cannot be wholly curbed, and less, or more f their naive glee and abandon, must unicated by sympathy to the seniors. An infant will crow, laugh and kick in its childish glee, if the mother's heart should be breaking, and it thus often draws her mind, from trouble, which would otherwise end a miserable life, in an early grave. There is no doubt that, to the Mormon mother, a family is a mine of wealth, from which she draws for the purpose of cancelling any bill of cares, which that stern debtor, life, may present, and, we may also add, that such gives her increased importance and consideration the eyes of her husband. Our information in regard to the inmates of these houses, must needs be imperfect, as it is largely hearsay, and the result of observations made in public.-We could not arrive, at any satisfactory conclusion, in regard to their number. It is more than probable that few, if any, of those with whom we were, in commun tion, really knew, and that those who did, were not desirous to enlighten us, con-sidering our enquiries, evinced a curiosity, bordering on impertinence. That we, may glean all the information, which we can, an eminence, overlooking the garden, is gained. On the score of courtesy, and the amenities of ordinary intercourse between the different members of the human family, we know, that we have no right to seek to pry into the domestic affairs of any man. as long as he conforms to the usages of civilized people; but when he or they seek to establish a new code of morals, and inculcate the principles of a new philosophy and religion, the case is different. We certainly have a right to investigate everything connected with such a subject, openly if we can, covertly if information is denied us, seeing that its success, or otherwise, will have an important bearing on the whole social fabric. Having thus promised, the public will hardly blame us if we have laid before them facts, which only the kindness of the Saint, who gave us access to the family circle, could have enabled us to furnish. Looking over Brigham's premises we could learn but little. Immediately behind each of the houses, was a well-kept garden, to which, we suppose, the inmates severally laid claim as a consequence of individual labor, while beyond, was a flourishing orchard, bearing all the ordinary varieties of fruit. This appeared to be common property, inasmuch, as many women and children, were congregated within its borders, while their several families frolicked and played under the shade of the trees. The elders were engaged in sewing, knitting, or fancy work, from which they turned oceasionally to exchange a remark or idea. These observations must have been of the ficient for three women, who one and all soberest character-probably about the claim the rank of wives; but if we increase this number, we will also have to increase the number of our possessions, in and grow fat." is strongly reprobated by the shape of houses. He cannot help wishing that the buxom dame with such ample width of skirt, would make up her mind to trade the moiety of a hat, with her Swedish neighbour, and thus harmonize her dress, by associating those eighteen yards of calico, with a becoming width of rim. The ex-inhabitant of Calmar could hardly fail to be the gainer also. At present she looks as bare and top heavy, as a cocuanut tree, with her narrow, cling ing skirts, terminating at the calf of the leg, and lengthened tightly fitting waist. As we scrutinize this throng (the female portion) we are forced to the conclusion, that the greater part of them are sincere. It is hardly necessary to say that their belief cannot be one of intelligence. A submission to doctrines, which daily outrage all the finer feelings of human nature vill be sullen or fanatical, and is often a nbination of both. In either case, the subject is a mere machine, running fast or low according to the degree of force applied, and ever moving in the same grooves or bearings. It is so with these women. In the hands of Brigham and his cohorts, they are, as the potters clay. They are taught that the more crosses there are in this world, the greater shall be the future reward. They can do nothing of them elves. In Eve, they have been cursed, and by man only, can they be saved .-When so great an end is to be attained, they would be worse than the infidel, or even the gentile (looking at us) if they did not willingly bear a trifling mortification of the flesh. "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his soul:" said the Prophet. "There is no doubt," added he, "but that this is meant to apply to women also. We in our enlightened policy, grant, that they have souls, and admit them to the full DRESS GOODS! union of the Church, though this privilege was denied then by the ancients, and even the early christians. What a fearful position they occupied before that prophet of God, Joseph Smith, published the new revelation? (the women groan in sympathy, for those who died before the new dispensation.) How thankful they ought to be, for the privilege of living in such an age, and to those self-denying men, who are braving danger, and persecution for their sakes. (they make much effort to appear radiant, with indifferent success, and we are expected to make a note of it.) Not more than a few weeks ago, pursued Brigham: that Saint and onary Elder Softheart, had been stoned in the native State of the Prophet, (groans from the whole congregation); yes, stoned for doing the Lord's work, but it was so with Stephen. The good man had been eminently successful. Many sisters had chosen to tread in the paths that lead to rest, forsaking their heathen husbands and children, with all their abominations. Several virgins (you remember the parable of the seven wise virgins) had also come out from Sodom, and might be expected some of these days, the Missionary not desiring on the score of domestic economy, to marry the whole of them, (the Elder's under the Prophet's wing, stick up their irs like a terrier, who has just got a sniff of a rat); there will be a fine field for those

He did me the honour to enter into quite a protracted conversation on the street. Noticing that I was a stranger, (he knows every man for forty miles around), he ventured the supposition that I belonged to the immigrants on the square. Finding this to be correct, he enquired where I came from; the number of my immediate relations! my personal acquirements! the financial status of the people; and their opinion of mormonism! what I thought of the country and people, and if I did not intend to remain, or did not think I might according to the old proverb, go further and fare worse! Not, believing in the divine powers of the Prophet, our answers were wanting in candour; especially where they bore on a point so delicate, as our opinion of the saints, and their polity; Leaving the main points in abeyance, we duly enlarged on the kindness of the people and their thrift, industry and evident prosperity. Giving us a kindly parting "shake" he expressed his sorrow that we had not concluded to remain in the holy City. In our next we will review the Prophet in the pulpit and elsewhere. TO BE CONTINUED.

We have asked enough to supply all and, besides, he was authorised to give the fishermen time to pay the tax, which would no be required of them until June, or later. The question why enough licenses to supply the different local Overseers were not furnished from Ottawa is one not easily answered. The fact that they were not supplied is not a very creditable commentary on the present system of management in the Department and it is an additional proof of neglect for which the Minister will be held responsible, wherever the actual fault may Respecting the matter of giving the ishermen time to pay the tax it may be said that there is no objection to such a course, but is it a fact that there is bu one Overseer in the County qualified to dispense Government leniency in that connection? We think not. If all the Overseers who are practically acquainted with the fisheries are to be officially declared but mere registering machines for the one least qualified in that respect, let the Department say so by its Regulations. If not let the Minister turn over a new leaf and give a positive ssurance to officers, fishermen and the public, alike, that he controls the administration of affairs over which he is paid to preside and that he is not afraid to require, of even so great a personage as the Inspector of Fisheries, respect fo Orders in Council, as well as for his 'good intentions towards the fisher men," which have grown to assume the character of a delusion and mockery.

The New York Shipping and Commercial List discusses the question of the benefits of war to commerce in a very able article, which, no doubt, will do something to dispel the popular delusion on this subject. Kitty was looking up at him with earnest gaze.

"Is she very ill?" she asked.

Minnie lay there, her cheeks deathly pale, her eyes closed, her lips apart, revealing her white and even teeth; over the pillow her long, fair hair lay floating in a tangled mass, and one small hand, almost rigidly clenched was outside the coverlet. "She is very ill," replied Dr. Travers,

At that instant Minnie uttered a low moan, and shuddered in her sleen. At that instant Minnie uttered a low moan, and shuddered in her sleep. The hand which lay outside the coverlet, was unclasped and stretched forward, as though in supplication.

When she said:

"You can not expect me to meet this man?"

"I do not expect any such sacrifice,

"You can not expect me to meet this man?"

"I do not expect any such sacrifice, nor do I anticipate that there is any chance of a meeting between you taking place. From what I have gathered from Liddy Randall's maid, it would seem that the couple have for some time lived on bad terms. The brutality which this man occasionally exercised on you, when you were in his power, does not seem to have diminished; on the contrary, from what I learn, it has increased under the influence of drink, to which he has succumbed. My notion is, that in one of these paroxysms of folly, he has made a personal attack upon his wife, and that when he recovers his senses, even he will be so ashamed of himself that it will be some time before he hat it an appearance."

"But suppose he should come, what should I do!" asid Kitty, covering her eyes with her hands.

"Exercise your common sense, my of the contrary for the contrary hands."
