they had no acquaintance. Not a woman, young or old, but had looked kindly on the young sailor, and known when he sailed away, and when he came back; not a child but smiled and nodded to him through the window when he passed. Of course they had all surmised that the lovely young girl whom they had seen there before, and who had now been taking care of him, was one day to be his wife. She divided their attention with him as she stepped on the step, and watched him drive away.

It was the hour of the steamer's departure; and when Edith was alone, she shut herself into her chamber, and, kneeling there, prayed fervently that God would keep the traveller wherever he might wander, and that, though far from her, he might be ever near to heaven.

She did not leave her room when she heard the others come home; and after a while Mrs. Williams came to say that Dick would like to see her.

"We had a delightful drive, and he is not a bit the worse for it," the mother said. "He will be well enough to go to Mrs. Cleaveland's to see you, now; but I think he wants to have a good talk with you before you go away. He told me not to let any one interrupt."

Edith knew well what the summons meant, and with one upward aspiration, "O Spirit of light and truth!" she went immediately.

Dick was sitting in his arm-chair by the window when she entered, and he looked around with a bright smile and greeting, "Well, little sister!" and motioned her to a chair near him.

On hearing that title she stopped and clasped her hands on her bosom.

"It was a brother who sent for you," he said. "Come!"

She seated herself speechless, almost breathless.

"Edith, where is Carl Yorkie?" he asked gently.

She gave the answer with a quiet that looked like coldness. "He left in the steamer today for England. From there he continues his travels to the East; I do not know where else. No person is to know this but you and me, as his mother cannot be told."

The color and the smile left Dick Rowan's face. Surprise and pain for a moment deprived him of the power of speech.

"I am astonished and distressed!" he said at length. "I wished to see him to talk with him. But that he is not a Catholic, I should have wished to see you married, soon."

A deep blush of wounded delicacy rushed to Edith's cheeks. "Dick Rowan," she said, "you have yet much to learn about women, or, at least, about me. Whatever feeling of sympathy and affection I may have had for Carl Yorkie, my conduct and conversation with him have been irreproachable, and so have my thoughts even. The thought of marriage has not crossed my mind. I do not wish to hear you speak of it."

Her dignified answer disconcerted him for a moment. He had made the mistake nearly always made by men, often made by women, of misinterpreting the nature, or, at least, the degree of development of an affection as yet angelically pure, if ardent.

"You were quite right in supposing that I would marry no one but a Catholic," she remarked.

"I have done you a great wrong, Edith," he said hastily, "and I wish to repair it as far as I can. But first, will you tell me why you promised to marry me?"

THE RAILWAY ACCIDENT AT LONDON.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The following additional particulars relative to the accident on the Grand Trunk Railway yesterday are given.—The two engines leaped high in the air and came down together. One of the freight cars was thrown fully thirty feet from the track, and came down upon another car, on which it lodged. The end of one of the Pullmans was stove in. Two freight cars were utterly annihilated, and the two engines and tenders were crushed into a shapeless mass of splintered rubbish. When the men in charge of the train saw the collision was inevitable, they jumped, and will probably escape without serious consequences. John Porter, fireman in the Grand Trunk Railway shop, St. Thomas, formerly employed in the same capacity in the Great Western Railway shops near, returning to St. Thomas, after a brief visit to his friends, sustained the most serious injuries, and has since died. He had foreseen the accident, and had reached the platform of the Pullman, just behind the tender, intending to jump, but at that moment the crash came, and he was wedged in between the Pullman and the tender, with only one head visible. Engineer Fletcher also sustained injuries about the head and face. Conductor Dulmage had an arm broken, and Selby, a baggage-man, and four passengers sustained injuries, but, as far as ascertained, not serious. The passengers, when the trains came together, were thrown from their seats and huddled pell mell together, and for a time a scene of utmost confusion prevailed.

LYNCHING IN ILLINOIS.

A NEGRO TAKEN FROM THE JAIL AT MOUND CITY AND HANGED BY A MOB.

CAIRO, July 9.—Nelson Howard, the negro who killed John Kane, white, was taken out of the jail at Mound City before daylight this morning and hanged by a mob. Kane was a bridge carpenter and Howard a section hand on the railroad. They spent the 4th in Cairo, and were under the influence of liquor when they got on the train that left Cairo at 7 1/2 on the evening of the 4th. They quarrelled, and Howard stabbed Kane in the back. Kane then pulled a pistol, but he was too drunk to use it, and, before any one could interfere, Howard seized the weapon and shot Kane twice. The first shot made a slight wound on his forehead. The second entered his chest. Kane never spoke afterwards, death ensuing in about an hour. Nobody knew that Kane had been cut until after the shooting, when the knife wound was discovered. The tragedy occurred just as the train was entering the depot at Mound City. Howard jumped from the car and escaped, but he was found on the morning of the 5th, and jailed at Mound City. The lynchers numbered about thirty-five, and it is said by a negro man who claims to have seen them that they arrived on three head cars from Cairo at about 2 o'clock in the morning. They all wore masks, and had evidently matured their plans before starting on their mission. Disembarking from their hand cars in the depot, they first forced open a tool house and secured a large spike hammer. Then they proceeded to the jail. The jailer met them outside the door, and in response to a request for the keys, said they were in possession of the Sheriff. Some of the men seized the jailer and held him a prisoner, while the others broke down the jail door. Howard

TORNADOES SCIENTIFICALLY ACCOUNTED FOR, AND SOME REMEDY GIVEN THAT PRODUCE PAINFUL RESULTS EXPLAINED.

The following synopsis of a lecture delivered by Dr. Horace B. Hamilton before the New York Society for the promotion of science, contains so much that is timely and important that it can be read with both interest and profit:—

There is probably no subject of modern times that has caused and is causing greater attention than the origin of tornadoes. Scientists have studied it for the benefit of humanity; men have investigated it for the welfare of their families. It has been a vexatious subject long considered, and through all this investigation the cyclone has swept across the land carrying destruction to scientists as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, is certain: the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the whirling body of wind itself. Its results are powerful; its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts.

First, the appearance of a cyclone is invariably preceded by dark spots upon the face of the sun. These spots, indicating a disturbed condition of the solar regions, necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. An unusual generation of heat in one part of the atmosphere is certain to cause a partial vacuum in another portion. Air must rush in to fill this vacuum. Hence the disturbances—hence the cyclone. This theory finds additional confirmation in the fact that tornadoes come during the day and not at night. The dark spots upon the surface of the sun, whatever they may be, seem to cause great commotion in the atmosphere of the world, and it is almost certain that the extremely wet weather of the present season can be accounted for on precisely this basis. Is it reasonable to suppose that the marvellous effect of the sun upon vegetation and life in general shall be less than upon the atmosphere itself through which its rays come? The cause is remote, but the effect is here.

After describing some of the terrible effects of the cyclone, the speaker went on to say:—

This rule finds its application in nearly every department of life. An operator is in San Francisco—the click of the instrument manipulated by his fingers, in New York. The President makes a slight stroke of the pen in his study at the White House, and the whole nation is aroused by the act. An unconscious and disgust with everything in life, commonly called home sickness, is felt by many people, when the cause is to be found in the distant home thousands of miles away. An unconscious pain may be felt in the hand. It is repeated in other parts of the body. The appetite departs and all energy is gone. Is the cause necessarily to be found in the head. The next day the feeling increases. There are added symptoms. They continue and become more aggravated. The slight pains in the head increase to agonies. The nausea becomes chronic. The heart grows irregular, and the breathing uncertain. All these effects have a definite cause; and, after years of deep experience upon this subject, I do not hesitate to say that this cause is to be found in some derangement of the kidneys or liver far away from that portion of the body in which these effects appear. But one may say, I have no pain whatever in my kidneys or liver. Very true. Neither have we any evidence that there is a tornado on the surface of the sun; but it is none the less certain that these great organs of the body are the cause of the trouble although there may be no pain in their vicinity.

I know whereof I speak, for I have passed through this very experience myself. Nearly ten years ago I was the picture of health, weighing more than 200 pounds, and as strong and healthy as any man I ever knew. When I felt the symptoms I have above described, they caused me annoyance, not only by reason of their aggravating nature, but because I had never felt any pain before. Other doctors told me I was troubled with malaria, and I treated myself accordingly. I did not believe, however, that malaria could show such aggravated symptoms. It never occurred to me that analysis would help solve the trouble, as I did not presume my difficulty was located in that portion of the body. But I continued to grow worse. I had a faint sensation at the pit of my stomach, nearly every day. I felt a great desire to eat, and yet I lost my food. I was constantly tired and still I could not sleep. My brain was unusually active, but I could not think connectedly. My existence was a living misery. I continued in this condition for nearly a year; never free from pain, never for a moment happy. Such an existence is far worse than death, for which I confess I earnestly longed.

It was while suffering thus that a friend advised me to make a final attempt to recover my health. I sneered inwardly at his suggestion, but I was too weak to make any resistance. He furnished me with a remedy, simple yet palatable, and within two days I observed a slight change for the better. This awakened my courage. I felt that I would not die at that time. I continued the use of the remedy, taking it in accordance with directions, until I became not only restored to my former health and strength, but of greater vigor than I have before known. This condition has continued up to the present time, and I believe I should have died as miserably as thousands of other men have died and are dying every day had it not been for the simple yet wonderful power of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy I employed.

The lecturer then described his means of restoration more in detail, and concluded as follows:—

My complete recovery has caused me to investigate the subject more carefully, and I believe I have discovered the key to most ill health of our modern civilization. I am fully confident that four fifths of the diseases which afflict humanity might be avoided were the kidneys and liver kept in perfect condition. Were it possible to control the action of the sun, cyclones could undoubtedly be averted. That, however, is one of the things that cannot be. But I rejoice to say that it is possible to control the kidneys and liver; to render their action wholly normal, and thus effect upon the system the effect of purifiers rather than poisoners. This end has been accomplished largely by means of the remedy I have named. I do not have a doubt, and I feel it my duty to make this open declaration for the enlightenment of the profession and for the benefit of suffering humanity in all parts of the world.

We are astounded to find the Kingston News advocating a most sanguinary line of action. It says that if the Marquis of Lansdowne "knew his duty he would remain in Ireland and be shot from behind a hedge."

The usefulness of pull-back dresses has just received a rather severe blow by the decision of a Court of Justice in a neighboring State. A St. Paul lady, while going from one car to another, fell between the two, and was badly injured.

The unpopularity of Lansdowne's appointment to the Governor Generalship of Canada is by no means decreasing, and he is destined to enjoy but a limited share of public favor. The Catholic Record of London, says: "There can be no doubt that in a strict constitutional sense Mr. Gladstone has a perfect right to recommend to the Queen any one whom he sees fit to fill the Governorship of Canada."

It is only a short time ago that the Executive of the Irish National League in Dublin announced that the Irishmen of Australia had, since Mr. Redmond's arrival in their midst, in January last contributed $30,000 to the national treasury. Yesterday the League acknowledged a further receipt of $10,000.

Hon. Mr. MONTGOMERY'S Government is resolved to carry out the reforms as recommended by the Civil Service Commission. The expenditure has been further reduced to the extent of $36,000 during the past few weeks.

quarters besides the Civil Service. There are at present in this Province a large number of corporations that draw annual grants of money from the Treasury, and that are in no way in need of help from the Government.

The cattle men in the United States are somewhat excited and disgusted at the action of the British House of Commons in passing the bill which prohibits the importation of live cattle from all countries with the exception of Canada, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

La Minerve, in commenting on the news received from Madagascar anent the conduct of the French admiral towards the British Consul, charges Mr. Gladstone with attempting to create a scene in the House of Commons about nothing, and with getting a little too excited. It says:—"One would imagine that Mr. Gladstone desires a rupture with France. He has, anyhow, been always but little guarded in his utterances."

A WARLIKE ADMIRAL.
The announcement made by Mr. Gladstone last evening in the House of Commons that the Admiral in command of the French fleet at Madagascar had proclaimed a state of siege, and had subjected British subjects to rough handling, is a startling and disquieting piece of news.

HOW INFORMERS ARE SECURED.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Guardians at Castlebar, Ireland, some rather strange revelations of police officiousness and Earl Spencer's mode of obtaining informers, came to light. It seems that a poor woman had been evicted from her little hut and thrown on the roadside after her husband's death.

THE LORDS AND THE LAND ACT.

The Committee of Lords from the Upper House, who have had the Irish Land Act under their consideration for some time, have presented a report, remarkable in many respects. One would scarcely believe it, but the Lords have declared it to be their settled opinion that the emigration clause of the Act has proved a complete failure.

THE DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER BILL.

The royal family is much vexed at the rejection, by the House of Lords, of the bill permitting marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The failure of the measure puts the intended marriage of the Princess Beatrice to her widowed brother-in-law as far off as ever.

elector in 1852 read is a second time once, and once rejected; that elected in 1859 twice rejected; that elected in 1866 once rejected; that elected in 1868 four times read a second time, but the majority was reduced from 100 to a little over 30; the House elected in 1874 rejected it the only time it was presented to its notice.

PRINCE BISMARCK AND THE FALK LAWS.

Bismarck has at last been forced to lift his iron heel from the neck of the Catholic people in Germany, whom he so doggedly pursued and oppressed during the past thirteen years. Like all other persecutors of the past, he fondly imagined that his hand and will would effect the destruction of the Church, but like them, the "man of blood and iron" has been taught by experience that the game is not so easily played nor so easily won.

ecclesiastical office on civil, religious or educational grounds; they carried their point and Bismarck grudgingly yielded to their demand. This clause was further amended by transferring from the central Government to the Governors of provinces, the right of objecting to ecclesiastical appointments by the Church.

Bismarck has thus been forced to learn that the safety of a government and the public peace lie rather in the respect of all the rights, religious as well as political, of the people, rather than in unreasonable and spasmodic efforts of suppression or persecution.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR. ON "CLASSICAL CULTURE."

In his address recently delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard University, the Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., attacked the study of classics. His effort to disparage the usefulness and importance of a classical education was both inconsiderate and unsuccessful. From the tenor of his address, one is inevitably forced to the conclusion, notwithstanding the literary reputation of the orator, that Mr. Adams was eminently unqualified to speak on the subject, and to express an opinion that could have any weighty influence with educated men.

some of Mr. Adams' strictures, says:—"I have conversed with intelligent men of all professions on this subject, heard and considered all the objections, and been a constant and careful observer of the effects of the two styles of education contrasted by Mr. Adams, and my conclusion is that for an education broad, developing and elevating, an education that shall make a man thoroughly master of himself and all his faculties at their best, an education that shall fit him for the best mastery of any specific calling he may choose, an education that shall give him the highest and widest influence in whatever specific calling, there has yet been found no adequate substitute for the wise study of the two classical tongues."

Of course it is not desirable to compel all young men to go over the same amount of Latin and Greek, as the beneficial results to be derived from them depend largely upon the taste and capacity of the student. It is clear, therefore, that Mr. Adams has oversteered his case and has unwisely allowed himself to be governed by the illusion that what could do him no good, from either want of taste or capacity, can do good to no other student in the higher spheres of education.

AN ELECTIVE FOR A NOMINATIVE SENATE.

A LARGE section of the Canadian press is at present advocating a radical change in the legislative machinery of the country. The Senate, which is a perille imitation of the House of Lords in England, is far from being adapted to the genius of free, independent and responsible government. Of course, the framers of the Confederation Act meant the Senate of the Dominion to be like the Supreme Court of the country, a high judicial body, and not a partisan body, but sixteen years' experience has proved the creation of a nominative Senate to be a grave mistake.

The partisanship of the Senate had been so unblushingly manifested that even one of the Conservative members, Senator Alexander, could not refrain from condemning the scandal. Last year when speaking in the debate on the Address, he said: "I implore of this honorable House to cast off from this day forward all partisanship. I do not believe in members of this body issuing at their own expense partisan pamphlets to influence elections. I do not believe in Senators acting as chairmen of partisan banquets merely to attain their own selfish ends. Senators who use their high position in the chamber to attain their own selfish ends, are the most ignoble of our members and ought to be deposed by this House."

A TRUE REFUGE

Written for The Post and True Witness.

Of a refuge they tell... For the sinners that fell... Deep down in the depths of crime...

But the refuge for all... Who have fallen or fall... (Ah! wretchedly do not start!)

Yes, the mother's heart... Is the only part... Of the world to find relief...

To the prayer of the one that's lost... She would even brave... The grave to see that lost!

When the God of might... In the crime is hid... Of a sinner's blood hung high...

Thro' that Mother, low... To Him we bow... Thro' her ready hand...

In the mother's breast... Is a feeling bliss... For her son, he be good or wild...

From the dawn of life... To the closing strife... The Refuge, for all, must be...

THE NEW DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

"ONE OF THE MOST ELEGANT BLACKGUARDS AMONG THE BRITISH NOBILITY." New York, July 10.—The London correspondent of the N.Y. Sun cables the following:—

The Duke of Marlborough fell dead of heart disease as he was about getting into bed on Wednesday night. He was one of the most respectable members of his distinguished family. He gambled a good deal, but he always paid up, even if he had to sell off the wonderful art treasures of the family to enable him to do so.

His present Grace married Lady Alberta Hamilton, daughter of the Duke of Abercorn, and has by her a son and three daughters. For family reasons she condoned his adultery with Lady Aylesford, a case in which the Prince of Wales was deeply compromised; and she even forgave him for knocking her down at the breakfast table with a blow of his fist.

AFAIRS IN IRELAND.

Mr. Mundella, member for Sheffield, opposed the motion. He said that one sixth of the cattle and meat supplied to Great Britain was foreign.

Mr. J. G. Dodson, member for Scarborough, said the motion meant absolute prohibition of the importation of live stock.

Mr. Mundella's motion was subsequently carried by a vote of 200 against 192.

PARNELL'S NOBLE RESOLVE.

Ready to spend the Testimonial Fund to Carry the Elections.—The English Government Alarmed at the Result in Monaghan.—Planning to Rent the Home Rule Party.

LONDON, July 17.—There is a very serious feeling among all Parliamentary parties over the result of the election in Monaghan, and a great deal of uneasiness, fostered by the Irish party, as to the possible results of such scattering elections as have yet to take place.

The difficulty in the Irish canvass and the greatest danger comes from a lack of funds with which to counterbalance the heavy expenditures both of the Liberal and Conservative candidates.

The only chance of defeating the Irish party with certainty is in a coalition of candidates in Irish districts, so that only one candidate shall be run by the Conservatives and Liberals in each borough; and the Conservatives supporting a Liberal in one and the Liberals a Conservative in another district.

The Telegraph hints at another possibility which might interfere with Mr. Parnell's hopes in his suggestion that if the Liberals are defeated it may be with such an overwhelming Conservative majority in England and Scotland that the Conservative majority might overbalance a Liberal and Home Rule combination, and thus deprive the Irish members of any influence.

In an interview today Parnell says: "I think the results of the coming election are fairly indicated by the result in Monaghan. The Protestant Irishmen voted for Mr. Healy, and I believe they will vote for Ireland's interest elsewhere, without regard to religion or prejudice, to a greater extent than ever before. The North of Ireland is beginning to understand, as it has not understood, that there are still possibilities of the success of a Home Rule movement; once convinced of that and Belfast and the whole North will refuse to support English rule."

IMPORTANT JUDGMENT.

Toronto, July 16.—An important judgment in regard to the rights of railway companies as regards traffic accommodation and payment therefor over the International Bridge, and the rights of the Bridge Company, has just been given by the Imperial Privy Council. TRADE WITNESS OFFICE.

Tuesday, July 17.

In New York today St. Paul and Manitoba opened at 106, and Canada Pacific at 60 1/2.

In the money market rates were unchanged. Mercantile paper was discounted at 7 per cent and loans on stocks were secured at 5 to 5 1/2 per cent on call.

The stock market this morning again displayed a fair measure of activity but prices were far from strong, closing 1/2 per cent lower for some securities.

WEEKLY REVIEW—WHOLESALE MARKETS.

The general features of the wholesale markets have undergone no marked change. We are now in the midst of a dull and uncertain season when many people are out of town on pleasure bent, and everyone is discussing the harvest prospects and awaiting developments before entering on the fall trade.

Cotton stocks, which three months ago, were selling at twenty and thirty per cent above par are now considerably below par. Montreal Cotton stock is down to 97 1/2 asked. A few shares of Canada Cotton Company sold at 94 and Dundas Cotton Company could have been purchased at 80.

Grain.—Wheat—In some quarters there are expressions of firmness and marked confidence with a strong disinclination to show samples except upon full bids. On the whole the market is in a satisfactory condition.

Flour.—There was more enquiry for wheat in this market than has been noticed for a long time past, but business was prevented by the firm attitude of holders. For Canada white winter $1 10 was bid, without getting it.

Wool.—The following grain-laden barges left Kingston on Saturday for this port belonging to the Kingston and Montreal Forwarding Company:—A. J. Peacy, 10,390 bushels wheat and 5,000 bushels corn; Rapid, 15,500 bushels wheat; Mena, 16,000 bushels wheat; London, 15,604 bushels wheat; Virginia, 13,653 bushels wheat; Alabama, 11,600 bushels wheat; and Frontenac, 17,971 bushels corn.

Flour Inspection.—Statement of flour inspected for week ending 14th July (J. A. Boyer, Inspector).—Superior extra 2,627 bbls; extra superior 1,096 bbls; Spring extra 460 bbls; superior 480 bbls; fine 143 bbls; middlings 22 bbls; strong bakers' 350 bbls; rejected 46 bbls; sour 287 bbls. Total, 5,620.

MONTEAL HORSE MARKET. There would be a large business done if the receipts of horses were larger, as the demand is brisk. Mr. Kimball, of the Montreal Horse Exchange, has just received from Woodstock, Ont., a carload containing 16 first-class heavy draft horses, and also a pair of fancy drivers. He sold one bay pony for $180, one grey horse for $175 and one pair for $450.

MONTEAL CATTLE MARKET. At Messrs. Acet & Kennedy's yards, Point St. Charles, business was pretty dull, there being very few shipping cattle on the market, which were quoted at 60 to 50 per lb. Butcher's cattle sold from about 200 head of common to fair. About 200 head of cattle were offered for sale at the Vigor market, and the demand was good. The best quality was sold at 50 to 5 1/2 per lb., and poor to medium from 3 1/2 to 4 1/2 per lb.

Manufacturers, when they make their appearance on the market, are well treated. Buff and splits have been exported as much as possible in order that stocks could be kept from growing unwieldy. Prices are given unchanged, but the tone all round is dull. We quote:—Spanish sole No. 1, B. A., 25c to 26c; do No. 2, B. A., 23c to 24c; do No. 3, 20c to 21c; China, No. 1, 22c to 23c; do No. 2, 20c to 21c; Buffalo, sole, No. 1, 22c to 23c; do No. 2, 20c to 21c; slaughter, No. 1, 27c to 28c; English sole, 46c to 48c; rough belting hide, 32c to 34c; harness, 25c to 30c; waxed upper, 33c to 37c; do grained, 35c to 38c; do Scotch grained 36c to 38c; buff, 14c to 16c; pebbled, 12c to 18c; splits, ordinary to choice, 22c to 25c; do under Juniors 16c to 19c.

FRUIT IN THE MONTREAL MARKETS. Just now there is a very good demand for fresh domestic fruit of all kinds, also a fair enquiry for foreign, which is scarce and dear. Today being Monday the receipts of fruit were not very large and the supply of strawberries was quickly taken up at 50 to 12c a quart, as to quality, some boxes being in very poor condition. Gooseberries sold at 40c to 50c per gallon; red and white currants at 40c to 50c do; black at 50c to 60c do, and blueberries at 80c per box. Harvest apples realized $1.50 to 4.50 per bbl. Bananas brought $2.50 to 2.75 a bunch. Lemons in boxes sold at $6 to $8.50; Palesmos in cases $7.50 to $8.25; Naples $8 to $8.25. Oranges sold at $13 per case for Valencia and at $10.50 per case for Naples.

EXTENSIVE SEIZURE. A despatch from Toronto says:—Fifteen thousand cigars, shipped to Mr. L. W. Scales, of King street east, by a Montreal factory, have been seized by the Customs authorities on account of a provision in the Customs regulations not being complied with. The manufacturer in Montreal neglected to put a caution note on the boxes relating to the destruction of the stamp in opening the box, and also giving the name of the factory and the whole division. The fine imposed may be as high as $5 a box, and, there were 300 boxes seized, the whole fine would then amount to $1,500. The neglect to comply with the regulations was the fault of Mr. Scales, and the whole responsibility rests with the Montreal manufacturer who shipped the cigars. Mr. Scales declines to disclose the name of the manufacturer.

CANADIAN BANKS Suing THE UNITED STATES REVENUE DEPARTMENT. A Chicago despatch says:—The Bank of Montreal and the Canadian Bank of Commerce each began suits in the United States Circuit Court yesterday against Joel D. Harvey, ex-Collector of Internal Revenue, the former for $50,000 and the latter for $30,000. These suits arise where the banks claim that they paid as internal revenue taxes in excess of what they ought to have paid. They were assessed, and paid under protest, as the practice is in some cases, and now sue to recover the money. They claim that they are simply branches of the main business in Canada, and do business here upon a limited capital and the earnings of that capital. They were assessed upon both capital and earnings, and claim that they should have been assessed upon capital only.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE. The Dominion Board of Arbitrators have completed their labors in the case of B. A. R. Hubert, et al., vs. the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa. This is an action for $3,000 damages alleged to have been occasioned by the flooding of the farming lands of the complainant situated near Cote St. Paul, by under coakage from the Lachine Canal prior to its enlargement, by which they allege their crops were spoiled and the land soured, thereby rendering it unfit for cultivation for a considerable period. The case went to proof, and the arbitrators recently gave their decision, namely, that they cannot give any award, as the board is equally divided in opinion, two being for an award to the complainants and two against, whilst the fifth member of the board either has not the power to give a casting vote or declines to do so. The case will have to go to the Supreme Court.

HONORING A JOURNALIST. A very pleasing affair took place in the council chamber, Winnipeg, on Monday evening, July 9th, prior to the meeting of the council. Mr. William Daniels, a journalist of the Prairie City, being about to take the position of assistant editor on the Halifax Herald, with which paper he was formerly connected for seven years, it was thought by his numerous friends that the occasion was a fitting one for the expression of those kindly feelings which they entertained for him as a gentleman and as a journalist of ability. Aid. Nixon read the address, which set forth the regret felt by his friends at Mr. Daniels' departure and wishing him all prosperity in his future home by the sea. Mr. Richardson then presented Mr. Daniels with a handsome gold watch, and at the same time asked him to accept, on behalf of Mrs. Daniels, of a costly silver teacup. The watch is in the Louis XV style and is 14 carat gold and weighs 63 penny weights. The teacup contains eight pieces of silver beautifully chased, the value at $300. Mr. Daniels made a short but heartfelt reply regarding his departure, and alluding to the many warm friends he had made during his short residence in Winnipeg.

THE SUEZ CANAL. LONDON, July 13.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Mr. Childers, in reply to Sir Stafford Northcote, said the canal agreement would be submitted by a motion made in the House on the 14th inst. The Canal Company by the Government for building the new canal should be charged on the Consolidated Fund. Sir Northcote believed that the leaders of the Opposition are not disposed to sanction the conditions of the canal agreement. The Tory papers think that the agreement is a step in the right direction, but that it does not secure to England sufficient control over the canal. The British believes that the country will be relieved with the agreement, the only remaining indignation, it is thought, being the fact that the Ministry must blame their own dogmatic contempt of warning and instruction if they find themselves in a position from which they cannot escape without disaster.

THE LONDON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE has decided that the agreement is inadequate and unsatisfactory. The London Chamber of Commerce has decided that the agreement is inadequate and unsatisfactory. The London Chamber of Commerce has decided that the agreement is inadequate and unsatisfactory.

and shipowners' resolutions were passed expressing regret that the Government had promised to use their influence to obtain a concession for a second canal in favor of the DeLesseps company, instead of making the concession for an independent British canal.

At a crowded meeting of merchants and shipowners at Lloyd's to-day a resolution was passed strongly objecting to the agreement between DeLesseps and the Government on financial, commercial and political grounds.

LONDON, July 14.—DeLesseps in an interview yesterday, declared that he was indifferent as to whether England accepted the canal agreement or not.

The Sisters of the congregation of Notre Dame have sent to Lourdes by the Canadian pilgrims who left last week a beautiful souvenir, to be left at the shrine at Lourdes. The souvenir contains all the names of the Sisters, from the foundation of the order, together with a view of the Mother house at Villa Maria.
