FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO CIRTEX KNITTING INCORPORATED, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 1,527—Mr. Jarvis:

1. What is the total amount of grants, subsidies, or any other means of financial assistance, both direct or indirect, to be given by the government to Cirtex Knitting Incorporated, to be located in New Brunswick?

2. What is the total amount of grants, subsidies, or other financial assistance, which the government spent in 1972 on knitting mills owned and operated by Canadian entrepreneurs and companies in each of the ten provinces and two territories?

3. What is the policy of the government regarding the limitation of the amount of textiles imported into Canada from abroad?

FERRY "PELEE ISLANDER"

Question No. 1,833—Mr. Grier:

1. (a) What were the costs of construction of the ferry Pelee Islander (b) to whom were the costs paid and by whom (c) what are the terms of the use of this ship by the Pelee Shipping Company Limited?

2. What amounts of subsidy were paid to the Pelee Shipping Company Limited in each year 1960 to 1967 inclusive?

3. What is the status of a legal labour dispute between Pelee Shipping Company Limited, and is the dispute economic and related to the need for implementation of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code?

4. (a) Was the subsidy to Pelee Shipping Company Limited increased in 1968 and, if so, was this increase to provide for the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (b) what amounts of subsidies were paid in each year 1968 to 1972 inclusive and 1973 to date?

5. Is it consistent with government policy to subsidize employers, such as Pelee Shipping Company Limited, while such employers are subject of a legal strike by their working men?

6. What was the operating revenue of the subsidized Pelee Islander for the years 1970, 1971 and 1972?

7. Are the rates charged the public by the operator of the Pelee Islander approved by the Canadian Transport Commission and, if not, for what reason?

8. (a) Who is the owner of the Pelee Islander (b) who was the previous owner (c) is the ship being sold and, if so, by whom, to whom and on what terms?

9. Is the Pelee Islander the only source of livelihood of her present operator and, if not, what other sources of income to this person are known to the government?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, the last time written questions were called I inquired of the parliamentary secretary about question No. 1,047. I have looked at the comment he made at that time. I am raising this matter again because I happen to know about the kind of statistics that are available to realize that if I were responsible I could have that question answered in a week. Would he be good enough, before the next time around, to find out why this question has not been answered and to tell me the real facts, whether or not it will be answered?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On March 19 I put down question No. 1,661 which is of interest to all CNR employees who are making contributions to their pension fund. It is a very simple question. It asks what is the total amount of loans in each year, 1965 to 1972, made by the CNR Pension Fund to (a) Canadian companies and (b) foreign-controlled companies. It asks what amount has been loaned to Fidinam (Ontario) Limited and at what interest rate, and is Fidinam a Canadian-owned company. Finally, it asks whether railway workers have any voice in pension fund decisions that are made. There can be no reason why that question has not been answered except that the government does not want to give this information. The railway employees have asked over and over again for the information. I now ask the minister responsible for answering this question to provide an answer; otherwise I will have to take such action in this House as parliamentary procedure permits.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX INCREASE—ACTION TO CONTROL RETAIL PRICE INCREASES—RATE OF INFLATION IN 1973

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question arising out of the news about the very alarming increase in the wholesale price index in April over March and, in particular, April 1973, compared with April, 1972. In view of the increase of over 16 per cent from year to year, does the minister still regard his anti-inflation program as adequate, or is he now prepared to take more direct action to de-escalate the increase in retail prices in Canada—and of course by "direct action" I do not mean tight money?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the wholesale price index gives us cause for concern. It represents primarily a rise in agricultural commodity and world commodity prices which would not be susceptible, since it involves a shortage of supply, to the type of action recommended by the Leader of the Opposition. As a matter of fact, when I made this analysis of the situation at last week's federal-provincial conference it was accepted by the provinces, and particularly by the Premier of Ontario.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that the increase in the wholesale price index is likely to work its way through quite quickly into the retail price index, and as the development of an inflationary psychology is one of the things that menaces us, did the minister in fact predict to that conference that the rate of inflation during 1973 would be 5 per cent? Further has he any reason to believe, or does he believe in fact, that the rate of inflation will level off and slow down?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the rate of inflation in world commodities, including agricultural commodities, will level off when the supply is increased to meet the rapidly increasing demand. It is true that at the conference I said that our existing forecasts of the price deflator would run in the range of 5 per cent. As for an inflationary psychology, I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he may be contributing to that as much as anybody else.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time the minister has suggested that, and it is not the first time I have suggested that he should do something to head it off.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFLATION—SUGGESTED BROADENING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question since, of course, his is the final responsibility. In light of these alarming figures, will the Prime Minister at least consider broadening the terms of the body established by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? It is well recognized that I have no great fondness for that body, but I would like to know how the Prime Minister regards the problem of inflation, whether he believes the problem of inflation in Canada is largely one of food prices, and in light of these figures is he prepared to face up to what really seem to be the facts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are many aspects to that question. Replying to the last part I would say yes, the government is always desirous of facing up to the facts. Indeed, the board to which the Leader of the Opposition refers is one which was set up along the lines recommended by a committee of the House.

ENERGY

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST THAT NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT BE AMENDED SO THAT PARLIAMENT MAY MAKE DECISION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the minister's remarks over the past few weeks. They have raised widespread concern that the decision on the Mackenzie pipeline, a decision of extreme importance to the future of this country, will be made by the cabinet without prior consultation with parliament. When that concern was brought to the minister's attention, he observed that he was not in a position to do anything and he did not want members of parliament counselling him to break the law. We would not want to do that. Since the minister is of the view that the National Energy Board Act restricts him from bringing the matter of the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline to parliament for debate, will he, instead, bring before parliament the National Energy Board Act so that the act can be suitably amended by parliament, to provide that the decision on the pipeline will be made by parliament rather than by the cabinet alone?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I suggest, as an alternative, that it might be advisable to take advantage of the relief that committees will have from responsibility for the estimates in the coming month to have a discussion, perhaps jointly with the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, on the guidelines that have been put forth up to this point, and also at a later date when additional guidelines, particularly financial, are available.

Mr. Saltsman: I do not feel that the minister has really answered the question I put to him. As the minister seems to be reluctant to answer the question, will he at least give parliament his reasons for not letting parliament make the decision on a pipeline that is of such importance and of such concern to this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the hon. gentleman's question. Parliament passed a statute specifically to deal with pipeline questions. I think it might be more appropriate to find out whether that statute has indeed served the interests of Canadians and whether the preparations for such hearings are adequate. If there is disagreement on that point, I suppose the question of amendments to the act might then be brought forward.

Mr. Baldwin: How would you vote, Max?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION THAT BANK OF CANADA MAKE LOANS TO PROVINCES—DATE OF NEXT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister regarding the recent federal-provincial conference.

First, did the conference discuss the possibility of the Bank of Canada making loans to provinces to promote faster economic development? Second, has a date been agreed upon for the next conference on the same topic?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no to the first part of the question. As for the next conference, mention was made of the end of fall perhaps or of next winter, but not precisely to discuss the matter interesting the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada. There was mention of industrial development and other similar topics.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To foster industrial development, could the Prime Minister suggest that the provinces use the credits of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems that within two years, the people in those two provinces which patiently gave the social credit system a 30-year trial grew disgusted with it and threw it out. This might explain why that system has not been carried on.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a final supplementary.

Is the Prime Minister aware that those two creditist provinces did not re-elect their respective government probably because their laws have been found ultra vires by the government of the right hon. Prime Minister?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will return later to supplementaries on this subject, but we should try to move on.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POSITION FOR PRESENTATION TO LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE RESPECTING WATERS OVER CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister say whether the position he has stated publicly that Canada will go all out, flat, for an exclusive fishing zone that will include the fringes of our continental shelf represents the position of his department or the position—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows, I am sure, that a question cannot be asked in those terms. The question should be asked directly of the minister. During the oral question period questions cannot be asked about statements made by ministers outside the House except to inquire whether the statement represents government policy.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, that is what I am about to do, if Your Honour would have a little patience with me. I am asking the minister, can he indicate whether this has been accepted as the position that will be presented to the Law of the Sea Conference in 1974 by the government, and has the minister received clearance with respect to this position from the Secretary of States for External Affairs?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker the answer, basically, is yes. That has been my position and the position of the Department of Fisheries since 1968.

Mr. Lundrigan: Could the minister answer the second part of my question which is so vital? I understand that certain motions I put forward today were turned down because there was not agreement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate whether there has been clearance from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that this will be Canada's position at the Law of the Sea Conference?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have had a great deal of support from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister passed over my question. I wonder if he would indicate what the basis was for the presentation of the position on page 6 of his speech, which he released on Saturday and from which I must quote, that the Conservative party is pushing for a 50-mile limit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like the hon. member to remember what I suggested a moment ago. It is a well established practice of the House that questions must be asked directly. The hon. member, I am sure, can ask the question directly without making a direct allusion or reference to statements made outside the House. The hon. member can ask the question on that basis and there will be no difficulty.

Mr. Lundrigan: Your Honour, I am handicapped in asking questions on this matter unless I can refer to the charge, if you can call it that, or allegation or fabrication which was made by the minister on Saturday wherein he indicated that the position of the Conservative party of Canada is to push for a 50-mile limit. Further, maps were included at the end of his presentation. He had a 50-mile limit drawn on the map, which he contends is the position of my party, along with a 200-mile limit. I ask the minister, what was the basis for drawing that conclusion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have just indicated to the hon. member that the question cannot be asked in those terms. I appreciate that it may be hard to find a way around the difficulty, but there should be some way for the hon. member to obtain the information he wants. Perhaps the minister will reply briefly to the question asked by the hon. member, assuming that the question has been asked directly without reference to or quotation from the statement made outside the House, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville who has a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my response has to be that I listened attentively to the hon. member and other hon. members opposite, and that is my interpretation of their position.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Your Honour, it is very important that members of the Privy Council, House leaders, and leaders of parties be responsible in the public statements they make. This applies especially to people in these very responsible positions. I contend, Your Honour, that if members of the Privy Council are permitted to go outside the House, or even to do this inside the House, and make presentations that are complete fabrications, they are undermining not only the privileges of all members of the House but also the whole political process of our country. What if the Leader of the Opposition were to say today that the Liberal party supported free abortion or supported termination of diplomatic relations with the United States? I would consider that to be a very serious matter if such statements were not in accordance with the facts. On Saturday the minister proceeded to make a public statement. I suppose it was actually presented but at least it was released on Saturday with the indication that it would be presented in New Brunswick. The presentation indicated that the position of my party was that there would be—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lundrigan: I am going to go on, anyway. The minister talks about a 200-mile limit and then goes on to ask, where do our Conservative friends stand now; they are talking about a 50-mile limit. He said that this is Conservative thinking and he went on to reflect on the Conservative party as having a policy relating to a 50-mile limit. At no time has any member of this party ever indicated that Canada should seek a 50-mile limit.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, I appreciate, has risen on a question of privilege and has referred to a statement made outside the House. The hon. member has the right to rise at this time on a question of privilege, and when he does he has to be heard. When I return to the Chair every Monday, having read the newspapers and seen the many statements made by hon. members referring to the political situation and the political positions taken by members of other parties or spokesmen for other parties, it is my impression that we could spend much of our Mondays and Tuesdays discussing these statements which I am sure in many instances are felt by hon. members on one side or the other not to represent in fact the positions of their parties. The hon. member, again I insist, has the right to rise on a question of privilege, but I hope we will not get involved in a lengthy debate on the matter.

● (1500)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last, I rose in the House and moved a motion under Standing Order 43. I wish to read the contents of that motion. The motion reads:

> That Canada express its position to the fishing nations of the world, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the principle of ownership by the coastal state of the waters over the continental shelf be upheld.

I have stated this position about 500 times in the past five years, but the minister had the gumption to go to New Brunswick and present maps prepared by his department indicating a 50-mile limit and a 200-mile limit. This is completely absurd.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: A year ago last December 1,500 delegates from every constituency in Canada assembled at a meeting of the Conservative Association of Canada and presented resolutions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he is now going beyond the assertion of a question of privilege and is debating the issue. I do not think the hon. member would want to do that at this time. There are many possibilities for hon. members to discuss issues, even issues of such importance as the one referred to by the hon. member, but the question period is certainly not the time to initiate a full-fledged debate on a matter of substance. I am sure the hon. member appreciates the position of the Chair in this respect in seeking his co-operation.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will be happy to do that, Mr. Speaker, if the minister will withdraw his remarks which were lies and fabrications, absolute lies and fabrications.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: It was an absolute lie. The minister has no right to leave it on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he has no right—

Mr. Lundrigan: That is right. I know that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member confirms that he knows he has no right to accuse another member of the House, whether he is a member on the other side of the House, a member of the government or on his own side of the House, of lying. I even hesitate to use the word. I would hope that, in accordance with the long tradition of parliament, the hon. member will co-operate with the Chair and not use language that is clearly unparliamentary. For over 100 years this has formed the basis of a rule which is accepted by all hon. members. I think we set a very bad example to other parliamentary institutions in this country at all levels of government if the senior House in Canada does not conform to the long established rules of parliamentary debate.

I am sure the hon. member will allow the Chair to complete his remarks. I am referring to another hon. member, not the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

That is one of the difficulties of referring to statements made outside the House. It is also a long established practice that members do not ask questions about statements made outside the House and that no reference is made to them. When such questions are asked they should be asked directly rather than by asking ministers to confirm what they have said and whether it is right or wrong, because at that point we get involved in a debate of the kind that has now been initiated by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. If a statement is made outside the House and another member thinks the statement is wrong, it seems to me there should be an opportunity in the House, not during the question period, to try to offer rectification of the facts, or the matter might be pursued by an hon. member outside the House in response to statements made outside this chamber.

Having said all this, I hope the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will co-operate with the Chair and seek another opportunity or another way to initiate a debate on the issue. I am sure the hon. member will agree that according to long established practice it is not correct or parliamentary to accuse another member of deliberately misleading the House or of lying. I appreciate that this is a difficult situation in that we are now referring to statements made outside the House, but I hope the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will assist the Chair and allow us to continue.

Mr. Lundrigan: I did not realize the rest of the statement contains as much garbage as it does. I thought there was only the lie that I am concerned about. It is time for us to reassess that rule. If ministers can do that kind of damage to our system, not the Conservative party, by presenting this kind of position internationally it is time that we re-assessed the rule. Something must be done to prevent ministers from presenting this kind of position to the Canadian people. These men have a great responsibility. Your Honour might as well make an example of me right now because I will not withdraw these remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the rule certainly is clear that anyone who says of a member in the House that what he has said in the House is a lie would be subject to having to withdraw, but to make that statement respecting a statement by a minister made outside the House is, I submit, not contrary to the rule. I have heard that question argued before. If that were not so, loose, idle, disorderly and untruthful statements could be made outside the House and we would be bound within the House not to cast any doubts on the veracity thereof.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, being a freshman in this chamber I am intrigued by one of the comments by Your Honour, namely, that a member of this House is not entitled to and should not at any time use the words "lie" or "lying". If in fact a minister or any other member did state a lie in the House, would it not be appropriate to call him a liar, and if he in fact did state a lie would he not have to resign and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he might take a closer look at the rules. In any event, the hon. member is asking me a question and the Chair is not and has never been in a position to reply to questions.

What the right hon. member has said perhaps brings forth for the assistance of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the Chair a distinction which is perhaps somewhat theoretical. The Chair still feels it is conducive to disorder in the House for hon. members to rise and say that a lie has been uttered or accuse another member of lying outside the House and, I suppose, saying that he is within the rules because he is saying the lie was uttered outside this chamber.

All that confirms my original statement that it is contrary to the long established practice of this House for members to ask questions during the question period in relation to statements made outside the House. The only result that comes from transgressing the rule is the kind of debate and the kind of difficulty we now have.

I am willing to take the matter under advisement and take into consideration the fact we are dealing with matters that have transpired outside of this chamber. But in spite of what the right hon. member has said I would certainly reaffirm the general statement and principle that it is certainly not according to the long established practice of this House to use these words and make accusations along these lines, even if we are dealing with statements that have been made outside this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to say a few words in support of the observance of the long established rule of this House that one member cannot call another hon. member a liar, nor can he accuse him of lies. To suggest, as has been done by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, that it is quite all right to call another hon. member a liar on Saturday or Sunday but that it is unparliamentary to do so on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday is quite unacceptable. The rule respecting this situation applies to the utterances of members of the House of Commons both within and outside the House.

● (1510)

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. MacEachen: I would draw to the attention of the right hon. gentleman a very important precedent. Some years ago, if my recollection is correct, he himself rose in the House and clarified for the benefit of the Speaker comments which he had made outside the House. If he was not observing that tradition, why did he do it? It is obvious it would fly in the face of reason and human decency to suggest there is one standard of conduct that applies to members of parliament while they are sitting in the chamber, that here we maintain standards of proper debate, and another, lower standard, which applies once they leave the chamber. That is quite unacceptable—quite unacceptable to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Whatever standards apply, apply in all places, including the House of Commons, and the right hon. gentleman cannot make a defence by saying it is all right to call a man a liar if you do it while speaking in New Brunswick but it is bad if you do it in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Despite the applause with which that totally unacceptable and illogical statement by the minister has been received, the fact remains that if we on this side of the House were regularly to point out the falsehoods told by members of the government outside the House we would be busy all the time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett: Since the President of the Privy Council has seen fit to intervene in this matter in his role as government House leader, and since he has made reference to the standards that should apply both within and outside the House, I suggest that if he has not already done so he should examine the statement in question, as I have done, and perhaps indicate to his colleague in parliamentary terms that, to say the least, he has displayed a mystifying lack of knowledge of the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since we have lost twelve minutes, he might as well lose another one to say that there is only one truth, and that it should be the same inside and outside this House, and that those politicians who have just spoken for twelve minutes have caused us to waste important minutes allotted to the oral question period.

Mr. Speaker, that problem comes back often and it should be referred immediately to the Committee on Procedure and Organization for further consideration. But it remains nevertheless that we have once again lost our time, and our Progressive Conservative friends have not yet understood the importance of the oral question period if they amuse themselves as they do.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I understand that Your Honour has agreed to consider this matter and come to a decision. But I must say we have to reject the philosophy of the President of the Privy Council which indicates that there shall be a different standard for members of parliament in the House and outside the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: As I understood him, he suggested it was perfectly competent for a minister of the Crown to follow a lower standard in a statement outside the House than in the House, and that I reject completely.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not consider myself to be an expert on the rules of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: But having listened to the intervention by the right hon. member for Prince Albert I realize the immense respect we all have for the precedents set by the mother of parliaments. There they are not so much concerned with a lie outside the House but they certainly have been dealing with a lay outside the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: Boo!

Mr. Bell: Same old bunch!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members can see now where this kind of insinuation leads. I would think hon. members should be prepared to accept the rulings of the Chair. I have tried since I have been in the chair to guide hon. members to the best of my ability—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —in the use of what I consider to be parliamentary language. I think that hon. members, by and large, from day to day over the years have been very respectful of the rules and that in general we have set a very good example, as we ought to do—I feel very strongly about this—to other legislatures, to municipal councils and other parliamentary bodies. I believe hon. members should always bear this in mind. They should consider that it is part of their responsibility in this House to set a good example not only to other hon. members and to the general public but also, as I have said, to other parliamentary institutions. In this sense I suggest it is fitting they should adopt the highest possible standards. When we start making distinctions as to whether we can call a member a liar when he makes a statement outside the House but we cannot do it about a statement he makes inside the House we are splitting hairs and we are not acting in conformity with the spirit of the rules. The spirit of the rules is that we should try to work together as civilized people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that members of the House are human and that they can feel very irritated, sometimes rightly so, in connection with statements made outside the House if there is provocation which might lead them to use words stronger than those they would otherwise use. I am sure this is what happened in the case of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who feels very strongly in connection about fisheries matters. He feels the statement made by the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries outside the House was not in conformity with the facts. I think it is always possible to tell the House that a statement made outside is not in conformity with the facts, perhaps in the same way as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni did—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: —but to use stronger language and, to my way of thinking, unparliamentary language, can only lead to difficulties such as we have experienced this afternoon. I shall continue to give the matter serious consideration, but I insist that I do not intend to allow the standards of parliamentary language to deteriorate. If we were to allow the House to follow the road it appears to wish to embark on this afternoon we would be doing a disservice to parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—EFFECT OF LEVEL OF INVESTMENT ON DOLLAR, INTEREST RATES AND EXPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to change the topic and ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question on the subject of energy. In view of the evidence that increased exports of gas and oil and the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline will probably exert upward pressure on the Canadian dollar, making our other exports less competitive, as well as contributing to higher interest rates, has the minister established a system to monitor the level of investment in energy in Canada to determine how it might affect the level of the dollar, interest rates and exports?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): It is my view that any energy project of the magnitude referred to by the hon. member could be orchestrated in such a way as not to produce undue pressures either on our interest rates or on exchange rates.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of possible heavy investment in James Bay, the tar sands and pipeline development in the next few years, sums of the order of tens of billions of dollars, can the minister tell us whether he is conducting any studies of the impact of such major developments on the economy and on employment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the effect on Canadian capital markets of projects of the type and how they ought to be brought into operation without producing, as I said, undue pressure either on our dollar or on the economy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize for having to interrupt the hon. member but the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I misunderstood but I did not understand that the subject was going to change as abruptly as it did. I rise on a point of privilege because I wish this to go on the record. Since the remarks attributed to the Minister of the Environment were made in my constituency, I want it abundantly clear that at no time could he associate me in any way with any remarks relating to this limit. Any remarks made in that regard bear little relationship to the truth or to remarks I have made in my constituency, in this House and in committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF TERMS OF REFERENCE—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION IN HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs of which I am now giving him verbal notice. In light of the extraordinary emptiness of the terms of reference of the Board, respecting which he tabled an order today, is the minister prepared to refer this matter to the House so as to improve both the quality and the quantity of those terms of reference?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the hon. member's premise. The concept of the board was approved by a strong majority of this House. The important thing is to let the board get down to work in the interests of the Canadian people generally.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that earlier today the Minister of Finance hinted that the first ministers conference approved the lack of policy of this government in regard to inflation, will the Prime Minister give consideration to assuring that the next extravaganza is televised so the people will know what they are getting for their money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will convey the hon. gentleman's feelings to the other provincial premiers.

WELFARE

POLICY RESPECTING DAY CARE CENTRES—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC MINISTER SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Can the minister tell this House whether, following the discussions he had with the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs, changes have been brought to the policy of his department concerning day-care centres?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER IDENTIFY THE TWO MOST IMPORTANT PROVINCES AGAINST IMPOSITION OF PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that is supplementary to an earlier series asked various ministers about last week's conference. I address this question to the Prime Minister. In a television account of the proceedings the Prime Minister said, if I may quote him, that "the two most important provinces were against price controls". Will the right hon. gentleman allay my curiosity and identify for the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. gentleman kindly ask the question directly. I thought we had spent a little time earlier trying to find a way around the difficulties that result from asking questions about statements made outside the House.

Mr. Fairweather: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, part of the difficulty is that it was a supplementary asked at an earlier stage and therefore I have to lay the ground. I am anxious to know which of the two provinces the Prime Minister identified as the most important, and is this part of the new federal formula? Which are the two most important provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member reads the communiqué he will see that the majority of the provinces expressed their belief that this was not—

An hon. Member: Don't evade the question.

Mr. Fairweather: The television record will show what you said.

Mr. Trudeau: I agree with the hon. member that I said something along those lines.

Mr. Baldwin: Which are the two, then?

Mr. Trudeau: Two of those that said they were opposed to it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL FROM COMMISSION OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fatuous, if not incongruous, contribution that the Canadian contingent to the ICCS finds itself having to discharge by reason of the activities of other members of the commission, has the government yet come to any conclusion regarding the removal of the Canadian force? If so, the government having made a decision and therefore being responsible for what is being done, would consideration now be given before the withdrawal to letting the House of Commons speak on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has made a decision and I intend to convey it to the House tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say what it was?

Mr. Sharp: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He won't say what it is. That means they are getting out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, but I believe the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert is rising for the purpose of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the government has made a decision, surely parliament is not going to be bypassed by the announcement being made outside the House, which has happened too often in the past. I ask the minister: Will the announcement be made in this House?

Mr. Sharp: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker. I said that I would convey this decision to the House tomorrow.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

POSSIBLE INCLUSION IN LEGISLATION OF FUND RAISERS FOR POLITICAL PARTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the recent acknowledgement by Mr. J. P. Ostiguy that he is what is commonly known as a "bagman" for the Liberal party and at the same time sits as a member of the advisory board to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, would the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether or not a situation such as this will be covered in the proposed legislation on conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the information conveyed by the hon. member is incorrect. The gentleman in question is not what he calls a "bagman" for the Liberal party.

Mr. Baldwin: Is he an assistant?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are running short of time. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby will be allowed to ask a supplementary question, and then we will have time for a few more questions before calling orders of the day.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that, bagman or not, depending on one's choice of terms, this gentleman is involved in fund raising for the Liberal party, or has been—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is prefacing his question by a statement or an allegation. I think the hon. member sinned against the long established rule in the same way in asking a question last week. I suggest to him that it should be possible for him to ask a question without making a statement or an allegation of fact.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have never considered fund raising as such whether for the Liberal party or not to be an allegation of a criminal offence. My question to the Prime Minister is this. Would he assure the House that the legislation that the government is preparing on this subject for introduction to this House will cover the situation where a man, no matter which political party he may be working for in a fund raising capacity, will be excluded from membership on government boards which are involved in decisions that lead to grants being given to corporations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Prime Minister for the purpose of replying to the question, but obviously the question is wrongly put on a number of counts, despite the correction made by the hon. member. The statement that has been made is based on an allegation. If not, then it is hypothetical. In any event, the Prime Minister will be allowed to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the allegation contained in the earlier part of the question is incorrect. So far as the question of having contributed to a party and sitting on government boards is concerned, I think a lot of people who are affiliated with the NDP sit on government advisory boards. The Economic Council of Canada and other bodies have members who are connected with the labour movement.

Mr. Baldwin: No wonder we are in trouble.

Mr. Trudeau: No wonder we are in trouble, as the hon. member says. This is a matter that I would find difficulty in including in the legislation to which the hon. member refers, but we will listen very carefully to proposals containing any kind of constructive amendments which have already been discussed by the hon. gentleman's party.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS WHILE VISITING VICTORIA FALLS, RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT AND TABLING OF LETTER FROM ZAMBIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement the minister made last Thursday concerning the murder of two Canadian girls in Rhodesia, in which the minister said he and his government were treating this matter very seriously and were not satisfied with the public statement made by Zambia, I would ask whether he has received a full report from our high commissioner in Lusaka, and has this statement been referred to the Zambian government? Has he or his department received a full report or a statement from that government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Assistant High Commissioner, as the hon. member knows, went to Rhosedia and made a report to us on his findings and conveyed these to the government of Zambia. I have received a personal letter from the foreign minister of Zambia which conveys deep felt condolences to the government and people of Canada, and particularly to the bereaved families. This is a personal letter and, therefore, I would prefer not to reveal it, but perhaps I could quote one part which says:

—the Party, Government and People of Zambia deeply regret the deaths of these innocent Canadian nationals.

An hon. Member: You have quoted it.

Mr. Sharp: I might add that I am not yet satisfied with the explanations that have been given by Zambia and I am awaiting a further report.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister has read from this document, perhaps he would be kind enough to table it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You can't break all the rules.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the minister's assurance that he will table it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to tabling it. I felt it was important to the House to know that I had received a message from the Zambian government which came in the form of a personal letter addressed to me. I am not quite certain what "personal" means in this connection. I quoted only a few words from it to indicate the condolences of the Zambian government. I shall ask the foreign minister whether he has any objections to its being tabled. I knew he would not have any objection to me expressing these general sentiments of the Zambian government.

In addition, I wanted to assure the hon. member that we are not yet satisfied with the explanation and we are pursuing our inquiries. We expect a much fuller result from the inquiries we have made.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a long-standing rule of this House that when a member reads from a document, whether personal or otherwise, it must be tabled. I must, therefore, ask the minister to table it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has quoted the rule correctly. I think it would have been open to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs to refer in general terms to the letter. When he receives a letter and quotes from it, this does not mean he automatically has to table it. There may be a feeling among hon. members that he should not be required to do so. However, when the matter is raised by way of a point of order a ruling has to be made and the rule is very clear that when a document is quoted by the minister or whoever quotes it, that member is required to table it.

The minister states that this is a personal letter. As is well known to hon. members, the rule refers to official documents. It now becomes a question of determining whether the document in question is an official one or whether it is a personal letter. It would have been much easier had the minister not quoted from it, but I would think, in view of the fact it is a formal communication, that makes it a formal document and under the rules of the House the hon. minister would be required to table it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the point of order, I really have no objection to tabling the letter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, table it.

Mr. Sharp: It was addressed to me in the form of a personal letter and I felt, therefore, that I should ask the minister whether he has any objection, and I do not think he will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You should not have quoted from it.

Mr. Baldwin: Let the House judge whether it is official or personal.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the undertaking by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and perhaps he will have communication with the hon. member for Wellington, it may be easier later on, by consent of the House, to determine whether the letter in question ought to be tabled.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO INCREASE BASIC RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the hope the minister expressed on May 17 that he would be able to table before the end of May a bill to amend—don't look at your watch, look at your calendar—that he would be able to introduce a bill to amend the Pension Act so as to increase the basic rate of war disability pensions, can the minister say whether he will meet that commitment within the next three days?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to inform the hon. member that there is a calendar on my watch. I cannot give a formal commitment on this today, it being May 28, but when I have it available it will be brought to your attention.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might be allowed to ask a supplementary, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

POSSIBILITY DELAY IN LEGISLATION CAUSED BY FAILURE OF CABINET TO AGREE ON BASIC RATE OF PENSION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will he indicate to the House whether the Cabinet has agreed to the new formula in respect of the basic rate of pension and that legislation is to come forth on that basis? Has the Cabinet agreed or is that the reason the bill has not been presented?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I explained the other day, the item is before Cabinet, but no final or full agreement has been reached as yet.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON PRISONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF ITEMS ON AGENDA

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the announcement today from Collins Bay penitentiary of yet another failure under the temporary absence system, namely the case of David Lawrence who failed to return after being granted temporary leave, will the minister advise whether the temporary absence system is on the agenda for the conference announced by the minister of federal and provincial authorities on the prison system in Canada?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will have some announcement to make perhaps later this week in respect of the temporary absence and parole system.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in connection with the announcement later this week. Can the minister advise us whether he will be making a statement on motions outlining the agenda for the proposed conference of federal and provincial governments respecting prisons, and will he table all the correspondence he has had with the provincial ministers in this connection?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as soon as the agenda becomes final I will be pleased to do that. At the present time we are thinking of having discussions on female offenders; the sharing of correctional services; the Hugessen Report recommendations; rehabilitation programs; parole and probation services and so on. When I get a more complete agenda I will table it.

WHEAT—CONTINUITY OF SUPPLY FOR EASTERN FLOUR MILLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that eastern flour mills must have a continuity of wheat supplies to enable them to tender on flour orders in the foreign trade, can he state, in light of the present wheat situation, that provision has been made to keep a constant supply of suitable wheat available to mills in the east?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, over the years the Canadian Wheat Board has been assuring that there would be adequate supplies of grain available in appropriate positions both for the milling industry and for the domestic feed market. If the hon. member has a particular problem to which he is referring I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On Friday he indicated he would make a statement to the House in respect of the availability of drugs to treaty Indians in Saskatchewan. Is he prepared to make that statement today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have no statement to make, other than to say that the directive issued by the regional director in Saskatchewan has been rescinded, and that the previous practice is to be maintained. There has been no change in that practice.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGED LACK OF TRAINING AND RAPID TURNOVER OF GUARDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns the recent escape of John McCann from the B.C. Penitentiary. In view of the fact that two of the guards assigned to check his cell were only three months on the job and had received no training, and in view of the fact there is a one-third turnover of personnel in that institution, can the minister indicate what steps he has taken to correct the situation so as to reduce the turnover and see that guards hired are given some training?

[Mr. O'Sullivan.]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge all guards and correctional officers are supposed to receive training before they go on the job. I note that one of the guards in this instance was suspended temporarily pending an investigation into the matter. I will check into the point brought to my attention and report back to the hon. member.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST BY LOCAL UNION FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General has received several requests from the local British Columbia union for meetings to pursue this question of security and morale, and I should like to know whether the minister has made any definite arrangement in respect of such a meeting?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning I am meeting the Public Service Alliance with regard to the Solicitor General's department. I am meeting the national union not the local.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL FROM COMMISSION ON CONTROL AND SUPERVISION IN VIET NAM

On the order:

May 25, 1973—That this House is of the view that notice should be given to the appropriate parties of the withdrawal of the Canadian contribution from the International Commission on Control and Supervision in Viet Nam by the 30th of June, 1973, for the following reasons:

(a) There has, in effect, been no ceasefire to supervise and the Commission has been unable to fulfil the functions for which it was appointed under the Paris Peace Agreement;

(b) Various parties to the Agreement have disregarded its terms, in particular both the United States of America and the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam have continued military activities in Cambodia and Laos and have not totally withdrawn from, or refrained from reintroducing into these two countries troops, military advisers, military personnel, armaments, munitions and war material as provided for by Article 20(b) of the Agreement;

(c) That the spirit, if not the letter, of the Agreement has been violated by the detention of many thousands of civilian political prisoners subject to gross mistreatment; and further,

That this House urges the Government of Canada to do all in its power to arouse world public opinion to call for the ending of the imprisonment of civilian political prisoners and for the return of such prisoners to their own homes as soon as possible.—Mr. Brewin.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word on this motion which stands in my name.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or with the intention of moving the motion, because there are two motions now before the House and we should not have a debate on both, even if it is one word.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. I want to say that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) informed the House, as indeed he informed me earlier today, that he proposes within a few days to make a statement on the subject matter of the motion. In these circumstances, I do not think it would be appropriate to proceed with the debate on this subject and I am, therefore, asking that the motion be withdrawn, subject to our right to re-introduce the motion later if circumstances warrant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to suggest to hon. members that we will get ourselves into difficulty if every time there is an opposition day or supply motion, when a number of motions are listed, if hon. members rise on points of order to state reasons for not proceeding with their motion. This would lead to abuses I suggest. This is not applicable in this particular case, but this practice could lead to difficulty. In any event, the hon. member has asked leave to withdraw the motion, and I shall inquire whether this is the wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn. We will, therefore, proceed to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and it will be put to this House.

Motion withdrawn and order discharged.

ALLOTTED S.O. 58—SUGGESTED IMPOSITION OF CONTROLS ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) moved:

That this House views with concern recent increases in the prices of crude oil, gasoline and other refined products as well as the increasing quantities of gasoline being exported from Canada and therefore calls upon the government to take immediate steps to implement the following measures:

(a) Place export controls on the export of gasoline and other refined petroleum products;

(b) Establish a two-price system for gas and oil with the export price reflecting the price in export markets and the domestic price significantly lower;

(c) Remove the Ottawa Valley line and permit offshore oil and domestic crude to move freely in the interests of price competition.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we hear a great deal these days about the world energy crisis. I think one should recall that there is really a long-term aspect and a short-term aspect to the energy crisis. Time does not permit that we discuss the long-term aspect of this problem, but I do wish to deal very briefly with the problem of the short-term aspect of the energy crisis. I would begin by reminding the House that there is no shortage of oil in Canada for our needs in the immediate future, nor is there any shortage of world supplies for the next few years. What we are facing at the present time is a situation in which the United States is running short of natural gas and crude oil. The result is that the United States is becoming increasingly dependent on supplies from outside its own borders. It cannot get sufficient supplies from Canada or from Venezuela, and consequently is more and more dependent upon securing crude oil from the Middle East.

Two things are happening today that are causing the United States great concern. The first is that the Middle East, very naturally, is very conscious of the situation and is raising its price. Second, of course, there is the political problem in that much of the oil is in the hands of pro-Arab countries and there is some tendency to bring pressure to bear on the pro-Israeli countries through the sale of oil. Consequently, the United States today is frantically trying to buy sufficient quantities of oil to meet its needs. It is paying higher prices and is seeking to obtain oil and gasoline wherever it can. This is having an effect on their balance of payments. It is stoking the fires of inflation in the United States, and is having some very serious effect with regard to our position as an oil-producing country.

The purpose of my motion is to point out that, in my opinion, the government has a two-fold responsibility. The first is to see that the shortage of oil in the United States does not result in Canada having insufficient supplies to meet its own needs. The second responsibility the government has is to see that the higher prices in the United States do not result in Canadians having to pay more for their oil than is justified, particularly when we remember it is oil which belongs to the people of Canada.

In this motion I have, therefore, suggested, first, that the government should extend the present export controls on oil to cover gasoline and other refined products. The minister, both on May 17 and again last Friday, May 25, expressed the opinion that there is no sign of any shortage of gasoline and other refined products. I hope he is right. But I also remember that last January 9, when I raised the danger of a shortage of crude oil in this country, the minister was quite sanguine about the situation. However, by February 15, the minister, through the National Energy Board, found it necessary to apply export restrictions on crude oil because there was no guarantee by any of the big oil companies that they could supply sufficient oil to meet Canadian needs for the months of March, April and beyond. As a matter of fact, since the minister applied these restrictions his action has been fully justified by the fact that the applications for permits to export crude oil for the month of May were for 200,000 barrels per day more than the National Energy Board was prepared to approve and for the month of June they were for 320,000 barrels more than the National Energy Board was prepared to approve.

Further, the justification for imposing export controls on crude oil has been fully vindicated, and I am now suggesting to the House the time has come to apply the same provisions to the export of gasoline. I do that because the figures alarm me. As I put them on Hansard Friday, in January and February of this year, our exports of gasoline to the United States were 11,517 gallons, and they jumped in March of this year to 5,332,000. This compares with only 72,000 for March of 1972. If we take our total exports of gasoline for January and February combined, were 81,265 gallons, but for March our export of gasoline had risen dramatically to 12,367,289 gallons. When you realize that our total exports last year, including our exports to the United States, were only 17 million gallons and that in the month of March alone this year we exported over 12 million gallons, you begin to understand what is happening, namely, that when the oil companies found they were restricted to exporting 1,235,000 barrels per day maximum of crude oil they began to export from Canada gasoline to meet the demand in the United States. It was a method of evading the restrictions on the export of crude oil.

It is significant that the exports of gasoline did not rise spectacularly until the restrictions upon crude oil were put into effect. There will be some question as to whether or not this is affecting many people. It is certainly affecting the independent operators. I have had many telephone calls from independent operators and I will give one example. One company here, the Capital City Gas Bars which operate some 24 stations in the Ottawa-Stittsville-Maniwaki area, has been notified by British Petroleum that they will only be allowed gasoline for two stations after June 1. The result is that they are going to close all 24 stations and this will throw some 200 employees out of work in this district. It seems to me that the time has come for the government to take the logical step, which we argue they should have taken last February, of extending these export controls on oil to cover gasoline and other refined products. This would plug the loophole which the oil companies are using to supplement their oil exports by additional gasoline exports.

In my opinion it is no longer satisfactory to revert to the old formula that certain amounts of oil or gasoline are "surplus to our needs". The fact is that in Canada we must conserve our supplies of cheap gas and oil because when our present supplies run out—and that time is not too far distant—we will be required to turn to much more expensive energy resources, such as oil from the tar sands and natural gas from the Arctic and the Mackenzie delta. It, therefore, seems the very essence of common sense to be conserving our cheaper conventional fission fuels rather than to be exporting large quantities, and then at an early date having to pay much higher prices for the necessary energy to operate our economy.

The second proposal I am making in this motion is that the government should introduce a two price system to protect the consumers west of the Ottawa valley who represent a captive market as a result of the government's oil policy. Ever since 1960 or thereabouts the area west of the Ottawa valley has been reserved for the western oil companies. This gave to that area a security of supply, but the consumers have paid millions of dollars for that security. This is a captive market which was given to the western oil companies without any agreement about a price formula, and with the consumers having no form of redress whatsoever with respect to the price. The oil shortage in the United States, and the demand for oil at almost any price, has resulted in prices going up in the area west of the Ottawa valley. Oil prices have risen anywhere from 55 cents a barrel to 70 cents a barrel, depending on grade and area—an increase of about 20 per cent.

I notice with alarm that some of the United States oil periodicals are predicting that this summer wellhead price for oil in Canada will go up by another 40 cents a barrel. During the last six months the price of gasoline and fuel oil for home heating have all increased, and we are justified in asking whether or not these very substantial increases in the price of oil and petroleum products is warranted. When the president of Imperial Oil was asked why these increases were taking place, he summed it up in one phrase. He said it was "attributable to international supply and price factors". Putting that into simple English, the president of Imperial Oil was saying that his company and the other oil companies were taking advantage of rising prices in the United States to charge Canadians more for the privilege of using their own oil.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas: I submit that there is no evidence whatsoever that justifies this 20 per cent increase over the past six months. The oil industry in Canada in 1972 increased its profits by 20.4 per cent over 1971, and in the first quarter of this year it increased its profits by 31.7 per cent over the same quarter for the previous year. Let me take the largest of these companies, namely, Imperial Oil, because when they raise the price all the other oil companies follow suit within a few days. Imperial Oil, which is 70 per cent owned by Standard Oil of New Jersey, in 1972 had profits of $157 million after taxes, which is up 11 per cent from the $136 million they made in 1971, which was a good year for their profits in that year were up 29.5 per cent over 1970. This price increase does not result from a payroll increase. The payroll of Imperial Oil in 1971 went down by 3.5 per cent because in that year they closed the refineries in Winnipeg, Regina and Calgary, and in 1972 their payroll went up by 3.5 per cent. So in that two year period, 1971 and 1972, their payroll was virtually stable, but their profits in that two year period went up by 40 per cent. Imperial Oil's profits over the past ten years, after paying taxes including corporation taxes, went up by over one thousand million dollars. They paid to the governments of Canada, in royalties in that ten year period, some $40 million, representing 4 per cent of what they put in their own pockets.

● (1600)

We have to recognize that 99 per cent of the petroleum refining industry in this country is foreign owned and controlled. Therefore, those corporations have been given a monopoly under the National Energy Board act to fleece the Canadian consumer with the supine connivance of an apathetic and timid government. I am suggesting that the government should seek legislative authority under Part IV of the National Energy Board Act to set prices for all oil produced and sold in Canada.

The minister takes refuge in the fact that he has no power to set the price with respect to imported oil, and I am not suggesting for a moment that he has. But in the same statement the minister points out that off-shore oil east of the Ottawa valley is still cheaper than domestic oil. Therefore, Canadians are paying a great deal more for their oil than they ought to pay, and the protection which the government ought to give those who live west of the Ottawa valley is absolutely essential. The government has a responsibility to protect Canadian consumers by setting a price for domestic crude oil. We can let the export crude price be set by the international market, and if that price goes too far out of line with domestic prices then the government has power to impose an export tax on all Canadian crude going to foreign markets. In this way the Canadian people, to whom the oil belongs, would enjoy some of the benefits and not be limited to the mere 4 per cent of the profits which Imperial Oil has made over the past ten years.

The third proposal I have made in this motion is to suggest that the time has come to revise the national oil policy. Whatever merit the Ottawa valley line may have had 12 years ago, I maintain that today it represents a prescription for disaster. I notice that in the letter which Mr. J. F. Grundy, the Deputy Minister of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, sent to the Chairman of the National Energy Board on September 22, 1971, he said:

> If the "price" for unlimited access involves a rigid maintenance of the Ottawa valley line and higher costs for Canadian industry generally and the petro-chemical industry in particular, we do not believe this is in the national interest.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the rule of the House be applied to the hon. member and that he be required to table the document from which he has just quoted.

Mr. Douglas: I would be very glad to table it, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that the rules preclude a private member from tabling a document. However, if I am not allowed to table it I will be glad to give the hon. member a copy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I wish to remind the hon. member and the former minister that this rule applies to ministers and not necessarily to private members, and in particular it applies to official documents.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Is that right, Stanley?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A private member cannot table anything.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder if ministers ever read the studies which are prepared for them. I have just sent to the minister and to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) a copy of a report called "Canada's Commercial Policy and Energy," prepared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is an excellent report.

That report predicted the growing shortage of supplies in the United States. It anticipated a drainage of the Canadian market and a drastic rise of price. That report, which the government has had in its possession for a year and a half, advocated a two price system for oil in Canada. Today, after 18 months, with prices soaring and the demand for oil increasing, the government has done nothing to protect the oil consumers in the area west of the Ottawa valley.

In my opinion this national oil policy is now giving to Canadians the worst of both worlds. Those west of the Ottawa valley have the assurance of supply, but are completely at the mercy of a monopolistic industry with respect to price. Those east of the Ottawa valley have the advantage of competitive pricing, but they are going to be increasingly at the mercy of the oil producing nations which can cut off their supply or raise the price at will.

The people of eastern Canada cannot get Canadian crude because there is no pipeline to carry it to them. At the present time, Canada is shipping some 60 per cent of its oil production to the American mid-west. By removing the Ottawa valley line, I believe it would be possible for the government to give the Canadian people the best of both worlds, by having two way pipelines through which oil could move freely, either from western Canada into the eastern regions, or have off-shore oil move freely from eastern Canada and Montreal into the central market. The result would be that if western oil prices were unjustifiably high, then off-shore oil would provide competition. On the other hand, if imported crude supply were threatened or if prices became too high, then the people in the east could use western crude to ensure both security of supply and price competition. I readily admit that this might mean some curtailment in our oil exports to the United States, but I would point out to hon. members of this House that for years and years the United States has imposed quotas against Canadian crude oil by presidential directive, and those orders still stand. Canada has been used as a tap to be turned off and on as it suited the oil companies and as it suited the United States.

The fact is that we have not got a national oil policy. We have an oil policy designed by the oil industry of the United States, by the Americans and for the Americans. On March 19 of this year Mr. John Connally, the former U.S. secretary of the treasury, speaking in Toronto warned Canada not to be hidebound, to use his phrase, by nationalism, in considering our new trade and financial arrangements. But he went on to say, "The United States would understand an oil supply policy which might cut back exports to the United States if necessary to cover Canadian needs." In other words Mr. Connally is saying to Canadians, "For heaven's sake, tell us what your oil policy is with respect to your needs."

I think that we would be justified in placing a curtailment on our exports of oil and gasoline in order to guarantee to the people of Canada security of supply and reasonable prices. In my opinion, the quotas set for oil last February were much too high. They were set after there had been a terrific out-pouring of oil to the United States. We would be fully justified, not in cutting off exports of oil, but in tapering them down to the figure of half a million or three-quarters of a million barrels, the figure the United States itself imposed on us not too long ago. What we do in this immediate oil crisis will largely determine our ability to deal effectively with the long-term oil crisis.

As I said a few moments ago, we are shipping out our conventional crude and natural gas, and the end of those supplies is in sight. We have a life index for oil of probably between 12 and 17 years, and a life index for natural gas of 27 or 28 years. That does not mean that we will not have any energy at the end of those periods. On the other hand it does mean that we will need to turn to more expensive forms of energy, such as oil made from tar sands, gas made from coal, natural gas procured from the Arctic and the Mackenzie Valley. We ought to be conserving this cheap oil, not only to give the Canadian people reasonably priced crude products, as at present, but, as well, because our whole industrial strategy in the world depends on our preserving our competitive advantage by having cheap energy to produce manufactured and processed goods for sale on the world market. This government, in my opinion, has never understood the use of energy as a tool in our struggle to win for Canada a place in the durable goods markets of the world and thereby create more jobs for Canadians.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that unless the government starts now to deal with the short-term energy crisis, we will have thrown away our trump cards when we come to deal with the long-term energy crisis, for that is the crisis which will determine whether Canada will survive as an important manufacturing nation in the world.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any significance in there not being an immediate reply by the government to the motion moved by the NDP. I think that all the evidence shows that all political parties at this moment of Canada's history are turning their deepest thoughts to this problem in an effort to find some way of grappling with the question of energy and Canada's future. I do not think it is trite to say that our future as a nation depends on our wise use of minerals and our wise use of energy which, by God's grace, we find in Canada.

I wish to commend the ex-leader of the NDP for his statesmanlike presentation of what he terms as the short-term approach. At first he ignored the long-term approach. Near the end of his remarks he came down, I think, on the right side by suggesting that ultimately we will need to grapple with this long-term question. I share with him his concern that the government for ten years, not four, had avoided grappling with the issue of a national energy policy, a national mineral policy and a national resource policy. If one peruses the records of this House since 1963, one will find frequent questions asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and other hon. members of the House, including myself, with regard to our need to move in this area.

I am not going to spend all my time in dealing with generalities. As I say, I wish to commend the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for his speech today. It shows that real thought is being given to this question. I am glad he changed the attitude which was evident three years ago when, in this House, he commended this government for its efforts in trying to sell more oil in the United States. All I can say is that in 1970 the hon. member said we should sell more oil to the United States and that the government should do everything it could to sell more oil in that market. Today, he has come round to another way of thinking and said that we should not do that.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member has been reading the wrong Hansard.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The hon. member says I am reading the wrong Hansard. I have a copy of Hansard in my hand, and if the hon. member wishes, I will quote for him. I am simply commending the hon. member for his change of attitude. I am not going to go over the political history of the trapeze act that the NDP has carried on for the past 35 years in Canada. It has shifted its position whenever the wind has veered. I am glad to welcome them on board, so to speak, and commend them for their position, which I hope is constant.

An hon. Member: And who is jumping on the band wagon now?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there is an energy crisis today. Its size and scope has been outlined well and ably by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. This is not a new crisis, in the opinion of some. In 1952, the Paley report of the United States, which had been asked for by the president in 1944, was published. The purpose in commissioning the report was this: The American government wanted the experts involved to tell the American people about the huge consumption of their strategic resources during the fighting of the war and what the future would be for their industrial complex. That report of 1952 warned that by 1980 the American Republic would be facing serious deficits in strategic resources of minerals, oil and gas.

In 1959, the Netschert report outlined this shortage in a different form and put it even more strongly. In 1963, the Landsberg report of the United States put the question in wider perspective. It warned the United States that it could get off the hook only if it used more expensive renewable resources. So, one cannot say that we have arrived at our present situation without warning.

As I say, today we face a crisis. This crisis has not only to do with a temporary shortage of supplies because, after all, there are plentiful sources of energy in the world. Rather, the crisis has to do with intermediate or short-term supply and price. At present the United States, an industrial nation, and Japan and western Europe, also industrial areas, are desperately short of the traditional fossil fuels, oil, gas and coal. Of all industrial nations, with the exception of Russia, Canada is the only one that can look with assurance at the future in the short term and in the long term. We have proven supplies for 15 years for oil, 30 years for gas and, when you take coal, we cannot even begin to estimate how many years of supply we have. If we add up all our resources, according to conservative estimates our potential reserves of oil, gas and other energy resources will last us about 500 years at present consumption rates. So we, ourselves, are not in a precarious position.

As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pointed out, if we take this backlog of resources and use them to correct the American mistake of the past 25 years, our supplies will become negligible and we will join the deficit area shared by Japan, the United States and western Europe. Therefore, on the question of supply, we must be cautious. We have to move very carefully in the matter involving export permits both for oil and gas. I do not think there is any difference between any party in Canada on this score.

However, on the question of price, there are going to be slight variations. For 50 years, since the twenties, the world price has been set by an international cartel. This international cartel, more powerful than governments, had a policy that worked on the assumption of plentiful supplies at low prices. Therefore, the wholesale price of oil, which is an international commodity, has remained almost static for nearly 50 years. Naturally, price wars broke out and they squelched them, but generally speaking, the price of wholesale oil has remained constant for 50 years throughout the industrial world.

This policy of the cartel, which oddly enough worked to the advantage of consumers all over the industrial world, has come to an end. OPEC, the Organization of Petroleum Export Countries, realizes that this oil in their lands is of great value to the industrial nations and, as the hon. member who preceded me pointed out, gives them political leverage. For these two reasons, oil prices in the world are no longer set by a cartel of seven major international oil companies. They are now set by the 11, 12 or 13 nations which export under the over all umbrella of OPEC. This fact of price is something that no person of responsibility in any party, opposition or government, can ignore. We will be up against a world price fact for the next 10 or 12 years, that is unquestionable. No matter how much manoeuvring we do, we cannot change this. However, I accept at once the first part of the proposal of the New Democratic Party that some consideration must be given to placing controls on the export of gasoline and other refined petroleum products.

In speaking for this party, I have been very careful about being as responsible as I can. It is true I have tried to guide the minister into facing the fact that he has some responsibility to get extra supplies for the eastern part of Canada. The situation in Montreal has concerned me for over four years. Since 1966, it has been sitting on the edge of an abyss. What would happen if there were an outbreak of hostilities in the Middle East? If these nations fulfilled their pledges which they have made over and over again, Montreal and the area would have 45 days supply and then be out entirely. Naturally, the government would move fast and set up a rationing system so that the 45 days supply would last for 60 or 70 days, but there would be a lot of cold people in the area east of the Ottawa valley if that emergency arose.

We hope and pray that oil and gas will be discovered off the east coast to relieve this pressure. However, as a question of policy which is not long term, but short term, the government has to grapple with the decision of what we would do about these people in Montreal. Many of them speak a different language, but they are part of Canada. A great deal of our industrial complex is in this area, yet these people sit quite oblivious to the fact that if there were a cut-off of offshore oil, they would be out of business as an industrial area immediately. As long as the rationing lasted, they would be reasonably warm.

The danger of having to rely on the tender mercies of OPEC, the policy recommendation for the short-run, is referred to in the third clause in the motion moved today by the NDP. The third clause reads:

> Remove the Ottawa Valley line and permit offshore oil and domestic crude to move freely in the interests of price competition.

I would love to believe this could be done. As far as oil and gas are concerned, I would love to get the Ontario and Quebec people off the backs of the westerners. We have been carring them on our backs for nearly 15 years. Certainly, higher prices would be charged for oil, but if the Ontario and Quebec people are to be at the tender mercies of the OPEC nations in preference to the tender mercies of Mr. Lougheed, that is their choice. However, I think that choice should be arrived at by open discussion, free of partisanship, because we cannot resolve these matters by indulging in traditional partisanship. I, and I believe my party, would be prepared to move the Ottawa Valley line west if that were requested by the Ontario government.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): West or east?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Move the Ottawa Valley line west, as suggested in the motion. I would agree with that because then we could move into our natural form of movement of oil south from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. However, I am a Canadian. I have to look at the problems of the people who live in Ontario and Quebec as well as those who live in the west.

This matter should be openly and seriously considered. I would move the Ottawa Valley line east and include Montreal, if Quebec asked for it. I know adjustments would have to be made in the refineries. Even though it would not be economic on the basis of costs, the westerner, as a Canadian, would have to be prepared to supply at least half the needs of Montreal. The people of Quebec should be brought into this decision making. We here could arbitrarily say we are going to build a pipeline into Montreal with a capacity of 400,000 barrels a day. This would at least guarantee that heating fuels were available. We could not keep their industry going. However, that is a decision for the province of Quebec to share. They had better come here to talk to us about this or we should go to them. I am speaking here, I hope in a reasonably non-partisan way, to try to bring light to this question.

On the first part of this question, the control clause, we do not have any choice. Look at our pipeline capacity. We had a narrow squeak last winter. One cold winter and Toronto will be in trouble. We do not have the pipeline capacity. Look at the storage capacity in Ontario and the dangerous position of the refinery capacity. Two years ago, Texaco announced it would build a refinery near Lake Erie. Construction was held up for two years. I will not go into all the reasons because they are well known. Last month Texaco announced they would be going ahead with the project. They had better get cracking because regardless of whether they make 15 per cent or 20 per cent profit, people in the industrial area of Ontario want enough oil and gas to keep their industries going and their bodies warm. That is the essential part of policy. Do not distract us entirely with this issue of how much they are making. They are not doing too badly. I simply point out that the essence of policy making at this time is to see if we can come up with some sort of decision that is clear-cut for the producer and the consumer. The national oil policy of 1961 is not the law of the Medes and Persians. It is a flexible thing and should be looked at in that way.

I condemned the minister by inference for going into this OECD deal and saying he would not make special deals with Venezuela or Nigeria. He now realizes his mistake and will look into the matter. I support him in this. Venezuela is a friend of Canada, but will only deal government to government. Nigeria is a different case. There you can deal with different owners of concessions. At the present time, 100,000 barrels a day of sweet oil is available to Canada from Nigeria, but somebody has to make the move. Ontario has to help us decide whether that Ottawa Valley line should be moved west or east, whether that area is going to stay in the Canadian supply orbit or the world supply orbit. All I can say is that that area has not suffered too badly this last number of years.

In 1961, the national oil policy was based simply on the facts of that time. We wanted our exports from the west to balance our imports on the east. Those balances were kept by private companies. The United States government was actually opposed to the import of Canadian oil into the United States. It tried to stop it in 1959 by imposing mandatory quotas. We laid down unilaterally an oil policy which said that exports should balance imports, and private industry, by trading off quotas, reached that balance. We have provided Ontario with security of markets at a slight premium over the Montreal price. At this moment in time they are negotiating in Vienna for a price increase of 30 to 40 cents a barrel and by the end of this year prices in Montreal of offshore oil will be above western oil prices or Chicago prices. A fair estimate of the price per barrel for offshore oil by 1975 is $5 per barrel. Do you want to wire those Quebec and Ontario people into that price of oil? I would like to hear more about what price will be set for western oil, to be fair.

I want you, Mr. Speaker, to remember, too, that this oil in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan belongs to the people of those provinces. They will have something to say. They can stop the export of oil from those areas if they wish. I think this Ottawa Valley line should be left open. I would like to talk to the people of Quebec and offer to them, if they wish a policy of building a pipeline right down into Montreal, via the Toronto area, but one which would back up into North Bay and Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, even. If we do discover oil offshore in the Atlantic, we could bring it up that line to under-developed parts of Canada. In the meantime, such a pipeline would be a guarantee to the Montreal people that at least half their needs would be provided. Certainly, western oil would be cheaper than offshore oil by the time that line is completed. I would like to leave that decision open, and I think the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands would like to leave it that way, too. At least we want the government to move. That is the main thing we have in common.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

On the question of gasoline exports, I would hate to think it is anything more than a regional policy, or a short-term policy at best. Many parts of Canada, I am talking now about Newfoundland, Cape Breton as part of Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, have waited for years to get more processing and more jobs in Canada. No opportunity has come to Canada until recently. This type of policy suggest by the NDP would cut off exports completely. I think, on that point, that if you want to talk rationally with us about some sort of regional policy on gasoline there would be some sense in temporary controls. I would like to put that forward. I have a series of questions about such a policy in the long range. I believe the policy you are suggesting would destroy all that the government was trying to do, because the government was trying to get more processing in Canada. If we look after our basic needs, we can be very open about that question. I do have questions here about the licensing procedures, but they are purely housekeeping and I will let them go.

The two-price system for gas has been in effect ever since the beginning, by reason of the common carriage principle—I know that gas is not a common carrier but I am using that phrase—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member because the time allotted to him has expired. Unless there is unanimous consent, he cannot continue.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I shall not abuse the privilege extended to me by the House, Mr. Sepaker. I was just about finished. I was about to say we have had the two-price system for gas by reason of the common carrier principle because they used the zone system of prices, and we certainly had it on the export differential of 5 per cent. I would like to hear some discussion as to whether this export differential which is now governed by regulations of the National Energy Board, should be made 10 per cent or something like that. If you put it too high I am sure you would have a lot of static from the producer, who would feel he was being discriminated against. But that policy principle has been established and I think it should be re-opened for discussion.

Oil has always had only the protection of the common carrier price differential. There has never been any control by government in the United States or Canada on price, and the announcement made by the minister the other day is very significant. But once again this should be approached very cautiously and a lot of questions have to be asked. I would question quite frankly the wisdom of trying to keep us too far out of touch with the world price. But once again I have over-used my time and I will not impose upon the House.

I think I have said enough about the Ottawa Valley line to keep the question open until we find out what Eastern people want. I want to conclude in the same tone as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands concluded. Canada has nothing to fear either in the short term or in the long term. We have plenty of resources of the traditional fossil forms and unbelievable resources, as do other countries, in the form of renewables. But we do have a common need to work out industrial strategy, to use these great advantages of our great resources of water, of which we are only using 1 per cent, our great resources of energy, our great resources of minerals, wood and so on, to bring into Canada more processing without too many controls.

Now, with the rising prices of energy offshore, with the rising prices and shortage of minerals around the world, all these things can be turned to advantage. We have waited so patiently for this day to come. The day is now here and our decisions on this question of energy are vital to the achievement of a dream which is now becoming a reality. We pay higher wages to steel workers. We produce better quality steel today in Canada and we do it at a lower price. That is a comparative advantage. Let us exploit things like the petro-chemical industry, the steel industry and all the things made out of steel, by building this proper mix, by making those things in Canada for which we have comparative advantage and letting other nations of the world supply the things in which they have comparative advantage. I think the future we have talked about for a generation or more, or maybe longer, has a chance to be fulfilled in a very short time. I see the movement of the petro-chemical industry in Canada; I know the steel industry can expand, and that the wood industry just has to expand to meet the human problems and the shortage of fibre around the world.

My criticism of the NDP position is that it will force us on a short term basis to face frankly these issues raised by the hon. member. But obviously there has to be a future occasion on which we can discuss the broader long-range problems and solutions for Canada. I know that we in our party are looking forward to bringing in these alternatives. When the government has delivered its papers we shall see what it has to offer. We are prepared to offer our alternatives. Now, these decisions are for Canada. We shall be dealing with electricity. We shall deal with energy in its fossil form and in its renewable form, and I would hope we can put forward a type of long-range proposal, with short-term housekeeping responsibilities met, that could draw the support of every party in this House and most people in Canada.

● (1640)

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, one could speak endlessly on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), especially in view of the present government's lack of policy in this area.

On the one hand, when one ponders over the statistics and the specialists' comments on Canada's oil resources, one realizes that this country is far from being short of this commodity. Even in to-day's newspapers Canadians are given every assurance that, at least in the near future, there will be no shortage of oil or of any other natural resources for that matter.

On the other hand, one must look farther than the tip of one's nose. Although there is no risk of an oil crisis occurring in Canada to-day, it is a fact that we may be faced with such a crisis, because the volume of our exports, maybe not within the next five to ten years, but in the more distant future. Any inconsiderate abuse could certainly foster this problem in Canada.

The motion before the House is divided into three parts, the first of which is as follows:

(a) Place export controls on the export of gasoline and other refined petroleum products;

We all know—as explained a moment ago by the hon. member who introduced the motion—that controls have been provided by the government for the purpose of reducing the export of crude oil (natural resources). And indirectly, these restrictions on exports have had as a result that the United States are asking for a finished product. However, I believe that we may not be in a suitable position to criticize this attitude because in a way, there have been many complaints in recent years, especially in Canada. We complain that we have only raw products, that we have not succeeded in developing our secondary industry and here, in a round about way, we have a sector where we force foreigners to come here to buy refined products. Here is an area where surely we can still improve our production, improve employment possibilities and our industrial sector.

On the other hand, the demand from the United States and other countries is growing stronger and there is an increase in prices. In other words, the United States are ready to pay a higher price because their needs are greater and indirectly the companies, especially Canadian development companies, are asking Canadians the same price that they can get from the United States, thereby pushing up prices in Canada also.

It is fine to want to restrict the export of raw products through controls and today we are wondering how we could help Canadians population avoid higher prices, brought about by a stronger demand.

In the second paragraph of his motion, the hon. member advocates the establishment of price controls or at least, indirectly, a two-price system. First they ask for export controls, then the establishment of price controls.

I believe that through control measures or through an energy commission it would certainly be possible to exercise a certain control. I do not want a dictatorial control but it remains that a government is always elected to protect the rights or meet the needs of the people. Then, it would be logical to have a national commission evaluate the country's oil supply, and consider our short long term requirements. A national agency or organization could make sure that the needs of our population are fulfilled.

Our production surplus, and our reserves—because still one must expect to have reserves—could then be sold at a high price to other countries, according to their needs. Then the situation would not be as it is now, where the Canadian population is made to suffer from whatever increase in prices that may prevail in the United States. That is one way of having prices established.

Then, how are prices set? Prices are determined in the first instance by the cost of production, plus a logical and reasonable profit. This basic price could easily be met on the Canadian market.

When a variation originating in other countries occurs and leads to a loss for Canadian producers we could, not by setting up a price control system but a compensated discount system, compensate the producer or a given product for a possible loss resulting from a sale on domestic rather than foreign markets. That is a way the government could use and certainly it would not be up to the government to determine prices. Free competition within this country could easily set prices, as is partly the case presently.

Such is not the case, for instance, in the oil sector because the third paragraph of the motion—and I think the hon. member made it quite clear a while ago—specifically refers to an obstacle which adversely affects competition on the Canadian market, that is to say the frontier created by the Ottawa Valley which impedes the distribution or sale of oil between eastern and western Canada. So by doing away with such a frontier we would really create in Canada a possibility for real competition in oil prices.

It is known that western oil producing or manufacturing provinces can sell their oil profitably to the United States. However, we in the province of Quebec or the Maritimes can buy oil cheaper from the Middle East or Venezuela than from Alberta. Why? Simply because the west wanted to set up an imaginary limitation to control and get the highest price while the east has to deal with an international market, which does not do anything for competition in Canada. So by doing away with that frontier of the Ottawa Valley we would give back Canada a chance to establish competitive prices between domestic and foreign products.

And I am not thinking about a possible production in Quebec. It is known that many industries, many experts on oil products undertook drilling operations in the province of Quebec and on the east coast of Canada. But nothing is said or done about it. Those are possibilities which could be developed.

As I said before, according to the studies of a board, we would determine the real potential, the immediate and long-term potential or the reserve needed in Canada.

In this global context, it is important that government take positive action. It would be possible to set up or guarantee a competitive price for oil—since it is the example used today—based on production costs as well as a normal profit within a sound competitive situation in Canada and, as I mentioned before, pay an indemnity to those who might lose money selling surpluses, which I doubt. As demand from the U.S. and other countries increases rapidly, I am sure we could get the best price for it. Then, the sale of those surpluses could even be included in an international market where we could bargain over a product that, for us, has a set price based on our needs, but that could have a much higher value for Americans according to their own needs. Then, trade would be subject not to international price controls as now but to our needs and those of the U.S., for example.

If the United States have huge oil requirements and we, on the other hand, have a strong appetite for oranges we could easily bargain on the market on the market according to the value of products and to our requirements, assess the volume of trade according to our requirements and not only to prices established by international or multinational corporations which ask us, in fact, a price that is not dictated by our requirements but that they establish arbitrarily to make inflated profits in some cases.

The government must change its whole policy, its whole attitude towards foreign trade. First of all, we must take into account our requirements and surplus that we will have produced, then we might bargain with other countries in need and establish prices as we see fit. Thus, we will have much higher profits.

It is important that the government look after Canadians first and, if possible, deal with other countries after.

We should not forget either than even taxes are included in price increases. As I said earlier, prices have gone up not because of stronger demand in Canada but as a result of larger requirements in the United States, which have an indirect impact on Canadian prices.

One realizes that we have a strange way of doing things in Canada. A gallon of oil or gas is sold at a given price in the west and at an other price in the east and, similarly, the tax differs in the east and in the west because it is deducted from retail prices.

Those are situations that might be readjusted in order to reflect not necessarily the requirements of large corporations but those of the people, according to the cost of production and not to arbitrary decisions taken by various corporations.

I have here statistics showing the increase in exports of oil products to the United States. Whereas in 1969-70 our sales of crude oil to the United States amounted to $525,780,000, in 1970 they reached $649,075,000 and in 1972, $1.8 billion.

If there is such a growing need for oil products in the United States as shown over the past years, I feel we are now in a good position to bargain with them and to apply restrictions on exports of crude products while increasing exports of refined products.

In the past, the Americans were importing crude oil from Canada and were having it refined at home, thus creating new jobs and improving their own economy.

Today we are able to put restrictions on production and export of crude oil; it is equally important to maintain those restrictions so as to provide for the development of our secondary industry, namely refineries, and then sell the surplus of those refineries to the United States as well as other countries wishing to have some.

That is what I wanted to say on this motion and I believe the fact of thinking about a general energy policy already represents in the attitude of politicians and Canadians a fresh and, I hope, lasting outlook for all Canadians as compared with the restrictive and arbitrary approach we now favour.

Again, that is what I wished to say and in concluding I would like to point out that prices are based on operating costs and profits and that if there is a need to increase prices or losses because price or consumption are not in accordance with the demand, there is only one possible way then of readjusting prices, namely the establishment of a compensated discount for the Canadian people and not for other countries.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—National Defence—request for retention of the kilt for Highland units; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—National Revenue—request that the government not seek return of over-payment to farmers under Wheat Inventory Reduction Program; the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Agriculture—taxation of marketing quotas—Possible revision in light of representations by farm groups.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGEST IMPOSITION OF CONTROLS ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to refer to one of the issues raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette). It was a repetition of the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to the effect that one of the reasons for the considerable increase in Canadian gas exports in March was the control over crude oil exports set by the government in February.

I would like to emphasize that there is no relation between those facts. Most of the refined oil exported from Canada in March originated from Quebec and Nova Scotia refineries and not from Alberta where crude oil controls were in effect. So, the crude petroleum imports from overseas are used in Canadian regions. We note that the increase in exports is larger in those areas. So there is no relation between the larger gas exports and the control set on crude oil by the government at the beginning of February.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the motion put by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), in essence, has two parts to it. In effect, there is a reference to the short-run and immediate problem of motor gasoline and, secondly, in parts (b) and (c) it has reference to the longer run issue, namely the kind of structure we should create for the Canadian oil market given the somewhat changed circumstances of our petroleum situation in the mid-1970's. I should like to take a little time dealing with the motor gasoline question because of the legitimate special concern on this point, and after that my remarks will refer to the long-run situation.

The hon. member referred in his question on Friday to a number of independent dealers who had been suffering problems concerning the supply of refined motor gasoline. He made particular reference to one firm in respect of this situation. We are familiar with the situation regarding this firm and are hopeful that through the informal assistance of the National Energy Board this problem might be met. I might put to him and to others, both in the House and out, who are familiar with similar situations, that particularly when we talk about the independent distributors of gasoline I wish to be familiar with their situation, to see in what way the government and particularly the board might be of assistance in dealing with the problem.

I think it might be of some assistance if, really in response to the gentleman's question of last Friday, I put some figures on the record which I now have from the National Energy Board with regard to exports during the month of March. I am advised by the board that gasoline exports to all countries during the month of March were 12,367,000 gallons which is at the rate of just under 12,000 barrels a day. Since the very large bulk movement occurred in that month, and as exports were expected to rise sharply in any case, I think the events of April may have more significance. The board estimates that April exports of gasoline were lower than those of March, that is, something under 10,000 barrels a day. It is still a significant figure in comparison with previous years, but bear in mind when we are talking about 12,000 barrels daily, with the daily Canadian production of motor gasoline of around 500,000 barrels, we are talking about 2 per cent of the Canadian production.

In the present volatile situation, of course, it is very difficult to make a prediction with regard to the current market. However, officers of the board have been in constant contact with the refiners and I can assure members that the gasoline situation is receiving day-to-day surveillance. I would, however, like to emphasize to the House, and repeat what has been indicated privately to the major refiners in Canada, that the government has the same expectation with regard to refined products as was expressed earlier in this year with regard to unrefined petroleum, namely, that the needs of the Canadian market would receive priority and that if we find that informal arrangements of the kind that have operated for many years through the agency of the board are not effective in protecting the Canadian market, I will not hesitate to recommend to my colleagues the extension of the export control system to refined as well as unrefined petroleum.

I think it might be useful to mention a number of factors which have contributed to the very substantial increase in petroleum prices internationally since 1970. There has, of course, first, been an increase in taxation by the overseas producing countries brought about primarily by the efforts of OPEC, the organization of petroleum exporting countries. There have, in the same period, been changes in exchange rates, particularly in so far as they effect North America and, through negotiations again by OPEC, the cost of overseas oil coming to this continent has been increased. There has been an attainment by overseas producers of the right of participation in oil production which was formerly exclusively controlled by private companies and this, too, has contributed to the price increase. There has been a continued pressure of rising demand on available oil supplies which also has effected tanker markets, particularly in recent months, and has therefore affected the cost of transporting overseas the oil imported into this continent.

It is impossible to give a precise indication of the extent of this price increase as it affects the cost of crude oil delivered to our import dependent eastern market because the increase is still working its way through the system. However, estimates tabled by the board and placed before the standing committee earlier this year suggest that between 1970 and February of this year the average cost of imported crude increased by at least 85 cents a barrel or some 30 per cent. Imports of refined oil products in to eastern Canada have decreased in recent years with the coming on the scene of new refinery capacity. But the structure of the eastern Canadian market still has been that substantial refined petroleum products are required by the Canadian market. Indeed, many of the independents who are now so much feeling the pinch of the changed international situation were able to operate in this area where it was possible to buy offshore at cheap prices refined gasoline for resale within the market east of the Ottawa Valley line, the eastern Canadian market.

What has now occurred, of course, is that with the increased pressure on oil prices generally, the substantial increase in the prices of refined oil products and because of the very heavy demand due to the tightness of the supply internationally, the supplies, which formerly were available to the independents particularly but to the eastern Canadian market, have now very substantially dried up and the situation therefore which has been created for the independents is not so much one of shortage resulting from a diversion of refinery capacity in Canada, from which they were formerly drawing, but rather from there not having available to them from overseas the supplies of the refined products which they had before. I think we must expect that with or without export controls, that is to say with or without the control on export of Canadian refined products to the United States market, we will feel an attenuation of the supply of refined products to the Canadian market and for this reason I think we can expect, through this year and so long as these prices remain, not to be importing as much of the refined product as we did previously, with the economic consequences that that has had for certain firms.

More specifically, I am advised by the board that in 1973 almost no motor gasoline has been imported into Canada. I should explain that the import of the refined product is subject to licensing. In the previous year, while 140,000 barrels a day of refined products came into Canada, of which 10,000 barrels a day, was motor gasoline, there has been virtually none of the latter come into Canada since the start of the year. I have already mentioned the fact that in April the board contacted all the refiners who might be selling their product for export. The board has sought and received assurances that the product would not be exported at the expense of the necessary supply to the domestic market. The emphasis again is put on the fact that the March export figures reflect one large shipment and a number of smaller spot sales and, as I already mentioned, the expectation is that the figures will be slightly lower for the month of April.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister a question? I am interested in the figures which he just quoted, and I have them here. Does it not give the minister concern that at the same time that our exports of gasoline have gone up so dramatically, our imports of gasoline have almost dried up? Does it not point to what could be a serious situation requiring gasoline rationing this summer?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly, there is need for serious consideration. My advice is that there is no serious shortage of supply at this moment, but I would have to agree with the hon. gentleman that without a very tight restriction on further exports from Canadian refiners the position of the Canadian market certainly would be more precarious, particularly if there was a refinery accident or if there were an abnormal increase in the demand during the present period, so that the supplies in eastern Canada in particular would be very much a matter of concern. I would agree with the hon. gentleman that with the phenomenon of the reduction of foreign supply of refined petroleum products we should be very concerned about conserving all the possible domestic refined product for the Canadian market, recognizing that this is apparently going against the policy which we have been fostering of trying to find a market for the refined product. I would say that we are hopeful that the efforts made informally with refiners to achieve this purpose would be successful, but I repeat that if they are not, the government will have to take action similar to the one it took with regard to export of crude.

The second aspect of the hon. member's motion is with regard to a restructuring—and this is my characterization—of the Canadian oil market, given the substantial change in the external facts since the national oil policy was first announced by the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in 1961. I think it might be useful to reflect for a moment on the nature of the system that was set up at that time, and on the motivations of the government at that time. The Canadian oil industry in those years—and here we are talking about western Canadian producers of oil and natural gas—was in a situation of being basically in a buyers' market, of having difficulty in getting access to the United States for oil and in having great difficulty in getting access to the United States for natural gas at reasonable prices. For that reason, governments in the late 1950's and early 1960's sought to create systems in Canada whereby Canadian needs would be supplied by Canadian sources, as much from the motive of making markets available for the producers as to provide sources for consumers.

Over a period of years, and particularly in the last decade since the situation was changed from an exclusively buyers' market to more of a sellers' market. The national oil policy system on the whole, I think, has served the country well. It put us in the position, at least in so far as exports from western Canada are concerned, of selling the Canadian product at a high price to the United States and, in so far as the population east of the Ottawa valley line was concerned, of buying the product cheaply on the international market. The consumer, of course, who bore the cost of this was the Ontario consumer, but the argument has been made, particularly by western producers, that in the same period of time the Ontario producer had the advantage of low cost natural gas which somewhat equalized the situation for him.

Whatever may have been the merits of that system, I think we can recognize the fact that this situation has substantially changed. In the first place, as all previous speakers have indicated, the United States has ceased to be a net producer of petroleum and has become a very substantial net importer. At the same time, because of this situation, Canada has not only achieved the objective which was talked about for many years in this House of having full access to the United States market, but we have achieved the objective of being able to sell as much of the oil to the United States market as the existing conventional Canadian systems can produce following good conservation practices.

On this basis, we are now in the situation where we have reached a ceiling on our production from Western Canadian sources, and at the same time the international scene has changed. What started out basically as a system to provide a protected market for the western producer in Ontario through the national oil policy has now become a system which provides for the Ontario consumer security of supply which the consumer in eastern Canada, east of the Ottawa valley line, does not have and which indeed very few consumers have anywhere else in the world

This brings me, therefore, to the two points made by the hon. gentleman, and I put them in the form of questions. First, should we shift from the national oil policy system and the Ottawa valley line which we have had for the last 11 or 12 years and, as the hon. member suggested, open it to the full competitive system; and, second, should we create a system of price control within the market so that, as he said, the price for oil and petroleum products in Canada will be significantly lower than the going international price? These are two difficult questions, and I would agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) that they are the kind of major questions with which we should be involved, not only in debate in this House but in debates between the various regions of Canada which will be affected.

I do not presume to lecture the two gentlemen who are both natives of the prairie region and spokesmen for western Canada, but certainly I think they would recognize the viewpoint of western producers that far from being in the situation of, in effect, selling their product at a lower cost on the Canadian market than it would fetch internationally, they should get the highest price obtainable for oil or gas in any market, domestic or international.

Mr. Douglas: The question is, whose oil is it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There was some reference to the premier of Alberta. He thinks definitely that it is his oil. I suppose his arguments are twofold, and he can make them much more eloquently than I. To repeat them, the first is that in the form of economic rent by way of royalties he and the residents of his province will get more from the exploitation of what is, after all, a wasting asset if they get a higher price for their product. The second argument is that because of higher price there will be encouragement for greater exploration for oil within that province and in the vicinity of the province which will have benefits both for the provincial treasury and the economic opportunities which it will offer residents of western Canada.

This is one of the questions we have to consider on a national basis in weighing the regional interests of western Canada and getting the best possible price for this product while recognizing the interest of the consumers in other parts of Canada in getting the product at the lowest possible price. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's proposal of establishing a two price system would not, at least immediately, find support in western Canada. Obviously, it will have to be a matter of debate.

The second of the points that I would have made, and which was made effectively by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, regards the security of supply. It is with regard to the location of the Ottawa valley line. An eloquent argument can be made—and the hon. gentleman certainly advanced it well—that rather than removing the line altogether serious consideration should be given to moving it, not west or removing it altogether, but moving it east to protect the substantial Montreal refinery markets, thereby ensuring to that market the security of crude feedstock which the Ontario market already enjoys. That too, of course, would be in contradiction of the hon. member's proposal. I would have to say that that too offers obvious problems, both from the point of view of the refiners in the Quebec market and from the standpoint of the western producers who feel they could probably get a better price for their product if they sold it in the more proximate market than in the Montreal market.

These are the kinds of questions we as a country will have to face in dealing with the changed situation that has occurred since we first established the national oil policy back in the early 1960's. These are the kinds of basic questions, along with other questions, that are dealt with in the energy policy studies which have now, as they say, gone to press, and which we hope will be available before the House rises for the summer. These are the kinds of questions with which the House and the country will be involved, the kinds of questions with which the government, in dealing with provincial governments and in dealing with the viewpoints of individual citizens, will be very much involved later this year. These are the kinds of difficult questions that require some kind of national consensus, such as we had a decade or so ago, and the process of establishing that national consensus will start with the analyses we have made and which we hope will assist in arriving at a change in policy.

Petroleum Products Controls

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), I will recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain on a question, since the minister has much time remaing for his speech.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Do I understand that these reports or papers on energy policy will not be available until near the end of June?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I cannot really be certain of this because the matter is now beyond my control, in the sense that the translation and the printing of the documents are now in process. I would hope they would be available within the coming month, but I cannot be precise as to time.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I wonder if some of the staff would leak me the documents ahead of time, just as they leaked the one to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have to insist that if there are to be any leaks that they be in both official languages.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister talked about moving the Ottawa Valley line east or west. My suggestion was that, rather than doing that, we should remove the line altogether so that off-shore oil, if it is cheap, could come further west, and western oil if it is cheaper could come east by extending the pipeline to Montreal. Is this aspect being studied by those who are preparing the national energy report?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In general terms, the question is debated. This is one of th factors I would like to be specific about because the hon. gentleman talked at some length about it. This concerns the security of supply situation so far as opening up the market at some future date to full imports is concerned.

While we have a present tightness in the international supply situation this is not, as several speakers suggested, because there is not a very strong base of supply in the ground or available in the producing countries, but rather is due to shortcomings in the producing system and in the transportation system. It is conceivable that we would move from the present situation of tight supply to one where there would be significantly full supplies. One of the considerations we have to bring to bear would be, if we opened up the full Eastern Canadian market, the Toronto as well as the Montreal market to off-shore imports, the effect this could have in backing out western feed stock from these areas and thereby creating a larger problem of insecurity with respect to supply. This is one of the concerns we would have to take under consideration before following the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if there is some significance in the fact that all these leaks have been taking place since we established Information Canada.

The matter I should like to raise with the minister is one that I raised earlier this afternoon during the question period about bringing pipelines and national gas and oil policy to parliament. It is becoming quite obvious that this is a political question. I do not think any better statement on its obviousness could be made than that made by the minister this afternoon. It is not a technical question. Every speaker who has talked about the problem of gas and oil in Canada has highlighted the point that some kind of political solution is required if we are to have a new national policy.

I agree with what the minister said when he indicated that the old national policy has served us to some extent up to a point. But the basis on which that policy was created has gone. It was created to take account of the fact that Alberta needed a guaranteed market for its out-put at a time when the United States would not take any oil at all, or was very reluctant to take any. I think it is a credit to the administration in power when the national oil policy was formulated that it was able to get such a deal for the country. In those days it looked as though the problem was going to be one of a surplus. Therefore, the solution was to get rid of supplies. Perhaps the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) may have been somewhat more prescient than others in foreseeing that there was going to be a shortage, but in those days all the talk was about getting the oil out as rapidly as possible.

That day is over. Therefore, we have to take an entirely new look at the situation. As I say, it is a political question. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) asked: to whom does the oil belong? He and the rest of us are socialists. Therefore, we say the oil belongs to Canada. We are talking about a national responsibility, a national obligation for sharing. In very sharp contrast, both the statements of the minister and of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain show their conservative tendencies. It would not bother me as much if, in fact, Alberta was getting that much benefit from the oil industry. But what often seems to be the case is that Alberta is running interference for the private corporations, and the maximum benefits are not going to the people of Alberta but to the major international oil companies. This is a pretty unhappy situation.

It is facile to say that people in Ontario are now raising this question because oil is in short supply and therefore they are interested in getting cheap oil from western Canada. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain summed it up by saying, "Get Ontario off our backs." Did he say that ten or 12 years ago when he brought in a national oil policy which has cost this country, Ontario and all the consumers of Canada, something like half a billion dollars a year for gasoline, or 5 cents for every gallon sold in Canada? It worked two ways. The price of western crude was more expensive than the international price, and the people in Montreal were paying higher than the internationally posted price. The price in Montreal was somewhat lower than that of western crude, but the fact remains that it was not the international price. Every country in the world, France, Germany and England, were paying less for crude oil, less taxes, than Canada. Canada was paying a premium price not only for its own oil but for the crude it imported, because that was the pricing policy of the international companies. They based the price at Montreal on the cost of bringing western crude by pipeline to Montreal, and that was higher than the posted international price.

The report referred to today by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pointed out that in fact we have been paying 30 cents a barrel more for crude than the international price. It is not just the people of Ontario, but the people of all Canada, no matter whether they have used domestic or offshore supplies, who have paid for the national policy. We have been willing to pay for it because we all recognized that the western oil producing provinces of Canada needed consideration at a time when they could not find outlets for their oil.

As an aside, let me say that when we start talking about restricing supplies of oil to the United States and someone gets up and says, "Isn't it terrible; just look at what you are doing to our American neighbours," we should look back 10 or 15 years to the time when we could not sell our crude in that country. They did not want our oil. There was not a greal deal of outcry in Canada. The time may come when we will not be in a position to sell western Canadian oil to the United States because we will have to ensure our own supplies. When that time comes, let us not talk about how bad a neighbour we shall be: if that time ever comes, let us think back to the way we were treated when we thought we desperately needed that market for our crude oil.

I think Ontario, along with the rest of Canada, has been willing to pay higher prices for gasoline and for the chemicals that come from crude petroleum. Higher petroleum prices have had an important bearing on the performance of our petrochemical industry which is an important and growing industry. The performance of that industry in this country depends to a great extent on the price of Canadian crude. So for years not only has the average consumer had to pay more for gasoline, but the entire petrochemical industry has had to pay higher prices for its supplies. Those supplies were maintained at higher prices by a tariff that was imposed on supplies imported into Canada. Consequently, we substantially disadvantaged that industry.

As I say, on balance we probably had to do it. The national oil policy, despite all its faults, probably created the opportunity for the accelerated development of the whole industry. But let there be no talk about Ontario being on Alberta's back; such statements would imply there are short memories in this country. Ontario is not guiltless. Westerners have many grievances against the east and some of them are legitimate; and we recognize that. When the people of Ontario look at the national oil policy they should bear in mind the grievances of westerners. They are willing to accommodate themselves to those policies in the hope that it will help western Canada.

Western grievances involving tariffs and transportation are legitimate and real. Let me repeat the point I am trying to make in my remarks, that there is a need for adequate solutions in this whole area. Obviously, we are not going to find an answer, because the entire policy is breaking down. The people of this country, so rich in raw materials and natural resources, are in danger of facing supply shortages. That is an incredible situation. We are in danger of having to pay enormous prices for those things which are to be found in our own country, because of the arbitrary marketing decisions of international oil companies acting in collusion with a province.

When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands spoke of the west, he had a right to speak about it. After all, he was for many years premier of a great province. I am sure when he says that the oil belongs to Canadians, he will find a harmonious echo of his remarks in the great province of Saskatchewan. That province has oil. I hope that the attitude in Saskatchewan is somewhat different from the attitude in another province.

This difficulty must be resolved. It will not be resolved simply by saying, "We are going to take over all the oil, and Alberta be damned." I think Alberta can produce good arguments in support of its position, and these must be taken into account. Parliament must take the initiative to deal with these questions, and not the National Energy Board. Although the National Energy Board may be competent in a technical sense to make decisions about pipelines or about export arrangements under our present national oil policy, it is not competent to review or bring in a new kind of oil policy that is required in this country.

What can the federal government do in this field? First, it must say unequivocally that matters of energy and transportation are so vital to this country that they must come under federal control, and that the federal government alone is in the position to establish national priorities. We have done this before. Unless there are assured sources of energy supplies both in terms of quantity and cost, we will not be able to overcome some of the inherent disadvantages this country faces in the provision of jobs for our people. We developed a national transportation system in response to the same kind of dilemma and problem. We now need a national oil, gas and general energy policy as well. We will need to make some trade-offs; we will need to make some arrangements with the provinces which will make this acceptable.

What are some of the things we can do in this area? I find it hard to understand, with all the oil and natural gas we have in the west, with the intelligent population we have and with the funds at our disposal, when we have to bring crude petroleum into Ontario and refine it in Ontario, or why we should be selling crude oil to the United States to be refined there. If there is a disposition on the part of the western provinces to do more processing, then it is highly advisable for that processing to be done there in order to encourage refining as a major industry in the west.

I am talking not only of fuel oil to be turned into gasoline but also of the creation of feedstocks. We need feedstocks for the chemical industry. In the west, plants that would be significant on a world scale ought to be constructed. If we are to do any selling internationally of oil and gas, why should we not sell it in a more processed form instead of simply shipping out so many barrels of crude oil? Why should we do this in a most elementary and simplistic way? I think a policy could be developed that would be satisfactory to the west. Certainly it is something we ought to discuss with them.

There is another aspect of policy that we must examine. Newfoundland obviously wants to get into the refining business. We must consider the question of Quebec's relationship to the refining industry. There could be allocations of capacity. There ought to be over-all federal control as to where these refineries are to be built. We ought to ensure that refineries are built in such a way that they do not interfere with our balance of payments, with the capital flows in this country, and that they are of optimum size in order that we can produce gasoline and feedstocks at the cheapest possible price.

Some members may ask what we will do with the feedstocks. The United States obviously has adopted a policy of excluding our chemicals from their markets. In earlier days it was their policy to exclude our crude petroleum from their markets. Therefore, I think it is about time we made a firm statement saying that we are not prepared to export our products to that market, and if the United States want our assistance in the field of petrochemicals, they will have to take them in the form of manufactured feedstocks which are at a higher point of processing than crude oil. We ought to enforce that kind of policy or do something along that line.

I think Ontario, as well, will have to recognize some of the grievances of the west in the field of transportation and of tariffs. If we resolve the other difficulty to which I have referred, then it seems to me the question of tariffs and costs can also be resolved. We must also look at the question of freight rates, especially at equalized freight rates, to make sure that the disadvantages, under the present system, in the maritime region are removed.

Mr. Speaker, I come back to what I think is the central point in any discussion of oil and gas. If we are to talk about a two-price system, if we are to talk about how we allocate markets and about our pricing policies, then Parliament must make a political decision, in the best sense of the word. It must take into account the various grievances that exist in this country and find a way of resolving them. For that reason, I hope the government, particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), will stop hiding behind the National Energy Board and using it as an excuse for not letting Parliament come to a conclusion and making a decision on this important item.

I congratulate the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on his most timely motion, because of its urgency to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this motion, which is probably one of the most important subjects to come before this House, I feel I should begin with a word of caution. It is unfortunate that a subject as important as this has been coloured by a tendency on the part of hon. members to my left to become exercised and extremely negative on the question of the American nation and so-called big business.

I followed with interest the address by the mover of the motion before us today. I was rather startled to note what I feel was an unhappy, anti-American tone in much of his comment. Having said that, I believe the record should be put straight on a few points. In his motion the hon. member states that recent increases in the price of crude oil, gasoline and other refined products are viewed with concern by himself and, hopefully, by this House. We in the Progressive Conservative party also view with concern the rise in price of these products. It is time the hon. member and his colleagues accepted the fact that we should be agreeing that rising prices in this country generally are of concern to all of us. Members of the NDP, who have been exercised for some time about rising food prices, as of today has discovered that the price of gasoline, oil and other refined product is rising, yet to date they have consistently refused to co-operate with this party in suggesting, and in fact demanding that the government bring in wage, price and dividend controls in this country.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Let us try to solve the over-all problem of inflation in this country, as opposed to the nit-picking that the members to my left seem to like to get into. Let us be specific. The products to which they are referring were, at the end of April—these figures were released at one o'clock today by Statistics Canada—as follows: petroleum refining products had an index of 122.2. That is a little over an increase of one percentage point since January. Various fuel oils have been static so far this year, at 138.8 in the case of No. 1 fuel oil—kerosene stove oil and tractor fuel—and 143.3 in the case of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 light fuel oils.

Surely it behooves this House to accept the fact that the petroleum price increase is not the cardinal reason for our cost of living rising as sensationally as it has but, rather, many other rising prices are involved to which we have been pointing for some time. In April the index for all consumer goods stood at 147.3. We in this party have consistently drawn attention to the high cost of housing and shelter in this country. We believe this is a disaster, certainly in the Toronto area, for many people who have the worth-while and proper objective of wanting to own their own home. The issue of petroleum prices has two beautiful ingredients as far as the NDP are concerned, and that is why we are discussing it today. I suggest they look upon it as a red flag in the sense that it is American and, in their minds, big business.

I wish to deal with a few of the references made by the hon. member in the address on his motion. The hon. member who preceded me made the same type of references. They like to conjure up the image that international petroleum companies are among the worst devils in the capitalistic world. I am not particularly defensive of any of these companies, but I think it is wrong for the members of this House to hear and not object to certain misinformation. Among the 500 largest corporations in the United States, the profit picture with regard to the petroleum refining field was the least attractive in 1972 of any of the companies listed, with the exception of three categories—beverages, tobacco and mining. The petroleum refining industry, contrary to what the hon. member suggested, did not have a good profit increase in 1972.

It is wise to bear in mind that the petroleum refining industry has more assets per employee than any industry listed in the directory of 500 put out by Fortune. In 1972 it had $126,775 invested per employee, compared with the next highest, the mining industry, with $84,291 per employee. I hope the record will be set straight with regard to the question of these huge corporations when it is suggested that they are making uncalled-for profits.

The next point I wish to deal with is the suggestion raised by the hon. member in paragraph (a) of his resolution which reads:

Place export controls on the export of gasoline and other refined petroleum products—

In this category, the hon. member offered what appeared to be rather alarming figures when he quoted the current amount of gas exports compared with earlier periods. The minister touched on this matter, but I think it deserves to be mentioned again. I believe the hon. member deliberately chose not to make it clear that the main increase in gasoline exports was not of refined Canadian products, but gasoline that had been refined in eastern Canadian refineries mainly from crude that had been imported to eastern Canada from other sources.

Surely it is wrong to conjure up in this House an image that Canadian fuel is being taken from our reserves, refined and exported to the United States in its refined form. The fact is that at the present time 51.8 per cent of the refining capacity of this country lies east of the Ottawa River. It does not have access to the Canadian crude to which the hon. member referred so frequently in his remarks. Is he suggesting that the refining expansion contemplated in eastern Canada should be discontinued? Is he hinting that it is wrong that some of the refineries which have come on stream and which are exporting gasoline products should be restricted in this type of exportation?

I should like to make it aboundantly clear, as did my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), that we believe there should be export controls, if necessary, provided Canadian crude oil is involved and there is a suggestion that the refining companies are circumventing the regulations by simply taking Canadian crude and refining it with a view to increasing their exports. It should also be made clear that we do not feel the actual increase of refining capacity in eastern Canada, with a view to taking crude from other areas and exporting it in a refined state to the U.S. or elsewhere, is necessarily wrong.

The hon. member referred to a two-price system. What he chose to neglect was the answer to the question: Who pays for it? Is he saying that the producer has to accept a lower price if he sells to a domestic concern in Canada than he would receive if he exported his product? Is he saying that the producer must pay, or is he hinting that the federal government should end up subsidizing sales to domestic consumers in this country?

Let me turn, now, to the most interesting point in the resolution, one which I believe most hon. members would find inconsistent with the terms used at the beginning of the resolution itself. I am referring to item (c) which speaks about moving the Ottawa valley line and permitting offshore oil and domestic crude to move freely in the interests of price competition. There is the suggestion in this motion that somehow we should not allow petroleum companies to take advantage of international markets because, presumably, the price is higher and this in turn would raise domestic prices. Yet at the tail end of this resolution the hon. member places a reverse twist on the proposition, saying that if we removed the Ottawa valley line then somehow that same foreign product would result in reduced prices in Canada. Is this not an inconsistent line of reasoning? I heard the hon. member's remarks on this subject and I must say they undermined greatly my own confidence in his proposal.

I believe there should be no suggestion that we in Ontario be left in a situation in which we might become dependent on foreign sources of oil or related products. At the present time we feel we have our troubles in negotiating prices with the province of Alberta. However, let me assure hon. members that we in Ontario would prefer to deal with the province of Alberta than to deal with foreign concerns with which we have no possible relationship.

I believe the one point which should be emphasized in our debate is that we in Canada are today seeing the results of the absence of any proper national resources policy at the national level. This is where the fundamental problem lies. There would be no need for a debate of the sort we are conducting today had the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) already proposed a national energy policy for Canada and had Parliament agreed to it. The type of innuendo the hon. member is attempting to put forward in his resolution would not be possible if there were a firm and all-embracing national energy policy established in this country.

Tied in with such a policy we need an industrial strategy. It is unfortunate that we are looking at the pieces instead of the over-all situation. In devising such a policy, rather than make statements which may not be helpful and which, indeed, in some cases may even be harmful in our trading relationship with the United States, we should accept the fact that the Americans are the best buyers of our products. Rather than being hostile, we should seriously consider what steps we should be taking, if not in the short-term then certainly in the medium- and long-term, to ensure that certain measures now being taken in the United States will not have unfavourable repercussions in this country at a later date. We should consider the possible effects, for example, of statements made by President Nixon to the United States Congress on April 18, 1973. I should like to itemize those points, but I see my time is running out. Perhaps on a later occasion I shall be given that privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member places the Chair in a quandary. Obviously, he could continue if he asked for and were given extra time, but such a request is not normally dealt with at six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock was called I had just concluded my remarks on the motion before the House, moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). If I could summarize the four points that I had made to that point in time, first of all I indicated that I felt it was unfortunate that the hon. member had taken certain items and had pointed to the fact that the price of these items had increased, while totally ignoring the fact that in the over-all inflationary spiral of consumer prices in this country the petroleum products that he referred to were of comparatively little significance. For example, in April the consumer price index stood at 147.3, having risen 1.1 per cent in April alone, compared to petroleum products which are in the 120 to 130 price index range and which in many cases have been relatively static in price for several months. In short, we in the Progressive Conservative party foresaw the problem of rising prices and advocated that the government bring in wage and price controls. The government has refused to do so, and the NDP has aided and abetted them in that refusal.

Secondly, the hon. member is suggesting placing controls on the export of gasoline and other refined petroleum products. However, he did not mention to hon. members, when he quoted certain figures showing the rise in the export of gasoline products, that the bulk of the increase came from eastern Canadian refineries which in most instances were established to take in crude oil from foreign countries, refine it and export it to the United States in its refined state. I think it is unfortunate that the hon. member chose to make that point and to suggest that the export of this type of refined product should be controlled. The fact is that 51.8 per cent of the refining capacity of this country is in eastern Canada, and the hon. member is indicating, perhaps unintentionally, that he is proposing to kill the growth of this refining and exporting business.

If I may deal again with the two-price system, the hon. member also ignored the question who is going to pay for this two-price system. Does he intend that the producer shall pay, the federal government, or the provincial governments? I feel this was an unfortunate omission on his part.

Finally, may I deal with paragraph (c) of his motion in which he suggested removing the Ottawa valley line and permitting offshore oil and domestic crude to move freely in the interests of price competition. This, as I mentioned, is surely totally inconsistent with the hon. member's approach. On the one hand he is suggesting that we stop exporting petroleum products because prices internationally are higher, and on the other hand he is suggesting the removal of the Ottawa valley line to take advantage of those competitive international prices. You cannot have it both ways. If export prices are higher, I think the hon. member has a lot of explaining to do as to why he feels we would have lower prices in this part of Canada as a result of that line being removed. In fact, I believe it would be very detrimental to Ontario in particular if through inadvertence or lack of planning we became totally dependent upon foreign producers for our petroleum products.

It has been seriously suggested that the price of gasoline could go as high as $1 per gallon in this country. Surely the hon. member does not wish to contribute to bringing about that situation. As I said before, I would much prefer to continue to negotiate with the Premier of Alberta than deal with the sheiks of the Middle East, which could well be the end result of his suggestion in paragraph (c) of this resolution.

In proposing this resolution I think the hon. member and his colleagues have been opportunistic. They have taken certain items which they feel suit their purpose and have chosen to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue, however, if he has unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimity.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, let me start my speech by referring to what was said by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman).

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the stress the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) placed upon the controls he thought should be imposed on the exportation of crude oil, and the position taken by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) that there should be encouragement in respect of the exportation of products refined from crude oil. Indeed, that flies directly in the face of the proposal of his colleague.

I also take exception to the statement of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge to the effect that indeed there was consideration by United States authorities to put quotas on the importation by that country of oil products from Canada. Let me advise the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, that in his mid-April energy message President Nixon contemporaneously issued an oil import program proclamation in which power was given to the Secretary of the Interior to increase at will the importation of products from oil, including crude oil, unfinished oil and finished products from Canada.

When we look at the latest count in respect of weekly consumption by the United States in barrels, we see that the United States consumes at the present time approximately 45 million barrels per week, the maximum capacity of their refineries. They foresee that within a very short time the increase in the demand for gasoline will be in the order of 4 million barrels a week. Indeed, it becomes evident that with the capacity of 45 million barrels a week being completely used at the present time, in a few months the United States will face a considerable shortage of gasoline, and it would be silly of them at this particular stage to commence the imposition of restrictions on the amount of oil products imported from Canada. I would suggest that at this particular juncture it might be wise for the National Energy Board to consider imposing increased controls on crude oil in lieu of controls on refined products.

In the speech of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) there was no indication of the capacity of Canadian refineries. I suggest that if the United States is going to be short 4 million barrels of oil or gas per week, that refining capacity could be found in Canadian refineries. This is particularly true in view of the minister's statement in this chamber this afternoon that the whole of the increase cited by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was the entire production of eastern refineries, representing only 2 per cent of total Canadian output.

It is staggering to realize that this substantial increase represents only that small percentage of total Canadian production involving only refineries in eastern Canada. If there were greater imposition of controls on crude, we could perhaps employ the additional capacity of western Canadian refineries to our advantage. As stated by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, we should carry out more refining of our crude oil in Canada.

I also take issue with the statement that the present government hides behind the National Energy Board. Let me simply reiterate what the minister has already said, that the National Energy Board was constituted by an act of Parliament, with specific powers, and this government has an obligation, until otherwise advised, to give that board its support. Indeed, in view of the way the board has acquitted itself of its obligations in the past, it should be commended.

I should now like to turn to the subject of guidelines referred to by the minister this afternoon. He indicated he was ready, notwithstanding the powers of the National Energy Board in respect of the Mackenzie valley pipeline, to review those guidelines for the board in its determination of the advisability of this pipeline. The minister indicated his willingness to refer the guidelines to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works in order that it might study the problem. I commend the minister for that statement and hasten to add that I am sure hon. members of that committee are ready, able and willing to review these guidelines.

Let me now turn to the comments of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I take strong issue with the entire content of that hon. member's speech. I have been present during all speeches on this matter and not once did I hear the expression of any anti-American sentiment. Not once was the United States attacked in the House this afternoon, nor was anything said which might lend credence to the thought expressed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe to the effect that the speech of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was an expression of anti-American sentiment. We have heard this sort of demagoguery before, and I suggest it has no place in this House. Our dealings with our neighbour to the south have always been on friendly terms, and we have always sought to protect our national interests. I fail to see at this time how the comments of the hon. member for York-Simcoe fit that endeavour.

The plea of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was that we should abandon our partisan stance in order to analyse this very serious problem. He indicated that all parties were very concerned about this problem and were busy studying it, considering its various facets. I suggest that plea was completely neutralized by the attitude of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, expressed in sensational rhetoric. He then proceeded to use his best efforts and most tortuous logic to protect the interests of big oil companies. All I can say is, bully for him.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) rises on a point of order.

● (2020)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately we do not have the benefit of today's Hansard, but I would remind the hon. member that in moving the motion the statement was made that we do not have a national oil policy, that it is designed by the Americans, that we do not export to the United States but that Canada has been used as a tap by that country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a point of order. It is a point of debate, and the point of debate has been made.

Mr. Blais: As for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, as well as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands they made most informative addresses in which they sought to review the past and the reason we are in this particular situation. They sought to offer some solutions. They ought to be commended for that. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands agreed that the solutions proposed are short-term. He was well advised in this regard.

It seems evident from the nature of the solution expressed in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of the motion that the hon. member was attempting to engage other hon. members in debate and to seek the ideas of others. Undoubtedly he did not propose those particular solutions as being conclusive, because I am sure if he had known the ultimate conclusions he would not have resorted to the type of motion that he presented. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, in paragraph (A) speaks about the government taking immediate steps to implement the measures he cites. Yet I suggest he has not provided any evidence, with reference to paragraph (a), that there is a direct relationship between the incidence of exports of gasoline and, indeed, the takeover of known reserves in Canada of crude oil. The evidence as adduced by the hon. member in this particular instance is to the contrary. Really, all the gas which has been exported has been exported from refineries in eastern Canada. That oil was offshore oil, in accordance with the Ottawa valley policy adopted by the former government.

In the second step which the hon. member proposes, he states that there should be a two-price system. But he did not indicate, at least to my recollection, what sort of a two-price system he thought should be imposed. Is it a two-price system by way of an increase at the wellhead, with subsidy to the domestic user? That is one solution. Or is it an export tax or export duty imposed by the federal government? That would be another solution. Or, indeed, is it by way of a two-price system established by the Alberta Energy Conservation Board and, if so, what would be the role of the National Energy Board in that case? The hon. member does not consider the various alternatives. This leads me to the point that he must have been attempting to engage in debate.

With reference to the removal of the Ottawa valley line, that policy was adopted by the former Conservative government under the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) more than a decade ago. That has been, and is, a way of life in Canada. The matter was before the Supreme Court of Canada 18 months ago, I believe, at which time the Supreme Court upheld that particular policy.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has not reviewed how western refineries would feel in the event that the Ottawa valley line was removed as the demarkation point. How about the interests of the provinces of Quebec and Nova Scotia—which are now very seriously considering accommodating huge ocean tankers at their seaports? I understand from the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) that New Brunswick is also considering this.

With the increased traffic by means of oil tankers, what would be the effect in respect of the price of oil in Canada? With the increased volume, what would be the effect on western oil prices? What about the offshore, continental shelf finds? I feel there is here a situation which requires a great deal of consideration. From reading one of today's evening papers we learn that the leader of Libya has indicated he will nationalize his country's oil industry if the OPEC negotiators are not successful in their negotiations with the particular companies involved. So we must consider the situation in the Middle East.

With all these uncertainties, we have a member of this House who suggests that the protection which is afforded to western producers should be removed. I suggest, again, that we can only conclude that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was not serious in suggesting that these are solutions which the government should adopt but, rather, he was really leading with his left in order to obtain a response. I hope I am providing that response for him.

In this context I suggest that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands have advised this House that they are giving consideration to the problem and that they recognize the historical context. I suggest they know there is a need in Canada for more exploration capital in order to get into the area north of the sixtieth parallel, into the Mackenzie delta and into the Arctic Island. I suggest they know, also, that there is a need for capital expenditures in respect of transportation from those regions, that there is constant pressure from the environmental agencies, that there are serious questions of regional inequalities and disparities, that the provinces are indeed in competition one with another and that there are offshore, political considerations.

In addition to this, all members know there is the question of monetary difficulty and monetary stability. I suggest that all members who have debated this matter today are aware of the difficulties and know that the suggestions put forward in this motion are made in order to encourage debate. The debate is now officially under way. We hear comments by members of the opposition to the effect that we should have a national policy, notwithstanding the fact that the minister indicated we are protecting our national interests through policies adopted by the government.

Opposition members are calling for a national policy in an effort to get the public involved. Surely they are attempting to engage in debate on this subject, having recognized all the difficulties cabinet faces in respect of the offshore situation, the monetary situation, the difficulties in respect of access to national resources, and the need for exploration capital. Surely they are not serious, in this particular context, in suggesting that the federal government could proceed with a national energy policy which would resolve all these difficulties. Of all the suggestions I have heard, that would be the most ridiculous. I have heard this not only from members of this House; I have heard it from the parliamentary assistant to the Premier of Ontario, who on two occasions stated the same thing.

That province has not seen fit to give sufficient importance to the subject of energy by naming a cabinet minister with responsibility for this particular topic. There is a parliamentary assistant in charge of energy. That is how serious that province considers the problem. When he took the question of energy under consideration he attempted to impose an energy tax. However, some of my constituents reacted to that particular attempt quite directly and quite articulately, and it was withdrawn.

I suggest energy is a very interesting and very essential part of government policy. It has to be analysed and reviewed. The plea of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that we abandon our partisan interest in this situation should be considered with all its merits, and I hope we will endeavour to do so.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, what concerns me most with respect to the crux of the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) is the basic premise which he appears to have adopted, that the posture of Canada toward our neighbour to the south should be that of protectionism in the form of severe restrictions on hydrocarbon exports, the creation of a two-price system and the elimination of the Ottawa valley line, on the assumption that these steps will operate to protect the security of supply of cheap fuel for Canadians.

I suggest that this is essentially a negative approach. I submit that in reality the so-called energy crisis, from Canada's standpoint, in fact creates opportunities for Canada which, if well managed, will result in short-term and long-term economic benefits for all Canadians, but if mishandled will result in the loss of opportunities for Canadians. In this respect I think it behooves us to analyse and draw conclusions from the initiatives proposed by President Nixon on April 18 and to consider the implications from our point of view of President Nixon's so-called energy message.

I suggest that this message makes it clear that sharp changes in United States energy policy are under way which will affect Canada and have the potential to seriously disrupt our domestic industrial strategy. Accordingly, any attempts to develop domestic energy policy initiatives must now seek as their primary objective the minimization of these changes.

It is quite apparent that some of the paramount, short-term objectives of the new U.S. policy are to decrease American dependence on increasing amounts of imported oil and gas while at the same time seeking to expand domestic hydrocarbon reserves and production to meet rising energy consumption. Of course, the Americans would continue to take all the Canadian oil and natural gas that we are prepared and able to sell them on a short-term basis, but I suggest it is obvious that the Americans have written off Canada's oil and gas reserves as a potential major source of supply for their long-term needs and are evolving new policies and programs as alternatives to the use of Canadian hydrocarbon reserves. Such an over-all policy direction appears to be consistent with American objectives of continuing to have access to secure energy supplies while at the same time seeking to eliminate an annual import trade deficit of $1.25 billion.

Over-all, the Nixon message makes it clear that Canada's previously favoured position in the American market will be diminished and could be eventually eliminated. Furthermore, Canada will in the near future not only have to compete with other countries seeking to enter the United States evergy market including, I suggest, the Soviet Union, but will also have to face competition from American energy companies operating in a favoured domestic environment.

While the United States is under pressure to reduce annual expenditures for foreign oil, corrective measures taken against this trade imbalance will no doubt start gradually and build up over several years. This, taken together with many of President Nixon's proposals, is directed toward speeding up these corrective measures. Higher gas prices, prorated import tariffs on all oil by 1980, 12 per cent tax credits on intangible expenditures for successful drilling ventures, relaxation of environmental regulations governing resource extraction and use, and initiatives to bring Alaskan oil to market all suggest the urgency with which the Americans view this trade imbalance.

Other long-term objectives of the Nixon energy message, taken collectively, will have potentially even greater effects on Canada's energy position. I am referring to the continued and better protection of the United States petrochemical industry at the expense of foreign oil importers, more favourable domestic tax laws that will favour redirection of exploration funds from Canada's frontier areas to more intensive exploration in the United States, elimination of oil import quotas which may redirect Middle East oil to the large U.S. markets there to challenge or possibly replace traditional Canadian markets for oil, and the establishment of deep water facilities in American waters at the expense of similar facilities planned for our maritimes.

But perhaps the most significant effect of the Nixon message on Canada is also the most intangible one, namely, that any bilateral trade arrangements between the two countries will of necessity and inevitably involve some commitment of Canada's energy resources, particularly natural gas which, if unwisely managed, could disrupt our own national industrial development strategy. I mention these conclusions in support of the proposal that it would be shortsighted and unwise to invoke hasty, precipitous and unnecessarily harsh or unreasonable measures which in the weeks and month ahead could create an unfavourable environment and attitude in respect of our trade relations vis-à-vis our neighbour to the south.

Instead of regarding the current situation from a negative standpoint, I suggest we regard it as a situation creating great opportunity for Canada. Certainly we have problems which cry out for action in the energy field in this country: such matters as federal versus provincial ownership of our offshore oil and gas resources, the routing and environmental impact of future proposed pipelines, the cost of transportation, royalties and taxes, prices in the field and in the marketplace, equity participation by Canadians, foreign ownership, and similar matters. However, I submit that one thing we should not, and need not, be concerned about is the long-term adequacy of our energy supplies.

Current production limitations may well require some restriction of our export of crude oil to the United States and there are certain limits to the quantities of natural gas available for export. However, for the long term I submit that the overwhelming weight of scientific and expert opinion establishes that Canada's present and future energy resources are vastly greater than it is anticipated will be required well into the next century.

What are Canada's energy opportunities? Canada has substantial supplies of all the common fossil fuels such as oil, gas, bitumen, coal and lignite, and of hydro energy and uranium. There are very large proven supplies of oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and there are enormous prospects for further discoveries and growth in these three provinces and even more so in the frontier areas of northern Canada.

Alberta's Athabasca and related oil sands deposits represent one of the largest sources of bitumen and synthetic crude oil in the world. British Columbia and Alberta have tremendous proven reserves of bituminous and subbituminous coal. Saskatchewan has large reserves of lignite suitable for electrical energy generation. The enormous hydro resources of British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and Labrador are well known. Canada possesses one of the world's largest reserves of natural uranium in the provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories.

Most of Canada's energy supplies come from its own resources, but we do benefit in eastern Canada from imported crude oil supplied from overseas sources. Similarly, eastern Canada benefits from the import of substantial quantities of coal presently available from the eastern United States. Canada's trade in energy resources has, and will enable it on the one hand to benefit from lower cost supplies to eastern Canada, and on the other to market surplus supplies and help to maintain a satisfactory balance of trade, offsetting essential imports in other commodities.

It is of fundamental importance, however, that we manage our energy resources so as to maintain and develop the health and vigour of our energy resource industries and make sure that they work for the benefit of all Canadians. In order to accomplish this we must recognize certain fundamental factors. We must ensure that we can generate and attract the necessary investment capital for further resource development. Some of this will undoubtedly come from outside Canada, but there is no reason why we cannot ensure Canadian control where it really counts and Canadian equity participation to the extent that Canadians really want it.

We must ensure that realistic prices are paid for our energy products whether they are sold in Canadian or export markets, prices which reflect true commodity values. We need realistic transportation policies which will enable the economic movement of energy products to the market. We must as Canadians be prepared to benefit from imports where these are logical and, by the same token, we must be prepared to benefit from the export of energy resources surplus to our own requirements. What is needed are firm but positive policies to provide incentives for growth, opportunities for investment and employment of Canadians, fair royalties and tax rules, and stern but rational environmental controls.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a timely resolution. There is no problem holding the attention of the Canadian people as much as that of energy resources at the present time when answers are sought for sources of supply.

We note a deep concern about protection of environment. At times, coupled with regional conflicts of interests, both seem to be so incompatible that trying to undertake comprenhensive planning in that field is an impossible task.

However, without pretending to be an expert and most humbly, it seems to me that if we make a survey of the problems which we must tackle, there is no possible solution without comprehensive planning of our national interests with respect to the development of those resources.

I was saying that the concern with environment seems to be such at times that it could be at the root of conflicts in the development of our resources.

I understand very well, if I look towards western Canada, that the citizens of British Columbia are worried about the transportation of crude oil from Prudhoe Bay, through Anchorage and along the coasts to Seattle. In fact, the residents of this province who face the possibility of ecological risks without any economic reward or any benefit suggest that this crude oil be transported in the way outlined in their book The Way Out which, incidentally, is very good. This means transportation by railway which appears to me very logical since there is the advantage of increased protection for the environment and also the possibility that building this railway from north to south could open access not only to countless resources but it would be possible to develop the whole province which, as we know, has a wealth of mineral, lumbering and other resources.

I may be qualified as utopian because I support this project but let us remember that when there was a proposal to build a railway from east to west the Prairies were then considered as an unproductive area and that after that, with the sense of vision and of risk of the pionners, the Prairies became not only the world's granary, but huge oil, gas and potassium resources were discovered and today they benefit the provinces concerned and the whole country.

I say that this same concern of the people of Alberta who pleaded their cause by referring to the protection of the environment to get the oil out of the north as against through Valdez and their ambition to have oil and gas pipelines also seems to me very justified.

I think that these policies can be reconciled with the interest of the country and with those of the Americans. This was brought out and I think it is good to recall that Canada does enjoy a wealth of raw and other products that can be considered as energy sources such as uranium. In fact we have so much that finally we have a bargaining power with our wealthy neighbours to the south, a negotiation power that we should be able to use skillfully so that in North America we will be able to reconcile our interests for our development while keeping in mind that our first concern which is also included in the present resolution must be to serve the Canadian consumer in the best way possible. And I think that if we begin with this policy of wanting to serve the Canadian consumer, it is really possible to reconcile what we thought was impossible.

We know that the pipeline extends into Ontario. At the committee on National Resources and Public Works, I heard Mr. McKeough, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ontario Prime Minister, complain about the fact that being at the end of this pipeline was costing Ontario between $70 and $80 million a year. His province was doing that rather than taking advantage of imports. In fact, I asked him if he considered that this was the price to pay to protect the Ontario refineries and the petrochemical industry rather than remove the "Borden barrier", the Ottawa valley boundary, and extending the pipeline to Montreal, provided supply and demand came into play and the flow went both ways.

As long as we will be able to get foreign products at a better price, good for the Canadian consumer and good for our own resources as well. How are they endangered at this point? And are our markets not good and big enough that in fact we will only have to plan what we really want to sell, in the interest of manufacturers, of Canadians and of those who will be our customers? But even with this first concern, we must not forget Canadians.

I see the Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) in the House, and recently I heard him say that he would have the same concern for both eastern and western harbours as far as environment is concerned. I say to the minister that we must agree on this policy and this concern for environment. However, there is quite a difference between ships that would come to get a product in Anchorage or Valdez to go to Seattle, and a sea harbour in the St. Lawrence Valley that is built to accommodate the new generation of ships and develop all our territory. A child could see that difference. We must agree on the same policy and the same concern for environment, but as regards environment if the same reasoning should be followed on the eastern and the western coasts, I think something is wrong and does not make any sense.

I now come to the concern of Quebec and Ontario which depend on foreign supplies for 80 per cent of their supply; Ontario gets it from Alberta and Quebec from imports. You know that the Quebec minister of natural resources, (Mr. Massé), when stating the objectives of a Quebec policy on energy, has indicated some priorities: building a supertanker harbour to handle raw products from overseas, rationalizing distribution and building a pipeline from Gros-Cacouna et Quebec, Montreal and the United States.

Does this appear as still being irreconcilable with Canadian interests? If is quite reconcilable, and it is even in our interest. For the reasons I mentioned earlier, as long as we can profitably get our supply from foreign sources I do not see why we should not draw benefits from it.

We must accept the fact that Quebec is now at the end of the natural gas pipeline. Now, when it comes to extending this gas pipeline, the government is requested to pay the entire cost of the extension and furthermore, as it still is at the end of the pipeline, the product becomes more expensive. It is obvious that the situation would be the same if we only adopted this policy extending the pipeline. The Montreal refineries would then be in a non-competitive position with those of Ontario. This would be a fool's deal that Quebec would not accept. Unfortunately, there are people who think that the true vocation of Quebec is to remain in the field of crafts, folklore and leave to other provinces the responsibility of developing their more advanced, more industrialized resources.

Some people are quite sincere and earnest about environment. However, they did not make a single move about the Golden Eagle Canada Limited in Quebec City. They never even thought of refineries in Montreal, stating high principles about pollution. The city of Montreal dumps its raw sewage into the St. Lawrence River through four 18-foot pipes; nobody says a word about it. But at a time when a region which suffers an annual average unemployment rate of 31 per cent tries to get out of its misery, to industrialize its part of territory, all these famous thinkers who would not have made a single move to help it, appoint themselves as experts and geniuses in the field of environment. Everyone of them comes and gives us a lesson and shows us the path to follow.

In this House, some hon. members have proved themselves to be so unacquainted with the conditions of the environment and even with port and maritime conditions, that I wonder whether it is worth answering them. But since this has been said in the House, let me only remind them that all the experts who have carried out studies not only stated that there was the necessary depth of water, that is 100 feet or more—this is also found in the English Channel where traffic is ten times heavier than here—but also that this is the most accessible place in the whole St. Lawrence River, and that this was recognized as a result of many studies and surveys which would take too long to mention.

Then, the common good, the good of the province of Quebec, requires that most profit be taken out of it, and not only as far as oil is concerned. Let me remind our friends who are sitting in this House that we must take advantage of it in the context of the four big vocations of development of the whole St. Lawrence Seaway. It is quite obvious that the province of Quebec is separated by this Seaway which constitutes the real "entrance door" to it. The province must take full advantage of it. It can profit by it and the Gros Cacouna port is the only one to have the four major benefits required. It can benefit from the fact that it can accommodate the latest lines of ships closer inland. It can handle the loading and unloading of special ships on the Great Lakes which cannot leave the St. Lawrence River, which cannot, for example, go to the Maritime ports because they are not built for it. They would not be insurable and for them it would mean a route extension involving five to ten days more of navigation. In addition to handling, loading and unloading in other ships to develop our whole St. Lawrence Seaway, there is pipeline loading and unloading and shipping by the shortest route to supply Quebec, and railway transport which would allow access to the port 12 months a year and the transport of goods to the inland. Transport by a four-lane highway, the Trans-Canada Highway, which goes up to that place, can be found nowhere else and it facilitates the development of the whole St. Lawrence Seaway. There will be projects which will be developed at Thunder Bay as long as we are intelligent enough to build that sea port and accommodate the new generation of ships. And there is no conflict between different sea ports along the Seaway. The question is which of the United States or Canada will be more intelligent to get there first to handle in the most economical way all primary resources which make our country an industrialized country. And that is how the problem shapes up.

And I ask people concerned with environment: Is it more logical to have three thousand ships go up to Montreal or to have 300 go up to Gros Cacouna? And that is the situation of the problem.

Anyhow, Quebec needs 30 million barrels of oil a year. Right now, small ships flying a foreign flag—about this read the report of the inquiry on pilotage—and without any radar or radiotelephone in good order sail up the St. Lawrence River and no one is shocked about this. However, they are shocked about the fact that some people want to build a super harbour on the lower St. Lawrence. They say: Wildlife must be protected. We are not allowed any more to gather shells along our shores, because that is forbidden. Eel fishing has been forbidden. We are not allowed to catch any salmon because that fish is threatened with extinction. Finally, it is certainly not this super harbour which has caused all these problems concerning the environment since the Minister of Environment has already been forced to ban fishing in this area. Several other cases could be given.

It is obvious that it would be far less dangerous for the environment to accommodate this new generation of ships to the most inland places and thus take full advantage of this development. That, they will tell me, comes into conflict with the interests of the Maritimes. I say it will not. But even there there can be conciliation. How so? On the one hand, the potential of the continental shelf of the Maritimes has not yet been developed. If and when it is developed, the building of a pipeline reaching the Maritime provinces ports, to take advantage of all the resources of the continental shelf will make sense. However, it is clear that if the sole purpose is to receive imports, it is more profitable to move the products further inland because the ports of the Maritimes are well placed to serve the Atlantic coast. They do, and this is a source of satisfaction; in fact we wish them well.

However, the Maritimes do not want to take ecologic risks without benefiting from economic fall-outs because they do not want to ship crude oil, but the refined product and here again—I return to the example I gave a while ago—this would correspond to limiting Quebec to crafts and folklore, leaving peak industries to others.

But after the continental shelf is properly tapped, the pipeline should be extended to Gros Cacouna, and then there will be a link between Alberta and the Maritimes. Then a comprehensive and continental policy can be established to serve all Canadians and, because it is such a huge market, we shall see to it that our resources are developed fully and profitably. In short, with such a large demand, our industries do not run the risk of being unable to operate at full capacity; the greater problem will develop as we expend this non-renewable commodity. We shall have to make new discoveries as economically as possible, and maintain our priorities in this country full of resources and promises.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is possible to reconcile all our interests in this respect. We must have the honesty and courage to say things as they are; the blame must not be put where it does not belong, nor should the progress and development of our country be jeopardized meanly because of small camouflaged interests one does not want to reveal.

A war is being waged against me now about the seaport project, because a citizen has land and a cottage on that site. The whole problem of environment is being brought up, and Isle-Verte is being dubbed "Isle-Noire"; a witchhunt is being drummed up, and dramas made out ot the situation. I say we are much more concerned about environment than any stranger with recently found new vocations.

We have homes there and live there. We want to develop that area and we know what problems have to be solved to do so. We are constantly—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can, however, continue with unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gendron: I thank the House for its indulgence and I shall not abuse it.

Still, I would not like to close on a pessimistic note. A sincere, honest survey of our needs, our aspirations should be made. I feel it has been proved generally that the dangers to the ecology have not been added to; on the contrary, they have been decreased. I feel that we are still capable of conciliating the efforts to conserve beautiful sites, our wildlife and our touristic vocation, with modern technology and the vastness of the territory; those various interests can be reconciled.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the arguments from both sides of the House when debating a question as fundamental as the energy crisis in Canada and in the world generally. I was very amused by some of the arguments put forth by the last two speakers from the Conservative party, particularly the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who was very eloquent in coming to the defence of the oil companies. He said the socialist hordes of this party would frighten off the oil companies, that the United States for sources of supply would turn elsewhere, and that we in this party are anti-American. He criticized us for being so tough on the poor little oil companies.

I remind the hon. member that these poor little oil companies have a gross income approximately three times that of the Canadian government. They are the seven largest companies in the world. The largest, Standard Oil of New Jersey, the parent of Imperial Oil, has a gross income equal to that of the Canadian government. These are the companies the Conservatives, particularly the hon. member for York-Simcoe, seem to be so concerned about and so afraid that we might injure by raising this question in the House.

Another member of that party asked about the terrible NDP, socialist idea of a two-price system. He asked who would pay for this. Would it be the producers? Would they not receive the benefit of increased prices in the United States by increasing the price to Canadian consumers? The oil companies are able to produce their product in this country at a really big profit. I see no reason why the consumers of this country should not have the benefit of the lowest possible price. I maintain that the oil does not belong to the oil companies; it should belong to the people of Canada and the provinces wherein it is situated. It is amusing, and perhaps very revealing, that certain members of the Conservative party should exhibit their true colours and come to the defence of these poor little weak sisters, the huge multi-national oil companies of the world.

During the past few months we have witnessed in this country increasing prices for gasoline, farm fuels and home heating fuels. We have actually seen a shortage of some of these fuels in parts of the United States. This is because the Americans find themselves in a situation where they are running short of cheap energy supplies. This is not only true of that country but of other countries in the world. There is not a shortage in Canada; we have enough reserves of cheap fuel in this country to last for several years. The price in Canada has been increasing because the multinational companies which control our oil are milking Canadian consumers for as much as possible as result of what is happening in the United States.

The issue of energy, gas, oil and pipelines is very important, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said earlier, not only in the short term but the long term as well. If we play our cards right, if we have a national energy policy and move with real controls on behalf of the people of Canada, energy could become our trump card. It could make our industry much more competitive and create jobs. There could be literally billions of dollars in profits for the Canadian people. This is the situation at its best. Taken at its worst, without any planning, I can visualize the ruin of our economy. Because of the balance of payments problem which the United States will have in 10 or 20 years, without a controlled or planned energy development program I can visualize the ruin of the Canadian economy, and perhaps annexation by the United States. These are the two extreme options we should bear in mind when talking about a fultime energy policy for Canada.

My concern is that the huge, multinational oil companies, with the complicity of this government and the United States government, are orchestrating the public of Canada to the fact that there is an energy crisis. If we do not do something about it there will be a real crisis in this country, and therefore they say we need a confidential energy plan. The United States does face a crisis in terms of cheap energy. According to United Nation's statistics of 1969, the United States, with 5.7 per cent of the world's population, consumes approximately 34 per cent of the world's energy. Canada is almost as bad: with 0.6 per cent of the world's population, we consume 2.9 per cent of the world's energy. India, with 15.2 per cent of the world's population, consumes only 1.5 per cent of the energy in the world.

Until the end of World War II, the United States was self-sufficient in terms of energy needs. Today the United States imports approximately 25 per cent of its energy and that percentage is rising every year. By 1980 they will be importing approximately 50 per cent of their energy needs. The Americans have many options. We have spoken about a number of these today. One is the Middle East. They can expand their take of energy from Middle East countries such as Saudi Arabia, Iran and Kuwait. However, the United States does not feel these countries are secure; there are many political problems. This makes the situation very dicey and shaky as far as the United States is concerned.

The second source of energy available to the United States is Canada, but Canada could not supply what is needed by the United States even if we did have a continental energy policy. Today we export to the American market about 60 per cent of what we produce, and this accounts for only 5 per cent of the crude oil consumed in the United States and 3.6 per cent of the gas consumed in that country. If you take the current situation and project it into the future, you will see that the situation does not differ much even if the Mackenzie valley pipeline is constructed and in full operation. If it is constructed and in operation by 1977, for example, and producing two million barrels of oil a day for the American market, about all that would do is make up for the drop in production in the lower 48 states of the United States.

The same is true of Alaska oil. If Alaska oil is developed to its potential, the Americans by the time 1980 comes along will still be producing about the same amount of oil as it is producing today. They would still find themselves in the position of having to import about half their energy. By that time the price will have gone up to at least $5 a barrel, if not higher, compared with about $3.40 in 1972. And, as I said, Canada cannot fulfil the American demand for energy; we do not have the reserves, and if we did develop them our economy would be in serious trouble.

In 1972 there were proven conventional reserves of eight billion barrels of oil and 53 trillion cubic feet of gas in Canada. The Canadian Petroleum Association estimates that the conventional reserves in Canada which are recoverable amount to about 120 billion barrels of oil and 725 trillion cubic feet of gas. This would not be sufficient to satisfy American demands even if we wished to do so.

The world is currently using oil at the rate of about 20 billion barrels a year, increasing at an annual rate of 7 per cent, or doubling every ten years. By the year 2000, about 1,330 billion parrels of oil will have been used—that is, between the present year and the year 2000. Canada will have consumed about 30 billion barrels, the United States 300 billion barrels and the rest of the world about 1,000 billion barrels. Proven conventional oil reserves in the world at this time, according to an American geological survey, amount to about 634 billion barrels.

This, in a nutshell, is the situation which faces us at the present time. What will the solution be? There is extra oil and gas available, but it will be much more expensive to produce. For example, there are the tar sands in Athabasca, Alberta. Oil reserves there could amount to as much as 300 billion barrels. Other tar sands in Canada hold estimated reserves of 145 billion barrels. It is, as we all know, much more expensive to refine this oil, get it out of the ground, and so on.

In the 1980s the Colorado oil shale might become competitive, but here again we are into a much more expensive operation. The reserves in the oil shale show about twice as much as the reserves of the tar sands in Canada. But if a sequence of this kind occurs, we can see what is likely to happen to the price. Canada, if we are not careful, will have priced herself out of her own market; we shall find our energy resources are much too expensive for our industrial needs.

Canada can meet its energy needs until the end of the century, with cheap energy, only if the government steps in and exercises certain controls and restraints. But this is not happening. We find ourselves, instead, accidentally step by step moving toward a continental energy deal of one kind or another. We find, for example, that 99 per cent of the refining capacity in this country is foreign-owned; 82.6 per cent of the gas and oil industry is in the hands of foreign companies and corporations. And this is only part of the situation which concerns me. These are all capital-intensive industries; they do not provide much employment.

Moreover, Canadian tax laws reinforce foreign ownership in this area and encourage investment of capital in this area. Eric Kierans, when he was a member of this House, pointed out many times that in the three years between 1965 and 1968 the oil companies showed a book profit of $795 million. Their taxable income, after accounting for all exemptions, amounted to $45 million. This means they paid taxes on 5.7 per cent of their book profits. Compare this with the level of taxation applied to manufacturing industry—63 per cent—or with that paid by the retail trade, where small businessmen and others pay tax at the rate of 90 per cent on their book profits. This illustrates how distorted our priorities are when it comes to industrial planning and the direction of capital to areas where it should be going.

Imperial Oil showed a profit of $1 billion in the last ten years. This fact was referred to earlier by my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. They were taxed at the rate of 4 per cent. This is a lower tax rate than is levied on a girl who is working for the minimum wage at an all-night truck stop, if she is single, with no dependants. Thus, basically we are subsidizing, at the expense of the Canadian people, a commodity which is vital for the growth and welfare of the United States, Japanese and European economies. This policy will eventually be to the detriment of the people of Canada.

Consider the argument one step further. Industries in the resource area are highly capital-intensive. Eric Kierans quoted figures to show that $100 invested in resource development would provide about $6.50 in wages, while $100 invested in manufacturing would provide between $30 and $35 in wages. You can see right there why we have the highest unemployment rate of any industrialized country in the world. We in Canada import more manufactured goods than any other industrialized country in the world. We import $463 worth a year per capita, compared to manufactured goods worth $116 per capita imported by citizens of the United States. This imbalance will become increasingly severe in the years ahead if we continue with an energy policy such as the one we appear to be stumbling into.

I think we should be operating in the opposite direction. We should be carrying out more refining and processing right here in our own country, instead of exporting the raw material in its crude state. But if the people who represent the oil companies get their way, this position will probably get even worse by 1980. Here I am talking about the possible development of the Mackenzie valley gas and oil pipeline, other gas and oil pipelines, the development of the tar sands, and so on.

It has been estimated by many economists that the cost of a gas and oil pipeline down the Mackenzie valley would be about $12 billion by 1980. Some people are saying that by 1980 there might be as much as $30 billion invested in the tar sands, and another $6 to $8 billion in the James Bay project. Just think what effect this would have on inflation in this country, on our exchange rate, on interest rates, on our export markets, on Canadian industry or on Canadian agricultural and farm goods. It would have a negative effect on this whole area of our economy. With this type of investment in the tar sands, the Mackenzie valley and other Canadian oil and gas producing areas, we would be in a position to export five, six or seven million barrels a day of crude oil to the United States, resulting in an inflow into Canada of $11 billion or $12 billion in U.S. currency.

Let me carry that a step further. The United States balance of payments deficit today is around $4 billion. By 1980 it could go up to $20 billion or more due to their energy shortage. The United States is going to find itself in a straitjacket so far as its balance of payments problem is concerned, and thus will want to sell us even more manufactured goods and finished products in exchange for the oil and gas that we sell them. This will mean even less jobs for Canadians, perhaps an even greater inflation rate in this country, along with higher interest rates and difficulty in selling our exports, which in turn will mean we will be unable to develop any secondary or manufacturing industry in this country. The value of the Canadian dollar will probably go up once again we will go through the cycle of economic problems.

So far as the Canadian dollar is concerned, a United States economist from California has estimated that a 5 per cent increase in the value of the Canadian dollar over the U.S. dollar would result in a negative trade shift against Canada of $715 million. A 10 per cent increase in the value of the Canadian dollar over the U.S. dollar would result in a $1.6 billion negative trade shift between the two countries against Canada. These, Mr. Speaker, are some very real factors that could very well be valid if we are stampeded into a continental energy plan, construction of the Mackenzie valley gas and oil pipe line and development of the tar sands without regard to the real needs Canadians face, not just in the field of energy but in our whole economy.

The solutions must be radical ones; I do not think we can just tinker around. Our oil resources belong to the people of this country, not to the big oil companies and multinationals. For this reason we must establish immediately a number of priorities for this country. The first is a marketing agency which would be responsible for the marketing of gas and oil, an agency that would not be afraid of establishing a two-price system such as that advocated in the motion put forward today by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Secondly, we must not be afraid to regulate production and export of gas and oil in Canada. Thirdly, I suggest we must begin seriously to consider the possibility of public ownership of our gas and oil resources.

Let me remind the House of a Gallup poll that was conducted a few weeks ago and which showed that the majority of the Canadian people now thought that the option of public ownership of our energy resources should be considered. These resources are very profitable. For example, in the province of Saskatchewan it is anticipated that $117 million will flow out of the province this year in the form of profits from the gas and oil industry, and in Alberta the amount leaving the province will be roughly $868 million.

If our energy resources were placed under public ownership we could then increase our refining capability and our petrochemical industry would become more sophisticated. We would be able to direct the profits therefrom into establishing additional manufacturing industry in this country and into a whole wealth of industrial, resource and energy planning the likes of which this country has never seen, but which it will have to see if we want to remain a united and free country into the twenty-first century.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has expired.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to debate the energy problems facing Canada over the next few years, may I say that if one were to adopt the proposal put forward by the previous speaker you would have to suggest that if we all traded less, we would be better off. I do not think that is true. I do not think that we as a nation can escape the fact that there is an energy shortage throughout the world, and especially in the United States. I do not think we can dodge the changes that are developing throughout the world any more than we can escape food shortages, vast famines and political events that occur.

In the discussion of what our relations should be with the United States—which after all is the only country that can afford to buy our expensive energy—from the point of view of the export of gas and oil, it seems to me some historical events should be noted. For most of Canada's life we have been an oil deficient country. Only in 1954, with the discovery of Leduc, did Canada approach anything like energy sufficiency in gas and oil. The energy needs of central Canada and the western prairies were dependent upon imports from the United States. Had the United States not allowed oil exports to Canada, the Canadian economy would have been seriously retarded for a long time, and I suggest we might well have had only one-half or two-thirds of our population. For example, western Canadian agriculture would have developed at only a fraction of the rate it did.

Canada has now become one of the few western industrialized nations that has an adequate oil and gas supply for its immediate use. Bearing in mind that less than 20 years ago we had practically no oil and gas production, it is wise to remember that times change, and not always in our favour.

In his motion the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) speaks of the curtailment of gasoline shipments to the United States. I suggest that this curtailment of gasoline flies in the face of the many attempts to increase the export of more refined products, which has been the goal of many governments for a long time and the goal of the NDP. In the province of Manitoba, the NDP government has pledged itself to export more processed materials. Let us all also consider that oil from offshore that is surplus to our needs we can refine and re-export. Any oil we require, we can get from the Middle East, which does not deplete our own resources. So for a while, at least, we can benefit from the shortage in the United States.

While the Canadian public has to be protected, this placing of export controls on refined petroleum products means that we are negating much of the effort we have made to export refined products. It also places in jeopardy the large refineries at Come-by-Chance and Melfort Point, the production of which is beamed to the American market and is considered surplus to Canadian needs.

Furthermore, we cannot be unaware that the President's message to Congress has an evaluation content that must place the long overdue energy policy of the Canadian government into perspective. The important item in the President's message is that all existing tariffs on imported crude oil and oil products have been removed, and has direct control over the quantity of such crude oil and refined products. This is being replaced with a licence fee import system starting May 1 of this year. Under this new system, tariffs are only paid on the amount of oil over the amount imported in April. These tariffs will increase from about 10.5 cents a barrel initially to 21 cents per barrel by November 1, 1975.

In addition, between 1973 and 1980 the amount of oil already covered by this fee will decline progressively until in 1980 all oil will be eligible for fee. The fees themselves vary as between crude oil and refined petroleum products. For residual fuel oil the import fee starts at 15 cents per barrel, rising to 63 cents per barrel by November, 1975. For gasoline, fees will start at 52 cents per barrel, rising to 63 cents during the same period; and there are proposed import fee exemptions for 75 per cent of crude oil imports during five years for new or expanded refinery capacity in the United States. In other words, the president has anticipated the motion of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the United States is already going to substantially increase the import tariff on gasoline in the next two and a half years.

In regard to natural gas, the President has proposed that gas from new wells or gas newly dedicated to interstate markets, and continuing production from expired contracts, should no longer be subject to price regulation at the wellhead. Thus, the future price of gas will be related to a mix of regulated and unregulated natural gas. In other words, the United States is anticipating rises in prices that will no doubt make for more efficient use of their energy resources, in the short term, to bias the import tariff so that crude oil will be favoured for importation over refined products. The United States has anticipated this motion and regards it in its interest not to import gasoline and other refined petroleum products.

The action of the President in respect of natural gas also indicates a departure from that which is proposed in this motion. It has long been felt that the price control of natural gas in the United States has stimulated its uneconomical use by being abnormally cheap. It is being used in the production of generating plants that could well be fuelled by other forms of fuel such as ooal. This would result in a saving of this very highly desired fuel. In other words, the United States has tried a price system and has discarded it in favour of the market system. This in itself should bring an end to the wasting of high quality products such as natural gas. For instance, it is stated that one-third of the energy used in an ordinary gas cooking range is consumed by the pilot light.

It is clear from President Nixon's message that these changes will have an effect on Canada in a very direct way and will tend to disrupt our domestic industrial strategy. We must develop our own domestic energy strategy in order to compensate for this change. The President's objectives are as detailed by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour). They include continued and better protection of the United States petrochemical industry at the expense of foreign oil importers. This means curtailment on the importation of gasoline into the United States in favour of crude oil. Domestic tax laws in the United States are being changed to promote a redirection of exploration fees which have been going to Canadian frontier areas, to move intensified exploration in the United States.

A further objective is the elimination of oil import quotas with a redirection of Mid-East oil to the large U.S. market, to challenge or possibly replace traditional Canadian markets. I suggest that Mid-East oil is not nearly as unstable as many would seem to suggest. The President's message refers to the establishment of deep water facilities off the east coast of the United States at the expense of similar facilities which are planned for our maritimes. This indicates that the United States regards it more important to build refineries and ports in the United States than in Canada. The effect of President Nixon's message is that trade concessions or bilateral arrangements between our two countries will of necessity involve Canada's energy resources, and we cannot get away from that.

Having regard to a two-price system for gas in Canada, as I understand it we already have this in effect for the export market, which is the United States market, in that gas must be priced at least 105 per cent of the price of fuel comsumed in that area. Does this motion intend to change this situation? What do the NDP expect the domestic price to be? The motion states that the domestic price should be significantly lower, but how much lower is not said.

If the domestic price is lower than the cost of production, or at least the cost of bringing gas not now found into production, or to make economical the production of gas not now considered viable under the price structure, this would indicate that the price of natural gas should rise in order that we can exploit the discovery of natural gas in the field to the fullest. In other words, the industry says there is natural gas that cannot be exploited as long as the price is low. If we are to cut back on our exports to the United States to the extent of $1.25 billion in respect of oil and gas, how will we fill that gap in the immediate future?

Recently the United States closed the trade gap with us as far as the merchandise account is concerned and is now showing a surplus trade account. Inevitably, a discussion about the restriction of energy, particularly oil and gas, with the United States brings forth the idea that Canada could with impunity shut off the supply of oil and gas and suffer no untoward effects. We have complained bitterly that the United States sees and treats Canadians as hewers of wood and drawers of water. However, my analysis would indicate that of all the highly finished industrial products we sell abroad, by far the greatest amount goes to the United States.

Let me give the House an example. On September 7, 1971, a former minister of finance, Mr. Edgar Benson, said in the House of Commons that 85 per cent of Canadian finished, export goods were sold in the United States. In 1969 we sold only 13.2 per cent of our finished products manufactured for export outside the United States. This amount totalled more than one-third of our total exports. In 1969 Canada sold about one-third of its exports as processed industrial material, with the United States providing 70 per cent of our total market. I would doubt that these figures have changed a great deal. If we complain about Canadians being treated as hewers of wood and drawers of water, we must remember our export of raw material to Japan and the European common market, such as coal, wood, and so on, used there for the production of finished products.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands mentioned that Canada needs low-cost gas and oil for its own manufacturing industry. Surely the widespread shutting off of gas and oil to the United States would be interpreted as a direct blow to that country's industrial capacity. We could not embark on this course without expecting substantial changes in the United States regarding its dealings with us. To keep its industrial machines going, the United States would have to import oil from other sources, and it is not likely it would allow the export of our high-priced manufactured goods into their markets. Indeed, the United States would be required more and more to export only finished goods while restricting imports. The United States would have little sympathy if it could not import energy from Canada. As the balance of payments grew worse, the United States could not continue to import high-priced Canadian goods without some compensation.

Perhaps there is good news as far as the basic economy of the western world is concerned in the fact that the United States balance of payments has improved in the past year, particularly in the past month or two. I think it is interesting to note that this is largely due to an increase in exports to world markets. This is something for the House to think about in considering Lift programs, and so on. To replace the United States market for our Canadian manufacturers with either the Japanese market or the European Common Market would involve a problem that I think would concern even the most avid Canadian nationalist.

It is already widely apparent that United States investment in our oil and gas exploration is being severely curtailed and we will have to shift Canadian investment into these fields. This will cause heavy demands on the Canadian economy if we wish to sustain new finds. It seems to me that the radical setting of a domestic price for oil and gas that is greatly lower that the world market would only store up problems for the future and would do nothing to solve our problems in the long run. Perhaps there is some need for regulation of local, unusual circumstances.

With regard to paragraph (c) of this motion, I think it is very much in conflict with the attempt to establish a two-price system for gas and oil. It may well be that now is the time to consider a more flexible Ottawa valley line. Prices east of the Ottawa valley are bound to rise. It seems there will be factors that will prevent their rising to abnormal levels. First of all, the OPEC countries can only raise the price of energy to a degree before they bump into competition from other fuels.

It is widely recognized that in North America, which includes Canada, much of our energy needs are dictated by our high standard of living. Inevitably, the gasoline rationing in the United States will reduce the demand and increase the trend to smaller cars, with perhaps more efficient use of public transport. This should cause a levelling off of energy demands. All these will modify the Arab demands in respect of oil. But the hon. member's suggestion that the Ottawa valley line be removed is in direct conflict with the two-price system for oil which he has suggested.

In the matter of oil, generally speaking Canada has remained with the price at the world market level. Unless conditions change significantly, this still seems to be by far the best policy for us to follow. I foresee great overtones of trouble developing for us in the future in moving into a two-price system.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in this debate on the motion moved on behalf of our party by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). To my mind, no question outlined in Parliament today is more central to the very future of our country and the future needs of the consumers of this country, regardless of whether they are farmers on the prairies or consumers of natural gas in Toronto or wherever they may live.

I listened to some of the debate today with great interest. I think it has outlined the position of the different parties in terms of their stand on the energy crisis as it affects the people of Canada. I am appalled at the position and the attitude of the Tory party on such a fundamental question. First of all, this party which has historically taken the position of advocating a sort of nice Canadian nationalism of the days of Sir John A. Macdonald is now the greatest proponent of a continental approach to the use of our oil and gas resources.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) seemed to apologize for the U.S.A. and the position in which it finds itself in terms of energy and energy needs. He seemed to be suggesting that we really must not start to control our export of oil and gas and must not begin to plan for the needs of Canadians. I want to point out that before the committee of the House of Commons dealing with the price, cost and supply of oil and natural gas it was pointed out, in terms of the charts, that in fact if all the known reserves of oil and natural gas in Canada today were turned over lock, stock and barrel to the United States, those reserves of oil and natural gas would supply the United States market for less than one year. That is the kind of situation which exists in respect of Canada and the United States. There is less than one year's supply in terms of known reserves. The Tory party talks about a wide open field between the United States and Canada in terms of a continentalist policy in respect of oil and natural gas.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) and one of the Toronto members cried crocodile tears for the oil companies. I believe it would be written in the history of this country, if a Tory government were formed and allowed a free flow of non-renewable resources into the United States market, that it would be one of the greatest sell-outs, comparable only to the sell-out of the rest of our industries by those sitting across from the Tories. Let me point out that if we continue to operate on a philosophy of allowing the free flow on a so-called open market among multi-national, United States-owned and controlled corporations, and keep working under this narrow and outdated philosophy presented by the oldline parties in this House, we will be in the position of putting the price of our oil and gas at a level which is inconceivable in terms of the farmer on the land and the consumer in the town or city.

We must begin now to look into planning the use of our natural resources. For whom are those natural resources there? Are they there for the large, United States multinational corporations, corporations which when they face a certain restriction, a very minor move by the Minister of Energy, Mines, and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) about which the Tory party complained, switch to another angle to protect their own private interests? They export out of Canada by moving gasoline across the border.

Members of this House listened to the independent dealer, not a representative of the monopolies to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) referred but, rather, a representative of the independing suppliers in the Ottawa valley who had to close down most of his independent operations while the monopoly corporations had a greater market supply. He told the newscaster on television at six o'clock, during the news program, that one of the major reasons he was closing down was that the large, United States-owned monopoly corporations in this country were now in fact moving gasoline across the border in order to avoid the import restrictions on oil.

If the government, in the interest of the people of Canada, cannot now see the absolute necessity of considering the public interest in respect of the production and supply of our oil and natural gas, I believe the philosophy of the old-line parties is outmoded and outdated in terms of the development of our resources which are needed by the people of Canada.

The resolution points out the concept of a two-price system for oil and natural gas, or energy supplies in Canada. I believe it is of considerable merit. Surely when out population is so dependent on these resources, and the industrial world is so dependent on the supply of non-renewable resources, it is incumbent upon us as the representatives of our people to find it in the public interest to control the price they must pay for their energy. I believe we must begin to prod the government into directly intervening in the activities of the oil and gas industries, which is a policy I do not believe we will see followed by either old-line party, in terms of meeting the real and desperate need for energy supplies in Canada.

I heard the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain earlier today cry out for non-partisanship in dealing with this issue. If I had to speak for the Tory party and some of the representatives within it who represent the oil cartels, I would cry for non-partisanship as well, because surely there is no defence of the position being taken by the Tory party. I recall a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works when officials of the National Energy Board came before it and clearly outlined, by chart, the discrepancy between the supplies we had in Canada for our domestic consumption and our needs in the coming decades. One of the officials pointed out very clearly a problem which was raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, namely, that the supply in a decade or more from now will not be there.

I remember a spokesman for the Tory party saying at that time that he was glad the National Energy Board had shown there was no problem in terms of oil and gas supplies. Either in protecting their friends in the oil industry, or in sheer blindness, they cannot see the fundamental question we are facing in this country. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pointed out the possibilities of a dual pipeline system so as to bring about some kind of competition between domestic oil and offshore oil.

Mr. McKinley: Capitalism.

Mr. Knight: The hon. member says "capitalism". I want to point out that the first word they forgot in terms of the oil and gas industry was the word "competition". I am referring to the creation of a situation in which the entire Canadian economy east of the Ottawa valley is not dependent on offshore oil supplies, and this is fundamental.

If we can create such a situation, we will not be trapped should the Americans find their supplies in the Middle East or other parts of the world tapped, and they continue to get a limited supply from other foreign markets and decide that they have to restrict the offshore oil which is going to meet Canadian needs, through their multinational corporations. So I believe it is in the public interest that we move into a two-price system as it relates to energy and that we move into an area of marketing agencies, as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) pointed out.

We should establish eventual ownership of all the pipeline systems and distributions in this country as an initial step in order to keep control of this movement. As a result of control of the pipelines we can bring an end to the ludicrous position of TransCanada Pipe Lines which, in all the years of its operation, has not paid corporate income taxes to the public treasury. The income of TransCanada Pipe Lines should not go to a privileged few; it should be used for the public interest.

From there we should move to the eventual position of complete public ownership of the gas and oil industry, in the public interest. The resources in the Northwest Territories and the Mackenzie region should not be confined to private industry and multinational corporations. People in the Northwest Territories represented by my colleague should have a say in the kind of development that takes place there, in terms of the relationship to large, multinational corporations. These corporations should be restricted. This should be done in the public interest. Exploitation of the resources should be carried out by public entreprise and a publicly-owned corporation.

I want to point out how this energy crisis relates to the ordinary people of Canada. In my constituency at present we have the culmination of the seeding season and every producer on the land needs gas and oil for his machinery. If we as Members of Parliament do not solve the energy problem in terms of the kind of price the producer will have to pay on the domestic market, the price for that commodity will continue to rise unendingly. It is not the only cost with which he is faced.

May I quote a few statistics. The cost of running a farm in the first quarter of 1973 was up over 10 per cent from last year, according to Statistics Canada. The farm input price index was pushed up by an 18 per cent increase in the cost of livestock, a 15 per cent increase in the cost of feeder cattle, and a 31 per cent increase in the cost of seed.

Add to this major increases in the price of fuel which came this spring. Some farmers point out to me that it will cost them an additional $400 or $500 this year to operate their machinery.

The index of 100 in 1961 in respect of costs to eastern farmers shows an increase to 119.2 in 1970 in the cost of petroleum products compared to 125.8 for 1972. For western farmers rose to 113.5 in 1970 and to 120 in 1972, not including the increases since Christmas in their costs. The consumers of Canada who want cheap food will have to pay the ever rising costs of the producer unless we answer the fundamental questions related to energy costs in terms of oil and natural gas.

I believe that the program outlined by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on behalf of this party provides an approach to the energy question in our country which will ensure a reasonable price for both consumers and producers, and which will protect a steady supply of oil and gas to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF THE KILT FOR HIGHLAND UNITS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is not here this evening to hear my representation. I presume he is engaged on something which he considers more important. On April 10 I asked the minister if he would reconsider the decision to force the Highland units to give up their cherished kilts, and if he would reinstate the maintenance grants for Highland dress for those units. The minister gave the totally specious reply that "there is no regulation preventing the Highland regiments in the reserves from wearing the kilt".

The question, as the minister well knew, was about the cutting off of maintenance grants to Highland units. The people concerned are well aware that Highland units may continue wearing the kilt, the change being that the minister now demands that the troops involved pay for their own uniforms.

● (2200)

Since April 10 I have received petitions from the St. Andrews and Caledonian Society of Victoria, the Regimental Association of the Cameron Highlanders of Ottawa, and the Soltire Society of Victoria requesting the retention of Highland uniforms at government expense. There are some 4,000 signatures to these petitions, and I will be requesting permission tomorrow to table them. One is left to ponder upon the reasons for this move on the part of the minister. Highland units have been a proud part of the Canadian military for over a hundred years. I am informed that 35 per cent of the militia order of battle are Highland units. I wonder if the minister wishes to alienate such a sizeable proportion of the militia.

On a dollars and cents basis there is little ground for the curtailing decision. It is estimated that the life expectancy of the new green trousers is approximately two years, at a cost of approximately $10. The Highland units suggest that the minister should save the $10 and instead restore a kilt maintenance grant of $5 per annum for the Highland militia and cadets. I might mention now, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad to see the minister has taken his seat in this chamber and will reply to my presentation. I might also mention that the $10 for the green trousers does not include payment for certain undergarments, which it is well known Highland units do not need or wear.

It seems strange that the forces are advertising for recruits and at the same time are giving up the best kind of advertising they have. In this respect I note that in the estimates there is an increase of $2 million in defence expenditure on information. I hope that tomorrow I will also have a chance to inquire into the spending of that large amount of money.

It is the negative approach that the minister seems to take to recruiting people into militia that I believe is particularly unsuccessful. Field Marshall Montgomery established as a principle of war that we should reinforce success. The Highland units have always had success in attracting recruits. Why not reinforce their successful ways?

This government adopts the attitude of the born loser. In "Defence for the 70's" it stated, "The government intends to maintain the reserve force at the current authorized size." In "Defence 1971" it stated, "The average militia strength in 1971 was approximately 18,000." In "Defence 1972", at page 91 it states, "As of October 1, 1972, the militia strength was 16,583." Obviously, the government is failing to attract recruits into the militia; and I do not wonder, when it takes away the things the militia feel most seriously about.

The government pretends to encourage groups to remember their heritage. The very fine Royal 22nd Regiment wear on their cap badges "Je me souviens"—a fine motto, and I agree with their wearing it. Pride of past, race, family and self are all intertwined, and the proud regiments are the best. Perhaps I might close by recommending to the minister that he should not choose Highland units to be the next victim of his policy of anonymity for all units in the forces. Instead, he might consider Sir Wilfrid Laurier's enlightened comment in a speech delivered in Toronto on January 5, 1893, when he said, "If I were not French I would choose to be Scotch."

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity provided by the ten o'clock debate to reply to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I know that since he entered this House after the election of October 30 last he has had a very keen interest in the armed forces, both the regular and the reserve. I might say that my awareness of his interest has resulted from personal conversations as well as from questions he has directed to me across the floor.

The subject of dress for Highland units that he first raised back in April, and which he has addressed himself to again tonight, is a matter which I like to think is of as much concern and importance to me as it is to many members of the House and many Canadians. First of all, I would like to clarify any misunderstanding that may exist with regard to the present policy. There is no regulation of any kind which prevents the Highland units from wearing the kilt. I am well aware, however, that there was a change of policy brought about before I became Minister of National Defence. This change in policy had the effect of eliminating financial support from the department for the purchase and, particularly, for the maintenance of the kilt.

I have the responsibility, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows, as have other ministers, for reassessing the decisions made by my predecessors. At this point in time the most I can say to the hon. member for Victoria is that I believe he has brought forward for public attention and consideration a matter of importance. It is important to the department, particularly important to the Highland units, and I like to believe it is of importance to Canada.

I say to the hon. member that there are a number of matters, and this is one of them, which I am still evaluating as Minister of National Defence and upon which I am still reaching my own conclusions. I have not yet had an opportunity to fully assess the implications of the proposals that he is suggesting. However, it does not trouble me to say to him that I am in general agreement with the sentiments and representations that he has made on behalf of Highland units.

It should be pointed out that in matters of dress of all federal employees, including the armed forces, the approval of Treasury Board is required. With this in mind, and also having regard to the numerous other financial demands on my budget, it is my personal belief that the Canadian armed forces—I will conclude in less than one minute, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The rule of the "late show" is applied strictly. I am ready to let the minister go on but I am afraid that this will set a precedent for another evening, and we are already in difficulty in that the minister has now taken one minute longer than he should. I will let the minister continue, but I would not want this occasion to create a precedent.

An hon. Member: One minute.

Mr. Richardson: What I want to say, and this is really the main point I wanted to bring before hon. members is that it is my personal belief that the Canadian armed forces would be well served if the payment for some part of the capital cost of kilts for the Highland units, and an annual grant per member for the maintenance of kilts, was reinstituted as our policy.

I will conclude by saying that I welcome the representations by the hon. member for Victoria because, as I have said, the sentiments he has expressed are very close to my own. I wish to assure him tonight that I intend to move our policy concerning financial assistance to the Highland units along the lines which I have just described.

NATIONAL REVENUE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT SEEK RETURN OF OVERPAYMENTS TO FARMERS UNDER WHEAT INVENTORY REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on May 25 I asked a question of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) relating to the long-outmoded policy of the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow, or Lift, as it relates to the western producer. It appears that under this program the government overpaid some 4,000 farmers to the tune of $365,000. It has collected some of this money; the farmers concerned now owe about $288,000. According to the Auditor General's report, the government can write off moneys to the tune of $6 million owed to the federal treasury by such illustrious individuals as United States automobile manufacturing companies.

The Auditor General further pointed out that this government, according to its philosophy, is prepared to ignore joint-owned corporations in joint ventures to save corporate income tax. The essence of it is that the government is trying to collect $288,000 from 4,000 farmers. This amounts to between $40 and $50 per farmer. They are also trying to collect overpayments under the old age security program in the neighbourhood of $1 million. I understand they have made a recovery of half that amount. While trying to collect these overpayments, the government is willing to allow a United States automobile manufacturing company a forgiveness of $6 million owing to the federal treasury.

This government has a philosophy of free enterprise—free for the rich but not for the poor. If that is their philosophy, there are two points that should be made. They ought to forget about the overpayments under the LIFT program. It was disastrous; it was an act against humanity to tell the farmers not to grow food while millions were starving. Second, the government will present figures which probably will not add up to $288,000. If they keep at it each year, it will probably cost more to try to collect than it is worth in terms of money owing by these thousands of farmers. If the government is going to operate with the philosophy that it can write off $6 million for their large corporate friends, they should be prepared to write off the $288,000 owned by western farmers.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the question which was asked by the hon. member of the opposition to the Minister of National Revenue is the same as the one he asked exactly a year ago to the Minister of Justice. In view of the pertinency of the reply given by the then Parliamentary Secretary, may I be permitted to quote this reply as recorded on page 2874 of the Debates for June 5, 1972. Here it is:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. member in directing his original question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) sought to draw a parallel between two distinctly different circumstances. The situations mentioned were the Canada-United States automotive agreement on the one hand and the Operation Lift program on the other. The minister in his reply stated that he could see no connection between the two situations and frankly, Mr. Speaker, neither can I.
> Although the Canada-United States auto agreement is not administered by the Canadian Department of Agriculture, perhaps I may still reply to that part of the hon. member's question which pertains to this agreement. It is my understanding that this agreement was based on the principle of free trade. As such it did not envisage collection of duty or sales tax by either party. The amount the hon. member interprets as being a direct liability is, in my understanding, what has been referred to as a contingent liability, not a direct liability nor an outstanding debt owing.
> The overpayments to farmers are examples of direct liabilities and as such are quite different both in terms of accounting principles and of actual fact. Under the terms of the Lift program, farmers who elected to participate in the program were paid a specific amount for each acre taken out of wheat production, with an additional payment made when this acreage was diverted to perennial forage production. These payments were made subject to a definite set of governing regulations.
> I am certain the hon. member is well aware of the reasons behind the Lift program and I need not go into them in detail. However, I should like to mention the fact that the government, in an attempt to put needed cash into the hands of farmers as soon as possible, made advance interim payments to farmers who submitted claims. Final payments were made when on-farm inspections had been made. Some overpayments did result. Some of these overpayments arose out of arithmetical errors and misunderstanding of the regulations. In other cases there were definite inconsistencies when the actual farm inspections were made.
> In conclusion, and to answer the hon. member's question, the government does not intend to forgive or writeoff these overpayments. Rather, we have already collected much of the amount owing and have been and are, judging each outstanding case on its own merits. Where, according to the regulations, recovery is justifiable we shall attempt to collect the full amount owing.

AGRICULTURE—TAXATION OF MARKETING QUOTAS—POSSIBLE REVISION IN LIGHT OF REPRESENTATIONS BY FARM GROUPS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, the capital gains tax provision respecting farm merketing quotas is bad legislation and this, I suggest, is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). There are two fundamental principles of these capital gains tax provisions: first, capital gains tax shall not be retroactive, that is, the cost of acquiring an asset before valuation day, January 1, 1972, is not material. Second, this tax applies only to capital assets. These are sound principles and should lead to little or no confusion but somehow, between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the whole area of farm marketing quotas has been turned into a hopelessly complex system of unfair and retroactive taxation.

The two ministers to whom I have referred have agreed between themselves that these quotas are the same as goodwill and should be taxed accordingly. This must mystify thousands of farmers who have purchased these quotas at auction sales, for example, just as they might purchase a piece of machinery; the purchaser was buying a capital asset worth, in the case of many milk quotas, tens of thousands of dollars. The purchaser would be astonished to hear from these ministers that he was purchasing goodwill. Similarly, when a broiler producer purchases a barn with a broiler quota, will the Minister of Agriculture tell him he is not buying a capital asset?

Third, the marketing quota tax is retroactive, as I have said, and this is not hard to demonstrate. In January, 1971, group one pool milk quotas in Ontario sold for an average of $25.05 per pound. Let us assume farmer A purchased a 1,000-pound quota which cost him about $25,000. The same day his next door neighbour turned his farm over to his son and gifted to the son the same sized quota. Under the budget provisions, neither farmer can have a valuation day value for their quotas. Farmer A gains a hollow victory because he can on disposal, ten years hence, for example, deduct his original cost. But even he can place no valuation day value on this asset. The neighbour's son, according to this legislation, has incurred no cost and is taxed on the full amount of disposal proceeds, subject of course to the usual provisions affecting all gains and to the transitory provisions respecting goodwill and similar assets.

The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance say this is fair because it cost the son nothing. Their attitude is absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker. I and thousands of other estate planners spent years transferring assets by way of gifts, including real estate, shares in companies and other assets. Let us assume that on the same day the farmer's son received the $25,000 milk quota, his cousin in the city received from his father $25,000 in shares in the family business. The cousin in not subject to capital gains tax on the whole proceeds of disposal because he can deduct from such proceeds the value of those shares on valuation day. Will the Minister of Agriculture tell us the difference between a $25,000 milk quota and $25,000 in shares in an incorporated company? Of course he will not, Mr. Speaker, because insofar as capital gains tax is concerned there can be no difference if we are to be fair and equitable.

Since the first week of March I have been asking the minister to have the legislation changed. What has been his response? He says the legislation is good. I have pointed out to him that every farm organization concerned with the problem has been diametrically opposed to this inequitable, complex and retroactive taxation.

On March 6 I quoted the Canadian Federation of Agriculture's position. The minister replied that he had met with the federation and he said: "I am not of the opinion that they are that dissatisfied." Subsequently I received copies of briefs to the minister from farm organizations, and in light of the universal condemnation in these briefs of this taxation I asked the minister what steps he would take to correct the inequity. I quote his reply on March 20: "I am still of the same opinion as I was before".

Finally, I raised the matter on May 17 and pointed out the overwhelming criticism of this retroactive taxation. Again the minister said he disagreed that there had seen such strong criticism, and he went on to say that the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture had told him: "You are doing one hell of a good job, Mr. Minister". I do not know in what context the president of the federation made those remarks. He may have been speaking in general terms or, more likely, he may have been talking about the quantity of speeches that the minister has been delivering across the country. One aspect of farm life that the president was not referring to was the capital gains tax on farm marketing quotas, where he could have been accurately quoted as saying. "You are doing one hell of a bad job. Mr. Minister."

I say this without qualification or reservation, because exactly five days after the minister's reply in this House to my latest question there appeared in the May 22 edition of Farm and Country a feature story by the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The heading is: "Next target: no gains tax on quotas assigned before V-day". Let me quote briefly from this article:

> However, there are many major inequities that still have not been removed. Capital gains tax on marketing quotas acquired before January 1, 1972, is still retroactive and unjust . . .
> Obviously this must be corrected immediately.

Will the Minister of Agriculture again try to tell the House that the Ontario federation is anything but absolutely opposed to this legislation? This position is echoed by a multitude of farm organizations and marketing boards right across this country.

I referred earlier to the many speeches that the minister has been giving across Canada, and I hasten not to condemn him for this. But it surprises me that I have to remind the minister that he has an obligation not only to speak to farmers but to speak for farmers as well. If it had not been for the energy and determination of agricultural groups and the opposition parties in this House we would still have a capital gains tax on the transfer of family farms. I for one am going to do battle again on this unjust, complicated and retroactive taxation on marketing quotas; but it seems to me that if the Minister of Agriculture paused even briefly between his speeches to tell the Minister of Finance the truth about these positions, we would all save a lot of time and the farmers of Canada would receive no more than they deserve—fair and equitable capital gains tax legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): On May 17, 1973, the honourable member opposite referred to "overwhelming criticism" of the Capital Gains Tax provision respecting farm marketing quotas. The minister has and does reject as an exaggeration the statement that the Federation is overwhelmingly critical of this provision as it now stands.

However, much has been done to change other provisions contained in the February 17 budget which were of even greater concern.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself specifically to the Capital Gains Tax on marketing quotas. The quotas most commonly referred to in this connection are individual milk quotas. These quotas were made available to producers at no cost. Since the original allocation quotas have been bought and sold between producers with the result that quotas have now acquired a value. The tax would then be applied to the appreciated value. The real concern of the Federation, however, is that it is not possible to assign a valuation day value to such quota, and it is in this connection that this organization has expressed dissatisfaction.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will recall, I am sure, the procedural difficulties in which the House became involved yesterday when a charge was made by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate against the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries. The Chair intervened to suggest that the words used by the hon. member were unparliamentary. A discussion ensued as to whether the rule could apply where the charge relates to conduct or statements made outside the chamber. I appreciate that the distinction was proposed constructively with a view to being of assistance both to the hon. member and to the Chair.

On reflection, I find it difficult to agree with the proposition that so-called unparliamentary language would be irregular when it refers to the conduct or statements of members inside the House but that the same so-called unparliamentary language would be acceptable when relating to events outside the chamber. Hon. members, I am sure, will want to agree with the Chair when I suggest that unparliamentary language is just that, and requires the intervention of the Chair in accordance with the long established practice of this House. I will not burden the House with a long list of citations or precedents. I simply remind the House of Standing Order 35 which is to the effect that no member shall use offensive words against either House or against any member thereof. I refer also to Citation 155, paragraph 3, of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, as follows:

> No Member can be allowed . . . to tell a Member that he went about the country telling palpable lies.

This particular citation is referred to in connection with the suggestion that the hon. member's words might not be unparliamentary in that they had reference to statements made outside the House.

Having made these comments, I wish to assure the House that I do not want to dramatize the situation. I realize that members participate in debate in the House under considerable pressure and stress. I consider it to be the duty of the Chair to take this into account. It is easy and, indeed, sometimes natural for members to use words or expressions which, while they may honestly express one's feelings, may perhaps go beyond the limits of parliamentary propriety. Repeating a suggestion which I made yesterday, it seems to me that it should be possible for members to express strong views and to oppose other members vigorously without using offensive expressions which, by long-established practice and tradition and by the common consent of members, are not acceptable in debate.

These rules and practices are established by the members themselves. They can be changed when it is felt that they are no longer relevant to the times. Such changes are accomplished by the House itself following debate either in the House or in committee. If members feel that the rules relating to the use of so-called unparliamentary language should be altered or that we should change the much-disputed rule that no question should be asked of a minister during the question period in relation to statements he has made outside the House, then it is up to the members themselves to make these changes. In the meantime the rules are there for members to observe. There is no way, I suggest, that the Chair can enforce these rules without the full co-operation of members, and I do not mean only the majority of members but every single member of the House of Commons.

I have always felt deeply indebted to the members of this House who in similar difficult positions in the past have made it possible for this type of procedural difficulty to be cleared up without dramatic confrontations. I am hopeful that, with the continuing assistance and, indeed, with the guidance of the House, it might be possible to soothe hurt feelings and restore a feeling of harmony between aggrieved members and proceed happily to the business of the House.

I think it would be unfortunate if this whole matter were resolved in a climate of emotional tension. I am prepared to leave the matter in abeyance for today in the hope that sweet reason will prevail, while at the same time reserving the proprieties of debate which are essential to the reasonable and orderly conduct of parliamentary business. In other words, I am prepared to make a distinction between the two aspects of this matter.

The first deals with ministerial statements made outside the House and reference to such statements. I myself have had serious doubts about this rule, and I think the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the right hon. member for Prince Albert had a point when they said that this rule should be reviewed. The hon. member for Peace River suggested yesterday that perhaps this is a question that might be referred to the committee.

Then there is the second aspect, which is perhaps not as important as the matter of substance, that is, the use of unparliamentary language. As I have said, it is important that no decisions should be made in the House by the Chair, by individual members or by the House in general on an emotional basis. I think that yesterday, and perhaps even today, we are still under considerable stress in relation to this very serious and contentious issue.

Tabling of Reports

The Chair is quite prepared to leave this matter in abeyance for the time being in the hope, as I have said, that by referring the matter of substance to the committee on procedure we might in due course resolve the other matter, which I really do not think should be made a tragedy. That is my view, and I feel very confident that all hon. members will want to co-operate with the Chair in this respect so we can get on with the business of the House, which I understand is very important business today, rather than spending the day on whether a word is parliamentary or unparliamentary.

I insist on my feeling that certain words have to be judged by the Chair and that it is the duty of the Chair to take action. I suggest it is the duty of individual members to co-operate with the Chair in ensuring that we can proceed on a reasonable basis, observing the proprieties of this chamber. I seek the co-operation of all hon. members, and I am confident that they will extend that co-operation to me as they have in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—DECISION TO WITHDRAW CANADIAN ELEMENT FROM INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, speaking in the House of Commons on March 27 I said that the government had decided to extend Canadian participation in the International Commission of Control and Supervision until May 31 and that before that date the government would decide whether to remain or to withdraw.

At that time I said, as will be found on page 2630 of Hansard, that we would withdraw our contingent by June 30 unless there had been a substantial improvement in the situation or some signs of an imminent political agreement between the two South Vietnamese parties.

The decision is a serious one and the government so regards it. Canada has a reputation, I believe, for responsibility in international affairs. We have served in more peacekeeping and peace observer roles than any other country and we remain ready to serve wherever we can be effective. We have also in the course of this varied and extensive experience, including 19 years in Indo-China, learned something about the conditions that are necessary to success in peacekeeping and peace observer activities.

The House will recall the efforts that the government made to establish conditions which would help to improve the prospects for the successful functioning of the International Commission of Control and Supervision provided for in the Paris Agreement on Viet Nam. I shall not repeat them now. The record of Canada's approach to the question of participation in the ICCS up to the end of March, 1973, is to be found in a White Paper that I shall table at the conclusion of this statement.

Stated briefly, what we sought to ensure was that the new International Commission would be an impartial, fact-finding body, supported by the parties to the peace agreement, with sufficient freedom of access to enable it to ascertain the facts about any alleged breach of the agreement and reporting quickly not only to the parties to the agreement but also to the international community as a whole. While we did not achieve all our purposes, I think it is fair to say that we helped to effect some improvements, at least in form.

What we could not ensure, and what the ICCS could not ensure, was peace in Viet Nam. That depends on the parties to the peace agreement and not on the ICCS. Nor can Canada alone ensure that the ICCS fulfils its function of peace observing and reporting as provided for in the peace agreement. That too depends on the parties to the agreement and on the other member delegations of the commission.

Notwithstanding our hesitations and doubts we accepted membership for a trial period of 60 days. At the end of that first 60 days our hesitations and doubts had been reinforced but we were urged by many countries to show patience. So we agreed to another two-month period which is not coming to an end.

By and large there has been no significant change in the situation that would alter the view we formed at the end of the first 60 days, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the Canadian contingent to support the functioning of the international commission.

Let me repeat that our attitude results from Canadian experience in the old ICSC and the Canadian concept of the functioning of a peace observer body. We are not criticizing the peace agreement. We welcomed that agreement; we regard it as a good agreement that provides as sound and honourable a basis for peace as was negotiable. If the parties will set themselves to applying it, as we hope they may yet do, it can bring lasting peace to Viet Nam. We hope that the efforts of Dr. Kissinger and Mr. Le Duc Tho to achieve a stricter observance of the agreement will be crowned with success.

We have come to the conclusion, however, that the Canadian concept of the functioning of the International Commission has not been accepted and that it would be in the interest of all concerned if we were now to withdraw. Nor do we believe that Canadian withdrawal would have any significant effect upon the prospects for peace in Viet Nam. That depends upon the parties to the peace agreement and not upon the ICCS. It is only if the parties are co-operating in a strict observance of the agreement and are willing to use the ICCS as a means of reinforcing the agreement that the commission can perform its function with any hope of success.

Throughout our tenure on the ICCS we have sought above all else to be objective. We have represented none of the contending parties. We have been as insistent in calling for and participating in investigations of alleged violations by the United States and the Republic of Viet Nam as we have with regard to alleged violations by the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam and the other South Vietnamese party. If the RVN or the United States has been at fault we have said so. If the other parties were to blame for cease-fire violations we also have said so. I assure the House that we have no need to listen mutely now or later to any charges that we have acted partially; we can be proud of our objectivity in the commission and of our attempts to see this impartiality as an integral part of commission activities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I also said in my statement to the House on March 27 that Canada would be prepared to return to Viet Nam to participate in the international supervision of an election clearly held under the terms of the Paris Agreement and therefore with the concurrence and participation of the two South Vietnamese parties. It went without saying that our participation would not be necessary if a replacement were found for Canada on the ICCS. I am not convinced that there is much chance that an election will take place as provided for in the agreement, but if it should, and we would want to examine it carefully to make sure it was this kind of election, and if no replacement had been found for Canada, we would consider sympathetically a request to return temporarily to the ICCS for this purpose, in the light of the circumstances then prevailing and our assessment of the chances for effective supervision.

The Peace Agreement itself anticipates the replacement of the named members of the ICCS—Canada, Hungary, Indonesia and Poland, or any of them. I have also said that we would be prepared to remain on the commission until June 30 so that a replacement could be found. We have since learned that the discussions which took place recently between Dr. Kissinger and Mr. Le Duc Tho will be resumed in June. We want to give those discussions every chance of success and we would certainly wish to do nothing that would complicate them by introducing what might seem to be too short a deadline for agreeing on a replacement for Canada on the commission.

In recognition of that possible difficulty, we are prepared if the parties to the agreement so wish, to stay for a period beyond June 30 but not later than July 31. Canada's decision to withdraw is firm and definite, but the additional flexibility should give the parties adequate time to find a replacement for the Canadian delegation. Should a successor be named and be ready to take its place before July 31, we would be prepared to hand over our responsibilities at any mutually convenient earlier time. We shall, of course, continue to function as we have been doing during the remaining period of our stay on the commission.

In conclusion, I should like to pay tribute to Ambassador Gauvin, Major-General MacAlpine and all the members of the Canadian delegation now in Viet Nam and to their predecessors going back to 1954.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Notwithstanding great frustration and serious risks they have carried high the flag of Canada; for some it has cost them their lives. Those who now will be returning to Canada can have the satisfaction of knowing that they did all in their power to help in bringing peace to the war-weary people of Viet Nam. It was our delegation that carried the main burden of organizing the work of the commission and whatever success the commission has had can, in a large measure, be attributed to their professional competence, dedication and energy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as mentioned in my preceding remarks, I wish to table in both official languages a White Paper entitled "Viet Nam—Canada's Approach to Participation in the International Commission of Control and Supervision."

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, the very respect of peace as a value, and the very reputation of our country within an international peace force today demand that we regretfully withdraw from Viet Nam, that we cease to be accomplices in an illusory peace, that we do not forfeit our credibility as an autonomous country.

Notwithstanding this choice, and this must be specified, we are not unconcerned about the fate awaiting the population of Viet Nam in general and more particularly civilians, a great number of whom, it would appear, are in prison for alleged political reason. Nor does this choice make us indifferent toward the task of socio-economic reconstruction of Viet Nam.

Quite on the contrary, we express our deep regret of the obligation to withdraw, and we do hope that this withdrawal will enable us to appeal freely once more within the framework of the United Nations in order that in all justice a lasting and healing peace may at last come about for all the people of Viet Nam.

[English]

I say to the minister, and I say so with sincerity, that as a nation we should not be discouraged by this episode, either in terms of pursuing peace in Indo-China or of discharging our responsibilities as a member of the world community.

The minister's statement on our withdrawal should be seen by Canadians as something more than an end to a valiant international effort. It should be seen as a beginning of a very real determination to pursue peace in Indo-China through other means.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: There may be those nations that will say that Canada quit when the going was rough. I say to those nations, as I am sure every member of this House would say, that to make this suggestion is to deny the fundamental spirit and international sense of responsibility that have become our nation's tradition in foreign policy. I know that that tradition will be enriched by this experience rather than discouraged by our withdrawal.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to subscribe to the sentiments expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) concerning our valiant peace ambassadors who are entitled to hold their heads high when they come home, having well deserved of their fellow-citizens.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party agree with the substance of the decision announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). We agree with the proposal that the Canadian contribution to the International Commission of Control and Supervision be withdrawn.

● (1430)

We regret that the making of this decision was not left to parliament. There are, of course, in the realm of international affairs many things that have to be left to the executive, but major decisions as to war or peace or decisions as to important Canadian international commitments and their withdrawal should, in our opinion, be made by parliament itself.

With respect to the actual decision to withdraw, my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), stated our view in the debate on March 27. The position of the New Democratic Party stated by the hon. member for Selkirk was that Canada should give the 90 days notice provided for in the agreement and make it clear that Canada would be leaving on June 30, 1973, at the end of the 90 days whether or not a replacement was found. The government has now, in effect, decided to accept this policy, and we will naturally support the government's decision.

This party approved originally of the acceptance of an observer role in Viet Nam in the ICCS by Canada. We believed then and we still believe that there was no honourable alternative. Canada had for a long time maintained a position as a member of the international community ready, willing and qualified to seek, through the provision of peace-keeping forces and observer teams, to maintain peace. But while we approved of Canada's participation we made it clear that we did so on the basis of the conditions formally set out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and we added that we would urge that Canada should make clear its intention to withdraw, unilaterally and promptly, if the parties did not accept the cease-fire or if they indicated by their actions or by their words that they were not accepting the provisions of the agreement.

We do not regret the decision we made to support the original contribution. Indeed, the presence of Canada in the ICCS may have contributed to some of the constructive things that have happened, namely, the withdrawal of American troops from Viet Nam and the exchange of military prisoners.

But the question remains whether the conditions for Canada's continued participation in the ICCS and our acceptance of a role there have been fulfilled. The answer is clearly no. There has been and there is no cease-fire to observe. Violations have continued on both sides. Indeed, the head of Canada's truce observers, Ambassador Gauvin, stated in the last day or so that fighting was continuing and even was intensified since the truce.

Precisely the same report was brought back from Viet Nam by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the hon. member for Selkirk in March. There has been no sign of real improvement since. The commission cannot, therefore, fulfil its function.

Canada, as we have stated from the beginning, does not want a repetition of the exercise in futility which characterized the International Control Commission under the Geneva Agreement. The various parties to the present agreement have in fact disregarded its terms, and they are not in a strong position to ask that Canada undertake grave risks to maintain a non-existent peace and a constantly violated agreement.

Both the United States of America and the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam have continued military activities in Cambodia and Laos, contrary to Article 20(b) of the Paris Peace Agreement. We read every day of the violation of this part of the agreement by both sides. The Americans continue the aerial bombardment of Cambodia and Laos, adding to the devastation, death and flood of refugees in those unhappy countries. If it be said that to call attention to this fact is in some way anti-American bias, let me remind the House that both the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States have cut off funds for this operation.

Lastly, the spirit, if not the letter, of the agreement which called for national reconciliation between the two administrations in Viet Nam and for the maintenance of civil rights and of freedom of speech, and for holding of elections, has been nullified by the detention of many thousands of civilian political prisoners subject to gross mistreatment.

It has been clear from the beginning that the observer role of the ICCS would not put the ICCS in the position to enforce a peace the parties themselves were unwilling to accept. I think Canada has made an honest effort to make its contribution to the working out of the agreement. I think it has a perfect right now to say that it has discharged its international obligation in this respect.

There is another international obligation which we share with the world community, and in my view it is not in any way discharged or lessened by withdrawal from the ICCS. I refer to the responsibility for humanitarian intervention in respect of civilian prisoners held in jails and camps in South Viet Nam. While there have been denials, a number of completely reliable sources such as the World Council of Churches, Amnesty International and many other reputable witnesses, including some who spoke to members of this House in the last few days, have given detailed statements in support of these allegations.

Imprisonment has been accompanied by torture, by detention after the service of sentence, by detention without trial. The people so held include those best qualified in the country to make a reality out of the process of national reconciliation called for by the Paris Peace Agreement.

Canada, of course, cannot deal with this problem alone, but it can do all in its power to arouse world public opinion. General Thieu and his regime rely entirely on American supplies of ammunition and weapons. The American government contributes a good part of the budget of his regime. That regime could not function without massive American aid.

It is our position that the Canadian government should make an urgent appeal to the American government and the American people to see that the Thieu government is responsive on this humanitarian issue to world opinion. This is not intervention in the internal affairs of South Viet Nam. It is in accordance with the well established tradition of international law of the right to intervene where fundamental human rights are denied on a substantial scale.

I have just two more sentences, Mr. Speaker. I would like to conclude my remarks by saying—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Thank you. I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that peacekeeping—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, some people may not understand the importance of these matters, but I think most members of the House do understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Peacekeeping and the use of observer teams have not been discredited by what has happened. Indeed, the Canadians in particular on the ICCS have conducted themselves according to the highest traditions. Peacekeeping and observer teams remain, as they have been in the past and will be in the future, an important instrument in the making of peace.

To say that, after the 25 years of war in Viet Nam and the bitter hostilities there, the present truce is not working and cannot work without a change of attitude on the part of the adversaries is not to devalue peacekeeping and the Canadian policy of being willing to participate and contribute in such efforts to build the world community.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, when Canada was asked by the countries involved in the Viet Nam war to participate in the International Commission of Control and Supervision of the cease-fire, we agreed because we feel that Canada cannot refuse to help maintain peace in the world.

As long as the parties to this conflict showed some goodwill and there was still some hope that the fighting would stop, we supported the efforts of the Canadian delegation within the Commission. However, we must admit that the cease-fire is only a myth. Fighting has started again and it is a miracle that there have not been more prople killed within the Commission, which had to carry out its mandate under the fire of machine guns and bombs.

The infiltration of communist battalions from North Viet Nam, American bombings in Cambodia are all hostile acts which show that the parties involved are not willing to stop fighting.

Therefore, we find it logical to withdraw the Canadian delegation from the ICCS in the hope that such action will give cause for reflection to the countries involved in this costly war.

However, let us be ready to serve and to maintain peace whenever we are asked and our co-operation is really useful.

If there is a real cease-fire in Viet Nam and the countries involved in this conflict put an end to their warlike acts, we will be in a position to return to Viet Nam in order to help establish a lasting peace.

But we believe that this government is wise to withdraw our delegation from Viet Nam before more Canadian soldiers are victims of this continuing war.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should also like, on behalf of my party and my colleagues in the House, to give my respects to our ambassador, Mr. Gauvin, as well as to our brave soldiers who showed so much courage and fair-mindedness.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF FURTHER MOTIONS RELATING TO INCOME TAX

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise to table two notices of ways and means motions relating to income taxes pursuant to Standing Order 60(1). In part they supersede notices tabled at the time of my February budget and in part they reintroduce proposals which I made to this House in my budget of May, 1972.

Members will recall that last March I proposed that this House deal first with outstanding tax measures affecting 1972 and then with those measures which take effect in 1973 or later years. Just before the Easter recess, all of the tax changes affecting income tax, excise tax and customs duties for 1972 were enacted into law.

Today, I am tabling notices of ways and means motions which deal with income tax measures that take effect in 1973 or later. Members will recall that in my February budget I proposed an increase in personal exemptions for individuals from $1,500 to $1,600 and for married couples from $2,850 to $3,000. I also proposed a reduction in federal basic tax of 5 per cent of tax otherwise payable subject to a maximum of $500 and, most importantly, a minimum of $100. These measures are to take effect on January 1, 1973. It is also proposed to index the personal income tax, starting January 1, 1974, in order to eliminate, once and for all, the automatic tax increase which arises as a result of the interaction of inflation and the progressive rate schedule.

Some hon. Members: Author!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In addition, there are a number of measures of a technical nature arising out of tax reform.

The ways and means motions also call for new measures to strengthen the international competitive position of our manufacturing and processing industries in order to protect existing jobs and create new ones in this vital sector of our economy and in all those industries serving it. As described in my budget of last May, the government is proposing that the rate of corporate tax to be applied to manufacturing and processing profits be reduced to 40 per cent. In the case of manufacturing and processing income which is eligible for the small business deduction, the rate would be reduced from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.

In my budget speech of February, 1973, I advised the House that the government intended to establish a new procedure to monitor the effect of these measures in strengthening our manufacturing and processing industries. This review procedure would assess the effect of not just the reduction in the rate of corporate tax but also the proposed two-year write-off for manufacturing and processing equipment. At that time I indicated that a report would be submitted to the House before the end of 1974.

The report would be based on detailed information gathered from more than 1,000 individual companies and from an in-depth study of some 200 of the largest corporations.

The report would seek to determine the effectiveness of these new manufacturing incentives in achieving their intended purposes.

Finally, I indicated that in order to better evaluate not just the new fast write-off but all aspects of the present capital cost allowance regime, I proposed to initiate a thorough examination of the entire capital cost allowance system, to be completed by the end of 1974.

I am firmly convinced that these manufacturing incentives are vital to our national interest, for reasons I have indicated on numerous previous occasions. However, I have been carefully following the public debate on this matter and I am anxious to do everything reasonably possible to meet the legitimate concerns that have been expressed about various aspects of these proposals without impairing their effectiveness in achieving our objectives. Hence, I wish to announce that it is my intention to put before this House by April 1 of next year an interim report based on the review and monitoring procedure which I described earlier. This will give members an early opportunity to begin to assess the results of these measures on the basis of facts and figures. Members will also have an opportunity to make constructive suggestions before the final report is submitted by the end of 1974.

In this context, the government will include in the legislation a provision whereby parliament will have a fresh opportunity to consider the incentive measures. Upon the request of 60 members of this House, and after the measures have been in force for a reasonable period of time, namely, after April 1, 1974, the government will take the steps necessary to provide an early occasion for this House to re-examine these tax incentives and, if the House so decided, the measures would be withdrawn thereafter in whole or in part.

Finally, in order that the discussion of the manufacturing incentives may be both meaningful and comprehensive, I am also tabling today a draft of the proposed capital cost allowance regulations. These provide for the two-year fast write-off of manufacturing and processing equipment acquired between May 8, 1972, and December 31, 1974. Under authority provided by parliament, capital cost allowances are a matter of regulation. However, during the course of the debate on the bill, members will be free to discuss the incentive proposals as a total program.

With the permission of the House, I would ask that the notices of ways and means motions and the draft capital cost allowance regulations which I have tabled today be printed in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling on the hon. Leader of the Opposition I would inquire whether it is agreed that the documents referred to by the hon. minister will be printed as requested.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Put them in the museum.

[Editor's Note: For text of ways and means motions and draft of proposed capital cost allowance regulations, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed the culmination of an exhibition of courage and determination that the minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —has followed without swerving since May 8, 1972. He has brought in some sort of measures relating to corporate tax cuts, measures which he announced on May 8, 1972, as being of the very greatest importance to the country, but they were not sufficiently urgent to be introduced before the House was dissolved and an election called. Following the election I stated my assumption that, because the minister had mentioned these measures in his budget of May 8, Canadian businessmen had probably acted on these proposals and consequently they ought to be implemented for the time being at least. However, the minister took no action on these or any other tax measures. On March 21 of this year I elaborated my position in order to try to break the log jam.

• (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: At that time the minister did not even have the courage to move on personal income tax measures for 1972.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I stated on March 21 that we had no difficulty with the proposal for fast write-offs for 1973 and 1974. I gave reasons why we took objection to the proposed cut in the corporate tax rate in respect of manufacturing and processing profits and why we could not agree to accept this as a permanent part of our tax structure. I said we would support these measures for the year 1973. I have examined the minister's proposals as of today and I find that he has accepted my position—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —of implementing these measures for the time being at least. The minister is not terminating the proposals as of December 31, 1973, but is asking parliament to commit itself definitely for a further period of three months. Ordinarily an opposition party or groups of opposition members in the House could not initiate the termination or readjustment of any tax measure in 1974 because, among other things, of the requirement of a Governor General's recommendation. Under the minister's proposal, whether the tax cut he now proposes will remain in operation after April 1, 1974, will depend upon the will of the House at that time without the requirement of a Governor General's recommendation. It is evident that in these proposals the minister is not asking us to adopt as a permanent part of our tax structure a cut in corporate taxes which, of course, is what I object to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to take too long because we will have a lot of time to discuss these matters.

An hon. Members: Four years.

Mr. Stanfield: As I say, the minister has not precisely accepted my proposal. He is asking for three months more than I proposed. The minister is asking us to accept the arrangement he has put forward for a review of the tax cuts after April 1, 1974, rather than accepting a definite termination as of December 31, 1973.

We will certainly want to examine very carefully the mechanism of the review process that the minister is proposing. We will want to know, for example, whether it can be counted on to work, whether we can rely on it or whether we will have to dismiss it as something that the minister has put forward as some kind of ploy. I want to emphasize that I approach this matter on the basis that I have absolutely no confidence in the gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: They say one thing one day and do exactly the opposite a few months later. For example, included in the minister's recommendations is a proposal to index incomes for the purpose of the calculation of income tax. A year ago the minister ridiculed this proposal which he is now bringing into the House with such pride. This is why I say I have absolutely no confidence in these gentlemen. It is in this light that we will want to examine very carefully the recommendation with regard to proposed tax cuts that the minister has put before the House today. The minister is proposing implementation for the time being. I could use words such as—

Mr. Nielsen: Totally unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —totally unacceptable. I could say that the minister is backing down and that this represents a complete surrender.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Or should we just content ourselves by saying that the minister has adjusted his position?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister wants a commitment for an additional three months. I remind Your Honour that even a cat is entitled to three months. Since the minister has moved so far, my colleagues will want to examine carefully the mechanism the minister is proposing to accomplish his purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), whose statement I had read earlier, and to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). At the end of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, I was not quite certain what his position may be. I understand that he is going to examine carefully the review mechanism and something else, but I am not quite certain what his position may be.

The Leader of the Opposition has complained for some time that the government's lack of action with regard to the May, 1972, budget has caused uncertainty in the business world. I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that his shifting back and forth for some months has added to that uncertainty in the business world.

● (1500)

Mr. Baldwin: How did you vote?

Mr. Lewis: But if there is any uncertainty in your mind, Mr. Speaker, about the position of the Conservative Party in this House, there will be none about the position of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Everyone in this House, everyone in the media, everyone in the country knows that we supported the budget of February, 1973. We supported it because it provided among other things a progressive cut in the income tax for individual taxpayers. I might remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition voted against that budget which we supported. But I want to say to the Minister of Finance that his attempt to package the honey of February, 1973, with what we consider to be the poison of May, 1972, will be opposed by us if the bill contains corporate rip-off provisions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I suggest that in all honesty and decency the minister should provide the House with two separate bills so that those of us who consider the corporate rip-off unjustified and unnecessary will be able to vote against that aspect, and those of us who wish to support, as we do, individual income tax cuts will be able to vote for them. But if the minister is trying what I consider to be a trick in order to catch those who are opposed to the corporate tax concessions by adding the individual income tax cuts to the measure, he certainly has not learned that the members of my party are tough enough to oppose it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Tough enough to oppose the bill, even if it contains individual income tax cuts, as long as it contains the corporate rip-off of May, 1972.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I am not surprised at the noise that certain gentlemen in the House are now making. They have been caught by a smart ruse on the part of the Minister of Finance. The Conservatives did exactly what we knew they would do. We knew that, come the crunch, they would get together with the Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —to support the tax cuts for corporations.

Mr. Muir: Bring Woodsworth back!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously a very healthy House. However, hon. members should allow the hon. member for York South to pursue his statement.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, some have suggested that I was in bed with the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might continue his remarks.

Mr. Lewis: When that was suggested, I pointed out that neither of us is a consenting adult. But I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition is a consenting adult enjoying the bed now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: As far as I am concerned, there is no need for a study of the effect of fast write-offs. We have had years of experience. They have not produced employment in the past and they will not do so in the future. They have only deferred taxes for corporations, mainly large and mainly foreign owned. This is a colossal rip-off at the expense of the ordinary taxpayers of Canada. There must be a halt to this rip-off, and we do not intend to support it no matter how it is packaged before the House.

It is a fact that the manufacturing industries of this country now have in their coffers over $2 billion by way of deferred taxes. Yet the minister wishes to add to this amount. This is unjust and unfair to the ordinary taxpayers. As far as I am concerned, we do not need any study of the effect of the cut in the tax rate on corporations. Corporation profits, without extra concessions from this parliament, have increased rapidly. They went up by 20 per cent in 1972 compared with 1971; they went up by 16 per cent in 1971 compared with 1970; they increased by 35 per cent in the first quarter of 1973 compared with the first quarter of 1972. The profits of the corporations in this country are already too high and we have no right to increase them by making further tax concessions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: On May 8, 1972, when the Minister of Finance presented his budget, he informed the House that the cost of these concessions to the federal treasury would be about $500 million. Let me take a few moments to indicate what that means. I hope Your Honour is not becoming impatient because there has been a great deal of interruption and I should like the time in which to finish my remarks. They will not take too long. I want to indicate to the House what the figure means. That amount of $500 million is $100 million more than the total cost of the increase in pensions and the adjustment for the cost of living in the guaranteed income supplement. Instead of $500 million for the corporations the government could have used the money to increase pensions by a further $20 a month and still have money left over. We could have used that money to increase the individual income tax cut by at least 50 per cent so there would be a minimum of $150 instead of $100. We could have used it to reduce freight rates for the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces of Canada in order to stimulate the economies of those regions. We do not need any studies. The proposals of May, 1972, for concessions to corporations are unjustified economically and immoral socially. We do not need any studies to prove what has already been proven over the years.

Finally, a word about the monitoring agency which was mentioned and which I assume will be inside the Department of Finance. I have no confidence in the people in the Department of Finance monitoring a policy which they themselves have promoted and supported for years. They will no more come up with any real, valuable results from their study than anyone responsible for policy is likely to be objective about it.

● (1510)

I think it is wrong for the minister to package the 1972 and 1973 budget income tax proposals in one bill. If he is going to be fair and honest about it, I believe he should have two bills. But whether there are two bills or only one, the New Democratic Party will support nothing that involves further corporate concessions.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, we hear the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) accuse the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of going to bed with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) and on the other hand, we have just heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party say that the Prime Minister is sleeping with the Leader of the Official Opposition. We must conclude then that the Prime Minister has become a bigamist.

You may be assured, Mr. Speaker, that as far as we are concerned, we have not slept with the Prime Minister.

However, I have closely listened to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) where he seems to be deliberately confusing, referring to personal income tax exemptions that will be raised from $1500 to $1600 for single persons and from $2850 to $3000 for married couples, and going on to say that we should help the big corporations and grant them tax reductions up to 40 per cent in order to enable them to stimulate the Canadian economy.

[English]

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says this is a complete surrender by the minister.

[Translation]

Then, the Leader of the New Democratic Party said:

[English]

There is no confusion at all; we are going to vote against those corporate welfare bums again.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for example I would like to hear the minister talk about abolishing the sales tax on building materials which would have resulted in the creation of jobs in Canada.

I would have also liked to hear him say that not only professionals but miners and workers could deduct from their income tax the cost of the tools they need to work.

We overlook those aspects. When we deal with them we do so very parsimoniously. On the other hand, in order to help corporations become more competitive on international markets the government says: we are going to have a trial shot for a while and if 60 members express the wish to have the whole question discussed again in the House it will be brought back before the House so it can be decided.

Mr. Speaker, I have no compromise with any corporation in Canada. When we hear the Leader of the Opposition say that the government gives in to his wishes I say quite honestly that the two parties can hardly be separated from one another because their election campaigns are both financed by big corporations. If we are against socialism and for private enterprise it is not to get election funds but to allow this country to develop and be competitive across the world.

When I hear the leader of the New Democratic Party say: we are going to vote against corporate bums, I cannot help recall that the new NDP premier of B.C. is grovelling before European financiers to borrow funds to develop his province. I wonder if he goes to bed with European financiers.

Mr. Speaker, we must put an end to this hypocrisy of saying things here and doing the opposite elsewhere. The same thing goes for Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, as we advocate in our basic policy, the first role of a government is to stimulate personal initiative and not to crush it. When I hear these people say: power to the people! The power is in the hands of the people, in Russia and in Czechoslovakia, and look at the kind of power they have!

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this measure which encourages personal initiative and private enterprise, even though it is incomplete as far as individuals and workers are concerned, will contribute to the creation of jobs in Canada. It will help the country to be a better competitor on the international market. However, I would like the hon. Minister of Finance and the government to think of helping Canadian workers, especially the low income group in the area of income tax.

For example, not long ago when we moved a motion to grant old age security pensions at 60, how come the New Democratic Party voted against it?

How come the Progressive Conservatives also voted against it? And the Liberals who shout "It is true" voted against it too.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the independent member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) voted with us.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say as a measure of precaution that the motion of the government could be discussed anew within a year and a half, twenty months. So, let us make the experiment, let us see what happens: if there is no result, we will say so. If nothing comes out of this, we might possibly convince the New Democratic Party leader (Mr. Lewis) to back private enterprise.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DESIGNATION OF WEDNESDAY, MAY 30, AS OPPOSITION DAY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the House that, following consultations, we have agreed to have an opposition day tomorrow.

PROPOSED OIL TANKER ROUTE ALONG EAST COAST OF NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. On May 15 of last year the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) sought and obtained the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion relating to the proposal to move oil by tanker down the coast of British Columbia from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point in the state of Washington.

I rise today also to seek the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 on a related matter, namely, the proposed movement of oil by tanker along Canada's east coast through channels less than 250 feet wide to a new refinery at Eastport, Maine. I should like, therefore, to move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House herewith declares that the movement of oil by tanker along the east coast of New Brunswick to the proposed refinery at Eastport in Maine is inimical to Canadian interests, especially those of an environmental nature;

And further, that this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the government of the United States of America in order that that government be apprised of the concern that the House of Commons of Canada has about the proposed movement of oil.

I might again stress, Mr. Speaker, that a motion almost identical to this one received the unanimous consent of the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has proposed his motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: How can you say no to that?

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

An hon. Member: You blew it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PETITION FOR PROVISION OF KILTS FOR HIGHLAND MILITIA UNITS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave, under Standing Order 67, to present a petition for the retention of Highland uniforms at government expense for Highland units in the Canadian militia.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The petition has been received from the St. Andrew's and Caledonian Society of Victoria, the Regimental Association of the Cameron Highlanders of Ottawa and the Saltire Society of Victoria. There are some 4,000 signatures on the petition.

An hon. Member: Did you sign the petition, Allan?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. Leader of the Opposition, perhaps the Chair might be permitted to recognize the hon. member for Wellington on a point of order.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with a letter the Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed to table following your ruling yesterday that it should be tabled. To the best of my knowledge it has not been tabled yet.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to table the letter today but apparently the rules require that it be translated, so it will be tabled tomorrow.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I find I must do so as I do not think there is any excuse for not having a two-page letter translated into both official languages between three o'clock yesterday afternoon and now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hales: There is no excuse whatsoever for this. I must say that it is two weeks today since this tragedy occurred in Rhodesia and I must now demand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs complete a comprehensive and factual report on this whole situation as I am advised—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member was rising on the original point of order relating to the possible tabling of the letter. The ruling of the Chair yesterday was that perhaps there might be discussion between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the hon. member but that if I were to rule only on the point of order, the document clearly having been quoted by the minister, it was the duty of the minister to table it. Perhaps it might be easier if the document were tabled in its original form, subject to the House officials looking after the translation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would have done this except I am advised that under an act of this parliament all documents must be tabled in both official languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: But not at the same time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF INCREASE IN CLAIMANTS IN FIRST THREE MONTHS OF 1973 AND DECREASE IN UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising from the fact that the number of unemployment insurance claimants was some 10 per cent higher during the first three months of 1973 than in the first three months of 1972, although Statistics Canada reported some 34,000 fewer people unemployed in the month of March. Has the minister prepared or had prepared any detailed explanation of the fact that the claimant rate and the unemployment rate seem to be moving in opposite directions during these three months and, if so, is he prepared to table that explanation in the House?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are several factors involved here: the length of time of benefit, the accelerated or speeded up treatment of claims which has condensed the pay-outs in the first quarter this year compared with last year, the maturity of the plan, the increase in sickness and maternity benefits and several other factors which explanation was placed before the standing committee recently and which will be in the transcript that will be available to this House very shortly.

Mr. Stanfield: I appreciate what the minister has said about maturity of claims, maternity claims and so on, but I should like to ask whether he is having any accurate study made of the total number of claimants and the fact that the number seem to have been going in a direction opposite to the unemployment rate as reported by Statistics Canada?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, these kinds of statistics are under constant examination.

REQUEST FOR PROJECTED EXPENDITURE FOR 1973

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the minister will give us some information on this. In light of the cost of the program being $150 million higher during the first quarter of 1973 than in 1972, and the total cost of some $2 billion during 1972, can the minister give us any revised estimate as to the projected expenditure under the plan during 1973?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this too would depend on very many factors: the rate of unemployment, the length of benefit pay-outs and several other factors which have been stated in this House many times. The actual pay-out will be made known and will be approved or otherwise in the main estimates for 1974 as provided for in the recent amendments contained in Bill C-124.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Trinity on a supplementary question and then the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION 2086 CONCERNING NUMBER RECEIVING BENEFITS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether he will be in a position to answer question 2086 tomorrow so that the House will know how many people were actually receiving benefits in January, February, March and April?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will see if that answer can be expedited.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF PROGRAMS IN OTHER THAN FRENCH AND ENGLISH ON STATION CKSB, ST. BONIFACE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State in charge of multicultural programs in the absence of the Secretary of State. I should like to ask whether he or the Secretary of State has had discussions with officials of the CBC about representations made to the minister in the past week in connection with the CBC limitation of programs in other than the English or French languages which have been carried on Station CKSB, St. Boniface, now taken over by the CBC, and which the CBC proposes to eliminate after a year's operation?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any personal meeting with the President of the CBC since last Friday, but since the Secretary of State is here now perhaps he might answer the other part of the question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the question to the Secretary of State who has just come into the House. Has he had any discussions with the president of the CBC in the past few days in connection with representations made to ministers of the Crown and other members concerning the proposed cutback by the CBC of programs in other than the French or English languages which have been carried by station CKSB in St. Boniface?

• (1530)

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, I have not had a discussion with the president of the CBC.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF LANGUAGE COMMISSIONER ON MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has learned of the representation made to the CBC by the language commissioner on this subject, and the subsequent rejection by the CBC of the suggestion made by the language commissioner, and whether he intends to take any steps to implement these suggestions which are in line with the government's program on multiculturalism?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had a chance to briefly review the letter, which I believe was from the deputy commissioner. I want to make sure we are talking about the same letter. However, I have not decided on what steps I will take beyond that.

ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING CONTINUATION OF MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Boniface on a supplementary question.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Secretary of State.

I would like to ask him if he can tell whether the manager of CKSB, Mr. Couture, has informed him that he had reached agreements with other radio stations of the Metropolitan Winnipeg area to provide the same service to all ethnic groups referred to, namely Jews, Ukrainians and others? Has that service already been offered to the groups concerned?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again I am not sure of the latest details, but in fact that type of negotiation has been going on and, as the House knows, the corporation itself has agreed to continue third language broadcasting over station CKSB for a period following the takeover of the station to allow for these negotiations to be completed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will have to try to move on. However, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a last supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

POSITION OF CORPORATION ON MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO BROADCASTING ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the CBC has insisted it cannot provide the broadcasting time for programming in languages other than English and French because of its interpretation of the Broadcasting Act but the CBC is in fact, on its stations at Yellowknife, Inuvik, Churchill and Frobisher Bay, now carrying broadcasts in various Indian and Eskimo dialects? If this is so, why is there this contradiction?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Well, Mr. Speaker, we have discussed this matter of third language broadcasting at some length in the committee. We are aware of what appears to be a contradiction, namely, that in the Northwest Territories there are third language broadcasts taking place. As the hon. member knows, CBC affiliates are allowed to broadcast third-language programs as of course are private stations. It seems to me if there is to be a change in this basic policy then it is something the House must direct itself to in terms of the Broadcasting Act itself.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell whether the government of Quebec has submitted a formal request for the transfer to the provinces concerned of the tax amounts paid to the federal government by Bell Canada?

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

ALLEGED INABILITY TO INVESTIGATE FARM COSTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ADEQUACY OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the fact that last Friday, in the absence of the minister, I believe the acting Prime Minister rejected the suggestion of the hon. member for Regina East that the Food Prices Review Board investigate farm input costs and, as a high priority, the escalating farm machinery costs, would the minister now tell the House whether it is the position of the government that it would be outside the terms of reference of the board to investigate these increasing farm production costs? If that is so, would the minister tell the House how the board will be able to decide what are justified food costs increases and what can be done without reviewing farm input costs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference of the board are a matter of public record; certainly as of yesterday. It is my own view that in looking into food price increases the terms of reference are broad enough to enable the board to examine any of the relevant factors, but the interpretation of the terms of reference in the final course of events I believe would be for the board itself.

RECRUITMENT OF STAFF—POSSIBLE USE OF EXISTING GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister related to the appointment of the chairman and members of the Food Prices Review Board. Is it the intention of the government to utilize the existing organization that was brought together for the Prices and Incomes Commission or does the government propose to establish an added bureaucracy for this board?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the organization to which the hon. member refers essentially went out of existence with the Prices and Incomes Commission. In order to make sure that the board is able to carry out its responsibility in an independant manner, as the food trends committee recommended, it is our view that the board should have its own staff.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he can assure the House that the staff necessary for the functioning of the Prices Review Board will be taken from existing government organizations and that a new bureaucracy will not be created?

Mr. Gray: No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot give the hon. member that assurance. I am not certain that this would be desirable. The decision in this regard in my view is something to be worked out between the review board and the government.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO INCREASED FARM PRODUCTION COSTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In light of the unanimous concern by farmers in all parts in Canada about rising machinery costs and in light of the 6.1 per cent increase in farm input cost in the first quarter of 1973, does the minister intend to undertake a separate and special investigation under the Inquiries Act into farm production costs, and if not, why is he reluctant to do so?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think all I can say is I will take the hon. member's suggestion under advisement.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPERTANKER PORTS ON ATLANTIC COAST—POSSIBLE PROTEST TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. Since an aide memoire of protest was forwarded to the government of the United States in respect of the proposed Alaska to Cherry Point route, will a similar memoire of protest be forwarded to cover the Eastport proposal.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): I hope so and very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF UNITED NATIONS AGENCY TO REGULATE ACTIVITIES ON HIGH SEAS OR SEA BED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that scientists believe that by the end of the 70's some 35 per cent of the world's oil requirements will be met from offshore production, while pressure mounts for increased control over deep-sea mining, transportation and fishing problems, is the government giving any thought to proposing the establishment at the United Nations of an international agency to regulate, supervise and control all activities on the high seas or under the sea bed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will consult with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to ascertain the final answer on that.

SUGGESTED RESOLUTION TO SUPPORT CANADA'S POSITION AT ICNAF CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the possible danger that a decision which was reached yesterday might be misinterpreted as lack of support for the ICNAF delegation which is meeting in Copenhagen on Sunday, would the Prime Minister be prepared to bring before the House a resolution of support for Canada's position at the ICNAF conference on June 3 at which time the conference hopes to bring back a better deal for the Canadian fishery. I am sure, Your Honour, all members of all parties would be willing to work toward such a resolution.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that a delegation of the Canadian government would have the authority to speak on behalf of the government and I am happy to see that the opposition joins itself with this position.

Mr. Lundrigan: Your Honour, my question had nothing to do with the support of the government. It is the support of the House of Commons. I am asking the right hon. gentleman whether the government will bring forward some form of resolution that can be unanimously accepted by the House giving the Canadian delegation led by the very competent Dr. Needler an assurance that the position they are to take requesting that Canada harvest as much marine resources as it is capable of harvesting will receive the support of the political and parliamentary system of Canada.

● (1540)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have delegations in various parts of the world speaking for the government and expressing its policies all the time. If the opposition wants to support the government in this, I think we would welcome it very much, and perhaps they could use their opposition day tomorrow to do this.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The hon. member has put two questions. If there is time, I will return to him in a short while. The Chair would like to recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West.

PROPOSED SUPERTANKER PORT IN ISLE VERTE REGION OF QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ECOLOGICAL STUDIES

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the minister's expressed justifiable concern over dangers to the Canadian environment in the building of a supertanker port at Eastport, Maine, and in view of the recent statement by the Quebec minister of natural resources that environmental studies with regard to the building of a superport at Isle Verte, Quebec have not begun, could the minister express to the House the concern of his ministry by indicating that the department has begun ecological studies surrounding the building of the superport in Isle Verte, Quebec?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have already completed an environmental impact assessment on the Lorneville project in New Brunswick, and a joint investigation regarding the Canso project is under way. We are happy to join with the provinces in these kinds of appraisals at any time.

PROPOSED SUPERTANKER PORT IN ISLE VERTE REGION—INQUIRY RESPECTING ALLEGED APPROVAL GIVEN QUEBEC BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I address it to the right hon. Prime Minister?

[Translation]

Could the Prime Minister inform the House of the answer to the question I put to the Acting Prime Minister last week, when I asked him what department or government branch had approved Quebec's participation in the supertanker port project at Gros Cacouna-Isle Verte, since the Quebec department of natural resources had admitted earlier this year that such approval had been received from the federal government?

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall be pleased to inquire about the answer to this question, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the hon. member put it while I was at the federal-provincial conference last week. I apologize for not having been informed of this question and I shall see to it that it is answered as soon as possible.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

LACK OF SUCCESS OF RECENT CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS—CESSION TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN TAX FIELDS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the qualified success of the recent federal-provincial conference as to the fair sharing of the taxation fields, and to put an end to the provincial premiers' periodic "marches" on Ottawa, could he advise the House whether he is seriously considering the possibility of declaring World War II officially terminated, thereby automatically surrendering to the provinces the taxation fields granted to the federal government in 1942, pursuant to section 23(1) of Bill C-16, which was given Royal Assent May 13, 1942.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without going into details, I should like to tell the hon. member that, if he carefully examines the documentation submitted to the conference as well as the positions taken respectively by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), he will realize that the government's position was in fact to surrender to the provinces the taxation means which they need to finance the two programs under discussion, namely health services and post-secondary education.

Therefore, should the hon. member examine the documentation, he will see that this is our position, and I am delighted that he should support the government on this issue.

AIR TRANSPORT

DISCONTINUANCE OF CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE—SUGGESTION MORE CONSIDERATION BE GIVEN PASSENGERS THAN AIRLINES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether or not the government is about to put an end to the system now in effect in respect of air passengers out of Toronto and Montreal not being able to secure their customs clearances before departure.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is part of the negotiations which are taking place now with the United States. As soon as the negotiations are completed, I will be happy to inform the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the minister consider that Canadians should be used as pawns in an endeavour on the part of the government of Canada to force action by the United States for what they require? Are Canadians not entitled to more consideration than that?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that Canadians deserve consideration. I believe the right hon. gentleman will agree with me that if we have a national airline here, which is important, we should protect it against unfair competition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister means to imply by that that he places corporation requirements ahead of human needs, surely he is not that hard toward the people of Canada, or is he?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I know the right hon. gentleman is very sensitive and probably would like to help the American airlines, but at this moment I think it is the Canadian airline which should be protected.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is nonsense.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE SECRET TESTS RELATED TO NEW RUNWAY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that a few weeks ago the Department of Transport almost exulted over the fact that tests had been taking place unknown to the public with respect to STOL aircraft and that these tests showed that in fact people were not complaining about the noise, may I have the minister's assurance that no similar tests are taking place at the Vancouver airport relating to the new proposed runway at that airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is something surprising there. Surely, the new runway cannot be used because it has not yet been built.

Mr. Fraser: The department might try even that.

Mr. Trudeau: And you will be the first passenger.

Mr. Fraser: My question to the Minister of Transport is quite simple. Are any tests being done now, the results of which will be brought forward later with the suggestion by the Department of Transport that they took these planes on exactly the same route as the new runway would require and nobody complained? I am sure the minister knows exactly what I am getting at.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Unfortunately, the problem now at the Vancouver airport is the problem of the new runway. I really do not know whether there are some Twin Otters which land on the runway at present, but I can inquire. I do not know of any regulations that would prevent Twin Otters from landing anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister assure the House that no secret runs are being made by aircraft to simulate the patterns that would be required if the new runway were built with a view to bringing out this fact later and saying to the people: You did not complain when we were carrying out these secret tests?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If it is so secret that nobody notices it, I do not think it is a successful experiment. However, I will inquire and make a report.

Mr. Baldwin: Ask Turner. He's the minister of simulation.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—ALLEGED RECOMMENDATION OF COUNCIL OF HEALTH TO LIMIT AVAILABILITY OF INSURED SERVICES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the federal government's failure to buy itself out of the responsibility of health care costs, is the minister aware of the recommendation being made by a committee appointed by the Council of Health which would limit the quality and availability of insured medical services?

● (1550)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a report in Ontario limiting the quantity of services. I am not sure it is the right conclusion to say it would limit the quality of such services. I will look into this particular report. I am aware of it only through press reports, and I want to make sure that such proposals would meet the four basic criteria for federal financing of health services.

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF ACUPUNCTURE IN INSURED SERVICES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he is going to include acupuncture in insured medical services?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think it is too early to give an answer to that particular question. I will give an answer later.

PENITENTIARIES

ALLEGATIONS BY ESCAPED CONVICT McCANN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General in the hope that I can provide him with an opportunity to provide an answer that will prevent the penitentiary service from falling into greater disrepute than it is in now. Is he aware of comments, reported to have appeared today in the Vancouver Sun, by escaped convict McCann, who escaped from the B.C. penitentiary, to the effect that he spent 25 months in the hole while there, that he waited for four months for a reclassification, and that while in the hole he was able to obtain illicit drugs? Is the minister investigating these allegations and will he say, with respect to the 25 months reportedly spent in the hole, whether they were largely the result of the request of McCann himself?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of these statements made by inmate McCann to certain newspapermen. I must say, according to the report I have had, that he spent 25 months in the hole because he offered a $1,000 bribe to the guards. We are now investigating the different statements he made to the press, and I will have a more complete report in a few days.

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY ON FUTURE DEVELOPMENT AND STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of the port of Churchill to the economy of western Canada, is the minister now prepared to table the study just recently completed for the port, as requested by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, actually I have received the report on the port of Churchill. There are many aspects with which I am not satisfied, and I have returned the report to the marine administration of my department for further details and comments.

Mr. Taylor: As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that the Chairman of the National Harbours Board does not yet know what work will be carried out at Churchill, is the minister prepared to advise the House as to what improvements and up-grading will take place at the port of Churchill for this season?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This decision will be made as soon as I have received the second report for which I have asked on the first one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of hon. members who wish to ask supplementaries. I will recognize the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary to the previous question.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEEP WATER PORTS

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada does not now have deep water ports that can handle ships presently being constructed by some of our grain customers, and in view of the recent statement made by the President of the United States when he called for an ambitious program to create new deep water ports in that country, can the Minister of Transport inform the House if any deep water ports are being planned by the government?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ESCAPED CONVICT MERCIER—INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TAKEN TO BRING ABOUT APPREHENSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that there will be a vote on second reading of the capital punishment bill this evening. I would like to put this question to the Solicitor General. Would he advise the House and the country whether Mercier, who escaped from St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary with three other inmates, has been caught? I know that the three others have been caught, but I ask the question because the last time Mercier escaped he was later found guilty of murdering two game wardens?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no report that he has been caught to this time.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that Mercier and probably some others with similar records are at large, has the Solicitor General, working in conjunction with the attorneys general of the various provinces, done anything or offered any assistance to the RCMP or others to bring about that kind of administration which would ensure these people will be caught and put back into custody?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Provincial Police, the Montreal City Police and other police forces in the Montreal area, together with the RCMP, have been doing everything possible since Mercier's escape to capture him.

ADVANCE BOOKING CHARTER REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT OF REGULATIONS AND AID TO STUDENTS UNABLE TO OBTAIN CHARTER SERVICE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the continuing confusion which surrounds air charter travel in Canada, and in particular the recent evidence that a number of Canadian students will be deprived of the opportunity of fulfilling their air charter travel as previously organized under the old affinity rules, can the minister advise the House if he is actively conferring with officials of the Canadian Transport Commission with a view to drawing up a set of workable regulations concerning air charter service in this country because there has been a failure of the ABC's, and in particular is any consideration being given to accommodating these Canadian students affected by the ABC's?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the House knows that the Air Transport Committee of the CTC was formed in order to protect the ABC's against outside influence. I think this committee must make its own decisions. However, I am ready to check into the case referred to by the hon. member and will try to help everybody.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister did state in the House that he would be prepared to examine these regulations personally after they were implemented for some time, and improve upon them or recommend improvements to the ABC's, will the minister now take that course of action and confer with officials of the CTC with a view to up-grading these regulations into a set of working rules?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in many cases I have drawn the attention of the CTC to certain effects and shortcomings of the regulations, and I hope everything will be taken care of.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST OF YVES GEOFFROY FOR NEW TRIAL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Justice.

As notary Geoffroy's lawyers asked the department for a second trial a few weeks ago and as perjury charges were directly related to his trial and laid before the court a few days ago, does the minister intend to wait for proof of perjury before ruling on the possibility of ordering a second trial in the Geoffroy case?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of carefully assembling the facts relating to the request for reconsideration. The events now unfolding in the courtroom will also be taken into consideration in dealing with this request and, as a result, I do not anticipate giving a definitive answer at the moment.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEMS CAUSED BY GREY SEALS IN CERTAIN AREAS OF ATLANTIC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries regarding a matter on which I have made representations to his department for some time. In view of the great difficulties caused by grey seals to fishermen in certain areas of Atlantic Canada, including the constituency of the government House leader, does the minister have under active consideration any measure to aid the fishermen at this time, and would he undertake to send some of his departmental officials to the area to seek some practical ways to solve some of the problems of the fishing industry there?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, each time I visit the area fishermen make representations about this problem which they encounter. The department has had a program in effect there for a number of years, and it is being reviewed.

ESCAPED CONVICT McCANN—POSSIBLE CHARGES AGAINST VANCOUVER "SUN" REPORTER

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General who mentioned investigating the statements made by the convict who escaped from the British Columbia penitentiary. Is the government considering investigating how a reporter for the Vancouver Sun could find this escaped criminal, and is the government contemplating any charges against the interviewer for not reporting where the convict was when he saw him?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the escaped inmate telephoned the reporter. It was not the other way around; the reporter did not contact the inmate. We will be looking into the question of whether the reporter could be charged with any type of offence.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the answer given by the Solicitor General to the member for Hamilton-Wentworth yesterday concerning the federal-provincial conference of attorneys general. Can the Solicitor General tell the House whether the Yukon and Northwest Territories are going to be represented at that conference, which I understand will be discussing penal reform, and if not, why not?

DISCONTINUANCE OF MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS BY CKSB, ST. BONIFACE—REQUEST MINISTER ASK WINNIPEG STATIONS TO UNDERTAKE SUCH PROGRAMS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and, in essence, is supplementary to earlier questions asked about the third language broadcasts by CKSB, St. Boniface. One of the recommendations associated with the reports on discontinuance of those broadcasts after one year was that the existing English language stations in Winnipeg could perhaps take up some of the slack which would result. I wondered if the minister would make active representations to English language broadcasting stations in Winnipeg himself in an effort to encourage them to undertake some third language broadcasting?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I have not, Mr. Speaker, but I am certainly prepared to do so. That was the point raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface. Frankly, my impression was, up to this point, that these negotiations were going very well but if it is felt by the hon. member and the hon. member for St. Boniface that my intervention would help I would be pleased to do so.

MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT DIRECTION—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO BROADCASTING ACT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The President of the CBC indicated recently that he is willing to use a third language in broadcasting, provided some direction comes from the government in keeping with this idea. Could the minister tell the House why no such direction has come from the government so that the CBC could proceed?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think we should be clear on this point. At the present time, the issue on language policy is abundantly clear. The fact is that the CBC interprets its mandate to broadcast in this country in English and French and CBC affiliates, as well, private stations, are allowed under regulations to broadcast in third languages. If we want changes, and the House of Commons can change this, let us address ourselves to the Broadcasting Act.

With regard to the many releases the minister has sent to us on safety standards for motor vehicles, can he tell us whether those standards are set as a result of studies and research conducted in Canada under Canadian conditions, or are they only set in accordance with American standards?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is part of the government's policy. Our contribution to external aid is increasing more rapidly than any other country in the world at the present time. We have been a very strong supporter of the United Nations, and I believe our action today underlines our real concern for peace in the world.

MOUNT HOPE—POSSIBLE MORATORIUM ON EXPANSION—LENGTH OF TIME FUNDS AVAILABLE

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that the Hamilton Academy of Medicine has asked the city of Hamilton to seek a moratorium on the expansion of Mount Hope airport for health reasons and in view of the fact that the council has no assurance that if they do seek a moratorium the funds will still be available for expansion, will the minister inform the Hamilton city council in writing how long the funds for expansion of this municipal airport will be available?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it might take rather a long time to give here all the details of what is known as the revolving fund of airports. In any case, we are now reviewing the whole situation at the Hamilton airport, and we will certainly be able to get in touch soon with the city council.

MOUNT HOPE—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH CIVIC OFFICIALS AND CITIZENS ON EXPANSION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, there has been a statement made by the Minister of Labour that he is seeking citizenship participation by holding a meeting in Hamilton to deal with this entire matter. Can the minister advise whether, in fact, the data has been sought? Has there been consultation with the officials of the city of Hamilton, as well as others, as to a suitable date and, if so, what is that date?

AUTOMOBILE SAFETY—RUPTURE OF GASOLINE TANKS ON VEHICLES INVOLVED IN ACCIDENTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Harry Kuntz (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that there is an ever-increasing number of deaths by fire when the gasoline tank ruptures on a motor vehicle involved in an accident, resulting in the surrounding area being sprayed with gasoline, will the minister tell this House whether his department has any intention of investigating this very serious problem to determine if these gasoline tanks are being manufactured to a sufficient strength to lessen the possibility of them rupturing in an accident?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know my department has been working hard in the field of safety as far as cars are concerned. From memory, I have no indication that they worked particularly on this aspect of security. I will inquire. I may profit by the occasion to say that since the department undertook this responsibility four years ago, the number of accidents in Canada in relative terms has declined quite sharply.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GRASSY NARROWS AND WHITE DOG RESERVES—MERCURY CONTAMINATION OF FISH—RESULTS OF FEDERAL TESTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the minister indicated to the House on May 10 that a team of doctors from his department had carried out tests on the effects of mercury contamination on fish food sources for the Indians of the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves, and in light of the fact that 60 of these native people have been informed by provincial agencies that they have an excess of mercury in their system, can the minister tell the House if the result of the federal tests have shown a high incidence of mercury contamination? If so, what steps are planned to deal with this serious matter affecting the health of our native people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal team has been working jointly and in very close co-operation with the Ontario government team, and I have no reason to believe that the figures quoted by the members of the Ontario team are different from those that may have been compiled by the federal team.

As to the action required, it is a responsibility that the Ontario government has assumed for some time, and it is up to the provincial government to make sure that food and other necessities are available to the people on this reserve.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. There are a number of hon. members still seeking an opportunity to ask questions. The hon. member will be given priority tomorrow to pursue the matter, but we have gone four or five minutes beyond the question period. Perhaps we should call orders of the day now.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that for six days I have risen, and on more than four occasions have caught your eye. I noticed you have known I have been rising, but I have not been granted the privilege of asking a question which is of some urgency. I request that tomorrow I might be given some consideration. tions in this House. I have risen 20 or 30 times a day for six days and I would like to draw that to your attention.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Ellwood Madill (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at 10 o'clock on Thursday night, May 24, I was speaking on Bill C-2. In continuing the debate, I wish to put on the record a table indicating the murder rate in Canada per 100,000. The source is "A Study of the Deterrent Effect of Capital Punishment with Special Reference to the Canadian Situation" by E. A. Fattah. The two years to which I will be referring will be 1962 and 1970. The rates are as follows: Newfoundland, 0 in 1962 and .2 in 1970; Prince Edward Island, 1.1 in 1962 and 1.1 in 1970; Nova Scotia, 1.6 in 1962 and 2.2 in 1970; New Brunswick, 1.6 in 1962 and 1.5 in 1970; Quebec, 1.4 in 1962 and 1.9 in 1970; Ontario, 1.4 in 1962 and 1.7 in 1970; Manitoba, 2.5 in 1962 and 3.3 in 1970; Saskatchewan, 1.7 in 1962 and 2.9 in 1970; Alberta, 1.7 in 1962 and 3.1 in 1970; British Columbia, 3.9 in 1962 and 4.1 in 1970. These figures indicate a growth over the years. Ezzat Abdel Fattah draws the conclusion that this increase is no greater than the general increase that was occurring prior to temporary abolition.

In the February 20 issue of the Brampton Daily Times, there is an editorial headed "Death Penalty Demand Anti-Liberal Backlash". It reads:

> Our readers have voted overwhelmingly for retention of capital punishment in some form.
> A Daily Times survey now compiled and tallied indicates 73 per cent of those replying wanted retention of capital punishment as it was before the five-year trial ban and another 10 per cent wanted a limited form of capital punishment.
> Any sort of liberalism which brought the ban into effect in the first place appears to have been dispelled, judging from the fact that only 17 per cent of those replying wanted total abolition of capital punishment.
> It was clear while compiling results that our readers freely relate bail reform legislation and other liberalizing trends with capital punishment.
> Quite frankly, we're not sure these can be related. However, it is clear that what is being said is that "enough is enough" and we're inclined to agree.
> We would suggest that through abuses of current bail and penal legislation, Canada has sold out on its prerogative to abolish capital punishment.
> We are not sure that capital punishment deters crime but we are now very certain that liberalized prison and bail procedures certainly don't. The general public, however, sees a parallel between the two areas in question and the cry is out for capital punishment.
> Considering the number of brutal murders of police officers and citizens generally, one can hardly blame the public for being incensed.
> You may call capital punishment a "revenge" motive and point out that innocent people are hung, too, but it will do little to deter the tide of public opinion.
> We think an alternative is to tighten the legal controls on bail and assure that sentences as they exist are carried out.
> We would further suggest that if this were done, many capital punishment advocates might change their mind. On the other hand, the vote we received is undeniably clear . . .
> Needless to say, our social order is in sad shape when the public cries for death but we understand the reasoning behind the cry and we would have to ascribe it to a situation where such a demand was predictable.

In discussing the pros and cons of capital punishment, one would be wrong not to consider facts lest one be carried away by strong emotion. Thus, when the facts suggest some conclusions which do not support a person's feelings, a great conflict might arise. However, we should look again at those figures and ask why there is a rise in the crime rate at all. Murder is the most glamourized of crimes, but other crimes are on the rise, even faster than murder.

If the liberal attitude taken in the last dozen years regarding crime and criminals had been the correct attitude, surely the crime rate would not be rising. Our leniency has led to a grave situation. The argument that abolition of the death penalty has not caused an increase in murders, especially when compared to other crime rates, cannot be fully accepted because our liberalism has led to a general easing of punishment for all crimes. Murder, as mentioned above, is only one portion of an overall horrendous picture. By retaining the death penalty and enforcing its use Canadians will be returning to a more common sense attitude. It is not so much the execution of the murderer but the self-realization that we are prepared to deal sternly once again with all criminals that will help society. As with the proverbial camel who has worked his head and neck into the tent, so it is with our leniency towards those who commit capital crimes. We must take a strong stand now.

The crime of treason against our country should never be removed from our statute books. Any one who commits treason against this country deserves the death penalty. Hijackers, who endanger the lives of hundreds of people, should not have a second chance because they do not consider the passengers on the aircraft or what this act means to society. If life imprisonment meant at least 25 years for those convicted of murder, whether it be a policeman, guard or any citizen, we could probably take a second look at this bill. However, there are those who consider that 25 years in prison is not humane punishment.

Those of us who served our country in World War II did so in order to protect our democratic way of life and to keep Canada a safe place in which to raise our families. There could be a much more humane method of execution than hanging, such as the electric chair, the gas chamber or the needle which we use on our pets when we put them permanently to sleep. However, since during the five year trial period the murder rate in Canada has increased, it is necessary to have a strong deterrent as well as a punishment. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will vote against Bill C-2.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take much of the time of the House, partly because I do not think I have much to say that will be particularly fresh. However, this issue is of such interest and concern in my constituency that I feel obliged to say how and why I intend to vote. I want to make clear my view that the major value of the bill before us is that it gives us something to amend. I intend to vote for it on second reading to get it into committee so that it may be amended. A second question has almost been introduced into this debate. While the vote concerns capital punishment of a sort, the way we vote has raised questions of responsiveness to the wishes of constituents. I want to deal with this important question as much as with the substance of the bill.

I was asked by a constituent just last weekend whether on this vote on capital punishment I would follow my conscience or my constituents'. Put in these terms, the decision is relatively easy to make. Most people would want their Member of Parliament to follow his conscience on any question, not violate it. However, there is a suggestion of stark choice that I do not believe is exact. It is possible to serve both conscience and constituents even when, as in my case, the member is reluctant to sanction the taking of a human life by execution and his constituents have indicated a strong preference for capital punishment.

That is so because the advice of constituents, for or against capital punishment, is advice on a question which is not before this House. The choice we face in this bill is not a choice between the death penalty and abolition. The death penalty provision in this bill is very limited in its application. It is limited even more in its application in practice and, despite the assurances of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), there is no evidence at all that it would be applied in practice in the future. The choice offered here is not even a choice between a hard and a soft approach to murder. The approach in this bill is hard on paper and soft in practice. So, many members of parliament are faced with a mandate from their constituents to deal severely with murder and a bill which makes that impossible.

In the circumstances, I think it is necessary for a Member of Parliament, since he cannot act exactly on the advice given him, to interpret that advice for guidance in his own vote. The specific advice given to me by more than 3,000 people responding to a questionnaire, showed that 82.8 per cent were in favour of capital punishment and only 17.2 per cent opposed. Virtually all of those who responded, 96.7 per cent, wanted any penalty to apply to all convicted of murder, not only those convicted of murdering policemen or prison guards. But in addition, 49.1 per cent indicated they would support a policy which meant the imposition of prison term which really meant life imprisonment, or long imprisonment, instead of the death penalty. As applied to the empty bill which faces us today and on which we are to vote tonight, it seems to me the main desire is for a penalty severe enough to stop murder, or at least to make murder less likely to be tried. Most of my constituents do not necessarily want to have the state kill people. But they want some sanction, and the sanction they know is the traditional sanction, the death penalty. That is the guidance they have given me.

I emphasize the word "guidance" because this issue is the first in my career in parliament upon which I am required to state my view of the relation between the advice of a constituency and the action of a member. It seems to me that a special duty grows out of the special nature of this chamber as the only place in which the whole nation gathers, not just to state strong views but also to work out ways of reconciling the strong views of one part of the country with the strong, but often contrary, views of another, and to reconcile them all with the goals and traditions of the nation as they are understood by those who have a responsibility to think about them. In an age of computers and questionnaires, and in an age, also, when it is the style of interest groups to demand that parliament adopt selfish policies which it is our duty only to consider, it is important to reassert and respect the responsibility of parliamentarians to decide ourselves, in the final analysis, what course the country should take.

We can use questionnaires and similar means of gathering evidence. I, for one, intend to do so. But if we abandon the responsibility to assess on our own account what to make of the evidence, we might as well be replaced by calculating machines or crystal balls. And if our judgment conflicts too often with that of our constituents, they have the sovereign power to replace us. A strict reliance upon questionnaires and other devices of so-called direct democracy is really not a long way removed from the kind of consultation MacKenzie King employed to divine, if that is the proper word, the best interests of the country. This is modern, and his was mystic, but neither is exact and neither excuses the Member of Parliament from performing the elemental exercise we are sent here to perform, the exercise of judgment.

In fact, in my view, this aspect of the duty of a member of parliament is one of the things which distinguishes our system from that of the United States. The United States system has been described as representative government, while ours is responsible government. This implies that the Congressman has a duty to represent more exactly the views of his constituents. The member of the Canadian parliament has a different and more difficult duty—the duty to be responsible to his constituents—to act in the way in which his judgment and conscience direct, and then to be judged. Our job is to judge; our fate, and restraint, is to be judged.

In making a judgment on any particular issue, one major consideration to be taken into account must be the expressed wish of our constituents. But we cannot rely exclusively on the evidence that is sent us. We must seek all the evidence which applies, thus assuring ourselves that our decision will be right, and not just popular. This is what I committed myself to do when this question came up during the election campaign—to consult with my constituents by means of a questionnaire and consult with those who have made it their business to study the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent. I have consulted both now, and the evidence concerning the deterrent is such that I must place on the record my view that, even if we had before us a bill which would apply the death penalty in practice, even if we had the kind of penalty this bill does not provide, I would have to vote against it or try to amend it. This is not because of an unwillingness to execute, which might be interpreted as naïve or sentimental; I am quite prepared to have society take a life if that would serve a necessary social purpose which no other instrument can serve. It is because the evidence I have sought suggests that the death penalty does not do the job my constituents want to see done. I would have to vote against any legislation which came forward, even legislation with teeth. This bill does not do that job. It does not do what my constituents want to be done. It does not stop murderers who want to murder. It does not add to public safety in any real sense, although it might offer a temporary psychological security.

What we have to do here—and more particularly what those of us whose constituents clearly want an effective deterrent to murder have to do—is try to find some deterrent which will be effective. The bill before us will not do that job. Nor would a more widespread application of the death penalty, if we believe the studies made by people whose business it is to know. A long fixed term might. It would at least provide some psychological security to society without making the government a killer or without indulging in the fraud this bill involves when it promises a penalty which, will not be implemented.

Others in this House have noted frequently a concern for order and a desire to stop—with this legislation, and symbolically—what is called permissiveness. I believe we must take this concern seriously. I am no sociologist, but politicians do their own kind of sampling and I think it is fair to presume that many of my constituents who are most anxious to see capital punishment reinstated are people whose lives are still based on things that do not change. Some of them farm. Others live in view of the constant mountains. Many practice a strong, firm faith. They are settled people. This is not to say they are outmoded or inept at meeting modern challenges. Indeed, some are highly skilled, innovative, imaginative. What distinguishes them is that they have grown accustomed to having something to come back to. And they are worried, now, that what they knew is being broken down—not just some of it, but all. They are apprehensive of the day when there will be nothing to come back to—no respect for law, no respect for faith, no familiar landmarks. This is not intended as a eulogy for these people. Quite the opposite.

I believe we must begin to pay much more attention, when deciding on national policies, to the values and aspirations of these settled Canadians, not just because they pay the fare for many of the programs we propose here but also because in many cases they possess a special expertise which comes from experience. They know about things we only talk about. Whether or not we see it, they see plenty of evidence to show that government today is moving to exclude them from influence. There is a very real feeling in my constituency that power in Canada has passed to a narrow, insensitive, metropolitan elite, and while the people of Rocky Mountain are prepared to give that elite some voice, they also want a voice of their own. The danger is that they feel passed by.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

If I might reiterate a theme I have raised before, let me just say this: when parliament becomes preoccupied by the need to build great cities we seem to overlook the equal need to preserve existing communities, whether they are neighbourhoods in a metropolis or small towns in a countryside. When we become preoccupied by the demands of the venturing young, we sometimes forget the desire of older Canadians for a sense of stability or even for an adequate income. When we devise fancy new programs to give young people summer jobs they will enjoy, we overlook the resentment such programs can cause among people schooled to believe in the virtue of an honest day's work. I do not intend to devalue the importance of programs for transient youth, or of Opportunities for Youth or of help to build great cities. My point is simply that if our emphasis on these goals seems too complete, if we seem consistently to ignore the requirements of the settled people of the country or to demean their values, we make them feel less at home in their country. Those of us who are genuinely concerned about a sense of alienation, or even of disorder, should look in this direction for solutions rather than try to redress such a problem under the guise of amending the criminal law.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, having heard many of the speeches made on Bill C-2 during the present debate, and having, also, heard many of the speeches made five years ago on what is basically the same measure, I wish to speak briefly to explain my reason for voting against the legislation before us when the question is put.

Basically, this bill deals with the age-old question of the sanctity of human life on the one hand, and the security of society on the other. The debate on this issue symbolizes the confusion in which parliament presently finds itself. Once a question of conscience arises there will, undoubtedly, be confusion and differences of opinion. Bill C-2, on which we are going to vote tonight, to me completely symbolizes this parliament. It symbolizes a government that refuses to lead and leaders who are afraid to govern. This bill is a sham, a farce and a charade. As the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) said a moment ago, this bill stands not for abolition and not for retention. We are going to send to the legal affairs and justice committee a qualified abolition bill or a qualified retention bill, depending on how you interpret it, so that for another five years we are going to have what we have had for the last five years. As long as a man murders a policeman or a prison guard, there is a chance he will have to pay the supreme price; if he murders anyone else, obviously he does not pay the supreme price following due process of law.

I listened to the leaders of the parties who spoke last Wednesday. I was very glad that they entered into the debate because this was the catalyst that decided me to participate. All three leaders of the national parties, in effect, supported the sending of Bill C-2 to committee. If you follow their arguments, Mr. Speaker, basically they support a form of abolition as contained in the bill, if not total abolition. But I suggest in all seriousness that the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) again illustrate the symbolism of this parliament and its confusion.

Let me take their remarks in synoptic form and deal first with the remarks of the Prime Minister, who I thought gave one of his more sensitive speeches in this House. I did not say "sensible" but "sensitive". He said that members must take their responsibilities seriously. He said let us not avoid the issue; let us face up to the responsibility of voting. Yet we know from his very next words that we are not voting for abolition or for retention; we are voting for a sham. I say it would have been much more forthright of the Prime Minister not to have produced this hybrid bill.

Mr. Allmand: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member says that if we vote for this bill we are voting for a hybrid bill, a sham that is neither abolition nor retention. Does not the hon. member realize that if he votes against the bill he will also be left with a law that, in itself, is a hybrid? The law now in effect is the law of 1961, which divided murder into capital and non-capital for different reasons. The only difference is that the bill now before the House provides for a much more restricted retention. If the hon. member votes against the bill, does he not realize that the situation will still be a hybrid?

Mr. Nowlan: All I can say to that, Mr. Speaker, having listened to the speeches of the three leaders, as did the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), is that I am prepared to accept the premise of the Prime Minister that we take our responsibility. I am against a hybrid situation. The Leader of the New Democratic Party never once mentioned the distinction between capital and non-capital crimes. The debate we had in 1961 was the culmination of much anxiety and soul searching on the part of members of the House in putting into the law provision for capital and non-capital murder. Very few members have mentioned this distinction between capital murder and non-capital murder, and it is only in the popular definition of capital murder that you invoke the supreme penalty. I fully appreciate that the fact that we have capital murder and non-capital murder leads to a hybrid situation, but I think members of the House are prepared to face that fact, as the Prime Minister suggested. It is a question of whether they want the law of 1961 or whether they want to vote for full abolition of capital punishment.

I interpret the present bill as providing a qualified abolition or a qualified retention. The bill still recognizes capital punishment, but its imposition, is limited to the murderers of policemen and prison guards. I appreciate the intervention of the Solicitor General, but what I am saying is that I would have followed with more conviction the premise of the Prime Minister regarding members facing their responsibility, rather than trying to hide under a sham bill which can be interpreted as providing for either abolition or for retention.

After having had a five year trial period, I ask, why have another five year trial period when we should be prepared to face the question squarely? I agree with the Prime Minister that the question posed in this bill is eternal. But we do not need another five year trial period. We had a false trial period previously, but let us assume that we do have another so-called trial period. What statistics or philosophical argument that we know of today is going to change over the next five years? This is my point. This House could make a definitive decision tonight and vote either for or against abolition, instead of hiding the vote under this sham bill. To the fervent abolitionists, I say that by voting for the bill they are creating a sham for their constituents. They want to hide under the cloak of the bill and have another five year trial period. The question of the sanctity of life as measured against the security of society is an eternal one, and we do not need another five years to determine it.

As far as the speech of the Leader of the Opposition is concerned, he used the basic argument that is used by all of those who support this bill, namely that there is no statistical evidence to show that capital punishment is a deterrent to the commission of murder. I am prepared to agree that that is so. Equally, I do not think he could disagree with me that the converse of the situation is true, namely that there are no statistics to show that the absence of capital punishment eliminates or reduces capital crime. As far as I am concerned, the statistics prove neither one side of the issue nor the other.

What bothers me about the argument that the statistics show that the commission of murder is not deterred by capital punishment, is that if you follow this to its logical conclusion we might ask why we impose any penalties or have any deterrents at all. Why not throw the whole thing into the laps of the sociologists and the philosophical do-gooders so we can all have an ideal society, try to rehabilitate those who can be rehabilitated, and then keep our fingers crossed when we let them outside prison walls?

With regard to the proposed amendment that may be moved in committee to provide that anyone convicted of capital murder be put behind bars for at least 25 years—indeed, some say a convicted murderer should stay in jail for life—frankly, I am wondering whether that is not even more inhumane. In this country there have been no executions since 1962. I do not know whether it is more humane to keep someone behind bars in a cage for the rest of his life than to resort to the law of 1961 of capital and non-capital offences.

I do not want to get into a dissertation on the law, but following some of the arguments that were raised at the time in this House concerning instances where juries were reluctant to convict if they thought the accused would hang, we decided to divide the category of murder into two and to provide capital punishment only for crimes of capital murder. It is only in such cases that a convicted murderer may be exposed to the threat of execution, but in such cases there is the royal prerogative of mercy which the government of the day can exercise at its discretion.

Coming back to this question of deterrence, I suggest you cannot say that statistics indicate a deterrent or, conversely, that the threat of capital punishment has not been a deterrent to murder. The important point is that if you dilute the effect of deterrence, you must wonder why we should impose a penalty in respect of any lesser crime. That is why I find it difficult to follow the words of my leader. Immediately after referring to the deterrent effect, he castigated the government for being too liberal in its use of the royal prerogative of mercy in the commutation of sentences. I do not understand the connection. If capital punishment has no deterrent effect how can there be any deterrent effect in the penalties for lesser crimes?

The leader of the NDP presented a basic argument that statistics cannot prove that capital punishment is a deterrent to murder. He also referred to the inhumanity and brutality of the state in taking a life. He supported his case by developing the argument that juries are reluctant to convict when there is the possibility of a murderer paying the supreme price. He did not once mention the fact that there is a distinction between capital and non-capital murder. Juries can convict a man of a non-capital murder where there is no possibility of execution. That hon. member did not mention that fact, and for that reason I think his argument is a little confusing intellectually, as no doubt he will think my argument is intellectually confusing, if he takes the time to read my speech.

The leader of the NDP then went on to say there were no statistics to prove the deterrent theory, and advanced his own argument that juries would be reluctant to convict if they knew the man would swing, without pointing out the distinction between capital and non-capital murder. What the hon. member did not mention, and what has not been mentioned often during this debate, is the other side of the coin. This is the situation which exists when you do not have capital punishment for capital murder, those murders being of a very different kind from non-capital murder.

Perhaps a sociologist or a student of penal reform could use this subject as the basis of a thesis. Perhaps such a thesis has already been written on this subject. You might have the situation in which a man, alleged to have committed a murder, is being apprehended and in the process kills a policeman. Perhaps the policeman is attempting to apprehend him and there is a shoot-out. Who is to say that, because the policeman knows there is no possibility of this man paying the supreme penalty, he will not take the law into his own hands? There have been cases in the country to the south of us involving policemen who have broken into the residences of members of the Black Panther organization, and have caused a shoot-out which has resulted in the death of several people. Investigations have shown that guns were drawn and people were killed. I suggest that where there is no supreme penalty at the end of the judicial role, there will be a possibility of an increase in the number of incidents of this kind. Such incidents will result in the quick administration of justice and the snuffing out of more lives than would be the case if the proper judicial process were followed.

My personal dilemma lies in the fact that I have been on both sides of this issue. The first time the bill came before the House I voted for retention. Five years ago, I voted for qualified abolition or retention as long as capital punishment was invoked in the case of the murder of a policeman or prison guard. Perhaps there was no logic at all in my support on that occasion of qualified abolition or retention, because we ended up with an unnatural discrimination as between policemen and prison guards and other citizens across Canada. I have come to the conclusion that I must face this issue on the straight basis of abolition or retention, without trying to descriminate between citizens; in other words, making out that policemen and prison guards are in a different category than other citizens. That is the way we must face the issue, hence my dilemma.

I might suggest I am a reluctant retentionist. I am reluctant because I have no more fervour for retention than I have enthusiasm for abolition. Therein lies my quandary. When we change the law there should be an onus on those who want a change to show a positive reason for the change. The abolitionists suggest you cannot support the deterrent theory of capital murder statistically. If you cannot support abolition statistically, on what grounds can you support partial retention? I suggest more evidence is required to bring about a qualified state of abolition than the mere suggestion that this would result in a blissful and ideal society which we would all love to see in existence. At this very moment throughout the world many people are not dying peacefully in their beds. Men have not died peacefully in their beds since the beginning of history. Without being cynical, I would venture to guess that it will be a long time before mankind can be assured of a peaceful death in bed. I would guess that more people have died as a result of some kind of armed conflict somewhere in the world during one day of this debate than will ever face execution under this bill.

In times of emergency, crisis and war, it is necessary for the state to protect itself against attack. It is abhorrent that we train men to kill for the defence of society, but this is a necessity. Cold-blooded and calculated murder by execution is a form of defence, just as cold-blooded and calculated murder itself is a form of war against society or a form of war by individual against individual. Anyone who engages in this form of war should face the possibility of paying the supreme penalty after due process of law. This is retribution, revenge or reality, and frankly I am not sure which. We have laws that must be obeyed and penalties that must be paid in respect of breaches of those laws. If there is logic to the idea of penalties in respect of lesser laws, there must be logic to the penalty of capital punishment for capital crimes, keeping in mind always the royal prerogative. If it is logical to have penalties for infractions of lesser laws, then it must be logical and reasonable to have at least the possibility of the supreme penalty for the supreme crime. Surely, that must follow.

It is for those reasons I intend to vote against Bill C-2 tonight so that the government can bring in a bill, either for or against capital punishment. Then, Members of Parliament can make up their minds on that issue, and not try to hide behind the sham that is implicit in this bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some interest to this debate and what I have not been able to hear I have read. This will be the fifth debate on this subject in which I have participated in this House. This matter, as usual, presents a host of problems to a political party, despite the fact that it is described as being a free vote, and many problems to members. For 40 years I have been opposed to, have voted against, have spoken against and have worked against capital punishment. Many other members on both sides of this House have participated in this debate. I must say at once that I find the measure we are discussing falls somewhat short of the ideal I would like to see as the law of this land. It would be easy to rationalize voting against it on second reading, although one might be an abolitionist. Members on both sides of the House could do this and come out nicely. However, I believe it would be wrong to do that.

I must indicate I will vote for the bill, despite its defects. I am reinforced in this view as a result of the procedure which has been adopted in this House. The vote on second reading of a bill, has lost some of the significance which at one time was attached to it. The vote on third reading is, of course, the most important in respect of many bills, and certainly in respect of this bill. Assuming the vote on second reading is a yea vote and the measure is referred to a committee, then in the committee there will be an opportunity for members, the total retentionists, the total abolitionists and those in between, to put forward their views. There are members who have indicated some preference for a 25-year mandatory penalty. They will have a right to put forward their views either themselves, if they should be members of the committee, or through substitutes.

My guess is that a great variety of amendments will be moved in the committee. I do not know what procedure the committee will follow, whether or not it will decide to hear witnesses. This, of course, is a matter for the committee itself to decide. After this debate, after the national discussions which have taken place, I personally do not think there is a great deal to be gained by having the committee examine witnesses and accept briefs. I do not think there is one member in this House who has not had some form of communication from either a group or individuals concerning their views on this issue. However, I leave it for the committee to decide. When the bill is reintroduced into the House in its new form after having passed the committee, every member will have an opportunity to initiate further debate on the basis of the amendments at the report stage.

I fully expect that almost every amendment which will be moved in the standing committee will probably be re-introduced in the House at the report stage. We will then have a debate, or possibly a series of debates, on these issues after which the bill will appear in its final form. Then, knowing what is in the bill, what its final form will be and what its terms are, that will be the time to test the views of members of this House. If abolitionists feel that the bill contains elements which are repugnant to them, they may be compelled reluctantly to vote against it, despite their views on abolition. The same situation may apply to those who are retentionists. At that time, in that way, in this House we will come to the final challenge on this measure. I must say that as yet it is not a perfect bill. If one waited in this House for perfection before deciding to approve a proposal, one would wait here for a much longer period than you and I, Mr. Speaker, have left in these mortal portals before we shuffle off.

I am not being partisan in making these comments. I think all governments fail to achieve perfection in respect of a bill which is moulded to the economic and social needs of a country. There are too many tensions. I must say that this government shows itself far more able than most governments to avoid that degree of perfection which would appeal to me. I have been waiting for ten years. I think I can count on the fingers of one hand the number of bills which in that period have come even half-way toward reaching the degree of perfection I believe a measure should reach. I am hoping that by the process of bringing in amendments we can go forward by stages, accepting partial remedies and reducing or eliminating some defects, and hope to do better next time. Thus, believing capital punishment to be wrong and just as inconsistent with the improvement of human society as the killing which leads to the infliction of hanging, I say any proposal which limits the extent to which the state, acting on behalf of the people who constitute it, deliberately takes the life of one or more of those people, ought to be supported. So, I intend to support this bill and hope to give more of my reasons at eight o'clock, since Your Honour probably has other purposes in mind for the time between now and six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Peace River. He will indeed be recognized at eight o'clock. Perhaps it might be agreed—it was not agreed the other day when the original order was passed—that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) should have 15 minutes, or more if the debate should be completed beforehand, to reply. Members would have an opportunity to speak up until 9.15, and then the Solicitor General would have a right to reply to the various arguments which have been adduced, since he is the sponsor of the bill, from 9.15 until 9.30 at which time the order states the debate shall expire. Is this agreeable to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—regional economic expansion—Atlantic Canada—request for massive capital investment in large infrastructures; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—public works—construction of new post office in Lac Mégantic—inquiry about when tenders will be called; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—post office—re-examination of requirement for establishment of rural routes in western Canada.

Senate and House of Commons Act

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think there would be agreement to call Bill C-30 in the name of the hon. member for Cochrane.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING DISQUALIFICATION OF MEMBER

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should call the order. I understand there is an objection to the bill.

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization of Bill C-30, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to be brief and refer hon. members to the remarks of Mr. Speaker on January 18, 1973 when he served notice of an objection to this particular bill. Mr. Speaker made the comment at that time that this bill would infringe upon the financial rights of the Crown. He argued, therefore, that when it came up for debate this procedural point should be considered. I want to refer Your Honour to the remarks made by him and to ask for a ruling on the point.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. There does not seem to me to have been a clear ruling by Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there was some question in his mind regarding whether this is a money bill. He felt that it may, perhaps, infringe upon the financial responsibility of the government. In my opinion, the bill is quite clear and does not transgress in that way at all. It has nothing to do with money or the responsibility of the Crown in that regard. It simply provides that a Member of Parliament will not be liable to disqualification if he is a member of a board of directors of one of the Crown corporations, whether or not it is a remunerative position. In that respect, I suggest with great respect that this bill has nothing to do with the financial responsibility of the Crown.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere in this family argument, which is very interesting, and I do not want to get involved in technicalities. All I can say on the question of substance, having in mind the recent report of the Auditor General, is that I am amazed to see the government take the position that they should be very careful about how the Crown flings away its money. I make this comment in view of the Auditor General's version of the mis-spending, extravagance and waste of this government. However, I will let Your Honour decide that issue.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Reid: I rise on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since this is a rather interesting case, and probably a marginal one, I wonder if Your Honour might want to take a few minutes to consider it. In that period of time, we might proceed with amendments to the Judges Act which, I understand, can be dealt with in a short time, following which it might be possible for Your Honour to make a ruling. I think there would be agreement in the House to that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House is agreeable to this course I must say I would be eternally grateful. I do not want to be peremptory in my decision on a matter which I know the hon. member has pursued in other ways over a number of years. I just do not want to make a quick decision on it. So, if the House is agreeable to the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary, the Chair would certainly be agreeable also. Is it agreed that the ruling be made later?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) agree to this course? It is his bill.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed then, that we return now to public business and that we deal with the Judges Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

JUDGES ACT

PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR CERTAIN COURTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-177, to amend the Judges Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-177, an act to amend the Judges Act, be amended by striking out line 11 of clause 5 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"(b) One hundred and four judges and"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Mr. Lang moved that Bill C-177, to amend the Judges Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lang moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the House revert now to Public Bills, order No. 26?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING DISQUALIFICATION OF MEMBER

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization of Bill C-30, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, may I again rise on a point of order on this bill. I have reread the bill, and I have come to the conclusion that the remarks made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) are more apt in this case than those made by Mr. Speaker, because if the bill does affect the financial prerogative of any agency of the government it would affect the financial prerogative of the House of Commons more than that of the government.

What the bill apparently seeks to do is to remove the prohibition from Members of Parliament and permit them to accept fees and expenses when they are able to obtain seats on government commissions and boards. Therefore, it does not seem that the funds flowing to a Member of Parliament in such a case would come from the government but rather from a Crown agency, and second, Members of Parliament are not funded by the government but by the House of Commons.

Under those circumstances it would seem to me that the bill would be admissible on procedural grounds. My point in rising originally was merely to remind Your Honour of the caveat that Mr. Speaker, had placed on the record on January 18. If Your Honour finds that the matter is to be decided so closely that, in effect, it is a marginal matter, I believe it has been the practice in private members' hour to permit the bill to proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the parliamentary secretary makes a good point, especially as it has become a marginal matter for the Chair, and the hon. member for Cochrane should be allowed his moment in the sun. I say this without making a definitive ruling on it. I think that justice, or at least common sense, would say that the hon. member should be allowed to put his argument. Does the hon. member for Peace River have a better way out?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to say that this was a very wise suggestion, and to call your attention to the fact that very significantly on May 29 the government has made three retreats, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), and now by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next retreat is about to be made by the Deputy Speaker when he vacates the Chair.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved that Bill C-30, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

He said: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, particularly for your graciousness in permitting this debate to continue. Hon. members who were members of the House in the last parliament will recall that I sought various means in order to include on the boards of directors of Crown corporations and agencies some representation from the elected representatives of the people, the reason being to have a watchdog effect on the spending of government through those agencies and in order to have a political in-put, political with a capital "P" rather than with the meaning of partisanship, to provide a greater understanding from the point of view of the grass roots of the country. Who better than the members of this House are in the position to know and understand that feeling?

There are all kinds of complications to bringing this about, because of rules, regulations and laws that we already have on the books. When I brought forth a bill that would permit a Member of Parliament to sit on the board of a Crown corporation, it was considered not to be in order because there is a regulation to the effect that a member can lose his seat if he receives any kind of remuneration, whether it be in the form of fees or expenses, from any agency of the government. For that reason, it was difficult to get anywhere with the proposal.

We tried another method by putting the proposal forth as a motion. It was debated in the House but that was as far as it got. I do not wish to debate the merits of placing Members of Parliament on the boards of Crown corporations today. I simply want to debate the actual bill in front of us, which would remove that regulation which provides that a member can lose his seat if he is in receipt of any kind of stipend from a government agency. This is a silly regulation.

Members of parliaments are appointed to boards in other jurisdictions, in the province of Ontario and elsewhere. At present, if a member of this House were appointed to the board of Air Canada, and a meeting of that board were to be held in Montreal on a Thursday morning, the Member of Parliament would not be allowed to have his way paid there by Air Canada, as other members of the board are paid, simply because of the existence of this regulation that I seek to have changed. If it should so happen that one of us would be required to appear on television in Toronto, and if it happened to be the CTV station there would be no difficulty. That member could travel down to Toronto at the expense of CTV. But if it were for CBC television he could not do so. This is ludicrous. The only reason he would not be reimbursed for the expense in going to Toronto is this Provision in the House of Commons Act. That is why I feel this bill is extremely important and why it should go to a committee where it could be examined properly.

It is not a question of wanting to have members receive remuneration for something. That is not the point. The point is that a member should not be liable to lose his seat should he be in a position where he could receive expenses or other fees that go along with being on a government board. So, I ask that the members of this House allow this bill to proceed to a committee where it can be properly examined.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot approve the principle of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). As I understand the bill, it contemplates that Members of Parliament can, without the normal disqualification, be appointed to boards or agencies of the government. I have three reasons why I think that would not be a good principle.

First of all, it seems to me that we in this House have enough to do already, perhaps too much to do to discharge the functions that we have here. If we are going to sit on boards and commissions, which are often very demanding jobs, we would be over straining our capacity and not doing justice to the primary task we have, which is to be elected members of this House. It is one thing to say that we sit on committees and learn about these things, and perhaps criticize deeply these boards and commissions. That is the watchdog function to which the hon. member referred. But when you sit on a board, you are not just a watchdog. You are part of the whole machinery. You are part of the internal machinery that is running the board or agency, and at that stage you have loyalties and demands which I think would be inconsistent with being a member of Parliament.

I suppose all members of the House have different degrees of business in their tasks, but if the recent experience of most members is like my own, I find a great multiplication of work in this House. There are more committees. There are more people coming to see you all the time. There are greater demands by constituents. Even for the private member, whether he be on the government side or on the opposition side, this is an increasingly taxing job we assume when we become elected representatives. To suggest that we mix that up with responsibilities to a public utility, to a great corporation like Air Canada, or to others of these companies, organizations and agencies of government, would be to overtax our ability, and I do not think would be a constructive approach.

The second thing is related to the first. I am not sure that it might not create conflicts of interest—if not conflicts of interest, at least clashes of loyalty. If you sat on a board of a great utility like Air Canada or like a provincial hydro board, you would acquire not only inside knowledge of the operation and management, but loyalties to the organization. When the legislation comes before the House you must be thinking of the dual interest, the interest of the country as a whole and the interest of the board, institution or agency of which you are, presumably, a loyal and industrious member.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I do not like the suggestion in this bill that those who sit on these commissions should get extra remuneration. I call attention of the House to the fact that this principle was applied in the province of Ontario, and for all I know in various other provinces, where various members of the legislature—nearly always members of the government party—were associated with various boards and drew salary considerably in excess of their ordinary indemnities as members of the legislature. I do not think we need that. I see no objection to having cabinet office or duties as a parliamentary secretaries, those who serve a particular function in the House, recognized by extra salary. I think, however, for extra salaries in the gift of the government to be made available to people whose primary job is that of a Member of Parliament, is a mistake.

I do not like to differ from the hon. member for Cochrane, and I know he has given a lot of thought to this matter. I am sure the bill has some merit but as far as I am concerned the merits are dwarfed by the disadvantages. If the bill ever comes to a vote—which I doubt even the hon. member expects—I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) when he introduced his bill, and also to the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

The more I study the bill, the more I realize the intention the hon. member wanted to put forward in the House. He feels that an association with a crown corporation should not prevent an hon. member from sitting in the House. He made his point quite clearly and I am sure he devoted much time and energy to research in order to bring his views forward in the House.

Now, in spite of the explanation the hon. member kindly supplied, I am most reluctant to believe that it would be possible for an hon. member who sits on the board of a crown corporation to make completely neutral decisions at a given time if, when making his decisions, he is aware that this same corporation will be carrying out certain projects.

For instance, I think of natural resources. We now have several Crown corporations, as Panarctic Oils Limited, which deal particularly with resources; if the question were to construct a pipeline to move products found in the Arctic, how could the hon. member be impartial if he were an administrator or a member of a corporation which would be neutral, as he would know at a certain time that the corporation, because of his duties as member of management, would probably put it in a prejudicial position. Whatever his personal position, he would certainly have to give some explanations.

The hon. member for Cochrane said that remuneration was not an issue. It is possible—and I think he made it very clear—that a member of parliament could be in a very difficult position; evidently he would not have been paid if he had given a favourable judgment or if for instance at a management meeting he had voted in favour of such and such project to be carried out later by the same corporation. The very fact that he were at the meeting and had his money refunded for expenses incurred to go to the meeting, as explained by the hon. member, would likely prompt him to go anyway. But I understand that meetings are not always held at the same location for various reasons and that conflicts can arise.

Here is how I see it: the duty of a federal member is much more demanding today than before. In the past, we could sit a few months a year; now, in my case, it is a full time occupation and, a corporation requiring us to devote a few months, a few sittings, even several days or weeks, I wonder how we could determine the primary interest. Then, would the House take precedence or would it be preferable to go to the meetings of company executives?

I fail to see how we could make a value judgement which would not compromise the role we were assigned by our electors. These people sent us to the House knowing very well that it was out of the question for us to take other responsibilities than that of representing them and not to become managers or even interim shareholders of various corporations, be they completely controlled by the crown or not. I think that our electors would have many reservations in that respect.

We could deal with many other points but I think I must single out the conflict of interests which could arise, not necessarily as regards the salary but rather at the level of decisions that have to be taken by managers of various corporations whether they are crown corporations or not.

I congratulate the member for having pointed this out. I know that this has existed for many years in provinces such as Ontario. Furthermore, it is not incumbent on I or us to decide how these people can conciliate various interests. I know that many cases of conflicting interests have been published in the papers recently. Some people tried to make a scandal out of those things. I do not have the right to judge them, but it has been reported that some people have defended interests other than those of their electors.

There are also other administration levels where this is allowed but in spite of this, I sincerely think that I cannot at this point support Bill C-30 that the member for Cochrane has brought before this House for the reasons that I have pointed out earlier.

[English]

Mr. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is a rather intriguing idea. It has been put into practice with some degree of success at the municipal level and also in some cases at the provincial level. Municipally, we find planning boards and hydro boards, upon which there is a mixed composition of members, non-elected and elected, who try to deliberate and decide on the business of the organization to which they have been appointed.

I do not know whether the reasonable success that has been met so far, at least at municipal level, is because we do not have the party system at that level. I suspect this could be the reason the mixed composition is working very well municipally. At provincial levels we find a similar pattern. I am aware of the one in the province of Ontario, and here I would have to approach the subject in a different manner because the same argument does not stand, namely, that there is a party system and so if this mix works it must be based on other reasons and considerations.

The proposition of the hon. member for Cochrane that this bill would create a watchdog effect by providing a political input, renders the idea perhaps even more attractive. However, if one looks at these aspects more closely, one finds that the watchdog effect of the presence of elected representatives would indirectly cast doubt on the ability of those non-elected members to that specific board to operate without the presence of elected members. That, by implication alone, is rather serious. With regard to the political input, we are all aware of the frustrations sometimes faced by elected representatives in dealing with some independent corporations; they are not as responsive to popular and political pressures as perhaps one would like them to be.

We must look into the reasons for these independent and semi-autonomous bodies being set up originally. I suspect one reason was to create entities once removed from political pressures to enable them to make certain decisions. The National Energy Board, which was created by this House after the experience of 1957, was to be a Crown corporation, board or commission that could deliberate and make decisions on matters of national importance removed from the political pressures of the day.

If one looks at this bill in light of these thoughts, one begins to wonder about the merits of it. I do not deny that it embodies an intriguing idea. One must also look at other aspects such as current trends. All members are aware of the trend toward greater participation on the part of citizens in the affairs of their community and country; there is a great desire to become involved.

With regard to the role of elected representatives, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) there is already a great workload on elected representatives. There is no need to elaborate on how difficult it is sometimes to man the standing committees of this House, without there being the added responsibility of sitting on boards away from Parliament Hill. These two basic trends, the workload of Members of Parliament and greater desire on the part of citizens to become involved, must be considered before giving approval to a measure of this kind. I believe the thought embodied in this bill runs counter to these two trends. I would prefer there to be a tendency by Members of Parliament to appear before a board when a matter is of particular interest to them. They could make representations on behalf of a group or a specific interest. There have been some fine examples of this being done in the past.

With regard to the manning of these Crown corporations, boards and agencies, I support what has been done in the past, that is, a continuation of the efforts of this government to reach out into the community and bring in from the ranks of the non-elected people with fresh talents, abilities, skills and particular backgrounds, people who are not prepared to run for office but have a keen interest in the affairs of the nation or a specific field of endeavour which affects the interests and policies of Canada. This seems to be a better approach.

The Member of Parliament has a role to play in his constituency, in the community at large, in the House and in our committees. We are frequently criticized by our constituents. We often hear it said that a member can be found only when soliciting votes and after that is not seen again for many years. An additional responsibility such as the one proposed in Bill C-30 would only add to this kind of criticism. The alternative was launched several years ago of reaching out into the community and bringing in new talent from the non-elected ranks to these boards and keeping them removed from political pressure. After all, these bodies are responsible to a minister and he will ensure that the policy is impressed upon the members of that body. This approach which has been used over the years is fairly sound.

Mr. Brewin: Would the hon. member permit a question before resuming his seat? The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) referred to the fact that a practice has been established in Ontario of appointing members of the legislature to various boards and commissions under the control of the legislature. Is it a fact that the so-called Camp commission which has been inquiring into various matters affecting the legislature has recommended that this practice in Ontario be dropped?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. member for Greenwood for having raised this point. I was not aware of it.

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on this very interesting bill which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has raised a very important point. I was also under the impression that it has been a long-standing practice in Ontario for members of the legislature to be appointed members of Crown corporations. I understand this practice has been followed for many years. It has been pointed out by hon. members from Ontario that it seems to be the practice that such members chosen from the legislature over the past 30 years have been backbenchers of the Conservative Party; in other words, this is another way of giving recompense to their own members and not necessarily because of their knowledge or aptitude to sit on any particular board.

As pointed out by the member who preceded me, and the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), a conflict of interest could easily arise if a Member of Parliament was also a member of the CBC, the CNR or any other Crown corporation and a decision had to be taken that could concern his constituency. He has been elected to parliament to represent a constituency, and if he is a member of the board of directors of a Crown corporation he may have to make a decision affecting that constituency. I do not know how a Member of Parliament could possibly have an unbiased point of view under such circumstances.

I commend the hon. member for Cochrane for having brought forward this bill. However, I would like more research carried out on the subject; we could then have an interesting discussion on what is being done about this problem in Ontario. They have had 30 or 50 years' experience. I am not a resident of Ontario so I cannot say how they will resolve this question. But I do have misgivings in connection with this question.

I understand the hon. member for Cochrane has brought forward many good subjects for debate in this House. I know he was one of the two members responsible for having the Canadian flag displayed in this chamber. I appreciate the work he has done not only in connection with this bill but other bills, and I am sure if he continues his good work the House will look favourably on other measures which he may introduce. However, I am not prepared to support him on this occasion without making a further study of what is involved. Parts of this bill are contentious. Moreover, an expenditure of funds by the government may be involved, as has been stated. This alone would warrant withholding consent to the passage of the bill at the present time.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join other hon. members in acknowledging the tenacity of purpose of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). This subject has appeared under the guise of questions on the order paper, oral questions, motions for the production of papers and, now, as a private member's public bill. I believe the hon. member has demonstrated the kind of fixity of purpose which is required when a private member wishes to have his pet idea put forward, debated extensively and, hopefully, brought to a decision.

It seems to me that the bill we are debating contains only one clause. It is one of those seductive bills embodying a whole series of principles, involving changes in the way in which Members of Parliament would work, involving considerable changes in the way in which government operates, all under the cover of an apparently innocuous clause. I congratulate the hon. member for Cochrane on the way in which he has packaged this idea. It is a seductive idea, one which at first blush has much to recommend it. But when the evening is over, when the make-up has been removed, and under harsher light, one sees the idea in true perspective. To disregard the artful use of cosmetics, to strip an idea of its protective coloration, is part of the function of private members' hour. In the hard light of day, stripped of the mood music, the appeal of this idea is dissipated.

The heart of the argument against the proposal has to do with the responsibilities of Members of Parliament. It has always been my belief that Members of Parliament are here to make policy. They are here to provide direction to the country at large. It is not the responsibility of Members of Parliament, particularly those of us who are backbenchers, to take on the task of setting policy for Crown corporations or other agencies of government. Our task in this direction was accomplished with the passing of the act of Parliament which established those corporations—Air Canada, Northern Transportation, Eldorado, Atomic Energy of Canada, to name only a few.

The task was discharged at the point at which we voted to establish these organizations to carry out certain specific aims as enumerated in the act of parliament giving those organizations life and authority. If we were to reach into the affairs of the boards of directors by appointing ourselves to the boards, there is one question which immediately comes to my mind: How could we be assured that all members of the House would be fairly represented? I reject altogether the way in which the Ontario government chooses people to sit on provincial boards. If we were to adopt such a procedure it would be necessary to ensure that all parties in the House of Commons had an opportunity to participate directly in the formation of policy.

But consider where this would lead. Not only would we as a parliament have established certain functions for these organizations to carry out, but we would have taken upon ourselves responsibility for sitting as directors and assuming day to day control. This would be a complete reversal of the way in which parliament and government has seen its responsibilities. We have always taken the view that for the sake of the common good it is sometimes necessary to set up Crown corporations to carry out specific tasks. But in doing so, we set them up in such a way that they operate at arm's length.

It is instructive to point out that these corporations operate not only at arm's length vis-à-vis Members of Parliament, but also vis-à-vis members of the government. It is not the Minister of Transport who directs Air Canada to carry out a certain policy; it is not the Secretary of State who insists that CBC carry out a specific policy: it is parliament which has established the responsibilities of those organizations. They are creatures of parliament and they report to parliament through ministers as intermediaries. This is an important principle.

I suggest that if they have not done so, hon. members should read a book by John Kenneth Galbraith entitled The New Industrial State. It contains a fascinating chapter describing the attempt by emerging nations to gain some control over their economies, to break the bonds which had tied them to the nations which controlled them as colonies and, in particular, the bonds that tied them to the corporations whose activities had such influence on the economic scene. The technique they used was called socialism, but it was socialism with a difference because the process involved not only taking over a particular segment of the economy but also making those corporations responsible directly to the democratically elected chamber. What has been the result? Absolute chaos.

That would be the system that would apply in Canada if it were possible for Members of Parliament to dictate the policy of all Crown corporations. I think it is important to understand that Members of Parliament are not free beings; they are tied to their constituencies and to their regions, and they come here to represent them in the best possible way and to get policies implemented that will benefit their areas. The dilemma, of course, is that these policies are always in conflict in a country like Canada which has so much regional disparity.

Therefore, the point is that if you have Members of Parliament on the board of directors of these corporations, and if they have the power to influence the direction of policy and the implementation of policy, a conflict of interest arises between the responsibility of Members of Parliament representing their constituents and their responsibility as members of the House of Commons which has created the corporation and given it certain policy directives.

It seems to me that the experience of other countries indicates that where Members of Parliament are able to dabble in the administration of a particular program or in the activities of a particular country, the result can only be disastrous for the country and for the program. We are not driven or controlled by a sense of what has to be done, or by a sense of the responsibilities which an organization may or may not have; we are driven by other forces. It is right that that should be so. But it is also right that in trying to set up organizations to carry out the will of the members of the House of Commons we do not put those organizations under constraints which may prevent them from carrying out their responsibilities under the act of parliament that created them, and at the same time put Members of Parliament in a highly equivocal position which could lead to serious conflict of interest.

So I think I would oppose this particular bill, which is a rather seductive and apparently simple idea, on the basis that it conflicts with the traditional, and I think proper, interpretation of my role as a Member of Parliament. It would also put me in the highly visible position of becoming the victim of a conflict of interest. I believe the point made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), that we do develop loyalties to companies and to organizations when we are put on their boards and have an opportunity to participate in decision-making, is a perfectly logical and accurate point, one that I think we ignore at our peril.

The second point I wish to make regarding this bill is that it is promoted under the guise of controlling government spending. It is quite true that there is government money given to many of these corporations. For example, we give the CBC considerable sums. The amount of revenue the CBC has is not as great as it might be. On the other hand, the CBC is an institution of particular importance to Canada. It is also the kind of institution, it seems to me, that ought not to come under the direct control of politicians of any party. I suggest there may be one or two in this chamber who might be considered exceptions to that rule, members who have the breadth of wisdom and statesmanlike qualities to be able to handle such a potentially powerful propaganda machine. However, I have not met any in the House, and I include myself, because we are all susceptible to emotional feelings in the House of Commons. The point I am trying to make is that while government money might be involved, and the amounts are significant, the proposal would also impinge on areas of great concern to Canadians, areas into which it is unwise for Members of Parliament to venture. I think the CBC is a perfect example of this principle.

Another perfect example of this principle would be the operations of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission which regulates all of the broadcasting industry of Canada. I could also mention other regulatory bodies, such as the Canadian Transportation Commission. In my case I think it would be very unwise for me to be appointed to the board of directors of, say, the CNR or Air Canada, because decisions that they take may affect my constituency and I might be in a position where I could have the board of directors accept recommendations which might not be in keeping with the good of the country as a whole.

These are principles that I think we ignore at considerable risk to the structures that we have created in this country, that are unique to this country and with which to date we have had a certain level of success. Where these techniques have been implanted into other countries, their level of success has not been as great because the members of their legislatures have not been able to stand away to allow their handiwork, which is the act of the legislature establishing corporations, to be carried through by the boards of directors and managements that they have selected.

By and large we have used Crown corporations in this country for a variety of purposes. For example, we have used Crown corporations to provide services that we have deemed essential but for which purpose there was little private capital and little or no willingness to accept responsibility. The creation of Trans-Canada Air Lines, now Air Canada, is a perfect example of that kind of operation. Air Canada, with its private board of directors and the financing that the government of Canada has provided to it, has given Canada a unique and efficient service. But even then I could point out that a few years ago a deterioration began to set in in the operations of Air Canada, a problem that was solved to some extent by providing competition from CP Air. Under the regional air transportation policy, additional competition was provided by CP Air and other regional carriers, which has forced the larger companies to pay attention to competitive pressure which formerly they were not sufficiently taking into account.

It seems to me that this kind of decision-making by government and by parliament has far superior efficacy than the pleading of a number of Members of Parliament on boards of directors or the pleading of representatives of all parties on boards of directors to attempt to get something done for a particular region. I must say I accept—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REINSTATEMENT OF LAW RELATING TO CAPITAL PUNISHMENT THAT EXISTED PRIOR TO DECEMBER 30, 1972

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock when the House gave consideration to other important matters I had just finished saying that while this bill lacked the perfection I should like to have seen in it, because I have been used to this House for over 15 years and understand that perfection is something we are not likely to see here in the form of legislation, I intend to support the bill on second reading, with all its imperfections. The gods must have been amused by this inconsistent society of man which after grave deliberation says that the taking of life is the worst of all possible crimes and then proceeds deliberately to fix for that crime the punishment of death by hanging. I think of what Montaigne said:

> There is no man so good who were he to submit all his thoughts and actions to the law, would not deserve hanging ten times in his life.

Much has been said in this debate on the philosophical and ethical aspects of this matter and it would be a waste of time to repeat many of the very good arguments that have been made here. As I have said, this is the fifth debate on this subject in which I have participated in the House and my views are on the record many times. I suggest there are certain collateral issues which have crept into the debate, have become part of it, and we must consider them in light of the subject matter which is the issue of this bill.

One issue is the relationship between the elected representative, the Member of Parliament, and the people. It would be improper, wrong, foolhardy and stupid for any elected representative at any level of government to suggest he can ignore, deny or refuse to give most careful consideration to what his constituents in particular, and the people of the country in general, have to say at any time on any given issue. Certainly, the views of the people who elect us must play an exceedingly important part in the decisions which we individually come to in this House.

Polls are not completely reliable, and letter writers are those who feel most strongly about an issue. I am very happy to know that there are in this country people who feel very definitely and positively about things and will write letters to support those feelings. But it has been my experience, not only in this House but in other places, that the people who write letters are those who have the determination to put their views on the record. But they are not, alone—for that reason—safe criteria of the general feeling of the country.

I have lived with this issue for many years. I would say that eight or nine years ago a reasonable majority of the people in this country were opposed, in general principle, to capital punishment on the basis on which it then stood in the law. Even taking into account all the safeguards in assessing public opinion—and I have given a few of them here—if it be correct that the majority of people today favour capital punishment, and I think probably it is, I suggest it is equally true that 10 or 15 years from now—I venture to make this prediction—a substantial majority of the people in this country and those in most western, democratic countries, will stand up and indicate they are opposed to capital punishment being part of our penal code.

I spoke against capital punishment the first time I was a candidate in a federal election. I spoke against it in other election campaigns. The first time I spoke against it during an election campaign was 35 years ago. I have been quoted. I have made my position clear. I have spoken during every election campaign, not raising the issue on my own but answering questions when asked. I have made it quite clear that so far as I am concerned, I have been and continue to be opposed to capital punishment.

I have made public speeches on this question in and out of my constituency. I have spoken in debates in the House of Commons and I have been, am now and will continue to be in favour of abolition. So when I had the honour to be re-elected to this House on October 30, I was elected as a person whose views were plainly known. I have received 11 letters from my constituency. Six of these were in favour of the retention of capital punishment, one was undecided and four were against. I mention this, not because I am not affected by the views of my constituents. I say it, however, to those hon. members who during the course of this debate have expressed concern, have shown a measure of doubt and difficulty and even mental anguish in having to decide issues regarding which the opinions of themselves and their constituents might not coincide.

It is not for me to make up the minds of these hon. members or exert pressure upon them, but I suggest to them that the trends and weight of opinion in respect of issues of this kind can vary, will change, and the views of people today which exist, as I propose to show, for a specific reason will not be the same years from now. I believe I am right on moral, legal and philosophical grounds. Much has been said in this and other debates about capital punishment being a deterrent. There are figures available. Members on both sides of the House have taken advantage of those figures because they are capable of being adjusted. I do not suggest that they are twisted or distorted, but they are capable of being used on either side of the argument.

In my view, after the closest possible examination, it would seem evident that the statistics do not establish that homicide coming within the meaning of murder has had any significant increase terms of percentage of population since 1967. The information in other jurisdictions seems to bear this out. I shall not go beyond this. Others have taken a different view, and I respect those who support retention. I hope that they, in turn, will give me and those whose views are the same as mine credit for honestly believing that fear of hanging has not in the past been an effective deterrent. I suggest that every time the hangman springs the trap and sends the hooded and pinioned, condemned person spinning down to dark eternity, this is a clear example of the failure of capital punishment as a deterrent.

In addition to this I have a sort of statistical score of my own. No one, I suppose, is an expert on the question of murder and capital punishment, but in the course of my professional career I have defended a very large number of people charged with homicide. In the course of the trial, the Preliminary hearing and the investigations which I always found it essential to be involved in, as well as the studies I made, I became pretty well acquainted with these people. I am using this information because I believe today we have been sort of engulfed in the problems connected with social difficulties which are creeping into this debate. I think we of the present are justified in using the periscope of the past to look into the future. After all, one cannot be associated with these people day after day, particularly during the course of a trial, and with them three or four times a day briefing them, talking to them and obtaining their reactions, without having a reasonably accurate opinion of their motivation, their course of action, why they did this thing, how it came about—in fact, the whole background.

In each and every one of these cases I can say categorically that it is my belief the thought of the punishment did not enter into the calculation or the consideration of those who committed the crime. To that extent I use my own personal observations, my understanding and my interpretation of the discussions I have had with these people to support the comfort I take from the statistics which have been made available. So this knowledge, added to my own views and the reading I have done, has placed me where I stand in this debate.

In passing, I refer to the fact that a short time ago the parliament of the United Kingdom, by a very substantial majority, abolished capital punishment in Northern Ireland. I was of the opinion that the debate which took place about two or three months ago—which, by the way, it is interesting to note was dealt with and disposed of in two ten-minute speeches for and against—dealt with capital punishment in the United Kingdom, but apparently it did not apply to Northern Ireland. Just two or three weeks ago the United Kingdom Parliament, which apparently has legislative jurisdiction in this respect over Northern Ireland, passed a bill which had the effect of abolishing capital punishment specifically in Northern Ireland.

When one looks at the sad and tragic history in these dark days of Northern Ireland, the mass, deliberate killings and the violence in that country, it is interesting to find that the legislature which has jurisdiction over this issue is so little taken with the view that capital punishment constitutes a deterrent that it has seen fit, by a non-partisan vote involving all parties in the United Kingdom House of Commons, to legislate the abolition of capital punishment at this time specifically in Northern Ireland. That is a fact which I urge my colleagues not to ignore.

I do not want to leave this issue without a final comment on a related issue, for it is not sufficient for me to simply indicate my position and let it go at that. I do not believe that ordinary Canadians are blood thirsty, violent or revengeful by nature. They are not anxious to take human life even by an act of parliament. However, something must be wrong when such large numbers of people in this country wish to restore, or even think about restoring the practice of legal killing by hanging.

There is unease, anxiety and deep unrest abroad in this land. It has been manifested in many ways, particularly in this debate, not only in the House but in the country. The anger and the unease over our prison, penitentiary, parole and prison leave systems I believe is an apt demonstration of that feeling. It cannot be ignored or separated from this debate. In my view, this debate should have taken place concurrently with debate on remedial measures in respect of these and other penal issues.

I believe there are many people who think we have gone too far, too fast; that we have not been able to digest many of the social and economic reforms in our society; that our body politic probably has severe indigestion. This debate is one of those manifestations of the fact, as is the feeling of many people in the country. In recent years we have witnessed in many western countries phenomena such as the tremendous acceleration toward urbanization, with all its concomitant defects and problems. Associated with it and partly related to it is the rise of permissiveness, militancy, violence, changes in life style, increased use of drugs, and the thrust of organized crime. These are many of the phenomena. What will come out of this environment we do not know.

People who came to this continent did so to satisfy a desire for self-expression, for incentive and individual enterprise. Big government and big business have made great strides to blunt these characteristics and substitute for them organized welfare and an industrialized and highly centralized society, and in doing so they have disturbed and blunted the drive and the ability to cope of individuals who built this land into what it is.

So having in a way given up our right to deal with problems on our own, we have allowed the giant unions and the large corporations and, above all, big, benevolent governments to order our affairs to an almost unlimited extent. It has been a sort of trade-off of our independence. We have been told by our masters that this is in exchange for a better life, more order and stability. But we have obtained neither. In fact, we have probably lost out on both counts. So, made hostile by these phenomena, yearning for an orderly and stable society, people demand scapegoats. It is an expression of human nature.

To some extent a request for the restoration of capital punishment has a measure of symbolism about it, with which I sympathize though I cannot accept it to the point of voting for it. I was glad to read in the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he seems, at long last, to have recognized this fact on behalf of the government. I hope this bill passes. But whether it does or does not, this other major issue will continue. It must be settled. It will not wait, because time does not wait. It will not wait because there is a corrosion and a sickness in our society which has to be diagnosed at once and remedied. It will not wait because if it is not dealt with and eased, the existing malady which is temporary may well become permanent and terminal.

While I cannot, and will not under any circumstances, believe that hanging a criminal will make a better world. But for a better world to be brought about there must be the acceptance that certain action will be taken to make it better; there must be some assurance of a reasonable amount of tranquillity in our society.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the last few months this House has heard literally dozens of speeches on the subject contained in Bill C-2. The subject of the supreme penalty has been covered from every conceivable point of view, sometimes covered haltingly but more frequently, I think, with passionate conviction and eloquence. It is doubtful to me, however, whether any minds have been changed as a result of this prolonged debate because capital punishment, like abortion, poses for many a deep moral dilemma.

I wish to speak tonight, not because I feel I can bring anything vitally new or convincing to the floor but principally because I feel also very deeply about the subject and I am prepared to stand or fall for my convictions or, if you prefer—my prejudices. I do not like to be at odds with what I take to be the wishes of my constituents. What I find even more demeaning, however, is to be at odds with myself. If I voted in any other way than to support this bill before us, I am afraid that I would forever regard myself as being grossly, in fact obscenely, disloyal to a very personal matter of conscience which has inhabited my mind for many years.

The issue of capital punishment has been proclaimed many times as a moral decision or a matter of conscience, and I agree with this position. For those members who believe that the shadow of the gallows represents a deterrent sufficient to inhibit the prospective transgressions against society of a life taker, there is no alternative but to vote against this bill. However, for those who believe, just as firmly and just as sincerely, that since murder is more frequently an impulse, a crime of passion usually directed against friends and family, the deterrent effect of capital punishment is enormously suspect.

This group, the latter group of members—and, I hope, the majority of members in the House tonight—have no alternative but to vote in favour of the bill before us even though it represents but de facto abolition. To these members the vengeful, premeditated taking of human life by the state is a violation of civilized behaviour far too abhorrent to be accepted with equanimity. Both of these pro- and anti-capital punishment positions are at least consistent with the concept of a vote of conscience and are therefore rational positions to hold.

The members who are really troubled, it seems to me, are the ones who are going to vote against their philosophical and moral principles chiefly because they believe that a vote contrary to their conscience is at once democratic and pleasing to their constituents. I reject this idea, this notion completely, because I reject the concept that a Member of Parliament is little more than his constituents' delegate, that is, that he should always reflect accurately, as far as he can gauge in his decisions and in his votes, what he regards as the temporal opinion of the majority of the people he is privileged to represent.

If our democratic process no longer depends on electoral confidence in the judgment of an individual Member of Parliament, we should burn down this House, as Guy Fawkes once tried to do with the mother of parliaments, and install a multiplicity of computers to sample public opinion continuously, day by day. Members of Parliament at worst become redundant if we take this view, that is, if we embrace the delegate concept, and at best, little more than highly paid ombudsmen social workers whose main preoccupation in this House is to entreat ministers of the Crown for some favourable titbit such as a pension for Mrs. Jones.

My objections to the death penalty are as follows, and I will summarize them: first, there is no statistical evidence, that I have been able to uncover, that capital punishment is a deterrent. Murder, as I have said before, is most often a crime of passion and premeditated murder is extremely rare. Second, juries being human and composed of humans can make mistakes and innocent men can die. Third, even in the various American states which have retained the death penalty most murders are never solved, or murder suspects are acquitted by juries who choose to err on the side of mercy rather than on the side of doubtful testimony coming before them. Fourth, legalized murder—that is, capital punishment—in my view and in the view of many members of this House brutalizes society. Finally, I could not execute a human myself; therefore I feel that I am in no position to ask someone else to do what I, as an individual, could not bring myself to do.

I have looked into some of the authorities on the subject. Karl F. Schuessler in his book The Deterrent Influence of the Death Penalty wrote this:

—previous studies have uniformly concluded that the death penalty is inconsequential as a deterrent, that the relative frequency of murder in a given population is a function of the conditions under which the group lives.

This is a very important statement, because if we change the conditions under which we as a group live then we are certainly going to have a profound effect on the incidence of murder, and I cannot accept the fact that if the state goes into the business of murder an improvement in the homicide rate in our society can be brought about. What Mr. Schuessler says about groups I think might also apply to sub-groups. He concludes that "different population classifications have different homicide and execution rates," meaning of course that the difference affects different people differently.

I think it is well-known that the law tends to discriminate against low socio-economic males in its application. This discrimination also holds true in terms of convictions in homicide cases. Nothing that I have read about this subject, therefore, has persuaded me that I should abandon my position that state murder or, if you like, execution, brutalizes society and that it has little or no influence on public security. We must, then, ask ourselves: Why is there in existence now this powerful, public sentiment apparently in favour of returning to the noose?

I do not know of any parliamentarian who has not gone through agony of doubt about capital punishment and the bill before us. We have been bombarded by the pro- and anti-noose forces. Incidentally, both sides have used the Bible liberally to reinforce their positions. The candidates of the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party, and of my own party in my riding during the last election all came out as abolitionists. I am pleased that we are in the company of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a former prime minister, and the leader of my own party as being philosophically opposed to capital punishment.

We will all vote for the present bill, but when it gets to committee we will be asked to consider certain amendments to retain the death penalty in limited circumstances and also amendments which would broaden its use in the light of current public opinion. I, of course, cannot be hypothetical about what might happen in the committee, but certainly a number of amendments will be put forward and undoubtedly some of them will be accepted. Perhaps the matter of hijacking and the protection of families of policemen and prison guards might be considered favourably.

I would like my constituents, and people all across Canada, to know that Members of Parliament on both sides of this moral question have tried desperately to analyse the rationale behind current public sentiment in favour of returning to the noose. Regardless of the outcome of the vote, I insist that no public-be-damned attitude exists on the part of elected representatives in this chamber.

I think that the urge to reinstate capital punishment has become, not a citizen regression into a state of barbarism but a symbol of the general malaise in society, which was touched on by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), a symbol expressed by people who feel that something is definitely wrong and either their elected representatives are unable or perhaps unwilling to do anything about it. I do not think we are either unwilling or unable to come to grips with problems, but I am suggesting that that is what the public thinks.

There exists a profound public concern about the increasing number of crimes of violence. There is a suspicion that even when dangerous men are caught and convicted, irresponsible parole and prison policies release these men to prey again on the public after they have served a minimal portion of their sentences. That may or may not be true, but nevertheless I am certain that the feeling exists, and not without some foundation.

Citizens also consider it irresponsible of prison officials to allow convicted, dangerous sexual offenders unescorted weekend freedom, which in one instance led to the tragic murder of the daughter of a prison guard. The public is also fed up with policies which appear to direct more sympathy to the rehabilitation of the criminal than to the protection of the innocent. We as Members of Parliament have to face it; we cannot avoid it.

I am also convinced that much of the pro-noose sentiment arises from a nostalgic yearning for simpler times when things did not change so fast. The new morality to many people means no morality at all. The increasing incidence of drugs, long hair, funny clothes and the decline of religion and the work ethic all combine to pulverize traditional values and priorities and to insulate one generation from its predecessor.

I believe that Canadians and North Americans generally are frustrated. They are bombarded with propaganda, afraid, herded into cities where they are rootless and isolated. People have been forced to cope with more change in the last 40 years than civilization had to cope with in the previous 4,000 years. Popularizing this viewpoint is TV's Archie Bunker who illustrates the difficulties many people have in making value adjustments. But if social tensions resulting from inability to cope with rapid change are so deep and complex, and if the death penalty has become a symbol upon which all of societies ills are focused, I ask you, Sir, would the execution of a relatively few murderers, including the odd innocent person, help much to resolve these tensions? I very much doubt it.

That, however, does not mean that Members of Parliament should ignore the legitimate demands for better public safety, and I do not think we will. We can begin by demanding tighter gun control legislation. We can do as I did before Christmas, call for a parliamentary investigation of the parole and day pass system. We can also begin to make certain that dangerous sexual offenders are permanently isolated from society, because apparently there is no treatment for them, and that murderers stay behind bars for a specified time. We can provide the funds necessary for a massive educational, rehabilitative enforcement attack on the drug problem, a problem which leads inevitably to degradation, debilitation, death—and, yes, sometimes even murder.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I have heard the letters from constituents read into the record in order to rationalize the positions members perhaps had already taken. Last week we listened to the speech of the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Caouette), who read to us from his mailbag. I would like to do the same now because I think my letter rises far above the Old Testament logic of retribution and vengeance and puts at least one individual on a more contemporary celestial plane. I will withhold the name of the writer. He wrote:

> A couple of years ago when I applied for a position at Matsqui—

Meaning Matsqui institution.

> —I was asked a number of questions, of which one was, am I against capital punishment? My reply was, and has not changed, "As long as humans are used to investigate, charge, try, and finally execute a person who has committed a capital offence, a mistake could be made, and it is impossible to rectify that mistake."

Here, I think, is the most important part, Mr. Speaker:

> Recently my daughter died and at present two young people are in custody in Vancouver charged with her death. If they are convicted, they could face the extreme penalty. Our whole family was hurt deeply by our daughter's passing, but can you imagine what our feelings would be if that mistake I mentioned earlier was made?

He is referring to the execution of an innocent man. He continues:

> Don't get me wrong; we all want the guilty person or persons punished and punished severely. I think, and this is my own feelings, I would rather see them—persons convicted of a capital offence—put away for life with no hope of parole, passes or appeals, than if again that mistake was made the person or persons would have lost naught but time.

We might quarrel with the details of that letter, but I think it takes a very big man—and this one was suffering from a very grave loss—to rise above that and come out as an abolitionist. I think all of us who have not had to face his situation should ponder on the agony that this man and his family went through, and the idealism and the courage it took to put forward his viewpoint. His position is both surprising and encouraging. It reminds me of the abolitionist position taken by the Kennedy family after having lost two outstanding sons by assassins' bullets.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that those of us who are supporting Bill C-2 are repudiating the wishes of Canadians. There are many who seize upon the capital punishment issue as a solution to their many concerns about the wrongs of our current society. I disagree with them. Execution is no solution to anything. How much public outcry would be raised, for instance, if we hanged a dog or a horse or a man publicly, on colour television? For those who believe that hanging is a deterrent, would not a public exhibition of hanging with nationwide dissemination over the electronic media be a greater deterrent? Why hide it in private? Of course I exaggerate, Mr. Speaker, but a grisly exhibition like the one I have described would cause a public outcry against further executions far greater than any kind of retentionist sentiment that may prevail today.

Mr. Speaker, I hope with all my heart that the bill passes tonight and that Canada may continue to be among the number of civilized nations in the world which can no longer tolerate the death penalty as a cruel and unusual punishment and banish it forever from our judicial process.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the government is anxious to conclude second reading of this bill, and as a result not everyone who wishes to speak may be allowed to do so, I hope to keep my remarks to a bare minimum so that as many members as possible may participate. Later this evening there will be an alleged free vote on this question. I would have thought that those who advanced that nomenclature would also have taken the view that there should be a completely free debate, but apparently such an idea is beyond the logic of those who urged that discussion on this question cease tonight.

The main reason I am opposing this measure, Mr. Speaker, is that it would merely carry on the unsatisfactory experiment that was commenced in December, 1967. I believe it is recognized by all hon. members that, rightly or wrongly, the vast majority of Canadians wish the death penalty retained. I think my hon. friend from Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) recognized that position.

In that connection I should like to say that I for one do not think there is any great advantage in retaining the method of execution—that is, hanging—and that consideration should be given to bringing the death penalty up to date with the methods which have been developed in recent years in order to make it more humane. Nevertheless, I believe that the death penalty should be retained as the ultimate punishment for capital murder.

I have listened to argument on both sides about how a member should behave when he disagrees with his constituents. I listened to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) on the CBC program "Cross Country Check-up" on Sunday and heard what he said about referendums. I understand the rationalization of some hon. members who are opposed to capital punishment, even though I disagree with it, when they say they are going to support this measure contrary to the wishes of their constituents. To me, their rationalization is a very strong argument for supporting the idea of a national referendum on this question.

Contrary to the views of the Solicitor General on a referendum, I do not feel such a vote should be held in a vacuum, but that prior to the poll there should be a wide-ranging debate all across the country during which all the information on the subject could be made available to the voter before he cast his ballot.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the argument against a referendum is a spurious one. Such arguments are only advanced to deny the people of the nation a chance to express themselves clearly on the subject. We find their representatives here denying their views for various reasons. I would say that at least the arguments are much stronger for a referendum on this subject than they were the last time such a device was used, which was when the Liberal government of the day polled the Canadian people on the question of conscription.

As for the measure itself, I do not see how anyone can support it. With respect to the abolitionists, it retains the principle of capital punishment; but probably they are depending on the continuation of the present Prime Minister's penchant for flouting laws with which he does not agree. In this case, though, it is hard to see how even he could have the gall to flout a law for which he is responsible. At least prior to last December it could be said that the reason for ignoring the law was that the Pearson government had placed it on the books. If this measure passes tonight, even that flimsy excuse will disappear. The retentionists are unhappy to see such double-standard legislation continued; they can only expect a continuation of the present de facto abolition situation if the measure passes.

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to say a few words about deterrence, because in my opinion that is the crux of this whole debate. The legislation recognizes the validity of this argument, otherwise why have capital punishment even for the murder of police officers and prison guards? Figures that have recently become available show a tremendous increase in homicide, both solved and unsolved, since 1967 when the general deterrent was removed. I defy anyone to say that in the past ten years, a period in which there have been no hangings, Canada has been a less violent country than it was previously in its history, even though there have been periods of great stress and turmoil such as during the great depression and two world wars. Any member who says that retention of capital punishment would promote a more violent society is just expressing bleeding-heart mishmash.

One just has to look at the real world, see what happens there and take note of the deterrent that capital punishment has been. I completely agree with the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) who cited the example of organized crime. He pointed out that that segment of our society is pretty well orderly and is not subject to much violence, primarily because of the deterrence of capital punishment. Its members know what is waiting for them if they disobey the laws of that group.

I think we can take an example much closer to home for most of us by examining the situation of our driving laws. We all know that the existence of radar machines, breathalyzers and the points system help people to obey the driving laws of this country; people know they are there and are being used. If these machines were not there, or a person's driving privileges were not at stake, one can imagine the increase in the carnage on the highways. As far as deterrence is concerned, no one can tell me there is less deterrence in capital punishment than a radar machine, breathalyzer or demerit points system.

This legislation is no good. If I had any doubts, they would be dispelled by recalling the performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in administering such a law over the past five years. I urge hon. members to oppose the passage of the bill at this stage.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, 101 speeches have been made during the 12 days of this debate. It is only fair to say that everything has been said. There is little left to be said, but I rise to support the bill because I support the principle of the abolition of capital punishment. I also rise because this view does not necessarily represent the view of the majority of my constituents. Notwithstanding that fact, and regardless of how the majority of my constituents may feel on this matter, I do not think they would want me, as their representative in this House, to vote against the dictates of my conscience. My conscience dictates that I should support this bill and, indeed, I should urge the government to go one step further and bring a measure before this House that would totally abolish capital punishment in Canada.

I began my remarks by saying that everything had been said. Consequently, I will be brief. However, while I support this bill and would like to see a measure ultimately brought before this House totally abolishing capital punishment in Canada, at the same time I would like to see a tightening up of our parole laws to ensure that dangerous criminals are not turned loose on society.

Finally, may I say to hon. members who support capital punishment, those who put forward the argument that capital punishment is a deterrent, that I respect their views. I quote from the novel Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak:

> If the beast who sleeps in man could be held down by threats—any kind of threat, whether of jail or of retribution after death—then the highest emblem of humanity would be the lion tamer in the circus with his whip, not the Prophet who sacrificed himself.

I urge the House to support this bill.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my colleague said that 12 days of debate have gone by. At the beginning of the debate I did not intend to make any comments on this bill; however, as comments were made by my colleagues some very interesting points were raised. I agree with the hon. member who preceded me that everything must have been said. We have heard many statistics. What an experience it must have been for those who like statistics to compare the pros and cons and make interesting calculations. We have compared other nations such as Ireland which recently abolished capital punishment, as well as the state of California which recently reinstated capital punishment. I am somewhat at a disadvantage, being almost the last person to speak on the subject before we are called upon to stand and be counted. All has been said. Even though the galleries are filled with spectators tonight and one is tempted to repeat what has already been said, I will refrain from doing that.

At the outset, I would like to say that I have not heard one speaker who would not much rather abolish capital punishment. However, many of my colleagues are attaching a number of conditions to this luxury. Some of these conditions are worth repeating. My colleagues in the House are saying, "Remove the threat of murder; remove the fear of war; remove the fear that whole generations of young people could be destroyed by some drug that someone may be pushing; remove the terrible, agonizing pain of a mother whose child has been raped, and remove the fear and devastating effect it has on a human being when he is deprived of the freedom to enjoy the accomplishments of a lifetime, or when the goods he has acquired are destroyed or taken from him—then we will fight until we have no breath left in our bodies, to abolish capital punishment."

Because as a child, I can truthfully say, I witnessed almost all of those things I have talked about, I have listened to or read with great interest the comments my colleagues have advanced, and I must say that at times those comments were not made from the heart. I am not being critical of any party in particular. All of us are guilty of that. I am not critical, because many of the things about which I have spoken need to be experienced to be fully understood.

For example, one has to experience the pain it is to be poor in a rich country in order to understand and support some of the social advances which are being made and some of the ideas which certain of our colleagues are putting forward in this field. One has to be old in order to understand how devastating it is to be poor as an old person. And many of my colleagues are not old. Some of my colleagues have made speeches with their lips only, probably to explain their concern to the press and people back home, because the people back home are very concerned—all of us know that—and they are watching us closely because they look on us as the government, as the leaders in charge of the situation upon whom all depends in times of disaster.

They look upon us as the guardians of all that is held true, all that is worth writing down, all that is worth saying and all that is worth doing. These people have been watching us making deals with various groups of people, some of them criminals. They have watched us being pushed into a corner by elements which are threatening to destroy our system from the outside. It is these people who wonder just how secure our system is.

My colleagues who have held referendums, who have questioned their constituents as I have, know what the people want, and some of them have used this debate to justify their own positions. They have tried to use arguments; indeed, they have invented arguments such as, "We shall not call it capital punishment, but murder punishable by death, or, "We would vote to abolish capital punishment if we could be sure that the prisoner would be locked up for life and the keys thrown away." What a barbaric way to treat a human being! It is true, though, that the prisoners we lock up in jail today are better off than some people who are living under stumps and in snow huts in our country. They say they would vote for the death penalty if the murderer, the guilty person, could be shot instead of hanged, or if the murderer were gassed, cremated or, maybe, drowned. This they say, would be more humane.

Mr. Speaker, all these things have been tried individually and in mass operation ever since the world began. People have been executed by every society in the world as far back as man can remember. The cave man executed anyone who invaded his cave or challenged his seniority over his woman. In our own lifetime we have witnessed executions, singular or en masse, for crimes that have not even seen a court. It happens all over the world. Yet it is significant that not one of my colleagues—not a single one—is in favour of capital punishment if—and this is a big "if"—the reason which prompts society to take this drastic step could somehow be removed.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I do not wish to say the last word on this subject; I do not think I have the right. There are signs all over the world that this is actually happening—that the need for society to take this drastic step will be removed. As we become masters of the universe we shall become masters of ourselves. Such is the faith I have in humanity. We shall learn to understand what sickness it is that drives men to commit capital crimes. We shall learn how to cure—yes, how to prevent such a disease—as we advance, continuing the pace of our advance in the last 50 years. The world population will advance to a point at which this is possible. I will go even further. I predict that this evolution will take place within the next 50 to 75 years; we shall understand so much about the human body and the human brain that we will be able to prevent these things.

I believe that some of my colleagues are ahead of their time. They have achieved this intellectual status now. They are ahead of their constituents and they ought to follow their own consciences. They are not only ahead on this subject but in the application of some of the other things with which this House concerns itself. Our social laws are, to my thinking, too far advanced in some areas. They say they do know better than the people they represent, and I agree. But until all people, not only Canadians and those living in the western world, have had a chance to evolve to the same extent intellectually as some of my colleagues, the abolition of capital punishment is premature. It is a luxury. I say that, and I sincerely believe it, and all my colleagues believe it. It is a luxury we cannot afford at this time. Until we have mastered all the things I have talked about we must, as those charged with the responsibility of protecting those in our care, discharge our duty.

Mr. Kenneth J. Higson (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honour and great privilege for me to rise in this chamber to speak for the first time on behalf of the people of the constituency of Lincoln, which riding is in the heart of the Niagara peninsula in the province of Ontario.

I have noted that all hon. members when speaking for the first time have paid tribute to you, Sir, and your deputy, and have congratulated you upon the elevation to your high office. I, too, join with my colleagues in this House to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Had I spoken earlier, my words might have been mere form rather than words with meaning, but I have now had the opportunity to observe your command of this House, your sense of wit and humour, your warmth of personality and great sense of fair play. I now have experienced the reasons why you are held in such high esteem and affection by all members of this House, and I appreciate those reasons.

In speaking for the first time, I might have preferred, Mr. Speaker, to tell you and hon. members of the House generally something of the constituency of Lincoln and the people whom I have the honour to represent. I trust I shall have an opportunity to talk about these things on another and more suitable occasion.

During this debate on the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code incorporated in Bill C-2, a great deal has been stated by members of this House, both by the so-called abolitionists and retentionists of the death penalty. As is usual with the final speaker or two, there is little original or of startling consequence on this subject that has not heretofore been brought before this House for consideration. Thus, one is left to comment on one's personal observations of what has transpired in this country during recent years, one's conclusions and recommendations.

The ultimate question to be decided—that is to say, whether we are to retain the death penalty for all premeditated murder or merely for the murder of police officers and others listed in subsection 2 of section 214, as proposed in Bill C-2—is a most difficult and complex one, having as it does social, legal and moral ramifications and sparked by a high degree of emotion regardless of one's point of view on the subject. It is a subject which has clearly awakened the conscience of Canada, as may be evidenced by the continuous and voluminous amount of mail which each of us as members has received during the last five months, and I am sure over greater periods of time for members who have been here longer than I have.

I should have preferred that this parliament deal with the question on a more permanent basis than continuing the experiment, as it were, for a further five-year period. While I appreciate that any statutory provision may be repealed or amended by an act of this or future parliaments, I do not believe that it is either wise or intelligent to deal with this matter on an ad hoc or continual-review basis.

I should have preferred, as well, that this parliament deal not just with the narrow question as to whether we are to abolish the death penalty for most murder for a further five-year period, but rather that we consider in a most comprehensive manner the startling increase in crime, including armed robbery, rape, arson, theft, drug abuse and similar crime, and generally the administration of our penal system, including the administration of our parole system. The fear of our citizens to go about their daily activities in safety in our cities and towns across this country has, in my view, created to a large extent the emotion surrounding the issue which we are discussing tonight.

Much has been stated as to the deterrent effect of the death penalty, and presumably reliable figures have been quoted to illustrate or prove that the removal of the death penalty has not substantially increased the homicide rate during the last five years. However, I have heard very little by way of figures to show how many murders did not take place because of the presence of capital punishment in the Criminal Code prior to five years ago, and I suspect that such figures would be impossible to compile. I am sure of the advice offered by the sociologists and psychologists on the subject, but I do not comprehend the argument that punishment, albeit the ultimate punishment, is not a deterrent to wrongdoing—in the case at hand, the crime of premeditated murder.

I have heard the argument of the finality of the death penalty in the case of an error in our judicial process. I must admit this is difficult, for admittedly the subject at hand is not a pleasant one. But such argument does a disservice to our judicial process, for we must say that such cases are very rare, and we will retain the royal prerogative of clemency which should be exercised in favour of the convicted should there by any shadow of doubt as to his or her guilt, or should there be humanitarian or extenuating reasons not to exercise the penalty of death.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I very much regret interrupting the hon. member, more particularly since it is his maiden speech, but the House made an order earlier today that would permit the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) as mover of the bill, to reply for 15 minutes before the vote is taken. Again, I apologize to the hon. member and thank him for the spirit in which he takes the interruption.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate on second reading I should like to emphasize a few points that I think need emphasizing, and to answer some of the questions and arguments put by hon. members during the debate. It was interesting this evening that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said that 101 members had spoken in the debate to this time. As hon. members know, I made a lengthy statement in favour of the bill at the beginning of the debate, so I shall not repeat those arguments this evening.

Above all, I should like to urge upon members, especially those in doubt and those undecided, to vote for the bill on second reading. By doing this they will send the bill to the justice committee where it can be considered in detail and amended where appropriate. Consequently, this will give parliament the opportunity to improve the bill and to examine many of the suggestions put forward in the debate, many of which were good suggestions. So I ask those who are undecided to vote for the bill now, exactly for that reason. This will give the bill a chance to be improved. If it is not improved, then the House still has a chance to vote against it on third reading or at the report stage.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) made this point in her speech of May 22, and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) also made the point very well this afternoon. When the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands spoke, she said she supported the principle of abolition but did not like many aspects of this bill. Others have said that they would support the abolition of capital punishment if some improvements were made in the parole system and in the penal system. Is not this the sort of thing that can and should be considered by the committee? There will be an opportunity to present amendments in the committee and also at the report stage of the bill. If a member votes against the bill at this stage, he will eliminate any opportunity for further discussion or amendment.

I personally feel there should be improvements made in the parole and temporary absence system. It is for this reason that we announced in the Speech from the Throne that improvements would be made in the prison and parole system. Because we were very concerned about this, my predecessor set up the Hugessen task force in 1972. Later this week, or possibly next week, I will present proposals to the House for improving the parole and temporary absence system in a general way. I might say, further, that we are also studying several possibilities for changing the parole provisions as they apply to convicted murderers, and I would be willing to discuss these proposals with the justice committee if and when the bill is sent to that committee.

There are other areas in which we could amend the bill as well. When the bill was introduced in January—it was one of the first bills that was introduced—at that time we did not have the murder statistics for 1971, which was one of the reasons for putting forward a bill that would continue the previous law in force over the last five years. We now have another year's statistics. Also, in that time we have been able to get to know each other in this House. This was a new parliament and when we presented the bill we did not know what to expect. We had a minority government and we did not know what would be the opinions of members with respect to capital punishment. We now have a better feel of what is in the minds of hon. members, and again this will provide us with the opportunity to accept and consider amendments.

Many hon. members have asked why we have a bill that retains capital punishment for the murder of two categories of individuals, policemen and prison guards. If the House remembers, when this measure was introduced in 1967 the basis for its introduction was the British experiment. The British parliament had decided to try an experiment for five years in which it abolished capital punishment for murder, except for the murder of prison guards and policemen. At the time we felt this would be an appropriate experimental move for ourselves. Since that time the five-year experiment expired in Britain and the British House of Commons decided to completely abolish capital punishment. However, this year, as hon. members know, there was an attempt by a number of private members to have capital punishment reinstated by another vote. On that occasion the British House of Commons again turned down the reinstatement of capital punishment.

I might say that in the five and a half years since we partially abolished capital punishment there has been no certain trend, At the beginning of the debate I pointed out that immediately after partial abolition, in certain provinces, and in particular in the province of Ontario, the largest, most industrialized and most urban province in Canada, for three successive years there was a decline in the number of murders. After three years there was a slight increase. In other provinces there was a steady increase, although slight in all, right through 1968. In some provinces there was a decrease in the latter part of the five-year trial period. There has been no definite trend following partial abolition in 1968.

As I said at the beginning of the debate, I would prefer complete abolition, but first of all this is a government bill decided upon by the government to be put to the House. In putting it forward I am speaking on behalf of the government. This is to be a free vote, but it is a government bill. The same thing occurred in 1967 when a considerable number of members in the government party voted against the bill.

We put it forward as a compromise move toward total abolition in the best way we could. At the time we put the bill forward, we felt that if we proposed total abolition at that time it might be defeated and we would be left with the 1961 law which would probably, from the abolitionist's point of view, be much worse and would provide for many more executions than under the law we have had during the past five years.

For this reason, I find it very difficult to understand members who have spoken in this debate declaring themselves complete abolitionists and saying they would vote against this bill because it is not abolitionist enough. I fail to understand that argument, because if they are abolitionists and vote against it they will be left with a law which will provide for a much larger area of capital punishment. I cannot understand how a person who is really an abolitionist could fail to vote for a bill which moves toward the goal of total abolition, but instead would vote against the bill which is a move backward.

Some members during this debate have said they will not vote for this bill because it is a hybrid bill, neither abolitionist nor retentionist. As I pointed out this afternoon, if they vote against the bill they are left with a law which in itself is a hybrid law. They are left with the law of 1961 in which there is capital murder and non-capital murder. In other words, the law that will apply if they defeat this bill is a law under which certain types of murder will lead to life imprisonment and other types of murder will lead to capital punishment. So they are not being consistent in their arguments. The difference between the two laws is that this bill will provide for a greatly restricted area of capital punishment, and the law that will be in force if this bill is defeated will provide for a much larger area.

I said I would try to deal with some of the arguments put forward during the debate, an important one being that put forward by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He referred to a very important case decided in the United States Supreme Court. In that case the U.S. Supreme Court decided that capital punishment was contrary to the United States Bill of Rights on the ground that it was an unnecessarily cruel punishment. Consequently, they ruled it unconstitutional.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert suggested that we suspend the debate on this bill and refer the question of capital punishment to our Supreme Court, on the basis that our Bill of Rights contains provisions which are very similar to the United States Bill of Rights. I am sure the argument of the right hon. gentleman was a very serious one. I think perhaps capital punishment in relation to our Bill of Rights should be the subject of decision by the Supreme Court.

However, I do not think that gives us here in parliament the right to avoid our responsibilities in making a decision in respect of capital punishment this year, tonight and within the weeks to come. As a legislative body, I think we must accept our responsibility. There is a time to refer something to the Supreme Court for decision, but that is another matter. That is a method of deciding the question judicially. I think that should be done as well. But tonight and on other occasions to come I think we must decide how we stand on this issue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the statement just made by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). There was no suggestion on my part, indirectly or at all, that parliament should not discharge its responsibility. What I pointed out, having regard to the decision of the United States Supreme Court, was that the whole question as to whether capital punishment is a cruel and unnatural punishment should be decided by the Supreme Court of Canada. Otherwise we are going through a fatuous course of action. I want to make that very clear. I was not in any way suggesting that parliament should not make its own decision.

I also point out to the hon. gentleman that the government, as a government, should make clear what its attitude is on this matter, because a moment ago the minister said ministers could vote one way or the other, but this is a government bill.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the right hon. member. I thought he said earlier in the debate, I think in February, that we should suspend the debate and refer this matter to the Supreme Court. I think there is much merit in the suggestion that the question should be referred to the Supreme Court, but I think we should also make our decision. I might also say, in response to the right hon. gentleman's last remark, that I did not say ministers would vote whichever way they want. This is a government bill. The cabinet decided it would present this bill as a government bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I said that members of the government party are free to vote as they want, because it is a free vote. I only have two minutes left at my disposal although there are many arguments to which I should like to reply. Many hon. members have said they must vote against this bill because a vote in favour of it would be a vote in negation of measures to protect the public. In other words, if you vote for this bill you are not serious about protecting the public. I reject that argument. I think we must do everything possible to protect the public, but I have not seen one bit of evidence to suggest that capital punishment has ever protected the public.

Some of the worst murder rates in the world have existed and do exist in countries where there is a prevailing practice of applying capital punishment. On the other hand, I again refer to the example given by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) of the state of Maine in the United States which abolished capital punishment in 1913 and has had one of the lowest murder rates in the United States, much lower than many of the southern states in that country which have had capital punishment for many years and still have very high rates of murder.

Hon. members have talked about this bill in relation to parole and have suggested that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. Solicitor General but, it being 9.30 o'clock p.m. on all the clocks I can see, it is my duty, pursuant to special order made Wednesday, May 23, to interrupt the proceedings and put the question. The question is on the motion of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Allmand), which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—ATLANTIC CANADA—REQUEST FOR MASSIVE CAPITAL INVESTMENT IN LARGE INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, on March 28, 1973, I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) to consider certain infrastructures involving massive capital investment, such as a corridor road from McAdam, New Brunswick to Sherbrooke, Quebec. The corridor road would be a straight line highway through the state of Maine from the province of New Brunswick, and would be created by the extension of the Vanceboro-Lincoln road at the New Brunswick border to the outskirts of Sherbrooke in Quebec. Over such a road it would be some 400 miles from Fredericton to Montreal, compared with nearly 600 miles at the present time over Canadian highways or some 540 miles driving through the United States.

In addition to saving on distance, there is a great reduction in time involved. This is a factor of considerable importance where trucking costs are involved. At the present time, using either the Canadian or American routes there is a distance of approximately 665 miles from the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, to Montreal, Quebec. The corridor road would reduce this by approximately 200 miles in distance and about four hours in time.

Over the period of a week this would allow one additional trip per vehicle per week through the saving in time. The corridor road would bring the Atlantic provinces and the industrial centres of Quebec and Ontario much closer in terms of distance and time.

The construction of the modern highway envisaged by the corridor road linking the Atlantic provinces and the great markets of Quebec and Ontario through the state of Maine appears to be an important, indeed a vital component of any program for economic improvement of the region. Freight haulers, furniture vans, tank trailers and car carriers would gravitate to the corridor road. Truck transportation of milled lumber would also benefit in savings and cost of operation over the shorter route. Reduced freight rates for the movement of maritime products westward and on eastward shipments designed for the Atlantic market, or through our winter ports to the international markets of the world, would benefit producers and shippers. Fresh and frozen fish products from the maritimes could compete with imported products in central Canadian markets and the reduced prices for these goods would be a direct benefit to all consumers.

A shorter route to the markets of Quebec and Ontario would give tremendous impetus to highway transportation of all kinds, including tourist traffic, and would provide competition for our rail lines. Many low-class bulk commodities now tied to rail and water transportation could look to new market potential. Militarily, there is an advantage of the utmost importance in linking the United States with the great military base at Gagetown and the naval and air bases of the Maritimes.

To construct such a road would probably be expensive. In much of this territory where no previous road exists I would estimate it would be in excess of $200,000 a mile if built to the same standards as the Trans-Canada Highway. The improvement of any sections of existing low-standard roads would probably cost less, and improvement of a better paved road that could contribute to the highway would be less still. My estimate, based on slight research, puts the cost at about $60 million.

Maintenance due to the terrain and the climate would probably be comparable to maintenance of roads in New Brunswick. Big questions to be solved are, who would pay for the road, construct it and maintain it? With the American interest in talks about to take place with respect to international trade and tariffs, the auto pact, resource development and transportation, it seems that now is an appropriate time to place this subject on the agenda for discussion with our American friends.

It is my view that such a road would be welcomed in the state of Maine, but that state does not have the funds to build it. In my opinion, a road which would benefit two countries might well be constructed on a shared-cost basis. The first step, the important step, involves negotiations with the United States of America and the state of Maine. It is important that this matter be raised now. If this government has any intention of even considering the matter, negotiations should start now. If we envisage discussion on a bundle of rights covering a number of topics, this could well be the quid pro quo forming part of a general agreement on a multiplicity of matters.

I say to the government: Do your homework well, and do it now. We have already lost much time; there has been too much talk and too little action. We can make things happen in the Maritimes if we develop the arteries of commerce—the corridor road, our ports, the power potential in the tides of Fundy, the Chignecto canal and the P.E.I. causeway. We need investment in the Maritimes to challenge the enterprise of our people, not handouts. Invest in these arteries of commerce and development will follow as day follows night, and it will follow without handouts. Our people could then live in prosperity and dignity.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of replying to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I am always very interested in his suggestions. I find no difficulty in acknowledging that there is need for particular DREE assistance in the Atlantic provinces both in terms of infrastructure and support and incentive grants to local industries.

The policies of regional development are important to the economic well-being of that region, just as they are to Quebec and other parts of Canada which have not developed over the years to their fullest potential. The hon. member has referred to the failure of this policy. I do not agree with this conclusion, because I think there is growing evidence which shows marked improvement in the economy of the Atlantic region. However, I agree that we need improvement.

I am aware of a considerable increase in investment in manufacturing. I know that the employment rate has been growing gradually over the past four years. I also know that unemployment has continued to plague this area, but there has been a marked reduction in the outmigration of people from the maritimes, and it is encouraging to see a closing of the gap of the average income in the Atlantic compared to the national average.

I believe that Atlantic Canada's economy is starting to expand on the basis of the development of viable, long-term economic opportunities. Infrastructure projects are considered on their merits, and if they are sound and desirable they receive full consideration. I think our colleague from York-Sunbury will agree that since he asked this question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) over two months ago considerable progress has been made. I refer not only to the recent announcement of a DREE grant of over $2.5 millions to reopen the textile mill at Marysville, but also to the extensive federal-provincial co-operation regarding DREE involvement in all provinces which has been undertaken by the minister.

PUBLIC WORKS—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW POST OFFICE AT LAC MÉGANTIC—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF TENDERS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, on May 23 last, I put a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) with regard to the federal building there has been talk of building at Lac Mégantic for nine years now. On October 10, 1963—I was a member of Parliament at the time—the occupants of the Lac Mégantic post office asked me to intervene with the Post Office Department and the Department of Public Works to ask that repairs be made to that post office.

Here is the letter I received in reply to my question:

> The minister has asked me to reply to your letter dated October 3 with regard to the condition of the inside of the Lac Mégantic post office. Your remarks surprise us. Rest assured that our Montreal officers will inspect the building immediately. Unless you insist, we doubt that it will be necessary to consult Mr. Langford, since our Montreal office has an architect as well as an engineer who are capable, to our mind, of taking care of all repairs or alterations in that building.

At that time, I asked that repairs be made; it was found that no repairs were indicated because the building was in perfect condition. Some time later, those inspectors and engineers inspected the building and condemned it. Now, Mr. Speaker, that building is as solid as the Parliament buildings. That building is in perfect condition; it is still in good repair.

On that occasion I had also asked to repair the post office in Coaticook, a city identical to Lac Mégantic. There again was a very good building that has also been condemned, to which they found all kinds of defects. Those buildings were about to crumble down; they were not safe and could not be of any use to the public. So they had to be set aside.

As to the Lac Mégantic building, windows were boarded up and in 1963 they put a big sign on the door saying: A new post office will be built here to provide all public services to this area. Much water has flowed under the bridge since then.

Mr. Speaker, decisions of all kinds were made. First they decided to erect a small one-storey building and that was refused by the municipality on account of the municipal rules prohibiting one-storey buildings in the town. It had to have two storeys. Afterwards, I intervened on many occasions and with the support of the municipal council, I obtained the permission to erect a federal building for all federal services.

We have at home the following services: customs, post-office, Unemployment Insurance Commission offices, manpower services and other agencies of the federal government.

All those services could be in that building but it was closed; offices were sub-leased elsewhere and since then we pay rent. During the last eight years, Mr. Speaker, we paid almost $200,000 for rent elsewhere and buildings that were in very good condition were closed.

In Coaticook, I enjoyed the full co-operation of the civic authorities and we had the honour of obtaining a brand new federal building which could be used to accommodate all federal services. Nothing has changed in Lac Mégantic. On five occasions, we have been promised some buildings. Plans and specifications have been drawn up, tender have been drafted and each time they were to be called somebody put a spoke in the wheel. The issue has been used for petty politics.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

I have here a letter dated September 1, 1970 and addressed to Mr. Hervé Fecteau, clerk of the municipality of Lac Mégantic and I quote:

> I acknowledge receipt of your letter dated June 8, 1970 and addressed to the minister, along with copy of the resolution passed on June 1 at a meeting of the municipal council of Lac Mégantic and a picture of the former post office to be demolished.
> I appreciate your interest in the improvement of postal premises at the above-mentioned location and wish to advise you that we are trying to set up some new premises as requested. Local officials have experienced some difficulty in this connection due to the local building code which specifies that buildings situated in the district where the construction of the new post office is contemplated must have at least two stories. Department officials are considering the possibility of building a property for renting purposes and it is anticipated that tendering will take place about September 1, 1970. Mr. Laing will write to you as soon as we have further information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

I recognize the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I know some hon. members who, hardly a year after being elected to this House, have obtained post offices. So, I would like to suggest to the hon. member that he should not be too proud of his performance, since he has been waiting for his post office for ten years.

I would also like to remind the hon. member that the things he said to a newsman of the paper La Tribune last weekend and those he stated tonight in this House clearly show that he is off the track concerning the construction of a federal building in Lac Mégantic.

Mr. Latulippe: You are the one who is off the track.

Mr. Ouellet: I went recently to Lac Mégantic and I noted the urgency of building a new post office there. Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the Department of Public Works has been authorized since April to call for tenders for the construction of a new federal building on the very site of the former Lac Mégantic post office. The construction plans provide, in a first phase, for post office facilities and, in a second phase, for other rooms on the second floor designed for other federal departments.

Before that call for tenders, the Unemployment Insurance Commission had asked the Department of Public Works to provide it rapidly with facilities at Lac Mégantic.

Now, the Department of Public Works is considering, as it ought to do, the possibility of revising its plans for the immediate construction of a two storey-federal building.

This is the situation, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure the House that my colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé), will announce his decision in due time. I am convinced that such a decision will please both the municipal council and the whole population of Lac Mégantic, and I hope that the hon. member will approve this decision.

POST OFFICE—RE-EXAMINATION OF REQUIREMENTS FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF RURAL ROUTES IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on May 23 I asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), as reported at page 4019 of Hansard in part reads as follows:

> In view of the fact that the Hutterian Brethren of Canada take vows of poverty and perpetual poverty, and because they are church-employed, would the minister indicate whether he will present legislation to the House to exempt the Hutterian Brethren of Canada from paying Canada Pension Plan premiums?

This minority group living in western Canada has from time to time been severely criticized for the social position they take, but I should like to submit that this group exists and has set up a society on the basis of what they believe to be right; on the religious beliefs that dictate to them the manner of life that they should lead. So the question is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is wondering about the matter being raised by the hon. member. The question which appears on the order tonight has to do with a rural post office. I am wondering if there is some confusion that we can sort out. Perhaps the hon. member will explain the situation.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, if you check the record you will see that the question for the adjournment debate has to do with a rural post office—and I thank the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) for being here—but if you look at Hansard for May 23 you will note that Mr. Speaker suggested that because of the brevity and urgency of this matter it would be the topic under discussion at the adjournment debate, and not the matter of the post office. When I checked with the Clerk at the table I also indicated this. I am sorry about the confusion, but that is the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The difficulty that arises now is that there might not be anybody here to answer the hon. member's question. If he wants to proceed with the matter, he may do so at the risk of not receiving a reply satisfactory to him. Perhaps a member for the government benches might attempt to answer the question.

An hon. Member: Mr. Latulippe will answer you.

Mr. Epp: I realize that the hon. gentleman might feel he is an expert in many areas, but I doubt if that is the case in respect of the Hutterian Brethren of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could defer this question until the next adjournment debate, which will be on Thursday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There is no problem in respect of the request of the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know or suspect, there is a procedural question relating to the use of unparliamentary language in the House which is uppermost in my mind and has been for the last 48 hours. I did mention yesterday that there were other procedural aspects which I thought the Chair owed it to hon. members to have the House leaders consider for possible referral to the committee on procedure. Unfortunately, this aspect of the matter has not yet been cleared up, so I think I will have to suffer another 24 hours before I seek to bring the matter before the House with, I hope, the co-operation of every hon. member at that time.

TABLING OF LETTER FROM FOREIGN MINISTER OF ZAMBIA ON DEATHS OF CHRISTINE SINCLAIR AND MARION DRIJBERG

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I wish to table in both official languages the text of a letter dated May 28 addressed to me by the foreign minister of Zambia on the subject of the recent tragic deaths of Miss Sinclair and Miss Drijberg.

ENERGY

NUMBER OF BARRELS OF GASOLINE EXPORTED PER DAY—CORRECTION OF FIGURE BY MINISTER

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the debate on Monday last, when discussing shipments of motor gasoline in April from Canada, I conveyed to the House figures from the National Energy Board putting the barrels a day rate for such shipments at under 10,000 barrels a day. The board has informed me that late on the day of the debate notification of an additional shipment from the Atlantic provinces was received which puts the April rate at the rate of 17,000 barrels a day, which is over the previous figure and over the figure for March. I wanted to correct the record in that respect.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

ENGAGEMENT OF PRINCESS ANNE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion of importance under Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House expresses its congratulations and best wishes to Her Royal Highness, Princess Anne, on the occasion of the announcement of her engagement to Lieutenant Mark Phillips, and that Mr. Speaker be requested to kindly convey this message on behalf of the Canadian House of Commons to Her Royal Highness.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Leeds. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On the government side.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE STRIKE BY MACHINISTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity arising out of the early June deadline when a national airline strike can gravely affect the public interest during a peak travel period. Latest press reports show that 97 per cent of Air Canada machinists are voting in favour of strike action against Air Canada. This threat to the public interest is caused by Air Canada's disregard of the legitimate grievances of the machinists against discriminatory airline practices.

With consent, Mr. Speaker, I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt):

That this House resolves that Air Canada immediately take all steps necessary in the public interest to ensure settlement of its dispute with the 6,900 machinists in its employ.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

URBAN AFFAIRS

LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House in order to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, under its program of loans to municipalities for the establishment of water and sewage systems, wishes to help low income Canadians anxious to buy a house; since there is now a very strong demand for houses, and procedures to be followed by municipalities to obtain such loans are often long and arduous, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau):

That the House consider in the shortest delays the possibility of revising procedures to be followed in order that municipalities may obtain more easily and rapidly loans from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the establishment of community water and sewage systems.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot therefore be put.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

LOCATION OF HEAD OFFICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, because of the confusion regarding the movement of the Canada Development Corporation head office to Vancouver emanating from conflicting statements in the House by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), I rise, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek consent to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the House request the Prime Minister announce that his statements to this House on November 29, 1971 and April 5, 1973, are in fact government policy and that the CDC head office will be located in Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

HOUSING

INDEMNIFICATION OF PURCHASERS OF BADLY CONSTRUCTED HOUSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of national interest.

In view of the fact that the CMHC is always wont to grant contracts to contractors whose past gives us cause to question their competence, that a large number of contractors have gone bankrupt, that dissatisfied owners have benefited from court judgments advocating the cancellation of their purchasing contracts as well as the reimbursement of rather important damages, and that, when the contractor proves insolvent, it is absolutely impossible to carry out the said legal decisions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House examine as soon as possible the action required so that the Ministry of Urban Affairs be empowered to grant subsidies to certain buyers who are nothing less than victims of a disaster whose property needs urgent repairs.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, unanimous consent is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; therefore, the motion of the hon. member cannot be put.

CRIMINAL CODE

MINIMUM SENTENCE FOR INDICTABLE OFFENCE WHILE ARMED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, concerning a matter which should be brought before the House, namely, that an amendment unanimously recommended by the western police chiefs be introduced into the Criminal Code so that any person committing an indictable offence while armed with a firearm will be liable to a minimum sentence of two years in prison. This would curb the increasing problem of offences committed by armed persons and will help solve an increasing western problem, cattle rustling. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for study and report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Is the hon. member rising on the same motion?

Mr. Hurlburt: No, Sir. I have another motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lethbridge.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RESPECTING HORSES SHIPPED TO EUROPE FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 concerning a matter of urgent necessity arising from public concern about the shipping of live horses from Canada to European markets for human consumption. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That an amendment be introduced to the Criminal Code stating that all horses shipped to Europe be processed and inspected in Canada before shipping.

This would stop the inhumane shipment of horses to Europe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is no longer presenting his motion. He is presenting an argument in support of the motion. I suggest to hon. members that when they propose a motion under Standing Order 43 to the House it should not include argument. Would the hon. member indicate whether that is the motion he wishes to put to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43.

Mr. Hurlburt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is illegal for live horses to be sent from the United States to France and I would ask hon. members to give unanimous consent to the said motion.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

May 28, 1973—Mr. Nielsen:

That the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on May 22, 1973, be concurred in.

An hon. Member: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: It is suggested that this motion stand. I think I owe it to the House to put hon. members on notice that this motion, referring to a committee report, could perhaps be out of order. I have serious procedural reservations about some of the reports that are coming from committees and the motions presented to the House on the basis of these reports. I believe we may be preparing some future difficulties for the House unless hon. members are prepared very soon to look at this procedure very closely. I mention this to put hon. members on notice and to suggest to them that when this and perhaps other motions of this kind come before the House I will invite procedural advice from hon. members.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I have been concerned about the point Your Honour has raised. It has come to my attention that committee clerks have been advising chairmen that because no ruling has been made by Your Honour on these reports—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is putting to the House an argument he may want to put to the House for the consideration of the Chair and other hon. members when the matter is brought to the attention of the House. I was not raising it at all by way of a point of order but only for the purpose of putting hon. members on notice. Perhaps at that point the parliamentary secretary and other members, I am sure, would want to give the Chair the benefit of their wisdom, knowledge, experience and advice.

Order Paper Questions

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

May 28, 1973—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That the first report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on February 23, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would simply like to say that I filed this motion in the hope that it would put pressure on the government to bring in its bill to amend the Pension Act. In the hope that that might be done in a few days I would like the motion to stand.

● (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will, of course, stand the motion but I wonder whether it is in order for hon. members to present an argument in support of the suggestion that a motion should stand. In any event, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made the point. He asks that the motion stand. The Chair will say that it is stood.

EQUIPMENT TO VIET NAM

Question No. 1,375—Mr. Godin:

Since 1965, has the government supplied Viet Nam with any type of equipment and, if so (a) under which program (b) what was the nature of such equipment (i) technical (ii) medical (iii) military (c) what was the total value of each category of supply?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Since 1965, Canada through the bilateral grants program of the Canadian International Development Agency has provided equipment to the Republic of Viet Nam (often in conjunction with technical assistance) in the field of humanitarian relief assistance and for paramedical projects. The value of equipment in the paramedical sector which included emergency hospital units has totalled approximately $1,664,200. The value of other equipment is approximately $764,300 and included iron roofing material. Canada has never provided military equipment to the Republic of Viet Nam.

ADMINISTRATION OF CNR PENSION FUND

Question No. 1,661—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What is the total amount of loans in each year 1965 to 1972 inclusive made by the CNR Pension Fund to (a) Canadian companies (b) foreign-controlled companies?

2. What amount has been loaned to Fidinam (Ontario) Limited and at what interest rate?

3. Is Fidinam (Ontario) Limited a Canadian-owned company?

4. Have railway workers any voice in Pension Fund decisions concerning monies in the fund that have been contributed to a large extent by them and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. The CNR Pension Fund does not make loans as such. It does invest in mortgages, corporate bonds and debentures and as at December 31, 1972, it had total mortgage investments of $225 million, at least 95 per cent of which have been placed with Canadian controlled companies. As at the same date the Pension Fund held bonds and debentures having a total par value of $331 million and less than 10 per cent of these obligations were issued by Canadian companies that were foreign controlled.

2. Nil.

3. To the best of our knowledge the company is not Canadian-owned.

4. The fund is administered by the CNR as trustee. The amount of pensions payable to employees is guaranteed regardless of the amount of money in the fund or the return on investment.

CONTROL OF WIRE TAPPING AND ELECTRONIC SNOOPING

Question No. 1,773—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the government intend to re-introduce legislation not passed by the last Parliament for control of wire tapping and electronic snooping and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, at the earliest suitable opportunity. Note: Bill C-176 received 1st reading on April 13, 1973.

FEDERAL FINANCING TO GOVERNMENT OF SENEGAL

Question No. 1,878—Mr. Masniuk:

1. Has the government made loans to the Government of Senegal and, if so, on how many occasions, what amounts and, in each instance, at what rate of interest?

2. With any of the loans made by the government to Senegal, was there a loan for the purchase of outboard motors and, if so (a) how many outboard motors were purchased (b) at what cost (c) from what firm or firms?

3. Were tenders called for the purchase of these outboard motors and, if so (a) what firms were invited to tender (b) which firms submitted tenders (c) what was the amount of each tender in each instance?

4. Were any firms in Manitoba invited to tender and on what basis was a selection of firms in Manitoba determined?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. Yes, two. One concerned with a project called: Chaîne de froid, $880,000 and a second for the motorisation of dugout canoes, $2,710,000. Both were awarded on the following terms: no interest, 10 years before the first payment and 40 years to repay.

2. (a) 1650 motors; (b) $689,254; (c) Outboard Marine Corporation of Canada Limited, Peterborough, Ontario.

3. At the request of Canadian International Development Agency and Sénégal, this program was a directed procurement to ensure compatibility and interchangability with Outboard Marine engines already in use in Sénégal.

4. See answer to part 3.

MULTICULTURALISM—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Question No. 1,906—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. To date, which province(s) has the government met with at the ministerial level to discuss the teaching of a third language and culture in (a) primary schools (b) secondary schools (c) universities?

2. To date (a) which province(s) has shown interest in the government's policy on multiculturalism (b) with which provinces have discussions been held concerning multiculturalism?

3. Has the government been in touch with the Canadian Education Association for the purpose of discussing the teachings of languages and cultures in the schools and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reasons?

4. Has the government surveyed the provinces to determine (a) the availability of instruction in non-official languages in the public school systems (b) the relationship between those languages available and the ethnic composition of the province in question?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. None.

2. (a) All provinces have expressed interest; (b) Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

3. (a) No; (b) any such discussions would be held with the provinces individually or with the Council of Ministers of Education, after the results become available from the current research program on language as a factor in cultural retention.

4. (a) The Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism examined the availability of instruction in the non-official languages and the results of that study are available in Volume 4 of the Commission's reports; (b) no.

LISTENING DEVICES IN CANADIAN EMBASSIES AND CONSULAR OFFICES

Question No. 1,938—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Have listening devices of any kind been discovered at any time since 1958 in Canadian Embassies, Consular Offices, or any other buildings occupied abroad by the Canadian Government and, if so, in what specific places were such devices found and on what dates were they found?

2. During the above-mentioned period of time, did the government ever become aware of third parties listening to telephone conversations to or from any buildings occupied by the government abroad and, if so, what were the dates of such occurrences and specifically where did these incidents happen?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. We have had evidence of such activities directed against some of our missions abroad. It would not be in the national interest, however, to go into detail on this evidence or how or where we obtained it.

2. No. Due to the ease with which telephone conversations can be monitored, members of the Canadian foreign service exercise caution and discipline in the use of telephone.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT

Question No. 1,939—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What were the considerations that led to the appointment of Mr. Russell Honey, formerly M.P. for Northumberland-Durham, to a Judgeship as announced by the Minister of Justice?

2. Did the fact that he was formerly a Liberal Member of Parliament have a bearing on his appointment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Governments in the past have not commented on matters relating to specific judicial appointments except in respect to policy and procedure. The major formal consultative process in considering appointments to the Bench involves the submission of names of potential candidates to the Judicial Committee of the Canadian Bar Association and their return of a judgment about whether or not the person or persons under consideration for appointment are qualified, well qualified or not qualified for the appointment. The criteria considered before recommending individuals for judicial appointment to the Governor in Council for approval include competence, integrity, honesty, experience and merit, as the quality of our justice is measured by the quality of our judges. The chief criterion in the past has been, and will remain, one of competence for the appointment under consideration.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,958—Mr. Dick:

1. How many persons were hired, in each of the past five years 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972 by the Public Service Commission to become public servants?

2. How many hired, in each year of the past five years, were not Canadian citizens?

3. Of the number who were not Canadian citizens, how many were not landed immigrants at the time they were accepted in the Public Service?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1.

	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972*	Total
By Public Service Commission	17,602	11,206	8,350	7,226	7,992	52,376
By Departments (under delegated authority)	2,777	9,527	14,705	20,480	30,576	78,065
Total	20,379	20,733	23,055	27,706	38,568	130,441

*Figures taken from annual report.

2. The Public Service Commission does not keep a central record of the number of persons who were not Canadian citizens hired in each of the past five years.

3. Since the Commission does not maintain records of persons hired who were not Canadian citizens, it has no record of those who were not landed immigrants.

BANK OF CANADA—MONEY SUPPLY

Question No. 2,005—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

1. By what percentage rate did the Bank of Canada inflate the money supply between January 1 and December 31, 1972?

2. By what percentage rate does the Bank of Canada plan to inflate the money supply between January 1 and December 31, 1973?

3. What rate of inflation of the consumer price index does the Bank of Canada expect will result from this increase in the money supply during 1973?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. Total chartered bank deposits and currency outside banks increased by 13.6 per cent between December 31, 1971 and December 31, 1972. Over the same period, privately held deposits and currency outside banks grew by 13.9 per cent.

2. The Bank of Canada does not establish in advance a precise target rate of growth for the banking system or for monetary aggregates. Its view of the appropriate rate of monetary expansion and of credit conditions is subject to modification as new information about the current state of the economy or unexpected developments alter prospective economic conditions. In a recent speech, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, while stressing that "the banking system would continue to be in a position to accommodate reasonable growth in bank lending", expressed the view that "the recent pace of bank credit expansion had clearly been too rapid".

3. The extent to which prices in Canada will rise in 1973 is dependent upon a great many factors other than the increase in money supply in 1973.

INFORMATION CANADA BOOKSTORE—CUSTOMER SURVEY

Question No. 2,030—Mr. O'Connor:

1. To how many people, businesses or corporations was the Information Canada Bookstore 9-page Customer Survey sent?

2. (a) How many replies have been received (b) has a cost benefit study of this survey been undertaken and, if so, what are the results of this study?

3. What is the total cost of the survey including, but not limited to, computer time, postage, printing, staff salaries and calculations of results and implementation of new programs or procedures based on survey results?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. Nine thousand questionnaires (in French and English) were distributed through our bookstores and to mail order customers.

2. (a) to date, 1,200 questionnaires have been returned; (b) since the survey is still in progress, no cost benefit study has been conducted.

3. Twelve thousand dollars.

CBC—PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,040—Mr. Boisvert:

How many CBC employees earn (a) less than $5,000 per annum (b) from $5,001 to $10,000 (c) from $10,001 to $20,000 (d) more than $20,000?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: (a) 139; (b) 3,746; (c) 5,093; (d) 346; Total, 9,324 (Number of continuing employees).

APPEALS UNDER SECTION 20 OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Question No. 2,046—Mr. Yewchuk:

Since March 1967, how many candidates have appealed against the decision of the Public Service Commission, because of the provisions in Section 20 of the Public Service Employment Act and Regulations?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The statistics kept by the Appeals Branch do not permit a direct reply to the question as posed. However, the Appeals Branch is able to provide some information relating to the topic covered in the question.

Statistics indicating the key issues raised at appeal hearings have been kept since January 1, 1972. During the 16-month period from January 1, 1972, until April 30, 1973, issues relating to language requirements were raised in 110 appeals out of a total of 3,530 appeals heard. Of these, 44 were allowed and 66 dismissed. This category of the Appeals Branch statistics includes allegations of irregularities and/or unfairness with regard to three Sections of the Public Service Employment Act: Section 14(2) which deals with the language of notice of a proposed competition, Section 16(2) which deals with the language in which an examination, test, or interview is to be conducted, and Section 20 which deals with the language qualifications necessary of employees in order that the functions of the department, portion or part can be performed adequately and effective service provided to the public. Section 20 of the Public Service Employment Regulations deals with the establishment, period of validity, and extension of eligible lists. The Appeals Branch statistics do not indicate appeals against this section of the regulations as a key issue in appeals hearings.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—NUMBER OF CLAIMANTS JANUARY TO APRIL, 1972

Question No. 2,086—Mr. Hellyer:

How many persons were in receipt of unemployment insurance payments in Canada in January, February, March and April 1972 in the week in which Statistics Canada took its sample of unemployment levels?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):

Beneficiaries of Unemployment Insurance Benefits[1]

1972	Regular Benefits[2] No Earnings Reported	Regular Benefits[2] With Earnings Reported	Special Benefits[3]	Total
January	552,000	34,000	34,000	620,000
February	614,000	40,000	43,000	697,000
March	613,000	42,000	42,000	697,000
April	589,000	41,000	35,000	665,000

[1]Each of these statistics relate to a reference week taken as representative for the month in question (The same week as that used by Statistics Canada).

[2]Regular unemployment insurance benefits including benefits for trainees who have completed their courses but have not found work.

[3]Special benefit types include Sickness, Maternity, Retirement, fishing and benefits paid to trainees while on an approved training course.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITY OF HAM-NORD

Question No. 2,109—Mr. Beaudoin:

For each year since 1965, what was the total amount received directly or indirectly from the government by the municipality of Ham-Nord, in the constituency of Richmond?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): It is not feasible to provide aggregate information on government expenditure disbursements for municipalities, constituencies or other comparable units. Government estimates are not prepared on this basis nor are records of expenditures kept in this way. Information concerning expenditures could be supplied where specific projects, programmes or payees are identified in a question. These, of course, would in some cases relate to a particular municipality or constituency.

2. For each of the same fiscal years, by province, what were the number and amount of unpaid debts and how many are considered as a loss?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 205 is acceptable to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 205 be deemed agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING DECISION TO APPROVE CONSTRUCTION OF CN TOWER IN TORONTO

Motion No. 205—Mr. Forrestall:

That an humble Address bo presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all notes, correspondence or memoranda exchanged between the government, the City of Toronto, Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, Canadian Owners and Pilots Association and any other department or agency of the government with respect to the decision to approve the construction of the proposed 1800 foot CN Tower in downtown Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 187, 215 and 219.

BRITISH COLUMBIA OFY AND LIP PROJECTS—COPIES OF AUDITED OR UNAUDITED STATEMENTS 1971-72

Motion No. 187—Mr. Reynolds:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the audited statements or unaudited, as the case may be, of all OFY projects in British Columbia for the year 1971-1972.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

[Later:]

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, when you were calling motions I was busy for a second and, if it is not too late, I would like to have my motion read today.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking for leave of the House to return to motions? We require unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of returning to motions.

Mr. Reynolds: No, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to return to motions. I want you to read the motion you called earlier.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to motion for the production of papers No. 187.

Mr. Speaker: No. 187.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned this motion is not acceptable because the requested papers are of a voluminous character, and an inordinate cost and length of time would be required to produce them.

In so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned the motion is not acceptable because the requested papers reflect on the personal competence or character of an individual and are also private or confidential and not of a public or official character. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Reynolds: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Motions for Papers

TRIDENT STEAMSHIPS LIMITED—OWNERSHIP PARTICULARS

Motion No. 215—Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the full particulars as to ownership of Trident Steamships Limited.

He said: Stand, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have to beg your indulgence to ask the parliamentary secretary if he would mind going back to the production of papers. The reason I asked for my motions to stand in the first place was that I could not locate them in the book but I now have them here. Would he be so kind as to provide answers to Nos. 215 and 219?

Mr. Speaker: We will return to that item of business and call on the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is unacceptable to the government because Trident Steamships Limited was incorporated provincially and no source exists in the federal government for determining the ownership of this company. I would therefor ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

NEWFOUNDLAND STEAMSHIPS LIMITED—OWNERSHIP PARTICULARS

Motion No. 219—Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the full particulars as to ownership of Newfoundland Steamships Limited.

He said: Stand, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is unacceptable to the government because no source exists for determining the ownership of this company. Annual returns submitted to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs under the Canada Corporations Act and the Corporations and Labour Unions Act indicate officers and directors but not the ownership of companies. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Reid: Mr. speaker, I ask that the other notices of motions be permitted to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before we leave the production of papers I rise on a point of order. My point is that either the government has been particularly negligent in responding to certain motions passed by the House or is seeking to avoid answering them. On February 21 two motions standing in my name were passed by the House, each of them relating to documents concerning fish canning facilities on the north coast of British Columbia. On March 28 three other motions or a total of five, relating to the same subject matter were passed by the House asking that there be laid before the House certain documents and exchanges of correspondence with respect to canning facilities on the north coast of British Columbia.

The same motions were put forward to the House during the previous session of parliament. There is ample information, ample advance notice, and ample knowledge about them in the hands of the government and the Department of Fisheries. My point of order is that either through negligence or a desire not to comply with orders of the House the returns have not been tabled. I would like to have some response from the government on why it has not complied with five orders of the House with respect to the tabling of documents.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there are two points I would like to raise with the hon. member at this time. The first is that before we can table these documents in the House we must receive consent from the government of British Columbia, and I have been informed that to date it has not been forthcoming.

The second point is that when we do have permission to table these documents it then becomes necessary to provide them in the two official languages. That means a built-in delay not only with respect to the production of the documents the hon. member for Skeena has requested but the production of all documents under this order of business that hon. members request. These are built-in delays, and I am sorry that it is not possible for me to expedite either the consent of the government of British Columbia or the translation process once we get permission.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member as well as to the parliamentary secretary that we could go on for a long time discussing the point raised by the hon. member for Skeena and the response made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. I would hope that we could go on to the next item of business. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Howard: On another point of order, Mr. Speaker. Production of the documents in response to only one of the five motions, separately passed by this House, rests on the consent of the government of British Columbia. The delay in producing the other documents is purely the responsibility of the federal government.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HIS BEATITUDE, JOSYF CARDINAL SLIPYJ

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would like to call the attention of the House to the presence in the Senate Gallery of a distinguished visitor, His Beatitude, Josyf Cardinal Slipyj of Rome, Archbishop-Major and Primate of the Ukrainian Catholic Church.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of State responsible for the federal government's policy on multiculturalism I would like on behalf of the government of Canada to join with the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) in extending a very warm welcome to His Beatitude Josyf Cardinal Slipyj.

• (1430)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out once again that we have not received an answer to question No. 832. I have asked on several occasions that the answer be produced. The Auditor General has now referred to this matter in his report and I believe the House is entitled to an explanation why this question involving some $28 million in expenditure has not been answered to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, is now going back to questions and we have already moved beyond the production of papers. If we continue going backwards we will find ourselves back to Tuesday.

Mr. Oberle: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I too may be wanting to go back but I am a little confused by the proceedings. I have a question on the order paper, No. 2,048, which was placed there on May 14. I do not abuse the privilege of asking questions on the order paper and have had very few. This question is very timely and concerns thousands of Canadians throughout the country. I would seek the indulgence of the House to ask the parliamentary secretary to answer this question in the immediate future.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE INITIATIVE TO RESUME TALKS—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS—DUTY ON IMPORTED CARS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement by Peter Flanigan, President of the Council on International Economic Policy, to the effect that there is no schedule for resuming trade talks between Canada and the United States, can the minister tell the House whether he will take the initiative in arranging a meeting at the earliest possible date?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that a meeting will take place in the very near future.

Mr. Hellyer: Has the government prepared a series of proposals and a comprehensive strategy for such talks and has the government suggested any specific date for resumption of the talks?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on an earlier occasion, the result of my previous discussions with Secretary Shultz was that both sides would examine their positions and at a later date—I would hope very shortly—both sides would sit down together at the official level to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Mr. Hellyer: In light of the concern of the Premier of Ontario about the 15 per cent import duty on new cars and in the interest of Canadian automotive parts producers, is the minister going to consult with the government of Ontario on these two areas in particular prior to the resumption of the talks?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the importance of the auto pact to the province of Ontario. I have had discussions with the Minister of Industry for the province and have indicated to him that on the appropriate occasion I would have further consultations with him if there is some point at which it would be appropriate.

ENERGY

GASOLINE—POSSIBILITY OF SHORTAGE—REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF EXPORTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that a number of Canada's largest independent retailers of gasoline, including such firms as Caloil Inc. of Montreal, Gasex Oil Limited of Montreal, Premium Oil Company of Toronto and Capital City Gas and Fuel Company of Ottawa, have all stated that their inability to secure supplies of gasoline is compelling them to abandon plans to open new outlets and even to close some filling stations now in operation? In view of the minister's statement on Monday that he was keeping this situation under close scrutiny, I should like to ask him whether he is now prepared to extend export controls to cover refined products?

Hon. Donald S. MacDonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I recall from the article in the Globe and Mail this morning to which the hon. member refers, the explanation was given by several of the distributors that it was an inability to purchase the refined product overseas which had imposed this termination on them. I would like to confirm that the board is keeping close surveillance on exports, but the basic problem is the tight international supply situation and the inability of these firms to buy refined gasoline abroad as they have been doing for the past several years.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the minister's explanation may I ask whether his attention has been drawn to the statement made by revenue minister Allan Grossman in the Ontario legislature yesterday to the effect that in the month of April Ontario exported 4.1 million gallons of gasoline, or 11 times as much as it exported in all of 1972? Since this gasoline was refined from western crude oil, may I ask the minister what action he or the National Energy Board proposes to take to protect the gasoline consumers of this country?

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the hon. gentleman that I would agree there is no action that can be taken about exports that occurred in April, but we have indicated to the refiners that we will expect them to meet the demands of the Canadian market and that if they fail to do so we will put on export controls.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that exports of gasoline have risen astronomically and that imports have virtually come to a standstill, creating a real problem in Canada, may I ask the minister whether he has taken any action such as he promised on Monday, that the National Energy Board would intervene informally to make sure that these independent distributors get adequate supplies of gasoline?

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Yes, Sir, the National Energy Board has been intervening in a number of cases. Indeed, on page B2 of the Report on Business in the Globe and Mail this morning he will see an example of the intervention.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY OF ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether the government intends to publish the 13th file on Quebec's economic performance and, if so, when?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and convey it to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether the study referred to was undertaken when he was responsible for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, studies were constantly being made when I was in charge of that department; I do not know whether this study had anything to do with them.

As I have not seen it, I shall have a look at it and then answer the question.

AIR CANADA

IMPENDING STRIKE BY MACHINISTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES COMMISSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that Canada faces a tie-up of its national airline, Air Canada, because of a dispute with the machinists' union, and indications are that a vote favouring a strike is very likely, one local already having voted 97 per cent in support of a strike, what action is the government taking to avert this strike which could have devastating effects on many parts of the country? I might say that this question was directed to the Acting Prime Minister five days ago and at that time the Acting Prime Minister promised he would have the Minister of Labour bring a report to the House.

Hon. John Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I prefer not to go into further details in reporting to the House and the hon. member until such time as we know the official result of the vote for ratification. If it is turned down, I will be pleased to indicate what further action the government will take.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration to implementing the recommendation of the Woods Commission, which was made five years ago, that an industrial disputes commission be established to avert strikes that threaten the national interest and tie up the national economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this report was considered quite some years ago, and whatever decision the government decided to adopt was incorporated in the bill which has long since passed before parliament.

Mr. McGrath: On May 25 a similar question was directed to the Acting Prime Minister and the Acting Prime Minister, as recorded on page 4092 of Hansard said that the government was giving this matter consideration. He said, "However, the government has not found it easy to deal with this question in a satisfactory manner." He did say, and this is on the record, that the government is considering this question. In light of that answer, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would like to revise his answer?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, obviously some ministers are considering this matter but it has not come before cabinet recently. I will look into the matter and see if consideration is being given to it at any departmental level.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

STRIKE BY FINANCIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—SUGGESTED ACCEPTANCE OF UNANIMOUS CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In light of the questions asked last Friday, can he now advise whether or not he has had discussions with Air Canada with the object of getting Air Canada to accept the unanimous report of the conciliation board concerning the strike of the financial and administrative group of Air Canada employees in Winnipeg?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts whether the question is supplementary, but as it has been asked it might be easier to allow the minister to reply, if he has a reply for the hon. member. Perhaps the hon. member might like to renew the question. Apparently it has not been heard.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will direct my question to the Minister of Labour if he is prepared to turn this way. In light of the questions asked of him last Friday, can he advise the House whether or not he has been in contact with Air Canada with a view to having it accept the unanimous report of the conciliation board, signed by their own nominee, concerning the dispute with the financial and administrative group now on strike in the city of Winnipeg?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, contact has been made with both parties to the dispute.

Mr. Benjamin: And what happened?

INCOME TAX

LIVESTOCK INVENTORY PROVISIONS IN LAST BUDGET—RETROACTIVITY TO JANUARY 1, 1972, IN LIGHT OF TERMINATION OF BASIC HERD PROVISIONS IN 1971

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I directed a question through you, Sir, to the Minister of National Revenue. He said he had to consult with some cabinet colleagues before replying. I think he has had that opportunity. It had to do with the livestock inventory provisions in the latest budget. Can the minister tell the House whether these provisions will be retroactive to January 1, 1972, and, if not, will the government take any steps to cure the tax hiatus between the termination of the basic herd provisions and the commencement of the livestock inventory provisions?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have checked, and section 28, subsection 1, as amended by Bill C-170, is effective from January 1, 1972. I can assure the hon. member that if farmers who filed 1972 returns prior to the passage of Bill C-170 would like to so request, their returns will be adjusted.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRACTICE OF DEPARTMENT IN ORDERING FORMS

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with your permission perhaps I might reply further, as promised, to a question posed to me last week by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I have inquired and am advised that my department does not order its forms from the private sector but obtains them through the Department of Supply and Services.

PATENTS

REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT OF CANADIAN PATENTS AND DEVELOPMENT LIMITED BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a brief question to the President of the Treasury Board. May I ask him whether or not he will direct that the annual report of Canadian Patents and Development Limited, a Crown corporation, be referred to the appropriate committee? If so, can he do so before June 15, and to which committee would he refer it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the appropriate committee would be the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee. I will consult with the House leader about such a reference.

HOUSING

MORATORIUM ON RENT INCREASES ON SENIOR CITIZENS' ACCOMMODATION OPERATED BY METRO TORONTO HOUSING COMPANY—STEPS TO EXTEND

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the initial 60-day moratorium on proposed rent increases for senior citizens' accommodation operated by Metro Toronto Housing Company will expire tomorrow, will the minister advise the House what steps have been taken to extend this moratorium to March, 1974, as he originally requested. Also, can he assure the House that the planned increases will not be proceeded with?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in so far as CMHC housing is concerned, of course the House is aware that we have imposed a freeze on that. With regard to this particular housing, I have had an answer given to me by my advisers with which I am not entirely satisfied and I will be wiring the officials either this evening or tomorrow morning to determine what the position will be.

Mr. Grier: In view of the fact the minister advised the House on March 15 that officials of CMHC would be entering into discussions with Metro Toronto Housing Company in order to work out the details of the moratorium, can he advise the House whether these discussions actually took place?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been discussions but I am not entirely satisfied with the outcome in order to ensure the protection of senior citizens in the buildings, and I want to change what has been presently suggested.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS AT VICTORIA FALLS—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY RHODESIA ON INCIDENT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The hon. minister tabled in the House a copy of a personal letter from the foreign minister of Zambia concerning the killing of two Canadian girls about a month ago in Zambia.

On page 2 of the letter the following can be read:

> Responsibility for the death of these persons must definitely be laid at the door of the rebel government of Salisbury . . .

And further on, it is stated:

> The news also deeply shocked us in Zambia.

Therefore, here is my question:

Following this entirely irresponsible and childish statement of the Zambian government, does the hon. minister intend to call upon the government of Rhodesia, accused in the circumstances, to let us have its version of the facts, since the country guilty of the murder is making a cowardly accusation against a country which was never involved in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question, as stated, is entirely out of order. The hon. member is not asking a question but making a statement and I believe that the question should not be accepted. On the other hand, since the hon. member has formulated statements in his question, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs should have an opportunity to reply.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said, the foreign minister of Zambia lays responsibility upon the Rhodesian authorities for the death of the two girls. We are pursuing our inquiries with the Zambian government to try to ascertain the facts.

Mr. Rondeau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since Rhodesia has been accused by the Zambian government, is it also the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ask the Rhodesian government to present its account of the events in order to know both sides of the picture?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our Assistant High Commissioner in Lusaka was in Rhodesia. He interviewed eyewitnesses. He received the utmost courtesy from the government of Rhodesia. Since we do not have diplomatic relations with the Rhodesian government, we are not addressing any inquiries directly to them.

ALLEGED LOSS OF LIFE BY CITIZEN OF ZAMBIA IN CANADA—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a supplementary question.

In the letter tabled in the House, I read the following:

[English]

"Last year a Canadian and a Zambian lost their lives in your country in the cause of strengthening our relations."

[Translation]

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House the names of those two persons who died in Canada, and in what circumstances, in order perhaps to reassure those who will read that letter from the foreign minister of Zambia?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I took note of the same statement in the letter and am making inquiries. I was not familiar with the incident.

PERSECUTION IN THE UKRAINE—REQUEST THAT QUESTION BE BROUGHT BEFORE UNITED NATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the House has just paid tribute to Cardinal Slipyj who for 18 years was imprisoned by the communists in Siberia. Attention has been directed to the fact that today Ukrainian writers, literary critics, journalists, professors and students are being thrown into prisons and psychiatric hospitals for expressing their thoughts and beliefs with regard to linguistic and cultural freedom, even though freedom of speech is guaranteed under the constitution of the U.S.S.R. In view of the persecution that is taking place in the Ukraine, will the minister bring this question before the United Nations to the end that the U.S.S.R. be asked to live up to its agreements under the charter of the United Nations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as one of the signatories of the convention on human rights we are urging all countries, including the U.S.S.R., to live up to their obligations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A generalization of that kind will not do much to help those who are in great difficulty. Has a protest been made to the U.S.S.R. against the inhuman treatment being imposed upon people who appreciate freedom and who are simply speaking out in favour of certain principles in the constitution of the U.S.S.R.?

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Sharp: Like the right hon. gentleman, I believe in those principles and I urge that they be observed everywhere. Unfortunately, there are many parts of the world where the standards are not as high as they are in Canada. I hope they will all reach our standards, at least.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is no excuse at all. That is just an alibi.

ESTABLISHMENT OF EGG QUOTAS—ASSURANCES FROM PROVINCES OF PARTICIPATION IN A WAY TO ENSURE PROPER OPERATION OF PLAN

Mr. Bill Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? In view of the fact that national egg quotas will be established among the provinces shortly, has the minister received assurances from all the provinces that they will be participating in such a way as to ensure the proper operation of the plan?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The national egg marketing agency runs its own operation. I had been assured it will do so in a proper and fair fashion. I have no doubt it will do this.

ENERGY

GASOLINE—ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY TO INDEPENDENT OPERATORS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources supplementary to the one addressed to him by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. It concerns the effect the shortage of gasoline supplies to service station operators is having not only on the smaller companies mentioned by the hon. member but also on individual independent operators who, in communities such as Scarborough, are in danger of being put out of business by their inability to obtain gas. Is the minister prepared to call representatives of the major oil companies together and use his good offices to ensure a more equitable distribution of gasoline among all operators, including those independent dealers who are so important in keeping prices of gasoline competitive in Toronto?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I had a meeting with representatives of the industry on Friday last.

Mr. Stackhouse: I thank the minister for the teaser he gave us by telling us there was a meeting. Will he now tell us whether it produced any results? We know that the price of gas in Toronto has gone up by six cents in the past month.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I told the House in the debate last Monday, we advised the industry that we expected them to meet the demands of Canadian consumers as a priority before any exports of gas, and that if they failed to do this we would apply export controls.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO BREAK INTO CANADIAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the hon. gentleman received any information about an alleged conspiracy by the United States government to break into the Canadian embassy in Washington? Has he any information he can give us in the form of an answer to the question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have no information of that kind nor any evidence to suggest there is any substance to the allegation. I believe the answer given by an anonymous spokesman for the department was a good one, namely, that if the Americans wanted to know about our policy toward draft dodgers and deserters, they had only to ask.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope they do better than we do when they ask.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: I had a question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, but he seems to have disappeared. Perhaps Your Honour would recognize me if he returns.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member at any time.

FINANCE

MEASURES TO ASSURE SUFFICIENT FUNDS AVAILABLE TO FARMERS, FISHERMEN AND SMALL BUSINESSES UNDER GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is in the same vein as a question asked some days ago; the minister said then that he would look into it. Has the government taken any measures to assure that sufficient loans are being made available to farmers under the legislation providing for government guaranteed loans, as well as under the arrangements concerning small business loans and loans to fishermen?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): On that subject, when we have something to announce we shall announce it here.

ASSURANCE OF LOCATION OF HEAD OFFICE IN VANCOUVER

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It relates to the Canada Development Corporation. In April, 1971, the Prime Minister announced that the head office would be located in Vancouver. Again, in April of this year, he reassured me that this would be the case. However, some of his colleagues in the cabinet are going round the country saying it will not be located in Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question. He is now making a statement. He has been recognized for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Reynolds: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he misinformed me when he told me in his statement in April that the head office would be located in Vancouver?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, I did not misinform the hon. member. But I should like to inform him that unintentionally he himself misinformed the House when he said that ministers are saying the contrary.

Mr. Reynolds: There is a restaurant in Vancouver called Sneaky Pete's and I think it was named after the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members may applaud that kind of remark but I do not. I think that kind of statement by the hon. member is not conducive to the dignity of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I respect your statement, but might I point out that the Prime Minister said his ministers did not make the statements I attributed to them. About two weeks ago, in this House, the Minister of Justice said to one of his own members that the CDC would be locating in western Canada but not in Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: I do not quarrel with the hon. member's statement now. Obviously, there is a disagreement as to fact between the hon. member and other members. But I suggest it is always possible to make that kind of point while remaining within what I regard as being the traditions and proprieties of debate in the House of Commons.

ABORTION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who two weeks ago informed me he would consider the possibility of making a statement to the House concerning his review of too-liberal abortion laws. In light of the fact that more than 7,000 foetuses have been aborted since he announced his review on March 5, is the minister now willing to make a statement on this matter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I am giving consideration to that question. I have, of course, discussed the proper enforcement of the criminal law with the provincial Attorneys General upon whom the main responsibility rests.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE BY EMPLOYEES OF NOVA SCOTIAN HOTEL, HALIFAX—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. It arises out of another unfortunate strike of four or five weeks' duration by the employees of the Nova Scotian Hotel in Halifax, a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways. Is the minister's department taking any steps to bring the parties to the dispute together in the hope that a settlement may be reached?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe, if my memory serves me correctly, we have offered mediation services to the parties to resolve the dispute. I can obtain further particulars for the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: I am certain the minister made that statement in good faith and something may have happened, but in view of the fact a spokesman for the union informed me only last night that there has been no such invitation to the parties to meet, would the minister inquire and make certain that such an invitation does in fact go out to the parties without delay, because I am informed there may be an opportunity for settling the dispute?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the observations of the hon. member and I will do that.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo has a supplementary to his question and he will be recognized for that purpose,

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have just a short supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he is currently envisaging bringing down any further amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with abortion?

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In view of the fact that some homeowners who were dissatisfied with the houses they bought from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Place Morin, Vanier City, have recently obtained a court judgment cancelling the sale and granting the payment of $1,500 in costs, as a result of the action they had brought against Darec Construction and since the said judgment cannot be enforced because of the insolvency of the firm, could the minister indicate what steps he considers taking to help the victims whose houses are in need of immediate repairs?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to look into the judgment first and the situation before I answer, so I will take the question as notice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REASON COMMONWEALTH TARIFF PREFERENCE NOT WITHDRAWN BY CANADA

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On May 11 last, I asked the right hon. gentleman a question at which time he stated he would take it as notice. The question is as follows, as reported on page 3659 of Hansard:

> In view of the fact South Africa has been expelled from the Commonwealth of Nations for some time now, would the Prime Minister tell the House why no plans were ever formulated by his government to withdraw Commonwealth preferential tariff treatment from that country?

I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman could give me an answer to that question today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I did look into the question at the time. The answer is not fresh in my mind, but I will try to formulate it. These preferences are on a reciprocal basis. Their object is to obtain as much gain as possible for the Canadian people as a trading nation, and I do not see any link with the Commonwealth. If they are favourable to us I can see no reason at all to abolish them. If they are unfavourable to us, then I think they should be negotiated out, whether South Africa is in the Commonwealth or not.

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL REPRESENTATIVE PARTICIPATE IN HEARINGS CONCERNING EASTERN SLOPES OF ROCKY MOUNTAINS OR SUBMIT DETAILED BRIEFS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister reconsider his refusal to accept the invitation of the Alberta Conservation Authority to have a federal parks representative sit on the panel at the hearings concerning the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains, which are dominated by national parks, and where proper hearings cannot succeed without the full co-operation and participation of the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the situation correctly, these territories are outside the national parks. I do not see how I could interfere with the activities of the Alberta government, since I am myself so touchy whenever the Alberta government meddles with our affairs within the parks.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the minister that an invitation was issued by the province of Alberta, which indicates that they were not particularly concerned about jurisdiction—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): My supplementary question is this. Would the minister at least give an undertaking that the briefs that his department intends to submit will, despite his answer, be detailed and not general, and will give enough guidance about parks plans that the province and private citizens can make sensible plans of their own for development of that region?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am quite at ease in that connection, because we had public hearings held over a year ago on possible developments in Jasper and Banff parks. Plans were then made public. Many comments were received from the public at large and if someone has not received copy of those plans, I will be pleased to send them directly or through the hon. member.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER GIVE HIGH PRIORITY TO POSSIBLE STRIKE

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman said earlier in answer to a question about the possible Air Canada strike that he had not looked at it recently. In view of the fact that it has had very low priority, would the Prime Minister move it up to a higher priority on his agenda and take a look at the matter before the strike takes place rather than after the strike?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there must be some misunderstanding. I do not recall ever having said that I had not looked at it recently. I am sure that if I commented on it at all it was to refer the matter to the Minister of Labour who, on the contrary, has reported more than once to me and the cabinet on the situation and is following it very closely.

ENERGY

REVIEW OF OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN ROYALTIES AND LEASE RATES—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Are the federal oil and gas regulations still under review and, if so, when will the review be completed, and will the royalties and permit and lease rates under the new regulations be substantially increased over the rates existing under the present regulations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, they are still under review. Royalties for offshore oil development are one of the questions under discussion and negotiation with the five eastern governments at the present time, and until those negotiations are completed I would not anticipate that there would be any change in the regulations. The exact nature of the changes will be announced at that time.

Mr. Harding: In view of the statement in the Canadian trade journal, Oilweek, that the petroleum industry has had frank, open and understanding discussions with the government on the new oil and gas regulations, may I ask the minister if and when similar discussions on these regulations will be held either with this House or the appropriate standing committee?

LAOS AND CAMBODIA—CANADIAN POSITION ON STATUS OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Against the background of the statement made in the House yesterday relating to withdrawal of the truce supervisory group from Viet Nam, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is prepared to give to the House and to the country, either today or at some early date, a clear statement on the status of the other two supervisory commissions still legally in existence in Southeast Asia, that in Cambodia and the one in Laos, and about Canada's present and future involvement on those commissions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I might attempt a brief answer, and if it is not satisfactory I might make a statement later. The position in Laos is that Canada is one of the signatories to the agreement under which the International Control Commission is operating in that country and therefore we have obligations, unlike the situation in Viet Nam. The International Control Commission in Cambodia has been adjourned sine die and I see no prospect of it being revived.

Does the Postmaster General consider a complaint received by him from Rosedale Presbyterian Church in Toronto, stating that a letter posted at noon on April 26 in Toronto was not delivered in Toronto until Monday morning, April 30, and the fact that a letter addressed to the Prime Minister from the manager of the Red Deer exhibition and mailed in Red Deer on May 11—

Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare give consideration to additional grants for family planning purposes so there may be some approach to reducing the number of abortions in a rational way and an appropriate education program developed across the country?

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED LACK OF PROJECT RECORDS FOR AUDIT PURPOSES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister responsible for manpower regarding the policy of extending LIP. In light of the fact that the Audit Service Bureau, as a result of the lack of records by many LIP projects, has on several occasions either declined an opinion or at best has only given a qualified or negative opinion, is the minister aware of this, have there been any recommendations made to his department and has he followed them through in respect of this entire program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge we are following through on the recommendations when we have examined them, checked into them, looked into them and agreed with them.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—NUMBER OF PROJECTS EXTENDED—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ALL PROJECTS KEEP RECORDS FOR AUDIT PURPOSES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In light of the fact the minister is on the verge, I would hope, of giving some indication as to the number of projects that have been extended—I would hope he is in a position to tell us how many projects have been extended under this new policy—can he assure the House that all the projects being extended have had a favourable auditor's report upon which the minister can act? In other words, can he assure the House that all Local Initiative Programs that have been extended have been the subject of a complete and full auditor's report that has been favourable?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question in its detail as notice.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE RECOVERY OF TRANSPORTATION COSTS OF IMMIGRANTS FROM UGANDA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of our government's humane and generous gesture last year of inviting to Canada a number of immigrants from Uganda, can he tell the House whether it is now the policy of his department to recover from these refugees, who came to Canada as a result of the inclement climate in their political system there, the transportation costs incurred by the government?

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO—EFFECT ON PRIVATE LANDS OF LACK OF PROTECTIVE MEASURES ON ADJACENT GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mr. Kenneth J. Higson (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Is he aware of the continuing erosion of vacant lands owned by the government of Canada along the shoreline of Lake Ontario as a result of the increasing high water level of Lake Ontario where no protective measures are being taken, and the adverse effect this lack of protection is having on adjoining improved privately owned lands where such protective measures have or are being taken, and what does he propose that the government should do about this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Public Works or the Canadian government do not necessarily assume responsibility for all damages caused by erosion. This erosion must have been caused by navigation or by federal undertakings in order for us to assume responsibility. I will have in this instance to check the hon. member's request to see whether this actually comes under the responsibility of the federal government.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): It is most surely for local demand.

[Later:]

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, can the minister explain the rationale behind extending the airport in a community the size of Windsor, Ontario, for the purpose of jumbo jet aircraft?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is argumentative or invites debate—perhaps that is a better way to put it—and is not in order.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he now confirm that he has received a report from the anti-dumping tribunal in respect of the shoe industry in Canada and, if so, when will he be in a position to make a statement as to what his department or the government intends to do to relieve the plight of the shoe and tanning industries of this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have received a report from the anti-dumping tribunal and I expect to make a statement in the very near future.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT'S RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURAL NATURE OF CANADA

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca) moved:

That this House, re-affirming that generations of peoples of diverse races and many nationalities have joined in peace and war to build a free Canada and to mold a Canadian nationality, regrets the government's reluctant and token recognition of this reality.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the opportunity to use one of our opposition days to discuss the question of multiculturalism. The diversity of origins, customs, religions, languages, literature, music and the arts is a precious Canadian asset. Retention and enhancement of these contributions to our society should be given every reasonable assistance, and where assistance involves the use of public funds it is incumbent upon the government to insure that there is no suggestion that such funds are being used to gain political favour.

To date, steps taken to implement a multicultural policy in this country have not convinced many Canadians that the aim has not been in some ways partisan. The program so far has been almost exclusively related to a few grants for this and for that; throw in a four-page ad which has the distinct appearance of election campaign material, and one could easily become suspicious of the motives. I am not being critical of the idea of grants, but it is clear that in order to realize the aims of a policy of multiculturalism much more than a few government handouts is necessary. There has to be a genuine effort to introduce appropriate legislative changes designed to give complete equality to all ethnic groups in the country.

We recognize that you cannot buy or legislate cultural activity or harmony. The government's cultural role has to be a supportive one to create the proper atmosphere and institutional basis to allow the realization by all Canadians of their cultural aspirations, and conditions must be such that these aspirations could emanate from the people, not from the state.

Multiculturalism is a uniquely Canadian concept and represents the traditional difference between the American melting pot and Canadian mosaic. This mosaic probably remains the single most important strand in the fabric of our national identity. Inside the melting pot everyone is rootless, floating like driftwood in the ocean, no roots to attach it to firm soil. Here in Canada, the English, the French and other Canadians of European origin, the Indians, are maintaining their identity and therefore maintaining their roots on Canadian soil. These groups occupy a special place in the unofficial agreement between people of various backgrounds living together, recognizing and appreciating each other's differences and respecting these while maintaining their own particular identities.

The original "B and B" concept failed to recognize this Canadian reality and in fact implied a quiet suppression of non-official cultures and languages, creating a feeling not conducive to unity in the country. Acceptance of and recognition of Canada's multicultural reality gives official status to the positive value of the contribution of other cultures to the Canadian cultural framework. In short, Canada's basic fibre consists of many groups, each of which has a rich and cohesive internal life, each of which has a desire to reach outward, to co-operate with, and appreciate the others.

Official recognition of this Canadian multicultural reality is a new thing for many Canadians. Many Canadians have greeted this recognition with joy, while others have greeted it with some suspicion. There have been feelings expressed that in some way an official policy of multiculturalism will detract from, or undermine, Canada's two largest ethnic groups, namely the English and French.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that I do not see multiculturalism in that kind of light. Multiculturalism simply adds to the richness contributed to this country by the two largest ethnic groups.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: It is an embellishment and refinement of the definition of Canadian society as it actually exists. I would like to assure those who feel threatened that multiculturalism is not a threat to anyone. As I mentioned previously, official recognition of multiculturalism was generally accepted as a step in the right direction. As far as the non-official language groups are concerned, the policy was nearly universally received with some pleasure.

The minister's announcements of a few days ago concerning the establishment of an advisory council and the plan to hold a national conference on multiculturalism, as well as the various grants, are also small steps in the right direction but none of these things are satisfactory from the point of view of creating a feeling of complete equality amongst all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, there is a growing feeling amongst the ethnic groups that steps so far taken connot be interpreted as much more than tokenism.

Many of the recommendations of the fourth book of the B and B Commission are left unattended, and many moves that could be made to achieve a better sense of belonging are yet to be made. There are certain legislative changes for example that could be carried out. First, a constitutional change would be in order which would officially embody the concept of multiculturalism within the Canadian constitution. This move is not something that would cost the taxpayer but would go a long way toward making all minority groups feel officially recognized and equal as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: The language bill could be improved as well by the strengthening of section 38, which deals with the rights of ethnic groups, in such a way as to make the section more positive. The purpose of such an amendment would be to ensure that the Official Languages Act does not have the effect, either directly or indirectly, of restricting in any way the current status or the future growth of any minority languages. Such an amendment could include guarantees of the right to speak a minority language other than either of the two official languages, and the right of that language to enjoy natural development within this country. Furthermore, the language act could be improved in such a way as to bring about consultation and agreement between federal and provincial governments for the purpose of assisting and encouraging the natural development of any such minority language. It would also be useful to declare minority languages that have been in common usage in this country for many years to be Canadian languages.

I have a letter from the deputy language commissioner which refers to the takeover of a radio station in Winnipeg by CBC and the future right of non-official language groups to use this radio station for programming. At least six times in that letter, the assistant language commissioner refers to German, Italian, Ukrainian and other languages that have been programmed on this station as foreign language broadcasts and, at the same time, to English and French as Canadian languages. The fact of the matter is that English and French as well as German, Italian, Ukrainian and many other languages are all of European origin and therefore, by definition, are all foreign languages to Canadian soil. However, we accept English and French as the official languages of the country, and I do not think that anybody suggests there should be more than two official languages. But we must recognize that other languages commonly used are no more foreign to this soil than either of the two official languages.

Some hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: I can see no particular reason that other languages cannot be declared to be Canadian languages in order to avoid the application of the word "foreign" to Canadians who have been here for generations.

Mr. Alexander: That is right.

Mr. Yewchuk: Again, that would not cost any money and would not undermine in any way the two official languages. I want to point out that there are many countries of the world which have several languages which are their own but which have only one or two official languages.

Another legislative change which would go a long way towards creating equality amongst Canadians would be to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights, section I, which deals with the four traditional freedoms. Two more freedoms could be added. One would be the freedom of choice of language to be spoken by any individual—and again I do not suggest the addition of more official languages—and the other would be freedom of choice of culture or way of life. This simple move would put into statute the intent of this parliament and this government to ensure Canadians that the Canadian Bill of Rights explicitly sets out and guarantees Canadians the absolute right to speak any language they may wish, regardless of the universality of such language, and to guarantee them the absolute right to adopt as a style of life any culture or part thereof contributing to the Canadian mosaic.

These changes would reassure Canadians of their right to exist as a cultural group—and you may call that a group right if you like—and the right to be different if they so choose. These rights would guarantee that no politician, no political party or any other group of significant importance could trample on the mosaic and therefore disturb the fine balance between Canadians that has developed over the years.

In addition to amendments to the Bill of Rights itself, Canada should set up an independent national human rights commission to deal with the whole range of individual rights in every field be it labour, housing, status of women or any other field where there is jurisdictional involvement of the federal government. If properly set up and administered, such a commission could be of enormous value in reinforcing the practical every-day application of the Bill of Rights. In terms of moral force, in terms of publicity through periodic reports to the House of Commons, and in terms of administrative decisions, its influence could be considerable. Such a commission could deal with a number of matters which the federal government itself might refer to it. For example, they might refer matters like questions on the census forms, or place of birth information required on Canadian passports, or situations such as have been produced by the takeover of station CKSB by CBC in Manitoba. The commission could also be helpful to the government in the process of removing from the statutes all remaining distinctions between native and naturalized Canadians in order to lessen the opportunities for discrimination that may be presented by these distinctions.

I mentioned before that while Canada has always been a multicultural country, the concept was officially recognized only recently and there are some Canadians who do not fully understand multiculturalism, who feel that in some ways it may threaten them or detract from the official language groups of the country. In order to overcome these problems and to make the general public more aware of multiculturalism and of the contribution made by all Canadians, certain steps need to be taken as part of a public educational program. A two pronged approach would serve the purpose, namely, first, the use of the mass media, of national radio, of television, of newspapers, and of cablevision; and second, the educational system itself, which involves dealings with the provinces in their area of responsibility for education.

With regard to the mass media, the Broadcasting Act appears to present certain difficulties to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in that it specifically suggests that the language of broadcasts is to be English or French. While it does not say that other languages should not be used, it is interpreted by the CBC in such a way that other languages are not used. The president of the CBC, when questioned about this matter, indicated that amendments to the Broadcasting Act were not necessary in order to allow the use of third language programming and broadcasting, but that direction from the government and from parliament must come prior to any changes in their policy. At the same time other languages are used in broadcasting in the north, namely, the native languages, a move which I fully support but one which also confirms the fact that the Broadcasting Act does not stand in the way of the use of other languages than English and French on the national networks.

When questioned in the House on this matter, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) seemed to be of a different opinion. He felt that it was up to the CBC to set policy, and only a day ago suggested that possibly amendments to the Broadcasting Act would have to be made in order to allow third language broadcasting. Whether or not it is intentional, there appears to be a conflict between the opinions of the president of the CBC and the Secretary of State on this question of third language broadcasting. However, this is a subject which must be squarely faced and dealt with in order that multicultural programming can be made available to the Canadian public within a reasonable time. Cablevision could be used for this purpose initially, and the national networks in due course. The National Film Board and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should certainly be exhibiting a greater awareness of the variety of backgrounds of Canadians than they presently are.

The ethnic press in Canada has been an important source of information, cultural and otherwise, to many Canadians, but it is experiencing severe difficulty. While government advertising in the ethnic press is of some benefit from the point of view of revenue, such advertising in itself is in no way a means of guaranteeing the viability of the ethnic press. I do not need to emphasize the importance of the survival of the ethnic press as a tool of maintaining language and culture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yewchuk: Increases in postal rates in recent years have acted as a great drawback to a wide circulation of Canada's ethnic press. The situation could be easily remedied by a roll back in postal rates as applied to ethnic and other uniquely Canadian publications.

Another step in assisting the ethnic press would be to establish an ethnic press bureau in Ottawa operated by the ethnic press itself, independent from government ties but with government assistance.

Finally, greater recognition of the third force in Canada could be given by promoting more outward signs of Canada's multicultural nature. Again, these do not run into additional costs. They simply require decisions to be made. For example, we could produce commemorative stamps commemorating authors, poets or other great men originating from ethnic groups. Every level of government can certainly do more to promote multiculturalism through the naming of public buildings, streets, and other public institutions by names which originate in other ethnic groups. In short, all public means should be used to give more indication of our commitment to multiculturalism.

These are some of the principles that must be considered and some of the policies that must be implemented. We must create a society in which every Canadian is proud of his past, his present, his origin, his name, and his ability to achieve equality in this country.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the motion before the House this afternoon, a motion submitted by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) on behalf of his party, which reads:

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

> That this House, re-affirming that generations of peoples of diverse races and many nationalities have joined in peace and war to build a free Canada and to mould a Canadian nationality, regrets the government's reluctant and token recognition of this reality.

In my 12 years as a member of the House of Commons, I have never heard anything more unfair to a government which has a tremendous and enviable record of achievement on all fronts. This motion, I think, demonstrates such an incomplete knowledge of the facts and lack of appreciation of this government's and other Liberal administrations' achievements in the recognition and support of all the people comprising the Canadian society that I am disappointed that the hon. member for Athabasca allowed his name to be associated with such a motion.

I am pleased this afternoon to take this opportunity to put on record the achievements of Liberal governments and to clarify any misconceptions. We in the Liberal party have always worked for unity in diversity. May I refer to the first Liberal prime minister of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, under whose administration Canada flourished and welcomed to our shores people from many nations. Who is there who is not stirred or not inspired by his ideals and his oratory, especially when he reads the speech that Sir Wilfrid Laurier delivered to Acadians in August of 1900 when he likened his concept of Canada to the harmonious structure of a great English cathedral, saying:

> As long as I live, as long as I have power to labour in the service of my country, I shall repel the idea of changing the nature of its different elements. I want the marble to remain the marble; I want the granite to remain the granite; I want the oak to remain the oak. I want to take all these elements and build a nation that will be foremost amongst the great powers of the world.

I recall many other speeches of Liberal prime ministers, such as those of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent who recognized the Canadian reality of multicultural Canada, who in their words as well as in their deeds worked tirelessly for unity in diversity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the minister for interrupting his speech but he is lauding former Liberal prime ministers. I believe he made a statement which was erroneous when he said that the first Liberal prime minister was Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In fact, it was Alexander Mackenzie. I would think he would know that.

Mr. Haidasz: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I meant the first French Canadian Liberal prime minister.

It was our beloved prime minister, the late Lester B. Pearson, who recognized the need to build a modern Canada as we were approaching the 100th birthday of Canadian confederation. When he established the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in 1963, he directed them, among other things, in their terms of reference to:

> take into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution.

The Liberal government of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) acted upon the recommendations of that royal commission, and he announced formally in the House of Commons on October 8, 1971, his government's policy on multiculturalism. That, Mr. Speaker, was an historic date that will be remembered as the most significant event in the Canadian history of our time.

Our late prime minister, Lester B. Pearson, will also be remembered for his enlightened and humanitarian approach to the needs of the Canadian people. The legislation he introduced such as medical insurance, the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan, and other progressive and reform legislation will be remembered gratefully by the Canadian people.

Canada also honours its men and women of outstanding achievement with the Order of Canada, thanks to Lester B. Pearson. The Order of Canada was created on Canada's 100th birthday, and will be forever associated with Lester B. Pearson whose initiative led to the establishment of the order, and gave our country its own system of recognizing merit, achievement and courage. It is a fitting memorial to his great patriotism and statesmanship. Among his many other achievements is our national flag which takes its place of honour to the right of your chair, Mr. Speaker. It was with satisfaction that the Canadian people learned that effective July 1, 1972, the Order was to be enlarged, while at the same time a new Order of Military Merit gives recognition for outstanding achievement on the part of members of the Canadian Armed Forces.

The Liberal governments, present and past, have recognized other outstanding Canadians of various ethno-cultural groups by appointing them to the cabinet, to the Senate to diplomatic posts around the world, to the courts of justice, and to federal agencies and advisory bodies. I recall at this time distinguished Canadians so honoured by Liberal governments such as the famous Ukrainian Canadian, Senator Wall of Winnipeg, a Lebanese Canadian, Senator Basha of Newfoundland, our Jewish Canadian senator, Senator David Croll, a Ukrainian Canadian physician, the Hon. Stephen Worabetz who was appointed the Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, His Honour John Decore, a chief judge for the district of northern Alberta, and also the Hon. Michael Starr and Peter Taraska, and as recently as May 15 this year Mrs. Isa Scotti, were appointed judges of the Canadian Citizenship Courts. The Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) is also considering commemorating famous Canadians and ethno-cultural groups through a special series of commemorative stamps.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it was Liberal governments, always guided by compassion and humanitarian considerations, that opened Canada's gates to refugees from displaced persons camps, to thousands of former soldiers, to refugees fleeing from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Tibet, Uganda, and to other immigrants. Our governments have a distinguished record also in assisting these refugees to settle in Canada. Many immigrants to this country have been assisted through paid language courses, vocational retraining or up-grading, in this way facilitating their entry into the main stream of Canadian life.

Canada has also assisted its citizens who are striving to be reunited with their families by being a signatory to the United Nations Charter on Human Rights and by insisting, during preparatory talks on European security, that countries act on the reunification of families, freedom of travel, and information exchange.

But the most recent significant development in the field of federal recognition of the contribution of Canadians of all ethno-cultural origins was on that historic date, October 8, 1971, when the Prime Minister formally announced his government's official policy on multiculturalism. May I take time to quote some of his remarks on that occasion. He said:

> There are two official languages, there is no official culture, nor does any ethnic group take precedence over any other. No citizen or group of citizens is other than a Canadian, and all should be treated fairly.

He also said on that occasion:

> A policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework commends itself to the government as the most suitable means of assuring the cultural freedom of Canadians.

The importance of the Prime Minister's statement is that it clearly presents the government's position in this sensitive area, and in doing so it removes constraints and sanctions, particularly official or quasi official ones, that impede the full participation of all groups in Canadian society. Furthermore, the statement is a clear recognition of a reality, the reality that multiculturalism has always existed in Canada, beginning with the diversity of the native peoples, followed by the arrival of explorers from various countries, and reinforced by waves of immigrant settlers from around the world. The record of our government is one of recognition, respect for and encouragement of this cultural diversity as a distinctive feature of the Canadian identity.

An aspect of this recognition is that while Canada is to have two official languages, and legislation in the form of the Official Languages Act has been passed to ensure that Canadians can deal with their government in one or the other of the official languages and guarantee the acquired legal and customary right of other languages, Canada does not, and I repeat does not, have an official culture or cultures. A policy of multiculturalism is a policy of virtually unlimited scope and one which allows all strands of thought, values and beliefs to contribute to the identity we have as Canadians. Culture is not something which should be officially sanctioned, for if it is to have any meaning it must be free to grow and change as the values and beliefs of the Canadian people change. The role of the government is to eliminate barriers to cultural development and, where necessary, to provide support to expressions of the various cultures in our country.

Moreover, this support must be in response to an initiative on the part of the groups themselves. To have it otherwise, in my judgment, would be folly. The government cannot and should not develop a multicultural society by decree, for in attempting to do so something artificial would be created. The cultural identity we have as Canadians is for all Canadians to contribute to, and what we as a government must ensure is that everyone has a full and equal opportunity to participate in the development of our way of life. This concern of ours that all Canadians should participate in the development of our cultural identity is a major consideration which guides our actions. Consequently, we are well aware of the need to sensitize the majority groups in Canada to the value of a multicultural society.

Last November the Liberal government manifested its faith in the concept of multiculturalism by appointing a Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism and by assigning to him the task of the implementation of its policy in a vigorous and effective manner. Upon assuming this post, I requested of my officials that they prepare a policy paper which would, on the basis of the experience in the past year and a half, and in light of representations made to us, expand the existing programs and introduce new ones. I am happy to say to you today that I was successful in obtaining approval for a new and expanded program which underlines the fact that the policy on multiculturalism, initiated by this government, is being implemented with both seriousness and determination.

On May 17 in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to announce the first appointments to the Canadian Consultative Council on multiculturalism. I envisage this council playing an important role in the development of multiculturalism in Canada. It is composed of able people who were selected on the basis of their achievements and abilities, and not, and I wish to emphasize this, because they belong to certain ethnic organizations. The primary role of the council is to provide an overview of all ethno-cultural groups in Canada including the dominant groups, the native peoples, the well-established minority groups and the newer ones which are still arriving in Canada. It is intended to examine their changing relationships to each other and to chart the long-range course of multiculturalism.

We see this council as a unique experiment in consultation for the federal government. It is much larger than most advisory bodies simply because we want to ensure that it is as fully representative as possible of all peoples and regions of Canada. In addition to serving as a source of consultation for the government, it is our desire to see it serve as an effective instrument for the development of cross-cultural understanding among members of all Canada's ethno-cultural groups, by playing an important role in sensitizing members of the dominant cultures to the needs, aspirations and values of Canada's minority groups.

The responsibilities of the council are onerous, but we have every reason to be optimistic for, in my judgment, the membership of the council is composed of excellent people who will work to ensure the full participation of all Canadians in the cultural development of this country. I am asking them to begin their work as soon as possible and expect that five regional meetings across the country will be convened in the next few weeks in preparation for a national meeting.

Our federal government continues to take the initiative in meeting the need to preserve and nurture our cultural heritage and is responding to the aspirations of the ethnocultural groups of Canada by creating and further developing the multicultural program. If the program is to continue to meet the needs of Canadians, an ongoing consultative process is necessary. The Canadian consultative council on multiculturalism is, of course, an important instrument in this process. But other techniques are necessary, too, if we are to keep closely in touch with those we serve, and specific organizations and individuals should be given an opportunity to express their views within a national forum. For this reason, I am convening the first national conference on multiculturalism to be held in Ottawa this fall. The members of my consultative council will be in attendance and I hope that all interested organizations will be active participants in these deliberations.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

There have been those who said that the multicultural policy has been one of "tokenism". The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said that a few moments ago. We reject this view entirely. Funds in the amount of $3 million were made available in January, 1972 to carry out the initial organization and launch not only a project grants program, but also other specific programs to express the multicultural reality of Canada. These included a major research program into the role that language plays as a factor in cultural retention, the commissioning of a series of textbooks on the histories and contributions of ethno-cultural groups to the development of Canada, an examination of ethnic studies in academic institutions, developmental work with multicultural centres, negotiations with provincial governments and ethnocultural groups regarding the writing of language textbooks, the beginning of a series of films on the present day life styles of different ethnocultural groups, the initiation of programs to make books and films in ancestral languages available across Canada, and the development of collections and exhibits depicting the heritage of all the groups making up Canadian society.

I list these activities not merely to illustrate how much work has been done since January 1972, but to make a very essential point. The multicultural program is not merely a granting program. It is something far more complex and far more significant than that. It is a response to a major change in direction in our society, a change of which many organizations in Canada are in the forefront and of which they are well aware.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that at a time when governments at all levels in Canada are being accused of excessive, and indeed frequently wanton expenditures of public funds, it is refreshing to be accused of having an undue regard for the public purse. Unfortunately, the allegation that has been made by the hon. member for Athabasca rests neither upon accuracy nor a recognition of this government's efforts to exercise both restraint and wisdom in the expenditure of public funds.

The basic argument of his party is that we are not doing enough to promote multiculturalism and more especially our expenditures reflect a token recognition of the multicultural fact in Canada. As I mentioned, only a few days ago I announced in this House that my budget for the multicultural program has been tripled to $10 million. This is a large sum by any standards and if the members of his party regard amounts of this size so lightly, I think the people of Canada ought to note this and count their untold blessings that they have not entrusted the government to a party which would use public funds of this magnitude so flippantly.

I do not take the hon. member's charge of tokenism seriously, Mr. Speaker, as I do not think he really means it. Perhaps it is intended to be provocative for its own sake or for the sake of the debate this afternoon but the barrenness of his party's policy on multiculturalism is evident. So that there will be no confusion over the plans which this government has for multiculturalism, and so that at least we can retain the distinction of being clear on what we advocate as a party, I should like to highlight for the edification of hon. members opposite, the major direction and components of our multicultural policy.

I want to say that the best known of our programs, and certainly the one from which we have had the greatest public response, is that of multiculturalism grants. This program was implemented in January of 1972, and since then more than 300 ethno-cultural groups have received financial assistance to assist them in undertaking cultural and social projects. One of the basic criteria of any responsible government is to determine needs which can be legitimately made before deciding how much money to seek and then deciding how to spend it. This latter course appears to be the one which the hon. member for Athabasca favours, and it is quite possible the reason his party is not in power today.

Governments must base their decisions on a good deal more than talk, Mr. Speaker. They must decide on the legitimate aspirations and genuine needs of the ethno-cultural groups. The government is well satisfied that the multicultural grants program is meeting the needs of those whom it is intended to serve. On the basis of expressed interest in it, and also because we have regretfully had to refuse a number of deserving applications in the past year, $1.1 million will be added to the existing budget for this program in this fiscal year.

Further on the subject of program expansion, Mr. Speaker, and the allegation of tokenism, let it be noted that under our program of grants for multicultural centres, we are increasing our expenditures there by well over 300 per cent in actual dollars; the amount involves an increase from $154,000 to $654,000.

As well as having increased the funds available for the establishment of multicultural centres, we have also modified the criteria originally established for this program so that we can provide greater support for these very desirable facilities. Indeed, it is our desire to see multicultural centres develop throughout Canada because they can be a very significant factor in developing cross-cultural understanding. I must say, however, that the basic initiative for establishing these centres rests with the people in the communities themselves and, as they demonstrate a desire for these facilities, I shall ensure that adequate resources are made available so that those requests which do come within the clear terms of established and public criteria need not be denied assistance. If this is tokenism, Mr. Speaker, I would be most grateful to hear how our position could be more liberal and still remain responsible which, of course, is a concept that the opposition party does not have to attach great significance to, since they have been unable to persuade the electorate to entrust them with the care of federal programs.

As I announced in the House of Commons on May 17, the government is establishing a Canadian identities program as a further, and important part of its multicultural program. The purpose of this program is to increase an awareness and understanding by all Canadians of the cultural diversity and, within Canada, expenditures under the Canadian identities program will, in this fiscal year alone, exceed $3.8 million.

Additionally, the government plans to continue its assistance to multicultural projects involving all media of communication, including films, radio and television, theatre, literature, crafts and cuisine, travelling exhibits under the sponsorship of the National Museum of Man, and the collection and exhibition programs of the Public Archives. Encouragement to conduct research in ethnic studies is an integral part of our multicultural policy, and the government proposes spending a further $425,000 on its multicultural studies program in this fiscal year.

The very special role and problems of the ethnic press in Canada are well understood, and we shall be making greatly increased use of the ethnic press to supply all cultural groups with essential information on such matters as the availability and entitlement to pensions and other individual assistance programs which are of interest to many Canadians.

The government recognizes that many young Canadians experience difficulty in retaining their ancestral languages, and in consultation with the provinces and to give Canadians greater opportunity to learn more of their cultural origins, we have undertaken to provide language teaching aids to those provinces and ethno-cultural groups which have expressed concern because these aids are not presently available from Canadian sources. Research on the role of ancestral languages as an element in the retention of a culture is currently under way. We are extending this program to include a larger number of ethno-cultural groups and rural areas in Canada in addition to the large urban centres, previously the focus of this program, as recommended to us by many ethno-cultural groups and members of this House.

Our multicultural programs are relatively new, and I think it is only prudent that before seeking additional funds, or making additional commitments, we, as a responsible government, should be satisfied that there exists a legitimate reason for doing either of these. Neither do I profess to have ready all of the solutions to our multicultural needs, or, indeed, to foresee all of them. I am, therefore, always grateful for advice which is objective and factually given and which comes from members of this House and various ethno-cultural organizations. There is no doubt that the government's multicultural programs have been received with great success, and that is perhaps nowhere more apparent than in the desire of the official opposition to identify themselves with support for the basic concept of a multicultural Canada. I thank them for that.

I have followed the public reaction to our multicultural programs very closely, and I think it is worth citing from an article in the Montreal Star of May 12 by a distinguished Ukrainian Canadian, Mr. Roman Rakhmanny. He wrote:

> ... neither the Progressive Conservative Party nor the New Democratic Party has included in its program any form of multicultural policy.

I shall be quite content, Mr. Speaker, to have the Canadian people decide at an appropriate date whether this government's effort to foster a multicultural society has been a token one or not. I take some consolation in this matter, even at this stage in the life of our government, in knowing that we shall have a record on which to go to the people. Unfortunately, the Conservative party continues to remain in its traditional position of saying what they would do if only they could persuade the people of Canada to entrust them with the responsibility of leading the country. The record of this government already exceeds that of any government in the past with respect to assistance to all of Canada's peoples and our position and programs are clearly stated. We have not indulged in epithets; we have not recited meaningless clichés or adopted positions of tokenism.

Canada stands today on the threshold of troubled times. In an era when economic and technological changes in the world have produced sweeping dislocations without precedent in the entire swell of human history—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired and he may continue only if he has the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that we must insist that members stick to their allotted times. The minister could be allowed a minute or two in order to finish his remarks but it will take our members every minute that is available this afternoon to straighten out the fantasy which he has been putting on record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the proposal submitted by the hon. member agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Haidasz: In an era when economic and technological changes in the world have produced sweeping dislocations without precedent in the entire swell of human history, and at a time when the traditional seams of cohesion threaten to snap, a major thrust in Canadian multicultural development is most opportune. Whether the search for identity and struggle for survival prove to be divisive or cohesive, futile or fortunate, will depend on the degree of our participation in shaping Canadian society.

Our attitude, our interest, our response to the federal government's initiative and leadership must transcend economic problems, social differences and language barriers. It must involve all of us. Yes, all of us must be concerned with the development of the Canadian cultural mosaic that will do justice to all Canadians. The additional human and financial resources which will be allocated to carry out these programs is further evidence of the importance that this government attaches to its multicultural policy. That is what multiculturalism is really all about, and I invite all hon. members to participate fully in this Canadian multicultural destiny.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to ask the minister a question on a matter that needs clarification.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Haidasz: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I could not ascertain from press releases whether the people who represent the minister's advisory council represent visible minority groups who make up our cultural mosaic. Can the minister clarify this question for us? Does it, in fact, represent the ethnic minorities?

● (1610)

Mr. Haidasz: I am pleased to say the membership of the council on multiculturalism is representative of all the ethno-cultural groups in Canada. I will send the hon. member particulars of the membership, from which he will see that it includes representation from among the black people in Canada.

Mr. Alexander: I was not making reference particularly to the black people, though I am glad to see the minister has included them. I am thinking of the Indians, the East Indians and the Eskimos. I am pleased to know that this is what is happening. I would appreciate the information in any event.

Mr. Haidasz: The native peoples of Canada are represented, both Indian and Eskimo. And the East Indians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, proposed the establishment of the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. The New Democratic Party Members of Parliament supported the recommendations made by that commission because we recognized that the unity of Canada was endangered by the feeling among French people, particularly those in Quebec, that they had not been treated fairly in Canada. Some of us, though, including the former member for Selkirk who is now premier of Manitoba, suggested on more than one occasion that while recognizing that English and French were the official languages of Canada, both the federal government and provincial governments should encourage, financially and otherwise, the continuing use and development of the cultures and languages brought to Canada by the other ethnic groups. This was probably because all of us represent essentially English-speaking constituencies and because many of us represent constituencies whose population is largely ethnic in origin, that is, they contain large numbers of Canadian citizens whose origins are neither English nor French. Such citizens, now, in fact, make up one third of the population.

I do not regret the support which I and other members of the New Democratic Party gave to the policy of biculturalism. But I want to say to the minister who has just completed his statement that it is because so many Liberals made this policy appear to be a political issue which only the Liberals can solve that so many Canadians have in recent years felt doubts about that policy. The Liberal party did no service to Canada by taking such an approach. I say to the minister that he does nothing good for Canada by suggesting that only the Liberal party has such a policy with regard to multiculturalism. If these programs are to be successful they will succeed only to the extent to which Canadians of all ethnic origins in all provinces accept them as being a response to the aspirations of all Canadians irrespective of party. When the minister gives the impression that only his party has a policy which meets the needs of those whose origin is neither English nor French, he invites opposition parties to criticize his programs even though, occasionally, they are on the right track.

We accept the principle that the cultural traditions brought to Canada by the various ethnic, religious and racial groups which came to this country during the past 200 years are of value to the development of our national culture. The literature, art and music they brought to Canada have all helped to develop a greater cultural depth in this country. As to the native peoples, in recent years Canadians have begun to realize, for the first time, I suspect, that the people who lived in this land before it was called Canada also have a culture and a way of life which possessed, and possesses, an ability to make a contribution to the over-all achievements of our society. I draw attention to the world-wide acclaim which has been given in recent years to Eskimo sculpture, prints and other forms of art. It is only in recent years we have begun to realize that those who lived here before our forefathers arrived possessed a distinctive and valuable culture of their own—that they were not savages, and so on, as they were too often called, and as they are still sometimes referred to, in our history books.

Volume IV of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism recognized and accepted many of the ideas which some of us who are neither of English nor French origin have been expressing from the time the proposal to establish the commission was first made. I have already indicated the principles which guided us. The minister, in his speech, quoted with approval the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on October 8, 1971 at which time he accepted the principle of multiculturalism. The words he spoke on that occasion were excellent, as was the document tabled at that time, which was entitled "The Federal Government's Response to Volume IV of the Report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism". I do not have time to put on record all the excellent ideas and principles which were expressed in that document, but let me quote just a few of the statements made in that response by the government:

> Bilingualism does not properly describe our society. Multiculturalism is more accurate.

And later:

> The Government of Canada will support all of Canada's cultures and will seek to assist, resources permitting, the development of those cultural groups which have demonstrated a desire and effort to continue to develop, a capacity to grow and to contribute to Canada, as well as a clear need for assistance.

It goes on to say:

> Government aid to multicultural centres, to specific projects of ethnic groups and to displays of the performing and visual arts as well as the programs already mentioned, will promote cultural exchange.

Then, later:

> The government will continue to assist immigrants to acquire at least one of Canada's official languages in order to become full participants in the Canadian society.

After discussing the process of implementation and administration, the document states:

> The growing provincial interest and public action in the field of multiculturalism make it imperative that the two levels of government co-operate. Patchwork programs and jurisdictional confusion will result unless an attempt is made to coordinate federal and provincial policies at the ministerial level and good relationships are established between the officials administering the programs.

All these are excellent ideas. What dismays me is that for a period of almost a year and a half after this statement was made, the government did virtually nothing to implement these principles. We are told today that the government is providing $10 million for that purpose this year. Until the present year, the appropriation was a great deal less—something in the neighbourhood of $2.5 million. Why is this? It is not as if the ethnic communities are bereft of organization or leadership or ideas. Ten times the $2.5 million appropriated last year could have been spent. Why was there virtually no consultation between the government of Canada and the ethnic groups? The minister has not explained that.

Mr. Haidasz: There was consultation.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister says there was. I represent a constituency which probably has more ethnic groups and people of ethnic origin than any other constituency in Canada. I am in frequent consultation with them and I know the groups that receive funds and the groups that do not. But until today I have been unable to get any explanation from the government or from these groups as to why certain of them get grants while others do not. Much more important than the fact that I could not get any explanation is the fact that the organizations themselves could not get any explanation. It is true that criteria were tabled supposedly outlining the basis on which grants would be made. I have looked at these criteria and I know which organizations received grants and which did not. Although I have lived in my constituency all my life and know these organizations quite well, I know no more than they do why some got grants but others did not.

The document that I quoted refers to the absolute need for consultation with the provinces. I have not had a chance to discuss just what happened in other provinces, but I do have some connection with the present government of Manitoba and on more than one occasion I have discussed with the minister in charge the objectives of this program in that province. The province of Manitoba is doing its own work in this field, and also encouraging ethnic groups by providing funds. It makes no sense to me, as it made no sense to the federal government when they tabled their response to volume 4 of the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, to run these federal and provincial programs virtually in separate compartments.

On the many occasions when I discussed the amount of consultation being had between the federal government and the provincial government of Manitoba in respect of this kind of programming, I was assured that there was little, if any, consultation. The minister in charge of these programs, the former Secretary of State, came through Winnipeg once or twice and paid a courtesy call on the minister in charge in Manitoba, but there was no—

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps it would be helpful to the hon. member if I stated that I met, on a visit to Winnipeg, with the hon. Mr. Desjardins and had several talks with one of his chief advisers, Mr. Cecil Senchyshyn.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I accept what the minister says and it merely confirms what I have been saying. The minister has only been in his present portfolio for a relatively short period, and I am saying that until he was appointed to his present position the federal government and the departmental officials responsible for implementing the program were not in consultation with the provinces. I am not just talking about a meeting between ministers but about detailed discussions between officials of the department of the federal government responsible for this work and provincial governments across Canada. These kind of discussions are required to achieve a sensible co-ordination that will make these programs work.

The minister spoke with a good deal of pride about the appointment of his advisory committee and I want to congratulate him on that score. But again I point out that almost a year and a half has been lost. There was no need to wait a year and a half before appointing a committee representative of most of the important ethnic groups so that the kind of consultation that is really required if the program is to be meaningful is had. The appointment of the advisory committee is a case of better late than never.

Members on this side of the House have been critical of the government in view of the fact that, having apparently enthusiastically endorsed the recommendations made in volume 4 of the B and B commission report a year and a half ago, the Prime Minister and his government have taken all this time to do the most elementary and fundamental things that are required to be done if this program is not to be what the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said it has been. I agree with him that, to a large extent, the program until now has been tokenism.

Those of us who represent constituencies that are largely ethnic in composition cannot be blamed if until now we have felt that to some considerable extent grants were given not on the basis of need, or on what organization can do the best job or is the most deserving, but rather possibly on the basis of political considerations. I am not saying we are right on that count, but I am saying that until the government made the move it made recently and appointed an advisory committee that is representative to conduct meaningful consultations with the provinces and provide a budget that begins to meet needs both for this year and next year, we critics could not be blamed, either inside or outside parliament, for feeling that the program was, as I say, tokenism to a large extent.

Mr. Prud'homme: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. member asking me a question but I only have a few more minutes. If the House will give the hon. member the time when I have finished, I will be more than happy to answer his question.

Let me say further that we hope to be able to say the government has finally moved along the lines we felt it should have moved a year and a half ago. We hope that the advisory committee will have real power and that consultations with the provinces will be meaningful. We hope that if the government finds that $10 million is not enough it will provide more money. We can assure the minister we will not criticize the minister for being profligate with the taxpayers' money but will support him in the expenditure of whatever amounts are reasonable in order to implement the policy the government has adopted in principle and that we enthusiastically support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) seeking the floor to ask a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since the hon. member did complete his remarks when his 20 minutes had expired, I think the hon. member must seek the consent of the House in order to ask a question. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: This is not a controversial question, Mr. Speaker, but rather to enlighten the House. Does the hon. member realize how difficult it is, and how long it takes to set up a multicultural advisory committee? Does he realize the multitude of consultations which must take place in every province of Canada? Unless someone is appointed by the government, and this could be done very rapidly, does the hon. member realize the difficulties that must be faced in consulting every single ethnic group in every single province in Canada, and how long this would take if it is to be well done?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member asking the question came from an area closer to Manitoba than he does, he would realize he need not ask a member of any party representing north Winnipeg that kind of question. My constituency is like a small United Nations, and if any Member of Parliament knows the difficulties and intricacies in respect of ethnic groups in this country, I want to assure the hon. member that I surely do.

Mr. Prud'homme: There are 17 languages spoken in my district.

Mr. Orlikow: I should think it would be easier to appoint an advisory committee of this kind when the ethnic groups are well organized and represented by a multitude of organization than it would be to set up a Local Initiatives Program or an Opportunities for Youth Program. We spent a lot more money in this regard, and we started with no organization and no representatives at all. I do not think that is a very valid reason for taking so long.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will bear with me and my bad voice, but spring has been catching up with me.

I enjoyed hearing the minister's statistics in respect of moneys proposed for ethnic grants, but to date I still fail to see a clear government policy benefiting all Canadians. I should like to take the opportunity of answering the minister's allegation regarding this party. I can assure him that, if and when this party forms the government, we will not only have a policy we will update on a continuing basis but, more importantly, it will not take us three and a half years to realize that we have a multicultural situation in Canada, whether we like it or not.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, let me just make my thinking clear as far as multiculturalism is concerned. Contrary to the critics of multiculturalism in Canada, and unfortunately there exist a great number of critics, some here in this House, multiculturalism in no way constitutes an attack on the basic duality of our country. We all know there are two official languages in Canada and no one is trying to take away the importance of either of them. We all know that Canada has many of its own original cultures, such as Eskimo and Indian, and no one is trying to take away the importance of that. We all know that Canada has developed many talented individuals and organizations over the years in all walks of life, be it in education, literature or the arts, and no one is trying to take away the importance of that either.

What then do we want, Mr. Speaker? We want both justice for all Canadians and recognition of the cultural diversity of this country. We want the opportunity of continuation of the talent, cultures and arts brought to Canada by our fathers and forefathers. The federal government can and must play an important role in utilizing the resources and powers which only it has rather than promoting itself and its ministers as it so lavishly did through the recent national advertising campaign at the taxpayers' expense. The government should assist all ethno-cultural communities in Canada to become dynamic and creative. This course would benefit not only the Canadian members of a certain community but, in the long run, all citizens of Canada. This is a simple principle of preserving and enhancing the many cultural traditions which exist within our country.

I agree with some of the suggestions made last year by Heritage Ontario for the benefit of all Canadians. These are suggestions which the government has not acted upon or even reacted to. But how can you expect this government to act upon anything if it does not even have a clear policy of its own on these matters? The only thing the government seems to have done so far, as I said earlier, has been to advertise through the ethnic press across Canada the fact that it, indeed, has a minister responsible for multiculturalism. I suppose we cannot blame the government completely for this display, as how else would the people of Canada know there was such a department, let alone a minister responsible for it?

In the last number of years, Canada has been characterized by an expanding economy in which there has been a vast increase in the impact of technology on the forms of our social organization and the cultural life of our society. Two results of these changes have been the social and spatial mobility of people and the increasingly important role played by the mass media, primarily television, in the lives of the population. For the minority ethno-cultural groups, the consequence has been an increased pressure to adapt to these changes at ever increasing rates. Groups have been forced to concentrate most of their energies on self-preservation. Since the cultures of Canada's ethnocultural minorities are a common resource, they must not only be maintained but, above all, developed.

It is not only necessary to deal directly with the individuals and their organizations, but to deal and work as much as possible with such national bodies as the National Film Library, the Public Archives, the National Film Board and many others; to work and to promote in the interest of all Canadians, within a unifying scheme, the development and promotion of all cultures available to any Canadian citizen. For Canadians to reap full benefit from the many-faceted nature of these cultures, we must have an adequate means of cultural exchange among all segments of our population. The government, the media, the cultural agencies and our educational systems must share responsibility for ensuring that the people of Canada are informed about all of Canada's ethnocultural groups and have access to each other's cultural heritage.

It has long been recognized in Canada that international cultural exchange is an important aspect of cultural development. It was to this end that the government of Canada participated directly in international conferences with France and other French-speaking countries. I believe this to be a very positive development which should be extended to other countries that share with Canada common cultural attributes. I strongly endorse the recommendations of Heritage Ontario that the federal government and Canada's ethnocultural groups initiate cultural exchange programs with the originating countries of Canada's ethnocultural groups.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a suggestion concerning what I believe to be the only realistic way to operate with regard to this multitude of problems and possibilities. I must point out that I am speaking personally and am merely expressing my own opinion in this regard. I do not believe that the council which is presently being assembled by the minister will be able to cope with the problems at hand, if for no other reason than size alone and the indiscriminate manner in which appointments are made to the council. I believe a government agency, perhaps along the line of Sports Canada, should be formed which would be representative of all Canadians. This agency would be manned and operated by representatives of all minority groups, including Indian and Eskimo, who would be selected or elected by their own communities and who would sit under one umbrella organization, so to speak, which would be directly responsible to the minister and his department.

Until something along this line is developed, I cannot foresee the government being in a position to deal in an adequate, fair, equal and productive manner with the hundreds of different groups in Canada. I wish to remind the minister that the greatest strength of Canada lies in its people of various cultural heritages and backgrounds. The quality of the lives of all Canadians has been enriched by the number of cultures that have joined to form our society. It is important that we maintain this rich cultural heritage while adapting to changing conditions in Canada. I believe in Canadian unity, and will play any part I can to ensure that this unity is maintained in every sense of the word. First, however, we must persuade the government to do the same.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this discussion and to find that we have before us a most interesting motion. It deals with various questions—particularly from an ethnic viewpoint—concerning the technicality of biculturalism and multiculturalism.

Mr. Speaker, this motion reads as follows:

That this House, re-affirming that generations of peoples of diverse races and many nationalities have joined in peace and war to build a free Canada and to mold a Canadian nationality, regrets the government's reluctant and token recognition of this reality.

Yet, during the war, for instance, we recognized all those nationalities and because of that war, we allowed all those ethnic groups to live more decently and to speak their languages. In spite of the war, they were also allowed to continue erecting their buildings, use their mother tongue and learn a lot of things.

War, Mr. Speaker, actually put an economic power in the hands of citizens. Even if several things were manufactured only for the purpose of war, citizens suffered many technical and physical hardships. Nevertheless, we were able to develop in a few years a hundred times more than during the ten depression years. During the depression nothing was possible, but with the war everything became possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before talking of bilingualism, multiculturalism and languages, people must have the means to live. I know that in Canada we have some means but we must borrow from future generations in order to be able to live. To build what each nationality needs to develop and even live—schools, churches, well, everything—we have to use the formula of capitalism which says that you have to go into debt and borrow. We cannot do anything unless we go into debt and mortgage the future in order to develop our country. So it is quite difficult from that point of view to allow all ethnic groups in Canada to develop according to their aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, according to the study and a survey made by the Treasury Board, the number of French-speaking and bilingual public servants is not adequate. Bilingualism programs are ineffective and inadequate. High officials are always recruited among unilingual anglophones in preference to others.

This is what Mr. Spicer says in his report.

I am certain that the problem, Mr. Speaker, has to do with economics: all those who have economic power are free and self-governing. Money has no language, but it has power, and this is what Canadians need most.

Then, Mr. Speaker, if a beneficial economic system were set up, if taxpayers were provided with the necessary funds, they would have their own power and they could use it as they please, and they could develop technically in all respects. They could also speak their own language and develop their nation according to their aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, in order to establish unity in our country, to reinstate unity, national unity must be strengthened by granting equal rights and opportunities to all Canadians. Whether they be French-speaking, English-speaking or other, all Canadians have the right to live. Every human being has the right to live and this right, Mr. Speaker, must be safeguarded and it is up to us, in this parliament to safeguard the rights of the citizens. At present, we safeguard the rights of the dollar bill, of finance, but the rights of the human being, we despise them. That is what we are doing now.

In fact, I claim that in this country, the problem is not so much one of language than of participation. Even though the whole federal administration were bilingual, the problems would not be solved, since French Canadians or people from other countries would not feel at home. Thus, it would not be possible to solve the problem only through bilingualism. It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that structures and administrators be fairly and equitably divided among the ethnic groups making up our country.

We have been living in hope for a long time. In 1969, when the Official Languages Act wAs passed, it gave rise to great hopes because we thought then that we would have a tangible contribution to make. What did the royal commission on biculturalism do to settle the problem of bilingualism? Though this inquiry cost more than $9 million, we only learned that there were so many French Canadians, so many Ukranians, so many English Canadians and so many German Candians in Canada. That is all we got out of this inquiry. Then, the problem will not be solved through inquiries. To solve this problem, we must enable Canadians to take part in the administration of their country, give them the importance they deserve.

If, for instance, 27 per cent of the people are French Canadians and 10 or 12 per cent belong to other ethnic groups, each nationality, according to the population ratio it represents, must be accepted within the public service and each should be able to exercise powers and participate in the administration like all the other groups in Canada. That is how we will really create in Canada social unity and give Canadians their true rights.

All linguistic rights are recognized, but financial power is necessary in order to exercise them. Since that power is detrimental to all that, we find it difficult to exercise our true powers and allow each nationality to develop normally. If we have true respect for human beings and their linguistic and cultural rights, let us arrange to make available to them what they lack to acquire their rights. And such true rights citizens will enjoy if we supply the population with economic power, which dominates all others. The exercise of any other power is useless without economic power. So let us fight for and demand economic power. Having obtained it, we shall have political,linguistic and ethnic powers, in short all powers.

There is much else I should have liked to say, but since other hon. members want the floor, I shall be content with the few remarks I have just made.

[English]

Mr. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) for choosing this topic for today's debate, even though his motion is drafted in such highly partisan terms—

An hon. Member: Like the minister's speech.

Mr. Caccia:—that it does not add very much to an unbiased, lucid and objective approach to the topic of his choice. It strikes me as being significant that today's debate has taken place so far in English and French, not in Ojibway, not in Italian, not in Polish, not in Ukrainian, not in Greek, and not in Portuguese. This has a certain significance. If the hon. member had spoken in Ukrainian in making his opening remarks, if the Minister of State (Mr. Haidasz) had replied in Polish and had been followed by the next member speaking Jewish and then by me speaking Italian, perhaps we would have been achieving real multiculturalism. The fact remains that we are addressing each other in this debate today either in English or in French, and this is something that strikes me as being a fact of life in this country, a reality with which we are all coming to grips and from which we probably draw different conclusions but which nevertheless could also be a subject for a deeper analysis.

Apart from this observation, let me say that this debate raises several other questions. It raises the question of what is the role of the state in determining the cultural policy of the nation. Is it to strengthen and encourage the retention of identities along the road travelled so far which has found its definition in the term "mosaic", or is it that of strengthening and encouraging the integration of individuals in the new society which eventually leads to the so-called melting pot? Is it also to keep in mind considerations of national unity and of common denominators despite differences, this being a third alternative apart from the other two?

Another question that this debate raises in my mind is whether it is good to have a separate policy, a separation between the multicultural policy on one hand and the other cultural policies of the state. Should there be a distinction between the two, whereby you have the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) implementing a policy aimed at Francophones and Anglophones and another policy that takes care of all the others. Is this something to which we would like to address our thoughts? I would like to do that, and also to consider what the consequences are of these approaches in the long run.

Another question that comes to my mind, of course, is one that has been raised by many other speakers, namely, do we believe in hyphenated Canadianism, such an Anglophone-Italo-Canadian, or a Francophone-Greek-Canadian, or an Anglophone-Armenian-Canadian, and so forth? What is the meaning of that and what are the implications of this approach?

These are very intriguing questions, but I should not compliment myself upon the fact that I am asking these questions. Nevertheless, they arise from the motion which is now before us. I do not have the answers, of course, but I think there is more to this subject than is revealed by the terms of the motion put to us in a highly partisan way by the hon. member for Athabasca. This is a very important and serious matter which cannot be measured in terms of the cash value of cultures. It is for this reason that when the idea of creating a council and its composition where announced by the Minister of State I thought it was a tremendous thing. I believed that a body had been launched which perhaps could provide some of the answers to these questions which cannot be resolved in the course of an afternoon's debate. For instance, some of the questions which should be put for guidance and deliberation are: Which direction is the state to take within the Canadian experience, and if there is a balance to be achieved between identity and integration, what kind of balance should it be? What is the role of the federal government, of provincial governments, and of municipal governments?

The hon. member for Athabasca raised a number of points in his remarks, some of which were purely under provincial jurisdiction, such as, for instance, the teaching of other languages in high schools. Different standards and different patterns are applied in the various provinces. Another question is: What is the role of volunteer agencies. The next one is related to the point which I just raised, namely, should multiculturalism remain a separate component of Canada's cultural policy? Another area for investigation which intrigues me very much is: What do the second, third and fourth generation Canadians expect from multiculturalism, and what does it mean to youth, to the ones who will probably be implementing some of the ideas that are being forged now? When you have individual approaches, there are all sorts of replies to such questions and some of them are so much in conflict with each other that it is rather difficult to reach a conclusion regarding what the expectations are. Obviously, the expectations of the first generation Canadian who has voluntarily become Canadian during his lifetime are quite different from the expectations of second, third or fourth generation Canadians.

The perception of the country and the ambitions are varied as a result of the experience of each generation. This is why I say it is rather sad when cultural programs are measured in terms of dollars and cents or, even worse, when they are compared with expenditures for implementing the Official Languages Act, as was done some weeks ago by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That question was raised by him in this House, and comparing the two struck me as being a kind of cheap politics. Really, this is not the way we should approach these two questions.

Obviously, bilingualism is a policy that is highly supported and is received with great enthusiasm by all cultural groups in this country, because through the bilingual policy we see a vehicle to a recognition of a multicultural society. Therefore, the comparison of one with the other is a most unfair approach. Actually one program complements the other. The bilingual policy is followed by the multicultural concept. There is historic evidence for this statement because, if I remember correctly, when the commission was launched it was a bilingual and bicultural commission. Then, over the years it was discovered that there was more to the question than just biculturalism, and so that approach was modified. As I say, the two are tied in with each other. Bilingualism is a recognition of the two languages and is highly welcomed in Canada today.

Of course, it is true that financial support is important, but more than that is needed. What is needed is vigour, vitality, and the will to retain one's culture, and to keep it up to date. It is a dynamic force. It is a way of life. It is language, of course. It is customs. It is art. It is folklore. It is a way of doing things. If these ingredients are there, then the funds will follow as a natural consequence, but let us not measure the funds first and then see what happens to multiculturalism. Multiculturalism is an option that is offered to the Canadian people, and its vitality has already been expressed in the first two years of the government's program. If that continues, the question of funds will be resolved. I am keeping my speech short because the thought has been expressed that there are others who want to speak in this debate. The main emphasis of my little speech is to ask that we treat some of these questions with care, in order that we approach the matter as objectively as we can.

The answers to these questions will be more readily found if we keep the subject out of so-called partisan politics, and whether we will be able to do that remains to be seen. Perhaps in these present days, Mr. Speaker, we are engaged in the process of shaping a rather unique society the like of which does not exist in other parts of the world. Perhaps we are travelling along a broad middle road, motivated by the liberal instinct of providing the broadest scope for expression to men and women of good will. Let us keep it that way, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Minister of State (Mr. Haidasz) was consulting with the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), and I hope some solutions have been reached. I listened very attentively to the last speaker, and I assume that most of his questions will be answered in the future by the minister who, I may say, gave us a very good history of past prime ministers. I came to this chamber as a new member. I was very happy that the minister gave us that past history, but I am looking for some future policies. I hope, as the previous speaker just mentioned, that we can work together in developing a worthwhile type of multicultural society in Canada.

I am delighted to rise in support of the motion moved by my colleague from Athabasca, for to me the subject of multiculturalism and all it implies for our country is fundamental to our Canadian existence and prosperity. From the beginning in this country, we have wisely resisted the lure of an American style melting pot society in which all are assimilated. As a result of the decision of the British Crown to reject Lord Durham's recommendations and ensure the survival of the French language and culture, and the Roman Catholic religion, Canada has been a place where a multiplicity of identities has been encouraged, not as an end in itself but as a valid expression of the greatest unifying force we have in Canada, the common love of her varied peoples for Canada, and for each other.

My constituency mirrors the mosaic pattern of which we have heard so much. The elusive Canadian identity, which I think makes us stronger, not weaker; freer, not less free, shows up in my riding with a population which is 12 per cent German. I speiken zie Deutch, but I do not think our interpreters do here in the House. Some 7 per cent of the population is Ukrainian, and 10 per cent is other including Magyar, Gaelic and French. In the same way my own ancestry illustrates the rich background which has developed this land. My great grandfather left the plains of Prussia and settled in Alberta. His son's first language was German. His grandson, my father, had English as his first language but always remained fluent in German. And so today his great grandson rises to speak in the parliament of Canada, although I have lost all the German, in support and defence of that great tradition of diverse development. He rises as a man who is thoroughly Canadian and who only occasionally catches glimpses of his antecedents in the great dishes my mother prepares and in which I probably indulge too much.

But I rise as one who is convinced of the validity of my ancestry as part of the Canadian experience, an experience which, as I have said, has tremendously enriched this country and which can, if properly aided and maintained, continue to keep Canada Canadian, united and free. So a challenge presents itself to government today, and that challenge is a fundamental one. It is not an invitation to make funds available to sponsor pretty folk dances in quiet local communities, in town squares, as the Russians sometimes do for the slave states of the Ukraine and Georgia. It is a call to preserve a multicultural presence in a completely Canadian context, for we know that the various ethnic groups charged with this task are among the most fervent and patriotic in Canada today. Indeed, some of our self-appointed "relevant" trend setters, who have been here longer, could learn many lessons about Canadian citizenship from these people.

The motion before us refers to tokenism in the government's policies and attitudes towards multicultural development. Of course having a Minister of State charged with this is a very fine thing, but in itself it means nothing. One aspect of this tokenism is the appalling paucity of the budget for multiculturalism. A sum of $10 million sounds like a lot, and is in fact two and a half times last year's budget, but after the minister's overpriced advertising propaganda campaign, of which I hope the opposition has completely informed him, and the salaries of the bureaucrats who seem to proliferate these days, how much will actually be left to do the job? How much will get down to the local level where it can be much more effective? A government content to spend over a billion dollars of revenue to administer the unemployment insurance scheme—which we have just read is consuming our tax dollars at a new and record level—and a paltry $10 million for citizenship development, has got its priorities mixed up, and that is an understatement.

I should like to see much more assistance and funding available for the important experience of travel, to let Canadians learn to share their views and identities with each other. Personal contact is worth millions of words or dollars paid to an advertising agency. Education is, of course, the root of the problem and the solution. Too many school systems disregard the diverse ethnic contributions to the progress and history of Canada. Local and regional history is nearly totally ignored. Literature courses cover only Anglophone authors. Immediate assistance should be given by the government to fund provincial educational programs to allow a certain amount of teaching, not only in the two official languages, but also the other languages.

The school systems should be used to promote, rather than to discourage, the use of non-official languages in Canada. On a per pupil basis, this federal funding would be an investment in the future of this dominion. Assistance is needed, too, for school library programs, teacher training, provincial exchanges of information. With provincial co-operation, incentive grants should be made available to schools with outstanding multicultural programs. The resources of the government should be made available to develop history and social studies courses with a view to ensuring a more balanced picture and a broader perspective. The government should help to ensure that many languages are available for study, especially in the early learning years. These should be taught in relation to a cultural context, and not in a vacuum as if they were foreign to the Canadian experience. The previous speaker mentioned that perhaps education is a provincial matter, but I would point out that the education costs across Canada in 1971 were some $7.4 billion and the federal contribution was 21.3 per cent. The estimates for 1972-73 are $8.8 billion. Just the beginnings of the program I have mentioned would gobble up that $10 million budget in one bite.

One of the most important steps the government should take is the increasing of support and funding of multicultural centres across Canada. Only if at the local and regional level understanding and history are promoted will community understanding and more national unity be fostered. I must state the appreciation of many of my constituents for the grant given to their multicultural centre for development studies at Stony Plain, and the apparent co-ordination by Opportunities For Youth officials. But much more will be needed and, I trust, afforded this project in particular and other similar efforts.

I am not unaware, Mr. Speaker, of the need to proceed circumspectly in this field. We do not want insensitive handling or misunderstandings to give rise to the type of disunity and ill-feeling which this government has sometimes successfully promoted in the past. We exist not to divide, but to unite; what the government should remember, too, is that we exist to serve the people, and not as an end in ourselves. If the multicultural program is allowed to wallow in bureaucracy and civil service inefficiency, it will do more harm than good.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be associated with policies to develop our heritage and with the motion that the hon. member for Athabasca has put forward today. I am proud of the rich variety of that heritage which we can see even in this House. Let us hold fast to this good thing and develop it with the care and attention it needs; not to serve partisan propaganda ends or enrich the sociologists and advertising men, but to help build a better, stronger Canada in which the diverse backgrounds of all are welded into a firm common future.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Development): Mr. Speaker, I was struck by the motion of the hon. member for Athatasca (Mr. Yewchuk). Immediately, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I was very much disappointed with this motion, in which the hon. member says that he regrets the government's reluctant and token recognition of this reality. At least, that is how it reads in today's order paper.

Mr. Speaker, a matter as important as that of multiculturalism in Canada should in fact transcend any party politics and we should admit that this motion of the hon. member is highly unfortunate. Of course I do not want to voice any political considerations myself; I only regret the terms he used to draft his motion. He accuses the government—particularly the present government—of tokenism when it comes to the multicultural policy.

Mr. Speaker, is it tokenism for government members to have been first to admit that Canada was multicultural? The hon. member knows very well that we have come a long way, beginning with a concept of bilingualism and biculturalism, and ending with the recognition of the Canadian reality which for historical reasons, is that of bilingualism but which, for reasons of social order, prompts us to recognize that multiculturalism exists in Canada.

This was a giant step taken by the present government. And the hon. member should not try to say anything to the contrary. In fact, this was a historical gesture when we announced on October 8, 1971 that henceforth we would prefer to have in Canada a multicultural policy which would be expressed within an official bilingualism.

The hon. member knows very well—and if he does not know, I will tell him—that I have always defended, long before it became official, the policy concerning multiculturalism.

I will keep some of my arguments for the debate on the bilingualism resolution which will soon be introduced in the House, but right now, I wish to say something in both French and English—I am extremely proud of being a French Canadian. However, when I really discovered that I was proud of being a French Canadian, I realized an important thing, that is others must also be proud of their extraction. Whether we are from Ukrainian, Italian, British, Irish, Scottish or Welsh extraction, we always have to be proud of it.

In such circumstances, I find the multicultural policy excellent. Indeed, it recognizes to each of us the right to be proud of our extraction. And for historical reasons which we may reconsider next week during the debate on bilingualism, we can say that our pride in our ethnic extraction is expressed in Canada through two official languages.

This multicultural policy, far from being a piecemeal approach, as suggested by the hon. member for Athabasca, is an additional example which should strengthen tolerance that has always existed in this country. In that regard, I think that I will now draw closer to the view expressed by the hon. member for Athabasca.

If some people in Canada, and especially in the House, believe that is perhaps there a superior race showing more tolerance towards the others, I immediately say that we must dispute such an ideology.

● (1720)

[English]

There is in Canada no superior race and no superior group. We are all equals in this country, and as long as I am a member of this House or am anywhere else in Quebec or in Canada, I will make absolutely sure that everybody realizes that no one is superior to anyone else because of background, because of the alleged superiority of his language or because we use one language more often than any other language in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to my mind it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Athabasca should have told us that the government is not really interested in a multicultural policy, that it uses it merely to flatter the people and induce them into supporting the liberal party, perhaps for political ends.

For the guidance of the hon. member for Athabasca and those who may share his views, I shall quote a journalist of high repute who is certainly very well known in Canada. I refer to an article published in the Montreal Star on May 12, 1973.

[English]

I now wish to quote something written by a man, highly regarded, not only among Ukranian Canadians but, as well, by all others across Canada, including many writers and journalists. I am referring to Mr. Roman Rakhmanny, a Montreal journalist and native of the Ukraine who moved to Montreal 14 years ago. I will not quote much of his article. Nevertheless, what he wrote, it seems to me, refutes the charge that we are merely interested in tokenism in our multicultural policy. He wrote:

> To be sure, no one doubts the sincerity of the architects of the policy; they did what they believed to be just and necessary for Canada. Nevertheless, there was no debate during the last election campaign, which would have clarified the primary issue of the problem; the need of constitutional guarantees for the 'third-language' groups.
> More specifically, neither the Progressive Conservative Party nor the New Democratic Party has included in its program any form of multicultural policy.

I shall continue reading from the article in a moment. The author refers to the Ontario government. I wonder which government is guilty of adopting positions of tokenism in this country. Is it this government, the government of Ontario, or the government of the province of Alberta? Mr. Rakhmanny goes on to say:

> The Ontario government supported a large Heritage Ontario Congress last June. A similar conference on multiculturalism was held in Alberta and its recommendations were upheld by the new Conservative administration.

However, as Professor M. E. Lupul, a prominent Ukranian Canadian of whom the mover of the motion must be aware, remarked, although those recommendations were upheld by the new Conservative administrations, "Neither has lifted a finger yet to put into practice the precepts they seemingly have embraced."

[Mr. Prud'homme.]

Let me tell you what I think about this, Mr. Speaker. I think that because the federal government in October, 1972, announced that Canada was a bilingual and multicultural country, and showed the way, the province of Ontario said, "We must do something, too," so they organized Heritage Ontario. This action was followed by the action taken by the provincial Conservative government of Alberta, which thought that it, too, must organize something similar. Consequently, it organized Heritage Alberta. Neither of these governments has done anything yet in the multicultural field. I will not mention all the things that the minister has done. I will only say that ever since he was appointed, the minister has been absolutely tireless.

The minister spared neither his efforts nor his time in making of this policy a truly positive policy to help Canadians better respect, know and understand one another.

The hon. member knows full well—and I said so a while ago to the hon. member for Winnipeg North—that it is not easy to set up an advisory committee whose members are obviously not all chosen from the riding of Winnipeg North. It is quite obvious that if the members of that advisory committee had been selected in the riding of Saint-Denis in Montreal, where 17 languages are spoken, and not solely in Winnipeg North—

[English]

I have always said that the district I represent is like a small United Nations, and it works. My majority was not provided by the French; it was provided by every group. The community I represent includes 17 linguistic groups. If the minister had asked me to supply him with a multicultural board from the riding of Saint-Denis in Montreal, it would have been easy to oblige him. Obviously, it would have taken me only one week to do this. However, the minister had to consult with people all across Canada, with people in every one of the ten provinces and in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. He had to attend an unbelievable number of meetings with various groups.

Mr. Yewchuk: Nonsense. He sent letters.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think the minister started by doing the right thing. He sent letters first and, after that, held consultations, as the hon. member ought to know.

There are also, in the hon. member's remarks, certain points which I should like him to elucidate—not today, of course, but in the future—and which I find hard to understand.

When, for instance, he says that the CBC, under the Broadcasting Act, is denying us programs in languages other than French or English, I should like to ask him, in the first place, what he is suggesting to the House. Is it the creation of a third state television network, over and above the French and English ones? There is something which I personally dislike to hear, although I am of French origin, is that Canada is divided into three groups of different origins.

[English]

Some hold the concept, which I reject, that Canada is divided between the French, the English and the others.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is the hon. member's concept.

Mr. Prud'homme: I have always said, even in the hon. member's district in western Canada, if my name were "Prud'hommeski", I would reject the concept, as would the hon. member of German origin who spoke, as would the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and as would the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), that I am "one of the others". I would object to that. I ask the hon. member, what kind of broadcasting act would he envisage in order that we might adopt such a concept in this country? Would the hon. member be ready to cut out some programs on the English CBC network in order to have programs in Ukrainian? If so, would not every single one of the other groups whose mother tongue is not one of the official languages of this country raise their arms and say, "We want a program in our language, too?" Is he suggesting that French stations should curtail their programs somewhat in order that we might broadcast programs in Italian, say?

Mr. Yewchuk: Right.

Mr. Prud'homme: If that is what the hon. member is suggesting—

Mr. Yewchuk: That is what I am suggesting.

Mr. Prud'homme: —then I, personally, reject that concept. I think we are now approaching a time at which, with the multiplicity of channels available, there will be no need to change the Canadian Broadcasting Act. We should continue to use Radio Canada and the CBC as they are, and allot other channels so that persons who want to listen to one of the other languages may do so.

● (1730)

Mr. Yewchuk: You just rejected that.

Mr. Prud'homme: I did not. I said it should be done by others, not by the CBC.

Mr. Yewchuk: You said you did not want a third one.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am asking you if you want a third CBC. If so, in what language will it operate? A CBC for the others? I say I reject that concept. I want the hon. member for Athabasca to define what he meant by "the others".

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member asked me to define what I meant. I am sorry he was not listening to my speech. What I meant was that the CBC, as it now exists, should allow third language broadcasting on both the English and French networks.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, in case the time allotted to me is more advanced than I think, I should like to make a few constructive suggestions.

Multiculturalism

If the government is serious about this multicultural policy—and I think it is, judging from the efforts the minister has made to date and the amounts of money earmarked for this policy—if the government is really serious—and I shall think it is unless proven otherwise—it must appoint more and more people of ethnic origins other than French or English to sit on government agencies.

In all Crown corporations, it is obvious that people belonging to other groups than the French and the English are clearly in a minority, as well as elsewhere.

I believe—and it is already a beginning at the present time—that it is up to the CBC, through its French and English networks, to show Canadians what Canada is—and that can be done in French and in English—to indicate in both languages the cultural contribution of the ethnic groups other than the French and the English, who have, for all that, as everybody knows, historical rights that others have not.

I think that the National Film Board is beginning to make films in the languages of those people who wish to keep their identity in Canada by clinging to their language and origins, but the National Film Board should show those films in English and in French in order that Canadians of long standing, from English or French stock, may realize and appreciate better the cultural contribution that groups other than Francophones or Anglophones have made to Canadian history. That is something that is not well enough known among the Canadian people, Canadians of old stock if you would rather call them that way. As for me, I do not like the word "ethnic", I would rather say: old Canadians and new Canadians. If old Canadians of English or French origin were better informed of the cultural, historical and economic contribution of communities other than French and English ones, there would be better understanding in this country and people would accept one another better.

I also hope, Mr. Speaker, that during election campaigns there will be fewer and fewer people, especially in western Canada——and more particularly in western Canada where we see politicians who for the sake of easy re-election play ethnic group against ethnic group as I have myself heard, not only during the last campaign. I am not putting the blame on one individual or on one particular party.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Put it on the Prime Minister.

Mr. Prud'homme: I said I am not putting the blame on anybody, but if the member wants to start mentioning names I might give him a preview of names I could mention next week. What I am saying is that time after time we have seen politicians of various political parties—I am ready to go that far—playing one against the other. For instance, I have in mind the example of a district where the French Canadians—I prefer to say les Canadiens français—you know where I place the emphasis; I did not do the translation from "Canadiens français" to "French Canadians"—I am as Canadian as the hon. member for Athabasca and Canada is as much mine as it is his, or anyone else from western Canada, I can assure you of that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Yewchuk: I agree with that.

Mr. Prud'homme: I want to say this in conclusion. I hope that in future politicians of every party will try to explain the history of Canada. I hope they will try to explain what we mean by recognizing two official languages. Then it will be much easier to make people understand why Ukrainian is not one of the official languages, even though in one particular district they might number 40 per cent of the population while the Canadiens français might account for only one per cent. The day politicians begin to realize the history of this country and explain it in various parts of Canada, Canada will be really bilingual as well as highly multicultural.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in speaking in favour of the motion before us, my purpose is to give the minister responsible for multiculturalism some of my views and suggestions. I trust they will be in a positive vein.

First, though, I must comment on some of the statements just made by the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). It is precisely that type of veiled threat he has just finished making with reference to western Canada, in which he gave the impression that people are elected on the basis of bias and bigotry, which should have no place in this House. It should have no place in Canada whatsoever.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I took all possible precautions to escape the trap in which the hon. member would like me to fall now. I never said what the hon. member suggests I said and he has no right to credit me with such intentions. I spoke in a general way. I did not show any political partisanship and I think that the hon. member opens the debate on a very unfortunate note as my intentions were not really such and if that is what the hon. member understood, well, I think he misunderstood me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret, but I rather feel the hon. member is initiating a debate.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, I believe the innuendo was there, and I do not think an innuendo of that type has any place in a discussion of bilingualism or the multiculturalism we are discussing today.

As the underlying premise of the ideas I wish to convey to the minister, let me state clearly that bilingualism, together with biculturalism, is an historical fact of Canada. It is also a constitutional fact. I agree with other speakers that for too long we have paid only lip service to the French language. I fully recognize that Canadians who are French speaking have a right to expect services from the federal government to be provided in the language of their birth. In other words, I want to say that multiculturalism does not detract from the official policy on bilingualism and biculturalism. I do not believe that multiculturalism is divisive. It does not undermine bilingualism or biculturalism. But I believe that this government in the past, especially between the years 1968 and 1971, gave the impression to many Canadians of so-called multicultural background that multiculturalism had to be played down in order that bilingualism and biculturalism could survive. It is clear to many smaller ethnic groups that while multiculturalism has been played down and just lip service paid to it as a policy, there has in fact been very little constructive policy between these years.

Ethnic and multicultural groups have made contributions to Canada of various kinds, and I shall not go into that aspect. Canada is a pluralistic society, but first of all we must be Canadians, not hyphenated Canadians. There is no such thing as an English-speaking or French-speaking Canadian being any better than any other Canadian; we are all Canadians and that is what we should stress. Each member of this House should take it upon himself to bring this message to all Canadians in their ridings. Divisiveness on the basis of nationality and ethnic background has no place whatever in Canada. I suggest members on both sides of the House heed this lesson very carefully. I do not disagree with the minister that multiculturalism as such has been recognized, and I welcome this and commend him for it. But we must also recognize that the so-called third group—a term that I also have some difficulty with—has a background which, when its members came to Canada, had to be if not negated at least reduced in terms of the importance those members would have liked to give it.

Today, we see our young people whose background is not French or English asking for a clear identification of their cultural background of generations ago. Someone said that a person who forgets the lessons of the past has no right to look to the future, and I think that multiculturalism proves that looking to the past is a valid concept. Canada has been a refuge for many people. This country welcomed those who do not belong to the two largest ethnic groups in Canada, and I believe that they have made their contribution in a positive way and added to Canada's contribution on the international scene as well.

Multiculturalism policy can fall into the trap of becoming partisan. Much has been said today about former prime ministers of the Liberal party recognizing this fact when they made multiculturalism part of government policy. I do not want to discredit that fact, but I should like to refer to the contributions made and the leadership given by the government led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Speaking now as a western Canadian, the right hon. gentleman was recognized by multicultural groups as a man who, in turn, recognized the contribution that they had made to life in Canada, and that it was a positive contribution. It was not simply a matter of increasing funds from $3 million to $10 million and of saying: "I have now recognized you and that you have made a contribution".

In his statement in the House on October 8, 1971 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) outlined the multicultural policy of the government. In reply to his statement, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as reported at page 8546 of Hansard of that date, had this to say:

> I wish to state immediately, Mr. Speaker, that the emphasis we have given to multiculturalism in no way constitutes an attack on the basic duality of our country. What we want is justice for all Canadians, and recognition of the cultural diversity of this country.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we want, a recognition that the contribution has been made and that multiculturalism not only be an official policy but that clear cut action be taken to implement that policy.

I direct my attention to two specific areas. One is the problem of language instruction. Much is said today about third language instruction in schools. Having taught high school in western Canada for some time and taken a second language other than French, I know what has happened to second or third language instruction, depending on interpretation, in western Canada.

As long as our universities, specifically in Alberta and Manitoba, had a second language requirement for entrance to most faculties, there was in our high schools the maintenance of second language instruction. Generally this second language instruction was French, Ukrainian or German. Since the governments of Alberta and Manitoba have now dropped this requirement for almost all faculties, the impact on second language instruction in the high schools has been disastrous. Today, students do not opt for second language instruction, be it French, Ukrainian, German or any other language that is authorized.

The federal government and the provincial governments must together provide, to my way of thinking, a positive program whereby once again there will be a resurgence of second language instruction. Not only is a second language an advantage and gives a person an additional cultural outlook; it is a necessity if language instruction is itself to survive at all and western Canada is not to become even more unilingual than is the case now. So, a program of financial aid will have to be stepped up and students must be encouraged to take second language instruction.

Another point I want to make concerns radio broadcasting. The hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has given the House his view about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, though I do not subscribe to that view. If the House will recall, we discussed the sale of radio station CKSB of St. Boniface for use by the CBC as a French language radio station. I have no quarrel with that, and I have so stated previously in a debate in this House. But I do suggest that the CBC re-evaluate this policy, and that if need be the Broadcasting Act be amended so that in cases where the need is demonstrated time be made available on English or French speaking CBC stations for so-called third language broadcasting.

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? There are many radio stations across Canada, especially in western Canada, that might make time available. But very often this time is not prime time, and the financial obligations that have to be met are such as to pretty well exclude the use of these stations by multicultural groups. Volume four of the report on bilingualism and biculturalism, which is entitled "The Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups", contained these recommendations:

> 8. We recommend that the CRTC remove restrictions on private broadcasting in languages other than English and French, except those restrictions necessary to meet the administrative and legal responsibilities of the licensees and those that also apply to English- and French-language programmes.

> 9. We recommend that the CBC recognize the place of languages other than English and French in Canadian life and that the CBC remove its proscription on the use of other languages in broadcasting.

I suggest to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), to whom the CBC is responsible, that the necessary amendments to the Canadian Broadcasting Act be made so that time can be made available by the CBC, be it on the English or French stations, to these multicultural groups for the broadcasting of information.

I should like to commend the Secretary of State for embarking on this program, limited though it is, for the development of films of an ethnic nature. This present policy needs encouragement and expansion. I concur with the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that these films should be made in English and in French for the purpose of education and giving a better understanding among all Canadians of the various backgrounds we have, yet common to the Canadian identity we share.

Lastly, it is approximately 100 years since Canada really embarked upon a multicultural program, in the sense that it was approximately 100 years ago the so-called third groups or third forces began to come to Canada. Up to that time, Canada was known to other than the native people as an English and French-speaking country. As these people are embarking today on centennaries, and I could point out various groups, I suggest there is great credit to Canada in that 100 years later, even though these people have learned the English language, primarily for economic reasons, they retained and gave to us some of the culture they brought, for which Canada is the richer.

As we approach this period in time, looking again at what effect this has had on Canada as a country, we should recommend very strongly to the minister and his colleagues that the department of multiculturalism should not simply be considered as a second-rate department, but rather a full-fledged department promoting programs based on the fact that Canada is better off because of the contribution these ethnic groups have made. Once this is done, I am sure a greater understanding will evolve in Canada. I, personally, am convinced that when we consider our various backgrounds it will only be when we understand and communicate with each other that understanding will develop and that we, as Canadians, will recognize our responsibility to foster a Canadian identity in spite of our diversity. Canada is too important to me to be divided by partisan issues on the basis of nationality. Our responsibility is to build a national unity.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I think I overheard someone mention that I have a lucky seven minutes remaining. I will try to be as brief as I can in my remarks as I know the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) has been trying for sometime this afternoon to get the floor. I may be able to complete my remarks in a couple of minutes so he will have an opportunity to speak.

First of all, I should like to say how much I regret the word "regrets" and all that follows in this particular motion before the House today. I think it most unfortunate that one member of the official opposition a moment or two ago summed up what I really wanted to say this afternoon, that this is surely a subject of concern to us all. We are all of ethnic backgrounds and all part of the multicultural complex that makes up Canada today. In fact, if anyone can say he is not a member of one of these ethnic groups, then he must be a native Canadian. Only a native Canadian can honestly say he is not part of what has been developed in Canada.

I think I am one of the few people who has risen this afternoon in the House who is perhaps not tarnished with that term I so much dislike, the "third group". I think perhaps the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and myself somehow get shoved into the other two categories. I do not see it that way at all. I see us as one people in Canada, members of a nation that has been built to greatness by diversity. It is only because we have grown over the years as English and French that we can say we are stronger because of that, and because of what one has offered the other and what each has offered this country. That is also so of the so-called "third force". It has grown in strength and is equally important. We are all equal and we all have something important to contribute.

I can very well remember 12 or 13 years ago, when I began working in the metropolitan urban area of Toronto as a young journalist, how dull and staid a city it seemed. It was not because the English, Scottish and Irish did not have a great heritage and style, but because that was all we had. That was the main force within the boundaries of that area. We learned about little else to diversify our understanding, pleasure and interest in the cultural backgrounds, languages and styles. In that 10 or 12 years, I have seen a tremendous change, which I think has in fact created a really great city that did not exist 10 or 12 years ago. It is now one of the most cosmopolitan cities on earth.

Some five years ago if you were a first or even second generation Canadian and did not speak English or French, you suffered a stigma; you were second class. I do not believe that is so today. I think all that changed in October 1971 when this multicultural direction was established by parliament. I think we have followed through on that with the $3 million given to the program last year and the $10 million this year. What other program dedicated to preventing the slipping away of the cultural backgrounds of these people has had its funds tripled?

I share the concern of some hon. members on the other side about the radio station in St. Boniface, and I certainly will make as many representations as I can to the government that its multicultural programming should remain. I agree with the issue presented by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) concerning second languages in school. I think that is predominantly a provincial matter, but certainly any federal input that can help should be forthcoming.

There are a number of things I wanted to mention, but I want to leave a moment or two for the hon. member for Meadow Lake. I want to conclude by saying how very proud I am to be the member of a riding in which, while it is made up of 40 per cent or 45 per cent with Italian background, 40 per cent or 45 per cent with an English background, 5 per cent with a French background and 5 per cent with other backgrounds, all the constituents consider themselves Canadians and have come to enjoy each other and to enjoy Canada even more because of each other.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I cannot recognize the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) as it is now six o'clock, unless the House agrees that we should continue.

An hon. Member: We have two minutes left according to that clock.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to quote something said on television not too long ago by a character named Archie Bunker. He said "Whattaya wanna learn yourself Spanish for? English is good enough." I hold in contempt the sentiments mouthed by this illiterate American television character, yet there appears to be reason for believing that the imbecilities cherished by Mr. Bunker are not totally absent from the Canadian scene.

I regard the various cultural traditions now domiciled in Canada as a great national good and as an extraordinary national resource. There is no reason for believing that a theatre group offering plays in German or Ukrainian is less important to our national wealth and welfare than mineral deposits or arable lands. It does take money and labour to extract minerals or to make wastelands arable. It also takes money and labour to extract cultural values, yet this fact is not accepted as completely. Much money is put into various economic programs by both federal and provincial governments. We are interested in creating jobs. However, we forget that things of cultural value nourish the body as well as the mind. In at least one aspect of national interest it seems preferable to pour development grants into multicultural programs rather than into industries because industries often are owned by non-Canadians. Multicultural projects in my view are most completely Canadian.

I have much more to say, Mr. Speaker, but this will complete my comments for today. I feel that one aspect which has not been touched upon today during this debate is that we should not worry so much about multiculturalism but should be thinking in terms of a Canadian culture, period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being six o'clock, according to Standing Order 58(11) this debate is now terminated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUBJECT OF QUESTIONS ON STATEMENTS MADE OUTSIDE HOUSE—RETRACTION OF CERTAIN WORDS BY MEMBER FOR GANDER-TWILLINGATE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise with your permission and that of the House to deal with a point of order which has been before the House for the last two days in respect of matters that arose during the question period the day before yesterday when the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) made certain comments.

I have read with very great care what you had to say and what other hon. members had to say, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the government House leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In particular, I listened to Your Honour with interest when you indicated there is a collateral problem to the main issue which might invite the attention and consideration of the committee of this House best qualified to deal with such matters, that is, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. Since then there have been some consultations among House leaders which have proceeded reasonably well, as such meetings do, and I think we are at least in agreement that there is a problem relating to statements made outside the House by members of the House touching on proceedings in the House, and the opportunities and means by which such statements may be the subject of comment and discussion and may be dealt with in the House.

Your Honour has ruled on many occasions that the age old accommodation and principle of privilege does not apply. I think I must agree, perhaps without prejudice, that Your Honour is quite right in the strict interpretation of that principle. However, because of the introduction of electronic media and because many statements are frequently made outside the House immediately following what has been said in the House, I think we can all accept the fact that a very real problem has been created. I do not pretend to say what the answer is, but I say there ought to be an answer.

In light of that and the fact I have had discussions with the other House leaders, I would propose, and with the hope that the House might feel disposed to accept it, that Your Honour might put to the Committee on Procedure and Organization as accepted by the House something along these lines, and I offer this as a guide:

That the question of statements by members outside the House with regard to proceedings inside the House, and the manner and extent to which such statements can be dealt with or be the subject of comment and consideration by members in the House, be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

I only say that I drew this in the widest possible terms in the hope that the Committee on Procedure and Organization, which is now engaged in dealing with questions of procedure and the Standing Orders of the House, might be seized of this matter and, hopefully, might deal with it and bring in some recommendation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm the statement by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to the effect that there have been consultations among us in respect of this matter. I should also like to indicate that we are in agreement with regard to the proposition that the question of comments in the House on statements made outside the House be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

I should like to make it clear, indeed, to use words I am accused of using too often, I want to make it crystal clear that this is all we are talking about in so far as reference is being made to a recent occurrence in the House. We are not in this context making any reference to the use of unparliamentary language. That is not what we want referred to the standing committee but rather the clearcut question of whether the rule is now out of date which denies to members in the House the right to make reference in questions to statements made outside the House by ministers of the Crown.

I would point out, Sir, that this problem arises not only in the way you indicated a few days ago, namely, in relation to weekend speeches which seem to provide material for Monday afternoon questions, but it also arises during the week. There are occasions when a member puts a question to a minister and gets a certain answer, if he is lucky, on the floor of the House, and then the minister goes outside the chamber to room 130-S, goes on radio and television and says things he did not say here on the floor of the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A revised version.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But because these statements are made outside the House the member, under the rule, is precluded from asking questions about them. I am not trying to solve the problem here but I believe it should be looked at. I think it becomes a bit of a farce for us to have to go through the formula, every time we want to ask a question about a minister's statement, of asking the Prime Minister whether that minister was stating government policy. It seems to me, for the reasons given by the hon. member for Peace River, particularly the electronic age in which we are living, that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization should look into this matter.

● (1410)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we would support the proposal that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, making it clear that we are not in this reference going into the question of the use of unparliamentary language. We feel that is in the hands of the Chair and that we should not deal with that aspect of the matter in the standing committee.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to confirm discussions which have taken place between parties concerning the recent point of order resulting from the last incident.

I should like to say that we endorse the remarks of hon. members for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The problem is of course a major one which often causes embarrassment to the Chair and to hon. members. Ministers have got into the unpleasant habit of making statements outside the House which, as is generally known, prevents hon. members from actually giving the impression, let alone the reality of a responsible government reporting on its policy.

We are inconvenienced because of that situation, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt the efficient and profitable work carried out by the Committee on Procedure and Organization will be useful in clearing up the matter, of course, assisted by the advice and comments of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to seize the opportunity to say that the oral question period, which lasts only 40 minutes, is now under review in the committee, with the purpose of improving it according to your pertinent suggestions. Nevertheless, our party deplores increasing use of the question period for rising on questions of privilege which are often unjustified and on points of order, thus depriving many hon. members of their right to put pertinent questions to ministers.

The last incident which took place this week caused us to lose over 12 minutes of the oral question period, with practically no result. We have now unanimously decided that the matter be referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that in future committees will be allowed to carry out their tasks and that the oral question period will really be used for the purpose it is meant to serve, namely to allow opposition members to force the government to report on its action, as befits any responsible system.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief comments on the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River. I certainly underline the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that this suggestion is not, in my opinion, intended to deal with the question of unparliamentary language, nor is the acceptance of any such reference to a committee to be regarded as embodying any alteration in the standards that have been accepted by the House.

I would make the further comment that in my opinion the question of statements by members outside the House embraces more than just the question of statements by ministers of the Crown. It certainly would be improper to have one category of statement made outside the House subject to comment within the House and another category of statement made outside the House not subject to comment.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Baldwin: That is why I used the word "members".

Mr. MacEachen: That is why the hon. member for Peace River has used in the wider expression, "by members outside the House". Similarly, the problem in respect of the electronic media applies, of course, to ministers of the Crown, but it also applies to all other members including the Leader of the Opposition and leaders of the other parties who are free, if they wish, to amplify outside the House comments made in the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not revised as the government did.

Mr. MacEachen: We accept the notion of the right hon. gentleman that all the evil rests with this side of the House and all the virtue rests on that side. At one time I thought it was only those at the far end of that side of that House who wrapped themselves in the cloak of virtue, but the right hon. member for Prince Albert is doing that today.

Aside from these comments, Mr. Speaker, we think it might be useful for the committee to look at these questions, and if its members come forward with useful suggestions the procedures of the House would probably be improved.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I never realized before that statements made on television in the extramural performances that take place from time to time represented anything in the nature of government policy. What is objected to is the fact that ministers find themselves making one statement in the House that is not in accordance with the facts—I had better be careful what I say because I might arouse the eggshell sentimentalities and feelings of those opposite. I will put it this way. Some of those ministers who indulge in terminological inexactitude on occasion—this is within parliamentary tradition—state things to be true that one can only say are the very antithesis of the truth as represented by them and bring down parliament because this is where ministers should be answering, not revising outside the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the suggestions that have been made by the hon. member for Peace River and other House leaders in reference to the incident which I think has caused much anguish to many of us, certainly to the Chair. I have already mentioned that to hon. members. I have suggested from the beginning that, in my way of thinking, there was more than one issue involved here and perhaps the most fundamental issue was the question of references that might be made in the House to speeches made outside the House by members of the government—or others, if that will please the President of the Privy Council. I had hoped that if we could clear up that difficulty by making it the object of a study by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, at the same time we might solve the other problem.

It was my thought that because of this rule, because of the procedural difficulties, there was considerable provocation, and I can understand why the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate felt it necessary at the time to use what in my estimation in any event were rather strong words. That is why I sought his co-operation and assistance to the Chair. But I felt at the same time, and I repeat this, that we should try to solve the other situation at the same time. I do not agree with the suggestion that these are two entirely different problems. This is one and the same problem, and I would hope that the efforts of members of the House to try to resolve the procedural matter which has caused so much difficulty in past months, indeed, in past years, would be supported by every single member, including the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

I would hope, very sincerely and very deeply, that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will look at this matter in the same way as I do and confirm the suggestion I am making to him which I have made before that the words used were unparliamentary and that there might be ways of saying what we want to say by using words that are acceptable and in the traditions of the House. It is in accordance with this line of thinking that I seek again the co-operation of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say that the motion by the House leader of this party and the response by the other three House leaders come as a bit of a pleasant surprise to me, although I was aware of the motion for the last 15 or 20 minutes immediately before the House opened. I also want to say that this was not done as a result of pressure on my part directed toward Your Honour or to any of the House leaders. It arises out of something that happened earlier in the week and is a mutual effort on the part of hon. members, and I suspect on the part of Your Honour, to have the matter properly dealt with.

Second, what started out as Canada's mini cod war has developed into something much more fundamental and complex. For some time I have felt strongly that when statements are made outside the House, members should be able to deal with them in some way in the House of Commons that would enable the House to express itself upon them and to impose some kind of political morality on all hon. members. The people of Canada should be able to demand of their parliamentary representatives at the national level, not only members of the Privy Council but all representatives, the highest degree of integrity and the highest degree of frankness and openness possible under our parliamentary system. This was the basis on which the question was raised earlier in the week.

I also feel that while the rule preventing members of the House from responding to statements made outside the House might very well have been applicable 100 years ago, today we are living in an age in which, with instant communication, sometimes what is said outside the House becomes more important than what is said inside the House. That, I feel, leads to a degradation of our parliamentary system. As a young Member of Parliament, relatively speaking, compared with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I feel this is something we should all examine in the hope of upgrading it and bringing it into proper perspective in the twentieth century.

The other point I want to make is that I have the greatest respect for Your Honour and the deepest admiration. Without sounding condescending by saying under these circumstances what you might expect me to say, I feel it is impossible for this House of Commons ever to expect to obtain anybody else to preside over events in the House with more capability, stature and dignity than Your Honour possesses. I believe every member of the House will agree with that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: At the same time, I feel that nothing comes easy. To experience anguish and a little broken rest, which not only Your Honour may have suffered during the last few days, may sometimes be necessary in order to bring certain matters to the fore and have them properly dealt with. I do not see how we are going to get reform unless members are willing, within the rules, to stand up and sometimes even take issue with those rules to have matters reformed and brought to a satisfactory conclusion. Frequently during the question period, and now with respect to this particular rule, I find myself in a position that I do not enjoy. Some people enjoy a comfortable pew. I enjoy a comfortable pew too, but sometimes we have to put this kind of comfort behind us and be willing to stand up for things which, in the future, will be of the greatest importance for our Canadian parliamentary system.

I feel that what has happened today will go down in Canadian parliamentary history as an important event, if the procedure committee deals with it as I know they will deal with it. Consequently, I believe I would be cutting off my nose to spite my face if I were not willing, in deference to the House, to make a compromise. In saying this I am not retracting in any way from the substance and essence of the statement I made in the House on Tuesday. In fact, I hope to be able to appear before the committee. With reference to the specific words that are not acceptable within the rules we now have and perhaps may always have, out of respect for you, Mr. Speaker, and the House may I say that the recommendation Your Honour has made is quite acceptable to me.

I reiterate that I have a great deal of respect for all members of the Privy Council who have very heavy responsibilities, but I will never condone any member of the House not being completely honest in the representations he makes to the Canadian people. I do not view my retraction, as has been said by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), as prejudicing any future moves I would like to make.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is a very important point I want to stress in the simplest possible words. The acquiescence of myself and others on this side of the House to this suggestion is strictly on procedural grounds and is not put forward in any way as a conditional offer to any member to observe the rules of privilege. I believe that ought to be understood clearly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that was made clear by all members who took part in the procedural debate we had a moment ago. I think there is no suggestion that there is any condition put on what has been agreed to or will be agreed to by the House if I put the motion. I go back to what I said originally. I feel that these two questions which forcibly, because of the circumstances, came together. I felt very deeply that it would be helpful to the House if the matter of substance relating to statements outside the House could be referred to committee, and I think the House will agree. At the same time, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has agreed to retract the statement he had made to the extent that it was a statement which is contrary to the traditions of the House, and I certainly am prepared to accept the explanation of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

I think we have perhaps managed to establish that there are some norms in parliamentary language which all members would want to observe in co-operation with the Chair, because I am here not to invent rules but to put into force rules which members have agreed to and expect the Chair to put into force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL, TERMS OF REFERENCE AND NAMES OF MEMBERS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on motions and table documents in both official languages under Standing Order 41(2) concerning this government's action with regard to the status of women.

• (1430)

As you know, I recently announced my intention to establish an advisory council on the status of women. I would like now to announce the terms of reference for this council, and the names of the members to be appointed to it.

The purpose of the council will be twofold: to bring before the government and the public matters of interest and concern to women, and to advise the government on actions that it deems necessary to improve the position of women in society.

The terms of reference for the council are as follows: to advise the minister responsible in respect of such matters relating to the status of women as the minister may refer to the council for its consideration, or the council considers appropriate.

These terms of reference are purposely very broad in order that the council will have freedom to take whatever action it considers necessary. To enable the council to carry out its mandate effectively, provision has been made for a full-time chairman plus two vice-chairmen working on a full-time basis who will be supported by a staff and office. The council will meet as often as it feels necessary, and its first meeting will probably be early in July.

The council will also have authority to publish its reports, recommendations and statements. In this way the council will be in a position to keep before the public, as well as the government, the whole question of the status of women.

In establishing the council in this manner, I am aware that it does not follow the exact recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in that it will not report directly to parliament. However, the main objective in having a body that reports to parliament is to enable that body to make its advice public so that parliamentarians can look at the advice and question the government concerning that advice. By giving this advisory council authority to publish its recommendations and reports, this objective has been met.

In considering whom to appoint to this council, I felt strongly that it must be as representative as possible of all the women of Canada. For this reason, I wrote to women's organizations across the country and publicly requested their assistance in suggesting people who could contribute to this council. More than 200 letters have come back, all with excellent suggestions. The list of names that I am now tabling is made up of the best people available, 28 people from across Canada of varying backgrounds and experiences, all of whom are vitally interested and concerned about the status of women in our country.

I am appointing as chairman Dr. Kate Cooke, who has been chosen because of her excellent understanding of the problems of women in all walks of life, because of her ability to work with and communicate with people of varying backgrounds and concerns, and because of her in-depth knowledge of the situation of women in Canada at the present time. Dr. Cooke has a Ph.D. in sociology and is presently with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. She will be taking leave of absence from the government to fill this position. The two vice-chairmen will be appointed after the council has met.

I would like to take this opportunity to inform the House that as well as setting up this advisory council on the status of women, the government is taking other actions to improve the position of women in Canada. I will be introducing, in the very near future, a bill to amend the Canada Labour Code (Fair Employment Practices). The purpose of this bill will be to amend the act so that discrimination on the grounds of sex, age and marital status will be added to other prohibited grounds of discrimination by employers and unions coming under federal jurisdiction. Hon. members may recall that a bill to this effect was introduced in the last parliament; however, there was insufficient time for debate and it died on the order paper. The bill that will be introduced in the near future will contain a number of improvements, specifically in regard to pension and insurance schemes.

I also wish to announce at this time that the regulations under the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act have been amended so that all government contracts will include a provision that, in hiring and employment of workmen to perform work under a contract, the contractor will not refuse to employ and will not discriminate in any manner against any person because of that person's race, national origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status.

In line with amendments to the Canada Labour Code, my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will be introducing amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act. These are presently being drafted by the Department of Justice and it is the government's intention to introduce a bill amending the Superannuation Act in the very near future. These amendments will follow the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

In addition, the Treasury Board has developed a new relocation directive with appropriate provisions to implement the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women on the subject of removal expenses for public servants. The new directive will be issued shortly and will replace the actual removal expenses regulations. This does not require legislative action.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister sincerely for his courtesy in sending me a copy of his statement this morning. I assure him that my question of yesterday on this topic was not as a result of any leak from his office, although I understand this government has a propensity for leaks.

My party treats this matter very seriously. The status of women in Canadian life is not funny, is not a joke, is not something for locker room snickers. The subject is not amenable to tokenism. The government, parliament and the political parties must do more than mouth platitudes about the subject. I must say that although I deplore some of the stridency of language I add, gratuitously, that this is quite understandable because of the lack of results women have achieved up to now. The royal commission, after all, recommended in 1970 that the advisory council on the status of women should be established and report to parliament. The government, unfortunately, ignored that good advice and took a different route by appointing what is, in reality, a committee that is to report to the minister. The results will enable us to judge who is right.

Despite what the minister says, in my opinion the terms of reference he enunciated today are much too restrictive. Mr. Speaker, the parties must be serious about women candidates in public life. Surely the twenty-ninth parliament provides splendid evidence of the quality of women Members of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. members for Ahuntsic (Mrs. Sauvé), Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) and Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) are a credit to themselves and to this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: There is something Irish there, too.

Mr. Fairweather: All right. That is tokenism. We all understand that Canada lags far behind most countries in the world when it comes to having women represented in public life. The government's employment of women in senior positions in public life is, I believe, a scandal and disgrace. I assume that this committee will be doing something, even though it may mean quotas, to a limited extent, to end what is a serious and scandalous imbalance in this area. As government and parliament are bellweathers in employment practices, I hope that industry, which also has a reprehensible record in this regard, will deal with this matter quickly.

The council is but a beginning. The royal commission recommended:

> ... that the federal government immediately take steps to enter into agreement with the provinces leading to the adoption of a national Day-Care Act under which federal funds would be made available on a cost-sharing basis for the building and running of day-care centres meeting specified minimum standards, the federal government to (a) pay half the operating costs; (b) during an initial seven-year period, pay 70 per cent of capital costs; and (c) make similar arrangements for the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

It is a pity that when the minister made his announcement about the composition of the board, although he was specifically requested by women of the Yukon, there is no representation from the Yukon on the committee.

My leader has advocated in eloquent terms the need for the establishment of a human rights commission. I hope this recommendation will be brought forward very quickly by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Speaking on behalf of my party, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the appointment. I hope the committee will become established quickly. I hope its members never let up on their recommendations to the government and that they push this minister until he wonders why he ever made the appointments.

Finally, the minister mentioned pension plan changes. If these changes do not include the right of the housewives of this country to make contributions to and, therefore, to be eligible for pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, that will be a serious gap in the legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I can assure Dr. Katie Cooke and the new council they will have enthusiastic support from this parliament if they push the Minister of Labour to the end of his endurance.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, we in this party do not welcome this announcement if it is mere tokenism as I strongly suspect. In fact, from examining the 28 appointments it can be seen that it is clearly tokenism as only one male was appointed to the council. This demonstrates the continuing attitude of this government not to take this subject as seriously as it should.

Injustice and discrimination continue in this country in terms of employment opportunities, wage levels and promotion. This is nothing short of scandalous. It is particularly true of the federal civil service where an infinitesimal number of senior positions are held by women.

The recommendation of the royal commission is being avoided by not having this body report to parliament. The procedure being followed will in fact only provide protection for the minister through the council. That is not what is needed. What is needed is parliamentary action and a direct report to parliament.

We welcome the proposed changes in the pension and insurance schemes, in the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act. However, we must remember that most of this work has already been done by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and it is unneccessary to do a complete overlap. What is necessary is legislative action and not delay.

I might say I am pleased to represent a British Columbia constituency that has two women cabinet ministers and a woman deputy premier.

I repeat that this is tokenism. We have very serious doubts that all the recommendations of the royal commission will be quickly implemented as they ought to be. This is a poor substitute for action.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, if the creation of an advisory council on the status of women can help change the discriminatory attitude towards women and encourage as well her emancipation and fulfilment, it could prove to be an efficient move.

Though we dislike any type of crusade for the equality of the two sexes, we must admit that prejudice still exists in this regard.

As for us, the Social Credit Party of Canada, who preach with deep conviction the freedom of human beings, we advocate the quality of all individuals, regardless of their race, nationality or sex.

We can only hope that women will contribute even more to the formulation of our laws, the administration of our country and the general progress of society.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing necessity arises out of the revelation that the government has repudiated the basis on which it gained the support of the House, including the budget which gave first priority to the reduction of unemployment and inflation. If the House gives unanimous consent, I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

> That this House does hereby request a copy of a document incorporating the cabinet decision to relegate government action against inflation and unemployment from top priority to number six priority be tabled and that the government forthwith ask for the confidence of the House of this attempt to reverse the previous decision of this House.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF DEPARTMENT'S ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a question of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact the government has suggested regional development will have top priority, and in view of the fact that only 21,000 jobs have been created in all of Canada in the first three and a half years of operation compared to 562,000 unemployed in Canada in 1972, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the annual report of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENTATION OF PETITION REQUESTING STAMP COMMEMORATING FORTHCOMING VISIT OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to present a petition signed by 778 citizens from my area requesting the authorization and publication of a commemorative stamp bearing a portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, crowned, on her Royal visit to Canada this year. This petition is in accordance with government intentions, as stated by the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) on May 15.

Princess Anne

THE ROYAL FAMILY

ENGAGEMENT OF PRINCESS ANNE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of importance to this House and to Canadians. I seek the unanimous consent of the House for this motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay):

That this House express its best wishes to Her Royal Highness, Princess Anne, on the occasion of her engagement to Lieutenant Mark Phillips; our sincere affection to Her Royal Highness and best wishes for their continued happiness; and that Mr. Speaker be requested to convey this message on behalf of this House to Her Royal Highness.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate to the House that from my point of view we have more important things to do and the motion does not have my consent.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

● (1450)

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The motion that has just been proposed is similar to the one I put yesterday which the hon. gentlemen opposite did not agree with at that time. There seem to be those on the government side who, I feel, are interfering with the privileges of the House by hiding their mouths behind their hands to cover their nays when the House tries to express legitimate views on legitimate matters arising under Standing Order 43. I accept, of course, that Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent in order for the motion to be put, but I feel that the privileges of the House are being interfered with day after day by members on the opposite side when they cry no and remain anonymous.

The rules of the House do not permit a secret ballot, but in fact hon. members opposite are succeeding in doing this very thing by not identifying themselves when these votes arise. May I respectfully ask whether the Chair would consider the possibility of asking, in connection with proposed motions under Standing Order 43, firstly for the yeas and secondly for the nays.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the suggestion that is being made by the hon. member for Leeds and it is one that has been made before. However, the practice is clear: what the Chair is required to do is to ascertain whether there is unanimous consent to move the motion. It is sufficient for this purpose if there is one nay. I wonder whether it would be appropriate to change the practice, call for the yeas and nays and count noses or heads. I think that the application of Standing Order 43 is complicated enough at the present time without making it more complicated.

The problem raised by the hon. member in connection with the present motion is somewhat hypothetical because there were clearly members who identified themselves in expressing a negative response to the inquiry whether there was unanimous consent under Standing Order 43. In any event, I have noted the hon. member's suggestion and I assume that those who look after rules reforms will want to take it into consideration.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre on a question of privilege.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member opposite say in his remarks just now that I had not concurred in his motion yesterday, which is clearly not the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member but again I wonder whether there is any point in going into this matter much further by raising a question of privilege. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, would he indicate what it is.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, the question is that the accusation has come from the other side that members on this side, I among them, did not support the motion moved yesterday. I did not detect that either yesterday or today. If there was any opposition it did not come from this side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, using the same words as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I should like to make it "crystal clear" that the reason I seconded the motion was to bring it to the attention or the House that no member on this side opposed the motion moved yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because again today, for the last 10 minutes, we have been wasting our time with things of lesser importance, as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) stated.

We want to work in this chamber, ask questions of the government, make progress and give accounts to the public, instead of wasting our time.

Mr. Speaker, there is a limit to everything and it is most regrettable to give such a sad show to the people of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Again I suggest to the House that three or four members have now risen on the same question of privilege and, with respect, I do not think anything can be achieved by pursuing this matter further and ascertaining who said yea and who said nay. The hon. member for Leeds raised a point a moment ago and I would hope we could now go on with the business of the House.

Mr. Cossitt: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I will only take one moment but I feel it is necessary to rise in view of the statement made a few moments ago by the hon. member opposite regarding what I had said. I must draw to the attention of the House that I certainly did not specify that the two members who moved and seconded the motion today were specifically among the nays of yesterday. It was stated incorrectly by the hon. members opposite that I did do such a thing; I simply said it was obvious that the nays came from the government side of the House.

An hon. Member: No, they did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to make a ruling at this point that we have to go on with the business of the House. The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. > That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs be instructed to advise the House immediately what steps are being taken to ensure that these increases will not now be proceeded with.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

That this House does hereby request the immediate placement of a committee of investigation at Dorval airport to inspect the haphazard implementation of safety standards as they presently exist.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NORTHERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity to seek unanimous consent of the House to move a motion. In view of the revelation in today's press that regional development will get top government priority, and in view of the admission by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, contained in another unpublished document, that northern Ontario's economic viability has been declining since 1961, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the House directs the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to present within a month to the House a detailed program for the development of the long neglected region of northern Ontario, with specific reference to the establishment of special areas for the development of infrastructures, and to the establishment of Crown corporations for the benefit of our neglected people in northern Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to define "health" in the Criminal Code under section 251(6) of that statute to mean actual physical or mental danger to the mother and, without limiting the generality of the word "danger", consideration of social and economic conditions affecting the mother or her family unit shall not be taken into account.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES—BASIS ON WHICH PRIORITIES ESTABLISHED—POSITION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising from a leaked document purporting to be a cabinet document. I would ask whether the cabinet has changed its list or order of priorities and, in particular, whether the attack on inflation and unemployment has been moved from the top of the list, where it was in the Speech from the Throne and the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, to number six on the list?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the House and the Leader of the Opposition will understand that it is not good practice to comment on documents or exchanges between Privy Councillors of a confidential nature. I am prepared to answer questions on any subject but not on the basis of any document supposed to be leaked.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the order of priorities indicated by the government in the Speech from the Throne and in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance has been changed and, in particular, whether the fight against unemployment and inflation is now number six on the list instead of number one?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer to that is no.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, has the government changed its priorities in any respect?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government does change its priorities from time to time. We have problems that we look at either on an urgent or essential basis. When we think they are solved or on the way to being solved we put others in a higher priority position. It would also depend on whether they were priorities from the point of view of action, from the point of view of consideration by cabinet, or from the point of view of eventual study by some department. The priorities are of a different nature according to the field of action about which you are talking.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his philosophical dissertation. I should like to ask whether he will table in the House the government's list of priorities as it now exists, and whether he denies that the list of priorities, as contained in the purported cabinet document, does in fact constitute the government's list of priorities as of today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the last part of the question I would answer it first by saying I do not comment on cabinet documents whether they are reputed to have been leaked or not. On the question as to what our priorities are, Mr. Speaker, they vary from time to time, and I hope that the country and the opposition know what they are from time to time. Today our priorities—

An hon. Member: Do you know?

Mr. Trudeau: Today our priorities—

An hon. Member: What are they? Let's hear about them.

Mr. Trudeau: I will be glad to answer any question of the hon. Leader of the Opposition as to what our priorities are at a particular point in time from the point of view of action or from the point of view of study.

An hon. Member: When is the next election?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peace River on a supplementary question and then the hon. member for Nickel Belt. If there are further supplementary questions on this subject they can be asked after we have completed the first round of questions.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is now the opinion of the government that it has found itself incapable of dealing with inflation and the unacceptable rate of unemployment and is therefore turning to deal with the consequences that flow from such failures?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

NORTHERN ONTARIO—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the highest priority which the cabinet places on regional development, and in view of the admission in the confidential DREE document entitled "Ontario Regional Report" that the incentive program is not sufficient in itself to alter substantially the position of northern Ontario in the Canadian economy as a whole, will the minister tell the House whether he intends to establish a Crown corporation located in northern Ontario in which the people of northern Ontario would have a say?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the preamble to the hon. member's question, I would respond in precisely the same way as did the Prime Minister. I do not propose to comment on alleged leaked documents, if you like. In terms of the substance of the question, we have in every part of Canada, in other provinces, created either Crown corporations or federal-provincial corporations. This is a mechanism which we will be quite prepared to discuss either with the province of Ontario or with other groups within the province of Ontario.

NORTHERN ONTARIO—ESTABLISHMENT OF DESIGNATED AREAS—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, since the document in question further states that the problems of northern Ontario are related to the lack of adequate housing, inadequate sewage facilities and a lack of fully-serviced industrial land, will the minister tell the House whether he intends to make a statement on the designation of several special areas in northern Ontario for the purpose of infrastructure?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, all of the matters to which the hon. member has referred will be discussed with the government of Ontario within the next ten days. I believe they are scheduled for the forthcoming DREE discussions I will be having in the early part of June. Certainly, these matters will be discussed in detail at that time.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again a number of members are seeking to ask supplementary questions. I have been trying to finish the first round of questioning. The hon. member for Assiniboia can ask one supplementary question, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Compton.

NORTHERN ONTARIO AND WESTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF TRANSPORTATION COSTS AS FACTOR IN ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that areas in northern Ontario and in western Canada face a most difficult situation because of the freight rate structure, can this minister, who has a long record of experience with transportation, inform the House what precise action is being taken in these areas to meet this all-important question of revising the freight rate structure?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in so far as my own responsibilities are concerned, transportation is one of the key elements I have been discussing, in association with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, with the provinces. I did have discussions in Edmonton yesterday with the government of Alberta and have been doing so at all the federal-provincial discussions that have been going on. In addition, of course, we have met with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces and a meeting which was scheduled with the Prairie provinces on transportation for June 7 has now been postponed at the request, I believe, of the province of Alberta.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BILL RESPECTING ELECTION EXPENSES—REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us what stage the proceedings have reached concerning an electoral reform; is the government still considering the possibility of preparing a bill before the summer adjournment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we still intend to carry on.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Does the Prime Minister find that the matter has some importance and could he tell us whether he has received representations from the other parties or other Canadian taxpayers asking for reforms, especially as regards the financing of candidates at election time?

Mr. Trudeau: It is possible, Mr. Speaker, but I do not remember any specific representation. It is possible that someone wrote me in that connection, but I do not recall any special communication. We have tried to answer all legitimate requests.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED LOW POSITION OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ON GOVERNMENT'S PRIORITY LIST

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he explain to the House why it is that the government has relegated to the very bottom of the list of priorities the subject of environmental protection, as reported in the leaked cabinet document, when so recently it was such a high priority matter on the government's list?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The government has not done that, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING OF PRIORITY ON NATIONAL ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On or before May 17, did the cabinet set a priority on the subject entitled "Secure Our National Economic Independence" and, if so, where did the subject rank on the list of priorities?

● (1510)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister and my colleague have already indicated, I do not intend to comment on alleged cabinet leaks.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I remind the minister that I did not refer to any paper but simply asked whether on May 17 such a priority was set and, if so, what was the numerical priority?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East.

POSSIBLE STRIKE OF MACHINISTS—REQUEST FOR PERSONAL INTERVENTION OF MINISTER TO AVERT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on another matter of priority I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the machinists union has voted overwhelmingly for strike action, is it the intention of the minister to follow the excellent example of his predecessor, the hon. member for Verdun, and personally intervene in this dispute with a view of trying to avert a strike which would result in the tying up of air travel in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the hon. member in terms of the excellent job the hon. member for Verdun did as Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would advise the hon. member that Mr. Gallagher, the conciliation commissioner who came down with a report which has not been accepted, has re-entered the picture. I have appointed him, with the consent of both sides, and he is attempting to mediate the dispute. It is my hope that he will be successful.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the union can legally strike at any time beginning tomorrow and that we could have a series of rotating strikes beginning tomorrow, does the minister personally intend to intervene in this matter and does the government have a contingency plan to meet the situation in the event of a strike?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be aware it is natural that the government is concerned—I am sure the opposition shares this concern—that there not be a strike in this country. We also adhere to the principle of free collective bargaining. The fact remains that if you adhere to that principle the strike weapon remains in the hands of the union members of this particular company. Having said that—and we of this party adhere to that principle and I believe the members of the official opposition also—there can be no absolute guarantee that there will not be a strike. All I can do is assure the hon. member we will de everything possible in our role as the government to prevent it.

STRIKE BY FINANCIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—SUGGESTION MINISTER URGE PRESIDENT OF COMPANY TO RE-ENTER NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact there is already a strike of Air Canada employees taking place in Winnipeg and because of the fact that the strike is caused by the refusal of Air Canada management to accept the unanimous report of the conciliation board, will the minister discuss with the president of Air Canada that refusal and urge him to re-enter negotiations in that strike?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is in this government, like all others, a Minister of Labour who has responsibility in that field and if I have to do something I will do it according to the advice given to me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North in a moment, if he will resume his seat, and then the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport really understood my question. Surely, the Minister of Transport, through whom Air Canada reports to parliament, has some relationship with the president of Air Canada and can discuss its refusal to accept the unanimous report of the conciliation board with its officials.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary Centre.

POSSIBLE STRIKE OF MACHINISTS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ASSESSMENT OF EFFECT OF STRIKE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Labour. Along with any contingency plans the government may or may not have formulated to avert such a strike, has the government prepared an over-all assessment of the effect of such a strike and will it be tabled in the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think we can accept the fact that if there is a strike of Air Canada it will have serious repercussions of an economic nature, as do all strikes under federal or provincial jurisdiction that involve a number of employees. Still, a price is involved in adherence to the principle of free collective bargaining and all we can do is try to avoid the economic consequences. If they become too serious, I point out that parliament is in record as having taken appropriate action in the public interest.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS ON GOVERNMENT'S LIST OF PRIORITIES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Prime Minister. Since neither the throne speech nor its substitute listed any priority or made any reference to the problems of Canada's native people, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could say at what level these problems, including the question of aboriginal rights, are being considered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, gladly, Mr. Speaker; at the very highest level and I believe they are being very excellently dealt with by the minister responsible.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Am I to understand then that the question of aboriginal rights is being considered by the minister?

Mr. Trudeau: The whole subject of our native people is one which has been before the government since the beginning of the last parliament. The government's position on all aspects, including the one raised by the hon. member, has been stated from time to time.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY AND DIVISION OF ROUTES BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND CP AIR—ALLOCATION OF ROUTE TO MILAN, ITALY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to advise the House whether the government has now reached a decision on a new international aviation policy, to which the minister referred on previous occasions, which would allocate international air routes between Canada's two major air carriers? If so, can the minister indicate to the House when this policy will be made public and also can he advise when a decision will be reached on the landing rights at Milan, Italy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are still looking into this problem in the department. I do not think I am in a position to say at what moment we will be ready to make any public statement and not for the Milan route either because it has to be decided.

DISCONTINUANCE OF CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Having regard to the bilateral discussions now taking place in Ottawa, can the Minister of Transport tell us whether the subject of preclearance is a subject of top priority. Can the minister assure the House that after these meetings are concluded we will have any definitive decisions as to the extended air routes and the overcoming of this problem of preclearance at the Toronto International Airport.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): As the hon. member mentioned, negotiations are going on now. I do not have the result of those negotiations and I do not think I should reveal anything which is being discussed at this moment.

INQUIRY AS TO ALLOCATION OF EDMONTON-CALGARY LINK TO UNITED STATES

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and is supplementary. Can the minister tell the House whether the government has reached a decision now on the expansion of western Canada air routes, and particularly the Edmonton-Calgary link to the United States?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is surely one of the preoccupations of the department and is something we are trying to achieve now.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO INCREASE BASIC RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the assurance the minister gave the House on May 17 that he hoped to be able, before the end of May, to introduce the government's bill to amend the Pension Act so as to increase the basic rate of the war disability pension, and in view of the fact that there are only about eight or nine hours left in the month of May, is he now in a position to introduce that legislation?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my department is presently working on the legislation and I hope to present it to the House before too long. I do not think we can get it here before tonight.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether that legislation will follow the recommendations of the joint study group on the basic rate of the war disability pension?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I would prefer not to make that statement at this time. When the legislation is brought in this will be determined.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ON GOVERNMENT'S LIST OF PRIORITIES—EQUAL APPLICATION TO ALL AREAS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that in the list of priorities reported today environmental protection apparently is not considered by the government to be as important as bilingualism, does the order of priority apply equally to every part of this country?

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS AT VICTORIA FALLS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE THE HIGH COMMISSIONER'S REPORT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is the minister prepared to table a copy of the report drafted by the Canadian High Commissioner, Mr. A. M. Leith, giving the real version of the events surrounding the killings in Zambia of two Canadian citizens, a report which is rumoured to contradict the remarks of Zambia's foreign affairs minister?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the House will permit, I will make a short statement. I do not intend to table the communication from the deputy high commissioner to me because that is a privileged document. However, I would be prepared to give the substance of the disagreement if the House would let me make a statement now.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fairweather: You are reverting to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. To clarify what we are doing now, may I point out that the suggestion made by the minister is that we revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement. I am wondering whether the House might not prefer that we go to the end of the question period, and then have the minister make his statement on motions under the Standing Order which would invite comments from parties in opposition. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN IN VIEW OF ICE CONDITIONS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister tell the House what action he proposes to take with respect to requests made to him by the Premier of Newfoundland and the provincial Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland for emergency assistance to help the fishermen who are prevented from fishing because of severe ice conditions?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the income problem faced by the fishermen on the Atlantic shores due to ice is under active consideration.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TERMINATION OF GRANTS TO PROJECTS RELATED TO ROCHDALE COLLEGE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and it arises from my recent questioning regarding the troubled Rochdale College in Toronto following which I received a letter from the minister, for which I thank him. Because of the fact that the minister now confirms there is still a total of $110,000 in LIP grants outstanding to individuals or organizations associated with Rochdale, and due to the tragic and deplorable events which are continually taking place at that drug infested institution, I ask the minister to advise the House why his department has not, or in fact is not even considering, any action for the premature termination of these grants?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I went on to say in the same letter to which the hon. member refers that not all those projects which are even remotely associated with Rochdale were located in Rochdale. I think the fact that some tenant may be occupying space in the building or may have some other remote connection does not call for the cancellation of a worthwhile project. Projects are being examined on their merits. I might say that the whole affair is probably superceded by the termination date of May 31, and I do not know at this moment whether any of these will be eligible for extension.

POLICY ON DESIGNATED AND SPECIAL AREAS—DISCUSSION WITH QUÉBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Since there have recently been meetings with the Quebec government concerning designated or special areas which should be announced soon, at the same time as the departmental policy, can the minister assure us that the recommendations or proposals made by the Quebec government will not only be examined but taken into serious consideration?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously the answer is yes. They will get very serious consideration.

TRADE

LUMBER—ALLEGED SHORTAGE FOR HOME BUILDERS—REQUEST FOR EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the continual rise of shelter costs, and in view of the high percentage of lumber generally used for home building here in Canada presently being shipped to Japan causing a lack of lumber which has raised the price here in Canada some 300 per cent in the last two years, will the minister consider imposing export quotas on lumber being shipped out of this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the question on export controls on lumber is no but, as the hon. member probably realizes, we do have export controls on Canadian logs.

LUMBER—ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF HARDWOOD FOR FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS—REQUEST FOR EXPORT CONTROLS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the hon. member for St. Catharines and I address it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that his predecessor in the portfolio spent a great deal of the taxpayers' money building up the furniture industry in Quebec and eastern Canada in general for export purposes, and as there are industry reports that they are now short of lumber to carry out their commitments due to this expansion, would the minister indicate whether he is willing to reconsider his stance of no export controls such as we have on copper, natural gas and oil?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I understand from conversations that I have had with lumber producer groups, particularly hardwood, that hardwood lumber production in Canada has increased significantly, in fact 24 per cent last year over 1971. The current trend indicates that during the past year Canadian hardwood lumber consumers have received an increasing share of Canadian production supplemented by larger net increases in imports of both hardwood logs and lumber.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the minister contradict the reports coming out of Quebec that the furniture industry is short of hardwood lumber in that province?

Mr. Gillespie: I understand that there is a tight situation, but I have also been assured that Canadian producers will do everything they can to assure a supply to Canadian furniture makers.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. Catharines on a supplementary.

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Again my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does he not agree that there is a substantial shortage of lumber for home building here in Canada today?

Mr. Gillespie: There seems to be a worldwide shortage of lumber at present.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT ON RECIPROCAL FISHING ARRANGEMENTS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I wish to ask him whether he will table in the House a copy of the text of the recently negotiated agreement with the United States on reciprocal fishing arrangements.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, we are prepared to do that, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED LEAK OF CABINET DOCUMENT—POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and I am sorry to interrupt him. I should like to ask him whether he has launched, or caused to be launched within the last two weeks, any investigation into any leaked cabinet document and, if so, would the date of the document be May 17?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say from memory if there has been an investigation on a particular date or in reference to a document of a particular date, but I can say quite candidly that when documents are leaked there is a standing instruction from me to ensure that the departments from which there appears to be a leak are carrying out an investigation within the department to see if they can ascertain the source of that leak. Confidentiality remains the basis on which we think governments should be able to operate in receiving advice from their officials.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in fact such an investigation has been launched during the past two weeks with regard to a leaked cabinet document.

Mr. Trudeau: I would presume so, Mr. Speaker. When I was told this morning that there might be a leak of a cabinet document, I said that we should try to ascertain the source of that leak.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PURPOSE OF ALLEGED FINGERPRINTING OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister some ten days ago whether all civil servants were fingerprinted. Since then I have done some ascertaining myself and I believe that to be correct. Was the reason for doing so, now that all civil servants in any category hired by the Public Service Commission are being fingerprinted, to catch and trace down the leaks which are now so frequent?

● (1530)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did look into the question and so far as I can recall, subject to refreshing my memory, the answer is no. There is no fingerprinting automatically of all civil servants. Certain categories of civil servants are indeed fingerprinted, as was recognized by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the particular case requested of him.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I now take it from the Prime Minister's answer that what he is saying is that there is no requirement that all public servants be fingerprinted?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is what is in my memory. If I am in error on that I will want to correct it later today or tomorrow.

HOUSING

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT PROPOSED RENT INCREASES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS WILL NOT BE PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister today in a position to assure the House that the proposed rent increases in the Toronto area for senior citizens, to which I have referred, will not be proceeded with after May 31, which is the end of the 60-day moratorium, and if the minister is not able to give us that assurance today will he indicate whether by tomorrow he will be able to do so?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Company is a non-profit organization and I have offered them a proposal to convert their limited dividend housing into public housing and therefore have a 50 per cent federal contribution toward the rent to income scale in that housing, which I would hope would allow the housing association to maintain its moratorium on rent increases. There are discussions going on between CMHC and the association, all of which are subject to the approval of the Toronto Housing Corporation, but I would hope that would be the result.

Mr. Grier: Can the minister assure the House that pending the outcome of the present discussions no rent increases will be proceeded with?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the rent, of course, is charged and levied by the association. I hope that my offer to them will enable them to maintain the moratorium on any rent increases.

PROPOSED DEEP WATER PORT AT LORNEVILLE, NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT OF PROJECT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works has expressed support for the development of all potential Atlantic deep-water ports, and particularly for the development of Lorneville, and as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has agreed that his department will assist in such development, would the Prime Minister now state that he will fully support the position of these two cabinet ministers and their policies in this regard, and will he also state that he will use the full force of his office to see that their policies are expedited?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can state that quite unequivocally. It is the policy of the government, in fact of all ministers.

ALLEGED DIRECTIVE TO NANAIMO RESEARCH STATION NOT TO COMMENT ON LOBSTER PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment in connection with the controversial lobster program at Nanaimo. Can the minister indicate the basis of the directive received at the Nanaimo Research Station, and, if he is not aware of it, cause it to be investigated, stipulating that in order to protect the minister from unwarranted badgering in the House of Commons any comments to the press, Members of Parliament and the general public should be released through the office of the director?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any unwarranted badgering in the House of Commons.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask the minister if he would cause to be investigated this very serious directive which has been received at the Nanaimo Research Station?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this subject was covered, I know at considerable length, in the relevant committee of the House a few weeks ago. I will be glad to speak to the subject if it comes up again in that committee.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE—POSSIBLE WITHHOLDING OF GRAIN BY FARMERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since the Canadian Wheat Board has raised its export price for wheat by some 20 cents a bushel at the eastern ports and 10 cents a bushel at the western ports, and since wheat prices have strengthened by approximately $1.25 during the past year, is the Board at this time giving any consideration to increasing the initial price paid to western farmers for the wheat they are delivering this crop year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not know of such consideration. I think many farmers would be rather more upset than otherwise by an increase in the current year, and of course the general practice is to allow for a fairly large final payment six or eight months after the pool period is closed. Further, prices are a very volatile matter. There was some decline today. That alone justifies the policy of a large final payment.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should bring to the attention of hon. members that we are coming to the end of the question period and we should have as few supplementaries as possible in order to allow other members to ask at least one question each.

Mr. Murta: In view of the fact that some farmers may hold back marketings until after August 1 in expectation of higher initial prices for the 1973-74 crop year, would this not give grounds for considering a possible increase in the initial price for the coming year?

Mr. Lang: No. Farmers know in fact that the total amount of money is the important figure and not the initial price. The flow of wheat into the system is still adequate to meet the Wheat Board's commitments.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER TO MANITOBA GOVERNMENT CONCERNING HYDRO PROJECTS

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the repeated requests from Manitoban Indians for assistance in dealing with the government of Manitoba and Manitoba Hydro with respect to hydro projects in northern Manitoba, would the minister advise the House what representations he has made on behalf of those Indians to the government of Manitoba or to Manitoba Hydro, and what the results of his representations have been?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I wrote the Manitoba premier concerning this. LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—NUMBER OF PROJECTS APPROVED AND TOTAL DOLLAR VALUE IN EACH PROVINCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is he giving consideration to making a statement early next week informing the House how many LIP projects have been approved for continuation in each province, and the total dollar value of each project?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to convey that information to the House in one form or another when it is available to me. At the moment those figures are not finalized, and I am not sure they are in a form that I could use early next week. As soon as they are available I will see that hon. members are informed.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

GASOLINE—COMPLAINTS OF INDEPENDENT RETAILERS CONCERNING PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns reports of price rises and price fixing in the wholesaling of gasoline by large companies to independent wholesalers, who in turn sell to the small independent gasoline retailers. I would like to ask the minister if any complaints have been submitted by any independent gasoline retailers or their associations concerning this matter?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, matters of this kind have been brought to the attention of the Combines Branch from time to time.

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE BASIC RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION—DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the statement today by the Minister of Veterans Affairs that legislation to increase the basic rate of disability pensions for veterans will not be introduced before the end of May as he predicted, may I ask the President of the Privy Council if he could give the government's assurance that such legislation will be introduced before the end of June?

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister tell the House when he is going to announce the personnel of the independent study group for Pickering airport, which he first indicated he was going to set up over four months ago?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House and before the committee, I consulted with the government of Ontario and understand that they will shortly be in a position to announce the names of the members of the board of examination.

Mr. Speaker: Before returning to motions for the purpose of hearing the statement to be made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs the Chair will allow the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte to ask a supplementary to the question he asked previously and then return to motions.

PROPOSED DEEP WATER PORT AT LORNEVILLE, N.B.—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister in respect of my initial question. In view of the fact that remarks attributed to the Minister of the Environment in New Brunswick over the last weekend were interpreted as virtually negating the policies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Public Works, and that only the Prime Minister can clarify this matter which has created a great deal of uncertainty and worry over the future of the Lorneville development, would the Prime Minister please state where this government stands and what help can government and investors expect to receive in making a healthy development at Lorneville?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, the Minister of the Environment has already talked to me about this and I understand he has attempted to get some rectification of the way in which his remarks were reported. The significance of his remarks, and I certainly would support him, is that in any development of this kind we must show due concern for the environment and any development which is proceeded with in these places must be looked at from the point of view of the Minister of the Environment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS AT VICTORIA FALLS, RHODESIA—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have reported to the House earlier, the First Secretary of our High Commission in Lusaka, Mr. A. M. Leith, visited the scene of the shooting incident primarily to assist with the arrangements for the recovery and return to Canada of the body of Miss Sinclair and in regard to the search for the body of Miss Drijber. He also took the occasion to speak to the eye-witnesses of the tragedy and to officials concerned. Mr. Leith left Zambia for Rhodesia before we were aware of the contents of the initial Zambian communiqué. During his journey Mr. Leith received full co-operation from Rhodesian and Zambian authorities concerned and was able to assist in the speedy return to Canada of the body of Miss Sinclair. The information given to Mr. Leith by the eye-witnesses on the Rhodesian side to whom he spoke revealed some serious discrepancies in regard to the Zambian version. For example:

(1) Mr. Leith reported to the effect that there was no evidence of any provocation for the incident so far as he could determine;

(2) As to whether the two Canadian girls had been in the water, the Rhodesian police report on Miss Sinclair's clothing confirmed no evidence of water on her shoes or trousers;

(3) There was no evidence that any member of the party was wearing bandoliers or waterproof gear, and

(4) There was evidence that more than one gun was used and an examination of spent bullets and bullet marks indicated that the shooting had been directed to three locations on the Rhodesian side.

As I have already reported to the House, I have not been satisfied with the version of events contained in the Zambian communiqué. On my instructions our High Commissioner brought to the attention of the Foreign Minister the discrepancies between the information obtained by Mr. Leith and the Zambian communiqué. This interview between our High Commissioner and Foreign Minister Mudenda took place on May 24. Mr. Broadbridge stressed to the Foreign Minister my desire to receive a full and satisfactory statement from the Zambian government immediately. The result of these representations was the receipt of the personal message from the Zambian Foreign Minister which I tabled yesterday. Although this statement expresses the Zambian government's regrets, it leaves a good deal to be desired and I have instructed our High Commissioner to continue to press the Zambian government for a more satisfactory response. When I have received further information from the Zambian authorities I will be in a position to advise the House further.

May I add, Mr. Speaker, a reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) regarding a statement in the letter from the Foreign Minister of Zambia that I tabled yesterday which reads as follows:

Last year a Canadian and a Zambian lost their lives in your country in the cause of strengthening our relations.

So far as we can discover, the incident refers to the deaths in an automobile accident of a Zambian who was in Canada on a training program and a Canadian whose house guest he was at the time. The Zambian, Robinson Chibundi, was a superintendent of the Zambian police force, and had arrived in Canada August 23, 1972 to participate in a three-month training program. Over the Labour Day weekend, superintendent Chibundi and a fellow Zambian police officer were the house guests of a lieutenant of the Hamilton police force, Michael Pauloski, who was also on the training program. Lieutenant Pauloski, members of his family, and the two Zambians were returning from a football game on September 4 when Lieutenant Pauloski and Superintendent Chibundi were killed in an automobile accident.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the minister has decided to make a full statement on this issue following a report submitted to him by our High Commissioner on the facts concerning the death of two Canadian girls. I have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that as my colleague the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) has noted, there seem to be many questions unanswered and up until now there did not appear to be considerable activity on the part of the Department of External Affairs with reference to this matter.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians travelling abroad have a right to the fullest protection that the Canadian flag can afford. This can only be assured if further efforts with reference to redress are made and the strongest possible protests are launched, perhaps at the United Nations.

There are many questions that I should like to have answered. With respect to the circumstances surrounding these deaths we have already had a report given by a reliable and comprehensive reporter from Reuter, who gave us certain facts a few days ago. The government does not seem to have conducted any inquiry into that report. These facts are substantially different from those which have been given by the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Zambia. I should like to quote from the Reuter report the following paragraph:

The front page story, which the newspaper said was the result of a week's investigation—

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the reporter has been able to make such an investigation quickly, surely our Department of External Affairs could have done likewise.

—said that "about 50 people watched in horror" while five Zambian soldiers shot dead Christine Sinclair, of Guelph, Ontario, wounded American John Crothers "and then sniped for nearly two hours at Marjan Drijber hiding behind a rock in the Zambesi river."

The article continues:

According to the Star, all witnesses to the incident had been "cowed into silence" and "indications in Lusaka are that President Kaunda has had the truth deliberately kept from him by his security forces with the connivance of members of his cabinet, including Mr. Grey Zulu, Minister of Defence."

And, later:

"During all this several Zambian policemen and plainclothes officers looked on in silence." The report said the Zambian troops were in a state of high agitation, sweating profusely.

And a further paragraph from the report reads:

● (1550)

When objections were made to the uniformed police and plainclothesmen looking on, one reported that the fact that the person was a woman made no difference because the Black September movement had used women to blow up Israeli airliners.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, these facts brought out by a reporter should have been looked into by the Department of External Affairs. Other questions, as well, come to mind and it seems to me that the minister should look into them. In the letter which was tabled yesterday, sent by the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Zambia, these sentences appear:

Besides, we have several Zambians who have trained or are training in Canada. Last year a Canadian and a Zambian lost their lives in your country in the cause of strengthening our relations.

Having heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs, we now know what the last sentence means. Nevertheless, I am disturbed by those sentences. It is said that several Zambians have trained or are training in Canada. I do not know if these Zambians have been trained as managers of corporations or as soldiers in certain camps. I wonder, if they are still being trained in Canada, what action the government is taking, now that these two girls have been murdered. Will the action to be taken by the government be swift and decisive, or will the government wait until the High Commissioner returns and gets information from the same person who wrote this personal letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

In this matter we want more than regrets. We do not want excuses from the government. We want compensation, and we have not yet heard anything of that nature. It seems to me that these questions and many more will have to be answered. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) has been pressing the government day after day, without success. We have received a partial report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hope that, since he has been asked these additional questions today, he will be able to satisfy not only us, in this Parliament, but all Canadians.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the incident to which the minister referred in his statement was tragic in the sense that two young Canadian women unnecessarily lost their lives. It could be doubly tragic if we were to allow that unfortunate incident to affect our relationships with Zambia, which, after all, has been friendly, without first determining the facts of the case. I appreciate the efforts of the government in first ascertaining those facts before determining its course of action.

We provide substantial aid to Zambia on a regular basis. We have provided emergency aid to Zambia, to help that country overcome difficulties encountered as a result of the closure of its border with Rhodesia. We have trained Zambian policemen and military personnel in this country. I have received suggestions, both direct and veiled, that perhaps this kind of assistance should be stopped because of the incident to which reference has been made. I hope the government will not act on that basis, and that the government's actions will not be dictated by the obvious and normal human desire for revenge in instances of this kind. If two or three Canadians had been killed, for example, in the Kent State incident in the United States, there would have been outrage but certainly not demands for separation of relationships from the United States. There would have been demands for an official apology from the government of that country and perhaps for compensation, but certainly not demands for punitive action. I think it is only proper, even though Zambia is not one of the world's most powerful nations, that we should treat that country in the same way as we would treat any other nation with whom we have friendly relations.

I think it was unfortunate in the extreme, given the potential for adverse reaction in this country, that the government of Zambia did not see fit to communicate directly with our government on the issue and provide it with facts at its disposal directly, instead of operating via press releases. I think it is also unfortunate that in its initial reactions to this incident, the government of Zambia made statements which now would appear clearly not to have been in accordance with the facts.

I hope our government will insist that the government of Zambia issue an official apology and a full explanation of the incident. And, if that full explanation seems to warrant it, I hope our government will demand compensation for the families who have suffered this tragic loss. Certainly, until such time as we receive a satisfactory answer from the government of Zambia, our own independent inquiries through our embassy officials there should continue.

I think one final point must be made. This tragedy should have brought home to all Canadians forcefully the results which flow from the kinds of tensions which are produced in this world by racist regimes. Borders are closed, and armed troops patrol those borders. These tensions are a result of policies pursued by certain countries which are unacceptable to us as a nation and unacceptable to the United Nations. I hope that that is the lesson that Canadians have learned from this incident.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs just made leaves us somewhat puzzled, althouth the minister seems to demand a more exhaustive investigation than the report submitted by the Zambian government.

I think we should demand more than that in order to know all the facts involved in a situation we looks like a double murder.

Many Canadians are wondering about that, particularly those who are planning to go abroad. We need to feel secure when we travel in other countries, either as tourists or official representatives. And when such tragedies occur, we need to know all the circumstances. In the present case, some families have lost dear ones, and I agree with my colleagues who urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to insist that those families should receive some compensation.

[Mr. Rowland.]

[English]

Mr. Hales: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask permission to say one or two words about this tragedy, particularly as these two girls come from my riding?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that the House agrees. I expect hon. members are familiar with subsection 3 of Standing Order No. 15. However, if it is the will of the House that the hon. member be heard, he will be recognized.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you and hon. members of the House. I will not repeat what has been said concerning this tragedy. I am wondering why it has taken this government 16 days to make a statement in the House, and not a complete statement, at that. We are still left in doubt about the true facts surrounding this tragic incident. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) will give to this House early next week a full and complete report on this tragedy. I also hope he will be able to say what compensation may be forthcoming to the families of the two Canadian girls, in addition to covering many other points that I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing as they have already been mentioned. We must not delay this matter any longer. The longer the government lets this matter stay in limbo, the more questions will be asked and the more serious and complex will become this political issue. So, I seriously hope that early next week the Secretary of State for External Affairs will give us a more comprehensive report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the usual Thursday afternoon, now almost evening, question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River on the usual Thursday point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to ask the government House leader if he has managed to maintain his priorities for the legislative program between now and the end of June. I do not suggest this is the order because that may be embarrassing, but I understand we are to deal with housing, capital punishment, bilingualism, family income legislation, electoral boundaries, Immigration Appeal Board and legislation relating to the Olympics. I ask this as complementary to the question with regard to the business of the House for this week and next. In light of the fact tomorrow is June 1, the minister might like to keep the House acquainted with his views as to what he wants done.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the business for today and tomorrow has already been announced. Hopefully, it will be concluded early next week. We will continue our discussions. On Tuesday, I would like to call the report stage of the national housing bill, to be followed by the residential mortgage bill and the fisheries development bill. Thursday and Friday must be opposition days. Hopefully, within that week there will be a day designated to deal with the Ways and Means resolutions tabled this week. The following week will probably be taken up with consideration of the tax bill or bills and an Immigration Appeal Board bill.

With regard to the list of legislation that the hon. member has mentioned, certainly all of that is on the priority list to be dealt with before the summer adjournment. I would like to look at the list to see whether anything has been omitted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the President of the Privy Council indicate when summer begins on his calendar?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should add to the list the veterans legislation. The summer adjournment will begin when these bills are completed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In light of the commitment made by the Prime Minister each year since 1967, may I ask the government House leader whether the bill on the limitation and control of election expenses will be presented to parliament during this coming month.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It will be presented. I am not sure whether it can be dealt with completely before the summer adjournment, but it will be presented before that time.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps Your Honour might want to hear the hon. member for Lotbinière first.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in answer to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), has stated, if I have it right, that from now until the end of the session, a legislation on election expenses would be introduced according to what had been announced in the speech from the throne.

I realize that he will talk about it, but I would like to know whether the government leader anticipates that this bill can be considered and whether we will be able to pass it before the end of this session, or whether it will be introduced only for consideration during summer?

Business of the House

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very important point of order affecting all hon. members. It has to do with the business of the House. According to Standing Order 58(14), as of midnight tonight, all estimates of the House will be deemed to have been passed. The standing order reads:

> Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

Today there are 11 standing committees and one special committee of the House meeting, with just a couple of exceptions, for the purpose of examining estimates. For example, four committees met at 9:30 this morning to examine estimates and two at 11 a.m.; four were scheduled to meet at 3:30 p.m. and two are scheduled to meet at 8 p.m. today. It is with regard to the meeting scheduled for 8 p.m. that I base my point of order.

The estimates of Information Canada are to be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. These estimates will be examined for the first time at eight o'clock. That means the members of that committee will have a maximum of four hours to examine the estimates of this very important government agency. In fact, if the House adjourns at 10:30 and the committee adjourns at 10:30 as is the custom, we will have approximately two and one half hours to examine the estimates of Information Canada. I might point out that when the supplementary estimates were before the House, the vote under the heading Information Canada for $19,000 was voted down by a majority vote of the House. This must have indicated to the government there was less than satisfaction in the House with this government agency and the substantial amount of government funds that have been earmarked for expenditure by this agency.

I realize that Your Honour's first reaction will be that no rule of the House is being violated or broken. That is true. However, this is certainly a flagrant violation and abuse of the rules of this House. Members of this House have the responsibility of examining the estimates. Government expenditures amounting to $20 billion have been referred to the standing committees of this House for examination and scrutiny. If committees are meeting simultaneously with the sitting of the House, and that is another argument, my grievance is this: The government should have referred the estimates of Information Canada to the committee before two or four hours prior to the deadline set out in Standing Order 58(14). We can only conclude that the government does not want this agency to receive the kind of scrutiny it certainly warrants under the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: When the estimates of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) were being examined by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, we were informed that we could not examine the minister on the Information Canada vote because, for some strange reason yet unknown, the estimates of Information Canada were to be dealt with by another standing committee, the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. Consequently, we were denied the opportunity of examining the Minister of Labour on the estimates of Information Canada. The only opportunity that we will have to examine the estimates of this particular agency will be at eight o'clock this evening. This will be our first and our only opportunity, because by midnight tonight, under the Standing Orders of this House, all estimates will be deemed to have passed.

I appeal to Your Honour, as custodian of the rights and privileges of the members of this House, to take this matter under advisement so as to ensure in future that when the government manages the business of the House, especially supply and reference of estimates to standing committees, it takes into account the very specific provisions of Standing Order 58(14) and sees to it that all hon. members are given ample time to examine all of the estimates which are placed before the standing committees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on the same point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on February 27 last the estimates of Information Canada, along with all the other estimates, were referred to the various standing committees. For three years now, the estimates of Information Canada have been referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. This was certainly the case while I was chairman of that committee over the last four years.

Second, the government does not control those committees. It does not have a majority on those committees. It is the combined opposition that controls those committees by virtue of its controlling vote. The committees make their own decisions as to what departments they call. Each committee has a certain number of hours allocated to it, the total time available divided evenly among them, and it is possible for the committee to use this time as it sees fit. I do not think that the charge that the government has deliberately attempted to hide the estimates of Information Canada is valid, because it is, as I say, the committee that controls its own time and sets its own schedule and agenda.

The last point I want to make is that it was at the behest of the government, and at my insistence as the parliamentary secretary having some responsibility for committees, that the committee decided to hold hearings tonight on Information Canada. According to the chairman of that committee, no indication had been given by members of the opposition that they wished to consider those estimates. They had among themselves made their own decision as to which departments and agencies they wanted to examine. I think if anyone is to be found at fault, it is not the government but the members of the committee, members of all parties in the House. The members of that committee have had no direction from the government in terms of what the committee shall call or what it shall do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Regina-Lake Centre on the same point of order.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that some efforts have been made to schedule committee meetings in such a manner that the situation we have had in the past where a number of committees are sitting at the same time will not occur, and I must say I appreciate those efforts. But what has been happening over the past two weeks in two committees of which I have personal knowledge is that there has been a strange inability on the part of both the government party and the official opposition to assemble a quorum. This occurred just 30 minutes ago when a meeting of the transport and communications committee was cancelled. Only two members were present, the hon. member for Skeena and myself; no one was there from the government and there was no one from the official opposition. Some 30 officials of the Department of Transport were sitting waiting. The same thing happened in the privileges and elections committee. On two occasions, it was unable to meet because of a lack of a quorum. I find it passing strange for a member of this House to complain that we cannot deal with estimates when the fact is that committees cannot get quorums.

I urge the government and the House leaders of all parties to revert to a practice we tried two or three years ago, which was for the House not to sit for a full week while committees met two or three times a day for the entire five day period. A great deal of work was accomplished. I suggest a modification of that practice might be to have the orders of the day question period, and then have House recess until the next day. This procedure could be followed for an entire week. Perhaps a week out of each month over a period of three months should be devoted to committee meetings, and most of the work of hon. members during that week would be on committees. I hope that the committee on privileges and elections will be able to get a quorum tonight.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and also on the point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane is rising on the point of order.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because the committee that I have the honour to Chair has been referred to by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I think I should point out that it has been standard practice for committees to schedule meetings at 3.30, on the understanding that the committee may meet later than 3.30 if the question period in the House of Commons continues past that point. Today has been a rather unusual day to begin with, and even now the question period is not over, or least we have not reached orders of the day.

I could see trouble arising today at 3.30, since a lengthy question period in the House is still in progress. This is why today, after consultation with the vice-chairman of the committee, the minister and others concerned, we decided that the best thing to do would be to cancel the meeting of the committee. I regret very much that the hon. member was there at 3.30, but the question period was not over at that time. It was not a question of getting a quorum in the committee but rather whether the committee should meet.

Mr. Benjamin: I waited for half an hour.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, may I assure the hon. member that as chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts I do not take direction from the government as to the business to be heard. As far as any decision to hear certain departments is concerned, this decision is arrived at through consultations with other party members on that committee. As a matter of fact, there are so many different departments and agencies referred to this committee that it is impossible to examine all their estimates in the course of a year, much less in the time we have been given.

As far as the hearing tonight with regard to Information Canada is concerned, there would not have been an opportunity to examine these estimates at all had it not been for the fact that we disposed of one item of the Secretary of State's department yesterday. This left us with time to examine the estimates of Information Canada, since it happens to be an agency that is important and should be examined. However, there is certainly not time to hear from all departments. I point out to the hon. member for St. John's East that at the present time he is not a member of this committee, so therefore is not in a position to know what has taken place up to now. As I say, it has not been possible to schedule any other meetings to hear from this particular agency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont on the same point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. With respect to the basic question that was touched on by the hon. member for Cochrane namely the increasingly difficult situation in which we find ourselves each year with very limited time to deal with so many departmental estimates, particularly when government expenditure is increasing every year, would it not be possible for the procedure and organization committee to give this matter some priority of examination in order to introduce a formula that would be a good deal more workable than the present one set out in Standing Order 58(14)?

On a more practical note, I am sorry that the government House leader is not in his place, but earlier he said that he would give consideration to the referral of annual reports to various committees in order that the basic work done by committees of scrutinizing government expenditures and programs could continue. If the government House leader could give us some assurance that these reports would be referred to committees, presumably some of the pressures referred to by hon. members on both sides of the House would be relieved. I think it is important that the House have a much better opportunity to examine the workings of government departments than it has under this present prohibition.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, it seems that a number of factors have emerged all of a sudden. The matter of the Committee of Transport and Communications having a meeting scheduled for 3.30 this afternoon to consider the estimates of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, and other committees having just this last day to consider estimates, brings us to the point that I think we might want to consider altering the Standing Order that demands that the estimates be deemed to have been adopted by the end of May. We might want to provide additional time to do this cleanup work and also to do a very much better job of considering the estimates. If we do not move in that direction ourselves, we shall be open to some rather serious charges of completely disregarding the expenditure of public funds.

I am not referring only to the Committee on Transport and Communications, but that is the one of which I am a member and in respect of which I am particularly concerned. I wonder if I might put forward the suggestion, not to seek consent to it now, but so that the House leaders might discuss it and come back later today with agreement on a course of action. I suggest that Standing Order 58(14), the one in question, be amended for this session so that instead of today, May 31, being the time when estimates are extracted from these committees automatically, whether they have been considered or not, we extend the time to June 15. This procedure would give the committees another couple of weeks to do a proper and thorough job of considering all those estimates with which they have so far not dealt. Perhaps that might get us out of a very awkward situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder, now that the government House leader—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let me say to the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), in view of my ruling in respect of other hon. members wishing to speak on this point of order, he may not speak now. Hon. members are allowed to make one contribution and that is all. I regret to have to take that action.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was merely rising to invite the government House leader to respond to my suggestion, in view of his earlier indication that he would consider the proposal to refer the annual reports, in order that we might clear this impasse and make the work of the committees more effective.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the point raised earlier, by the Leader of the Opposition, as to whether there would be some arrangement or extension in respect of a particular committee, namely the Standing Committee on Regional Development, that committee has reported and has completed its study of the estimates. It was in respect of that committee I had promised consideration.

Mr. McGrath: What about the motion?

Mr. MacEachen: There is not a motion.

Mr. Stanfield: No, he did not put it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 58(14) states:

In every session the main estimates to cover the incoming fiscal year for every department of government shall be referred to standing committees on or before March 1 of the then expiring fiscal year. Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

Several hon. members have taken that Standing Order to mean that at the expiry of today the estimates of any particular department, more particularly the ones to which the hon. members refer, shall be deemed to have been passed by the House of Commons. This is not so. The relevant words are "shall be deemed to have reported". It is open to hon. members, at a later stage in this session, to challenge the particular estimates they wish to have challenged. I think the Chair might also say that hon. members are anticipating what may happen this evening when a meeting has been called to consider the estimates of a particular department or division of government. That is something I think the House cannot do. The estimates have been referred to the committees and until these come back, either as a result of the provisions of the Standing Order I have mentioned or in some other way, we should not interfere.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to determine whether or not there would be unanimous consent to the proposal I put forward earlier, namely, that the Standing Order be altered so that June 15 becomes the deadline, without proposing that there be any debate on it.

An hon. Member: No, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The Liberals say no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will pe first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canda, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne indicated that our government would ask Parliament to "confirm the basic principles of our program for bilingualism in the public service. The resolution now before this House sets out those principles, together with further measures to achieve greater use of the French language in the public service.

Since we must this session deal with quite a few national concerns, I am sure hon. members will allow me a few moments to relate today's resolution, and the government's official languages policy, to other major legislation proposed in the throne speech.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in one way or another, every government since Confederation has sought to enhance national unity in Canada: to remove the irritants which divide us, while strengthening the many links which join us. Like many of its predecessors, this government understands that national unity is not to be found in an immutable formula chiselled in stone. The quest for Canadian unity is not frozen for all time in any one track or single direction. The pace of modern change is too rapid for that; our country is too large and diverse for that.

In Canada we have two official languages; a number of proud provinces and regions; many thriving cultures. All of us rejoice in our diverse identities, and are vigorously determined to retain them. Hence, achieving national unity will depend on meeting different priorities in different areas. Our challenge is that it now depends on meeting many of them at the same time.

The throne speech has proposed measures to improve urban life, and to widen opportunities for western Canadians; to deal with many economic and regional expansion problems; and with what some call "the language problem". They are all on our agenda for this session; we will deal with them all with equal vigour. For as we well know, if the essential needs of any major group or region are consistently ignored, in the long run there may not be a Canada for any of us.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to national unity, today's resolution has an extra dimension because it concerns the Public Service of Canada. Our public service develops and applies the whole range of federal policies affecting the lives of all Canadians. This puts it in constant touch with the people, in intimate contact with their everyday concerns. The public service must be acutely sensitive to the needs of Canadians, so Canadians will feel it is their public service; and so the public servant will feel himself involved with the whole.

The policy of the government is to attract the most capable and competent people to our public service. We cannot do this, and the Public service cannot adequately serve all Canadians, unless it is increasingly representative of the two language groups.

Why do we have two official languages in Canada? In my opinion, not primarily because of any historical founding rights, though they are important to many people. Not, certainly, because those two particular languages are superior to any other. We are not dealing with historical abstractions or cultural preferences. We are dealing with straightforward political and social realities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: And a stark reality of our country is this: there are about 16 million English-speaking Canadians, most of whom speak no French. There are about 6 million French-speaking Canadians, a majority of whom speak no English. If only because of sheer force of numbers, either group has the power to destroy the unity of this country.

Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker: two numerically dominant language groups, both of them prevalently unilingual. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) reminded us last December:

> These facts leave Canada with only one choice, only one realistic policy: to guarantee the language rights of both linguistic communities. They are the facts which have dictated the government's bilingualism policies, and the principles which must apply in their application in the public service.

Mr. Speaker, this concern with the two official languages is a very old one here in parliament. My right hon. friend from Prince Albert has cited this himself. So perhaps he will remember how vigourously John A. Macdonald denounced any attempt—in Macdonald's words—"to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other." "I believe", said Macdonald, "that would be impossible if it were tried—and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible". Impossible, of course, because neither the French nor the English-speaking Canadian is going to throw himself, or his language, into the sea. Foolish and wicked, because to make one language inferior to the other, even by default, would implant a core of implacable dissatisfaction at the heart of our country.

You know, many of us take language pretty much for granted, much like breathing. But that is exactly why limiting a person's use of his language can cause in him such a trauma, because you are interfering with something almost as basic as breathing. The Pearson government accurately stated a number of years ago that:

> . . . language is at once the extension of the individual personality, and an indispensable tool of social organization: fail to recognize the linguistic rights of either French or English-speaking Canadians, and their will to preserve Canada will be seriously weakened, if not destroyed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for more than a century now many French-speaking Canadians have been saying, "That government in Ottawa, that's not my government . . . Why, it doesn't even speak my language". That is the kind of frustation that fed separatism. So the federal government finally said to the people of Quebec, "Look, keep faith in Canada. Things can be changed. We'll implement the B and B report, and bring in the Official Languages Act. We'll get the public service people to look over their recruitment and personnel policies".

"We'll get Ottawa and Hull, with Queen's Park and the people in Quebec City a bit enthusiastic about making the capital more bilingual, a more open city, a more national capital. Because Quebeckers have to feel at home in all of Canada; and certainly in our federal government."

Now, so far the people of Quebec have kept the faith. They rejected separatism when it was raised as an issue in the elections of 1968, 1970 and 1972. But the federal government must keep the faith too. All of us, working together, have got to show once and for all Ottawa can speak in the French language and can reflect the values of French as well as English-speaking Canada. This we must do, because we want to stay together as one Canada. Thanks to all parties in this House, we have our basic tool, the Official Languages Act. But we always have to ensure we are using it in the very best way we can. And that is part of what today's resolution is all about.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain quite clearly the major reasons for this resolution. Some have asked: "Why is Parliament being asked to debate? Why is Parliament being asked to vote on it?" Others even say, "Why did the government even bother drafting it? Isn't all of this already in the Official Languages Act?"

Well, I will agree on one point. Nothing in today's resolution deviates from the spirit or letter of the act. But, we are not debating the act; we are debating the public service official languages program. It was criticized and it caused uneasiness on the part of public servants because of the way in which it was applied or allegedly applied. That is why we want this Parliament to know the way in which we want to apply it. That is why we want the public service to know what the guidelines are and that is why the unions in the public service have been also consulted on this. The program itself has evolved remarkably in the past four years. More than almost any other recent measure I can think of it has required constant adjustment, constant improvisation and constant experimentation. After all, what we are doing in our public service has never been done before, at least not in Canada. All of us, the government and treasury board, the Public Service Commission and staff associations, have had to take a chance on the methods we thought best. And we have had to be willing to refine and even change some of our techniques and to try new ones in the light of our experience.

I am happy to say that we recently reached something of a watershed in this rather hectic effort. The results have been evaluated. And the new guidelines we promised last September, well before the result of October 30, are now embodied in a firm set of principles—that is the first part of today's resolution—and in further concrete measures—that is the second part—which we expect to pursue with consistency for some time to come. Hence today's resolution presents to this House several new, basic developments in the way we are implementing the public service languages program. Every part of the resolution carries the full support of the staff associations, and was developed in full consultation with them. I was certain that the House would want this opportunity to express its opinions as well. After all, all parties in the House support the goals of the Official Languages Act. Along with the government, the Public Service Commission and staff associations, the House is a full partner in this vital enterprise.

There is another reason for bringing forward this resolution. The government's language policies are intended to benefit all Canadians. But it is primarily our public servants who have to live, in a very personal sense, at the cutting edge of this fundamental change; who have to bear much of the burden for us all. We owed it to them to spell out more precisely, as soon as we could, the specific conditions of the program. To do so has been a primary purpose of this resolution.

During the past few years, I have felt a great deal of sympathy for any men and women in the public service who at any time may have felt personally threatened. I also understand the concern of public service candidates who want to know more precisely whether a second language will be required of them in a few years time. Today's resolution should help clear the air, certainly not by slackening the pace of our program but by making both the requirements and guarantees far more tangible, concise and precise than before. In this sense, the resolution is a matter of simple fairness to those most directly involved. It can help ensure that a vital instrument of national unity, the Official Languages Act, shall not become a tool of disunity.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), will be explaining in some detail both the principles embodied in the resolution and the guidelines which flow from them. In the near future, I hope that he and I may also meet with the senior officials of the federal public service to discuss with them the substance of this resolution and to ensure an understanding of the objectives involved. I can think of no area where understanding and co-operation at all levels of the public service are more important.

There are just a few important points I should like to make now. English speaking Canadians often forget that a majority of French speaking Canadians are not bilingual—they too are unilingual. An Anglophone takes it for granted that he can work in the public service of his country, in his national capital, using his own language. A Francophone cannot. That is obviously unfair and must be changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: But let us also remember this: We do not repair one man's house by removing the bricks from his neighbour's. Hence, I am speaking of both Francophones and Anglophones when I state my determination that our language policy must never be a barrier to any Canadian wanting to work in the federal public service.

If Canada's public service is to offer real equality of opportunity, as many public servants as possible must be able to work in their own language. It was certainly never the policy of the government that most public servants need to become bilingual to enjoy satisfying careers. On the contrary, our intention is to enable most of them to remain unilingual if they so desire.

Obviously, this will not be possible unless they can communicate in their own language with their supervisors, and with their central departmental services: the reference library, let us say, or the personnel branch. Which means a certain number of central service and supervisory positions (as well as some of those dealing with the public) will have to be held by bilingual men and women.

There are more than 250,000 public service positions in all of Canada. We estimate that about 25,000 of these must be held by bilingual officials to permit most other public servants to work in their own language. (I'm told that something like half of the 25,000 posts already are filled by bilingual persons.) By designating just these specific positions, I think we've found the best, least disruptive way to enable Canadians to work for the public service in the official language of their choice and to ensure that the federal government can serve every Canadian in his own language.

[English]

To summarize, we do not seek a public service in which most men and women are individually bilingual. This approach would obviously be the wrong one since the vast majority of Canadians do not speak two official languages. Rather, we wish to create a public service that is functionally bilingual—that is one in which most men and women will be able to work, to function, in whichever official language they choose.

Let me assure the House that we have not the slightest intention or desire ever to impose a second official language on any Canadian who does not wish to speak one. While the phrase may sound a bit awkward, there is really nothing mysterious or frightening about what we call "functional bilingualism". It will not take anything away from anyone. It will give something very desirable to all of us, to the Canadian speaking only English and to the Canadian speaking only French. It will give us a public service in which all of us can work in the language that comes most naturally to us as individual men and women, a public service from which all of us can obtain essential government services in our own language. Is that bad? Is it a policy to make any of us fearful? I do not think so, and that is why I commend this resolution to every member of this House and to all the Canadian people.

As the resolution recognizes, most Canadians have not had a need or an opportunity to learn both official languages. With this in mind, the government proposes that those who are unilingual, as well as those who are already bilingual, be able to compete as equals for any bilingual position open to public competition. They can do so on the understanding that, should a unilingual candidate be selected for a bilingual post, he or she will take up to a year of language training—at public expense—to develop whatever degree of second language proficiency is required. This measure is for the benefit of both unilingual English speaking and unilingual French speaking Canadians, and will apply to them of course without distinction.

The principles embodied in today's resolution also deal with those already working for the government. In this 1966 statement which established the government's basic position on bilingualism in the public service, prime minister Pearson promised that the careers of unilingual public servants:

> . . . who have devoted many years of their lives to the service of their country must not be prejudiced in any way by measures to develop bilingualism.

From the outset, our language policy has been elaborated within that spirit. I am aware, however, that many doubts have arisen among unilingual public servants in part because the 1966 promise was general in nature.

In contrast, today's resolution is quite specific. It states that unilingual public servants will be given at least one year's notice of the bilingual designation of their posts. They will have an opportunity to take language training—also at public expense—or to transfer to a unilingual position at no loss of salary.

What if someone should decline language training or be unsuccessful at it, and also refuse a transfer? If all that befalls, him, he may remain in his post if he wishes to and we will make administrative arrangements to ensure that the bilingual needs of his office are met. In other words, no public servant will be removed from his position by virtue of our implementation of the principles. We wish to provide an extra measure of protection for public servants who had ten years of continuous service as of the date of Mr. Pearson's statement, April 6, 1966, and who have been continuously employed in the public service since that time. Even though they are unilingual and wish to remain unilingual they will have the right to apply for positions identified as bilingual, but not yet formally designated as bilingual.

Mr. Speaker, I have described in some detail the safeguards we are providing to protect the interests of unilingual public servants. These safeguards will apply to both English and French-speaking public servants, but in terms of numbers will most help the English-speaking group. Now let me turn more specifically to the primary interest of French-speaking Canadians: Are public service careers becoming available to them on the basis of equality? I know that some people—pointing to the targets previously set for 1975, and the new deadline of 1978—have charged that today's resolution represents a retreat from our objectives, or a delay in implementation of our policies. This is simply not the case. On the contrary, we cannot meet our new objectives for 1978 unless, at a minimum, we meet the targets previously set for 1975. The President of the Treasury Board will explain this question in detail. I would like at this time only to impress one crucial point upon this House:

I do not regard the achievement of a functionally bilingual public service as a vague and distant desideratum. I regard it as a very concrete matter; I regard it as having immediate importance to the well-being of our country as a whole—and of millions of our citizens as individuals.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we would be blind not to recognize that many French-speaking Canadians still do not regard the federal Public Service as "theirs". That many of them feel the federal government "belongs to the anglophone", because it still largely speaks in English, and works in English. With the cooperation and goodwill of our public servants, we have already made a certain amount of progress towards changing this situation. Now we must call upon ourselves to do more.

That is why the second part of today's resolution refers to specific measures to increase the use of French in the public service, and to enhance public service career opportunities for French-speaking Canadians. Where appropriate, we are increasing the number of French Language Units. We are undertaking further measures to increase recruitment of francophones. So that these recruits may compete as equals for promotion within the public service, we are increasing the number of professional training programs offered in French. And we will seek progressively more effective action, in consultation with provincial and municipal authorities, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital Region.

For just a moment, let me also recall that the first part—the "basic principles"—of the resolution are of at least equal importance from the point of view of a unilingual francophone. Their importance to him is this: our good intentions, our efforts to create a functionally bilingual working atmosphere, have now crystallized as a precise and systematic program to identify—by December 31st of this year—and to fill—by 1978—the key positions with bilingual public servants. To assist in this end, we are augmenting second-language training facilities for federal public servants.

I have just one additional note. It may be of special interest to the francophones who have contributed so much to our federal cultural agencies, and are beginning to contribute much more than in the past to the commercial, scientific and technical ones. I am writing to the heads of the federal agencies, to inform them that the government anticipates their personnel policies will take full account of these measures to enhance the use of French. (Along, of course, with the entitlements and safeguards which I described earlier.)

Mr. Speaker, I would humbly express the wish that comparable measures will apply everywhere on Parliament Hill as regards both Houses, the House of Commons and its services and the Senate. I also will draw the resolution to the attention of the presidents of corporations such as Air Canada and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, we are trying, in a fair and just way, to create a public service increasingly based on a true partnership of the anglophone and francophone communities. We are trying to widen the opportunities for public service for all Canadians who may wish to serve. But we are today discussing only one aspect of the Official Languages Act. It must be remembered that that Act also covers such matters as provision to the public of services in both official languages by the federal courts and crown corporations; the use of the two languages in Parliament; and the appointment of a Commissioner for Official Languages.

That Act and today's resolution make sense only if we agree on the kind of Canada we want: A Canada where French and English-speaking Canadians feel at home in all parts of the country; a Canada where all citizens treasure the privilege and challenge of building one nation with two official languages, and many cultures.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, language policy is not an idée fixe with this government; it is one of the means toward our two pre-eminent goals, national unity, and equality of opportunity. To a Quebecker a more desirable Canada may vitally depend on respect for language rights. To a westerner more interest may currently attach to whether this government and their own provincial premiers make real progress at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. In many parts of the country millions of Canadians will judge their government less by the language it speaks than by whether it provides equity and compassion in our social welfare system, or new ideas and resources to help keep urban life liveable and urban government workable.

Can all these needs be understood and tackled together, Mr. Speaker? I think they can, because while in Canada we may often have different priorities, we respect each other and want to live together as a nation. Canadians also realize that your well being or mine cannot be purchased at the expense of our neighbour's. Hence today's resolution is one essential in a complex of programs and objectives to foster unity and equality for all in this country. Today's resolution is a clear option for the kind of Canada we want. I commend it to all hon. members of this House, and indeed to all Canadians.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk)—Broadcasting—Sale of radio station CKSB, Winnipeg, to CBC—Action to set aside Canadian Radio-Television Commission decision; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather)—Energy—Proposed West Coast oil tanker route—Alleged lack of departmental co-ordination of opposition; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Canada Pension Plan—Hutterian Brethren of Canada—Request for exemption from paying premiums.

It now being five o'clock, we will proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier when tabling the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that I would be seeking the consent of the House to revert to presenting reports of standing and special committees to present the fifth report of that committee if hon. members are agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the House should return to the order, "presenting reports" so that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) may present his report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. If the House gives consent, I intend to move immediately for concurrence in that report.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The Clerk Assistant (Administrative and Procedural) read the report as follows:]

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has the honour to present its fifth report.

Your Committee recommends that its membership be increased by adding thereto the following names: Messrs. Beaudoin, Fox, Howard, Lawrence, Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands), Messrs. O'Connor, Olivier and Prud'homme, and that the provisions of Standing Order 65(1)(i) relating thereto be suspended, so that two sub-committees may be formed to begin investigation into the administration of the penitentiary system while the Committee proceeds with consideration of proposed legislation now referred to it, that the quorum of the committee be set at ten members and that the provisions of Standing Order 65(6) relating thereto be suspended.

Your committee further recommends that the said sub-committees be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada, accompanied by the necessary supporting staff, for the purpose of visiting penitentiaries.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence (Issues Nos. 11 and 12) is tabled.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES JEROME,
Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the presentation of the report. It would now be a matter of moving that it be adopted. I take it that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is so moving, seconded by Mr. Drury—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would prevail upon the Chairman of the committee to allow us to look at a certain part of the report overnight before we move concurrence in it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If there is not unanimous consent, then concurrence in the report cannot be moved now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to be difficult with my good friend the Chairman of the committee, but I would like to look at that part of the report which requires travel from place to place in Canada. If the rest of the report could be adopted but that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that there is not unanimous consent. We will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business. The first order of business would be notices of motions for papers.

Regional Economic Expansion

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

OFFER OF LOAN TO THE PARK SAMUEL HOLLAND HOTEL OF QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the signed agreement and all other documents relating to the offer of a guaranteed loan made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel of Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to thank my good friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for seconding my motion. It shows once more that this Parliament is the assembly of the nation. Notwithstanding political parties, whenever the public good is concerned, we agree.

The object of the motion of which I am the sponsor is to have an order directing the executive to produce, in this House, which is the supreme authority in this country, the documents specifically concerning the signed agreement between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, of the first part, and the management of the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel of Quebec, of the second part.

I really cannot understand why the government appears reluctant to reply to information requests made by hon. members, according to the Standing Orders of the House.

Logically, it seems to me that hon. members' privileges should be taken into account by the executive. The credits that the ministers are authorized to spend are voted by Parliament, therefore by the members. The legislation authorizing the expenditure of public funds is also voted by the members.

Why deny them this right of looking into the use of funds they have voted to such or such department? I know that in general, the civil service decides whether this or that plan submitted under an act must be accepted or rejected. I understand that the minister cannot do everything by himself, however he is responsible before Parliament and if he refuses to answer requests for information coming from the members of this House, how can these members be informed and play their role of supervising?

The motion being considered is to the effect that the House orders the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) to table a document that would allow us to verify whether the act governing this department has been complied with.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is one of the most important in the federal administration; we need only look at the budget to be convinced of this. Moreover, we know that the former minister of this department has been the target of many criticisms. Were they all warranted? I hope not.

To remedy the concerns and the numerous requests for information with which the members are flooded, the executive power would have to be more flexible and generous toward information requests coming from hon. members. The work of parliamentarians becomes more demanding and more tiresome. News bulletins and comments by so-called experts are coming from everywhere. Men and women in public life have fewer chances than before of thinking about complex questions before making a judgment.

It has become an art to follow the events so as to give valid opinions on vital issues for the electorate as for its representatives. Those who asked questions expect quick and wise answers on the part of Parliament members on many subjects which concern the community, such as fiscal matters, economic matters which are becoming more and more disturbing and also on local topics which are increasing in number and difficulty.

Specifically, we have people asking why a co-operative flour-mill which contributes to provide jobs and boost the economic growth of an area cannot benefit from DREE grants to upgrade its equipment and offer new products to the public when a hotel such as the one mentioned in the motion can benefit from the act. Are products or services offered to the public more useful than those of a co-operative flour-mill?

Why can that same department financially help a business and not another? People will say that the act is the governing criterion. There are also regulations edicted under the act but they are made by officials and not members of parliament; that procedure is a deficiency which prevents members of parliament from fulfilling their role to the fullest extent.

A parliamentarian often needs information on delicate questions—perhaps a problem or a grievance from one of his constituents—and the department may be reluctant or give an inadequate answer because of restrictive rules.

A real or imaginary barrier may stand between departments and members of the opposition in the sense that the public service is at the government's disposal. That is why members will feel sometimes that an official is trying to avoid or escape certain questions because he thinks that the subject is politically touchy. Personally, I have that problem mainly with the Department of Manpower and Immigration which is in charge of the Local Initiatives Program.

I know that as far as the motion is concerned I will be told that those documents are of a confidential nature and that the department has no choice but to refuse the information requested. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, one could rightly say that all reports from individuals and companies to the government are of a confidential nature.

I also want to say that the remarks found in the report of the auditor general relating to the use of public funds are quite fair, and the government should draw inspiration from them.

I should like to quote from the notes on the report of the auditor general a passage that appears to me to be very fair, which somewhat supports the motion through which I request the tabling of certain documents, in order to be in a position to control, in accordance with our parliamentary duties, expenditures and appropriations of public funds. I am referring to paragraph 195, on page 26, which states:

Weakening of parliamentary control over expenditure through failure to disclose the total cost of a project. Canada has undertaken to contribute $6 million toward the cost of building a provincial ferry with ice-breaking capabilities of which $3 million was paid by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion during the year and $3 million is to be paid by the Department of Transport in 1972-73. When contributions to a single project are divided between the appropriations of more than one department, the full extent of the related cost—

—to a given department—

—is not adequately disclosed, thereby contributing to the weakening of parliamentary control over expenditure.

And further on, it says:

196 Irregular charges to Regional Economic Expansion appropriation. Charges of $694,000 with respect to the projects mentioned in this paragraph were irregular as they came within the programs of other departments for which specific appropriations had been provided by Parliament.

A third point was raised by the auditor general concerning the same department, and I quote:

197 Irregular payment of a development incentive grant. The grant, of which $442,000 out of a possible $570,000 had been paid, relates to the takeover without interruption of the operation of a completely organized manufacturing firm which was in commercial production. It is difficult to understand how the acquisition of a functioning facility can be construed as being the establishment of a new facility as contemplated by the Regional Development Incentives Act.

The fourth point—the last I shall quote—will prove once more that we are justified in availing ourselves of the Standing Orders to present a motion for production of papers.

198 Grant made under Department of Regional Economic Expansion Act. Grant of $33,500 paid to company notwithstanding the fact that an investigation showed that company equity was negative and the operation was not viable.

This will be my last quotation. I merely wanted to bring to the attention of the House the merits of my motion and I hereby invite hon. members to adopt it unanimously, so that the documents may be produced.

Mr. Speaker, this is not only out of curiosity, but to fulfil our duties as parliamentarians. If, as I said earlier, we authorize credits, we have the right and the responsibility to find out how things are done and the money administered.

Therefore, if an hon. member is entitled pursuant to Standing Orders to submit a motion to compel the government to produce documents, I hope this is no laughing matter and that this motion will be unanimously carried.

● (1710)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate your recognition of me. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) stood up at the same time I did. I am sure I will leave plenty of time to enable the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie to put his remarks on the record.

The notice of motion in the name of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) that we are discussing this afternoon reads:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the signed agreement and all other documents relating to the offer of a guaranteed loan made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel of Quebec.

I think the basic reason that I, personally, would oppose this motion is that we are trying to get new industries established in the designated areas of Canada. In this case, the industry happens to be a hotel. We are striving to get new businesses into these areas so that they will provide more jobs. It is basic that when people apply for grants or, in this case, a guaranteed loan, they do so because they want to do business with the government. They have to file very detailed information as to their long-term projections and show what their assets and liabilities are. If this information is to be made public, those companies will not bother applying. For every one application that is granted, many, many are never granted. If we want these companies to apply for this assistance, I suggest they have every right to be dealt with confidentially.

In this connection I wish to quote from page 5 of the March issue of "Report on Regional Development Incentives":

> In conclusion, it should be noted that applications for incentive assistance and supporting documentation contain a large amount of information that must be regarded as commercially confidential. It is for this reason that, as a matter of policy, the Department is unable to make public certain types of data. It is for the same reason that the Department does not reveal the fact that a particular application has been received unless and until it results in an accepted offer of incentive assistance. This policy is, of course, consistent with the aims and objectives of the program, which is designed to encourage investment in the designated regions and special areas of Canada.

Many of the things to which the hon. member referred were discussed in great detail by the Regional Development Committee yesterday when it visited Sudbury, at which time various groups from all over northeastern Ontario were heard. One area in which we should be doing more is that of loan guarantees and assistance of various types to those engaged in the tourist industry. Northeastern Ontario, like many other areas of Canada that have been designated, has tremendous tourist potential. Under the federal regional economic expansion program, not much assistance is granted to those engaged in the tourist industry. The loan guarantee is one part of the regional economic expansion program which applies directly to the tourist industry.

When this matter was before the House two or three years ago, it was pointed out that the main reason for establishing the loan guarantee was that often the resort operator had only 20 per cent of the capital required. If he were establishing a manufacturing or processing plant, he would perhaps receive a grant from the federal government of another 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the capital required. However, in a slow growth area, it was often difficult to raise the additional capital needed to finance the project. Therefore, the loan guarantee was introduced so that the entrepreneur would be able to go to the bank or some other lending institution to borrow the money and the government would guarantee the loan. There has not been a large number of loan guarantees approved. Perhaps there is a need to improve this program because it is not being utilized nearly as much as the Regional Development Incentives Act.

The hon. member also mentioned the hotel type of operation which received assistance through the Industrial Development Bank. I was pleased to note that, according to the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will be introducing amendments to the Industrial Development Bank Act later this session to make it more flexible. The bank has made a lot of progress in securing new business.

Some of the witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Regional Development in Sudbury yesterday indicated that they were much more aggressive and were doing a better job of getting new business. This does not deny the fact that the interest rates continue to be high. Although the interest rates are higher than those charged on loans from the Northern Ontario Development Corporation, there is still a great deal of money made available to the tourist industry and hotel chains through the Industrial Development Bank.

Another agency in which the federal government is involved is ARDA. It does not make loans directly to those engaged in the tourist industry, but does make grants to communities for the development of tourist facilities. I understand the smallest loan on which a guarantee is given is $250,000. This seems rather high. Perhaps if it were lower, more businesses could take advantage of it.

When speaking on this subject some time ago, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) argued that such loan guarantees should be available to the operators of smaller hotels. All hon. members are aware of inflation and increased costs. Possibly you could not build much of a hotel for $250,000, but this limit still seems high. The hon. member for Compton also suggested that the assistance should only be available to Canadian owners of hotels. Of the two examples cited, I understand that one hotel is owned by a company in Quebec and the other in Winnipeg is Canadian owned as well.

I wish to refer to the criteria upon which the government bases a decision to produce papers because it gives a guide to the type of information which is available to Members of Parliament. This document was appended to Hansard for March 15. The general principle set out in the document is as follows:

> To enable Members of Parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistent with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

Exemptions

> The following criteria are to be applied in determining if government papers or documents should be exempt from production:

1. Legal opinions or advice provided for the use of the government.

This should be self-evident. Sometimes a government gets more than one legal opinion. To reveal this information ahead of time, especially if the government were involved in a litigation with a company or individual, would certainly prejudice the position of the government. The second criterion reads:

> Papers, the release of which would be detrimental to the security of the State.

This obviously refers to matters of national security, such as police information, RCMP information and so on. The third criterion is as follows:

Papers dealing with international relations, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of Canada's foreign relations; (the release of papers received from other countries to be subject to the consent of the originating country).

If members were given access to private papers and reports concerning other countries, the effect on our international relations could be detrimental. The fourth item reads:

Papers, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations or the relations of provinces inter se; (the release of papers received from provinces to be subject to the consent of the originating province).

With the tremendously complex maze of federal-provincial and interprovincial papers, it is evident that if the federal government were to release these, there would be great difficulty in the negotiations between the federal and provincial governments. The fifth item is as follows:

● (1730)

Papers containing information, the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons.

I believe this item in the criteria relates directly to the inquiry today by the hon. member for Bellechasse. If companies apply for this kind of assistance and their complete financial picture is released to the public, these companies, having given the government the information privately and confidentially, would very soon cease to have any faith in doing business with the government or at least in giving factual information to the government. Then No. 6:

Papers reflecting on the personal competence or character of an individual.

I shall not go into that; I am sure most members appreciate its significance. The criteria continue:

7. Papers of a voluminous character or which would require an inordinate cost or length of time to prepare.

Many of the questions put on the order paper require a tremendous amount of information-collecting. For instance, the government might have to ascertain how much of any particular item it has in its stores. Therefore, it seems to me it would be unreasonable to expect the government to go to all the expense of gathering and collecting such information.

8. Papers relating to the business of the Senate.

I understand we do not even refer to the Senate as such but, rather, refer to "the other place". If we start to release information through the government and the House of Commons relating to the Senate, we will change the relationship that has traditionally existed between this House and the other place.

9. Papers, the release of which would be personally embarrassing to Her Majesty or the royal family or official representatives of Her Majesty.

10. Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

Likewise, this relates to the sort of situation we are debating this afternoon, a loan guarantee given to a company which has provided the government with confidential information. Because of that trust, this information should not be released to the general public.

11. Papers that are excluded from disclosure by statute.

For example, those covered by the Official Secrets Act.

12. Cabinet documents and those documents which include a Privy Council confidence.

13. Any proceedings before a court of justice or a judicial inquiry of any sort.

14. Papers that are private or confidential and not of a public or official character.

15. Internal departmental memoranda.

16. Papers requested, submitted or received in confidence by the government from sources outside the government.

Similarly, I believe this latter item applies to the subject matter of the motion we are debating this afternoon asking for a House order to release information. I think this particular criterion has been applied to the release of documents. The motion presented by the hon. member this afternoon makes it clear that these papers do not fall within the category of those that can be released. The committee held hearings yesterday in Sudbury.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I might say it was a very successful meeting and was devoted entirely to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Some consideration was given to the loan guarantee program and to other programs. A great deal of concern was expressed about the need for decentralizing the department and for having field officers able to assist applicants applying for a small loan guarantee or regional development grant directly, thus eliminating the expense entailed by engaging consultants and accountants. I believe there was unanimity among the committee members that this kind of assistance should be made available especially to people in the more remote areas. For the large corporation, decentralization perhaps is not so necessary since they have people on staff to handle detailed information and a trip to Ottawa to consult officials is not all that onerous.

We met many groups from various cities in northeastern Ontario and they, likewise, supported the idea of decentralizing this department. One group was from the Spanish River Indian Reserve and was represented by Chief Wilfrid Owl who made a presentation on behalf of his band and the 26 bands he represented in northeastern Ontario. Their experience with the loan guarantee program and the Regional Development Incentives Act has not been particularly favourable. They have received some assistance through the ARDA program as well as the Indian economic development fund, but the assistance received directly from the loan guarantee program and RDIA has been exceedingly limited.

In spite of the lack of direct liaison with the department, considerable progress has been made. The chief outlined the leathercrafts, woodcrafts and other development programs that have been financed through the department and the Indian economic development fund, including assistance to the forest products industry, small sawmill operations and pulp-cutting operations that are being carried out on his reserve. He indicated that the same kind of program has been implemented on other reserves in northeastern Ontario. Similarly with the ARDA program; he indicated the kind of assistance that had been given to that part of Ontario. I see you are moving to your feet, Mr. Speaker, so I shall resume my seat and let the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the next speaker in this debate, perhaps I should point out that by one of those coincidences that comes along once in every two lifetimes, the mover and the seconder of this motion both happen to have names the same as other members of the House. The hon. member who seconded the motion under discussion is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you for that favourable mention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on his attempt to talk out the bill. He did an excellent job, although I do not share his sentiment that the bill should be talked out.

I also congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on his motion. It is important that we try to get information from this government, especially the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I find myself a bit more fortunate than the hon. member for Bellechasse in that I have in my possession a confidential document which I received just a few days ago, prepared by a study group of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which examined northern Ontario. The study group produced a report entitled "The Ontario Regional Review". I think it contains some very important information which the committee on regional development should have had before it. I see there are a number of members of that committee in the House and I would be most happy to give them a copy of the report when I have concluded my remarks.

We in northern Ontario feel great sympathy for those in the Maritimes because, like the Maritimes and parts of Quebec and western Canada, we are an underdeveloped area. In northern Ontario, in the ten years from 1961 to 1971 employment rose by only 18 per cent, compared with a 47 per cent increase in Ontario and 43 per cent in the rest of Canada. The per capita income slipped from the equivalent of the Canadian average in 1961 to only 93 per cent of the national average in 1969. Chronic unemployment is one of our problems. Young people graduating from school not being able to find jobs and having to move to southern Ontario is another problem we face.

This report by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion highlights these very important problems and I should like to read some of its more important parts to the House. After examining the four years of operation of DREE, the report states:

> In summary, northern Ontario occupies about the same relative position in the Canadian economy as it did four years ago when the region was first designated. It remains isolated from the mainstream of economic activity in the remainder of the province. As a slow-growth region its problems are akin to those in the west and to some extent the Maritimes.

In another part of the report it is stated:

> The growth prospects of the region must be viewed as mixed at best. While increases in output may be realized in the traditional sectors (i.e. mining, forestry, and related manufacturing) the employment gains will be relatively small and will certainly fall well short of the over-all job requirements for the region as specified by the Ontario government. The single-industry towns will continue to decline and the possibility of resource depletion—especially of minerals—creates some uncertainty regarding the longer term growth prospects of the region.

The report mentions specific problems in northern Ontario as follows:

> Even the largest centres in the region have moved only slightly beyond their resource-based origins. Related to this are such infrastructure problems as the lack of adequate housing, inadequate sewage facilities and the lack of fully serviced industrial land. Third, remoteness from the major markets of North America results in higher transportation costs relative to, for example, the Toronto-centred region.

The report goes on to describe the DREE program in northern Ontario in these words:

> In northern Ontario incentives amounting to $31 million have been accepted by 57 firms. These firms are expected to create about 4,000 jobs with a capital investment of approximately $200 million.

You will note that it is expected, not guaranteed. The report continues:

> Two projects have been dominant in the over-all distribution of incentives in northern Ontario. Of the $31 million in total incentives, Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie has accepted $12 million and Eckstall Mining in Hoyle township just east of Timmins has accepted $8 million. Thus $20 million has been committed to two projects; the remaining $11 million is spread among 55 firms.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has a question, if the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) agrees. The Chair will then present its own question to the hon. member.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to the grant made to the Algoma Steel Corporation and seemed to be in opposition to that grant. I was wondering whether he in fact believes that the grant made by the department to the Algoma Steel Corporation was a good one.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, the point being brought out in the report is that the majority of the grants made in northern Ontario have gone to two firms, one at Sault Ste. Marie and one at Timmins. As a result, the money spread among the other areas of northern Ontario has been rather thin.

The whole point of the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse is that if we had access to this government's information, the study by the regional development committee could be of immense importance. When we went to Sudbury yesterday and heard the briefs from municipalities, organizations and individuals, this was the kind of problem brought forward. DREE had done studies, yet the local people have not had access to them in order to take advantage of them and develop programs and policies for northern Ontario. As a result, when we look at the situation in northern Ontario we find that the helter-skelter approach by the department has not solved our problems. We need a co-ordinated and over-all plan for this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the hon. member continues, perhaps the Chair might say it is in some difficulty in that the motion before the House reads:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of the signed agreement and all other documents relating to the offer of a guaranteed loan made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel of Quebec.

It seems to me that both the previous speaker and the present speaker in this debate have gone rather far afield from that motion. I suppose the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is hoping that there will be a conclusion in respect of what he has proposed. Therefore, I suggest it is the duty of the Chair to try to hold the debate within the realm of the motion presented by the hon. member. It seems to me that to range far and wide over the operations of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, unless it can be tied to or kept in line with the loan made to the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel of Quebec, would be to do a disservice to the motion and to the hon. member.

Mr. Symes: I take your comments under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse on the point of order raised by the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt needlessly the present speaker, but I highly appreciate your remarks. The two members who followed me considerably wandered from the motion.

The object of the motion is to facilitate the access to departmental papers and information.

I think that the motion is particularly interesting and I ask the support of hon. members to have those papers tabled.

I thank the Chair for its comments and I am sure that the subsequent speeches will deal exclusively with the motion.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) rising on the point of order raised by the Chair?

Mr. Jerome: Only with regard to clarification of your intervention, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the concern of the Chair in respect of speeches relating to the subject matter of the motion. However, in private members' hour there is always a general question of principle involved, aside from the substantive motion put forward by an hon. member, particularly on Thursdays when we deal with the production of documents. There is not only the question of the production of documents specifically related to the motion, but there is always in this hour the question of when a government should release documents and when it should not. That was the tenor of the speech of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I would urge upon Your Honour that these remarks be taken in the context that hon. members refer not only to the subject matter of the motion but should also be given an opportunity to discuss the principle of whether or not documents should be released.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury are well taken. Certainly, it is not a procedure which happens so often that it would interfere with the rules which have been laid down. However, it seems to me it is a difficult matter when a member wishes to pursue a quest for information, as the hon. member for Bellechasse is doing, if he suddenly finds himself confronted with a great, over-all debate. Obviously, hon. members can see I am in a state of perplexity on this matter. I recognize the merit of what the hon. member for Sudbury says, but I think in fairness to the hon. member for Bellechasse I must ask that the debate be as restricted as possible and as relevant as possible to his motion.

Mr. Symes: In view of those comments, Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. However, I believe the point I am trying to make is relevant to the motion. While the hon. member for Bellechasse is worried about particular documents which relate to a particular problem, I am arguing on the same principle, the principle of access to information. We are not getting it in this House. I was using the example of a document which came into my hands which is not public and which would have been of immense value to the committee on regional development. In that sense I agree with the hon. member for Bellechasse that we should have more access to this type of information, and I do not agree with the strictures elaborated by the hon. member for Algoma. I shall resume my seat in order that we may make a decision on this motion.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I shall keep in mind your direction to the House about relevancy and abide by it. However, I think we should bear in mind the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) on the subject of general information. I should like to speak at the outset, as chairman of the Standing Committee on Regional Development, about information which comes to government and does not ordinarily make its way into the House of Commons or become accessible to Members of Parliament.

There is a very happy piece of information which we are told has leaked out of that very secret cabinet room, which apparently indicates that this government gives the very highest priority to regional development. I take it that this means consideration by the Treasury Board, which sometimes can be a little tough in respect of some programs. The information is that this department is to be given every consideration so that the important job which is being done in respect of developing the various regions of this country can be done in a much more vigorous way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Penner: I would be delighted to accept a question from the venerable hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member confirming the authenticity of the document to which he has referred?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question may I say I would be a very proud man if I could say I had access to cabinet secrets and could guarantee their authenticity. My sources are the same as those of the hon. member, that is, the morning newspapers. But I am delighted with this news. I take it to be authentic. Perhaps that is wishful thinking. I want it to be authentic because we must get on in this country with the job of experimenting, spending money and doing much more, so that Canada can be something other than a few pockets of population with vast areas in between which are underdeveloped and which are not getting their fair share of the opportunities which should be available to every citizen of this country.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) pointed out that there has not been a great amount of growth in northern Ontario. It is quite true that we have only been able to hold our own. The fact that we have only been able to hold our own is to a large extent the responsibility of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in co-operation with certain provincial agencies also concerned with regional development. It came out at the hearings of the committee yesterday that much more must be done and that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion could do much more in this area.

I should like to mention one point that was raised. In case you are concerned about relevancy, Mr. Speaker, it is about information. Some of the witnesses who appeared before our committee in Sudbury yesterday pointed out that industrial commissioners, reeves, mayors and people involved in regional development find it extraordinarily difficult to obtain information which would be useful to them. It is expensive to gather it themselves. These people made the plea that much of the information which is available in the department should be released so that they could use it. Indeed, the committee unanimously passed a motion, which is part of the second report submitted earlier this afternoon, urging the government to give consideration to making some of this information available in the areas where it could be used. Rather than having it locked up here in Ottawa, it should be available to the regions and given to the people who can use it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That this house,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the public service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal public service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the public service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the public service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the public service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French language units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public

Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the national capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the public service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am almost overwhelmed by the interest of my hon. friends opposite in this subject. I must add, however, that I have received a note from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressing his regret that it would be almost impossible for him to be here tonight, and I certainly accept that. I am sorry he will not be here because I would have liked to say what I have to say in his presence.

Mr. Fraser: Where is the government?

Mr. Bell: I hope the press notes their absence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Here is the government.

Mr. Stanfield: The resolution contains a preamble referring to the Official Languages Act and the status of French and English under that act. It goes on to set out nine principles which set forth what are commonly known as the Drury guidelines for achieving the purposes of the Official Languages Act within the public service, guidelines promulgated following the election of last autumn.

The proposed motion also recommends that this House, and I quote:

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region—

[English]

The principles of the Official Languages Act are not in question in this debate; they are not before the House. They were approved when the Official Languages Act was adopted a few years ago. I supported the measure at that time and I continue to do so. I support the principles and I do not propose tonight to discuss or to reargue in any way the principles involved in the Official Languages Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But it is really a little puzzling to see what purpose this resolution is intended to serve. The Official Languages Act is law; it has legal effect. The part of the resolution before us setting out what are generally called the Drury guidelines are already announced government policy. The government, for example, did not consult Parliament before adopting these guidelines. Obviously, they did not see the necessity to do so. The adoption of this resolution by the House and by the Senate does not have the force of law in any way. Obviously, the resolution does not modify in any way the Official Languages Act or any other legislation that has been adopted by this parliament.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Do you think it should go further?

Mr. Stanfield: I hope the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) will have the courtesy to listen to me. I am quite prepared to deal with him in my usual way, but I do not know that it would add very much to this debate or to the importance of the subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Let us hear what you have to say.

Mr. Fairweather: An empty barrel!

Mr. Stanfield: The adoption of this resolution—I emphasize this—is not binding on the government. It is a matter of law, despite what the Prime Minister said in the House on May 7 of this year in answer to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). One might argue, of course, that there would be some moral obligation on the part of the government to comply with the resolution, but there certainly could be no legal obligation on the part of the government, or officials administering the legislation, because this resolution cannot have the force of law, cannot change any existing law and cannot be binding upon those who are administering the law.

In saying this I am not in any way questioning the competence of the House to proceed with an affirmative resolution, to express an opinion as it were, and I am certainly not intending to indicate, by virtue of expressing this opinion, that I propose to vote against the resolution. But I am saying that this kind of resolution obviously has no binding effect upon the ministers of the Crown nor upon the officials administering the legislation.

Earlier this session the Viet Nam resolution was before the House and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) indicated that the outcome of that resolution, that is, the views of the House as expressed on the resolution adopted by the House, would not bind him in the actions he might take, because the resolution would not have the force of law. So we intend to offer to the House an option to do more than simply express an opinion of the House. We intend to attempt to bind the government to the substance of the content of the resolution, and accordingly I will put forward an appropriate amendment at the conclusion of my remarks.

● (2010)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, I believe very much in the support of institutional bilingualism in this country. I believe the cause of institutional bilingualism needs support. But I do suggest that we will not necessarily do very much to increase the support in the country for institutional bilingualism simply by passing a resolution in this House. I suggest we really do more to help the cause if we discuss the issue frankly, if we recognize and discuss any mistakes that have been made, with a view to correcting them and with a view to making the implementation of the principles of the legislation fairer and more acceptable.

The Prime Minister has put forward this resolution. I must comment on it very frankly. I speak as a supporter of the principles. I think I might be personal enough to say that I speak as one who, in the course of defending the principles and the policy throughout the country, bears a few scars as a result thereof.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It seems to me that the resolution is put forward with a view to trying to screen some of the failure and mistakes that the government has made in implementing the Official Languages Act. One does not have to be a vigorous anti-government partisan to recognize the dangers of many of the needless strains that the government, by its methods, has caused in connection with the program. Not the least of its sins has been in the area of arousing suspicion, distrust and confusion in the minds of many of those Canadians who are neither French- nor English-speaking in their origin. The government cannot say that it acted in the absence of any advice which was constructive and intended to be helpful.

[Translation]

Four years ago, during the debate on the Official Languages Act, I suggested the importance of recognizing and encouraging the various ethnic groups established in Canada. I stated at the time that we had to make those people understand that they should not see in the bill a form of depreciation and even less of negation of their own cultures.

I then suggested that the committee could perhaps draft a preamble to the act underlining that idea.

In addition, we recommended the incorporation into the act of an amendment recognizing the right to speak other languages and the importance of helping the conservation and development of other cultures. This amendment stipulated among other things that it was impossible to recognize the linguistic duality of Canada without in so doing trespassing on the rights of other cultural groups.

[English]

The government, Sir, rejected that amendment. Indeed, it took the government until October, 1971, even to get around to doing anything in recognition of these other cultures in Canada. Its failure to do so earlier, particularly two and a half years earlier at the time of the introduction of the Official Languages Act, was a source of profound regret to every Canadian who wanted to see the act operate in the interests of unity in the country. I think parliament at that time created the impression in the minds of a good many Canadians who are neither of French nor British stock that they were being treated as second-class citizens; and I think the move of the government, non-contemporaneously with the act—in fact, a couple of years later—was belated. The government also cannot duck, and I say this very earnestly, its record of generating concern in the country about the downgrading of the monarchy and the erosion of symbols and institutions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, this has nothing to do with bilingualism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: It has nothing to do with bilingualism. I see my hon. friends opposite shaking their heads, but I say very earnestly that in the minds of many people who were concerned about the erosion of these institutions the two became quite erroneously linked.

Mr. Allmand: Let's have some examples.

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friends can laugh; they can do anything the like. I say we are only going to make progress—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but it is becoming very hard to follow his speech. I think that this afternoon we had very good order in the House. I must frankly admit that I hear noise on both sides. I hope that hon. members, who know the rules of the House and have respect for them, will listen to the Leader of the Opposition with great attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to arouse the House. I would be very grateful if everybody would just sit quietly and listen to what I have to say. I just say that this coincidence, in the minds of many people, has been an unfortunate circumstance which has not helped but which has poisoned the atmosphere.

Let us return to the record of the government in relation to the public service. Here again, the government created hostility toward its program, and again the government cannot claim lack of constructive comment at the time the legislation was introduced. During the debate on the Official Languages Act on May 16, 1969, I said, for example, and I hope I will be forgiven for quoting myself:

> If this bill is not administered fairly and sensibly it can very easily create more disunity than unity. I say that in all sincerity. We could very easily create more new grievances in trying to remove old grievances . . .
> This bill must be administered in such a way that it will not destroy the careers of the many Canadians now in our federal public service who are not bilingual. I suggest the emphasis ought to be on providing bilingual government services to the extent it is practical rather than upon the public servants providing those services being bilingual. This must be done to the fullest extent possible so that both French—and English-speaking persons will feel at home in the federal service. The emphasis should be placed to the fullest extent practical upon the bilingual aspect of the service rather than the bilingual aspect of the servant.

● (2020)

At the time I spoke in the debate the government had already got off to a ham-handed start involving secrecy and lack of frankness on the one hand and a flippant and inflammatory remark by the Prime Minister on the other hand. I am sorry he is not in the House at the moment. Many people still flinch when they remember the elevator operator remark. I say, Sir, that this was no way to start and the performance of the government over the next several years was unfortunately sometimes consistent with that bad start.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I must say that it seemed to me this afternoon that the Prime Minister was eminently reasonable in what he said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I have to say, too, that it seems to me that sometimes he has made remarks that have sounded rather cavalier about matters of very real concern to Canadians. Not until the so-called Drury guidelines were made public on December 14, 1972, did the government give any definite indication of what it was up to in relation to the careers of public service personnel. This was almost two years after the episode in connection with the secret memorandum which aroused further suspicion and anger unnecessarily. I remind you, Sir, that on that occasion the Prime Minister provided another example of his talent for bringing people together by calling the opposition "a bunch of fanatics". At the time of that so-called secret memorandum revelation in February, 1971, I asked the government to produce details of any programs designed to create a proper balance in the public service. As I say, the silence persisted until late into 1972.

This afternoon the Prime Minister suggested that the so-called Drury guidelines were produced just as soon as possible. That I cannot accept. They were not produced for a good many years after the legislation. Indeed, I do not think they were produced until some fairly sober second thoughts were forced pretty heavily upon the government. I think the kind of guidelines spelled out in the nine points in this resolution can be identified with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). These assurances are basically the same as those so long demanded by many who from time to time have been called fanatics.

There are other areas where the government needs to get on with the job of implementing the proposals of the Official Languages Act. I have spoken about what I consider to be the mistakes that have been made. I should like now to turn to some of the areas that I think need attention. By dealing with them we can do more to help the cause of institutional bilingualism in the country than by simply talking about it here. Mr. Keith Spicer, the Commissioner of Official Languages, has provided an ongoing critique of the government's performance. According to Mr. Spicer, the most fundamental criticism of the government is its continuing failure to close what he calls "the deep and perilous information gap" that exists between the government's intentions and the public's awareness and understanding of the government's aims. In his second report to parliament, the commissioner said:

> For if there remains one disturbing setback in the slow march of Canada's federal administration toward equity for our two official languages, it is the scandalous misinformation that, in too many parts of Canada, still overshadows the act's basic, civilized truths—

Mr. Spicer says he is convinced that if bilingualism remains controversial in some quarters it is precisely because too many public officials, in spite of some honest efforts, have not fully met their responsibilities in explaining the legislation. Mr. Spicer indicates that this information gap is flourishing within the public service where many federal employees have a singularly inaccurate understanding of the act. If the government cannot even adequately explain it to its own employees, they cannot explain it to the Canadian people. Mr. Spicer zeros in on a number of other specific areas. He has termed second language teaching in the provincial school systems "a countrywide catastrophe" which must be remedied. I do not pretend for a moment that it is a simple thing to correct but it is important that we make progress on it, and surely we can do better than we have in the past. I say that, accepting some responsibility as a former minister of education in one of our provinces.

The commissioner also raises questions about the concept of the bilingual district—that is, the present state of the bilingual district—and states that the Official Languages Act itself is adequate to protect language rights without the particular bilingual districts which run the risk of creating linguistic ghettos. Further, the drawing of bilingual districts can create friction since they must be revised after each census. This could be a source of irritation. I think we should be looking at this area and considering it dispassionately to see what course should be followed. In his report of November, 1971, Mr. Spicer commented on language training programs in the public service. He said there had been high drop-out rates caused—> —apparently, by lengthy and partly ill-adapted courses: according to the Public Service Commission, 30 per cent of more than 22,000 students withdrew from training since 1964, and only 2,000 successfully reached the end of level 3, the top level being 4.

More recent figures show the drop-out rate running at 33 per cent. I realize this is not an easy challenge to meet, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot regard this performance as very satisfactory. When I say that, I speak—if I may put it in these terms—as a beneficiary of the system of instruction in the public service language schools. Invariably, the teachers have been courteous and very patient with me. The criticisms I have touched upon, the references I have made to Mr. Spicer's remarks are not references to the criticisms of a partisan; they are references to the observations of the officer responsible to parliament for the Official Languages Act.

We have heard criticism, as well, from the associations which represent employees in the public service and these, too, have not been based on partisan considerations. These criticisms reflected the deep concern of people in the service who did not know where they were, and no one would tell them where they were going. They wondered what had become of the Pearson pledge of April, 1966. It is no wonder that people are emotional about bilingualism in the public service. This is, in part at least, the government's fault because it failed to explain its plans for implementation.

I say the government has shown a distinct lack of consideration for the fears and apprehensions of public servants. The government has done precious little to encourage a positive attitude by addressing itself to explaining the implementation of the program. The way in which the government has proceeded with its language training program in the public service has also contributed to frustration. A survey of drop-outs established that at least two-thirds of them had been forced to discontinue their training because it conflicted with their regular workload. It is true that many have complained about the unrealistic administrative policy of the government with regard to the program of bilingualism in the public service, but this must not be construed as opposition to the principles of bilingualism in the public service.

I think that language training programs must be closely examined. The practice of pulling senior civil servants away from language training to take care of departmental duties has been costly and has weakened the program. Too many language students have failed to achieve any measure of competence, regardless of personal effort. Leaving language training to attend to departmental matters and then returning, only to find one has fallen far behind, has discouraged a number of eager people.

There is also the question of selection of candidates for language training. Many feel they are being discriminated against because they have been refused the opportunity to become bilingual. I realize that all these things cannot be corrected overnight, but they are things we ought to talk about. The government, in all seriousness, must make language training available to those who want it. Many well disposed civil servants have been frustrated by the government's failure to give them a fair chance to compete professionally through wider access to language training. The government must assist its own employees who may need another language to advance their careers. Many find this lack of opportunity a great threat.

What is the best service the government can render at this point in time to the program of bilingualism in the public service? What are the priority actions? Certainly, Sir, the program of bilingualism in the public service, and of institutional bilingualism in the country generally, needs public support.

An hon. Member: And you are so helpful.

Mr. Stanfield: I beg your pardon? The program needs public support. In a national sense the government must respond effectively to Mr. Spicer's criticism regarding lack of explanation: it must act to close "the deep and perilous information gap". Within the public service it must undertake an immersion course itself, a full immersion course in consultation. It must certainly listen and be prepared to listen, and it should act to give the force of law to the assurances and guarantees in the resolution before us. We feel that the nine points of the resolution deserve more than a simple affirmation by this House. They have been generally well received by those best equipped to judge.

Mr. L. W. Barnes, the executive director of the Professional Institute of Canada, the certified bargaining agent for 38 professional groups in the public service, has said that the guidelines represent a "great improvement". He also said that they remove the fears and doubts of many public servants and that they provide clarification about the implementation of bilingualism policies. Mr. Barnes noted that these new guidelines match the objectives of the institute's policy on bilingualism.

Mr. Claude Edwards, president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, said the association was favourable to the guidelines, which met most of the objectives of the Public Service Alliance, particularly as regards long service and unilingual public servants. He cautioned, however, that much depends on the way in which they are implemented and on good faith on both sides. Both these staff associations, the main bargaining agents for federal public servants, are involved in the National Joint Council which is engaged in continuous consultation with the Public Service Commission on the designation of bilingual positions. Spokesmen for both groups stress implementation as the key to the success or failure of the guidelines.

I believe that a growing number of public servants should have the opportunity to speak both our official languages. As far as I am concerned, there should be a system of incentives to this end. But, of course, there should be no attempt to force people and I would not support or permit any attempt to stop short the careers of men and women of either language because of lack of fluency in the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, I urge all hon. members to consider the case for the amendment to be put forward and I ask for their support. If it is said that these guidelines have to be, and should be flexible, and that they have to be subject to change, why are we being asked to endorse them in this House? We could incorporate them in legislation and still change them from time to time, if it seemed necessary. If the amendment is lost—I want to emphasize this—if the House does not accept my amendment, I want to make it perfectly clear that I will support the resolution as it stands.

I have been a supporter of this program. I believe we will best serve the program if we discuss these problems frankly and openly, as I have tried to do, and concentrate on methods to improve the program. As far as my amendment is concerned, I urge it upon the House. I think it would be an appropriate step to take. Nevertheless, I will support the resolution as it stands. I will not play all or nothing here, Sir; there is too much at stake in terms of morale in the public service and there is too much at stake in the broader terms of national unity.

I will not allow my position regarding the content of the resolution to be in any way misunderstood. I support the content, Sir. I certainly want the public service of this country to be attractive to French-speaking Canadians in every sense of the word. I want it to be attractive to French-speaking Canadians as well as to English-speaking Canadians. I think that is essential for national unity and essential for the country. In saying this I emphasize that my support for the resolution is in no way a vote of confidence with regard to the government's actions in this area. In putting forward the motion in the way that it has, it seems to me the government is trying to distract from its own failures and mistakes. These failures and mistakes are not limited to the matter of bilingualism in the public service. Resentment, fear and frustration have been created in many related areas.

I refer again to my remarks of May 16, 1969. I said that firm and unequivocal assurances had to be given to the employees in the public service and I suggested that such assurances "be written into the act to the fullest extent possible". We have the opportunity to take this step now, Mr. Speaker. The government has brought the matter before the House in the form of a resolution. The government did not choose to take that course back in 1969 and we have seen some unfortunate results as a consequence. We cannot undo the past, but we can take action to make, not necessarily a fresh start but a new leap forward and to express ourselves not simply in the form of an opinion but in doing something in meaningful, legislative terms.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the motion be amended by adding to paragraph (i) thereof, next after the words, "taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned principles", the following:

"and the Government of Canada, as a priority measure, introducing legislation to incorporate the aforementioned principles in the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Employment Act and other appropriate statutes;"

● (2040)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, we have not had an opportunity to examine this motion on its procedural acceptability.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid: I want to enter this caveat on behalf of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will have an opportunity later to rise on a point of order or a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I first say that we will study the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I will have to consider exactly what it means. I will want to discuss it with my colleagues. Therefore, I cannot say anything about our attitude toward it at this time.

In a sense, I regret that this resolution has been brought before the House, not for some of the reasons I have heard but for another and perhaps deeper reason. I have learned that in life, particularly in collective life, there are matters with respect to which repeated argument produces confrontation and repeated confrontation pollutes rather than clears the air.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I cannot condemn the government for having brought this to parliament. I remember the discussion a couple of years ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) followed up with some guidelines after volume 3 of the B and B report was presented and discussed. The Leader of the Opposition and others demanded that something be done legislatively instead of sending the matter to the Department of the Secretary of State, so that parliament could discuss it. I think there was something to that request at that time. I am not being dogmatic about it, because the subject that is before us ought to receive our very careful consideration and we should use carefully considered words. However, from some of the things I have heard, and some of the things I fear I may hear, both in the House and outside I am not certain that it is the wisest step to bring this resolution before the House.

A statement was made by the late Mr. Pearson in 1966 with regard to policies in the public service. That was followed by the adoption of the Official Languages Act, supported by all parties in this House. Some members opposed it, but all parties officially supported it. We had the introduction of new public service suggestions after volume 3 of the B and B report. Commissioner Spicer reported twice to this parliament. There has been a great deal of discussion on the subject across this country.

One of the disturbing things about this kind of delicate, sensitive subject is that instead of discussion producing more understanding and clearing the air, it frequently rejuvenates prejudices and misunderstandings rather than allaying them. That is why I am sorry to some extent that this resolution is now before us. Because of its past, because of what parliament has done, because of what the government has done, because these guidelines were announced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) in November or December, some weeks before the Speech from the Throne, the government ought to have continued trying to improve as it learned from mistakes made along the way, in the hope that, not overnight but in the course of a few years, the uneasiness and misunderstandings would disappear and we would be on the road to real harmony on the question of linguistic equality in the public service.

That might have been more wise, but the resolution is before us. I hope our discussion will follow the discussion that has taken place thus far. I hope it will follow the reasonable and sincere statement of the Prime Minister this afternoon and the reasonable and equally sincere support of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I hope with all my heart that a discussion of this resolution in the House will help, rather than hinder, understanding and national unity in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That is said to those of us who are Anglophones and uneasy about the steps suggested, and those of us who are Francophones and impatient because the steps are not big enough. If we start that kind of argument we can go on forever and do nothing but harm to linguistic equality in the public service and to unity in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I was pleased that for the first time—I do not think I am exaggerating when I say it is the first time—in the discussion on the subject of bilingualism in Canada, the Prime Minister, by implication at least, admitted that it was not the "be all and end all" of the question of national unity. Because I had the pleasure of being my party's spokesman on this subject before I became leader, as well as since I have been leader, I have had occasion in several debates to underline to the Prime Minister that he is making an error if he thinks that the institution of bilingualism, if properly applied and universally used, will solve the problem of national unity in this country. It is just not so.

Therefore, I was glad to hear him say this afternoon that he admits that there are other issues, economic and social, in this country and that the question of language in the public service of Canada is only one aspect of national unity. That is an admission that I welcome, and I only hope that the government keeps it in mind.

The adoption of this resolution is now guaranteed. The Leader of the Opposition said that he would vote for it, and I am sure that all or most of his colleagues will. I, too, support this resolution, though we will have to see what we shall do about the amendment. There may be one or two of my colleagues who have some doubts—I do not know—but by a decision of our caucus I can tell the House, as leader of the caucus, that this party supports the resolution. Therefore, the resolution will pass and I can only hope that this debate, and the resolution when adopted, will remove the justified grievance which French-speaking Canadians, not only in the province of Quebec but right across Canada, have had.

I have heard a good many of my friends across the country expressing the fear that these bilingualism guidelines for the public service are going to mean that some English-speaking Canadians may not be able to get certain jobs or advance in their jobs in the same way as before. And that may happen in some cases. But I cannot really feel that this is seeing more than the one side. Those of us who are English-speaking and who see that side ought to remember that the French-speaking Canadian has not had an opportunity to advance in the public service of Canada, not only for a century but for two centuries: not only since confederation but for a century before confederation that was the situation in this country. I therefore hope that we will now solve that problem.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that some members object to the resolution because they feel it is a reversal of original views.

It is important that English-speaking Canadians inside and outside the civil service become conscious of the fact that some members and other French-speaking Canadians deplore the dilatory measures taken to develop linguistic equality in the civil service and ask an acceleration of the process.

This finding, Mr. Speaker, is important because it shows the difficulties and duties which we have to face. Some impatient individuals are taking part in this debate. Some question the requirement of linguistic equality in the civil service, while others are impatient because of the slowness in establishing such equality.

For almost a century, Mr. Speaker, a great number of Canadians as well as Parliament and the federal government have not given enough attention to the requirement of establishing linguistic equality in the departments and agencies of the federal government. The federal public service—I know because I lived in Ottawa from 1935 to 1950—had become almost entirely unilingual and English-speaking. This failure has inspired a certain rancour among French-speaking Canadian, but it is important to notice also that this failure has also produced a tradition of unilingualism that some English-speaking Canadians hesitate to change.

Today, Mr. Speaker, justice is struggling against tradition. Such a struggle always produces some reactions and fears that make difficult any logical discussion and reasonable solution.

That is the problem. It can be solved only through patience, respect and understanding. To people who are impatient before the slowness in establishing bilingualism, I say that it is impossible to correct within one or two years the injustice of two centuries. The task inevitably risks being subject to painful discussions; it requires a long education in various regions of this country and changes of attitude and tradition among people who were not even aware of the existence of such a problem and who, therefore, do not understand it.

In such a situation, rancour and bitterness cannot help us, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I take the liberty of saying to my English-speaking fellow Canadians that they ought to recognize the injustice to French-speaking Canadians that has existed up until now, and that all of us must show a measure of understanding and appreciation of the need for change in the public service. Even if we do have some doubts from time to time, even if it has not been our habit to hear French spoken, and even if we have to accept something that we had not thought about before, we should accept these things now. The disgrace is not that we accept it now; the disgrace is that we did not think of it before.

Going about this country we all have our own experiences. When I hear Members of Parliament of all parties sometimes expressing the view that their constituents are fearful of bilingualism, I really doubt this is so. I learned a long time ago that when someone comes to me and says that he is expressing the opinion of the public, what he is really saying is that that is his opinion which he wishes were the opinion of the public.

Let me cite three of my own experiences, Mr. Speaker; it will not take me very long. Two and a half years ago the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) was at his nomination meeting in, I think, his own city of Selkirk, Manitoba. The audience at that meeting represented practically all national and racial origins in this country. There were people from French-speaking families, people who came from every European background you can think of, and there were even a few Anglo-Saxons, people whose origins were British.

A hardnosed member of the audience rose to his feet and put to me a question about bilingualism. This was at a time when debate on the subject was raging in this House. I spoke in reply with some passion, I must admit, but straightforwardly, without bending a word or hiding my views. I spoke, as I have said many times in this House, as a new Canadian speaking to another new Canadian. The hon. member for Selkirk is here and he will underline the fact that my answer to that person was not booed, but received a standing ovation that lasted many seconds—not for me but for the ideas I expressed.

During the campaign last fall I attended a meeting in Port Alberni in the constituency of my friend the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). The same sort of question was asked, and I gave the same sort of answer. A good many people in British Columbia say that you get a lot of backlash there. I gave the same sort of answer, and again there was a standing ovation in acceptance of the ideas I expressed.

I have been on open-line programs in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and every other province in this country. Of course, occasionally you receive a call from a person like one call I will never forget, from an obviously very elderly lady whom I am sure is the salt of the earth. I have not the faintest notion who she is, but her cracked voice indicated she was pretty elderly. She said to me; "Mr. Lewis, why do those fellows want to speak French? Why don't they speak Canadian?" That angered me. But there is that kind of person in this country; that kind of person exists not only on the Anglophone side but also on the Francophone side. One might think of the province of Quebec, and I have travelled through that province. But by and large I am confident that the Canadian people from coast to coast are ready to accept this policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: They are ready to accept this policy particularly if all of us who are political spokesmen and political leaders have the sense and the imagination to promote the policy and not tear it down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I mention another experience because it moved me very much. A couple of months ago I was at a meeting at the University of Western Ontario, London. The hon. member for that constituency may know of that meeting. It was a special meeting started as a counter-convocation but which ended in a very positive Canadian meeting. There was a large audience of well over 2,000 students, not only from the university but from the high schools. The reason I am mentioning this is that London, Ontario, is not in the centre of a large French-speaking community.

An hon. Member: Would you believe!

Mr. Lewis: With great respect to the citizens of London, whom I love, particularly when they vote NDP—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Which is rare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Who were those three?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Lewis: I thought I had become a little too serious and a bit of levity was called for. With great respect to the citizens of London, that city does not have the reputation of being a revolutionary centre of modern ideas. The important thing about that meeting was that its chairman, a young student at the university, started to speak French. The person who introduced me made his speech half in English and half in French. The person who introduced the other speaker, who happened to be Pierre Berton, spoke half in English and half in French. After the meeting we had a little get-together and I asked these three people why this was done. This is the important part. I asked, "Why did you speak French?" They spoke fairly well in French. The answer was, "We were discussing the independence of Canada, the building of a distinct society, and we could not discuss it only in one of its languages".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say that the people of Canada, particularly the young people, are ready to accept this kind of policy, to stand behind it and to remove all the prejudices which have plagued some of us older Canadians. There are some people who, because they believe that the steps are too slow, say that the resolution is a retreat from the original idea. It is not. What happened, and I am not going to put it the same way as the Leader of the Opposition, nor am I going to put it any better, is that the implementation of the policy in the public service in the first two or three years raised a great many unnecessary fears and a great deal of unnecessary opposition inside the public service.

I am not going to read what I said because it is not as worthy of reading as the quotation used by the Leader of the Opposition, but during the debate on the Official Languages Act I underlined the need for openness in the implementation of the policy and for making sure it was based on consent and did not appear to the people to be imposed from the top. On rereading the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and my own remarks—I reread them just today; that is why I remember them—I pleaded with the government to consult the unions of the public servants about the implementation of that policy, because that was not done early enough and a great deal of unnecessary misunderstanding and bitterness was created.

I am glad to see, as I was last November or December, that the resolution now contains safeguards which the policy should have contained before. The resolution does not now indicate that the unilingual public servant who has been in the service for some time will suffer as a result of the new policies now being introduced. Let me quote only one sentence of what I said on May 16, 1969:

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we must make sure that one injustice is not replaced by another.

That is what appeared to some people to be happening and I am glad the resolution now precludes such a thing from happening. I am not going to take the time to explain how the resolution has answered some of the criticism that some people, including myself, have sometimes expressed, but at a nomination convention for Pauline Jewett here in Ottawa certain things were mentioned. Perhaps I should not take the time to repeat them.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Take the time; you should.

Mr. Lewis: The resolution deals with a situation which I did not like, and since the hon. member was good enough to invite me perhaps I should point this out. What I did not like, and said so at that time, was that the public servants did not know which jobs were to be designated bilingual jobs. I said that the public servants should be consulted and the unions should be consulted, and those with long-term service in the public service should not be disadvantaged in the way of advancement and promotion.

It is always unfair, when you introduce a new policy which was not there when the person was first hired, to hit him with that policy to his disadvantage. I further asked in that speech that the long-service employee in the public service not be disadvantaged by the new policy. I am very happy to see that almost every one of those criticisms is met by the paragraphs of this resolution, although I am sure some people have some doubts about the last paragraph; that is, that in future all jobs may not be open to unilingual applicants. I would be dishonest if I did not say that this is possible.

The present employees in the public service are protected by the guidelines set out in the resolution, but it may well be that when people are new in the public service they will have to be rated either unilingually English or French, or rated bilingual, and they may have to make a decision at some point in their career, which civil servants did not have to do ten years ago. But I am ready to accept that because I do not know any way in which one could introduce this kind of policy and not make language one of the qualifications of the job for certain designated positions. Just as it is necessary for a stenographer to be able to take shorthand and to be able to type, so it is necessary for a person in certain designated positions to be able to speak one or other, or both languages as the case may be. That is a qualification of the job. I repeat what I said earlier, that even though this affects some it will be only a few—English-speaking applicants for jobs, the situation until now has been such that almost all French-speaking applicants for jobs were affected in this way, and that kind of inequality or imbalance must be adjusted in this country.

As the last point I want to make, I find it a fact in my travels across the country, particularly in the province of Quebec, that too many Quebecois do not even now regard Ottawa as their capital. I am not talking about separatism or separatists. I do not pay any attention to the kind of attitude the separatists may take, because I am very clear in rejection of their objects. I am talking about people who really believe in Canada but who simply do not feel or sense that Ottawa is their capital. They are oriented toward the city of Quebec rather than toward Ottawa as their capital.

Part of that is due to the kind of country we have, because to some extent this is true of every province in the country. To some extent it is true of many British Columbians—perhaps I should say some British Columbians—who regard Victoria as their capital rather than Ottawa. And there are people in Saskatchewan who regard Regina as their capital. Part of it is due to the nature of our country, as I have stated. It is due in part to the grievances every region of the country has against the centre, and the centre has been insensitive to the needs of the east and the west. I do not blame the people in these areas. The centre has been as insensitive about the needs of the east and the west in Canada as it has been of the need for linguistic equality. So you have the same kind of resentment.

But in addition to the normal thing you may find in English-speaking Canada about Ottawa, there is the additional dimension of language in Quebec. The trouble with many English-speaking Canadians is that when they visit the province of Quebec they visit Montreal. There is no doubt that a good many Montrealers speak both English and French. However, it is a fact that when you travel around the rest of the province of Quebec there are many—I am certain, a majority—of Quebecois who do not speak English. They may understand it a little, they may speak a few words, but they do not know the language sufficiently to be able to do a job of work in the English language in the public service.

I have met such people in other parts of Canada. I have met Canadian citizens who are French-speaking even in communities outside Quebec. Many of these people at the age of 14 or 15 are just beginning to learn the English language sufficiently to be able to handle it in a job in the public service. I think we ought to remember this. We are dealing, as was rightly said this afternoon, with a majority of English-speaking people who do not speak French, and a majority of French-speaking Canadians who do not speak English. All these people ought to have the same opportunity to serve the people of Canada and to serve in the language of choice of the people concerned.

Finally, there is among those who come from origins other than British or French undoubtedly a feeling of unease. I have found this very often. The newcomer to Canada, if he does not go to Montreal but, rather, to somewhere else in Canada assumes that Canada is a unilingual country. He hears only English spoken around him. His children attend an English language school and he assumes it is a unilingual country. He lives with that assumption, fairly and honestly, for a good many years. Then suddenly, in 1967 and 1968, he was confronted with the fact that it is not so, that although Ukrainian, German, Finnish, Swedish, Italian and Jewish are still languages which have unofficial status, French does have an official status equal to English. I think he is wrong in his reaction. I say this with respect. However, I am not surprised that he has this reaction; no one should be surprised, because all his life that is what he learned.

He may not have had that reaction if when he came to Canada he had gone to Montreal and heard both official languages spoken. But if a person had settled in Regina, Edmonton, Melville, Vancouver, Victoria or, for that matter, Orangeville or London, Ontario, he would probably never have heard a word of French spoken and it would never have occurred to him that it is on the same level as English. Then suddenly when he finds that this is so by law, it is natural for him to say, "What is wrong with my mother tongue?" This is what is happening in Canada. It is perfectly understandable. I say to my fellow Canadians who are immigrants, who came to this country as I did when I was 12 years of age, that if they are able to enjoy their original culture, if they are now able to draw upon public funds to assist them in retaining and in developing their original culture, it is only because this country is a bilingual country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is only because this country has recognized more than one language and more than one culture since its existence. If this had been a unilingual country with only one culture, there would not have been this acceptance of multiculturalism. I am not saying that what has been done is enough, but there has been and will be an expenditure of millions of dollars in order to assist in the development of multiculturalism in Canada and the original cultures of the various communities in this country.

I say to my fellow Canadians of all origins that this is a great country. It could be greater. It has immense potential. It is important to keep it together. It is important that French-speaking Canadians feel at home everywhere in Canada as Canadian citizens. This resolution is a step in that direction. I appeal not only to all hon. members to support this resolution but to all Canadians to understand its purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this consensus which seems to develop in this House on the occasion of this debate on the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which deals with bilingualism, I regret being unable to share it because, as I already had the opportunity to point out, time has come to face up to the situation just as it is and to attempt together to find true solutions to the real problem confronting us.

It is therefore useless to hide once more behind fine speeches and behind a principle which seems to bring solutions but which, unfortunately, does not.

I was listening a while ago to the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who was boasting that the principles in the motion brought in by the government came from him. I heard the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) say about the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, we know perfectly well that, although it is the Prime Minister who has decided to propose this motion and, in support of it, to state the general principles with which we are in complete agreement, which we cherish like the apples of our eyes, and which are included in the preamble, the means proposed to realize these basic principles were suggested by the leader of the opposition. Perhaps this is why they are far from being sound.

Mr. Speaker, we are in 1973, and 106 years have already elapsed since Confederation. The leader of the New Democratic Party keeps advising hon. members to be patient. We are willing to wait, but we do not want our patience to be taken for weakness.

I only want to state once more what Quebecers and French Canadians want. There is absolutely no intention to cheat anyone of his rights, of affecting in any way those who are now in the public service and who have put forth their efforts there over many years. We realize that they have a right to their jobs. We do not wish to replace those people. What we do want is to achieve true equality in a fair and equitable manner.

Mr. Speaker, to express the feeling of a Quebecer, or of a French Canadian, and primarily in order that hon. members may understand that no animosity, nationalism or anything else is involved, I shall say that the issue is merely the freedom of the individual. Mr. Speaker, having been born in Quebec and of French Canadian parents, my universe, my country was the French language. Is it to be held against me that I was nursed by my mother who was French-speaking?

Mr. Speaker, this is something instinctive and natural. I feel really at home in this country, but little by little I discovered that the universe of my childhood was not quite the same as the one of my manhood. That is when every Quebecer wakes up and finds that he is not quite at home with the government of his country and that sometimes he is quite a stranger outside the borders of Quebec.

We don't blame anybody but we simply want, today more than ever, to take what is coming to us. Therefore, we completely agree with the principles referred to by the right hon. Prime Minister. Where we are going in different direction is when the means to reach this goal are being determined.

Mr. Speaker, the nine practical principles set out in the motion are sometimes insignificant, sometimes, stupid and sometimes again they simply sanction a situation of fact which Quebecers, French Canadians have been up against for years if not always. Here is the first of these principles:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

Mr. Speaker, I heard today the Prime Minister explain this section a little. I felt he had been compelled to do so because as soon as the motion had been introduced, and even when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) stated these principles last December, some people already began protesting.

● (2130)

In fact, if today in 1973, as representative of the constituency of Champlain in the House of Commons, I have to deal with various departments of the federal government, how is it that I cannot do it in my own language? And why should I be referred to some clerk assigned to the service to make up for the lack of French-speaking officials in that office?

If the problem exists at the present time and if everybody can see it, why say that it is going to be solved before 1978? That is what I cannot understand. If such a need exists now and has been known to exist for years, my patience, does not stretch that far. I believe it my duty to be proud and energetic and to express the views and the wishes of everyone of my constituents on the subject.

Here is an example of the difficulties experienced at times in the administration. This week, I had an appointment with the Canadian Patent Office. My constituent was ready to come on Wednesday or today, but since there will be a Francophone only next Tuesday in that office, we shall have to wait until next Tuesday. Perhaps some other person will submit the same invention this week, and I believe it will be a good one. My constituent will be outstripped merely because he was not looked after immediately in his own language.

Therefore we cannot be patient anymore. We merely want justice. We merely want French Canadians to be looked after in their own language, nothing less.

That objective set for 1978 seems to us like a mere joke on Quebecers. I know that the government can afford to laugh at Quebecers when it gets massive support. However, I think that it is high time the truth came out on certain points.

The second principle of the motion is as follows:

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

Mr. Speaker, this is quite a find. It will be determined which positions require a knowledge of English, which require a knowledge of French and those requiring bilingual applicants.

The Prime Minister stated this afternoon, if I am not mistaken, that of the 250,000 positions of the Civil Service, 25,000 are bilingual.

I would have liked then to ask him: among the 225,000 other positions, how many will be for English-speaking applicants and how many for Francophones?

An hon. Member: He did not mention it.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to say that, because one would be inclined to believe that the same applies to both, and of course that is probably what many of my colleagues would tell me. It is as true of Anglophones as of Francophones. However, let us not be so stupid.

We know full well that in the Public Service—and this is borne out by figures supplied in replies to questions placed on the order paper and statistics brought out over the years—there are virtually no Francophone units. As a matter of fact, in notices of Public Service competitions, one finds that in 90 per cent of cases the only language requirement is knowledge of English. Let us not wonder why graduates of Francophone universities, for instance, show little interest in coming to work in Ottawa. From the very start, they are frustrated by an organization conceived exclusively in terms of the Anglo-Saxon component of this country.

The third principle reads as follows:

A knowledge of French and English—

that is a good joke—

—is one of the qualifications required for the selection of applicants to bilingual positions;

Mr. Speaker, we could have been referred to the dictionary where the word "bilingual" is defined as someone who speaks two languages. That is the principle. We are told that a bilingual person is someone who speaks two languages. To get excited with that and make us believe that Canada's problem has been settled by telling us that a bilingual person is someone who speaks two languages, that is too much! The Larousse dictionary, the Webster and all other dictionaries have said it long before the Prime Minister.

The fourth principle reads as follows:

Competitions to bilingual positions will be opened both to bilingual and unilingual applicants who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

Mr. Speaker, let us stop playing on words and handing out a convincing line. I know perfectly well that literally, I am compelled to say that I agree with that. Yes, I agree with that, literally, but when one is aware of the Canadian reality, when one is aware of the facts, this principle, stated in subsection (4) means: competitions for bilingual positions will be opened both to bilingual applicants and unilingual English speaking applicants, since they are the only ones to be unilingual. Then, when one considers this nice principle that, literally, one would be led to approve in contrast with Canadian reality, one realizes that once more it does not solve anything. That is why some people must be brave enough not to play the game of the traditional good understanding and say: That is very fine, we accept it and everything continues to be the same!

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I am fulfilling here tonight an important duty, so that we can, at a given time, think in a more realistic way.

The fifth principle reads as follows:

that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

I can hardly see how anyone really serious can find anything making any sense here. It is said: "for unilingual positions". Again, unilingual candidates, O.K., but it says bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job.

Again, Mr. Speaker, if we stick to the present facts and circumstances, we know quite well that that does not mean anything whatsoever. Again, it all looks nice but when one stops and thinks about it for a while one realizes that it is simply another way of trying to please a certain part of the country which showed some dissatisfaction during the last election campaign, and rightly so. I will come back on that later.

The sixth principle reads as follows:

that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum,

Here again, why if it is a bilingual position, talk about unilingual incumbents. That I can understand, and I would agree if it were not for what comes after:

or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a negation of any intelligence in individuals and people. The principle is set that some positions will be bilingual. English-speaking or French-speaking unilingual; we have a bilingual position, and unilingual person gets it. The unilingual person can be transferred to another position at the same salary under that principle but if he does not want it he can stay there. I cannot get over how one can think of solving problems with such principles.

I will not read the seventh principle but it boils down to this: Those who have been in the Public Service for 17 years are kings and masters in the Public Service. That is all.

● (2140)

It is as simple as that: the "establishment" which may exist in the civil service is being sanctioned.

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

I do not advise them to go and get a job at the United Nations, Mr. Speaker. Such a story will not cut any ice: if expressing the wish to become bilingual made it so, if it were as simple as that, we would never have problems! It reminds me of the "upper chamber" when Christ appeared and the Holy Spirit conferred the gift of languages upon everyone. One need only have faith, and express the wish of becoming bilingual for it to be so! That is the miraculous principle the government has come up with in an attempt to solve another problem. Finally, I shall deal with the last principle:

that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

Mr. Speaker, once again, when one is aware of the situation, when one knows that about 2, 3 or 4 per cent of all civil servants hold top positions, what does that principle mean? It means that money is spent on training bilingual personnel to the detriment of the Francophone element in this country, of course.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, in the fact of such a situation, if one really wanted to see things as they are, one would realize that to solve the problem there must be no beating around the bush. For instance, we note that in this case the Canadian reality contradicts the stated principles. What can be done, Mr. Speaker? It is a fact that the Canadian reality contradicts all those principles.

We must therefore find solutions that are more adequate, more equitable and more realistic. And, Mr. Speaker, we do have some of those solutions. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) delivered a very good speech, very interesting to listen to and which, in certain aspects could be very true. Nevertheless, the principles contained in his resolution do not agree with what he said. As I listened to his speech, I was thinking, Mr. Speaker, about an amendment that I had prepared, which is a logical extension to the words spoken by the Prime Minister.

That is why my criticisms, tonight, are made without passion, without spite against anyone. We appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the problem, in this country, is not a problem of language but a problem of participation. Even if the entire federal public service, in Ottawa, were bilingual, if 95 per cent of our executives were unilingual, English-or French-speaking, we would have solved nothing, because we would be a hundred times more justified in saying that Canada is an impossible thing, because we are not there. That is why there is but one solution, since the actual problem is one of participation. There is but one solution, Mr. Speaker: to have people participate, to provide the occasion to the various elements of this country to take part in the development of legislation, in the administration of this country. That is what is needed, because that is the real problem.

[Mr. Matte.]

It is quite true that it is not a language problem, even though, because of historical circumstances, French Canadians have identified their national problem with a language problem. This is due only to a historical coincidence, and I am sure that the Irish, to give you just another exemple, have not identified their national problem with a language problem. But let nobody tell an Irishman point blank that he is an Englishman: he will not appreciate it. He is of a different nationality, but he has accepted the English language to express his thoughts.

As for us, in Canada, we have identified our national problem with a language problem. That is why when we deal with the language problem, we are dealing with the national problem of the French Canadians. But the time has come to make a distinction.

Therefore, we will not solve this problem by spending $29,000 per civil servant trying to teach him a second language, or $55,000 per civil servant trying to make him understand the other culture. There is a means which is less costly than this heavy bilingualism which does not satisfy anyone, and this means would enable everyone to participate in it.

This is why I have considered introducing an amendment which, in my view, is the solution and brings the problem back to its true dimension and whose principles are just as satisfactory, I am sure, to the people of British Columbia, Newfoundland, Ontario or Quebec. In fact, these principles are acceptable everywhere and constitute a concrete solution which, obviously, would settle once and for all the problem which we are facing.

Mr. Speaker, I am therefore considerably pleased to move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting, after the words "the foregoing" in the fourth paragraph, the nine Principles listed therein and substituting therefor the following Principles:

(1) that bilingualism cannot be considered as an essential factor of competence;

(2) that the knowledge of both official languages is required only for administrative positions where it becomes a criterion of competence, such as telephone operator, hostess, train conductor, receptionist, etc.;

(3) that everyone is free to speak the language of his or her choice in Canada;

(4) that, account being taken of geographical and demographical circumstances, everyone in Canada has the right to be served and administered in the official language of his or her choice;

(5) that unilingualism cannot prevent a civil servant in the Canadian government from being eligible for senior positions; therefore, the government undertakes to set up, organize and implement a parallel administration, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, in all departments of the federal government;

(a) each department shall have two sections, one English, the other French; the size of these sections shall be proportional to the requirements of their respective administrative needs, which means that the departments shall not necessarily have the same number of employees;

(b) these departments shall be autonomous entities with equal responsibilities up to the deputy minister level, both the English-speaking and the French-speaking deputy ministers having similar authority and similar responsibilities;

(c) promotions in each department shall be based exclusively on merit.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I must say that this proposal was integrally included in our election program, and that if we have included it, it was only after finding out that this was the true solution for all Canadians. We realize very well that a Canadian from an entirely English-speaking community, as soon as he feels that they want to impose on him the knowledge of another language, is perfectly right in protesting and we want to satisfy him. The same could apply to a Quebec French Canadian from Quebec who could also protest in the same circumstances.

Now to avoid any friction or misunderstanding and to preserve—as one likes to say—unity and harmony in this country, why not accept the sole solution which I find realistic, that is to enable each ethnic entity to gain freedom and self-fulfilment as it may see fit.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to refer to the Beaudet report which has never been made public by the President of the Treasury Board. We are still waiting for it. It is a negative report about the government policy on bilingualism. Indeed, when I read therein that it costs $29,000 to make an employee bilingual and $55,000 to have him gain some insight into the other culture, I say that it costs nothing to stay as you are.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) for having given the Chair notice of the motion that he proposed to move and which he read into the record a few minutes ago.

In order to avoid a long, time-consuming procedural debate I should indicate now to the hon. member my reservation about the motion. My reservation is that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in his speech earlier this evening moved an amendment which would seek to incorporate by way of legislative action the purposes of the resolution that we are now discussing. It seems to me that what is proposed by the hon. member for Champlain is a matter entirely different from the one incorporated in the amendment presented to us by the Leader of the Opposition.

I also have some doubts about paragraph 5 of the proposed motion of the hon. member for Champlain. Be that as it may, I suggest to the hon. member that he is not restricted either from participating again in debate or from having a colleague participate in the debate at a future time in order to move exactly what he has presented, after the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition has been disposed of. This does not prejudice the hon. member's rights at all.

I say again that I have read paragraph 5 of the proposed motion and it gives me some concern. However, that is not a question we need to decide immediately. All I am saying is that the hon. member will have an opportunity to move his motion at a future time, but it cannot be accepted now.

Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

BROADCASTING—SALE OF RADIO STATION CKSB, WINNIPEG, TO CBC—ACTION TO SET ASIDE CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION DECISION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments, in the brief time available to me, about a situation which has already been raised in the House on numerous occasions, namely, the takeover of radio station CKSB, Winnipeg, by the CBC. First I should like to make some comments about the Canadian Radio-Television Commission itself. It appears to be most insensitive to the meaning and import of section 38 of the Official Languages Act and insensitive to the concept of multiculturalism as proclaimed by this government on several occasions in the past year and a half.

When the application was made to the CRTC and it was asked to consider the matter in Winnipeg, it decided to hold its meetings in Montreal. That decision was hard to understand; it did not make any sense at all. Representations were made to the CRTC prior to the meetings. Nevertheless, the commission insisted on holding the hearings, not in the city involved where people who were concerned could be present in sufficient numbers to make reasonable representations on their own behalf, but in another city, Montreal. I know that a few representatives travelled from Winnipeg—so far as I know, at government expense—to make representations but this was by no means satisfactory and did not obviate the need to hold hearings in Winnipeg where proper representations could have been made by all groups concerned.

I think the decision of the CRTC to allow this sale to go through constitutes blatant disregard of the established rights of the people in the Winnipeg area who have been accustomed to using this radio station for the purpose of third language broadcasts. I think the minister should explain to the House why the CRTC was so unreasonable in refusing to hold hearings in Winnipeg and, secondly, why he refused to direct the CRTC to the extent that he has any influence over it. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) is here this evening. I hope he will take this opportunity to explain what has happened.

We also had a communication from the Commissioner of Official Languages who was requested to investigate this takeover and see whether it was contrary to section 38 of the Official Languages Act. The commissioner's report indicated that station CKSB had been broadcasting in a third language for 20 years. In his report he repeatedly used the words "foreign languages". These words are offensive to Canadians who speak a language other than the two official languages; they object to having a third language referred to as a foreign language on so many occasions in the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

In any event, the commissioner concluded that in his opinion this takeover and the consequent loss of rights for ethnic groups with regard to the use of a third language in programming did not constitute an infraction of section 38 of the Official Languages Act. I am sorry to say that I have to disagree with the languages commissioner. He did not explain fully on what ground he made his deduction, and I hope he takes the opportunity to explain it in the near future.

In any event, the languages commissioner recommended that the CBC should reconsider its language policy and allow third language broadcasting. He made his point of view known to the CBC. The CBC replied in a negative manner; that is to say, they condescended to allow the use of this station to continue as at present for another year. In other words, it is to continue on a temporary basis. However, the CBC made it very plain to the languages commissioner that this concession that was granted to the ethnic groups concerned should not be considered by any means as a change in policy but only as a temporary arrangement, and it could not accede to the request of the languages commissioner to change its policy with respect to third language broadcasting.

The CBC has been hiding behind the Broadcasting Act on which it has based its policy. Section 3 of the act provides that all Canadians are entitled to broadcasting service in English and French as public funds become available. The CBC has considered broadcasting in English and French to be a priority. This does not mean that the CBC is not allowed to broadcast in other languages.

In this House there have been previous discussions on this subject with the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and with the minister responsible for multiculturalism. We have also had discussions with the president of the CBC. We have obtained conflicting reports in that the president of the CBC has indicated that the Broadcasting Act does not really stand in the way in this matter; on the other hand, the Secretary of State has suggested that the Broadcasting Act does stand in the way of third language broadcasting. It is therefore my impression that arguments about legal principles and technicalities prevent third language broadcasting by the CBC. It is also my impression that nobody who so argues is at all interested in seeing that the ethnic groups involved receive justice. I think that is a shameful reflection on this government which claims to be concerned about all Canadians and says it is committed to a policy of multiculturalism. I think this matter ought to be straightened out forthwith.

A petition was presented to the governor in council a few days ago by the groups involved, asking that the government use its power to reverse the position taken by the CRTC in permitting this sale. They want the hearings to be held again in order that concerned groups can be heard. However, the government has refused to heed this petition and I should like to know why. I think the big fear created by this action is that it will set a precedent. If this action is allowed to go unchallenged, it is possible that other radio stations which now broadcast programs in a third language may follow the same course.

What will happen to stations in Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Toronto and other parts of the country which are now broadcasting in a third language? Are these to go the same way? Will the languages commissioner claim that established and customary rights have not been lost in all cases and refuse to take action? It is time the minister and the government were honest and gave us information as to where they really stand on this matter, to clarify once and for all the long-term prospects in third language broadcasting and the prospects for protecting established and customary rights as stated in Section 38 of the Official Languages Act.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wants to give me the opportunity to explain the situation. I welcome this opportunity but I will use it mainly to inform the hon. member, who seems to ignore a great number of things pertaining to the question he has put forward tonight. The hon. member stated that the CRTC is insensitive and unreasonable about third languages. He has forgotten the policy the CRTC established for private stations over which it has authority, and in the field where it can make a policy outside the Broadcasting Act which concerns the CBC.

The hon. member blamed the CRTC for not holding the meeting in Winnipeg. This is very unfair, because the CRTC is the most mobile of all regulatory bodies in Canada. If the hon. member were reasonable, he would recognize that the CRTC cannot be in every city or town in this country at the same time. The hon. member must realize that there are problems pertaining to broadcasting and cablecasting in almost every city and town in this country at almost all times. It is absolutely impossible for them to be everywhere at the same time. It is very unfair to level such a charge against the CRTC which, I repeat, has been more mobile than any other regulatory body.

With regard to the petition that was presented to the governor in council, the hon. member can see no reason why the governor in council decided not to refer back to, or vary the decision of the CRTC. I must inform the hon. member that the petition was received so late that the cabinet would have had exactly 36 hours advance notice to review a question on which the CRTC had been holding hearings for days. It was entirely unreasonable to hope that within 36 hours the government would decide to reform, rescind or refer back the decision of the CRTC which had been very well motivated.

The CBC's language policy is another question. The CBC must interpret the law. It has legal advisers. It broadcasts in English and French. It cannot do any other broadcasting except at arm's length, in some northern parts, in native languages. The hon. member says we are committed to multiculturalism, but forgets the second part within a bilingual framework. When I was secretary of state and this policy was being developed, I met with many groups including the very interesting ethnic group to which the hon. member belongs. I asked whether they recognized the true terms of the policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework. Not one group in this country said no at that time. If they want to change their minds now, that is their absolute right. They can ask for a hearing before the CRTC at a place of their choice. They can hear the CBC, and their propositions can be considered—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him under the Standing Order has expired.

CANADA PENSION PLAN—HUTTERIAN BRETHREN OF CANADA—REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM PAYING PREMIUMS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the minister for his presence here tonight. The question I should like to deal with concerns Canada Pension Plan premiums paid by the Hutterian Brethren of Canada. Not only is the Department of National Health and Welfare concerned in the matter, but perhaps at this stage the Department of National Revenue is even more concerned; and I am sure the minister will convey my comments to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury).

The Hutterian Brethren are a minority group, a very unique group living in western Canada who in many instances, I feel, have been misunderstood, specifically with regard to the Canada Pension Plan. The Hutterian Brethren hold all things common. I should like to make it very clear to the minister that no individual can own any property, nor can he build up any personal equity, and a pension plan could be regarded as building up personal equity.

The Canada Pension Plan Act, section 6(2)(e), provides that "employment of a member of a religious order who has taken a vow of perpetual poverty and whose remuneration is paid either directly or by him to the order" is exempted from payment of Canada Pension Plan premiums. In their baptismal vows Hutterian Brethren are required to state:

> That no one shall have any private possessions any more: for one gives and surrenders himself to the Lord and his church with all that he has and is able to do, as it was in the original apostolic church, when no one said of his possessions that they were his own, but all things were common to them.

According to a letter signed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), the Hutterian Brethren of Canada were exempted from payment of CPP premiums as of January 1, 1972. In this regard I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) whether an amendment would be tabled or brought into the House to cover this provision by legislative action. In addition, there is a backlog of unpaid premiums from 1966 to the end of 1971. For six years, from the inception of the plan to the date the exemption took effect, these premiums have been accumulating on behalf of various Hutterian colonies in Manitoba.

I suggest that the collection of these fees is the whole nub of the matter. In the same letter to which I referred, the minister undertook not to take any action against the Hutterites to collect premiums without prior consultation with Hutterian representatives. Prior to 1972, when the exemption took effect, the Department of National Revenue took the tax refund credits which were to be paid to the Hutterian Brethren and placed them against the back premiums for those six years, at a time when the Hutterian Brethren had clearly been given to understand that no future collection action would be taken against them by the government without prior consultation. There was no prior consultation, yet this action was taken during a year when the Hutterian Brethren had been exempted by the government from paying premiums.

In conclusion, I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of National Revenue to undertake a re-examination of this problem with the result that this inequity, in my view, can be removed in respect of the Hutterian Brethren.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) in paying tribute to the Hutterian Brethren of Canada for the contribution they have made to this country. They stand very high in the religious groups of this country in terms of their contribution to Canadian life. They bring to us a unique way of life, and have been in all respects exemplary citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The problem raised by the hon. member has also been raised by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Hymmen) for quite a while, and by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) on various occasions. When I was assigned to my present portfolio, and my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) was assigned his portfolio last November, this was one issue drawn to our attention at that time. It has been decided that indeed we should do everything necessary to honour the commitment made by the former minister of national revenue. I have since been to the cabinet with my colleague, and I can tell the hon. member that this morning a bill was approved which I hope will be introduced in this House very shortly. I think it will remedy the situation raised by the hon. member to his satisfaction, and I hope we can receive unanimous support from all parties in the House in order that we might pass the bill in a very short time.

The bill includes four or five technical amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. The matter raised by the hon. member will be taken care of by these amendments. I hope the bill will be introduced within the next few days.

ENERGY—PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—ALLEGED LACK OF DEPARTMENTAL CO-ORDINATION OF OPPOSITION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, the issue I raised in the form of a question to the hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) appears at page 3131 of Hansard as follows:

> Having in mind the criticism in recent days by the head of the Science Council of Canada, Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, of what he calls the snail's pace progress being made by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment to protect the west coast of British Columbia from potential oil spillage along the tanker route to Cherry Point, which is within 18 miles of my riding, is the minister satisfied with the protection that exists, or will he pay heed to the warning issued by the head of the Science Council within the last four or five days?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will ever be completely satisfied with the measures that we are taking, but our performance recently on the west coast relative to the spill from the freighter Irish Stardust was much better than that with respect to the Arrow with which Dr. McTaggart-Cowan is familiar.

British Columbians disagree on a great many more matters than we agree on, but if there is one thing on which we have unity it is the fact that it is inconceivable to us that Canada will not protect us from the inevitable major oil spills and massive pollution along our coast and the islands that will follow the shipment by giant oil tankers of oil from Alaska down the coast to Cherry Point, a refinery in Washington state about 18 miles from my riding. It is estimated there will be one such oil spill every four years.

With this in mind, I have tried to raise this issue as have other members representing the various parties. We do not need recapitulation of the whole situation tonight and, of course, time does not permit this. There is greater pressure now that safeguards be applied quickly, particularly in light of the fact that the United States is concerned about the need for energy, than there was maybe a year or two ago. This pressure is from environmentalists who recently managed to stay a U.S. project to move oil from Alaska by shipment along our coast.

The danger involved here to Alaska, and particularly to British Columbia, the lower mainland and the Gulf islands, is tremendous. The danger is great particularly in respect of these vast vessels, some of which are 100,000-ton tankers that I am told take almost a mile to change direction. This is an indication of the perils involved in their passage through the intricate and sometimes foggy channels just off the lower mainland of British Columbia and the Gulf islands of British Columbia. Therefore, I felt it was right to raise the matter again tonight.

The United States refinery at Cherry Point, which as I say is about 18 miles south of my riding, is an ecological time-bomb ticking away, one which will continue to tick away as long as the threat exists of these oil tankers bringing oil from Alaska down that coast to the refinery. I raise the question concerning what is being done to protect us because of the statement made by Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, an oil expert in this country if ever we had one. He has had experience on the east coast. He was very critical concerning the amount of action and effort, as well as success, of our departments of industry, trade and commerce, and transport to at least supply sort of a fire-fighter service to meet the situation if an oil spill should come about off the coast of British Columbia.

Last year Dr. McTaggart-Cowan said—I think he meant this in line with the suggestion that we cannot stop the oil shipments coming down the coast—"We will have to police the hell out of the oil tanker transports". A great many million dollars are at the disposal of both the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment to cope with the many problems with which these departments are faced. I think a very small amount of this money is actually being used to police our west coast against the threat of oil pollution which would certainly result from oil tanker shipments down that coast.

I had the pleasure of questioning Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, head of the Science Council of Canada, on May 24 at a committee meeting. I asked him about his opinion of defensive measures being taken by the federal departments concerned. He replied to me in this way:

> If you ask am I satisfied with the progress that has been made since Chedabucto Bay, the answer is no.

He went on to say:

> This is not to say that people are not doing their best under a difficult situation, but international marine law is hopelessly inadequate. Canada cannot solve these problems alone . . . Having had the job of trying to cope with a few million gallons, no I will not be satisfied until the problem is licked and the problem is not licked by any manner of means. So the honest answer is no. I am restless. I wish I could see more action.

Coming from the source it did, I think this statement made a few weeks ago on this very grave problem in British Columbia deserves to be quoted tonight to underline the reason for my raising the question again with the minister, whom I know in many respects is a good minister who means very well. But I doubt that the people of British Columbia are satisfied with the action and practical application of money, men and machines to defend our shores—this is what it amounts to—from the threat of oil spill pollution which confronts us on the B.C. coast in particular.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that British Columbians can agree on, it is the necessity to protect our coasts from oil spills, particulary spills resulting from the movement of Alaskan oil down the west coast by supertanker. We must prevent the spills from occurring in the first place. We will, however, have some spills in our own waters simply because there oil and other products are moving in relatively small quantities up and down the coast to remote locations.

Therefore we must be ready to deal with emergency situation first in respect of the prevention of massive oil spills. For example, through the United Nations at Stockholm last June we managed to have resolutions passed—and, incidentally, the United States and a great majority of nations were with us—which were opposed to the shipment of oil in large quantities through inland areas, parts of the world in which ocean or waters were contained, parts of the world in which navigation would be difficult and parts of the world where the biological flora and fauna were unique or precious or where recreation and tourism were important. Certainly the waters between the mainland of B.C. and Vancouver Island fall within that category.

We have entered, with the United States, into a joint contingency plan to deal with spills should they occur, but our basic approach is to prevent large tankers from coming into those waters at all. Basically, the answer is to continue to supply refineries in the Seattle and Vancouver areas by pipeline from western Canada, and if Alaskan oil does move down the west coast of North America it should go to California, which is its principal destination in any case. In other words, we should keep the big trucks on the highways of the seas and not bring them in too close to parkland areas close to Vancouver. That must be the basic policy.

But we also have environmental emergency centres established across the country. In other words, there is a phone number which can be called by anyone but especially by federal government departments and provincial administrations as well as by U.S. coastguards and others. We have worked out a co-operative agreement with the United States coastguard and we have been assembling a lot of equipment. We have a $5 million program to have sticklicks on hand and oil booms; we have the little Pisces submarine out there, and so on.

Dr. McTaggart-Cowan is a competent gentleman who has had a lot of experience with the Arrow oil spill. We welcome him back to take a look at our new organization, our new arrangements and our equipment on the west coast at any time. I think he will agree that we have made progress. But I must repeat what I said to the hon. member earlier. Personally, I am not satisfied we have reached the millennium—we have still quite a long way to go.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege about which I gave Your Honour notice earlier this morning. My question of privilege relates to the manner in which the rights and privileges of Members of Parliament are being infringed, notwithstanding Standing Order 58(14), by the way in which some hon. members and some committees function under that Standing Order. As everyone knows, Standing Order 58(14) provides that the estimates shall be considered and reported by the various committees, with the deadline being yesterday. If by that date committees have not been able to report to the House on their consideration of the estimates, the estimates are to be deemed to have been reported regardless of whether or not committees have considered or voted on them. I realize there is a citation in Beauchesne which says that until the report of a committee and the evidence have been laid upon the table it is illegal to refer to activities and proceedings before standing committees, but I think Standing Order 58(14) has come into effect since that citation was written and colours the situation somewhat.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections had referred to it the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer and held some meetings on the Chief Electoral Officer's proposed expenditures. A few days ago, on Wednesday, because no steps were being taken by the committee to hold further meetings and as the estimates had not been voted upon, at my request to the chairman the steering committee met and called a meeting of the committee for Wednesday of this week. The committee waited half an hour for members to appear. During the course of that time only half a dozen members attended, two members of the Liberal party, two Conservatives and my colleague from Regina-Lake Centre and myself. As there was no quorum, the chairman agreed to call another meeting last evening. The committee assembled again in the committee room. Again we waited for a long period and again only two Liberal members, two Conservative members and my colleague from Regina-Lake Centre and myself appeared.

It seems to me there was, if nothing else, negligence on the part of certain members of that committee in not attending and providing a quorum so that the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer could be considered and voted upon and the committee provided with an opportunity, if it so desired, to make some recommendation to the House with regard to these estimates of expenditure or on some other matter related to them. I feel that what was almost collusion on the part of the Liberals and Conservatives not to attend that committee meeting has resulted in the privileges and rights of members being infringed. Accordingly, if Your Honour finds I have a question of privilege I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That Standing Order 58(14) be amended by substituting for the date May 31 the date June 15 for the purpose of allowing the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to continue to consider the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer for the fiscal year 1973-74.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might hear the hon. member for Peace River briefly but, as hon. members know, there should be no debate on a question of this kind. The Chair should be given an opportunity to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege and a motion that should be proposed for the consideration of the House. However, I shall hear the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of privilege arising out the hon. member's reference to collusion on the part of the Conservative and Liberal parties. I will not ask the hon. member to withdraw, but that is an improper statement which should not have been made. It is an incorrect statement. If there is collusion in this House it is certainly not between the Conservative party and the Liberal party.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: That is, of course, a different issue and perhaps a different question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. member for Skeena that he may have a grievance but I doubt very much whether the operation of a Standing Order accepted by the House can be brought into question under the cover of a question of privilege. The hon. member will admit, I am sure, that the motion he has proposed is a substantive motion and not a motion of privilege. In this respect I do not think the motion can be put at this time. I would hope that some other way could be found for the hon. member's grievance to be considered by the House or by one of its committees.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF QUEBEC

Mr. Speaker: May I call the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of a delegation of the Quebec National Assembly headed by its distinguished president, Mr. Jean-Noël Lavoie.

The delegation, representative of all political groups of the Assembly, is visiting Ottawa under the sponsorship of the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians. The House is happy to welcome its Quebec colleagues and their wives.

I hope our guests will gain a favourable impression from this one-day immersion in parliamentary usage of their federal colleagues. Hon. members of Ottawa and Quebec, we trust indeed that the discussions taking place in the framework of the association's activities will enhance already existing good relations between Ottawa and Quebec parliamentarians.

[English]

On behalf of every member of the House I extend to our distinguished visitors a very warm welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TABLING OF ANNUAL REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table, for the information of hon. members, the annual review of government accounts. I understand it is the practice of the House to seek unanimous consent to make the review an appendix to the day's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PENITENTIARIES

ANNOUNCEMENT BY SOLICITOR GENERAL OF NEW PAROLE AND TEMPORARY ABSENCE REGULATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, hon. members are well aware of public criticism stemming from the fact that some inmates, while on parole or temporary leave of absence, have committed offences. Additionally, there have been serious questions raised with respect to both inmate grievance procedures and staff morale within our penitentiaries.

I should therefore like to take this opportunity to outline to the House immediate measures which will help prevent abuses of our release programs, provide for a more adequate means of investigating inmate grievances, and describe steps which will improve working conditions and morale of employees working in penitentiaries.

In recent years, both parole and temporary absences have played an important role in the process of rehabilitating inmates. Parole is a procedure whereby an inmate of a penitentiary may be released before the expiration of his sentence so that he may serve the balance of his sentence in society, but under appropriate guidance and surveillance to help him lead a law-abiding life. It is a transitional step between close confinement in an institution and absolute freedom.

In recent years, day parole, requiring an inmate to return to prison periodically, or after a specified period of time, has been widely used. The National Parole Board has granted day paroles for the purpose of enabling inmates to pursue specified educational, cultural or job training activities which were not available within the institution and which, in the opinion of the Parole Board, would assist in the inmate's rehabilitation. When the Penitentiary Act was amended in 1961 parliament conferred upon the Commissioner of Penitentiaries and individual institution directors the authority to authorize temporary leaves of absence for inmates for three or 15 days. It was intended that such leaves of absence, either with or without escort, were to be granted for medical, humanitarian or rehabilitation reasons.

Since 1961, therefore, inmates could be released to the community both under the authority of the National Parole Board or the Canadian Penitentiary Service. Because the criteria for selection of inmates by these two agencies have not necessarily been the same, there has been some difficulty. The differences in criteria arise not only because of the different statutory authorities under which they operate but also because the considerations that apply in assessing an inmate for temporary absence differ from those applicable to parole. Inevitably this has led to confusion in the public mind. Moreover, there are certain legal complexities that bring into question the operation of a large portion of the temporary absence program. The most difficult problem concerns what are commonly called back-to-back temporary absences, a practice developed in recent years whereby inmates are released on successive leaves of absence over an extended period of time, generally for rehabilitative purposes. I have therefore made the following decisions:

1. In the future the Canadian Penitentiary Service will cease the practice of providing back-to-back temporary absences for inmates in federal penal institutions. This involves a change in the Canadian Penitentiary Service directives and does not require an amendment to the legislation. The Penitentiary Service will continue to operate a temporary absence program under section 26 of the Penitentiary Act to provide three and 15 day absences for medical, humanitarian and rehabilitation purposes, with or without an escort.

2. For those inmates who are now on successful temporary back-to-back absences or where in the future extended absences are considered necessary or desirable by penitentiary authorities, provision will be made for a greater use of day parole under the Parole Act. This will enable inmates to continue their education, accept employment, and generally pursue their rehabilitation outside the institutions.

3. Legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity to amend the Parole Act to permit the appointment of ten additional ad hoc members of the Parole Board. These ten members will be assigned in teams of two to the five regions of Canada and will deal primarily with day parole and panel hearings in the institutions. This step will enable the National Parole Board to deal with a considerable backlog of cases that require detailed consideration, and simultaneously satisfy the new volume of decisions on day parole that will come before the members.

4. The appropriate regulations under the National Parole Act will be changed so that an inmate will be required to serve one-third of his sentence or seven years, whichever is the lesser, before he becomes eligible for parole. Previously inmates became eligible for parole after they had served one-third of their sentence of four years, whichever was the lesser. Concern has been expressed that the premature release of inmates on parole contributes to an unacceptably high rate of parole violations, and that those who violated their conditions of parole previously are permitted to become again eligible for parole at too early a date. This change in the parole eligibility period will affect primarily offenders serving long terms, that is, of more than 12 years.

5. The National Parole Act regulation will be changed so that those who have forfeited their parole will have to serve one-half of any new term of imprisonment or seven years before being again considered for parole. This will prevent an offender who has forfeited his parole by committing an indictable offence from being reconsidered for parole before he has completed a large part of his total sentence. Under the present regulation an inmate who has forfeited his parole and has his parole revoked is eligible for parole consideration after serving one-third of his total term of imprisonment or four years, whichever period is completed first.

The two above-mentioned changes apply to inmates currently in our institutions. I am mindful of the fact that some inmates who had been making good progress toward their rehabilitation in the community might feel aggrieved by these changes. Any such case could be favourably considered by the National Parole Board where justified because of special circumstances resulting from these modifications.

6. Steps have been taken to increase the number of classification, visiting and correspondence officers within the Canadian Penitentiary Service, as well as those members of the staff who are concerned with the social development of inmates. More visiting and correspondence officers will provide additional opportunity for family and friends to meet and communicate with inmates within institutions. Additional classification officers will ensure that individual inmates receive appropriate diagnostic and counselling service as well as providing for closer screening of applications for temporary absence, day parole and full parole. Social development and activity officers are required to enrich institutional programs of leisure-time activities. The steps that have been taken to improve programs within the penitentiary system have included, as I mentioned, the use of temporary absences and day parole to gain access to rehabilitative resources in the community for individual inmates.

7. Steps are being taken to provide additional staff facilities, such as conference rooms, libraries, lockers, lounge and shower facilities, to improve working conditions for employees in our penitentiaries.

Programs of inmate rehabilitation cannot be achieved without good relations between staff and inmates. A great deal of effort has been and will continue to be expended on establishing the best possible conditions for the reform of the inmate, but I fully realize that where staff, for one reason or another, are dissatisfied in terms of their working conditions, the prospects of useful staff-inmate relationships tend to diminish. While it is true that the penitentiary service is now unionized and a collective agreement exists, there are other areas not subject to negotiation where we could improve staff conditions.

8. To assure the impartial investigation of inmate complaints and grievances, I have received authority, under part II, section 6, of the Inquiries Act, to create the position of correctional investigator. Both the Archambault and the Swackhamer commissions recommend visiting committees to assist in the impartial consideration of inmate grievances. While I feel that this is a valuable suggestion, I am certain the creation of the correctional investigator's position will better accomplish these goals.

The appointee will assure that inmate grievances are dealt with at an early stage and on a basis that is satisfactory, generally speaking, to the inmate, the penitentiary staff, and to the Canadian public. The appointee will report directly to the Solicitor General. The correctional investigator's duties will be to investigate complaints of federal penitentiary inmates and to make recommendations concerning those complaints. The investigator will also be authorized to inquire on her own initiative but will be relieved of the necessity of making an investigation if she is satisfied that the complainant has not sought legal or administrative remedy. This official will be required to make an annual report to the Solicitor General who will table it in the House of Commons, subject to the deletion of any material that might adversely affect the security of Canada or any penitentiary, and the civil liberties or privacy of individuals.

9. Miss Inger Hansen has been appointed Canada's first correctional investigator. Miss Hansen has broad experience in both the field of criminal law and corrections generally and I believe that her distinguished background will assure her success as correctional investigator.

These are recommendations that are calculated to deal with some federal correctional problems on a short-term basis in the field of penitentiary services, temporary absences and parole. For the long term, more profound changes may be necessary. I should remind the House that there is a report of the task force on the release of inmates under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Hugessen to be made public shortly which requires detailed consideration because it raises a number of important issues that could only be dealt with by substantial changes in current legislation. Similarly, a committee of the other place is conducting inquiries into the entire question of the release of inmates, whether on parole or temporary absence. Finally, there is the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee of this House which just a few days ago has assumed the task of carrying out an inquiry into our penitentiary system, including parole and temporary absence. All of these reports will be considered in depth as part of an ever-expanding development of federal corrections in Canada.

As I stated above, I do not contend that the policies I have announced today are the long-term answers to our problems in the field of corrections. In due course, we will have to deal with some of the other more complex questions, but these measures I have discussed are designed to provide immediate solutions for some immediate problems. They will, I hope, help to assure the public and parliament that this government is determined to demand both security and rehabilitation from our release programs, while at the same time protecting the rights of inmates and creating better working conditions for our penitentiary employees.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard another example of government by ad hocery. The minister has reacted to public outcry as have others of his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). They have reacted with band-aid measures when they should be formulating cohesive and in-depth policies.

The minister cannot extract the penal system and the penitentiary system from the over-all problem of dealing with crime in this country, and that is exactly what he is attempting to do. He has made certain changes with respect to back-to-back leave and temporary absences. Does this mean that convicted wife murderers are no longer going to be able to obtain leave in order to marry their mistresses for whom murder was committed in the first place? Does this mean that criminals are not going to be permitted to visit such eminent institutions as la salon de la femme and then disappear? Does this mean that judges are no longer going to say at the conclusion of a criminal trial, I find you guilty and sentence you to two years, three years, five years, or whatever the case may be, but, instead, will be saying, I find you guilty and I have arranged for a reservation for you at the rehabilitation centre at such and such a place. Taking measures such as those that have been announced by the minister, instead of approaching the matter in a scientific fashion, in an in-depth fashion and considering the over-all fabric of crime and penal reform in the country, is no solution.

In my view, Sir, what the minister should have been announcing is a program aimed, first, at primary prevention; second, at early detection; third, at the problems of detention; fourth, at active treatment; fifth, at rehabilitation and follow-up and, last, at education and research. That is the whole scientific package that has to be considered. The penal system cannot be viewed in a vacuum and extracted and band-aid solutions applied in the expectation that they will solve all the problems that exist. Government policies such as I have suggested in order to deal with crime in accordance with the directives I have listed would be an immense step forward. Our knowledge of man and his behaviour could be utilized within such a unified policy to provide a scientific basis for developing that kind of policy. Surely the knowledge we have in the various disciplines impinging on criminal behaviour and the measures deemed appropriate to control it could thereby be co-ordinated.

In his announcement the minister also failed to outline to us, and thereby failed to allay public apprehension in this area, the criteria for temporary leaves of absence that are going to be granted without escort. What criteria are envisaged in the granting and greater use of day parole? The elimination of back to back leave implies that a greater use of day parole is very likely to cancel out the former. What assurance have the people of Canada that the enlargement of the day parole process is not going to be so great as to eliminate entirely whatever improvement may be derived from the cancellation of the policy of back to back leaves?

With respect to the announcement concerning the National Parole Board, we wonder whether the enlargement of the Parole Board will permit the reinstatement of the interview system. When will this legislation be introduced? The minister has said nothing about that, given the government's new set of priorities as leaked by a secret cabinet document the other day, which does not include penal reform, I might point out.

The minister referred to serving longer sentences prior to becoming eligible for parole. Is any consideration given to the type of crime in the granting of parole? He said nothing about that. For instance, what will the procedure be regarding sexual offenders, murderers, habitual criminals and so on? Is any account taken of the response of the prisoner to rehabilitation efforts? How much consultation exists or is planned with the judiciary? There is precious little today. It is the judge who must decide the length of the sentence, not the parole board. Liaison is necessary, for example, in cases where the judge does not recommend mercy.

It is one thing to view the almost complete erosion of the morale of the staff of the penal system and another to try to correct it by the measures announced by the minister. The increases in staff mentioned by the minister will not solve the problem. They sound good, but the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Is the Department of the Solicitor General having success in recruiting persons for these positions? What ratio of classification officers to inmates has been established as acceptable? These are the kinds of questions that arise in our minds.

The minister made an announcement with regard to additional staff facilities. We welcome this kind of announcement. Perhaps the staff will at least have the kind of luxurious facilities now available to inmates. Will staff members be consulted on any new reform undertaken in the penal institution? Are there any plans for increased training facilities for penitentiary staff, an area which is crying out for reform?

With regard to the correctional investigator, I find no quarrel with the minister in so far as the appointment is concerned, if for no other reason than her racial background and the spelling of her name. Coming from the country which she does and settling in Canada, obviously she has to be of unusually high calibre as an individual. However, the announcement is woefully inadequate with regard to the terms of reference of this individual.

The status of the correctional investigator is not clear. She continues to be a public servant. Although the Solicitor General stated that the investigator is independent of any association with the Canadian Penitentiary Service, the investigator appears to remain a legal officer of the Department of Justice which is responsible for providing legal advisers to all government departments. The functions of these officers are under the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, another public official. Their duties are to furnish legal advice and obtain for officials opinions of the Deputy Attorney General for the government departments and agencies to which they are assigned.

It appears, therefore, that the correctional investigator, as a Department of Justice legal officer, always was and continues to be independent of the penitentiary service of the Solicitor General. Accordingly, the statement that she has been granted full independence is, in my view, rather meaningless. She has been and continues to be responsible to and under the direction of the Deputy Attorney General of Canada. She is not an investigator who is independent of the government and responsible to parliament and the public. Further, as a departmental official, all the reports of the investigator will be interdepartmental communications and subject to the rules of government secrecy as announced by the government in the House this session. In short, the correctional—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. I would hope the hon. member is coming to the end of his remarks. I interrupted him just as he was saying "in short". I assume he was about to summarize what he had said, but I remind hon. members that the provisions of the Standing Order suggest that members who speak on behalf of parties in opposition should be brief. I always like to relate the length of their comments to the length of the statement by the minister. That is why I have been more lenient with regard to the comments being made by the hon. member for Yukon, but I thought it my duty to remind all hon. members of the provisions of the Standing Order.

Mr. Nielsen: I was watching the clock very carefully, Mr. Speaker. As the minister took 12 minutes and I have been speaking for 10, I was coming to the end of my remarks.

In short, the correctional investigator was and is an official of the Department of Justice assigned to the Solicitor General's Department. She now has authority as an inquiries commissioner to subpoena and swear witnesses. As most, if not all, the witnesses will be prison guards and prisoners, the granting of power to summon witnesses under penalty to punish for contempt appears to be in questionable taste. The fact that her reports are confidential memoranda between herself and her departmental superiors is really an insult to this House.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I want first to express my thanks to the minister for having made available a copy of his statement some time before the House met, even though its social implications and effects on the penitentiary service are more than could be grasped in the time available to look at it. My reaction is that it is a statement responding to a situation out of desperation rather than a clear approach to a fair and just penal system in the nation. It is a political document, not one with any penological sense to it.

I wish to deal briefly with the points raised by the minister. The minister referred to the day parole system and the so-called back-to-back or successive 15 day temporary absences that can be granted by the Commissioner of Penitentiaries. The minister seeks to dispose of that and not have any more successive temporary absences. He thinks that abuses of the system will accordingly be lessened or curtailed. The minister is under a misapprehension or misunderstanding. The problem does not arise because an inmate has a three day, 15-day or a number of 15-day successive temporary absences. The problem arises in the assessment of the individual in the first place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: If the person who makes the assessment or selection of inmates eligible for temporary absence is incompetent or conned into it, there will be a continuation of abuses. Let me say that when it comes to conning, inmates have far more brains than most of the people in the penitentiary system.

The minister talked about expanding the Parole Board. I gather the purpose is that the additional members will permit the board to deal with the question of day parole and the great backlog of cases. One would think from this that the minister is curtailing day parole, but he is in fact seeking to expand and intensify it. This is fine, but the difficulty again arises with regard to the competency or otherwise of the person making the selection. There is also the problem of supervision in the after-care field and working with the inmate whether he is on temporary absence, day parole or full parole. In the absence of a concomitant community activity involving that individual, the prospects of failure will increase.

Again—and this points up the political impact of the document—the minister talks about establishing a seven year period instead of a four year period before a person will be eligible for parole. The minister seems, on the one hand, to wish to intensify the activities of the Parole Board and, on the other hand, to restrict and curtail those activities and to make sure that individuals stay in jail for a longer period of time. This is contrary to the idea of parole, contrary to the idea that an inmate should have an opportunity to live in a free society, in a free community to the fullest extent that it is possible to live in that way after he has been sentenced for a crime, in the hope that his activity within the community will lead him to the point of rehabilitation. It flies in the face of the concept that there is no rehabilitation possible in a penitentiary. This is a point the minister seems to miss. The penitentiary is for purposes of custody; rehabilitation takes place outside and afterwards, and not within the penitentiary. The idea that if you keep a person inside for a longer period he will thereby become more amenable to rehabilitation is arrant nonsense.

The minister talks in terms of an additional expansion of the number of classification officers, visiting officers and corresponding officers. Generally—and this does not apply to every individual who falls within these categories—professional social workers who spend their time going through universities getting a degree in social work are not much help as classification officers or persons working as visiting or corresponding officers within penitentiaries because they do not know what life in a jail is all about, and they talk to inmates using a concept of language that differs from what the inmate understands. I think this step is doomed to be less than helpful, though it will no doubt build up the bureaucracy within the system.

Additional staff facilities, such as showers and lounge rooms, will not help build up the morale of the staff within the system. They are disenchanted for two reasons, basically. First, they are custodial officers who see their function being overridden by classification officers who, most of the time, do not know what they are doing anyway. Second, there is a conflict, a disenchantment, because staff custodial officers feel the people in the headquarters office do not know what they are doing either. In this regard, the first thing I think the minister should do is take some steps to replace the commissioner, Mr. Faguy. I have no complaint about Mr. Faguy's administrative competence. I am sure it is very great. But he has no idea about penological matters or prison systems. He is a professional civil servant, and his concern is with administrative structures without regard to the fact that people are within them. I would take him out of there and put somebody in who knows something about prisons and about human beings.

I have very grave doubts about the value of the correctional investigator, regardless of who fills the office, and her effectiveness in dealing with grievances by inmates. If the warden sends somebody to the hole, is the correctional officer to step into that picture and override the decision of warden's court? Certainly not. I hope not, in any event. What about the question of lost remission? What about the question of lost privileges? What about the question of discipline within a penitentiary? All we are likely to see here, following the appointment of this correctional investigator, is an advancing bureaucracy, the setting up of a further level of government structure to confuse inmates, confuse the staff, and create more general public confusion than exists at present.

The minister's statement indicates that he has not yet understood what is involved in a prison or penological system. He seeks to make the ideas contained in this statement available to all institutions. He seems to ignore the fact of life that programs applicable to one prison are not applicable in the same way to another. Surely the minister is not telling us that the program with respect to day parole should apply equally at Joyceville, which is a minimum security institution in Ontario, and at the special detention or special correctional unit just outside St. Vincent de Paul in Quebec. In our prison system what we need is not a furtherance of the so-called traditional or historic liberal approach—and I use a small "l" here, Mr. Speaker. We need one that is sensible, one that is just, one that is fair. And the two are not compatible. As long as he continues to ignore the fact that jail is for custody and that rehabilitation takes place only outside the jail and has its best opportunity for success when the citizenry are drawn into it, we shall continue to encounter difficulties, problems, abuses and, hopefully, a change of minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the recommendations that you have often made, I will be very brief.

I would like first to congratulate the hon. minister for being kind enough to respect the bilingual character of this House and give me a French copy of his statement. I am all the more pleased to say so as last night, in committee, such was not my opinion. As a matter of fact, I blamed the hon. minister who previously had not respected the bilingual character of this country.

As far as the minister's statement is concerned, I must say that at first sight it seems acceptable to me. Ever since I became a member of the House, I have heard discussions about problems of parole prison escapes. Several members have not only made suggestions but have proposed solutions designed to improve the living conditions of prisoners in penitentiaries and to make their rehabilitation easier so that, once they are back into society, they become good citizens and help it to improve their living conditions, in order to enable our country to take full advantage of all its human resources.

Every so often, officers, prison guards are blamed for not carrying out their supervisory duties, for not doing their job, and sometimes even for deliberately taking part in some of those escapes. Personally, I am convinced that it certainly must not be easy to be a guard in a penitentiary, to live in such difficult conditions, under constant pressure.

Therefore, according to the minister's statement, today, he wants to have better living conditions for our officers, and our prison guards, allowing them to live a more normal life while doing their duty, and accepting their responsibilities. I think that this will also enable them to create a more congenial atmosphere for our inmates who no doubt have not been locked up in the penitentiary just to have a good time. They cannot expect to lead a completely normal life. If they are in there, it is because they have done something wrong, because they have violated the law and also, because order must prevail in our society.

Therefore, it is not out of nastiness or revenge that the state decrees penalties but to make sure that law is respected in the land. If the action that the minister intends to take to correct this situation appears effective, and if it is actually implemented, I am convinced that there will be considerable improvements.

Another point on which I would like to draw the attention of the minister, and I regret that he did not mention it in his statement, is the drug problem in our penitentiaries. This does not help create a responsible climate among our inmates. On the contrary, it helps to make it worse, and supervision should be more rigid in that area so that those who violate the law and who find ways of introducing drugs into our penitentiaries, be made to join those who are inside the walls, and this would help our society correct a situation which is fast becoming alarming.

When inmates have the advantage of being paroled, our society should enable them to reintegrate it easily, welcome them generously, and facilitate their rehabilitation. We must do our share. And to do our share we must act. The government is now responsible in a large part for the situation in which we are.

There is an old proverb that says: Idleness is at the root of all evil. If it is true, let us manage so that there will be fewer idle people. Conversely, one can say that work is the remedy for all evil.

Let us therefore do our utmost so that there will be more jobs in our country, so that there will be more people at work; and when there will be more people at work every day, there will be fewer inmates in the prisons.

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to request unanimous consent of the House to deal with a motion concerning a matter that is urgent and pressing, namely, the ability of at least two standing committees of the House of Commons to complete their work, and to put an end to the negligence of Members of Parliament who fail to attend these meetings. If I have the unanimous consent of the House I would move:

That Standing Order 58(14) be amended by substituting for the date May 31 the date June 15 for the purpose of allowing the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to continue to consider the estimates of the Chief Electoral Officer for the fiscal year 1973-74.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER DEVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—DISCUSSION WITH U.S. GOVERNMENT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN EXCHANGE FUND HOLDINGS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the price of gold has risen quite remarkably on the free market in the last week and that there is continued speculation the United States dollar may be devalued again, can the minister tell us whether there has been any direct contact by his officials with officials of the United States government about the possibility of a further devaluation of the U.S. dollar?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if that were so it would not be something I would speculate on in the House.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, if there has been no direct consultation about this matter, can the minister tell us whether the government has taken the position that it is willing to accept a devaluation in the purchasing power of reserves held in U.S. dollars by the Canadian exchange equalization fund rather than propose to the United States government some possible plan whereby the purchasing power of these dollars can be maintained at the present exchange rate?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The brunt of the hon. member's question is dulled a bit by the fact that most of these reserves are held in U.S. dollars in any event, and our dollar has remained at virtual parity with the U.S. dollar.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, that is the very point. The fact is that as the U.S. dollar depreciates our dollar floats with it. The question is, what are we doing to protect the purchasing power of our reserves having regard to paying off debts such as the one to Germany paid today and having regard to the Japanese dollar and so on? The very fact that our dollar is floating with the U.S. dollar makes it imperative that we do something.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the question is not in order in that it is argumentative.

An hon. Member: Let's have an answer.

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: Tell him you haven't got to that chapter of the book yet.

PICKERING—RESPECTING OF RIGHTS OF OWNERS OF EXPROPRIATED LAND—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works concerning the procedures for expropriating the lands required for the Pickering airport development project.

Would the minister tell the House whether he has given any guidelines to the officials and agents of his department to the effect that the rights of the people involved be not encroached upon as far as tenure of residence is concerned?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Moreover, I intend to go personally to Pickering some time next week to explain to the people involved the very generous provisions of the Expropriation Act.

[English]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works intends to travel to Pickering to assure the persons expropriated of their rights, will he also look into the repeated reports to the effect that his agents, or agents working for his department, have entered homes without the knowledge or permission of the residents to make assessments, and in certain cases have effectively browbeaten residents into signing expropriation papers they did not have to sign, according to the undertaken given recently by the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, these rumours are not correct. These assessments are not made by officials of my department; they are made by independent qualified assessors, and as far as we know there is no veracity in these false claims.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West on one last supplementary and then complete the first round of questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Champlain.

• (1200)

Mr. Harney: When the minister is in the area next week, does he intend to explain to the people involved and affected exactly what the difference is between officials of his department and agents working on behalf of his department?

Mr. Dubé: We will tell the people concerned the true facts, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: That will be a change.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COULOMBE REPORT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Since we are discussing bilingualism within the Public Service, could the minister tell us if he will make the Coulombe report available to the House so that the discussion on the Prime Minister's resolution will be more relevant and effective?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have already said that the Coulombe report was not intended to be made public. This report was prepared by an official of the Treasury Board for the information of Treasury Board officials themselves, for the Secretariat. Thus, it is not intended to publish it or make it public. But if there are facts related to this report, I would like to make them known to the hon. member.

Mr. Matte: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Could the President of the Treasury Board tell us whether he intends to base the statement he will make during the debate on the official languages on facts taken from the Beaudet report or the Coulombe report, in order to further enlighten the House?

Mr. Speaker: The member will recognize that he is now anticipating on the debate which will continue later on today.

POSSIBILITY OF ROTATING STRIKES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour with regard to the announcement I understand has been made that rotating strikes will take place affecting the operations of Air Canada. Can the minister tell the House if he proposes to undertake any new measures to head off this thing? I realize that yesterday he appointed a mediator.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would advise the Leader of the Opposition that, from whatever information I have been able to glean, if rotating strikes are a possibility as indeed overall strike action is, the indication has been couched in those terms. I do not think there has been any decision yet to have rotating strikes on the part of the labour leaders involved. Mediation is going on right now with Mr. Gallagher. I believe they are meeting this afternoon in Montreal. I take it that the parties are meeting with him in good faith to endeavour to find a solution to this matter. I hope to have further particulars during the course of the weekend.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the indication of rotating strikes, which I understood was more definite than the minister seems to believe, I would ask the minister to inquire concerning what the situation actually is, and would he consider taking a hand himself with a view to trying to bring the parties together in order to avoid rotating strikes in view of the very serious disruption that would be caused to our economy and to many individual Canadians?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think Mr. Gallagher should be given an opportunity to see what he can do in terms of resolving this dispute. Because of the inconvenience caused by rotating strikes, if this should turn out to be a reality instead of what I consider at the moment to be a possibility, my intervention is always under consideration. If it can indeed be helpful to the situation, it will, of course, be entertained.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary.

Mr. Hees: Mine is not a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF ROTATING STRIKES—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER OF TRANSPORT AND PRESIDENT OF COMPANY TO PREVENT INCONVENIENCE TO TRAVELLERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question. In view of the fact the union announced a short while ago that they will commence rotating strikes by giving two hours notice to whatever airports they are going to strike, has the minister had discussions with the president of Air Canada to see what steps can be taken to prevent this tremendous inconvenience to the Canadian travelling public at this peak travelling period?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that government members are at least as interested as the hon. member by what is now going on at Air Canada. I think that to indicate what action might be taken in every possible case would not help the parties involved and would not contribute at all to the settlement of the conflict.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, after which I will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE MADE AVAILABLE TO HIRE PERSONNEL TO OPERATE FOUR DECOMMISSIONED DESTROYERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement by the Commander of Maritime Command that an alternative to selling or putting in mothballs the four destroyers that cannot be manned because of lack of manpower in the department, would be for the government to allot to the navy sufficient funds to hire personnel necessary to operate these ships, is the government considering taking this very excellent advice of the Commander of Maritime Command, thereby making it possible for these four destroyers, which cost the Canadian taxpayers $120 million, are in first class shape and were designed to carry out this maritime role—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the department and the government have not received that advice.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is the government considering transferring some of the funds which are allotted to the OFY and LIP to the Department of National Defence to make it possible for young men who wish to go into the navy as a permanent career to be employed permanently in this role—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: —and by so doing make it possible for these warships to operate and stop the continuation of the scandalous waste of $120 million of the taxpayers money?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Hees: Let us have an answer.

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: Put George into drydock.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PLANNING AND ANALYSIS RESEARCH GROUP—POSSIBLE ABOLITION OR MADE SUBJECT TO REPORTING TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to become involved in any controversy and therefore I will wait until the controversy is over before asking my question.

My question is directed to the Solicitor General. I should like to ask him whether or not consideration is being given to abolishing or demobilizing the police and security planning and analysis research group. I have to look at my notes because the name has changed. What is his answer to that?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, has the minister read the evidence that has been given in the Watergate case in the Senate of the United States, which indicates what happens when a group of powerful men is responsible not to Congress but only to the President and to the cabinet and the effect this can have on individual rights? In view of the fact that this government group that has been set up is secret, silent, but equally effective when it comes to interfering with human rights, should it not be subject, if not to abolition, to reporting to parliament on its conduct?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to read all the evidence in the Watergate affair, but I wish to assure the right hon. member there is no resemblance whatsoever between it and this group. We have answered all questions about this group in the House. This group is to protect civil rights against such things as Watergate rather than to impinge on them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I suggest to the minister that he shows he has not read any of the evidence, for this body was set up with the identical purpose he now defines as the one for his own group.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Selkirk.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF IN-CAMERA BRIEFINGS OF COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): In view of the in-camera briefing the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has had while considering estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General, and in view of the minister's assurance that further such briefings would be available to committee members and because that reference is out of the hands of the committee by reason of its reporting to the House, will the Solicitor General, in consultation with the government House leader, make arrangements for a further reference to that committee so that these very useful in the one case, and could be useful in the other, in-camera meetings might be continued because otherwise they are terminated?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I intend to live up to that commitment and I will see to it that arrangements are made. I might say that this group—and I have said it several times before—is to deal with security matters and police matters, not with spying on the political opposition. It is to deal with questions such as the possible threat of the Black September Organization and FLQ threats. If the opposition wants to do away with that, they can take the responsibility.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED RECOMMISSIONING OF CERTAIN DESTROYERS FOR USE IN PROTECTING FISHERMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and it is supplementary to those asked earlier by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. In view of the fact that it would cost about $1.6 million a year to put the four destroyers to sea—we are talking about a total investment in those ships lying alongside amounting to $160 million, so here we are talking about one per cent of that investment—and in light of the fact we could probably draw 700 men from the national defence headquarters and never feel it—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rowland: —will the minister reconsider his decision to let the ships lie alongside and put them back to sea where they could at least assist our fishermen in avoiding the kind of harassment they sometimes experience from larger ships of other nations?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am certain the hon. member knows that we have recently commissioned three new DDH destroyers which have a much greater capability than the ones to which he is referring.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AMENDMENT OF CRITERIA RESPECTING EXTENSION OF PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I should like to put a question to his Parliamentary Secretary.

In view of the growing importance of local initiatives projects because of the new economic blood that has been injected for the coming months, can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether, in addition to the criteria referred to in the letter sent by the minister to members of the House at the end of May, other standards will be applied to the Department in order to guide the officials responsible for the selection of local initiatives projects to see whether they can be extended?

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are no other standards, but of course there is always the problem of interpreting rules and criteria.

[Translation]

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN PROJECTS

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is an interpretation of the rules.

My supplementary question is as follows: Are any local initiatives projects concerning the building of reservoirs, the restoration of old furniture or still the building of recreational facilities, playgrounds, being considered in the standards set up by the minister in his letter of May 19?

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would not be able to answer that question without further information from the hon. member, and I will be glad to have that information from him subsequently.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY DISPUTE WITH PILOTS—GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the House and the public about the steps which he has taken and the activities of his officials in the conflict which is constantly deteriorating on the St. Lawrence Seaway?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a meeting of the pilots of the St. Lawrence Seaway is now underway. This meeting should end today. Normally, the activities should resume tomorrow. However, even if the pilots decide to return to work today—an accident unrelated to the meeting having occurred, the Snell lock in the U.S. has been damaged—unfortunately they would be unable to do so due to that accident.

POSSIBLE STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT AND CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In light of growing unrest and imperilled rail service because of slow contract negotiations between the railways and the unions, would the minister tell the House whether he has any indication of when the conciliation report will be completed and whether the government has prepared a contingency plan and a firm policy in the event of the suspension of rail services?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, a conciliation board has been constituted and I announced approximately a week ago the appointment of the conciliation board chairman, Mr. Justice Craig Munro. They will be holding their meetings in British Columbia—

An hon. Member: Any relation?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, no relation. They will be holding their meetings in Vancouver starting next week.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Labour. In view of the admitted lack of plans and economic analyses regarding potential air and rail strikes at this time, is the government now going to set up an industrial disputes tribunal to undertake this kind of work and prepare rational and responsible measures to protect essential public interests?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Despite what I consider to be the rather overblown rhetoric of the hon. member in the first part of his question, I think any parliamentarian in the House or in the country is well aware of the serious economic consequences that would visit a country like Canada if there were a rail strike. So we are going to do everything in our power to try to avoid that.

POLICY RESPECTING SPECIAL AREAS—RESULTS OF DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put another question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Following the discussion that took place recently between Quebec and Ottawa, the Quebec government stated yesterday that it was in favour of eliminating special areas since the minister Mr. Lévesque stated that he would like to see in the terms of those agreements, the province of Quebec free to set its own priorities. Can the minister say if he will favour such freedom for the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Basically, yes, Mr. Speaker. I think that was the gist of the meetings that were held with the province of Quebec and with other provinces, that rather than maintain the so-called special areas it would be better to bring to bear as much help as we can on industrial opportunities wherever they happen to exist in a particular province.

ENERGY

FARM FUELS—REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF SUPPLY AT NO INCREASE IN PRICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the increased export of energy and the fact that farm costs have gone up by 6.1 per cent in the first three months of this year which, if it continues, would mean an increase of 25 per cent this year, can the minister assure us that the price of farm fuels will not be going up further this year, and can he guarantee to farmers any security of supply of fuels for their farms?

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any control the federal government has over the price at the retail level.

FARM FUELS—POSSIBLE USE OF TWO-PRICE SYSTEM AND EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the drastic increase in farm costs, can the minister say whether or not he would consider now a two-price system so far as farm fuels are concerned as well as the extension of export controls to gasoline and other farm fuels?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think that the question of a two-price system which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, while it might be effective in the farm area, would undoubtedly produce higher prices for other Canadian consumers. Obviously these two considerations would have to be weighed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's West who has a supplementary to a previous question, I believe, and then the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF MAKING FOUR DESTROYERS AVAILABLE TO DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked of the Minister of National Defence by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. In view of the fact that Canada is providing inadequate protection for our fishermen against the encroachment of foreign fishing ships, would the minister consider making these four destroyers available to his colleague, the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries, to provide protection for our fishermen on Canada's east coast?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The protection we provide is by no means inadequate. The Minister of the Environment has recently confirmed the increased surveillance that we provide from the air. We also provide protection from the sea. We do not need those reserve destroyers in order to protect the fishing fleets.

• (1220)

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In order to protect against an even greater financial fiasco than the Bonaventure fiasco by the sale or scrapping of ships that are less than 20 years old and have a shelf life of at least 40 years if they are properly maintained, will the Prime Minister give consideration to undertaking consultations with the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of the Environment toward the end of utilizing these four destroyer escorts for beefing up our coast guard service and utilizing these ships for protection of our fishing industry, especially in light of the statement by the Minister of the Environment that we intend to extend our fisheries management control limit to 200 miles, or to the edge of Canada's continental shelf?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government understands the importance of giving the greatest protection to our country, the greatest protection to our coastlines, and as much surveillance as possible. The difficulty, of course, is the size of the defence budget. The government has to keep that budget within a rate of escalation which is considered to be reasonable. We are not able to do everything we would like to do in every area of government. This is one example of an area where the government has to curtail expenditures and choose other areas of expenditures where, if funds were not available, certain social services would be prevented from being delivered to the Canadian people. It is this kind of decision the government has had to reach in deciding the size of its defence expenditures.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether, in view of the fact the reason the four destroyers are idle is the inability to man them, he has given any thought to solving this problem by establishing a ratio of one sailor to one admiral in order to supply sufficient sailors to man the ships?

REQUEST FOR INCREASED SURVEILLANCE OF COASTAL AREA TO PROTECT FISHERMEN

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he is aware that Canada's present effort in surveillance of the continental shelf consists of the Cape Freels, which has just about enough capacity to maintain surveillance over the Rideau Canal? Further, would he seriously take under advisement the recommendations made by members on this side of the House in view of the fact that the proposed plan put forward by the Minister of the Environment for beefing up our surveillance capability cannot be implemented until seven years from the present date?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich for one last supplementary on this subject followed by the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Peel South. I would like to assure the latter that he will be recognized before the end of the question period.

MANNING OF DDH DESTROYERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he can explain how construction plans for the DDH series of four vessels can be carried forward without, at the same time, developing plans to man those vessels and the vessels that were still in service?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there has never been any question about being able to man the four new DDH vessels. They are being manned now. They are at sea.

APPOINTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR—INQUIRY AS TO INDEPENDENCE OF OPERATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General arising out of his statement earlier this morning. Is the correctional investigator to be part of the minister's departmental staff? If so, how can inmates be assured of independence of consideration of their grievances, and how can the investigator be considered as any substitute for such procedures as recommended in 1938 by Archambault and in 1972 by Swackhamer?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the correctional ombudsman or investigator is in no way at all to be connected with the department. I do not know how the hon. member for Yukon could interpret my statement that way.

Mr. Fairweather: I am asking the question.

Mr. Allmand: The investigator is to be completely independent, operating under the Inquiries Act with all the powers of the Inquiries Act, and she will be able to initiate inquiries on her own or at the request of families and friends of inmates. I repeat that she will have all the powers provided under Part II of the Inquiries Act.

TEMPORARY RELEASE PROGRAM—APPLICATION TO THOSE UNDER LIFE SENTENCE FOR MURDER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Solicitor General this question. In light of the fact your statement suggests you are going to continue the temporary release program—I am not arguing about that—and in light of the fact that the bill with respect to the abolition of capital punishment has gone to committee and there is serious concern in reference to weighing what kind of penalty should be handed out to a person convicted of murder, will the temporary release program apply as in the past to any person given a life sentence for murder, or will you act in accordance with that section of the Criminal Code which says that no one serving a life sentence will be released from a prison without passage of an order in council? Which act are you going to follow?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should have directed his question to the Chair, but we will assume he did that.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the rules for release relating to people who have been convicted of murder have special provisions. As the hon. member knows, there is a ten-year minimum period before a person who has been convicted of murder can be considered for parole. We will consider special arrangements for parole and temporary absence for convicted murderers, and these will be discussed in the committee in connection with the bill dealing with capital punishment. The measures I announced this morning apply to all other inmates but not to convicted murderers.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary and then see the hon. member for Rimouski and the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Woolliams: So there will be no misunderstanding, will the temporary release program apply to people who have been convicted of murder and given life sentences?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, it can apply in certain cases. For example, section 26 of the Penitentiaries Act provides for release for medical reasons, with escort. We would have to be very explicit. If a man is in prison having been convicted of murder and he has to go to hospital he would be released on temporary absence, with escort, and would probably be there for some time. There are other cases we will have to deal with separately, especially temporary absence for rehabilitation reasons without escort. They will be dealt with in the committee when we deal with the capital punishment bill.

AVAILABILITY TO MEMBERS OF REPORT ON QUEBEC'S ECONOMY

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Following the publication of articles in some Quebec newspapers, particularly La Presse and Le Soleil, with respect to a report on regional development in the province of Quebec, Mr. Minister, is it your intention to release copies of that report to hon. members so they will know before the newspapers what is the situation with respect to the economy?

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted once more to remind the hon. member, as I did the hon. member for Calgary North a while ago, that questions should be put through the Chair rather than directly to the minister.

Having made that procedural remark I suggest that the minister might reply to the hon. member's question.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the documents to which the hon. gentleman referred are not, in fact, the papers that were submitted to the province. They are merely a set of working papers within the department. When the process of consultation with all ten provinces has been completed it is my intention to make the contents of our papers available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a supplementary and he will be recognized, but we must try to limit supplementaries because we are reaching the end of the question period and I am still anxious to recognize the hon. member for Peel South.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

APPOINTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. With respect to the appointment of a correctional investigator, would he be prepared to bring a motion before the House, which I am sure could be dealt with without debate, to refer that office and appointment to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee so that the members of that committee can have an opportunity to pass on the question?

• (1230)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Well, I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I would consider that, but I do not really think that is necessary at this time. We have discussed the nature of ombudsmen offices in this country for years. This is a correctional ombudsman. I am willing to table the terms of reference, the order in council and so on, but I do not know whether we would accomplish very much by having further discussions in committee.

POSSIBILITY PROVINCIAL PAROLE BOARDS SHOULD BE GIVEN RESPONSIBILITY FOR INMATES IN PROVINCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In addition to the measures announced today, would the minister give immediate consideration to having provincial parole boards assume responsibility for paroles to inmates in provincial institutions, thereby reducing the backlog of cases before the National Parole Board?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): That is being considered, Mr. Speaker, and it is a possible agenda item for the federal-provincial conference on corrections in the fall. I might say if we get consent to the bill to add ten members to the board to serve in five regions of Canada, that will do a lot to prevent a backlog of cases before the Parole Board. It will also lead to the resumption of panel hearings and dealing with the increased workload for day paroles.

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BILL RESPECTING FINANCING—POSSIBILITY OF LIMITING DEBATE

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Various authorities of the City of Montreal and the province of Quebec are concerned about the priority given by the government to the bill concerning the financing of the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal. Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House on what date this bill will be introduced?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a specific date, but I can tell him that the cabinet has actually approved the final drafting of the bill. The bill is already drafted. There are a few printing and production problems to settle, but I think I am not far off in saying that we hope to have the first reading of this bill next week.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

To your knowledge, Mr. Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member not to follow the example set earlier this afternoon by other hon. members who put questions directly to ministers. It is a rule easy enough to follow and I beg the hon. members to direct their questions directly to the Chair.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether there has been agreement between the House leaders as to the time limit for the debate, so that this bill may be passed as soon as possible?

Mr. Trudeau: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I hope that when the bill is introduced in the House, there will be discussions between the various party leaders so as to reach an agreement with respect to the time limit for this debate, in order to pass the bill as soon as possible.

COST OF SERVICED LAND AS FACTOR IN COST OF HOUSING—POSSIBLE USE OF LAND BANK FUNDS TO PROVIDE SERVICES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister confirm his statement in Toronto last week when he said it was not the cost of land that is pricing housing out of the market but the cost or shortage of serviced land?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had sufficient difficulty recently in connection with asking questions in this way. Perhaps the hon. member might put the question more directly rather than asking the minister to confirm whether a statement was made.

Mr. Blenkarn: Rephrasing the question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it is the minister's view now that it is not the price of land but the shortage of services that is driving up the price of houses?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member is referring to a statement I made at the Peterborough tri-level meeting, which statement was very well received by the mayor and others from Toronto.

Mr. Baldwin: You have been misinformed on that; more deception.

Mr. Basford: I will be happy to send the text of the statement to the hon. member. As I recall the text, my statement was that obviously the cost of servicing land is one of the contributing factors to the increase in the price of housing and land, and that is why we have initiated a number of policies in this government to help deal with this problem.

Mr. Blenkarn: Is the minister proposing to use money set aside for land banking now to get at the real problem, servicing, as set out by our party in debate on this matter throughout this session?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker, I think we should be land banking as fast as the provinces are willing to take it up and use the very substantial budget we have established at the federal level. I have also indicated that I would like to explore additional ways of accelerating the laying down of trunk sewer services where land costs are a major problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin, then the hon. member for Edmonton Centre and then call orders of the day.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN NATIONAL AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House if any progress has been made in talks with the government of British Columbia with regard to the railroad system in that province, with particular emphasis on the shortage of boxcars and the need for a railway interchange in the Lillooet area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, negotiations have been going on for months now between the CNR and the British Columbia railway and the government of British Columbia. I think they came to an understanding as far as the shortage of boxcars is concerned. As you know, there is an imbalance between Canadian cars in the United States and American cars in Canada. The railway companies are working hard on this so that we can recover our boxcars, but there is certainly a shortage and a serious problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE LOAN TO TUNISIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence may I direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance for Tunisia has been in Canada to negotiate a loan, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether the loan to Tunisia has been completed and, if so, in what amount?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I cannot give an answer to the question. I am meeting the Minister of Trade and Commerce for Algeria if I can leave the House in a few minutes and it may be that I will meet some other gentleman, but we are obviously talking of different countries.

Mr. Paproski: I would just like to know if the Prime Minister can sign a cheque for over a million dollars?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the hon. member is talking about the right country. There is a matter of a loan being discussed—but Algeria, Tunisia; who cares.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Speaker.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday May 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;
(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;
(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;
(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;
(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;
(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their position even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;
(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingess to become bilingual;
(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;
(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhanced the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield, seconded by Mr. Baker,—That the motion be amended by adding to paragraph (i) thereof, next after the words, "taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles", the following:

"and the Government of Canada, as a priority measure, introducing legislation to incorporate the aforementioned Principles in the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Employment Act and other appropriate statutes;"

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in moving this resolution, outlined the approach that this government is proposing to solve the problems that linguistic pluralism poses to Canada.

Canada is not, of course, the only country faced with the challenge of ensuring that two official languages do enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all government institutions. In Canada, Mr. Speaker, the passage of the Official Languages Act made this the law. It is part of this law that Canadians should be able to receive services from, and communicate with, their government in the official language of their choice. Why is this required? Quite simply to allow the 18 million Canadians who are unilingual to remain unilingual. That is the right of every Canadian. And that is why the Public Service which serves all Canadians must be able to provide its services in both English and French.

Faced with this responsibility, it is encouraging that most Canadians understand this need and the government, public servants and the staff associations which represent most employees are prepared to adopt the traditionally reasonable Canadian approach to solving this complex linguistic issue—an approach exemplified by the late respected former prime minister of Canada, Lester Pearson, who laid the foundations for bilingualism within the public service.

Mr. Peters: It sure got screwed up.

• (1240)

Mr. Drury: Simply stated, Mr. Speaker, if the government and the Public Service of Canada cannot meet the needs of the country by providing services in both languages and, if the public service can not be a place where both language groups can work together, both in the language of their choice, then we will have indeed failed to find a solution to the problems that linguistic pluralism poses to Canada. The price of failure for Canada is too high and is one that, I am sure all members of this House will join me in saying, is unacceptable.

[Translation]

That is my concern as President of the Treasury Board and as the minister responsible for implementing bilingualism in the Public Service.

What is involved in the first part of the resolution under study dates back to December 14, 1972 when I made a statement setting forth the government policy on bilingualism in the Public Service of Canada, the principles underlying the implementation of that policy and its effects on all Canadian citizens whether they are public servants or not.

As I said before, the principles set forth in today's resolution follow from the government policy on official languages which, even if it is well known by some, might have been forgotten or misunderstood by others.

[English]

A public service for all Canadians whether they are members of the public or public servants: that short phrase summarizes the goal of the resolution. However, without a more sustained effort to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the public service, without good will and a conscious, constructive effort to achieve this objective, this country will find itself with a central institution, its public service, that has little or no meaning for a large number of its citizens. To ensure that the public service has the same meaning for French speaking Canadians as it has for English speaking Canadians, Mr. Speaker, is the objective of the second part of the resolution.

Unfortunately, the government's language policies have often been misunderstood. Misunderstanding seems to be endemic to this complex and often emotionally charged subject. This resolution apparently is no exception to the rule. Various interpretations have already been read into it by some members of the House and some members of the press. Before discussing in greater detail the substance of the resolution, I would like to make clear two points.

First, it is not the government's intention to increase the use of French—or English for that matter—at all levels in the public service in all parts of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I underline the words "in all parts of Canada". In the statement that I made in December, it will be seen that the development of a functionally bilingual public service that is providing equality of opportunity for public servants at all levels to work within the public service in either English or French—will essentially be limited to the national capital region, and other such areas where both official languages are in relatively common use, both in government offices and in the surrounding communities. Given today's geographical distribution of English and French speaking Canadians, these areas would presently include such places as Montreal, certain other parts of Quebec, parts of eastern and northern Ontario, and parts of northern and eastern New Brunswick. For most of Ontario, many areas in Quebec and in most of eastern and western Canada bilingualism will only be required to meet the provisions of the Official Languages Act; but in these areas it will not be required throughout the hierarchy of the public service. I want to make this quite clear.

I would like to make a few remarks about another matter. It concerns the realization, in the Public Service and within the scope of the merit concept, of the full participation of members of the anglophone and francophone communities. Certain people have seen in this objective the appearance of a quota system designed to increase the number of francophone public servants to about 28 per cent, which would represent the approximate percentage of French-speaking Canadians compared with the population of Canada. That is not the case.

The government intends to ensure wider use of French in the Public Service by increasing the number of French language units, by improving the recruiting effort of the Public Service Commission, by increasing the number of professional training and administration programs offered in French and, finally, through co-operation with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual aspect of the national capital area. I am convinced that when all those objectives will be realized, francophones will experience more satisfaction working in the Public Service of Canada, and that their number will increase. Thus, we will have attained our objective, which is to obtain the full participation of the English- and French-speaking communities.

[English]

If then one objective is to increase the use of French within the public service, the public service must in itself become functionally bilingual. Functional bilingualism is the expression best suited to describe the aims of the nine principles, Mr. Speaker. However, to avoid these words being misunderstood, I would like to outline for the House exactly what they mean.

More precisely, functional bilingualism in the public service means that the structures of the public service should provide those in it, and those who aspire to join it, with the opportunity of choosing freely to remain unilingual while still enjoying satisfying carriers or, in cases where bilingualism is required, by offering unilinguals the opportunity of becoming bilingual, not only, Mr. Speaker, to meet their job requirements but to provide them with the means to expand their personal horizons and appreciate more fully the bilingual nature of Canada. The main points of the plan are now in front of us. Their implementation requires the good will of individuals, the talents of managers, the support of staff associations, and, the approval of this parliament.

The policy of developing a functionally bilingual public service has been supported, I am sure, by most Canadians. But at the same time, apprehensions have been aroused, individually as well as collectively. Many Canadians, and particularly public servants, were concerned about the policy because the details as to how it would be implemented had not been developed and explained clearly enough. It was not that they disagreed with the policy, but each further step appeared to them to be nearing the moment when they would have to become bilingual. Such a misunderstanding gives rise to a fear that individuals' rights would be infringed, in the name of bilingualism; of a fear, also, that measures to achieve bilingualism would jeopardize the security of employment of many conscientious and dedicated public servants. These fears, shared by many English-speaking Canadians, should now be allayed.

[Translation]

If it is true that English-speaking Canadians felt somewhat apprehensive, the majority of French-speaking Canadians for their part had come to mistrust the bilingualism program because progress was slow, especially in the part of the program that consisted in making the higher echelons of the Public Service capable of efficiently supervising those who wanted to work in French. Each new measure gave them the impression of becoming increasingly involved in a situation which was strange to them. They feared that the use of French would be limited to bilingual positions, even if this was contrary to the principle of equal status and rights provided for in the Official Languages Act. To them, a bilingual person is first of all a French-speaking Canadian who can work in English! To them, the concept of functional bilingualism has been created to calm this fear and mistrust by increasing the use of French as a working language to the same extent as English in the Public Service. This, Mr. Speaker,—I repeat once again—in some regions of Canada where the two language groups are significantly represented.

• (1250)

[English]

The government looks to the principles on bilingualism in the public service as an important milestone in the implementation of the policy on official languages; in direct continuity with the statement by the late Prime Minister, Lester B. Pearson in 1966; with the Official Languages Act of 1969, which received the support of all parties in this House and with the statement of the Prime Minister in 1970 relating to Book III of the Report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. Nevertheless, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the present session, the government feels that the House should be given the opportunity of expressing its views with the purpose of achieving a consensus on the principles.

I am pleased to inform the House that the staff associations of the public service were continuously consulted from the date of my announcement of the principles with regard to the development of the Treasury Board guidelines that give administrative application to the principles.

I would like to make special mention of the forum in which these consultations took place, the National Joint Council. The achievements of this unique organization are too numerous to enumerate here. Members of both sides of this House interested in the subject of staff relations in the public service are well acquainted with them. I would merely wish for the record to state my own satisfaction with the manner in which the National Joint Council rose to the occasion of ensuring effective consultation on this most complex and potentially divisive subject. A permanent committee of the National Joint Council will be established to provide a continuing forum for consultation on official language matters.

The guidelines on the language requirements of positions, as they now stand ready to be circulated by the Secretary of the Treasury Board, bring to the principles only greater precision of detail with regard to the timetable of their implementation, the sectors and areas of application, the specific procedures protecting the jobs and careers of unilingual employees, the necessary mechanism of on-going consultation with the parties concerned and the setting of priorities for access to language training.

The first two principles cover the identification of the language requirements of all jobs in the public service. Principles three, four and five relate to the procedures for staffing positions in the public service with respect to language requirements. The last four principles cover the entitlement of individuals.

No one principle in those nine is more important than another, Mr. Speaker, and all are inseparable from the notion of a public service for all Canadians. In the resolution before you, the principles are derived from two fundamentals: first, Canadians should be able to receive service from, and to communicate with, the federal government in either English or French, whichever is the language of their choice. Second, Canadians who work for the Government of Canada should be able, as a general rule, to work in the language of their choice.

[Translation]

It is interesting to note that although most Canadians have supported these proposals there was a clearly divided reaction to implementation policies. Some French-speaking Canadians considered those policies as slowing down efforts to create a functionally bilingual Public Service; although many English-speaking Canadians reacted favourably in view of the fact that the proposals supplied the clarification and the guarantees they wanted, some felt that implementation of bilingualism should be postponed for some three years. I believe that all those who felt that the policies would slow down or delay creation of a bilingual Public Service were mistaken since instead of considering the policies as a whole they considered them in isolation. Let me clarify this point.

[English]

I would like to make a clear distinction in the difference between the 1975 target percentages for bilingual employees for each occupational category, first proposed by the Public Service Commission and subsequently confirmed in the management objectives for bilingualism in the public service which I announced before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates in March 1971, and the 1978 deadline for designation of bilingual positions. Far from being one other change, this process will mark an important turning point; accelerating previous efforts to achieve a proper form of functional bilingualism in the Public Service of Canada.

The 1975 figure refers to numbers of people in each occupational category who should be bilingual by 1975, irrespective of whether they are in positions that require bilingualism. The 1978 date refers to positions that require knowledge of both official languages and that should generally be filled by that date by bilingual persons. Using the executive category as an example, the 1975 target called for 60 per cent of those in that category to become bilingual; the 1978 deadline will require 90 per cent of the positions to be occupied by bilinguals, a somewhat different picture and hardly a slowing down of our efforts. I should add, however, that the same increase in the number of those who will be required to become bilingual will not occur in other categories. The effect on the executive category is strongly influenced by the fact that most of these positions are in Ottawa. Why then the 1978 target date for the designation of bilingual positions? The answer is critical to the issue in point.

The 1975 targets aimed at achieving a pool of bilingual individuals, irrespective of the language requirement of their jobs. This posed a management problem in so far as it made it difficult to evaluate the benefit language training was bringing the public service in its day-to-day bilingual profile. After two years of closely monitoring bilingualism, the conclusion became clear. The successful achievement of the targets for 1975 would not induce or guarantee the realization of the complete list of all 11 objectives for bilingualism in the public service which I outlined to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates in March 1971. The successful development of bilingual skills in individuals does not lead to the achievement of a functionally bilingual public service. This development must be related to jobs where these skills are required and can be used.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House met at 2 p.m.

Mr. Drury: Before we adjourned for lunch, Mr. Speaker, I was outlining the problem caused as a result of the earlier endeavour to introduce bilingualism by looking at groups of people rather than at institutions. Having discerned the difficulties into which this approach led us, I am now prepared to suggest that a more effective approach has been to identify precisely the positions in which bilingualism is required and the date by which these positions will be filled by bilingual persons, always recognizing, of course, the entitlement offered to employees under the nine principles. This is why the government looks upon these arrangements as a furthering of established policies rather than as a departure from them.

[Translation]

Although some French-speaking Canadians felt at first that the nine principles benefited English-speaking Canadians more, their apprehension is understandable. English-speaking Canadians have only been considering the establishment of a bilingual public service for a few years; French-speaking Canadians have been aware of its lack for more than 100 years. Some French Canadians aimed their criticism at the protection enjoyed by unilingual civil servants, stating that our decision to that effect would impede the implementation of bilingualism.

Such an attitude, Mr. Speaker, ignores too many essential factors. It takes for granted that the unilinguals involved are exclusively English-speaking; that they systematically reject the possibility of acquiring second-language skills; that if they could not or would not become bilingual they would refuse a transfer to another position. That is completely false, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that such an attitude only creates dissent. The principles announced, including principle No. 6, were developed for all Canadians, for all public servants, whether English- or French-speaking.

Of course the number of unilingual public servants who are Anglophones is by far greater than the number of those who are Francophones. But such a disproportion is drastically reduced when considering only those areas of the Public Service where bilingualism is a foreseeable or established need. The government feels that members of both groups are entitled to job security in case of inability or refusal to become bilingual in recognition of newly recognized linguistic requirements for the position they occupy.

Furthermore, I for one am not prepared to question the integrity or the good will of public servants, or to presume, as some have done, that a majority or even a substantial number of unilinguals will reject the possibility offered them of becoming bilingual under the most favourable conditions. When such situations occur, departments and agencies will receive the required funds from the Treasury Board to take alternative administrative action in order to satisfy linguistic requirements.

[English]

In certain cases, the price of ensuring linguistic equality in the public service may indeed result in some additional positions being provided. However, I expect more often than not in such cases the option of a job transfer will be satisfying or even attractive to the employees, thus eliminating the need for alternative administrative arrangements.

• (1410)

We are determined that the development of bilingualism in the public service will be the product of evolution. The government acknowledges that such evolution is achieved at the cost of considerable outlays, of goodwill and of individual effort. The tempo of change we seek is based on our readiness to rely on the goodwill of the men and women who make up the public service of Canada, the staff associations, this government and members of parliament.

I should like to say that the support of the Chairman of the Public Service Commission to these principles and guidelines was indispensable to their successful development. The Public Service Commission has taken on a demanding task ranging from the determination of language proficiency levels required for individual positions, the administration of the merit principle in respect of appointments as required by the Public Service Employment Act, the reorganization of language schools so as to provide for continuous language training, to the hearing of appeals against the improper determination of the language requirements of positions.

The most notable development, however, touches on the subject of competitions for the minority of public service jobs which will be designated as bilingual. In order not to prevent Canadians from getting into the service of their country through lack of a language skill, which they may not have had the opportunity to acquire, unilingual English or French-speaking Canadians will be allowed to compete for bilingual positions if they have indicated their willingness to become bilingual. The Public Service Commission has extended such an advantage to present employees of the government as well as to new entrants, Mr. Speaker. Such candidates judged successful in respect of job requirements other than second-language skills will be given immediate access to continuous language training, at the completion of which they will be confirmed in their positions. Candidates unsuccessful in language training will also be provided with an opportunity for a review of their ability in the second language. In the event that they are unable to acquire the necessary level of bilingual ability, they will be given an equivalent unilingual job with no loss of earnings.

The Treasury Board's contribution with regard to these procedures will be to provide the parties with the means to replace those on language training and to ensure that positions are available for those who may be unsuccessful in language training. The Treasury Board will also be responsible for co-ordinating and monitoring the complex administrative task of implementing the guidelines.

The resolution before you, Mr. Speaker, does not spell out the timetable for the implementation of the nine principles; and I would like to explain this further.

The first step, known as the identification of positions requiring the knowledge and use of both French and English, will be completed by December 31 of this year, although we will be pressed to achieve this. The list of those positions, to be prepared by the departments and agencies, will be reviewed by the Treasury Board and with the staff associations.

The formal designation of positions as "bilingual" will follow the identification step by 15 months, and thus be effected progressively from April 1, 1975 to the end of 1978. Employees, will, therefore, have at least 15 months notice of the effective date of designation of the positions they occupy. Prior to the designation taking effect, unilingual persons in these positions will be able to take language training of up to 12 months at public expense.

After the identification of bilingual positions, the language requirements of all other positions in the public service will be listed on the following basis: English essential, French essential, or optional use of French or English.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the principle that entitled long-service employees, those with 10 years continuous service in 1966 when Mr. Pearson addressed this House on the same issue, to have access without second-language skills to positions identified as bilingual. The Prime Minister in his address, has commented at length on the fulfilling of the commitments made to public servants by Mr. Pearson.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should also point out that the Public Service Commission has for some time been hearing appeals against the language requirements of any position at the time that a selection process is taking place to fill vacant positions; whether unilingual or bilingual. This appeal route will be an added preventative to incorrect identification of the language requirements of the position as well as against the incorrect assignment of the level of language competence required.

One element absent from the government's program on official languages is compulsion; its only excess, in the eyes of some, is compassion. If these are faults, Mr. Speaker, the government is prepared to bear with them. For no person now in the employment of the Public Service of Canada will be compelled to become bilingual. On the contrary, as I have previously emphasized, the government's policy is intended to allow those who wish to remain unilingual to do so. I am sure, however, that the opportunities given to become bilingual will commend themselves to public servants and all Canadians.

The implementation of these principles and the adoption of this resolution is an invitation; an invitation to public servants, an invitation to staff associations, an invitation to all Canadians and, Sir, an invitation to the representatives of all Canadians in this House, to give unqualified support to the implementation of a policy first put to this House by Prime Minister Pearson, and so heartily endorsed by the leaders of all parties in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, deep down I am convinced that we are now writing a page in history of which our fellow-citizens and future generations will either be critical or proud, depending on whether we have acted with prejudice or foresight.

I shall support wholeheartedly the amendment of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the motion before the House, all the more so because the last part of it deals with the crying need to attract more Francophones to the Public Service and give them more recognition.

I sincerely hope that the present debate will continue in the same non partisan vein as the first interventions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis).

The linguistic challenge made by Canada, I accept and, like so many others, I intend to act upon it actively.

I want to place myself well above emotional considerations, on the level of facts and needs.

Even now in 1973, the situation of bilingualism in the Public Service, statistics on the subject, everything prompts us to speak on this motion in terms of justice.

As eloquent, I was about to say sadly eloquent as those figures maybe which were conveyed to us in answer to the relevant questions asked by our colleagues of the Social Credit Party, or again following the publication of the second annual report of the official languages commissioner, how much more specific and more striking, Mr. Speaker, would they not be if we could refer today to the famed and long awaited Coulombe report on the efficiency of the bilingualism programs in the Public Service.

By the way, I should like to urge all my colleagues in this House to join me in requesting the publication of that report without delay.

This synthetic report should not be reserved for the sole use of the government. That this tool cannot be used as a source of information during our proceedings is surely inexplicable and therefore shameful.

I hope that the Fox report on the creation of bilingual districts, whose publication is scheduled for the fall of 1973, will be make public sooner.

If there is an area where we must not fear to face the facts, however hard they may seem to some people, it is that of our two official languages, in other words, linguistic justice.

Some recent data—I shall mention two for the consideration of my colleagues—show that in 1971, out of 66,675 positions "called" by the Public Service Commission and by federal departments, only about 8 per cent required a unilingual French-speaking incumbent, while approximately 80 per cent, that is ten times more, required English only.

Here is now another statistics, one among many which discloses the unfair situation in which French-speaking Canadians find themselves: in 1972, contrary to the recommendations of the 1962 Dion report, only 12 per cent of high officials were French-speaking and half of them only were from Quebec.

Therefore it is on the basis of those facts and many others and in view of the challenge that Parliament, I insist Parliament, accepted in July 1969 with the adoption of the Official Languages Act, that all fair-minded people should talk about bilingualism in Public Service.

Yet in all fairness and realistically, we must be concerned with the only and real purpose of the law, namely the equality of the French and English languages in the federal government with the specific purpose of providing the Canadian public whenever possible and the need warrants it with federal services in both official languages; moreover, we must as much as possible allow all federal employees to work with language of their choice, usually their mother tongue.

Then we can talk about institutional bilingualism relations with the public, and working language in federal institutions.

Consequently, if we want the words justice, equity and equality to mean something, all of us we must take effective steps in the recruiting and promotion of federal employees particularly those who are likely to deal with the public. For the same reasons, and if need be in other ciecumstances and places, we will also have to make sure that many of the recommendations and suggestions of the official languages Commissioner will be followed up.

Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues, in our studies and even when dealing with legislation, let us keep these considerations in mind. Let us not be distracted by untruths, by false pretences or still by extremes in our way or the other.

In order to do useful work in this essential field so urgent for the future of Canada, let us not, for pity's sake, get all confused and mislead the Canadian public, plunging it also into confusion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the reality of multiculturalism. It is desirable no doubt to encourage and preserve the various cultures which make our Canadian society more valuable. But let us not get confused making them all equal. Canada will and must continue to have two prevailing cultures, and we know which ones; they are part and parcel of our Canadian heritage. And along with my colleagues, here, I have regard for the culture of each of the ethnic groups in this country. I say what a rich cultural contribution to the real Canadian mosaic that is ours! And a moral and financial endeavour on the part of the state should recognize that situation without altering for all that the already precarious balance of the Canadian challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I am all the more at ease to say so since the first member for the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe in this House was a Polish immigrant, the Hon. Edward Kierzkowsi. It was an almost wholly French-Canadian population that elected him as their member as early as 1867, and one can see that long before today Saint-Hyacinthe was proud of accepting people from outside who soon sank their roots deep into Canadian soil.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House, in the name of justice itself, should arouse and command unanimous assent.

That being said, I shall repeat my words of last December 15, on the day after the Treasury Board communiqué was published, dealing with nine new official language policy principles in the Public Service.

The position announced then was—and I am well aware of the terms I am using—a step backward from the objectives of the legislation passed in 1969, a backward movement that others have more justly described as strategic withdrawal. It was a backward movement first as to the expiring date. The expiring date of the identification of bilingual positions was the end of December 1973. As to the period for appointments to such positions, it was to extend until December 1978. It was a withdrawal also as to the territory concerned. We are not thinking anymore of Canada as a whole but of Quebec and certain areas in Ontario and New Brunswick. Moreover, they did not want to give the exact percentage or the number of public servants who could hold senior positions or others of bilingual character. And especially, a consequence that could lead some people to cynicism, they did little to encourage Quebecers, far from it, to contribute in a greater number to the enrichment of the federal Public Service.

In fact, however, one must admit that the administrative measures of December 14 last—perhaps because they have been made more complete in the resolution before the House by specific clauses in respect to French-speaking people—serve—and such may be their advantage—as a criterion for measuring the extent, the depth of the problem, and the seriousness of the real challenge facing us.

Mr. Speaker, although I appreciate here the impatience of our colleagues of the Social Credit Party, I cannot agree with their approach to this problem. By its very nature, the amendment they have proposed but which has not yet been adopted, deviates from the legislator's original design and distorts and by-passes the true objective of the Official Languages Act in Canada. To concur with this amendment would be to go against what they had in mind and transform, through a parallel public service, French-Canadians into second class citizens.

I, for one, believe that this motion as a whole, in its present form, exemplifies the challenge facing us. It is very significant and reflects, as it should, the philosophy and the strategy of the intended bilingualism; and this is the purpose of our amendment once incorporated into the Official Languages Act, to enforce this legislation and ensure the protection of all civil servants' rights and the possible recourse to the courts, in cases of infringements of the act; because, if certain resolutions may leave some hon. members unmoved, no one, and no government, is above the law. Our respect for linguistic rights urges us to engrave them in an authentical legal instrument.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of the differentiation that must be made between the philosophy of bilingualism and a bilingual strategy for a public service. There are few in this House who would differ on the issue of the principle of bilingualism and its desirability. Where the differences emerge is on the question of strategy. From the point of view of either the English or French Canadians, it is clear that the strategy of the existing government has simply not been successful. The Language Commissioner has said that progress in the area of opening up access to the public service to French Canadians has not been rapid enough. Figures put before the standing committee of this House a couple of weeks ago by the Language Commissioner indicate that more than 70 per cent of those complaints looked into by the Commissioner came from public servants who have French as their mother tongue.

It is clear that both English and French public servants have had ample cause for dissatisfaction and unease. That is why my party takes the view that, as a parliament, we must move to enshrine in law the nine points put forward in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) resolution as well as that portion of the resolution that is a firm commitment to rectifying the imbalance in the public service and recruiting where possible public servants from our Francophone community.

The initial speaker for the Creditistes said that we should deal with the realities of Canada and see things as they are. I imagine that the fundamental reality of Canada is that there are in our society, as in any other, those who have little patience and no tolerance. Whether we speak of a mayor in one province or a party leader in another, intolerance supported from a public office is a sin of unmentionable magnitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: It was my privilege to serve in the government of a province where the minority happen to be English speaking. Having been involved in the administration of justice at all levels, I might say that I am particularly hurt and shocked by the views expressed by one political leader to the effect that only French should be used in the courts of Quebec. That is the type of suggestion that flies in the face of everything this land is supposed to stand for, and it is the type of suggestion that indicates how important this debate is and can be. Yet, to be frank, many provinces with French speaking minorities have not progressed as far as Quebec with reference to its attitude toward its English speaking population.

I say quite candidly that the report issued by the French Canadian Association here in Ontario must be disturbing to all men and women of decency. In a nutshell, the reports indicate that earning opportunity is limited for Franco-Ontarian families when compared with other Ontario citizens. Surely if this were true, this would be the type of de facto economic discrimination that Canada could do without. If bilingualism is to work, it must be the product of not only faith, of which the Prime Minister spoke, but also of trust. The resolution proposed by the government relates to the issue of faith. Indeed, it constitutes an affirmation of faith by this House. The amendment put forward by my leader makes this resolution an instrument of trust. I beseech my colleagues on all sides of the House to make use of that instrument.

[Translation]

This position being established, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wish with so many others that by the end of this debate, the primary intention of the 1969 Parliamentarians will come out clearly, firmly and neatly. Let the whole federal Public service and the 150 federal agencies realize the urgency of making bilingualism a reality within the federal Public Service. Let all Parliamentarians—all of us—realize the importance of their role before the Canadian public in this respect. All of us, from all political parties, must buy 100 per cent in order to sell 100 per cent the objective of the Official Languages Act. Let provincial governments, various agencies throughout the country, private firms, be more and more aware of their social role, as Mr. Keith Spicer so rightly put it, and let them follow suit. The final solution to the problem of bilingualism—and this will never be said enough—cannot come from the Parliament of Canada alone.

As for myself, further to the remarks that I am making today, I intend actually to become the apostle of bilingualism. More specifically, I shall see to it that in this Parliament the objective of the Act is respected.

As a Quebecker, I shall also see to it that Quebeckers, and generally French-speaking Canadians, be served in good French. Along with others, I do not want, for instance, that our French-speaking farmers be wronged—even only temporarily—in their rights and their dues, because of badly filled out forms, which were worded in poor French;

Furthermore, in due time, I intend to deal with, the comments made by the Commissioner to the official languages, concerning bilingualism within the External Affairs Department. The image of Canada as a bilingual country, must stand out throughout the world.

Finally, within my party if need be, I intend to be consistent as my remarks will show. And at this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to a pay another tribute to Leader of the Official Opposition for his stand concerning this motion, and for his commendable efforts, which are already paying off, to master the French language.

In closing, I join with Mr. Keith Spicer is saying:

> Plainly, departments and agencies must find more room for unilingual French-speaking Canadians, or the vicious circle of low French-language recruitment and few federal opportunities to work in French will go on forever. Easy slogans can neither solve nor disguise this problem. The Commissioner hopes that the Government will move quickly to find policies on linguistic work rights, on administrative settings where French-speaking Canadians feel at home, and on more balanced opportunities in recruitment. All these, and nothing less, can make the Official Languages Act the instrument of full linguistic equality which Parliament intended.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to borrow these words from the founder of the Jeunesse ouvrière catholique canadienne, and say to you, by changing his words a little: Canada will end in triumph or in disaster.

It depends on you, it depends on me, but you and I, can change the course of history.

[English]

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it was only a few weeks ago that we were debating a resolution on this question presented by the members of the Social Credit party. Those of us who spoke at that time will find ourselves more or less forced to repeat some of the things we said then. I used to worry about this matter of repeating one's self. As a matter of fact, I come from a profession where repeating one's self was a necessity, but now I discover I am in one where repeating one's self is a virtue, and so I will not hesitate to go over a few of the points I made at that time and to add a few new ones, particularly on matters that have come to light and to consideration under this particular resolution.

The other week I made some point about the importance of making distinctions in this very important question, and I am glad to report what I am sure many members have noticed over the past few years, that we have all learned more about the matter that is before us as the years have gone by and as our deliberations have become more informed and more searching. I would ask members of the House to remember the days in 1963-64 when the debate on bilingualism and biculturalism, as it was called then, began in earnest, and to recall some of the terminology we used to try to describe for our own understanding the state of affairs that existed in Canada, and to try to describe the goals we would seek to achieve. If we were to go back to those documents, indeed to the statement Prime Minister Pearson made on the day he announced the establishment of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, we would see that we have come a long way. Some of the terminology we used in the past we would now find totally inadequate. Indeed, in this process we may note that our learning process had accelerated in the past four or five years.

I could not help but listen yesterday to the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and compare them with the remarks he made a few years ago. I listened to his use of the terms that are so important in this great national debate. In his speech yesterday, he was very careful to limit the debate on this point to the application and working out of the Official Languages

Act in the Public Service of Canada. I would quote a phrase or two referring to this resolution and its status among other matters facing this House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

• (1450)

The throne speech has proposed measures to improve urban life, and to widen opportunities for western Canadians; to deal with many economic and regional expansion problems; and with what some call "the language problem". They are all on our agenda for this session; we will deal with them all with equal vigour.

In a later passage, making more or less the same point the Prime Minister said:

Mr. Speaker, language policy is not an idée fixe with this government; it is one of the means toward our two pre-eminent goals, national unity, and equality of opportunity.

Here, I stress the Prime Minister's words:

... it is one of the means toward our two pre-eminent goals, national unity, and equality of opportunity.

"one of the means", Mr. Speaker. A few years ago the intimation might have been different. It might have been that it was the primordial means, and not only the primordial means, but a sufficient means toward the goal of national unity. I continue to quote from the Prime Minister's address:

To a Quebecker a more desirable Canada may vitally depend on respect for language rights. To a westerner more interest may currently attach to whether this government and their own provincial premiers make real progress at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. In many parts of the country millions of Canadians will judge their government less by the language it speaks than by whether it provides equity and compassion in our social welfare system, or new ideas and resources to help keep urban life liveable and urban government workable.

Can all these needs be understood and tackled together, Mr. Speaker? I think they can—

That is the end of the citation from the Prime Minister's address. I have gone over these two passages very carefully because to me they signal an important change in attitude and outlook. I will not venture to say a change of mind or change of idea, but a change of attitude which allows the Prime Minister and his government to place the Official Languages Act and its application in its proper context.

Let me continue on this matter of distinctions. It is now realized that we are not to equate the Official Languages Act and its provisions and its carrying out, with bilingualism in this country; they are not the same thing. Nor should we equate the Official Languages Act and its provisions with the establishment, maintenance and preservation of national unity in this country; they are not the same thing. To use a classical, logical distinction, Mr. Speaker, which I think is very important in this case, I believe we could say that the proper application, the generous application of the Official Languages Act and its provisions ensures a necessary condition, but not a sufficient condition, for the maintenance of national unity.

This distinction is an extremely important one because in the past many Canadians both inside this House and outside this House have heard remarks to the effect that the application of the Official Languages Act, essentially the sine qua non for national unity, is the approach which would establish and develop national unity. There was always a suggested corollary to this kind of statement, and it was that any criticisms of the Official Languages Act and its application was tantamount to disloyalty—not disloyalty to a party or disloyalty to a government but disloyalty to an idea, the idea of Canada. We have come a long way, Mr. Speaker, since those days of 1968, a very long way because now, as members of this House, we can feel that we can stand up and criticize the specific application of the Official Languages Act, criticize the progress or lack of progress of bilingualism and language opportunity in the civil service, criticize the very proposals put forward by the government this day without feeling we are in any way disloyal. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that is a very large measure of progress.

I feel that is important for myself, among many others, because in many ways I am not satisfied with the state of affairs in the public service, with the state of bilingualism in Canada, with the Official Languages Act or with its application. Later in my remarks I propose to make some very specific comments to that end. Let me repeat that I, as a Canadian, appreciate the fact that I can finally stand up and state my case without there being any intimation whatsoever that I am somehow being disloyal because I do not agree with an act proposed by a specific government at a specific time in the history of my nation.

Basically, my feeling about the Official Languages Act, Mr. Speaker, a feeling which is shared by many of my party and many people out in the country, is that this act is the least we can do with respect to the bilingual nature of our country. If we did less we would lapse into insensitivity and niggardliness. There may be defects in the act, and there may be defects in the application of the act, but at the very least it provides us with an earnest of our intention and this intention is to bring about language equality in the public service. Note, Mr. Speaker, I do not say equality of opportunity for language equality in the public service because I certainly distinguish my position and that of my party. I hope, from that of the Prime Minister on that point. The Prime Minister is after all, and he has not been hiding the fact these last several years, a liberal. I use that word with the small "l", Mr. Speaker; he is even a big "L" Liberal but I am now talking about the fact that he is a small "l" liberal and, therefore, it should not be surprising to any of us that he should speak as a liberal.

I come back to the phrase I repeated a short time ago—"our two pre-eminent goals, national unity and equality of opportunity". These are not my goals, Mr. Speaker. My goals would ring a little more like those of national unity or, preferably, national solidarity but I will not quibble over those two words today—national unity and equality of condition. The words "equality of opportunity" make the Prime Minister a liberal and the words "equality of condition" make me a socialist. That is fine; we understand the distinction. It is clear. I appreciate, of course, the Liberal position. I think I even understand it. As a matter of fact, I understand it so well that I understand its internal contradictions. I remember that a few years ago, in 1968, there was a contest for the leadership of the Liberal party. The person who is now Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was one of the candidates. He epitomized the Liberal position in his address to the convention when he said, "We Liberals do not believe that everybody should end the same, but we believe that everybody should start the same."

• (1500)

He got a huge round of applause, as well he should from the Liberal crowd because he was speaking the very essence of Liberal philosophy—equality of opportunity. Of course, neither he nor anybody else in that room seemed aware of the obvious contradiction inherent in that statement, which was this: how can everybody start the same—we all start as children—unless everybody else more or less ends the same? After all, the people who have children are parents. I do not think you could ever sort it out, but more people are beginning to ponder this assertion.

At any rate, it should not surprise us that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should translate this touchstone of Liberal philosophy into the whole question of language equality in Canada and, specifically, language opportunity in Canada. All the measures that flow from this basic premise, this basic outlook are founded on this approach which is based on opportunity. That is why, of course, I find them insufficient. I will come back to that later.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the House other distinctions because there are, as I said before, extremely important distinctions to be made here.

[Translation]

When I looked a little closer at what was suggested in the resolution before us, I found it wanting in some respects. In a sense, I agree with this resolution, but in another I say not only that such a resolution is a step backward, as it is claimed in certain parts of the country, but that it is ill-timed. How? Inasmuch as it fails to suggest any aims, objectives which will eventually give us what this resolution is striving for, namely linguistic equality in the public service.

From experience, I know very well, Mr. Speaker, that it is possible for us to urge people to do this and that, to act in a certain way but if we keep on urging without acting, we remain at a standstill; like preachers in the pulpit, we are urging the faithful to behave in a certain way, because at the end there is the eternal paradise, and not the alternative which I shall not mention here today.

I am coming to this, Mr. Speaker:

[English]

Somebody said, "The other place". I am referring to the other other place, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I am coming back to this: If we want to establish on a sound basis equal language rights in the Public Service, we will have to tackle directly and eagerly the problem of recruiting, because if we simply play with the rules before us, we will never achieve anything, or it will be too late.

I would like to talk again about this issue of recruiting in a moment, when I deal with other differences, as I promised a few moments ago.

However, first of all, I would like to touch on another aspect of this issue of bilingualism. Although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said yesterday that we would deal specifically with the resolution on official languages today, we should never ignore the fact that because we are here in Ottawa, in this parliament or in the public service of Canada, we are not separated from the rest of the country. There are certain facts to be recognized, to say the least, Mr. Speaker, that are a little disturbing. I have already acknowledged them, but I think it is important to reiterate them and draw the attention of parliamentarians to them.

It may be possible for us today to promote bilingualism gradually within the public service, but the fact is that in Canada, we are going backwards.

A few years ago, our fellow citizens were proposed this objective of a bilingual country, of a country where not only everybody could feel at home, where not only every citizen would be entitled to live and act in the language of his or her choice and only in that language, if he or she only spoke one, if, as the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson and the Prime Minister had suggested strongly in their statements, we had established an objective in order to come one of these days to a situation in which a large number of Canadians might be personally bilingual. And I do not speak of institutional bilingualism but I say "personally bilingual".

I myself have always believed that this is a real objective, but I must admit that we do not take throughout this country measures which will enable us to achieve it. On the contrary, we are moving backwards. I quoted a few figures recently and I will quote them again because they are very important.

Throughout Canada, especially in English Canada, one can see that the number of students learning a second language in our schools is gradually decreasing and there are reasons for it, Mr. Speaker. A few years ago, university authorities decided that it was no longer necessary for students requesting admission to universities, to be able to speak, read or write a second language. And all universities, one after the other, dropped this requirement. Finally, high schools, Departments of Education in most provinces also dropped this requirement at the secondary level.

Let us see what is happening in Canada! In 1970-71, of all the young people who could have taken courses in French or another language except English, in English Canadian schools, only 55.7 per cent took such courses. And now, in 1972-73, that percentage has gone down to 47 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that percentage will still be more dreadful next year, because I know that in my province of Ontario, now there is a rule that says that no student needs to take a second language to graduate from a secondary school.

In a sense, Mr. Speaker, "the Ship of State" is becoming bilingual. The process is slow but sure, and our ship is moving landwards rather than seawards.

And although it ploughs through the waters, it is slipping back, running a ground. We are not going forward, Mr. Speaker, but backwards. First, it is important to know that if we are to consider this resolution, we must not debate it apart from the facts existing in our country.

[English]

I made this point before. I said at the beginning of my remarks that it was necessary to repeat, so I will make the point again. Even with proper and total discussion of this act, and proper and total application of the rules, or even amending to the best possible extent all the items coming under this act, we will not solve the problem that is facing our nation.

Two centuries ago the famous author, Jonathan Swift, wrote a book entitled "Gulliver's Travels." In the third volume of that book he described the island of Laputa. I recommend the reading of that book by hon. members. On the island of Laputa there were some disinterested, extremely rational beings who debated at great length, in the most logical fashion, what they thought was the order of reality. However, these beings, who were supposed to be the rulers or governors of the country below, were floating out of sight and out of mind. This is why I stress the importance of the related issue before us. This is why I ask members of the government as well as the other members of this House to reconsider certain policies or lack of policy.

I ask the members of the government, particularly those who have to deal with post-secondary financing, to address themselves to the problem of second language requirement for university entrance. After all, this used to exist universally in Canada some ten years ago and it should be possible for the federal authorities, sitting in consultation with the provincial authorities and in confrontation—I use that word advisedly—with the university authorities in this country to say to them, "we wish to restore this requirement. We wish to see inscribed in the rules for admission to our universities the fact that a student should be able to present evidence of achievement in a second language."

I am not even going to suggest a specific language. Let us just leave it at a second language. I believe—indeed, I happen to know—that in English Canada the second language for most students would be French. They are not fools. They know the importance of French in this country. They know the value and importance of the French language in literature and history. They will choose French. However, if you insist that they choose French you will run into the impossible argument of somebody saying, "Why not Italian?"—and you will spend the next ten years discussing that; the country will have run another ten years toward the other place I referred to a while ago.

When the ministers of this government who are in charge of the policies that have to do with the provision of funds to the provinces for the encouragement of bilingualism—and we have been spending quite a bit of money in this area over the past couple of years, and propose to spend more—consult the provinces, they should insist that these moneys indeed go for the purposes of furthering bilingualism, innovation in teaching the second language, and not simply for the purpose of supporting programs which already exist. Otherwise we will have figures like the ones I am now going to quote back to haunt us every year.

In Ontario, in 1970-71, out of the total number of students enrolled in high schools and capable of studying French, 47.5 per cent were studying French. I do not mean studying French in every year of high school. These figures tell us they studied it once, took one course. This figure of 47.5 per cent is good compared to the figure for 1972-73: it has now dropped to 39.4 per cent. What we are looking at here is part of an accelerated downward progression.

If I cannot get my point across by quoting figures, perhaps I can symbolize it by referring to something which has struck me over the years. We live in a bilingual country. One institution in this country is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It has two parts: in English Canada we know it as the CBC, and in French Canada as Radio Canada. I have admired and respected this corporation over the years, but one thing that burns me is the simple fact that on the news programs even the most highly qualified announcers can rarely pronounce a French Canadian name correctly.

It may seem like a small point, but I have seen the CBC pay a lot of attention to the accurate pronunciation of names of people from very far away. I have admired them. I could never pronounce those names accurately. I say to myself that somebody must be doing research. More important, there is somebody who is concerned. However, when I listen to the horrible mangling of names of people who live in this country, I say to myself that there cannot be anybody there who is concerned. You can have theoretical concern, but if it has no practical consequence you might as well not have it. I do not mean to single out the CBC for criticism; I just use them to underline a point.

I will end this part of my remarks with a brief quotation from the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. He states in his report:

• (1520)

From our observation post we definitely do not have the impression that the cause of bilingualism is advancing with giant steps.

The statement drips with irony. It is a very serious accusation. How can we advance the progress of biculturalism or language equality, in the civil service at least? I began my remarks by dealing specifically with the resolution before us and advancing some considerations which should be brought to its application. A while ago I was thinking about the important difference between equality of opportunity and equality of condition. I happen to believe we shall only achieve language equality in the civil service when we adopt the second statement, equality of condition, as our fundamental working premise. The first speaker for the Social Credit party said the principle ought to be "celle de la participation."

[Translation]

—that of participation. As I stated two weeks ago, I disagree with the policy which he specifically advocates, but I recognize the importance of the principle he lends to that policy which is the following. As long as we do not give full support to the idea of participation which will make us concentrate on recruitment, we will never attain linguistic equality in the Civil Service.

I would like to recall, Mr. Speaker, the promise made by the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson in 1966 and I quote:

In the recruitment and training of its members, the Civil Service must reflect the cultural and linguistic values of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians.

I know quite well that it is a rather comprehensive statement, but still it contains a very important principle.

We note that he is trying to stress two ideas, two things: recruitment and training of civil servants.

[English]

So until we come to a full realization that we need to establish something like quotas, and pursue these quotas actively, we shall find ourselves snared year after year by the task of trying to work out linguistic equality using means which simply will not work: means, moreover, which will greatly exacerbate feelings on both sides. We were given an indication yesterday by the Prime Minister, that we do not have all the time in the world in which to solve this problem. So let us proceed as quickly as we can to a reconsideration of the whole approach.

In sum, I should like to stress the two main points I have been making. First, the Official Languages Act and the resolution before us are not concerned with national unity but with linguistic justice in the public service. They are also concerned about the ability of Canadians to address their public servants in the language of their choice, a most important consideration. Second, if we wish to bring about bilingualism in Canada we need to search for other methods rather than the correct application of the Official Languages Act.

It is about time we in Ottawa took our heads out of the sand and began to realize that there is a vast country outside the gates in front of Parliament Hill. We had better start talking to the provinces about these matters which concern us, and not assume that the residents of the provinces are not citizens of Canada. Sometimes, in order to make distinctions between governments we begin to split our country up into parts which have nothing to do with reality.

Third, I should like to urge, for the consideration of the House and the government, that in approaching this whole question of language rights in the civil service in the future it is much more practical to seek to establish quotas than merely to designate certain roles in the public service as being bilingual. Such an approach has a far better chance of success.

• (1530)

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in this debate on the motion introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the issue of languages and the unity in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if we really want to maintain unity in Canada, this Parliament will necessarily have to take sound and positive action to bring about a final settlement of this issue and also achieve the goal which is to give equal opportunities to all Canadians in this country, irrespective of their language, colour, race or religion. Indeed the Canadian Constitution says that all Canadians must be treated on an equal basis.

What we have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to implement the constitution. It is not a question of changing it or changing its terms and conditions because I think we have a sound Constitution. It is rather a matter of enforcing it. The time has come when the Constitution must be truly implemented.

Then if the Constitution says that both races and other ethnic groups must be treated on an equal basis that equality must be made quite clear to all Canadians concerned.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to have the Constitution respected in Canada, everyone must be free to speak the language of his choice. That it what the Constitution says by and large and that is what we want, that is what Canadians want. At present, there are shortcomings in that respect.

The Constitution also says that everyone should have the right in Canada to be served and administered in one of the two official languages. That is a principle we must enforce because in Canada, we have ethnic groups who are not dealt with in their own language, and which is not respected as it should. We still have a long way to go in that respect.

Unilingualism cannot prevent a public servant from being promoted to a higher position. Therefore, we must set up, and the Parliament must set up and work out parallel administrations: one French and one English, within the federal departments. That is what is provided for in the Constitution, and that is what Canadians of every nationality are asking for.

And we also require tht all departments have two sections: one French and one English. The size of those sections would be according to the respective administrative needs. This means that the departments would not necessarily have the same number of employees, and they would form self-contained units with equal responsibilities up to the deputy minister level. It is at this price, Mr. Speaker, that we will settle that matter once and for all in Canada, and it is at this price that we will provide this unity that our country needs.

Each minister should therefore have one French-speaking and one English-speaking deputy minister, both having the same powers and the same responsibilities.

All the administrative fields coming under the provincial jurisdiction, according to the Constitution, would be turned back to the provincial authorities, provided it is agreed with each particular province. This will reduce to a minimum the number of public servants employed by some departments such as the Department of National Health and Social Welfare. Promotions would be exclusively based on merit in all departments.

As the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) pointed out yesterday, the English and French networks of the CBC are a fairly good example of administration. That corporation has two parallel administrations, well structured and therefore well protected.

The parallel administration we advocate would not be more costly than the expensive integral bilingualism the government is now striving for. In any event, Mr. Speaker, that is the cost we will have to pay to maintain Canadian unity.

Official Languages

Mr. Speaker, a study made by the Treasury Board reveals that the representation of Francophones and bilingual civil servants is not adequate. Bilingualism programs are neither effective nor adequate. Recruitment for top jobs still encourages a greater number of unilingual Anglophones.

National unity must be strengthened through equality of rights and opportunity for all Canadians, whether they speak English, French or another language. We maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the problem in this country is not a language problem but a problem of participation. Even if the whole federal administration were bilingual, nothing would be solved because French Canadians would not feel at home.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot solve the problem only through bilingualism. It is most important that the structures and the members of the administration be really distributed according to a fair percentage in relation to the relative importance of the ethnic elements which make up this country.

For a long time, Mr. Speaker, we have been living on hope; in 1969, when the Official Languages Act was passed, a great hope was born because we thought then that we would be offered something tangible to solve the problems of bilingualism. And that hope, we felt it and we thought that the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, which cost a great deal of money, would make suitable suggestions and find suitable solutions to really solve the problem. But such was not the case. This royal commission simply taught us that there were in Canada a certain number of French Canadians, a certain number of English Canadians and a certain number of Germans, Ukrainians, Polish and many other nationalities, and we were given percentages and numbers and this commission cost as we all know close to $9,500,000.

Mr. Speaker, this has cost a lot of money and it has not solved the problem. Many Canadians were disappointed, English speaking as well as French speaking. We were disappointed because this commission did not produce such great results.

But as statistics show, there has been no progress but a stagnation, and in certain areas, a regression. I would like to see us achieve an atmosphere of objectivity, of realism, devoid of any animosity akin to a struggle between two ethnic groups.

Mr. Speaker, we could quote figures. Several hon. members have already done so; we now know that the participation of ethnic groups is decreasing in the Public Service when it should be increasing; yes, it should have gone up considerably, but it has diminished. We therefore feel, Mr. Speaker, that we have lost ground on that score. We must therefore update, put back in evidence all facts, concretize them and act according to reality, to the logical and justified requests which are being made by various personalities, by those who have a vast knowledge of biculturalism, multiculturalism, etc.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, in order to establish a true system of equality here, they say and I quote:

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Excerpt from the conclusion of the report written on behalf of the task force on bilingualism of the Treasury Board by Mr. Gilbert Langelier. This report is entitled: French Language Units: machinery for implanting a system of equality in the Public Service. The sub-titles are those of Le Devoir.

The study may appear to some as being very critical of the present experiment.

We are aware of the possibility of such an interpretation. We would like here to clarify the grounds of our approach. We strongly believe that the implementation of true bilingualism in the Public Service implies that French must occupy an important place as a true language of work.

The government must take action to implement the principle of equality between French-speaking and English-speaking employees, a principle which is essential as long as the fact of working in French will be a disadvantage.

The government has started to implement a policy in that sense but it appears at this time to be too timid and weak to achieve the principle of equality. Obviously, it is only an experiment to better inform the government on the possibility of institutionalizing French Language Units as an element of organization and management.

However, thought must be already given to the components to be considered in the formulation of a policy of over-all bilingualism aimed at achieving the principle of equality between French-speaking and English-speaking employees in the Public Service. The implementation of such a policy will require co-operation and planning at the level of those responsible for bilingualism and will require available human and financial resources to bring about the necessary changes.

The study underway has clarified the nature of the necessary changes and stated ways of achieving them. We are aware of the amount of work that will be required to implement those changes but we firmly believe that their importance warrants perseverance and the necessary resources to carry them out. So, objective No. 4, which reads as follows:

"Secure gradually the place French deserves besides English as a language of work in the federal Public Service" should be made the priority objective of the new Bilingualism Division of the Treasury Board and grant the necessary recources to achieve it. Once this objective has been achieved, all the others will be much more easy to reach.

We hope finally that the point of view we have adopted will be properly understood and that people will recognize the FLU is the main agent for the realization of institutional bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not read the findings of the report any further: the rest is more of the same. But, Mr. Speaker, we are in complete agreement with the clause dealing with equality and with the Spicer report which also deals with equality and the opportunity of participation.

We entirely agree on that and we also agree, Mr. Speaker, on the preamble to the resolution of the right hon. Prime Minister. But we disagree with him on the methods he is proposing to apply those reforms.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to propose an amendment to the amendment of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the amendment moved by Mr. Stanfield be amended by adding, next after the words "and other appropriate statutes", the following words: "and the government studying the possibility of setting up, organizing and implementing a parallel administration, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, in all departments of the federal government;

(a) each department shall have two sections, one English, the other French; the size of these sections shall be proportional to the requirements of their respective administrative needs, which means that the departments shall not necessarily have the same number of employees;

(b) these departments shall be autonomous entities with equal responsibilities up to the deputy minister level, both the English-speaking and the French-speaking deputy ministers having similar authority and similar responsibilities;

(c) promotions in each department shall be based exclusively on merit.

Mr. Speaker, that is the motion I wish to propose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Would the hon. member for Compton have something to say?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again, we request earnestly that this motion be adopted. We would like that this motion be accepted, we would like that the feelings be a little unanimous, if I may say so.

Mr. Speaker, we are confident that we can give Canadians unity, that we can reinforce national unity to the extent that we give Canadians equal opportunities that are coming to them. This is the purpose of this motion: that there be equality in every respect within the government departments and that the participation of Canadians whatever their language, race or colour, be proportionate to their number.

Mr. Speaker, if we adhere to this principle, we will be on the way to unity and we will have, if we can achieve this unity, a great Canada, a united country, and thanks to some economic reforms, we will also have a prosperous nation.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Does the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) wish to speak to the subamendment on which I was about to give a ruling or ask for the assistance of hon. members?

[English]

As I have said, I am ready to render a decision on the subamendment. However, if any hon. member wishes to express an opinion I will listen to it.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should merely like to point out that I moved an amendment yesterday after the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Stanfield) moved his; I know the debate may be limited which is why we return to the charge today and my colleague for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) has moved a subamendment to the amendment of the leader of the official opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. With regard to the sub-amendment just moved by the hon. member for Compton, I certainly have doubts about its being in order, specifically about its having a bearing on the subject. May I refer to the 4th edition of Beauchesnes' Parliamentary Rules and Forms, before going into further details, and quote citation 202(3) on page 173 of the French version:

Since the purpose of a sub-amendment is to alter the amendment, it should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment but it should deal with matters that are not covered by the amendment; if it is intended to bring up matters foreign to the amendment, the member should wait until the amendment is disposed of and move a new amendment.

On that basis, I would like to explain to the hon. member that under that standing order, he will be able, after all, to move his motion later on during the debate. After the House has dealt with the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition—whether it is defeated or passed—the member could always move another amendment in accordance with the standing orders or move an amendment such as the one he moved yesterday.

Now, for the above reasons, especially the standing order which I have just quoted, and since it is possible that the hon. member will move an amendment later on during this debate, I have to declare the sub-amendment out of order.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting in this House for nearly 8 years now and one thing has always struck me. With the accumulation of words and the series of speeches on a given topic after a while we always end up forgetting about the basic issue of any debate.

This is why, I would like first to reiterate this afternoon the position that the government has defined as its own right at the opening of this debate, a position which will force us to refuse both the amendment introduced by the official opposition and a potential sub-amendment, which the chair has just indicated as possible.

First of all, let us explain how the government looks upon the present situation concerning the official languages. Everyone, except for a few dinosaurs—and if the term is not parliamentary, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to substitute brontosaurus or diplodocus,—everyone, except in a very few cases, accepts the principles which have been enshrined in the Official Languages Act.

This is why this resolution does not bring forth these principles. On the contrary, it is most practical, since it concerns the implementation of these principles. With this resolution, we are out of the realm of theory and concerned exclusively with implementation.

The time had come to leave theory behind and I say that it was time for everyone to get out of it. To support generally accepted principles is relatively easy. It hurts when it becomes more complex, when one has to implement these same principles.

I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I myself had such an experience when I was Secretary of State and was responsible to the government for the official languages policy.

At that time, everybody, except a few "dinosaurs" had already approved the Official Languages Act. And yet, I often had to answer members who repeatedly asked questions and questioned principles to which they actually had only paid lip service.

For instance, as soon as an unilingual public servant had to be transferred, even without a loss of salary or any other inconvenience to him, some hon. members who had welcomed the passage of the Official Languages Act started to cry out and denounce the injustice, without any evidence whatsoever. What is even more serious, these very people generally condemned the implementation of the act without ever giving one specific, possible and documented example, without even taking the trouble of proving anything, being satisfied, on the contrary, with spreading rumours that they had not checked or giving examples of dissatisfaction, the causes of which they had not even taken the trouble to establish.

I remember in particular the case of a public servant who was ineligible for a promotion in the city of Montreal and who claimed that after living 10 years in Montreal, he never, and I quote:

had the chance to learn French.

When I was asked myself on a television program what I thought of this public servant's comment, I answered to the reporter who was questioning me: I am going to answer by a question. If, after living 10 years in Toronto or even in Ottawa, I was to claim that I never had the chance to learn English, who would believe me? The reporters told me: You are not supposed to ask questions, we are. One of them then said: By refusing to answer, you gave me an eloquent answer.

It is really to put an end to such practices, which are extremely detrimental to the cause of the official languages in Canada, that the government introduced the resolution now before us, so that after the principles are approved, nobody afterwards can undermine the efforts at implementation on the pretext that he was not consulted on their application or that he disagrees with the terms and that he was never given the chance to say so.

• (1600)

Thanks to this resolution, hon. members now have the opportunity—and they should take advantage of it—to say where they stand in respect to the application of what they have already accepted in principle. The resolution proposes reasonable, sound, practical and realistic measures, as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has shown very well during debate.

So far, what is the basis for the opposition's objections on this matter? Except for the Social Credit Party—I shall come to that later—the opposition has made known its intention—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but it being four o'clock . . . Is the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) rising on a point of order?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member of the Conservative Party whose motion would ordinarily be dealt with during the next hour is, I understand, agreeable to forgoing private members' hour on the understanding that his motion retains its place. We could therefore continue with the present item of business for the next hour.

Mr. Baldwin: That is correct, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) is willing to make that sacrifice at this time in light of the subject which is being discussed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga).]

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Then, since there is unanimity to forego the private members' hour, the hon. Minister of Communications has the floor again.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the House and more particularly the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn).

So, I was going to say that, except for the Social Credit Party of Canada, to which I shall return in a moment, the opposition has stated its intent to support the resolution, for which I commend it and I rejoice like, doubtless, the overwhelming majority of members.

However, I would like to note as briefly as possible some points of disagreement which have been expressed by the Leader of the Official Opposition, last night, by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and finally by the spokesman for the Social Credit Party of Canada (Mr. Matte).

First, I would like to comment the amendment introduced by the official opposition and say that it is rather amusing for anyone who in 1969 took part in the debate previous to the passing of the Official Languages Act. In the course of that debate, and I was re-reading it this morning in Hansard, the position of the opposition was to the effect that it was useless—that was the word—to pass a bill concerning the official languages. That position was to the effect that the government had but to issue directives, take decisions at the executive level, and not to go through all the ceremonial of the passing of an act. That was a viewpoint, and I would not like by recalling it to take any credit from the opposition for having finally supported the Official Languages Act.

We were told that after all, as far as principles were concerned, we did not need a law. I cannot but be surprised to hear today that we have to legislate at the implementation level.

The reason why the government decided not to legislate in this case, was best explained by the Leader of the Opposition himself last night when he said, and I quote:

. . . that these guidelines have to be, and should be flexible, and that they have to be subject to change . . .

Obviously. But he asked afterwards:

. . . why are we being asked to endorse them in this House?

I believe I have just said why we are asking this House to approve them.

Why not enshrine them in a piece of legislation? Precisely because they have to be, to use the very words of the Leader of the Opposition: "flexible and subject to change".

Now, we all know from experience, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will admit it—that even to bring a very light change in the way of applying principles on which we have agreed, it is extremely costly to go through the legislative process which is quite painstaking, as everybody knows.

However, having established the precedent of submitting to the House for its approval the guiding principles of its endeavour as to a better balance concerning official languages in the public service, the government will want I am sure, every time there will be an opportunity to change those methods, to consult the House again but perhaps not, and certainly not each time, through the passing of an amendment to an existing legislation, which would be a loss of time.

The Leader of the Opposition—

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Of course.

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the minister whether he is giving an assurance that the government will bring a resolution before the House each time before there is any change made in its guidelines.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I can give this assurance if what the hon. member has in mind is any change in the principles that are submitted to the House in this resolution.

[Translation]

I would also emphasize that the Leader of the Official Opposition was generous enough—and I commend him for it—to say that even if his amendment were not passed he would vote for the main resolution and I think that in this debate he contributed to creating a climate that, as far as I am concerned, I would not disrupt.

If I had time, I would tease him on the way he introduced monarchy into the bilingualism issue, but it would be only to tease him. However, he said in his speech—realizing that it was difficult to accept a relation between the two—that there were people who had compared the erosion—whatever that is—of anarchic institutions with bilingualism. I think on the contrary that in a certain "integrism" that he knows as well as I do, people tend to see in bilingualism an attack against monarchy. In fact, for those people almost everything is an attack against monarchy. I admit that I expected that kind of comment from the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), but not from the Leader of the Official Opposition himself.

To come back to serious things, the Leader of the Official Opposition expressed criticism. He said at the outset:

[English]

Let's discuss this frankly and openly.

[Translation]

I would have liked him to add another adverb and to put it into practice: the adverb "specifically". I find that his numerous objections directed against the government do not constitute a well-founded criticism or at least not the substantial criticism I was expecting. I think that the Leader of the Opposition merely pointed out minor details and I could not help thinking that it is really very hard for the Leader of the Opposition or for the leader of any opposition party in this House, to make a realistic criticism. Because, after all, who criticizes the action of the government in this area? People who never had to face the extremely complex problems created by the balance of the official languages in the Civil Service, problems that are so complex that they would discourage any government without optimism or deep faith in this country of ours, problems the difficulty of which one can hardly imagine before tackling them. And if I credit the opposition leader for waiting to deal with these problems, it is because he recognized himself last night that in the past positions he held, time had not yet come—I have to admit it considering the province where he was premier—to make this revolution and he never had the opportunity to undertake it. I would almost wish that he could one day take office, if no other inconveniences were related to that, so that he could finally realize how difficult efforts are in this very complex field.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to comment briefly on one of the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), a remark that he had already made in this House, at the beginning of this session, which, at that time, had shocked me and which shocked me once again last night. When I say "shocked", I mean "distressed", not "offended".

The hon. member for York South said yesterday, and I quote:

> I regret that this resolution has been brought before the House, not for some of the reasons I have heard but for another and perhaps deeper reason. I have learned that in life, particularly in collective life, there are matters with respect to which repeated argument produces confrontation and repeated confrontation pollutes rather than clears the air.

The hon. member for York South had already adopted that attitude with respect to a speech by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and again, with respect to a speech by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) on the same subject as the one we are discussing this afternoon. This attitude, coming from a man like the hon. member for York South, had confounded me, all the more that he is ready, as are all the other members of his party, to discuss the most delicate problems in this House. He is willing at any time to discuss the death penalty, the status of women, abortion, the situation of our native peoples. Those are issues which are, as the hon. member for York South puts it, most controversial.

Why does he feel sorry only when it comes to the language problem? Would the language question in Canada be of an obscene, shameful or pornographic nature that would forbid us to discuss it or is it to be considered as so extraordinary or explosive that it should be ignored? Mr. Speaker, I think it has been ignored for too long, and I am surprised to see this kind of resistance from a man like the hon. member for York South who, as I said a while ago, does not lack daring.

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) just spoke, with a smile, about certain contradictions that might exist in our party. I think I could amuse myself in calling attention to a contradiction between him and his own leader.

Indeed, when a few months ago the member for York South had just said what more or less I have just reported, but in another context, the member for Scarborough West contradicted him in a television program. He had said that a speech by the Minister of Transport was "an emotional speech". And he said, and I quote:

• (1610)

[English]

An emotional speech? I do not agree. It was an intense speech, but perfectly logical.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Scarborough West, added during this television broadcast, and I quote:

[English]

I think it is a good thing that such speeches are made in a place like the House of Commons, where they belong.

[Translation]

In this internal conflict, I am against such a dissension within the New Democratic Party and on the side of the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if the House has the patience to listen to me for another three or four minutes, I would like to say why I cannot accept the Social Credit Party proposal. I am referring to the proposal in general and not to the subamendments which were rejected. I think the Standing Orders allow me to comment on some remarks which were made and the idea which was voiced.

I think that the Social Credit Party proposal corresponds exactly to the definition which that party tried to attach to the government's resolution during a debate held on an allotted day, a few weeks ago. It was said at that time that the resolution was neither positive, nor factual nor practical.

I could repeat exactly the same thing.

Sure enough, the hon. member for Champlain and this afternoon the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) put forward those two parallel administrations as being worthy, first, from the economic point of view. I took time since last night to ask people who are more knowledgeable than I am about the administrative problems. They told me that compared with what the bilingualism program of this government may cost, the implementation of those parallel structures put forward by members of the Social Credit Party would probably reach in the billions of dollars. Even if it were economical I would like to try and prove that it is not practical. When to promote national unity or solidarity you split the public service from top to bottom I think that you go against those same purposes you are pursuing.

I think that even with parallel structures—because I cannot deny that French Languages Units are to a certain extent parallel structures—the program put forward in the resolution presently before the House should nevertheless be implemented because why should a number of public servants have to become bilingual? The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) explained it this morning: if public servants are to be able to work in the official language of their choice we necessarily need to have people in supervisory positions able to communicate in both French and English, that is to say that the same person in that case must know both French and English. This also means that more members of both linguistic communities in Canada will have to become bilingual as the application of that policy is gradually increased.

I would like to point out to the hon. member for Champlain that even Belgium, which faces a linguistic problem similar to ours, has established those parallel structures only in a minimum of departments. And why? Because it is a unitary state. We understand, for instance, that in Belgium they have a Department of Dutch Education and a Department of French Education. We understand also that they have a Department of Dutch Cultural Affairs and a Department of French Cultural Affairs and that they have two ministers for the two departments. But, precisely, we are not in a unitary country and the federal system has been established in our country to find a solution to such problems and tensions.

We have provincial departments of education and within those departments in provinces where there are large minorities using another official language, they have developed different structures.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Champlain had a slip of the tongue and that sometimes reflects unconsciousness. He said: Who could blame me for having nursed my mother! All of us have these slips of the tongue and I do not laugh at the hon. member for Champlain when I recall this one but his system seems as impossible to realize as it is surely impossible for the member for Champlain to have nursed his own mother.

To conclude, I would like to say two things. First, that we are about to conclude one phase. I already told the hon. member for Champlain and I say it again, as the non. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) noted himself: being French-speaking it is impossible for us not to feel very impatient.

The Leader of the Official Opposition talked yesterday about the scars he gained in his efforts for the French language. But what is threatening us as French-speaking Canadians in this country, is not some scars; but we should fear being flayed alive if we do not have the necessary optimism.

But I think that realism and common sense consist in telling ourselves, about this century of guilty negligence and of injustice as the member for Saint-Hyacinthe called it, that this year we cannot make up for the consequences all of a sudden, that there must be gradual stages. I am also impatient, I have already said it and I will repeat it.

Only if this whole House becomes impatient will we really end up with a fair system. But we must control our legitimate impatience and tell ourselves that in any political matter such objectives are always reached gradually.

Mr. Speaker, I also submit that the step taken with this resolution is an extremely important one. Personally, this is th realistic objective to seek and this is why I think that all members of this House will wish to vote for the resolution, some with minor reservations, and I cannot blame them, I have some myself, others perhaps with serious reservations, and I cannot blame them either because maybe they perceive difficulties to which I am not sensitive myself but I feel that a climate, not of understanding which is an abused word, but of realism and healthy optimism, should preside over the whole remainder of this debate and also the final vote and that this vote should be unanimous to enable us to start working in a climate of trust and, I repeat, unanimity.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help thinking of the last words of the speech of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), who suggested that perhaps he should ask for good will and reasonableness for the sake of reasonableness. To my mind he did not start out as well as he ended. He referred to certain members of this House being of the age of the dinosaur and being like dinosaurs in their objections to the official languages bill in 1969. That to my mind did not indicate a desire for good will on his part. I regretted having to sit here and hear those words.

The minister suggested that members should stand up in this House and speak about these problems. I agree. I have wrestled with this problem since 1969. I spoke at length on it when it was debated. I urged the government at that time to be careful and not to go too fast, because they would create enemies in certain parts of the country while thinking they were healing wounds in other parts. They did not pay much attention to my remarks.

Many Members of Parliament at that time sat in their seats and would not voice their opinions in parliament. They would not voice the opinions of their constituents on the official languages bill. Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic members would not voice their opinion. They were afraid to do so because the party leaders were telling them that they had to support the bill. I take part in the workings of this democratic institution and the exercise of representative government, and I wrestled with the problem. I asked myself, should we speak frankly and tell this House what our constituents feel, or was the lesson they taught us on October 30 clear enough? If we are to be part of a democracy and governed by representative government, then I think one must speak as a representative. Certainly a member can lead his constituents, but a government that gets too far out in front of the people is not returned; it is defeated in the next election.

Some say it was the anti-Trudeau feeling in the last election that nearly led to the defeat of the Liberal government. Some say that the way western Canada felt about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was terrible. I spoke to a Liberal candidate who was defeated in Alberta. I said, "What was the thing that beat you?" He said, "The animosity toward Mr. Trudeau defeated me in the last election." Whether you like it or not, and whether the country likes it or not I am certain that hundreds of thousands of people in western Canada realize this is true. I am certain, having watched television on election night and seeing the Prime Minister shortly after the election results were in, that the Prime Minister recognized that fact.

Whether we like it or not—and we cannot sweep the question under the rug—the Prime Minister has brought in this resolution. Personally, I question whether he really means it. I was certainly pleased when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) moved his amendment because it puts the test right to the Prime Minister. On October 30 many people across Canada outside Quebec rejected the Prime Minister and his party. Whether you like it or not, that is the fact: they rejected the Prime Minister and the Liberal party.

Why was that party rejected? Every person can give his reason. Certainly in some areas the languages bill was a factor, although it was not in western Canada and it was not in my constituency. Some mention was made of newspaper ads that I had run in my constituency during my election campaign in which I complained about money from western Canada being spent in too many places other than western Canada, and I mentioned Quebec and Ontario.

Constituents have complained over the years about Ontario milking the cow, but you cannot mention Quebec. The attitude of the hon. member who just sat down was: Let us mention this. Let us get it out in the open. I did so in my election campaign and was accused of being racist. Well, I am not. I am not afraid to represent my people in our democracy. When a country fails to produce people with enough courage to represent other people, there is something wrong with that country, and if it is a democracy one can say that their democracy has been severely eroded.

What does the Prime Minister mean by this resolution? Now that we hear the government will not accept the amendment, I suggest it means very little.

An hon. Member: It doesn't mean a damn thing.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you for that vivid explanation. I have come to the same conclusion. I should like to believe in my heart that the Prime Minister really means it, because it closely parallels an amendment I moved when the languages bill was being debated. The Prime Minister has brought in the resolution in the hope that he can get a unanimous vote of support from the House of Commons so that once and for all the language question will be settled. He said that. I quote from an article by Peter Desbarats. According to him, the Prime Minister said:

> The struggle for the recognition of the "French fact" from sea to sea is not over, the battle is not won, and I propose to make certain that the question is well debated in the next election.

I think if he does that he will be taking a pretty dangerous gamble. He has brought this resolution in to try to shore up confidence in the government in areas outside Quebec. He is asking those areas to trust him in his application of the language question. Yet he really does not mean it.

Whether you like it or not, Canada started out as a nation after three constitutional conferences. Anyone who reads history can read the reports of those constitutional conferences. Language was not the important question in those days. Perhaps it should have been, but apparently it was not. Some provinces had already existed for some time. At the time of the constitutional conference of 1867, Nova Scotia, for example, was 109 years old. True, western Canada really had not been born. Some have said that this country is a marriage between the French and the English. We in the west wonder what we are. Are we a child of that marriage? We are not. We want to feel that we can play a full and equal part in this country of ours as an equal offspring of that marriage.

The Prime Minister has said that less than 10 per cent of the civil service is bilingual. He said it was 25,000 people out of 370,000, I think. The sad part today is that they are all at the top. Whether you like it or not, you will find, as I have found from my research, that instead of more French being taught in western Canada, less is taught. I said in the languages debate four years ago that if we want to make Canada a bilingual country we are going about it the wrong way. Otherwise, I said, we would create bitterness. I said the way to do it was through education. Education must come first, not afterwards.

The Prime Minister said yesterday that he is not going to force any Canadian to learn French or English; on the other hand, Canadians can learn either language if they want to. Why did he do this by bringing in a resolution first and then saying the government would spend money to educate people—after the fact, so to speak? Whether you like it or not, he is forcing people to learn; many people in the civil service feel they are being forced. The hon. member for Hochelaga suggested that that is just a feeling and that somehow we have put forward a myth. It is not a myth.

Hon. members can read the second annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. It is not the best of reading because this very serious matter is treated in a very light vein. However, even he recognized the fact that we should not proceed with bilingual districts. This resolution does not touch on the matter of bilingual districts. That is the problem we are confronted with today: should we go ahead and establish bilingual districts across this country, or not? The Prime Minister has not decided what to do about this issue. Quebec does not want bilingual districts, and I do not suppose any other province is very fussy about them.

Where do we go from here? Why do I believe that without the resolution being written into the act it will not be any good? We have all heard of the pledge which the late Mr. Pearson made in this House on April 6, 1966. The Prime Minister made a similar pledge on October 17, 1968. What was wrong with those pledges? Is it going to be any better than this dictatorship where the leader makes a speech, the bureau agrees and it is endorsed and followed by all civil servants and those who have the obligation of administering the act? It will not work that way. Mr. Carson said that. I quote from an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of November 20, 1972. It reads:

—Public Service Commission Chairman John Carson explicity repudiated this pledge, stating he was guided by the law—

Mr. Carson has to administer much of the languages legislation. What has he said in committee? What has he said about appeals made to his commission? I quote from page 29 of the proceedings of the miscellaneous estimates committee of June 13, 1972:

The commissioner conceded that the public service staff associations were right in their contention that assurances by Prime Ministers Trudeau and Pearson that no unilingual civil servants would suffer in career terms because of the bilingual program, just didn't hold up in practice.

Will this resolution be any better? It will not hold up in practice. It may, while the spirit and intent is fresh in the minds of the Public Service Commission and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who has to battle with this problem and has accepted the fact that he must accept these points. The fourth point is interesting. It reads:

that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual—

On July 4, 1969, I moved an amendment that parallelled this point almost to the word. Many people in my constituency do not think an opposition member can find his words in legislation. This is not legislation but my words are there. My amendment read:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this act, provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other language.

Those are nearly the same words as in item 4. What did the former minister of justice, now Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) say when piloting this bill through the House? What has caused him to change his mind? He thinks this resolution can be enforced. In reply to a remark which I made, the minister said, as recorded at page 10819 of Hansard for July 3, 1969:

We deny that categorically, and I say that through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Crowfoot. We contend that the hon. member's solution would be impracticable, one not capable of realization.

That is why I distrust this resolution and say that it will not mean anything to the public servants. The former minister of justice said it was impracticable. If point 4 is impracticable, what about point 6? The minister, in the same speech, dealt with the meaning of willingness. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) also spoke on that amendment. He, too, was in difficulty about the real meaning of willingness. Anyone who reads Hansard for July 3, 1969, will see whether the government wants to put any teeth into this act.

One can read the Ottawa newspapers to see what two former representatives from the Ottawa area had to say. They both complained bitterly, after the fact, that Mr. Carson was administering the act in the wrong way. Mr. Carson was doing his duty and obeying the law. If a public servant administers any legislation contrary to the law, he gets into trouble. An article in the June 9, 1972, Ottawa Citizen about Mr. Gordon Blair, the former member for Grenville-Carleton, reads in part:

He is confident that some of the programs implemented by John Carson, PSC chairman, do not truly reflect government attitudes and desires.

The attitudes and desires of this government have a tendency to change; they flip around a little from time to time. In July, 1972, they did not want anything to do with the question of willingness of people to learn the other official language. They said it was impracticable and could not be implemented. Something has happened since then and they have changed their desire. People in western Canada are saying that the Prime Minister is nice, he has done a lot of things, but can we trust him? My standard reply is, "You tell me." They fear that if the government gets back with a majority of seats, the Prime Minister will return to his old ways. They fear his desires and intentions will change after the next election. That is why I say that if the Prime Minister means what he says in this resolution, it should be incorporated in the act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Some members questioned my good faith last December 14 when the President of the Treasury Board made his announcement. I immediately contacted the press and said that I supported the nine points announced at that time. However, we are now asked to debate this resolution, bow down and say this is a bilingual country. I can say that; it is not difficult: everyone in this House can say it. However, if the country is not prepared to accept it at this time, what is the use of saying it?

No government can move any faster than those governed want it to move. If they do, they are rejected. The Prime Minister found that out. Some members his cabinet were very bitter after the last election, as were some Liberal backbenchers. This is the irony of democracy; the people are always right. The government is the servant of the people, not the master. The Prime Minister would love to be the master and absolute ruler. Before the last election many people said that the Prime Minister would never call another election because he thought himself the master.

I am sorry to say that this resolution will not build faith and confidence in the government. I have listened to the speeches that have been made to date on this subject and I have not been convinced that the government means what it says. I may not be a very easy person to convince. Certainly, if I am convinced I will get out and try to sell the idea. I will try to sell the good faith of the government as I did back in December when I issued a press release saying I supported the President of Treasury Board in issuing the nine points.

But now they are trotting this issue out in an effort to hoodwink and pacify certain areas of the country. To my mind, the lesson was clearly given on October 30. The government has understood that lesson and is trying to prepare itself to go to the people again. This is one of the ways in which it is trying to prepare itself. It is trying to cover up this issue.

I firmly believe the resolution before us will be closely adhered to until the next election, but I have no confidence it will be adhered to afterward. How can I think otherwise when even a prominent member of the cabinet indulges in name-calling? The Prime Minister calling the premier of a western province a bigot does not help. The languages commissioner saying the English-speaking people in Westmount are Westmount Rhodesians does not help. This does not help to build good faith. If we want to build good faith, we have to mean it in our hearts. And the government has to legislate upon a basis of good faith. Nowhere in Canada will the people be fooled by this attempted hoax.

Mr. Lang: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, concerning the timing of the vote on this motion. There have been discussions and I think there may be general agreement in the House that all questions required to dispose of the motion now before us be put at 9.30 Tuesday evening.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Lang: If the debate came to a conclusion earlier, it would be understood that we would move on to other business. In particular, it would be our intention to call the National Housing Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, any fixing of a date or of an hour like that is not acceptable to me. This is a matter which the people of Canada want to know something about, and to rush it through without full discussion is not in keeping with the responsibilities of this House. Letters are starting to come in from everywhere concerning this debate. I have never raised objection before to the fixing of hours, but I am absolutely opposed to a fixed hour being set for the termination of a debate as important as this. To do so might well deprive the Canadian people of an opportunity of knowing the facts.

If there are no other speakers to carry on the debate when we arrive at that point, or prior to Tuesday evening, a vote will take place. But I cannot agree to a suggestion that we be shackled when we are dealing with a matter in connection with which the Canadian people expressed themselves so strongly everywhere in the country last fall. Behind many of the votes lay the fact that people were disgusted with the administration of this act. So I take the strongest objection to the proposal put forward by the hon. gentleman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In these circumstances I need not inquire whether there is agreement; I will merely call upon the next speaker, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a new member taking part in this debate, one of 57 new members of this party in the House. I think it is probable that each Parliament reflects the times in which particular groups of individuals are sent to this chamber. While within our party there is an established tradition of individual members acting as individuals, most of us came here, I think I can say, on the assumption that the basic principles of the Official Languages Act were established and that the issue of that legislation would not dominate the present parliament.

We came here with a mandate from our electors to deal with other issues, issues which were regarded by them as being highly important. For that reason, in my case at least, I was most surprised when it became evident, as it did before the first week of debate was concluded, that the government was apparently preoccupied with questions related to language. I regretted to find new evidence of this preoccupation today in the speech of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier).

To a certain extent this preoccupation is understandable. It relates to problems encountered in the public service. I am not so much surprised by the concern shown as by the strength of the comments made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on January 8 and by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) shortly afterward. A charitable explanation is that the principal reason the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport came into parliament was to try to contribute in a positive way to questions related to cultural equality. I respect them for that. I go beyond that: I thank them for coming here to serve their country for that reason.

I recall hearing the Prime Minister speak in my own constituency in Alberta. He went there for purposes which are not at all related to my being here—quite the opposite—and answered questions put by audience in the town of Edson having to do with the government's position on the official languages bill. He spoke then, as he and others have spoken since, about the grave difficulties which had been encountered by many people in the province of Quebec in dealing with a government, which they had every right to regard as their government, in a language which was not their own. He made the point that this was the cause of grievous concern. This was accepted by the people of that community, as it had been accepted earlier by those of us who had been given an opportunity to hear it from the Prime Minister and from others.

There is no question of the importance of making the case which the Prime Minister made at that time as well as on other occasions. It is also natural that, since this was to such a great extent the personal motive of the Prime Minister and of other senior ministers for entering public life at the federal level, they should assume that since this question had provided such an important personal motive for their coming it might, indeed, have been the motive in the minds of some Canadians when voting for opponents of their party. In my opinion, this is simply not true. It is not an accurate analysis of the voting behaviour of electors, at least in my part of the country, in rural western Canada.

I think the government recognizes that it is not true, because they have begun to change their approach in a number of fields which had been the subject of criticism before the last election. Some of us feel that this change is more apparent than real. They have indicated that there are questions of taxation and unemployment insurance to be dealt with. These questions have been recognized in western Canada to the extent of calling a conference there to consider the very legitimate criticisms of the administration of these matters for reasons that have nothing to do with the language matter question.

I have to say, Sir, with some regret, that charity is not the only quality which influences members of this House as we come to some of our conclusions. We are also, all of us, subject to certain suspicion regarding the motives of those in other parties for some of the things they do. I believe it is fair to state that some of us believe that this issue is being raised deliberately now in a considered effort by the Liberal party to find an issue on which it might be able to win an election. That is a suspicion, in short, that national unity is being used for partisan purposes.

We in this party are sensitive about the weakness of our representation in the province of Quebec, although certainly we are proud of our members from that province and their quality. We are also pleased by the size of the vote we received and hope to be able to translate this into seats. But we recognize that we need strength in that province and in the rest of Canada, not simply to win an election but to govern effectively. We have to earn not just votes in Quebec but also the confidence of French Canadians, and we believe we are well on the way to that goal.

We are aware, also, that if a concerted attempt were made to try to divide this party on the question, it could have serious consequences, not simply to us as a party competing in national affairs but also ultimately perhaps to the country. I very much regret having to express my suspicion that this might very well be part of the reason we are dealing with this matter now.

For the record, I want to state my own belief as a new member here—that there can be no question at all about the commitment of this party to the principles of the Official Languages Act and, indeed, to the principles of a bilingual and multicultural nation. That commitment was reiterated last night in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). As I have said before, the Leader of the Opposition came to this House and to national politics expressly to help unite Canada. Most of us who came here as new members on this side came to parliament expressly to support our leader and to work with him in the job of uniting Canada.

Against that background it was alarming for me and my colleagues to begin our careers in the House of Commons by hearing the Prime Minister of Canada accuse us, by unmistakable implication, of a kind of bigotry. I can say quite frankly, and this is no surprise to anyone here, that in my campaign in a rural riding of Alberta there were opportunities for bigotry. There were opportunities to condemn the people of a distant part of Canada. We undoubtedly faced more opportunities to make political gain in that way than people in other parts of the country. The point is that we turned down these opportunities because we did not want to associate ourselves with any action that would help to disunite our nation. That is why so many of us reacted with such heat and felt such a sense of unfairness about the implications of accusation made by members of the government.

We are faced again with wondering about the motives of the government when we have before us a resolution which has no effect in law and which, while it is being defended here and now as an expression of moral approval, was inspired by a determination to have members of this House, in the words of the Prime Minister which appear in Hansard for January 8, "stand up and be counted". Those are words that have a connotation that is unmistakable, and that connotation was not reduced by the suggestion of the Minister of Communications who said not long ago, as I understood him, that new members must have an opportunity to express their own support for these principles, because if we do not do that we might be asking questions which would be unfortunate or embarrassing.

That seems to me a novel principle to be embarking upon. I would think that in fact, if I heard the Minister of Communications correctly and if that precedent is to be established, we will face a multitude of resolutions in this House to ensure that members who were not here before are committed in some personal way to every piece of legislation that has been passed here hitherto. Indeed, that would make by-elections a very dangerous occupation in the country. What is dangerous and particularly regrettable about the comments of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Communications in a muted way today, is the suggestion and the implication that some of us are acting out of mean or narrow instincts.

There are obviously some people in some regions who are more reluctant than others to embrace this particular act. That is so with every piece of legislation. What is different about matters relating to the Official Languages Act is that the differences here can inspire deep antagonism. The point I want to make as the representative of a western Canadian constituency who is concerned about the unity of my nation is that it need not have that effect.

When we talk about questions of this sort we move inevitably into the precincts of prejudices on both sides. There are people who think that any particular act, whatever it says, goes too far. There are those on the other side who think it does not go far enough. I think in that kind of area of legislation it is well for us to proceed very cautiously, not to act when we do not have to act and not to act when all we are doing is expressing an opinion.

Some commentators have suggested that this issue and related issues should be fought out once and for all. I suggest that is a piece of advice for the crusades or for religious wars, but not for politics. we are not engaged here in a holy war. This is not an issue on which every citizen should, to use the Prime Minister's words, "stand up and be counted". Rather, this is a question in my view of ensuring that rights are defined and respected. In my part of the country people will accept that. They might do it reluctantly in some cases, but they will accept it virtually everywhere in the sense that it is going to happen and it will not hurt them particularly. Many of them, like myself, are much more enthusiastic; but with others—there is no point in masking the fact—this issue is an irritant which will pass but which can, if it is agitated, become an open wound.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m. next Monday. I wish all hon. members a happy weekend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The same to you, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1972-73

INTRODUCTION

is review presents in summary form the financial tions of the Government of Canada for the fiscal year 73. The fiscal year of the government ends on March t the books must remain open for some time after date to record adjusting entries and to take into nt section 30 of the Financial Administration Act permits payments made up to April 30 to discharge incurred before March 31 to be included in the nts for the fiscal year. The figures used in this review based on eleven months actual and one month ated.

financial operations of the government include the of tax and other revenues and departmental and other expenditures; such operations are provided for in its annual administrative budget. In addition, the government undertakes other transactions which do not enter into the calculation of its budget surplus or deficit. These transactions include all receipts and payments leading to changes in the assets or liabilities of the government. Among such receipts and payments are those arising from debt operations which are undertaken to finance the government's cash requirements. Any deficit or surplus arising from all operations of the government, whether budgetary or non-budgetary, is reflected in the Receiver General bank balances. Accordingly, in what follows, debt operations and changes in the bank balances of the Receiver General are distinguished from other non-budgetary transactions.

section outlines the financial operations of the nment in 1972-73 giving in Table 1 a brief summary e budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, unmatured debt transactions and changes in the cash position and the debt position during the fiscal year. More detailed explanations are given in subsequent sections of this review.

Budgetary transactions

Revenue estimated at $16,600 million for 1972-73 is $2,373 million or about 17 per cent more than 1971-72 revenue of $14,227 million. The increase is the result of a rise of $2,153 million in tax revenue and an expansion of $220 million in non-tax revenue. The yield from personal income taxes (including the social development tax) is $1,205 million higher, from corporation income tax $437 million higher and from all other taxes and duties $511 million higher than in 1971-72.

Expenditure estimated at $16,155 million for 1972-73 is $1,314 million or 9 per cent higher than in 1971-72. The major changes between 1971-72 and 1972-73 expenditures are increases of $167 million in public debt charges, $37 million in fiscal transfer payments to provinces, $54 million in payments in respect of the Medical Care Act, $106 million in outlays under Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, $33 million under the Canada Assistance Plan and $103 million for development and utilization of manpower.

With revenue of $16,600 million and expenditure of $16,155 million, the budgetary surplus is $445 million as compared with a deficit of $614 million in 1971-72.

Non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions)

The three social security accounts are those for the Old Age Security Fund, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Account. Summaries of the transactions in these accounts for 1971-72 and 1972-73 are given in table 2.

The Old Age Security Fund is financed by tax receipts. These receipts are $2,226 million, an increase of 5 per cent over their level in 1971-72. Payments of $2,526 million in 1972-73 are $300 million more than receipts. In 1971-72, payments of $2,205 million exceeded receipts by $87 million.

Canada Pension Plan receipts of $1,252 million in 1972-73 exceed disbursements of $229 million. The greater part of the excess of $1,023 million is invested in purchasing $979 million of provincial and federal government bonds.

Unemployment Insurance Account receipts at $2,122 million are $27 million less than disbursements resulting in a balance of $10 million in the account at March 31, 1973 compared with a balance of $37 million at March 31, 1972. Included in the receipts are advances of $1,305 million by the government.

Other annuity, insurance and pension accounts include the superannuation accounts of the public service, the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the government annuities account and certain other accounts of a similar nature. Net receipts from these accounts at $859 million are $55 million less than in 1971-72.

The greater part of loans, investments and advances are made to crown corporations and the remainder made to provincial governments, governments outside Canada, international organizations, private businesses and individuals. In 1972-73 net loans and investments of $790 million to crown corporations are $453 million less than in 1971-72; other loans, investments and advances in the net amount of $673 million are $248 million more than in 1971-72.

Foreign exchange operations to finance increases in Canada's international reserves include receipts from Special Drawing Rights (SDR's) issued by the International Monetary Fund and payments arising from subscriptions of capital to the International Monetary Fund, advances to the Exchange Fund and the redemption of non-interest-bearing notes payable to the International Monetary Fund. During 1972-73 net disbursements arising from these operations in the amount of $73 million include net disbursements of $125 million in transactions in the Exchange Fund Account and net receipts of $52 million from transactions in respect of the International Monetary Fund. In 1971-72 net disbursements were $698 million, $938 million in net disbursements in Exchange Fund account partly offset by net receipts of $240 million in the International Monetary Fund.

Collections of provincial income taxes amount to $2,448 million and payments to the provinces total $2,453 million. In 1971-72 collections were $2,153 million and payments were $2,023 million. Net receipts from other non-budgetary transactions are $441 million compared with net receipts of $443 million in 1971-72.

Unmatured debt transactions

The net cash requirement of $1,828 million arising from budget transactions, operations of social security funds and other operations was met by net issues of marketable bonds, treasury bills and Canada savings bonds. In 1972-73 there was a net issue of $42 million of marketable bonds compared with $354 million in 1971-72, a net issue of $460 million in treasury bills compared with $95 million in 1971-72 and a net issue of $1,276 million in Canada savings bonds compared with $1,908 million in 1971-72. Other borrowing produced a net receipt of $7 million compared with a net payment of $308 million in 1971-72.

Change in cash position

A summary of all these operations is given in table 1 which shows that their net effect was to increase the bank balances of the Receiver General, including those in foreign currencies, by $402 million from $1,600 million at March 31, 1972 to $2,002 million at March 31, 1973.

Change in debt position

As a result of all operations just described, the gross public debt increased by $4,017 million to $51,740 million at March 31, 1973, net recorded assets increased by $4,462 million to $34,248 million and the net debt decreased by $445 million to $17,492 million.

BUDGETARY TRANSACTIONS

Total budgetary revenue for 1972-73 is estimated at $16,600 million, total budgetary expenditure at $16,155 million and the budgetary surplus at $445 million.

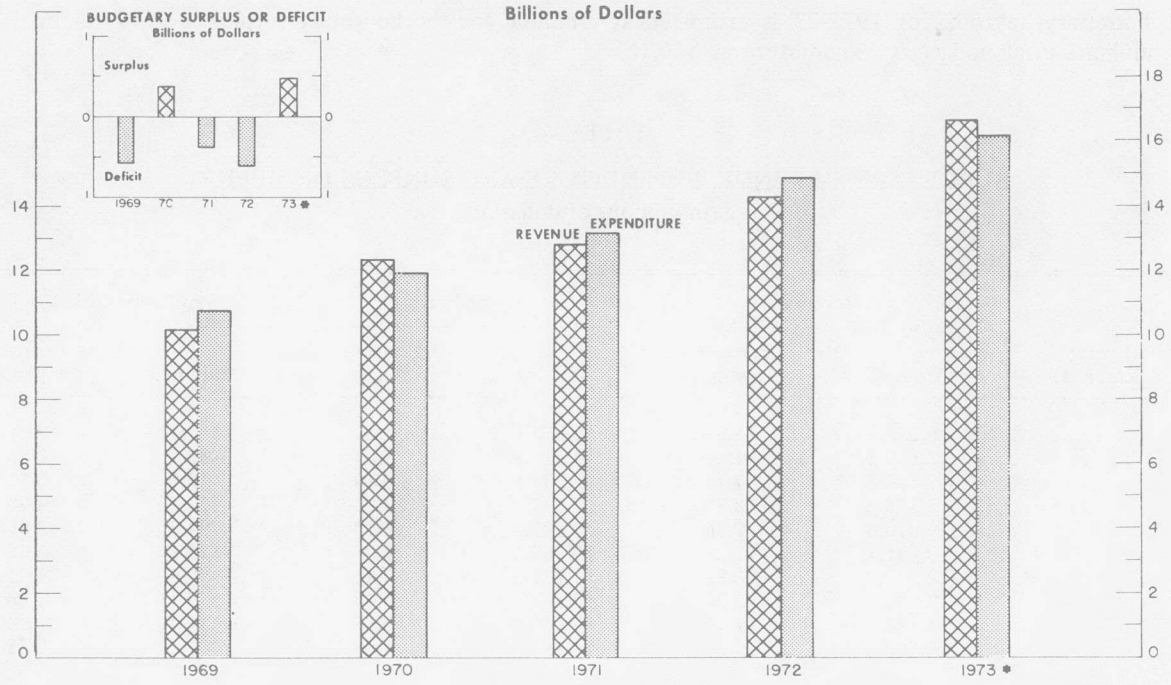
REVENUE



Budgetary revenue at $16,600 million is estimated at $2,373 million or 17 per cent higher than the total received in 1971-72. Tax revenue of $14,715 million accounts for 89 per cent and non-tax revenue of $1,885 million accounts for 11 per cent. The main changes are increases of $1,608 million in personal income taxes, $437 million in corporation taxes, $320 million in sales tax, $211 million in customs import duties and $142 million in return on investments.

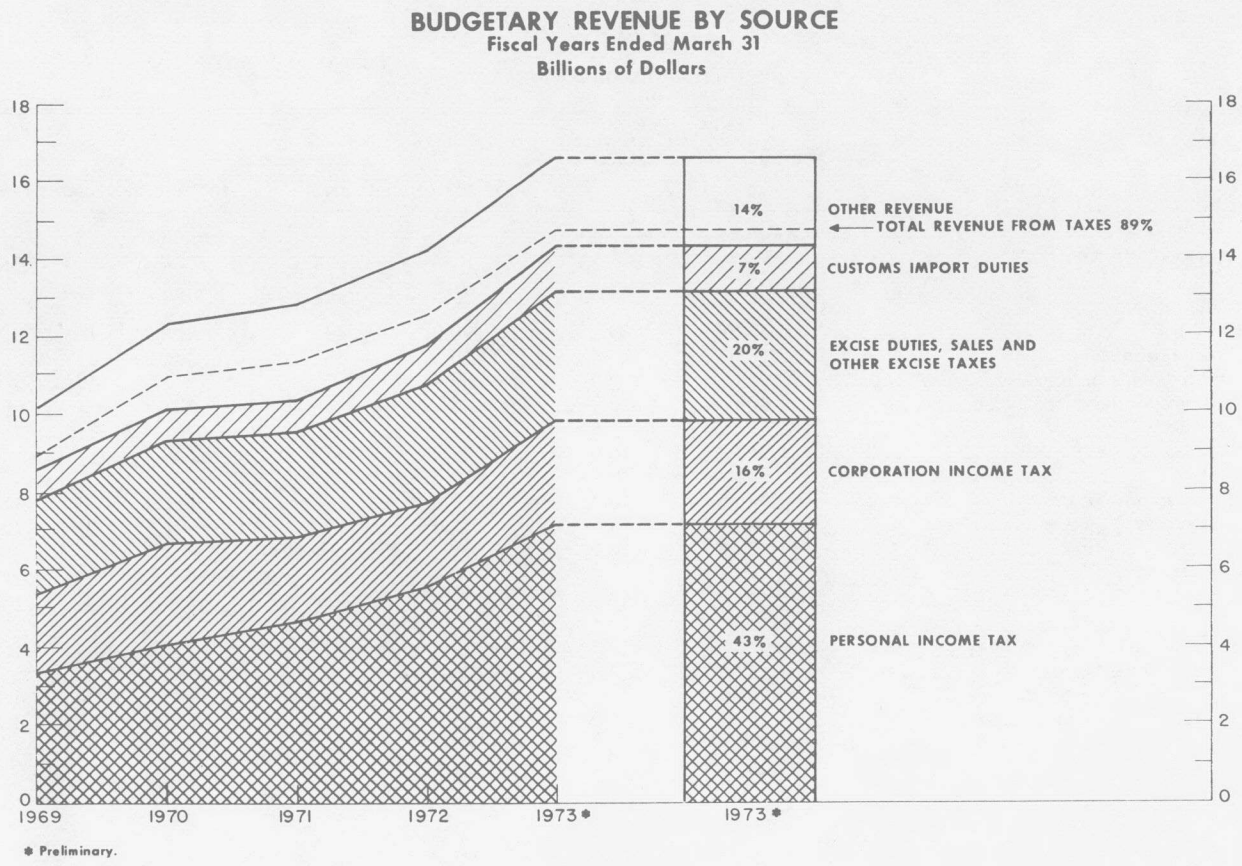
TAX REVENUE



The effect of the tax changes announced in May 1972 and January 1973 was to moderate the growth in revenue which ordinarily would accompany a period of rapid growth in the economy.

Under fiscal arrangements, that became operative in 1962, the federal government withdrew in part from the field of direct taxation and left the vacated area to the provinces. The federal government has entered into tax-collection agreements under which it collects the provincial personal income taxes of all provinces except Quebec and the provincial corporation income taxes of all provinces except Ontario and Quebec.

During the year collections are expected to be $2,448 million and payments to the provinces $2,453 million. These sums are not included in federal tax revenue shown in Table 5.

Tax on personal incomes

As is shown in table 5, personal income tax is again the largest source of government budgetary revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $7,190 million or 43 per cent of total budgetary revenue. In 1971-72 the yield was $5,582 million or 39 per cent of total revenue. The increase is due mainly to a higher level of personal incomes during the fiscal year. The tax on personal incomes credited to the old age security fund is estimated to be $1,190 million compared with $1,237 million in 1971-72.

Corporation income tax

Corporation income tax is the second largest source of budgetary revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $2,620 million or 16 per cent of total budgetary revenue compared with $2,183 million or 15 per cent in 1971-72. The increase of $437 million is due mainly to the strength of the economy during the fiscal year. The tax on incomes of corporations credited to the old age security fund is estimated to be $266 million compared with $213 million in 1971-72.

Taxes on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad

Revenue in this category is derived from taxes withheld from dividends, interest, rents, royalties, alimony and income from estates and trusts paid to non-residents. Collections of $289 million in 1972-73 are $2 million more than in 1971-72.

Social development tax

This tax first took effect for the taxation year 1969 and was discontinued effective January 1, 1972 under the new income tax provisions. The tax, which was imposed on individuals, was originally the lesser of 2 per cent of taxable income or $120. For 1971 the maximum was $100. During 1972-73 the yield is $6 million compared with $409 million in 1971-72.

Excise taxes

Excise taxes including the sales tax total $2,715 million or 16 per cent of total budgetary revenue compared with $2,373 million or 17 per cent in 1971-72.

From a revenue standpoint the general sales tax is the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act. Receipts (excluding the amount credited to the old age security fund) of $2,305 million are $320 million more than in 1971-72.

The sales tax credited to the old age security fund is $770 million compared with $669 million in 1971-72.

The yield from other excise taxes is $410 million of which $354 million is in respect of tobacco products. In 1971-72 the yield was $388 million of which $330 million was in respect of tobacco products.

Customs import duties

Receipts of $1,200 million from this source are $211 million more than in 1971-72.

Excise duties

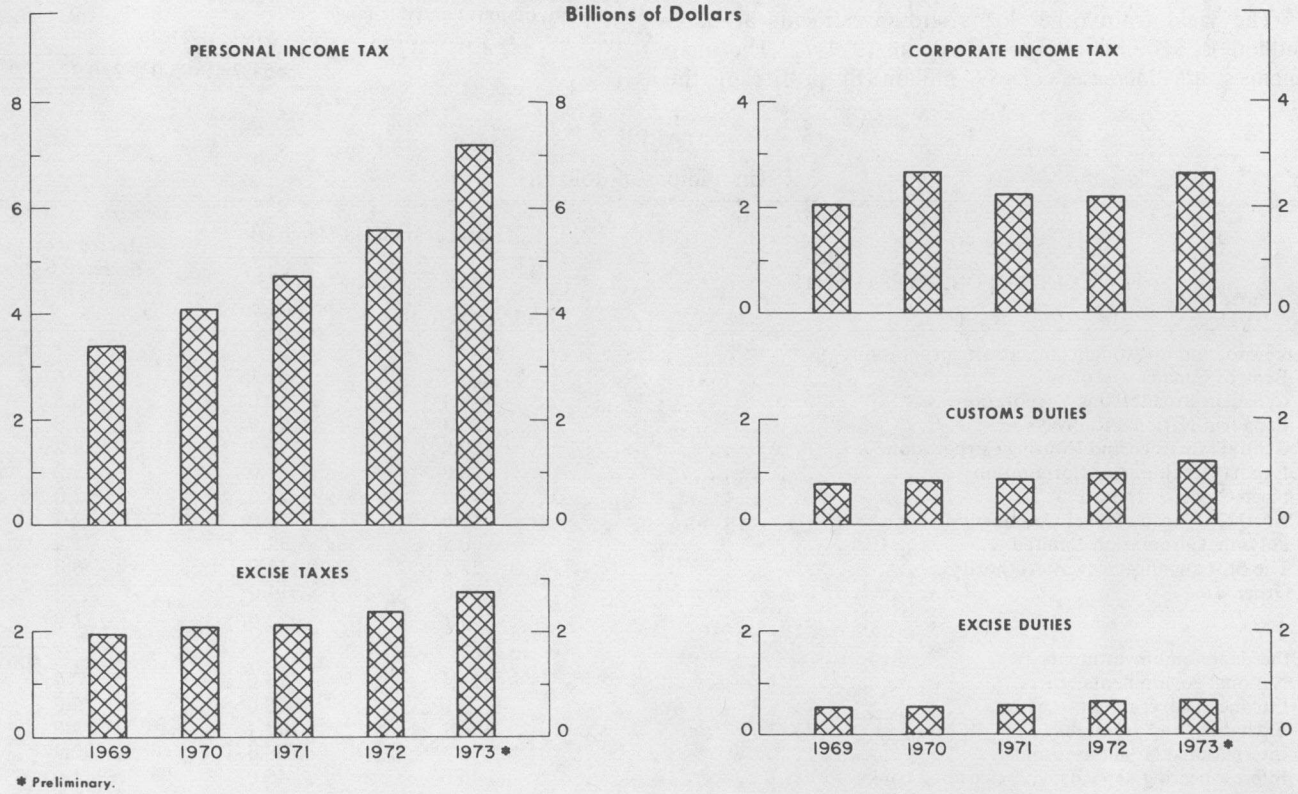
Excise duties are levied on alcoholic beverages (other than wines) and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act.) Net receipts of $635 million are $28 million more than in 1971-72.

Gross receipts of $414 million from duties on alcoholic beverages consist of $245 million in respect of spirits and $169 million in respect of beer and are $18 million higher than receipts of $396 million in 1971-72 of which $235 million was in respect of spirits and $161 million in respect of beer. Gross receipts of $233 million in respect of tobacco products are $12 million higher than in 1971-72.

Refunds and drawbacks of $12 million are $1 million more than in 1971-72.

Estate tax

Revenues in this category are derived under the Estate Tax Act. This Act does not apply in the case of any death after 1971. Net receipts of $60 million are $72 million less than in 1971-72.



Other taxes

Revenue under this heading of $400,000 is approximately the same amount as in 1971-72.

PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF TAX REVENUE

Fiscal Years Ended March 31

Billions of Dollars

* Preliminary.

NON-TAX REVENUE

Non-tax revenue in the amount of $1,885 million is $220 million more than in 1971-72. The main changes are increases of $142 million in return on investments and $71 million in net postal revenue.

Return on investments

These receipts amounting to $1,275 million consist of income derived from loans and advances made by the government and from investments by the government in productive or earning assets. In 1971-72 receipts were $1,133 million.

Receipts from crown corporations at $922 million are $132 million more than in 1971-72 due mainly to increases of $36 million in Bank of Canada profits paid to the government and $49 million in payments by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the crediting to revenue of $32 million resulting from the sale of Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation.

The yield from other loans and investments at $353 million is $10 million more than in 1971-72. The main changes are increases of $9 million in profits of the exchange fund account and $5 million in interest on loans to provincial governments.

Post Office revenue

Gross receipts from Post Office operations are $562 million but authorized disbursements from revenue for salaries and rent allowances, other allowances and commissions at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through and delivered in foreign countries, etc., in the amount of $59 million and revenue credits of $28 million to expenditure result in net revenue of $475 million. In 1971-72 comparable amounts were gross receipts of $487 million, authorized disbursements of $56 million, credits of $27 million to expenditure and net revenue of $404 million.

As is shown in the section on budgetary expenditure the net costs of operating the Post Office during 1972-73 (excluding the $87 million charged to revenue) are $474 million. Given net revenue of $475 million, there is an operating surplus of $1 million. In 1971-72 net costs of $413 million and net revenue of $404 million resulted in an operating deficit of $9 million.

Refunds of previous years' expenditure

Refunds of $23 million include $3 million in receipts by the Department of National Defence (mainly from adjustments to cost audits and contracts with the United States government) and $3 million in receipts by the Department of Veterans Affairs (mainly from refunds of veterans pensions, allowances and re-establishment credits). In 1971-72 refunds totalled $22 million.

Services and service fees

Revenue of $19 million from this source includes $9 million received by the Department of Agriculture (mainly for services for the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain) and $3 million received by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (mainly from inspection fees in respect of weights and measures, and electricity and gas). In 1971-72 revenue totalled $18 million.

Proceeds from sales

Revenue of $16 million includes receipts of $5 million by the Department of Supply and Services from the sale of surplus crown assets and $3 million from sales of publications by Information Canada. In 1971-72 revenue totalled $16 million.

Privileges, licences and permits

Revenue from this source in the amount of $30 million includes $10 million in receipts by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (mainly in respect of oil, gas and gold), $5 million in receipts by the Department of Public Works (mainly from rentals) and $7 million in receipts by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in respect of patents, trade marks, charters, etc. In 1971-72 revenue from this source was $28 million.

Bullion and coinage

This revenue, which is derived from transactions in the bullion and coinage working capital advance, is $25 million compared with $23 million in 1971-72.

Premium, discount and exchange

These transactions reflect net revenue of $1 million compared with a net expenditure of $2 million in 1971-72.

Miscellaneous non-tax revenue

Miscellaneous revenue is $21 million approximately the same as the previous year.

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture together with those in respect of the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and the Farm Credit Corporation total $318 million compared with $286 million in 1971-72.

Outlays for production and marketing at $167 million are $17 million higher than in 1971-72 due mainly to larger payments for farm income maintenance as a result of adverse weather conditions. The charge to expenditure to cover the net operating loss of the Agricultural Stabilization Board is $119 million compared with $122 million in 1971-72.

Research costs are $55 million compared with $51 million in 1971-72; expenditures for the health of animals program are $30 million compared with $27 million; and expenditures in respect of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board are $22 million compared with $21 million in 1971-72.

Public debt charges

Public debt charges consist of interest on public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt. These charges in the amount of $2,177 million include interest of $2,131 million of which $1,707 million is in respect of unmatured debt and $424 million in respect of other liabilities.

The increase of $167 million mainly reflects an increase in unmatured debt.

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1972-73 this income is $1,275 million as shown in the non-tax revenue section under "return on investments". This amount deducted from the gross total of $2,316 million as shown in table 19 leaves a net amount of $1,041 million compared with a net of $957 million in 1971-72. Measured as a percentage of net debt, the burden of the net annual interest charges is 5.95 per cent in 1972-73 compared with 5.34 per cent in 1971-72. As a percentage of the gross national product for the calendar year ending within the fiscal year, the relative burden is 1.01 per cent compared with 1.04 per cent in 1971-72.

Fiscal transfer payments to provinces

These payments total $1,462 million, $37 million more than in 1971-72.

Payments of $1,160 million under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act are $42 million higher than in 1971-72.

Payments of $226 million under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Province of Quebec are in respect of compensation to that province for its opting out of the following programs: hospital insurance and diagnostic services, old age assistance, disabled persons allowances, blind persons allowances, unemployment assistance, and the Canada Assistance Plan; and, in part, the general health grants program. Payments were $281 million in 1971-72.

Subsidies to provinces payable under the British North America Acts and other statutory authority are $34 million, the same as in 1971-72.

The transfer of certain public utility tax receipts in the amount of $81 million are $56 million more than in 1971-72 and represent the transferable portion of income tax received from corporations whose main business is the distribution to, or generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas and steam.

The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, 1964, provides that where, in any fiscal year commencing on or after April 1, 1964, the federal savings in respect of a province providing schooling allowances exceeds the federal revenue abatement in respect of that province for the taxation year ending in that fiscal year, the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to that province in respect of that fiscal year an amount equal to the excess. Moreover, where for a taxation year ending in any fiscal year commencing on or after April 1, 1964 the federal revenue abatement in respect of a province providing schooling allowances exceeds the federal savings in that fiscal year in respect of that province, the amount of the excess may be deducted from any payment to that province under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act or under any subsequent Act of the Parliament of Canada substituted therefore, or may be otherwise recovered as a debt due to Canada by that province. The abatement for the taxation year 1972 and the revised abatement for the taxation year 1971 in respect of the Province of Quebec exceeded the federal savings by $38 million which has been recovered from payments to that province under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act. In 1971-72 abatements exceeded the federal savings by $32 million and was recovered.

Outlays in respect of military pensions, pension contributions and other benefits include $79 million for the government's contribution to the Canadian forces superannuation account, $89 million for amortization of deferred charges and $79 million for additional interest in respect of the superannuation account. In 1971-72 the government's contribution was $74 million, amortization of deferred charges was $66 million and additional interest was $59 million.

Defence research costs of $48 million are $1 million more than in 1971-72.

National Health and Welfare

Expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare including those of the Medical Research Council are $2,917 million compared with $2,706 million in 1971-72.

Outlays for income security and social assistance are $1,134 million compared with $1,100 million in 1971-72; for health insurance and resources $1,633 million compared with $1,476 million; for medical services $53 million compared with $50 million; and for the Medical Research Council $38 million compared with $36 million.

Family allowances, family assistance and youth allowances

These expenditures total $610 million of which $549 million is family allowances, $59 million is youth allowances and $2 million is family assistance. In 1971-72 the total was $616 million of which $554 million was family allowances, $60 million was youth allowances and $2 million was family assistance.

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under 16 years of age, resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as children of immigrants who must reside in Canada one year before family allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years of age and $8 in the age group 10 to 15.

Family assistance is payable at the same rates on behalf of children of immigrants and settlers during their first year of residence in Canada.

Youth allowances are payable at the rate of $10 per month in respect of persons resident in Canada who have attained the age of 16 years and have not attained the age of 18 years and who are in full-time attendance at a school or university or are by reasons of mental or physical infirmity precluded from attending school or university. No payments were made in respect of persons resident in the Province of Quebec. However, under authority of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, abatements in federal income tax otherwise payable by individuals resident in that province were allowed in compensation of the fact that the payment of youth allowances had been assumed by the province and to allow for the imposition of the required provincial income taxes.

Canada Assistance Plan

Payments to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan are $490 million compared with $457 million in 1971-72. The Canada Assistance Plan Act which was enacted in 1966 authorizes the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces for sharing the costs of assistance and welfare services provided by the provinces, territories and municipalities to persons in need. The rate of the federal contribution is 50 per cent of the shareable costs; the rates of assistance granted and the specific conditions of eligibility applied are determined by the provinces and their municipalities and take into account the budgetary requirements as well as the income and resources of the applicants. Contributions under this plan have replaced certain contributions which formerly had been made under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Unemployment Assistance Act. Under a federal-provincial agreement the Province of Quebec has opted out of a major portion of this program.

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office department total $561 million in 1972-73 compared with $496 million in 1971-72.

Salaries and allowances are $431 million, $59 million higher than in 1971-72 and costs of transportation of mail are $92 million, $4 million less than in 1971-72.

However, as authorized by the Post Office Act, remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices and certain other disbursements are paid from revenue. These payments amount to $59 million in 1972-73 ($56 million in 1971-72). Also, Post Office vote 1 authorized that revenue arising from services provided thereunder be credited thereto; this amounts to $28 million compared with $27 million in 1971-72.

Consequently net expenditures charged to budgetary appropriations are $474 million compared to $413 million in 1971-72.

As net Post Office receipts total $475 million as shown in the revenue section of this report and net expenditures are $474 million there is a net operating surplus of $1 million for 1972-73. In 1971-72 net receipts of $404 million and net expenditures of $413 million resulted in a net operating deficit of $9 million.

However, it is to be noted that post office expenditures do not reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office nor for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments, nor does post office revenue reflect any receipts from the franking privilege covering parliamentary mail or other miscellaneous services provided for other departments and agencies.

SUMMARY

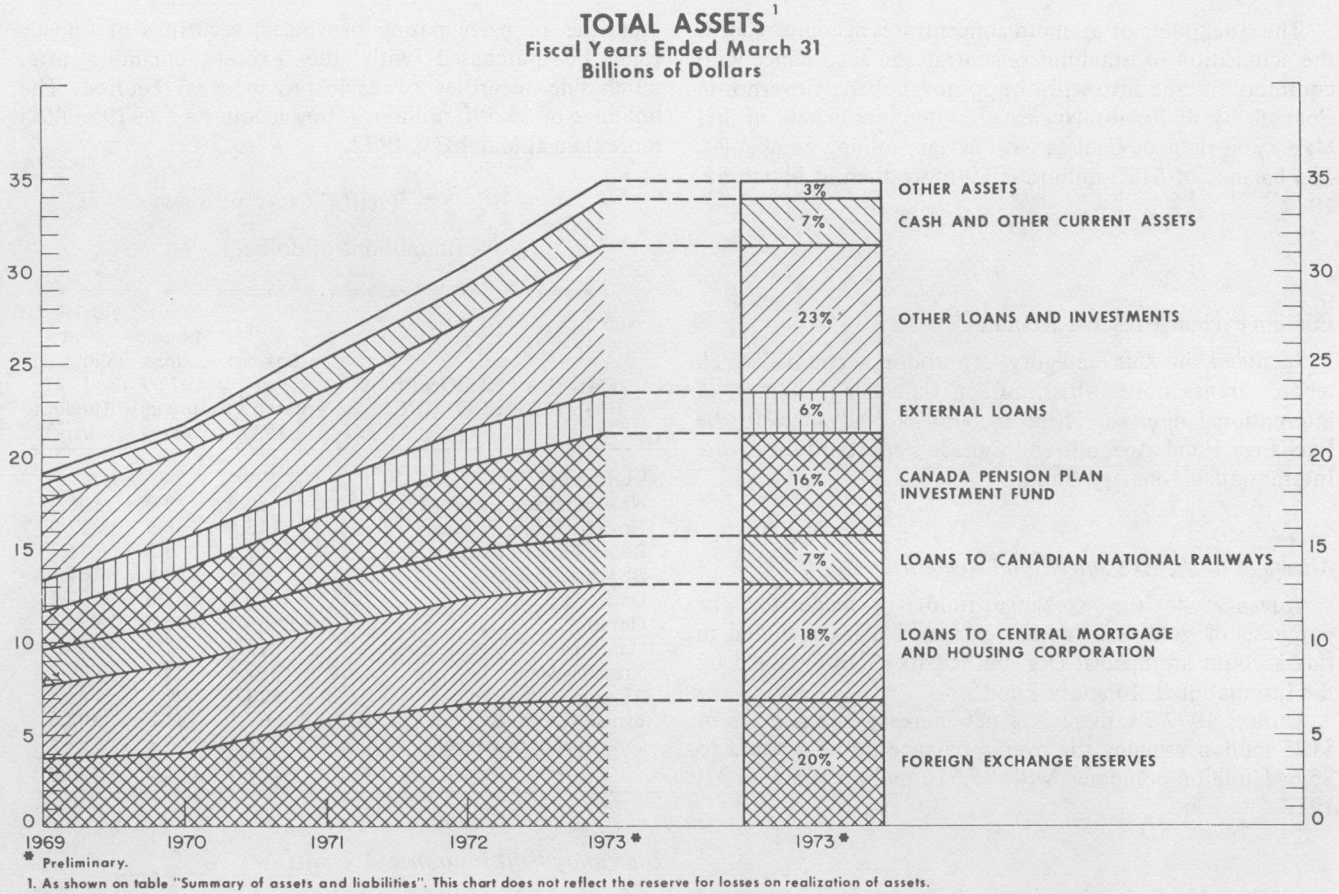
The gross liabilities of the government are estimated at $51,740 million at March 31, 1973 compared with $47,723 million at March 31, 1972. The increase of $4,017 million is due mainly to increases of $1,779 million in unmatured debt and $1,555 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

Net recorded assets estimated at $34,248 million are $4,462 million higher than at March 31, 1972 due mainly to increases of $1,462 million in advances, loans and investments, $979 million in the Canada pension plan investment fund and $1,305 million in loans and advances to the Unemployment Insurance Account.

The net debt of Canada, or the excess of liabilities over net recorded assets, is $17,492 million at March 31, 1973 compared with $17,937 million at March 31, 1972. The decrease of $445 million reflects the estimated surplus for 1972-73.

ASSET ACCOUNTS

Current assets:



These accounts consist of various cash accounts and the securities investment account.

Total current assets at $2,489 million are $529 million more than at March 31, 1972. The main changes are an increase of $390 million in Receiver General current deposits and an increase of $100 million in cash in hands of collectors and in transit.

Departmental Working Capital Advances

These accounts record advances outstanding at the close of the fiscal year for working funds for certain departmental activities. The balance of $181 million is $9 million higher than at March 31, 1972.

Bullion and coinage consists of separate accounts for bronze, gold, nickel and silver in which are recorded transactions in respect of purchases and sales. Debits include the cost of all coin and bullion purchased from the Royal Canadian Mint. Credits represent the face value of all coin issued to, and gold bullion transferred to the Bank of Canada, and sales of silver bullion. The balances at March 31, 1973 total $10 million compared with $8 million at March 31, 1972.

The defence production revolving fund records the cost of materials procured for use in the manufacture of defence equipment until such time as they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment, as well as working capital loans and advances for their production. The balance at March 31, 1973 is $10 million, $4 million less than at March 31, 1972.

The stockpiling of uranium concentrates account records the acquisition of uranium concentrates in accordance with contracts entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by Eldorado Nuclear Limited on behalf of her Majesty in right of Canada with certain mining companies. The balance of $110 million is $9 more than at March 31, 1972.

Foreign exchange reserve accounts

Included in this category are those accounts which record transactions which affect Canada's holdings of international reserves. These accounts are advances to the Exchange Fund Account and Canada's subscription to the International Monetary Fund.

Advances to the Exchange Fund Account

Advances to the exchange fund are made for the purchase of gold and foreign exchange. Also included in this account are Special Drawing Rights (SDR's) issued by the International Monetary Fund.

During 1972-73 there is a net increase in advances of $125 million bringing the overall balance in the account to $5,641 million compared with $5,516 million at March 31, 1972.

Canada's subscription to the capital of the International Monetary Fund

This subscription is Canada's quota in the International Monetary Fund. In this organization, member's quotas are set in SDR units of account and are normally paid in gold (25 per cent) and the remainder (75 per cent) in the member's currency. If the fund does not require a currency, this portion of a member's quota may be paid in the form of non-interest-bearing notes payable on demand. These notes are recorded in the government's liabilities. The balance at March 31, 1973 is $1,192 million compared with $1,141 million at March 31, 1972.

Social Security accounts

Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund

This investment fund records securities purchased under the Canada Pension Plan and the sale of these securities. The amount by which the operating balance of the Canada Pension Plan Fund in any month exceeds the estimated amount required to meet all payments in the following three-month period is available for the purchase of securities of participating provinces; securities of Canada shall be purchased with the excess remaining after purchasing securities of each province as required. The holdings of $5,590 million in this account are $979 million more than at March 31, 1972.

Farm Credit Corporation

The government provides loans to the corporation which makes loans on farm property. The balance of $1,252 million consists of the crown's investment of $48 million in the corporation and $1,204 million in loans. At March 31, 1972 the balance of $1,207 million consisted of $46 million capital and $1,161 million in loans.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority

Outstanding obligations of $714 million in this account consist of $520 million in interest-bearing loans, $72 million in interest-free loans and $122 million in deferred interest. At March 31, 1972 outstanding obligations were $680 million and consisted of $513 million in interest-bearing loans, $75 million in interest-free loans and $92 million in deferred interest.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited

The balance of $693 million compared with $617 million at March 31, 1972. Included in these balances is $15 million in capital stock.

Export Development Corporation

The outstanding balance of $594 million in this account includes $25 million in capital stock, $25 million for working capital and $544 million for loans under section 29A of the Export Development Act. Comparable amounts at March 31, 1972 were $20 million in capital stock, $20 million in working capital and $432 million for loans.

National Harbours Board

Expenditures for capital purposes at harbour sites under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board fall into two general categories: (a) non-active loans charged to the net debt of Canada, and (b) investments included in the active assets of the Government of Canada.

At March 31, 1973 active assets of $274 million are the same as at March 31, 1972.

National Capital Commission

Outstanding loans to the Commission to acquire property total $64 million, of which $41 million is in respect of the "Greenbelt" section of the National Capital Area. These latter loans which are likely to require parliamentary appropriations in subsequent fiscal years increased by $3 million during the year.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

There is no change in the working capital, the balance remaining at $10 million. Loans to the Corporation for capital purposes total $160 million compared with $138 million at March 31, 1972. Recovery of these loans is likely to require parliamentary appropriations in subsequent fiscal years.

Other domestic loans

Loans to provincial governments in the amount of $698 million are $193 million higher than the March 31, 1972 balance. The increase is due mainly to the Federal-Provincial Loans Program, 1971 for the purpose of assisting in the creation of employment. Advances under the Veterans Land Act at $503 million are the same as at March 31, 1972, advances under the Municipal Development and Loan Act at $244 million are $10 million less than at March 31, 1972, advances of $188 million to the Canada Development Corporation are $163 million more than at March 31, 1972 and Airport Capital Loans of $192 million are $55 million more.

made quinquennially, the next of which is being made as at December 31, 1970 for the Canadian forces superannuation account, as at December 31, 1972 for the public service superannuation account and as at December 31, 1969 for the RCMP superannuation account. Any actuarial deficiencies revealed when the evaluation is made will be credited to the superannuation account and charged to unamortized actuarial deficiencies and amortized to budgetary expenditure in five equal annual instalments commencing in the fiscal year in which the credit has been made to the superannuation account. Also, the cost for benefits payable under the superannuation acts as a result of the authorization of salary increases is credited to the superannuation accounts and charged to unamortized actuarial deficiencies and amortized over a period of five years commencing in the year in which the increase is authorized.

The unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the public service superannuation account is $388 million compared with $403 million at March 31, 1972. During the year $170 million was charged thereto as a result of salary increases and $185 million was amortized as a charge to budgetary expenditure of which $104 million was charged to interest on public debt.

The unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the Canadian forces superannuation account is $377 million compared with $331 million at March 31, 1972. During the year $214 million was charged thereto as a result of salary increases and $168 million was amortized to budgetary expenditure of which $79 million was charged to interest on public debt.

The unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the RCMP superannuation account is $24 million compared with $19 million at March 31, 1972. During the year $18 million was charged thereto as a result of salary increases and $13 million was amortized to budgetary expenditure of which $5 million was charged to interest on public debt.

Cost of new loans issued during 1972-73 and charged to the account total $57 million, of which $34 million in respect of treasury bills discounts will be charged to interest on public debt in 1973-74. Credits to the account were $70 million, of which $41 million is a charge to the budgetary expenditure category "annual amortization costs" and $29 million (representing discount applicable to 1972-73 on treasury bills issued in 1971-72) is a charge to the budgetary expenditure category "interest on public debt".

Capital assets

Assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., that are charged to budgetary expenditure at the time of acquisition or construction, are included in this category and are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1.

Inactive loans and investments

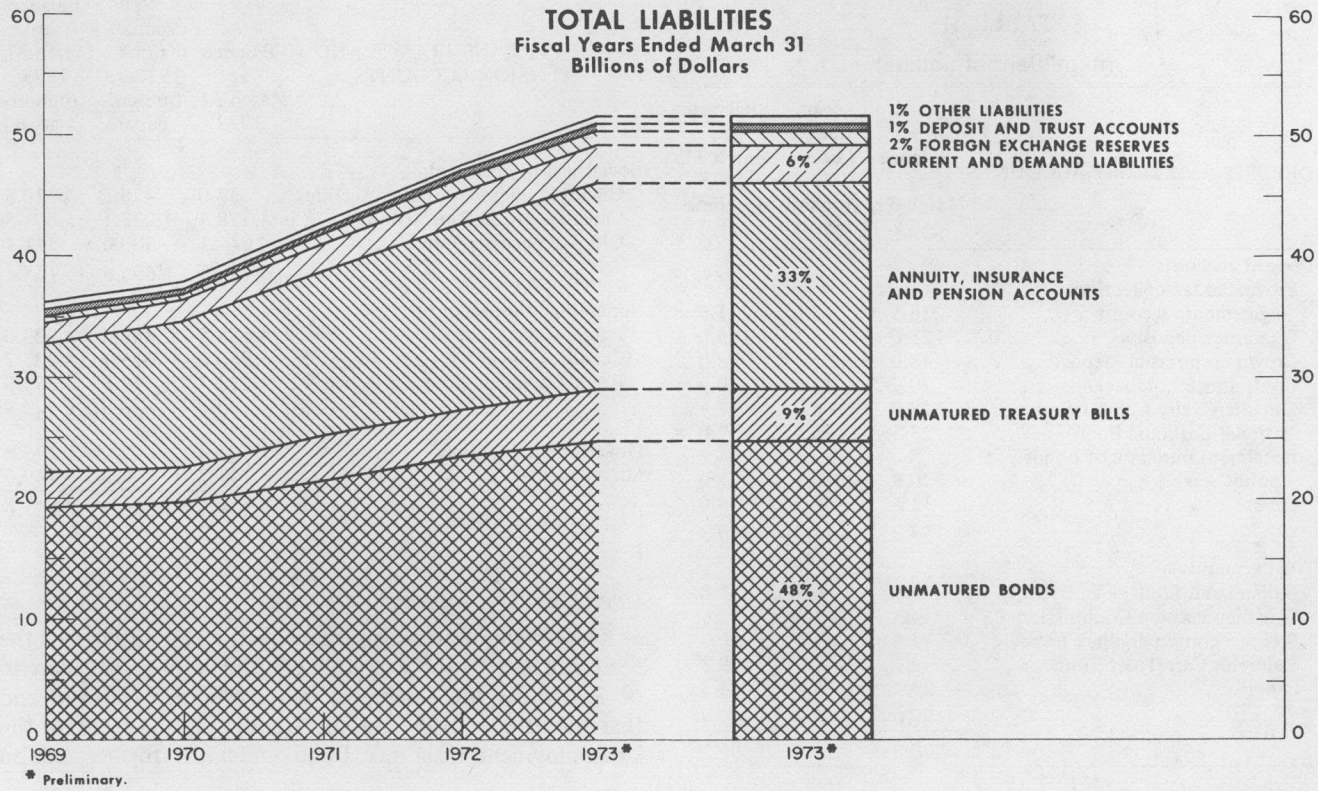
Such loans and investments which are recorded herein are not currently revenue-producing or realizable. Included are the loans of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, loans totalling $24 million and $7 million made to Roumania and Greece, respectively, in 1919-20 and 1920-21 and advances of $15 million in respect of the implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited).

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

There has been no change in this reserve since the fiscal year 1956-57. The balance is $546 million.

NET DEBT

The net debt of Canada, or the excess of liabilities over net recorded assets, is estimated at $17,492 million as at March 31, 1973 compared with $17,937 million at March 31, 1972. The decrease of $445 million reflects the 1972-73 budgetary surplus.



LIABILITY ACCOUNTS

Current and demand liabilities

Those liabilities, which consist of obligations of the government payable currently or on demand, total $3,201 million compared with $2,681 million at March 31, 1972.

Outstanding cheques at $777 million are $40 million more than at March 31, 1972 and accounts payable at $682 million are $33 million more than at the previous fiscal year-end.

Interest due and outstanding at $870 million is $311 million higher and interest accrued at $592 million is $52 million higher than at March 31, 1972.

Unemployment Insurance Account

The Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, authorized the establishment in the accounts of Canada of an account to be known as the Unemployment Insurance Account and that the balance of the amount standing to the credit of the Unemployment Insurance Fund under the former Act on June 27, 1971, together with interest accrued thereon to that day, be credited thereto.

The Act also provides that all amounts received under the Act as or on account of premiums, fines, penalties, interest and repayment of overpayments of benefits, and all amounts collected by the Commission for services rendered to other government departments or agencies or the public, shall be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund and shall be credited to the Unemployment Insurance Account; that any other amounts provided out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for any purpose related to unemployment insurance that is authorized by an appropriation by Parliament and the administration of which falls to the Commission shall be credited to the Unemployment Insurance Account; that the Minister of Finance may authorize, in accordance with such terms and conditions and at such rates as he may prescribe, the payment of interest on the balance in the Unemployment Insurance Account, and such interest shall be credited to the account; and that there shall be charged to the account all amounts paid as or on account of benefits under this Act and the costs of administration of the Act.

During 1972-73 receipts totalled $2,122 million of which $1,305 million were advances by the government and disbursements were $2,148 million resulting in a balance of $10 million at March 31, 1973.

Old Age Security Fund

The Old Age Security Act, 1951, directed that this fund be established and that credits to the fund should consist of a 2 per cent sales tax, a 2 per cent (maximum tax $60) on individual incomes and a 2 per cent tax on corporation incomes, and that pension payments of $40 per month be paid to all eligible persons over 70 years of age. Payments were effective from January 1952.

Amendments to the Act have increased these tax rates: on individual incomes to 4 per cent effective January 1, 1964 (maximum tax $120 increased to $240 effective January 1, 1967); on corporation incomes to 3 per cent effective January 1, 1959; and on sales to 3 per cent effective April 10, 1959.

The Old Age Security Act was amended effective January 1, 1972 to provide for the repeal of these taxes and for the crediting to the fund of an amount estimated to be equal to what would have been credited to the fund had those taxes not been repealed.

Pension rates also have increased by amendments to the Act to $75 per month effective October 1, 1963, to $76.50 per month effective January 1, 1968, to $78 per month effective January 1, 1969, to $79.58 effective January 1, 1970 and to $80 effective January 1, 1971. A subsequent amendment in May 1972 provided that the basic pension be escalated effective January 1973 to reflect changes in the consumer price index and resulted in monthly payments of $82.88 effective January 1973.

The Act was furtner amended to authorize pension payments effective January 1966 to all persons who had satisfied the residence requirements of the Act who had attained the age of 69 years on or before January 1, 1966; the age limit being reduced by one year on January 1st of each subsequent year until 1970. A further amendment in 1966-67 authorized the payment of a monthly guaranteed income supplement to eligible pensioners. The amount of the supplement that may be paid to a pensioner for a month was 40 per cent of the amount of the old age security pension. An amendment in 1970 fixed the maximum basic supplement at $55 per month and the amendment to the old age security program in May 1972 provided for the escalation of the basic old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement to the extent of the full annual increase in the consumer price index which brought the guaranteed income supplement to $67.12 per month effective January 1973.

During 1972-73 pension payments of $2,526 million exceed receipts of $2,226 million by $300 million reducing the balance in the account to $341 million at March 31, 1973. Receipts consist of $770 million from sales tax,

The balance of $1,297 million is $7 million less than the balance of $1,304 million at March 31, 1972.

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

This category records the undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts from which disbursements may be made in the current and future years for authorized purposes. They fall into two classes. The first of these, comprising the majority of the accounts, consists of cases where parliament has appropriated moneys for specific purposes. The other class consists of accounts to which is credited moneys received from the sale of materials, supplies, equipment, land, works and buildings and which are available in the current and future years with the authority of parliament, for purposes of the Department of National Defence.

The balance of $186 million is $5 million less than at March 31, 1972.

The main changes are a decrease of $17 million in the reserve for wheat inventory reduction payments and an increase of $10 million in the international assistance account.

THE CASH POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT

The government's cash account represents balances of current and special deposits to the credit of the Receiver General for Canada in the Bank of Canada, chartered banks in Canada and certain banks in London, New York, Brussels, Bonn, Frankfurt and Rome.

The cash position of the government is affected not only by budgetary transactions but also by changes in the government's unmatured debt and other non-budgetary transactions. Non-budgetary transactions are those which affect the government's asset and liability accounts and must be taken into account when considering the full scope of the government's financial operations.

On the asset side, the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayment by crown corporations and other government agencies and funds, national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations and other borrowers. On the liability side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The following statement summarizes both the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions in 1972-73 and indicates how they affected the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1971-72 are also shown.

In 1972-73 an estimated surplus of $445 million in budgetary transactions and an estimated net requirement of $1,828 million for non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions) will result in an overall requirement of $1,383 million. As outstanding unmatured debt is expected to result in an increase of $1,785 million during the year, Receiver General bank balances will increase by $402 million. In 1971-72 the budgetary deficit of $614 million and net requirements of $1,113 million for non-budgetary purposes resulted in an overall requirement of $1,727 million. As there was an increase of $2,049 million in outstanding unmatured debt, Receiver General bank balances rose by $322 million.

Gross debt, net recorded assets and net debt

The gross debt of Canada, or the total of liabilities as recorded on the statement of assets and liabilities, is estimated to be $51,740 million at March 31, 1973, an increase of $4,017 million over the total at March 31, 1972. The main changes are increases of $1,779 million in unmatured debt and $1,555 million annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Unmatured debt at $29,038 million represents 56 per cent and annuity, insurance and pension accounts at $17,131 million represents 33 per cent of the total. At March 31, 1972 unmatured debt at $27,259 million was 57 per cent and annuity, insurance and pension accounts at $15,576 million were 33 per cent of total liabilities.

The government's net recorded assets are estimated to be $34,248 million at March 31, 1973, an increase of $4,462 million over the total at March 31, 1972. The main changes are increases of $1,462 million in advances, loans and investments, $979 million in the Canada Pension Plan investment fund and $1,305 million in advances to the Unemployment Insurance Account. Advances, loans and investments at $17,050 million represent 50 per cent, foreign exchange reserve accounts at $6,834 million represent 20 per cent and the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at $5,590 million represent 16 per cent of the total. At March 31, 1972 advances, loans and investments at $15,589 million were 52 per cent, foreign exchange reserve accounts at $6,658 million were 22 per cent and the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at $4,611 million was 15 per cent of the total.

Based on the above figures the net debt of Canada will be $17,492 million at March 31, 1973 compared with $17,937 million at March 31, 1972. The decrease of $445 million is equivalent to the 1972-73 estimated budgetary surplus.

Unmatured debt

Total unmatured debt of $29,038 million is $1,779 million more than at March 31, 1972.

The government's holdings of its own securities as at March 31, 1973 are comprised of $56 million in the securities investment account, which represent Canada savings bonds held in respect of the employees instalment purchase plan. This is a decrease of $4 million over the previous year-end total, when holdings were $45 million in the securities investment account in respect of the employees instalment purchase plan and $15 million in investment held for retirement of unmatured debt.

Of the total unmatured debt, $28,704 million is payable in Canadian dollars, $260 million is payable in U.S. dollars and $74 million is payable in German deutsche marks. Securities payable in U.S. dollars are converted at U.S. $1.00 = CAN. $1.08108 and those payable in Deutsche Marks are converted at D.M. 3.66 = CAN. $1.08108.

Summary of security issues, maturities, cancellations, conversions and redemptions

Excluding the refunding of treasury bills, the government will have issued securities in an amount of $4,180 million and will have retired $2,401 million.

Net sales of Canada savings bonds series 27 of $2,003 million exceed redemptions of $727 million by $1,276 million bringing total Canada savings bonds to $10,988 million at March 31, 1973.

Treasury bills of $4,290 million are $460 million more than at March 31, 1972 and consist of $2,795 million in three-month bills, $1,095 million in six-month bills and $400 million in special bills.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to seek unanimous consent to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Having regard to the persistent delays in applications for veterans disability pensions being dealt with by the Pension Commission, and as the entitlement and review board work load has reached emergency proportions, and consideration must be given to a means of speeding up the process, particularly for those veterans who are in their late years, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Madill):

That the matter be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to review those clauses in the legislation, and particularly the benefit of the doubt clause and as well the shortage of administrative personnel, to relieve the excessive waiting period which is causing hardship to many thousands of veterans.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POLICY REVIEW STUDIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the recent indiscretions committed by the Globe and Mail and Le Soleil in respect of confidential studies of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the House recommend to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to consider prompt release of the complete set of recently prepared studies in his department dealing with policy review of the Atlantic region, the prairie region and the Pacific region before the daily press gets its hands on these reports, thus ripping off the taxpayers of Canada by publishing the government's confidential documents.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—SALE OF AIRCRAFT

Question No. 832—Mr. Stevens:

1. Has the Canadian Commercial Corporation paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund the $17,111,554 ($2,651,000 in accounts payable and $14,460,554 in advances from customers) received by that Corporation in partial payment for the sale of aircraft to a foreign government on behalf of the Department of National Defence as the Auditor General in his last audit report for the Corporation dated June, 1972 said should have been done by the Corporation and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, for what reason was the amount not initially paid into the special accounts in the Consolidated Revenue Fund established by Section 11 of the National Defence Act for proceeds from the sale of material which is not surplus to requirements, and Vote 48, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1966, for proceeds from the sale of surplus materials?

2. Has the $44,818 accrued interest earned on these funds as of March 31, 1972 and subsequent accrued interest been remitted to the Receiver General as revenue of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The transaction involves the sale of surplus and non-surplus materiel to a foreign government with the proceeds of the sale to be used to purchase further supplies for National Defence. At the direction of the Governor in Council and the Minister of Supply and Services, both facets are being handled by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. The financial aspects of the transaction are being administered in accordance with the provisions of relevant legislation and have been approved by Treasury Board on the advice of their legal advisers, the Department of Justice, as follows: 1. (a) Proceeds received from the sale of surplus material are being retained by the Canadian Commercial Corporation as it is authorized to do by the CCC Act, and are being used to purchase materiel for the Department of National Defence; (b) proceeds received from the sale of non-surplus materiel are being administered in accordance with Section 11 of the National Defence Act.

2. No, they are being retained and administered by the Canadian Commercial Corporation in accordance with Sections 3 and 5 of the CCC Act in furthering the corporation's purposes; in this instance, the purchase of defence materiel.

AIR CANADA—STATISTICS ON INTERNATIONAL PASSENGERS

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In the past three years, how many passengers, travelling on Air Canada planes to foreign countries, have departed from (a) Toronto (b) Montreal?

2. In the past three years, how many passengers, travelling on Air Canada planes from foreign countries, have arrived in (a) Toronto (b) Montreal?

3. Has Air Canada any figures showing the number of international passengers arriving in and departing from Toronto and Montreal who are travelling on other airlines?

4. Does Air Canada consider that the center of further operations in Canada for International Airlines will be increasingly in Toronto and, if so, has Air Canada reconsidered its policy of expanding its overhaul facilities at Dorval and replacing it by a policy of de-centralizing its overhaul facilities in cities such as Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, etc.?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1, 2 and 3.

(2) Aviation Statistics Centre Service Bulletins Cat. 51-004, Vol. 4, No. 21, Asc-5B-2-3 minus Air Canada passengers.

4. Air Canada considers that Toronto is, and will continue to be, one of the major centers of International air transportation, and its policy on facilities is governed accordingly.

AIR CANADA—HEADQUARTERS ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many Air Canada employees work in space rented by Air Canada in Place Ville Marie in Montreal?

2. Except for secretarial help, what classifications of employees, aside from senior executives, are housed in Place Ville Marie?

3. Has Air Canada studied the question of whether it would be more economical to rent or build its own office to provide working space for the majority of its headquarters' employees in less expensive accommodation as Place Ville Marie?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1. Approximately 920 employees of Air Canada are located in rented office space in Place Ville Marie.

[Mr. Stevens.]

2. Management, professional and clerical personnel engaged in marketing, transportation services, finance, personnel, law, public relations, secretary and supporting organizations.

3. This possibility is under review. Prior examinations have shown, however, that existing lease arrangements are relatively advantageous.

AIR CANADA—IN-FLIGHT FOOD SERVICE

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many complaints has Air Canada received about the food served to passengers, particularly those travelling in the economy class, in the past two years?

2. How many complaints has Air Canada received that the food service has deteriorated and that it compares unfavourably with the food served to other major carriers in Canada and other countries?

3. Has Air Canada discussed complaints it has received of its present caterer, with a view to obtaining an improvement in the food service?

4. For how long does the contract to supply food for Air Canada passengers run with the present supplier?

5. Is Air Canada discussing the supplying of meals with other caterers with a view to improving food service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1. 1971, 1 complaint per 3,854 passengers; 1972, 1 complaint per 4,347 passengers.

2. Complaints are not classified according to how many deal with how Air Canada's food service compares with those of other domestic and foreign airlines. As an indication, however, in the past two years the Company has received well over 2,000 commendations on the quality of its food service from satisfied customers.

3. The food service is constantly monitored and reviewed with the Company's caterers to ensure quality standards are met.

4 and 5. Air Canada deals with 30 contractors for in-flight meals across its system. Term of these arrangements varies. Generally, Air Canada reserves the right to terminate for failure to meet quality specifications.

AIR CANADA—BILINGUALISM AMONG STEWARDESSES AND SENIOR PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,185—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) Are unilingual girls who are well-qualified in every respect, except the fact that they are not bilingual, able to become stewardesses for Air Canada (b) is knowledge of more than one language required of stewardesses and, if so, is this fact made known to applicants for positions?

2. Are most senior positions at Air Canada Headquarters in Montreal reserved for bilingual employees?

3. How many unilingual (English or French) employees have been appointed to senior positions in Montreal by Air Canada since 1970 (a) from within Air Canada (b) from outside Air Canada?

4. Which senior positions in Montreal has Air Canada clearly identified as requiring a bilingual occupant and are all employees fully aware of this requirement?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1 (a) and (b), Unilingual English-speaking persons are hired as Flight Attendants. Fluency in both of Canada's official languages, as well as in German, Russian, Czech, Danish, Flemish or other languages improves the candidate's competitive position. This information is made known through brochures and advertising.

2. No.

3. Since 1970, eight unilingual people were appointed to senior management positions, of which (a) seven were promoted from within the Company, and (b) one was recruited from outside.

4. Senior positions are not classified in this way, but many are occupied by bilingual persons.

Order Paper Questions

AIR CANADA—APPOINTMENT OF McKINSEY AND COMPANY AS CONSULTANTS

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What were the circumstances which led Air Canada to employ a USA-based firm—McKinsey and Company—to advise in the major reorganization which took place in 1970?

2. How much did McKinsey and Company receive in consulting fees during its full period of advisory service with Air Canada?

3. What significant changes have been made in the organization pattern of Air Canada as a result of the Report, adopted in 1970, during the past two years?

4. Were other management consulting firms involved in these further changes and, if so (a) what were their names (b) what did it cost the Company in each case?

5. (a) Did McKinsey and Company recommend the establishment of a key Vice-President position (b) was this position eliminated in 1972 and, if so, what was the reason for this decision?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Air Canada management advises as follows: 1. Several consultant companies, including Canada-based firms, were asked to submit applications. McKinsey and Company Inc. was selected because it best met the Corporation's requirements.

2. The Corporation considers this proprietary information.

3. The essential changes have been to create a strong marketing branch and a regional organization with clear lines of authority over the stations within that region.

4. Air Canada has used a number of management consultants in the last two years in the ordinary course of business. Their purpose has not been primarily concerned with corporate organization.

5. (a) McKinsey recommended a complete organization for Air Canada with the notable changes as set out in 3 above; (b) the management structure has evolved in various ways since 1970. In particular there has been insistence on direct reporting by regional vice presidents to the president.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES IN QUEBEC, 1969-72

Question No. 1,846—Mr. Matte:

What was the amount of money spent in Quebec by the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Armed Forces in the years 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): For the fiscal year 1971-72 it is estimated that the Department of National Defence spent $376,733,266.00 in the Province of Quebec. This estimate is based on a calculation of a distribution of all DND budgetary expenditures. Prior to 1971-72 the Department used a different base to estimate the distribution of DND expenditure; therefore any comparison with earlier estimates covering the period 1968-1971 would not be valid.

MILITARY EQUIPMENT AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE BETWEEN CANADA AND COUNTRIES OF THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH

Question No. 1,874—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since 1950, has Canada supplied military equipment or technical assistance to countries of the British Commonwealth and, if so, what countries benefited and in what amounts?

2. Did Canada receive military equipment or technical aid from countries of the British Commonwealth and, if so, from what countries and in what amounts?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, the following British Commonwealth countries have received military equipment and/or technical assistance since 1950: Barbados, Ghana, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Nigeria, Singapore, Tanzania, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, United Kingdom, Zambia. Due to the period covering the question, the value of the equipment and assistance cannot be accurately determined from records now available, with the exception of the United Kingdom where the amount was contained in reply to Question 1,875, 9 May 73, page 3563 of Hansard.

2. No.

IMPORTS OF EXOTIC CATTLE

Question No. 1,889—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. How many federal permits were given out for import of exotic cattle in (a) 1971 (b) 1972 (c) 1973?

2. What criteria are used to determine the number of permits issued for such imports and to whom they shall be given?

3. For 1972, how many permits were given for import into each province?

4. How many have been granted so far for import into each province during 1973?

5. Is the current government policy on such importation under review and, if so, on what date will the new policy or criteria for importation be announced?

6. Has the government received criticism of the present policy and, if so (a) how many (b) were they from organizations or individuals?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) 1971, 608 permits for the importation year 1971-72; (b) 1972, 639 permits for the importation year 1972-73; (c) Permits have not, as yet, been issued for the importation year 1973-74.

NOTE: The importation of exotic cattle is dealt with by "importation year". Within this year, a shipment enters quarantine on Grosse Ile in October and shipments enter quarantine on St. Pierre in November and the following May.

2. Applicants provide written "project proposals" outlining their proposed breeding program utilizing the cattle for which they are making application to import and provide an inventory of their present cattle herd with particular reference to those cattle of European breeding. A departmental officer visits and interviews each applicant to verify the cattle inventory, and provide an assessment as to his capabilities and the likelihood of his achieving a viable breeding program. These project proposals and interview reports are then submitted anonymously to a technical review committee composed for four geneticists, two of whom are from this Department and two of whom are from universities. The committee assesses and rates the project proposals on the likelihood of the project proposal leading to a viable herd development of general improvement to the livestock industry in Canada, and the likelihood of the breeding proposal being achieved. The permits are then allocated to those importers whose proposals receive the higher ratings until such time as the limits of the quarantine stations are reached. The number of cattle awarded to each applicant is dependent upon the priorities recommended by the technical review committee and the rating awarded the proposal.

Province	Permits Issued
Newfoundland	Nil
Prince Edward Island	1
Nova Scotia	3
New Brunswick	5
Quebec	13
Ontario	51
Manitoba	76
Saskatchewan	135
Alberta	324
British Columbia	31
Total	639

4. Permits have not, as yet, been issued for the 1973-74 importation year.

5. The policy has been reviewed and the decision made and announced to continue the project proposal system for at least this year.

6. The department has received 26 critical letters, all of which were from or on behalf of individuals who had been unsuccessful in obtaining permits. No criticism has been received from the breed associations.

1973 SEALIFT

Question No. 1,977—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the government intend to take steps towards upgrading existing standards for safety and vessel construction of ships employed in the Sealift 1973 specifically, or Arctic cargo haulage generally, with a view to phasing out the use of ships built and designed for use in other seas and (a) if so, of what nature, and on what date may they be expected (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Standards of safety and vessel construction of ships used in Arctic waters north of 60° latitude have recently been upgraded by the Arctic Shipping Pollution Prevention regulations which came into force on October 5, 1972. These regulations were made pursuant to Sections 4(3), 5(2), 12(1) and 12(3) of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act which was proclaimed on August 2, 1972. They set various standards of ship construction for entry into specified zones in the Arctic and require navigational and other equipment, all of which are in excess of those required for ships navigating in other seas.

DISCUSSIONS WITH GOVERNMENT OF GERMANY REGARDING ARCTIC RESOURCE EXTRACTION

Question No. 2,028—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government still involved with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany with respect to Arctic resource extraction and, if so, what is the nature of the negotiations and what is their present status?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Exploratory discussions have taken place between Canadian officials and German representatives interested in the possibilities of resource development and shipping in the Canadian Arctic. These discussions have been preliminary in nature and no commitments of any kind have been made. It is understood that the Germans may submit a proposal for co-operation with Canada in the research and development of an ice breaking cargo ship. No such proposal has yet been received and no negotiations have taken place.

FINANCE

REASONS FOR PREDICTING BALANCED BUDGET FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1973, IN LIGHT OF ACTUAL SURPLUS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he any explanation as to how, as recently as six weeks ago, he could have predicted a balanced budget for the fiscal year that expired on March 31 last whereas in fact a surplus of almost half a billion dollars was actually the result? Has the minister any explanation at all as to how he and his officials could be as much as half a billion dollars out six weeks before the end of the fiscal year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Sir. That discrepancy is well within the range of 1 per cent or 2 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —found in the national accounts. As a matter of fact, this morning Statistics Canada released a revision of the national accounts for the year 1972 moving up the gross national product from 5.5 per cent to 5.8 per cent. But in the accounts to which the hon. gentleman refers a good deal of it has to do with the inability of parliament to deal with some of the legislative items that were forecasted as being part of the accounts. I refer to the enactment of the Canadian National-Air Canada guarantees bill, and personal income tax refunds were much lower in the first quarter because the income tax measures for 1972 were still pending, and many corporations had to maintain—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —their existing rate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, there must be a specific place in the rules of the House and a specific time when the minister can make apologies, but not now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition presents me with a question in debating form, surely I am entitled under the rules to reply to him in debating form.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I simply asked the minister if he had any explanation of the discrepancy of half a billion dollars and obviously he has not. In view of the minister and his department being half a billion dollars out in their prediction as recently as six weeks before the end of the fiscal year, and in view of the impossibility of running a country on that basis, I ask the minister whether he has any intention of establishing a more effective forecasting arrangement?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with that in debate, but I should say to the hon. gentleman that he and his colleagues were calling for a deficit twice as large as the deficit I predicted for that fiscal year, and yet the real gross national product in this country for the first quarter increased 2.9 per cent which is an annual rate of 10 to 12 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman is talking about a deficit that did not come closer to his expectations, he and his colleagues have grossly underestimated the expansion of the economy.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that response is just about as irrelevant as the forecast was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether in fact he and his officials were trying to make an accurate forecast or were simply predicting a balanced budget for the current fiscal year for the purpose of creating an uncertain atmosphere with regard to the budget he was presenting?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the forecast was based on an anticipation of what parliament might be able to accomplish. That has not been the case. There is certain legislation upon which that forecast was based which has not been passed. The economy is reflecting a growth that has boosted sales and import taxes and the increase in employment is even stronger than we forecast, so that revenues were stronger than those we forecast.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if this serious miscalculation of government finances and accounts is in any way related to the 180 degree change in government planning and priorities contained in the cabinet document which the Prime Minister refused to table the other day, and will the minister explain or rationalize this change in direction which, if taken in civilian life, would come perilously close to obtaining by false pretences?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the Prime Minister commenting upon that alleged document to any extent at all.

INDUSTRY

MEETING OF CABINET MINISTERS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS—REPORTED MEETING OF MINDS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of reports that several cabinet ministers met last Friday with representatives of 13 business organizations and that it was a real meeting of the minds on the important question of our economic development, would the minister, who was present at that meeting, be good enough to indicate what this meeting of minds consisted of and whether this meeting of minds means that the multimillion dollar grants from the federal treasury, and especially from the minister's department, to private enterprise will continue in the same haphazard fashion and in the same over-generous amounts?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the meeting that took place on Friday was a meeting to hear and consider the views of industry with respect to the question of an industrial strategy for Canada. The basis of the discussion was a compendium of views of over 200 pages. There was discussion by various industrial associations as to their approach to the industrial strategy question, and discussion by myself and my colleagues as to our approach. The phrase "meeting of minds" I think reflected the view of the businessmen present and our approach to development of an industrial strategy. In other words, their objectives and strategies for the industrial development of Canada are very much on the same wavelength.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

MEETING OF CABINET MINISTERS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSION OF FURTHER GRANTS TO BELL CANADA AND TELEPHONE RATES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Given that the chief spokesmen for the business community were Messrs. Wolff and Marquez, chief executive officers of Bell Canada subsidiaries, would the minister indicate to the House whether federal grants additional to the $40-odd million granted so far to Bell Telephone and its subsidiaries were discussed at the meeting and could the minister tell the House whether there was any meeting of minds on the matter of Bell Telephone rates? Also, can the minister announce that Bell Canada rates are going to be rolled back?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there was no consideration of questions such as grants or rates, but there was a consideration of long-term objectives for Canada. They were spelled out in a paper which was presented for purposes of discussion, and I think there was a genuine meeting of minds as to what the long-term objectives of "an industrial strategy" for Canada might be and how industry might play its part in meeting those objectives.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the non-answers we are getting from the minister, would the minister please be kind enough to make available to the House the text of his speech so we can interpret what he said to that meeting?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to submit a copy of my notes to the hon. member on another occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for St. John's East.

CHANGES IN AUTOMOTIVE POLICY AS PART OF INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY—RESUMPTION OF TRADE TALKS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As one part of an industrial strategy for the country includes the automobile industry, I wonder whether the minister is in a position now to say when the government will be announcing its changes in the automotive policy. Related to that, may I ask whether the minister is in a position to announce when trade talks on that subject are going to resume between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated on earlier occasions that, although the automobile industry is a very important industry from the point of view of the whole strategies approach, I am not in a position at this stage to indicate when those talks will resume, but I hope it will be very shortly.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LOWER ST. LAWRENCE AREA—INQUIRY RESPECTING STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the statements the minister made at Matane over the weekend to the effect that the Lower St. Lawrence region should get more assistance from the central government, can he tell us whether he intends to formulate or to have the government formulate a new investment policy for that area?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to refer to what I said: he will then realize that he is not quoting me exactly.

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Labour. Does the absence of the Minister of Labour indicate that the government is now involving itself directly in the Air Canada machinists dispute which is crippling the system and which has struck Montreal today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, not necessarily, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Gallagher is acting in his proper capacity. The minister himself is having meetings at this time with his officials on the subject of the strike.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact the federal mediator has met today separately with both sides to the dispute, is the Prime Minister able to report on those meetings and tell us whether the situation is any closer to settlement at this time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at this time we find it preferable not to make any public statement on the state of the negotiations. As the Minister of Transport said late last week, it is not helpful to negotiations to make them public at each stage.

STRIKE BY FINANCIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary, or at least a parallel question. Is the government in a position to make any statement regarding the dispute between Air Canada and the Canadian Airline Employees Association? I am referring to the difficulties between the company and the finance branch employees.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question is under advisement in the Department of Labour and officials are working on it now.

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—MAINTENANCE OF ADEQUATE SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House what, if any, special precautions are being taken by his department to ensure that adequate safety standards are being maintained during these rotating strikes?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, definitely.

Mr. Baldwin: That was a truly bilingual answer.

STRIKE BY FINANCIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—PROCEDURE FOR COLLECTING SHARE OF TICKET MONEY FROM OTHER AIRLINES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport with regard to the strike. With the Canadian Airline Employees Association on strike and the finance department in Winnipeg closed, how is Air Canada billing and collecting its share of ticket moneys from other airlines? I understand there are deadlines as to when these moneys, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, can be collected.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire of Air Canada and inform the hon. member as to how they are proceeding.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary with regard to the question of safety. Is the flight performance quality control recording for Air Canada aircraft being properly reviewed with the Winnipeg office closed?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think so, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORTHCOMING WESTERN ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR PARTICIPATION BY OPPOSITION MEMBERS IN PLANNING AND MEETINGS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It concerns an issue I raised on April 12. In view of the Prime Minister's consultation with the four provincial leaders of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, will the Prime Minister arrange ways for western members of parliament who are not Liberals to participate in the planning and holding of this historic western economic opportunities conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question has been referred to the committee arranging the conference. At this stage I cannot answer the hon. member in the affirmative. It seems that each government will have its own group of officials and advisers. There will, of course, be room at the open meetings for observers. I can tell the hon. member we will want to make sure that members of parliament and members of the provincial legislatures will be given priority in the observers' seats.

Mr. Roche: If I understand the Prime Minister correctly, the meetings will be open. Will he clarify whether all the meetings will be open or only some? Also, will there be a way in which western members of parliament can participate in planning the input into the conference as well as the actual conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, some of these meetings will be open, some will be in camera. I do not believe the final decision has been reached on what parts of the agenda will be open and what parts will be closed. As far as input is concerned, we as a government have welcomed input from all sources, including members of parliament from other parties. I have also written to boards of trade and other representative groups in the west to ensure that any input they want to make will arrive at my office fairly soon. I would certainly welcome representations and briefs from other parties.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT IN ACCORDANCE WITH PUBLIC SERVICE SALARIES—CABINET DECISION ON BASIC RATE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the representation by the National Council of Veterans Associations and four provincial commands directly to the Prime Minister suggesting that veterans disability pensions be adjusted in accordance with public service salaries and not the cost of living as at present, will the Prime Minister advise the House what action the government is taking to comply with this request and whether a decision has been made by cabinet to accept the recommendation of the joint study report on the basic rate of pension?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question has been considered by cabinet. When the Minister of Veterans Affairs returns from Europe where he is presently representing Canada at the D-Day ceremonies he will probably want to contact the representative organizations of the veterans and in due course inform the House when a decision is finalized.

D-DAY CEREMONIES IN FRANCE—REASON NO OPPOSITION PARTY MEMBERS INVITED TO PARTICIPATE

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of Veterans Affairs is in France participating in D-Day observances, can the Prime Minister inform the House why no members of opposition parties were invited to participate in these ceremonies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot, Mr. Speaker, but it is certainly the custom of the government to ensure that delegations are composed of members of parliament who can find their way clear to be absent at any particular time. I do not have the precise answer in this case. I see that the acting minister does not have it either, but I will inquire.

HARBOURS

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF OIL TANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—LETTER BY ENVIRONMENT MINISTER TO "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

I would like to ask him whether the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Fisheries was stating government policy in his letter to the Globe and Mail rejecting any project for the construction of a tanker port on the St. Lawrence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that letter; I have therefore nothing specific to say against its contents. As for the government policy, no negative decision has been taken about the construction of a tanker port on the St. Lawrence; on the contrary, I think that the discussions are still open.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rises on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon is not here, but I have shared his point of view on numerous occasions. I believe Your Honour has frequently mentioned that you do not believe it is proper for parliamentary secretaries to address questions to cabinet ministers. I notice that we are again reverting to that habit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: That point has been raised before and I have commented on it before. If the hon. member would refer to earlier statements I have made he would find I have never indicated that parliamentary secretaries should not ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NORTHERN ONTARIO—JOINT ACTION WITH PROVINCE TO FORMULATE CO-ORDINATED DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion I address my question to his parliamentary secretary or to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Ontario government has recognized the need for special economic programs to assist northern Ontario, can the hon. gentleman inform the House what action his department has taken in conjunction with the province to formulate a co-ordinated plan of development for northern Ontario?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I was absent-minded for a moment and I would greatly appreciate it if the hon. member would repeat the beginning of his question.

[English]

Mr. Symes: With the situation in northern Ontario it is obvious that not only the parliamentary secretary but also the department is dozing. In view of the fact that the Ontario government has recognized the need for special economic programs to assist northern Ontario, can the parliamentary secretary inform the House what action the department has taken in conjunction with the province to formulate a co-ordinated plan of development for northern Ontario?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has met with the provincial premiers and held extensive conversations on the co-ordination which should exist between the federal department and the various provincial governments; the policy on this is being elaborated. On the other hand, I must recognize that, when he appeared before the committee, the minister dwelt at great length on what ought to be accomplished in northern Ontario. The hon. member should know that, if there have been problems in the past, they resulted mostly from lack of interest on the part of the Ontario government which, for many years, had neglected the northern area.

[English]

Mr. Symes: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Bearing in mind a confidential DREE report which I released to the House last Thursday, stating that 6,000 jobs may become redundant in northern Ontario within the next two or three years, what immediate steps will the Prime Minister take to see that such an economic upheaval does not occur?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There is little I can add to what the parliamentary secretary has just said, except to say that there is to be a meeting with the responsible minister of the Ontario government, Mr. White, I believe, within a week.

ENERGY

NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS BY MINISTER WITH VISITING UNITED STATES SENATORS AND OFFICIALS—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON GAS PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising from the fact that a number of United States senators and officials were in Ottawa over the weekend, apparently making inquiries about the federal government's position with reference to energy. Did the minister hold any discussions with these people?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Sir.

Mr. Woolliams: If I understood the minister's shotgun answer, he said "Yes, Sir". Are you now in a position to tell the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Woolliams: —through you, Mr. Speaker—the nature of your discussions with regard to this subject which is so important to the country, particularly to western Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Sir. We discussed, among other things, the possibility of the Mackenzie Valley route for a pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to the United States markets. I indicated, as I have told the House on a number of occasions, that the government was prepared to consider a Mackenzie Valley route as an alternative to the Alyeska proposal as one way of protecting the west coast of Canada from the tanker risk.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister go as far as to tell the House and the country whether an agreement was reached between the United States and Canada on the construction of a pipeline to transport natural gas and, eventually, petroleum crude?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Sir. There was no agreement. They were not here to seek agreement; they were here to discuss some of the issues involved in the alternatives for bringing Arctic reserves to the market.

Oral Questions

CAPABILITY OF ENERGY BOARD TO JUDGE APPLICATION TO TRANSPORT NATURAL GAS IN OTHER THAN VAPOUR FORM

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has informed us on a number of occasions that the department is studying alternative methods of transporting natural gas from the north, methods alternative to transporting it in the vapour state. Is the National Energy Board, should it be seized with this information officially, capable of rejecting an application to transport it in the vapour state—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the hon. member is asking the minister to express an opinion, in the sense that he might be asked to interpret a statute. In these terms the question would be out of order.

Mr. Rowland: May I rephrase it, then?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to do that. But we are running short of time. I suggest that hon. members should limit the number of supplementaries and make them as brief as possible.

Mr. Rowland: I believe the gist of my question was understood. I would therefore ask the minister whether the National Energy Board is capable of making that kind of judgment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): From its membership, plus additional advice which has been and will be obtained, the board has the competence to make that kind of judgment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INCREASE IN ADMINISTRATION COSTS—INQUIRY AS TO ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT ON RELATED MATTERS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In light of the fact that administration costs have increased from $26 million in 1971-72 to $128 million in 1972-73, an increase of some 400 per cent, and in view of the fact that the budget for 1973-74 is set at $144 million, can the minister advise the House whether he has pushed the advisory committee to the UIC with a view to getting its report on related matters dealing with a proposed new act as soon as possible in order that it might be possible to bring in legislation which would save the taxpayers $100 million as stipulated by the minister earlier?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am asking the advisory committee on every possible occasion to report on those matters placed before it. I must say I suspect that the $100 million to which the hon. member has referred is not related to the administrative costs which he mentioned earlier. There is quite a difference.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Alexander: In view of the rapidly rising cost, can the minister say whether he is keeping in mind the advice he received from his colleagues on the front benches and whether, in fact, the administrative cost has reached its peak, having in mind the policies of the government in relation to employment and so on?

Mr. Andras: I would hope the administrative cost has reached its peak. As I explained recently in another place, about half the increase in administrative costs compared with 1972 is due to increases in wages reflecting the general increases which are taking place in the public service. A further $10 million to $12 million is related to expansion and to decentralization of the service, something which I understand has been applauded or looked forward to by all hon. members.

GRAIN

REDUCTION IN FREE TIME ALLOWANCE FOR LOADING—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUFFICIENT BOXCARS AND NO ADDITIONAL CHARGES TO FARMERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact the Canadian railways intend reducing the free time allowance for loading from 48 hours to 24 hours on July 1, 1973, and in view of the fact that this reduction arises from an apparent shortage of boxcars, would the minister assure the House, first, that an adequate number of cars will be made available to transport grain to export positions so it is available for loading when ships are available and there will be no additional costs or demurrage charges and, second, that there will be no additional charges levied against the farmer at local points resulting from the reduction in loading time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the obvious purpose of such a change is to assure that cars are used as effectively and efficiently as possible by allowing them to turn round very quickly. The hon. member's concern about movement of grain should be met by the figures indicating that the record movement is continuing. Even in the month of May, notwithstanding that two bridges on the CNR line were out for a while and a slowdown on the CNR, another all-time record month of loadings onto ships was set.

REQUEST THAT CERTAIN DESTROYERS BE TURNED OVER TO DEPARTMENT FOR FISHERIES PROTECTION PURPOSES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's reply to my question on Friday in which he stated that the government has to keep the budget within a rate of escalation that is considered to be reasonable, and the statement of the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries that he is considering employing charter vessels as an immediate step to beef up our protection capability, would the Prime Minister take steps immediately to turn over to the Department of the Environment and Fisheries the destroyer escorts St. Laurent, Fraser and Ottawa presently at Halifax, and the St. Croix on the west coast?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have the matter looked into and will take the question as notice in order to see whether it offers any constructive alternatives.

ALLEGED DISCOVERY OF HIDEOUT OF NORMAN LEBLANC—ACTION TO EXTRADITE FROM COSTA RICA—REPRESENTATIONS BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the discovery yesterday in Costa Rica of the hide-out of Norman Leblanc, who is wanted here in connection with a fraud amounting to $107 million, is it the intention of his department to have discussions or institute proceedings with the government of Costa Rica President Figueres aiming at the extradition of Leblanc and his surrendering to Canada, and more specifically to Quebec?

GRAIN

REPORTED DROP IN FLOUR SALES TO GREAT BRITAIN—REPRESENTATIONS TO BRITISH GOVERNMENT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of recent reports that sales of flour to Great Britain, which has been a traditional market for Canada, have dropped to zero in 1973, can the minister say whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or his own department is making any representations to the British government in view of their entry into the Common Market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a very short time ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had discussions with the British in connection with their entry, and agricultural and grain matters were very high on his list. I will attempt to keep the hon. member informed about current figures on sales.

Mr. Gleave: Do the recent reported statements by Mr. Gifford, chief of the agricultural trade policy division, that Canada is not making any final policy decisions for the coming trade negotiations under GATT until the United States has decided on its approach and stated it, mean that this represents the government's position and policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not in order.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSITION OF BILATERAL AGREEMENT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the hon. gentleman kindly advise the House whether the bilateral air agreement meetings scheduled to take place last week and this week between Canada and the United States were terminated on Friday? If so, at whose instance were they terminated and what were the grounds for such termination?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the negotiations are continuing.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister kindly advise the House how it is that according to reports the negotiations or discussions have been suspended?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot explain that. All I know is that they have been very difficult and it may be that there has been an adjournment for a few days for the two sides to consider their respective positions. But the negotiations continue.

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—CONSIDERATION BY GOVERNMENT OF LEGISLATION TO ENFORCE RETURN TO WORK

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that airline strikes seem to be becoming an annual event, to the discomfiture of the travelling public of Canada and the upsetting of our entire economy, is consideration being given on the part of the minister and the government to bringing in legislation to the effect that those employed by the airline should be required to return to work with negotiations then to continue?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, hon. members know that this is within the power of the House and it has so decided in the past on a few occasions. But to my knowledge it is not in the government's program to deprive any group of workers of their right to strike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that was not the answer given on previous occasions when measures were brought into this House. I ask the minister how long this strike is going to be permitted to continue before the government does something more than simply snooze?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can have it both ways. If the House gives the right to strike to a particular group, as soon as that group goes on strike we cannot say: Don't go on strike because it is creating embarrassment.

NATIONAL REVENUE

OFFSETTING OF ONTARIO PROPERTY TAX CREDITS AGAINST ARREARS OF FEDERAL INCOME TAX

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the government, through the Department of National Revenue, is acting as agent, I would ask the minister on what authority he is acting when he claims payments made under the Ontario property tax credit scheme to senior citizens and uses this money to pay off federal tax arrears?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has serious doubts about a question asked in those terms. It seems to me the hon. member is asking for a legal interpretation. Perhaps I am wrong in this interpretation of the rule. The minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, without attempting a legal interpretation I think I can say as a matter of fact that there is provision in the agreements for administering the tax credit schemes of Ontario and Manitoba for such offsetting. This provision was drawn to the attention of provincial negotiators, who responded to the effect that this was a deliberate decision taken by Ontario. I understand it has been communicated in two brochures sent by the province of Ontario to persons who might be entitled to the property tax credit.

Mr. Hales: In drafting the agreements with the provinces, was this stipulation laid down by the federal government that they would collect this money provided they could divert it to pay off old debts?

Mr. Stanbury: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. As I say, this point was specifically drawn to the attention of the Ontario authorities, and they responded that this decision had been deliberately taken by them and that this was the way they wished the matter to be dealt with.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

CONSIDERATION OF DISCONTINUANCE OF TAX COLLECTION FOR PROVINCES

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the same minister. Has any consideration been given to the possibility of discontinuing the practice of collecting taxes for the provinces and of allowing them to collect their own taxes so the people of Canada will know where the money goes?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I suppose this would be a matter for discussion between the Minister of Finance and the finance ministers of the provinces, but I can tell the hon. member that it is no joy for the Department of National Revenue to spend up to half its time in the days before returns are filed answering questions about provincial taxes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH WEST GERMANY CONCERNING CANADA'S EXTRACTIVE INDUSTRIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Have any discussions taken place between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany regarding Canada's extractive industries and, if so, have we arrived at any firm conclusion or agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know of no such discussion, Mr. Speaker, but I will inquire and see if there is any such matter under discussion.

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROPOSAL BY WEST GERMANY FOR DEVELOPMENT OF SHIP TO CARRY CANADIAN MINERALS THROUGH NORTHERN ICE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, this question should almost be raised as a point of order because of its importance. May I ask the Minister of Transport and/or the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether or not in fact negotiations are going on with the Germans and whether or not it is a fact that the government of Canada expects that the Federal Republic of Germany will submit a proposal for the joint development of a polar ice cargo carrying ship for the extraction of mineral resources in our north?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know of no formal negotiations going on between Canada and the German Federal Republic. The hon. member may be referring to the fact that there is a very important delegation of German businessmen in Ottawa today. They are moving on to Toronto and Montreal. It is a return visit to that by Canadian businessmen to Germany a few years ago headed by my predecessor.

Mr. Forrestall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is incumbent upon members of the government to provide members in written answers with accurate information. I can understand that one specific minister or the Prime Minister might not be aware of information that has the significance this question has, but I think the House is entitled to some explanation of why there is a direct conflict between the oral answers of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and a written answer given me today. I shall not take the time of the House to cite the written answer today, but in light of the importance of the matter I think the ministers over there had better supply the House with consistent and accurate information.

TAXATION

REQUEST BY TORONTO TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION THAT FEDERAL SALES TAX NOT APPLY TO PUBLIC TRANSIT VEHICLES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the Prime Minister passed on to the Minister of Finance the request of the Toronto Transportation Commission that the federal sales tax not apply to public transit vehicles and, if so, is the minister prepared to introduce the necessary change in the law?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that we are, of course, reviewing. We have had similar requests from other municipalities. If any action is taken on this matter we will announce it in the House.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister give urgent consideration to this request as the federal contribution to urban transportation and to pollution control to the end that he could introduce a resolution this year when the tax laws are before the House?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the very fact that the hon. gentleman brings it to my attention makes it an urgent matter.

AGRICULTURE

SHIPMENT OF HORSES TO EUROPE FOR SLAUGHTER—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ELIMINATE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. Having in mind the fact that the cruel trade involving the shipment of Canadian horses by sea for slaughter in Europe, has started again in the face of strong representations against it by all the humane societies in Canada, will the minister look into this situation with a view to stopping this unfortunate situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the department to carry out a lengthy study. I have received some of the reports. I can say, so far as we are concerned, that in respect of any shipments of horses they must be preconditioned, their age must be known and it must be known whether or not they are pregnant before they are loaded on a ship. If more than 25 are put on a ship they must be escorted by a veterinarian all the way across the ocean.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister whether he and his department are aware of the fact that many of the horses which die during shipment are rolled overboard and also that the European people by whom they are received ridicule the requirements of his department?

Mr. Whelan: The records show that the health standards are that high because of the restrictions we are placing on them that the number of horses requested for shipment is away down. If there are signs that a horse is likely to die the veterinarian has orders to give an anaesthetic in order to put it out of its misery on board the ship. Every humane aspect is being looked at.

In view of published reports of a memorandum from the Commissioner of Penitentiaries to the prison directors, can the right hon. gentleman advise if it is now government policy to change some medium security institutions to maximum security institutions, and would the Prime Minister have this document tabled in the House so that we might understand the reasons behind the memorandum?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would be pleased to take notice of the question on behalf of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is perhaps supplementary to one asked very early in the question period. In view of the surplus the minister has recently discovered in the Department of Finance, would he discuss with the President of the Treasury Board the possibility of earmarking even one-tenth of those unbudgeted funds for Atlantic harbour and wharf improvements? In particular, Mr. Speaker, I would make a plea in respect of the wharves in the constituency of Restigouche where I understand the member has been having great difficulty—

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POLICY RESPECTING SPECIAL AREAS—RESULTS OF DISCUSSION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but in his absence, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Does the minister intend to publish the results from his negotiations with—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but—the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises an a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my point of order reflects somewhat on the point raised earlier about parliamentary secretaries asking questions, but I would draw your attention to the fact that it is certainly in violation of the rules for questions to be put to other than ministers of the Crown.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask his question. I am not too sure whether the hon. member is right in respect of his point of order. I assume a question ought to be asked of a minister, but if the minister is not here someone might reply on his behalf. The hon. member might ask the question on this basis. He has been very patient for the last 45 minutes waiting for a chance to ask his question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. O'Connor.]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I resume my question.

I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and, in his absence, his parliamentary secretary when the minister intends to publish the results from his negotiations with the Quebec provincial government, and whether the present special areas and the possibility of designation of others have been mentioned during those negotiations?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Again I apologize to the hon. member.

[English]

The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will continue rising on a point of order until these set-ups are stopped in the House. Again I insist. I believe rule 39(5) states—get out your book and read it—that there is no allowance in the rules for parliamentary secretaries to be taking questions. If the Prime Minister cannot indicate an acting minister, then let them wait with their questions.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: This point has been raised before and the Chair has indicated that there was a point of contention as to whether parliamentary secretaries should be allowed to ask questions when they answer questions as well. I have indicated before that I felt there appeared to be some measure of contradiction there. There was agreement at the time among hon. members that perhaps this was the kind of difficulty to which the House might apply its collective wisdom. But I think there is an established practice, which may be right or wrong, for parliamentary secretaries to answer questions. Perhaps that practice should be changed; perhaps it is wrong and questions should be answered by the Prime Minister or an acting minister. But certainly hon. members who have been here for some years know that on a number of occasions in the past parliamentary secretaries have replied on behalf of their ministers.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to Standing Order 39(5) on page 36, chapter V. It is specifically spelled out in the rules that questions are to be put to a minister of the Crown, and if the Prime Minister cannot indicate who is the acting minister, then I say it is time that the House stopped these set-up questions passed back and forth between Liberal backbenchers and parliamentary secretaries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The point of order raised by the hon. member finds a degree of sympathy with me. As I said before, according to my interpretation of the rules, they do not prohibit a parliamentary secretary from asking a question or from replying to one. Again, we have had the practice for some years in both instances. I am in sympathy with the point raised by the hon. member. I hope that it will be solved one day. But, as hon. members know, the Standing Orders are interpreted according to the practice of the House and there obviously has been a practice established in this respect. Perhaps for the moment the House might allow the parliamentary secretary to reply briefly on behalf of the minister, and then we will call orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—for his encouragement in helping me to get an appointment some day.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the hon. member that the minister will be concluding this week his discussions with the various premiers of all Canadian provinces and the various departments in each of those provinces—today he is in the Maritimes—and if any reports are to be released, it will be when the consultations are all concluded between governments.

As to the last part of the question put by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, without divulging the discussions which took place in Quebec City and which I attended, I wish to inform him that there are grounds to hope that those numerous representations, among which those from the community of Sherbrooke, to ensure that the provincial government recognizes the urgent nature of—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the same point. I wish to draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that this precedent was started at the time the government was following the roster system and members of the House had no opportunity to ask questions even of acting ministers. Now that the Prime Minister has seen fit to do away with the roster system, I think he should at least establish acting ministers in this House when ministers are absent. I am not criticizing the necessity for ministers being away, but I say that the Prime Minister has an obligation to provide for members of the House acting ministers so that this nonsense can stop once and for all, because objections have been made to it since the first day it was started.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we will not get involved again in an interminable point of order and a series of questions of privilege. I would hope we might go on to the business of the day. However, the parliamentary secretary wishes to pursue the matter and I have no alternative but to listen to him.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make one comment. It has been the practice of the House to have members on the other side address questions to members on this side who are not ministers, including chairmen of committees and parliamentary secretaries. I see no reason why the rules should be interpreted in such a restrictive fashion as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has suggested.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nonsense!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we hear the hon. member's point of order, I might point out that there seems to be a disposition on the part of hon. members, including the parliamentary secretary, to pursue the matter. I will listen to all hon. members who wish to make a contribution.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I think that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is not the only one who has been elected by the Canadian people; I too have been elected by the people and I am entitled to obtain answers.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is not my intention to take away from the hon. member his right to represent his people, but I would suggest to him that he represent his people in the right way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): If by chance a precedent is established in the House whereby the rules themselves can be violated, then I will turn up some very interesting precedents which involve the use of unparliamentary language in the House. A precedent has already been established on a question which was brought up last week which was ruled out of order owing to the use of unparliamentary language, but a few moments later someone on that side of the House used unparliamentary words. I say that if a precedent is going to be established, let us throw out the rule book and start all over again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If hon. members feel that this point has been resolved, we might now return to the business of the House.

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to conclude the remarks I began on Friday. I regret the absence from the House of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) who spoke the other day, because I wanted to refer in part to some of the statements he made in this debate.

If I understood the minister correctly, he indicated some sort of opposition to the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) because he seemed to be concerned about the fact that that amendment will make the declaration of these principles too firm. If I may use the exact language which was adopted by the Minister of Communications, he said that the principles would then not be "flexible and subject to change". That is the point. The substantive purpose of these principles is to provide some guarantee of application, a guarantee both to persons who are already in the public service and, just as important, a guarantee to persons who might contemplate joining the public service. That is necessary precisely because there is a widespread apprehension that previously the rules either were not known or were not applied in a satisfactory or fair way.

The minister now asks for flexibility. But it is fair for us to ask: flexibility in what direction? Flexibility for whom? The very reason that we face this substantive issue now is precisely that there was a kind of flexibility which seemed unfair to many people. The amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition would guard against that kind of flexibility. It would provide some guarantees. The resolution without it would be mere opinion.

It might be claimed that it is influential opinion. But may I remind you and the House that influential opinion also changes. For a public servant, or for a young constituent of mine who might contemplate becoming a public servant, there would be cold comfort if an election or some other event caused this opinion to change or to be ignored, because there is no doubt at all that in law the opinion expressed in a resolution has no force. That is the clear result of the case of Roman Corporation versus Hudson's Bay which was decided in the Ontario Court of Appeal and upheld in the Supreme Court of Canada this May. It made the point firmly that proceedings in this parliament have no force in law. It is clear from the advice of the Chairman of the Public Service Commission that, in his actions, he was bound only by the language of the act of parliament and not by the language of the so-called Pearson pledge which had no force in law.

It is clear even in the recent statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who explicitly advised the House that his government did not intend to be bound by a mere resolution of the House concerning Viet Nam. The precedents of law, indeed the very practices of ministers of the government this session, affirm the fact that in terms of law the opinion of this parliament is as incidental as a cough in the night. There is no doubt about that. There is no guarantee in this resolution without the amendment, no protection over a period of time, and it has no more force than the statement of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) in December or the pledge of the late prime minister years before.

The minister asks for flexibility. If that is a serious request, it raises important questions indeed about what other matters the government might excuse from legislation with the argument that flexibility is needed. What matter before this parliament is so fixed and firm that it does not require flexibility? That, Sir, is what the process of amendment is all about. The extra advantage of the amendment is the requirement that any changes, any flexibility, must be accomplished in the light of day, with the knowledge and deliberate consent of the parliament and people involved. And until that consent is achieved, the people concerned have guarantees. I ask you, Sir, what is so special about this matter that the normal practices cannot apply?

The minister suggested that this matter is very difficult to be definite about, involving as it does staff relations and subjective judgments. He went on to suggest—he didn't come right out and say it, but the implication was clear—that the application of language guidelines is so complex that only the people who actually apply them know enough to criticize. There is an argument with possibilities. If we accept that view, then this parliament would be mute. There would be no criticism or scrutiny of anything, and no control.

The government will have to find a better defence than to suggest that matters are so complex that only it can deal with them. Of course they are complex, but either you are going to have guidelines or you are not, and if we have a situation where an administration or an administrator is able to modify a guideline because it is too difficult to enforce, then again we have no guarantees at all.

The minister pointed out that spokesmen for this party had argued, when the Languages Act was first before parliament, for an approach by resolution because that would allow flexibility. That, Sir, is a mere debating point, and matters relating to official bilingualism are too important to be dealt with by debating points. In any event, the government rejected then the approach it proposes now, and the practice was established of proceeding by law, not by resolution, on this question. If the substance of the matter is important enough to be enshrined in law, so are the principles which guide the application of bilingualism in the public service. The government just cannot have it both ways.

But if the minister is serious, and if we grant his request for flexibility, we will again create conditions in which public servants or prospective public servants will fear that regulations will be interpreted against their interests. That is the very fear this resolution purports to redress, yet if we reject this amendment we run the risk of reviving the fear instead of reducing it. In light of all that I have said I assume the minister was not serious in his suggestion on Friday. He was not stating the government's response so much as he was testing the wind. Certainly, if he is interested in allaying fears, achieving bilingualism and getting on with the business of Canada, he and his colleagues will support the amendment and give force to what they propose.

As the House knows, this matter of bilingualism is not without contention. In my own region of western Canada there are some who, as a matter of what they see as principle, would oppose virtually any measure designed to make bilingualism work. In my view they are the voices of a small minority, and are no more representative of that region than the voices of separatism are representative of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Indeed, Sir, they are probably less so. But I say with seriousness that there are other western Canadians, many in number, who have reservations about the application of official bilingualism but who will go along with it as part of the price they pay for the other benefits of their country. With time and with encouragement, many of the sons and daughters of this group will become bilingual, and some of the group themselves will, because that will be part of being Canadian, like learning to pronounce Mahavolich, or learning to live with snow. But if instead of being encouraged to accept bilingualism these people are encouraged to suspect it, there is the danger that they will become stubborn; that is the danger directly aroused by this debate. The problem is not the nine principles. It is not even the DeBané addendum or amendment. The problem is the public tone and the suggested motives for the introduction of the resolution.

When I began my remarks on Friday, I referred to my own regret at the innuendo in the remarks in January of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). That, Sir, was an insult to me and to many other members who deliberately faced down the temptation to embrace prejudice on this question. But more than an insult, these insinuations set poison in the system. A predictable response has come from that small minority which actively opposes bilingualism. But the poison could spread to other and more tolerant parts of the body politic, particularly if the innuendos continue and if the government rejects an amendment which merely gives the binding force of law to what it proposes.

I do not give this warning lightly. As I listened to the Minister of Cummunications (Mr. Pelletier) on Friday with his talk of dinosaurs and his playing with the monarchy, I wondered what effort he has made to understand my part of the country. I have tried to understand his, and so have several of my colleagues here as well as my neighbours at home.

[Translation]

It was not easy for us who came from cities and towns where there were no French Canadians, from areas far from Quebec, and who attended schools where French is not properly taught. That problem still exists.

[English]

But we are doing the positive things we can. Sir, we have a right to expect not patience but reciprocity, at least from a minister of the Crown, some fairness, and some sensitivity to matters which might cause us special problems. National unity is not a one-way street.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Sir, we in western Canada are not a region like the others. No region in this country, is, but one of our characteristics is a cultural and linguistic tradition different from that of the longer settled regions of the country. A great many of our citizens are of an origin other than English or French, and to many of them bilingualism appeared as a threat, particularly when the government delayed so long its recognition of multiculturalism. Many more of us, my age and older, were raised in a kind of regional insularity in which we just did not know that Canada, in practice, was a bilingual country. Indeed, I was out of high school before that fact came home to me. So bilingualism was, quite literally, a world we did not know, and the adjustment to the Languages Act was not as natural in Alberta as it might have been in Montreal.

There are still some special fears. One is that western Canada's young men and women of talent might not enjoy an equal chance in Canada's public service simply because they were born where the French language was inadequately taught. Whether it is paranoia or perceptiveness, many western Canadians feel at a disadvantage anyway, in competition for position against the old school, old boy network of central Canada, and that sense is sharpened by the knowledge that some public service positions require a level of bilingualism it is often difficult for prairie candidates to acquire. The amendment of the Leader of the Opposition would provide some guarantees against that fear, but it is symptomatic of a western sensitivity which the program of bilingualism must recognize if it is to succeed. Sir, that sensitivity is not quieted, but aroused, by insinuations of the kind in which too many ministers have indulged.

When I began to speak on Friday, I expressed my surprise at the insistence of the government on bringing this matter back and expressed by regretful conclusion that their motive in so doing must have been to seek some means to divide my party, even if, in the attempt, they divided the country, too. That might not be their motive. Perhaps, in fact, they seek only to extend guarantees to the public service. If that is so, they will support the amendment because only the amendment contains guarantees. If their interest instead is division, they will oppose the amendment. But even if they do that, there is no way they will reduce or muddy the clear commitment of this party to a united and bilingual Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): That commitment is not only clear upon the record. It has been proven in the heat of campaigns and in the face of provocation.

In closing today I want to repeat that I, and most of my colleagues, came here with the expectation that the issue of language was essentially settled in Canada, and that we could turn to the urgent concerns of this year and of years to come. We came here to deal with the issues of the seventies and beyond, and not to strike old poses or fight old wars. That is clearly the desire of the millions of Canadians who grew into adulthood in the fifties and the sixties. It is clearly my mandate from my constituents. We are a new parliament in a new decade with enough contemporary challenges that we need not look back. The best proof the government can offer that it shares this spirit too, that it is more interested in the future than the past, is to support this amendment, which accords with and confirms all the high ideals the Prime Minister spoke of, and then let parliament get on with the other urgent work of 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us on both sides of the House have listened to an extremely good speech given by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the purpose of the motion before the House to reopen an old question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suppose, as long as we have the type of country we have, and the complexities we have, these issues will continually have to be revised and revalued. The purpose of the motion before Your Honour is not to give the House an opportunity to express a new view or a further view on the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister said that was the purpose.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was dealt with in a debate four or five years ago. The purpose is to express a view upon the application of that act, in practice, to the public service of this country. I want to take issue with the interjection of the right hon. gentleman. The purpose is to review the basis on which the Official Languages Act is to apply to the public service of this country. The object is to give the House of Commons an occasion to pronounce itself upon institutional bilingualism as it is meant to work in practice. The principles set forth by my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) outline the blueprint which the government and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission of Canada intend to apply in co-operation with the staff associations. It has also as its purpose the endorsement of those principles by this House and, by reason of this resolution, to take them beyond the dictates of ministerial discretion. I will deal with the argument of the hon. member who preceded me in a few moments but if I may, I should like to deal first with a few general points.

First of all, what do we mean when we talk about bilingualism in the public service? Many of us have said this before but I believe it will bear repeating because the thrust of the policy has been misunderstood in many parts of the country. We are not talking about individual bilingualism, Mr. Speaker; we are not talking about the ability of any Canadian to speak both languages; we are not talking about any type of compulsion to force Canadians to speak the other official language, to speak other than the language that is his mother tongue or his choice. We are talking about what we have called earlier institutional bilingualism. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, called it functional bilingualism or the availability of a federal government service to Canadians in either of the two official languages of this country, French or English. In a reciprocal fashion it is the right of every Canadian to work in the public service in either French or English. In other words, it is an institutional fabric by which we hope that the national unity of this country can be cemented—namely the right of any Canadian from any part of Canada to deal with his or her federal government or agencies of the federal government in the language of his or her choice and to allow any Canadian to be involved and to work in the public service in either French or English. As my colleague put it, in a very detailed speech to this House on Friday, it thereby preserves the right of any Canadian to remain unilingual if he wants in his dealings with the Public Service of Canada and unilingual in his service to his country.

What is the purpose of the bilingualism policy? I think every member of the House is highly cognizant of it. Certainly, I was impressed by the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and their appraisal of the situation. National unity is consecrated by the ability of all Canadians to deal with the federal government or work for the federal government in either French or English. National unity in the sense of cultivating a feeling of consecrating the reality, particularly, and let us admit it, among French speaking Canadians, that they have an equal opportunity in this country and that they can be made to feel at home in this country and to feel at home at work or at play in the national capital. It is only in this way that I believe this parliament can undercut one of the arguments of the separatists, namely that only within his own nation state can the French speaking Canadian find his true home, fulfil his true personality, find his complete acceptance.

I believe that if this resolution, which has the support of the House, is applied by the Public Service Commission and by the Treasury Board in co-operation with the staff associations with understanding and humanity and recognition of the human careers that are involved, then the temptation of French speaking Canadians to opt for their own state will not be nearly as attractive. If French speaking Canadians are made to feel at home in reality, in appearance and in psychology within the bosom of a country we call Canada.

● (1530)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think in terms of fundamental human rights one could say, too, that the use of language is essential to the exercise of a full personality.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as regards language as psychological extension of character, I am entitled to describe my own experience in the province of Quebec. I belong to the Bar of the province of Quebec, one of the most bilingual institutions of the country, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) knows, and every lawyer and every witness had the right to speak in the language of his choice.

During my first years of practice, of course I had to plead before judges and to cross-examine witnesses in French all day long. It was physically and mentally tiresome for me, especially when inquiries lasted for two, three or four days. I was absolutely exhausted—

Mr. Wagner: Worn out.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, worn out, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, thanks to my experience I can understand how difficult it is for a French Canadian to live in English in North America, in Canada, where he must do the same thing as I, speak my language and make efforts in a language which is not his mother tongue.

I suggest that a country cannot survive unless every citizen is able to express himself in the official language of his choice, otherwise he cannot feel well and at home in his own country. And this is even more important when considering the atmosphere of the national capital.

This is a psychological matter; this is a matter of basic rights, of human rights. The problem of languages is a psychological matter; therefore, it is a key issue because most important and basic matters in the life of nations are those associated to unity, which is a matter of subjectivity.

Therefore, how does one feel in a given country? This is why I think that the problem of languages becomes a subjective matter, and if so, it is even more important for the unity of our country.

[English]

I listened to the Leader of the Opposition and to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who leads the New Democratic Party, criticizing the government for the delay in bringing forth these particular principles. I can say to them and to the House that no one has been more anxious than the government, and certainly, the members sitting on the Liberal side of the House, to have these principles clarified. A good many of us have lived with the problem, and with the problems of our constituents. I can only say in answer to those hon. members and to you, Your Honour, that the application of a policy of bilingualism is an incredibly difficult and delicate procedure. Why? Because human careers are involved, that is why. As I said before, we had no prior experience upon which to call. Our particular situation in Canada is distinctly different from that of other countries with a bilingual nature, because of the makeup of our own country. There were no charts, no guidelines, and no well trodden paths for us to follow, as I said before. No one, Sir, should underestimate the difficulty of moving forward with speed and determination, and yet with a sense of equity and justice with respect to the human problems involved.

Let me say a word about the analysis of the nine principles and the supplementary resolution. These were developed in consultation with the staff associations. I want to take the opportunity to say to the House how much the government has appreciated and how much I, personally, have appreciated the good will, understanding and co-operation of the executive and members of the staff associations and, particularly, those who sit on the National Joint Council.

Looking through the principles, one can see clarification and protection in a number of distinct areas. There is a new procedure of prior identification and designation of bilingual positions. This gives members of the public service advance notice on which to exercise various career options. There is guaranteed protection for acquired rights of unilingual public servants having ten years of service at the date of Mr. Pearson's original statement in the House. There is a new flexibility in the definition of bilingualism, as it may be required for particular positions. The ability to qualify for a position that may be designated as bilingual is now enshrined in advance of acquiring the second language. In other words, the public servant does not necessarily have to have a capacity in both languages at the time he stands and qualifies for a bilingual position. Once having achieved that position, he is given the opportunity to establish that bilingual qualification. As a result, and this is another point, there is now a wider availability of language training, and it becomes incumbent now on the government to ensure that anyone seeking admission to the public service or seeking promotion within the public service has available to him as of right, no matter what his standing in the hierarchy of the system may be, the necessary language training. Finally, there are wider avenues of appeal respecting the implementation of this policy.

I want to deal briefly, if I may, with the amendment put before the House by the Leader of the Opposition. I appreciated the reasoned calm of his argument and the fact that he put it forward for the consideration of the House but said, however, that it was not a condition precedent to his support of the main resolution. I believe that spirit was appreciated on my side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Despite the arguments put forward effectively today by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), the government has decided that it must reject the amendment put to the House by the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are saying.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The reasons, and I will state them as calmly as I can to the House, are that the principles set forth in the resolution and their administrative application have been developed as the result of extensive consultations between the government and the staff associations.

Mr. Grafftey: Speak from your heart.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government has undertaken to continue such negotiations through the medium of the National Joint Council. It is our submission, Mr. Speaker, and I believe also the view of the staff associations, that it would be unwise to put into law at this time administrative arrangements that have been agreed to through these consultations and which might be subject, after further consultation, to amplification by both parties at a later date.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

An hon. Member: You can always change the law.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Therefore, it is most important at this stage, both for the people of Canada as employer and for the staff associations representing the employees, that there be sufficient flexibility in the policy that I feel, would be a distinct advantage at this stage of the process.

Let me say this to the House about the implementation of the principles. The implementation of the principles can take effect without legislative action. Section 39 of the Public Service Employment Act provides:

> In any case where the Commission decides that it is not practicable nor in the best interests of the public service to apply this Act or any provision thereof to any position or person or class of positions or persons, the Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council exclude such position or person or class of positions or persons in whole or in part from the operation of this Act; and the Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, re-apply any of the provisions of this Act to any position or person so excluded.

Thus, I submit parliament has already anticipated a possible need for excluding from certain portions of the Public Service Employment Act certain positions or persons. Legislation is, therefore, unnecessary, as the existing laws provide for the implementation of the principle, either by means of the Public Service Employment Act, the Financial Administration Act or the Official Languages Act.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, the Public Service Commission has been reluctant to seek such exclusions under Section 39, but with the approval of this resolution the Chairman of the Public Service Commission and the Commission will interpret this approval as parliament's direction that Section 39 of the Public Service Employment Act be invoked. The Chairman of the Public Service Commission has already advised the staff side of the National Joint Council to this effect and the Public Service Commission will be requesting the Governor in Council to pass regulations under Section 39 to give effect to the principles.

A permanent committee of the National Joint Council, representing the people of Canada and parliament as employer and the staff associations as employees, has been established to keep under constant review matters related to the principles and measures contained in the resolution. It is safe to say that the staff side, recognizing the dynamic nature of this issue, has not pressed for inclusion of the principles in legislation. They believe and we believe that legislation at this time would be inappropriate as the consultation process is working effectively and is responsive to the dynamic nature of the complex issues involved.

The purpose of putting the resolution before the House was not only to re-affirm the government's intention and commitment to the contents of the principles and measures contained in the resolution, but also to seek similar affirmation and commitment from all parties of the House so that the House would support what has already been jointly agreed to between the employer and the staff associations. Through the vehicle of the National Joint Commission, it will remain under continual scrutiny.

I have had a personal commitment for some time to the principles of bilingualism in this country. I had the responsibility for negotiating the Official Languages Act with the attorneys general of the provinces, particularly the provinces in western Canada and Quebec. I had some responsibility for negotiating its passage through parliament. I spoke during the Speech from the Throne debate on January 9, and have tried to give voice to my feelings on this crucial subject on every occasion when I found it legitimate to do so.

I believe that the resolution enshrines a series of principles in the application of the Official Languages Act that are fundamental to national unity. I believe the English speaking majority in this country must try to understand the hopes and feelings of the minority in terms of the future of this country. The French speaking minority must try, on their part, to understand the intense tolerance of the English speaking majority and the considerable progress that has been made in order to equalize opportunities within the Public Service of Canada.

I do not for a moment underestimate the human difficulties encountered in trying to make this policy work. It must work and it must work fairly. It must work because the future of this country is at stake. It must work fairly because we are dealing with men and women who are dedicating their lives to the public service of their country. In terms of the constituency and region I represent, nowhere is it more important that these principles be made to work. As I have said to my constituents on several occasions, without national unity, without a country, the city of Ottawa does not make any sense at all. We in the capital have a special burden, and yet a unique challenge to make it happen and make it work.

Re-affirmation in this House of Commons of these specific principles to convert the theory of the Official Languages Act into practice and working rules will, in my submission, go far toward re-assuring both those who fear bilingualism in the public service is going ahead too fast and those who are concerned that it is not going ahead fast enough. No one has ever claimed that the implementation of this policy would be easy nor that it would not arouse apprehension. The purpose of this resolution is to attempt to relieve that apprehension. Nor has it been claimed that it would not add to the cost of government. It is one of the prices we pay for being Canadian. I believe it is a price well worth paying against the limitless prospects of a united country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I intend to place before the House and the country my views in respect of this matter clearly and unequivocally. Throughout the years I have been in public life I have devoted myself to the unity of our country.

And long before many of those sitting in this House were born, in 1922, when it was unpopular to do so, I took an appeal on behalf of the French school trustees in the province of Saskatchewan. One always remembers the cases he has won. That case is reported. Through the years I have devoted myself to assuring in this country an exemplification of the meaning of national unity.

I shall be referring a little later to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Before doing that, I want to deal with a speech I delivered in this House on February 4, 1963. A portion of it was quoted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the other day. In that speech I quoted the words uttered by Sir John A. Macdonald in this House in 1890. I quote:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that, by any mode whatever, there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other. I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible.

I quoted that with approval. That was the attitude of the government I had the honour to lead in this country. That was the attitude throughout. At that time I said, and I quote:

> Today we proudly call courselves Canadian citizens enjoying every attribute of freedom and sovereignty.
>
> Confederation was achieved by a partnership of English speaking and French speaking men who believed that the destiny of the north half of this continent might be achieved in unity but not in uniformity. But for the fundamental agreements expressed in section 133 of the British North America Act, with its assurance of the rights of language in this country, and section 91 and 92 assuring to the provinces their jurisdiction over education and culture, there never would have been a Canada . . .
>
> Canada, under confederation, has prospered and grown. There have, however, arisen from time to time—periodically it takes place—questions as to whether Canada, as she approaches the close of the first century of confederation, has achieved the full measure of the vision of the fathers of confederation. It is with this thought in mind that the government has decided to propose the calling of a federal-provincial conference, and invitations to such a conference will be dispatched to the governments of the ten provinces at once.
> The scope of the conference will be of the fullest breadth. It will be asked to study ways and means of repatriating the constitution, the problem of adequate representation in the public service, Crown corporations and other government agencies; the recommendations in the Therrien report; the choice of a national flag and other symbols of our national sovereignty. In brief, the conference will be asked to examine biculturalism and bilingualism in a comprehensive manner.

I then went on to say it had been suggested a royal commission could do that. I opposed a royal commission. In light of events, I leave it to the country to conclude who was right. The royal commission cost $10 million. The result of that royal commission has been divisions in this country unequalled in all the years since confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I then went on to say:

> In correcting any injustices that might be found we shall destroy prejudice and misunderstanding. We are ready to take action to deal firmly and positively with any danger which confronts the basis of the Canadian confederation.
>
> This is a task to which all Canadians can give their willing allegiance . . .
> To the original French and English strains in the Canadian population there have now been added many Canadians of other origins. They have come of their own choice to this country and have become members of the Canadian family, bringing with them their traditions and rich heritages of culture. By their contributions they have enriched, deepened and diversified the cultures of this nation.

By their contributions they have enriched, deepened and diversified the cultures of this nation.

● (1550)

And I saw a Canada—and this has been my life's work—which would bring an end to the division of this nation on the basis of origins, while maintaining the basic principle of confederation, an end to hyphenated Canadianism where each of us would take up the racial origin of our respective made forebears, with the rights of French Canada maintained inviolate as they were provided for in the British North America Act. Such a Canada I said was destined to play an ever greater and beneficent role in the world as an example of cultures and peoples residing together in unity.

Sir, I have been in a minority before. I was in a minority at the convention of the National Conservative Party. I had no idea of standing for the leadership. None. But I warned the Conservative party then that the idea of deux nations—two nations—was, as a policy, the negation of everything for which Macdonald and each succeeding prime minister from the Conservative party had stood. They said I was wrong. I need not go into detail concerning what happened. This party could not survive on the basis of a policy like that. Yet it was passed by the sub-committee of the party and by the committee on policy. I dared to speak. Having spoken, the next morning I had to allow my name to be put in nomination because of the fact that nominations had to be in by ten a.m. Otherwise, people would have said: He voices his opinions but he dare not stand.

French Canada? Well, I have always had a wonderful welcome there. In my own province, those of French origin voted for me. They voted for me when it was most unpopular for anyone to do so. They did it because I stood for their rights; I stood for their constitutional rights when it was unpopular to do so. Members opposite say: We are going to get support in Quebec, if we propose this. Mr. Speaker, the Quebec people are no different from others in every part of Canada in this respect: they are not deluded by soft-spoken, soporific phraseology.

When I was leader of this party we secured support in Quebec. Let me point this out, because it is sometimes forgotten. In 1940, with an outstanding leader in French-Canadian life, Dr. Mannion, we elected not one in Quebec though we did elect one independent. Then, John Bracken became leader of this party. He had, in Manitoba, supported Canadians of French origin over the school question of 1896, and they stood with him. In 1945, we elected one member. Then Mr. Drew came in. He had strong claims in French Canada, and he elected two. And in 1953, we in this party elected four. They tell me I know nothing about the feeling of French Canada. That may be so, but at the worst of times, when I was leader, we in this party elected more than three leaders had done in four successive election campaigns. And when I go to Montreal, when I go to Quebec, the welcome I receive today is as heartfelt as anyone could wish.

I am sorry I have never been able to learn the French language so as to make a speech in French. I have read Racine, Molière and Corneille. And I read French today with almost the same facility as I read English. But I do not have an ear for sound. I am not like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —who has a capacity of intonation which I lack. But I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who was my member for years, only made two speeches in French in his entire life. Once he said "Oui", and the second time he said "Oui, oui."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: But he swept the Province of Quebec.

What did we do during my time as leader? The first thing I said we should do was to make the House of Commons bilingual. And we brought in simultaneous translation. Next, I got in touch with the administrative departments of government and pointed out that French Canada was not receiving its fair share of the upper echelon appointments. In the Department of External Affairs it was preposterous the degree to which these people did not get any kind of reasonable support when it came to appointments. It was upon my recommendation, and no one else's, that for the first time in history, the first time since Vaudreuil, one of French origin became the Governor General of Canada. The Queen accepted that recommendation. And it was in my time that bilingual cheques and the like were brought in.

This was a matter which was deeply in the hearts and minds of Canadians of French origin. So don't tell me I know nothing about the requirements of French Canada. You cannot fool the people in the Province of Quebec by taking up the position: the government brings something in and we are for it, and therefore we will get support. Nobody ever got support by tying themselves to the tail of a comet—and I think the description "comet" just fits the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He flashed, and he is gradually disappearing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why was this motion brought up? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is a man of whom I have always spoken in the warmest terms. I don't think he has always reciprocated. I seem to remember a campaign in which caricatures of me—and I caricature well—were exhibited. But I do not mind attacks in politics as long as they are not against integrity. I listened to him today with the same interest as I always do. He did not tell the House why it is that at a time when critical national issues confront us, parliament is being asked by the Prime Minister to masticate material already digested.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1600)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this resolution before the House to bring about Canadian unity?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I heard a tiny squeak of "yes" from one corner. The resolution was designed to becloud national issues today, issues with which the government has been aimlessly dealing. The Minister of Finance said: "We moved with speed and determination"; they were his very words today. Even the finest of slow motion cameras would be unable to take a picture of this government moving with speed and determination.

What has the Prime Minister brought before this House? It is his contribution to Canadian unity. The Prime Minister has brought forward to the House a prettied up, curry-combed version of a policy in order to give himself a new image. This is to be a tranquilizer. I shall mention the election results in a moment because they were not tranquilizers to the government of the right hon. gentleman.

At every hand in this country there is division and disunity, the responsibility for which rests with the present government and nowhere else. The Prime Minister said he was bringing this resolution before the House so we could stand up and be counted. I shall stand, Mr. Speaker, and I shall be counted. For I will not become the hand-maiden of a government which in the last several years, as a result of the mental gymnastics of the Prime Minister, has divided this country to an extent that I only hope years to come will efface.

The minister who has just spoken referred to being able to communicate in both languages. In the city of Victoria I am told that the Department of National Health and Welfare is listed in the telephone book in French, and there are three numbers for those who want to communicate with the department in French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is progress.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. members applaud, but let me give them the rest of this. If you call the numbers they will answer you in English, and not one of them knows the French language.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That little item came to me this morning. I miss some of these observations that are made, and I am sure I miss a great deal.

Imagine the speciousness of the arguments that are advanced by the minister. The reason that he will not accept the amendment is that he believes in "flexible rigidity". I have heard the minister make explanations before, but never on other occasions have I heard him approach the school men of the Middle Ages. Just imagine the argument, Mr. Speaker. The minister maintained that the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition, even though not incorporated in an act, can be carried out by order of Council. What sham and hypocrisy is this?

The Leader of the Opposition was slapped in the face by the former secretary of state, who since the election has been demoted to Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier). The hon. gentleman brushed the amendment aside facetiously, but I never expected the Minister of Finance to give his support. The facetious and sneering answers to the proposition advanced by the Leader of the Opposition which were given by the Minister of Communications reveals that this resolution is nothing but eyewash. It will not be legally binding whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If perchance the Liberal party should win the next election, what would happen to the promises made in an unenforceable declaration by parliament? The government do not have to follow such a declaration; they can do as they please. Preambles and that sort of thing have no efficacy in a court of law. Why does the government endeavour to deceive the Canadian people into believing that something is going to be done? Do you know, Mr. Speaker, why the government is doing this? It is doing it to ensure that there will be votes in the province of Quebec. And in other parts of Canada the government will be able to say: "We are just devoting ourselves to national unity".

I did not like the suggestion of the Minister of Finance that those who disagree with this resolution are in the category of separatists.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not what I said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It may not have been his words but that was his inference.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is your inference, sir.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the minister does not hold that view. All I have to say is that this is a sham and a delusion. Hon. members opposite are going to ask the Tory party to line up and say "Me too". "Me too" was never the slogan on a standard that would make for a fighting opposition when the government is wrong in what it is doing.

What manner of thing is this? This resolution is designed to wash away the tears the government shed over the many defeats that they had in the last election. I look around me and ask hon. members, if they believe the Minister of . . . What is Marchand now?

Some hon. Members: No one knows.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in this game of political musical chairs it is difficult to identify the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). But what did he say a few days after the election? He said that the trouble was that those who voted for the Conservatives were fanatics. He also had in the chorus with him the former solicitor general, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet), and the former secretary of state, now demoted. That was the song that they sang. If what they said is correct, then all of the new members representing the Conservative party today owe thousands and thousands of votes to those who were designated by these ministers as "fanatics."

What happened in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker? I shall come to that in a moment, but I have never known anything to equal the transfiguration that has taken place in the Prime Minister since October 30. What a transformation it has been. In the twinkling of an eye he has pretended to be transformed and transfigured, and he now asks the Canadian people to forget and forgive. Where was this policy regarding civil servants during those dark days? The minister, himself, I think had a considerably reduced majority. After all, there was no possibility of defeating him. That is what the augurs said about these other members, the two in Ottawa. Did they get any votes from the civil servants because of the damnable treatment that was handed them? Look at the record; look at the majorities here in the city of Ottawa; look at the majority in the neighbouring seat, Lanark. What happened? Men and women, whatever their Liberal past might have been, were determined that the Trudeau government must go.

What did the Prime Minister say at one time in 1972 while enunciating his basic principle? He said that you don't determine your timing, it is events that determine it for you. Was it the election result, where constituency after constituency across Canada was lost, which suddenly brought about that tremendous influence that produced the resolution in question? Sir, ever since the election the Prime Minister has exemplified Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. He could not understand what happened—"after all I am right". That was the attitude. Then this little coterie, or triumvirate, started in to recite that the reason for this resolution is the fact that the people did not understand. It was the harshness under the Language Act and the way it was administered that lost these seats.

Sir, this is brought before the House as a political dodge, a deliberate hoax. What are we to stand up and be counted on? Perhaps the Minister of Finance will tell me when in Canadian history, or in British parliamentary history either, a government ever asked the House of Commons to pass a resolution which is so totally ineffective concerning a statute that is a law of the country. There is not another example. After all, Machiavelli has become a must study in the circles of the upper echelons of the civil service.

Sir, the Prime Minister is asking us to give him absolution for the sins he has committed against the civil servants of this country. He is asking for that. The change has been tremendous. How do we account for it? Well, one time he explained—and I will use his exact words—"I always do the reverse of what others do". Some of you gentlemen who sit in opposition here were designated in 1968 as bums. Parliament was trampled on by that system of having ministers here one at a time, like cuckoos appearing in a cuckoo-clock. But suddenly reform came to him after the election. This reform was all across the board. Am I overstating it when I remember what Mr. Francis said after his majority of 7,300 votes in 1968 turned into a minority of 3,700? Who did he blame?

An hon. Member: The cuckoo.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Spontaneity is the essense of truthfulness. He blamed the government. What about the member for Grenville-Carleton, Mr. Gordon Blair? He had won by 2,468 votes and went down by 10,800 votes. Who did he blame? Well, he blamed him even before the election. Then, if you really want the gospel get in touch with Mr. Murray McBride. What he said about the people of his constituency ensured that he ought to have another place other than the pulpit or parliament. Now, he is in the Post Office Department. That may account for some of the slowness in the mail. He got himself a position after condemning the government and also castigating his constituents. Virtue has its own reward. Even the present Minister of Finance began to express his doubts in July, 1970 about the language bill. He, Mr. Francis and Mr. Blair suddenly came to the conclusion that there was something that ought to be improved in the bilingualism program. One or other of them stated that it hurt many civil servants, but the Prime Minister stood firm and the election took place.

What a change; what a transfiguration! The monarchy damned, not only by him but by two or three other ministers—ridiculed. The Solicitor General introduced a motion in this House whereby the oath of allegiance to the Crown would be done away with for those who took Canadian citizenship. That was only a few months ago. Sir, watch them when Her Majesty comes. The Prime Minister will virtually be able to strut sitting down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the flag? We had two flags, according to Pickersgill. He also has a big pension now. When a motion was moved in the House that the Union Jack, as the second flag for the Commonwealth, should be placed alongside the Speaker's Throne who prevented it? The no's came from ministers of the Crown opposite.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1620)

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are now asked to trust this government.

As to the Commonwealth, I can just see the Prime Minister in the month of August when the various members of the Commonwealth gather here. He will embrace the institution. In Singapore two years ago, when he was condemning Britain for her attitude in shipping arms under an agreement to South Africa, he said that Canada may find itself in the position of having to withdraw from the Commonwealth, as if he had any right to do such a thing. On wheat meat does Caesar feed? You would think that he could take the country out of the Commonwealth. But wait until August. "Already I have seen signs that the Commonwealth is a fairly good institution" he said. His words in New Delhi in January of 1971 were:

> If enough nations withdraw from the Commonwealth over the South African arms issue a chain reaction will start that might force others to quit,—including Canada.

He comes to parliament with this innocuous piece of legislation. I guess you can describe it as nothing else but a piece of legislation. He says he trusts parliament. What happened when the Conservative members in 1968 joined in a Hallelujah chorus about the change of rules? We fought him on rule 16, and he withdrew it at the last moment, and then the day after he said that the Tories walked into a trap, and ever since then this parliament has been innocuous. "We are the masters of this chamber"—you remember the words?

What about this legislation? The opposition tried to improve it. We had certain objections, one of which regarded its constitutionality. Other amendments were moved, but I will not detail them. They can be found in Hansard of July, 1969. But here is the one that shows the utter hypocrisy now before parliament. An amendment was moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and that amendment was:

That Bill C-120 . . . the following subclause 5:

(5) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no person shall be refused employment or promotion within the Public Service of Canada on grounds alone of inadequate acquaintance with either of the official languages mentioned in this Act, provided that the applicant has declared his intention and willingness to learn the other official language.

Is that not what it says? The Minister of Finance, then minister of justice, brushed it aside. "It is worthless", he said. The Liberal members lined up and said "you are so right".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The right hon. gentleman should read the argument.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not get that.

An hon. Member: You did not miss much.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the right hon. gentleman should read the argument.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I read it and I found it to be the most indigestible collection of nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We said that the constitutionality should be tested. The then minister of justice said "it is constitutional. I tell you it is, and the Prime Minister says it is". I said that we should allow the Supreme Court of Canada the opportunity to test it, and the then minister of justice said, "we are not afraid of that". Anybody can object. Then, Mr. Justice Thorson raised an objection and the Department of Justice appointed lawyers who fought inch by inch against Mr. Justice Thorson having the opportunity to even start the action. The matter will come before the Supreme Court of Canada within the next few days.

What about the constitutionality? Nothing has been decided yet. There is a case coming here, but it will not be decided before the fall.

The best argument advanced was by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). He spoke in July of 1969. He went into detail and then said:

When a jurist of the stature of J. T. Thorson places before the Canadian people his concern about the constitutionality of the bill, I would think the government would be quick to make a reference to the Supreme Court—

Then, later that day, he went on to say:

It is the lack of reference to the Supreme Court that has created my greatest problem regarding this bill. Had the government taken steps to make such a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada . . . or had it indicated there was agreement by all the provinces to amend the BNA Act, requiring action to obtain passage of an act by the parliament of the United Kingdom, I might have been willing to support the bill.

His position today cannot be changed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I might be allowed at this moment to interrupt the right hon. gentleman to bring to the attention of the House that his time has expired. But of course he may continue with the consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The House has always been considerate, except on one occasion when the present Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) was the only person in the House to say "no". If he were here, I would read him some interesting things.

That was one of our arguments. The other was that the Commissioner of Languages has powers that were too great. Lo and behold, some of the Liberal members have since concluded that his powers were too great. He was given greater powers than any person in Canadian history. I heard him yesterday on "Cross Country Checkup". If you really want to check up on what he said yesterday you will have an opportunity of doing that on a later occasion, as I am now speaking on the amendment. He is the one who spoke about the Westmount Rhodesians. That was a classic phrase. He went to the United States to make that statement before a learned society. When he was questioned, he said "I was joking". Joking! Yesterday he was not joking when he was asked questions. He said to one person "garbage" when that person took some issue with the act. He used some other language too that indicated he is completely comtemptuous of the rights that he has and he has come to the position where he believes that anything he does is humorous, regardless of the wrong that has been done to the public service of our country.

We said that the despotic powers of the commissioner should be reduced. We said that there should be protection of the rights of English speaking civil servants who have been in the civil service for years, who could not meet the provisions of the Languages Act and therefore would be denied advancement. I said that bill created an injustice to the people of other racial origins and made them second class citizens. And it did. They were in a lower category, Now, along comes the government and suddenly the Prime Minister has seen the light again, and about $10 million is going to be made available. Some 5 per cent of what is going to be spent on biculturalism and bilingualism is going to be doled out from the rich man's table to all the six million people of racial origins other than English and French.

Sir, I can never get over the observation that the Prime Minister made when somebody asked, "What is going to happen if any civil servant refuses to learn French?" And he replied, "Unwilling? That would be fine. We would keep him running elevators where there are no French Canadians." There is the attitude, Mr. Speaker. And Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is to say by its vote that we do appreciate the way in which this act has been administered, the way in which discrimination has been practised under it. Sir, I shall not participate in giving to the government the appreciation of one who has tried through the years to bring about an end to discrimination within this nation, and in saying to the Prime Minister and to the government, "We know that you have become transfigured, and that all now is well. You are forgiven."

I opposed the bill. I oppose this resolution on the ground that it will give explicit approval and an expression of confidence to the Prime Minister for doing that which he has not done. Never before has a government ever asked to receive a vote of confidence for what it hasn't done because it has decided since an election to change its mind. I ask hon. members behind me, are you going to be made dupes? I can look at one of you, act one and another who were elected just because of the Languages Act, at least according to the Minister of Transport, and according to two or three other ministers.

This resolution shows a contempt for parliament, for parliament is only consulted when given an opportunity to afford a mechanism for political expediency to the Prime Minister. And he hopes for support of the public. It is not a very subtle plan. The ruse is far too transparent. I, for one, have not that confidence in this government that I will give it support for what it has not done. I shall not support such political trickery.

The purpose is to accomplish the unique feat of conveying to French Canada the idea that absolute bilingualism will prevail. That will be the interpretation. When the Conservative party supports this, French Canada may simply say, "Why should we support that party? Just because it agreed with the action taken by the government?"

On the one hand, government ministers are trying to fool French Canadians, and on the other hand they are pretending to the rest of Canada that they have changed their attitude. I have tried, Sir, with the appreciation that I have for this House, to remove the verbal veneer with which the Prime Minister has endeavoured to clothe this act of expediency. When this Opposition votes for the resolution, every last one of you, according to the Minister of Transport, according to the Minister of Communications, and according to the Postmaster General, will have voted for the Act. None of you will be able to go to your constituencies and meet that. That will be the Liberal argument in every part of this country.

The Conservative party tried to improve the Official Languages Act. They were spurned. I am not going to ask hon. members to read the Official Languages Act but I venture an opinion, even without benefit of a Gallup Poll, that it has not been read by very many. It has never been my custom—and at my age I live from day to day—to tailor my principles to political expediency. I do not intent to cower before false gods. This is a transparent trick.

Sir, I spent a lifetime trying to bring about equality for all Canadians of all racial origins. Now, this will be swept aside. Because I was of mixed origin I felt for others who were too. My people had been in Canada since the early 1800's, but because of my name I was not a Canadian. I was not accepted as a Canadian. I put an end to that. I said we were Canadians all.

And what have we got today? We have Anglophones, Francophones, multiculturalphones, all kinds. Everything I have striven for I see now being swept aside, and an end to that Canadianism which, above everything else, has been my devotion throughout a long life. It could be the last time I will speak on this subject when this debate is over, but my last words will be: God help Canada from the disunity in which it now finds itself.

We shall never build the nation which our potential resources make possible by dividing ourselves into Anglophones, Francophones, multiculturalphones, or whatever kind of phoneys you choose. I say: Canadians, first, last, and always!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I say God help Canada were the attitude of the right hon. gentleman to prevail in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have been a great admirer of the right hon. gentleman. I think this is an open secret in the House of Commons. I still am. I think that the right hon. gentleman has earned his place in the history books of this country by his contribution to parliament, by his production of the Bill of Rights, by his undeniable concern for the rights of individuals. Parliament would be a poorer place without the right hon. gentleman. His ability as a debater is second to none and his ability to talk around the subject at hand is second to none. Very rarely this afternoon did the right hon. gentleman speak about the issue at hand. His concept of equality is something that is hard for me to follow. Equality for Canadians, obviously in the opinion of the right hon. gentleman, means a unilingual English-speaking Canadian, a Canada in which Ottawa and the public service is out of bounds to millions of Canadians who happen to live in one particular section of the country called the province of Quebec.

● (1640)

The hon. gentleman has done many things to advance the cause of French speaking Canadians. He did, indeed, name the first French speaking Governor General in Canadian history, following the first English speaking Canadian Governor General in Canadian history which I think was obviously a very logical thing to do. But when we get down to an issue as sensitive as language, when we get down to the question of unity, I try very hard to follow the logic of the right hon. gentleman. For many years I have attempted to be in the House on each and every occasion when he debates because I have learned a great deal from his style and his ability to make speeches without reading a text, something which should be enforced in this House. Nevertheless, I was puzzled and found it difficult to understand how his concept of Canadianism could possibly be acceptable to the people who are resident of the province of Quebec, who are Canadian, whose mother tongue happens to be French and who are told "There is room for you in Ottawa but under the following condition—that you learn to speak English because that is the language of the majority in this country."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. gentleman, subtlely and astutely, dragged in the two nations concept, the associate state concept, the third force, people of other cultures and things that had nothing at all to do with the issue at hand, which is the application of the Official Languages Act in an appropriate manner. There are many people who feel that this act has not been applied with enough vigour and who feel that the progress has been slow. I do not share that opinion. I came here in 1962 when members of the Créditiste Party speaking against were the statement of the President of the Canadian National Railways to the effect that the French speaking Canadians were not capable of being directors of a Canadian corporation called the CNR.

I lived in Quebec when we went through the evaluation of the 60's and the two nations concept as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) knows. I used to stand in this House in 1962, 1963 and 1964 and fight against those very principles and I used to be told "You are stupid—as a politician you won't get re-elected in your constituency which is 80 per cent French by denying the two nations concept". I used to say "Be damned on re-election" and fight it and I accused the provincial government of the day of fostering separatism under different titles and under different slogans. So, I bow not even to the right hon. gentleman when it comes to my concern for this country, to my appreciation of the French speaking Canadians of Canada. If I were a French speaking Canadian, I would have been a separatist when I was young and I would have been a separatist in 1962 when I came here. At that time I was appalled to find that the only gesture of friendship in the House of Commons was that of simultaneous translation. Beyond that I can remember the days when Hansard was not even printed in the French language, when the reports of committee hearings in French were tabled weeks later and when we spent day after day apologizing for the lack of linguistic capabilities in the House of Commons.

Last Wednesday and Thursday, with the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe and the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert), I met a group of young French speaking Canadians from my riding out on the lawn and they asked all sorts of questions about Ottawa and about parliament. One said to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, "How is it that when I come to Ottawa to visit parliament I am greeted in French?" I can remember the day when it was not so, when we could not find enough bilingual people at the front door to take the tours from Quebec around the House of Commons. That was not too many years ago.

Mr. Speaker, what are we asking French speaking Canadians to do? What is the Prime Minister suggesting? Nothing more than that Canadians whose mother tongue happens to be French should be able to participate in the public service of the country, to realize that there is room for them in the public service of this country, to realize that there is opportunity for them to be promoted, to make them realize that their language is welcome and enriching rather than a hindrance when they come to this place. We are asking them, I hope, one of these days to stop comparing the affluence of Ottawa with the drudgery and slum conditions of Hull across the river which is what they were expected to do when they came here 20 years ago. They were expected to live across the river, work all day in the English language in Ottawa and then go back home across the river where they could at least be exposed to their own culture. This is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, for the French Canadian federalists of the province of Quebec who want to participate in everyday life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I say that I take off my hat to, that I am proud of and that I support the leader of the official opposition in his encouraging, dynamic and courageous stand on this particular issue. The other day he said that he bore scars for being progressive on this subject. I think the Progressive Conservative party is lucky to have as their leader a man who is prepared to take that stand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert said something that is very true. He said Quebec people are not different; of course, they are not. The French Canadian that I have known for 52 years is no different from the English speaking friend down the street. In time of need, I have been able to turn to my neighbour who happens to be French. Our children play together on the same hockey and baseball teams; we want essentially the same things for ourselves and our children, a country that provides jobs, a degree of prosperity and a degree of security. The French speaking Canadian demands equality of opportunity. How can you get equality of opportunity in the federal public service if there is no room for the French language? That has been the problem for too long. One would think from the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert that what we are suggesting in the resolution or what was suggested in the Official Languages Act—

An hon. Member: He voted against it.

Mr. Mackasey: Well, I do not want to get into a rereading of the 1968 speeches. I can still remember some of the speeches on the flag debate that were sickening. The hon. gentleman dragged in the flag, dragged in the Union Jack. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has got an Achilles heel in that he has never been able to understand the French people of the province of Quebec. We came forward with a flag that bore no symbol of the French speaking Canadians, no symbol of the English speaking Canadians, but a simple maple leaf that was as acceptable to those who traced their ancestry to Ireland, to Poland, to the Ukraine, to Italy or any other country. His children or grandchildren have made this such a wonderful country in which to live.

● (1650)

But, Mr. Speaker, if we, and I mean not only the Liberal Party but all federalists in the House of Commons and in Quebec, are to beat back the separatist movement and continue beating it back, and if we are to win our fight for the minds and hearts of the youngsters in the province of Quebec, we must prevent them from turning inward and show them that there are opportunities in Ottawa if they should wish to participate in the development and formation of this country by serving in the public service. Such service is impossible if the penalty they must pay is being denied promotion because their mother tongue is French rather than English.

I travelled across this country in 1964 and 1965, and visited Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta. I can say, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) said, that I rarely ran into anybody bigoted or biased in those places. I visited every constituency, I think, in Saskatchewan, including Prince Albert, and in pretty well every riding, people would come up to me and say, "I originated in Quebec" or tell me that the parents or grandparents had come from that province and that they had been able to hang on to their language and culture to varying degrees. Are these people not entitled to be served, at least by their own government, in their own language, regardless of where they live in Canada, if they need to be so served? How else will you persuade French speaking Canadians to leave Quebec and move to Ontario, Alberta, Manitoba, or British Columbia?

It is not too many years ago that one of my closest friends, a French speaking Canadian, turned down a tremendous promotion outside Quebec only three months after leaving the province, because he could not find schooling for his children or cultural outlets, and could not even deal with the federal government in his own language. That is not what we want or what the Canadian people want. Those who happen to be bigoted or biased in their approach, and I am talking about Members of Parliament, and display bias or bigotry in order to be elected, are wrong. What is right eventually becomes politically right. A new generation is growing up, and this type of bigoted approach is fast disappearing.

Mr. Hueglin: Not in Quebec, with Ouellet calling us royalist fanatics.

Mr. Mackasey: At the same time, we must apply the Official Languages Act in a gentlemanlike manner, in a sensitive manner, and not in brusque way, because people, quite logically, fear change. English speaking Quebecers fear change. They are afraid of the working language in their own province being French and of the possibility that new Canadians will be forced to speak another language rather than the one of their own choice. So, the province of Quebec has a stake in this, too, and must make certain that its policies are fair and not discriminatory.

As so many others have said before me, this is the greatest country in the world. We all agree. Even though we are suffering from troubles and are suffering from so-called disunity, there is less trouble of that kind now than there was even ten years ago. Former prime minister Lester Pearson spoke very little French but had the vision to unite this country, to set up the B & B Commission, to take steps needed for the new Canadian flag, and to do the things that were needed with respect to the public service. Our present Prime Minister is carrying on that tradition. The Leader of the Opposition and other members have supported him, because that is only right and fair and is the price we must pay for the continuation of this country. It is a very small price, I might add.

Any country with two official languages and enjoying a multicultural society is rich. Such a country is a contrast to other countries which have eliminated all but one language and assimilated all cultures into one. It is paradoxical, perhaps, that Canadians of Italian, Ukrainian, Russian or Polish descent are better able to cling to their own languages and cultures by reason of the fact that we have been able to resist being assimilated culturally by the United States. That resistance has been possible because of the existence of several million people in Quebec who do not necessarily share a common language with our neighbour. So, we are all richer because in this country we speak two languages and follow many, many cultures.

In 1973, as we look around the world and see the miseries of other countries, it is gratifying to know that the only thing dividing us is the medium of communication. Why, young people in Europe learn three, four or five languages under their educational curriculum. I hope from now on that this debate will centre on the Official Languages Act, that we do not accuse each other of fostering disharmony and that the Prime Minister will not be accused of being a divisive force, as he was just accused. There is no political gain in this type of approach, nor can anybody gain much by being bigoted or biased in approaching the whole question of language. If any gain results from such an approach, it will be very, very temporary.

Let me say in conclusion that I could have lived with the amendment of the hon. gentleman of the opposition, although, perhaps, it would have introduced some degree of inflexibility. Perhaps the suggestion contained in the motion should remain vested in regulations which can be adjusted periodically.

Let me say a word about the constitutionality of this whole approach, and whether there are or ought to be two official languages in Canada. Mr. Justice Thorson has made his views on this subject known. I have discussed this subject with the learned judge and read his reasons for his stand, his books and his articles. Frankly, whether this act is constitutional is relatively unimportant. The facts of the case do not stand on the constitution; they stand on reality, on the fact that in Quebec there are millions of Canadians whose mother tongue happens to be French, who want to remain federalist and who want to see this country remain together. In several provincial elections they have rejected the separatist parties. If they are given a significant opportunity, they will become one of the real forces for unity in this country because they are realistic. If we deny them the right to work in their own language, to be promoted in the federal public service or to see the national capital, as it should exist on both sides of the river, as a reflection of our dual nationality and multicultural society, we will play a self-defeating and self-annihilating role. I support the Official Languages Act and commend it to all members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. When the debate resumes, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) will be recognized by the Chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter)—Harbours—Atlantic area—Request for improved facilities for fishermen; the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney)—Energy—Possible establishment of refinery at Gros Cacouna—Federal government participation with Quebec in discussions with Saudi Arabia; the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds)—Harbours—Ladner, B.C.—Request for dredging to assist fishermen.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the progress we are making in the debate, I wonder if there might be agreement in the House to forgo private members' hour and proceed with the debate. Your Honour could recognize the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie immediately, if there is agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary asks if the House agrees to postpone private members' hour and return to the debate that was interrupted a few minutes ago. Is it the wish of the House to agree to his suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As that appears to be agreeable, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designates, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their position even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhanced the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities, and of the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 4318).

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express myself fluently in French, but I regret that my French is not good enough for me to do so. I rely on the goodwill and the wisdom of my French-speaking colleagues in asking them to understand why I must continue my comments in English.

I listened with interest to the comments of the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). I would like to say that I agree with the points he made and express my disappointment with the remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who accused the government of political trickery in this resolution.

● (1700)

The right hon. member for Prince Albert said the resolution was designed to fool French Canadians into thinking the resolution was significant and a trick to convince English speaking Canadians that the government had really changed its attitude. I am disappointed that the debate is being continued on that level because there is a problem in Canada in the public service and with the Official Languages Act. I hope this resolution, to some small degree, will be a positive step forward towards correcting the shortcomings of the policy. If the Liberal government had followed the suggestions of my party when the Official Languages Act was first introduced and had consulted with the public service, perhaps we would not have a need for this resolution at this time. I hope this resolution will alleviate some of the problems.

I represent a constituency which is 6 per cent French speaking in the sense the people can trace their origin to French ancestry. This is compared with 40 per cent in the whole of Canada. In this debate, we must not lose sight of the realities of Canadian history and the reality of the situation as it now exists in this country. To those who want a unilingual Canada or to keep Quebec French only, I say they are sadly mistaken about the realities of our times.

If we look at Canadian history, we see there were two founding races. Throughout our history, since the time of the conquest in 1760, the English rulers tried on numerous occasions to assimilate the French Canadians, to make them into English speaking British subjects. They have failed. They failed in 1763 with the proclamation of that date. They failed with the Act of Union in 1840. One thing is clear from the reading of Canadian history. There is within the French Canadians a distinct desire to preserve their culture and identity. We call it "le fait français". I think this is a lesson all of us must heed.

I speak of the reality of today. Today, there are six million French speaking Canadians, the majority of whom do not speak any English. I refuse to get into the argument of majority-minority. The fact is that French Canadians are the majority in the province of Quebec and, therefore, have rights. Because they belong to this confederation, to this country, they have rights outside that province, just as English Canadians should have rights within that province.

When we debate this resolution, we must make a distinction between bilingualism and biculturalism and the Official Languages Act. The Official Languages Act, to which this resolution has reference, is but one facet of implementing bilingualism in this country. The Official Languages Act is concerned with linguistic equality in the public service. Bilingualism is a term of much broader scope. The objective of bilingualism is to allow Canadians of either language background to feel at home in the country so that they may truly say "I am a Canadian", not just in the province of Quebec or in English speaking Canada. In order to make them feel at home throughout Canada, we have to do more than is outlined in the Official Languages Act. If this is to be truly a country where people of either language group can feel at home, we have to look to not only government offices throughout Canada being able to serve people in both languages, but government run transportation facilities as well.

We talk about bilingualism in the hope of achieving much in this country, yet when we look at the situation in our schools, we see there is a backward trend, a decline in the teaching of the French language in English-Canadian schools. In 1971, 55 per cent of the students in English Canada studied French. Today, in 1973, it has declined to 47 per cent and seems to be going down. When I look at those figures, I worry about what the future has in store for Canada and the opportunities for our young people to become familiar with both languages.

I am also concerned about present day attitudes toward the issue of bilingualism, particularly the Official languages Act and the way the government has tried to implement it. In January, I sent a questionnaire to my constituents. I included a question on bilingualism. The question read "In your opinion, is the federal government's policy on bilingualism (a) essential to foster Canadian unity, (b) doing more harm than good." Of those who answered whether they thought bilingualism as being carried out by the government is essential to foster Canadian unity, 30 per cent said yes and 32 per cent said no, almost tied. On the question of whether they thought the present government's policy of bilingualism was doing more harm than good, 55 per cent said yes and 10 per cent said no. The figures do not add up to 100 per cent because many who replied only answered one part of the question.

There definitely seems to be a concern among English speaking Canadians about just what this policy is doing. Based on the replies I received and comments I have heard, there seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding about bilingualism and the Official Languages Act. The responsibility for this misunderstanding must be placed at the door of the government for its failure to convince and explain to English Canadians the necessity of this approach.

Today, we have a backlash among English speaking Canadians and a skepticism among French speaking Canadians as to the worth of the whole measure. I wonder why the implementation of the Official Languages Act is responsible for this unfavourable attitude among many English speaking Canadians. The Official Languages Act is concerned with institutional bilingualism. Its application is limited to those places where it is needed. Each federal department must have enough employees and written materials to provide service to the public in both official languages.

We hear many reasons from English speaking Canadians as to why they object to this act. I think many of them are unfounded. Many people argue that this policy is costly to the taxpayer. The figure of $54 million is bandied about. I do not know whether that figure is accurate. Stories are told by English speaking public servants about not being promoted because they are not bilingual. This goes from neighbour to neighbour and stereotyping begins. What may have been one incident is generalized beyond all proportions. What are the facts? We hear about the cost to the taxpayers. Well, Mr. Speaker, I pose the question: What price Canadian unity? We have many examples of misspending by this government and we have had such examples for years. I don't propose to try to categorize them all, but I merely mention the case of the Bonaventure. To be niggardly and to argue that it costs government money to provide services in both official languages is not only myopic, it is deceiving and it is not worthy for people to argue in this context.

● (1710)

What about the idea that civil servants are being discriminated against because they speak only one language? We in English Canada often get the impression that it is English speaking Canadians who are being discriminated against. Well, I read through the official report of the Commissioner of Official Languages and there are some very interesting statistics in that report of which I hope the public will be made aware. When one looks at the language used by the complainants under the Official Languages Act for the year 1972, one finds that 15 per cent of the complainants are English speaking and 85 per cent are French speaking Canadians. If one looks at the number of admissible complaints under the Act, the vast majority of them are from French speaking Canadians and their complaints have been found to be justified.

In 1971, there were 59,000 civil service jobs filled. Of those 59,000 jobs, 80 per cent required English only. Those requiring French only numbered 8 per cent, and 9 per cent required the use of both languages. In other words, it is ten times harder for French Canadians to get jobs in the civil service. So I say to English speaking Canadians who, through maybe personal experience, although I suspect mostly through hearsay evidence, say that the Official Languages Act is discriminatory, that they should read the statistics and they will then know that it is French Canadians who really have the problem trying to find equality in the civil service. I ask them to try to understand the frustration undergone by the French speaking Canadians who face these circumstances.

At the same time, I must once again—and how often this seems to be the request of English speaking Canadians of French speaking Canadians—ask French speaking Canadians to try to understand and be patient with English speaking civil servants. God knows there have been hundreds of years of injustice done to French speaking Canadians and it cannot be righted overnight. But I sincerely believe that English-speaking Canadians are now beginning to realize that something must be done. If we can only get the facts across to them, then I think they will understand, because the English-speaking civil servants I have talked to are not the bigoted stereotyped civil servants we hear on the media or whom we hear in conversations. I have talked to civil servants in Sault Ste. Marie who do not object to the principle of the Official Languages Act. What they object to is the way it was implemented. I was really impressed by the positive tone they had, the positive outlook they displayed. They saw the need for bilingualism in the civil service and they were willing to take the extra steps to accommodate the policy. But they objected to some bureaucrat saying: This is the way its got to be done. Or someone not explaining fully to them. As a result they were disturbed. They were not angry; they were not bigoted; they were just disturbed and they wanted to see the situation corrected. I find there is a lot of good faith and it is up to the government to do something about explaining and implementing the policy of bilingualism in the civil service.

Therefore, I welcome these nine points of the resolution as my party welcomes them. I think they will go part way at least towards correcting some of the wrongs which have existed in the implementation of the Official Languages Act. I support the principles. But I do not support the Conservative amendment nor does my party. The Conservative party in its amendment to the resolution argues that the nine principles outlined should be made into several different statutes. As I say we do support the principles. But to try to believe they can be put into statutes will only complicate the problem and result in a backward step. The problem is that in trying to implement a policy one has to take into account particular local circumstances and situations as they develop. But this must be an on-going process. You cannot legislate fixed rules and say that they apply in Sault Ste. Marie and in every other community in exactly the same way. So these principles, if they are not made into statutes, will enable us to have some flexibility.

That there is need for flexibility was recognized by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) himself when he said, and I quote: "These guidelines have to be and should be flexible and they have to be subject to change". We believe in that principle, Mr. Speaker, and not only our party but the men who have to work under these principles believe this. The Public Service Alliance of Canada has stated clearly that it supports the idea of the resolution not being made into a statute, as does, too, the Professional Institute of Canada. Because the employees' groups do not support the Conservative amendment and because, as I have explained, it would mean rigidity instead of flexibility, our party will not support the Conservative motion.

The road to bilingualism in the country as a whole is a difficult one. But it is worth it. The road to bilingualism in the civil service is equally difficult but equally worth taking. It will take time, it will take tolerance and it will take understanding. But despite our quarrels and our frustrations, I believe Canadians are basically a tolerant people. Because of bilingualism we are a richer country. Indeed, the leader of our party pointed out the other day that if we did not have an official policy of bilingualism in this country we would not have a policy of multiculturalism either. Together, both linguistic groups can build Canada for greater things. Together we can promote unity but still maintain our diversity.

Last January, Mr. Speaker, when I made my maiden speech, I devoted part of it to the issue of bilingualism. At that time I quoted the late Governor General Georges P. Vanier. I would like to do so again, because I think his words have much meaning for us in Canada when we talk about bilingualism and biculturalism. He gave this address on New Year's Eve, 1967, shortly before his death. He said:

> The measure of our unity has been the measure of our success in the past . . .
> If we imagine that we can now go our separate ways within our country, if we think that selfish interests can now take precedence over the national good, if we exaggerate our differences or revel in contention, if we do any of these things we will promote our own destruction.

Canada owes it to the world to remain united because no lesson is more badly needed than the one our unity can provide—the lesson that diversity need not be a cause for conflict, but, on the contrary may lead to richer and nobler living.

He went on:

Let us open the windows and doors of the provinces. Let us look over the walls and see what is on the other side. Let us know one another, and that will lead to understanding.

● (1720)

I pray God that we may all go forward hand in hand. We can't run the risk of this great country falling into pieces.

All I can say to that is: Amen.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, most of the problems with which we deal in this House of Commons are political in the truest and best sense of the word. Honest differences underline most of our debates here in this chamber. This idea is, perhaps, central to the fundamental workings of our parliament. Sometimes I become slightly suspicious when members of parliament, individually or collectively, cry out for a bipartisan approach to this or that issue being discussed on the floor of this chamber.

Having said that, I am as sure of one thing as never before: if we as parliamentarians let this debate on bilingualism fall into the partisan political arena, the damage to Canada, and to this parliament as an institution, will be incalculable. In my view, this is no exaggeration. Call it a cliché, call it a motherhood statement, but I approach this debate today in a spirit of seriousness that I have approached no other debate in this House previously.

[Translation]

I am sure of one thing, Mr. Speaker. When—

Mr. Langlois: You should have spoken before the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Gratttey: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Langlois: You should have spoken before the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[English]

An hon. Member: You should have spoken before Dief.

Mr. Grafftey: Perhaps I should. But let me say to the hon. member that I do not think it is helpful when the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) calls us dinosaurs, or when Mr. Pickersgill says that all the bigots are on this side of the House. I hope the hon. member will contain himself and attempt to ascertain what I am trying to do in this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure of one thing: it rests with each hon. member to see to it that politics is excluded from the debate on bilingualism.

[English]

With questions relating to national unity in the truest sense—bilingualism, multiculturalism and language rights—in spite of what I said at the opening of my remarks, special considerations surely exist which should invoke a bipartisan approach on the part of each and every member of this House. I think most of us realize that this is the first time in the history of the western world that a country has attempted to, let us say, superimpose the parliamentary system on a young federal union which at the same time is multicultural and has certain language rights, as we in Canada have today. Surely, this demands the highest kind of leadership and statesmanship by each and every member of this House. If I sound as though I am preaching a little, I make no apologies. The question of language rights in a young federal union such as Canada should never become the subject matter of partisan political debate, and in this regard I underline again and again the leadership role expected of us in this regard by every Canadian.

If I may digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, if I deal with general propositions in this House today it is because I deeply feel and believe that they are propositions that must be discussed before we give this resolution, or a bill or amended bill, our approval and clause by clause consideration. All four parties in this House must approach this subject as national parties. To do otherwise would be to abandon the trust that, in my view, the Canadian people have placed in our hands.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as this debate goes on with other hon. members in the House, I think—and this is not an overstatement—of Canada but also of my constituency of Brome-Missisquoi whose population is 70 per cent French-speaking and 30 per cent English-speaking.

In my own riding, as well as in several other ridings, national unity exists in the true sense of the word. I will remember to my dying day that when I started my political life 15 years ago in Ottawa—I must admit it—I spoke broken French; it was even worse than now. I will remember to my dying day the warm and courteous welcome I received from my constituents, my French-speaking fellow citizens. Like the previous speakers, I have pleasant memories of my first years in Ottawa.

For example, a French-speaking constituent from Farnham in my riding wanted to tender with the Department of National Defence. Immediately after I received his request on the phone and then his letter, the papers from the Public Service in Ottawa arrived at my office written entirely in English. My constituent had to submit his tender within three or four days, and the officials here in Ottawa told me: Mr. Grafftey, you have to wait three or four weeks for a French translation. Mr. Speaker, I found that quite ridiculous 15 years ago, and I hope I finally settled the matter not through an act of Parliament or a regulation, but with a simple phone call.

Let us look now at the other side of the picture, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I am aware of what is going on today, and I do not want, as I said earlier, to make a political issue out of this question, but I remember something that happened a few weeks ago with regard to the government of the province of Quebec. Unfortunately, as I said a while ago—the population is 30 per cent English-speaking in Brome-Missisquoi—too often I write in English to my fellow citizens and to the provincial government and too often I receive letters written entirely in French. That is the opposite of what was happening 15 years ago in Ottawa.

There is one thing I want to make quite clear, Mr. Speaker: As a Canadian, not as a Tory in the Progressive Conservative party, I am going to fight to the last to secure the same language rights for my French-speaking fellow-countrymen throughout Canada, as I have always done for English-speaking Quebecers. One must respect the same language rights and grant the same protection to Anglophones and Francophones.

● (1730)

[English]

Let us put our cards on the table right now, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Brome-Missisquoi we have bigots on both sides of the picture. But, Sir, I am sure of one thing: I have no mandate from anybody in my riding to give them the time of day in this House of Commons. I, along with every other member of this House, have no mandate either—and I repeat this time and time again—to allow the issue of bilingualism to become a partisan political issue. The mandate I do have in this debate and in this House of Commons is to reach out across the floor of this House, and to my left in this chamber, to unite Canada—not as a Progressive Conservative, but as a Canadian first.

Only when we work as Canadians first to settle this question, in the spirit of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) who spoke so well last Friday in this chamber, only in that spirit—especially those of us of the contemporary generation; and I do not say that in respect of any difference in chronological age but, rather, in respect of those especially who perhaps view national unity in a contemporary, outgoing way—and only by adopting this attitude and acting as Canadians first and settling this issue once and for all, can we get on with the real and true task of nation-building.

However, I must say that in my view the present parliament has a very special obligation toward the people of Canada in relation to language rights. Let us put our cards on the table now and briefly and objectively state what they are. I fully realize I am only one of two members in my party from the province of Quebec. At the same time, Sir, within my party there is great strength and representation from western Canada where the creative and positive forces of multiculturalism are so often and so well expressed. Partisan debate in the past on the subject of language rights has given far too many Canadians the feeling of having been left out and ignored in what should be a non-partisan, family debate. There is no use mincing words: this approach that has been followed in the past must stop, and stop immediately.

At this point I should like to speak very frankly—I am not exchanging accusations across the floor of this House—with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) about an important consideration which in my view touches both directly and indirectly on any discussion of language rights.

[Translation]

—language rights in general or language rights in the Public Service of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Since he came to Ottawa, the hon. Minister of Transport pointed out on many occasions that the Progressive Conservative party is not a national party. I regret Mr. Speaker that my party has only two members from Quebec in the House of Commons, but I am sure the hon. Minister of Transport also regrets to see only one Liberal member in Alberta.

[English]

The fact is that both the Minister of Transport and myself are members of great national parties. To say otherwise is to play partisan politics with the very fabric of national unity. I well remember the time between 1958 and 1962 when the Liberal opposition of the day was not much more than a corporals' guard in this House of Commons, with more than half their members coming from the province of Quebec. Was it ever suggested in the press, or was it ever suggested from this side of the House of Commons that it had ceased to be a national party? The answer definitely is no, it was never suggested.

If the Minister of Transport persists in the theory that only his party is the party of national unity, or the indispensable force for Canadian unity, the result would be catastrophic: it would mean that the only political parties which Quebec citizens, or Canadians living in the province of Quebec would have would be the Liberal party or the Parti Quebecois. We all know what that would mean eventually.

[Translation]

Anyway, I remain ever convinced of the common sense of the Canadian population in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces.

[English]

While I have never agreed with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) interpretation of the constitution, especially as it affects federal-provincial relations, I have never attacked his federalist credentials either within or outside this chamber, nor have I ever suggested since my entry into political life that his party has ceased or will cease to be a national party. I ask members opposite, including the Minister of Transport, to re-examine their theories concerning what is and what is not a national party at the present time.

Sir, in relation to the question of bilingualism I repeat that this Parliament has an awesome responsibility. Primarily, we must not confuse language rights with cultural rights and cultural identity. I was particularly impressed by some of the remarks of the Prime Minister when he opened the debate on this resolution. He said that whatever the historical facts vis-à-vis language rights were in 1867, 100 years ago, 100 years later we are faced with other political and social considerations.

What are these? I have already alluded to them. The first thing that comes to my mind is that the vast majority of members from my province find themselves sitting on the government side of the House, while the vast majority of members representing the dynamic, creative forces of multiculturalism sit with my party on this side of the House and, I should say, with the NDP, the hon. members to my left. Need I say any more? Surely, these facts alone call for the highest kind of statesmanship to be practised by all parties and all hon. members in this domain. The Canadian people expect nothing less from us. They have given us a mandate to play our part in uniting Canada.

[Translation]

It must be admitted, Mr. Speaker, that I have some difficulty to follow the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

[English]

I repeat that it is with some trepidation, and at the risk of sounding somewhat presumptuous, that I wish to address a few words especially to the Prime Minister. Considering the fact that he feels this resolution standing in his name to be so important, and he had so much to say about it—I have never said this before, but at least I think I know some of the awesome responsibilities that a prime minister must shoulder—and in view of the importance which most hon. members attach to this debate, it is regrettable that he has not seen fit to be present in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: However, I wish to address a few words especially to him as prime minister of my country, my prime minister, and to the prime minister of another day, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

The Prime Minister came to office not only with a national mandate but with a special knowledge of the political forces at play in his native province in the late 1960s. He came to make Ottawa a meaningful capital and to make federal Canada a viable option for millions of Canadians living in the province of Quebec. It constituted a large part of his mandate. Who, in all honesty, could question the sincerity of this mission? The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, the first prime minister of Canada with other than French or British origin as he said today, gave with pride particular expression to the forces of multiculturalism so often—as we have heard and as we are going to hear in the House—to be found within the context of western Canada.

I do not think I will be giving away any caucus secrets when I say that in 1962 and 1963, both inside and outside our caucus the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who was then prime minister, had articulated his desire for an all-party conference which would be non-partisan in nature and which would involve legislators from all parties at all levels of government, and Canadians other than legislators from many walks of life. Such a great conference was to update many constitutional considerations, such as language rights and the rest, as we approached our centennial. I, frankly, think that the fact it was never held is to be regretted. I do not know what kind of progress we would have made, but the fact it was never held is to be regretted.

[Translation]

But unfortunately, since 1962—and I do not want to throw all the blame on one party or another, because both sides are perhaps responsible and as far as I am concerned maybe I would accept the blame—the matter of language rights has too often been mixed up with politics.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

[English]

As I said at the outset that if we continue to do this only Canada and only this institution of Parliament will suffer because we will not be getting on with the real and fundamental issues of nation-building.

Past misunderstandings and wounds must be buried and forgotten. Members on both sides of the House have awesome responsibilities in this regard. If there is currently misunderstanding between the positive Canadianism to be found in the French fact and the positive pride in Canadianism to be found in the creative forces of multiculturalism, I plead with the two right hon. gentlemen in the House to show imagination and leadership, as I know they can, to lessen the suspicion and misunderstanding. I plead with the present prime minister and the past prime minister. Everyone knows what I am talking about here. It could be argued that both of them lost working majorities because of misunderstanding in this regard. I do not believe that, but there is perhaps misunderstanding, bitterness and suspicion in this respect. I plead, as I have never pleaded with the House before, for those two right hon. gentlemen to show what I know is their capacity for leadership and imagination and to water down the suspicion and misunderstanding that exists.

People like ourselves who have seen national unity work, where the English and the French work side by side, such as in my little village, might find it very difficult to emphasize with this misunderstanding and suspicion. But it does exist somewhere, and surely national leadership by both the present and the past prime minister is something that younger, contemporary-thinking members of this House may ask for if we are to have a decent Canada in which to live.

There is a common denominator of pride in Canada to be found in the French fact and in the multicultural mosaic. Every time I travel west I sense this pride in Canada in the west, as in all other parts of Canada. Both sides of the House owe it to Canada and to Canadians to join forces to strengthen this common bond of feeling.

I plead as I have never pleaded before that this House accept the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Why the resolution was put forward in the first place, not as an amendment to the Official Languages Act but in this form, escapes me. I say this without any partisan intentions whatsoever. It seems to me that if what I hear in the House is correct, by voting for the amendment we will allay those fears, perhaps unjustified, that this resolution was purely a political ploy.

Members on the government side have stated that we should have enough flexibility to permit change as the situation evolves. What kind of change? What kind of flexibility? Change by administrative decree and ordinance that has already created confusion and misunderstanding? Change in the intention of this resolution without reference to parliament? That is just what we shall have if the resolution before the House is not amended so that its provisions become an amendment to the Official Languages Act.

I say to members of all parties, as a first act in climbing onto bipartisan ground: For the good of Canada, accept this amendment. We are not trying to shove it down anyone's throat. It might not be the be all and end all, but surely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) knows what I mean when I say, and will continue to say: For the good of Canada, accept this amendment. There is no trickery involved.

My leader is in the House, and I say that if there was one reason he came into national politics it was to play his part in uniting this country. Do hon. members think he put the amendment forward as political trickery? No. You can read between the lines when I say: In the name of Canada, accept this amendment and take this issue out of the political arena once and for all. It would be the first act we could all do together as we climbed onto bipartisan ground, without accusing each other and pointing to where the bigots are. Who knows where they are? Let us not give them the time of day in this place, Mr. Speaker.

If future changes are needed, let parliament, in good faith, do the amending. No resolution, be it ever so pious, will serve us well. Matters of this import cannot be left to administrative whim: surely we have learned that lesson. For some years now the Official Languages Act has been administered without real reference to parliament. The results, no matter what we feel they should be, are far from satisfactory. They are there for all to see. Surely government members have come to distrust a purely administrative approach to directing language matters.

Parliament must be consulted when basic changes are involved. Is there any doubt about that, when this is something that goes to the very fabric of our national unity? I have seen too many agencies of government, including Radio Canada, fly in the teeth of resolutions which had all-party support. Sir, this resolution must become an amendment to the Official Languages Act. I ask members of the party opposite to get hold of the Prime Minister tonight, have him join hands with my leader, and in a spirit of bipartisanship accept this amendment once and for all.

[Translation]

But we would have several things to add particularly if my proposals have been considered seriously. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessarily in the House of Commons—even with a piece of legislation or an amendment—that are settled matters concerning linguistic rights within the Public Service of Canada or even outside, without a true sense of understanding and goodwill and, I am sure that most members are such minded. But, Mr. Speaker, provinces must also play their part as far as the teaching of a second language is concerned.

[English]

I suppose we all know that we can do what we want by fooling around with acts, by amending acts, by looking at clauses and subclauses. But we will only succeed if there is a positive spirit of good will as we approach this subject. I am glad somebody is extremely sincere and progressive in his attitude to this problem; I refer to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). We have had many private conversations. I know he shares my view that the provinces can fulfil a much stronger role in teaching a second language, and if they do our job of uniting the country will be made somewhat easier. I feel that many of the programs he has initiated will help in this regard. I can do nothing but encourage him and give him support from this side of the House. We should implore the provinces to do this, not only the province of Quebec but our other provinces.

[Translation]

—to improve what is being done, Mr. Speaker, to that effect.

[English]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me simply state that we do not know our strength if we do not know our history. Confederation was an act of faith. Liberals and Conservatives joined hands to bring Canada and Canadians together. There was no indispensable man; there was no indispensable party. The Fathers of Confederation acted as Canadians first. Confederation was an act of national unity; there was no room for partisan debate.

Today, over 100 years later, a few things have changed. We now have four parties represented in a minority situation in the House of Commons. Millions of people have since come to Canada from many lands other than the United Kingdom and France, a fact which the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert articulated so well today. Yet, Sir, one thing has not changed; that is the necessity for each Member of Parliament to adopt the spirit of the Fathers of Confederation as we discuss the question of language rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being agreed that it is six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, we members are often accused of talking in the House to our constituents. Today I am addressing myself to every Canadian of English mother tongue. I am using the other official language to speak to you to emphasize the instant translation facilities available to us here in Ottawa and that these remarks will appear in Hansard, printed in both official languages. Easy communication is maintained though the majority of the English mother tongue members of this House have little or no fluency in their country's other language.

This last statement is not a criticism. We must accept as a well illustrated truth, that persons that have passed the half way point in their lives are not likely to have either the ability or the desire to become fluent in another language.

Very few persons are fortunate enough to live in bilingual households. Outside the province of Quebec there is only a negligable amount of business that is not conducted in the English language. In nine provinces, the opportunity rarely exists where a person can be immersed in a French-speaking environment.

We must also realize in our assessment of our current situation that the standard of second language instruction across the country leaves much to be desired. Far less attention has been paid to language instruction than other subjects. In many countries of Europe, a second language rates equally with other school subjects and a pass mark is a prerequisite for graduation.

In Canada, whether we be of English or French mother tongue, we have tended to build a resistance to school instruction in the second language that has lowered teaching standards and encouraged antipathy in our young people. In a communication vaccum, people tend to become emotional and sometimes afraid. American visitors enjoy Quebec because of its French language and distinctive atmosphere. The same attitude is found in English speaking vacationers in Quebec. This enjoyment is enhanced by the realization that they will not be lost or embarrassed because they speak one language. The unilingual English person demands the right to the protection afforded by the use of his or her own language. Why, then, is there English resistance to the establishment of minimal rights for unilingual French-speaking persons? Why is this motion necessary when we already have the Official Languages Act?

As it states in the initial paragraphs of the motion, it is necessary to recognize and approve the principles for the achievement of the objectives of the Official Languages Act.

Separatism is not unique to the province of Quebec. Here in this capital city, groups actively work for a unilingual English-speaking Canada. Many English-speaking persons refuse to accept the way of life of several millions of their fellow Canadians. This English separatism is just as deadly as the French variety, just as short sighted, just as bigoted and just as detrimental to the future prosperity and well being of every citizen of this country.

What then are we asking? Not that all English speak French, not that all the French speak English. But only that anyone communicating with their federal government be at ease and easily understood in the official language of their choice. That a unilingual French person have an opportunity to work for his government in his own language. That is all.

I am not going to repeat lengthy statistics. The inbalance is abundently self evident: 3.6 per cent of the appointments to the public service in 1971 were unilingual French. 81.7 per cent were unilingual English.

The last paragraph in the motion before us deals with the National Capital region and the desire to enhance its bilingual character. We have a long way to go. Here, at the Parliament of Canada it should hardly be necessary to stress that visitors should be able to address all officials in either of our official languages.

[Mr. Herbert.]

That this condition does not exist one hundred and six years after the birth of our nation is no credit to this House.

Language was a factor in the last election and no discussion of degree will alter that fact. It is an unfortunate truism that many persons will say one thing and do another. This is a particular weakness amongst politicians.

I am appealing to you as men and women who fight for Indian rights, for Eskimo rights, for the right to worship God in your own way and as men and women who respect the rights of others in a free society. I am not worried about the vote on this motion. I am concerned about our individual actions today and tomorrow.

To members who stress the merits of the official languages act, but suggest that we are moving too fast, I would ask to change sides just long enough to face the reality of the situation as it exists today.

Those of you that actively support Indian rights have cultivated an appreciation of the different way of life of the Indian.

Our two official languages also represent two different ways of life. A recognition of that fact will put an end to fence sitting.

If you have to wrestle with your conscience, before you recognize the right to equality of service and opportunity of our French language citizens, then I suggest that voter consideration is overriding human consideration.

I am extremely fortunate in being able to enjoy each day our very special Canadian way of life. Let us all actively work to improve it.

● (2010)

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate we have heard a great deal of important rhetoric which I could not hope to emulate in speaking of the involvement of this question of language in the whole concept of national unity in our country. I say at the outset that I would not quarrel with anyone who says that the issue is an important one from the point of view of the future of our country and the relationship between our two great races which just over 100 years ago started as a partnership to develop a nation through agreement, understanding and compromise. I want to put my position with respect to this resolution in a somewhat different light from the positions which have been expressed thus far in this debate.

Although the debate seems to have centered on national unity, I want to remind all my colleagues in this House of certain facts. I ask the government not to forget that there is a very important human element involved in this debate. Thousands of public servants, the majority of whom live in the national capital area, have their eyes on the actions of this government and their ears on the debate taking place in parliament. So I rise to speak in this debate, Mr. Speaker, conscious that I have the honour to represent in parliament a large number of public servants and their families who at one time or another have been bumped and buffeted and have found themselves in the eye of what I said on a previous occasion was a "bilingual hurricane". It is to this aspect of the matter that I wish to address myself.

I have found that for public servants the issue is not the Official Languages Act as such. The act was debated and its principles were examined by another parliament. The result of the examination was that all parties in the House at that time endorsed the principles of the Official Languages Act. For those public servants to whom I have referred the big question is not the act; the question is, what is the real and true intention of the government in advancing this resolution at this time?

I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who represents my neighbouring riding, Ottawa-Carleton, and who represents, as I do, a large number of public servants. He said this afternoon that the purpose of the resolution is not to reopen an old debate. One could be forgiven if one doubted that, in view of the utterances made in this House. I say that we should close the debate. The minister said that the purpose of the resolution is to review the principles under which the act is to be applied and under which implementation of the program is to take place in the public service.

Mr. Speaker, I think this question goes far beyond a mere matter of review. I think it comes down to this: we must enshrine within the law of this country certain principles which are designed to protect the interests of public servants, particularly unilingual public servants, in every part of Canada. The minister said the purpose of this resolution is to undercut the arguments of separatism. I say that we should go further and this House should make a pronouncement that will pull the rug from under the separatist element in this country.

When I have spoken to public servants about this matter, they have reminded me that this is the same government that has refused consistently to bring forth long overdue amendments to the Public Service Employment Act with respect to broadening the bargaining rights of public servants. This is the same government, Mr. Speaker, that has paid lip service to the principle of full escalation of public service pensions, a principle which we support, but has used what I call shabby legal arguments to avoid bringing the question before this House. This government has not taken in these areas any steps which are really meaningful to public servants.

Is it any wonder that public servants view with skepticism the resolution before the House? I hasten to add they are not skeptical about the words they read; their skepticism is centred around the real intention of this government. They are asking me and others how there can be any assurance that the important nine points now enunciated, and so long overdue, will have an effect on the day to day operations of the Public Service of Canada and will continue to have such an effect in the offices of individual public servants.

The fact is, as has been stated before, that this government has dangerously neglected to give the Canadian public a candid and comprehensive explanation of the Official Languages Act and their bilingual policy. They have failed to explain to Canadians, particularly public servants, in down to earth, practical terms the real meaning of the statute and that which flows from it. There is no doubt that whatever steps they have failed to take, must be taken now so that misunderstandings can be corrected, so that misinterpretations that exist in the national capital can be eliminated, and so that all Canadians, not just public servants, will understand the true effect and meaning of the statute and the government's policy.

I met thousands of public servants in the fall of 1972. I say to this House, it is to their everlasting credit that the public servants of Canada generally supported the principles of the Official Languages Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: That was their position. They recognized that the purpose of the act was to give equal status in the public service and in the Government of Canada to the two official languages. The act states that the two languages——shall possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada.

Parliament enacted that statute. The government that brought it forward was vested with the duty to ensure that every public servant, and those contemplating entry into the public service, should possess and enjoy equality of status. It is, therefore, the duty of all members of this House, particularly those on the government side, to ensure that in the process of implementating the bilingual program in the public service, equality is assured for all public servants.

The problem is very serious. If we can solve the problems of the public servants employed during this period of transition, a period when we are trying to remake 105 years of history within a relatively short time, we will have gone a long way toward fostering and promoting the spirit of the legislation and the principles set forth in the Official Languages Act.

I have said before, and I say again, that the policy of bilingualism means that within the limits of practicability Canadians should have the right to federal government service in either official language. We should continue to search for equality. There ought to be a commitment to equality. We must not forget that entering the public service and advancing within it must be based on equality of opportunity for all Canadians. Every Member of Parliament has a duty to ensure that the public service is a place where Canadians can work together. All members, not just those who represent public service ridings, must ensure that the public service is a place where justice is not only done to every public servant but where it is seen to be done.

We must never forget that bilingualism involves the right to be unilingual, and that that right applies to both English- and French-speaking Canadians. There was on this government a very heavy burden with regard to the public service of Canada. It is a matter of history and record that this government failed with respect to that burden.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: As a result of the way in which this policy was implemented, doubts, fears and apprehensions arose. Public servants came to the conclusion that the guarantees of a prime minister now dead were not being observed or honoured by those in the bureaucracy charged with the responsibility. During the past few years some unfortunate pages have been written into Canadian history. The circumstances to which I refer make it doubly important and of even greater urgency that what is done in the future will begin to wipe away what has been held to be injustice in the past.

As a result of the election in which one of the issues was certainly implementation of its policy, the government's record was so bad, so haphazard and felt to be so unfair and suspect that my Liberal opponent in Grenville-Carleton denounced the government's and his party's stand on the issue. It was after the election campaign during which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, "If you don't like the public service you can get out," that new guidelines were produced. The timing was important. Is it any wonder that among public servants there is great suspicion as to the true intentions of the government and its good faith, and concern as to the motives which prompted it to bring forth principles which my party and its leader have been calling for since 1969? I hope I will be forgiven if I say that I do not trust this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: I listened carefully to the speech of the Prime Minister, as well as to the speech of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). Like many public servants, I fear guidelines; they have the habit of wavering from place to place to suit the convenience of the moment. Even in the short time that I have been here I have seen a great number of guidelines waver. I share the feeling of suspicion and distrust of the government with respect to principles that are couched in a mere resolution.

I view this resolution as a statement of first principles. Having said that, I ask this government for once to go the second mile with the public servants and put the nine principles contained in the amendment into the statutes which affect the employment of public servants, so that all persons, whether they are in the public service, employed on boards, commissions or Crown corporations, will for the first time be given some real assurance in this regard.

Let the individual public servant know that at long last there is a new day in this whole unfortunate business. Give him the comfort of access to an independent tribunal. Give more than lip service to his cause. Every member of this House who has a real concern for public servants will support the amendment advanced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). This amendment goes no further than to give certain legal right to unilingual public servants in every part of Canada, and extends those rights to persons who are contemplating entering the public service. If the government does not accept the amendment as a matter of principle, I will doubt its sincerity with respect to this issue—so will the public servant.

It is unfortunate, but true, that if this resolution is passed in its present form it will have no force in law and the well-intentioned statement of a former prime minister now deceased will not be butteressed by anything which offers protection to public servants. I ask the government to breath some life into this resolution and make it a real guarantee, as it ought to be. I ask the government to take the position that never again shall public servants hear a prime minister say how things ought to be, and then hear a bureaucrat say the prime minister's words do not bind him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Moreover, it is no argument to say that this amendment is right and proper and then to avoid it by suggesting that to embody protection in the law would cause inflexibility. That is an argument of sophistry. Lack of flexibility is one the surest guarantees of rights. Then again, this resolution is not the end of consideration of this matter by parliament. I see no reason why as the years go by our ongoing consideration should not result in amendments to a statute rather than to a mere resolution. The Public Service Staff Association has agreed to the principle of the amendment, I read in a statement by the Public Service Alliance tonight. They are concerned about flexibility, of course. But parliament is not an inflexible body; it is a place where these matters can always be weighed and judged. There is now too much legislation in Canada by way of order in council regulation beyond the scrutiny of parliament and the people.

The argument advanced against the amendment by my neighbour the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton who represents a public service constituency, can only be described—I say this with regret—as the shabbiest legalism I have yet heard in the House of Commons. I ask the government to reconsider its position and accept the amendment which the Leader of the Opposition proposed and which I seconded. I ask it to begin again a process which has thus far brought misunderstanding and mistrust, and I hope that the second kick at the cat, with respect to implementation, will be better than the first.

I join my leader in all the suggestions he made to improve the lot of public servants. I intend to vote for the resolution, but I would much prefer to be joined in an overwhelming vote for the amendment. I will support the resolution because it states principles for which I fought during an election, but I want it clearly understood that those principles designed for the protection of unilingual public servants deserve to be part of the law of Canada. And they would be, Mr. Speaker, if our party formed the government.

I realize that two ministers of the Crown have taken a position against the amendment we have put forward, and that in the minds of some hon. members this may be a hurdle over which they feel they cannot vault. I urge government supporters to confront this hurdle and jump it, so that from this day forward we may not have to go through what we have gone through in the last few years with respect to bilingualism in the public service. I do not want to go out on the campaign trail again and encounter that sort of atmosphere. I would much prefer to meet happy public servants than discontented ones. I ask the government to set the record straight so that every public servant or prospective public servant, no matter from what part of the country he comes, can look upon the public service as a place for advancement, a service in which he feels trust, knowing that in his employment he is protected by the law.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, invited to give my opinion on the resolution concerning the application of bilingualism within the civil service, I will certainly take this opportunity to express my views and, perhaps also, allay the anxieties of some hon. members who consider that the subject is raised much too often in the House.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this resolution concerns a highly political subject which virtually affects the future of the whole Canadian people, and the members of all parties are certainly not wasting the time of the House when they publicly proclaim their opinion on one of the official languages in Canada.

We have adopted the Official Languages Act which was supported by most hon. members, by all party leaders and, of course, by all liberal members. In fact, not to admit it would be lying to one's self.

Moreover, over the past years, several interpretations have been made of the Official Languages Act and particularly of the respective roles that the French and English languages should play within the public service. Let us not deny it: Some fears have been expressed by many citizens and maybe also certain views were circulated through the public service which had nothing to do with reality.

Of course, the principles of the resolution may seem elementary but in view of the past confusion I think it is important to repeat these principles and to allow the most important political body of this country, namely the House of Commons, to state its position on those principles so that those responsible for the public administration may implement them with the knowledge that they have the Commons' confidence. Finally, basic principles will be implemented within the public service towards the essential objective which is to communicate in the language of one's choice at all federal levels.

I think I can make this statement without anyone being able to charge this government with politicking on bilingualism and, on the other hand, without charging the other hon. members and mainly the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) to try and play politics with this debate, which is basic if we are to understand that in the public service there exists a system by which opportunities and chances are equal for all Canadians. And I am rather convinced that the application of this resolution can better serve the causes of French- than English-speaking people because in the past, a certain group of French Canadians have rather been disinterested towards the federal public service, for reasons that can very easily be understood. There is also something that could be called not discrimination but a tendency to place people on a side line, because it is easier to understand each other when you are using the same language; it is also normal to deal with an assistant, a helper speaking your own language, because that very important vehicle is essential to communicate with human beings.

Generally speaking, I think that this confirmation of principles by the House of Commons is timely; Mr. Speaker, if the resolution accepted by the House had no result other than to clear up the confusion in the mind of a number of civil servants and if the population could understand that we are trying to provide all Canadians with basic services they are entitled to when we are talking about the language of communication, either French or English, we would have reached an important point and at the same time, we would have insured better understanding between all Canadians be they from Vancouver, Quebec or the Maritimes.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am right when I say, without claiming that Canada is the country which is doing most for the French language, that we must realize that we are the most privileged persons in the world with the best means of communication to be able to use equally English or French which are both world wide communication languages. We must take better advantage of that asset in the federal public service where some gaps still remain to be filled. It is important and imperative for the government and for the House of Commons, because it it the higher political body in the country, to provide guidelines for those who will have the responsibility to apply them in order to ensure services in both official languages.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that our country is one of the most privileged countries because it has the opportunity to enjoy both English and French, which are two universal languages. Furthermore, with our means of communication, radio and television for instance, we are perhaps the country which contributes the most for the progress of both languages and particularly French, because I think that French-speaking Canadians, those who have a French Canadian origin in Canada, have a right to wonder.

All hon. members who speak French are members of an international association of parliamentarians. In 1971 we had the pleasure and good fortune of welcoming the representatives of 28 states. They were parliamentarians of French-speaking countries. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these natural relations between states, through the vehicle of thought which is language, are a considerable enrichment.

I think there is no need to recall that at the United Nations as well French is one of the official languages of communication.

But in a country like ours, Mr. Speaker, where a third of the population speaks French and where important steps have been taken by youth to learn one of the official languages a considerable improvement took place these last few years. I think it is important that hon. members make a decision on this question and state openly that some positions must be recognized as essentially bilingual to ensure the citizen the possibility of communicating in the language of his choice when dealing with the government.

One can say of course, once again, that it is elementary; previous years have shown that we had to come back to the subject, talk about it again and that the House of Commons has to make a decision on the matter. If most hon. members can accept this essential point, we will have taken a giant step forward or we will have accomplished significant progress towards national unity, towards well understood Canadian unity and we will have ensured the basic elements of a healthier understanding between Canadians, whatever their province.

● (2050)

I have received open letters and I know quite well that it is the same for several other members. Frankly, I cannot understand how Canadians can now speak of a possible unilingual country, of having one single language and one culture. These people, however, make an effort to write in excellent English. Yet, I believe that these people are not dishonest, but they really lack information. And perhaps their leaders have failed to fulfill the duty incumbent upon them, that is to describe really the nature of our country, how it was constituted, and finally, that there were at least six million French-speaking people in Canada and that bilingualism was not too important in some parts of our country.

I know that in my riding, 99.9 per cent of the people speak French; speaking bilingualism has some importance because it opens the doors of the public service to French-speaking people, which was very difficult in the past since there was some reluctance to do it. To be able to understand and speak to one another, I think that this is one of the most important aspects of the resolution now before us, which recognizes that public servants should be able, under the provisions of the Official Languages Act, to fulfill their duties within the government in the official language of their choice.

I come back to the theme of the resolution which, in a country which was established in 1867, must be considered by people like me as entirely elementary. But, in my opinion, it had to be said in order to secure a better understanding and give public servants who will be responsible for the implementation of these principles the authority to ensure, once and for all, that the individual who will write a letter in French will be able to get an answer in French and that he who will write in English will get an answer in English.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I will say a few words concerning those who maintain that those administrative criteria should be incorporated in the Official Languages Act. Administrative criteria, or principles, which are somehow the guidelines in the implementation of the Official Languages Act in the public service, could very well be called regulations.

But regulations are not part of the legislation, and to answer the hon. member who proceded me, I will simply state that he does not have to get impatient, that if the House agrees to that motion, as I have a feeling it will, the government, which has always moved forward in the implementation of a genuine policy on bilingualism, both within the public service and in connection with the official languages and all the federal institutions, is still really the one which can offer the greatest possible pledge that the rights of individuals will be respected. It will however be necessary to make sure that the language of the citizen can be used as a basis and can likewise be used in the public service, and that the official positions will be duly filled.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition suggests or recommends that that resolution be made an integral part of the Official Languages Act, I for one do not question his sincerity.

However, at the political level—it may be a very clever suggestion or proposal—I would like to suggest to him that he will have to secure the support of the majority or the totality of the members of his party. The Leader of the Official Opposition is one of the leaders—and I say this with a very open mind, Mr. Speaker—who for the first time as leader of the Progressive Conservative party really sets himself on basic issues at the level of a head of a national party.

However, Mr. Speaker, that is a lot. I know that the House gave him an ovation when he rose to officially support the Official Languages Act against the will of a group of members of his party. He showed real courage.

Mr. Speaker, to those members who are concerned about the fact that this issue comes back very often before the House, I merely say that when voluntarily and with good faith those criteria will be allowed to be applied and become the policy followed within the public service, that is a question which will disappear at the national level and at the same time we will have set the cornerstone to really ensure a well-understood national unity among all Canadians for they will be able to talk to and understand each other.

[English]

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to emphasize very strongly that I have never quarrelled with the provisions and the spirit of the Official Languages Act. In my view, the problems which have arisen in this country in connection with bilingualism are the direct result of the methods this government has used in the course of implementing that act.

It is my opinion that the government has followed a path filled with unnecessary and unfair actions which scarcely do anything but bring a sea of trouble following behind them. I find no reason to believe this situation would necessarily undergo any change for the better by the passage of the resolution now before this House. Indeed, I believe this government has performed a great disservice to the cause of Canadian unity by pursuing policies of confrontation rather than policies of co-operation in respect of its method of instituting bilingualism in Canada.

I do not hesitate to say there are those who have been, and still are, dividing this country by using the issue of bilingualism for political purposes. Indeed, they have been using the whole subject of national unity for political purposes. The people doing that most certainly are not sitting on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: Since the passage of the Official Languages Act I believe it has become quite clear that the government has hoped to characterize probably all Canadians into two basic groups in so far as attitude toward bilingualism is concerned. The first category is composed of all those who agree with every single thing this government has done in connection with the implementation of the bilingual program. It is almost as if we are expected to believe these are the only people who stand for national unity and that these are the people who are good Canadians because they are prepared to accept without question the supposed rightness of the government's bilingual policies.

In the second category I believe the government has sought to place all persons who would in any way whatsoever criticize or find any fault in respect of the methods of instituting bilingualism. These, therefore, are the people who are against national unity and are the bad Canadians because they are the people who have committed the supposedly shocking crime of being unwilling to accept without question the divine rightness of the government's method of instituting bilingualism in this country.

I submit, however, there is a third category of people in this country which this government has conveniently overlooked. I suggest it is the largest category of Canadians by far. It is composed of thousands and thousands of people across the land who have never quarrelled with the principles of bilingualism but who have been shocked and utterly appalled at the methods used by this government to institute its bilingual program. This third group is made up of Canadians who love their country too much to allow it to be torn apart by a government that has been, and is, playing politics with bilingualism and national unity, a government that gives unctuous lip service to national unity while at the same time indulging in actions and following methods that, in short, will do more to disunite this country than even avowed separatists could hope to accomplish. And, with regret, I suggest that the motives behind the presentation of this resolution do not improve the situation at all; but I will come to that aspect of the matter a little later in my remarks.

This resolution is not legislation. It is not an amendment to the Official Languages Act. It is merely a resolution of this House which, if passed, might well not last beyond the life of this parliament. In short, it means no more than the "Pearson pledge". It is an exercise in futility. Why should we pass a resolution which would have no validity in law?

● (2100)

If this government was really sincere, if it was doing anything more than playing politics with this most important and most serious subject, if this government really wanted such guarantees and assurances to public servants to mean something of real substance, then it would have proposed without hesitation that the contents of this resolution be written into the Official Languages Act in the form of an amendment. But this it did not do. It remained for the leader of this party to move such an amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: We witnessed the refusal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to move an amendment when he replied to a question raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) a few days or a week or two ago. I suggest that the answer given by the Prime Minister at that time revealed this government resolution in all its naked reality. It is a cheap political ploy, an insincere political gimmick, an attempt to play with the unity of Canada for political purposes.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cossitt: I find such actions by this government contemptible, to say the least. But no one should find this government's actions surprising. When we look back to the throne speech debate in the early days of this session, and when we recall some of the remarks made at that time by the Prime Minister, we can only conclude that we were being given a preview of the kind of thinking that lies behind the drafting of this resolution. Indeed, at that time in the Prime Minister's ill-tempered remarks we were being provided with a setting of the stage for what was to come and for what is now before us for consideration. This resolution, in reality, is worthless because it will have no legal validity, because its life expectancy would be very limited if passed. We should well be asking ourselves why this House is being put through this whole exercise.

The preamble of this resolution is more or less a reaffirmation of the principles of the Official Languages Act. Is it necessary to reaffirm by resolution an act that is already the law of this land? What kind of nonsense is this? If the sun is shining on Parliament Hill, should this House be called together for purposes of passing a resolution that the sun is really shining? Is it necessary that parliament should consider pious, periodic reaffirmations of all legislation that passes? Why do we not have resolutions reaffirming the importance of old age security? Surely, we should rush right away into immediate consideration of a resolution reaffirming our belief in the value and importance of family allowances.

What else does this resolution contain other than pious reaffirmations? Supposedly, it sets forth certain guarantees for public servants. But we should ask ourselves: What does it really do? What does it really mean? For example, paragraph 3 of the resolution says that the knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions. How on earth could this be otherwise? Would we fill a position requiring English and French with a person speaking Arabic and Afghan? The truth, I suggest, is very sad. It is a very sad truth indeed. This resolution is not at all what the government would have us believe it to be. It is, in reality, yet another example of how this government will play with the subject of bilingualism for political purposes.

Judging by the tone of his remarks on this subject in recent months, I believe it is obvious that the Prime Minister and the government wanted only one thing, namely, to introduce a motion on bilingualism that would divide the House, and therefore at the same time a motion that they hoped would enable them to sit back and say in effect, "Look at us; we are for national unity and the others are not. We alone can save this country." The unfortunate reality of it all is that the kind of twisted thinking that lies behind this resolution could ultimately destroy this country.

The government would have Canadians swallow the utter myth that only it is capable of maintaining national unity. By this resolution, in my opinion, the government expected turmoil to be stirred up in this country, and then when the pot is nicely boiling the scenario calls for the Prime Minister and his associates to come riding in on their white horses, posing as the ones who will be the saviours of Canada as a nation from those who are painted as the advocates of disunity simply because we object to gross government errors in implementing bilingualism.

Some may say that the easiest way to put an end to such cheap melodrama on the part of this government would be to quietly vote for this resolution, to make no objections, to deny St. George his dragon, to leave this sick government tilting at its windmills. Perhaps that approach has some merit, but to follow it would make it necessary to vote for a farce—and this resolution is a farce, this government knows it is a farce, and it is essential that it be shown to Canadians for exactly what it is.

Mr. Speaker, if this government was really sincere we would not be faced with this resolution. We would have been faced, instead, at the outset with amendments to the Official Languages Act making specific guarantees to public servants the law of this land. Only, as I said previously and as I say again, the amendment proposed by the leader of this party would accomplish that fact.

But the government has shown by its past actions that it is not sincere on many things, particularly on the methods of implementing bilingualism. There has been ample time since the passing of the Official Languages Act to clearly illustrate this fact. If this government has failed to approach the subject of bilingualism according to the spirit of the Official Languages Act, according to the spirit and intention of the "Pearson pledge", is there any reason to believe now that this resolution will make things any different? I suggest there is no reason whatsoever.

Over the past few years the people of my riding have had the opportunity of witnessing at first hand the methods used by this government to implement bilingualism in Canada. We have very clearly seen the hypocrisy, the insincerity and the duplicity of the course followed by this government. The people in my constituency of Leeds saw the incredibly nonsensical and stupid actions of this government in attempting to create instant bilingualism at Canada Customs offices, with no regard for common sense, with no regard for unilingual public servants of long-standing or for the merit principle; in short, with complete disrespect for the so-called "Pearson pledge" in regard to the implementation of bilingualism. But that is a fantastic story in itself, filled with unfairness, filled with hypocrisy and, I regret to say, filled with downright dishonesty—a case well documented and completely provable in all its aspects and a case which I am prepared to stand upon firmly before any persons who wish to judge it impartially, anywhere and at any time.

At the height of the nonsense in my area I was president of the constituency Liberal association. At that time I received a letter which I believe describes the actions of the government very well indeed in regard to its methods of implementing bilingualism. The letter is dated March 2, 1970. I would like to read into the record this particular paragraph which it contains:

I am sure there are many cases of essentially good legislation being ruined by ham-handed implementation. This appears to be a good example.

That letter was written by Senator Richard J. Stanbury, president of the Liberal Party of Canada. Truer words were never written. I agree with Senator Stanbury's sentiments completely. But subsequently the ringmaster of the circus opposite cracked his whip and the trained seals all sprang into line.

Mr. Speaker, I hear questions from the opposite side of the chamber asking, "Who is your writer?" I am proud to say I write my own speeches, something which I do not think many members on that side do. The methods used by the government up until now to institute its bilingual program have been in many cases ill-conceived, thoughtless and unfair. In addition, the program has suffered greatly from the antics of that bumbling bureaucrat, John Carson, and from the ridiculous and foolish utterances of the Commissioner of Official Languages who flits hither and yon to his little soirées and tête-à-têtes mouthing such nonsense as "Westmount Rhodesians."

We must seriously ask ourselves these questions: If the government has failed in the past to implement fairly the Official Languages Act, is there any reason whatsoever to believe that things will be different in the future? And even if the substance of section 1 of the resolution is incorporated by amendment into the Official Languages Act, as the leader of this party has suggested, is there any reason to believe that the government will honour such provisions with sincerity—something it has utterly failed to show in the past toward implementation of the act itself? I am forced to conclude that anything the government does here and now is mere hollow window-dressing brought on by the near defeat of last October 30, and not in any way the result of a change of heart. Anything the government does now must be regarded as suspect against the background of its past actions.

Speaking in this House last Friday, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) said that he was amused at the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and he tried to justify his amusement by going back to quotations from Hansard of 1969. But a lot has happened since 1969. Perhaps the most important lesson we have learned since 1969 is the fact that the record of the government in implementing bilingualism is such that the most definite and specific legal safeguards are required—required in order to be certain that bilingualism will be fairly and properly instituted in Canada for all concerned, required if for no other reason than the bumbling record of the government since 1969 in implementing bilingualism. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to expressing amusement I say to the Minister of Communications that there is nothing at all amusing about the government's record.

I do not believe it is exaggeration or inaccuracy to say that the government does not want an amendment to the Official Languages Act for a very good reason from its own point of view. That reason is not, as the Minister of Communications would have us believe, so that the government will be free to follow flexible guidelines to meet changing conditions. It is far more likely that the government does not want an amendment because an amendment has legal permanency, whereas a resolution as proposed by the government, to put it charitably, can be easily modified or, to put it a little less charitably, easily ignored or disposed of. Many persons have discovered that their inevitable fate, when they disagree with the government on the methods of implementing bilingualism, is to be faced with an attempt to label them as bigots. This has been my own personal experience and I will not be surprised if it is my experience again after my remarks tonight.

But, Mr. Speaker, of French ancestry on both sides of my family, with a wife who comes from Holland, and as one who has always been an outspoken opponent of all forms of racism and bigotry, I totally reject such labels. I am proud that I can trace my ancestry back to René Cosset who came from the area of La Rochelle in France around 1700. I am equally proud of the fact, despite the childish and ridiculous interjections of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), that the French-speaking Cossettes of Quebec and the English-speaking Cositts of Canada and the United States share a common ancestry that dates back several centuries to France.

If the government continues it past methods of implementing bilingualism—and those of us who have experienced these methods have no justification to expect it will do anything else—then I suggest that when the history of our age is written it will be said that this government destroyed national unity while it posed as its champion. It will be said that the sensible approach of co-operation between the English-and French-speaking peoples of this nation was forsaken for the senseless approach of confrontation. It will be said that this nation of Canada was torn apart by the policies of a government that played nothing but politics with bilingualism and national unity.

As a former member of the Liberal party—

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Cossitt: Yes, we all make mistakes. That was one of mine, but I can assure the hon. member opposite that it has been a pleasure and a joy to see the light and to be where there is no dictatorship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: As a former member of the Liberal party and as a Canadian I cherish the memory of association with the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, and as a former member of the Liberal party and as a Canadian I am proud of the record of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But I find little in the record of this government to which any Canadian can point with pride. While it remains for history to pass the final verdict on what course was the right course—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, the trained seals are chuckling as usual. While it remains for history to pass the final verdict on what course was the right one for this House to take at the present time, I am prepared to vote against this resolution with the certain feeling that I am following the course that is right for Canada.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member may ask a question if the hon. member who has the floor wants to accept it.

[English]

The hon. member is seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question. Does the hon. member give consent?

Mr. Cossitt: I would be quite glad to listen to the question. I am sorry I did not hear it. Could it be repeated?

• (2120)

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the House that the mover of the motion, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the seconder, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury)—I notice he has just come into the chamber, but they have been absent during this very important debate. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister has not had anyone in the House on his behalf.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that this cannot be a point of order. This is the kind of argument that he can make in his speech.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) is this. I have listened quite attentively to the whole content of his speech, and I wonder whether he would enlighten me as to whether he is in agreement with the principles announced in the resolution or the principles contained in an amendment to the act and, if so, would he please explain his position?

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to answer the hon. member's question. He said he listened attentively to my remarks, but after listening to his question I am not sure how attentive he really was. I do believe that in my remarks I tried to draw attention to the points that have caused the leader of this party to propose such an amendment, and I said this is something that the government should have done. I think I made very clear the answer to his question. I am sorry that he was not as attentive as he thought he was.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Blais: The question was very simple—

Some hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I do not think we can accept supplementaries for the purpose of obtaining further explanation at the end of a speech.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member opposite rose and said he wished to ask a supplementary question. I assure him that although we on this side of the House are not over there yet, I do not think he will have long to wait and then he can ask questions of this party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is great that the applause comes before my address rather than after.

An hon. Member: You won't get it then.

Mr. Cullen: I listened, as did my colleague the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). One gets the impression that he spent too much of his youth at cowboy movies because in his mind everybody falls into the category of either a good guy or a bad guy. We find the hon. member for Leeds imputing motives to this party. I thought he learned when he was a Liberal that we do not do that kind of thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: One is tempted to think that if the hon. member had held more meetings of the Liberal party in his association, rather than one every two years when he was president, he might have taken some leadership or have done something to make some changes that he thought should be made.

An hon. Member: He made a change all right.

An hon. Member: He is all yours; you can keep him.

An hon. Member: You sure can.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this resolution and I am particularly delighted that it stands in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I am delighted because it highlights the importance of the language issue in maintaining Canadian unity. This is not the panacea for unity, nor has anyone suggested that this concept be true. Regional disparities, a feeling of remoteness from Ottawa and a myriad of other problems large and small all play their part and place their strain on Canada remaining one country.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we must realize that the language issue is an important one. This motion was necessary to highlight the importance of language and to say once again, as we did with the Official Languages Act, that this is not only the position of the government but it is the position of parliament. We are saying to the Canadian public that this is the way the Official Languages Act will be implemented; these are the principles that will be followed in so far as the civil service of Canada is concerned. This is the fulfilment of a promise made to civil servants by the late prime minister, Lester Pearson, and this is a writing down in motion form of the manner in which this parliament sees the principles being applied. The procedure followed in adopting these principles has been correct.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) is rising for the purpose of asking a question. This can only be done with the consent of the hon. member.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the attitude of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) on this issue. I was wondering whether this indicates a change since 1969, when he did not take the opportunity of voting on the Official Languages Act when it was before the House.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, there are many ways of getting your point across. I propose to do it in my riding. I did it with newspaper articles; I did not go door-to-door knocking the Official Languages Act and misinterpreting its real meaning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the procedure followed in adopting these principles has been correct. Consultation has taken place with the people most intimately involved. I am certain we were all pleased to note the acceptance by Mr. Barnes and Mr. Edwards of these principles. They do not satisfy everyone. It is typical of any proposition advanced in this delicate area of negotiation that it goes too far for some and not far enough or fast enough for others. This is, after all, an accommodation, and an accommodation that is acceptable to the people most vitally concerned—the civil servants of Canada. There is no abandonment of principle. Surely, any Canadian can accept that his fellow Canadian has a right to deal with his government in his own language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: There is no suggestion that everyone in Canada must be bilingual as, unhappily, some have misinterpreted the meaning of the Official Languages Act. I believe it was the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) who last night indicated that a lot of English-speaking Canadians are of the opinion that most Quebeckers are bilingual because English-speaking Canadians have visited the metropolitan area of Montreal.

I can understand the frustration and the anger of the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). He is well armed with statistics, and his statistics are honest. How do we change them, and how do we bring them more in line with the reality of Canada? The member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), when responding to the motion of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) concerning the status of women, indicated that his party might be prepared to accept the quota system in the interests of getting more women into senior levels of the civil service. I have not heard, however, whether this party would back the quota system in the interests of placing more people whose native tongue is French in the civil service.

The quota system is not fair, and I think it would be difficult to apply the quota system whether it is in the interests of placing more women in the civil service or more unilingual French-speaking Canadians. It is unfair to those already in place who have warranted promotion and who might be bypassed. It is not fair if the standards have to be lowered in the interest of implementing a quota system. So we know the pitfalls of the quota system and we know that they are not fair.

We also know it is not fair that the proportion of French-speaking civil servants is so low. I can sympathize with the hon. member for Champlain. Can we do it by some words in debate, or applying a quota system? I do not know, but it is something we have to consider. Although I cannot accept all his views or arguments, I know that they stem from a deep-seated feeling shared by many of my French-speaking colleagues in the Liberal caucus.

When I am talking on this subject in my riding or other English-speaking parts of this country, I ask my audience to imagine for the moment that Queen Victoria, rather than naming Ottawa as the capital of Canada had selected, let us say Lac St. Jean where I understand the majority of people speak French, and beautiful French. Imagine if, with Lac St. Jean as the capital, on visiting your capital you heard only French spoken. Would you feel at home? Would you be frustrated if you were endeavouring to deal with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, finance, or external affairs only to find that there were very few people who could accommodate you in your own language? And how much greater would be the frustration if you were a unilingual, English-speaking Canadian!

That, then, is the dilemma and the problem faced by the French-speaking Canadian who comes to Ottawa and does not feel at home here. We have an obligation to make him feel at home in his country's capital. And where, as in my riding, there are pockets of French-speaking Canadians, I am pleased to see the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) making provision for grants so that the language and culture of the French-speaking Canadian can be preserved. I was pleased to note that over the past two years grants have been made to the Club Joliet in my riding. It was one of the highlights of my short political career to date that when addressing the club I was able to speak to them totally in French.

Some think it would be appropriate if I were to speak French in the present debate. If I were to do so, I would in my view miss the point of this particular debate. We are not saying to Canadians that they must speak two official languages; we are saying, "You can speak in your own tongue and express yourself in your own language." This is something I feel very strongly about. In any event, I feel it would be appropriate if I were to continue speaking in English rather than to demonstrate my halting French. In this exercise we are saying over and over again that every Canadian need not be bilingual. We are saying, however, that we are entitled to express our views in our own language.

I have had the privilege and I have enjoyed the opportunity of studying the French language since my election in 1968. It may be necessary for the Prime Minister and the government to use another phrase to describe my use of the French language—not functional, but possibly mini-functional. But what a challenge, Mr. Speaker, and how exciting it is to try a phrase and to realize that you have been understood; and how gratifying to realize that you can understand someone who is speaking French.

It is easier for me to learn French, thanks to the enthusiasm of my daughter Katie. I am proud she is making and has been making a determined effort to become, not functionally bilingual but bilingual. When my spirits sagged and I felt frustration or incapable of mastering the French language, my 14-year old daughter charged, shamed, encouraged and challenged me. I will continue to study, to practise, to listen and to speak French as my recognition of the French fact and acceptance of bilingualism in Canada. To those who are contemplating the study of French I would say, "Do it. There are many more rewards than there are frustrations, trials and tribulations."

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked in his remarks yesterday, "Why this resolution", and said it was not binding on the government. I say to the Leader of the Opposition that this resolution is put forward not only to show where the government stands but because the people of Canada must know where this parliament stands. It was encouraging to note that the Leader of the Opposition, speaking for his party, adopted and accepted the principles outlined. He would place them in legislation. I do not agree with that, because I think codifying these principles would make it extremely difficult to change them when changes should be made. I think there has to be some flexibility if there is to be fairness in the implementing of these principles. We are telling Canada and Canada's civil servants what will be the guiding principles in implementing the Official Languages Act in so far as they are concerned.

I compliment the Leader of the Opposition for the stand he has taken. I cannot argue too strongly against putting these principles into legislation. I think that might be too inflexible. He said he has received scars as a result of taking the stand he has taken. I say to him, they are honourable scars.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who originally supported the Official Languages Act, mainly because of the conciliatory action and direction of the late prime minister, Lester B. Pearson. At that time we were assured that this concept would not be implemented in such a way as to cause serious concern either to the civil service or to the people of Canada in general. Most of us who so voted believe, I think, that the proposals put forward in this resolution are the basis on which the Official Languages Act was passed. Therefore, I think few who voted originally for the Offical Languages Act would change their minds today.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made a speech today that interested me, more because of what he said and interpreted than any facts he enunciated. He indicated that the proposals in this resolution were always in the mind of the government, and that the flexibility that all members on the government side are talking about as being necessary is at present a fact, because changes will continually be involved in this matter. He forgot to tell everyone that these nine points were brought before parliament in the form of a resolution because of the result of the election of last October.

It must interest people like Mr. Francis, Mr. Blair and certain other former Members of Parliament, particularly those from the Ottawa valley, to find this resolution before us today, because as sure as I am standing here they were defeated for being unable to convince the government that it was necessary to provide the safeguards we are discussing in this resolution. It is interesting to note that several days after the election the government announced, through the medium of a statement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), that civil servants were to be dealt with as this resolution proposes. It was to be directed in that direction.

For what happened in the past I fault not only the government but the civil service associations, and I include in that the professional associations. I fault, as well, the civil service and its agencies. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, they were not able to solve some of the very simple problems which had arisen, and were not able to arrive at criteria that were acceptable either to the civil service authorities or to civil servants. I was therefore more impressed with the politics of this resolution than with the fact that parliament is being asked to endorse it. We are being asked to stand up and be counted again on a subject which we debated when the official languages bill was before the House.

As we are discussing this matter I think it behooves all members of the House to ascertain for themselves whether the flexibility that Liberal members are talking about is advantageous. I am of the opinion it is not advantageous. I am of the opinion that the principle put forward by Mr. Pearson and endorsed by most members of the House provided the civil service with a bill of rights which was to work in three ways. It protected those who were purely French-speaking in French communities; it protected those who were purely English-speaking in English communities, and it protected long-time civil servants who were in the never-never land in the middle, known as Ottawa.

The situation has not yet been resolved, for several good reasons. I come from an area where people are divided into several language groups. It includes French, English and many other nationalities. Approximately 30 to 35 per cent are French-speaking; the remainder are English-speaking. That district is to be designated under the act. Although the location of these bilingual districts has not been decided officially, in many instances such districts have been established. I use the example of Timmins. We had in Timmins for a number of years an acting postmaster. He was of Italian extraction, representing a large body of the population in Timmins. He also understood some English, having gone to school at his own expense. The Sisters in the community taught him some French. Therefore, he had some knowledge of three languages.

Because this is a bilingual district, although it has not yet been so designated, he was asked to appear before a board some two years after he had taken over as the acting postmaster in Timmins. When he appeared before the board the first question he was asked was whether he was bilingual. He said that he spoke English and had studied some French, although he was not fluent. I might say that although English has been his language for the past 35 or 40 years, he is not entirely fluent in that language either. He was told by the board, "If you are not bilingual, don't waste our time and we won't waste yours. Unless you are bilingual there is no point carrying on this interview." It is this kind of situation that neither the civil service not the Civil Service Association have been able to correct. This has created many anomalies in the province of Quebec. On an opposition day the Créditiste party raised this matter on behalf of people they represent who are also faced with inequality of opportunity. The real desire of Canadians is a language bill of rights for those employed in the Public Service of Canada.

I do not support the amendment moved by the Conservative party, for a very simple reason. If it were accepted we would be here all summer amending every act because of the language problem. We would have to amend acts respecting the armed forces, the public service, Crown corporations and many others. I am not particularly interested in that exercise.

Earlier today I spoke to the President of the Treasury Board. There is no one more familiar with the operation of the public service than he. If he remains President of the Treasury Board I believe this resolution can be implemented as is. In my opinion it is good to have some flexibility so that the legislation can be changed from time to time. This is also true of the Bill of Rights. The right to privacy should be included in the Canadian Bill of Rights. It should provide the right to use either official language as well as religion or lack of religion.

We should be able to make changes to something we believe to be fundamental. The development of bilingual or unilingual units throughout the country is very fundamental to every Canadian. I was very interested in the speech this afternoon by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). It amused me. When I first came here 15 years ago there was no simultaneous translation system. When a member from Quebec made a speech in French everybody went out and had a smoke. No one listened and no one cared. The member making the speech did not care either because when he had completed his speech he went back to Montreal or Quebec City and we did not hear from him until he wanted to make another speech. Following the installation of the simultaneous translation system there was an obligation to consider every argument that was made. Other changes have been made which have been advantageous in the development of this country.

I am not sure whether we will go ahead holus-bolus with bilingual districts across Canada. I am not sure whether in communities where only English is spoken it will be necessary to have bilingual services. I hope that unilingual people in English communities will not be denied opportunities because the community in which they live is in a designated bilingual district. I am not sure this will be avoided, because it has already begun to some extent. We do not want to see anyone demoted because they cannot pass an examination. We must be very careful about how this policy is implemented. The resolution must not be totally ignored.

I think this government has done a lot of window-dressing. The member who preceded me said that he had been studying French since 1968, but he did not even give us a sample of what he has learned. Perhaps he does not require a second language in Sarnia. It may not do him any good. Perhaps he is engaged in an exercise of futility.

A second language would be a decided asset to me. On several occasions I have tried to learn the French language. I have not taken an immersion course, but I did take lessons from a very nice, competent young lady in the West Block.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: The classes lasted for two hours. After leaving a class to attend a committee meeting or a sitting of the House, you forgot all about French. You did not think of it again until you returned for another lesson two or three days later. Our teacher became very frustrated because it was necessary to start all over again. There is no way to learn a language or have any facility in it unless you speak it regularly. I am not very impressed with $45,000 a year deputy ministers who are able to answer one question per year in the second language. I suppose it cost $50,000 to train them. Who ran the shop while they were being trained? If an assistant deputy was running the shop, he should have had the job.

I suggest that to some extent this type of training is an exercise in futility. I am not opposed to everyone in this country being bilingual, and I am aware of some of the criticisms that members from the province of Quebec will make. I am prepared to vote reasonably large sums of money to create a bilingual nation. I am prepared to put that money into every kindergarten and primary school so that children may spend the first two or three years of their education totally within the climate of the other language.

Hon. members may wonder why this has not been done already. The reason is this, and my friends in the Social Credit party are well aware of it: a bilingual nation would quickly be created and the second generation would all be English-speaking, because on the North American continent English is the predominant language and, very likely, the second language would fall into disuse. If it fell into disuse and was no longer spoken in any normal business conduct, it would obviously no longer be accepted. I know that ability in the second language would make Canadians better people.

I am very proud that my father, my brother and other members of my family have always been able to speak French. I went to work at an early age and my job in the mines, apart from running the machines underground, was to train other people to speak the English language. That is why I murder it so badly—the result of the input from so many other languages! But I am very proud that my grandchildren speak French as their first language. I am sure they will grow up to be bilingual, because my son is not proficient in French.

These are all matters which will have to be considered carefully. The bigots on all sides must be convinced that the teaching of the second language is accompanied by very real rewards. I studied French in high school for four years. I was taught by a teacher who could not speak to any of the French people in the class or in the community. She went to Paris and learned a different type of French. It was like a person who had learned Latin trying to talk to Italians. She encountered a certain amount of difficulty. In schools in Ontario the authorities usually hire a teacher who has a degree in the French language, rather than someone who can speak French. As a result, the time spent by the children is totally wasted.

Most members of this House are biased. Most members of this House and most people in the country are prejudiced. Nevertheless, there is a tradition in Canada of tolerance toward other people, of tolerance when we embark upon a program intended to produce a bilingual nation.I think there will be a great deal of tolerance shown on the part of parents. But you cannot give Ontario a large sum of money and tell them to run their education system on these lines because, obviously, they would find they were short somewhere else and would use the money for another purpose, as they are now doing.

If we are serious about language education, we shall need to arrange for exchanges of our people from different regions. If we decide to educate civil servants and they are willing to spend months at the task of learning the second language, then at least we should make sure they do this in Quebec rather than in Calgary or Ottawa.

If we are really considering the development of a bilingual policy in this country, we should be prepared to spend some money on it. It is for this reason I object to the resolution which has been placed before us, somewhat in the same terms as resolutions put forward when we want the Americans to get out of Viet Nam or when we want the French to discontinue exploding nuclear devices in the South Pacific in their atomic energy tests. The resolution should have been put into a form which would embody the controls which are being suggested in a way which it would be difficult to change. It seems that the resolution is an attempt to encourage the people of Quebec to believe they are part of this nation. Mr. Speaker, we decided that a long time ago. It has never been questioned in this House. Since I have been here I have not heard any member question whether the country should exist in the form in which it now exists.

What we are discussing is our lack of ability to produce the bilingual character which is necessary. I was very impressed when listening to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) speaking recently in this debate. I was impressed by the fact that he moved a motion very similar in tone to the solution now before us. A spokesman for the government took objection to it and declined to support him. Now we see it in the form of a resolution—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. MacEachen: I was wondering whether it might be possible, Mr. Speaker, to come to some agreement tonight as to the possible termination of this debate. I have held discussions with other House leaders, and it might be possible for us to agree to terminate the debate tomorrow night, in view of the number of speeches which have been made.

Mr. Baldwin: I have taken part in these discussions. I am fully aware there are those who feel the debate should not be ended until members who have a keen desire to intervene have had that opportunity. At first blush I thought that Tuesday night would be acceptable, but it has just been brought to my attention that some members of our party will not be able to get here by tomorrow because of the strike. I was about to suggest, as an alternative, a set time on Wednesday. I think it highly desirable in a debate of this nature that there be a time certain appointed so that members who wish to vote may have that opportunity.

I also think we should take into account the fact that the Creditiste party, who sought to move a subamendment to our amendment which was declared out of order because of its non-relationship, might have an opportunity, as they are entitled to, after our amendment has been voted on, to have their amendment put and have the House divide on it. While I personally, as well as a great many members of my party, would be quite in favour of terminating the debate on Tuesday, in view of the fact that some members are anxious to be here perhaps the President of the Privy Council would be prepared to consider a time certain on Wednesday when the debate would be concluded.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the government House leader has indicated, there have been certain discussions among us. Obviously, those discussions are still going on, and in that process I should like to support what has been suggested by the hon. member for Peace River. I gather he is suggesting that the debate on the present amendment, the one moved by the Leader of the Opposition, be concluded at ten o'clock tomorrow night, but that the vote not be put at that time; rather, that the vote be put at the beginning of government business on Wednesday. We would then agree to conclude all matters relating to this subject by a quarter to six on Wednesday.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, allowing for a Creditiste amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This would allow for an amendment to be moved by the Social Credit group on Wednesday afternoon and for it and the final vote to be put to the House by a quarter to six on Wednesday.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we would agree to vote tomorrow night on the Progressive Conservative amendment, but we would like to have the opportunity to introduce our amendments Wednesday, since only two members of our party were heard on the matter and that we still have five or six who wish to take part in the debate. We would like to have the same opportunity to speak as other members.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. There does not quite seem to be agreement. Hon. members might sleep on this question and see how the debate goes tomorrow.

[Translation]

As there does not seem to be any specific agreement, I will then let hon. members continue the consideration of the matter this evening or tomorrow.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HARBOURS—ATLANTIC AREA—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED FACILITIES FOR FISHERMEN

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on March 15 I inquired of the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) about the provision of fishing and harbour facilities in the Atlantic area, particularly in Newfoundland and my riding of St. John's West. My question to the minister was prompted by the fact that in the Atlantic area, and in my riding in particular, there is a very desperate need for more and better harbour and fish landing facilities. I find that in my riding the Department of Public Works of the federal government is completely derelict in its responsibility to provide decent harbour and fish landing facilities to enable fishermen to successfully prosecute the fisheries.

The situation is not made any better when one realizes that this year the Department of Public Works has estimated its total expenditure on capital projects, maintenance and operation of public buildings to be $386,209,000. The situation is, of course, even further aggravated by the fact that in Ontario, where unemployment is around 4 per cent or 4.5 per cent, the expenditure on capital projects is $109,696,000. For maintenance work and operation of public buildings there is an expenditure of $96,484,000, or a total in the province of Ontario of $206,180,000.

In the Atlantic area, where we have an unemployment figure of 7.9 per cent, we find there is a capital expenditure of $15.5 million, with something like $12 million for maintenance and operation of public buildings. Of course, speaking for my own province, where we have an unemployment rate of 16.2 per cent, we find that on capital projects there is an expenditure of $4 million and something like $3.5 million for maintenance and operation of public buildings, for a total of $7,749,000. These figures were submitted recently to the Standing Committee on Public Works by officials of the Department of Public Works, and substantiated by the Department of the Environment and Fisheries.

While this year in the Atlantic area there is an expenditure of $12 million on maintenance and public works, according to these people there should be an expenditure of $30 million. In the committee, these officials told us that in order to satisfy the needs of the Atlantic area and to bring it up to a level where fishermen would be able to fish successfully, with adequate facilities, there should be an expenditure of at least $100 million. We appreciate the need for more, and bigger and better buildings in Ottawa and in Ontario generally and in other parts of Canada, and we appreciate the need for bigger and better air-conditioning units, bigger and better cafeterias and bigger and better parking structures. We are not against these because we recognize that, this being the seat of government, certain amenities must be provided for our public servants.

But speaking for my riding, I think I am echoing the sentiments of most people in the Atlantic area when I say that we cannot accept the fact that this government and our present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé), in conjunction with the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries, have obviously placed a greater priority on building office towers in Ottawa and the amenities to which I have just referred than providing facilities to enable our fishermen in the Atlantic area, especially in Newfoundland and my riding, to be able successfully to prosecute the fishery.

It is a little alarming to find we have a government which is more interested in spending, or at least in committing itself to an expenditure of $36 million on a new building for the Department of Finance, and Treasury Board in Ottawa than it is in providing these badly needed facilities in the Atlantic region or indeed in maintaining the present facilities. We have the Minister of Public Works presiding over a department which has permitted properties in eastern Canada, especially in Newfoundland, to deteriorate to a point where in many cases they have been marked as being unsafe for people to travel on or reside in.

Can you imagine parts of Newfoundland—and I have seen this—where fishing is so vital to the economy of the province, where it is the mainstay of the people who live in that area, where barriers are erected on public wharves advising people not to bring their vehicles there because it is unsafe? This is a government that pleads poverty when it comes to providing these facilities, but is able to spend this year in excess of $25 million on providing other facilities for the bureaucracy in Ottawa and upper Canada. This is hard to take. Of course, some of the blame, perhaps all of the blame should be placed on the shoulders of the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries because he is obviously now more concerned with imposing regulations and restrictions on fishermen than with helping them to increase their catches and their earnings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) may not be aware of the fact that the federal taxpayer spends more money by far on the fishing industry, per dollar of profit per employee, than any other industry in Canada. This is the case today. It has been the case for a number of years. Therefore, as Minister of Fisheries I make no apology to him or anyone else for the level of federal assistance to fishermen.

In recent years a number of departments have been involved in assisting fisheries, the most notable of which is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In the last half dozen years there has been a fantastic growth of fish processing facilities. The hon. member knows that, the fishermen know that well, and the industry certainly is aware of it. Also, in the last three years there has been a remarkable increase in the number of new fishing boats built. At the moment there are far more fishing vessels in total being built in this country than at any time in the history of the industry. In that case, as well, there is a 35 per cent subsidy for practically all of those vessels.

So, one, in respect of processing and, two, in respect of vessels and gear there has been a remarkable expansion in the public effort in support of fishermen. We are now going into the third phase because bigger vessels are being built and we need different kinds of docks and wharves. I will be the first to admit that we have not put anything like the effort into looking after small craft harbours as we must do in the next few years to look after these new vessels and to make sure that fish flow efficiently from the boats to the plants.

The total budget of the Fisheries Service in Canada is now approaching $100 million. A very large proportion of that budget is spent in the province of Newfoundland. I wish the hon. member had referred to figures of that kind rather than to public buildings which are of little direct use to the fishermen of Newfoundland in any case.

ENERGY—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF REFINERY AT GROS CACOUNA—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION WITH QUEBEC IN DISCUSSIONS WITH SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, some time last week I began asking a series of questions of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) with regard to the proposed construction of a supertanker port in the Gros Cacouna-Ile Verte region in the St. Lawrence River region of Quebec. Needless to say, I was not thoroughly satisfied with the answers and that is why I am up again tonight to pursue the matter.

Particularly with regard to the question I asked on May 29, the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, we have already completed an environmental impact assessment on the Lorneville project in New Brunswick, and a joint investigation regarding the Canso project is under way. We are happy to join with the provinces in these kinds of appraisals at any time.

The point, of course, is that although this was a satisfying answer to some, it was not an answer to the question I was asking, which was with regard to the proposed construction of a supertanker port at Gros Cacouna-Ile Verte. Obviously, this is not a very good area in which to build a supertanker port. At that point the St. Lawrence becomes quite narrow; the tidal currents are very strong and extremely variable. On both sides the river has shallow waters, and in the middle of the river there is a dangerous little island called Red Islet. Knowing that supertankers can take ten miles to come to a dead stop, one wonders whether putting a supertanker port in that area is an idea, or somebody's bad dream.

I have an indication that the minister may be worried about this project, from reading a letter of his which was printed in the Globe and Mail last Saturday in which he wrote, among many other things:

> So why run the danger of messing up our beautiful Gulf islands?

These are the west coast Gulf islands he was talking about.

> Why run the risk of polluting a scenic area which is many times more valuable than the Thousand Islands on the St. Lawrence River?

How he compares the Gulf islands with the St. Lawrence Islands, I do not know. Further in his letter he wrote:

The idea of bringing 250,000 ton tankers into a narrow channel such as that approaching Eastport, Maine, is ridiculous, not only from an environmental but also from a navigational point of view. The same applies to ports well up the St. Lawrence River. We mustn't be stupid about these things.

He does not specify what "well up" is. I do not think he uses the term "well up" in the sense that Alice used it in "Alice in Wonderland." I would like to know if the minister is fearful of the project at Gros Cacouna-Ile Verte, and why he has been wary about answering questions put to him directly. Indeed, in the past some of the officials in his department have been more forthright. In an article printed in the Ottawa Citizen of December 6, 1972, Robert F. Shaw, deputy environment minister, said:

Ports for supertankers shouldn't be built without major studies into possible environmental effects.

In the article he went on to point out that there were considerable fears about building a port at Gros Cacouna-Ile Verte. We know there has been a certain amount of artful dodging, I am not saying here on the part of the minister, but between the federal government and the provincial government over this matter. The Minister of Industry and Commerce in Quebec has said, unsaid, and resaid on several occasions, in October, November and December, 1972, and again this year, that federal approval had been given for the building of this port. I have tried to find out on two occasions, once from the acting prime minister and once from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), whether federal approval had been given, and which department of government had given that approval. So far I have received no answer. I do not expect an answer on this particular point tonight from the Minister of the Environment, but I would not mind having an answer soon.

Just to end off my question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister specifically whether he intends to proceed with serious ecological studies of the lower St. Lawrence, particularly in view of two facts. The first is the immense danger posed to those extremely valuable and historic waters of ours if there were a major oil spill, and the second is with a view to using the St. Lawrence as a source of aquaculture. I did not say "agriculture," but "aquaculture". We all know that we are suffering a food shortage in the world and that the food shortage will become worse. One wonders whether it is wise to doom a source of food supply such as the St. Lawrence to complete sterility forever, rather than proceed to develop its natural capacity to produce food for us and for the world.

● (2220)

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) knows, no port is absolutely safe and no development is absolutely safe from an environmental point of view; they vary a great deal, one compared with another. We have not carried out exhaustive environmental studies in the general area of Gros Cacouna-Ile Verte. The principal developer has begun to carry out the necessary investigations. The company has been in touch with our officials with a view to determining what criteria, what guidelines, what tests we would apply in assessing ports of that general character.

I understand that the developers will be completing some of these studies using basic data supplied by the Department of the Environment for Canada, and relevant Quebec government departments as well, within the next two or three months. This fits in very well with the approach we are taking generally—the developer must present his case showing the advantages of the development, must look at the environmental aspects of the development as well as its economic aspects, navigation, the risks inherent in sailing through those waters and the risks to surrounding industries including fisheries, tourism, and so on. We do not have an adequate report on tanker offloading and onloading development in the stretch of the St. Lawrence River in the vicinity of Ile Verte-Gros Cacouna. We are working with the developer and we will see what the results are.

HARBOURS—LADNER, B.C.—REQUEST FOR DREDGING TO ASSIST FISHERMEN

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, when I first started asking questions about the Ladner harbour the hon. minister did not seem to know what the problem was, so I asked to be put on the ten o'clock debate. Better than telling the House in my own words what some of the problems are in the harbour, I should like to read into the record a letter from Mr. Edgar A. Birch, a fisherman in the area and a member of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, local No. 4. It was a letter to the editor and it reads as follows:

Editor,

Once again we have seen stupidity carried out to its fullest by the Fraser River Harbour Commission—that body of people who are answerable to no one, except Ottawa, since they are appointed and not elected.

Three years ago, myself and Nick Spilchen, who are fishermen, and two aldermen, met with this commission at the Delta Municipal Hall.

We pointed out to the commissioner that it was useless to go on this way without a plan, as to what we are going to do with the harbour and where to put the sand when dredging is done.

They agreed that even a couple of fishermen could be right.

They went away and that was the last we saw of them. However, a year ago, an engineer from the Department of Public Works showed up in Ladner. We showed this man what we wanted done in Ladner, and we pointed out that the slough would have to be widened to 300 feet, twice its present width. He agreed and said it was no problem from an engineer's point of view.

Eight months ago we started asking for the slough to be dredged again as it was filled up at the mouth to the point where you couldn't get in at low tide with any boat that draws over four feet of water.

Just about each month they informed us they were too busy, until March when we took the Member of Parliament, John Reynolds, on a trip of the river. Two weeks later we were informed that Ladner slough would be dredged. It seems that Reynolds did his homework in Ottawa. However, all consultation ended there.

The dredge came into Ladner and no one consulted the fishermen or the council as to what should be done, and went ahead and dredged the sand up along the edge of the slough and left it there.

Now if we want the slough widened, as we proposed, we will have to move two weeks' of dredging to do so.

If they had put it another 300 yards further inland it would have come to good use later on.

This we are supposed to call an intelligent harbour commission which consults no one. It is time this body was elected and answerable to the public if we are ever going to get anywhere on the Fraser River.

The icing on the cake came when an official assured the fishermen that the channel was dredged enough and they were leaving. The dredge only went about 400 yards when it went aground and stayed there three and a half hours until the tide came in enough to float it.

This once again shows the stupidity of this commission.

Edgar A. Birch

Mr. Speaker, I went up to the slough again last week and took five Members of Parliament with me to show them what the area should be like. It should have better docks. Fishermen are told by the companies, "You can use our facilities for free". But they must give away sometimes 5 per cent or 10 per cent of their bonuses every year to pay for these dock facilities. That can amount to quite a bit more than their competitors to the south, across the border, pay. They can go to the finest port facilities and for $200 or $300 per year keep their boats there.

This government is spending in excess of $100 million in British Columbia on ports this year, and yet is not touching Ladner or sloughs or small fishing ports in the area. We want to know why. The fishermen in the area want to know why, because they are the mainstay of the economy of the area. We demand that some action be taken with respect to sloughs and docks in that area.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised this question on a number of occasions. Tonight he raised a few questions that he had not originally raised. With respect to those questions that were not raised originally, I hope to bring them to the minister's attention so that he can give the hon. member appropriate answers. This evening the hon. member referred to over-all harbour development, and so on. This is a much broader question than the one asked originally.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. In this special proceeding points of order cannot be raised. There is limited time for hon. members to ask questions, and the minister or his representative has three minutes to reply.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): The question that had been raised, as I recall, had to do mainly with the dredging of Ladner harbour. I have the following brief note: I have been informed that dredging at Ladner, B.C., was carried out by departmental dredges during the period April 16, 1973, to May 3, 1973. The dredging was done in the navigation channel only. The dredging was to provide for a grade depth of 12 feet, and the channel is 150 feet wide. The dredge spoil was deposited in an area designated by officials in the area. I am further advised that the dredged channel is considered quite adequate for the use of fishing vessels in that particular area.

Mr. Reynolds: How did the dredge get stuck?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence and with the consent of the House I should like to advise hon. members as to arrangements that have been considered and agreed upon by House leaders with respect to the debate on the official languages resolution. I think we can agree that the debate on the amendment now before the House, moved by the Leader of the Opposition, should terminate at the end of the day tomorrow and that the vote on that amendment should take place as the first item of government business on Wednesday. It then would be possible for the Social Credit party to move its amendment, and the vote on that question and on the resolution would take place at a quarter to six on Wednesday. I am tempted to go further and ask the House to endorse that arrangement, although probably we ought to do that tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is satisfactory. We will give legality to it tomorrow. We hope that the House takes notice of this statement tonight. It comes within the ambit of Standing Order 40 (4), under which the time requirement for questions and answers with regard to the business of the House is now being discharged by the President of the Privy Council, myself and other House leaders. We are most anxious that the House be put on notice that this is imminent, so that hon. members can conduct themselves accordingly and make their plans.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we concur in what has been said and we would be willing to legalize this arrangement tomorrow.

• (2230)

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we agree with what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has just said, because during our discussions he told us that four members of our party would have a chance to speak and we readily accept.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I understand the good will and state of mind of the House leaders of the various parties. I think the President of the Privy Council suggested that it might be difficult to do this at the time of adjournment, when many hon. members have gone and when there might not be a quorum in the House. I think the suggestion is well taken, that the House should confirm this decision tomorrow at the earliest opportunity.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM ALBERTA LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Speaker: May I bring to the attention of the House the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of a delegation from the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta led by the Assembly's Deputy Speaker, Mr. William Diachuk.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Diachuk and his five colleagues are in Ottawa participating in a program of parliamentary visits and exchanges between federal and provincial legislatures sponsored by the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. It will be agreed, I am sure, that these exchange visits will be of benefit to Canadian legislators, to their respective parliaments, and to Canada as a whole. On behalf of all members I extend to our distinguished colleagues from the province of Alberta a most hearty welcome.

On behalf of all my colleagues in the House of Commons, I wish to call the attention to the presence of our parliamentary colleagues from Alberta and to extend to them a warm welcome both in Ottawa and in our parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SPEECH BY MEMBER FOR LEEDS ON JUNE 4, 1973—ERROR IN "HANSARD"

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last night I spoke in the House in the debate on the resolution and amendment on bilingualism. In this connection I would like to draw the attention of the House to page 4417 of Hansard and, in particular, to a gross error that appears in paragraph No. 2. Ordinarily I would not rise to correct a printing error in Hansard but because this error is of such a serious nature I am left with absolutely no alternative but to do so on a point of order.

● (1410)

I fully realize that this Hansard error will no doubt please those sitting opposite and I expect that the trained seals will holler as usual.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member by his words is now putting himself out of court. If the hon. member wishes to make a correction to Hansard he should do so now without making a speech.

Mr. Cossitt: I am reported as stating that I have always been "an outspoken proponent of all forms of racism and bigotry."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: In reality, Mr. Speaker, I stated that I have always been "an outspoken opponent of racism and bigotry".

An hon. Member: When did you change?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You can have him, Bob.

Mr. Cossitt: I should like to finish my point of order without replying to the seals. I have discussed this matter today with the editor of Hansard who informs me that it was an honest mistake by the Hansard staff. He further agrees that the Hansard error should have been spotted before it appeared in print. Naturally I accept this explanation, but the explanation in itself does not undo the most damaging nature of the error without my rising at this time to correct the matter.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I must state that I find this error rather incredible because all those sitting in this chamber at the time of my remarks know that I did not say what Hansard has attributed to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: I think it is unfortunate that the action of someone on the Hansard staff made it appear otherwise. I should also state, Mr. Speaker, that I furnished Hansard with a text of my remarks which very clearly shows that they did not contain this very offensive phrase. I must also say that I do not believe—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member got the floor for the purpose of making a correction to Hansard. He has already indicated what the correction is. I agree with him, and I am sure all hon. members also agree, that the hon. member for Leeds has a point in wanting to make the correction. It was important that he should rise at this time, but I do not think he should make remarks which at this point will provoke a debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORTS OF AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I have the honour to table copies, in both official languages, of the annual reports for Air Canada and the Canadian National Railways for the financial year which ended on December 31, 1972.

Mr. Speaker, neither of these reports has been certified by auditors. The auditors' reports will be tabled as soon as the bill on the financing and equity of the Canadian National Railways, which provides for the appointment of auditors, has been adopted. The annual reports are tabled now in order to conform as much as possible to the existing legislation and to give hon. members the opportunity to examine the activities of Air Canada and the Canadian National Railways for 1972.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have raised this point before. No matter how fast the minister read, he was making a statement on motions. Reading it rapidly did not alter that fact and he has no right to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Baldwin: As I understand it, the hon. gentleman stated that he was making application to table documents under Standing Order 41(2). I think that ministers should bear in mind the point I have raised and drawn to Your Honour's attention and to the attention of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The point made by the hon. member for Peace River is well taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If a minister chooses to make remarks when he tables a document, certainly it changes the situation. The minister, of course, has the right to do this at any time and members in opposition also have a corresponding right if they wish to make comments by way of response to statements on motions.

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTIONS

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to read this one slowly. In accordance with Standing Order 60, subsection 2, I request that an order of the day be designated for consideration tomorrow of the notices of ways and means relating to income tax tabled on May 29 and those relating to the excise tax and customs tariff tabled on February 19.

Mr. Hales: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before we leave motions I wonder whether I could ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is prepared to make a statement on motions on the Zambian situation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS WHILE VISITING VICTORIA FALLS, RHODESIA—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my statement will be very brief. The President of Zambia, President Kaunda, has apologized, both directly to us and in a public speech that he made in Lusaka yesterday, with respect to the murder or killing of the two Canadian girls. He has offered his sincere apologies to the Canadian people.

Mr. Hales: Was anything said about compensation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There should not be questioning at this time. The hon. member, if he wishes, can ask questions during the question period.

ELECTIONS

IMMEDIATE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO CONTROL EXPENSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion if I may have the unanimous consent of the House. In view of the tragic events in the United States, in view of the recent statements by a former Liberal cabinet minister and in view of the numerous promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding):

> That this House requests the government to immediately introduce legislation to limit and control election expenses that would include provision for limitation on spending and full disclosure of sources of funds for both candidates and political parties.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the rapidly increasing mortgage rates which now have gone up to the disastrous level of 9½ per cent, and in view of the fact that at this rate a home owner with a 25-year mortgage of $20,000 will pay an outrageous $31,720 in interest charges alone, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier):

That this House direct the government to implement forthwith a policy which would (a) set the NHA lending rate at a level not exceeding the prime lending rate and, (b) direct federally chartered financial institutions to set aside certain proportions of their annual investments for housing at this prime rate.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN SUPPLY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I wish to seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss such an inportant and urgent matter that we should not run the risk of letting it deteriorate further and impede the Canadian economy.

I refer to the problem of feed grain concerning not only grain producers but also increasing the agricultural producers in eastern Canada.

I move, seconded by the member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House adjourn to consider immediately the solutions to the problem of feed grain stocks for eastern producers in order to assure them fair prices and remove that difference of almost $1 per bushel between eastern and western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I think that I should point out to the hon. member that his motion is essentially a motion to adjourn under Standing Order 26. This motion should be moved with prior notice, in accordance with the standing orders.

Since the hon. member has not given notice to the Chair, his motion is out of order.

PRICE PARITY FOR FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 in order to discuss a very urgent matter.

Since the Canadian Livestock Feed Board has proved its inability to find a short or long term solution likely to ensure that eastern farmers will obtain parity prices for feed grain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be instructed to review the estimates of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and consider the possibility of recommending to the House that the powers of this Board be increased in order to make it more efficient, and failing this, that the estimates made available to this Board be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury) moved that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Thursday, May 31, 1973, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE ON HOUSING—GOVERNMENT POLICY—ACTION TO OFFSET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the increase in the mortgage rate of one half of one per cent since April 1, which means an addition to the cost of an ordinary home of approximately $3,000 when projected over the normal life of a mortgage, will the minister inform the House whether the increase in the mortgage rate to this extent is consistent with the government's policy? If not, what action, if any, does the government propose to take to offset this increase in the cost of housing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the banks, trust companies and life insurance companies that they are dedicating more funds to the housing and mortgage market in order to counteract and stabilize the trend toward higher interest rates. Of course, this is part of an economic situation in which we are enjoying a very rapidly expanding economy with tremendous competition for credit. Over the past six months the economy has been expanding at an annual rate of 11.6 per cent.

BANK INTEREST RATE ON LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES, FISHERMEN AND FARMERS—MEASURES TO ENSURE SUFFICIENT FUNDS AVAILABLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): When the increase in commercial bank rates followed the increase in the rate of the Bank of Canada an undertaking was given that the rate would not be increased on small business and similar loans up to $100,000 or $200,000. In view of the fact the minister made a great deal of this, and in view of the fact this seems to have been virtually abandoned by the banking system, does the minister have any comment to make?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the rates being charged by the banks for general loans and small business loans. The five larger banks in particular are in effect charging a dual rate, giving a preference to smaller loans. I would be glad to send the hon. gentleman the rate structure which establishes what I have said.

Mr. Stanfield: This question arises from the increase in the number of bankruptcies in the first four months of 1973 compared with 1972. Is the minister actually taking any measures to ensure that sufficient funds are available to fishermen, farmers and small businessmen with a view to halting the escalation in the rate of bankruptcies that seems to be taking place?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I have said before in the House, the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada is such that credit is available to meet the expansion in the economy. The governor of the bank and I have indicated to the chartered banks, which appear to be abiding by this policy, that in the allocation of credit preference is to be given to small business, particularly for loans under $200,000 or, in some cases, $100,000, to farmers, fishermen and businessmen in the slower growth areas of the country.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT COMPEL LENDING INSTITUTIONS TO ALLOCATE CERTAIN PERCENTAGE OF INVESTMENT TO HOUSING WITH INTEREST NOT ABOVE PRIME RATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising from the first answer he gave to the Leader of the Opposition. In view of the fact it is precisely the current economic situation which makes it more lucrative for banks and other financial institutions to invest in sectors of the economy other than housing, will the minister take steps to make it mandatory that the banks and other federally chartered lending institutions allocate a certain percentage of their annual investment to housing at rates that do not exceed the prime interest rate?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I do not have any authority under the Bank Act to do that.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But I would point out to the hon. gentleman that figures recently released by Statistics Canada show that our housing starts are still over 260,000 a year.

Mr. Hees: Nobody will be able to buy them when they are built.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether the Minister of State responsible for housing was expressing government policy when he stated over the weekend that lawyers are charging exorbitant fees in connection with mortgage transactions and other real estate deals?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Surely this is not a matter of government policy. It is an opinion expressed by a member of the House of Commons.

SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO BANKS TO ACCEPT LOWER INTEREST RATES ON HOUSING MORTGAGES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in light of the fact he has agreed, on behalf of the government, to accept an amendment to the National Housing Act setting a ceiling on interest rates on direct loans by CMHC. Would he consider trying to reach an agreement with the chartered banks to bring interest rates down from 9¾ per cent to a reasonable rate so that people with ordinary incomes could afford homes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I shall be happy to discuss that suggestion with my colleague, the Minister of Finance, who is the person who should make any representations in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a last supplementary, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue. If hon. members wish to pursue this matter, we will return to it later.

Mr. Woolliams: In view of that reply by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would he be prepared to discuss with the lending institutions, the banks and the insurance companies, the placing of a ceiling on interest rates under terms and conditions similar to those brought forward by us as an amendment on the order paper, and approved by the government, in order that people earning average incomes may afford homes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I must point out to the hon. member that the interest rates reflect the tremendous domestic expansion in the economy and international rate structures—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and those happen to be the facts.

Mr. Woolliams: That happens to be Liberal policy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCREASE IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY RESPECTING METHOD OF PAYMENT—MAINTENANCE OF PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence, I will put my question—

An hon. Member: He is in the House.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): So he is here. He is moving closer to the Creditistes, Mr. Speaker, he will soon be with us.

Mr. Speaker, I will then direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Canadians are happy to know that family allowances will be paid at the rate of $20 a month as of January 1. Will those allowances be paid directly to Canadian families or will they be distributed by provincial bodies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, those allowances will be paid directly by the federal government.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Will those allowances be universal, will they be subject to certain restrictions or will they be distributed evenly to all young Canadians.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, those allowances will be universal and taxable, and a provision gives the provinces the possibility of introducing legislation to vary the amounts above a certain ceiling according to the age or the number of children in each family.

[English]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—CONSIDERATION OF FURTHER INCREASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the family allowance legislation be introduced in the House of Commons during this month of June? May I also ask the minister whether, in view of the rising cost of living, the government is considering making the allowance an average of $25 a month rather than $20?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to the first part of the question the answer is yes. As for the second part, may I say I am not surprised at the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse has a supplementary after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

INQUIRY RESPECTING FAMILY ALLOWANCES PAID BY QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Following the discussions between the minister and the Quebec Social Affairs Minister, will the family allowances now paid by the province of Quebec to a certain group of children continue to be paid, or will those allowances be automatically discontinued under a possible agreement?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is an answer that will certainly be given by the Quebec government itself, which is responsible for the administration of its own allowances.

URBAN AFFAIRS

WILLINGNESS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO DISCUSS DISTRIBUTION OF TAX REVENUES WITH PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the declaration of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities yesterday that the federal government is not going to be restricted to the role of providing money to solve urban problems, is the government unwilling or unprepared to hold significant talks on the number one municipal problem, the imbalance in tax revenues among the three levels of government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject that we are prepared to talk about, though the forum is something that has to be agreed to by the three levels of government or administration meeting at the tri-level conferences. I believe it would be in order for this subject to be brought up at a tri-level meeting and if it were I am sure the minister would be prepared to deal with it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Have you advised the provinces that you would be prepared—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question should not be asked directly but must be put through the Chair.

Mr. Stevens: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I will direct it through you. Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether he has in fact advised the provinces and municipalities that at either the October tri-level conference or elsewhere they may bring up this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this matter is on the agenda for the tri-level conference which I believe is to be held in October.

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING SIZE AND GROWTH OF URBAN AREAS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In light of the remarks of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs about various growth problems of small, medium-sized and large urban areas, is the government preparing any over-all growth policy of its own with regard to the various sizes of urban areas? If so, which minister is responsible, and when will a detailed policy be outlined?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the ministry of urban affairs and housing is responsible for co-ordinating government policies in these general areas. The minister, who is present in the House, is prepared to answer questions on this matter.

Mr. Paproski: Is the government designing over-all guidelines of its own with regard to small communities and large cities and, if so, when will these separate guidelines be made public?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, but as I pointed out yesterday to the mayors there is a need for provincial growth strategies that federal policies can be supportive of.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KILLING OF TWO CANADIAN GIRLS WHILE VISITING VICTORIA FALLS, RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION BY ZAMBIA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following the very brief announcement the minister made today, may I ask him whether the President of Zambia offered compensation to the families of the two Canadian girls who were killed by Zambian soldiers? If not, is it the intention of the minister to press Zambia for compensation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no, the President of Zambia has not offered compensation. I can say to the hon. gentleman and to the House that the apology offered by the President of Zambia does indicate, I think, a greater awarness of the concern of the Canadian people at the death of these young women. I have also taken the rather extraordinary step of sending a special envoy to Zambia to underline the nature of the concern of the Canadian people, and I expect he will be there shortly.

[Mr. Stevens.]

ALLEGED BEATING OF TWO CANADIANS IN TANZANIA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a related supplementary question for the minister. It appears that two Canadians were beaten and held incommunicado for 30 hours in Tanzania because they strayed too close to the president's residence on April 29. Did our High Commission in Dar-es-Salaam file a report, were these Canadians in fact beaten, and did Tanzanian officials refuse to contact our High Commissioner?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the incident is that the two Canadians in question relieved themselves on the lawn of the president's palace.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: Did they get compensation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: That is a tough act to follow, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

COMMISSION OF SERIOUS OFFENCES BY LEONARD MIVILLE WHILE ON TEMPORARY ABSENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the latest incident of a sexual assault combined with injuring with intent to kill committed in Montreal by Leonard Miville, who is serving a life sentence and was out on a 12-hour pass, when does the government intend to stop allowing these dangerous criminals to go out on pass, particularly unattended, and thereby be able to continue their assaults against the rest of the population?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the temporary absence in question took place in September, 1972, although the trial of the man only took place yesterday. I might say that since that time we have tightened up on temporary absence passes on two occasions, and I announced some arrangements last Friday to do just that.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING CLEAN-UP AND PROTECTION OF CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact today is World Environment Day and the Minister of the Environment in a message has expressed Canada's commitment to the pollution clean-up of the world's environment, as was also expressed at the Stockholm conference a year ago, will the minister inform the House on this historic day whether or not the government of Canada is committed in any serious way to the clean-up and protection of the environment in our own country and, specifically, does he plan to use the Canada Water Act to deal effectively with the urgent problems of pollution clean-up which are found in a number of rivers and lakes throughout our country?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are committed to cleaning up our own environment and looking after our neighbouring waters and air and we will, of course, use all our laws including the Canada Water Act, to do so.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will he enlighten the House and the concerned Canadian public of the intentions of his government respecting its environmental policy in view of the fact that as recently as two weeks ago the federal cabinet decided to assign the protection of our natural environment the lowest priority in its legislative and spending program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's suggestions are not in accordance with the facts.

GRAIN

REMOVAL OF QUOTAS ON WHEAT AND BARLEY—POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF SUPPLIES TO MEET CURRENT AND FUTURE CONTRACTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who reports for the Canadian Wheat Board. Does the fact that the quotas on wheat and barley have been removed entirely indicate that in the opinion of the Wheat Board there is a shortage of necessary grains to meet current or immediate future contractual responsibilities?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, it does not. There are adequate supplies of grain to meet all the commitments on the Wheat Board. What the open quotas do indicate is that for the third year in a row we are having record sales of wheat and barley, and also that a certain number of farmers are holding back delivery because they feel a great deal of income tax will be assessed against them, so other farmers are being given a full opportunity to deliver all they want.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stripped of the statistical misinformation given by the minister, having regard to the contractual responsibilities of the government of Canada I should like to ask whether there is any possibility that the government will find itself in the next two or three months in the position that it will have to purchase wheat from competing foreign countries?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no chance of that.

CONTINUATION OF PROGRAMS ACTING AS ALLEGED DISINCENTIVES TO PRODUCTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of what appears to be a shortage of supply, can the minister indicate whether it is his intention to continue programs that act as disincentives to grain production?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the hon. member's question is clearly false. In the time of very heavy surpluses and very heavy supplies which were considered as an onerous and price-lowering factor in the world, there was a temporary curtailment in 1970 of the all-out effort to sell grain. Since that time we have been able to talk to the farmers about moving toward a position in which they can test their production capacity. This year, for the first time in many years, we are able to say to them: Go out and use fertilizer and sprays and produce grain in the most effective way you know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice that a sufficient number of members are seeking recognition to ask supplementary questions on this very important subject that we could spend the rest of the question period on it. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca on a supplementary question, followed by the hon. member for Assiniboia on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the hon. member for Portneuf.

PRESENT POSITION OF GRASSLANDS INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, can the minister clarify the position of the grasslands incentive program at the present time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, three years ago we developed the grasslands incentive program with the objective of assisting the movement of approximately four million acres of grain lands into grass because of the tremendous, clearcut, long-term and stable potential of the meat producing industry. This year, in order to complete the third year of the program, we added some additional money so that all farmers who apply can seed grass this year and be eligible in this the final year of the grasslands incentive program.

NUMBER OF CONTRACTS DELAYED BY WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board pointed out to the Standing Committee on Agriculture that the board had been holding back on making agreements in terms of exporting grain because of the level of grain on hand as of July 31, and the need at the end of the crop year, can the minister in charge of the Wheat Board inform the House how many contracts have in fact been delayed by the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the best way to describe this situation is to make it quite clear that the Wheat Board has been continuing to enter into contracts with our regular customers. However, in a mood of conservatism and caution, it has not been undertaking contracts with several potential new customers until it was assured that the capacity of our handling and transportation systems and our supplies would not be strained by the commitments we want to make with our regular customers. I know, of course, that all hon. members are happy that the moisture conditions now existing on the Prairies and the added number of acres that have been seeded will allow the Wheat Board to go all out and sell—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF USED "COSMOS" AIRCRAFT FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the President of the Treasury Board and a supplementary question to one of his colleagues. Has the Treasury Board approved or is it giving consideration to the approval of funds for the purchase of a used "Cosmos" aircraft from the United States?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board has no program for the purchase of aircraft, used or otherwise.

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST BY DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR USED COSMOPOLITAN AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I wonder if I might ask the charming minister whether her department has sought—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, when I speak to a good looking woman I wish she would listen. I wonder if I might ask the minister whether it is a fact that her department has asked for a used Cosmopolitan aircraft, or one of the Cosmopolitan fleet, from the Department of National Defence and whether that request has been denied?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

QUEBEC—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS IN CERTAIN MANPOWER CENTRES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could the minister indicate under what regulations the two manpower centres in Quebec City are operating differently? Indeed, one of those centres is in a position to offer rather good jobs to the unemployed of the area involved, while the other is operating as a sub-agency with only left-overs or lowly paid jobs to offer the applicants?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could have been placed on the order paper. If the minister can give a brief answer, the Chair will recognize him for that purpose.

[English]

The minister can reply briefly.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard of the allegation, but I will certainly look into it and see if there is any substance to it.

[Later:]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can the minister ensure the House that he will take advantage of the minor study he mentioned to consult those mostly responsible, namely the managers of the centres involved?

TRANSPORT

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does he intend to refer the reports of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to the Standing Committee on Transport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): It is automatic, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS AND INCREASED USE OF DRUGS—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF ADDITIONAL TESTS IN CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of recent figures projecting over 2500 deaths, 90,000 injured and an economic loss of $2 billion because of automobile accidents in Canada in 1973, and in view of the continued increase in the medical and non-medical use of drugs and the relationship of that use to many accidents, can the minister indicate whether he is considering additional tests to be included in the Criminal Code, particularly in those instances in respect of which breathalyzer tests are negative?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have received representations along these lines from the Canada Safety Council and the matter was discussed with the provincial Attorneys General. So far as I could tell this was not a matter in respect of which there was any great feeling that steps were required at this stage, but we will be raising the matter further with the uniformity commissioners.

DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE—INQUIRY AS TO POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUANTUM OF DAMAGES FOLLOWING DEATH BY ACT OF ANOTHER PERSON

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Since at present the death of children or individuals without dependants imposes little liability from the civil law point of view, at least so far as the quantum of damages is concerned, has the minister considered bringing the situation to the attention of the Law Reform Commission or, in areas of federal responsibility, has the minister plans to attempt to fix a minimum value, even if it be symbolic, for a human life which is taken by the act of another person?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not brought this subject to the attention of the Law Reform Commission. So far as civil liability is concerned, this would be clearly within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONITORING OF SALES TAX AND TARIFF CUTS TO ENSURE BENEFITS REACH CONSUMERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who, if he has a very long memory, will recall that he promised at the time of the budget to monitor the cuts in tariffs to see that they were passed on and to make a report to the House, as he said at that time, before the Easter recess. I should like to ask the minister when we may expect that report and whether he will make it during the lifetime of this parliament or in the next parliament?

Mr. Baldwin: Or in the minister's lifetime.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): During the lifetime of this parliament, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: As we have waited since the middle of February for this report, can the minister now give us a firm date when we will receive the report?

Mr. Gray: No, I do not think I can do so yet, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LOWER ST. LAWRENCE AREA—POLICY RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Following representations made by 3,000 citizens from the lower St. Lawrence area and Gaspé who met in Matane over the weekend, and in addition to having delegated the Minister of National Health and Welfare, would the Prime Minister inform the House of the government intentions with regard to the economic planning of this area, and more specifically of its strategy, in the light of the Quebec government's intentions for this area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously, this is not a question that I can answer during the question period. A statement should be made not only by myself but by several other ministers, either on motions or during the ensuing debate.

MEASURES TO IMPROVE GENERAL AND SPECIAL ARDA AGREEMENTS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion I should like to put this question to his parliamentary secretary. In light of the fact that the Native Council of Canada representing Metis and non-status Indians met the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on April 11, at which time the council members indicated measures that could be introduced by the government to improve the general ARDA and special ARDA agreements, is the minister taking any steps to correct some of the weaknesses in the general ARDA and special ARDA agreements?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the minister did meet the delegation in his office, and the assurance he gave the association is such that we have reason to believe that they can expect some changes to be made following their representations.

[English]

Mr. Nesdoly: Can the parliamentary secretary tell me when his minister expects to make an announcement regarding changes in these agreements?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister is currently visiting the province and is at present carrying out a study of the reforms to be made to regional development programs and ARDA agreements; I think it would be untimely to set a date today for the changes to be made following the hon. member's question and the representations that have been made.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT IN LIGHT OF SITUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR AND PRICE OF GOLD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the situation with regard to the United States dollar and the price of gold on the world market, would the minister kindly make a statement to the House explaining the situation as seen by the government and also explaining the decision of the government to ride along with the U.S. dollar? In this I would hope that the minister could observe a greater degree of accuracy than that displayed in the general financial review presented on Friday.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought to my attention by several people and I will undertake to discuss it with the corporation. REASON FOR IMPRISONMENT OF INMATE BLANCHARD, CONVICTED OF SERIOUS CRIMES, IN WILLIAM HEAD MINIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTION

Mr. Donald W. Would the Solicitor General inform the House how it came about that a criminal like Blanchard, convicted of vicious crimes including rape and inflicting grievous bodily harm, came to be held in a minimum security institution like William Head from which he escaped to commit other vicious crimes? I am wondering whether upon recapture he was returned to William Head.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the record of Blanchard. I was not aware that he had been convicted of rape. As far as I know, he is not presently being held at William Head—

Mr. Baldwin: Is he on leave?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that there are just a few minutes left before the end of the question period. I was hoping that before the end of the question period the distinguished frontbenchers might give the Chair an opportunity to recognize some hon. members in the back rows. Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there has been no directive changing medium security institutions to maximum security institutions. On the other hand, we have been upgrading the security on the perimeter of medium security institutions, but we have not changed the program or the internal security within medium security institutions.

Since he has indicated that there will be a larger than normal final payment to wheat producers, could he make available the terms of grain contracts made many months ago, which would not prejudice any negotiations at the present time, with countries such as Russia, China, Brazil and India, to name a few, as these long-term contracts take up a big portion of our export wheat sales and would be of great benefit to grain producers?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is presenting an argument in support of his question. The minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member is quoting accurately what I did say, although I am confident there is every reason to expect a substantial final payment on this year's pool. Mr. Reynolds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be imposing on your good will to ask for unanimous consent of the House to return to motions so that we could give the minister an opportunity to make a statement on the increase in the tonnage rates charged at the port of Vancouver because this is a very important and controversial issue in that area, or maybe the minister would consent to make one tomorrow.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is seeking unanimous consent to revert to motions. As hon. members know, after the question period every day we could have questions from members who would want to use the return to motions for the purpose of having statements made. I would ask whether there is unanimous consent for the purpose of returning to motions.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have recognized, as I have, that there was not unanimous consent for that purpose. Perhaps he could bring it on tomorrow.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can get the unanimous consent of the House to return to motions in order to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs about a question that was posed in one of the communiqués from the Zambian authorities regarding the deaths of Zambians, I believe in the city of Hamilton. The minister wanted to look into this to ascertain the problem. As I understand it, the government of Canada gave full co-operation at that time, as well as and in particular, the city of Hamilton. I wonder if the House will agree to return to motions in order to answer this very important question because it may have affected our diplomatic relations.

Mr. Speaker: I could inquire whether there is unanimous consent but my impression is that this point was inquired about yesterday or the day before by way of a question and a reply was given by the minister.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Monday June 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 4318).

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French of English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been indentified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am certain a lot of people in Canada are very concerned with these regulations and feel that we should get on by negotiating with the civil service associations of Canada—after an election which made a change in the direction—in order to provide some protection for those apparently not able to protect themselves.

Speaking on this subject yesterday, I said that I did not see how we would be able to enact a bill of rights on language and language protection. Since then, I have given some consideration to the type of legislation that we have used on other occasions. I am thinking of the type of legislation that was used when we amended the Criminal Code and a large number of acts in order to include a specific idea in those acts. This bill was put together in a form that would allow the various acts to be opened only for the purpose of providing the protection that was desired. I have also had the opportunity of reading several of the statements issued by the Civil Service Association to the effect that it was not interested in having these regulations put into legislation. The association thought amendments might be needed from time to time and was in the process of negotiating for amendments to the regulations.

If I had not been assured by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, that the terms of these regulations were being provided as a protection for all civil servants, I would not have voted for the Official Languages Act. Those assurances were given by the government of the day. They were given to parliament and I am just as firmly committed to this protection today as I was then. Mr. Speaker, I am not the least bit desirous of having parliament pass what I would consider to be a basic bill of rights for unilingual employees in the civil service, either French or English, or for those bilingual employees, which is going to destroy this protection.

I am not sure if the Civil Service Association believes it can negotiate bilingual districts. I am not sure if it thinks it is capable of making the decisions that will be necessary in determining those areas to which this resolution will apply to and those areas to which it will not. I have not found the Civil Service Association to be very strong, Mr. Speaker. I have found civil servants to be passive, to go along with almost anything that was decided as long as they got more money. I have known many civil servants who have fallen into the bad graces of the government. One of these later became a cabinet minister in this House, but he had sat for several years in an office with nothing on his desk because somebody had decided he was "in Coventry" and he just took it. I have not found civil servants to be strong willed, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think they are able to protect themselves. I am not of the opinion that either the Civil Service Association or the civil service is so strong in an advisory sense that they can protect themselves.

I am sure there are going to be amendments and changes; I am sure amendments will have to be negotiated but I am also sure, representing as I do a number of people of both French and English extraction who speak one of the official languages, and in many cases both the official languages, that those people agree with the terms of this resolution. They believe that we should have a bill of rights in respect of language in Canada in order to eliminate many of the problems that have developed over the last few years.

I have heard of very few cases that were pursued to arbitration, even when a person was told that he no longer had a job because it was now classified bilingual and he was not capable of taking bilingual training. I have seen jobs red circled. In many cases I am sure that the person took a position lower than the one to which he was entitled rather than make an issue. I am sure that is true of the association. However, it is possible the association will develop until it reaches a level of competence in the adversary system which will enable it to negotiate on behalf of those who are aggrieved or who feel they are aggrieved under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I was of the opinion that we could not put the terms of this resolution into legislative form, but after discussing the problem with several competent persons I think a general principle could be written into the various acts to give this protection. One bill could be formulated which would include the terms of the resolution as they affect a large number of acts. I am concerned that we might spend weeks and weeks discussing all the acts that would be involved to which this principle would apply, such as the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Act, the Armed Forces Act—you name it. The principle applies to almost every act that involves civil servants. If the government really wishes to make this a firm declaration, then I suggest it should be a firm declaration and the only way that can be ensured, Mr. Speaker, is to have it in written form.

It has been suggested by my leader that this protection should be written into the collective agreements and this is certainly worth considering. He says it is better than writing it into the law. That may be so. We argued that the bill of rights was not of much value, that its provisions should be written into the constitution. In fact, over the years the bill of rights has been used on a limited number of occasions with success in the courts because there has been an air of unreality in the way it has been applied by the courts. History might well prove that the same situation will apply in this case, and that legislation may be developed out of this resolution. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any member in this House who is not ashamed of his lack of ability to enforce the terms of this resolution as it applies to the civil service.

Members of this House who sat on the estimates committee actually considered the members of the parliamentary security staff one by one. They said, for instance, that such and such a man is French, and another is English; that such and such a man has a French name but does not speak French, and this one only speaks a little English. Mr. Speaker, we played the numbers game. We are not interested in equality of opportunity, but played the numbers game. The members wanted so many men to be on this side, and so many on that side. I am referring, of course, to the linguilistic capability of the men. There was nothing anybody on the committee could do about it, because that was the attitude of many members who support either side of this particular argument. The fact is that we started adding up numbers and the committee said, "We want so many in this group and so many in that group." There was no reference to whether or not we had introduced criteria on how to promote people who are competent, about whether we have given opportunities for people to learn a second language, if that is necessary, or how it would be possible to promote people in areas where a second language is not necessary. We did not do that at all. Instead, we played the numbers game. I think most members of that committee are ashamed that we played that game.

I think this resolution is only a pious resolution unless it really provides some protection for civil servants, and provides it without it being necessary for the civil servant to make a lot of fuss. We are well aware of the number of civil servants in Ottawa who have tried to make a case about their position. How has that benefited them, Mr. Speaker? In the long run it may benefit the country, because what they had to say was of value in the decision making process. But, Mr. Speaker, those proceedings did not do anything for the people involved. In every instance of which I know, the people concerned did not resign voluntarily; they were forced to leave the civil service, and nothing was done on their behalf by the associations. The associations did not protect them. So, I am not enamoured with the role the associations have played in the past. It may be that they will do better from now on. I suggest, however, that unless the government is really interested in providing the kind of protection of which I speak, the resolution before the House will turn out to be nothing more than a pious resolution. It will be nothing more than a pious exercise unless the government is willing to provide protection; otherwise, these principles will be changed, and changed very likely according to the fortunes of the political parties in this House.

At present, the members are being asked to endorse a program that was not introduced by a majority government. It is a program that was introduced by a minority government led by Mr. Pearson. It introduced these proposals. They have already been applied in the government's operations, if one is to judge by a public release of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). The civil service has had to abide by the terms of the program. That announcement has been made, but it was made two or three days after the election. That was not soon enough to save Mr. Blair or Mr. Francis. But, that announcement was made, and protection is being provided for the civil servants. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to see, after another election, another declaration made by the President of the Treasury Board, or whoever may be making the declaration, regarding a list of points that are to govern this issue. I should like to see the kind of protection of which I have spoken agreed to by most members of the House, in the same way as almost every member supported the official languages bill. On the other hand, if we leave this matter so that there is doubt, and leave it in such a way that the individual civil servant will not have the right to apply for the protection suggested in this resolution, it seems to me there will be a lot of monkeying around with these rules.

I agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party who thinks there are going to be changes in this matter. I agree; I think there will be changes, but there will not be changes in the terms of this resolution. There are going to be changes in how the terms of this resolution will be applied in various departments. I am sure that there will be differences of opinion over whether a deputy minister, say, of a particular department, should be bilingual or not. However, I am sure, and I hope other members agree, that such matters can be negotiated by the associations of the civil service. However, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government itself will indicate that this resolution is not the end of this matter, but that legislative action will be taken to implement the terms of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for St. Paul's.

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct privilege for me to be confused with the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) on the same day, as both members are about 20 years my junior. I appreciate the honour you do me.

My hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), for whom I have great affection, left me in some doubt at the conclusion of his speech as to whether he would support the amendment proposed by the leader of my party or not. I can only conclude from his last few remarks that he will not support it. I will. If the amendment does not carry, I will support the original resolution. I say that so that members of the House and the people of this country can know right now that, despite the published reports in what pass for newspapers in this city, the overwhelming majority of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative party will also support it.

I think we have to make clear at the outset of every address by every member of the House that we are not debating here the merits of the Official Languages Act or the merits of the bilingual policy of Canada. Those are matters of public policy and were decided upon four years ago. All the parties in this House supported that position, and it is now a fact. We are discussing here a resolution which, if its principles are honoured, will extend greater job security to as many as a quarter of a million Canadians. That is all we are discussing.

I believe the resolution needs the force of law to guarantee those rights because, as more than one speaker has said, a resolution can be ignored and amended, but you cannot do that so easily with a law. The point was made by a speaker last night on behalf of the Liberal party that that party does not wish to accept my leader's amendment because this program requires flexibility and the law is not flexible. That is perfectly true, Mr. Speaker. Not one of the laws on the statute books of this country is flexible. That is why the laws are there. Flexibility is marvelous for a careless or tyrannical government. I used to negotiate labour contracts, and every time the employer said to me he wanted flexibility in the application of the contract, or in the application of one set of standards or another, I knew precisely what he was talking about. He wanted power to do what he wanted, when he wanted and how he wanted to do it. So, I will not buy this need for flexibility. If a law is passed and is found to be a bad law, it can be brought back to this House for amendment. It happens every day of the week.

The hon. member for Timiskaming said twice during his speech, once today, I believe, and once last night, that he did not want to vote for my leader's amendment because he was afraid we would be here until July amending all companion pieces of legislation which would need to be amended in order to be in accord with the amendment proposed by my leader. I say to him that if it becomes a matter of legislating greater job security for a quarter of a million of my fellow Canadians, I will stay here until July, or until one year from July, if necessary. I do not think we can allow such considerations to get in the way of discussing this amendment.

Mr. Peters: But I made an alternative suggestion, too.

● (1530)

Mr. Reilly: There is a final point while I am discussing the amendment. It has been suggested by some people, both in this House and in the newspapers, that the motivation behind the submission of this amendment is far from what it seems. It has been suggested that the real reason for this resolution is to force division in the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada so that the Liberals can then go into Quebec and say this party cannot represent the people of that province. I would not like to believe that is the case. I have heard it said a great many times. I have resisted going along with the idea. However, I believe there is one way in which this government can demonstrate its good faith in a very palpable fashion. That is by giving this resolution the force of law by supporting the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: When it became necessary during the last election campaign to cope with the issue of bilingualism, I worked a long time before taking any position. I represent Ottawa West, a constituency in which a great many families have connections with the Public Service of Canada. I consulted the Public Service Alliance, the Professional Institute of Public Servants and finally struck this position, that the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and all companion acts, should be amended to provide for impartial binding arbitration of all disputes including those which may center on bilingualism. As those acts now stand, public servants are not represented in massive areas of their employment. There can be no grievances and arbitration of hirings, firings, transfers or promotion, things which go to the very core of an employment relationship. I proposed that that be changed.

That was the only position I took in public on the matter of the public service. However, even when I pointed out my only objection was that public servants could get no representation of an effective kind, I was called a racist, bigot and many less complimentary things than that. This is the kind of misunderstanding and ill will among politicians in this country that has to stop if it is to stop among the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: This resolution should not be allowed to fall into the hands of those whose only purpose is to exacerbate in order to get attention in this country. This is not a call to arms for another replay of the battle on the Plains of Abraham.

When I saw the nine points outlined by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) some months ago, I remarked that they paralleled in almost every regard the recommendations I had made during the election campaign. My colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), said essentially the same thing. I believe the resolution ought to go into effect. I believe that not only the nine points, but the appendix that was added at the behest of some members of the Liberal caucus should pass because that, too, is fair and should be a matter of law. I invite members from the Ottawa area who are not of my political persuasion to scrutinize this proposal very carefully, see whether they can vote for it and try to influence some of their colleagues to do the same.

We must guarantee people in the Public Service of Canada the right to an effective appeal. There is no such right at the present time. Someone who feels he has been discriminated against on matters affecting his bilingual ability or lack of it may do one of two things. He may appeal to the Public Service Commission, which is not an effective right of appeal since that is his employer, or he may go to the man who has been described as the language ombudsman, a man for whom I have a good deal of regard. On the only occasion I asked him to investigate a case, he did so swiftly, courteously and effectively. I suggest that public servants should be forgiven if, on occasion, they question this man's dedication to the cause of perfect equality in the public service where language is concerned. Some of his phraseology is at best colourful. While I admire a man who speaks colourfully, in a delicate area like this, a man's credentials can very easily be called into question because of public utterances.

I suggest to Your Honour and my colleagues that there is a great deal of mischief being done in this country by people who invoke the constitution. They invoke it on both sides. We have not been able to find a way to even repatriate our constitution. In my submission, it is time wasting and mischievous to become involved in long drawn out disputes about whether a two language policy is constitutional. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us here last week in what I thought was an excellent speech, it is not matter of history, but a matter of hard political reality. We have to cope with it here and we have to cope with it responsibly.

I want to address myself to an issue the Prime Minister has raised many times, both in this House and outside, national unity. We were told on many occasions that it was necessary to maintain the Liberal government in office because they and they alone were concerned with national unity. I have a different concept of national unity than wanting to make sure that the Official Languages Act is enshrined for all time. It is an important issue and I do not wish to denigrate it. However, alongside some of the other pressing issues that face this country, it is relatively minor and elitist because it concerns a small number of people.

The danger to national unity does not reside in whether this or that resolution passes this House. The danger to national unity lies in the fact that this government and governments before it for 100 years have not cared enough about the problems that vex the daily lives of the people in this country. In Montreal a few years ago, a handful of dispossessed and disaffected people rebelled. What did the government do? Did it prevail on the old friend of the Prime Minister, the mayor of Montreal, to build some houses? Did it prevail upon the city of Montreal to provide more green space and clean up the water and air? Did it give its attention to the children in the slums which have been described by the late Saul Alinsky as the worst in North America? The government did not do any of those things. It busied itself by trying to throw as many citizens in this country in jail as it could.

We do not need secret police groups operating in the East Block. That will not help national unity. What we need is a government that will know every time a child grows up in a slum the government is responsible. What we need is a government that will know that every time a woman is mangled or killed at the hands of some unskilled abortionist because no legal way is open to her the government is responsible. What we need is a government that will know every time an old person rots away in a tenement with an insufficient amount of money at the end of his or her life that the government is responsible. The government, in order to deserve to continue to be the government, must address itself to these problems because these are the real problems to national unity in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: When the Prime Minister introduced this resolution, he favoured us with a quote from the father of this country, Sir John A. Macdonald. I want to return to him a quote by Sir Wilfred Laurier. It is this:

> Any policy which appeals to a class, to a creed, to a race, or which does not appeal to the better instincts to be found in all classes, in all creeds and in all races, is stamped with the stamp of inferiority. The French-Canadian who appeals to his fellow countrymen to stand by themselves, aloof from the rest of the continent; the English-Canadian who appeals to his fellow countrymen on grounds affecting them alone may, perhaps, win the applause of those whom they may be addressing, but impartial history will pronounce their work as vicious in conception as it is mischievous and wicked in its tendency.

● (1540)

I do not believe there is a member in this House who could not subscribe to these views. I hope enough goodwill prevails among all of us here today that we can dispose of this measure in a manner which befits the Canadian House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, as a Liberal, as a Franco-Ontarian, but foremost as a Canadian I thank the leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Stanfield) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) for the support they showed this past Thursday for the motion we are now discussing. I sincerely hope that members of all parties similarly support it.

I sympathize with the views of the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) that service in French from the federal public service is occasionally found wanting, and that there is need for greater participation by Francophones in this institution. However, I personally feel that our government's declaration attempts to deal with these problems in an orderly, humane, and responsible manner. Furthermore, I find unacceptable certain likely consequences of Mr. Matte's amendment, part of which proposes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I would remind him at the outset of his remarks that he should refer to an other hon. member by his riding rather than by his name.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the hon. member for Champlain. Therefore, I find unacceptable certain likely consequences of the amendment which proposes that all departments of the federal government—

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, when the House is debating a motion we are supposed to talk about the motion, not about others which have been ruled out of order for having been moved at the wrong time. We are now discussing the progressive conservative amendment and it seems to me that is the amendment on the order paper.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East): In any event, Mr. Speaker, the two-nation thesis has long been rejected.

This government has in the past been accused by some people as being overly preoccupied with the question of bilingualism, especially as it relates to the public service. Well, as long as there are instances when the public service does not whenever feasible and whenever there is the need, as was documented in the two annual reports of the Commissioner of Official Languages, deal with the public in English and in French according to the public's choice; and as long as the public service does not, as I shall illustrate, offer equal opportunities to French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians to work in the language of their choice, I maintain that this alleged preoccupation is warranted. Indeed, there are good grounds for arguing that it should probably be intensified.

While I will be speaking this afternoon primarily on how this declaration affects Francophones, let us not for a moment forget that it is directed at both major linguistic groups in Canada; that it offers certain guarantees, and certain rights to both English-speaking and to French-speaking public servants and to any Canadian who wishes to work for the public service.

Let us remember that the public service is the prime instrument through which federal laws and regulations are administered. It is the single largest employer in Canada. It is one of the sinews which binds together our geographically diverse country with its linguistically heterogeneous population. Thus, it is critically important that the public service reflect in its compositions the population of the country. Given the Canadian reality of 16 million English-speaking and 6 million French-speaking inhabitants, clearly it is essential for the sake of national unity and for the sake of rendering effective services to ensure that in all government departments there are sufficient materials and personnel to serve the public in English and in French according to its choice, and for English and French to enjoy equal status as languages of work within the public service so that everyone will feel at home.

Although this is neither the time nor the place to examine in detail the history of bilingualism in the public service, it is nevertheless appropriate to note that for many years, indeed for generations, Francophone Canadians have voiced their concern for the need to have a public service which could deal with them in French, and in which they could work in French. However, it is only since the early 1960's that governments at the federal level have taken a serious interest in attempting to realize these goals.

If it seems to some people that there is too much government activity on the question of bilingualism, this may appear to be the case to them because so little was done concerning this vital issue prior to the mid 1960's.

This past decade has witnessed a desire for épanouissement among many groups in Canadian society—certain injustices against minorities were certainly not willingly committed. We have a certain amount of catching up to do as regards minority rights and so it is that today we speak of the rights of women, the rights of natives and of ethnic groups. The French-speaking minority is now living through that catching up period. Francophone minorities look upon Canadian federalism as an economic union and also as an association, a socio-cultural and linguistic agreement which strives towards the same goal—a prosperous Canada, endowed with two official languages and several cultures.

The premise of my argument will be to establish that the existence of francophone minorities in Canada guarantees the objective of the government's resolution, that is a functional, bilingual federal institution. If we are to avoid, Quebec becoming the only place where francophones can feel that they are able to live and work in French and becoming the homeland for all francophone Canadians, it is essential that the federal government take effective measures to implement institutional bilingualism and provide increased opportunity for francophones who desire to do so to work in French.

● (1550)

The motion that we are discussing today constitutes one of this government's attempts to realize these goals. Unless francophones can identify, to the extent that anglophones do, the federal public service as being their public service and the national capital as being their capital, the continued existence of a strongly united Canada from sea to sea is threatened. For a federation can exist only as long as its constituent parts feel that they are a vital part of the federation. History is replete with examples which substantiate this point.

That federal bilingual institution will be functional inasmuch as the supply of institutional bilingualism meets a firm demand throughout the country. However, in provinces where anglophones are in majority, the guarantee of that demand rests on francophone and bilingual minorities which have that responsibility and even that obligation.

In 1973 in Canada, there are 926,105 francophones living in provinces where anglophones are in majority. Those bilingual Canadians whose mother tongue is French fought for their rights since Confederation. Indeed they fought for their education rights to be recognized by the province. School being the extension of the family, it was a guarantee for the survival and development of their own entity. However, it is true that the French minorities outside Quebec have had to organize, to protect their rights, their mother tongue. They did so at their own expenses, at the cost of great sacrifices.

Mr. Speaker, I talked about that problem in this House last March 20, and I quote from page 2431 of Hansard where I said:

> All efforts made by the federal government will be of little use if we cannot maintain in all provinces a strong, lively, and dynamic French-speaking group which would lead the way and make a place for itself under the sun thanks to all sorts of provincial and public institutions designed to promote and encourage the French culture.

I continued later:

> Those efforts towards the establishment of bilingualism, Francophones have made them since our country was founded, but under present circumstances, the francophone minority can no longer oppose single-handed the anglophone giant of unilingualism. They must be given specific and efficient help if they are to continue living and fulfilling themselves in French.

The great majority of unilingual English-speaking people enjoyed a good education system which was tailored to their economic resources. For some of them in public service who make an application for a management job or who hold a position which eventually will be designated bilingual, they have merely to perfect their qualifications by becoming bilingual.

The principle of equal opportunities in public service is very important for us. Unhappily, because of a defective education system in their own language, the great majority of French-speaking minorities have no access to the middle or higher echelons of management. In 1965, in Ontario, where 500,000 French-speaking Canadians are now living, a very low percentage of bilingual French-speaking Canadians were continuing their secondary education beyond grade 10. The large majority were bilingual owing to the force of circumstances and the importance to express themselves in both languages. On the other hand, they were disadvantaged with respect to formal, academic, technical and vocational education because there were no French public schools.

Fortunately this situation has changed in recent years. Even if the battle will always be difficult, at least in Ontario—you just have to read the daily papers to realize it—the present school generation will eventually have opportunities of access to the public service with the same academic, technical and vocational ability as the English unilingual applicant.

The principle in the second part of the resolution under study has almost not been applied as regards bilingual French Canadians now in the public service. They did not have that adequate technical, vocational and administrative training that their English fellow-citizens had.

Joining the public service and staying there at a lower level cannot be considered as equal opportunity. To have equal opportunity means being able, depending on one's abilities and one's own merits, to reach the middle and top management levels. It is surprising and even ironic to note that the federal government in the fall of 1972 had sponsored 21,000 civil servants, especially among the intermediate and higher ranks, 80 per cent of whom are English-speaking, who had registered for French courses. The unilingual English Canadian was thus provided with the double qualification of bilingualism.

Do the sincere English-speaking groups, whose socio-economic classes had enabled them to acquire a higher education in their own language, appreciate that bilingual measure of the government and consider for a moment the unfairness done to French-speaking minorities too often disillusioned and frustrated?

Have such groups of right-minded and honest Canadians thought that to benefit really from equal opportunities the bilingual French-speaking Canadian would perhaps need a similar federal fund not to learn English but to enable them to better their own professional proficiency in the administrative and technical fields?

French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians do not enjoy equal opportunities to work in the public service in the language of their choice. It is the intention of the declaration to ensure that both English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians enjoy equal opportunity, when competing on the merit principle, to be appointed to the public service. Too often in discussions regarding this question the facts are neglected. I would now like to discuss some realities concerning this matter.

The 1971 annual report of the Public Service Commission states the language requirements of the 66,675 appointments made to the public Service during the year

1971. The figures include both appointments of former public servants and the appointments of new employees. The language requirements of these are as follows: 5,509 or 8.3 per cent required French-language capacity only, 6,047 or 9.1 per cent bilingual capacity and 52,821 or 79.2 per cent required English capacity only; the language requirements for 2,298 positions, 3.4 per cent, were not indicated.

In his appearance before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee the Commissioner of Official Languages presented data regarding the language requirements for the appointments made to the public service in the year 1972-73. The figures indicate that 7.6 per cent of the positions required bilingual capacity, 11 per cent required French only and 75.6 per cent required English only.

Furthermore it is quite widely known the under-representation of francophones in the public service is more pronounced in the upper than in the lower level positions, and that the opportunity to work in French decreases as one moves up the hierarchy of occupational levels. Granted, this declaration is not a panacea to all problems involving bilingualism in the public service. However, panacea's just don't exist for complex problems of this nature.

That is why it is a resolution, not a statute. It spells out in specific terms the guidelines being used for implementing bilingualism in the public service and for identifying bilingual positions. Let us remember that not all positions but approximately one tenth or 25,000 are slated to become bilingual positions.

After carefully examining the content of the resolution, I feel that no one can in all honesty claim that it contains any elements of injustice. The formal commitment by the federal government toward institutional bilingualism in the public service is relatively recent; it dates from April 6, 1966, the day the right hon. Mr. Pearson presented the declaration to the House of Commons.

One of the principles stated in that historic declaration was, and I quote:

—the linguistic and cultural values of both English speaking and French speaking Canadians will be reflected through civil service recruitment and training.

This national representation, well balanced and satisfactory, will include in our public service 10 per cent of bilingual employees and ensure as well that all unilingual Canadians have the right to work in the public service in the language of their choice.

Major changes in complex organizations, such as the federal public service, are rarely achieved without some friction. Institutional bilingualism, if it is to be effectively realized, will likely require both changes of an organizational nature and some changes in values within sectors of Canadian society. As politicians, as the elected representatives we can reduce the amount of friction involved by examining objectively the actual content of the government's policy regarding bilingualism in the public service. I think that it is due time to invest in the "bilingualization" of our unilingual citizens and that it is also essential to invest in the improvement of those who are bilingual. If we use all available assets to that effect, we will succeed in reaching our objective, that is respect for and development of our two great languages and cultures as well as the citizens concerned.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East).]

[English]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, successive Canadian governments have been labouring for a decade to make it evident that the federal administration reflects the equal partnership of the French and English founding people. The constitution formally recognized both French and English in 1867 in the federal field and in the province of Quebec. However, it has become evident to us that this recognition was incomplete in many respects, and often disputed where the French language was concerned. The equal status of the two languages must be established without a shade of doubt. From now on, I will proceed in my mother tongue.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) waited a long time before introducing in this House his resolution on bilingualism. When he finally introduced it on April 13 last, Canadians were expecting a realistic proposal that could snatch the government policy on bilingualism out of the stand-pattism that has characterized it since the passing of the Official Languages Act. On April 13 last, Canadians were disappointed. Of course, it was not the first time that this government disappointed them, far from it.

But after publication of the Spicer report, which pointed out the numerous inadequacies of the bilingualism program as administered by this government, the government was expected at least to go in the direction shown by the Commissioner of Official Languages and take steps to give a new start to faltering programs on bilingualism in the public service.

Not only are the April 13 proposals not heralding a new start of the faltering programs on bilingualism, but they clearly show this government's intention to confine itself to fine statements and good intentions.

Things have improved very much since 1962 in the federal public service, in federal institutions, as far as bilingualism is concerned, and the struggles led in this House by the Creditist members for the recognition of the French fact are historical.

It is true. There was much progress and improvements to enable a French-speaking member or a French-speaking Canadian to feel at home everywhere in Canada.

But since 1969, not only was there no improvement, but conditions deteriorated unceasingly. The Liberal government passed the Official Languages Act and then thought that the bilingualism problem had been solved. As if pronouncements of goodwill were enough to make French exist in the federal administration.

Some people said that the government was trying to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds by passing a law on bilingualism without taking any positive action. As a matter of fact, what the government is doing is much worse than that: it is trying to get the hare to run after the hounds! It takes advantage of the good faith and confidence of English- and French-speaking Canadians.

The Social Credit party intends to bring an amendment aimed at giving a concrete bearing to the meaningless proposal made by the government on April 13 last. The Social Credit party proposes specific measures which, if they are implemented, will bring an end to the everlasting debate on the language question and finally allow the House to tackle the economic problems of the country.

It is the failure of the government to take realistic measures on bilingualism which gave rise to the uneasiness existing in the civil service and within the population on this matter. What the Social Credit party is proposing is simple, but someone had to think of it. Instead of spending millions of dollars to try and teach a second language to civil servants who are a few years away from retirement, and instead of favouring injustice by trying to implement a quota system which goes against the principles of merit promotion, the government should consider creating two parallel administrations, one English and one French. Why should we force a second language on those who do not want it? Why should we spend millions of dollars for language courses which are bound to fail miserably?

The parallel administrations proposed by the Social Credit party represent the final and ultimate solution to the bilingualism problem in the civil service.

Let the government create, according to geographic and population circumstances, a French section and an English section in all departments, according to their respective administrative needs. Then, we will all be served and administered in the official language of our choice.

The employees of the civil service will be promoted exclusively on the basis of their respective merits without fearing racial and unjust policies.

This is in short what we propose: the adoption of logical and realistic measures to solve the problem of bilingualism in the civil service. The government therefore must stop beating about the bush and decide on a course of action. Everybody is sick and tired of listening to the commonplace remarks from the government side. While English-speaking Canadians feel they are being victimized, French-speaking Canadians want a federal administration in which they can feel at home.

The government must therefore make up their mind and assume their responsibilities; they must abandon these declarations of principles which are as empty as useless, and cope with the task of establishing parallel administrations in order to satisfy the true needs of the Canadian people.

This is what we are asking for in the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte); we request the support of all hon. members of good will so that this program which is in line with what all Canadians have been hoping for may be set in action.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this resolution as one who voted against the language bill in 1969. I should like to say that time has in no way changed my mind that the language bill has been and will continue to be a divisive factor in this country. Perhaps eventually the country will be divided, and it may well be that history will record the language bill as the final divisive force. I think any student of history would say that the relationship between the French province of Quebec and the balance of the country, mainly English-speaking, has made for a very difficult, unstable nation, but this country has given its people freedom, a reasonable standard of living, and in the final analysis those are the most important things for any individual.

One of the differences between this debate and the one that took place in 1969 is the indication that the Ralliement des Créditistes members, speaking for their voters in the province of Quebec, have indicated that bilingualism does not answer the objectives of those members who gained 30 per cent of the popular vote in Quebec. These views cannot be disregarded. These hon. members have indicated by this amendment that the present bilingual program will not solve our language difficulties in the civil service. There is much to be commended in respect of this amendment, but with the creation of French-language units we are already moving in the direction of a dual or parallel civil administration as suggested. I welcome that viewpoint and agree with it. It is timely at this stage in that it gets the bilingual problem out of the area of being untouchable and the suggestion that if it is not embraced in its entirety, Canada will fall to pieces. This debate is now placed in the political area where a decision can be made on the basis of what can be accomplished.

The stand taken by hon. members of the Creditiste party would indicate that a sizeable number of Francophones do not see in the bilingual concept a rational and reasonable approach to the idea of a bilingual civil service. Time at this stage will not allow a considered comment on this amendment, but I have long been of the opinion, in a general way, that the thrust proposed by hon. members of that party is reasonable, right, and will get around many of the difficulties in which we now find ourselves.

The attitude of the Liberal government that all those who oppose the bilingual program are to be found only amongst the Anglophone population of the country, and that all those people are bigots, must now be discarded, because in the Francophone segment of our country there are substantial numbers who are not happy and presumably must be classified also as bigots. The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) has stated in no uncertain terms that the present provision for bilingualism in the civil service will not in any way solve our problems. The sizeable number of voters in the province of Quebec who place their trust in the Social Credit party would indicate there is a large group of Quebecers who are looking for other means of satisfying their aspirations than the Official Languages Act, and I doubt that the Social Credit party at the last election numbered many Westmount Rhodesians among their supporters.

The attempt by the language bill to create a bilingual civil service to solve the French-English problem has created more difficulties than it has helped. Few would question the right of Canadians to receive federal government service in their official language, but it is an entirely different thing to make the civil service bilingual and to make all public servants speak both languages. This is an intellectual solution to a very difficult problem. It is a solution that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), being bilingual, has arrived at by the following process of reasoning: "We have a French-English problem . . . I am bilingual . . . others are bilingual; we will solve this problem by making everybody bilingual".

Having two official languages creates very great problems. This has been the case in all countries where there are a number of languages spoken. We only have to consider Belgium and South Africa to appreciate the great problems involved. The fundamental difficulty lies in the fact that no individual is bilingual. Everyone has a mother tongue and a working knowledge of a second language. Most people can say a few words in another language, but to be able to converse and work in the second language requires a high degree of proficiency in the language.

The measure of the bilingual ability of a person is of necessity an extremely subjective judgment and open to wide interpretation. For instance, a person may be grammatically correct in his use of the second language but his accent may make it impossible for anyone to understand him. I am sure that all members of the House would prefer that a witness in a committee who is making a valiant attempt to speak a second language, and often being grammatically correct, would speak in his first language and allow the interpreters to translate his remarks.

Functional bilingualism has always been present and would have served our needs adequately had we followed a sensible language policy. The present Official Languages Act allows for recruitment of civil servants on the basis of their linguistic abilities without regard for the merit of the candidates concerned. In view of the present structure of our civil service, we will shortly have a civil service whose prime aim will be language competence. It will be composed of an elite whose goal of excellence will be language training and who will be unaware of the fact that their primary function is to serve the public.

No one would deny that the civil service, as set up before the Official Languages Act, created a hardship for unilingual francophones. Remedial measures could have been introduced, and in fact were introduced in many cases and acted upon, to increase the percentage of francophones up to their census representation. Before the Official Languages Act was brought in it was difficult for unilingual francophones to enter the civil service, but anglophones from all over the country had an opportunity to obtain employment in the civil service in Ottawa. The principles of bilingualism slam the door shut to all unilingual Canadians, both francophones and anglophones, and make it impossible for them to participate in the federal civil service. If the civil service was previously biased against the French speaking minority, the present act is biased against unilingual Canadians, both francophones and anglophones. The present civil service is recruited from a small group of people in Canada who are bilingual by circumstance, and therefore it is not representative of the country at large.

The fact that Canada is made up of 16 million anglophones who speak little French and 6 million francophones, the majority of whom speak no English, means that that segment of the population which is bilingual is francophone by circumstance. It has been widely suggested that only 10 per cent of the civil servants will be required to be bilingual, but when one considers that this 10 per cent will be made up of civil servants in the top executive echelons—the people who make the decisions and carry on the daily business of the government—one realizes that an almost impossible situation will arise. Those people will have to be recruited from the small group of Canadians who are bilingual, and experience proves that these are francophones.

It is entirely unthinkable and unacceptable that this top 10 per cent of civil servants who are francophones should dominate the vast majority of civil servants who happen to be anglophones. Only if the top level of the civil service were to represent the numerical language ration of the country at large would the present bilingualism policy be acceptable. It is bad enough for the majority to dominate the minority, but for a minority to dominate the majority is intolerable.

We may well wonder why this resolution was not incorporated into the Language Act, because now it has no legal validity. The reason is that the people of Canada in the election of 1972 indicated their very grave concern about the language policy of this government. Language difficulties and unrest are increasing. Indeed, it is one of the major issues in the Air Canada strike. This unrest will certainly increase as time passes.

A much more practical solution to our language problem is available. So far as language is concerned, our country is divided, with Quebec being the main centre of the francophone population and most of the rest of the country being mainly anglophone. Western Canada especially is now becoming unilingual anglophone. The development of a dual civil service is an easy and practical way of bringing harmony to the language groups in Canada. There is no reason why a unilingual francophone should have to learn a second language to advance in the civil service, or vice-versa. The civil service could be structured in such a way as to recognize the basic principles of providing service in both languages. For those who say that a dual civil service would be too expensive, let me point out that we must recognize the enormous expense of providing language training in our attempt to make our civil service bilingual.

The resolution brought forward by the government makes no sense and carries no weight with anyone. At best, it can be said to be a moral directive to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) so long as the present incumbent occupies this position. It is not binding on any of the selection committees of the civil service. The only logical reason for bringing forth the resolution, which is intended to reaffirm legislation already passed, is a political one. It is an attempt by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to ensure his political base in Quebec and to continue to humiliate anglophones in the rest of Canada. It is an attempt on his part to show his superiority as a bilingual person over unilingual Canadians. It certainly attempts to demonstrate that all unilingual Canadians are second class citizens in this country.

The indication which the government gave that it will not accept amendments from the opposition to put the resolution into law demonstrates that the government does not intend to abide by the resolution. If the principles of the resolution are not put into legislation, even lip service will not be given to the aims it attempts to achieve. Regardless of whether the guidelines in the resolution are incorporated in the act, they will not be very effective. Even the clause which makes it possible for a unilingual person to apply for a position that is designated as bilingual means very little in fact because, practically speaking, the job will always have to be given to a bilingual person. A department head will be reluctant to allow a position to remain vacant for a year while the new employee is learning a second language.

To give an example of this let me quote an official who spoke in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration on the staffing process. He had the following to say:

> Mr. Chairman, we have developed a process, a staffing process within the department, whereby positions that are considered to require bilingualism to fulfill the duties are open to all employees of the department. In the event that a unilingual person is considered to be the best person in a competition and that a properly qualified bilingual person does not qualify, under those circumstances, the unilingual person is awarded the appointment—

Does this not indicate that only in exceptional cases, where no suitable bilingual person is available, does a unilingual person have any chance of getting a job? In a practical way, one cannot quarrel with any department head who would want the position filled at the earliest opportunity.

The Official Languages Act has created a great deal of disunity and divisiveness. In this resolution we are concerned about the effect of the act on people already in the civil service. But I have always said that if we are to make everybody in the civil service bilingual, we could put everyone who is unilingual on pension and we would even then be farther ahead. It is slowly and surely coming home to unilingual Canadians that the civil service in Ottawa is closed to them. There is a realization in unilingual western Canada that there will be little chance for people from that area in the Ottawa scene. There are those who say that there should be a greater degree of second language teaching in schools across the country, but it is certain that in western Canada there is little point in learning French as the second language. In my area, for every person who goes to Quebec, 20 go to Mexico, so if there is any stimulus for learning a second language, the preference would be for Spanish. Internationally, French is used relatively little compared to Russian, German, and, I suppose eventually, the Oriental languages.

We can forecast that in western Canada there will be a steady decline in the teaching and use of French as the second language. This might be regrettable, but I do not think this trend can be reversed, and indeed it would make little sense to attempt to reverse it. The Official Languages Act makes the western Canadian feel more strange, more apart from Ottawa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I support the amendment put forward by my party. I think it will improve the resolution and put some teeth in it. Otherwise, the resolution, as it now stands, is not worth the ink with which it was written.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to take part in the debate on this important resolution. The importance of our debate on this fundamental question of bilingualism in the public service cannot be overstated. There is nothing more and nothing less at stake than this country of ours, Canada. I am very pleased with the support that the various groups representing the public service have pledged to the principles embodied in this resolution. I cannot help but believe, too, that the well-being and good will of our political system in Canada will also be strengthened by the affirmation of this resolution.

I have followed the debate closely and with great interest, and would like to pay tribute to the hon. members who have spoken strongly in favour of the resolution, particularly the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the NDP, and many others. I know that questions were raised on the other side of the House by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) on why we introduced this resolution. One of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain was that we were trying to divide his party, among other things. Mr. Speaker, this could not be farther from the truth.

I would like to say very sincerely that I have admired the way in which the Leader of the Official Opposition has conducted himself on this question. He has been unwavering in his stand. He has not varied one iota in the stand he has taken on the question of bilingualism, and I commend him for that.

In gathering together a few ideas for my remarks today, several thoughts crossed my mind. The first is that it is a well known fact that I am neither of French nor English ancestry, and therefore I have no particular axe to grind. I might also say I have some real questions about the theory of the two founding races as expressed by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard), because my ancestors knew this land well before either of those groups arrived.

A second thought, and one that greatly disturbed me, was particularly relevant during the last election campaign and its immediate aftermath. We did not talk much about national unity, bilingualism, and the other ties that bind our diverse country together. We assumed, rather naïvely, that a great deal of the stress which had fostered disunity and misunderstanding in Canada had been alleviated over the years. We, as a government and as a parliament, failed to demonstrate the true spirit and the real facts behind bilingualism.

In my own campaign I talked about national unity as often as I could. At all-candidates-forums, coffee parties, townhall meetings and so on I, like the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), encountered very few red necks whom one could call bigots for their stand on bilingualism. However, I did encounter a lot of misunderstanding about the application of bilingualism in the public service.

The last parliament gave nearly unanimous support to the Official Languages Act in 1969. However, in my view, as parliamentarians we failed to demonstrate the leadership that was necessary to explain the rationale of the act, as it was being implemented, to the people of Canada. We cannot permit a situation where misunderstandings like that can develop, with the racial tensions that such misunderstandings might heighten in the future.

Several other thoughts hit me. In addition to being of neither French nor English ancestry, I am a western Canadian and a former civil servant. From the way some people have been ranting over the years one would assume that I have all the credentials to be one of the most anti-bilingualism people in the country. This is not so. I believe that the great majority of Canadians would support this resolution. But it is seldom that this group grab the headlines because, quite frankly and sadly, the positive beliefs that they hold just do not rate headlines.

No one can or will deny that there are certain forces in Canada which seek to subvert the unity of the nation. The Official Languages Act and its application are a target of this narrow, vindictive group. But Canadians are a tolerant people, and I am confident that they will continue to pay little attention to the small minority whose narrow outlook on life permits them to play to the basest of human emotions, fear, hatred and bigotry, emotions which result largely from a sad lack of knowledge and understanding.

From my point of view, a very important consideration with respect to this entire question centres squarely on my own ancestry. I feel very strongly that there is no way that Canada, as a nation, can recognize the rich heritage and diversity of the many groups that have joined together to build the great nation of Canada, and that will continue to work together in the future, if we do not give vital recognition to the principles and the application of bilingualism and multiculturalism. The eventual result of adopting a narrow approach would be for Canada to become a melting pot, like our neighbour to the south. This is directly contrary to the spirit and the vigour of Canada—a spirit of unity amidst diversity.

I believe that our government has committed itself to the right course for the cultural survival of Canada. I believe that our multiculturalism program, and its vigorous application, will help remove a lot of the misunderstanding which exists among several segments in Canada with respect to the bilingualism program. Multiculturalism and bilingualism and biculturalism go hand in hand in the recognition of human rights in this land of ours. These elements cannot be separated, nor can the spirit which underlies them.

We have heard several people say, particularly in western Canada, that the government is shoving French down our throats. They also complain about the cost of the bilingualism programs. Those two statements are probably the most common manifestation of the lack of knowledge of this program which exists in certain parts of the nation. It is our duty to do a better job of telling it the way it is. No one is forcing anyone to do or learn anything because of the act or this resolution, and I firmly believe that the cost of the program is small when one stops and considers what is at stake—Canada. Mr. Speaker, we may not all be able to speak to each other in either of the official languages but all of us, as Canadians, must be able to speak to each other with our hearts. When it comes to understanding what this whole issue is all about, it is heartfelt understanding that is all important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate briefly for the purpose of saying a few words with respect to what I believe is the one and only issue before the House of Commons. Certainly, the issue that I wish to pinpoint in a moment is the only one that is now dividing us in this debate.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

● (1630)

We do not have before us the question of the Official Languages Act or the question of bilingualism in Canada; we do not have before us an amendment relating to bilingual districts or to the activities of the Commissioner of Official Languages. All we have before us is a resolution that relates to employees in the Public Service of Canada in so far as the language question affects them.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that even the resolution which is before us in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and which contains nine main principles, is not now an issue. I realize that when the vote comes there may be some who will vote against it but it is clear that the vote for the resolution, whether it is amended or not, will be overwhelming. I realize that there are those who have argued that it was not necessary to bring this resolution before the House of Commons, but in any case now that it is here it does not divide us; we are agreed that the principles set out in the Prime Minister's resolution ought to be applied with regard to employment in the public service. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, that leaves us in this position; that the only issue—and it is the only one I am going to talk about—is whether those principles should simply be endorsed by a vote of the House of Commons in favour of the Prime Minister's motion or whether those principles should be written into the law, namely, into the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Employment Act, the Public Service Staff Relations Act and several others referred to as "appropriate statutes".

Sir, I do not fault the Leader of the Opposition or the seconder of this motion, who is my good friend and neighbour, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), for submitting their amendment and for making the case for it in terms of their wanting to get as much of a guarantee as is possible for the public servants in whom they are interested. If I may put it in the simplest terms, it just happens that I do not agree with them. I, too, happen to be concerned about the rights of public servants. As most if not all members are aware, I am concerned for them when they reach the point of retirement but I am also concerned about their rights as working public servants.

I am terribly aware, as is the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton who stated his position yesterday and as is the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) who spoke today, of the agony and fear that were experienced by many public servants in the national capital region and other parts of Canada when the guidelines being applied by the Treasury Board and the government in general were less favourable to the rights of public servants than would be the case if these guidelines came into effect. Therefore, I readily understand their desire to see these better guidelines given as much force, as much guarantee as is possible.

Even so, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the matter of the language question as it applies to employment in the public service is one that is still being sorted out. It is my information, not only from what I have read in the newspapers but from my talks with officials in the public service unions, that they are tremendously satisfied with the measure of consultation that they had with the government in the drawing up of these guidelines. That satisfaction is not retroactive—it does not go back to some earlier circumstances but I understand that so far as the consultations that resulted in the drawing up of these guidelines were concerned, they were fully satisfactory. But the officials of those same public service unions I believe—and I say this to my good friends from Grenville-Carleton and Ottawa West—I believe that they speak for their members, I believe that they speak for the public servants of Canada generally and particularly for the public servants in the Ottawa area when they say that they do not want even these guidelines to be frozen into our statutes, to be given the rigidity of law. To use their own language, they say there are still some "bugs" to be worked out, there are still some points to be made clear. When one looks at the resolution one sees in it, for example, a couple of dates which may well have to be moved forward or backward and there are other points which, in the course of two or three years might well need to be changed.

I believe that the leaders of the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the Professional Institute of the Public Service Canada are quite right in their contention that they want the present situation to obtain, they want still to be able to engage in consultation with the Treasury Board and with the government to work out the best possible arrangements in this area. It may come, the other side of 1978, that it might be a good idea to put principles in this area into our law. I am not even sure of that. I am not one of those who say this would be all right for a few years from now but it just is not all right now; I am not even sure it would be right a few years from now.

Along with my tremendous respect for the force of law and living by the rule of law, I also have great respect for the principle of consultation and collective bargaining. Precisely because this whole matter is the sensitive one that it is, precisely because it is such a human situation calling for consultation, I call on my friends who have placed this amendment before the House not to press it to a vote. I am not expecting to persuade them to withdraw it, but I plead with them not to press it to a vote. I plead with them to listen to my argument and my appeal. I am trying to do this not in terms of a confrontation. Rather, I believe that the spokesmen for the public servants of Canada are right in their contention that the best way to work this out, to continue the process of arriving at an agreement, is to leave it on the basis of consultation and not to write it into the law with all of the rigidity that can result therefrom.

I am doing my best to refer to my Ottawa friends in the affectionate terms that we sometimes use in the House of Commons. I have already done so with respect to the two at the west end of the city, and I hope the hon. member for Ottawa West will not mind if I say that I smiled a bit this afternoon when he said that laws are not inflexible—we change them all the time. In fact, his words were "It happens every day of the week". Now, my good friend from Ottawa West knows better and if he does not I ask him to consult the public servants of Ottawa. They know, for example, that there are improvements they would like in the Public Service Employment Act and in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Do we get amendments to those pieces of legislation every day of the week? We have not had an amendment to either of them since they were passed in 1967 or 1968. I remind him also of a piece of legislation of which all public servants in those constituencies and throughout Canada are aware, namely, the Public Service Superannuation Act. We scored a great victory here in 1969 and 1970 when we obtained the provision for the escalation of the pensions of retired public servants. However, there was written into the law on that occasion a provision that limits that escalation to 2 per cent per year, no matter how much the cost of living might rise in any one year. There have been recommendations galore, in fact, there are recommendations from advisory committees in this field, to the effect that that 2 per cent ceiling be removed.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I see my hon. friend for Grenville-Carleton and my hon. friend for Ottawa West applauding. And if there are any other members from the Ottawa area here, they will applaud, too. However, if my hon. friend from Ottawa West was correct in his statement, that we can get these statutes amended every day of the week, why has it not happened? No, Mr. Speaker, this goes on and on and on—

Mr. Reilly: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker; although I have great affection for the hon. member, I do not believe he has interpreted correctly what I said. I said that it was precisely because laws are not flexible that it is desirable, when enshrining the working rights of a quarter of a million Canadians, to do it in such a way as to remove the possibility of day to day amendment. I did say also that if a law was found, after a reasonable period, to be unworkable, it could be amended, and we do that here all the time. That is the business in which we are engaged. I did not mean to suggest that laws are flexible. They are certainly not, and it is the opposite meaning that I seek.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with the hon. member's restatement of what he said earlier. I thought it was a correct restatement. There were two aspects to that comment, as he has now confirmed, namely, that one of the benefits of law is that it is inflexible, that it is there as a guarantee. But he also said the other thing, and it is the other thing on which I wish to comment. He suggested that when a law needs to be changed, it can be done easily. It happens every day of the week.

Mr. Baldwin: All you need to do is change priorities, as this government does.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If my hon. friend thinks it would be any different if his party sat on the other side of the House, I have news for him.

An hon. Member: It would be worse.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have sat in this House when parties of both political stripes have been in control of the government and I remember how long it took, with Liberals or Tories in power, to make headway in the area of superannuation to which I just referred. It is unfortunate right now that the 2 per cent ceiling in the Superannuation Act is there and, although there are recommendations galore for change, and although I think everybody is for that change, we have not been able to get that change, because the government is not willing to bring in the necessary bill.

I realize that we must have law, and we must have a firm law. We must know what it says. Yet, surely, in dealing with an area that is as sensitive as this, an area concerning the day to day lives of a quarter of a million Canadians, we should not put these principles into the form of a rigid law at least until we have got the bugs worked out, at least until those who are involved in the operation are satisfied that we have principles that can be put into law without doing damage to any of those 250,000 or 275,000 Canadians who work in the public service.

Speaking of law, Mr. Speaker, and I took a look at the act, in order to be sure of what I am saying, the Official Languages Act as it stands says almost nothing on this issue. There are no details in the Official Languages Act about employment in the public service. Indeed, the only reference to the subject is found in the very last subsection of the Official Languages Act where it is said that the public service must carry out the principles and aims of the Official Languages Act, subject always to the maintenance of the principles of selection of personnel according to merit as required by the Public Service Employment Act. There is some argument about that. Actually, a great deal of the trouble last year was over whether or not the merit principle had been set aside. I draw hon. member's attention to the suggestion that this be solved in the manner suggested in one of the paragraphs of the Prime Minister's resolution which reads:

that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

I think it is a good idea that there be such a resolution, and I think it ought to be looked at, studied and worked on; but, until it has been tried and until it has been found that it is a proper way to interpret the merit principle, I do not think it would be a good idea to write it into the statute. So, one might go to the various other things that are in the resolution and one might comment on the Official Languages Act and the other statutes that apply in this field, such as the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

We are dealing with a terribly important, terribly sensitive and real human situation, and I am glad that there are persons like the officials who speak for public servants through the staff associations and who are concerned about this. I think we should leave the matter in their hands, to be resolved by consultation between them and the Treasury Board. They are alert. If they are being exploited or led down the garden path or let down, we will hear from them. Moreover, we are here, ourselves, to hear directly from public servants if these rules are not being applied.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we would be buying more trouble, not less, if at this stage of the game we were to put these principles into law. They are good. Again, I do not fault my friends of the Progressive Conservative party for having gone all the way, for having accepted them and for having said that they are so good we should make them law. I suggest, however, that we are still dealing with a human situation and that the best way to take care of it is through the process of consultation. My belief that the consultation has been satisfactory is not based merely on what the Prime Minister or the President of the Treasury Board said; it is based upon what representatives of the public service unions themselves have said. They like the present setup. I think it should continue. I believe that when we pass this resolution in the form in which it is before us in the name of the Prime Minister, it will not be simply a case of our approving these nine points; it will be a case of our giving our moral support and endorsation to what the public servants themselves are doing to resolve this important issue. On that basis we are prepared to support the motion as it was introduced.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the comments that were made last night, as recorded at page 4425 of Hansard, in which are reflected the agreement that was reached by the representatives of the various parties on the continuation and conclusion of debate on Government Order No. 34. I understand that that agreement is still in place and that debate on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will terminate at the end of the sitting today, that the vote will be taken on that amendment when government orders are called tomorrow, which then would allow the Social Credit party to put its amendment, and that the vote on that amendment and on the resolution itself will take place at a quarter to six tomorrow. If that is agreeable, Mr. Speaker, we might consecrate it in the form of a House order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is correct. A firm understanding was reached among the parties to that effect last night. We are now agreeable that it be made binding by an order of the House at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, confirm that that was the understanding we reached last night. I might say that one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), has raised one point with me, and I think I should bring it forward. It is this: That the government should undertake not to make two or three statements on motions tomorrow which would need to be responded to and which would waste up to an hour. On that understanding—although I do not ask that it be part of the agreement—that we will move to this item of government business as quickly as possible tomorrow, we agree to the proposed order of the House.

● (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I was present yesterday when the agreement was made. It was understood that the debate would be concluded tomorrow evening provided members from our party could take part in it. And since only one could speak today, there are still five or six, and it will be up to the government to provide the opportunity for them to speak.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is always somewhat embarrassing for me when there is an agreement between the political parties. From time to time I asked the government leader in the House to let me know the intention of the House. Now I have not been consulted. I have no delusions of grandeur, Mr. Speaker, but since the hon. member who preceded me said that his party wanted more of its members to have an opportunity to speak, and since I have not taken part in this debate, I am prepared to co-operate with the House to the extent that the Chair will, I hope, take into consideration my wish to speak before the end of the debate.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I think that can be done, Mr. Speaker. I can understand hon. members who have an irresistible urge to speak in this debate. They should not be denied that opportunity. This can be worked out. It is highly desirable to fix a certain time for ending this debate. If it is passed tomorrow, Thursday and Friday will be supply days. It will be extremely difficult for members who want to participate in the vote to know when it is going to be. We are trying to accommodate the hon. member so that he and those who want to speak will have that opportunity. If we do not do that, the date for the vote will be very indefinite. Under those conditions, I hope the order might go as suggested by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are two matters at issue; first, the agreement reached among the parties and, second, a request that the Chair recognize the suggestion of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). With regard to the second issue, it was my understanding that the party of which the hon. member for Roberval is a distinguished member wishes to have two speakers today and perhaps two tomorrow, although they may wish to have more. I think the Chair could take a direction within the spirit of the wish of various members that these members be allowed to have their opportunity to contribute. If that is the wish, and the Chair does have that discretion, perhaps I could put the question. Is there agreement to the suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: In order to avoid interrupting another hon. member, it is my understanding that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), who was to proceed with private members' hour, has agreed to forego his right. I understand there is no one else. We might at this stage agree to dispense with private members' hour. I know we have not reached five o'clock, but possibly Your Honour could put the question and we could then carry on with this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as has been suggested, we agree after consultation to have two members speak today and two tomorrow, if that is possible.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A very happy ending has been reached for both the members and the Chair. I will now put the question that private members' hour not be held today and that we continue with the business currently being considered. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Fisheries—Request for action to alleviate problems caused by grey seals in certain areas of Atlantic; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—Indian Affairs—Aboriginal rights—Validity of Royal Proclamation of 1763; the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey)—Airports—Pickering township site.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p.4318).

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the

French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that I support the contents of the resolution before us. More important, I support the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I am proud to associate myself with his very thoughtful and responsible remarks in this debate. Let me assure him that his scars will soon heal. As a close observer of the last parliament, I remember vividly the debate in 1969 on the Official Languages Act. It was an important debate. With the enactment of that act, an important milestone in Canada's history was achieved. Members of the 28th parliament can be justly proud of their work at that time.

One of the great surprises to me as a new member of this House has been to observe since January of this year the process by which this government determines the order and substance of the business of the House. One would think that legislation urgently required by the nation would have first priority. Certainly, such legislation might well bear some relationship to the promises and programs put forward in the previous election campaign and as a result of that campaign. Clearly, the economic issues were the principal issues discussed during the election campaign, at least in my part of the country, and one could hardly have faulted the government for introducing a series of economic measures following on the heels of that campaign.

Also, one would think that the order and substance of the business of the House might be determined by various events that suddenly occur, requiring immediate governmental action. The House, much to its credit, functioned along these lines last January with a resolution respecting the resumption of bombing in Viet Nam. In my view, this was a proper matter to be considered at that time. I was glad that Canada was able to speak forcefully and with one voice through the resolution put forward and adopted at that time.

But what have we here? Does the resolution before us represent a positive measure promised during an election campaign or a measure urgently required because of emergency circumstances? No. It involves essentially a matter dealt with in principle by the last parliament. It involves measures accepted by all parties in the House in the last parliament and enacted into law. I thought the principles of the Official Languages Act of 1969 were good. The principle of providing federal government services to Canadians in the official language of their choice is and was important. Also, the principle of providing access to the federal courts and all criminal courts in either official language was an important step forward. The office of Commissioner of Official Languages was created to be a sort of linguistic ombudsman. This has been, and will continue to be a most important and necessary function.

Why then do we need this resolution before us? It is not an amendment to the Public Service Employment Act or the Official Languages Act. It will have no force of law. It will not be binding on those administering the law. Perhaps we in this House can agree that there have been problems in administering the legislation. Even the government benches have conceded as much. Since 1969, it has been found that unilingual civil servants, both English and French, require special protection in the process of implementing this legislation. The nine points could provide this much needed protection if the government had chosen to give them the force of law. But it did not. It could have introduced the nine points as regulations under the act and thus given them legal effect, subject to scrutiny by the Statutory Instruments Committee. But it did not.

● (1700)

Instead, the government introduced a resolution designed to force all members of parliament to—to use the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) own words of January 8—"stand up and be counted". Yet the very form in which the matter was introduced negates any legal responsibility on the part of the government to see that the principles are adhered to, even if the resolution were unanimously adopted. It is playing politics with bilingualism in a way which can only be described as cowardly. At a time when diplomatic leadership is needed to assure Canadians, both French and English, that we can live together as a nation under a strong government in Ottawa, we have a Machiavellian resolution politically designed to open old wounds and cause them to fester once again. What kind of contribution to national unity is this? Is it the only game the Prime Minister really knows how to play?

Obviously, there are two courses one can follow in response to a contrived scheme such as this. One is to vote against the resolution. I cannot do this because the principles and protection enunciated are too important to run the risk of my being misunderstood by a negative vote. The content of this resolution is sound and should be supported. The other course which is open is to give this resolution some teeth; to make the government, the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), the Public Service Commission and the Commissioner of Official Languages legally responsible for its implementation once it is accepted by this House. This is what the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition seeks to do. It sseks to turn the nine principles into law. Mr. Speaker, this amendment puts the government to the test: does it really mean what it says? Can it be trusted? Is it prepared to accept legal responsibility, as well as partisan political gain from a resolution which is so ill-timed and badly motivated?

Lest I be accused of making a purely political speech, let me suggest some advantages which would flow from the adoption of the amendment to make the nine points law. First, it would represent a much firmer direction to the government, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission to see that the principles and protections in this resolution are in fact applied. It would amount to parliament saying to these bodies: We mean business. You must have the bilingual positions identified and designated by December 31, 1978. You must open all competitions to unilingual candidates, French or English, who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual. You must protect the jobs of unilingual incumbents, even if their jobs become designated as bilingual. You must protect the promotion rights of all those in the civil service before 1966 with ten years experience, even if they are unwilling to become bilingual. You must provide effective language training where required.

By putting these and other principles and protections into law, you avoid putting Mr. Carson, Mr. Spicer and the President of Treasury Board into the invidious position of deciding between the enforcement of a statute having judicial sanction and the implementation of a mere resolution of the House of Commons, not having the force of law. The present resolution has no sanction in its provisions. Standing alone, it is merely a passive approval of certain measures with no power of disapprobation. Put into legislation, these difficulties would be overcome.

Second, the many thousands of persons having rights and duties under this resolution have no source of interpretation such as the courts, with respect to statutes. Various authorities may interpret the motion differently from one another and from occasion to occasion. Technically, the House of Commons would be the interpreter of its own resolution, and a person aggrieved by a decision of the authorities would have a remedy only by way of a petition to the House. But how workable would this be, considering the thousands of civil servants to be affected by the provisions of the resolution? Surely it is better to put it into law, thus providing more certainty and uniformity in interpretation. This would apply particularly to decisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, arbitration tribunals and adjudicators hearing language grievances of federal employees under the relevant legislation.

Third, a final advantage relates to appeal rights. Last December, the President of Treasury Board promised the National Joint Council of the Public Service and Treasury Board that the government "was prepared to set up an appeal procedure if necessary". Yet the nine points contain nothing along these lines, and so far the government has not seen fit to make a specific proposal. By giving the nine points the force of law, as the amendment would do, we would increase the possibilities by which an aggrieved public servant, English or French, could pursue a remedy in the courts, whether by way of statutory appeal, right of review or prerogative writ.

An important new court, the Federal Court of Canada, was established by legislation in the last parliament. It permits easier access to a judicial remedy by persons aggrieved by decisions of federal boards, commissions or other tribunals. Regardless of the particular mode of access to the trial or appellate division of that court, which is now possible or would be possible under future amendments, it is certain that the principles and protections contained in the resolution before us will never represent a ground for going to court unless they are enacted into law. In their present state, however, they are impotent in the context of the judicial process.

What is the government's response to this amendment? The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) spoke last Friday and ventured these observations: First, he said it was "amusing" that the opposition should favour actual legislation in the light of comments made prior to the passage of the Official Languages Act. Well, Mr. Speaker, we accepted that act. The Leader of the Official Opposition has crossed this country to obtain a broader understanding and compassion toward the act—a task often made much more difficult by the excesses, insults and indignities of the Trudeau government. It was not an "amusing" commitment which the Leader of the Opposition made them; nor is it, now, when he calls on the government to give the force of law to what it says. It was a deadly serious commitment.

● (1710)

Second, the Minister of Communications says that it would be extremely costly to go through the legislative process because it is quite painstaking. Surely, that statement alone proves the political motivation behind the resolution. The government really does not care enough to give the principles of protection the dignity of becoming law as long as it can achieve its political purposes. What would be the cost that would be so high? One would have thought that the government would have gained a little more respect for the legislative process since last October. I hope that the legislative process will not be treated as lightly as it has been. To refer to a comment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it is difficult to enact laws in this parliament; however, it may be easy to enact some important principles into law and then have those principles implemented and applied through regulations, which are made, repealed, and then remade every day of the week.

Third, the Minister of Communications said that to amend the legislation would be a loss of time. A loss of time for what? The government is prepared to devote five days of House time at this point in our history to the discussion of a language resolution and to give it priority over housing legislation, tax legislation, family allowance legislation, much needed amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act—all matters of the utmost urgency. Yet it has the audacity to suggest to the House that the use of legislation to give added weight and certainty to the principles and protections would lead to a loss of time. This is hypocrisy of the highest order. The government wants the political benefits of the legislation but none of the responsibilities.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) rejected the amendment on behalf of the government because, he said, there must be flexibility. It seems strange that the Minister of Finance should make this argument now when in 1969, as Minister of Justice piloting the original bill through the House, he did not see any necessity for flexibility in regard to certain detailed and complex provisions relating to judicial proceedings which were contained in the Official Languages Act. He guided that act through the House and protected it against the onslaught of some provincial attorneys general.

These important provisions to which I have referred related to language rights of witnesses, simultaneous translation in the courts, and the language of proceedings in federal courts and in criminal cases in provincial courts. These were important provisions and protections which the government saw fit to include in its legislation. I am glad that the then minister of justice fought to put those protections into the legislation, even though some provincial attorneys general ultimately insisted that the protections be conditional upon provincial laws providing such protections in civil proceedings. The minister fought for those principles then and I only wish he would fight for them now. The protection afforded witnesses in the courts went into the law; why not protections afforded to the civil service?

To turn to the arguments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, his reasons for not supporting the amendment are that the nine principles and related matters are still being sorted out. If they are still being sorted out, why does the government bring forward this resolution now? There are urgent items facing this House and the country, yet the government has seen fit to proceed with this resolution now. Surely, we have proceeded far enough and have sorted out sufficiently the principles and general statements now to go 100 per cent of the way.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that really we do need flexibility, again reiterating the argument made by the minister of justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Atkey: Excuse me, the Minister of Finance. The hon. member said that the legislative process was a little too rigid for the task at hand. I do not need to tell the hon. member of some of the devices available in legislation to overcome rigidity. Legislation has been enacted in this House in which provision is made that automatically, as of a certain date, the House or a committee of the House will undertake a review of its provisions. One also has other means of automatic termination or automatic review, committee screening or committee scrutiny, of particular pieces of legislation. The legislative process can be and has been part of the on-going process of consultation to which the hon. member referred, and which I agree is very important. So the government has flexibility even though it proceeds with legislation. I suggest the flexibility is there through the vehicle of regulations. Then, we have an important new joint committee of this House and the Senate known as the statutory instruments committee. It really has not done very much yet but I suggest it could perform a valuable function by reviewing the regulations, which are the traditional instruments of flexibility, and that the government should seriously consider this in this particular context.

I honestly urge members of the government, particularly the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Communications who are not here at the moment, to reconsider their objections to the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. I suggest that those objections are what might be termed "knee-jerk" reactions—automatic responses whenever the opposition proposes something positive. I candidly admit that sometimes the opposition, or individual members of the opposition, have "knee-jerk" reactions to government proposals; this is the very nature of the institution in which we are all working. But I think it would be in the interests of this country for the members of the government, and indeed the members of the party to my left, to reconsider their position seriously, to examine the resolution before us and to ask themselves whether they agree with us that it should be given teeth by being incorporated into law.

Let me conclude by touching on broader items but within the context of the language question. I agree with others in this House who have said that this government has made a fundamental mistake in its approach to language rights. In my view, this fundamental mistake is that it sees protection of language rights as the only solution to problems in Canada. It is an approach which concentrates only upon institutional values and ignores more fundamental claims to economic and social equality which can only be achieved through more effective policies relating to prices, incomes, social services and regional disparities, policies certainly more effective than the government has provided to date.

This simple, straight-line approach of the present government ignores the fact that man's salvation, whether he be a francophone, an anglophone, or a member of a third linguistic group, is not merely to have services from his government in his own language; that is only part of the problem. Too often we look at the provision of government services as the cure-all. Surely, it is equally important, if not more important, to ensure that the individual has a climate of freedom—freedom to seek a job or vocation, freedom to travel, to join organizations, to read, to earn a decent living, to have decent housing, to develop himself spiritually and intellectually, and to gain the respect and admiration of his fellow man. These are some of the goals of Canadians whatever their language. Language is important. But language claims often tend to be outward manifestations of more basic human claims made as a result of a wide range of social, economic and cultural deprivations. Let us get on with the task of meeting some of the problems faced by this country. The principles of the language resolution will help, but they are not the only solution to national unity. Most Canadians agree with these principles; let us pass them now. I would be happier to enact them into law, but regardless, let us pass them and get on to other things. There is so much to do; let us get on with the job.

● (1720)

I should like in this debate to associate myself with the thoughtful remarks of the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition and even the leader of the NDP. These are the true leaders of this country, the people to whom the great majority of Canadians look for guidance, leadership and direction. Most important of all, these are the leaders of the young people of this country who have articulated their goals and their aspirations. Young Canadians want many things in relation to language; they want educational support to the provinces for second-language training. Sometimes they wish the government would do a better job of explaining its bilingual policy to their parents and grandparents, as this would mean their goals and aspirations might be easier met. Most of all, young Canadians will support this resolution and its contents, whatever its form, so let us get on with the job.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre de Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks with a quotation from the B and B Royal Commission report. Paragraph 243 read thus:

The possibility of national disintegration has forced a reexamination of the linguistic policies of the Public Service. The debate is no longer about efficiency, merit, patronage, and representation, but rather between thorough-going reform and schism.

"Reform or schism", that is indeed the subject of the debate we are holding these days. Some complain, and I understand them, about this matter being brought up, it is of course a subject which arouses passions and reveal plainly the prejudicies of a good part of our population.

However, in my opinion, we will have to settle this question once and for all because as a great historian said in a book entitled Maple Leaf Forever the story of this country has always been unstable and precarious precisely because our major problems have never been discussed and never been settled at the satisfaction of our two great majorities.

When you read the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism whose members were chosen among our most competent citizens and when you see at each page the injustice inflicted upon our French-speaking people you cannot but feel frustrated and I would say you cannot help crying over such small results achieved after 100 years.

I would quote only a few pertinent paragraphs. Paragraph 730 reads as follows:

730. On balance, however—

—despite all the progress made—

—extensive optimism is not warranted. In an organizational structure where the English language and culture predominate, there are still many factors blocking the progress of Francophones.

The three most important involve their adjustment to settings where English is dominant, their aversion to making geographic moves outside French-speaking areas,— —and this is understandable—

—and problems of social relations and sponsorship.

I now quote from paragraph 752:

Everywhere in the Public Service there is great concern for recruiting Francophones, but the desire seems to be for men who will fit easily into the existing structure. The desire for Francophones was rarely complemented by a willingness to provide the intellectual atmosphere and working conditions for the development of their talents.—The greatest drawback Francophone public servants must face is the cultural milieu of the federal administration: it is so overwhelmingly "English" that it is difficult for Francophones to identify with its problems or with the style of life, honour, and prestige of its officers.

I now quote from paragraph 767:

The greatest obstacle to equal partnership in the federal Public Service—The factor that most impedes a strong Francophone presence is the environment of the Public Service: its underlying assumptions and conventions, its prejudices, and, most important, its language, all of which are overwhelming of English-speaking Canada.

The discrimination of which the French-speaking population has been the victim had been exposed some years before by the Glassco Commission which was set up by the official opposition and had been made known much earlier by the French-speaking group since the beginning of the century. Let us remember the Lacroix amendment, the Jean committee, the amendments proposed by the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, and all the committees set up in the past: we see that progress has been slow, that the French Canadians have suffered from injustice and that the resolution before the House is in my opinion a very small effort to remedy the situation.

Some maintain that the Official Languages Act has settled those problems. Let me emphasize what the Commissioner of Official Languages wrote, a few weeks ago, in the report submitted to the House. On page 12, we can read and I quote:

● (1730)

Although the Act has been in effect for well over three years, it is painfully clear that many government agencies still consider the Act part of a distant and irrelevant archive. As a result, they have too often proven unwilling—

In the legal sense, unwilling and malice are the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

—or unable to effect significant reform without the Commissioner's intervention.

And he quotes several examples, particularly on page 9, some of which are shocking.

And that is why many French Canadians—myself included—are being humiliated every day in Ottawa because of the way they are treated as French Canadians and that is why I am not surprised when French-speaking public servants come to me and say that they can no longer live in such a hostile environment and prefer to go back to the province of Quebec.

And that humiliation, once again, is an every day reality, and many examples could be given merely on the way the French language is respected even here within the walls of this Parliament.

I just mentioned the alienation of French-speaking public servants. One could talk about the alienation of English-speaking westerners who are no more adequately represented in the federal public service. One could also talk in passing about the alienation of English-speaking Quebecers who are absent from the provincial public service. One can also talk about the absence of native groups. But I know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) is making considerable efforts in that respect within his department. I was speaking a while ago of alienation English-speaking westerners who are also right when they complain, because in a federal government, a government that should represent citizens from all Canada, all areas—maritimes provinces or Quebec or western Canada—should be represented as Ontario has always been.

My other comment is that considering all the efforts that were made during the last half-century, the amendments to the regulations of the Public Service Commission, the laws that were enacted and the resolutions that remained a dead letter, I believe it is high time we had a control system as they say in English a monitoring system—to check the progress that will be made.

The resolution mentions efforts to appoint French-speaking people. I could quote regulations going as far back as 1908, about efforts in that field. One needs only recall the right hon. Lester B. Pearson, the hon. Maurice Lamontagne and many other leaders who also talked about efforts to appoint French-speaking people. Moreover, let me recall that in 1955 the number of Francophones in the public service amounted to 22 per cent and that this percentage has not increased since. I believe that a close supervision will be necessary to make sure that there is progress.

And to think that more than 65 big statistical charts were prepared by the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and that not a single one was kept up to date, while we know very well that statistics on almost everything in Canada, except this question, were of some concern—one might say that to talk about that is inelegant, disgraceful or improper—I think that work will have to be done over again and kept up to date.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the fate of the French-speaking group in this country for the last 100 years does not speak well for us; it is not one of the most beautiful pages in the history of this country. Not only are we a minority submerged in an English-speaking environment, but everything has worked against us.

I do not wish to go back very far, but let us consider only the immigration policy for the past 100 years. Nothing has been done during the past 100 years to prevent immigration from jeopardizing further the dangerous position of the French-Canadian people.

Finally, as to the measure for the establishment of French language units, I think that the only model acceptable is that suggested by the commission, especially on pages 284 and the following of the report, where it spells out what are French language units, that is a department where, parallel to unilingual English language units, we would have an equally important unilingual French language section in addition to common bilingual services. It is different from what we have now where French units, for all practical purposes, are located in certain parts of Quebec.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation I have just described, that we should notice that the percentage of resignations and departures among French-speaking Canadians is, according to the statistics of the commission, much greater than among English-speaking Canadians. I think it is true that they cannot indefinitely bear this alienation to which they are submitted every day and eventually they leave the federal civil service.

I think that we should fight on a daily basis. Most of our past efforts have led to failures. We failed to make this country really the true champion of both cultures. Mr. Speaker, far from me the idea of uttering threats, but my humble opinion is that the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada is written down in history unless we succeed in making Ottawa and the federal government the champion of the two cultures. And to the extent where French Canadians will feel humiliated as they still do today, I think that this is the most dangerous seed for separation.

Obviously, it can be said that I am exaggerating, just as French Canadians said that English-Canadian westerners exaggerated when they complained when someone suggested doing away with the four small letters R.C.M.P. But this reminds me of a sentence by Albert Memmi in his book "Le portrait d'un homme colonisé": "When someone complains about the injustice he is suffering from, he is always told that he exaggerates".

Mr. Speaker, during the five years I have been here, I have too often witnessed the humiliation the French Canadians are suffering from. I live with it every day and I say that the issues of poverty or economic disparities or others are not at the root of the need French Canadians have to separate, to assert themselves, but it is this constant humiliation in which they are held.

Insofar as I am concerned, it is a daily tragedy to live in an environment which is, not hostile, but unaware of our dignity, and I say to myself that were the English-speaking Canadians to suffer the same prejudices, they would not tolerate them either.

This country is made of two majorities, and together they can form a country where we can really offer to the world an example of tolerance and civilization.

Otherwise, it must be remembered that the French-speaking Canadians have a territory of their own, that they have their own government, and if they are humiliated further, it would be most easy for them, overnight, to find a way to live in dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I am here to fight, to keep this country united, but I hope that everyone in this House will want to face this problem once and for all. All our statistics prove what the two Royal Commissions of inquiry and the present Chairman of the Public Service Commission have denounced, including the "discrimination" against the French-Canadians over the past few years.

It is important to recognize this and to take the necessary steps to keep our country united. Of course, this will mean concerted efforts and a high price; but it all this depends upon our scale of values. Do we want a united country or not? If the effort is really too great, let us say so. If economic values must have priority, we might as well join the United States. However, I have always thought that we stood for other values and, in this respect, to my mind the co-existence of various groups within the same community bears witness to a civilized society. It is pointless to dream of understanding between men, between peoples of the world who have never met if, in this country, where we have been living side by side for the past 100 years, we cannot achieve more mutual respect.

Mr. Speaker, a debate such as this one today is essential. It must be devoid of political considerations. I mentioned earlier, and other hon. members repeated it after me, that it has been said that it is indecent to speak of co-existence between various groups which have never gone to the roots of these problems; I, for one, consider that it is imperative that we talk about it now, if we do not want to face separatist and secessionist winds later on.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker, we must recognize, as the Royal Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism stressed on every page of its report, the problem of the federal administration; as we can read in every paragraph of Volume III, it is the problem of discrimination against French Canadians. Let us read again all its recommendations; every one is related to the discrimination against Francophones.

That is why I wish I could have voted for the amendment moved by the Leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but, unfortunately, this amendment relates only to the first part of the resolution. I really don't understand why it cannot also include the second part of the resolution, which is a follow-up, a reply to the Commission's report.

This is, Mr. Speaker, what I had to say. I think that coolly and dispassionately we will have to tackle the problem as it is, that of a people who for 100 years have been denied justice. Surely there has been some progress, but as they assert themselves increasingly, and become aware that they must shape their own fate, two avenues are open to them: either, become equal partners, and I think that it is the only valid objective in the federal Public Service, or entrench themselves. We must all cooperate so that those two large groups, as well as all the others which have been unfairly treated, may feel fairly dealt with by the Canadian government. To the extent where the government or the entire country become defenders of the French as well as the English cultures—and that is the only solution—this problem will be solved. Any other procedure or solution is a palliative that will not stand the test of time and the awareness of the people.

That is why I think that this debate should be held on a higher level than that of politics; the time has come to make the same diagnosis as the Commission and say that the only possible solution for this country is to act so both majorities will consider themselves as equal partners.

Official Languages

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the speaker who just resumed his seat. I believe he spoke as a real French Canadian; he deserves our consideration.

I have read very carefully the resolution moved by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the use of both official languages within the Public Service. My speech will certainly not be as well structured and as colorful as the one made by the right hon. Prime Minister as I do not have the multiplicity of 90 per cent English-speaking technocrats who surround him to think and write for him, as is also the case with the Treasury Board President (Mr. Drury).

In fact, as I have said already in this House, that deep feeling of discomfort that exists in this parliament is due to the fact that the government is only the reflection of the bureaucracy—in the main, Anglophone—that reigned supreme over all successive governments.

In such a government, the minister, as well as the government member, completely loses his personality. That explains, in fact, why voters no longer recognize their representatives once they sit on the government side.

As, for 11 years now, I have made it a point of being realistic, I may be harsh towards some, but I intend, even so, to tell you the truth about bilingualism in the Public Service as well as in our federal courts of justice and Crown corporations. As I am not in power, I do not have to act according to the pleasure of a dictatorial bureaucracy and I can voice the views of the people.

In order to hide their incapacity to change anything basic, the government members, who have succeeded one another during 100 years of confederative life, have tossed around beautiful principles without ever achieving any concrete results.

The resolution introduced in the House on May 30 last is an unparalleled example of what I have just stated. At the beginning, it is the same old story, that is the principles concerning the official languages embodied indefinitely in Chapter O-2 of Volume V of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

Naturally, we are for those principles since we have adopted them, but we are for their implementation and not for their shelving. Mr. Speaker, here is the beginning of the resolution of the right hon. Prime Minister as given on page 4302 of Hansard:

> RIGHT HON. P. E. TRUDEAU moved:
> That this House,
>
> (i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;
>
> cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while > recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;
>
> do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

And following that hymn to the glory of the principles, the Prime Minister makes an extraordinary discovery. He discovers the reality of the country. After having repeated his song on national unity, he finds out that we are dealing with specific political and social realities. And I quote again the Prime Minister:

We are dealing with very specific political and social realities.

And a stark reality of our country is this: there are about 16 million English-speaking Canadians, most of whom speak no French. There are about 6 million French-speaking Canadians, a majority of whom speak no English. If only because of sheer force of numbers, either group has the power to destroy the unity of this country.

Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker: two numerically dominant language groups, both of them prevalently unilingual. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) reminded us last December:

That same President of the Treasury Board repeated that to us in his last speech which completed the one written for the Prime Minister. Nevertheless, I want to warn the persons in charge at the office of the President of the Treasury Board about contradictions, when they state on page 4347 of the Hansard, and I quote:

It is part of this law that Canadians should be able to receive services from, and communicate with, their government in the official language of their choice.

That conditional mood, Mr. Speaker, well indicates that all Canadians do not now have that power to communicate, even after the passing of the Official Languages Act.

● (1750)

Why then does he state in the same paragraph, and I quote:

In Canada . . . the passage of the Official Languages Act made this the law.

Even if one is a seasoned civil servant, one need not treat everybody like morons.

I was also very much interested by the speech of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—which easily harmonizes with the statements of the Prime Minister—although his predecessor was singing a different tune.

I was very much impressed by the frankness of the Leader of the Official Opposition who stated that this motion, which he will nevertheless support, is null and void. We can read his statement in Hansard on page 4314, where the Leader of the Official Opposition is reported as saying:

The adoption of this resolution—I emphasize this—is not binding on the government. It is a matter of law, despite what the Prime Minister said in the House of May 7 of this year in answer to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). One might argue, of course, that there would be some moral obligation on the part of the government to comply with the resolution, but there certainly could be no legal obligation on the part of the government, or officials administering the legislation, because this resolution cannot have the force of law, cannot change any existing law and cannot be binding upon those who are administering the law.

One realizes that the civil servants who hold positions are reassured. They will never be subjected to any obligations. That is a point which the Prime Minister strove to hide from the House, for fear of informing the Canadian people.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

When the Official Languages Act was promulgated, it was evident that many civil servants were afraid of some transfers. When, after nearly 100 years, during which the public service was open only to unilingual English-speaking Canadians and a few perfectly bilingual French-speaking Canadians, it was quite difficult for this predominating group to accept the arrival of a group which represents after all one third of the Canadian population. And I am quite moderate when I say this, since the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who can speak freely to the English-speaking people, stated in the House on May 31, and I quote:

Those of us who are English-speaking and who see that side ought to remember that the French-speaking Canadian has not had an opportunity to advance in the public service of Canada, not only for a century but for two centuries: not only since confederation, but for a century before confederation that was the situation in this country.

Those are statements which speak volumes and at the same time explain the reaction of the young people, particularly in Quebec, when they see such absurd and long-standing discrimination. Indeed, when the young people look at all the efforts made by the Creditistes since 1962 in order to be recognized as French Canadians, more specifically in this House, they cannot but be disappointed to realize the few gains painfully acquired.

An English-speaking member was pleased to praise the simultaneous translation now available in this House as well as in committees. But do the members newly elected since 1962 even know about the fight that we, of the Creditiste party, had to put up to get that service in all the standing committees of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I still remember as if it were yesterday all the sarcasm and the insults we had to put up with from our fellow citizens, some of whom were French-speaking. The latter called us "peasants" and "stupid" because we dared protest against English-speaking unilinguism which had always existed in committees.

At that time, at the end of our tether, in order to have few words of French in committees, we finally decided to boycott committee work until we obtained justice. The operation was successful because since then, we enjoy this marvelous system of simultaneous translation.

I frankly admit that many times I felt like giving up everything because of the attitude of my French-speaking colleagues who sat on those committees. And had it not been for the support of many of my English-speaking friends, some of whom are still in the House today and I could point at, I believe that we could not survive those insidious attacks.

Indeed, when we left the committee rooms after stopping any proceedings without interpretation, those sincere friends whom I will never forget even if they were not from my party, shaked hands with me and said, "Cheer up, you will win. Pay no attention to your fellow countrymen, only think of your cause, because you are one hundred per cent right."

Today, we hear those jokers, those third rate members who fought against us during those difficult years, say in the House that their party introduced the simultaneous translation and that they granted some other small concessions to French Canadians. They seem satisfied with the crumbs obtained after much protest and pleading. It is because of such jokers that Quebec has never managed to take its place within the Canadian nation.

Let us stop saying "damned Englishmen" and let us look at ourselves in the mirror in order to see if we truly reflect the image ascribed to us by the people in Quebec. We have just conducted a little investigation on the percentage of French Canadians within the public service. And yet there are many French-Canadian ministers in the present cabinet. It is simply revolting, Mr. Speaker, to think that we make up one third of the population of Canada and that new Canadians outnumber us in the public service. Nevertheless, French Canadians in other parties say they are satisfied with the situation.

The Prime Minister boasts about being a dyed-in-the-wool French Canadian, but he has not dared yet hire a single unilingual French Canadian, whereas 90 per cent of his battalion is made up of unilingual anglophones, the few French Canadians working for him being all fluently bilinguals. "How about that?" as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would say.

In another area, the National Energy Board and the Treasury Board Secretariat answered a question from the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) concerning the percentage of English-speaking and French-speaking civil servants. As far as the National Energy Board is concerned, out of 212 employees, 173 are unilingual anglophones, 1 is francophone and 38 are bilingual. At the Treasury Board Secretariat, out of 159 employees, 126 are unilingual anglophones, there are no francophones and 33 are bilingual.

As a result, I think the figures speak for themselves! We do not need any other proof. I said I would throw some light on some truths that honest Canadians will find shocking, but they must be told in this House. It is all very well to buy "translating machines", but what about the increase in the number of French-speaking employees here in Parliament? May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

It being six o'clock, I leave the chair until 8 o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying at six o'clock, it is all very well to have bought and installed a simultaneous translation system, but the increase in the number of francophones in the Public Service of Canada must also be accelerated, mainly, at the higher levels of administration. As a matter of fact, I have found that it is extremely difficult for a French-Canadian, even if he is bilingual, to have precedence over an unilingual anglophone. What happens to the 7 per cent bonus for bilingualism designed for the bilingual employees? There again, some cards are not played according to the rules of the game. If I had the time to do so, I would mention hundreds of cases where people complained of discrimination to my office, in Parliament, and that I was able to look into. But, what can we do? We run up against a wall of silence at the higher levels of the Civil Service. Everything is done so silently that even the Members of Parliament can't break this silence.

I heard the Leader of the NDP say that this resolution should not have been brought before the House. In this regard, may I be permitted to quote his statement which is recorded in Hansard of May 31, 1973. And I quote:

> In a sense, I regret that this resolution has been brought before the House, not for some of the reasons I have heard but for another and perhaps deeper reason.
> ● (2010)
> I have learned that in life, particularly in collective life, there are matters with respect to which repeated argument produces confrontation and repeated confrontation pollutes rather than clears the air—
>
> —I am not certain that it is the wisest step to bring this resolution before the House.
>
> A statement was made by the late Mr. Pearson with regard to policies in the public service. That was followed by the adoption of the Official Languages Act, supported by all parties in this House. Some members opposed it, but all parties officially supported it. We had the introduction of new public service suggestions after volume 3 of the B and B report. Commissioner Spicer reported twice to this Parliament. There has been a great deal of discussion on the subject across this country.
> One of the disturbing things about this kind of delicate, sensitive subject is that instead of discussion producing more understanding and clearing the air, it frequently rejuvenates prejudices and misunderstandings rather than allaying them. That is why I am sorry to some extent that this resolution is now before us.

The leader of the New Democratic Party seems to be afraid of delicate and sensitive subjects as he calls them. Well, we are not afraid of them at all, because we know how to deal with thorny subjects. You just have to pluck off their thorns.

That is why we are going to consider carefully the nine principles contained in the Prime Minister's resolution. Let me warn hon. members right away that even though we agree with the introduction and the conclusion of this resolution, we are strongly opposed to some items because they counteract the beneficial effects of the resolution itself.

The first principle reads as follows:

> that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

We cannot accept to wait another five years after having already lost four. Indeed, since the act was promulgated, nothing has been done. People seemed convinced that it was only a matter of passing an act and that everything would go well in the public service. And as a consolation prize, the Prime Minister tells us that bilingual positions will be identified within a period of five years. It is that extension, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot accept.

The second principle reads as follows:

> that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

That falls precisely within our principles of letting each citizen decide freely on those positions, French positions and English positions.

The third principle deals with standard knowledge, and I quote:

that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

And I read it purposely because the next principle contradicts this last one when it is says that knowledge of French and English is absolutely essential to be able to seek bilingual positions.

As for the fourth principle, we read in connection with competitions, and I quote:

(4) competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates—

A bilingual position is set up and will be open to unilingual candidates——who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

It is somewhat as if we started to give a doctor's degree to a student wishing to become a doctor. It seems to me quite normal to require qualifications from someone for a competition. But everything is turned upside down with this resolution saying that unilingual candidates will also be eligible for competitions for bilingual positions.

The fifth principle reads as follows:

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

This is quite well, we admit it.

The sixth principle is as follows:

that unilingual incumbents—

I think that the Prime Minister felt remorse when he included that principle in his resolution.

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain——simply in their position, not give a darn about bilingualism and continue to practise unilingualism just as in the two past centuries.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this provision is a backward step; we will prevent those who are qualified from holding positions which they would fill better than unilingual individuals. I continue the quotation dealing further with unilingualism:

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job—

... let us not forget that we are always referring to unilingual employees ...

... that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

It is fantastic, Mr. Speaker. The worse is still to come:

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service ...

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

... who have never worked in the Public Service ...

... who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions ...

Imagine the mess! And they will try to make us swallow that!

I frankly say, after reading those conditions, that it is impossible for us to remain unconcerned about those proposals which are a complete reversal of the idea which underlies the preamble to the resolution.

The Prime Minister suggests at first the establishment of bilingual positions to guarantee adequate service to both main ethnic groups in Canada, but those positions may be filled by unilingual employees. The only qualification required will be the desire to learn another language. Nobody may be compelled to learn another language.

When bilingual districts and bilingual positions have been set up by the government, several persons, including our young university graduates who are perfectly bilingual, will be ready to take over. We will then have a sufficient number of competent people to fill those positions without being obliged to submit ourselves to the principles included in this resolution which are "superlatively ridiculous" because it will have been pointless for the Prime Minister to arrive at such brilliant conclusions and then destroy them completely by imposing politically biased conditions. This is mainly the result of political fears: the liberals have not yet admitted their last defeat; they will resort to anything to get votes from our two main ethnic groups in the next election.

Although the first principles of the resolution are good, the three or four I have mentioned are quite bad and unacceptable to my colleagues of the Social Credit.

Here is the only solution: If we want everyone to be satisfied, two parallel systems should be established, one in French and the other in English. This will be costly, but not more than all the bilingual positions that will never be bilingual and that will always be English unilingual. The only way to work towards national unity and to meet the needs of both groups in the linguistic field is to accept the proposals made recently by my colleague for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) and by the other members of the Social Credit, namely to create two parallel groups within the Public Service, one English and the other French.

Thus, we will really be able to strive towards national unity within diversity. Because Canada is unity within diversity, let us respect this diversity and give each citizen what he needs to live and guarantee his language and his institutions.

Then we will start working seriously towards Canadian unity.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by extending my congratulations to the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) who spoke this afternoon and to tell him, through you, Sir, that I appreciated the forthright and sincere manner of his speech and hope that he will accept mine in the same spirit.

I rise as a western Canadian to take part briefly in this debate. No one can presume to speak for all of western Canada; it is a huge expanse of diverse interests and a multitude of cultures. It is this very variety that is one of our strengths. But we consider ourselves Canadian first and we put the interests of Canada ahead of regional viewpoints. At least, that is the approach of those for whom I speak in this House. With great deference to those who pioneered those great open spaces, with great respect to those who claim an affinity to languages and cultures other than English and French, we speak for the new west.

It is time for Canada to hear the voice of the new west. We are urban and up to date. We are cosmopolitan, with the virtues and vices found in central Canada. We have skyscrapers and traffic jams, cuisine and culture and computers; and lots of energy, both in the ground and in the bodies of industrious, ambitious people. In short, we have the joys and hopes, the griefs and anxieties of Canadians everywhere. We want justice for ourselves, just as we are ready to do our part to obtain justice for all racial and ethnic groups in Canada.

The new west, then—and let this be heard clearly across the land—supports the principles of the Official Languages Act of 1969. Perhaps it was hard at first to swallow, because of our affinity with so many languages other than French, but the new west knows that it was a federal partnership of English and French which created Canada and we respect the principle that the future of one Canada, our Canada, depends on the maintenance of that partnership of equality.

[Translation]

Today, the Western provinces welcome the participation of the French-speaking Quebecers at the governmental level, and after hearing the points made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) on bilingualism among federal employees, nobody can question the issue of this discussion.

As the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is suggesting, the resolution should be annexed to the act, thus making it legal, and ensuring equal protection to all civil servants French- or English-speaking.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: The amendment put forward by my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), is a move to secure both justice and solidarity. It is the Leader of the Opposition who has provided the real leadership on this issue. Mr. Speaker, this spirit of justice and scrupulous concern for the rights of public servants is applauded by the new west. We know that if the government had been led in the past five years by that honest man from Nova Scotia, we in the west would not have felt humiliated by the downgrading of the monarchy, the diminution of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the gestures of contempt at the hands of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

It is lack of concern for our feelings and traditions that has exacerbated the acceptance of functional bilingualism. People in the west have felt threatened that government would be shut off from them unless they spoke French. It was the overbearing manner of the government that aroused fears in people and created resentment. If the nine points introduced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the uplifting demeanour of the Prime Minister last Thursday had been in evidence these past few years, Canada would have been more at peace with itself, and the personal crises experienced by many in the civil service who felt their careers being peremptorily jeopardized could have been avoided.

I understand that the resolution before us protects the careers of unilingual public servants, whether they speak English or French, while at the same time guaranteeing services to the public in both languages. That demonstrates fairness, and I support it. L. W. Barnes, executive director of the Professional Institute of Canada, the certified bargaining agent for 38 professional groups in the public service, has said that the guidelines in this resolution represent a "great improvement". Claude Edwards, president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, said the guidelines meet most of his objectives.

Let us not, therefore, debate endlessly a resolution that is good for Canada. In Mr. Keith Spicer we have a language ombudsman and I am confident that if we adopt the approach reflected in his second annual report we will make progress. Of course, in matters of bilingualism and multiculturalism a sense of good will and trust is essential. I want the people of Quebec to know that the new west offers that good will and trust.

Education, as everyone knows, is the key to bilingualism. It is in the kindergartens and primary grades that we can make the most significant contribution to developing linguistic fluency; that is where our money and efforts should be directed. English-French relations must be constantly improved for the good of our country. Let us end the two solitudes and work together to build a Canada that yearns to fulfil its destiny in the new global society. Statesmanship, not diatribe, is what this chamber needs and the country wants. I am proud to support the statesmanship of the Leader of the Opposition whose speech on national unity last Thursday was the finest moment the twenty-ninth parliament has yet seen.

Let those who would sow suspicions be trampled in a new harvest of national unity in which the rights of all Canadians are protected and fostered. Let us strive for a new level of national unity, conscious that the aged, youth, women, as well as language groups, must be able to plug into our society.

All this is what the new west wants. Our Canada is on a broad canvas. We have no time for narrow fixations or old battles. We want to spend our energies solving the economic and social problems facing us. In the west we have brains, energy and good will, and we will not be deflected from our task. I say to hon. members: "Let us get on with the job of helping all Canadians achieve their levels of greatness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take long in expressing my views on this subject. I do not believe that anything I might say would greatly influence other members, since I am sure this question has been on their minds for a considerable time and they have already reached a conclusion as to the way in which they intend to vote.

● (2030)

I want to say a few words about the resolution, and I should like to say this at the outset. This is a very sensitive issue. A person's language, or mother tongue as it were, is so much part of his own personality, his family inheritance and background, that it is very difficult to deal with the subject in a large context. On a personal basis it is quite simple, because in personal, individual discussions one can show respect to another human being and this foreshadows, or should foreshadow, any background experiences of individuals involved in such kinds of personal relationships.

However, when government makes a formal decision with regard to the language issue the situation becomes more difficult to cope with, or to appreciate or understand what is involved. The course upon which any government sets out in dealing with language and linguistic matters is impeded by a large number of hazards, not the least of which are emotional feelings that stem from a person's childhood, his upbringing, his schooling and his associations in early life. Not the least of these emotional feelings are those concerning a person's current status if he feels his job or security is threatened either in a real or imagined way.

This is because government is generally insensitive to an individual's plight or his concerns. Government is too big, too massive an organization—and so are big companies—to be aware of any emotional sensitivities that a person has if his job is in jeopardy as a result of linguistic policy. The same is true if his stature in society is placed in doubt, or the way he grew up in life is threatened. In this regard, and for these reasons, I think that government has to be extra careful when dealing with such matters. It has to tread softly and carefully and to move tentatively when bringing about any alteration to existing language concepts within this nation.

Regrettably, I suppose, from the point of view of national unity about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government like to speak so often, the Liberal party has not as a government trodden softly. In fact, if anything it has trampled heavily in the area of language. This government has become associated with the imposition of language upon the public service, particularly with the imposition of the French language upon people in the public service who have worked for many years in a unilingual, English-speaking capacity. On the other hand, one can say this is only the reverse of the coin so far as the Quebecois are concerned, because for four years the English language has been imposed upon French-speaking people from and in Quebec. As I understand it, there has been a denial of opportunity in the past for people of French-speaking origin to move freely, especially in government circles.

However, I do not think that this has been the result of any deliberate or conscious act imposed by statute law or by declaration by the Parliament of Canada; it has resulted from natural outgrowth within the province of Quebec itself. This outgrowth in turn arose from the attitude taken by the late Premier Duplessis, who to my mind was very parochial in outlook and anti-Canadian in view. He rejected any concept of federalism, rejected aid for universities, refused to accept grants for the trans-Canada highway, as well as a whole bunch of other things designed to assist in the development and growth of Canada as national policy. This outgrowth probably also sprang from an educational system that was geared largely to matters that were neither governmental nor economic but which were largely connected with the arts, and so on. So it is a question of trying to balance the books.

I do not like the term "French Canadian" although it is used pretty commonly, but there are many people of French-speaking origin who during the few years that I have been a member of this House have increasingly, and I think rightly, been demanding respect for themselves, for their language and their position. While it is true that they deserve respect in this regard, it is equally true that they themselves must also show respect. While there may be bigots of great stature, according to their own designation, both in this House and elsewhere of English-speaking background, there are also, regrettably, people of French-speaking origin who are equally bigoted in their view of people of English descent.

A very sad moment in the consideration of the language question came about when the Prime Minister entered into the throne speech debate last January and gave what I would call, in the most polite terms I can think of, a terrible example of indiscretion so far as the language question is concerned. I think he did as much at that time to indicate that he had a closed mind on this subject as others who have spoken in the last day or so in this House have done.

What the speech of the Prime Minister did was to indicate that in January he and some of his colleagues were not really desirous of showing generosity in regard to the development of bilingualism within the public service. His was a comment that was made out of pique. His was a reaction and a response to something that took place on October 30 last, namely, the election. I do not want to dwell too long on that matter because it is an insignificant part of what I want to say.

By contrast, I think we also saw the other side of the Jekyll and Hyde personality that comprises the Prime Minister of this nation. In introducing the resolution to this House he was extremely contrite. He was sorry and rather reflective about his past errors and sins, which showed, I think, not a change in substance or in attitude per se but at least a change in technique and in approach.

Earlier, outside the House, I had expressed the thought that the Prime Minister was a bit childish in wanting to bring a resolution of this nature before the House and to test the authority of his government upon that resolution in terms of want of confidence. I said that if he had wanted an election based on the linguistic policy of the government, there would have been many people in this House, I for one, who would have been glad to accommodate him. But because I felt that the Prime Minister was childish and wrong in his approach is no reason why I have to be.

I am trying to assess as objectively as possible what the initial dangers are that exist in respect of the Official Languages Act and its application to the resolution before us. I think there is great danger in trying to equate bilingualism with Canadian unity. The feeling of Canadians for this nation goes far beyond the question of the linguistic background of an individual or the lack of it, and to try to suggest that one is equal to the other is extremely dangerous.

There is a danger in attempting to bring into effect a policy of bilingualism or any policy of that nature. There is a danger in attempting to force upon Canadians any policy that touches upon Canadian unity. Surely it is dangerous to bring in any policy with the suggestion that the future of this country depends upon its acceptance—and that is the attitude of the government in respect of bilingualism. There is the suggestion that if bilingualism is not accepted, the future of Canada is likewise unacceptable and will fail.

This policy of bilingualism within the public service is a marked change from the attitude exhibited last year by the government. There is a tremendous amount of jealousy among various levels of the public service. There is a great hiving for positions by members of the public service solely for the purpose of advancement, increased power and less work. Many of these people are very narrow minded. There has been, there is and still can be an attitude on the part of certain individuals in the public service to force linguistic requirements on people who may well be at the lower levels of the public service.

Let me read one paragraph from a letter I received from an individual in the public service. This man is not an official of the Public Service Alliance or any other group; he is an uncomplicated worker in the public service. This is a two-page letter which goes into more detail than I could possibly cover in the time allotted to me, but I should like to read this paragraph which points up the situation better than I could. This man writes:

> What distresses me more is the fear that now exists among English-speaking people. The French unilingual knows he has the support of the government behind him. If one dares to speak against the policy of bilingualism from an English-speaking viewpoint, you are immediately frowned upon or reminded that your job is your "bread and butter", etc.

An hon. Member: That's a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Howard: Somebody suggests that this is a lot of nonsense. If that suggestion came from the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), I know of no better authority on the subject of nonsense than he.

An hon. Member: At least I don't take political advantage from a debate on bilingualism.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think the best thing I can do in respect of that hon. member is to ignore him.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Howard: If I do that, I will place him in the category in which he has been placed by the whole cabinet.

There is also a danger, in this question of bilingualism in the public service, in relation to the development of a very small bilingual segment of our society, namely, the 250,000 people who happen to work in the public service. If the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) is correct in his assessment of the fact that universities are moving away from the requirement of a second language for university entrance, I suggest he is also correct in that we find high school students not being required to take a second language in order to qualify for university courses. We find a tendency not to teach two languages in our schools from kindergarten upward. For this reason I suggest that when we embark upon a policy such as that contained in this resolution, we are in danger of developing a policy of bilingualisms solely and entirely for the purpose of the Public Service of Canada.

I sent a questionnaire to my constituents some two years ago. Hon. members should remember that the most westerly part of my constituency is close to what might be known as the riding of Japan. I asked whether the teaching of French in our schools should start in the lower grades, and the preponderance of those who responded were in favour of teaching the French language in kindergarten. That might be a good idea, but I must admit that in the two or three years I attended high school the classes in French were a waste of everybody's time, including the teacher's. I am sure that not one student graduated with much more knowledge of the French language than I did—and that is the ability to answer "Yes" or "No."

I suggest that this resolution has nothing to do with the teaching of English or French in our schools. The resolution standing in the Prime Minister's name seeks to guarantee certain rights for the people in our public service. It does not seek to guarantee a policy of bilingualism in this country. Presumably it ignores national unity. If a matter of this nature is important enough to this government that it should bring a resolution into the House in this form, it is important enough that the government should bring in a resolution that is acceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: This is a resolution which seeks to set out and recognize certain rights of the people, and so far as I am concerned, when the Prime Minister of Canada seeks to legislate in respect of the rights of people there should be flexibility and room for adjustment; there should not be any potential for interpretation, or misinterpretation as the case may be. These rights should not be negotiable.

I noticed over the weekend that one public servant, a member of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, came out in opposition to the Conservative amendment. Let me suggest, first, that I am not taking the part of any group or union in the public service and I am not advocating the right of such a group or union to negotiate in respect of any rights declared in law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2050)

Mr. Howard: I should like to quote point No. 6 of the resolution as an example. This is the crux, the guarantee of the recognition of the right of a person in the civil service to work and to enjoy his work and not to be in fear of losing it because somebody changes the rules in the middle of the game. Point No. 6 reads:

> That unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual—

I do not want the Public Service Alliance of Canada bargaining away that kind of right for two cents or three cents an hour or some other fringe benefit they might be able to get in a collective agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: The amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I think, is one which tends to keep the government honest, which tends to keep the government in a position of not only saying they believe in certain principles but that they are prepared to back up that belief with law. The statute amendments do not have to be in a dozen bills that come to the House. The principal point can be contained in one bill embracing the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Act and whatever other acts are involved.

To solidify those rights in law, which I think must be done for people working in the public service, ensures that they are not subject to tampering, subject to negotiations, subject to flexibility, subject to interpretation or misinterpretation. If they are to be permitted, as they are, just straight declarations of parliament subject to the whim or change of whoever happens to be in government, it will always be in the back of the Prime Minister's mind at some time in the future that he would want to get back to that comfortable, pre-October 30 time when he was king and there was no one to challenge him.

Let us put these principles into the law, now that we have a chance. Let us preserve those rights in law. Let us also take the position, as I have tried to say, that we should deal with linguistic matters in a respectful way and by so doing show that we respect the integrity of the individual. Thus, we will get some respect in return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make reference, first of all, to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that the teaching of French in high schools and universities is being stopped, and that if we are to have a purely bilingual country in the years ahead, the teaching of French should be continued in order to unify this country. I agree wholeheartedly with my friend the hon. member for Skeena that we should put our money where our mouth is. Let us put a bit of federal money into encouraging the teaching of French, not only at universities but in high schools and in public schools right down to kindergarten and pre-kindergarten for as many days a week as possible, as well as encouraging as much teaching of English in French schools as possible.

It is with some sadness that I rise to speak this evening. I have started to write a speech on this topic on a number of occasions but have been somewhat troubled and have had limited success, partly because I support the idea of bilingualism and biculturalism and in an effort to try to learn a language at which I consistently failed in university and in high school I took the opportunity of working for two summers in the region of the Saguenay valley and the little town of Port Alfred. I found it to be an enriching experience and that despite what the public was saying, what the politicians were saying and what the press was saying, people are people and it does not matter whether they speak English, French, German, Cree or any other language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: I am sad because we as Canadians are losers again. In the throne speech the government preached two priorities, the first about economic matters and the second about social and welfare matters. Neither priority has been established to any degree in this parliament. Canadians have been fooled again. This government has falsely presented the facts, and I call this a misrepresentation. They have changed the list of priorities. I am also saddened because lurking in the background is Canadian unity.

In May and June of 1968 in the constituency which I have the privilege and honour to represent, namely, Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, one could see a sign on all the trees and telegraph poles which read "One Canada: Trudeau, McBride". In 1969 a language debate took place and my Liberal predecessor did not take part in it, I am informed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), because he felt that his constituents did not want him to speak in support of the Official Languages Act. I do not hide. I will speak in favour of the Official Languages Act and of this resolution.

In 1972, after the election of October 30, I was somewhat discouraged and disappointed in my predecessor, the Reverend Murray McBride, referring to the people in Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton as bigots, as was reported from coast to coast and appeared on the front pages of Vancouver newspapers and Halifax newspapers. This is the man who did not have the courage to speak in the debate on the Official Languages Act, yet he called us bigots.

In January of 1973 I almost rose in my place for the first time on a question of privilege when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was addressing this House and made a comment which could only be interpreted as meaning that we on this side of the House are bigots. I did not like that. Now, in June of 1973, we have heard the comment of that noble gentleman, that noble Liberal, that noble person, Mr. Jack Pickersgill. He created his own job for retirement, left his $37,000 cabinet post for his $50,000 self-created job, and as soon as he got out decided he was going to be a Liberal again and called all of us Tories bigots. If you define bigotry as not understanding or not wanting to understand another person's point of view, then it follows that he who calls a person a bigot is a bigot himself.

To my way of thinking it is unfortunate that the government of today and the Liberal party seem to have cornered the market on calling people bigots. Let us do away with that word. Let us throw it out of parliament. That word should be tossed on the trash heap before the word "liar". It is easy to prove somebody a liar, but you cannot prove somebody a bigot because bigotry is a state of mind.

I am also sad because although the government says it feels this question is important and is a matter of priority, the Prime Minister did not feel it was important enough, nor did the majority of his senior cabinet officials—especially those from Quebec—feel it was important enough to stick around in this chamber and hear other points of view. They did not even have the courtesy to hear the points of view presented by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by the leaders of the other parties. That is some sense of priority, some sense of wanting to understand!

Any segment of society, whether it be French, English, East European, West European, Eskimo, Indian or what-have-you, is entitled to a sense of security. I will always vote for and support that which helps give a segment of people a sense of security if it does not encroach upon other people's sense of security. I said much the same thing in the recent debate on capital punishment. I say French-speaking Canadian felt threatened, felt that their sense of security was in jeopardy; therefore, to help provide them with a sense of security parliament deemed fit to enact the Official Languages Act. I support that act.

Now we have some unilingual, English-speaking Canadians who want the same feeling of security, and we have this resolution. The resolution is not much, but it is a small token in giving that sense of security and therefore I will gladly support it. However, I repeat that this resolution does not go far enough. If legislation was necessary to bolster the sense of security of French-speaking Canadians, then surely legislation is necessary to bolster the sense of security of English-speaking Canadians.

The resolution itself means nothing. It is not binding as a legal precedent. It cannot be pleaded in the courts. It cannot be cited in any court in this land. It has the same effect as Pearson's pledge, which has been referred to in this debate and which Mr. Carson said did not bind him at all; he said he went by the law of the land. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has already told this House that a resolution does not bind the government. Therefore, the government will not be bound by this resolution.

Through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the government says that it wants to remain flexible. If it wants to remain flexible it must already have in mind the idea of changing these principles. I do not think they should be so flexible as to be changed at the whim of the government. There is no guarantee, as the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday, in this resolution for our civil servants. Claude Edwards, the leader of a group of public service employees, says he wants the resolution made into law, but not yet. Has Claude Edwards negotiated a contract, a collective agreement with the government? If he has, that does give those civil servants a sense of security because they can sue on the basis of a contract or collective agreement. But if he has not negotiated and signed such a collective agreement or contract, then members of the public service are being sold short by their leader in this instance: they have no security whatever.

I accept the principles contained in this resolution, but I ask the House to have the courage of its convictions and put those principles into law. If this amendment is defeated, if the members of the NDP let down the workers in the civil service, then their principles, the socialist principles of protecting employees, are once again swept under the carpet and the English-speaking public servant is left with only hopes of good faith to depend on, with no law, no contract, no collective agreement. With this government, Mr. Speaker, I would never want to depend on its good faith.

If you have a contract or collective agreement, it can always be amended. It could be amended within minutes, with a notarial seal on it and a few signatures. If you have a law, it may take an amendment three or four days at the most to pass through the House of Commons. Surely that would give flexibility enough, if the government wants flexibility, and would provide security if a person wanted to go to court.

The Minister of Finance says it is a guarantee. It is a worthless guarantee. Perhaps we in this House should some time consider legislation dealing with guarantees, with unscrupulous salesmen delivering goods under a worthless guarantee. The only way to guarantee these principles is by contract, collective agreement of legislation. I can only add that if there is a contract or collective agreement stating these principles, then there is no need for this debate. If there is not an agreement, then we as good parliamentarians should make the resolution into law. This resolution is not being made into law. I believe it is only here to cause mischief—the old divide and rule principle. It is politically motivated. God, please don't divide my country over politics. The people of Canada are not causing disunity; it is the politicians in this chamber and the politicians outside this chamber, the ones who are hungering for power or who are trying to cling to power who are trying to divide this country for their own political ends.

Mr. Speaker, I did not come here to take part in the partitioning or dismembering of this country. Canada is too important and should not be pulled apart by politicians crying "unity", "bigotry", or "disunity". All politicians who make Canadian unity part of a partisan political process should be condemned. Even when the politicians are acting irresponsibly, as I believe we are in this debate, I plead with the members of the press to act responsibly. Don't use national unity, Canadian unity, for sensationalized stories. If the politicians are acting like children trying to pull Canada apart, I beg the press to condemn the politicians and to act to keep Canada together.

If the amendment to put the resolution into law in the near future is defeated, nevertheless, as I have already said, I will support the main motion. It really will be the case that if I cannot get a whole loaf, at least I might get a crumb. It will be negligible, perhaps a small deposit. I would not condemn those who choose to vote against the motion if the amendment is defeated, for they may be saying that if you give French-speaking Canadians a sense of security by putting the principle into law, you should also give English-speaking Canadians the same sense of security by putting it into law. What is good for the goose is good for the gander.

● (2110)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: I am taking the other approach, that a promise is better than nothing at all. I am hoping that the day will come when this party forms the government and we can put this resolution into law. Mr. Speaker, I do not have any great facility with the French language.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am not bilingual, but I can try to express myself in French; I know a few words. When I think about Canada, I think about a country from sea to sea, about a Canada composed of ten provinces and two territories, a Canada composed of many ethnic groups but with two official languages, a Canada where all peoples are happy.

Mr. Speaker, I love Canada, my Canada: Long live Canada!

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my colleagues are not clapping any louder.

Mr. Speaker, I was anxious, like so many others, to take part in this debate, and particularly as a Quebecer. I believe this is a very special opportunity to express, as a Quebecer and as a francophone, my opinions on the past which I will not describe because time does not allow me.

Still, I should like to make a few comments on the resolution and on the amendment under study. In 1970, we passed an official languages act that was very promising, and which I supported off-hand; I was very happy to do it. We hoped that, with this 1970 bill, we would eliminate the disappointment of some of the French-speaking people in this country and also, at the same time, ensure the security of the employees in the Civil Service.

I am not exaggerating when I say that the objectives sought or set at the time have not all been reached. Should we blame the government for this delay in the implementation of bilingualism throughout the Civil Service?

I would be tempted instead to blame a few responsible persons in the Civil Service, persons who may not have understood. There were certainly people within the public service who did not want to understand. One thing is certain: the government, that was supported by the great majority in Parliament, is also disappointed for having to give a date for the implementation of the Official Languages Act within the Civil Service.

I said earlier, as a Quebecer, that I was very honoured to take part in this debate because I think this is a very special opportunity for any member to speak favourably not only on the great principle that bilingualism would be for the country but also on the implementation of this bilingualism.

History forces us to react when such a serious question is being discussed. I will not go so far as to say that the integral implementation of the government's resolution will achieve national unity.

To achieve national unity would require much more than the adoption of a resolution to be implemented as law; this is one aspect, among many others, that should be studied as soon as possible, that Canadians in general be led to believe in this implementation of bilingualism within the public service.

I have listened to several speeches and I quite appreciated the presentation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The principles included in his resolution are suggestions which will be workable to the extent where officials in the public service will make them workable.

I hope that thanks to this debate we will succeed in sensitizing, first those officials, and also all the hon. members to the importance of total implementation of bilingualism in the public service.

I will not go so far as to suggest that discussing the official languages in parliament could incite all Canadians to speak two languages. To give such a guarantee would be to mislead those who listen to us. But it is absolutely imperative that, within the federal institutions,—and I think that all hon. members will agree with me—every Canadian may be taken care of in one of our official languages, and that from sea to sea. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, and I quote:

● (2120)

> For almost a century, many French-speaking Canadians have been thinking: "The government in Ottawa is not our government . . . it does not even speak our language". That is the kind of frustration which facilitated separatism.

I think that the Prime Minister was perfectly right in making that statement. Of course, more than an official languages act will be necessary to convince the Quebecers that the best and most beautiful place is still Canada. I will come back to that point anyway, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who first supported the resolution now before us and then for reasons that I greatly respect suggested that these suggestions should be incorporated into the Official Languages Act. I think that we must consider seriously the possible application of these proposals. Of course, the experience of the last three years leads us to be pessimistic, even though I am sure of the Prime Minister's good faith with regard to his goal, that is to say bilingualism within the public service. I am convinced of the Prime Minister's good faith as I am convinced of that of the Leader of the Official Opposition when he brings forward an amendment and says that he would like to see these proposals incorporated into the Official Languages Act, so that the delay of the last three years does not occur again.

Therefore, after thinking seriously about it, I am ready to support these proposals, though they are not perfect. However, I think that they deserve my consideration and confidence and I believe that the amendment before us deserves enough consideration to encourage me to support it, in order to facilitate the fastest and most complete application of these proposals. Should this amendment not get the support of the majority, I will do like so many others: I will gladly support the proposals submitted to us.

However, when we read some of the speeches again, we find that there are still weaknesses.

I also listened carefully to the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) who did not hesitate to support these resolutions and, as did the leader of the official opposition, mentioned the respect that those two party leaders have for French-speaking citizens of this country and the importance they attach to them. I think it is only fair to say that they showed their respect and consideration for that group which lives for the greater part in the province of Quebec, and they proved their respect for that group on several occasions.

As to my honourable friends of the social credit party of Canada, I do not know what their position is and whether they are free to vote for or against the resolution. Judging from what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) said, I would think it difficult for them to support that resolution. If I were more convinced that their amendment could be implemented, I would probably think more about it, but I have great doubts that the amendment moved by the social credit would be the solution.

I am told by a colleague that I cannot vote three ways. That is not my habit. However, I like to express my views and I may be in the best position to give credit to those who deserve it because I know that it is not always easy to congratulate an opponent and say publicly what is good and what is bad. I am free, Mr. Speaker, to appreciate and consider the fine comments which we have heard in this House.

I would also like to recall the hon. members the statistics which the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) mentioned when he stated that in 1971, among the 66,675 positions to be filled by the public service in federal departments, only 8 per cent required a unilingual French-speaking incumbent, while 80 per cent, that is ten times more, required only English. However, in 1972, contrary to the recommendations of the Dion report, only 12 per cent of senior employees were French-speaking and only half of them were from Quebec.

Therefore, the data given by the member for Saint-Hyacinthe give food for thought. They show how important it is not only to discuss the principles but especially to implement them as soon as possible. We have experienced failure in the past three years, although there has been some progress. This progress has been unsatisfactory, but it is clearly apparent that through legislation we could have greater success and better results.

I agree with some members, but perhaps I do not endorse the entire speech made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He said, for example, that he proposed the establishment of a royal commission. When the royal commission was suggested, he stated that he objected to it, under the circumstances and that the royal commission which cost $10 million has rather served to divide the country. I disagree with the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I have disagreed with him before and I still do because I think that although that inquiry cost $10 million and did not succeed in achieving national unity, it still had some good points: it has shown the Canadian entity with its qualities and defects. Any unbiased and sensible individual would admit that this inquiry opened our eyes to the current situation and we have every reason, by seriously analyzing the report, for correcting the shortcomings and injustice which do exist.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to respond to the desires of most Canadians we should respond unanimously if possible on a matter of principles put before us with a view to improving bilingualism within the public service. Several hon. members have urged their colleagues to show good will and objectivity.

I also heard some hon. members express certain fears on the part of English-speaking people about the proposals on official languages accepted three years ago. I think I can say that for us, French-speaking people, those fears are far behind us because we have known frustration; many French-speaking people have grown discouraged by slow progress and the impossibility of participating in the administration of this country.

Some are concerned and surprised to see that, particularly in the province of Quebec, people have given up on federalism. If you assess the results of the last hundred years, you will understand this discouragement; if I were to limit myself to the results of the last hundred years, I would certainly hesitate to remain in this House. However, efforts have been made for the last ten years. Some injustices have been alleviated and if you assess the results of the last ten years there is reason to be optimistic rather than pessimistic. Does one have to forget a long part of Canadian life?

• (2130)

The right hon. member for Prince Albert mentioned that he introduced in Parliament a measure to provide Canadians with bilingual cheques, with simultaneous translation, that he took steps to have certain French-speaking people apoointed to important posts; I think that, in all equity, we must recognize that on those occasions he did consider francophones. Mr. Speaker, one should not delude oneself and believe that those nominations or the bilingual cheques are adequate reasons to make francophones think that equality exists in this country.

We may very well talk about national unity, but woe unto him who thinks that the Official Languages Act is the only means to realize national unity! I for one prefer talking about national harmony.

Will we have to recognize that there are different regions having different needs? It is recognized in the House. I often hear hon. members talking about notable differences on a national basis. Of course some are reluctant to repeat that there exist two founding people. i am not afraid to say it, Mr. Speaker, because this is how I learned the Canadian history.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert mentioned that Confederation is the result of the association of English- and French-speaking people who believed that the destiny of the northern half of this continent could be fulfilled in unity, but not in uniformity, and I quite agree. Without the basic agreements expressed in British North America Act section 133 which ratify the rights pertaining to our country's languages, as well as in sections 91 and 92 stipulating that the provinces have jurisdiction over education and culture, Canada would never have been.

I do not believe it exaggerated to say that there are in Canada two founding nations. Naturally there is also, and I am delighted about it, the contribution of thousands of immigrants from various origin who deserve the respect of all Canadians, for they have contributed to the unification of Canada. But, just the same, how can we forget our origins and the true history of this country? Hence the need and the importance to recognize two official languages in this country.

Now I believe that this opportunity is most important, for it allows us to ask hon. members to respect that goal which we must pursue. That is one aspect of the problems we are facing in this country. Its achievement will be possible to the extent that those responsible in the civil service will think like most members, for I am convinced that the majority of members will support the initial resolution.

In any event we must at least—and I dare hope so—support unanimously the proposals that are now before us. It is not a life insurance, of course; I think it is a minimum which is worth considering. We will have to control the implementation of these principles, within the time limits stated, in respect of some positions to be created. It is a way of proving to the anglophones and francophones that Parliament, since we can all discuss this matter, is making a real effort to correct some injustices. The word is not too strong, and several members have said so before me. There have been injustices, and it seems that the majority, in Parliament, want to correct them. I think that we must make an effort to reach this goal; others before me appealed to unity and the influence that unanimity could exercise in Parliament. But we still have to convince the responsible people and to control closely the integral implementation of the principles involved. If, unhappily, we do not get better results than we have had in the last three years, we will have to admit that the Leader of the Official Opposition is quite right in asking as he does in his amendment that these principles be included in the Official Languages Act.

So I dare hope that the speeches made in this House will finally convince us of the importance of this debate. I would like to say before I conclude my remarks that we must not let ourselves be fooled into believing that with the Official Languages Act we have succeeded in satisfying the French-speaking group.

Should anybody think that those proposals were introduced only for those people living in the province of Quebec, it would be a serious mistake. I think that we can achieve that national harmony, that is the understanding of all ethnic groups in this country, through legislation a lot more important than the Official Languages Act. These amendments concern the economy of Canada.

I read today in a Montreal newspaper that Mr. Gérard Filion, a man well known in the province of Quebec, dealt with economic separatism 30 years ago because already at that time Quebec milk producers were adversely affected by the feed grain policy which still creates problems today.

There is this language problem for French-speaking people, but there are also economic problems. I am also thinking about the attitude of Quebec authorities.

Earlier, I heard a colleague from the New Democratic Party talk about the late Maurice Duplessis. Heaven knows if he is known in Quebec! But, Mr. Speaker, attempts were made to blame him for a certain conservatism, or a refusal to approve federal policies at one time. The attitude of Quebec governments for the last 30 years has always been aimed at a decentralized federalism. That has not changed today and the premier is asking that certain powers be handed back.

[Mr. La Salle.]

That is how national harmony will be achieved in this country, namely through the recognition of Quebec's needs.

I admit that in other areas or other provinces in this country people do not think as we do and do not speak our language, but the citizens in those areas have the right to live as much as we have.

Therefore, if we all recognized the distinct differences between the various areas in this country, we would accept them and would come to understand them, while promoting for certain areas, certain jurisdictions that would not be the same in other areas, because needs are different.

Therefore, Quebec's position is clear enough on that point. It is the whole history of the province and its mentality that want that, and I believe nobody has the right to put obstacles in the way of the one who wishes to preserve such basic rights.

However, it is not only a question of language here, but of needs and a question of mentality, that mentality we would like to be recognized throughout this country, as Quebecers. We already recognize different mentalities and accept them.

Now I believe it is with objectives such as those that we shall achieve that national harmony for the good of all Canadians. I hope there will be unanimity at least in this House on the principle of bilingualism, which is a basic principle and an obviously necessary one, so that we may really prove that we are members of parliament of this day and age.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with full realization of the significance and importance of the subject that I rise to take part in this debate, a debate which has included eloquent speeches by members from all parties. It is obvious that bilingualism is a subject that concerns us all.

Some Canadians see the Official Languages Act, and the nine principles for implementing bilingualism in the public service, as necessary and long overdue steps by the government to formally acknowledge the French fact in Canada. Others see the act as an arbitrary, inequitable and poorly administered program which is neither feasible nor workable. This latter group appears to include the majority of English-speaking Canadians, very few of whom harbour any ingrained biases or prejudices against their French-speaking countrymen as has been suggested. I include myself within this group of Canadians who are unhappy with the government's philosophy of bilingualism as articulated in the Official Languages Act. To us, the act has done little but foster misunderstanding and divisiveness between English- and French-speaking Canadians. This is the tragedy of the Official Languages Act.

Rather than re-evaluating the entire act in the hope of arriving at solutions more satisfactory to all Canadians, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is asking parliament to confirm the basic principles of the government's program for bilingualism in the public service. What this means is simply that the government is asking parliament to tell them to do what they intend to do anyway, that is, carry out the nine-point policy. It is a farce so far as public policy goes. The resolution has no value for it merely reiterates present government policy, and it will have no real effect upon the issue itself since it is not an enactment of legislation but an expression of opinion. It is evident that the Prime Minister's intention for this debate was not to enter into a constructive dialogue on bilingualism. Rather, as he himself said, his intention was to make it difficult for some members to hold ambiguous positions on bilingualism.

My position is unequivocal. While I recognize the obvious right of every French-speaking Canadian to deal with the federal government in French, and while I recognize the undeniable right of every French-speaking Canadian to have equal employment opportunities within the federal civil service, I do not recognize nor approve of the manner in which the government is going about guaranteeing these rights. I disagree with the way the Official Languages Act is being implemented. However, it is not the implementation of the act that is necessarily responsible for its disastrous results; it is the act itself. The Official Languages Act must be rewritten.

Four years have elapsed since the Official Languages Act was passed in parliament with an overwhelming majority. The act, which was thought by most members to be a logical and extremely necessary piece of legislation, has in practice proven to be just the opposite. The past four years have ushered in a new era, one of unprecedented misunderstanding between Canada's two founding peoples. This misunderstanding manifested itself clearly in the last election. There was a blacklash, and this blacklash will not be curbed until legislation is enacted which is both more fair and rational than that which we currently have before us. This does not mean arbitrary and binding regulations and stipulations. What it does mean is flexibility. It means taking account of the French fact in the public service, but only in direct proportion to their statistical numbers in the population, and vice versa for districts in which English-speaking persons are in the minority.

One example of the arbitrariness and rigidity which is characteristic of the Official Languages Act, and which does little to foster national unity, is the 10 per cent minority population rule used in drawing the boundaries for bilingual districts. In these districts bilingual government services are to be statutorily required rather than left to administrative judgments of significant demand and feasibility as otherwise ordered in the Official Languages Act. But how are the lines on the maps to be drawn?

The Canadian population is relatively mobile and, as the 1971 census has shown, French-English proportions change significantly over a decade. Are the boundaries of these districts to be redrawn every ten years? If so, we can be sure that such a move would cause much bitterness and irritation among the persons affected. The concept of bilingual districts must be abandoned. Instead, the government should rely on criteria of significant demand and feasibility to determine where bilingual government services should be provided. Such a move would do away with the ridiculous intention of the government to set up a surfeit of federally-declared bilingual districts, staffed with persons having to satisfy inflexible bilingual criteria, in provinces where it is neither necessary not proportionately justifiable with regard to population.

It appears, however, that the government has no plans to change the policy and thereby move to allay the fears of those most affected. Such lack of understanding and action epitomizes exactly what is wrong with both the government and the Official Languages Act. Even the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Keith Spicer, has suggested that the government take a second look at the idea of bilingual districts. The government's apparent refusal thus far to acknowledge Mr. Spicer's concern regarding bilingual districts is not surprising. The commissioner's frequent outbursts and sardonic humour have done nothing but further compound and intensify animosities between English- and French-speaking Canadians.

Why the Prime Minister has refrained from reprimanding the commissioner for his outlandish statements is anyone's guess. However, I suspect the Prime Minister of being somewhat sympathetic to the commissioner. After all, what the Prime Minister is attempting to achieve in this plastic debate is a distinctly measurable degree of divisiveness in this country on the entire subject of bilingualism. It is the Prime Minister's hope that from such divisiveness will emerge a feeling among many Canadians that he, and he alone, is Canada's last real hope for national unity—a sort of omniscient father called upon to bring together all his children.

It is obvious that the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) believes this, having accused several of my Conservative friends of persecuting French Canadians. Statements like these from an avowed federalist are inexcusable and reprehensible and further compound the problem. As long as bias and prejudice are continually rekindled, they will continue to exist; and no legislation, least of all the Official Languages Act, will make things any different. But to rewrite the act would at least be a start at nurturing a new feeling of understanding and equality among Canada's two founding peoples.

In any revision of the act, several important problem areas, all of which have blatently manifested themselves in the public service over the past four years, would have to be examined. As I mentioned earlier, the premise upon which a new act must be established is one of services and opportunity based on numbers. Minority group representation in the federal civil service should be based upon their statistical numbers in the population. Similarly, bilingual districts as such must be scrapped. If there are 50,000 French-speaking Canadians in an English-speaking province, there should only be a proportionate number of French-speaking public servants to deal with them. Current quotas are arbitrary and unfair. For example, there is little logic in a regulation stipulating that 50 per cent of the administrative staff in the Winnipeg Manpower Office must be bilingual by 1978, when the amount of government business they carry on with French-speaking Manitobans hardly makes the rule justifiable.

Other quotas, such as those involving the defence department, which stipulate that 28 per cent of all officers in the Canadian armed forces must be French-speaking, are similarly ridiculous. Quotas such as this smack of tokenism, and the possibility exists of some positions being filled with personnel merely because they are able to speak French.

The Official Languages Act also failed to take cognizance of the fact that learning another language is not always easy. Many public servants find it immensely difficult to master a new language and, as a result may be effectively prevented from moving into higher positions. Even those who are able to learn a new language with relative ease have problems with retention. This situation is exacerbated by the manner in which the public service has structured its French language training programs. Language specialists tell us that a person who studies a new language intensively for six weeks and then goes back to a job for the same period of time where that language is used only sparingly, can easily forget what he learned. Today this is a common occurrence in the Canadian public service, and an unnecessary one. The number of civil servants having to take part in these courses is totally out of proportion to the number that need to, or ever will, actually conduct their business in French.

Then there is the eroding effect that bilingualism has had on morale within the public service, not only in the national capital region where the results of October 30 indicate this widespread disaffection but throughout the country. Low employee morale is hardly conducive to good government. But perhaps the most serious concomitant effect of the entire bilingualism program has been the fantastic expenditure. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent by the government in implementing the federal bilingualism development program. The great portion of this money has been unnecessarily spent. The return on the investment has been poor.

One government practice in particular clearly illustrates to what I allude. I refer to the government's insistence that all government documents, books and pamphlets be printed and bound in both English and French. I am not arguing that inasmuch as both are official languages there should not be an English version and a French version of government publications, but why insist on having both versions within the one cover when only half will be used by the reader depending upon whether he speaks English or French? Even the Liberal Winnipeg Free Press pointed out that which is obvious when it said:

> Government documents are twice as large as they need be and therefore twice as costly. English-speaking Canadians will not use that half of a publication that is written in French; nor will French-speaking Canadians use the English half. Why, then, does the government print and make the public buy both versions?

Then there is the question of language training. As many speakers have said before me, more money must be spent in promoting French language instruction in our schools, particularly our elementary schools. This is where learning begins, where language training can be most effective and where understanding of different cultures and people initially develops. But while more of our young people could be studying French, they are not. A recent study by the Ontario Department of Education shows that the number of students studying French in the province is declining rather than increasing. This decline is indicative of the dissatisfaction felt by many Canadians with regard to the Official Languages Act. The number of students learning French is also declining in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

I could go on at some length reciting numerous other reasons why I am unhappy with the Official Languages Act and why I shall vote against this resolution. However, I think that my remarks sufficiently explain my position, one which is similar to that held by a great many Canadians, including the great majority of my constituents. I was thus astounded to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who recently assured the House that bilingualism is highly supported and is received with great enthusiasm by all cultural groups in this country. I question his judgment and am anxious to know the name of the country to which he referred.

The Official Languages Act and the question of its legality is currently before the courts. Its principles are before parliament and will eventually be before the Canadian people in an election. The controversy, hostility and misunderstanding surrounding bilingualism will continue until a more satisfactory approach is sought and found. A fair and equitable solution to the problem can only be arrived at through further dialogue and with the adoption of more flexible legislation. Such a solution must also acknowledge to a much greater extent other cultures and languages. Then, and only then, will Canada be on the road toward achieving our elusive dream—that of national unity.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to congratulate the government on introducing this resolution. It is something they dreamed up following a great deal of consideration. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), being a very cunning man and somewhat repentant, so it appears, felt it was necessary to show the country that the government had had a change of heart. I think that is really the purpose of this resolution, to leave the country with the impression that the Liberal party is adopting a new line of thinking and that the Prime Minister has learned something from the election of October 30.

However, I want also to state that this resolution, in terms of today's news events, is Canada's answer to the United States' Watergate. This is the biggest cover-up we have ever experienced by a government that knows full well that it does not mean one word of what it is saying in this resolution. This resolution is an attempt to deceive the Canadian people.

Just what is a resolution, Mr. Speaker? I have attended a great many conventions in my day, and I am sure each member of this House has attended convention after convention in one capacity or another. What is a resolution? It is simply a recommendation to a higher authority. So what do we have here? We have the government in power, which is one authority introducing in the House of Commons, which is the final authority, a recommendation to itself: it is saying, "We recommend to ourselves that we do this".

If the Prime Minister and his government were sincere they would not try to deceive the people of Canada. But someone in this House of Commons has been able to call their bluff. I am not going to stand here, as a member of this party or of any other party in this House, and have that kind of deceit, that kind of bluff, pulled on me. I do not think the Canadian people expect this sort of thing. If the Prime Minister or his cabinet were sincere today they would have introduced an amendment to the Officials Languages Act. That would have meant something. Certainly I would support that sort of amendment. Had the Prime Minister and the Liberal party done that, they would have called my bluff. Members who were here in the previous parliament will recall that I voted against the Official Languages Act. This act is now part of history. Obviously there is a feeling against it in certain parts of the country, contrary to the kind of hypocrisy that has existed in other parts.

In this chamber we have two standards. You can say things against English-speaking parts of Canada but you dare not say anything about French-speaking Canadians. You can say whatever you like about the other ethnic groups in this country. For example, what is happening in St. Boniface? The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) has been very vocal on many occasions, but what is happening to the radio station there? This radio station has provided Jews, Ukrainians and other ethnic groups with the chance to sing songs in their own language, but it is now being taken over by French-speaking Canadians.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, why should I have to sit here—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: I am not going to be silent in this House while—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat?

Mr. Korchinski: I have to be honest with myself, and certain things must be said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I realize that with a minute to go it is difficult to entertain a question of privilege and I know that the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) would like to continue his speech, but I have to hear the question of privilege of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will allow him to continue. He can shoot his mouth off, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. Boniface adds nothing to the dignity of this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to special order made at this day's sitting, the debate on the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is deemed to have been terminated. Accordingly, the question is as follows. Mr. Trudeau, seconded by Mr. Drury, moves:

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designates, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their position even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal public service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the public service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the public service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the public service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French language units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhanced the bilingual character of the nationa' capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the public service by members of both the Anglophone and the Francophone communities,

In amendment thereto, Mr. Stanfield, seconded by Mr. Baker, moved:

That the motion be amended by adding to paragraph (i) thereof, next after the words, "taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned principles", the following:

"and the Government of Canada, as a priority measure, introducing legislation to incorporate the aforementioned principles in the Official Languages Act, the Public Service Employment Act and other appropriate statutes;".

Mr. Reid: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There can be no interruption when the Chair is putting a motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to special order made this day, the recorded division on the proposed amendment stands deferred until the order of the day to resume this debate is entered upon tomorrow afternoon.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

● (2200)

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEMS CAUSED BY GREY SEALS IN CERTAIN AREAS OF ATLANTIC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on May 29, as recorded at page 4209 of Hansard, I had occasion to ask the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), in charge of fisheries, a question with reference to the detrimental effect grey seals are having on certain fishing operations off the eastern shore of Nova Scotia. There is a real problem in this particular part of Atlantic Canada which is symbolic of the situation in other parts of Canada.

The whole inshore fishing industry is not getting the advantage it deserves, and it is under severe pressure. Anyone who has attended the proceedings of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, or has read the minutes of that committee knows that in many respects the fishermen of eastern Canada are being short-changed. They are being short-changed in dredging, wharf repair and construction, breakwater maintenance, and so on. These aggravated problems are made worse in this particular area of my constituency and, incidentally, the constituency of the government House leader (Mr. MacEachen), by the activity of the grey seals.

The warden of the municipality of the district of St. Mary's, Howard Turner, who has been active in the fishing industry for many years, told me a few days ago that at one time he and others used to keep these animals in check and received bounty money for their trouble. At that time the fishermen were protected and the grey seals were kept in check. Now the situation is unfortunately reversed. The attitude of the government toward these fishermen in general is deplorable. The Department of Fisheries must be restored to its rightful place under a minister, and not lumped together with another department with other responsibilities.

The annual report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board, a government publication, indicates a decline in Canadian fisheries production. The annual Statistical Review of the Canadian fisheries for 1972, published by Environment Canada, illustrates Canada's position in world fisheries as being pretty mediocre: we are behind Russia, we are behind Japan, we are behind Norway and the United States. In terms of volume and value of catch we are behind these four countries. I suggest this is because our fishermen are not getting the backing or the protection and consideration they deserve.

About a year ago, because of a certain amount of agitation from the fishing industry the Minister of the Environment and the government House leader came to the town of Larry's River along with assorted officials. We had a very successful meeting there in terms of the number in attendance. At that time many promises were made about dredging, better wharves, better guidance systems and harbours. I do not have time to list the number of promises made but I certainly do not need much time to enumerate the promises that were kept. The fishermen in my constituency realize they are not being fairly treated. I know that the minister and many of his departmental officials hardly know the difference between a hake and a haddock, a cod fin and a capelin.

Let me refer again to the question of the grey seal. Unless something is done to relieve the situation, the fishermen will, in defence of their livelihood, be forced into disposing of these animals in contravention of the law. This is something no one wants to see happen, but unless consideration is given to some of the problems inherent in the inshore fisheries of Nova Scotia it is likely to happen.

This may not be strictly relevant to the question I directed to the Minister of Fisheries, but perhaps he would use his influence with the minister in charge of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to change the regulations so that fishermen can get better protection, in terms of unemployment insurance benefits, than they now get because of gross discrimination in terms of UIC benefits.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) made a statement which implied that the fishermen are being ignored. If he had read one of the recent reports of the Science Council of Canada he would have noted, for example, that the money which the federal government is spending on research and development in fisheries is the highest by all odds, for any industry in this country.

Ten per cent of the equivalent of the total value of output of the industry at the processing plant is spent by the taxpayers of Canada on research and development in the industry. If we take the total budget of the fishery service, it is equivalent approximately to 20 per cent of the value of the output of the industry.

There is no industry in Canada that gets this kind of support from the taxpayers of this nation, and that money is spent substantially on the east coast. It is roughly three times that spent on the west coast. It is spent in proportion to the value of the output of the industry.

I mentioned the figure of 10 per cent which is spent on research and development in proportion to the gross value of the industry. In agriculture, forestry and other industries the figure is more like 1 per cent. So in terms of R and D support the fishery is being treated ten times as well as forestry or agriculture. The fishery has not done badly in spite of what the hon. member said. Canada is behind Japan, Norway, Russia and the United States today. It has been behind them for many many years, those countries being long-distance fishing nations, fishing all over the world. Some of them with very large populations and concerned about protein shortages have always taken many more fish than Canadians with a relatively small population. We are more efficient but we take fewer fish.

The grey seal population on the east coast has been growing. It is now in the order of 30,000. We do have a controlled culling operation which is carried out annually under the direction of our scientists. However, the population has increased and the problem is increasing. They are taking large numbers of mackerel, cod, herring, and so on. Because the number of fish off our shores has been decreasing due to excessive fishing pressure, we have to take seals because their population is rising and the ecological balance has been upset. I can assure the hon. member and the fishermen in his area that we have the grey seal problem very much in mind and we are doing something about it.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—VALIDITY OF ROYAL PROCLAMATION OF 1763

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the occasion for the question which I addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last May 8 on the matter of aboriginal rights arose from two separate but related events. One was the statement made to the committee on Indian affairs by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) on April 12, 1973, as recorded at page 1329 of the proceedings of the committee which reads:

> The proclamation of 1763 I recognize as a valid document—It establishes on obligation for the Crown to negotiate with the natives before taking land from the Indians.

The second event was a little later, when this House was in recess and the Prime Minister made certain public statements on television, and perhaps otherwise, among other things suggesting that the NDP was trying to rewrite history and accusing us of lack of concern for what some of the provincial governments of Canada are doing in this area. This was sufficient cause for me to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when he was speaking before the committee was stating government policy or not. While there were certain procedural difficulties to the question as I posed it, that essentially was the question I asked and on which I would like information. The Prime Minister in his reply said it was "a very difficult legal question which I am not able to settle in any final way by any answer or, indeed, by a statement of policy."

● (2210)

When the Prime Minister of this country, in this day and age, was so vague about it, I felt the answer was far from being satisfactory and that I should pursue the matter further on an occasion such as this. The nub of the question that arises in my mind is why the Prime Minister continues to deal with this matter as an abstract legal question rather than as a basic human question involving basic human rights. That is the point of view from which I would like to see the question treated. Incidentally, I say at once, Mr. Speaker, that if we can get a real statement of policy, in depth from that point of view, from the government of Canada then so far as I am concerned I am quite prepared to play my part with any provincial government in this country, regardless of its political stripe, in having that government recognize its appropriate responsibility in the consideration of this matter. But until there is forthcoming from the Government of Canada a clear-cut statement of its policy, it ill behooves the Prime Minister or anyone else to criticize the position being taken in this context by provincial administrations.

There are a couple of points I would like to mention in the few minutes available to me. One arises out of the further statement by the minister on April 12 when, in reference to the B.C. land question, he said:

> In the B.C. land question the judges did not agree, they split. Three judges said that the proclamation of 1763 did not apply to B.C. because B.C. was terra incognita in 1763.

My response to that is again to say, let us get it out of the legal context. The fact is, and the records indicate it, that whether or not this legally applied, certainly the first Governor and the Colonial Secretary in London at that time acted as if it did apply. The documentary evidence on that point is quite clear. if one looks afield one can pick up that kind of factual recognition almost anywhere.

I have in my hand a copy of a book just published, "Barkley Sound—A History of the Pacific Rim National Park Area," by R. Bruce Scott in which he tells something of the life and adventures of William Eddy Banfield, described as a government agent, trader, explorer, writer, ship's pilot and the first white settler in Barkley Sound. Mr. Banfield in his rather voluminous reports to the Colonial Secretary at Government House, Victoria, a man named W. A. G. Young, had many interesting things to say. Among them is one of his reports dated Ohiat, Barclay Sound, 23rd February, 1860, in which he wrote:

I mentioned to His Excellency when at Victoria that I had made a purchase of my place at Ohiat from the Chief. I was almost compelled to do so on my first coming among them; they were particularly anxious that I should purchase the ground on which I lived... saying that the Americans at Cape Flattery had all bought their ground from the Indians. I pleaded poverty, which was very evident to them, my stores being very limited... But to save myself the daily annoyance of the creatures I at length bought it for two blankets and two shirts. In order to impress on them formality, I drew out a title deed and explained it to them, giving them a duplicate. I had no civilized witness, none being in the neighbourhood.

Then Mr. Banfield goes on to explain how he later moved to another spot and bought another place. Inflation had set in, for his second property cost "six blankets, some beans, molasses, etc." Again he drew out a title deed. The evidence is clear for anyone who want to see that de facto recognition was given at one time by governmental authorities, and that all we really need to do is interpret the context of the present documents on human rights in relation to the situation as it was recognized then.

Mr. Speaker, when I talk about documents I have in my hand some of the international covenants on human rights, among them the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of the United Nations, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. In the preamble to the covenant of the assembly the text reads as follows:

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying civil and political freedom and freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his civil and political rights, as well as his economic, social and cultural rights,

And part I, article I reads—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) because it is good that once in a while he is caught in the position of defending the government.

Of course we recognize Indian rights in this country, and of course we do that in British Columbia; and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that. When the decision of the Supreme Court was handed down a few months ago in the case of the Nishga people's council, the court was divided and the Indians came to me and asked me to go and see the British Columbia government, which happens to be of the same political stripe as the hon. member's party. I went, and said to the British Columbia government that the Indians from the Nass River were asking British Columbia to turn over to them the land that belongs to them according to the decision of the Supreme Court.

I expected the NDP government in British Columbia to agree and say it was part of the policy of their government and party to recognize those rights. Oh, they were surprised that I said that to them and asked that they recognize in general terms the Indian rights. That means that the B.C. government has to return to the federal government, for the benefit of Indians of the Nass River, those lands that immemoriably belong to the Indians there. I was flabbergasted to realize that they were not keen to do that. When it was time to deliver the goods, they were not there. They said, "Write us a letter about it." I wrote two months ago asking them to live up to the decision of the Supreme Court and deliver the land to the Nass River Indians. I am still waiting for an answer. So I hope the hon. member who is so devoted to the cause of Indians will go to his friends in British Columbia and tell them to live up to the program of his own party.

When the land was cut off from the Indians after 1912 during the time of the McBride commission a lot of land was taken away from the Indians and used by the province as Crown land. So I am going to the B.C. government once in a while asking them to return those lands that were taken away by the provincial authorities, for the benefit of the provincial government, from the Indians.

I am still waiting for British Columbia to live up to the commitment they made to the Indians during the last provincial election campaign, because this is a clear case where the rights of the Indians have not been lived up to by the provincial government and perhaps by the then federal government. So if the hon. member wants to cry in this House he should spend one day more, perhaps one week, on Vancouver Island and drive south to Victoria and speak to the provincial government.

I said in committee, and I repeat it here, that after the decision of the Supreme Court it is very clear that the royal proclamation by King George III in 1763 imposes an obligation to settle the Indian claims in a certain fashion. That is exactly why we have already started negotiations with the Yukon Indians, to settle their claims. That is why I am starting to establish acceptable mechanisms in order to find ways to solve the problems of those Indians in British Columbia who have not signed treaties.

● (2220)

I hope the hon. member for Comox-Alberni will employ some energy and use his facility with language to explain this to his friends in British Columbia who do not seem to be ready to deliver what they have promised to the electorate of British Columbia.

AIRPORTS—PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, on May 9 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether, in light of the fact that he had promised residents of the Toronto region that he would cancel the Pickering airport development if more than 51 per cent of the people in metro Toronto were opposed to it, he would treat a recent public opinion poll in the Toronto Star as indicative of the feelings of the people of the region, or would he prefer to treat the opinion of the NDP on this issue in view of their switch in position in committee, as indicative of public opinion. The Prime Minister refused to answer. The words I am about to refer to were uttered in the borough of Scarborough, but they would apply to the whole of metropolitan Toronto. They were spoken on March 25, 1972, and are as follows—that if the majority of people living in this area, even if only 51 per cent, did not want this airport, the government would not proceed with it.

There have always been a great many people in the Toronto region who have questioned the need for a second airport. It was a major issue, in the election campaign in the Toronto region, of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who went on record as early as September 30, 1972, as saying that the case for a second Toronto airport had not been made. Fourteen of the 22 successful candidates in the metro Toronto region who ran in the October 30 election were on record during the election campaign as saying that there was no proven need for a second airport. Yet still the government pushed ahead, convinced that the public was still behind them on this.

Then some of the municipal councils got into the act, namely, Toronto city council representing 700,000 people, the regional municipality of York representing 166,000 people, and the township of Pickering representing 30,000 people. The councils of all these municipalities expressed opposition to the airport proceeding as planned. Yet the government still persisted. Then the Swackhammer report was completed early in January of this year, indicating that there were weighty technical arguments against the airport proceeding. As well, there was further evidence of widespread public opposition. Yet the government charged blindly ahead and on January 30 confirmed the expropriation notices on some 18,000 acres of land even though there has not been an independent inquiry to allow full public participation on the question of the need and site of the location.

That was over four months ago, Mr. Speaker. We are still waiting for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to announce the terms of reference and membership of the independent inquiry, notwithstanding that he originally promised that it would be reporting within one year of his January 30 announcement. We are anxiously awaiting that announcement and I hope it will be made very shortly.

As for public opinion, there was further evidence brought to the attention of the government on April 28 of this year when the Toronto Star published the result of a poll carried out by Canadian Facts Company Ltd. during the first ten days of April. This poll was conducted on a number of national and local issues and included a sample of 407 eligible voters across metro Toronto. The poll concluded with this question: Are you in favour of the proposed new airport scheduled to be built in Pickering township, or are you against it?

The result in metropolitan Toronto was as follows: 56 per cent of the people were against the airport, only 26 per cent said they were in favour, and 18 per cent said they were not sure. In the city of Toronto, which contains the riding of St. Paul's which I represent, the result was as follows: 62 per cent were against the airport, 19 per cent were in favour of it, and 19 per cent were not sure. Mr. Speaker, over three to one were against it in the city, and if you take the entire metropolitan region, over two to one were against the airport.

Is it not about time to say to the Prime Minister: How about it? Will you honour your word to the people of the metropolitan Toronto region? Will the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport continue to ignore the facts which I have stated, or will the government continue to push blindly ahead, bolstered by the votes in committee of NDP members who in a moment of utter hypocrisy voted on estimates to give the government the money to push ahead with this unnecessary project? The whole project at Pickering runs counter to the environmental, economic and human needs of the urban region of metropolitan Toronto. When will this government begin to listen to the people?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) I wish to say that the minister has clearly outlined his views at the committee level.

Projections indicate that by the end of the century, Toronto will have in excess of six million people. Toronto is the hub of our domestic air transportation system. Air travel is no longer for the wealthy few. Air cargo will be a vital part of our future economic activities. Many times more facilities than those we have now will be required. In 1968 we abandoned the idea of expanding Malton airport due to the threat of noise and due to the surrounding development. Malton's traffic will be further expanded, but not its size. Even considering the quieter aircraft we will have in the future, Malton would have too many flights, considerable noise problems and too high a volume of aircraft unless the airport is enlarged. A new airport is required.

The Ontario government has a plan for regional development known as the Toronto centred region and we have been able to achieve a consensus of view with the Ontario government in selecting a new site consistent with their planning. Pickering meets aviation criteria, is convenient and can be developed to meet future demand. Those persons owning on land expropriated will be paid not only the market value but also related payments for relocation and disturbance. Also, a great deal of expropriated land can be made available for agricultural use within the airport zone.

Hearings under the Expropriation Act have been held. Everyone has been given time to be heard; yet no one need be disturbed nor will construction begin until a board of examination, working with the three levels of government concerned, determines the type and timing of facilities required.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

CITIZENSHIP

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAMS TO ENCOURAGE IMMIGRANT RESIDENTS TO BECOME CITIZENS AND TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL SUPPORT TO NATIONAL VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about a group of integrated programs which the government is undertaking to encourage eligible resident immigrants to obtain their citizenship and to provide financial support to national voluntary organizations engaged in stimulating a greater awareness among Canadians of the meaning and significance of citizenship.

Since the government does not oblige anyone to take out citizenship, there is no exact number of Canadian residents who now qualify. However, we estimate that there are over 850,000, possibly a million, immigrant residents in Canada who could now apply for citizenship.

As in other democracies, ours is not a coercive society. This is especially true of the registration of new citizens. The government can readily make available a range of services and essential information to them about these services. But it is up to the individual to initiate voluntarily the procedures leading to equal status with other Canadians. It will be a gentle invitation, this call to citizenship.

It is to extend the present registration and counselling facilities, and to add to the information at the disposal of potential citizens, that I am announcing today an additional budget of $2 million.

The Department of the Secretary of State has been receiving requests for the provision of special services for potential citizens. To help respond to the need, the services of citizenship branch officials and citizenship courts are being broadened in areas where the population density is high and the immigrant concentration is heavy.

New branch offices are being opened in Quebec City, in Brampton and Barrie, Ontario, and in Kelowna, British Columbia. On an experimental basis, travelling teams of citizenship registration officials will be located in "target areas" in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton and Vancouver. They will be available upon demand to take applications and answer questions in such places as work sites, shopping centres, and recreation centres. There are plans for a storefront office in a busy location in Toronto, to make citizenship registration services as informal and as accessible as possible. The aim is to make the services available to people in the familiar surroundings of their own communities. Where we can, as with the storefront office, we also want the hours of service extended into evenings and weekends.

In support of this extension of court services, there will be a promotion program in the media, with emphasis on local newspapers. It is anticipated that there will also be some use of pamphlets and posters, and some reliance on radio and television.

A third program is the development of new resource materials to be provided to citizens and potential citizens to help them learn about Canada. These will include specially designed and specially written booklets, attractive and up to date, and audio-visual materials and kits for the use of individuals and citizens' groups.

It is with considerable pleasure that I announce today the first grants to be made under our new program of support to voluntary organizations engaged in special projects to reinforce the meaning and importance of our common citizenship. These grants will go to the Canada Studies Foundation in Toronto and the Canada Committee in Montreal.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, we of the Progressive Conservative party totally endorse the government initiative to assist those who come to this country to understand and to use their rights. We wish those who emigrate to Canada to do so with a genuine involvement.

[English]

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are aware, as are the ministers involved, of woeful shortcomings. There are no reliable figures available as to the number of illegal immigrants in this country. It is truly disgraceful that the honest must often wait for years, subjected to great anxiety through a cumbersome and outdated appeal process—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: —while the less scrupulous are able to freely enjoy the advantages of this country.

It is a disgrace that newcomers are given such hopelessly inadequate instruction in the new society into which they enter, and I hope that the government announcement today reflects a serious coming to grips with this problem.

Fully two-thirds of those who immigrate to this country are below the age of 30. We must keep this fact clearly in mind while developing immigrant services. Their access to the rich multicultural resources of Canada must be assured. Their full acceptance as Canadians should they desire to become citizens ought to be guaranteed. Consideration might be given to removing all legal differentiation between native and naturalized citizens. This is surely in the spirit of the minister's initiative, and would certainly make citizenship more attractive to our resident immigrants.

● (1410)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize that the immigrant to this country has three major areas of difficulty: the first is one of information, often including a language barrier. The government has recognized its responsibility in general terms in this area, but we would like to see far more sensitivity shown with respect to the type and particular needs of immigrants for information, particularly for those who come from a radically different cultural background. The second great problem is loneliness. Here the direct role of the state is limited, yet that of its indirect influence is substantial. We must not allow the immigrant to disappear in our national debates on linguistic and cultural issues. Finally, there is a substantial economic problem. Many barriers are placed in the way of the newcomer; many of those with substantial skills are forced to work in positions and at wages which are far below their capacity, and all of Canada is made poorer by the limiting of their potential contribution.

[Translation]

The government has a positive role to play in those three areas. We have been delighted with the announcement of the minister, but I would like to express our wish that the government will integrate with efficiency and understanding those who come over to live in the Canadian community.

[English]

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I welcome the statement made this afternoon by the minister as a first step in a broad, general review and extension of government services to immigrant people in Canada. The minister has given us a firm assurance in committee that such an overhaul of the programs being presented by his department is now under way and, taking him at his word, we look forward to further developments of a similar nature in future.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the citizenship outreach program outlined this afternoon by the minister is not only needed but overdue and that it will prove to be well utilized so long as it operates on the principle that its prime concern is to meet the needs and convenience of its clientele and not those of the officials. The pilot experiments conducted in recent years by the department indicate that the present program, extended as it is, will be fully used. I would stress that the question of the hours of the services is crucial to the success of this program, and I would say to the minister that I hope the plan to operate it in the evenings and on weekends will not be limited merely to one storefront office but will include the mobile teams as well. I also hope that the department will establish advance liaison with the communities through existing organizations as well as the specialized media that often publish in the language of the immigrant community.

I would also point out that there is abroad a mystique to the effect that successful application for citizenship may involve answering tough questions or examinations. This has in the past proved to be an inhibition to applications for citizenship. I hope that the promised programs to be undertaken by the department will assure that the process of applying for and receiving citizenship is an encouraging rather than a discouraging one.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we look forward, as I said, to the continuing overhaul and extension of government programs aimed at new Canadians. I would emphasize that this process should be undertaken in close consultation with the communities affected as well as with provincial and municipal governments. I conclude by hoping that the program will extend beyond the range of the immediate services indicated in this afternoon's statement to the educational and cultural fields.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the announcement just made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) in order to assist the voluntary groups dealing with immigrants is full of good intentions, and I believe that the whole House agrees with that decision.

However, it is necessary that those applying to emigrate to Canada be well informed. Rather unfortunate situations happened in the past, and I just have one in mind, Mr. Speaker. A Frenchman made an application to come over to Canada, and the Canadian immigration office in France told him that he absolutely had to speak English in order to emigrate to Canada and work here. With that information, the applicant went back home and managed to follow intensive courses in English, and after one year, he applied again at the immigration office. He was then accepted and once in Canada, in the province of Quebec, he went over to Normetal Mine, in my constituency, to take a job as a miner. Upon his arrival he realized that there were no English-speaking persons working in that industry. You can appreciate his disappointment in the face of that situation. He lost a year merely because of this anomaly.

In my opinion, steps should be taken first of all to properly advise those who want to become Canadian citizens. Then, the procedures for granting Canadians immigrants citizenship certificates should be instituted early enough for them to receive their papers when the time comes. Of course, cases may differ but, in my opinion, they should not be considered separately.

Some immigrants who want to qualify for Canadian citizenship could certainly meet our requirements within a year. However, there are others—a limited number, I am glad to say—who will never really become Canadian citizens. In all fairness to those who have been accepted among us, they should be granted their certificates of citizenship as soon as possible, when the time comes, so that they may become Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received notice from the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe of a question of privilege of a non-controversial nature. The hon. member might be recognized for that purpose at this time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARSHALL—TWENTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time because today, June 6, marks the twenty-ninth anniversary of D-Day, and I am sure I speak for all members of the House and all Canadians in requesting a moment to pay homage to those valiant soldiers who took part in the allied invasion of Normandy.

Canadian veterans who took part will reflect today, I am sure, wherever they may be, on events which took place on the beaches of France some 29 years ago and think of their comrades who fell by their side and were denied the chance to return to Canada to avail themselves of the great opportunities of our growing and prosperous country. It is significant that today, 29 years later, the overriding topic that we are discussing across our nation is national unity and we are trying to attain this goal by legislation and with words. Yet we fail to recognize that we started to become a great nation because thousands of our young citizens from 1939 to 1945, including many who sit here as members of parliament, volunteered to fight for their country in far-off lands to defend Canada and the free world against the greed and lust for power of other nations. They fought together regardless of race, creed, colour or origin. They fought united as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: We can continue to build a greater nation if we take time to reflect and take an example from the comradeship which was instilled in our veterans through suffering together on the battlefield, a comradeship that will remain in their hearts as long as they live. We should think of this today. Let us ever remember the thousands of our veterans who lie in graves in foreign countries because of their duty to their country. Let us remember those veterans who returned, maimed and disabled, and who must look to us for help. Let us never forget our responsibility to those veterans who, by their sacrifice, protected our freedom to govern and to build a great nation for those of us who remain, a nation with pride, prosperity and peace, a nation with unity and comradeship among all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN TONNAGE RATE CHARGED OCEAN GOING VESSELS AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the unexplained and dangerous decision of the government to increase by approximately 60 per cent port rates payable by ocean vessels using the port of Vancouver. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That this House insist that the Minister of Transport present a detailed explanation of why this increase was undertaken, and insist that the minister undertake an immediate review of that decision.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

The amounts under column A pertain to direct program costs under the department's Information Program the objective of which is to publish and disseminate information about Canada in foreign countries and provide information on international affairs to the Canadian public.

2. The amounts under column B were paid to John Doherty and Company Limited, Ottawa in connection with a nation wide publicity campaign to inform the public on requirements relative to the procurement of passports.

3. Nil.

DREE—NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE, 1971

Question No. 149—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the total number of applications received by province, by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for assistance in the fiscal year ended 1971?

2. Of those approved, how many applications were exercised by the applicants, by province?

3. What is the total operating cost of the Department for the same period, exclusive of grants?

4. What is the total operating cost of the Department for the same period, inclusive of grants?

5. What is the average cost, based on the above, of each decision made by the Department on applications received?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, the number of applications for assistance under the Regional Development Incentives Act received by the department is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 80; Prince Edward Island, 40; Nova Scotia, 83; New Brunswick, 121; Quebec, 740; Ontario, 136; Manitoba, 164; Saskatchewan, 69; Alberta, 75; British Columbia, 47; Location of facility not specified by applicant at time of submission, Nil; total, 1,555.

2. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, the net number of accepted offers of development incentives authorized under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 12; Prince Edward Island, 14; Nova Scotia, 41; New Brunswick, 35; Quebec, 150; Ontario, 25; Manitoba, 54; Saskatchewan, 23; Alberta, 23; British Columbia, 7; total, 384.

3. The operating costs for the Incentives Division of the department exclusive of grants were $1,041,542 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971. This cost includes the expense of administering inspections and payments under the Regional Development Incentives Act and the Area Development Incentives Act, as well as that associated with the processing of applications.

[Mr. Sharp.]

4. The operating costs of the Incentives Division for the same period including RDIA and ADIA grant payments were $61,240,390.

5. It is not possible to give a meaningful response to this question. As pointed out in 3, officers of the Incentives Division carry a number of responsibilities that are not directly related to the processing of applications. These include the administration of payments, promotional activity, general research activity and a number of other supportive functions. The evaluation of applications cannot be broken out so as to provide average cost figures on the basis requested.

DREE—NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE, 1972

Question No. 991—Mr. Forrestall:

1. By province, what was the total number of applications received by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for assistance in the fiscal year ended 1972?

2. By province, of those approved, how many applications were exercised by the applicants?

3. What was the total operating cost of the Department for the same period (a) exclusive of grants (b) inclusive of grants?

4. What is the average cost, based on the above, of each decision made by the Department on (a) all applications received (b) applications approved (c) applications rejected (d) applications accepted but not exercised by the applicants?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, the number of applications for assistance under the Regional Development Incentives Act received by the department is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 118; Prince Edward Island, 39; Nova Scotia, 157; New Brunswick, 149; Quebec, 1,754; Ontario, 227; Manitoba, 172; Saskatchewan, 67; Alberta, 75; British Columbia, 57; Location of facility not specified by applicant at time of submission, 19; total, 2,834.

2. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, the net number of accepted offers of development incentives authorized under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 43; Prince Edward Island, 26; Nova Soctia, 75; New Brunswick, 87; Quebec, 704; Ontario, 72; Manitoba, 123; Saskatchewan, 37; Alberta, 36; British Columbia, 24; total, 1,227.

3. (a) The operating costs for the Incentives Division of the Department exclusive of grants were $3,499,327 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972. This cost includes the expense of administering payments under the Regional Development Incentives Act and the Area Development Incentives Act, as well as that associated with the processing of applications. (b) The operating costs of the Incentives Division for the same period including RDIA and ADIA grant payments were $99,773,034.

4. (a) It is not possible to give a meaningful response to this question. As pointed out in 3(a), officers of the Incentives Division carry a number of responsibilities that are not directly related to the processing of application. These include the administration of payments, promotional activity, general research activity and a number of other supportive functions. The evaluation of applications cannot be broken out so as to provide average cost figures on the basis requested. (b), (c) and (d) For the reasons pointed out in 4(a) these costs are not available.

OFY—PROJECTS OKANAGAN-KOOTENAY 1971-72

Question No. 1,373—Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay):

1. What Opportunities for Youth Program grants were paid to associations in the constituency of Okanagan-Kootenay in 1971 and 1972?

2. What were the names and addresses of each association and sponsors?

3. What were the names and addresses of each association and sponsors who did not receive a grant?

4. What study did the Secretary of State's Office make of the grants paid in 1971 and 1972 in the constituency of Okanagan-Kootenay as to their effective utilization?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. A list of all projects funded under the Opportunities for Youth program in 1971 has been completed. Projects are classified by province and then by type of project, not by constituency. A list of all projects funded under the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program has been completed. Projects are classified by province and in alphabetical order of the towns and cities in which the projects were carried out, not by constituency. Information included the project title and number, a short description of the project's activities, amount of the grant, number of participants and the name and address of the project representative. This 421-page listing can be obtained from the Secretary of State Department.

2. Groups were not required to have sponsors or to be connected with an association.

3. Groups were not required to have sponsors or to be connected with an association. No tabulated records exist for project applications which were not selected for funding under Opportunities for Youth in either 1971 or 1972.

4. All projects funded by Opportunities for Youth in 1971 and 1972 were visited at least once by the project officer responsible prior to receiving the second of three payments on the grant allocated. Further visits were made at the discretion of the officer concerned. Prior to receiving the third and last instalment of the grant, all projects were required to submit an evaluation report to the Secretary of State outlining the project's activities. All project evaluations were reviewed by officials in the Department of the Secretary of State. Evaluations are not classified according to constituency.

DREE—APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE 1972-73

Question No. 1,861—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What was the total number of applications received by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for assistance, by province, in the fiscal years ended 1972 and 1973?

2. Of those applications approved, how many were exercised by the applicants on a provincial basis?

3. What was the total operating cost of the Department for these periods (a) exclusive of grants (b) inclusive of grants?

4. What was the average cost, based on the above, of each decision made by the Department on applications (a) received (b) rejected (c) approved but not acted upon?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. For data relating to the fiscal year ending 1972, please refer to reply to Inquiry No. 991. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973 the number of applications received by the department under the Regional Development Incentives Act is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 71; Prince Edward Island, 32; Nova Scotia, 132; New Brunswick, 153; Quebec, 1,596; Ontario, 196; Manitoba, 151; Saskatchewan, 56; Alberta, 53; British Columbia, 48; Location of facility not specified by applicant at time of submission, 23; total, 2,511.

2. For data relating to the fiscal year ending 1972, please refer to reply to Inquiry No. 991. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, the net number of accepted offers of development incentives authorized under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act is, by province, as follows: Newfoundland, 16; Prince Edward Island, 9; Nova Scotia, 39; New Brunswick, 51; Quebec, 541; Ontario, 39; Manitoba, 42; Saskatchewan, 16; Alberta, 10; British Columbia, 3; total, 766.

3. (a) The operating costs for the Incentives Division of the department exclusive of grants were $3,474,361 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973. This cost includes the expense of administering payments under the Regional Development Incentives Act and the Area Development Incentives Act, as well as that associated with the processing of applications; (b) The operating costs of the Incentives Division for the same period including RDIA and ADIA grant payments were $88,500,899.

4. (a) It is not possible to give a meaningful response to this question. As pointed out in 3(a), officers of the Incentives Division carry a number of responsibilities that are not directly related to the processing of application. These include the administration of payments, promotional activity, general research activity and a number of other supportive functions. The evaluation of applications cannot be broken out so as to provide average cost figures on the basis requested; (b,(c,(d) For the reasons pointed out in 4(a) these costs are not available.

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the policy alternatives paper prepared on the basis of report to the government on Canadian ethnic studies.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this document is of a confidential nature internal to the department's operations. In the circumstances the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we should like it to be less confidential and would like the matter to be debated.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

IACC REPORTS TO DATE

Motion No. 212—Mr. Yewchuk:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of any reports so far completed by IACC.

Mr. Baldwin: I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee fulfils an internal co-ordinating function among government departments and agencies carrying out programs under the multicultural policy. In the circumstances the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: That alone, Mr. Speaker, justifies asking for it to be debated.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF SELECTIVE CREDIT CONTROLS—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact we are now experiencing the highest amount of inflation we have had in almost 25 years, and given the fact the minister has indicated that he now believes most of the cause of this inflation is demand pull, is the government considering the introduction of any sort of selective credit controls to eliminate some of this excessive purchasing power in the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

Mr. Gillies: If the government is not prepared to introduce selective credit controls, is not prepared to accept any sort of over-all wage and price controls and is not prepared to go for higher interest rates, would the minister tell the House whether or not the government is now prepared to live with this rate of inflation for the rest of the year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think I have set forth the position of the government very clearly, that the present rate of inflation results from world commodity prices and agricultural prices which, even adopting the theories advanced by my hon. friend, would not be amenable to wage and price controls. The government's response to the current position is to try to increase the supply of those commodities by lowering tariffs, encouraging agricultural production and increasing the disposable income of all Canadians.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to address to the Prime Minister. In light of the existence of the cabinet document on priorities which the Prime Minister has not rejected, has the government in fact abandoned its fight against inflation, and is price stabilization now well at the foot of the government's priority list?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

POSITION OF MINISTER ON PROBABLE FURTHER INCREASE IN PRIME INTEREST RATE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO LIMIT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Finance arising out of the announcement that the prime interest rate is likely to go up to 7½ per cent from 7¼ per cent. In view of the fact that kind of action by the chartered banks follows action or advice by the Bank of Canada, or a contraction of the money supply on the part of the Bank of Canada, and in view of the fact that the Bank of Canada would take that action only after consultation with and approval by the government or the Minister of Finance, may I ask the minister whether he is ready to accept a further increase in the prime interest rate from 7¼ to 7½ per cent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the so-called announcement to which the hon. gentleman refers is based on a newspaper report this morning which is of a speculative nature. I am not going to deal with hypothetical or speculative questions on the floor of the House.

● (1430)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the minister a direct question. Is he encouraging or approving of the Bank of Canada contracting the money supply, and is he prepared to allow the prime interest rate to go higher than the present 7.25 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada is allowing the money supply to increase at least at a rate to accommodate the expansion of the economy. At the moment the rate of increase in loans by the chartered banks in the first four months of this year, as the hon. gentleman knows, is expanding at about 28 per cent, well beyond the expansionary rate of the economy, so the words he has used are not applicable to the situation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister can make any sort of statement or speech he likes, but in view of the fact that interest rates are going up, that mortgage interest rates have followed the increase in their rate and are now up to 9½ per cent, in view of all these serious circumstances not only for borrowers but for home buyers, is the minister now prepared to take action together with the Bank of Canada to place a limit on interest rates so they will not go any higher than they are now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not. I am as conscious as the hon. gentleman of the pain of rising interest rates in this country. He has not got a monopoly on that feeling. But I want to say to him that in view of the current expansion of the economy over the last six months, at a rate of 11.6 per cent in real terms which is the fastest expansion we have ever had in this country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —in view of the extreme pressure of international interest rates, because despite historical trends our interest rates in the short term are still a point to a point and a half lower than those in the United States and well below those in Europe, if interest rates were not to reflect this economic expansion we would get—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously getting into a debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought inflation ended two years ago, according to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is another subject.

An hon. Member: Pierre said it was over two years ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That was before Turner took over.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—REQUEST FOR LOCAL TRANSPORT SERVICE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport concerning Dorval airport, in Montreal, where there are two wings from which one can board an aircraft, the one with gate No. 40, and the other with gate No. 6. Well, it happens that we have to run the whole distance about a mile, between gate No. 40 to reach gate No. 6.

Would the minister consider providing a small bus service, for instance, from one wing to the other, which would facilitate the comings and goings, as is done in New York and in all self-respecting cities?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are considering operating small jets to enable passengers to go from one place to the other.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Transport tell us whether these small jets will be bilingual like his own department?

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the machinists union is striking five cities today, and in view of the statement by Air Canada that if rotating strikes continue it will probably have to close down its operations, may I ask the minister whether the parties are any closer to a settlement, and what is the government doing to assist the parties to arrive at a settlement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government through the appointment of a mediator, Mr. Gallagher, has been meeting almost constantly with the parties in Montreal. They have narrowed the issues down progressively each day. The situation seemed quite hopeful yesterday. They are meeting again today, right now, and I hope to have a report one way or the other some time later today.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the deteriorating aspects of this situation, has the government presented any concrete proposals to both parties to help settle this dispute and, if not, does the government contemplate presenting such proposals?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, of course this is a process of collective bargaining between the parties, Air Canada and the machinists. The mediator's role is to endeavour to bring the parties together and achieve a reconciliation of the proposals of both sides in order to obtain a settlement of the dispute. That process is going on at the moment.

REQUEST THAT COMPANY NOT BE ALLOWED TO INCREASE FARES WITHOUT CONSULTATION WITH PARLIAMENT AND REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he assure the House that the government will not allow Air Canada to increase its rates this year without consulting with parliament and without a full review of the management and operations of Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard that fares are going to be increased. If Air Canada gets in touch with us concerning an increase we will, of course, surely be very reluctant about any move of this kind by Air Canada.

STRIKE BY FINANCIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Is his department taking any action to bring together the parties, Air Canada and the employees in Winnipeg who have been on strike for two weeks as a result of the refusal of Air Canada even to consider accepting the unanimous recommendation of the conciliation board?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government is taking action. We have a mediator on the scene who is endeavouring to his utmost to bring the parties together and try to arrive at a settlement.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether there has been the same kind of movement toward settlement of that dispute as the minister just reported with regard to the machinists' dispute?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker.

YOUTH

NATIONAL 4-H WEEK—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INITIATE SPECIAL PROGRAM TO SUPPORT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, through you I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the fact 1973 is the 60th anniversary of the founding of the first rural youth group in Canada, which is now made up of 6,000 4-H Clubs involving 77,000 young Canadians, and in view of the fact that November 10 to November 16 has been named National 4-H Week, would the government of Canada consider initiating a special program of support during that week to commemorate this anniversary?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government would be prepared to encourage youth groups of this kind by whatever means are legally and traditionally possible. The designation of a week is something I do not believe is generally done by the executive unless it is provided for by statute. There are certainly other ways of honouring this group and congratulating it for its very fine work, and I will do something.

PENITENTIARIES

MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE OVERCROWDING—POSSIBLE ACQUISITION OF COMMON JAIL AT PRINCE ALBERT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and has to do with the fact that one of the major complaints I have received in connection with penitentiaries is that there is overcrowding and that this applies right across the country. What is being done to provide temporary places where inmates can be kept? What is being done in order to bring about alleviation of the overcrowding?

An hon. Member: He is letting them out.

Mr. Hees: They are escaping.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They are all enjoying themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Have you got a reservation list?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in order to accommodate the overpopulation problem in the penitentiaries—

Mr. Hees: You are opening the doors.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Weekend leaves and trips to Europe.

Mr. Allmand: —we have already set up two new minimum security institutions in the west made up of trailer camps.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1440)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, one of those is situated at Drumheller, Alberta just outside the medium security institution and the other is being set up at Mission City, British Columbia. In addition, we are presently looking at several buildings that have been used as provincial institutions with a view to taking over these provincial institutions so they can be used as minimum security federal penitentiaries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am tremendously interested in this course in escape training that is taking place, but I ask the minister particularly what is being done at Prince Albert? Does the government intend to purchase the common jail there that is practically unoccupied as a means of alleviating the situation? When he is answering that question he might at the same time, having regard to the fact that two of the escaped inmates from Cowansville out for two months were picked up yesterday because of a very serious crime, advise how many crimes away he thinks it will be before he has the rest of them back?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that in Saskatchewan and Alberta we are looking at the possibility of purchasing or leasing certain provincial institutions. However, there are certain disadvantages with respect to the provincial institution in Prince Albert and we have not yet made a decision in that regard. I might point out that the trailer camps being used as minimum security institutions have been used in the past very successfully. They are used as work camps in the mountains and forests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether or not the particular tourist accommodations that he mentioned have proven to be the sieves that the penitentiaries have been under his administration?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West. Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may wish to answer the question but I do not think a question asked in those terms is in order. The minister might like to rise on a question of privilege or on a point of order, but certainly the question as asked by the right hon. gentleman is clearly out of order.

Mr. Allmand: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, for years now we have had minimum security institutions where there have not been any walls and if the men at those institutions wanted to escape they could. We do not classify these as escapes in the usual way. But the majority of the escapes have not been from the minimum institutions but, unfortunately, from the medium and maximum institutions. I might say that they are no hotels. If the hon. member or any other member wishes to visit them and stay there for a while I will try to arrange it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Oral Questions

SPORTS

SIGNING OF HOWE BROTHERS BY HOUSTON AEROS HOCKEY CLUB—REQUEST BY CANADIAN AMATEUR HOCKEY ASSOCIATION FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a very serious question, perhaps as a supplementary, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of yesterday's announcement of the signing of the Howe brothers by the Houston Aeros Hockey Club and the various implications flowing from these contracts, has the minister yet agreed to a requested meeting with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and, if so, when will this meeting be held?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, most of the implications I have seen in respect of the first part of the question seem to represent a "Hulluva" lot of money for the Howe brothers. I am quite happy for them. As to a meeting with the CAHA, my office received this request only yesterday and a meeting will be set up as soon as possible.

SIGNING OF HOWE BROTHERS BY HOUSTON AEROS HOCKEY CLUB—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PREVENT RETURN TO USE OF C-FORMS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Without holding any brief for the NHL, and offering my congratulations to the Howe brothers, in view of the fact the signing of under-age players violates both the recommendation of the federal task force on sport and the agreement between the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the NHL, an agreement now threatened by the World Hockey Association, I should like to ask what initiatives the federal government is planning to prevent the return of the primitive pre-agreement practice in which children signed C-forms committing them to long-term peonage at the hands of the international sports industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That has the appearance of a statement rather than a question. In any event, if the minister wishes to reply to the question he ought to do so by way of a statement on motions. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase the question. I had just got to it. I wish to ask most seriously what initiatives the government is planning to prevent the practice that occurred before the CAHA and NHL agreement which caused considerable controversy and many problems in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair had heard the question. My suggestion was that this kind of information should be given in a general way by a statement on motions. If I am wrong, the question could be considered at the time of adjournment.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GASPÉ AREA—CONTINUATION OF CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Following the minister's recent visits to the provincial capitals and his talks with Quebec officials, can he tell the House if there was any reference to the renewal of the Canada-Quebec agreement concerning the development of the Lower St. Lawrence area, the Gaspé peninsula and the Magdalen Islands, and what was his answer?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not in precisely those terms, Mr. Speaker, and not necessarily a renewal of the existing arrangement, but a new agreement which would certainly continue to include such areas as Gaspé where additional work is clearly necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, could the minister announce in the near future the policy of the Canadian government about those special programs which will replace the agreements with the provinces?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it is required by the statute that such agreements be public documents. If and when one is reached, and I have every confidence it will be reached, then it will be made public.

CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—STUDIES RESPECTING POSSIBLE REOPENING—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether during the discussions concerning the Gaspé peninsula, reference was also made to the reopening of the CIP plant in Temiscaming?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As of yesterday when I arrived back in Ottawa late last night I was informed that the Quebec government had now formulated a set of recommendations which I understand has gone to the TEMBEC operators to see whether they in fact can agree with the government of Quebec. Should that occur, then our intervention would follow from that point.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL BY UNITED STATES OF MANDATORY SCREENING OF PASSENGERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—IMPLICATIONS FOR BILL C-128

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that the United States Federal Aviation Authority has suggested the validity of considering withdrawal of the mandatory screening of airline passengers because of the development of a more effective revised screening system in which all passengers do not have to undergo a scrutiny check, I wonder whether the minister has had an opportunity to look into this and can he advise whether the implications of this move will have any effect on the passage of Bill C-128?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to obtain confirmation of this piece of news. It has not been confirmed by officials of the Washington government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister advise the House whether in fact a more adequate procedure is being developed and whether he would consider taking this into consideration during the passage of this particular piece of legislation?

● (1450)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member does not assume that just because the United States does something we will automatically do it. However, if it makes sense I agree that we should look at it.

TERMINAL No. 2, TORONTO—ACTION TO SOLVE PROBLEMS—REQUEST FOR MOVING SIDEWALK

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Terminal No. 2 in Toronto has been in use for over a month and that I have not found any members of the public or Air Canada who are satisfied with its operation, will the minister set out what he proposes to do about this terminal?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not build Terminal No. 2 myself. It is there, and I know a lot of people are unhappy about it. We have constituted a working group with Air Canada to see how we can manage it so that the customers are better treated than they are now. I hope this group will be successful in improving the situation.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peel South on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Blenkarn: Has the minister made any study of the installation of at least a moving sidewalk so that people using the domestic end of the terminal will not have to walk half a mile to three quarters of a mile to and from their planes?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I receive reports from the working group we will see what solutions we can find.

PAROLE

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSION BY MINISTER WITH PAROLE BOARD LEADING TO INCREASE IN RELEASE OF PENITENTIARY INMATES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General this question. At what stage are his negotiations with the National Parole Board with regard to revitalizing a more orderly method of emptying some of our penitentiaries, which obviously should take place?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the question. There are no negotiations with the Parole Board. Today I introduced a bill in the House to increase the number of members of the Parole Board by ten, in accordance with the statement I made on Friday. We hope that by doing this the board will be able to process parole applications much quicker and in a much more effective way than in the past.

Mr. Peters: Since there was a curtailment of 25 per cent in paroles last year, obviously discussions must be taking place with the National Parole Board on why that situation developed. I would like to know from the minister whether he has been able to correct this situation and have it return to normal so that an extra 25 per cent of our prison population will be released?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the reason there was quite a cutback in paroles last year was the fact that there was a high rate of violations when people were on parole. As a result, a lot of people out on parole came back into the institutions, and the board reconsidered its policy of granting parole on the basis it had done so in the previous year. However, I agree that there are probably a lot of people in penitentiary who should be out on parole, and we hope that with these new guidelines and new members it will be possible to deal with paroles in a more effective way.

AIR CANADA

EXPLOSION AND FIRE ON FLIGHT 141, TORONTO TO CALGARY

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On March 26 the minister assured me he would inquire concerning the reason why Air Canada flight No. 141 from Toronto to Calgary was turned back. On March 28 the minister sent me a letter stating that the engine did not explode or catch fire after takeoff. Subsequent to the receipt of this letter—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Hurlburt: —I concluded my own investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question, not for the purpose of revealing to the House the results of his investigation.

Mr. Hurlburt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hurlburt: I would now like to ask the minister if he is prepared to issue a new statement, or is he prepared to stand behind his communication of March 28?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to doublecheck the information I gave.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Maybe we will find out that the hon. member is a better inquirer.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RESPONSIBILITY OF COMPANY TO ASSIST IN REMOVING ECONOMIC DISPARITIES BY LOWERING FREIGHT RATES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Does the minister agree with the president of Canadian National Railways that the CNR has no responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Order!

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I thank hon. members who want to give advice and guidance to the Chair, but I think it is irregular for members to try to guide the Chair in determining whether or not a question is in order. The hon. member for Hastings has the floor, but he should ask his question directly, and not ask the minister to confirm a statement or an opinion expressed by someone outside the House.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister whether he and the government feel the CNR has no responsibility to help remove economic disparities by lowering freight rates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is purely a hypothetical question. I never heard Mr. MacMillan say that, and if he made a statement I would like to read it myself.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, since I was not allowed to refer to the document I merely asked the minister whether the Department of Transport and the government do not feel that the CNR has a responsibility to help remove economic disparity, and I did not refer to what Mr. MacMillan said.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to read Mr. MacMillan's statement before discussing it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

OPEN QUOTAS ON WHEAT—REQUEST THAT FARMERS RECEIVE SAME PAYMENT THIS YEAR AS NEXT YEAR TO ENSURE DELIVERIES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact the Wheat Board now has open quotas on wheat and other grain deliveries, would the minister assure, in order to provide the full flow of grain to elevators necessary at this time to meet our commitments, that farmers will receive the same type of payment this year as next year and thus provide them with a guarantee?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we had quite an exchange on this subject yesterday. I indicated that I certainly expected the flow of grain to continue, and there is every sign that it will. I certainly cannot tell the hon. member that prices will not be in total, higher in the crop year 1973-74 than they are in the crop year 1972-73. The initial prices are at the same level for both years in the case of wheat.

Mr. Korchinski: Will the minister provide a supplementary payment for those producers delivering this year to match the same level of payment that will be made next year in order to assure deliveries and avoid the embarrassment of having to buy wheat from other countries?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there is no possible question of having to buy grain from other countries, and it does a disservice to the Wheat Board and the grain industry to suggest it. In fact, as I indicated yesterday in the House, many farmers are not delivering grain because they are concerned about their income tax payments for 1973, and any additional supplementary payment would cause additional problems in that regard.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF WILLIAM TERON AS PRESIDENT—DIVESTMENT OF HIS FINANCIAL INTERESTS IN CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the announcement by the minister yesterday of the appointment of Mr. William Teron as President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, would the minister inform the House of the exact manner in which Mr. Teron has divested himself of his financial interests in the following corporations: William Teron and Associates, Etron Limited, Marina City, Kingston, Limited—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question.

Mr. Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, that was part of the question. There is quite a list. I will not read all of them but I have one I would like to get into the record—Power Corporation of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1500)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister's statement made clear yesterday, Mr. Teron has either divested himself or has undertaken to divest himself of those properties which would give rise to any possible or apparent conflict of interest with his operation as president and the other properties will be managed by trustees. I resent the implication of the question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on!

An hon. Member: Shame!

An hon. Member: What about the waterfront park?

Mr. Basford: —and I know that Mr. Teron—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. There are a number of members anxious to ask questions and we will be running short of time. The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Neale (Vancouver East): I would like to ask the minister if he would inform the House whether Mr. Teron is still a member of the Liberal party's task force on housing and cities?

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN POLICY—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION BY OTHER MINISTERS WITH QUEBEC PRODUCERS—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statements made yesterday in the committee on agriculture to the effect that the feed grains policy may or may not be discussed with the committee when it is presented, I should like to ask the minister if it is true that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be in Drummondville, Quebec, on June 12 to discuss the feed grain policy with the union of agricultural producers in that province?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I said in committee. I am not responsible for what the Minister of National Health and Welfare or any other minister may say or do in taking part in any meetings in Drummondville, Quebec, or any other place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, but there are only three minutes left before the end of the question period. There are about 20 members rising but many of them could save themselves the effort as it is obvious that they will not be recognized. The hon. member has a supplementary and will be recognized.

Mr. Murta: Although the minister may or may not agree with what may be said at that meeting, has he, contrary to what was stated yesterday, made a decision on a feed grain policy, and will the minister be stating government policy at that meeting?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, when a decision is made on the feed grain policy it will be announced in the proper fashion.

SOYBEAN FEEDS—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO LOWER AND CONTROL PRICE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and also pertains to feed grains. The price of soybeans and feeds containing this commodity used by farmers for feeding livestock has recently risen faster than the price of gold and beyond any reasonable level. Will the minister please take action to reduce and control the price of this product?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, parliament has not given me that authority but I will be happy to discuss the issue with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Has the minister had any representations from the Minister of Agriculture regarding this serious situation?

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN PORT FACILITIES

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question for the Minister of Transport and I am sure he will give me a straightforward answer. In view of the urgent need for improvements to the facilities at the port of Churchill, and in view of the delay caused by lack of direction on the part of the minister, would the minister make a statement on motions of the policy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not in order. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the House whether it is the intention of his department to use the two million dollars placed in the estimates by the minister for improvement of the port facilities to the benefit of all western Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered a similar question last week, that I had received a report concerning the port of Churchill. I sent it back to the marine administration of my department and I am expecting to have some recommendations very soon. At that moment I will tell the hon. gentleman what we intend to do.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF EXCISE TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Having regard to the rapidly increasing rates for shelter and having regard to the fact that this is caused by the increase in mortgage interest rates and the fact that the cost of lumber has gone up by some 300 per cent in the last two years, will the minister now reduce or eliminate the excise tax on construction materials and, if not, why not?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the prime factors in the rise in the price of lumber is the fact that price controls were released in the United States over lumber and that affected the Canadian market immeasurably.

[Mr. Gray.]

CITIZENSHIP

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN REGULATIONS AGAINST ALIEN HUSBANDS—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO ELIMINATE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the minister's outline today of measures designed to make immigrants feel more at home in Canada, and in view of the fact that an alien woman marrying a Canadian citizen can become a Canadian at the end of one year, while the alien husband of a Canadian woman must wait five years to become a Canadian citizen, does the minister intend to introduce legislation this session to wipe out this discrimination against the male sex?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Not this session, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Can the minister tell the House if and when the government, if it survives, intends to introduce such long overdue legislation?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, the problem has nothing to do with survival; it has to do with a rather crowded order paper. As the hon. member knows, there are amendments to the Citizenship Act which I and other members would like to make and it will all be done at such time as I can negotiate with the House leader.

AIR CANADA

NEW APPAREL FOR STEWARDESSES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the concern expressed earlier this week at a meeting of air stewardesses in Toronto that the new non-uniform for Air Canada stewardesses could lead to great difficulty in times of emergency—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Explain!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): —in terms of maintaining order in times of emergency because of difficulty in telling stewardesses from passengers, would the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth has a supplementary from yesterday.

PENITENTIARIES

MEDIUM SECURITY INSTITUTIONS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INSTRUCTIONS FOR UPGRADING

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to ask a supplementary from yesterday but if it will get me recognition I certainly will. My question is to the Solicitor General. Will the minister table in the House the document he referred to giving directions for the upgrading of the facilities surrounding medium security prisons in Canada?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said there was a document. I said that instructions were given—

An hon. Member: Somebody stole it.

Mr. Allmand: I will check whether instructions were given by telephone, wire, or special document and see what can be done to answer the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

ALLEGED STUDY DECLARING ARCTIC OIL RAILWAY PROPOSALS UNREALISTIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of a report prepared by the Canadian Transport Commission which discounted the Arctic oil railway proposals and concluded that they were unrealistic?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED PROPOSAL TO SELL AVIS TRANSPORT TO UNITED STATES PURCHASER—REQUEST FOR DELAY

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the reports of the imminent sale of 71.4 per cent of the shares of Avis Transport of Canada Limited, of which the minister and some members of his family are major shareholders, to a United States purchaser for $2.6 million, would the minister consider postponing the sale until the passage of the foreign takeover bill so that such sale could be judged under the provisions of the act?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of a trust, unfortunately, I have no control over the sale or otherwise. I should point out I have been given to understand that if the sale goes through it will be in conformity with the terms of the act.

HEALTH

REMOVAL OF DRUG SISTOSAN FROM APPROVED LIST—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that sistosan, the anti-haemorrhagic drug developed by Dr. Luigi Pancaro of Sudbury, has been removed from the approved list by the food and drug administration after being in use for 33 years and the doctor has not been given a reason for this, would the minister undertake to issue a statement on why the drug was removed?

● (1510)

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the drug was removed because it was found ineffective.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Edmonton West and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact the drug was on the market from 1934 to 1967, how can the minister say it was ineffective when it was in use for 33 years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously argument, not a supplementary question.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED CUT IN TAX ON CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN MANUFACTURING AND PROCESSING—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister consider favourably a request that he table on Friday the regulations that will define manufacturing and processing profits as defined within the act and as required by the proposal he is making, with regard to the cut in taxation on corporate profits?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 4318).

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French Language Units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the special order made Tuesday, June 5, 1973, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred vote. The question is on the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

[Translation]

Pursuant to special order made on June 5, 1973, the House will now proceed to the recorded division on the amendment proposed by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, if they all run away they will obviously understand nothing.

We have just voted on one amendment. I do not think I am entitled to comment on this vote. However, what I find strange in the resolution of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is its lack of clarification. For instance, I went through the nine points submitted to Parliament. We have just decided that this resolution cannot become law but will still remain a resolution. Paragraph (6) reads as follows, and I quote:

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

I think that this completely destroys the resolution.

On television last night I heard the remarks of the member for Matane (Mr. De Bané). He was saying that this resolution will not in the least improve the situation.

Generally speaking, I agree. For the last few years we have been talking about official languages, bilingualism, equal treatment for French- and English-speaking Canadians and after three of four years of tentative action here and there we hear the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Spicer, say that bilingualism has become a gross farce to the disadvantage of French-Canadians.

I do not intend to fight the assistance which the government wants to grant to our linguistic elements. However, I must quote a statement made by the former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), as recorded on page 4396 of Hansard of June 4:

—He did not tell—

—meaning the Prime Minister—

—He did not tell the House why it is that at a time when critical national issues confront us, parliament is being asked by the Prime Minister to masticate material already digested.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member used polite terms to say roughly what the Prime Minister said to the Lapalme boys a few years back.

The discussion of the past few days allows us to repeat what we have been saying for a number of years, that those are only pious wishes expressed in the House. In fact, even during this session we have seen how various departments make light of bilingualism or biculturalism and care little about treating English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians equally.

I have here a letter from the Department of Transport—the minister just left—addressed to:

Champlain Service
Emilien Dubé
Rivière Portneuf
Saguenay, Québec

Mr. Dubé does not know a word of English. But he is sent a document which reads as follows:

Transport Canada Transports Canada NEWS—NOUVELLES

It is entirely in English, two full pages, and not a word of French. The Department of Transport and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) sent that news letter to Rivière Portneuf in the Saguenay area to Mr. Dubé who does not know a single word of English.

An hon. Member: It is a mistake!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It is a mistake? Then let us take another department, Mr. Speaker. I have here another letter, and I quote:

Plant Products Division Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0C5
May 29, 1973

Mr. Louis Paquin
77 Rue St. Thomas
Montmagny, P.Q.

Mr. Paquin does not know a word of English. He received a letter signed by:

R. H. Davidson
Feed Unit

It is certainly not "fed" neither in English nor in French.

Mr. Speaker, that is a letter written entirely in English from one of the divisions of the Department of Agriculture, and this occurred after three, four or five trial years.

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker, eleven years ago, when I was requesting from Air Canada more French spoken by its stewardesses, I used to receive the following reply: Yes, this is going to be improved.

When we were elected in 1962, the Parliamentary Rules were written in English and I must pay tribute to the former Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who gave instructions to translate the Parliamentary Rules into French as early as 1962.

At present we travel by plane, for instance, between Montreal and Vancouver. It still happens that we cannot get a French answer on the plane. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against a young lady—whether her name is Smith, Lanier, Caouette or Trudeau, I do not mind—but let them give us services in both languages! I would object if a stewardess could not speak English to English-speaking passengers. I am convinced that no English-speaking Canadians would tolerate unilingualism on Air Canada flights, over the CBC or in any other Crown Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, this is not asking too much but we have not yet succeeded in obtaining it and now the government is putting forward a resolution which says that any incumbent of an English unilingual position may elect to undertake French language training and keep his position if he wants to, even though he does not want to become bilingual. This is the whole matter which generates division throughout Canada.

We are spending millions of dollars to tell English-speaking Canadians to learn French, and French-speaking Canadians to learn English, although we will never succeed in making an English speaking individual out of a French Canadian nor a French speaking individual out of an English speaking one. This is a point that we must always keep in mind. We will never succeed in doing it.

But we must find a solution that seems acceptable to both groups, a solution allowing English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians to preserve their respective characteristics. I note that for the past three, four or five days the resolution has been criticized by all opposition leaders and by other members. At one point, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) decided to move an amendment aimed at giving the force of law to a useless resolution. This is far from being very bright.

Mr. Speaker, we would like to move an amendment. My friend the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) referred to it last Thursday and I would like to develop those points which we want to explain clearly in this House and outside for the benefit of all Canadians.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

> That the motion be amended by removing, after "the foregoing:" in the fourth paragraph, the nine principles which are listed, and substituting therefor the following:
> (1) Bilingualism cannot be considered as a basic factor of qualification.

That is clear. If an English-speaking person is more qualified than a bilingual person in a certain field, he must be given the job even though he is unilingual. In doing so, we respect both the English- and French-speaking people in Canada. This would work both ways. We should not look for difficulties where there are none as we are doing right now.

A moment ago, I referred to airline stewardesses. Mr. Speaker, often times, a unilingual English stewardess gets a job with Air Canada. But a French Canadian stewardess who is not bilingual cannot get a job even in Montreal, even in Rouyn-Noranda, my hometown. Why should one have to speak two languages and the other be accepted though unilingual?

If we had truly parallel administrations for the whole nation we would not have the kind of situation we have at present. Then, as specified in our amendment, and I quote:

> (1) that bilingualism cannot be considered as an essential factor of competence;
> (2) that the knowledge of both official languages is required only for administrative positions where it becomes a criterion of competence, such as telephone operator, hostess, train conductor, receptionist, etc.;

In such cases, the knowledge of both languages may be required.

> (3) that everyone is free to speak the language of his or her choice in Canada;

I find it rather stupid to tell a civil servant: If you want to save your job, learn French. In fact, why should we tell a man of 50: Learn the other language or you might lose your job, you will be transferred or we will make changes which will upset everything. When someone is 50 years old, it is not the right time to tell him: Learn the second language that you must know.

I said it everywhere in Canada: If we want one day both languages to be known throughout Canada, let us start in the first grade to teach both official languages to our children and in less than five years, we will have people who speak French in British Columbia, in Nova Scotia, in Quebec and in Ontario.

Then, it might be done, but nobody should have to learn another language at 50, especially if we must spend hundreds of millions of dollars and tell people: Learn this language, we will help you. Then again, there are more Anglo-Saxons to help than French Canadians who speak French; so English people are given more opportunities to learn French and French people to learn English.

Mr. Speaker, I go on quoting our amendment:

> (4) that, account being taken of geographical and demographical circumstances, everyone in Canada has the right to be served and administered in the official language of his or her choice;
> (5) that unilingualism cannot prevent a civil servant in the Canadian government from being eligible for senior positions; . . .

That means that all present public servants would keep their positions if we applied a really Canadian national policy.

I resume the quotation:

> . . . therefore, the government undertakes to set up, organize and implement a parallel administration, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, in all departments of the federal government;

It is being done at the present time in the CBC, for instance, where there is an English network and a French network. That was established by the government of that time.

We have Air Canada with an English section and a French section. We have a president of our own and the English section also has its own. Do we ever see the English or the French squabbling over senior positions in Air Canada?

An hon. Member: . . . in the CBC.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I said the CBC.

An hon. Member: No, you said Air Canada.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Maybe, but I meant the CBC, where there are two presidents.

Now, we are not asking for the appointment of two ministers, but for two deputy ministers, and parallel administrations in all the Federal government departments. Thus, each department would have two sections: one English and one French. The size of each would depend on the needs. They would not have the same number of employees, of course, as there are fewer French-speaking Canadians than English-speaking Canadians.

Coming back to the amendment, I quote:

● (1600)

. . . the size of these sections shall be proportional to the requirements of their respective administrative needs, which means that the departments shall not necessarily have the same number of employees;

(b) these departments shall be autonomous entities with equal responsibilities up to the deputy minister level.

It would not matter whether the minister be French-speaking or English-speaking!

I continue the quotation:

. . . both the English-speaking and the French-speaking deputy ministers having similar authority and similar responsibilities;

Had we implemented that principle, we would not receive such letters in the Saguenay area, in Montmagny, or in areas of the province of Quebec where only French is spoken.

Mr. Speaker, paragraph (c) reads as follows:

promotions in each department shall be based exclusively on merit.

Promotion should be granted to a civil servant not because he speaks French or English, but because of his actual skills.

Those are the points we would like this House to understand so we can finally stop quarrelling all across Canada and hearing the Anglo-Saxons say that French-speaking Canadians demand too much and French-speaking Canadians complain that English take everything.

Mr. Speaker, with parallel administrations, we would certainly have gained much ground. For instance, when you see that $29,000 are now being spent in trying to make someone bilingual with hardly any positive results, that $54,000 or $55,000 are being spent to allow someone to learn the other culture in Canada, you must agree that these things will never be accepted by Canadians as a whole.

Someone will probably ask me: What is it going to cost the government? It will cost national unity. And we will achieve national unity provided the identity of everyone is respected, provided equal opportunity is given every Canadian with a law that allows everyone to be himself.

Mr. Speaker, as to the resolution moved by the right hon. Prime Minister, I did not attend the cabinet meeting, but I was told by a member of the Liberal party that the whole story was fabricated, made up and presented to the government by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Then, if everything is settled in advance, why do we discuss those questions here? If the civil servants are the ones who decide for the government, who say to the government: We are in charge, and you are going to act in such and such a way, why then should a resolution be submitted to us?

In a debate as this one, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the whole resolution is defeated by the sixth principle and the last paragraph which reads as follows:

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the public service, through increasing, where practical, the number of French language units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the national capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the public service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

This is again total confusion. In one paragraph the objective is to save national unity whereas in another paragraph it is attacked. A third paragraph states: You can remain what you are; if you are not satisfied, do something else.

We are presenting objectively our amendement to the House and we believe that parallel administrations would be no disappointment to anyone ans would be helpful to everyone. We would no longer hear an English civil servant say: Down with French civil servants and vice versa but Canadians would be on the same footing before the law and the same chances would be offered to all Canadians.

That is the amendment we are proposing and I hope the House will study it most carefully.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue) seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting, after the words "the foregoing" in the fourth paragraph, the nine Principles listed therein and substituting therefor the following Principles:

(1) that bilingualism cannot be considered as an essential factor of competence;

(2) that the knowledge of both official languages is required only for administrative positions where it becomes a criterion of competence, such as telephone operator, hostess, train conductor, receptionist, etc.;

(3) that everyone is free to speak the language of his or her choice in Canada;

(4) that, account being taken of geographical and demographical circumstances, everyone in Canada has the right to be served and administered in the official language of his or her choice;

(5) that unilingualism cannot prevent a civil servant in the Canadian government from being eligible for senior positions; therefore, the government undertakes to set up, organize and implement a parallel administration, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, in all departments of the federal government;

(a) each department shall have two sections, one English, the other French; the size of these sections shall be proportional to the requirements of their respective administrative needs, which means that the departments shall not necessarily have the same number of employees;

(b) these departments shall be autonomous entities with equal responsibilities up to the deputy minister level, both the English-speaking and the French-speaking deputy ministers having similar authority and similar responsibilities;

(c) promotions in each department shall be based exclusively on merit.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we all have certain oratorical cliches. One of mine is that I usually begin participation in debate by saying it is a great pleasure to take part in the debate. I do not say that this time. Indeed, I enter this debate with a certain heaviness of heart because I have a feeling that the whole discussion is not likely to be helpful, although I will say, and say with sincerity, that there have been speeches of a very high order and among those I would list that of my leader, that of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) and that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). However, there have been other utterances, and I regret to say some of them by the Prime Minister, in this House which have not indicated statesmanship and which have not been conducive to national unity.

I heard the Prime Minister when he spoke on the draft address and I also recall—I wish I did not—his malicious oratory when he spoke of certain people ending up as elevator operators. On this issue, there have been too many irritants and too many occasions when thoughtful silence would have been preferable to the smart utterance. I do not wish to denigrate a public servant and suggest that one utterance should characterize his whole performance, but I think Mr. Spicer's remarks about the Rhodesians might have been far better left unsaid. I heard him also on the radio last Sunday and I thought, when one woman phoned in and said that one of her children had learned French and the other had not, I had detected his approach of zeroing in on the one that had not, rather than of commending her in respect of the one that had. I have been in public life long enough to know it is much easier to catch the attention of the press and the public by the dramatic overstatement. Indeed, if he seeks publicity, the way of the moderate is hard.

While regretting the introduction of this measure at this time, and deploring the extremists on either side of the argument, I certainly plan to support this resolution and thereby renew my commitment to bilingualism, no matter how imperfect and sometimes hurtful has been its implementation so far. There is no immutable law, no certainty which declares that this Dominion shall endure. But it is my determination and my commitment that no intemperate remark of mine, no unwillingness to compromise, no unreadiness to understand others' views and aspirations will make even a tiny contribution to the weakening of the great experiment in nation building which began in my province, and indeed in my constituency in 1864.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: If I did not make this clear commitment I think I would be unworthy to represent the cradle of Confederation.

The Prime Minister the other night expressed the view that the existence of two official languages was not primarily because of any historical founding rights. I am inclined to give more weight to history on this matter. The British North America Act, the product of compromise and conciliation of the men of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island did establish a bilingual parliament. This matter was formally settled over a century ago. About that particular document and that particular provision the great Liberal historian Professor Lower, has said:

Similarly, the spirit of the Act, removed all distinction of status between French and English. The Act symbolized an agreement between the races to live and let live and gave a formula for the solution of the antagonisms that had brought the wheels of government to a stop. French speaking Canadians could only point to one or two specific clauses in hard legal support of their 'rights', but their claim would be that there were but 'the evidence of things unseen', the crystallization into law of understandings reached behind the scenes, of the compromises and mutual confidence which alone could have brought forth Confederation.

In Confederation, English and French, after a stormy courtship, took each other for better or worse, and whether the marriage had much prospect of being happy or not, it must, like other marriages create a reasonable degree of equality between the contracting parties.

● (1610)

I love to quote Professor Lower, who was one of the greatest teachers I ever had, and one of the greatest Liberals I ever ran across. The last time I saw him I gave him a little party in Charlottetown, and when he took leave of me he said: "I wish you well, Heath, even though you are a Conservative."

I mention the British North America Act because surely if the parliament of the country is to be bilingual, and to be established as bilingual, it is normal and natural to assume that the administrative bureaucracy through which parliament functions should reflect that bilingualism. Doubtless part of our anguish and frustration today stems from the fact that we are seeking to do in a decade what was essentially neglected for ten.

I listened carefully to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). I always listen to him, Mr. Speaker. I honour him as a good federalist. He comes out with some strange ideas at times, and with some practical suggestions too. When he refers to the delay in making bilingualism a fact I am very much in sympathy with him. He mentioned Beauchesne. When I came to this House Beauchesne was available only in English, and God knows it is hard enough to understand even written in your own language. Here I mention that Dr. Beauchesne was not a Scottish Canadian. His book was printed in English from 1922 to 1959, and its publication in French was one of the fine things that did take place under the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), that and simultaneous translation in this chamber. Until 1959, French speaking members had the right to speak, but not the technical right to be heard by those who did not know their language. And of course, it worked the other way also.

As has been noted in this debate previously, principally by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) who made a most excellent speech, the earlier emotional tensions and divisions in this country were more heavily weighted on the religious rather than the linguistic side. Even the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier could write as late as 1911:

It is becoming more and more manifest to me that it was not reciprocity that was turned down but a Catholic premier.

Making allowance for the shock and pain which we are told is felt by all holders of high office on defeat, it is interesting that Laurier felt no repudiation of his ethnic background or linguistic category. Tension, then, was over religion.

But these strains did come very close, down through our history, to being a continuation of what Lord Durham described in 1837 as "two nations warring in the bosom of a single state." Deep cleavages such as those over separate schools, the autonomy bills of 1905, the ne tempere decree, and regulation 17 have been with this country down through the generations, and we are naïve to think that the question of disunity is unique to our day and age. Indeed, since we became a country it has always been the test of statesmanship to resist and diminish the centrifugal forces which in Canada, in such a vast country, come into play far too easily. Confederation was not easily attained. We have always underestimated the eminence of the Macdonalds, Cartiers, Browns, McGees, Tuppers and others who were great nation builders. It was not easy for them to bring the country together. Nor is it easy to keep it together. Without goodwill, moderation, reasonableness and conciliation it will not hold together.

Reference has been made more than once to Sir John A. Macdonald, the founder of my party and, I think, the chief founder of the country. He had many virtues and some vices. But while he could be intemperate in some things he was ever temperate, wise and moderate on the issue of relations between the two major groups comprising the dominion. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) quoted Sir John the other night in direct reference to the language issue, when Macdonald said:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other; I believe that it would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible.

Those are fine, wonderful words. Many years ago Sir John A. Macdonald wrote to a Montreal editor, and I am sure many hon. members are familiar with this quotation:

> The trouble is that you British Canadians can never forget that you were once supreme, that John Baptiste was once your hewer of wood and drawer of water. You struggle for ascendency. If a lower Canadian Britisher desires to conquer he must stoop to conquer. He must make friends with the French without sacrificing the principles of his race or lineage. He must respect their nationality. Treat them as a nation and they will act as a free people generally do—generously. Treat them as a faction and they will become factious.

The phraseology is antique but the spirit, the sentiment is there. And of that particular passage again my old mentor, Professor Lower, wrote:

> —wise words, the beginning and end of our Canadian puzzle but by few indeed taken to heart.

I give one final quote from Dr. Lower, who must love to be forming part of a Progressive Conservative member's speech! Here, I recall what he said about Macdonald:

> —his stand with respect to the race question was consistent throughout his life whatever the cost to himself . . . he refused to raise the race cry at a time when he was in low political water.

I am proud that the father of my party in this, the eighty-second anniversay of his death, left such noble sentiments to guide us on this very serious matter. In these difficult days it is our task, indeed our duty, to ameliorate not exacerbate those things which might divide us, moderate not accentuate the irritants which could weaken the frail fabric of federation, and at times indeed it appears frail. It is my belief that we would be unworthy of our present and our past if we brought to an end the experiment launched with wisdom and foresight by our political ancestors in Charlottetown in 1864. I intend to do my humble bit to help strengthen the dynamic unity of this country.

The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) on Monday praised the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I appreciate and I echo his sentiments. There is a deal of personalizing entering into this debate. Mr. Speaker, I attended my first political meeting at the age of 11, and I have had the privilege of knowing the greats and the near greats of my party over a good many years. I remember all the numerous defeats and the few victories, and it is an honour to know those who are dedicated to a political party because I believe that Lord Bryce is right, that parliamentary democracy cannot function without political parties.

I have never been reluctant to parade my belief in political parties, and in their function. I would like to say I rejoice in the mind and in the manner of the man who is now our leader. Him I have known for 25 years. I was extremely young when I first met him! He came to the leadership of our party pledged to do his utmost for the unity of Canada. He has adhered to that pledge, and no man of all the men who have led our party with honour and distinction, and I am not reluctant to praise them all, no man has been more honourable, more consistent, more faithful in his determination to place country ahead of party, and the unity of the nation ahead of any seeming temporary partisan or political advantage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: One of the great statesmen of an earlier age said that the worst ill which could befall any country would be for it to be divided on political lines paralleling lines of race or lines of religion. He said that that kind of strain no political entity could stand. To those who look only superficially, we might appear to be close to that situation in Canada today, but I say that those who look more deeply than that, know in fact that that is not the case.

● (1620)

One of the things of which I was most proud in the Leader of the Opposition—and I know he will not care for these references I am making—was that after the election on October 30, when it would have been natural and normal that he might have been disappointed in the response to his program and of his people in the province of Quebec, he wasted no time in recriminating, no time in repining, no time in regretting but said straightforwardly, simply and sincerely, "I would not feel content about forming a government with little representation from Quebec". This was a speech that he made in Edmonton, after that near miss on October 30. It is my belief that he will be forming a government and that he will be having representation from Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Indeed, the more I see at close hand our new member from Quebec, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) I say that our setback there was only numerical and it is only temporary. Him, I honour as a man who serves his province, who serves his country with dignity, with presence, with moderation and with wisdom and I would class him, although he may not enjoy this sort of adulation either, as the modern Cartier of this nation. I think when this matter is disposed of and we move on to pressing things of an economic nature, that it is for all of us to set aside our differences, to ameliorate dissention and to make sure that in the development of the concept of bilingualism people are not injured. This, of course, is the great problem, when you take a good idea and apply it people are injured. This has been the problem that has caused anxiety to many, many Canadians.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). I cannot say his resolution commends itself to me or to my colleagues. It seems to me that to follow the course which he has mapped out, to support the resolution which he has advanced would, for a long time to come, give firmness and fabric to the very thing we do not want in this country, that is the continuation of the two solitudes, an expression that a distinguished Maritimer and great author used some years ago. I think we should be standing together and we should be governing the country together.

Not all of us will speak the same tongue. I notice that most people in this debate have expressed some of their remarks in English and some in French. I am not so confident of national unity that I would attempt to speak in French! I commend the present Leader of the Opposition who has become bilingual, and I commend members in the Social Credit Party for what they have done in this regard. But, as for their resolution, we do not want to preserve, to jell, the separation of our groups. We want to find ways where meaningfully we can work together to make the country the land of all, regardless of background. This surely was the vision of those who met in Charlottetown and Quebec City; this is what it was about.

I never liked to hear this expression "the patriation of the constitution"; I maintain the expression is "repatriation" because the constitution was made in Canada by Canadians, by people of the dominion and it was only a technicality that caused it to be processed in Britain. It was our achievement, by our great men of the nation, of the dominion. At times like this we have to be on the alert for those things which would divide that unity, which would diminish that entity, which was created by our political forefathers, men of wisdom, men of reason, men of understanding, men of broad vision. We must keep these visions of tolerance and understanding. These are the keynotes, these are what are called for in difficult days. In its application, bilingualism is difficult. People will be inconvenienced and worse, but we must set our eyes upon a high and noble goal and we must work together for it.

The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) was wondering about the motives of this resolution. I profoundly hope that no one introduced this measure as a device to diminish the effectiveness of my political party. I profoundly hope that this is not the case but I am in a position to say—and I am not a stripling in the party any more—that any one who had that illusion was totally wrong. Our party is not a newcomer when it comes to concern for national unity. Down through the ages we have held beliefs and initiated practices that put us in the position where we have to take a back seat to no other group. Not that I am boasting that we are better than others or that we have more regard, but we have not been unmindful of those things which unite rather than divide the country.

In conclusion, I am happy to say that we are led by a man, the present Leader of the Opposition, who, while he may be short on charisma is long on character and who will give that kind of leadership in his present role as well as a role which will come his way before long I think, that will cause Canadians of all backgrounds and different languages to be confident that he is a fit and proper repository of their confidence, a man who has the statesmanlike qualities which marked men like Macdonald and Laurier, men of moderation and goodwill who have generally been the people in whom the Canadian people have reposed their confidence for the longest periods.

So, Mr. Speaker, while I have noted and deplored some of the irritating features of this matter, I renew my commitment to the principle of bilingualism. May it be a hopeful factor for building a better Canada; may it be a factor causing all Canadians to feel that this indeed is a land worthy of their confidence, worthy of continuing fidelity. I hope we will not soon again have to be asked to renew our belief in something which most of us made clear only a few years ago. Let us say that now the issue has been settled, let us make bilingualism work with fairness with justice, with efficiency for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues tell me they are all behind me, and I shall feel secure—until I turn round. Being the whip of my party, I have sometimes tried to convince members not to take part in a debate in order to allow quick passage of a bill or resolution. However, in this debate I understand their feelings when they say they wish to speak. Having listened to the debate on this resolution, I feel that there is room and need for some of us who represent western prairie areas to express our feelings and opinions, in view of some of the remarks which have been made in this House.

I want to make my position perfectly clear. I do and will support the Official Languages Act. I do and will support the resolution presently before the House, even, I might add, if my party were of a contrary opinion to the one it presently holds, and they are not of that contrary opinion. Some speakers in this chamber have questioned our sincerity in debating this measure at this time. There is no greater question that this one relating to the unity of our country and its future. Any matter relating to that, whether it be the resolution concerning employment in the public service or the Official Languages Act, ought, without doubt, to be debated in this House when necessary.

There are in this House fellow westerners whose opinions I have respected over the years. Included among them is the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I have always admired and respected him in his pursuit of his political career. Let me point out to them why it is necessary to debate this kind of resolution. In the past, authority has been exercised in such a manner that the relevance of this House has been brought into question by members, particularly by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who has complained about the erosion of the powers of parliament. Therefore, I am pleased to see this resolution openly and freely debated in the House. I believe it is a resolution of importance and significance. I know of no place other than parliament where this question can be so effectively debated. Certainly, in this House we consider questions relating to national unity and questions of an economic nature. For a long time my party has espoused or proposed certain changes in our economic system in an attempt to solve those problems that divide our country on economic grounds. I will continue speaking on that subject as well, as I am sure the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) is well aware.

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) made an excellent speech today and enunciated the position that ought to be taken by members of parliament of this country and by the people of Canada generally. On our national coat-of-arms, if one cares to call it that, one will see a slogan that, translated, reads "From sea unto sea". Sometimes, in listening to debates in the House, in listening to my constituents and to people from all across Canada, I have felt that one word ought to be added to that motto—toleration. Our motto ought to read, "Toleration from sea unto sea". This nation cannot continue to exist if the two founding races, and the other races which have come to this country,—I use those words in a proper way—cannot learn to work together and function in an atmosphere of toleration. I believe that if one is a student, as I am, of Canadian history, one will find that this nation is unique. That cannot be denied.

I fear for its economic future because of foreign control and ownership of our resources. But Canada has maintained its identity as an independent nation of North America by reason of the operation of certain social and cultural forces. There are varied elements in our population. They are different. I believe that the difference of our cultural development, the difference of outlook, the difference in our social input, if you like, is to be attributed to the influence of the French fact, if one cares to call it that, in Canada. The fact that 7 million people living in one province use a language different from that in common use in North America, the fact that in areas like Saskatchewan there are thousands of French Canadians who are still adept at expressing themselves in French and in English, has, above all else in this country, helped us to maintain ourselves as an independent nation, as a nation together, instead of as a nation swallowed up by the United States of America. I have been talking about cultural matters and not economic matters. The cultural aspect of our country is, as I said, tremendously important in keeping this country together.

This resolution before the House, which I support, clarifies some aspects of bilingualism, as that relates to the public service. In this connection I wish to read an article written by Mr. Carson. The headline is "Bilingualism in the public service". I shall read this to show why I hold the view I do. It reads in part:

> We have undertaken, and will continue to undertake, programs aimed at attracting an increased number of French-speaking Canadians into the public service. We are very mindful of the fact that in the past, French-speaking Canadians have not had an even break when it came to being considered for a job in the public service. The current population of the service in the key occupations—the executive, scientific and profession, administration and foreign service, and technical categories—is 67,661. Of that total, 55,324 or 81.8 per cent are English-speaking and 12,337 or 18.2 per cent are French-speaking.
> Given that the population breakdown in the country at large is about 28 per cent French-speaking to 72 per cent English-speaking, I would venture to say that much remains to be done before we can truly say that the public service is representative of the two main linguistic groups in Canada . . .
> The overwhelming and traditional anglophone influence in the public service generates enough pressure to actually work against equal opportunity for French-speaking Canadians competing for jobs in the public service. Special recruitment programs help to counteract such pressure. During 1971, for example, 589 university students were recruited under the regular program, 449 of whom were English-speaking and 140 of whom spoke French as their mother tongue but were sufficiently bilingual to work in English, as we have traditionally required. One can see that our regular recruitment programs are not enough to attract and engage a sufficient number of French-speaking Canadians to offset this influence. With the addition of a special recruitment program, the French-speaking university recruitment total was raised to 398—not enough to redress the balance, but a step in the right direction.

The figures used show why the Parliament of Canada needs to deal with the problem respecting bilingualism in the Public Service. I believe that many problems were created because of the manner in which the government tried to implement its program in this regard in the last three or four years. Now, because of the result of the October 30 election, and because this is a minority parliament, the government has asked this House to express itself on a resolution, in an attempt to straighten out or accommodate the situation within the public service. I believe the resolution should be given full support. I commend the leader of my party for his position, other members of my party and other members of the House as well, who, as I do, support the resolution.

If we are to examine the future of this country, we have to recognize that this federal system has reached the position where in the next decade or so it must truly accommodate the fact that this is a bilingual nation, the fact there are two founding races, English and French. There must be tolerance to allow resolutions such as this to be discussed in parliament and by the public in a sound and rational manner in order to allow a continuing growth, not a tearing apart of this dominion of Canada.

I wish to deal with one aspect of this question which may interest members who participate in this debate. Some members have mentioned that unilingual French Canadians have difficulty getting jobs in the Public Service of Canada. I notice that most grievances filed under the Official Languages Act have been from unilingual Canadians of French background. Some hon. members, including a colleague on this side of the House, spoke of English Canadians who have become very angry because a position has been designated as bilingual. They thought the program was all wrong. Therefore, there are these two forces creating tension.

In western Canada there are large settlements of French Canadians whose ancestors were pioneers. For example, in my constituency there are 4,000 to 6,000 individuals whose mother tongue is French. Some of the leaders in their society have a different view toward the Official Languages Act. Originally, they did not think it was very effective. They thought it was merely an attempt to get Quebec to feel part of this nation. Even though the area in which they live has been designated as a bilingual district, they thought the Language Act was a sop to Quebec and they were being left out of the picture. These people have struggled to maintain their group, as have many other groups in the province of Saskatchewan. These people have the only bilingual school that I am aware of in the province of Saskatchewan. They have had to fight constantly in terms of dollars and cents to keep that college in operation. I have never been more proud of a situation than when I attended the graduation ceremonies at College Mathieu three weeks ago. That is an example of a bilingual school teaching the two official languages of this country. Students were able to make their addresses and replies to different toasts and so on in the two official languages. That is an example of the kind of development there ought to be in Canada in terms of the use of another language by both major groups.

I realize that the party across the way has moved an amendment. I will cease my discussion on this matter as I am sure they wish to have more members participate. I will end on this note. The most important aspect of this question is for those of us who believe in tolerance and accommodation to accept that moral obligation. We must express that toleration and accommodation by supporting the principles and the carrying out of the Official Languages Act in a just and judicial manner. We must listen, conciliate and, at times, compromise. We must ensure that that accommodation and tolerance operate to maintain national unity in this country of Canada, which all of us want to see continue to exist.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the debate on the motion introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with a view to reopening a meaningless debate on bilingualism, I dreaded with some bitterness taking part in it because it seemed abnormal to me that in 1973, after a federal election, we should have to come back to the question of bilingualism in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the main motion which gave rise to this debate and prompted our leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), to move his motion a moment ago, is in my opinion—especially after listening to several speakers in this House—a device used by the great political parties, among others, to save face. That seems to me to be the purport of all the speeches I have heard.

● (1650)

I remember that after the election of October 30, 1972, in which the government had lost an almost unprecedented majority, the right hon. Prime Minister accused the Progressive Conservatives of having made contradictory statements during the election campaign on the Canadian language problem; he said that at that time threats had been made on both sides and that in the Speech from the Throne, he would propose a resolution on bilingualism to settle this matter.

Now, this resolution was tabled in April and it is under study. The more I read it, Mr. Speaker, the more I find it unacceptable, hard to understand and to support. In fact, this motion does not change anything at all.

We must understand that a law called "Official Languages Act" has already been before Parliament. We must also understand that all the departments, since 1968, are governed by the bilingual policy generally based on the requirements of the Official Languages Act which was adopted by this Parliament and which recognizes an equal status to the two languages in the Civil Service and in Canada.

The departments are also guided by the Public Service Employment Act, the Translation Bureau Act and by the policy and directives set up by government.

But, before continuing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the position of the Commissioner of Official Languages was created, as well as inquiry commissions. There was the Coulombe inquiry, within the Treasury Board. There was the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism that spent millions of dollars to learn what language people were speaking in Canada. It was discovered that in some regions of the country, people spoke English and that in others, they spoke French.

Since then, one concept is replaced by another: the concept of two nations, the concept of one nation, Francophones versus Anglophones, and we say: The others are to blame.

Within the various departments, within the Public Service, official statistics readily prove that not only is there no progress being made, but that several departments are moving backwards.

I know that many government members or others will say: That is not true. Then I will refer them to Hansard for Wednesday, May 16, 1973. As a result of such findings, our party has been prompted for a number of years to move a positive motion, and we will support it all the way.

Let us take the case of the National Defence Department. The minister will rise in the House and stand up for his department saying that bilingualism there is a fantastic achievement and that they spend thousands of dollars for that purpose. Let us read question No. 482 put on order paper by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) regarding the National Defence Department, and I quote:

> 2. What number and total percentage of that department's employees are (a) English unilingual (b) French unilingual (c) bilingual?

Here is the answer:

> 2. On 31 December, 1972, there were (a) 61,960 (76%) unilingual Anglophones (b) 10,422 (13%) unilingual Francophones . . .

Let us consider, for instance, the Manpower and Immigration Department and the significance of our motion will be obvious. Some day we will have to bow to facts.

I go on quoting:

2. What number and total percentage of that department's employees are (a) English unilingual (b) French unilingual (c) bilingual?

Now, regarding the Department of Manpower and Immigration, despite the Official Languages Act, promises and pious wishes from this and preceding governments, are we to believe that this department does not have such information? It does not know how many of its employees are unilingual English, unilingual French and bilingual. It does not know and I would be curious to hear the minister (Mr. Andras) tell us what he thinks about the bilingualism possibilities, progress of bilingualism and respect for both languages in his department.

The reply is this and I quote:

The information is not available from departmental records.

Yet, in the very same department, $111,000 were invested in 1970-71 for bilingualism, but bilingualism for whom, Mr. Speaker, if no one has not even any information available, if it is not even known who has been following these courses? What was the classification of the employees who took this course?

Do you realize that this department which spent $174,000 to develop bilingualism during fiscal year 1971-72, and which will spend $671,000 during fiscal year 1972-73, does not even know how many of its employees speak only French or English, and how many are bilingual?

To speak plainly, this is a policy worthy of an ostrich. This motion which has been presented to divert people and continue to divide Canadians, will solve nothing. On the contrary. The civil servant whose rights have been encroached upon and who tries to avail himself of this motion will eventually realize that, because it is only a declaration of principles, this motion has no legal value in court.

Mr. Speaker, for the Department of Manpower and Immigration to spend $671,000 on bilingualism without actually knowing the number of civil servants taking these courses is a disgrace.

Let us take for instance the Department of Labour. Maybe we shall finally find a department that works? Same question: Unilingual English-speaking employees:

2. a) 482, 71.4 per cent;

Unilingual French-speaking employees:

b) 1;

This means that bilingualism applied at the expense of French-Canadians through those courses, and this is unilateral. As the hon. member for Témiscamingue stated earlier, the opportunities for becoming bilingual are much greater—at any rate they are disproportionate—for the English-speaking civil servants than for the French-speaking employees.

I could keep on quoting those statistics, but anyone can read. I will conclude with the Department of National Health and Welfare which is not only unable to say how many of its employees are unilingual English-speaking, unilingual French-speaking or bilingual but the answer is, as recorded on page 3821 of Hansard of May 16, and I quote:

[Mr. Fortin.]

2 and 3. Employees may only be considered as officially bilingual on the basis of having successfully completed the Public Service Commission second language proficiency test and met all standards set for their particular work category. Since this test is not compulsory, there may be certain persons who are in fact bilingual and who are not counted as such. However for the purpose of this question, all employees not bilingual, are considered to be unilingual.

These civil servants have certainly had a bright idea when they concocted this answer. And again I quote:

. . . There is at present, no basis for officially identifying unilingual French or unilingual English employees. The information requested in paragraphs 2 and 3 were not available before 1971. Listed below are the data . . .

This is the dead-end you reach with this bilingual policy advocated by the right hon. Prime Minister who is trying to turn French-speaking people into English-speaking people and vice versa whereas it would be so simple to leave everyone as they are and at a much lesser cost.

● (1700)

Mr. Speaker, an article published in Le Devoir of October 19, 1972 read as follows:

The federal government's program for the teaching of a second language has been an almost complete failure during the 1966-71 period.

Regardless of the method used to assess the results, it is obvious that the program was highly ineffective and awfully expensive.

This is borne out by a report . . .

An hon. Member: Give your references.

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting from Le Devoir of October 19, 1972.

I go on reading:

. . . a report of 300 pages completed in April 1972 by Mr. André Beaudet for the Treasury Board's task force on bilingualism.

"The Language Bureau's operation costs for those five years actually reached a sum of $54 million . . .

—namely $29,000 for each public servant. And for other public servants known as "senior officials" because they run the government, it cost $55,000 for each to become sensitized to the other culture in Toronto. Mr. Speaker, this clearly leads us nowhere.

The purpose of our motion is this: Instead of trying to make an Anglophone out of a Francophone and vice versa, we want Anglophones and Francophones to be at their place in the Public Service, without prejudice to the career or promotion of either because of their language.

It is ridiculous to base competence on the bilingual factor, Mr. Speaker. Competence should be based instead on the knowledge of the individual and his superior or average ability, but not on bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify a point of our policy. Yesterday I was discussing this motion with my Liberal colleagues who said: "Parallel services do not make any sense." Mr. Speaker, to answer those who are over-critical it is obvious that a policy of parallel services is difficult to implement, for example, in the Department of External Affairs. When we are dealing with the Chinese, we surely speak their language. Money knows no language, Mr. Speaker. If our department is dealing with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it is surely with the department and not with a branch. We are referring to all the federal departments or Crown corporations dealing with the public. We want those departments to be separate, one French-speaking and the other English-speaking. It does not harm anyone and we would be upholding the rights of everyone.

When I hear in the House speeches on national unity, on this magnificient and vast country, Canada, on the importance of speaking the two languages, of course I agree, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member for Témiscamingue stated, we should do so in the early school years, we should give language training in the two languages in the schools, and the federal government could surely play an important role in the financing of this training. But we realize now that when a member of parliament or any citizen has any business to conduct with any department, and obtains a reply in English, that, Mr. Speaker, becomes unacceptable, when we know the costs of bilingualism.

What will it cost to remain oneself? When French-speaking people communicate with the Department of Veterans Affairs, once our motion is agreed to, it is absolutely sure that they will be served in their own language by this department and that they can deal in French at all levels, even if they speak to the deputy-minister.

What will that cost, Mr. Speaker? No more than the present system, under which we flounder and have to work out percentages to know if there is progress or recession, while national unity wavers.

Mr. Speaker, I had a very unfortunate experience a month and a half ago when I went before the Canadian Transport Commission to stand up for some of our students. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is going to say that he is not responsible for the Commission. But sooner or later someone will have to say he is responsible for something as far as the Commission is concerned.

I was unable to meet with anyone at the Canadian Transport Commission who spoke my language. I had to come back to my office and find someone who was bilingual on our floor. This person is fluent in both languages, better than I am. I should like to master both languages but it is a matter of time and I want to keep my own identity. In any case, I went back to the Canadian Transport Commission with this translator. The Commission could not even provide an interpreter. I was ashamed because I was accompanied by ten students and none could speak English, because they had all grown-up in a French-speaking community. And yet these young people were penalized because they spoke French, in the same way as a unilingual Francophone who would like to apply for employment with the civil service.

The fact that the applicant can speak both languages will be used as a proficiency criterion and he will be required to speak English adequately, otherwise preference will be given to a unilingual Anglophone or to a bilingual whose mother tongue is English.

Mr. Speaker, as long as we stand such a discrimination, as long as we are satisfied with pious wishes, as long as we play politics at the expense of French Canadians, we will contribute to dividing the country.

I heard Progressive Conservative members say that the Prime Minister's motion was meaningless and then they introduced a motion suggesting that this meaningless measure be written into law. Mr. Speaker, this is their kind of logic.

The Liberals who find it funny are no better. They present a motion which, they say, will solve all problems, but about which the Progressive Conservatives say: If it is that good, write it into law, and then they are against it because they do not want it to become law.

For five days now we have been wasting our time. Pretentious speeches have been made but it remains that discrimination still exists within departments and Crown corporations. The fact is that if some progress has been made in the House with regard to bilingualism, it is because some men have stood up; as long as men, in this government or in the following ones, do not really stand up—it is not a matter of taking anything away from people but of seeing to it that these linguistic rights are truly respected—we will get nowhere.

This is why we are advocating the respect of cultural entities in Canada, the respect of languages and of every citizen within the Civil service. We are advocating a policy whereby, at any time of the night or day, any Canadian citizen, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, can communicate with his government, with a department—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order please. The hon. Minister of Transport on a point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I merely wish to point out to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), that if he did not meet any French Canadians when he went to the Transport Commission, it was not because there were not any. I have here a list of the Commissioners. There is Mr. Guy Roberge, a very good French-Canadian, who is vice-president; Mr. Laval Fortier, also a French-Canadian commissioner and Mr. Talbot also, formerly with National Harbours. The hon. member was really unlucky not to meet any because there are some.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. minister for his information, but if he knows his department so well, we will be able to speak of it to him.

To question No. 473 published in the Hansard, which reads in part as follows:

What number and total percentage of that department's employees are (a) English unilingual (b) French unilingual (c) bilingual?

The following answer was given:

(a) English unilingual, 12,360, 80 per cent; (b) French unilingual, 1,558, 12 per cent.

● (1710)

To the fourth part of the question which reads in part as follows:

. . . what was the total budget allocated for the development of bilingualism in that department?

The answer is, and I quote:

4. Total budget allocated for development of bilingualism is available only for the following years: 1969-70, $92,280; 1970-71, $59,100; 1971-72, $324,754; 1972-73, $976,900.

Surely that time, I went to the Canadian Transport Commission, and I was not lucky, Mr. Speaker, for I would have liked to see at least the result of an investment of almost $1 million for bilingualism, which I was not able to do. It would have been much easier for the Canadian Transport Commission to have a French-speaking section so that there would not have been any kind of problem.

Mr. Speaker, this seems extremely important to me. A lot of things might be said about this motion, but let us think seriously about it.

In an article by Claude Ryan in the paper Le Devoir, on June 1, 1973—it is sometimes a good thing to draw inspiration from people who observe the situation from outside and some people might be surprised to hear that members of the Social Credit Party read Le Devoir—one can read about the present policy of the government, and I quote:

this policy, when considered without any partisanship, represents a strategic withdrawal more than anything else . . .

Not only does the government reserve for itself the exclusive use of a capital document which belongs to all hon. members, but it asks the House to vote on the future of bilingualism without stating itself its own approach to concrete problems which exist in this area . . .

As long as this reality will not be more clearly admitted, we will likely waste—as has been the case for seven years—millions of dollars in programs of linguistic dusting which will always have restricted results . . .

Mr. Speaker, since they came to this House the Creditists have fought for the respect of French. When you consider that during one hundred years the Standing Orders in this House were in English only, that is a real shame. And I am ashamed of those Quebec members who represented us here and never dared to stand up and demand a translation.

Mr. Speaker, it is not out of bitterness that we demand equal rights for both languages. It is strictly because it seems abnormal to us to have to fight for the respect of a language. It seems to be a natural and legitimate right and we should not be fighting for something so essential, so vital and so human.

All Canadian citizens have the right to be served in their mother tongue. All Canadian citizens under the Canadian Bill of Rights are equal before the law, but they are not treated equally—in spite of the fact that the bilingualism policy is costing millions of dollars—when they approach departments or Crown corporations.

How many more years will we have to wait before we realize that the bilingualism policy will always have to be brought up again, that it does not really serve the interests of both languages? The cost of making a public servant who is 35 or 40 bilingual is $29,000, and even then the results are patchy, some are often so hard-headed that it cannot be done. Mr. Speaker, even if we spend $55,000 to teach the other culture to a public servant, when that public servant reaches 50, he will not be able to transmit his knowledge to his replacement. We will have to start all over again.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see that when public servants are hired now, they are judged according to their linguistic knowledge, and preference is given to those who are bilingual, so that French-speaking unilinguals—the majority in Quebec—hardly has a chance to get a job in those departments, so that we will always go around in circles and continue to divide Canadians among themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the motion we introduced today is a valid one: it is positive and also suggests a solution to that problem.

We do not want to take anything from the English-speaking Canadians but we would like them to recognize the same rights to French-speaking Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it is only at that cost that every Canadian citizen will really feel at home in his country. When I am in Toronto I expect to have to speak English. When a Torontonian comes to Victoriaville, my home town, he expects to have to speak French, but when the Torontonian or someone from Victoriaville calls upon a department they expect to be served in their mother tongue. And, Mr. Speaker, the easiest way to satisfy that legitimate right of those two Canadians who are equal before the law would be to give the French-speaking Canadian unit and the English one an English unit, so that both would be treated on an equal basis.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I am eager to see this Parliament put an end to its division over matters of languages when such matters are already established facts—and that we discuss serious problems.

Bilingualism, Mr. Speaker, is obviously a serious and very important problem. This is why we are moving a positive and constructive motion to solve this problem. But, we will not do it by speaking for days and days about languages, by moving motions that mean absolutely nothing and have no value legally.

I would like the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to indicate to me what would be the use of such a motion. Let us suppose that there is an obvious injustice within a department, that an appeal is lodged as provided for in the Public Service Commission Act and that this civil servant wants to protect himself, will he be able to use that motion to defend himself? No, and the hon. minister must admit it. This is true, as the game we are playing here settles absolutely nothing. It is nothing more than small vengeance by the right hon. Prime Minister against Higher Canada and, Mr. Speaker, that does not mean anything.

In any event, I sincerely hope that all my colleagues in the House will read this motion, consider it in depth and pass judgment on its merits. If we do it in a non partisan objective manner, I believe, Mr. Speaker that all Canadians will derive something positive from this debate. It would have been useful for once, to speak about languages, because we would then have had the assurance that every Canadian will be served in his own language, without depriving anybody of anything, but in respecting the equal rights of everyone.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, it appears that once again, as in the capital punishment debate, the government has, by threat, conjoling or otherwise, ensured that a certain number of members will be denied the right to express their ideas on a matter which, rightly or wrongly, is of great concern to a number of people. I will, therefore, try to keep my remarks at a minimum. I am sure hon. members on the other side will appreciate that, in any event.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I think he should know there are no special rules in respect of a time limit on speeches in this debate. There is no special arrangement by which the hon. member would be limited to speaking only five minutes instead of 30 minutes or 40 minutes. That is not the situation.

Mr. Schumacher: I realize I am allowed 40 minutes, Mr. Speaker, but if I take that long I will be speaking from now until the vote is called, thereby being the last member to speak on this subject, and I would not like to be in that position. As a member who voted against second reading of the Official Languages Act, may I say I have no reason to regret that vote. I am only sorry that my fears concerning that legislation are being realized. The proof of that fact is that we are now engaged in this debate, less than four years after the proclamation of that legislation.

Speaking as a representative from western Canada, I would say there is no objection to, or resentment of, those persons of French origin in this country. In point of fact, western Canada was settled by people from every part of the world. We have learned to live with and judge one another for what we are, and by that I mean what we can do, what the value of our word is and the interest we take in our communities and neighbourhoods.

The fundamental fear of the bilingual program as administered by this government is simple; it is that the public service at the senior or executive level will be completely dominated by people, whether they be anglophone or francophone, from the Ottawa Valley, Quebec and northern New Brunswick. It has long been the belief in western Canada, and rightly so in my submission, that policy and administrative changes by any government are for the most part initiated by senior public servants. If artificial language requirements prevent westerners from occupying senior or executive public service positions, the apparent misunderstanding of our problems will continue and, in fact, grow.

Let us consider what is happening. Wheat has been sold by so-called experts too cheaply and too far in advance. The world price is now over $3 a bushel but we are still filling contracts at about $1.78 a bushel. A subsidy paid in the form of acreage payments is a subsidy to consumers of bread, because we are forced by a government decision to sell wheat on the Canadian market at about $1 below the international market price. Western farmers suffer low prices at a time when the international price is high. Last year the final, realized price was the lowest in the last 10 years, namely $1.59. When the last Conservative administration made an acreage payment, it was over and above the world price of wheat.

Let us consider the feed grain problem. The western farmer does not mind the government paying feed freight assistance, but he does object to his feed grain being sold at a price 12 cents a bushel less than world prices. Western cattlemen are concerned because their representations were not listened to when the government reduced tariffs on United States cattle coming into this country, thus lowering the price of their cattle by $1.50 per hundred pounds. At the same time, the government did not ask the United States to reciprocate by allowing our cattle to move just as freely into their market.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Schumacher: There is also the question of energy. We hear rumours or comments by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that perhaps we should have a two-price system in order to lower the price of natural gas to Ontario and Quebec, and sell it at a higher price to the rest of the continental market. There is similar talk concerning oil. Reference has also been made to the fact that perhaps we should cut off or sharply reduce our exports of our surplus gas and oil in order to keep the price low in central Canada. The hon. Senator Maurice Lamontagne in a speech in the Senate said:

> Let's make a deal with the U.S.—trade our resources for markets for our manufactured goods.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

● (1720)

Mr. Schumacher: In other words, he suggested that we sell western Canada's wealth to maintain employment in eastern Canada. This is not too different from what Premier Lougheed and representatives of the other western provinces are complaining about today. Mr. Lougheed says that it is ludicrous and a farce to export jobs from the agricultural heartland of Canada to concentrate more people in the same crowded parts of Canada. He suggests that this makes no sense at all. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), Leader of the NDP, has said the same thing at various times with regard to the auto pact. Now, we are promised a western conference on transportation and economic opportunity.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

An hon. Member: You are making the wrong speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I do not like to do this, but I must point out that we are not involved in a throne speech debate or in some other debate. We are involved in a very specific motion concerning bilingualism. I wish the hon. member would return to the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. Schumacher: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am attempting to point out examples of what happens when you do not have representation in the public service from a certain area to make the views of that area known. The result is policy being formulated by a government which does not have any idea what is going on in a particular area. I suggest that if we continue to administer the bilingualism program in the way it has been administered in the past four years, these problems will continue to crop up. I am trying to point out what happens when we do not have the proper input from people who do not live in the golden triangle. That is the reason for these examples. I suggest that, politically, we in the west have endeavoured to put the point across. However, there is another part of the process, the public service, which is probably more important than the political aspect because that is where policy is formulated. The result is that we end up with half-baked policies based on lack of knowledge of the area concerned.

Transportation is a very important element in the problems of Western Canada. The Prime Minister has recognized this and is willing to go to Calgary to talk about it. In 1967, it was pointed out to the government that agreed charges were bad, that captive shippers could never be proven and that public interest was difficult to prove. Having said all this, perhaps members can understand why fears and alienation will grow. Westerners have always felt that the government controlled their destiny to a greater extent than that of the people in any other part of Canada. We have seen the example of the government of Quebec opting out of very important programs. The government of Quebec appears to have arrived at a situation in which it has much more influence over the residents of that province than any other province has over its residents. Westerners have not opted out of anything. We are willing to participate but we want the opportunity to do so. This is why we are so concerned about the inability to have adequate representation at the senior level of the public service.

One could even say that this situation is the reason for the feeling that the west is continually being used by central Canada, because people from our area have a more difficult time getting to the top in Crown corporations, in the armed services and in the public service. In speaking of the armed services, I may say that we have four destroyers laid up now because the government says it cannot get people to man them. This statement is made at a time when there is supposed to be much unemployment in this country. One would think, in view of the pay scales of the armed forces, many people would be willing to take a secure and fulfilling job, but such people do not seem to be available. I wonder whether the bilingual program has anything to do with that.

Finally, in view of the Prime Minister's role in bringing about this debate at this time, I can only agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) when he characterized an eating establishment in his area called "Sneaky Pete's" as being named after the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks before the amendment by the Leader of the Social Credit Party (Mr. Caouette) is put to the vote, because it is extremely important that all the members of this House know exactly what is its true significance.

Mr. Speaker, I am of course not questioning the intentions of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he put forward his motion on April 13. As I have said time and time again, it is the means to achieve the good intentions with which we do not agree, especially since we have the means not only to solve the language problem but also the constitutional problem.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

• (1730)

This will never be repeated often enough: The problem for French-speaking Canadians is not a problem of languages but a problem of participation. Since French Canadians want at all cost to feel truly at home in this country they want to participate in the preparation of laws and in the administration and management of the country. It is simple enough.

Even if we succeeded in turning the public service into a totally bilingual body, if a fair and reasonable proportion of French-speaking people are not employed we shall have settled nothing; in fact, we shall even have accelerated the division process in this country because when French-speaking Canadians will realize that they are being served in both languages but are only participating for 2, 3, or 4 per cent in the administration, they will be definitely convinced that the situation is hopeless. This is what we are trying to prevent.

In various fields this party has always been at the forefront and several years later our predictions turn out to be true. This has been happening for years, but when we are faced with the problem now before us we can no longer afford to say that this problem will be settled, that we are pioneers and that we shall settle it in 5, 10 or 20 years. Our proposal is so urgent that if we do not implement it almost immediately, I wonder where Canada is headed for.

All hon. members who have our unity at heart should most seriously consider the final settlement of this problem in Canada, to settle not a problem of language but a problem of participation.

If our objective were to enable each individual to achieve fulfilment, if it was admitted—not by paying lip service or by pious wishes—that Canada can subsist only through the active and effective participation of the francophone and anglophone communities, we would achieve something.

I am sure all my English-speaking colleagues recognize very well that Canada would not be Canada without the francophone element. Therefore it is in the interest of all my colleagues, be they from any Canadian province, to give francophones in this country the place they are entitled to. We are not asking more than that; we do not want to persecute anyone. On the contrary, we fully agree on the fact that all present public servants should keep not only the rights but the privileges they have acquired.

We agree to that. All we want is to enable now francophones to participate also on the administration level and it is by doing that that indirectly, as I said a while ago, we shall solve not only an administrative and language problem but also—and that is what is extremely important to me—a basic problem, namely that of a permanent harmony between the English and the French communities in this country.

It is in such a context that we have always examined that problem and we know objectively that it would become a secondary problem the moment the participation principle would be accepted.

That is why in paragraph 5 which is the major section of the amendment, one must see things as they are. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, is there a member in this House who could be against such an amendment. In fact, we merely move, and I quote:

(5) that unilingualism cannot prevent a civil servant in the Canadian government from being eligible for senior positions;

Apparently then, we entirely agree with most civil servants.

I continue the quotation:

therefore, the government undertakes . . .

Once again, we are soft-pedalling and we would like to consider actually whether it would be possible—

. . . to set up, organize and implement a parallel administration, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, in all departments of the federal government;

There would be no duplication of services nor overcrowding of the Public Service, since as explained in paragraphs (a)(b)(c) of the clause 5 of our amendment, both sections shall be proportional to the requirements of their respective administrative needs.

We entirely agree, Mr. Speaker, that in a given department in order to provide all services to our French-speaking people, we could need only 200 French-speaking employees as opposed to 1,200, 1,500 or 2,000 English-speaking. It could happen, depending on the services to be provided by a department.

This is then a matter of actual equality, and not of mathematical equality. This is a matter of equality according to human principles and the constitution.

Let us face it. Since we made that proposal, we have heard certain arguments from people who feared, for example, the cost of that duplication. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the cost of such a system would probably be less than the actual cost of bilingualism, since, as it is stated in the Coulombe report, to make a public servant bilingual it costs $29,000 and to give him an insight into the other culture it costs $55,000; one knows that even if today an unilingual public servant became bilingual following those courses and the consequent expenses incurred by the government, that employee would not systematically and miraculously pass that on to others. It will be a perpetual new start and that is what we are against.

If we determine exactly what services should be provided to the French-speaking and English-speaking population of this country, and if we also determine the number of civil servants needed for each section, we are sure then of one thing: we are putting an end to the injustices that have been going on for years. And nobody would ever be dissatisfied, because those who wanted to be served in French would only have to contact the French department and those who wanted to be served in English would only have to contact the English department. Nothing could be simpler. It is like Columbus' egg. And like all simple things, it is not easy to accept. It seems too simple, because for years it has been unduly complicated, bilingualism has been overstressed at the expense of participation by the people.

Mr. Speaker, we can already foresee that if we had two departments, a French one and an English one, there would be a healthy competition that would enable all civil servants of either section to choose freely to become bilingual, not through any legal constraint but owing to the force of circumstances. This is one of the most essential freedoms; it should really be left to the free will of everyone who wants to be bilingual. Everyone recognizes this need.

Mr. Speaker, some might think that I, for example, am not bilingual. Of course, I am not perfectly bilingual, but I should say that I have tried to prove that the old story I have been hearing since childhood is not quite true. As a matter of fact, I was told over and over again that to get ahead, to be successful in any field, you had to be bilingual. That was the old story I used to hear when I was young, particularly in the province of Quebec.

● (1740)

Well, I have attempted to show that it was possible to be a Canadian while speaking French. Unfortunately today I have to bear the consequences of the principle I have tried to demonstrate and I am really anxious to be bilingual myself. But, Mr. Speaker, it is in that context that we see the problem. As I have said before, we are not motivated by emotion or spite but we are sure that we can offer a concrete solution which could at least be considered and furthermore which could really save Canada if we were to set up a system by which all French-speaking people in this country could participate in the management of the nation. That would depend only on their qualifications and therefore, there would not be anymore injustice. Is that not all what we want?

There already has been references to the "just society". It has been said already that we want for this country understanding, unity, and harmony. But why? To do that, Mr. Speaker, why do we not take the required steps? Why these further attempts with good intentions? Why are we frustrating the French-speaking Canadians by telling them that it is very difficult to change the civil service because it has been in existence for so many years—that is why people refer to it as an English-speaking establishment—and we must proceed slowly. They tried to implement certain changes after having passed the Official Language Act, but they realized that politically it was not good, and then they said: Let us back up a little bit, let us please the civil servants and then afterwards we shall see!

Mr. Speaker, once more, we do not take a pessimistic approach to the right hon. Prime Minister's intentions and these nine principles, these nine steps he wants to take to achieve his goal; it is not a matter of being pessimistic but we want to stop thinking in terms of wishes, pious hopes and even miracles. As a matter of fact, I read that if someone wants to obtain a bilingual position, he simply has to indicate his willingness to become bilingual.

We do not believe very easily in this gift of tongues. We do know that although this has already happened in the Cenacle for the Apostles, but we do not believe that to-day, a public servant may become bilingual just because he wishes to. That is too much!

That is the reason why, without trying to interfere with anybody's rights and privileges, we could do justice to French-speaking Canadians, and to English-speaking Canadians everywhere in this country, by merely adopting our amendment.

Mr. Speaker, when we mentioned this part of our political platform to our own party—I remember quite well, having presented it myself—our delegates from British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba told me: We are not only in agreement with this proposition, we are behind it 200%, which means that we may be the only political party with sympathizers in all parts of Canada and, whether in British Columbia, Newfoundland or Quebec, our message is always the same, thereby assuring all Canadians of the prospect of self-reliance and self-development, while maintaining their true identity.

Therefore, this is not a last minute amendment that we are proposing now but an amendment which has been thought out and which has already been proposed to our delegates from every part of this country who have adopted it right away. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we should like the government and all the hon. members to merely support it. Then they could rightfully claim the glory and honour of having not only settled the constitutional problem, but also the problem of Canada as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being five forty-five o'clock, pursuant to special order made on Tuesday, June 5, 1973, it is my duty to interrupt the debate and to put forth every question necessary to dispose of the motion before the House.

Concerning the amendment, the Chair wishes to point out to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who had suggested the name of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) as seconder of his motion, that the hon. member for Champlain had already taken part in the debate on the main motion; the Chair decided to substitute the name of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

The question is now on the amendment to the main motion.

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion, the nays have it. Call in the members.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CORRECTION IN VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR JUNE 6 RESPECTING BILL S-5

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Page 379 of the Votes and Proceedings for yesterday reports that Bill S-5, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act

> . . . was deemed to have been read the first time and ordered for a second reading at the next sitting of the House, pursuant to Standing Order 100(2).

This is a public bill which was inadvertently treated as a private bill.

This entry will therefore be stricken from the Votes and Proceedings and Bill S-5 will appear on tomorrow's order paper under the heading "First Reading of Public Senate Bills".

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARNEY—REFERENCES BY MEMBER FOR ST. PAUL'S TO VOTE IN TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given Your Honour notice. It relates to remarks made by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) at the time of consideration of questions on the motion for adjournment on Tuesday night. As recorded on pages 4476 and 4477 of Hansard, there are two references by the hon. member to a vote which was taken in the transport committee. The first reference, as recorded on page 4476, was as follows:

> . . . or would he prefer to treat the opinion of the NDP on this issue, in view of their switch in position in committee, as indicative of public opinion.

Further, as recorded on page 4477, he said:

> . . . or will the government continue to push blindly ahead, bolstered by the votes in committee of NDP members who in a moment of utter hypocrisy voted on estimates to give the government the money to push ahead with this unnecessary project?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harney: My question of privilege is based on two points, Mr. Speaker. First, the hon. member's remarks are a reflection on a vote in a committee and as such are improper remarks to be made in the House. Second, the hon. member's remarks, particularly the second statement, involve an imputation of motives on the part of another member of the House.

The hon. member for St. Paul's can say anything he wishes outside the House about me, my colleagues or our votes in the House, but in this chamber he should respect the traditions of the House and neither reflect on a vote nor impute motives on the part of another member.

The substance of his imputation is that, although opposed to the building of the Pickering airport, I voted for the appropriation so that the government could go ahead and pay those people who wished to be expropriated. He is interested in supporting this as a change of position on my part that took place not only in terms of months but on the same day.

To end my point, I could very well in this House point out to the hon. member that he, in committee, in relation to his motion which he claims correctly I did not support, stated, as recorded on page 5:77 of Issue No. 5 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications:

> Mr. Chairman, the members should be perfectly clear that this motion does not kill the Pickering airport.

It was clearly stated by him that his motion was not in opposition to the Pickering airport.

On this matter, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for a withdrawal of the hon. member's remarks of the other night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harney: I do not ask, Mr. Speaker, for an apology.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member could bring his remarks to a close. I think he has indicated what his question of privilege is and he should give the Chair an opportunity to make a ruling.

Mr. Harney: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I repeat, I ask for a withdrawal and not for an apology because an apology, just like an insult from the hon. member, is of no particular consequence to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has referred to statements which were made in the House two days ago. He suggests that it is against the traditions, rules and practices of the House to reflect on a vote. Of course I am in agreement with him, as I am sure all hon. members are, and also that we cannot impute motives. But I do not think the hon. member is entitled on this basis to ask either for an apology or for a withdrawal. He has brought to the attention of the hon. member for St. Paul's and all other hon. members that it is irregular to refer to proceedings in a committee, to reflect on a vote or to impute motives. We are all agreed on this. I am sure the hon.

member for St. Paul's has noted the hon. member's reprimand.

● (1410)

Is the hon. member for St. Paul's rising? I would hope the hon. member would not pursue the matter. Will the hon. member resume his seat. I think there is a practice that an hon. member whose conduct is impugned or referred to in some way is given an opportunity to comment. I had not noticed that the hon. member wanted to rise. I think I owe it to him to let him say a few words, but I hope the matter will not be exacerbated and that we will not become involved in a long debate.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. My only suggestion is that the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) is very thin-skinned and sensitive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SOFTBALL GAME BETWEEN MEMBERS AND PROTECTIVE STAFF

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, may I advise Your Honour that in the annual ball game last night between members of the House of Commons and the protective staff the House of Commons upheld its tradition by winning. May I recommend, Sir, that in the year ahead Your Honour consider hiring a pitcher, no matter what language he speaks, and pay him the 7½ per cent bonus. They might do better next year.

AIR TRANSPORT

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES APPLICATION TO SUBCONTRACT CERTAIN ROUTES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the arrangement by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission for a public hearing in Vancouver on June 18 into an application by Pacific Western Airlines to subcontract some of its routes to other air carriers and the fact that the Air Transport Committee gave insufficient notice to those who may want to make some preparation and appear at that hearing. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

This House calls upon the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission to postpone its scheduled hearing relating to the request by Pacific Western Airlines to subcontract some of its routes in B.C., which hearing is scheduled to be held in Vancouver on June 18, in order that interested parties may have adequate opportunity to prepare for the hearing.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROPOSED BANNING OF STRIKES IN PUBLIC SECTOR—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to ask leave of the House to move the following motion:

That in the opinion of this House, strikes should be banned from the public sector, that an industrial disputes commission be set up to deal with workers' grievances, that disputes in the public sector should be settled by arbitration, and that this matter be referred to the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. The Chair will inquire whether the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: There are "Noes", and the motion cannot be put.

AGRICULTURE

DOMESTIC FEED GRAIN POLICY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to move a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. The subject matter has to do with the declared intention of the government to bring in a new policy to govern the marketing of feed grain in the domestic market and the intention of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to discuss this cabinet policy publicly before it has been presented to the House.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture meet forthwith and that the Minister of Agriculture place the proposed changes in feed grain marketing before the committee in order that such changes can be examined and discussed by the members of that committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, and the motion cannot be put.

MANPOWER

CRITERIA FOR EXTENSION OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion:

That a committee of the House made up of representatives of all political parties be established to clear up the matter of standards used to decide whether local initiatives projects should be extended; of persistent reports concerning political and partisan interventions with regard to the acceptance of such projects which reports bring discredit to the Local Initiatives Program and procedures used to review unilateral and arbitrary decisions of officials over which the responsible minister has effectively no control.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Consent is not unanimous; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

INCLUSION OF LEISURE TIME IN LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent to rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the criteria allowing the extension of the local initiatives projects have been established on an unsound basis and that some very important ones, including that of the Sainte-Thérèse de Drummondville recreational activities, have been cancelled, I move, supported by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the House examine the possibility of accepting recreational activities as a criterion for extending Local Initiatives Projects in communities where the unemployment rate exceeds 6.8 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—SUGGESTED INTERVENTION BY GOVERNMENT IN VIEW OF BREAKING OFF OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that contract talks between Air Canada and the machinists union have been broken off, is the minister able to inform the House that the government is now prepared to intervene in this dispute?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I cannot report to the House or to the hon. member on what further action will be taken as of the moment, simply because—

An hon. Member: You do not know!

Mr. Munro: —the talks broke off only a few hours ago. I am endeavouring to get full details as to the precise issues upon which the negotiations broke down and those issues on which there was agreement before deciding on what further efforts should be made toward mediation to bring the parties together.

● (1420)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, if the minister had sat in on the talks perhaps he would be better informed. In view of the fact four or five more cities have been struck today and the president of Air Canada has announced that if rotating strikes continue they will have to close down operations, and in view of the fact Air Canada has shown a substantial profit in the past year, the highest in its history, is the minister now prepared to recommend a settlement of this dispute, and is the government prepared to take a stand on what seems to be the very justified and reasonable wage demands of the Air Canada machinists?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is saying for himself and the Official Opposition that they have already taken a stand on the rights and privileges of the people involved in terms of what they feel they should be awarded, I must say that the government has not. We believe this is part of the free collective bargaining process. It is still going on. We believe in that process, and as long as we continue to believe in it we also believe in the right to strike for the employees affected.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact the free collective bargaining process has broken down, by the minister's own admission, and in view of the fact Air Canada is a publicly owned corporation owned by the people of Canada, is the minister, as the representative of the people of Canada, prepared to intervene in this dispute?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if it is felt, either by myself or by the government, that personal intervention on my part would resolve the dispute, then of course that would be seriously considered.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister whether he has considered consulting with the Prime Minister to obtain permission to get the advice of the hon. member for Verdun, who had a reasonable amount of success in solving industrial disputes?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that I am constantly getting advice, and it is always welcome, from the hon. member for Verdun.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Since Air Canada is a Crown corporation and our friends of the New Democratic Party are strongly in favour of nationalization, would the minister consider the possibility of "re-nationalizing" Air Canada to end that conflict?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings for a last supplementary on this matter, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour regarding the possibility of his taking an active part in these negotiations. As his predecessor, the hon. member for Verdun, described himself as the Babe Ruth of the bargaining table, does the minister intend to step up to the plate or to remain sitting in the club house?

ENERGY

REASONS FOR DECISION TO INCREASE EXPORTS OF PROPANE TO UNITED STATES—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN CONSUMERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the government's decision to allow three companies to double their exports of propane to the United States. In view of the fact this is merely another form of exporting natural gas, of which we do not have unlimited supplies for our own needs, I want to ask the minister what reasons motivated the government in reaching this decision?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the report of the National Energy Board on this question they drew a distinction between propane which, for pipeline reasons, has to be extracted from the natural gas flow, and ethane, which does not. The decision of the board was that ethane should be treated differently from propane, that propane is a distinct commodity by itself, that there is a very substantial surplus of propane in Canada which, were it not for the order the board made, would be difficult to accommodate within Canadian domestic requirements at the present time, and because of the very substantial surplus of propane and the necessity of removing it from the gas stream it was felt by the board that the application should be allowed, as it was.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, since the companies in question sought to reduce to less than half their shipments of propane to Canadian consumers while seeking to more than double their exports to the United States because of more attractive prices there, I want to ask the minister what steps he is taking to protect Canadian consumers of propane both with respect to price and guarantee of supplies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I regret I do not have the board's decision with me which points out that the application made was somewhat different from its disposition by the board, but the indication was that there was a very substantial surplus of propane which the board distinguished from natural gas, and for this reason export-import would be permitted. With regard to price, I do not have the details, but the hon. member will recall that the order was for five years only as opposed to the 20-year contract sought.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that all the board did was license the three companies to supply eastern consumers with propane, which is no assurance they will receive supplies or that they will not have the price raised because of higher prices in the United States, I should like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to take some steps to protect the consumers who, if the original request had been acceded to, would have had their supplies in eastern Canada cut to less than half?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I do not have the board's report in front of me, but I think the hon. member might do well to read the section on price, as I will again, and I will be glad to discuss that with him further.

POSSIBILITY OF PRICE CONTROLS IN LIGHT OF PRESENT OR FUTURE SUPPLY CRISIS OUTSIDE CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If necessary, will the government resort to energy price controls to ensure that domestic prices of energy resources are not inflated by any crisis that may exist or may arise in the future in respect of energy supplies outside of Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that was the subject of a debate in the House a week ago Monday, and my reasons still stand.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REPRESENTATION RESPECTING INCLUSION OF LEISURE TIME IN PROJECTS—EXTENSION BASED ON UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has the minister received lately representations or telegrams of protest from municipalities or community organizations concerning the refusal to extend local initiatives projects, one of which is in the field of recreational activities?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, such representations have not reached me personally, but I would not be surprised if some were in the mail somewhere and on the way now.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Since the minister does not seem to be too well informed and extensions were to be authorized according to the unemployment rate in each region, and since the Saguenay-North Shore area unemployment rates at 20 per cent, can the minister assure us that he will take those applications into consideration and reverse the decisions of officials concerning recreational activities projects?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I believe the premise of the hon. member's statement is somewhat incorrect. In addition to unemployment, as a factor, all the manpower centres have been instructed, in the further extension of the criteria, to give consideration to all projects in manpower centres where unemployment is below the national average, but these would be judged on their merits. In that regard, consideration is going on now; the final decisions are in the process of being made and I think should be completed by June 15.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière for one or two supplementaries, then I will recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED DIRECTIVES FROM DEPARTMENT RESPECTING EXTENSION OF PROJECTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has formally requested manpower centres to convey their recommendations concerning the renewal of certain projects and, if so, what are those recommendations?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with regret, I think the suggestion is so general I would have to know more precisely from what particular person, sponsor, group of sponsors or community the application came, but if the hon. member would give me more specific details I would be very happy to enlighten him.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, you have realized as I did that the minister did not get my question straight.

I would like to ask him whether an official memo has been forwarded by the department to manpower centres requesting their comments on the renewal of certain local initiatives projects?

● (1430)

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, not in those precise terms. There are, of course, instructions to the manpower officers, or at least those particularly associated with the local initiatives program, based on the extension criteria, dollar amounts and other conditions about which I have informed hon. members in the House and in communication by letter.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN TONNAGE RATE CHARGED OCEANGOING VESSELS AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—JUSTIFICATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question about the increase in the tonnage rates at the port of Vancouver on oceangoing vessels involving a switch from a charge based upon net tonnage to gross tonnage, resulting in an increase of about 60 per cent in the rates. Can the minister give in a very simple way the justification for this increase as there cannot be a necessity for revenue in view of the profitability of the port of Vancouver.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the 60 per cent figure is rather exaggerated, but even if it is, it represents a substantial increase. This increase was decreed so that the rates in Vancouver and Prince Rupert might be the same as in all other national harbours. This will provide a total additional income of $300,000 a year, and within the next two years we will be spending over $40 million in the port of Vancouver.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that the port of Vancouver is in intense competition with the port of Seattle, is the minister satisfied that this increase in the rate at the port of Vancouver will not put that port at a disadvantage with the port of Seattle which I understand is very actively competing for business now going to Vancouver?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter we considered very seriously, and since the amount is not very high, that is about $300,000 a year, for the port of Vancouver, this amount should not affect it very much compared with the cost of the port of Seattle or other ports on the west coast of the United States.

INCREASE IN TONNAGE RATE CHARGED OCEAN GOING VESSELS AT PORT OF VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE INTENTION OF FURTHER SUBSIDY FOR NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, would the minister inform the House whether he was aware that the port of Vancouver made a $1.2 million profit for the National Harbours Board last year and was one of the few profitable ports in the country? If so, would the minister tell the House whether the rate increase was consciously intended to subsidize further the National Harbours Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have given the reason for that, namely that new rates at Vancouver and Prince Rupert will be exactly the same as in all other Canadian harbours.

FISHERIES

LOBSTERS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASON IN DISTRICT 16, NOVA SCOTIA, BECAUSE OF ICE CONDITIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In light of the fact that as a result of severe ice conditions lobster fishermen in district 16 in Nova Scotia have suffered loss of income and fishing equipment, would the hon. gentleman give consideration to an extension of the season for a two-week period beyond the proposed closing date?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we will give serious consideration to an extension of the season, but my information varies with that of the hon. member. I am told that in that region the catch so far has been up to normal.

PRICES OF WHEAT SOLD TO RUSSIA AND CHINA IN FIRST QUARTER OF 1973

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Why is it that in the first quarter of 1973 Canadian wheat was sold to Russia at an average price of $1.73 a bushel and to China at an average price of $1.97 a bushel when the Wheat Board's own asking price at that time, basis Vancouver, was $2.97?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, while as the hon. member knows it is not customary to comment on specific prices—

Mr. Baldwin: Not when it is embarrassing.

Mr. Lang: —because of the Wheat Board's wish that these be kept secret as a matter of commercial practice, I should like to say on this occasion to the hon. member quite flatly that no sales in those periods were made at those prices.

Mr. Hees: At what prices were they made then?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to inform—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might like to ask a question rather than provide information.

Mr. Murta: In that case, Mr. Speaker, as I believe the information to be true because it was obtained from a book issued by Statistics Canada on exports by commodity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: —I should like to ask the minister whether since in the case of Russia and China there was a difference between the Wheat Board's Vancouver asking price and the actual selling price of approximately $1.25 a bushel to $1 a bushel respectively, the Wheat Board was not conscious of the fact of what was happening in respect of world markets at this period in time?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might try to help the hon. member to understand—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Just read Statistics Canada.

Mr. Lang: As hon. members will appreciate, there is a difference between the price at which a sale is made in a particular period and the total price on a product which may be delivered in that period but which is based on a contract entered into at some time long before. As the hon. member will appreciate we have, of course, been delivering grain to a variety of countries on the basis of agreements we had made in a number of different and earlier periods, at prices which were then prevailing, at prices which at that time reflected the judgment in the world of the competitive situation. I would say to hon. members that they would have been completely unforgiving of the Canadian Wheat Board if it had lost the sales to the U.S.S.R. or China to one of our competitors in that period because we were refusing to meet the competition. We had to meet the competition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can see that obviously a number of members want to enter the fray. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lisgar on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and see where we will go from there.

Mr. Murta: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this is such a very important matter and as in the first quarter of 1973 wheat was sold at an average loss of 79 cents per bushel—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Murta: —I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian Wheat Board intends to continue committing itself to long-term forward sales and in effect playing with the western farmer's own money?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt at all that the Canadian Wheat Board will continue to enter into long-term agreements and those long-term agreements at this point in time are being based on wheat priced at over $3 out of Thunder Bay.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Order, please. The Chair has recognized for the moment the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a supplementary.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED GREATER PLANTING—POSSIBILITY OF BETTER PRICES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question. In view of his public statement just the other day asking farmers to sow extra acreage in wheat and to produce a great deal more than they had intended to plant this spring, does this indicate a confidence on his part that this grain will move readily at better prices than those discussed here in the last few minutes?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the news release indicated, there is every reason to be confident about both the price level and the level of volume to be sold. In the last three years we have sold in each year an increasing and new record volume of grain into export.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At firesale prices.

Mr. Lang: For the last six months these record volumes have been moving at record prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1440)

Mr. Lang: It now appears, although there is no certainty in world prices, that this is likely to continue for a significant period. I am quite confident that, given the volume of production and the full operational capability of our handling system, we should be able to sell another record volume of grain in the coming year, and we are therefore inviting farmers to produce even more than they have ever produced before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Better put someone in charge there, Pierre, or the whole business will go bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has the floor for the purpose of asking a question. Perhaps he might be heard.

FEED GRAIN—PRICE TO FARMERS FOR DOMESTIC SALES UNDER NEW POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the fact the minister is urging farmers to plant more feed grains, can he assure the House and the farmers that under the new feed grain pricing policy, about which we have been able to obtain no information up to this point, farmers in western Canada will be assured a maximum price for those grains as the minister has assured us they will receive on the export market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The Speech from the Throne indicated the basic thrust of the feed grain policy. I am happy to re-emphasize that in my belief the feed grain policy as developed will be fair to farmers in Canada both in the east and the west.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I am completely confident, given the present world pricing situation, that prices will be very good indeed from the point of view of the producer of grain.

WHEAT—DELIVERIES BY FARMERS IN LIGHT OF EXPECTED HIGHER PRICE IN NEXT CROP YEAR

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. We all realize that sometimes hindsight proves better than foresight, but would the minister now lend some foresight to farmers and advise them not to deliver more wheat until the next crop year, in view of the low price in the 1972-73 crop year, because they will receive 50 cents a bushel more after August 1?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Some farmers are indeed arriving at the conclusion that they will not take advantage of the open delivery quotas at present because of the conclusion at which they have arrived with regard to the total price. I think the difference in the price will not be nearly as great as the hon. member suggests, but no one knows this at present because it will be about six months before we know the price on this year's pool, let alone the price on next year's pool.

However, I would like to say to farmers, as well as to hon. members, that the reason it is particularly desirable to deliver on these open quotas right now is that it looks as though there is a good possibility that farmers can in fact produce so much grain in the course of this year that they will want to make use of the available delivery opportunities to deliver new grain at the new high price and have the advantage of the present high price on the grain they can deliver now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order. I see a number of hon. members who wish to ask supplementaries on this question. I will, of course, return to the hon. member for Edmonton East and others in a moment. We might try to give other hon. members an opportunity to ask their questions, and after these other subjects have been considered by the House we will return to the great wheat debate. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—ROLE OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION IN DECISION ON SITE FOR OLYMPIC VILLAGE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that more than 100 associations and 66,000 petitioners in Montreal have indicated their opposition to Mayor Drapeau's proposed site for the Olympic village, has CMHC been consulted on that specific location and has any decision been reached yet by CMHC regarding the location of the village site?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, CMHC has not been consulted to this point and therefore no decision has been made. I have had some informal consultations on the matter with Dr. Goldbloom of the province of Quebec who, as you may know from reports, has been actively involved in this matter.

Mr. Rose: Since the CMHC, I assume, would not wish to bear the responsibility of funding future urban ghettos, I should like to ask the minister whether CMHC is under any obligation to fund projects in only those locations recommended by the city of Montreal, or is CMHC free to seek or propose alternative sites?

Mr. Basford: We would respond to an application by the Quebec Housing Authority not the City of Montreal and in looking at any application we would apply the rules that we normally do to our approvals.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he tell us whether he has been advised of the fact that some students hired by his department six weeks ago to head the temporary Manpower Centres for students have not yet received any salary? If so, can he tell us what steps he intends to take to pay them?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the matter. I have not been so informed, but I am quite sure that if the department has taken on these people and given them jobs it will find a way of paying them.

WHEAT—SALES TO RUSSIA AND CHINA—ALLEGED FIRE SALE PRICES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to come back to the questions asked of the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact the figures given by the hon. member for Lisgar have not in any way been challenged by the minister, and they could not be, coming as they do from Statistics Canada, does that fact not show what we have been endeavouring to prove for a long while, that while sales of wheat have been large they have been at fire sale prices and the western farmer has been taken for a ride?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, what the price and return figures show is what has been known to everyone and is not a matter for vital proof by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, namely, that when world prices were too low, in his and my opinion far too low, the Wheat Board was competing in those markets at those prices. I have not yet seen the right hon. member or others have the gumption to say that the Wheat Board was completely wrong in staying in the market. Would you have liked to see us, would the right hon. gentleman have liked to see us lose the Chinese market?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The degree of annoyance displayed by the minister indicates that the cat is out of the bag and he knows it. I now ask him, on the basis of those contracts with the U.S.S.R. and Communist China that were made two years ago, is it not a fact, as I have suggested to him over and over again, that wheat was being sold at prices below the cost of production?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member has never supplied me with the conclusion he agrees with as to the cost of production. I do not know whether he is using Palliser figures or National Farmers Union figures. What I have said is that, in my view, those prices were unreasonably low. We made that position clear to our competitors when we urged them throughout to revert to a reasonable International Grains Arrangement and sensible pricing provisions both at minimums and maximums.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that we have smoked the minister out, I ask him: Did he not on March 10, 1971, have this notation in his diary concerning a meeting of farm organizations in Minneapolis: I wondered whether or not something could not be done so that we in the United States and Canada would not be selling our wheat below the cost of production?

● (1450)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe I still have a copy of my Minneapolis speech and I will send it to the right hon. gentleman again. In the meantime, I wonder if he would tell me, Mr. Speaker, what he would have said if for two years we had stayed out of the Chinese and Russian markets?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no, the diary—

Some hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by these hon. members to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. I gather that the hon. minister's question was rhetorical and was not meant to elicit a reply from the right hon. gentleman. I think that our rules make it possible for members or right hon. members to ask questions of ministers but not for ministers to ask questions of right hon. members. The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The farmers were taken for a ride and the minister is responsible.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): "Hindsight Otto", they call him.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Justice.

The minister has simply failed to reply to the questions just put to him. We want to be told clearly whether our wheat is being sold to China and Russia for more or less than the cost price? That is all we want to know: there is no need for the minister to make a speech on that. Let him simply reply to that question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND IN LIGHT OF OPERATING PROFIT

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that in 1972 Canadian National Railways showed an operating profit of $48.3 million and a substantial increase in revenues from rail passenger service of 3.9 per cent, the reason for which has been given by the president as good merchandising and improved services, is the minister now prepared to accept the fact that rail passenger service can make money and can be economic? If so, is he prepared to accept the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport that rail passenger service be reinstated in Newfoundland?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe that some branches are profitable and others are not.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the importance for certain local initiatives projects to continue, could the minister, following serious recommendations, consider the possibility of granting additional funds in order that those projects might continue?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I see no possibility of additional credits other than those already announced. While I am on my feet, I might take the opportunity to reply to a question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North regarding—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Ministers and hon. members know that it sometimes creates difficulties when we try to reply to a question that was put earlier unless we are sure we have completed the question before us at the moment. If there are no supplementaries, the minister might be allowed to reply to the question to which he has just alluded.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—NUMBER OF PROJECTS APPROVED FOR EXTENSION

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, regarding my department's progress with LIP extensions, the situation as of this morning was that 1,585 projects have received an extension of time to complete their work with no additional funding; 1,800 projects were eligible for extension and funding under the criteria I announced. Of these 1,800, 1,594 applied for extensions of which 1,200 have been approved, 194 have been refused and 200 are still under discussion with the provinces and should be settled within the next several days, with all project sponsors hopefully notified by Monday, June 11.

MONITORING OF SALES TAX AND TARIFF CUTS TO ENSURE BENEFITS REACH CONSUMERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have been trying for three and a half months to get an answer to this question. Can the minister now tell the House when he will report on the monitoring arrangements, as promised by him and by the Minister of Finance at the time of budget, with respect to the tariff and excise tax cuts?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it has been indicated to the House that this work is under way. The Minister of Finance and I will consider what further information we can provide when the work is completed.

Mr. Stanfield: May I remind the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that a report was promised and it was indicated that it would be made after the Easter recess. I now ask the minister whether he meant what he said or whether the whole undertaking was simply so much boloney?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he should check his own diet before referring to other people's comments as boloney. I shall certainly check what I said in that regard and attempt to live up to it.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the minister arrange the leak of this report like the last report on which he was engaged?

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED DELAY IN ISSUING REFUNDS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. On May 14 the minister replied to a question I asked concerning undue delays in income tax refunds. In view of the fact that since that inquiry income tax refund delays have increased rather than declined, can the minister now say when Canadian taxpayers will receive their tax refunds?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that the bulk of refunds has already gone out, some six million of them.

An hon. Member: Where is mine?

Mr. Stanbury: Preference, of course, has been given to those returns that can be processed by computer, that are "clean returns". In the case of those returns with no errors either in figures or in the placing of the figures and those returns that bore the "urgent" tag which was provided for taxpayers, refunds have largely already gone out. Even in the case of the problem returns, refunds should be out within the next two weeks or a month.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time as there is just about one minute left before the end of the question period. Hon. members will appreciate that we have spent quite a bit of time on one or two subjects, which eliminates most questions. The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hales: In view of the fact the minister said on May 14 that they would all be out within two weeks, and as he still has not answered the question, is he going to notify Canadian taxpayers, whether or not their returns have errors, when they may expect their refunds?

Mr. Stanbury: Of course, Mr. Speaker, but as I have said nearly all the refunds have already gone out for people whose returns were completed without any errors.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of a new publication issued by the Liberal Party of Canada called "This Week In Ottawa" purporting to describe to weekly newspapers events in Ottawa in a non-partisan and factual way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: —and in view of the fact last week's column forwarded to weekly newspapers was a blank piece of paper, can the Prime Minister confirm whether this new policy of honesty will be followed by all government agencies?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the right hon. Prime Minister who may have a reply to the hon. member's question, but I am sure the question was not intended to elicit a reply. We are running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West, the hon. member for York-Simcoe and then call orders of the day.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TERMS OF REFERENCE OF REVIEW BOARD WILL BE AS STATED BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that on an earlier occasion the Minister of Transport said that the terms of reference for the board of review over the building of the Pickering Airport would be very broad and include such matters as need, location, planning, etc., and in view of the fact the Minister of Public Works said in Toronto on Tuesday that unless the hearings discover a facility which makes airports obsolete the airport will be built, will the Prime Minister assure the House and the residents of the Pickering area that the attitude and terms of reference—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question. It seems to me, and I am not saying this in relation to the hon. member's question, although it does seem a little long, that we would proceed much more effectively and there would be opportunity for more members to ask questions if questions were not really speeches. I think questions as long as the hon. member is asking now are unfair to other members.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister whether it will be the position of the Minister of Transport or that of the Minister of Public Works that will hold?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to look at the speech of the Minister of Public Works which is referred to. I do know of speeches and statements that have been made by the Minister of Transport and I can only say that they represent government policy. I would be inclined to gamble that the Minister of Public Works is also in line with what the Minister of Transport has said.

ENERGY

OIL—POSSIBILITY OF SUPPLYING STATE OF WASHINGTON THROUGH TRANS MOUNTAIN PIPELINE AS ALTERNATIVE TO WEST COAST TANKER ROUTE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the government offered or is the government willing to offer western Canadian low sulphur sweet crude oil to the Washington state area to obtain an agreement from the United States that supertankers would not service that area and would therefore not have any need to go through United States coastal waters which are near to British Columbia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is obviously referring to a speech which was made by Senator Stevens who is a great supporter of the Alyeska trans-Alaska pipeline. I indicated to the American senators, as I have indicated to the House many times, that the preference obviously is to have a Mackenzie Valley route which would obviate the necessity for tankers at all on the west coast, but that a second alternative would be, if that were not achievable, to repeat the offer made last year that we would continue to supply the Puget Sound refineries through the Trans Mountain Oil Pipeline.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough West said that a meeting was held in Toronto by the Minister of Public Works in respect of Pickering airport. I wish to point out that Toronto and Pickering are two distinct places and I hope they stay that way.

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as this information has just reached members of the House I wonder whether the Minister of Labour could indicate to the House if he has received word that Toronto International Airport will be struck at four o'clock today by the machinists and inform us whether there is any indication from Air Canada that the airport will be closed so far as Air Canada flights are concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is directing his question to me, no, no information has been conveyed to me or, as far as I am aware, to any of my colleagues that the airport in Toronto will be closed.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that we have gone beyond the question period and we would need the unanimous consent of the House to continue the question period. I appreciate the importance of the matter but there are hon. members who, if the hon. member for St. John's East is allowed to ask a question, will want to ask questions. The hon. member for Champlain has been waiting for a long time and there are others as well. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the hon. member is rising on a point of order, I shall have to call orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest, perhaps by way of a point of order, that perhaps now the minister might be prepared to take the next train to Montreal and personally intervene in this dispute.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, for the second time in several days I rise to correct a grave error in Hansard. I have just noticed that in yesterday's Hansard, at page 4516, my name is not—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to make a point of order when the trained seals are hollering again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has complained before of the language used by other hon. members. I think I have to make the same remark to him regarding the language which he uses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think it is not conducive to the dignity of this chamber for hon. members, every time they take the floor, to use offensive and abusive language. The hon. member, I am sure, does not appreciate being called names, and I think it is not right for him, without provocation very often, to use strong language. That is not conducive to debate in a dignified atmosphere. The hon. member may have a very valid point of order. He will be heard, and if it calls for redress I will assist him, but it seems to me he is injuring his own case when he prefaces his points of order or questions of privilege with this kind of reference to other members of the House.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully accept your remarks. I only have this comment to make. It is very difficult to speak when one is being constantly interrupted by buzzing noises on the other side of the House. In yesterday's Hansard, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member has the floor and should be given the opportunity to raise his point of order.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Cossitt: In yesterday's Hansard my name is not shown in the division list, as having participated in division No. 25 on the amendment proposed to the bilingual resolution by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). I was present in the House for that particular vote, and I voted "nay" on that occasion. I should like, if possible, to have that error corrected.

Mr. Speaker: The record will be corrected and the hon. member's correction is accepted. Certainly it must be the result of a mistake on the part of our staff. The difficulty will be straightened out and the official record corrected, as suggested and indicated by the hon. member for Leeds.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader about the business of the House for the rest of this and next week, and as far ahead as he can project his mind.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today is an opposition day and tomorrow will be as well. On Monday, we will begin the report stage of the National Housing Act, followed by the residential mortgage market proposal and followed, in turn, by the series of tax proposals, namely, Bill C-192, Income tax bill No. 2 with regard to corporate taxes; Bill C-193, Income tax bill No. 3, on personal income tax, and other matters, followed by the excise tax bill and customs tariff bill. Next week, we will call an opposition day on Friday. Beyond that my mind is not projected.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell me whether, with the exception of opposition days which are essential and healthy, the government intends, once the tax bill debates begin, to complete them in all their forms in the House before we go to other legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the corporate tax and the income tax, we would like to complete those bills without interruption. I cannot give the same assurance with respect to the customs tariff and excise tax.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the leader of the government has enumerated the various legislation to be put before the House, and that it is urgent to adopt the legislation on the 1976 Olympic Games, I would like to ask him when he will bring in that particular legislation, and whether he can assure us that it will be brought in before the summer recess?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Olympic bill will be given first reading tomorrow, probably, and we will deal with it as quickly as possible following the tax bills.

Mr. Bell: Before 1976?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the leader of the government when the next discussion will take place on the obvious necessity of having secretaries in the ridings?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF OWNERSHIP AND ACTION TO PROTECT FISHERIES RESOURCES OVER CONTINENTAL SHELF

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House accepts the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fisheries resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of these fisheries resources are the responsibility of the coastal state, that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state; and,

This House agrees that, in implementation of this policy, Canada must provide adequate surveillance so that swift action can be taken when Canadian interests are threatened or violated.

● (1510)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the interest of so many hon. members in this subject, possibly after the first four speeches, one speaker from each party, it would be acceptable to the House to limit speeches from then on to 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is a very pleasant day. It is an appropriate day for a trip to sea as long as we do not get too far off shore or lost at sea.

This motion is placed before the House today to give members an opportunity to indicate their support for the position and, indeed, the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fisheries resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, and that the management of these fisheries resources are the responsibility of the coastal state. It is important that we indicate our support for our position in view of the forthcoming Law of the Sea Conference and, without injecting too much controversy, we wish to discuss some of the misrepresentations made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) with regard to general views on this subject in this country. I simply wish to open the subject. A number of my colleagues will want to develop the points that I make as well as develop further points.

Those of us who have grown up by the sea have been involved in coastal life, associated closely with fishermen and the kind of life they lead, and are aware of the vast potential of the sea as a source of wealth as well as of the importance of the supply of fish to our fishermen. We are intensely aware of the vital importance of preserving the stock of fish, as well as the increasing pressure from many sources upon this great reserve of wealth as a result of technical innovations and vessels from various countries being able to move further afield, particularly factory ships. We are aware also that this increased pressure is not confined to our traditional fishing areas, but is a phenomenon that is being very keenly felt elsewhere.

I, of course, am identified particularly with the east coast of this country and the fishing problems there. However, I am familiar with the problems on the west coast and the measures that have been taken over recent years to at least cope with these problems. I am familiar with the disputes and difficulties that still remain, as well as with the general state in which they are today.

It is the east coast that I know best. I am familiar with the jurisdiction in eastern waters and the extension further to sea as well as the inclusion of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I am aware of the importance of this. However, I am only too familiar with the depletion in the stock of fishing species in the region over which we are claiming jurisdiction, namely our continental slopes and shelves. I am well aware of how difficult it has become for fishermen to make economic catches, despite very significant improvements in their equipment. Anyone who sits in this House must be aware of the depletion of many species as well as the often expressed fear of the extinction of certain species.

Many times my colleagues in this House have demanded action and protection for our fishermen and offshore fishing grounds. They have expressed concern about the share of available fish to be harvested by Canadian fishermen. I think I know what has been going on under the jurisdiction of ICNAF. Moves have been made to establish quotas. I think that a quota on herring is in operation. I believe that quotas are now in effect for other species such as cod, haddock and flounder and quotas for other species are under consideration.

I do not rise today to carp or be critical. However, I think these efforts have been a very long time in coming. I do not think there is any reason to believe these quotas will really work. I say this because of the slowness of this process. There is concern as to whether these arrangements will really work in terms of conservation or whether they will take care of the needs of Canadian fishermen. Because of this, some time ago my party turned to a consideration of the extension of Canadian jurisdiction over the waters over our continental shelves and slopes. We turned to the principle of Canada achieving that jurisdiction and exercising management of the fishing stock in the waters over our continental shelf and slopes.

I agree in principle that there is something attractive about the idea of a truly international approach to the problem of conservation. There is something attractive about the idea of nations being able to work together to achieve agreement, to achieve some joint means of surveillance and enforcement, to achieve an equitable sharing of the marine resources of the world. But the idea really does not seem to be working, either in terms of management or in terms of surveillance, and there does not seem to be much prospect of much success in the future to judge by the way things are going.

● (1520)

I could not help noticing an article in the Economist, dated June 2, devoted, basically, to the dispute between Britain and Iceland. The article reviews the general situation, speaks about the erosion of the doctrine of the freedom of the seas, speaks about preliminary consultation already going on in preparation for the San Diego conference and says that very few governments have shown any real interest in fair sharing of supplies or in the preservation of the marine environment. The article goes on to say, and I quote:

> Much of the current excitement turns on claims to national authority in the "superjacent" waters that lie above the continental shelf and slope zones off the coastal states' shores. Australia and New Zealand are thinking of claiming authority over a 200-mile zone; several South American states already make similar claims; Morocco is now violently at odds with Spain over its 70-mile claims; Iceland has indicated that it will soon extend its claim to 70 miles; and so it goes on, with China even demanding the scrapping of the 1958 and 1960 conventions, which it denounces as the product of imperialist machinations.

Then follows what is, to my mind, the most interesting part of the whole article, particularly since it is devoted basically to the dispute between Britain and Iceland and the right of British fishermen to fish in waters off the Icelandic coast.

> If the trendy thing is going to be for each coastal state to grab all it can, there is not much to be gained—and there may be much to be lost—by a solitary attempt to buck the trend. It is probably time for Britain to start preparing for the 1974 conference by deciding how far out it will push its own maritime frontiers—and then enforce them.

Now, for a perceptive economic journal to take this position in the context of the dispute which is going on between Britain and Iceland indicates how much the thinking has changed with regard to this whole situation and how far disillusionment has set in as to the prospect of any satisfactory regulation of these matters by international arrangement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This may be regrettable. As I say, there is something attractive to me about international regulation and co-operation, but to date at least the ICNAF arrangements have not in my judgment effectively protected the species or done the job that needs to be done to manage these marine resources properly. As Canadians, we want to be good citizens of the world but it is certainly our duty to protect our fishermen and to conserve the stocks of fish off our shores. Pressure on these stocks has been increasingly heavy. There is, too, I am told, inadequate surveillance of these waters—insufficient protection of our fishermen and fisheries. I have no doubt other speakers will emphasize this aspect.

So it was to protect our national interest and to protect our fishery stocks that my party adopted a resolution in Charlottetown last autumn which called, first of all, for the re-establishment of a separate department of fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The resolution then went on to say, and I quote:

> —under this new department, launch a new, aggressive program to extend Canada's managerial control to the extremities of its continental shelf, for conservation and management of its marine resources; immediately increase its surveillance and protection capabilities for the fishermen . . .

This principle was adopted as a matter of national policy.

Mr. McGrath: Long before the minister made his speech, I may say.

Mr. Stanfield: It is true the dispute involving Iceland and Great Britain has so far been in terms of a 50-mile limit, although the article I quoted from the Economist indicates that Iceland is thinking of going further than that and claiming 70 miles. A number of days ago, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) tried to get the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to indicate Canada's support for the basic position taken by Iceland in extending jurisdiction to the 50-mile limit.

Mr. Sharp: He asked me to intervene.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not intend to become involved in an argument with the minister as to whether he was asked to intervene or not. The point I want to make is this, that it was in relation to Iceland's position, and, therefore, 50 miles—

Mr. Sharp: But we are going way beyond that—way out to 200 miles.

Mr. Stanfield: If the Secretary of State for External Affairs wishes to give us the benefit of his views and wisdom, I am sure he can take part in this debate. But I suggest that in what he has had to say so far he has given no adequate justification for the kind of twisting he is doing now or what the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) said in his speech in New Brunswick. It is not my intention to interject too much controversy into this debate, though I enjoy it just as much as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, though he is a much more restrained individual, since basically he is a civil servant—

Mr. Sharp: I have been here longer than you have, and involved in more controversy, too.

Mr. Stanfield: I will take that back, Mr. Speaker, because members of the public service might think I was trying to insult them.

Mr. Sharp: I was just correcting the record.

● (1530)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate sought to get the Secretary of State for External Affairs to indicate support for the principle behind the position being taken by Iceland. I do not know how happy the Minister of Environment and Fisheries is with his title, because he tried pretty hard to get "Fisheries" expunged from it. Anyway, he made a political speech before a Liberal association in New Brunswick the other evening, no doubt trying to generate a little enthusiasm for his party in a difficult part of the country. I quote:

> And where do our Conservative friends stand now? They are boldly talking about a fifty mile limit. Little Iceland is going for fifty miles so Canada might be so bold to do likewise. That is Conservative thinking for you.

I simply indicate to the House that, because of our disillusionment with the effectiveness of international arrangements such as ICNAF, we in this party last fall formally adopted the resolution I have read. I think it must be the fault of the organization. I do not think it is the lack of drive which the minister has put into Canada's participation in that organization, and so it must be because of the lack of success of that organization, or at least partly for this reason, the minister has turned to the idea of making a vigorous demand to the Law of the Sea Conference for the extension of our rights to the waters over the continental shelves and slopes.

As a matter of fact, I think it was a rather cheap shot that the Minister of the Environment took when he was in New Brunswick, but I recognize the dire straits in which he must have been down there in trying to generate a little excitement in his party. I say to him that he had better get on with the job and, if he does, he will get lots of support over here. I think he had better get ahead with the business, within ICNAF, of protecting species, at least while we are relying on ICNAF. He had better get ahead with the job of providing adequate surveillance, because surveillance seems to be very inadequate today. Indeed, Sir, if I may give him a little advice, which I hope he does not find offensive, it might be more helpful for the fishermen if he did get ahead with the job of providing the surveillance that is needed, and providing the protection that is needed, instead of talking so much about it.

I simply want to say this in closing: we want to see the protection; we want to see the conservation; we want to see the management by Canada of our marine resources in the waters over the continental shelves and slopes. Those of us who live by the sea do not enjoy seeing the minister playing games with the matter. We want to see him get on with the job, and we will support him.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise and indicate the support of the New Democratic Party for the motion which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has placed on the order paper for our consideration today. I think it is important to recognize that when a motion of this kind is put before the House it represents some forward advance in our thinking in the area of preserving the resources of the sea that are adjacent to our coasts.

I think it would be well if we, as members, were all prepared to admit that over a period of years we have been groping towards a more adequate way of conserving those resources and protecting the rightful interests of Canadians who go down to the sea to fish.

I thought the Leader of the Opposition exercised very commendable restraint—perhaps it was his style of speaking—in reference to the speech delivered at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, last May 26 by the minister. Obviously, it was a political speech. Far be it from me to suggest that ministers of the Crown should not from time to time make political speeches. But, Mr. Speaker, the notes for that speech were distributed to us on the letterhead of the Minister of Fisheries for Canada, and when we get them in that form they lead us to hope that at least basically they contain serious statements of policy. As I say, it is self-evident it was a political speech, but the point that needs to be clarified in this chamber, and it has not yet been clarified, is to what extent that speech represents the official policy of the government of Canada.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). I certainly agree with him that it is high time the Secretary of State for External Affairs got up in his place in this House and gave us his views, in such a way that we could recognize exactly what Canada's foreign policy is in the realm of developing an approach to the law of the sea that will protect Canada's interests. It seems to me that often such matters are shoved off on to the Minister of Fisheries, and not enough recognition is given to the fact that in this area at least we, along with other countries, are involved in a great many important matters that vitally affect our interests, and indeed the future resources that will be available in terms of high protein foods to feed a hungry world.

When I first came to this House we were really in a different era. At that time, Canada dealt with this question, and it is only fair to say we did not do too badly, through bilateral treaties or arrangements. By and large, the encroachment of other nations with modernized high-seas fishing fleets had not yet come into being. So, we had bilateral treaties. Later, it began to be apparent that that approach was not adequate. It became apparent that we had to have a new look at where, either ourselves or in concert with other nations, we should assert increasing jurisdiction.

I was quite dismayed by the speech which the Minister of Fisheries made in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, because undoubtedly it was most unfair and not a factual attack on the position which the Conservative party is currently enunciating. If there is any one matter on which this House should try to set aside any narrow, partisan considerations and speak with a united Canadian voice, it is on this matter of our position on our jurisdiction over the resources of the sea.

● (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett: I hope the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs will clarify, during this debate, whether the rather extravagant remarks made to the Charlotte-Carleton Liberal Association do represent the position Canada is taking at the Law of the Sea Conference looming ahead. It is not my business to interfere with that question of which kettle is calling which pot black, but in this context I cannot help but draw the attention of the House to a little item that appeared in the Ottawa Journal on May 31 in which Mr. Henry Heald says:

> If anyone can claim kudos for far-sightedness in pushing out fishing limits, it should be Frank Howard (NDP—Skeena) who was calling for bold advances before Mr. Davis was ever elected to parliament. He was a constant prod urging the government to take the bold step of replacing the old three-mile limit with a 12-mile headland-to-headland fishing zone.

Perhaps the Minister of Fisheries' perspective is understandably a bit foreshortened on this matter because he has not been in the House that long, but I took the trouble to look at Hansard for the year 1960 and I think perhaps one of the first references ever made in this House to the extension of our territorial waters was made on June 29, 1960 by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), as reported at page 5565:

> Perhaps the most appropriate thing to do, so far as our general limits are concerned, is to take unilateral action and declare as Iceland has declared and as others are considering now, that our territorial limits for all purposes are 12 miles, and that is that.

It is surprising how often Iceland crops up in discussions of this matter. One can follow this course of events through the years. I might point out that in the next year, 1961, the member for Skeena introduced Bill C-96, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, to provide for a 12-mile fishing zone in Canada.

When I returned to this House and rejoined the hon. member for Skeena on the fisheries committee, there was a question then as to who was outdoing whom on the matter of how timid we could be in the steps we were prepared to take regarding our fishing zones, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Fisheries or the Official Opposition. However, I suggest that question is not really pertinent today because the motion before us clearly indicates our changing thinking on the matter of exercising jurisdiction over the continental shelf.

If I may, perhaps I could just blow my own horn a little bit. In 1970 when we had Bill C-203, to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, before the House I moved an amendment which had the effect of doing exactly what is envisaged in the resolution now before us. It was not accepted by the House, and to the best of my knowledge it was supported only by my colleagues in the NDP. My amendment read:

> The fishing zones of Canada comprise all water adjacent to the coasts of Canada, the natural resources of whose subjacent submarine areas Her Majesty in right of Canada has the right to dispose of or exploit—

I took this rather awkward phrase from the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act as the definition of the continental shelf envisioned by the government of Canada. I hope we can have an indication from hon. members on the government side of their preparedness to recognize the position of the opposition, and that they will support the opposition in exercising our jurisdiction in respect of the continental shelf.

There is one rather important omission in the text of the motion put forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition. One of our most important fisheries, namely the salmon fishery off the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, would not be protected merely by asserting Canadian jurisdiction to the edge of the continental shelf. We all know that salmon roam abroad in the high seas and return to our coasts and our rivers to spawn. If we are to consider this whole matter in its full context it is necessary to propose, in addition to the motion now before us and I intend to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Olaussen), an extension to our jurisdiction. I therefore move:

[Mr. Barnett.]

> That the motion be amended by adding a comma following the words, "with the permission of the coastal state" and inserting thereafter the following:
> "and asserts ownership by Canada of anadromous fish spawned within our borders, and the exclusive right to harvest the same."

I think I have already made it clear, but for those who may not be familiar with that particular term, let me say that for all practical purposes this refers to our salmon fishery. In this connection, we recognize that on both coasts one of our richest fisheries and the most highly regarded species is the salmon. Unless we are prepared to recognize the principle that when these salmon are feeding in the high seas they are still considered as Canadian fish, in the long-run we cannot assure their protection, and cannot assure that the money we may invest in developing and conserving their propagation will not be wasted. I feel this is one of the important principles Canadians should be endorsing.

I remember suggesting in this House a number of years ago that we might say when these salmon are in the high seas they carry our brand. We should treat them in the same way as cattle were treated in the days of the old open range. The range lands were open, not the property of any one cattle ranch and, since the cattle were branded with the owner's name, they were permitted to roam. Then, at the appropriate time, they were rounded up. As we can all recall, it was a very serious offence to engage in cattle rustling, and I suggest that Canada should be saying that we do not want anyone rustling our salmon. I understand that our scientists now have the technical ability to identify salmon by their scales in somewhat the same way as human beings are identified by their fingerprints. We can now identify salmon in the high seas as being, in fact, our salmon.

I cannot help feeling that the minister has been unnecessarily using some of our commercial fishermen as pawns in this game, and my opinion is shared by others. I should like to make a brief reference to a letter which appeared in the Evening Times-Globe, Saint John, New Brunswick, on February 21 last. It was written by A. G. Huntsman, Professor Emeritus of Biology of the University of Toronto. He is sometimes referred to as the "father of fisheries research in Canada". In that letter he says:

> When the ban on New Brunswick commercial salmon fishing was announced last April, I at once wrote to the minister that he was doing a very foolish thing, to stop the fishing without scientific evidence of overfishing and then to spend public funds to compensate the fishermen.

This may be a debatable point, Mr. Speaker, but from what I have been able to learn, the fact remains that it was not the commercial fishermen of the Atlantic coast who were responsible for the depletion of our salmon. When one considers what may have happened one is led to the belief that the industrial activities of others resulted in the depletion of our salmon. The other day the minister was talking about the amount of money being spent for research and development of the Canadian fishery and the fact, that it is much more than is being spent on agriculture. The minister made two errors. One was that constitutionally the fisheries are under federal jurisdiction, and he ignored what the provinces may have spent on agriculture, on forestry resources and so on. Second, he ignored the impact upon our fisheries of other industrial activities which quite properly should bear a share of the cost of preserving and expanding our salmon fishery at its source in our rivers.

The only other point I should like to make, if I have time, has to do with the current situation in respect of our Pacific salmon. We have been having some discussions with the United States authorities. According to the minister and other spokesmen who have been following these discussions, the United States has been pretty tough with us. I suggest it is about time we started shoving a few facts down the throats of our United States friends because they refer to the Columbia River as if it were their river.

The United States apparently is not prepared to admit that it has robbed Canada of its share of the Columbia River salmon. If the United States is now producing salmon in hatcheries in the lower reaches of the Columbia River, it should recognize that a fair share of this salmon rightfully belongs to Canadian fishermen. The United States authorities should cease this nonsense of trying to establish their claim to the Columbia River salmon and, at the same time, demand half of the Fraser River salmon. The United States—and this came out in the 1964 hearings on our territorial seas bill—has a solemn treaty with Canada which the then Secretary of State for External Affairs told me was still in effect, the Oregon Treaty, which guarantees us our rights on the Columbia River, our right of navigation forever from the 49th parallel to the mouth. The United States stands in flagrant violation of the terms of its solemn treaty. In that connection, when the Grand Coulee Dam was built it not only cut off navigation on the Columbia River but also, and incidentally at the same time, killed off all the Canadian salmon which previously had spawned in the Canadian part of the Columbia River.

When one starts talking about a respect for the right to the salmon which originate in the streams of a coastal state, this is an important point which we should be making with the United States, and which, in all fairness, I do not see how it can ignore. This issue, I suggest, must be faced in our dealings with the United States and, hopefully, the United States may be prepared to recognize the justice in our position. I believe the United States is concerned with the basic principle which my amendment suggests should be endorsed by the House. If the United States is to have jurisdiction over the salmon which originate in its streams in Washington, Oregon, California and Alaska—I shall not mention the Atlantic salmon because I do not think the United States has any left; they killed them all off quite a while ago—it must also first recognize that Canada must have that same right and, second, that when it talks about the Columbia River it is talking about not a United States river but an international river. I put forward this suggestion in the context of this debate because I think it is the type of issue which will have to be sorted out as we move into the final discussions of the upcoming conference on the Law of the Sea.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the recent events relating to the problems facing Icelanders and Britishers in connection with coastal fishing have prompted the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to introduce a motion which, I must admit, is timely and deserves our utmost consideration.

In my view, the amendment which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has just moved complements the motion of the leader of the official opposition.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that a country like Canada, which has vast openings on the Pacific and on the Atlantic oceans, needs legislation that can guarantee both autonomy and respect for fishing rights along the coastlines so that they can really be applicable and applied.

As regards the Gulf of St. Lawrence for instance, I happen to know that many fishermen were complaining precisely about the fact that, because of the lack of regulations, anybody could come in these waters and catch the fishes which happen to be there. We have to remedy the absence of regulations or the lack of means of implementation. The motion asks for the recognition of, and I quote:

> . . . the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fisheries resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of these fisheries resources are the responsibility of the coastal state, that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state . . .

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it has now become urgent that we get concerned with developing relevant rules which I could qualify as being rather severe.

We know very well that we have here in Canada immense resources of every description, including fishing resources, but we should not be careless and run the risk of losing them progressively simply because of a faltering sense of responsibilities.

It is thus quite natural, as indicated by the motion before us, that we agree to implement this policy of:

> . . . adequate surveillance so that swift action can be taken when Canadian interests are threatened or violated.

Before being driven to major conflicts, it should be very important that we spell out clearly and categorically our country's position concerning coastal fishing rights. And the more quickly we do this, the better we will be able to avoid all kinds of problems like those between England and Iceland.

I therefore think that the government should very seriously consider accepting this motion so that we may be assured that Canadians will really be masters in their own home and will be able to have the whole population benefit from controls guaranteeing our ownership.

This is why I approve the motion moved by the NDP member. In fact, should we accept these two principles, we would have adequate legislation, favourable to the whole of Canada. It would not be a matter of requiring respect from others but by being consciencious and adult enough to take our responsibilities we would deserve the respect of other countries and we would not have to face serious difficulties likely to tarnish our reputation.

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I welcome, and I am sure all hon. members of the House welcome this opportunity to discuss the fishing limits of both our coasts. It is a very important matter, not only for fishermen but for Canadians. It is a matter which verges on sovereignty, but it also has a great deal to do with wise management and conservation of many of the world's living resources of the sea.

Canada has the second longest coastline in the world; it has the world's largest continental shelf, and it is, I believe, the duty of Canadians to manage the living resources along its vast coastline out over its vast shelf, not only in the interest of our own people, but in the interest of all mankind.

The resolution before the House goes some distance down the road toward permitting the wise management of the fish and other wild living things out over our continental shelf. I am glad to see that the resolution mentions the slope as well as the shelf. We must concern ourselves with management of fish over the whole of the shelf and the slope.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) indicated that if we confine ourselves to the shelf and the slope we will not include salmon. He is right. This would not include swordfish, tuna, and a number of other species that swim along the margin of the continents. In our measures for conservation, in our management of these resources, we should pay close attention to the life cycle of all our fish stocks. Therefore, we should think in terms of territory which is not simply the shelf, not simply the slope, but also areas close to the slope of the continent or continents where great upwellings occur, where ocean currents bring food to the surface, and where many fish populations congregate and feed. Many of the groundfish which are common to the continental shelf, in fact, swim out over the great ocean deeps nearby.

So in the wise management of those resources we should concern ourselves not simply with the shelf and the slope but with margins beyond that, and our management approach must be that of the geography of the fish and not the topography of the bottom. However, the shelf concept is important because, in a general way although in a somewhat limited way, it describes where 95 per cent of the fish resources spend their lifetime.

I first advocated, in a speech in Boston in 1968, that the continental shelf be the general topographical ambit within which Canada should manage its fish stocks, and within which the coastal nations the world over should endeavour to manage fish resources in the best possible fashion. This because very few fish are found beyond the shelf and the neighbouring waters adjoining the shelf.

I realize that some hon. members from the NDP have advocated limits at the edge of the shelf; they have advocated 200 miles; they have advocated even greater distances at times and have been talking in terms of these extended jurisdictions for a decade or more. They were speaking in those terms in the House. However, they did not have the responsibility of trying to negotiate arrangements with other nations or make sure that those nations observed those limits.

I think that as Canadians we must be doubly conscious of the fact that at least on the Atlantic side of Canada, the Grand Banks, the vast fishing areas off our east coast, have been fished by many nations for centuries. We cannot unilaterally kick them out. We have been moving in that direction but we have been doing so by negotiation and, I hope, sweet reason rather than the use of gunboats.

When I say "sweet reason" I think that the approach we used, for example, at the world conference sponsored by FAO and convened under our leadership in Vancouver this spring, was that kind of approach. Basically, we have stressed conservation. Conservation was the fundamental idea, the fundamental concept which we wanted to pursue, and our management techniques must be designed to ensure that all stocks are kept at levels consistent with a productive fishing effort.

The term used in the industry is sustained yield. It is well known in the forest industry. It is being practiced increasingly in the world's fishing industries. Sustained yield as a term should be further defined. It does not mean the maximum biological sustained yield; rather it is the maximum economic yield. This is a lower rate of catch. It means less pressure on fish stocks than does the maximum sustained biological yield.

In any case, we have been preaching this doctrine, first, to protect the species from extinction; second, to enhance the incomes of fishermen who are so heavily dependent on the health of the fish stocks and, finally, to make sure that in the longer run Canadians do, in fact, get the maximum economic yield from our vast fish resources.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said some of the right things. He is a compassionate gentleman and I know he is a conscientious man. He was pessimistic on one count, however, and I found that distressing. He was pessimistic about our ability to convince the fishing nations of the world that sound conservation was in their best interests, and that management practices which involved the idea of optimum sustained yield would not carry the day.

● (1610)

We have evidence that these are succeeding. This week in Copenhagen the North Atlantic Fisheries Commission is holding its annual meeting. That meeting comprises 15 nations that fish in the north Atlantic and it has been meeting for close to a quarter of a century. For a long time, it was really a scientists' club. It developed data, it developed ideas, but it was not until the last few years that the idea of converting this data into quotas and into management criteria really caught hold. Indeed, it was only in 1972 when they met in Washington that the message we had been preaching for several years turned up in the form of quotas. The result of that developing consensus among the 15 nations, Canada included, was quotas for several of the major fish species taken in many of the major fishing areas of the north Atlantic.

I think it is important to state that scientists had a maximum input. Their evidence on the state of each stock was taken fully into account. The maximum sustained yield was calculated from that evidence and it was evidence from the international scientific community, not simply from a few fishing nations. The maximum sustained yield, having been set as the maximum catch for the north Atlantic, was then divided between nations and Canada, being a coastal state, got the largest slice of the overall quota, if I may put it that way. Canada got 10 per cent extra for the expansion of its fishery. In fact, we were not able to take up all of the fish allocated to us during the last 12 months. As far as we can determine, all 15 countries lived within their quotas. They did not, in total, take more fish than the scientists indicated could be taken without seriously reducing the stocks. While expanding her catch, Canada still did not in fact take all the fish allocated to her fishermen.

This year we are trying to revise the formula in close consultation with the fishermen and the industry. We hope to get the other 14 nations to agree that in 1973-74 we should be able to take everything we can catch. We will be hard put to take more than the quota allocated to us last year. We seem to have convinced these countries, however, that the coastal state does in fact have a special claim on the resources swimming along its shores, living its life over the continental shelf, over its slope and out into those other waters where the groundfish also feed during part of their lifetime.

One of the fundamental problems that the world fisheries face was largely tackled and overcome toward the end of the middle ages as it concerned agriculture. The great debates over the commons and what would happen to the commons finally resulted in enclosures. Only when land was enclosed and allocated to an owner was it properly managed. Prior to that time, everyone had turned as many sheep, as many cattle, out on the commons as they could. The commons were over-grazed. It was a case of the devil take the hindmost. The stock was in poor shape and, of course, not as many could be maintained under those circumstances as in the enclosed type of agriculture we know today.

This is happening in the world fisheries. Adjoining waters are being divided up so as to conserve their resources. I am not really suggesting that Canada should harvest those resources exclusively, certainly not in the next few decades because there are many species that we do not take yet, although we may begin to take them in time. First of all, we have no taste for them and there is no market on this continent or with the more affluent nations of northern Europe and, second, we do not happen to have the techniques. But where there are resources within these boundaries, which I believe the coastal state should in large measure determine and certainly manage, we should be prepared to give licence under contract or some kind of arrangement to other nations to either come in or to contract with Canadian companies or Canadian fishermen, and fish and process the resources on our shores.

I am optimistic about this because there is a limited supply of fish in the world, certainly in the wild state off the shores of the continent. At the same time, the demand for seafood is mounting steadily and has been for several decades at the rate of 5 per cent a year. The market for fish 15 years from now will be twice as large. As a broad generalization, world fish stocks will not stand much heavier fishing than they are presently exposed to. If the demand is to keep rising and the supply is limited, it is obvious that prices will continue to rise as they have in the last few years, so it is going to pay other countries to enter into arrangements with the coastal states for the coastal states to do much of the harvesting. However, it must be done under sound management, using the best conservation practices so that fish stocks are there forever in quantities which will permit a maximum economic yield from the resources.

Ten years ago Canada's fishing limit was three miles running close along the coast, and that is what it was during the period that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister. In 1964, legislation was passed to extend the limit to 12 miles so until the early 70's that was our limit.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question in the interests of the record?

Mr. Davis: Well, I would like to finish my line of thought—

Mr. McGrath: He is forgetting the 1958 Law of the Sea Conference and the half vote within which we came of getting the 12-mile limit at that time.

Mr. Davis: The hon. member is correct. At the Law of the Sea Conference in 1958, Canada endeavoured to get the 12-mile limit accepted but did not manage it. However, we went from three miles to 12 miles in the mid-sixties and we moved out handsomely in the last several years by drawing a straight base line across our bays and inlets, the straight lines going from promontory to promontory around Canada. We drew several lines which are exceptional, such as that between Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlottes, which is longer than the previous line by some 90 miles. In the north, we drew lines across the Gulf of St. Lawrence and across the Bay of Fundy. As a result of drawing these lines and adding 12 miles outside them, Canada extended the area—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) on a question.

Mr. Barnett: My point is, Mr. Speaker, that the minister refers to the line between Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlottes as a base line. I wonder if it would not be more in order to refer to it as a fisheries closing line since it does not enclose the internal waters of Canada. I wish it did.

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That hardly seems to be a remark that occasions a point of order. It might occasion debate.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I admit that I could have used better language. Since members on this side of the House invented the term and since fisheries closing lines are a Canadian invention, I should use the same terminology. In any case, the total area enclosed by drawing these base lines and fisheries closing lines around Canada's very extensive coast—the total area, which became in 1971 the exclusive fishing zones of Canada—added up to over 700,000 square miles. I mention that figure, because members often talk about South American countries and their 200-mile limits, and the vast extent of their unilaterally declared fishing zones. Chile's 200-mile limit added roughly 1 million square miles to that country's fishing area, 300,000 more than our 700,000 square miles. Brazil's 200-mile territorial sea covers about 1.1 million square miles. By contrast, the United States 12-mile limit, which follows its coastline closely, has added only 131,000 square miles, as compared with our 700,000. The United Kingdoms limits which go out 12 miles added 33,000 square miles compared with our 700,000. Italy's zone includes 39,000 square miles, and so on. But few other countries have extended their fishing limits to the extent we did.

Our extension of exclusive fishing zone limits is a recent happening. Our closing lines are years old. While we draw them to some degree unilaterally, we also entered into negotiations with half a dozen nations for the phasing out of their fishing operations. For example, with respect to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, we now have agreements with all the countries which fish there, and those agreements see an end to the operation of their fishing fleets in our exclusive fishing zones. These zones, as I have mentioned, are very large in extent.

We, among other things, brought to an end a more than 200-year old treaty with France. In a few years fishing vessels from metropolitan France will no longer be coming to the Gulf of St. Lawrence for example. Such countries, as a result of signing agreements for phasing out fishing with Canada, really recognized, for all time, the extent of our exclusive fishing zones as we know them, as they now appear on our maps, as they now appear on the charts of captains responsible for the navigation of fishing vessels owned by other nations that come close to our shores. Those are our limits today.

Many of the fish stocks we have harvested have been taken far out, beyond the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or well outside Queen Charlotte Sound on the west coast. We must be concerned about the total life cycle of the fish, about their lifetime habitat, which includes the shelf and the slope as well as those adjoining waters of the ocean which supply great quantities of food for our fish stocks, and which are therefore important to their management. I am speaking of a biological map, if I may call it that. That is the area in which these wild living things spend their lifetime, and is the area within which we have to manage fish stocks. The approach we must take, in my view, at the next Law of the Sea Conference, is that we must endeavour, first, to conserve these stocks and, second, that as we are the coastal state most closely involved, with the greatest concern and interest, that the responsibility should rest with us. That is a principle which should operate around the world, with all coastal states having that responsibility. It should not be exercised to the total exclusion of other nations, because at times, there will be a surplus for harvest and because other nations will have an appetite for many of the fish which the coastal state would not ordinarily take for its own use.

I am optimistic about the future of our fishery, even though there has been great pressure from foreign fleets off our shores. This optimism is shared by our industry. A large number of fishing vessels are being built at the present time. Confining my comments to the Atlantic coast, the total value of vessels under construction is about $18 million, of which roughly $5 million is for small boats in the 35 to 75 foot category and $13 million for those in the bigger trawler category. Plans have been announced for next year. They see a total of $46 million allocated, of which $16 million is for boats from 35 feet to 75 feet in length, and $30 million for large trawlers over 75 feet in length.

This is by far the biggest fishing vessel building program this country has ever seen. I cannot believe that our fishermen are wrong, that the fishing companies are wrong or that the fishing industry does not know what it is doing. They have some faith in ICNAF. They have some faith in our ability to manage our fish out to the edge of the continental shelf and beyond. It acknowledges our recent achievement in establishing an inside track position for the coastal state and it knows, as well, and this has been reported to the Fisheries Committee by representatives from the fisheries service and of the Department of External Affairs, that the consensus developed among the members of the United Nations is that the coastal state must have a major say over its coastal resources. There is a consensus about extending limits 200 miles seaward.

I prefer always to talk in terms of conservation in areas where the fish live and over which they travel as well as into the areas through which they travel during their lifetime. Any figure regarding limits, whether it be a three-mile limit, 12-mile limit or 200-mile limit, I find arbitrary.

According to my reading, the large majority of fishing nations, indeed, of the underdeveloped and other nations of the world which will be going to the Law of the Sea Conference, will have made up their minds and opt for the 200-mile limit. As it happens, 200 miles roughly covers our eastern shelf and slope and most productive near-by waters, with the exception of the Flemish gap; the 200-mile limit, as a generalization, would be a lot better from our point of view than a 12-mile limit or a 50-mile limit. Certainly, I would be surprised if Canada were to vote contrary to a resolution which advocates 200 miles and has built into it the philosophy of sound conservation and good management.

There are several tough questions which we may have to face in the not too distant future. One relates to port closures. This prickly question and has come up before. We used it on the west coast to force the Russians to talk to us about over-fishing off the west coast. We may have to use that kind of leverage on the east coast. I hope not. We are studying the effects on the merchants in our ports of invoking emergency measures of this kind. There are many other issues that have to be faced in detail.

The least discussed and potentially most controversial is that relating to joint ventures with other countries with large populations and rising standard of living, countries prepared, eventually, to pay almost any price for fish. Faced with a likely 200-mile limit, or some such limit, they want, somehow, to get a corner on production which may involve possibly a number of coastal states.

I know the Japanese have been making inquiries. I know that several companies in this country have held discussions with the West Germans and Japanese on joint ventures, under which Canadians would do the fishing in Canadian-owned vessels, and Canadians would do the processing in Canadian-owned plants, but the production would be tailored for certain foreign markets. The joint venture would be arranged in such a way that the country putting up, say, 50 per cent of the capital or 50 per cent of the working inventory would have a claim on the supply of fish over a period of years. This verges on foreign ownership. It raises the question as to how long these contracts or agreements should be allowed to run. But they are compatible with the idea of coastal states having control over the living resources off their coasts and responsibility for the wise management of these resources, more than some other arrangements we could enter into. They are far better than the first come first served arrangements, if I can call them arrangements, which now exist off our shores.

As I say, we are developing a system of quotas in the North Atlantic, but we need to improve them. We need to expand our own effort and increase our Canadian take. We should be doing the catching because we are far more efficient than foreigners are. We are two or three times as efficient as the Russians with their big trawlers. Processing on shore is much more economic than on ships at sea. When the vessels only have to go a few miles, or at the most 200 or 300 miles from shore, obviously their travel time and expenses for fuel and so on are much less than those of nations which have to send their fleets half way around the world. The economics are in favour of the coastal state doing the fishing and the processing as well.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to an article in the London Economist which I have not read. It indicated to me that the United Kingdom was in the process of throwing up its hands and suggested that it should exploit its own shelf or 200 miles or some such concept and buy its extra fish abroad rather than to fish close to countries with a coastal fishery. They should get into joint ventures of the type I already envisaged. I can imagine the United Kingdom getting into joint ventures, not only with Canadians, but with other countries, developed and underdeveloped in Africa, South America and around the world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time allotted to him under Standing Order 58(13) has expired.

Mr. Lundrigan: Will the minister accept a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions can only be asked with unanimous consent, because the maximum time allotted to the minister has been used. Is it agreed that questions to the minister be permitted?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask that questions be asked after I have spoken?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) for proposing his amendment to the motion before us and indicating the support of our party for that amendment. We in this party also believe we should assert ownership over anadromous fish spawned in our inland waters and our exclusive right to the harvest of those species.

Others in this debate will be dealing with the origin of the continental shelf treaty to which Canada is a party, how and when it came into being and what it provides to Canada. Mention has already been made of it.

In the few minutes available to me, I would like to say that it was concluded in 1958. I underline the date, 1958. It confers on coastal states sovereign rights over the continental shelf for the purpose of exploring and exploiting its resources.

Mr. Davis: Minerals only.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I agree that is what it confers. However, we must remember that by a very short margin Canada missed obtaining the 12 mile limit for which the minister is claiming sole responsibility. I say this only to get party lines straight at this particular stage.

Having said that, I wish to turn to those areas of the problem on which I will base my remarks. I have, of course, a vested interest in this debate. I am proud to have that vested interest and I intend to represent it fully here. In my area there are deep-sea fishermen, inshore fishermen and sports fishermen. I wonder whether the present government is doing enough to sustain, maintain and expand those enterprises which are so much a part of Canada's heritage. We rely on the living resources of the sea for our way of life and our food. I maintain that not enough is done for that interest. The government claims it has great plans afoot but relating their comments to their actions, one is permitted to wonder and be confused.

I propose to deal with only two aspects because of the limited time allotted to me; first, the fishing safeguards and, if time permits, pollutions safeguards which are, of course, closely inter-related with our fishing safeguards.

As far as the fishing safeguards are concerned, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) recently talked bravely about going out 200 miles. He said, and I quote:

> We will go, flat out, for an exclusive fishing zone which will include the fringes of our Continental Shelf... Whenever our continental margin reaches out more than two-hundred miles from shore, it is the continental margin which will form our fishing limit—

He said more along these lines, all of it in the context of exclusive fishing rights. Those were brave words. I notice that recently he has toned down these claims a bit and is now only talking in terms of management. This brings me to a point I made even before hearing the minister, namely, that I find claims of this sort hardly credible. They are even less credible now because he has backed off from that claim to a large, exclusive fishing area. The map which the minister circulated along with the text of his comments on that particular occasion bravely extolled the nationalistic and sovereign delights of these vast claims, but is this truly credible? Is this claim of his one that, through the actions or plans of his government, he can substantiate in practical or even theoretical terms?

In a debate last February, I referred to the size of Canada's coast guard. On the basis of the latest statistics I could find, May 1972, I stated that we had some 32 vessels in Canada's coast guard designated as patrol vessels. Let us say we have 40 today. That is being most generous.

Also, let us assume all of these vessels are fit and ready to proceed.

Where do we stand on fisheries patrol vessels? It is not always easy to find out just how many of these we have. I did a bit of research and came up with some figures. The minister announced a five year program in February. According to the press release which he issued at that time, he was aiming for scientific and fisheries patrol vessels capable of operating 100 miles or more off the coast for extended periods. How did he get out to 200 miles between February and May?

● (1640)

Mr. Davis: Ever heard of aircraft?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But the minister did not say 200 miles at that time. I suspect that what he was out to catch on that occasion were some fish in the St. Andrews area where he was talking, presumably, to supporters. Perhaps he was looking for non-supporters to convince, but I doubt they would be convinced.

Mr. Haliburton: A fisher of men.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That's right. With a $50 million program for one 200 ft. offshore patrol vessel to operate off Newfoundland, in 1975 and 1976, plus two other similar vessels, one for the Pacific and one for the Atlantic, completion in 1978, and a 95-footer due for completion in 1974-75, and three 48-footers. And, it is stated in the press release, some 17 vessels which are to be replaced in the course of this five-year program. Finally, the press releases announced there were 78 vessels engaged in fisheries patrol work in February of 1973. We have some 30 coastguard vessels and some 78 fisheries vessels.

The minister spoke just now, and I will accept his figures, that the extension of our fishing limits covered some 700,000 square miles. Going further, I was doing a bit of calculating and I arrived at a figure of about 2 million extra square miles to be patrolled by some 120 vessels. I find this is asking a good deal of crews, particularly when we cannot find them as indicated by the fact the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) had to lay up some of our vessels because he cannot man them. There is nothing in the program of the government which encourages the native heritage of Canada, which is going to sea. We cannot find mariners for our naval vessels and we are doing everything to discourage our fishermen. This clearly indicates how non-credible is the minister and the policies he is advocating.

Let us look at the situation in another light. What are the officials who advise the government saying about exclusive fishing rights? Not long ago in a committee we heard a lengthy statement on territorial sea matters by one of the government's most knowledgeable and practised advisers. After dealing with the rights of coastal states to the continental shelf, and even to the continental margin, a matter which for many purposes was settled by international convention in 1968, this specialist said:

> As to fisheries, we have asserted that the coastal state must have the power to manage the fisheries resources including the right to determine quotas.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

I note that the minister has backed up so that he will be able to fall in line with the advice he is getting.

Mr. Davis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman has said several things which are a flat contradiction of my speech. I said during my speech that we must manage the fish over our continental shelf. His last words were that I backed down from that.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You did back away from your speech in New Brunswick. What I suggested in my last comment was that the minister backed away from the statement he made in New Brunswick. I have the text in front of me and I am prepared to table it if necessary. He has backed away from that statement because he has found he cannot get support from the people who know how to negotiate treaties, people who are aware of the problems faced when trying to persuade others. I just cannot foresee, at this stage, and I am sure the minister doesn't either, the problems involved in saying "That's it"—certainly not with 120 vessels to defend our limits.

Mr. Lundrigan: We do not have five.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I made a calculation and I arrived at a rough figure of 120, that is if they were counting all at sea at the same time for 24 hours a day and never had to put into port. In any event, the witness who was giving this testimony knows the difficulties of negotiating even management rights. As for exclusive fishing rights, with all due respect, the hon. minister stepped way out of line.

So, we find the minister out of step with his advisers and, I suspect, out of step with his colleagues in the cabinet. Therefore, he moved back to the position he outlined just now.

All in all, the government is not doing enough to protect our fisheries, or to encourage our youth to garner the harvest that is theirs. It is not doing enough to encourage fishermen to go to sea, or to build a viable coastguard. It shames me to hear that when there is an accident off our shores the United States Coastguard is called in to pick up survivors. Why does Canada not have a coastguard worthy of the name? We do not have sufficient fisheries patrolmen, either. Our tradition as seamen is not being upheld.

This is not all. We are faced with the knotty problem of split or undecided jurisdiction in the area of maritime control. We have been told here and there in the question period and in committee about the hopes of the fisheries department to wrest control of harbours from transport and to get public works to do the building and maintenance of the facilities within the harbours. This I consider to be business management run wild. Divide and misrule, I call it.

Then, the defence department gets into the act. Listen to this. In the course of questioning the Minister of National Defence only two weeks ago, on May 22, we went into the question of the environmental protection and surveillance responsibilities allotted to our naval and air forces. As reported at page 29 and 30 of the minutes of the 13th meeting of the Committee on External Affairs and Defence, we heard the deputy minister of national defence outlining the problems of multiple jurisdiction or co-ordinated command. All we got out of that discussion was that a complex study of this question had been undertaken but because the inquiry would involve matters touching on security it could not be made public. This suggests to me that we are still nowhere near determining, in a crisis, which authority goes to sea and for what purpose. Is it a fisheries patrol vessel, is it a coastguard, is it a naval vessel or is it an RCMP vessel? The fisheries and environment people and the coastguard are clamouring for definitions, but the government has not provided any of the answers. So, there we are. We are expected to accept, on faith, that a government which cannot understand national priorities will act in a responsible way to co-ordinate the activities of the many jurisdictions operating for 200 miles out to sea and using all of our 120 vessels. I will not even mention the decision of the government to lay up, or even sell, several of our naval vessels because of inability to man these ships.

● (1650)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I now have the consent of the House to ask my question of the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a somewhat irregular procedure, but if the House wishes to consent, the hon. member could ask his question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: The minister failed to address himself to that very important part of the resolution dealing with adequate surveillance. May I ask the minister, and my question is prompted by this very serious omission on his part,—he seems to be suffering from amnesia these days—why he cannot use Canadian Armed Forces ships, just as we are now using Canadian Armed Forces aircraft for surveillance? As the minister well knows, aircraft have very limited ability in respect of surveillance because of weather conditions and their ineffectiveness at night. It would help if they were supplemented by ships of the Canadian Armed Forces. Is it the intention of the government to utilize Canadian navy vessels in this regard?

Mr. Davis: It could well be the government's intention, especially when we have exclusive limits reaching out to the continental shelf and in some places beyond. But it has not been necessary yet. The hon. member downgrades aircraft. Possibly he has not been out on any of the Armed Forces aircraft which can tell through fog, and at night, how many vessels there are, how large they are, whether they are fishing and so on. I would not downgrade the role of the Armed Forces which can carry out surveillance efficiently. I would also suggest that having negotiated quotas with other countries, and especially if we get into joint ventures where the catch is landed on our shores, the problem of surveillance would not be as difficult as it was in the past.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not reflect on the motion which is before the House, when he was speaking. Does he accept the motion which we presented? Secondly, does he still stand by the position he took at St. Andrews, on Saturday, May 26, when he said that the position of the government next year at the Law of the Sea Conference will be that we will go flat out for an exclusive fishing zone which will include the fringes of the continental shelf?

Mr. Davis: Dealing first with the last question, Mr. Speaker, I am personally going flat out for it.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am not talking about you personally.

Mr. Davis: I believe we should go further where 200 miles does not encompass the shelf, and we should include these broader shelf areas as well.

Dealing with the first question, I agree with the intent of the resolution but it does not go far enough. It does not include waters adjoining the slope, which are important fishing waters over which we should have authority, and it should cover salmon and other species which swim far beyond it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Will this be the position of the government next year, the position the minister announced at St. Andrews?

Mr. Davis: I believe it will, and it is my job to make sure it is.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before calling on the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. De Bané) perhaps I could announce at this time that, pursuant to Standing Order 40, the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Olaussen)—Transport—Subsidy to Foreign Registered Vessel, MV "Travetal"—Suggested requirement of Canadian registry; the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers)—Post Office—Alleged delay in delivery of first class mail.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF OWNERSHIP AND ACTION TO PROTECT FISHERIES RESOURCES OVER THE CONTINENTAL SHELF

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stanfield:

That this House accepts the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fisheries resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of these fisheries resources are the responsibility of the coastal state, that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state; and,

This House agrees that, in implementation of this policy, Canada must provide adequate surveillance so that swift action can be taken when Canadian interests are threatened or violated.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Barnett.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the motion which has just been introduced in the House bears on an issue which for a very long time, in fact since the very beginning of Canada, has been of great significance for the economic life and the welfare of the population. Besides being one of the first resources to be developed near the North American coasts, fishing has long been one of the most sturdy supports for our dawning economy. Since our fishing resources are also at the limits of our country, they have brought us into contact with our next-door neighbours and many other countries, and that has rapidly led us to conduct, in that field, more and more extensive activities and assume our own responsibilities. Every member recalls, for example, that the first treaty concluded and signed by Canadians was a convention concerning halibut fishing and our bilateral relations with the United States of America.

In a way, it is fair to say that the situation has not changed much, because fisheries remain a very important area of our national and international activities and that, once again, we must consider how Canada can turn to the best account the biological resources along our coasts and how to defend our interests in the light of new circumstances prevailing in the world today. So, Mr. Speaker, I should like to describe briefly the present situation concerning the matter of national jurisdiction over maritime fishing.

We will recall that for centuries fishing was part and parcel of the concept of the freedom of the sea, and that consequently the fishermen of the whole world could, without restraint, give free course to their talent and their boldness on all the seas of the world. It is only in recent years that we have realized that this total freedom could lead to serious impoverishment and in some cases to complete extinction of biological resources of the sea and that it became imperative to set up new rules if we wanted to preserve those important natural resources.

As the hon. Minister of Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) recalled earlier, Canada was one of the very first countries to propose, in 1958 and 1960 at the Geneva Law of the Sea Conference, that beyond the traditional three-mile territorial sea it was advisable that coastal states should obtain certain rights over a wider area for the exploitation of their resources.

As early as 1964, Canada set up a nine-mile fishing zone beyond the three-mile territorial sea and thus contributed to develop a new concept to guarantee better control over fishing by coastal states.

● (1700)

In 1970, this control was enlarged to even more important areas by extending the territorial waterline to 12 miles and creating exclusive fishing zones in the gulf of the St. Lawrence, Fundy bay, Dixon entrance, Hecate's Strait and Queen Charlotte Strait.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Those efforts have already brought us important benefits but our offshore fisheries are still subject under international law to a freedom which does not seem to us adequate. We believe that the Great Banks of Newfoundland for instance which for four centuries have attracted fishermen from all over the world, must from now on be governed by new regulations, new concepts. Obviously, the matter does not come under the exclusive jurisdiction of Canada and as is the case in all the seas of the world, fishing must be submitted to regulations universally recognized and applicable to everyone. These concerns are, of course, shared by most states of the world and this is why studies were undertaken under the auspices of the United Nations to develop adequate solutions to this problem.

The United Nations sea bed committee who is now preparing the third law of the Sea Conference is developing a fisheries system that will allow hopefully a better use and conservation of biological resources of the sea. it should be noted that in the same time, this committee also works on problems that have a direct impact on fisheries such as defining the rights of coastal states on the continental shelf and the rights and duties of those states with regard to prevention of pollution. Canada is no doubt one of the countries which were most actively involved in these studies and which contributed most to the development of an almost general agreement not only on the goals to be reached but also on the approach most likely to ensure the success of the operation.

Being aware of the importance of fishing in some areas of our country—including the constituency of Matane which I have the honour to represent—and, in a wider sense, for the whole of Canada, but realizing—which I feel is the most important—the interdependency of all nations of the world, we wish to emphasize that besides being tinted with economic egotism our policy but would above all take into account the primary importance that must be given to this vital resource and its conservation. it might therefore have been easier, but much too simplistic, to propose to the community of nations that they simply share the oceans and their resources and draw more or less arbitrary off-shore limits. Instead, we have decided that the only defensible position under these circumstances, was to treat fishing in a functional way, taking into account not only the geography and the very nature of the various species, but also the related economic and social factors and the necessity to maintain rational control over these activities. We must be delighted that that functional approach now seems to be meeting the acceptance of most countries. Indeed, when considering the concepts put forward by some countries in the context of the law of the sea, like those of the off-shore sea and the economic zone, one can only conclude that that reflects in different ways a practical implementation of that functional policy. Once again I must point out that Canada has been innovative when establishing three years ago its exclusive fishing zones where are already found in fact the main elements of the proposals now under serious consideration by the United Nations, that is the establishment within a certain zone of the rights and privileges in favour of coastal states, in connection with fishing resources, continental shelf resources and the prevention of sea pollution.

As you know we already have this jurisdiction over the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Bay of Fundy, Hecate Straight, Dixon Entrance and Queen Charlotte Sound.

This policy has a double objective: First, it is obvious that those guidelines should lead to a workable system that should ensure our fishermen and the Canadian people the protection required for the maximum exploitation and conservation of our biological resources. On the other hand, the interests of the international community should obviously be taken into account and it would be a mistake to ignore the human and political context we are living in and to deny to others rights obtained through tradition or which are theirs by the very nature of things. Many countries which are not endowed as we are and which cannot find near their coasts the fish resources required for their survival and trade have been, for years, intensively exploiting the biological resources of all the oceans and, in several cases, quite far out from their own coastal regions. Quite naturally the coastal nations have responded to this mass intrusion of foreign fishing fleets over banks situated near their territories. In view of the modern technology now used by those fleets it became obvious that pure and simple competition between coastal nations and remote fishing nations would have quickly entailed the loss of major resources. No one would have won anything in the long run. It goes without saying that a solution should be found to this confrontation and that we must urgently reconcile the views and interests of all nations involved.

The current negotiations should therefore take into account the opposition of certain very important countries which do not agree with coastal states extending their jurisdiction over large regions. An ideal policy consisting in a coastal state assuming outright control over all resources off its shores would be hardly negociable. It is also obvious that purely and simply maintaining the traditional fishing freedom would not constitute an element of fruitful negotiations either.

Therefore, what is to be done? Considering the positions developed by our natural allies in that field, namely those coastal states that are concerned above all with the resources adjacent to their shores, one realizes that a good number of them chose to secure rights and privileges over a zone up to 200 miles off-shore. As things are now, one can say that those states now represent a majority within the international community. But the kind of rights and privileges to be enjoyed by the coastal state over such a zone have yet to be defined. Some would like those rights to be exclusive, which would entail of course the automatic exclusion of fishermen from other states over large sea areas. Now very few states can say they are able to fish all the resources of those areas. Setting aside for themselves the exclusive right to such resources would be neither practical nor reasonable, given the protein needs throughout the world especially in the underdeveloped countries.

On the basis of scientific statistics, the Canadian government on the one hand deems essential that the coastal state keep for itself the exclusive administration of fishing resources and, on the other hand, firmly believes that the coastal state, while setting aside for itself a preferential share of the production, must allow other states to use the surplus of such resources that it cannot or does not want to take itself. Obviously, the coastal state must have all the necessary latitude to determine, on its own, what share it has coming to it, and to regulate the activity of other countries so that its own activity will not result in a serious decrease or the complete destruction of its stocks.

The question of knowing whether the rights of coastal states will be exclusive, totally or only partly, still remains to be decided at the next Law of the Sea Conference, but there is another equally important matter to which I alluded a few moments ago and which is particularly important to Canada, namely, the question of the limit of the jurisdiction to be exercised by the coastal state. I said that there is a tendency now to grant the coastal state some jurisdiction over fisheries up to 200 miles. Of course, in the case of most countries that distance covers the entirety of so-called coastal species since in most cases the continental shelf of those countries where those species live does not extend beyond 200 miles. However, the situation is entirely different in the case of the East Coast of Canada where the continental shelf of Newfoundland extends beyond 400 miles. On the same scientific grounds that led us to adopt a functional policy, it was normal for Canada to claim rights over that whole area, that is to say up to the limits of the continental shelf since that is where fish is found. It would be foolish to suggest that a state can manage, conserve and exploit adequately stocks lying within an arbitrary limit of 200 miles, without taking into account the elements of those stocks to be found in adjacent areas. A single stock must therefore come under one regulation because, otherwise, the effect of uncontrolled activity in one part would of course be disastrous for the other part of the stock. That is the position Canada defended and continues to defend because we think it is the only defendible position if a rational plan is to be established with respect to coastal fisheries.

Up to now, Mr. Speaker, I have only referred to the so-called coastal species, those which are found mainly on the continental shelf and which depend upon it for their conservation and development. Needless to say, the Canadian government was also concerned with other species of fish, some of which are of prime importance to Canada. I refer in particular to anadromous species, such as salmon. We took the stand, and we intend to maintain it, that salmon should be restricted, wherever it may be found, to the fishermen of the state where it was spawned. Without the large amounts of money and numerous efforts devoted to the reproduction of this species by the state where it is spawned, salmon could not exist, but of course, it is quite natural for it to happen to be, at some time or other, in territorial waters other than those of its country of origin. In such circumstances, interceptions are inevitable, and that problem naturally lends itself to bilateral solutions. Otherwise, there is no doubt that only the state of spawning should be entitled to catch this species.

Non-migrant species which live on the continental shelf are already covered by the Continental Shelf Convention of 1958, which Canada signed, the sovereign rights of coastal states.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this government has advocated the most appropriate policy to guarantee Canadian fishermen all the necessary protection for the development of their industry, and to ensure that their individual welfare and their contribution to national welfare continue to improve. A policy based exclusively on sovereignty concepts would only emphasize the disputes which already take place amongst some nations of the world. We developed legislation and regulations to protect our fisheries, but we have also reached agreements with given countries whenever necessary. We will continue to assert our rights at the international level, but we will also endeavour to ensure that proper consideration is given to the legitimate interests of other States and the international community as a whole.

[English]

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise to take part in this debate to support the motion presented this afternoon by my leader dealing with the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fisheries resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of these fisheries resources is the responsibility of the coastal state and that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state. I naturally support that motion.

Before I become too involved, I should like to take exception to the remarks made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) in the course of his speech in New Brunswick last week, because I am sure the minister must be aware of the position taken by our party in this matter on September 22, 1972 at a meeting of our Atlantic caucus in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. At that time our party stated its position with regard to our marine resources. I should like to read into the record a part of the release which came from that conference concerning our marine resources. It reads:

> . . . under this new department, launch a new, aggressive program to extend Canada's managerial control to the extremities of its continental shelf, for conservation and management of its marine resources;

I think the minister must have been aware of that resolution. Certainly, the people of Atlantic Canada were well aware of it. I am at a loss to understand why he would so deliberately try to misinterpret the views of our party and or our members in respect of our position regarding the continental shelf. I am rather surprised also to see the tug-of-war which obviously is taking place between certain members of the government.

The Minister of Fisheries in his speech at St. Andrews mentioned the continental shelf and came out with a program whereby we would go all out or flat out for exclusive fishing rights including the fringes of the continental shelf. However, a few days later, I believe on Monday, May 28, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) introduced a motion in this House under Standing Order 43 in which he called upon the House to stand behind that principle. The motion was not allowed unanimous consent. I understand the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is one of the members who refused this unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. De Bané.]

Mr. Carter: This did not surprise me, and I am sure it did not surprise most people in Atlantic Canada, because we know where the Secretary of State for External Affairs stands when it comes to fishing. As a matter of fact in 1953, in a speech, the minister stated that the fishery represents poverty and should be allowed to die. This is a statement made by the man who now occupies the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs. He outlined his attitude toward the fishing industry and the fact that it represented poverty and should be allowed to die. I am concerned that if a tug-of-war is in the making our Minister of Fisheries, as good as his intentions are, in all likelihood will lose the war because we have seen the influence the Secretary of State for External Affairs can exercise on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and we have seen how well he can represent the views of his Bay Street constituents in respect of policies made by the Prime Minister and this government.

I feel that if there is to be a battle between the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Atlantic area and indeed Canada, could very well come out on the wrong end of the stick. If that should happen, it would be extremely regrettable because we all know that our fish stocks are seriously declining to a point where it is now almost uneconomic to fish. Surely, if the present situation is allowed to prevail much longer it will be uneconomic to fish and a large segment of our population will be deprived of an opportunity to derive a livelihood from that industry. I make that statement in the light of figures which were released to the effect that in 1971 our catches represented, I believe, two and a half billion pounds. This figure was reduced in 1972 by almost 300 million pounds, despite the fact that the capability of our fishing fleets had increased due to improved technology, improved gear and so on.

This situation, of course, is all the more alarming in Atlantic Canada because we find that approximately 75 per cent of all the fish caught in Canada come from the Atlantic area. This is a rather shameful situation. I believe it is a very serious indictment of the present government which has allowed this situation to continue and worsen. We find that in respect of the Atlantic area—I have said this before in committee and in the House—there seems to be a complete and utter indifference to the fishing industry. We find that the government is totally insensitive to the needs of the area in respect of harbour and marine facilities. I am sure the records of the Committee on Public Works and the sub-committee on public works in respect of small craft harbours contain some very interesting and very alarming statistics which reflect the attitude of this government toward the fishing industry, particularly in Atlantic Canada.

We find that the expenditure on public works, such as harbour and wharf facilities, this year is to be 25 per cent of what it was in 1951. These are not my figures but rather are figures that were quoted at the meeting of the subcommittee to which I have just referred by highly placed officials of the Department of Public Works. We find, according to their testimony before the committee, that this year it would cost approximately $30 million to properly maintain and service our facilities in Atlantic Canada while in fact they are this year spending I believe a little over $15 million. I think this is pretty indicative of the attitude of the present government in respect of the fishing industry, particularly in Atlantic Canada. It is a very alarming fact when we realize that so many of our people depend on the fishing industry for a livelihood.

Earlier I mentioned my views in respect of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the fact that I believe the gentleman in question has no compassion whatever for the fishermen, and no optimism in respect of the fishing industry. I think that attitude has been reflected in the statement the minister made in 1953 when he referred to the fishing industry as representing poverty. He no doubt made that statement in view of the fact that according to official statistics the fishing industry accounts for less than 2 per cent of the gross national product of Canada. I think, therefore, it has become a political question.

● (1720)

The question, of course, is: why should we cater to the people involved in the fishing industry? Why should we cater to the regions in Canada where the fishing industry is important, when it represents such a small percentage of our gross national product? That question is very misleading in that the fishing industry represents much more than the reported 2 per cent. In fact, according to an economist with the Memorial University in Newfoundland, a man who has spent considerable time studying the effects of the fishing industry in Canada as a whole, the fishing industry is seventh in importance among all Canadian industries. When one realizes that a number of service industries are connected with the fishing industry, employing a number of people who derive a living from the fishing industry but yet never go out to the sea to fish, one cannot help but be surprised at the fact that so little attention has been paid to it by the government, and in particular by the Minister of Fisheries.

In my riding, fishing plays a very important part in our economy. There are communities in my riding where the fishing industry is all important and if the fishing industry were to die, the community would die. In the province of Newfoundland which I represent, if the fishing industry were to fail, the economy of our whole province would be shattered to such an extent that I doubt we could survive economically. That is why those of us in particular who represent Newfoundland are so anxious that action be taken immediately to adopt a sane approach to the management and control of our marine resources.

Of course, it is laughable to observe the government's attitude with regard to surveillance and control. I was amused the other day when in the House we were questioning the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and trying to impress upon him the need to make the four destroyers to which reference had been made available to the Department of Fisheries, rather than mothballing them, so that a proper job of patrolling our coastal waters could be made to protect our fishermen. The minister's reply was that he was quite satisfied we were doing a good job of patrolling our waters. If he were to tell that to the fishermen in my riding, I am sure he would get a laugh out of them.

It is obvious to all of us, particularly to the people who are affected, that this government is not doing its duty in properly patrolling our waters and protecting our fishermen from the ravaging of foreign fishing ships. Not only do these foreign fishermen rob our fish stocks and contribute to the depletion of our marine resources, but in the process in many cases they destroy the fishing gear of our fishermen. Then, they just thumb their noses at our fishermen and fade out into the sunset, not giving a thought to paying any compensation and with no respect for authority and law. This is a sad situation because fishing gear is vital to the operation of fishermen. Without it, they cannot fish. In many cases, fishing gear represents a substantial sum of money, certainly an amount which fishermen should not be expected to forfeit as the result of actions by foreign fishing fleets.

One alarming effect of the activities of foreign fishing vessels is that, for years now, we have noted an abrupt decline in our fish stocks. For the past number of years we have found that the catches of our fishermen were seriously declining. Yet, we have been prodding this government, and particularly the Minister of Fisheries, to try to bring about some method of control and management of our marine resources. However, I am afraid that our pleas have fallen on deaf ears, and very little action has been taken by him to protect our fish stocks. He has imposed other regulations on the advice of his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to seals. There are times, it seems, when the minister is quite willing, indeed anxious, to impose certain regulations. This is so often the case that at times we think perhaps he should be called minister of the environment, fish restrictions and regulations. Yet, when it comes to protecting that all important species, our groundfish, he seems unwilling to take any action that would have the effect of staving off the day when the extinction of this species would occur.

We have seen the minister take steps to curb the killing of baby seals. We all realize that it is not a pretty sight to see animals being killed. Yet, those of us in Atlantic Canada continue to hold very strong views concerning the wisdom of the minister's regulation with respect to that animal. We know how it came about. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and our ambassadors in foreign countries could not stand the thought of being badgered by the sob sisters of SPCA at their cocktail parties. Imagine that, they could not go to a cocktail party in European capitals or in New York without being approached by some lady wearing her mink stole and her kid gloves who, after having eaten a full sized meal of calves' liver and bacon, would come up to them and make objections to the killing of baby seals. Of course, the Secretary of State for External Affairs could not allow his staff to be harassed by such people, and consequently the Minister of Fisheries agreed to impose these restrictions, the effect of which was to pretty well ruin our sealing industry.

We have seen the minister impose other regulations with regard to whales, swordfish and salmon. This seems to be a government that is more concerned with imposing regulations on our own people, on our own fishermen, restricting their area of activity, than with talking sternly to the Russians, the Cubans, the French, the Spaniards, the East Germans and the Portuguese. You name them and they are there. What we want is a minister of fisheries, a government, and a secretary of state for external affairs who would be prepared to take off their gloves, if they have to, and tell these people that fish in our waters belong to this country and that they can fish them only by Canada's leave and licence.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting motion. The minister has already said that he can find little to disagree with in the motion except for the fact that it does not go far enough.

There are certain points in the motion which interest me. It reads:

> That this House accepts the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fishery resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes.

In other words, what it is really saying is that basically the opposition is adopting the same position as this government will be taking at the Law of the Sea conference. Yet, if it is that, on the one hand, members of the opposition are saying that basically they agree with the position that Canada will be taking at the Law of the Sea conference and, on the other hand, they are expressing pessimism regarding whether in fact this position can be improved. They say it is a good position to take, but can we actually do it?

Mr. Lundrigan: We are not accepting that position, my friend. Tell the House the truth.

Mr. Rompkey: You people have thrown cold water on ICNAF and on the Law of the Sea conference. The only alternative, then, is gunboat diplomacy. I think the opposition should come out clearly and say whether they are in favour of our ships firing on vessels of foreign nations and having them fire back on our ships.

Mr. Carter: Stick to teaching.

● (1730)

Mr. Rompkey: I had better classes when I was teaching, I can tell you that; they were much more orderly.

I think the Conservative party should come out quite clearly and say whether they are in favour of ships firing on other ships and precipitating an international incident. There are two alternatives; either gunboat diplomacy or "walk softly, and carry a big stick," in the words of Teddy Roosevelt. I think it should be clearly stated which of the two alternatives the opposition favours.

In many ways, the fishing industry in this country is in good shape at the present time. There are many indications of this. We have talked about the federal contribution to shipbuilding in the Atlantic provinces. In Newfoundland alone this means a federal contribution, for 1973-74, through a 50 per cent construction subsidy of $5 million. In addition there is the possibility of construction at the Marystown shipyard of ten 65-foot, steel, multipurpose units with a capacity of landing another seven million pounds. This represents jobs for 305 men for one full year. When in operation these ships will provide continuing employment for 272 crew members on a year-round basis. This contribution to shipbuilding is important to the fisheries as well.

There are other indications that in general terms the industry is in good shape. Fish prices have increased. For instance, cod blocks have risen from 21 cents per pound in 1969 to 62 cents per pound in 1973. The Salt Fish Corporation, even though cold water was thrown on it in committee by members from Nova Scotia, has put money in the pockets of fishermen. Choice, light-salted cod was selling for $27 per quintal in 1969; it is now selling for $49. It is true that in the last couple of years landings have gone down, but from 1953 to 1971 landings per fisherman increased from 29,000 pounds to 45,000 pounds. The available statistics show that in the last two or three years there has been a reduction, but looking at the broad picture it is evident that landings have in fact increased.

The position we are taking at the Law of the Sea Conference is increasingly geared toward improving the fisheries in this country. I want to speak particularly about the Atlantic area, which I represent and which is very much concerned with the fisheries. As a matter of fact, my province of Newfoundland has been historically and traditionally dependent upon the fishery to provide a living for its people, and I am sure it will continue to depend upon the fishery as a prime source of income in its economy.

The two major themes of this government are national unity and the elimination of regional disparity. We have already shown that the government is interested in improving the economy of the Atlantic area to the point that it is self-supporting. As I see it, our position at the Law of the Sea Conference is fulfilling that aim. If we can ensure increased earnings for our inshore fishermen, there will be less need to find alternative employment for them; in other words, DREE need not provide as many alternatives to jobs in the fishing industry if we concentrate our efforts on that industry.

One issue covered at the Law of the Sea Conference is that of control to the end of the continental shelf. If I understand the motion correctly, this is what it calls for. Our position at the conference seeks control to the end of the continental shelf whether it be 200 or 400 miles and, indeed, to the bottom of the continental slope. This is very important because there is a danger of depletion of stocks and only the host nation could have adequate control over those stocks. First of all, we must make sure that we have adequate stocks from which our fishermen can draw.

I was pleased with the appointment of Dr. Arthur May to the marine biology laboratory in St. John's. For some years he has given valuable aid to Canada at Law of the Sea conferences and I am sure that his knowledge will be valuable to the province in carrying out adequate research programs. It is not as easy to do research beneath the surface of the ocean as it is above the surface of the ground; it is not as easy to count fish as it is to count trees, and you cannot predict the same kind of maximum sustained yield in the water as you can on land. But we must go as close to it as we can.

Another point is that, as the host nation, we must have a preferential share in our fisheries' resources. This means that we should be able to fish to the limit of our resources. If we can establish such a policy, our next important point is to make sure that we have the capability with which to carry it out. The minister pointed out that we have not been fishing up to our established quota. If we can achieve control over the continental shelf and ensure preferential fishing rights, our next job is to make sure that our people have adequate technology to enable them to take those stocks. We must not emphasize, as this motion does, limits to the exclusion of facilities; we must view both aspects in context. It is one thing to set a limit and control stocks, to have maximum sustained yield and quotas; but we must also ensure that we have the proper facilities, inshore and offshore, to harvest that yield. This means improvements in technology. I have already pointed out that the government has been putting money into ships and gear; it is subsidizing these areas of the industry in order to help fishermen take more of the resources which, of course, means more money in their pockets.

We have discussed a small craft harbours program in various ways, and at length. There is no point in having quotas and controls if fishermen do not have the facilities with which to reap the proper harvest. We must ensure that breakwaters and other fishing facilities are in good shape, that boats are protected and able to harvest the resources properly. We must bear in mind the program announced recently whereby the department would provide a subsidy for freezing and chilling facilities in small craft harbours throughout Canada. This is important because usually a great deal of the catch is lost due to deterioration.

We must be careful, too, that while we are improving the facilities we improve the infrastructure—water supply, housing and all other facilities. I would like to see many of the OFY, LIP and other programs which have been up to now on an ad hoc basis put on an ongoing, comprehensive basis so that communities can plan ahead and thus make sure that the infrastructure is improved. I would like to see an ongoing program of winter works in connection with our small craft fishing harbours.

In a committee meeting recently my colleague from Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney) mentioned the effect that unemployment insurance has in encouraging people to leave the inshore fishery. It has been pointed out that the inshore fishery is possibly the most economical of our fisheries because it is less capital-intensive and therefore brings greater return to individual fishermen. We must make improvements in the unemployment insurance program as it applies to fishermen if we are to ensure that they remain inshore fishermen.

Proposals are already under way, through the proper authorities, to bring about necessary changes in unemployment insurance for fishermen. The only alternative would be some sort of catch insurance or, if I may put it another way, we must ensure a guaranteed annual income for firshermen. The form that this help is to take, whether it be unemployment insurance, catch insurance or any other form, is really a matter for debate and for the government to decide. We must ensure that there is some sort of guaranteed annual income for our fishermen. The other point that came up in our committee meetings recently had to do with greater communication with those in policy-making positions. Indeed, we must provide in future for more input from fishermen at the lower level.

All this, Mr. Speaker, is very important in view of the fact that we have a food problem in the world. We recently debated in this House the rising cost of food. Only a small percentage of the world's food comes from the sea. In future a great deal more of its food will come from the sea. This means that we must place greater emphasis on the fisheries and emphasize greater returns for our fishermen.

Naturally, I am very concerned about the northeast coast of Newfoundland, that part of my riding which is almost wholly dependent upon the fishery. In a year such as this, when ice conditions have been bad, our fishermen have no income to fall back on. Many have been without income since the middle of March. We all hope that the fall fishing will be good. When the ice has been bad at the beginning of a year it is said that the fall fishery will be good. In the meantime we must provide some form of income for our fishermen.

Mr. Lundrigan: How will you do it?

Mr. Rompkey: There are at the present time proposals before the government to do this very thing. I have tried to show that the government has increased its spending on the fishery and I have tried to indicate the areas in which it has done that. I have also tried to indicate some of the problems which remain, which some hon. members have tried to discuss within the context of the motion before the House.

Really, what I am trying to say is this: the first thing we must be concerned about is stocks off-our shores. We must improve our technology to ensure greater returns for our fishermen. We must try to improve market prices. We have done this. We must ensure that with improved market prices all the profits do not remain in the hands of the middleman but that the price paid to the fisherman is improved. We must continue to improve facilities in small craft fishing harbours. Finally, we must attempt to provide a guaranteed annual income of some kind for our fishermen.

The position as set out in the motion varies little from the position of the government. However, if we approach this matter from the point of view of the motion alone we will find it is not enough. We should not consider the motion out of context; I think we must be concerned about the broad spectrum of our fisheries' problems.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member wishes to ask a question. This can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will ask him privately.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable pleasure that I rise to participate in this debate for it provides me with an opportunity to place before the House some of the problems faced by our own fishermen and those engaged in the fish processing industry. Seldom in our history have the people of Atlantic Canada been more concerned over the future of the fishing industry, and they cannot help but question the federal government's role and its future development policy as it concerns this industry. The previous speaker, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Romp-key), made some comment about the healthy aspect of the industry. Although I do not wish to engage in any long controversy with him, I suggest that he read the annual report put out by Environment Canada in which he will find these words:

> Canadian landings of fish and shellfish in 1971 amounted to 2.5 billion pounds, 6 per cent less than 1970 and 12 per cent less than the peak year of 1968. The total value to Canadian fishermen at $190.7 million was, however, only 1 per cent lower than in 1970.
> On the Atlantic coast, total landings have been declining since the peak in 1968.

I could go on, but I think that is sufficient to show what is happening in Atlantic Canada. The fishing industry is vitally important to Atlantic Canada and it is especially important to Nova Scotia where the landed value last year of all species brought our fishermen a total of approximately $60 million. These species had a market value of approximately double this figure. However, this amount when distributed among our offshore and inshore fishermen still leaves them with an income far below the national average. This situation does little to encourage young men to consider fishing as a vocation. This, I submit, is unfortunate and is a situation which must be changed, and changed very quickly, if the fishing industry is to take its rightful place in Canada's over-all development.

In recent years it would appear that our fishermen and their activities have received a very low priority rating from this government. This fact was recently highlighted when fishermen from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Quebec appeared before the subcommittee on public works, where all of them without exception deplored the lack of consideration given their requests, as presented by petition through their Members of Parliament, for improved wharves, skidways, dredging and breakwaters.

It is utter nonsense for the government to say that it has not been alerted to the fishermen's needs, for in my own constituency the file is fat with copies of petitions forwarded to the government in support of fishermen's requests. The file from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) is equally fat; his communications state that the requests of the fishermen have been noted but no action can be taken at the present time due to shortage of funds. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what is the real reason behind the lack of action on these requests. I wonder why these people, whose requests are so small and reasonable, are denied assistance in order that they may earn a livelihood and add to the gross national product and to our economy. Why were these requests denied while at the same time this government made available millions of dollars in the form of grants, which in some cases do little for society and often are highly questionable?

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) cannot boast about a $445 million surplus for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, and at the same time ask us to make any sense whatever out of the statement of the Minister of Public Works that he cannot provide funds for skidways and wharves because there is no money available. You simply cannot have it both ways. And to judge from discussions I have had with fishermen, they are not being fooled by the manner in which the government is attempting to fog the issue. Surely the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) must be aware of these situations, and surely he could support pleas for funds made by the Minister of Public Works in cabinet, pleas which would lead to some improvement in the present disastrous and inadequate situation.

This may be one way in which the Minister of the Environment could polish his tarnished image among the fishermen. Having taken away their fishing bounty, their sick mariner's benefits, their swordfishing, salmon fishing and whaling industry, to name but a few, the minister—I can assure him—holds about as much respect among the fishermen as a faulty compass which they know will never lead them in the right direction. Perhaps if the Minister of the Environment spent more time with his colleagues devising policies for our fishermen, rather than attempting to make cheap, partisan politics out of our need for fishing limits on the high seas, as he tried to do at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, our fishermen would have more faith in this government than is now evidenced.

The minister is well aware that our party stated as a matter of policy that we, as a government, would adopt and recognize the principle that Canada and other coastal states own the fishing resources on and over their respective continental shelves and slopes, that the management of these fisheries resources is the responsibility of the coastal state, that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state, and in implementing this policy Canada will provide adequate surveillance so that swift action can be taken when Canadian interests are threatened or violated.

That, Mr. Speaker, is our policy. That is our stand. That is our position. That is where we have stood for many years. And what did the minister try to do? He said in his speech that the Conservatives are boldly talking about a 50-mile limit. In effect, Mr. Speaker, Conservative spokesmen were asking this government to support Iceland's stand which is, in my opinion, the same in principle as our own. The only difference is that their continental shelf is approximately 50 miles wide, while ours is 200 miles in some areas and much more than this when one considers the Grand Banks off Newfoundland. The minister fooled no one in New Brunswick. He certainly did not fool any of the fishermen in Atlantic Canada. He fooled no one because there is no record of any action taken by this government to support the principles of continental shelf management as enunciated by Iceland.

• (1750)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: That is the point we are trying to establish. When the minister and his parliamentary secretary say this is their position, I would like to know where in this House they have enunciated that position and placed it on the record. It is nowhere to be seen. By not showing any backbone, this minister and this government have made a mockery of their pledges to Canada's fisheries. They have made a mockery of their proposals for the upcoming Law of the Sea Conference scheduled for November in New York, and for Santiago, Chile, in 1974. They have robbed us of support for our proposals from Iceland and other countries, which support will be sorely needed if we are to obtain control of the fishing resources on our continental shelf.

Partisan politics will never be a substitute for practical policies. Instead of trying to intentionally mislead the fishermen and the fishing interests of Atlantic Canada, as the Minister of the Environment tried to do at St. Andrews, I suggest that he should try to remember we are still in opposition and that he and his colleagues, as long as they are the government, share the responsibility of proposing a policy that is acceptable to the majority of countries in attendance at the Law of the Sea Conference.

I remind the minister that the problems of the fishing industry are not only the concern of his department: they are also the concern of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp); the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand); the Minister of Public Works; the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), for surveillance; the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), for unemployment insurance; the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), for marketing; the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), for plant development; and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), for pricing and quality control. These are but a few of the ministers directly involved. Each one of these ministers has a relatively important role to play in the over-all development of our fishing industry.

There is every indication that there will be more government activity in the future; this is something which will have to be worked out between the government and the industry. In my opinion the government has certain responsibilities to this industry, such as the enforcement of regulations, conservation, biological research and the negotiation of international agreements. However, the industry should be permitted to assume certain responsibilities, such as the proper way in which to utilize the resource, the type and size of the ships required to catch the fish, the location of processing plants and the marketing of the catch, as well as the right to research new markets.

There should be one common goal to this over-rall policy; that is, the achievement of an adequate return for our fishermen and processors in relation to the effort made and the capital invested. To bring this about we need to process high quality fish in a form acceptable to the market. For far too long our fishermen have been treated as second-class citizens.

The prime requirement, of course, is some assurance that the fishing resource will always be available. Therefore, in my opinion the results obtained at the upcoming Law of the Sea Conference are vitally important to Atlantic Canada. In this regard I am concerned that the Minister of the Environment may not have the wholehearted support of his cabinet colleagues for his proposal to manage the fisheries on our continental shelf. I cannot help but wonder about the stand that will be taken at this conference by Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs. From the answers given this afternoon by the Minister of the Environment, obviously he has personal views on the course to be followed but he does not have the backing of the government. In my opinion he misled his audience in St. Andrews and he is misleading Canadian fishermen today. Until his stand is backed by the entire cabinet we will not have a clue as to where the government will stand when it comes before the Law of the Sea Conference.

The Minister of the Environment speaks about continental shelf management of our fishing resources as though it is something new which he has conceived. What arrogance and what nonsense! I remind him and the House that it was in 1952 that Chile, Ecuador and Peru, in their Santiago declaration, asserted full jurisdiction over the sea to 200 miles from their coasts or to such greater widths as might be necessary to protect in full the rights and well-being of their nationals as the three governments concerned might see fit. Perhaps it is only fitting that the next Law of the Sea Conference will be held in Santiago, because the Santiago declaration did more than any other action or document to launch the nations of the world on a course seeking an acceptable revision of the law of the sea.

In my opinion it is vitally important that the government of Canada, with the support of the opposition, present a united front at the next Law of the Sea Conference so that meaningful progress can be made. We must know who owns the sea bed, who has the right to exploit the minerals of he sea bed and how, where and to what depths this will be done. We must know how far out to sea the living resources of the sea belong to the coastal state. None of this will be easy. I say this, for in the preliminary consultations very few governments have shown any real concern about their sharing or about the whole world's interest in protecting the marine environment. When taking this stand they are only enforcing their present actions on our own continental shelf.

At present we know that some 2,000 fishing vessels are operating in the ICNAF area off the east coast. This increased fishing effort is, in effect, robbing us blind and is contributing to our declining fishery resources. The minister can claim that the countries belonging to ICNAF have agreed to fixed quotas—and I understand the quotas that have been established—but I believe it is our responsibility, as the coastal state, to carry out surveillance of these ships in order to monitor the quotas and also to inspect the fishing equipment to see if it is in accordance with ICNAF regulations.

It is for this reason I suggested to the Minister of the Environment, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that the minister's department take over the four surplus destroyer escorts of the Canadian armed forces. This is not a new idea. Last year, when announcing control of its waters up to 200 miles from its coast, Mexico negotiated the purchase of ten fleet mineweepers, 215-feet long, from the United States navy. These World War II ships were mothballed at San Diego. They are being used as offshore patrol vessels on both the Gulf and Pacific coasts of Mexico. This type of surveillance off Canada's east coast is long overdue. I hope the minister will take immediate steps to beef up our surveillance capability.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, 50 or even 25 years ago when marine resources were or seemed endless and when our fishing fleets were almost at the handicraft level, the motion presented today by the leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would have been of very little interest and it might not have come to the mind of hon. members to discuss such a matter, at least in the way we are discussing it today. But in recent years, with the advent and development of technology in the fishing industry as in all other industrial sectors, with the appearance of those fishing fleets and floating plants that invade our international and domestic waters, with the advent also of this technology used by our own Canadian fishing fleet, and the very great importance of the fishing industry for the Canadian economy, it has become necessary to change the criteria, since with all the development of this modern technology, we are beginning to fear desperately that our once endless resources be wiped out.

● (2010)

And in recent years it has become evident that the international law was less and less adapted to the new problems and needs deriving from the accelerated development of that technology. That is particularly evident as regards marine environment matters. And when we talk about environment we must not think only in terms of water pollution. The marine environment covers everything concerning the fishing industry.

About 400 years ago, Grotius wrote that most things were getting depleted through excessive use, but that such was not the case with the sea. The sea, he said, could not be depleted either through shipping or through fishing, in other words, through either of both uses that could then be made of it.

The traditional concepts of the law of the sea are unavoidably based on the hypotheses reflected in that assertion from one of the most emminent publicists of the law of the sea. Unfortunately, the nature itself of problems calling for regulations through the law of the sea has been radically changed by modern technology and the development of the law failed to keep pace with the development of technology.

Therefore, Grotius has excuses for not having foreseen the long range implications of technological progress as regards the law of the sea. In his time, since he lived towards the end of the XVIth century and in the beginning of the XVIIth, he could not ask himself for instance, whether nuclear ships and super tankers could be included in the definition of the "innocent passage", whether radioactive waste and nerve gas could be thrown into the sea under the principle of high-sea freedom, whether some protection should be a prerequisite to the drilling off our shores and whether modern fishing fleets more impressive than the Spanish Armada should be free to fish at will in the open sea.

As for us, we would have no excuse for ignoring modern technology's consequences on regulations devised in the remote ages of sailing boats and old empires. Uses of the sea have been multiplied since Grotius' time. Today, the sea can be depleted through over-fishing, as the one that is unfortunately practised every day, and it is up to us to develop a new law to prevent such a catastrophe.

Canada has a prime interest in all aspects of the law of the sea; this is readily evident when one considers the length of our coast and our dependency on high sea transportation because of our position as an important trading nation. Everybody knows that Canada has taken part in all efforts aimed at establishing new and better adapted rules in line with the new uses of the oceans. Canada's involvement in the 1958 and 1960 conferences is well known, but on many occasions since then we have tried to find solutions to yet unsolved problems, including the limit of territorial waters, as well as the nature and extent of the rights of coastal states over fisheries resources. Even though some progress has been made on those questions at the international level, we have a long way to go before unanimity is achieved. Some states are advocating strictly regional and even domestic solutions; others want a single limit with regard to the maritime sovereignty and other forms of maritime jurisdiction, but this, of course, is a potential source of conflict.

A complete review of all the principles of the 1958 Convention is not desirable and could lead to a return to anarchy and chaos. It remains that the third Conference on the law of the sea scheduled for next fall and the summer of 1974 in Santiago, Chile, will have to study a number of problems that have never been settled satisfactorily. I am thinking more specifically of the review of the rights and duties of the states in the area of conservation and management of maritime living resources, in the light of the growing depletion of those resources as the fishing techniques became more industrial, as I already indicated at the beginning of my remarks. I find it abnormal that some nations should make heavy investments to protect their spawning rivers, as in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific salmon, and that in so doing they should sacrifice the enormous profits they would have made by developping the hydro-electrical energy of those same rivers to find that this very fish which they tried to protect is being caught without any discrimination, by anyone at all, as soon as it starts migrating. Canada believes that the coastal and long distance fishing states should realize that a rationnal system of conservation, management and exploitation of fisheries is necessary in the interest of all. On the one hand, to allow fishing until the last fish is caught would be insanity while, on the other hand, the conflicts and chaos that total prohibition by a coastal state would entail should be avoided.

From Canada's point of view, first of all the international community must provide for special rights and duties of coastal states and set up at the same time new regulations for high sea fishing which will take into account both the need for an equitable distribution of profits and the importance of a rational development of resources.

Mr. Speaker, do I have to refer my colleagues to the stand taken and the suggestion made—which Canada approved—during the environment conference in Stockholm? The material that was published and released to all members during this conference is proof of it and is available to all hon. members.

The freedom of the seas cannot mean "freedom to exhaust the resources of the sea". Mr. Speaker, I repeat that marine resources are very important, not only for a large number of Canadians but for all our country, and in particular for those I am most concerned about, for most if not all of the constituents of the riding I have the honour to represent. It is a vital industry for these people and I suggest that it is the responsibility of both our leaders and those who exploit these resources to do it in a rational manner.

Fisheries are not the only area, Mr. Speaker, in which we have realized, unfortunately a bit too late, that our natural resources are being unconsideredly exploited. The same thing happened to forests in the province of Quebec, for instance, where there used to be numerous and very thick forests. They were exploited unconsideredly so that we find ourselves today in an alarming situation and that is why our governments have dealt with this issue, perhaps a bit late. The national development of our resources is the only way to conserve them for future generations.

Of course, I cannot blame the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) for taking a strong stand on such a crucial problem, and I understand their feelings because they are the feelings of their constituents and the fishermen in the areas they represent.

However, this does not mean that the government has done nothing and ignores the problem. Never has a Canadian government concerned itself so much with our fisheries, and I would ask my colleagues, without meaning to reproach them what did the tory government do about ten years ago in the area of fisheries, and particularly in the field of fisheries within our territorial waters, whereas right after Mr. Pearson's government came to power, Parliament passed legislation extending our fishing zone to 12 miles.

Fishing is now prohibited to foreigners in the gulf of St. Lawrence and many other steps and initiatives were taken by the government, which proves its great concern about this particular area of fisheries.

I realize that everything has not been done and if everything was done at the same time, I wonder what would be the use of having successive parliaments. Fisheries have evolved like any other area and that is why every successive Parliament is faced with problems and must find solutions to the best of its ability in the best interests of the people.

Mr. Speaker, we must therefore take the necessary steps to protect those resources. As I said earlier, I am very concerned with fisheries and on the matter of the depletion of those resources, one cannot remain silent.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we must protect those resources on which a large number of Canadians depend, including my fellow citizens from Bonaventure-Iles de la Madeleine, while acknowledging that other countries are interested in establishing a functional system offshore under which Canada would have priority rights, a system that will also recognize that others are entitled to a fair share of the benefits.

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked what our party had done in respect of fisheries when—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it would fall within the realm of proper debate for the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) to now make a second contribution to the debate.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has used up the time allotted by the Standing Order. However, if there is agreement in the House that the hon. member be allowed to ask a question, he will be recognized. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) asked what was done by the Department of Fisheries during the period the party to which I belong was in office. I should like to ask whether he is aware that during this period an immense subsidy program was put into effect under the Diefenbaker regime, during which the coastguard was established to provide protection to Canadian fishermen. Also, is he aware that in 1958, under the Conservative government, steps were taken enabling Canada to control and manage its continental shelf? Is he not aware that these progressive steps were taken under that regime?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, he answered my question, but he is asking me whether I was aware of it. I am; I did not say that the members of the party of the right hon. member from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had remained idle, but as far as the resolution introduced by the Leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is concerned, it deals with fisheries limits. Well, I say to him that if something was done, we were not aware of it; everything has been done since 1963.

[English]

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, the very important motion before us for debate gives us the opportunity of speaking on this subject. The government is being urged by members of the House to implement policies that are in the best interests of this country and our fishermen. The motion deals with fishery resources on and over the continental shelf and slope, as well as adequate surveillance.

First of all, I must mention that before implementing any policy or considering anything that will improve our fishing industry it is important to consider our air and sea rescue operations, particularly in British Columbia. These operations have proven to be rather ineffective at times and have been criticized in respect of poor performance and lack of immediate action. Steps must be taken to bring about improved air-sea rescue operations. I am sure hon. members of this House are agreed that something should be done in this direction in order that Canadian fishermen can operate in an effective and safe manner while harvesting one of the most important resources of this country. It is imperative, if we are to expand our fishing operations and if we want safety for our fishermen, that this be treated as a priority matter. Fish stocks have been declining over the years, not because of Canadian fishermen but because we have allowed our territorial waters, just as has happened with the territorial waters of Iceland, to be gradually depleted by foreign fishing fleets.

I welcome, also, the amendment to the motion before us, which I seconded, to the effect that this House assert ownership by Canada of anadromous fish spawned within our borders and the exclusive right to harvest the same. The views expressed in the House today will go a long way toward the formulation of policies that will bring long-term benefits to this country.

The question of the extent of a country's territorial boundaries has arisen many times in many parts of the world. Many countries which depend on fishing and the fishing industry as a major source of revenue and as a matter of national interest are taking action to protect this interest. We have recently witnessed the action taken by Iceland to extend its territorial waters in order to preserve its fishery resources. With the gradual depletion of these resources, Iceland now clings precariously to the edge of an economic precipice, as it finds no alternative to taking such Lilliputian action as is necessary against Great Britain in order to preserve the economic health of its country.

We have also witnessed the action taken by Uruguay, Ecuador, Peru and Chile to extend their territorial waters and fishing rights to 200 miles from shore. We witnessed an earlier declaration by Argentina to extend its fishing rights over the Patagonian shelf. This is the kind of action these countries find necessary to preserve their resources and prevent other countries from depriving them of their livelihood.

Here in Canada we are also faced with the encroachment of foreign fishing vessels within our waters, contributing to the gradual depletion of our fishery resources. It is not sufficient to have a 12-mile limit as this is merely an invitation to other countries to take advantage of our ground-fish resources which extend to the edge of the continental shelf, or of our salmon and herring which are spawned in this country and are the resources of Canada.

There is no doubt that the fishery resources in the waters adjacent to our coastlines must be conserved and developed in the interests of Canadians today and of future generations. The rapid increase in the world fishing effort and efficiency has focused attention on the fact that unless adequate safeguards are taken the marine resources which have played such a vital role in the development of the Canadian economy will be harvested by foreign fishing fleets.

Fishing resources harvested by Canadian fishermen in or out of Canadian territorial waters are also exploited by fishermen of other countries in the high seas adjacent to Canadian territorial waters. Unless positive action is taken by the Government of Canada to enforce the Canadian maritime boundaries and to extend these boundaries beyond the present 12-mile limit, there can be no planned program of fisheries management and conservation. If, however, action can be taken by this country to preserve its interests, then Canadians engaged in the primary fishing operation and in the many processing industries will be assured of a means of livelihood for many generations to come.

As a member representing a large coastal section of British Columbia it is in my interest and in the interest of fishermen in my constituency to ensure that steps are taken now to safeguard the marine resources which are adjacent to the coastlines of Canada. One of our weaknesses is that we cannot compete economically and on the same scale as the Japanese and/or the Russian fishing fleets. As a result, we must develop and implement a policy that will give us jurisdiction over our fishery resources in the waters adjacent to our coastlines, to the edge of the continental shelf and slope and if necessary to the limit of 200 miles in order that we can conserve and develop these resources.

There is no doubt that the principle of the 200-mile limit must be enforced, not only to 200 miles but also farther than that because the contintental shelf off the east coast of Canada extends in some cases 300 or 400 miles. We must develop a policy by which we can direct our attention toward better conservation to sustain yield operations, toward enforcement of anti-pollution laws and toward measures that will ensure that our fishery resource will continue to be a healthy sector of the Canadian economy.

In conclusion, I insist that this country must enforce its authority in defending the rights of Canadian fishermen to fish unmolested in their own waters. It must also be prepared to enforce its authority up to the edge of the continental shelf and slope, and even up to the limit of 200 miles which is the limit we may have to impose in order to preserve our fishery resources.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to contribute a few minutes to this debate on the welcome motion by the leader of our party. He made clear the policy we stated at the Atlantic conference in September of last year and specifically one of the many recommendations to the effect that we would extend Canada's managerial control to the extremeties of the continental shelf for conservation and management of our marine resources.

It was pleasing, also, to note that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) welcomed the position of our leader. I congratulate him on following the lead of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who also has the habit of stealing some of our policies. Now all the minister has to do is to get together with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and pound some sense into his head so that the government can move forward to make its clear case at the Law of the Sea Conference.

Since many former speakers have been taking credit for what they did and said over the years even before we Newfoundland members arrived in Ottawa, I am glad to see that the minister is finally coming around to listening to the many pleas we have made to him in the last five years on conservation of our resources and on the provision of meaningful surveillance. It took us five years, Mr. Speaker, and after a few battles I think he is beginning to see the light.

However, the leader of our party said, and rightly, that because the Law of the Sea Conference was finally taking place we should not get too confident that the minister will have his policies or objectives accepted immediately. It took a couple of years even to get agreement on an agenda from the other nations. But I am sure everyone in the House who is interested will wish him well. I mention this because our fishing industry is deteriorating even though the minister has such high hopes, which is indicated by the reams of releases which come out of his office. I must say that of all the paper coming out of government offices giving members glad tidings of great things to come, his office must hold the record. I mention this also because we have a problem on our hands right now which must be corrected immediately.

If I might refer to my own province, Mr. Speaker, our patrol capability leaves much to be desired. The foreign draggers must have a great time teasing the Cape Friels, for example, which could not catch a dory at low speed. Even the tracker squadron surveillance operation of the Department of National Defence is meaningless because they fly at predetermined hours and are not available at the time when foreign draggers are fishing within our boundaries. The minister and his department, for some reason or other, in respect of the reports coming in from the district officials take the word of these officials rather than the word of the fishermen.

I had a phone call from a fisherman last year who, while he was talking to me, was watching a foreign dragger tie up at a CNR dock and dump its offal when reports were coming in that all draggers were outside the limits. The department made a token arrest, however, of a Canadian dragger. I wonder what political implications were inherent in this instance. While we are waiting for the extension of our continental shelf, what are the 17,000 fishermen in Newfoundland to do?

This year the ice blockage along much of our coastline delayed the execution of the fisheries for many hundreds of fishermen. When I bring the matter to the attention of the minister he tells me this is not so because his officials have told him it is not so. And while he does not believe the representations of members, and in turn the fishermen, for some reason or other the government has not been able to come up with an unemployment or catch insurance plan to satisfy the industry, under the guise that fishermen are self-employed. I wonder what we are waiting for. Do we wait until the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who is here, comes up with his master plan which will take from three to five years to complete?

The minister also mentioned earlier the direction of his department's effort, and particularly that he is putting another $46 million into a vessel-building program. Fine and dandy, I say, But we have a good vessel-building program now whereby Newfoundland fishermen can get, through federal and provincial programs, 90 per cent of the cost of a longliner; but on the other hand, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) does not have enough money in his budget to provide the necessary wharfage facilities for these longliners. This emphasizes the lack of, and need for a comprehensive Canadian fisheries policy, which is now a patchwork system of various departments, both federal and provincial, going off in different directions and wasting millions of dollars.

The fishermen of Newfoundland are a completely frustrated lot of citizens, wondering what kind of legislators we are in Ottawa. Newfoundland joined confederation in 1949 because of the great benefits of our nation. True, there have been many benefits and I am glad this has come about, as are most Newfoundland citizens. But the Fathers who made the deal up here in Ottawa did not realize that the federal government would brush aside our little fishing industry as a little speck in their national goals. They did not realize, and evidently did not convey the idea that fishing was our basic resource and that it dictated our unique way of life. Those who governed after 1949 caught the industrialization disease, a disease which even today we cannot get rid of in our greed and our search for oil and other minerals. Unfortunately, we in our proud province still do not realize the environmental value and peacefulness of our lifestyle, a quality of life that is fast disappearing in our greed for wealth regardless of the cost.

The fishing industry in Newfoundland is our basic resource and we must protect this industry at all costs. We must protect the small fishing communities and the fishermen citizens who are as good Canadians as those whom we push to the big cities, citizens who because of fisheries policies have tried to relocate to growth centres to their detriment and disturbance. The fishery in Newfoundland is analogous to that of Iceland because we are fighting for survival. Iceland, as an independent nation, is dependent for 80 per cent of its economy on the fisheries. Can anyone blame it for the action it took to reinforce its survival?

The Minister of the Environment keeps repeating that we do not, and should not have to resort to gunboat diplomacy to protect our livelihood. I ask him: What do we do. Do we wait for the countless studies and programs he has announced? Do we wait for support facilities, the responsibility for which will be handed over by the Department of Public Works to the Department of Fisheries? Do we wait for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to sign the transfer of responsibilities so that the minister can get on with the job of providing small craft harbours to our fishermen? Do we wait for the minister to believe the members of the opposition from Newfoundland who are on his side but he does not know it? Do we wait for him and his government to show some backbone and tell the foreign nations that we were not aware of the value of the fishery resources and did not provide the factory ships and the trawlers necessary to compete for this lucrative resource?

● (2040)

Is it any wonder that the fishermen of Newfoundland have lost their hope of regaining their livelihood in the fishing industry? Is it any wonder that my colleague the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) had to make an issue of the political speech the minister made in New Brunswick a short time ago? Is it any wonder that I as a Member of Parliament, in my frustration when foreign draggers were raping the shores of my district two years ago, reluctantly threatened to take up arms together with my fishermen to keep these foreign draggers from ravaging our shores and denying our citizens their rights?

No one in Canada wants to resort to gunboat diplomacy. The minister is either being partisan or is still not aware of what poverty is. He is not aware of what frustration is and what the consequences might be of denying Canadians their rights: if he had been, he would not have made the statements he did.

Since time does not permit me to go on much longer, let me conclude by saying to the minister that all he has to do is trust Canadians regardless of their political leanings. Let him bring his case to the Law of the Sea Conference with our support. Let him bring Bill C-4 before the House of Commons so as to provide the support facilities necessary for the fishermen of the Atlantic region. Let him bring in his new programs for the provision of vessels to allow Canadian fishermen to take advantage of our resources. He should get on with the job of supplying the new patrol vessel which he announced. But let him remember the pledge of this government to guarantee equality of opportunity to all Canadians wherever they may live, which should include the fishermen of the Atlantic region and will benefit all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, since I have decided to take part in the debate on the motion presented by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), you will permit me to say that the government took action quite a long time before the idea of protecting the fisheries resources on our continental shelves and slopes ever crossed the mind of the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

The opposition days in the House, designated to deal with ways and means resolutions, do not offer the Canadian people anything new. We have already studied in its minute details the subject presently before the House in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, as well as in that on Fisheries and Forestries. Because what we heard today had already been said on many occasions by ministers and department officials, I say this is stale news.

The opposition is really limited in the choice of measures it wishes to suggest to the government. How lucky the Canadian people are, Mr. Speaker, to have had, since 1963, a government which is so concerned with their welfare and which presents legislative measures, not only for this generation but also for future ones. I would like to quote only the legislation passed by this Parliament on our territorial limit of 12 miles, and I remind this House that we have shown the way to a number of other countries by passing a legislation to protect our environment as far as 100 miles off our coasts, north of the 60th parallel.

With regard to the limits beyond territorial waters, several proposals have been made by various countries during the international conferences that have taken place, in order that the state may exercise its jurisdiction over the off-shore resources as far as 200 miles.

In addition to the jurisdiction over the off-shore resources, some states also want to broaden their jurisdiction over fisheries, and others would be prepared to take into account fishing done on the high seas for generations. There are some treaties to be considered and Canada, through its Secretary of State for External Affairs and its

[Mr. Marshall.]

Department of Fisheries has signed protocols with several countries concerning provisions to control fisheries within the 12-mile territorial limits. The negotiations were not easy, and we are grateful to those two ministers for the achievements. There is another type of jurisdiction with which we are concerned and that is pollution control. The Canadian government has already indicated that it advocates very strict regulations. On the other hand—that is well-known—our neighbours to the south, the United States, hardly accept the policy of the Canadian government in the area of pollution control on our coasts.

The Canadian position is known to everybody, since it has been outlined a number of times at the UNFAO, to the effect that we want to be the owners of the fishing resources on our continental shelves and slopes. We even went further in defining a continental shelf, since we have always maintained the position that the Canadian continental shelf extends to the continental limit, that is the shelf itself plus the slope or part of it.

In fishing matters, the government has defined two kinds of jurisdiction: that which the coastal state can exercise on fishing resources, as there is no longer a question of sticking to the previous system of non-interference, according to which anyone can fish at will. The coastal state must preserve the right to manage resources, including the right to set quotas. The government proposals still go further; it is asking that the coastal state be the sole beneficiary of certain marine species.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has already pointed out that some anadromous species such as the Atlantic salmon should not be fished in open sea, lest it become depleted. We are endeavouring on the Atlantic coast to preserve the salmon—especially the Gaspé salmon—and the countries practising that fishing should be more conscious of the conditions. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we must continue to prod the northern countries into preserving that species and we know that the Minister of Environment has performed significant work to that effect.

The motion of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) reads as follows and I quote:

> . . . the management of these fisheries resources are the responsibility of the coastal state, that other states may only fish such resources with the permission of the coastal state;

As for the Gulf of St. Lawrence, we are facing a very special problem: the presence of the Islands of Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, which belong to France.

During an external affairs and national defence committee debate, Mr. Alan Beesley, legal adviser and general manager of the Bureau of legal services, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), concerning the islands of Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, had this to say about the negotiations, and I quote:

> They are in abeyance at the moment . . . Our problem is that we have had a series of negotiations and over the course of years, literally, that these negotiations have taken, the position has developed to the point where we could be on the verge of an agreement. The problem is, in simple terms, that the French government originally took the position that St. Pierre and Miquelon were entitled to a shelf such as any other piece of land and therefore the equidistance principle must apply in determining the boundary line between their continental shelf and ours.

We took the position that the convention on the continental shelf to which both countries are party clearly envisages special circumstances, refers to the problem as special circumstances in which the equidistance principle would not be deemed to apply, and they said this is a classic case for the application of the special circumstances rule. So that meant we then had to get into negotiations to bring the two positions together.

The tentative outline of an agreement which has been worked out and which both governments must consider is rather complex because it is not based on a simple territorial acquisition. It is based on an attempt to determine what the real needs of the respective parties are, what the real interests are and where the point of accommodation lies. In other words, it is not simply a case of drawing a line on a map and saying there is the edge of the continental shelf.

It is conceivable, for example, that France might accept a lesser continental shelf if it could obtain certain types of benefits which we would normally not be willing to grant. So this is about all I really can say at the moment because the negotiations are confidential.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the government ensures an appropriate control so that swift steps may be taken to safeguard the interests of Canadians, especially those of fishermen on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts.

The association which exists in France concerning the islands of Saint-Pierre and Miquelon in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is an excellent example of the complexity of negotiations at the international level. Hon. members of the opposition blame the government for not taking immediate action concerning the fishing rights on the continental shelf of Canada.

What a calamity for Canada if diplomatic negotiations were the responsibility of the hon. leader of the opposition. How would he succeed in having Canada's positions accepted at the international conferences since he cannot even sell his own ideas on national policy to members of his own caucus.

With regard to negotiations on the international level, it is not an easy task and the government must take the lead in the conservation of our territorial waters and fisheries resources on and over the continental shelves and slopes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: The speech is not worth applause. That is bigotry over there.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise this evening to support the motion of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). When one thinks of the power at the negotiating table mentioned by my hon. friends across the way, one wonders what power the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) may have when he arrives at an international conference without even the blessing of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) for the proposal that he plans to present. Not only can he not get the consent of all his confrères to put forward this proposal, but he cannot get the consent of the minister who is particularly charged with that responsibility.

At this stage of a debate, Mr. Speaker, pretty well all that can be said has been said. I might take a moment, however, to review what I consider to be that situation as far as the Canadian fishery is concerned, or at least to speak of that with which I am familiar, the Atlantic fishery. The fishermen on the Atlantic coast are filled with uncertainty. We have seiners encroaching upon the territory of the weirs, big vessels encroaching upon the territory of little ones, foreigners encroaching upon the territory of Canadian vessels, lobstermen facing the depletion of lobster grounds by the encroachment of foreign vessels, lobstermen faced with broken promises by this government with regard to research which was to take place on the effect of fishing of offshore lobsters on inshore grounds. We have the effective loss of the whaling industry, the swordfishing industry, the salmon industry and the sealing industry. There is a good deal of uncertainty in the industry about the future of scallops and herring because of recent measures taken by the department.

New standards for fishing vessels have been brought in without any meaningful consultation with the men who operate them. The regulations involve not only those aspects of vessel construction and management which concern the quality of fishing but also changes which recently came into effect in regard to steamship regulations and the measurement of vessels. The regulations now require extremely small vessels to undergo the same type of rigorous inspection as steamships. Last, but not least, is the uncertainty of our fishermen about whether they are going to have a harbour big enough to hold their vessels once they acquire the new vessels that will be needed to comply with the requirements.

As we have learned in committee, in Atlantic Canada wharves are in a deplorable state of disrepair and require many millions of dollars to bring them up to standard. The future of the small fish plant operators in my riding is very uncertain. There are inconsistent inspection procedures, and apparently ad hoc standards. A fish plant and the product may pass inspection one day but not the next. There is an absence of meaningful help or guidance from the Department of the Environment as far as fisheries are concerned, and there is apparent callousness on the part of those charged with this responsibility toward small fish plant owners.

The vocabulary of this administration includes such words as "regulation", "protection", "inspection", "service" and "rationalization". Very seldom do we hear officials of the Department of the Environment or the minister speak of the promotion of the fisheries, encouragement of the fisheries, assistance to the fisheries or diversification of fish plants and fishing operations. This resolution, Mr. Speaker, can go some distance toward securing dependability of supply for our fishermen and fish plants. Within this context, however, there must be harbour facilities for big vessels, small vessels and intermediate vessels. Also, we must provide assistance to fish plants: there clearly is a need for large, small and intermediate operators.

Mr. Speaker, I heartily endorse the amendment of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). The amendment falls into line very well with the context and import of the motion of the leader of our party. I was encouraged, too, by the minister's statement about the changing attitude of various countries toward the imposition of control of our continental shelf to a 200-mile limit. I was concerned, however, by the answer he gave this afternoon to questions which indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not been won over to that view.

● (2100)

The ICNAF agreement on quotas represents a forward step in protecting and controlling our fishery resources off our coasts. Whether the Canadian fishermen will benefit in fact has yet to be decided. So far the result has been that fewer herring and haddock have been landed than would have been landed if the ICNAF agreement had not been reached. Contrary to the minister's statement this afternoon, not enough herring were provided for in the quota to keep our fishing fleet or our fish plants operating. In the Bay of Fundy there is a seiner fleet potentially able to catch some 200,000 tons of herring on our traditional grounds but now, under the ICNAF agreement, they are limited to 5,000 tons which is barely enough to supply one vessel with an adequate annual catch. Also, the over-all catch, as several hon. members have mentioned, has been declining annually. Our fishermen believe that this is the result of the rape of our resources by the vessels of foreign fleets operating off our coasts.

Despite the minister's assurances to the contrary, we have no way of knowing how much fish is actually being caught by many of these foreign vessels. There are 2,000 such vessels operating off our coasts. Until there are practical controls or controls which are negotiated with respect to the size of catches, the means of catching or the technique of catching the ICNAF agreement will be suspect so far as our fishermen are concerned.

What of the 200-mile limit? Here I am talking of Canada's surveillance capability. There is little use proposing a 200-mile limit or a continental shelf limit unless Canada has the capability to patrol this area at sea to make sure that our sovereignty is not abused. At the moment, on the east coast we have one vessel capable of providing surveillance and enforcement. We have heard proposals respecting another vessel which will come into being some years hence. I am astounded at the press release issued by the minister on May 11 which said in so many words that Canada has increased its aerial surveillance to the point where we will now have one flight per week of a tracker aircraft.

Mr. McGrath: Big deal!

Mr. Haliburton: That is right; it is a big deal. They will fly 1,400 hours per year, or roughly three hours per day if you average it out.

Mr. McGrath: Or one day per week.

Mr. Haliburton: That is a very token effort and it is certainly not one designed to provide an adequate means of obtaining knowledge of the location and size of catch of foreign vessels which regularly fish off our coasts. I suppose, if you work it out, that the tracker aircraft by the time it flies from one ship to another will spend about ten minutes in surveillance of each foreign vessel off our coasts.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is a misleading statement. It is about 60 seconds.

Mr. Haliburton: True, it is about 60 seconds. Tied in with that we must consider our rescue capability. To me, a maritime Canadian who has confidence in the ability of our seamen, who is proud of our maritime heritage and knows the capability of our seamen to cope in the worst weather conditions as well as in the best weather, it is particular galling to find that almost always when one of our vessels gets into trouble, or one of our fishermen needs to be rescued, the rescuer is either one of our own fishing vessels or the United States Coastguard.

The situation will be totally ridiculous if one considers it in the light of a 200-mile territorial sea limit. Certainly, if we are to have a 200-mile territorial sea we must have the ability to do the necessary lifesaving and patrolling that will be needed. A worth-while suggestion in this regard was made by one of my colleagues last week. He suggested that serious consideration should be given to taking over the four destroyer escorts which have been mothballed in Halifax. These destroyers are admirably suited to this task. They are fast and seaworthy and can carry a helicopter, which could be of vital use in the event of a disaster at sea not only in rescuing people but in flying them back to the coast where they can receive medical attention.

Much has been said about the 12-mile limit and the fact that the Liberal government of the 1960s was responsible for declaring it. Taken as a bald fact, that may be so. However, such statements ignore that the concept was advanced by the Conservative government at the Law of the Sea Conference in 1958, and that the idea very nearly won international acceptance. That was the ground-breaking episode with regard to that matter. The Liberal government of the sixties was merely following suit, merely following the line that had already been established by the former Conservative government.

What has been the effect of that unilateral declaration of the 12-mile limit? In many instances the declaration has not had any effect because every nation wants to protect its own interests. But is has affected our lobstermen who are unable to fish on their traditional grounds while American boats fish there, because presumably those American boats have some traditional right to fish in Canadian waters. I do not know whether a solution could be found, but if one is not found shortly there will be another shooting war because the Nova Scotia lobster fishermen, faced with declining catches and knowing the effect of the offshore lobster catches, are in no mood to sit idly by. They do not appreciate trying to catch haddock, halibut or hake while American fishermen are inside our 12-mile limit catching lobster which they may not be able to take.

I want to say in closing that I am proud of my country and proud of its maritime heritage. We cannot, as Canadians, stand by and see our maritime resources depleted by others who come to our shores. We can share. We have enough resources that we can share with other countries, under proper management, a portion of them. But we, the members of this House, must protect our citizens as well as the various species of fish. Whales, scallops and lobsters may need protection; but so our fishermen. Independent fishermen and independent fish plant owners are in danger of extinction as well. I believe that is something this House and this government ought to be concerned about. We must declare our title to the continental shelf and/or the 200-mile limit. We must agree to persuade others to recognize our ownership and right of control. We must have the capability, as well, to control that area. The resources of the sea are ours, but we must act soon to ensure our continued right to lay claim to them.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with others in welcoming this positive motion put forward by the official opposition as it clearly puts the official opposition on record as supporting the position which this government has taken, at least since the present minister made his hard-hitting speech in Boston in the autumn of 1968, when he claimed Canada's right to manage the marine resources on or over our continental shelves and slopes.

This is not to say, Mr. Speaker, that individual members of the opposition such as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) have not been ahead of their party in supporting the control of Canada's marine resources on and over the continental shelf. I think it is accurate to point out that before today neither the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) nor the fisheries critic of the official opposition have addressed themselves to this particular question. They did so today, and all members welcome this.

The hon. member who preceded me raised a very important point, the need for better surveillance facilities. Last May a delegation from parliament attended a NATO meeting in Brussels. They followed up a resolution which had been adopted by the NATO assembly the previous autumn. This resolution, which was sponsored by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and myself, put forward the difficulties which most nations of the North Atlantic face on the question of surveillance. We asked the NATO council to examine areas of potential collaboration among members of the North Atlantic community in using the full range of surveillance facilities, including satellites, to monitor fish migration and pollution dangers.

As a result of this resolution I was named as a special raporteur to report back to the assembly on this question. In preparing my report to the assembly I called upon the expertise which is available within our government. A very excellent report was prepared on the subject of surveillance facilities, describing the latest developments, by Dr. L. W. Morley, director of the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I presented this report on remote sensing to the NATO assembly meeting on May 19, 1973.

I do not know precisely the formula which should be followed, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that this report which was prepared by an outstanding Canadian civil servant is worthy of being attached to today's Hansard. I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to do this. I feel the report would be of sufficient general interest to justify this being done. I have not had your attention for the past two or three minutes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if Your Honour could address yourself to the question I asked, whether this very excellent report which has been prepared by an outstanding civil servant can be added to today's Hansard. It sets forth in a way which has not been done before the latest developments in satellite surveillance. Is this possible, Mr. Speaker? I ask for Your Honour's guidance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The Chair will first have to determine whether there is any objection. I will certainly need the——unanimous consent of the House to table such a document.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member can only do this with the consent of the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, under the rules the hon. member is not competent to table anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): There is not unanimous consent; therefore I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: Only a minister can do that.

Mr. Watson: Am I to understand I cannot do that, Mr. Speaker? While welcoming the motion on the subject of fisheries resources on and above our continental shelves and slopes, I wish this could have been a more general motion dealing with all resources on, under and over our continental shelves because this is an area where the position of the official opposition is cloudy, to say the least.

The position of the federal government on the question of resources, hydrocarbon and mineral resources on and under our continental shelves was to propose a formula whereby there would be a 50 per cent revenue-sharing arrangement with the provinces off whose coasts these resources exist. My own position on this is perhaps at odds even with that of the government. It has long been my contention that the resources of the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and our offshore resources, whether they are offshore in the Arctic, the Pacific or the Atlantic, are the patrimony of the Canadian people as a whole. I have not hesitated to express my opinion in this regard in the Yukon and I would not hesitate to express this opinion on the west coast or the east coast. That is my own view.

The government has gone further than my own feelings on the subject. It is prepared to share the revenues of offshore resources on a 50-50 basis. Presumably these are offshore resources within the 12-mile limit. I am not sure whether it includes the resources extending from the 12-mile limit to the limits of the continental shelf and slope. Presumably it does. In any event, the government has taken a clear position. The opposition has not taken any clear position on the question of these resources.

Mr. Lundrigan: You've got rocks in your bloody head. I will tell you what it is in a minute. You've got rocks in your skull.

Mr. Watson: I would like to know the position of the opposition on the subject of resources under the continental shelves. If that position is clear, I would certainly like to hear about it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then sit down.

Mr. Watson: I would like to know that position. The Canadian people have a right to know whether any party in this House is about to sell out the Canadian patrimony which I feel exists in these resources. As far as I am concerned, these resources, whether in the north or off our coasts, are the heritage of the Canadian people from coast to coast, regardless of the province in which they live. That position has not been clearly stated in this House by anyone. I hope the various political parties will begin to at least take some clear position in this regard.

● (2120)

It was the official policy of the Conservative party in the last election to make the Yukon a province within five years of taking office. This was in Conservative campaign material. I feel strongly that for the Yukon, which has a population of 20,000, to turn over the immense resources of that territory—everyone familiar with the Yukon realizes that the economy is controlled by perhaps 15 to 30 individuals—would be tantamount to creating a Canadian Kuwait in our north.

We ought to consider seriously in relation to our northern resources a system different from that which was adopted when the provinces were first created. The situation has changed dramatically. We now realize that resources are limited. They are a much more important element in our economy; they have a greater potential for the country's future well-being than any other factor. Surely all parties in the House should be giving this subject much more reasoned attention than has been the case up to now.

There is one way in which we could do something about these resources. Unfortunately it is a matter which has been neglected by this government. I refer to the apparent helplessness of the Canada Development Corporation to act in areas where attention is badly needed now. If we had a resource development corporation which could invest heavily in oil and mineral resource development and exploration in the Northwest Territories, in the Yukon and offshore the whole question whether Canadian or provincial jurisdiction applies would become less important. We would see, in effect, a strong resource development corporation controlling a key portion of these resources in the name and on behalf of the people of Canada.

This would be a solution, but apparently the government is not yet ready to create a development corporation which could do these things. The corporation which presently exists is designed to assist manufacturing industries in southern Canada. It is designed to provide a safe return to shareholders and to pay out dividends. It cannot contemplate the kind of risk which a natural resource development corporation would have to undertake if it were to explore, develop and bring mines and oilfields into production in the north or offshore. For this I have no one to criticize but my own side of the House.

In my view we must move toward control, if not by agreement with the provinces then at least through a resource development corporation to ensure an interest for the Canadian people as a whole in the offshore mineral and oil resources as well as of our mineral and oil resources in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. There is no constitutional conflict involved here. This is a field in which we can act without treading on anyone's toes.

I would point out to the official opposition that their motion today talked solely about fisheries. It should be talking about marine and undersea resources in general. I should like to hear an official declaration of policy from the opposition, not five years from now as they have done on this issue—it is five years since the minister made known his clearcut position on the fisheries—but within the next few months.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time alloted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the first think I want to say is that I did not intend to speak today for the very simple reason that there is little I can add to what my colleagues have already said. For the last five years, if you count all the 2,000 interventions I have made in the House, many of which might be classified as irrelevant to the major interest of Canada, you would find that the majority of them involved fisheries. The reason for this is, I suppose, that there are few subjects on which I have any background or what might be called gut conviction.

On this subject, however, I have been persuaded to become involved, and if I were to look back over the last five years—it is only a matter of a few weeks from now when I will celebrate my fifth anniversary as a member of parliament—I would have to admit that today has been the most memorable I have spent in the House of Commons. There are two reasons why I say this. First, my colleague from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) tells me that he cannot remember another occasion in the House when we have debated an opposition motion specifically applied to fisheries. Second, I can think of no other occasion when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or anybody else in a position of such importance and distinction has stood in his place and led off a debate. To my way of thinking, this has shown that I have achieved in my five years something that I did not expect to see—that fisheries has been placed in a very high position of priority in this House of Commons in contemporary parliamentary history.

I was very pleased to see the leader of our party stand up in the House and present a firm and definite position with no equivocation on the issue of our fisheries on both coasts of Canada. I am very pleased that the debate has taken place. The hon. member from South Western Nova (Mr. Haliburton) and the hon. member for South Shore

(Mr. Crouse), particularly the hon. member for South Shore because of his long tenure in the House of Commons, made notable contributions. The hon. member for South Shore made one of the most spirited, aggressive and straightforward statements I have heard for a very long time on the subject of fisheries. As a matter of fact, I would be satisfied if I were to do nothing but second his observations. I have to say that the minister will go down in parliamentary history as one of the great stickhandlers—the Max Bentley of the House of Commons.

Mr. Stanfield: He lost the puck toward the end.

Mr. Lundrigan: Yes, he did lose the puck toward the end; that was because he was speaking without conviction. I must say I do not expect the national press to pick up the debate. I should be quite frank about this; I might as well get it off my chest. Our national press are so ill-informed about the fisheries issue in Canada that one could say just about anything in the House of Commons and it would be accepted.

With the greatest respect to our national press, very few people, especially those in central Canada today, are able to understand the complexities of the issue. Consequently, people like the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis) can present any kind of argument and if they are smooth enough and subtle enough they can convince the country that they are sincere and honest. It takes somebody who has a maritime background to be able to recognize that what the minister said today represented a serious withdrawal; the minister was retreating from Moscow. I will return to this in a few moments.

I shall have to excuse the presentation made by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) on the basis that he did not know what he was talking about. I do not expect him to do so. I cannot speak on the serious problems in the Montreal area because I do not have the necessary background. He got involved in the issue of our resources, both inshore and on the continental shelf, and the subject of decisions in international law back in 1958 and later.

These are Canadian resources. They belong to Canada. The difference is that the hon. member has stated in less sophisticated fashion, in less calculating fashion, the position of his government. Therefore we now know that if the present government has a long tenure of office in this country we in Atlantic Canada have had it so far as concerns using our continental shelf resources to our advantage. We will be imprisoned in a form of economic slavery if the philosophy he expounded today is ever accepted as long-term economic policy. I am very disturbed about this.

As a matter of fact, with respect to what he put on the record today I suggest that every member from Atlantic Canada should see it is repeated and sent to all our constituents to allow them to understand the condescending, narrow-minded approach that he and his government have toward our continental resources. As I say, if that policy is accepted we in Atlantic Canada are doomed to a form of economic slavery for the next and succeeding generations. Our party is unequivocal in the position, in the stand we have taken toward using the continental shelf resources. That stand has been stated publicly. I challenge the hon. member to repeat it. It is a very aggressive policy that will give Atlantic Canadians and other Canadians who have continental resources the best chance to use them.

An hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Lundrigan: Don't ask me what it is. It is on the record. It is clear. It is unequivocal. It is stated formally. It is stated in no equivocal terms in our policy decisions. But I excuse the hon. gentleman for not knowing. The Minister of the Environment certainly knows the attitude which we have expressed, the stand which our party has taken with respect to continental marine resources, but he says that this has never been firmly established in international law.

I point out to the minister that our party's stand goes back a number of years. In December, 1971, approximately two years ago, one of the few resolutions to be unanimously accepted by our party at a meeting of 1,500 delegates from every constituency in Canada upheld the rights of the Canadian nation to the marine resources of the continental shelf, slopes and other areas in proximity to the continental shelf. As a national party we have been very progressive in our position, and had we had the responsibility we would have implemented that policy. The minister expressed a personal position in New Brunswick a few weeks ago.

Mr. Davis: And in Boston in 1968.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister talks about 1968. I agree with him on that; he did express a personal position in 1968 too. But unfortunately the minister does not have the confidence of his government; he does not have the backing of his government.

Mr. Stanfield: He pretends to be expressing the government's view.

Mr. Lundrigan: In his speech a few days ago he said that we would go flat out for the adoption, at the international Law of the Sea Conference, of the 200-mile limit, and where the continental shelf extended beyond 200 miles to include the extremities of the continental shelf. He did not say, "I will go all out" or "my department"; he said, "We will go all out." Then when we brought him back to parliament where he had to be honest, straightforward and show a bit of political integrity we found that the government does not support him.

I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a week last Monday, after his speech in New Brunswick, we moved a resolution in this chamber that was properly drafted. We presented it to the House of Commons for acceptance and it was rejected. Right now I can say without fear of contradiction and with all due respect for the Minister of the Environment that the reason it was rejected was because thumbs were turned down by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). I have proof of what I am saying.

Mr. Davis: You did not mention 200 miles.

Mr. Lundrigan: We did not mention 200 miles. We mentioned the continental shelf and the continental slopes, which are in the same context. Two hundred miles happens to be the sexy, "in" language in international affairs today, but we mentioned the continental shelf and the continental slope even though we haven't the scientists to back up the position we have taken, scientists that are available to the government.

We moved a second resolution to have the House of Commons express support for the Canadian delegation to the ICNAF conference that began in Copenhagen on Sunday. The Leader of the Opposition is expressing pessimism about imposing quotas, but he did not express any regret that we continue to support ICNAF save with the qualification that Canada may have to determine its own jurisdiction and take its own initiative.

The Minister of the Environment was quite willing to accept our resolution. I can tell Your Honour now that I had discussions with several members of the Canadian delegation, which is led by the former deputy minister of fisheries, who told me they would feel better at ICNAF if they had the expressed support of the House of Commons, the highest court in the land, behind them. But that resolution was rejected. I rose the next day in the House and asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he would be prepared to bring a resolution before the House expressing support for Canada's position at the ICNAF conference, and that request was rejected. If we can achieve the position—and it is an important principle—that Canada is able to catch whatever fish it can under our quota, it is a step in the right direction. We are not pessimistic there. However, we are pessimistic about enforcing some of the quotas established, with the kind of surveillance which Canada up until now has shown on the east coast.

It is very restrictive for a member to have only 15 minutes in which to present a position on this issue. The minister had 40 minutes in which to speak, and I have only 15 minutes to present my argument. I cannot do it in that time but I do want to leave one more impression with the House. It is that what happens in ICNAF, at the Law of the Sea Conference or in the provision of marine facilities is in one way or another irrelevant to the main issue in this debate. The main issue at stake in this debate and the reason why this resolution is before the House is to challenge the attitude of the federal government toward the fisheries of the nation. This is the most important problem we have. It has nothing to do with the continental shelf or 200 miles. The main issue is the attitude that is developing in this part of Canada toward our marine resources. This is something we would like to change.

Coming in the aftermath of the proceedings on yesterday's resolution when there was a lot of debate about national unity, I would like to make this one last plea, Mr. Speaker. If I could be a bit small, a bit parochial in my comments I would like to mention something originally put forward by my colleague from the west coast of Newfoundland. We are a province, as my colleague mentioned, of 500,000 people. Iceland is a country, a nation of 220,000 people.

When we became part of Canada 24 years ago we gave up our right of self-determination in the fishing industry because we wanted to become part of Canada and to enjoy the thousands of benefits that flow from being part of such a beautiful country. As I say, we gave up that right in the expectation that Canada would take up the cudgels and protect our rights as part of the Canadian nation.

Now, in Canadian terms fisheries are relatively unimportant. We can accept the statement of my colleague from St. John's West (Mr. Carter) that the fisheries represent only 2 per cent of the gross national product, or the statement by an economist who said the fisheries were the seventh largest industrial endeavour in the hierarchy of the Canadian industrial structure. But the fact remains that in New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island the fisheries represent the most important economic endeavour in our nation. Consequently, it is vital that Canada stand up for our people, that it take an aggressive position, that it show some leadership.

However, we are very afraid that this matter has been pulled down to a political issue within the last few years. We in the Atlantic area are relatively unimportant politically. It will not make very much difference to the national scene whether the Liberal party wins two seats, three seats or five seats in our region in the next election. Consequently, to the party in power today, and possibly to any future government, we may seem to be a very unimportant piece of political real estate. This is what has had a greater impact than any other force on what has happened to our fisheries.

We ask the Canadian government to amend its attitude by even a few degrees on the compass and look at this issue, not as just a cheap, little political move, not in terms of economic importance to Canada but in terms of the livelihood and well-being of the people on the east coast. We want a change in the attitude of the Canadian public and a change in the attitude of this government in terms of the fishing industry on the east and west coasts of Canada. This is our plea. We are not asking for separatism, we are not talking about breaking our ties with Canada—but unless we can get the Canadian nation to change its course substantially and recognize that because we have lost our self-determination to make our own decisions in respect of trade, commerce and all the other aspects of international relationships and agreements, then we have to be a little bit unhappy to be associated with a government that will not stand and be recognized as protecting our rights.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to direct a question to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan).

Mr. Lundrigan: I would be delighted to answer the hon. member's question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In view of the fact that the hon. member's time has expired, I do not feel that a question would be in order.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, like others I feel it is very difficult to put forward all my ideas in respect of this matter in 15 minutes. For that reason I will try to shorten my remarks and the expression of my thoughts on this motion and the amendment. Let me say that I am extremely proud and honoured to belong to a political party which has had a consistent view about this question for as long as I have been a member. The party which preceded the NDP, namely the CCF, was persistent and constant in its concern about fisheries and the 12-mile international limit. It was consistent in its concern about the international question concerning the continental shelf.

We appreciate the opportunity of speaking on this motion put forward by the Conservative Party. We regret that the motion is deficient in that it does not refer to the salmon fisheries off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, although we are happy to note that this has been corrected by the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). There is not another anadromous fish involved in this, but that is not at the moment a matter of commercial fishing importance. Anyone who has dealt with this subject matter over the years knows it has been an uphill fight. We also know that the motion put forward by the Conservative party is another move in that fight. I must state that the most difficult time we have had in respect of this whole matter was when the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) was minister of fisheries. We met during those years absolute obstinacy coupled with indifference and lack of concern.

I think we should pay our respects to a very tiny nation in this world for its approach to the matter of preserving its fisheries. We should express our appreciation for the tenacity and the foresight of Iceland in this regard. Coastal nations of the world owe a debt to Iceland which they will never be able to repay because it is an emotional debt and a debt with future consequences. It was Iceland that set the precedent for coastal nations in respect of a 12-mile limit. It declared unilaterally a 12-mile limit, and it had to contend with Great Britain in this respect. There was not another nation in the councils of the world that support that position. For all the brave words of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) in recent days and weeks, it is a matter of national regret, on my part at least, that Canada has not declared openly and publicly support for the position of Iceland in its desire to preserve the fisheries of that coastal nation.

Iceland is now talking about a 50-mile limit because that circumscribes an area around Iceland and is an easy way to measure the continental shelf and slope. That 50-mile circumscription pretty well coincides with the continental shelf and slope in relation to Canada. I wish every success to Iceland in its contest with Great Britain.

Precedents in international law have traditionally and historically come about by unilateral action on the part of a state. Very rarely has international law been established by agreement between nations. Britain, or whatever it was called in the early days, unilaterally established a three-mile limit because that was the distance they could cover with their coastal guns. Britain was able to exercise that territorial jurisdiction by saying it could fire three miles offshore and if foreign fishing vessels came within that distance they were in jeopardy.

It was Iceland that established the 12-mile limit, and this was accepted in the world. Some years ago Peru established a 200-mile fishing zone limit, but that limit had other complications than are conceived in respect of our territorial seas fishing zones. After Canada had consulted with the United States it unilaterally declared a nine-mile fishing zone. This was only after failure at two international conferences on the Law of the Sea and a discussion about putting this subject on the agenda at the United Nations.

Canada's position has been historically weak in the area of establishing authority over our own resources, especially those of the sea. Generally speaking, with one exception, and that was only after approaching the late President Kennedy and guaranteeing that United States, fishermen would have the right to fish within that nine-mile fishing zone and after we had committed ourselves not to infringe upon the so-called historical position of the United States, we have not taken a unilateral position. Apart from that we have sought consensus, agreement and accommodation from other countries to do those things which we ourselves should do for our own preservation and self-respect. Even in respect of the negotiations that took place a short while ago on the U.S.-Canada, or Canada-U.S. agreement, namely, the reciprocal fishing agreement, we knuckled under. We refused to stand up and be firm in our position. Unfortunately, that has been the attitude of Canada for too long in matters such as this. What we need is a determination, a strong unilateral declaration, not in fancy words or statements written by speechwriters for the Minister of Fisheries, but actions and declarations which mean something.

Mr. Speaker, if the government wishes any guidance or any advice in respect of how to approach this matter, it need go no further than look to the father-in-law of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), Jimmy Sinclair, because when he was minister of fisheries of this country we knew where we were going in respect of fishery matters. Ever since he left that post and was defeated, Canada's position on fishery matters on the international scene has gone downhill. Had it not been for people like Jimmy Sinclair and George Clark, the deputy minister of fisheries, and their determination we would not have had the Fraser River agreement with the United States, because that agreement was the result of our standing up to the United States and telling it what our position was.

I contrast the position at that time with the weak, lily-livered position taken by the government in respect of the current negotiations which apparently have just concluded with the United States. We do not need fancy speeches by the minister about 200 miles or any other number of miles. Rather, we need a declaration of intent. We need to take action as a nation in so far as our own fisheries are concerned. We must do so for our own integrity and for the sake of our respect and unity.

We have an obligation to future generations in this matter insofar as the food resources of the world are concerned. Up until now, very regrettably, we have treated this obligation as a bargaining item to be dealt with and dealt away in the niceties of our diplomatic relationships with other countries. What that approach has meant for us is that we have been made suckers by other nations of the world. We need a declaration to unify us, a unilateral declaration so that other people will know what we intend to do. In that regard let me read the motion and then ask the House a question. The motion asks that this House accept a certain principle; then it enumerates what it is.

In addition, there is an amendment by my colleague the hon. member for Comox-Alberni in respect of an assertion of ownership by Canada of anadromous fish. The motion states, however, that to implement this policy we must provide adequate surveillance, and so on. All the motion is asking for is a declaration of principle by the House of Commons concerning what our intentions and ideals are. Regardless of the position in respect of the Standing Orders, I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the motion were put by you now it would receive unanimous consent. I do not think anyone in this House disagrees with what it says. I would ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition be put to the House that by unanimous consent we call a vote on the amendment and on the motion so that all parties can declare themselves with one voice for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member knows that we are dependent on the rules and there is no way in which the Chair has the privilege or power to do what he suggests. I recognize now the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, if I might I should like to say I realize exactly what the rules mean, and that is why I asked if you would inquire whether there is the unanimous consent of the House to have a vote on the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I cannot seek the unanimous consent of the House in respect of a proposition which is not in order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I suggest to Your Honour that if you would ask for unanimous consent to waive the Standing Order, the House would give unanimous consent and we could pass the resolution, which would have the effect of giving very substantial support to our delegation which is now negotiating at the ICNAF conference.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): What is being put forward now is a very unique request. Without a specific rule I do not see how the Chair could consider an arrangement of this nature. The Chair is being asked to do something in this House which is irregular.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest complaints in this House involves debates which lead nowhere. Today we have had a debate in which the minister has expressed support for the resolution presented to the House earlier today. I would think the minister, the government and our country would be in a very strong position if we were to support this resolution of the House of Commons. I believe the House would do itself a great honour if the debate did not end in the usual manner and if we endorsed the resolution and the amendment proposed by our colleague from the west coast.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): As I have said, I am willing to listen to any explanations but the Chair has no choice in the matter unless members express suggestions to me, because right now I have no power.

Mr. Lundrigan: Ask for unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I have said already that I will entertain any assistance.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a small point in respect of the procedural impasse. The fact is that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in putting forth the motion had the option of moving two types of motion. One would have lead to a vote and the other would not. That option was at his disposal. He chose to put the motion in the form in which it is now before us. This was clear to hon. members opposite at the time the motion was put. The choice was made at that time and I do not see how they can change it at this stage of our proceedings.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister and his colleagues will be saved by the clock. I would just like to suggest that the impression on this side of the House is that the minister of fisheries and the environment stands all alone over there. He does not have the support of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), he does not have the support of his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), and as a matter of fact he does not seem to have the support of any of his colleagues.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you ask for unanimous consent. If there is not unanimous consent, and obviously there is not such consent from that side of the House, I would suggest to the minister, through Your Honour, that if he were tomorrow to suggest to his colleagues that he propose a motion under Standing Order 43 couched in the terms of the motion before us tonight, there would be unanimous consent to give the minister and our delegation which is now negotiating at Copenhagen the support they need. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you ask for unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I must now call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to become involved in the procedural argument. I must concede that what has been said about the way in which the motion is being put is correct. It has proven to be so popular that a member of another party has asked that it be put to the House. However, I object to what the whip said in respect of the Leader of the Opposition saying no. I want that expunged from the record.

• (2200)

Mr. Lefebvre: You did.

Mr. Stanfield: I want it made very clear that I did not say no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. It is obvious that the Leader of the Opposition, as pointed out by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), had a chance to put a motion that would or would not lead to a vote. He chose not to. It was his choice, and that is what I said.

Mr. Stanfield: You did not say that.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. We have now gone beyond ten o'clock, therefore we can accept the principle that we are proceeding beyond ten o'clock. I take it that we have accepted what is called jurisdiction beyond the point which would be ten o'clock. I ask Your Honour to ask for unanimous consent so that we can present the motion which could be accepted by the House unanimously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In order to follow the rules properly, my duty now is to call it ten o'clock. It being ten o'clock—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have just called it ten o'clock. Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being ten o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), to inform the House that the proceedings on the motion have expired.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Adjournment Debate

TRANSPORT—SUBSIDY TO FOREIGN REGISTERED VESSEL, MV "TRAVETAL"—SUGGESTED REQUIREMENT OF CANADIAN REGISTRY

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, now that we have some order in the House may I direct my remarks to a subject that has aroused many people in eastern Canada. The matter of the Canadian coastal shipping trade has already been raised in the House and in various parts of the country, so much so that many people feel it is no longer a newsworthy issue. It may no longer be a newsworthy issue to some people but it continues to be a contentious issue among political and shipping circles.

When the government of Canada is willing to finance the operation of foreign registered and foreign manned vessels so that they may participate in carrying out Canadian trade between Canadian ports, it is time for us to question seriously the government regarding the overgenerous subsidies that are given to such ships. We find here in Canada a situation in which Canadian ships are being replaced by ships under foreign registry and in which Canadian crews are being replaced by foreign crews.

I can understand the government's argument against the implementation of the Darling report and the government's contention that the operation of foreign manned vessels is much less expensive, but I do not understand it when a Singapore registered vessel such as the MV Travetal is guaranteed new subsidies to operate between Canadian ports. Such a situation does not support the government's arguments in this respect.

The vessel Travetal has recently been picketed in Halifax. The operation of this ship owned by Trident Steamships Limited has cost Canadian taxpayers $368,100 in the fiscal year 1972-73 alone. I am not questioning the jurisdictional right of the SIU to picket this particular ship; what I am questioning are the political and legal manoeuvres whereby such ships are allowed to operate at the expense of Canadian taxpayers, and Canadian seamen because they are out of work are forced to sail on ships which do not come under the control of Canadian steamship inspection and marine safety regulations. This is why the SIU or any other seamen's union has the moral right to picket such ships. This is one of the few means whereby our attention can be focused on this issue.

My opinion is that the use of cheap foreign labour and flags of convenience, not only in the coastal trade but also in the future development of offshore and Arctic areas, cannot be tolerated. The oil companies, the shipping interests and the assorted trading companies that control the economics and political life of the Atlantic provinces must be denied the generous concessions that have served their own interests in the past and that cannot contribute to the future prosperity of the area.

In conclusion, I ask the minister—unfortunately he is not here tonight—whether he can justify his actions in permitting the permanent entry into the coastal trade of Canada of the motor vessel Travetal and similar vessels, in terms of the provisions of the Alien Labour Act. I would also ask him to consider the views that I have expressed and to tell the House how and when he hopes to implement the recommendations of the Darling report.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would not agree with all the phraseology and the various things said by the previous speaker. If one were to agree with it, it would certainly put things out of kilter. The vessel is a Singapore registered ship, with German officers and a Spanish crew. The owner's address is London, England. In other words, it is owned by the British and the vessel is time-chartered to Trident Steamships Limited of Halifax, Nova Scotia. She carries out a completely roll-on, roll-off general cargo service, the principal cargo being automobiles, between Halifax, Nova Scotia and St. John's, Newfoundland.

While she is permitted, on account of being a British ship, to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, she is also subject to other sections of the Canada Shipping Act. The one causing the problems relates to the certificates of competency of the master and officers which under the act must be Canadian, as the hon. member said, or others accepted by the minister such as certain Commonwealth certificates. The present officers hold German certificates.

Under the authority given to him by the Canada Shipping Act, the minister on March 6, 1973, exempted the Travetal from the requirements of carrying officers holding Canadian certificates for a period of three months only until June 5, 1973, on condition that the party responsible for the operation submit proposals for compliance with the act. To date no such proposal has been received. The exemption expired on June 5 and has not been renewed. I should like to emphasize that, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of the exemption was to avoid disruption of the service currently provided between Halifax and St. John's, and representations urging this course were received from the Premier of Nova Scotia and representatives of the local International Longshoremen's Union.

Opposition to the exemption comes from the seamen's unions which are strong advocates of the recommendation that the coasting trade of Canada should be reserved for Canadian flag ships. With the expiry of the exemption, the Seafarers International Union took legal action to prevent its renewal. A telegram has been received from the Halifax local of the International Longshoremen's Union urging that the service be allowed to continue. Premier Regan of Nova Scotia has expressed the same concern.

Today, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) sent a telegram to Trident Steamships, to the International Longshoremen's Union and to Premier Regan of Nova Scotia stating that the exemption from the Canada Shipping Act provisions cannot be renewed indefinitely and that adequate time has already been allowed for compliance with the act. Late this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the minister received a new proposal from the operators which is now being taken under advisement.

POST OFFICE—ALLEGED DELAY IN DELIVERY OF FIRST-CLASS MAIL

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, when I asked questions in the House previously concerning unsatisfactory postal service, the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) said that he required specifics. I will now list a few definite examples of slow delivery. First, I cite the instance of a letter posted on March 30, 1973, in Red Deer, Alberta, destined for Vancouver. It was delivered to a Vancouver law firm on April 6, seven days later. Second, may I mention delivery of letters between Red Deer and Edmonton, and Red Deer and Calgary, a distance in each case of 100 miles, taking two days. Previously these were delivered the next day.

Third, Rosedale Presbyterian church, Toronto, complained directly to the Postmaster General that a letter posted at noon on Thursday April 26 in Toronto, for delivery in Toronto, was not delivered until the following Monday morning. Fourth, a letter addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which was posted in Red Deer on May 11 was not received in his office in Ottawa until May 18.

My constituents and others have expressed dissatisfaction also with the handling of mail which has resulted in breakages and other damage to well wrapped and securely tied parcels sent by first-class mail. The question arises whether or not there is any advantage in time and handling when one pays the highest postal rate. Parcels sent out first-class do not seem to arrive any earlier than parcels sent by ordinary parcel post rate, nor are they delivered in any better condition.

It is all very well for the Postmaster General to continue to acclaim the modernization of postal administration with computers and postal codes. Taxpayers are well aware of these changes, if for no other reason than that they pay for them and have had to spend additional hours in adding codes to their mailings both business and personal. When a person receives mail later than within a reasonable delivery period, and in the case of parcels in damaged or broken condition, that person is not interested in hearing again a glorified and detailed description of modern innovations to sort mail, or about the postal code system. On the one hand, the sorting of mail does not mean anything to the recipient or sender if mail is not delivered accurately and on time; on the other hand he is well aware that the computerized equipment is costing taxpayers millions of dollars. He wants to know why mail service has deteriorated to the extent it has over the last two years or so, when can he expect prompt and efficient mail delivery, will parcels be handled with care, as they once were, will letters be delivered to the address on the envelope and not to a residence three or four doors away or to one on the next street, and how long does it take inexperienced employees to become efficient, to read the address and deliver the mail? I do not think these questions are unreasonable or can be passed off with a shrug.

People pay for postal service. They are entitled to efficient and prompt delivery and they are still hoping they will receive the type of service for which they have paid and are paying. Just today I received a letter from a constituent. It is dated June 2, 1973. I should like to read it into the record. It reads:

Dear Mr. Towers:

Someone told me that you had complained about slow-moving mail but needed more proof. I enclose a envelope of the letter I sent to Mr. Reg Johnson whose address is Red Deer, but lives east of Penhold. You might know the person since he is not too far from your place. I sent them a cheque for seed oats on May 4th, and they were wondering why I did not pay. I was there later on to get some more seed and stopped payment on the cheque since I figured that the wrong person got hold of it, but they got it all right, 26 days after mailing, so maybe this will prove that somebody is not on his or her toes.

People who are using our mail system expect service. If they do not get good service, they will stop using it. If they stop using it, the cost must rise. The easiest way to have cheaper mail service is to give better service. These points are being brought to the attention of the Postmaster General on behalf of the people whom I represent and to help others who have brought their complaints to my attention because they do not have access to the Postmaster General except by mail. Delivery being uncertain, even his letter of explanation might not reach its destination for ten days or longer.

Without making any additional comments, I ask now for corrective action to be taken. The changeover to new equipment and a code system is no longer as satisfactory to the people who are paying for our postal system, the Canadian taxpayers.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member to give a few details about the complaints which he wanted to make. I thank him for doing so. I can assure him that if there is a special problem in Red Deer, we will immediately try to correct it.

I would like, however, to point out that it is somewhat unfair to judge the whole postal service by a few isolated cases. It may happen sometimes that Canadians find that their mail has been delayed. Out of 100 letters which they receive, one or two may be late. This does not mean that the postal service is bad. It means that twice out of a hundred times delivery has been delayed.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member cannot raise a point of order during the adjournment debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I would like to add that of course the Post Office Department agrees that certain difficulties result sometimes in late delivery. In fact, there are four kinds of difficulties against which we come up all the time and which prevent the mail from reaching its destination as fast as we would like.

Firstly, transportation is of prime importance to us, and we largely depend on air service. For sure, our service is to a great extent adversely affected by bad weather conditions and delayed flights.

Secondly, the mail volume varies each day, and an abnormal increase in that volume will overtax our sorting and handling facilities.

Thirdly, we have identified 31 handling operations as sources of errors or delays, from the collection of mail to its delivery, and such inconveniences, I admit, happen.

Fourthly, our postal facilities are unfortunately obsolete in many Canadian cities, which makes the task of our employees quite difficult.

But the important thing, Mr. Speaker, is to say that we are trying very hard to correct and improve the situation.

Finally, I can assure the hon. member that our assured mail program is meeting with great success. I have here figures for the week ended May 25, and the results in his province of Alberta, for instance, are rather outstanding. Our investigation has shown that in Calgary our assured mail service had an efficiency rate of 98 per cent at the national level, namely for mail throughout the country, an efficiency rate of 99 per cent for regional mail, that is for mail in Alberta and of 89 per cent for local mail.

I agree with the hon. member that there may be a problem in the Red Deer and Calgary area. We will attempt to improve the situation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that on the whole, our assured mail service has an efficiency rate exceeding 95 per cent. Since more than 5 billion pieces of mail are handled per year, it can be said that, on the whole, the postal service is very efficient in Canada.

AIR CANADA

STRIKES BY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, under the provision of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the government urge the Minister of Transport to discuss with the officers of Air Canada the advisability of making a more reasonable offer to their employees represented by the International Association of Machinists and by the Canadian Airline Employees Association, especially in view of the record profits of Air Canada and the justified request of their employees.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the hon. member's motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

TAXATION

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER PERSONAL INCOME AND SALES TAX CUTS IN LIGHT OF SURPLUS FOR YEAR 1972-73

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who will recall that at the time he presented his budget for the current year to the House in February he was about half a billion dollars out with respect to the fiscal year ending March 31 and as a result overtaxed Canadians during the last fiscal year by nearly half a billion dollars. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether in these circumstances he has revised his estimated tax collections for the current year and whether he is now prepared to recommend further personal income tax cuts or cuts in sales tax for the current year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I do not accept the substance of the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question. I have explained to the House that the variation had a good deal to do with the House of Commons being unable to enact some of the legislation upon which these forecasts were based. As a result I do not believe the rest of the hon. gentleman's question demands an answer from me at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the estimates of tax collections for the current fiscal year as presented in February were based upon an assumed rate of inflation of not more than 4 per cent, since the minister has now admitted he expects the rate to be 5 per cent, and since this will produce a vastly greater increase in government revenues than in government expenditures because of our progressive tax system, does the minister intend to recommend further tax cuts or does he insist upon collecting this year probably as much as a billion dollars more from Canadians than he forecast at the time of his budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Here again, I do not agree with the hon. gentleman's forecast. He knows, of course, that if there is any change in the fiscal stance of the government it will be announced in the proper and appropriate way.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, I thought this might be the proper and appropriate way. I am not asking the minister to agree with my forecast. I am asking him to face reality, however.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the excessive tax collections last year and expected this year in light of what I have alluded to, can the minister give us any reason at all for his insistence on increasing the rate of taxation imposed on most small companies this year compared with last year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): When it comes to realism, I hope the hon. gentleman will recall the insistence of himself and his colleagues in demanding that, despite a tremendously expanding economy, the deficit should be twice as large as was forecast in the budget. He and his friends wanted a deficit of more than $4 billion in spite of the expansion taking place in the country. If he is talking about realism he ought to read some of his older speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER TO COMPANY CONCERNING PENSION IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the number of strikes now taking place against Canadian National Railways and in view of the fact that a major element in the strikes is dissatisfaction with the proposed new pension arrangements, will the Minister of Transport have appropriate talks with Canadian National officials in the hope that these pension arrangements can be improved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt I have opportunities to discuss all these problems with the management of Canadian National Railways and I will certainly do so again. I was not sure that this particular one was the main issue at stake at the moment but if the hon. gentleman tells me that it is the most important one I will surely look into it because I think the employees should have satisfaction in that field.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I could ask the minister to note that my question referred to the pension arrangements as being one of the major issues. In view of his agreement that this is something that should be resolved, I thank him for his offer.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING REQUEST BY PROVINCES FOR TRANSFER OF INCOME TAX PAID BY BELL CANADA TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Further to my question of May 29 concerning the income tax of Bell Canada, and considering the fact that provincial Crown telephone companies do not pay federal income taxes, could the Prime Minister indicate whether the government would be prepared to transfer to the province of Quebec the income taxes paid by Bell Canada and which come from that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec remains free within the Constitution to levy the taxes it wishes. That is also the position of the federal government. If the province of Quebec wants to levy larger taxes on a company, it is free to do so without the authorization of the hon. member or of myself.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that Ontario has announced its provincial energy policy, as the province of Alberta did several months ago, when will the federal government state a national energy policy or does the nation simply have to wait for further white papers, discussions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: —and possibly eight more provincial policies to be set first?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it might be useful to have discussions on a subject that has been recognized to be a matter of complicated jurisdiction. The hon. member suggests we should proceed unilaterally, but that is not my approach.

Mr. Stevens: While the nation waits for the formation of a national energy policy by the federal government, would the minister at least indicate if the government is willing to allow the construction or extension of a two-way oil pipeline between western Canada, Quebec and the Maritimes, as suggested by the government of Ontario and which the government of Quebec requested some time ago?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member should know, construction of any such line is open to any applicant under the law passed by parliament. This question has been considered repeatedly over the last dozen years and rejected both by the private and public authorities involved. But we would be glad to consider any application that came along.

Mr. Stevens: In short, would the minister indicate whether he is willing to review the Ottawa valley line policy, and when will he make a statement on government policy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the debate a little over a week ago, we intend to make the energy studies public and have a public discussion with the affected governments. The government of Alberta is, of course, opposed to any extension of the Montreal pipeline but some other governments favour it. Obviously this is a matter that must be settled by arriving at a consensus among the governments, if possible.

POSITION PUT FORWARD BY GOVERNMENT TO VISITING UNITED STATES SENATORS AND OFFICIALS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of conflicting statements made by members of the United States congressional delegation which met with the minister and with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, last weekend to discuss energy matters, could the minister now clarify exactly what was said to this delegation, since not only Canadians but now Americans are totally confused by the statements that are being made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, discussions took place over a period of three hours. As I pointed out yesterday, there were both protagonists and antagonists of the Alyeska pipeline, and each drew from the conversations what he wanted to draw and has made it public.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question which I will direct to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his talks with the American delegation did the minister make it clear that before any development takes place in the Mackenzie corridor public hearings regarding a right of way under the Territorial Lands Act must be held, and that the granting of the right to construct a pipeline is not automatic?

● (1120)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I told them, naturally, that public hearings would be held before granting a right of way to the companies that might be interested in building a pipeline along the Mackenzie River. They know that there will be public hearings; each interested party will be able to bring in representations for or against the granting of a right of way.

[English]

SUGGESTED URGENCY OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My supplementary question arises from the answers of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this morning. Does the minister not appreciate the urgency at this time of announcing and proclaiming immediately a national energy policy for Canada so as to clear up once and for all what routes the government would prefer for gas pipelines, crude petroleum pipelines and any bothersome constitutional questions prior to any litigation being commenced by one or more provinces of Canada leading to further aggravation of energy demands, supply and price?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that national energy policies have been in effect in all areas for many years: for example, with regard to eastward transmission of natural gas by Trans-Canada, westward transmission by West Coast, eastward transmission of oil under the national oil policy, the ownership and control of the uranium industry and the export or non-export of electricity. In each of these areas there is an existing policy. The real question is, should any of the policies be changed? That is the purpose of laying the facts before the Canadian people by way of the energy studies and, on the basis of discussions following those facts, to arrive at what, if any, changes may be necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre on supplementary questions. I hope there will not be too many. After the hon. member for Edmonton Centre I hope we can move to the next subject.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the United States has made up its mind in respect of an Alaska pipeline and tanker route, does the minister not feel at this time there is urgency for a clearcut statement by him on behalf of the government to prevent any situation that could develop on the west coast resulting from wreckage of tankers carrying natural gas, liquified gas or crude petroleum?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Sir, and I will repeat the statement again. Our distinct preference is to have a Mackenzie route, subject, however, to an application being made under the law which has been passed by this parliament. The United States administration, of course, insists on handling its own resources in a different way. We have made clear to the United States the possibilities of a Canadian route, but I do not think we are really in a position to direct them as to how they should dispose of their resources within their jurisdiction.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW NATIONAL POLICY NOT BEING ANNOUNCED UNTIL 1974

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister has repeatedly promised to bring down a national energy policy—first it was by wintertime, then by late winter and then early spring, and it has not come yet—may I ask him whether the cabinet has now postponed the bringing down of such a national energy policy until 1974?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would correct the hon. gentleman. I indicated I would bring forward studies on the question of energy which are now being printed in both official languages and I hope will be available within a matter of weeks.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister had better go back and read some of his statements with reference to that.

Mr. Stanfield: I think he would blush.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps you had better go back.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE— OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION BY MEMBERS BEFORE ANY APPLICATION HEARD

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In light of the statement just made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, may I ask whether or not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can assure the House that before any hearings are held in respect of a Mackenzie Valley pipeline an opportunity will be given to the House to discuss the benefits if any, which would accrue to the Canadian people?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already pointed out to the hon. gentleman that if he and his colleagues had been interested they could have discussed the guidelines which have already been laid down with regard to the Mackenzie corridor. We on this side would be quite prepared to discuss the entire question of guidelines, environmental, economic, social and otherwise. If the hon. member wants to take advantage of the present committee hearings, or is interested in propounding an order of reference for further hearings, for my part I would be delighted to have the forum in which to speak.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of guidelines and policies regarding pipelines and the export of gas, oil and coal, is the government going to follow this week's precedent by introducing its guidelines in the form of a resolution for parliamentary approval and/or a matter of confidence?

CANADA LABOUR CODE

STUDY ON POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING WORK WEEK TO FOUR DAYS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can he tell us whether his department has ordered a study to be made on the reduction of the work week to four days for employees under federal jurisdiction while maintaining the same number of hours as at present? If so, can he tell us if the study is concluded and if he has reached a decision?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the study has not been completed. I might indicate that we are looking at the implications of a compressed, modified or shorter work week. That, as I say, is under intensive study at the moment but there are no final results as yet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, there have been quite a number of questions put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about Canada's energy problems. While I appreciate that the original question and the supplementaries were by many members from both central and western Canada, we also have a problem regarding energy on the east coast of Canada. I do not think it is really fair for members from central and western Canada to have an opportunity to ask questions of the minister about the lack of policy, which becomes more and more apparent every day, without our also having some possibility of asking questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, the hon. member will also appreciate the position of the Chair when after we had had a number of supplementaries we try to move on to another subject. I think it would make the task of the Chair impossible if the Chair were called upon to try to ensure that every province and every part of the country have a chance to ask supplementaries on each subject that is brought up. Hon. members, including the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, will have an opportunity to ask supplementaries during the question period. The competition is not as numerous this morning as perhaps it is on other days, so I can assure the hon. member that he will be recognized in a short time.

NATIONAL PARKS

GROS MORNE, NFLD.—DECISION ON APPEAL BY PROVINCE CONCERNING TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BY RESIDENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister indicate to the House whether he has reached a decision regarding the appeal by the provincial government of Newfoundland and the citizens living within Gros Morne National Park to be able to hand over the property and land they own to their successors?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have set up our policy in this regard. I met the minister this morning; we did not discuss that matter in particular, but I think we are in the process of solving all the difficulties which could have existed at the two levels of government.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

RESIGNATION OF NEW PRESIDENT OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION AS DIRECTOR OF ST. MAURICE CAPITAL CORPORATION—DIVESTMENT OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that yesterday morning Mr. William Teron was re-elected to the board of directors of the St. Maurice Capital Corporation and in view of the importance of removing all possible doubt concerning potential conflicts of interest since he has been recently appointed as the new head of CMHC, I would like to ask the Prime Minister two questions. First, did Mr. Teron subsequently yesterday resign from his position on that board and, second, would the Prime Minister inform the House of the precise manner in which Mr. Teron intends to divest himself of his financial interests and property holdings and the exact nature of the trust arrangement proposed for that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the question of directorships and so on the arrangement is that Mr. Teron will divest himself of any directorships which are in any way of a commercial interest in the area in which he will be operating. I believe there are some exceptions. For instance, I believe he is and will remain a director of the Ottawa Football Club and perhaps will keep his connection with the National Arts Centre. There are exceptions such as these. I have no knowledge of the election to which the hon. member referred in his question. I am certain that either it is not a fact or not a relevant fact because it is a fundamental part of the arrangement with Mr. Teron that he will resign from such directorships.

● (1130)

As to the other arrangements referred to in the latter part of the hon. member's question, there will be a divestment of property which will be either complete by sale over a reasonable period of time or there will be a putting of property into an arms' length trust composed of a decent part of a well-known public trust and an engagement on Mr. Teron's part to have no input at all into the management of the affairs of the trust.

ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN WILLIAMS REPORT—ESTABLISHMENT OF RULES RESPECTING TRUSTS AND SUPERVISORY MECHANISM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I hope that in the Prime Minister's busy schedule he will find time to check the relevant facts in this case.

I should like to ask him, on the important question of conflict of interest, whether the government intends, in the Prime Minister's promised legislation and guidelines on conflict of interest, to follow the recommendations in the report of Professor Jeremy Williams submitted to the government in 1969 and, further, whether he intends to establish rules concerning the nature of such trust arrangements to which he has just referred for cabinet ministers and other government appointees as well as an independent supervisory mechanism to ensure the proper administration of such trusts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To get an answer in detail to that question the hon. member will have to wait for our statement in the House and the paper which will be presented by the government suggesting how we propose to deal with matters of conflict of interest not only with regard to members of parliament but for cabinet ministers, members of the public service and, hopefully, eventually also for order in council appointments. The arrangement will be based on a long series of studies, including those to which the hon. member referred, and take into account procedures in other democratic countries. An effort will be made by the government to reconcile the very real desire of the people of Canada to have people of eminence in their service, either as members of parliament or in the public service, with the important principle of avoiding a conflict of interest situation where such a person would serve his own personal interest in serving the public.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the Prime Minister assure the House that we will have the promised legislation before the summer recess?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the statement is intended to be made before the recess for this summer.

An hon. Member: What summer recess?

Mr. Trudeau: I want to remind the hon. member that I have not promised that legislation would be passed. We would like to table in parliament the proposals of the government for resolving this problem of conflict of interest by members of parliament, perhaps not only in the form of a paper but as a draft bill. We hope it will be possible for all members of parliament in all parties to improve it, if possible, and certainly to look critically at the suggestions made by the government. If any improvements are suggested, we will probably want to take them into account in bringing in similar improvements to the guidelines for cabinet ministers and public servants.

[Later:]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might supplement an answer given by the Prime Minister to a question from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, on the basis of information just handed to me. While Mr. Teron was appointed to the board of directors of St. Maurice Capital Corporation yesterday at its annual meeting, the ballots had been sent in before his nomination as President of CMHC and subsequently, after his election, he resigned from the board.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF ALL STUDIES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Does the right hon. gentleman think that a discussion of this serious topic would be helped if not only the report of Professor Williams but the other studies that are going on in the office of the President of the Privy Council could be made public? Surely these documents are not internal documents, and it would help not only in responding to the government's belated initiative but would enable us to respond positively and quickly.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that seems to be a worth-while suggestion. I will consider the studies that have been made and see whether it is in the public interest to make them public.

Mr. Speaker: I see that practically every hon. member to my left is rising. We have spent quite some time on two questions only. I think we have lost the advantage we had earlier this afternoon by spending so much time on two questions. Many members will be disappointed again. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

AIR CANADA

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—INTERVENTION BY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In light of the fact that Air Canada faces the imminent danger of a complete shut-down of air services as a result of the gathering momentum of the machinists' rotating strikes, can the minister tell the House whether he is going to take any personal steps immediately to try to settle the dispute and, if not, why not?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the various suggestions emanating from the official opposition. Let me assure members of the opposition and in particular the hon. member that the government will take every possible action that we think is constructive to resolve this dispute.

ROTATING STRIKES BY MACHINISTS—MEASURES TO ENSURE SAFETY OF PASSENGERS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that unqualified persons are often working on some of the vital services connected with plane travel, can the minister tell the House what special procedures his department is taking to ensure the safety of persons still travelling on Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have increased the surveillance. We have more inspectors and we have taken steps to see to it that the safety of passengers is assured by Air Canada. As the hon. member knows, Air Canada has an operating maintenance manual which reflects the standards of security of the Department of Transport, and we are ensuring that the instructions in the operating manual are followed by Air Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DUMPING OF RAW SEWAGE INTO OTTAWA RIVER FROM NEW HEADQUARTERS BUILDING IN HULL

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment is not present today and there has been no notification of an acting minister. In view of the fact raw sewage is being dumped directly into the Ottawa River from the new headquarters of the Department of the Environment in the Fontaine building in Hull, when does the government expect the sewage system in the new building will be in operation and this direct pollution of the Ottawa River will cease?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister.

POWER

STEPS TO ACHIEVE NATIONAL GRID—RE-EXAMINATION OF REPORT ON FUNDY TIDES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is it the intention of his department to initiate new moves to try to secure a national agreement on the development of a national power grid as well as bring about a conclusion to the re-examination of the programming board report on Fundy tidal power?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the last several months we have already made offers, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, to achieve closer co-ordination of power facilities there. It was helpful to find out that with the proposals in Ontario there may be some prospect that their very large semi-autonomous facility will be co-operating in national policies.

With regard to Fundy tidal power, I should like to tell the hon. member that we have not had the report of the programming board which is at the moment considering the matter.

ENERGY

PROSPECTS FOR AGREEMENT WITH MARITIME PROVINCES ON ALLOCATION OF POSSIBLE OIL ROYALTIES FROM OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the confusion that reigns in Altantic Canada at present over the lack of policy with respect to the allocation of possible royalties from offshore development, and the fact that this indecision could well lead to a delay in developing our oil potential, will the minister indicate to the House whether any possible agreement has been reached with the four provincial premiers concerned with regard to this thorny problem?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, actually the five easternmost provinces are involved. No agreement has been reached at the moment, although I share the optimism of at least one of the provincial premiers that by the end of the summer there may be an agreement. We have had extensive discussions at the official level, and I think it is fair to say that there is some difference of position in the case of at least one provincial premier, but we hope to bring him around.

REPORTED OUTBREAK OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN AUSTRIA—EFFECT ON CURRENT CATTLE IMPORTS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. With respect to the report of a recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in northwestern Europe, specifically in Austria, can the minister confirm the accuracy of this report and will he comment on the implications of this cattle disease outbreak with respect to current Canadian import permits about to be announced this month?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is irregular to ask a minister to confirm a report. However, we might assume that the question has been asked directly in order to give the minister an opportunity to reply.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the fact that there is an outbreak of hoof and mouth disease, particularly in Austria. Naturally we are enforcing all the regulations that we customarily put into effect when there is an outbreak of this disease in any part of the world from which imports come into Canada. We are also asking for restrictions to be placed on tourists coming from that area to Canada. As a matter of fact, we had some difficulties just last week with a plane load of them who came to Montreal.

MANPOWER

TRAINING ON THE JOB AND TRAINING IN INDUSTRY PROGRAMS—INQUIRY WHETHER PRIVATE CORPORATIONS FAVOURED OVER CROWN COMPANIES IN MAKING GRANTS

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would he indicate to the House whether it is the policy of his department to favour private corporations to the detriment of Crown corporations when it comes to giving grants under the training on the job program and the training in industry program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is generally the practice of the department to favour improvement of the conditions of employees, and that is the basis for giving grants for training on the job to any employer. Generally speaking, there are a great many more such grants and contracts entered into with private corporations than with Crown corporations.

Mr. Nesdoly: In view of the fact that since 1968 the well known corporation of Mr. Roman, Dennison Mines, has received six grants from the Department of Manpower totalling almost $300,000 for the purpose of training its work force, whereas our Crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, received only $9,000 for the same purpose, would the minister agree to look into this matter and make a statement clarifying this very peculiar situation?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into it, but I can assure the hon. member that there is certainly no political patronage involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERTANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE—LETTER OF MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce expressed yesterday serious concern about the statement made by the Minister of the Environment that it was ridiculous to think of building a port for giant tankers on the St. Lawrence River, and since the Prime Minister said at the beginning of the week that he was not aware of that letter, could the Prime Minister say today if the statement made by the Minister of the Environment reflected the policy of the government, or whether discussions in that regard are still going on as he suggested earlier this week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, discussions are still going on. The Minister of the Environment, in this case as in others, does his job as Minister of the Environment of drawing the attention of the public and governments on the dangers of pollution, for the protection of the environment of certain developments. His advice has been always taken into consideration in the decisions of the government, together with other advice we receive from the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Finance, Transport, Industry, Trade and Commerce, etc. Each minister plays his part and the discussions are not over.

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERTANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister informs us that the discussions are not over, could he assure the House that he is prepared to consider the representations made by the Quebec government in that regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERTANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN SHARED COST PROJECT

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has he received a request to the effect that the federal government help or participate in a joint project, under which the private industry, the provincial government and the federal government would build a super-harbour in the Gulf of St. Lawrence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that such questions are in fact discussed and proposed. I cannot say that that question has been submitted to me, personally, but I understand that it is discussed by some ministers of the federal government with ministers of the provincial government.

SAFETY OF RALGRO AS GROWTH STIMULANT FOR CATTLE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that diethylstilbestrol, commonly known as DES, has been banned as a growth stimulant for cattle because of its carcinogenic properties, although certified as safe for use for almost two decades, can the minister assure the people of Canada that the new growth stimulant, ralgro, now licensed for use in Canada, is indeed a safe drug to use for this purpose, so that some time in the future it too will not be banned because of insufficient research?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been assured by the scientists who were associated with the research done before official consent was given for the use of ralgro in Canada that it is safe. I can only go by what they tell me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope there would not be too many supplementaries because we are now just about at the end of the question period.

Mr. Mitges: Now that many countries are again accepting our beef exports because of the banning of DES, can the minister state with assurance that these countries will still accept our beef exports if they have been previously treated with ralgro?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge that they would not be.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF FREIGHT CARS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Frank Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Further to a question I asked his parliamentary secretary about two weeks ago relating to the acute shortage of railway rolling stock for the lumber industry in British Columbia, can the minister today tell the House if his discussions with the provincial government have resulted in a solution for this very serious problem?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Is the hon. member referring only to the discussion on boxcars or to the whole discussion with the government of British Columbia?

Mr. Oberle: I am referring to boxcars which are in short supply for the lumber industry in British Columbia.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, discussions are being carried on not mainly with the government of British Columbia but with the Americans. This is where our boxcars are and the CNR and CPR are trying to get back as many cars as they can.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF SASKATOON AND REGINA AS SPECIAL AREAS AND PLACING OF ALL TOWNS AND CITIES ON EQUAL BASIS

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact the cities of Saskatoon and Regina are designated as special areas in Saskatchewan under DREE and that this policy discourages and practically prevents industrial growth in all other cities and towns in that province, would the minister consider changing the policy to eliminate these two cities as special areas and put all towns and cities on an equal basis?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, a question along these lines has already been discussed at considerable length with the government of Saskatchewan, and a working party is now considering how the objective outlined by the hon. member can be achieved, that is, to make incentive grants and other assistance under DREE available over a wider area, not only in Saskatchewan but in other provinces.

ALLEGED NOTIFICATION TO MUNICIPALITIES THAT DUMPING ON ITS LANDS WILL BE PROHIBITED IN 1974

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the growing concern with respect to waste management disposal problems in the national capital area, can he say whether it is true that the National Capital Commission has notified municipalities within the area that dumping on its lands will be prohibited in 1974 and, if so, what is the cut-off date for that order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I will take just one second of the time of the House to suggest it is not regular to ask a minister to confirm a statement which is made outside the House. To save time, we will assume that the question has been asked directly.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of the question and report back to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NUCLEAR TESTS BY FRANCE—PROTEST BY CANADA THROUGH UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What action, if any, is being taken by our Canadian representatives at the United Nations to protest the proposed French nuclear tests in the south Pacific?

● (1150)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made direct representations to the French government on this question on a number of occasions and I am very happy to say that on the last occasion I was able to transmit the views of this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary, and I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine have supplementaries to previous questions.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question. The question was, what action had been taken at the United Nations level by the Canadian representatives? In addition, may I ask whether the Canadian government has considered any further action at the international level in protesting against these proposed nuclear tests?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the Canadian government on these tests is extremely well known and, if there had been any doubt about it, we had the full support of the House of Commons. I can think of no stronger protest.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROVISION OF MAPS SHOWING PROPER BOUNDARY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND LABRADOR

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that two months ago the committee on DREE unanimously recommended that RDIA maps be replaced with maps showing an undisputed boundary between Quebec and Labrador, can the minister indicate what steps he has taken to have the improper maps replaced?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for calling this to my attention. The fact is, of course, that the line that is drawn does not indicate or is not meant to suggest that it is a disputed boundary. It is simply an unsurveyed boundary. However, I have had some exhaustive discussions with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it is our intention in future to make it abundantly clear just where the ownership of Labrador lies.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact the maps the minister's department has put out as late as today still show that the only boundary in Canada which is unsurveyed or disputed, whatever the appropriate term may be, is that between Quebec and Labrador, can the minister assure the House that this map will not be sent out to applicants in future and that proper maps will be designed immediately?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be quite improper or unfair to people who are looking for maps when we have a large number on hand. What we will do, if it is necessary before new maps are printed, is to put a qualifying note along with the maps to indicate what the position is.

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERTANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE—CONSIDERATION OF ECONOMIC FACTORS OVER POLLUTION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Concerning the decision that the government will have to take concerning the establishment of a super harbour at Gros-Cacouna, will priority be given to the economic welfare of the population of that area rather than to the effects of pollution?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will give proper weight to that particular consideration, but I am quite sure no one in this House would feel that the environmental factor should not be taken into account.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROJECTS ON NORTH SHORE OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

With reference to the answer he gave me yesterday that his officials would review the possibility of extending local initiatives projects in hard-up regions, can the minister assure the House that the North Shore projects in the field of recreational activities will be duly re-assessed and approved, as requested by his own officials in this region?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that particular application but, as a general rule, I think I have to repeat that not all projects, not even those projects which are considered eligible for extension, will in fact be extended. There will be, unfortunately, a selection process applied, even in areas where unemployment exceeds the national average.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member for Charlevoix—

[English]

The hon. member for Edmonton Centre rises on a point of order, after which I will return to the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I regret rising on a point of order. One week ago last Friday I asked a question of the Prime Minister because the Secretary of State for External Affairs was out of the House. It reads, as reported on page 4346 or Hansard:

> In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance for Tunisia has been in Canada to negotiate a loan, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether the loan to Tunisia has been completed and, if so, in what amount?

There was a little discrepancy in what the Prime Minister said, as recorded on the same page:

> I am not sure that the hon. member is talking about the right country. There is a matter of a loan being discussed—but Algeria, Tunisia; who cares.

We do care and I should like to know, and I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can please explain whether the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is debate on a question asked. The hon. member rose on a point of order, and I cannot see that there is a point of order. I regret that there are only 40 minutes in the question period. The hon. member for Charlevoix, although he was recognized for a supplementary, did not have the opportunity to ask his question. Perhaps this matter might be noted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and answered on another occasion. The Chair will recognize again the hon.

member for Charlevoix, then the Leader of the Opposition, and then call orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the unemployment rate in this region and the recommendations made in respect of the projects, as well as the fact that only two projects there have been granted extensions, does the minister intend to consider seriously the applications from that region?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will always take seriously the representations of any region and, of course, those of the hon. member as well.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF DIRECTIVES ON BILINGUALISM BASED ON CERTAIN GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It was to be a question for the Prime Minister who has slipped out, but I am sure the Acting Prime Minister can take care of it. It arises out of the statement of the President of the Treasury Board on December 14 that once the discussions with regard to the so-called Drury guidelines were terminated the council would publish the directives set out to guide departments with regard to the application of the principles. I ask the Acting Prime Minister why these directives have not been published, particularly in view of the assurance in the statement by the President of the Treasury Board on April 12 that they would be tabled at the time of the debate on the Prime Minister's resolution relating to bilingualism?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not able to answer that question unless I look into the undertakings and what the intention of the President of the Treasury Board may be. Certainly, we have nothing to hide in this matter and it would be our desire to make our position completely clear not only to members of the Public Service but also to the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED DETERIORATION IN SERVICE AND INCREASE IN RATES FOR POSTAL SERVICE AFFECTING SMALL PUBLICATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That this House regrets the drastic deterioration of the postal service in Canada during the past six years: including the closure of rural post offices; the reduction of urban service from six days to five days; the head-long costly rush to automation and computerization leading to job insecurity and low morale among employees—all this in the face of sharply increased postal rates which have seriously affected smaller Canadian publications, forcing many of them out of business; and urges the Government to take the necessary action to restore this fundamentally important communication system to its former excellence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread interest on the part of members in this important subject, I wonder if there could be agreement to limit speeches following those made in the first round to 15 minutes?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, next to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, I believe that the department of government that has been most seriously disorganized and that has been of the most concern to the public in recent years is the Post Office Department. Hon. members, when they heard this debate was coming up, all wanted to speak, because there is not one who has not found in recent years that the time of a member of parliament has been taken up substantially, every day, in acting as ombudsman for unravelling the confusions, disorganizations and uncertainties relating to Canada's postal service. As the motion indicates, I will make some positive recommendations toward the end of the debate, but at the outset I want to review briefly why I feel that the postal service, during the past six years, has deteriorated and degenerated so rapidly.

The destruction of the Post Office Department began some six years ago under the direction of the then Postmaster General, Eric Kierans, who has gone to other places and other activities. He was one of a succession of Postmasters General who wrestled with this problem. There have been almost as many Postmasters General in the past six years as there have been years in that period. However, I think the low water mark began with the tenure of that office by the hon. gentleman to whom I have already referred.

We now have a new Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). He is questioned from time to time in the House of Commons. A standard answer is all that is in the past, everything is now wonderful in the Post Office Department and it is the dawn of a new day as far as efficiency is concerned. He gave that answer as recently as on the late show last night when the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) brought some specifics before the minister. The minister's reply in part was as follows:

I would like however to point out that it is somewhat unfair to judge the whole postal service by a few isolated cases.

I would interpolate that these are not isolated cases as the Postmaster General will learn as he hears from various members during the course of today's debate.

It may happen sometimes that Canadians find that their mail has been delayed.

Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) discovered that on April 3 when he said everybody knows that the mail delivery in Canada is slow.

Out of 100 letters which they receive, one or two may be late. This does not mean that the postal service is bad. It means that twice out of a hundred times delivery has been delayed.

The Postmaster General has been described as a very affable and efficient sort of fellow. Perhaps he hopes to diffuse the continuing disorganization of the Post Office Department with a veneer of affability. However, a smile will not drive away the deeply rooted problems that are a part of our once efficient and adequate postal service.

I am going to review some of the difficulties that all members of parliament encounter. Other spokesmen will be specific on each of the points that I raise. I wish to point out to the Postmaster General there are real problems that have to be dealt with in a forthright manner. I suggest the reason for the decline in the efficiency of the Post Office Department in recent years came about as a result of the managerial approach or the approach of managerial expertise.

There have been many studies and analyses by various consultant groups in Canada. So many of these analyses and reports contradict one another that I am sure the Postmaster General does not know which way to turn. There has been change for the sake of change, as was the case with the Unemployment Insurance Commission which is now trying to put Humpty Dumpty together again by re-opening local offices that were once closed and trying to get the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Commission on a more intimate and efficient basis.

This change for the sake of change has been disruptive, traumatic and, in many instances, counterproductive. The Postmaster General must realize that something has to be done. We do not want a change in Postmasters General, as we had with Manpower and Immigration in order to get the mess sorted out. The Postmaster General must come to grips with these problems with more than a smile and an optimistic assurance that all is for the best in the best of all possible worlds.

Outside management was brought in from the world of business. I think this is one of the difficulties. The post office service used to operate quietly and efficiently. The people of Canada were happy with it. The letter carriers who met the public on a day-to-day basis were smiling. It is much better that they smile than the Postmaster General because they are in touch with the public on a day-to-day basis. The letter carriers are no longer the smiling, happy work force they once were.

The Post Office Department is a public service. When Mr. Kierans laid down the edict that it must pay its way, the fat was in the fire. I wonder what would happen if the same edict were laid down for the CBC, which is another form of communication, although not nearly as basic as the postal service, which is the medium of communication that really holds the fabric of the nation together.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Kierans said the Post Office Department had to pay its way. In order to accomplish this, he began closing rural post offices with wild abandon. No matter how many protests there were, Mr. Kierans was not slowed down in his objective of saving $1,000 here and there. He used to boast about it. He closed down the post office in Little Snoring and saved the Canadian taxpayers $1,000. Out of the other corner of his mouth, he was talking about the $100 million in public funds he was going to expend on building a satellite system that would be the most impressive breakthrough in satellite technology in modern times.

Mr. Kierans failed to realize that when you close a rural post office, the very existence of that community is threatened. This is the trouble of management that is out of touch with the realities of a government that is primarily engaged in serving the public. The rural post office is generally located in the corner store. With the additional revenue gone, the corner store closes. The town begins to disintegrate further. This disastrous phenomenon of urban rural drift that all governments are concerned about at the moment goes on with increasing speed, aided and abetted by the actions of members of the government of Canada.

The amazing thing was that while Mr. Kierans was decreasing the efficiency of the service, he was increasing the postal rates in all categories by a rather alarming amount. He was aware that this would have a deleterious effect on small Canadian publications, such as church and professional group publications and weekly newspapers. Weekly newspapers, like the ethnic press, find it almost impossible to meet the sharp increase in rates in that category which amounts in some instances to as much as 1,000 per cent. It must be pointed out once again that these publications are the real grass root publications by means of which a sense of belonging, of national unity and Canadianism is promoted. We know now what has happened. Many of these publications have gone out of business with highly regrettable consequences.

The solution to all these difficulties was to have been mechanization, computerisation and automation. Canada's mail was to be handled on the basis of coding and computerisation. But the managerial experts forgot that machines will not function successfully unless they are properly monitored by employees. And when the post office set up a wage category for this work which was lower than that applicable to postal workers engaged in normal sorting procedures—$2.90 an hour as compared with $3.64—it automatically created a source of discontent which has resulted in a sad decline in the morale and efficiency of the work force. These are all shortcomings to which attention has been called many times, Mr. Speaker. The minister tells us now they are all in the past and that solutions are forthcoming to all these problems.

I should like to point to one or two current incidents which suggest that his optimism is a case of whistling in the graveyard, and that he is still in great difficulty as far as complaints about the postal service are concerned. Service in the post office is still erratic. Only the other day the following letter appeared in the Edmonton Journal:

I should like to draw to your readers' attention the folly of the new postal code which we have been asked to adopt. I used it recently when writing to a correspondent in Raymond which is only some 20 miles away. The letter took two months to arrive, and it went via Japan. It apparently landed up in the Japanese capital because the postal code for Raymond is T0K 1Y0. I wonder whether other communities across the nation are having like problems.

The letter is signed by Ernest Mardon of Lethbridge. Other hon. members will be speaking about the postal code.

Mechanization is all very well but, as the Unemployment Insurance Commission discovered, computerization and mechanization can give rise to problems; unless properly programmed, these devices can confuse the situation rather than relieve it.

Employee morale in the post office is still low. This is what an employee of the department says, writing in the Communications magazine for May, 1973. The employee is from St. John's, Newfoundland, and he says, in the department's own publication:

A new look has arrived at Canada Post with the introduction of Telepost, etc. The employees of the post office can now feel a sense of pride in that they are now part of the finest post office in the world.

I think he is quoting there from one of the speeches of the Postmaster General. He goes on to make this comment.

Refreshing, isn't it? The new look does exist but not entirely in the perspective of the above paragraph. Postal workers are not rejuvenated but still dejected and defiant against management.

Publications are still going out of business in consequence of the almost punitive increase in postal rates. Most of the mail which reaches my desk nowadays seems to consist of complaints about postal services. As an example, let me quote part of a resolution which was forwarded to me by the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees on May 26. It reads:

WHEREAS our brotherhood journal, labour newspaper and the Canadian Railwaymen, along with other labour publications and periodicals of non-profit organizations and threatened by ruinous postal rate increases; and

WHEREAS the postal rate increases which face us, far higher than those applying to commercial publications, would wreck our vital means of communication with our membership through publications which, unlike the commercial press, have no advertizing revenue and few outside subscriptions, and are financed entirely by membership dues—

There are a few other "WHEREAS" clauses, and then the conclusion—

RESOLVED that we continue to press the issue with the Canadian Post Office Department whenever appropriate to seek a more equitable postal rate for the Canadian Railwayman.

A large number of similar journals have also been affected, and the organizations concerned have expressed their continuing concern in almost the same terms. This is why we on this side are bringing up the matter once again today.

The punitive increase in postal rates, as well as the decline in the efficiency of the service, has resulted in a loss of business. On February 12, a reply was tabled to a question in the name of the hon. member for Southwestern Nova (Mr. Haliburton). It indicated that revenue from first class, second class and third class mail has declined continually since 1967-68. Now, how can revenue possibly go down when there have been increases in rates such as I have described, other than because the Post Office Department by its unwise managerial experimentation has driven potential business away from itself?

If members will examine the yellow pages of the Toronto telephone directory they will discover listed there no fewer than 85 private messenger services which are in business competing directly with the post office in parcel post delivery and even letter carrying services. No wonder the deficit of the post office account continues to escalate. Problems in connection with mechanization continue to exist and new difficulties are arising on the labour front, some of which I shall refer to briefly this morning. It has been brought to my attention that recently, in the city of Toronto, a new module system of work organization has been established. Judging from some of the comments I have heard from employees involved, it is not likely to enhance the morale or the efficiency of postal workers. Here is a comment by one of the employees:

The unit leaders and cell members have been selected for each of these modules. Each cell consists of 20 or more employees.

He goes on to refer to Professor Martin Moore's book "Methods of Work" in which Professor Moore describes the module system as a pressure system similar to that used by the Nazis in their slave camps at Dachau, Belsen, etc. How on earth the management of the post office feels that this is going to increase efficiency is beyond comprehension. It is almost as bad as arbitrarily closing rural post offices, as the government did to the tune of about 2,000 within a very short period of time in order to save a dollar here and a dollar there.

● (1220)

The Canadian Union of Postal Workers bulletin of April 17 deals with the introduction of the module system, and here are some of the complaints they make about it:

You can see that we are reduced from five levels on our staff to three. The most interesting point here is that P.O. L7 will be equivalent to a P.O. L6.

I guess that stands for "postal operator".

Best of luck to APOC in justifying that to their members.

They anticipate that there is going to be a great kickback from the employees as a result of the decrease in the number of employee levels. Then, the bulletin goes on in great detail:

Approximately one year ago your education committee published an article on management by objectives (M.B.O.). Reduced to its simplest terms, this horrendous system works by establishing a goal or standard and when the person or group "Module(?) reaches the objective then a new, higher, objective is established. When you link M.B.O. with another of management's favourite procedures—"accountability"—then Ivory Tower Theorists start rubbing their hands together in glee. "Accountability" means each level in the supervisory hierarchy is responsible and required to account for the performance of his subordinates. In other words, each module supervisor would be "accountable" for the performance of his little group (module) of employees/workers. The next link in the chain is to measure production. It is already being done! The basis is group work measurement and does not measure an individual but rather a group (module) of employees on an operation. The unit of measurement is pieces per hour (PPH) and applies to magazines, circulars, letters, etc. . . .

How do we react to all this? The answer is simple—Don't! If you are doing a good day's work now, why should you change your manner of working because management makes changes? If you are not considered a poor worker now then why change? Don't let the so-called team (module) method of playing off one group against another get to you. Remember individual work measurement.

If morale was low among post office employees before this, you can just imagine, Mr. Speaker, how deeply morale is going to plummet in face of this sort of ad hoc trial and error experimentation with the lives of postal employees who at one time were the best and most enthusiastic of any group in Canada.

Another problem concerns decentralization. Regional areas are being used for the purpose of experimentation in managerial extravaganzas, such as the module system I have referred to, and one region is played off against another. Again, this affects the morale of the employees. As they say when you talk to them, it is like being in a three-ring circus, only in this case there are four rings and each is doing its own thing so there is bound to be disruption in the over-all efficiency of postal employees.

In addition, casual workers are being employed more and more. This was disclosed in the reply to a question to which I have already referred; the number of permanent employees is going down while the number of casuals is going up. Question No. 1544 put on the order paper by myself asked the following:

1. What is the estimated saving to the Post Office Department from the installation of the new postal code?

2. What are the reasons for this saving?

3. How many postal employees have been replaced by the automated system?

The first answer was as follows:

1. Savings over 17 years (beginning in 1971) were estimated at $134,000,000 (discounted dollars).

That sounds like the accountability of the UIC when it was going off into the wide blue yonder.

2. Savings will occur as a result of changes in future hiring patterns and increased efficiency in the department.

The future hiring patterns refers to the increased tendency to hire casuals who will not have their positions confirmed and it will be easy to get rid of them when the time comes. The answer to part 3 was "none". But just wait until automation gets underway. This is the sword of Damocles that will be hanging over the heads of the postal employees and which accounts for the low morale that is all too evident.

Another point I suppose I should make is that the post office is still insisting on operating on a pay-as-you-go basis. The estimates for 1973-74 gives this as the objective of the Post Office Department:

To provide postal services to the people of Canada at reasonable rates and at a standard of service adequate to meet their needs without incurring subsidization from general taxation.

That is to be found at page 19-6 of the estimates.

The Auditor General gets into the act, of course, when a department is as badly disorganized as this one. He refers in his report to attempts by the Post Office Department to deal with its deficit position. He reminds the Postmaster General in paragraph 176 of his report that the royal commission on government organization recommended that "an annual grant be made by parliament in an amount sufficient to cover the costs of the post office in handling second class mail", and of the recommendation by the public accounts committee that "the Post Office Department or Parliament immediately find ways and means of covering the loss of the Post Office Department in handling second class mail". Then he reminds the Postmaster General that these recommendations have not been acted upon. In other words, there is no recognition that the Post Office Department, like the railways, satellites and all the other means of communication, are basic to the well being of Canada as a whole.

His report also deals with the excursion of the Postmaster General into the realm of private enterprise. In paragraph 177 he refers to the fact that, as well as carrying on philatelic and other postal business in many post offices, the Post Office Department, hoping to make an honest dollar and to account for the deficit arising from the loss of legitimate postal business, sells coin sets, commemorative spoons, art prints, Canadian handicrafts, picture postcards, etc. It is almost becoming like a department store.

The Auditor General reminds the Postmaster General that there is no established policy in this regard, and that there is no accounting in relation to this source of funds. Consequently the Auditor General does not know whether it has been profitable or not, but he says it is questionable whether the sale of non-postal items falls within the powers granted to the Postmaster General under the Post Office Act, Revised Statutes of Canada chapter P-14. He feels that this matter requires an opinion for the Department of Justice. I am sure that many members have been receiving complaints from private businesses about this invasion of their field of business. As the Auditor General says, the Postmaster General is acting without authorization in a desperate attempt to meet the deficit of his department, and in so doing is incurring more and more antipathy from the people of Canada, whom the post office is supposed to serve and whom it had served efficiently down through the years until the last six years.

To bring these matters to a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I said I would wind up on an optimistic note. I suggest that what we need to deal with complaints in the post office is a complaint department similar to that set up by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This would allow the minister to keep in closer touch with the public and the facts, which I suggest are known at grass root levels.

● (1230)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should interrupt the hon. member at this time to bring to his attention and the attention of the House the fact that his time has expired. The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can conclude my remarks in two sentences, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the generosity of the House. The Postmaster General should, in a meaningful way, consult with postal employees. In this way he might avoid conflicts that result from the arbitrary introduction of the modular system. This is obviously going to be a big issue.

I congratulate the employees of the post office department for their tolerance and willingness to serve. They have been aggravated beyond endurance and, had it not been for their sense of responsibility, we would likely have experienced another postal strike last fall as a result of the high handed manner of the Treasury Board in negotiating. Let us listen to the employees' complaints. Let us bring the post office department back to the service of the people. This can only be done if the Postmaster General will abandon his ivory tower attitude, communicate with the people and listen to members of parliament. I am sure he will hear plenty from them today.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the resolution we are discussing today is, to a great extent, the result of the failings and shortcomings of the postal system in Canada. I intend to deal specifically with the problems listed in the resolution, namely "job insecurity and low morale among employees". It seems obvious to me that any person in Canada, not just members of parliament, could hardly avoid noticing the difficulties we have experienced in the postal department in the past 10 years. Let me go over that list of difficulties very briefly.

In 1965, we had a wildcat strike on the part of postal employees. In 1968, we had a legal strike and in 1970 we had a rotational strike. I suggest the reason for this difficulty lies in the fact that the government would not accept the recommendation of the chairman of the conciliation board. This year we almost had another strike, and the reason for that was that the conciliation board members brought in three different recommendations followed by another recommendation by the chairman. The unions accepted that recommendation.

In spite of repeated representations by employees and members of parliament of various parties, the government insisted on misinterpreting the recommendation of the chairman of that board. Only after the government realized the employees would call another strike did they agree to an earlier proposal of the union to go back to the chairman of the board to have him clear up what he meant by his recommendation. When that was done it became obvious, even to the government and its negotiating team, that the interpretation by the union of the chairman's recommendation was correct and the government's interpretation was wrong. That is the record for the last 10 years.

What are the reasons for these strikes which give a clear indication that the employees in the postal department are unhappy? I suggest there is low morale among this group of employees. The fact that this situation leads to difficulties in mail delivery should be obvious to everyone. I suggest that this low morale is the result of a suspicion on the part of employees that they cannot get satisfaction from the minister and senior officials of the Treasury Board during negotiations. There has not been one single, genuine or generous offer made by the Treasury Board or the minister's officials in the past six or eight years so far as postal employees are concerned. Everything the postal employees have been offered has been offered in a grudging, stingy and parsimonious way. Nothing has been offered voluntarily with the result that postal employees, both letter carriers and clerks, know they must fight whenever they want a change. I suggest this suspicion on the part of these employees is well founded.

Let me put on the record what these employees have received as a result of difficult negotiation with the government, two strikes and the threat of more. Let me compare the attitude of officials of the Treasury Board in respect of postal employees with their attitude in dealing with other employees who do not enjoy the benefits of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and others who do not enjoy the rights of collective bargaining. Let me compare the way in which the Treasury Board deals with senior officials in the postal department and other departments with the almost incestuous way it deals with senior officials in the Treasury Board.

In 1968, the median pay for letter carriers was $5,751. By 1972 that had gone up to $7,701, an increase of approximately $2,000. The pay rate of an E.S.1, that is a starting economist, working for the government in 1968 was $8,280. By 1972 that had gone up to $14,192, an increase of almost $6,000 in those few years. The gap in median rates of pay for a letter carrier and a starting economist had increased by $1,100 in those few years. In 1972 the gap had widened to $2,353. For an ES-4, a senior economist, the pay was $12,000. In 1972, it had jumped to over $16,000, an increase of more than $4,000. Let us compare a letter carrier with an SX 1, a branch director. In 1968, the SX 1 officer had a salary of $13,751 and by 1972 this had jumped to $16,777, an increase of over $3,000.

Then, we might compare a letter carrier with a senior assistant deputy minister in the postal department. In 1968, the gap between their median salaries was $21,000 and by 1972 it had increased to well over $28,000. Or we might compare a postal clerk and the ES 1. The gap between them in 1968 was $822 and in 1972 it had increased to $2,600. Next, we might compare the postal clerk to the ES 4. In 1968, the gap was $11,700 and in 1972 it was almost $16,000. Then, when we compare the postal clerk to the SX 1 we find that the gap in 1968 was $13,400 and in 1972 it was $16,480. In comparing the postal clerk to the SX 4, we find that in 1968 the gap was $20,700 while in 1972 it was $28,486. What does this indicate? It indicates a scale of values on the part of the minister in charge of the Treasury Board and on the part of those he appoints to do the negotiating which indicates that those who have shall get, and that those who have been poor will continue to be poor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or lose what they already have.

Mr. Orlikow: Or, as my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre says, lose what they already have. Let us look at the number of employees in the operational side of government and the number of employees in the senior executive and professional staffs. The figures I have come from Statistics Canada. The number of people in the operational category who work for government, which of course includes postal workers, according to Statistics Canada has increased, from the year 1970 to the year 1972, by 0.8 per cent. That is 8/10 of 1 per cent. However, if you look at the number of employees in the executive, scientific and professional categories the number has increased from 1970 to 1972 by 22½ per cent. Then if you look at the number of senior people in the administrative and foreign service groups, the number has increased by 20.8 per cent.

Let us for a moment look at the Treasury Board, the board which is given responsibility by the government of negotiating with the postal employees. As I have already indicated, this board is tough when it deals with the postal employees. It seems to want to protect every penny the people of Canada pay to the postal employees and to see that there is no waste and no generosity. The Treasury Board wishes to keep our taxes down. Let us look at the situation in respect of the Treasury Board. In January 1970, it had a staff of 443. By January of 1973 it had a staff of 590, an increase, as I make it, of about 25 per cent. In January of 1970, the Treasury Board had 185 people on staff who were earning $15,000 a year or more. In January of 1973, that salary had increased to $18,000 a year. So, allowing for the increase in the cost of living and the inflation about which we are all supposed to be worried, there were 261 people in that group, an increase of 50 per cent. I point out that almost every second employee on the rolls of the Treasury Board was earning over $18,000 a year and that every sixth employee, of which there are 104, was earning over $25,000 a year.

So, Mr. Speaker, you see the picture. Because the employees of the post office have shown they are a militant group they have collective bargaining. They have to be tough. They have their fears and they become involved in long drawn out and constant negotiations, because if they want anything they must go on strike. What about management? I have already indicated the kind of increases management has received which I would say are very substantial, completely unjustified and completely indefensible. Do these people have to go through the process of collective bargaining? No. They could not dirty their hands in that way. They do not have to go to collective bargaining. They are dealt with in a different way. For them, we have an advisory committee which looks at their salaries.

This advisory committee supposedly consults with private industry and makes recommendations to the government concerning what should be done. The advisory committee obviously has done very well for the senior officials of the postal department and other departments, particularly the Treasury Board. Who are some of the people on the advisory committee which suggests to the government what it should do? The first chairman was Mr. Clyne, a former chief justice in British Columbia. At the time he was the chairman of the advisory committee he was also the chairman of the board of McMillan, Bloedel, one of the largest companies in British Columbia, if not in all of Canada. Mr. Clyne has been noted for the speeches in which he has called on governments and employers to watch costs and not be too generous with employees because if the employees are allowed to have large wage increases we will have inflation and will price ourselves out of world markets.

Well, he certainly was not very tough with senior civil servants employed by the Government of Canada. Who is a recent appointee to this advisory committee? Well, it is Mr. DeGranpre. Who is he, Mr. Speaker? He is the President of Bell Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Orlikow: When Bell Canada increases its rates which the people of Ontario and Quebec must pay, it must make an application to the Canadian Transport Commission. What does that commission do with it? I presume it sends that application for study and analysis to its employees. Its senior employees who will be making the recommendation are the very employees who have been dealt with so generously by an advisory committee of which Mr. DeGranpre is a member. They are supposed to be impartial; they are supposed to protect the public interest, and yet the salary increases they will get in the next year or two will depend, to a large extent, on the advice that the government receives from Mr. DeGranpre.

● (1250)

I suggest to you that there is a conflict of interest there. I suggest, that, to say the least, it is immoral and improper for the government to appoint a person who has the stake that Mr. DeGranpre has in decisions made by a government agency and who has a great deal of say with regard to the salaries and working conditions of senior civil servants.

I say to the Postmaster General that if he wants to improve the role of the post office, to improve the service, and to improve the morale of the postal employees, which has, I am sure he will agree, not been very high in recent years, the best thing he could do would be to go back to his cabinet colleagues and insist that the responsibility for the bargaining which must take place between his department and its employees should be taken away from the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board has failed significantly in dealing fairly with the employees of the post office so responsibility for bargaining should be given back to his department because, despite its failings in the past, of which there are many and this is not the time to talk about them, there is no possible way in which his department could do the completely inadequate and disastrous job which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and his senior officials have done in recent years.

I say to the minister—and I say this in a sincere way and wishing him the best—that if he wants to be remembered as a good Postmaster General, the best thing he can do is to get back the right to conduct the negotiation so his employees can be dealt with fairly, honestly, and in a friendly way, rather than in the antagonistic and miserable way in which the Treasury Board has conducted negotiations in these past number of years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I was a little anxious; I had hoped that the member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would have been a little more voluble and would have continued his speech until one o'clock. I wonder if the House would agree that I call it one o'clock so that I do not have to begin my remarks and stop them right away.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume its sitting at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, it has been quite some time since the House had the opportunity to scrutinize the postal services. That is why I am grateful to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for providing us with this opportunity today.

The motion contains several elements and it will be rather difficult, in so short a period of debate, to consider fully all the points it raises. However, I am interested in some of them as they relate to some problems I have come up against.

In the first part of the motion, it is said, and I quote:

That this House regrets the drastic deterioration of the Postal Service in Canada during the past six years: . . .

I have been able to find such a deterioration of the postal services in my large constituency of Abitibi which can be regarded as a rural one. There are some small towns of 8,000, 10,000 or 12,000 inhabitants, but there are also a great many villages, rural parishes, where mail delivery is rather slow and sometimes delayed.

● (1410)

I would like to call again the attention of the minister to some examples I have in mind to prove that some unexplainable delays have occurred, and I refer to those which took place not so long ago, since the beginning of the year. It is said that the deterioration of the mail service has occurred during the last six years. If we go back further, when the mail was carried by the Canadian National Railways, we will remember that we could then receive in Abitibi a piece of mail at most 24 hours after it had been mailed in cities such as Quebec, Montreal or even Toronto.

A lot of people in my area come from around Quebec City and they would like to get the daily papers from that city. But as it is almost impossible to get those papers in time, they cancel their subscription to those dailies because the news come too late. They get their paper only five or six days after they have been published, three of four issues at the same time. So it is an unacceptable solution.

Mr. Speaker, I have in mind a few examples of delayed mail. I have here a letter which had been forwarded from Nipigon, Ontario on November 30, 1972 and it reached Authier, in Abitibi, on December 7, 1972. I believe it took quite a long time to deliver a letter for which an 8-cent stamp had been paid. A parcel sent from Sackville, New Brunswick, on November 27 to the same person arrived in Authier, on December 7, 1972. This parcel included parts to repair a furnace and everyone knows that in Abitibi by the end of November or early in December, it is most important that a furnace be in proper condition. That undue delay in the distribution or movement of mail riles custumers, taxpayers.

I will quote parts of the letter I received from that taxpayer on that occasion:

Dear Mr. Laprise:

For your information, I repeat that the movement of mail since the CNR abandoned it is nothing short of most rotten as far as we are concerned in Authier. I do not blame the postmaster for it.

Post Office

I receive my Quebec newspaper the L'Action a couple of times a week, etc.

We are not all millionnaires and we cannot all live in cities.

Does the right to live in rural areas in this big country still exist? Practically speaking, no.

What the signer of that letter, Mr. Adrien Lambert, of Authier, meant is that in recent months, particularly in recent years, it has been considered more important to provide reasonable service to people living in cities and people living in rural areas have been neglected, and they find that quite unpleasant.

I have here a letter addressed to the Department of the Postmaster General and dated January 16, 1973:

Dear Sir:

Today, January 16, I received a parcel that I had been waiting for for at least three weeks and which was sent on December 12.

I cannot understand a service so rotten on the part of your department. Those pieces were very important and caused enormous prejudice—

La Sarre Enr. Farm Agency,

R. Lauzon

The Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) investigated that case and gave me an answer after I brought that complaint to his attention.

Here is the reply from the Postmaster General, dated March 29, 1973:

I am being told by our regional representatives that they conducted an inquiry but cannot explain the delay exactly.

They conducted an inquiry without any results, since they could not find anything.

Except for registered mail, we do not keep any record of mail items. So it is seldom possible to find the cause of an irregularity of that kind. Furthermore, Mr. Lauzon told the postmaster in La Sarre that the parcel's wrapping had been destroyed. The wrappings of delayed articles often show marks that enable us to tell how the item was handled and why it was delayed.

However, labour disputes in the Post Office in December 1972 and in early January 1973 might explain the delay.

So the responsibility is shifted on to the postal workers. Simple and easy enough, isn't it?

I keep quoting from the letter:

As you certainly know, we signed about a month ago a labour contract with the union which represent about 30,000 out of our 45,000 employees. However, after the negotiations reached a deadlock, management and the unions had to resort to conciliation. In spite of that, a few workers decided to object to such a measure, and there was some slackening down and a few stoppages in many postal service centres.

That is an explanation. We know that there has been work to rule. But it is rather simple and easy to blame only the postal workers. And the minister adds:

Moreover, bad weather did not help either and transportation services were delayed,—

It depends on the weather now. Cloud seeding may have caused unusual rainfalls or snowfalls. It does not say. Attempts are made to find all kinds of reasons except the real ones.

I shall mention another case which, I think, is not caused by the rotating or not rotating strike, because there was no strike at the time. A parcel mailed by H. Fortier Ltée from Montreal on March 16, 1973 was received in La Sarre by the Librairie Régent Enregistrée on April 3, 1973, that is 19 days later, and there was no strike.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that distances are long in remote regions, like Abitibi, but such delays virtually never occurred when mail was carried by railway but ever since mail has been carried by truck or by air, there have been similar delays nearly every week, or every month.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is room for improvement and I draw the minister's attention to this in order that service in rural centres might become as rapid as in cities. Taxpayers of our rural centres pay the same rates for mail as taxpayers who live in towns. I think we have a right to ask for the same services.

● (1420)

In the second part of the motion, the closing of small rural post offices is deplored. Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I do not entirely agree with the motion. It is true that small post offices have been closed, but one must indeed realize that when a parish or a community of people is set up somewhere, they ask for postal services; a post office and its related services are then brought in. But when this same parish or community becomes deserted, after all one cannot ask the department to keep a permanent post office when there are practically no more families living there.

In my area, we cannot complain too much since the few post offices that were closed down have been replaced by other kinds of services, and I think the people get the service they are entitled to.

As for the reduction of urban service from six to five days, it created many more problems because small businesses mainly were affected.

Earlier this morning, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), in reply to a question of mine, said that he had ordered a study on the possibility of reducing the work-week to four days in federal services.

If in services such as the postal service the work-week were reduced to four days, two shifts of workers would have to be used to ensure services throughout the week, which would probably entail high expenses. I do not know whether the minister considered this, whether he consulted the Minister of Labour in this connection nor whether the latter consulted him as he did other ministers; but, in my opinion, it is a serious question which will have to be weighed carefully to make sure the post office users do not suffer from whatever decision of Minister of Labour makes following the studies.

I also have another complaint which I find most important and to which I drew the minister's attention last fall. I take this opportunity to bring it to the House's attention.

I am speaking about the delivery of parcels containing valuable objects which are a temptation to thieves. In fact, a jeweller of La Sarre, on September 7, 1972—and this was not the first time it happened to him—mailed two parcels of jewels to Montreal. Those parcels were shipped from La Sarre to Rouyn by postal trucks then transferred later on for transportation from Rouyn to Montreal by Air Canada. In this regard, I had the following question put on the Order Paper under No. 189 and I quote:

[Mr. Laprise.]

1. What was the date of Air Canada Flight 556 between Rouyn and Montreal where the disappearance of postal bags was discovered?

2. Was an investigation carried out and, if so, how long did it last?

The answer of Air Canada was given in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay), and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, in answer to question No. 189, Air Canada has not discovered any disappearance or loss of postal bags from Flight 556 between Rouyn and Montreal. Provided with more details, Air Canada might make a more detailed investigation.

This answer was given on February 21, 1973, but earlier, the former Postmaster General (Mr. Côté), who is now a senator, informed me by letter as follows:

We reached by telephone our regional officials in Montreal who informed us that the inquiry is going on this regard. Mr. Giasson's registered items were sent from La Sarre to Rouyn by truck, was forwarded to Montreal by flight 556. According to records, these items were duly received in Rouyn but never reached Montreal.

The parcel disappeared between Rouyn and Montreal. Since the department got in touch by telephone with its regional officials in Montreal, I assume that they had inquired at Air Canada and, on February 21, Air Canada's official informs the House that they were not aware of it. Either the answer given by Air Canada was wrong or the Post Office Department did not carry out a thorough inquiry to find out what happened to this mail bag.

Mr. Speaker, when this mail bag containing these items sent by registered mail arrived in Rouyn and was transferred, from the truck to the plane, someone must have signed to accept responsibility for it. I suggest that it should be quite easy to trace these items and find out who was the last person who signed for these parcels, and that it would also be interesting to know how come mail bags are stolen only when there are valuables in them, and who informs those make those valuables disappear from the mail. Everything indicates, Mr. Speaker—and this suspicion, in my opinion, is justified—that someone takes it upon himself to notify others that valuables are in the mail, and then they are stolen.

Mr. Speaker, I asked another question—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the 20 minutes allotted to him have expired. He can, however, continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unamimous consent.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for having raised the issue of the Post Office today, because it allows me to make my maiden speech in the House as Postmaster General.

Many times since last December have I had the opportunity of speaking on the problems concerning the Post Office, either by answering questions during the oral question period or by way of clarification during what is known as the late show. But this is the first opportunity I have had to speak as minister, and I want to take advantage of it to mention how often, through my visits across the country, I have had the occasion of realizing the devotion and the competence of all postal employees all over the country. I noted that dedication and competence at the national level here as well as in areas where thousands of Canadians work, often in difficult conditions, to ensure the best postal service possible to Canadians. And I am pleased to point out today in this first speech that in most cases, I have met and discussed with people who are proud to work with the Post Office Department, who are unhappy to find that often our operation is criticized in an irresponsible or irrational way and to find that, in many instances, the complexity and difficulty of such a postal service are not understood.

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker, I read as other members the resolution moved today by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) who charged the Post Office Department with such a multitude of sins of commission as well as omission that I could not help remembering that big hit movie "Play it again Sam".

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that the charge made by the hon. member is nothing but another far-off echo of a series of charges made periodically by the Post Office Department itself for several years as everyone who is interested in Canada's postal service realizes that such an institution must absolutely be modernized. Indeed every postal administration of the world must face the same problems. The increase in mail volume, the facilities, the system itself that has become obsolete, the social disorders and the ever increasing deficits contribute to a reduction in the quality of service and bring criticism upon us.

But the important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the Canadian Post Office has set out to work energically in order to remedy this situation and is doing everything possible so Canadians can again enjoy a postal service which they can rightly be proud of.

We have two alternatives: on the one hand, the Post Office Department could refrain from bringing basic alterations to its organization. Then, the quality of its service to the public would deteriorate and its annual deficit would surely reach $500 million at the beginning of the 80's. On the other hand, the department can set itself an aim which would surely not be easily achieved, whatever the line of action, and become a stable and modern organization providing to the Canadian people an essential service at reasonable cost while giving interesting work conditions for its employees.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the Canadian postal service has chosen the second solution and that it is becoming, in spite of the comments of some members opposite, a modern and dynamic organization. Moreover, the list of changes anticipated for that purpose is as important and impressive as long. In its endeavour to provide more efficiency to the postal service, the department has dealt with the first-class mail, which accounts for more than half of the five billion pieces of mail handled each year in the country.

We first provided an assured mail program for first-class mail. The efficiency of this service, with regard to delivery the day following mailing has now reached 95 per cent; quite recently, I read, as every Canadian could have done, in a week-end newspaper, the findings of an independent investigation made by a Canadian newspaper which showed beyond any doubt the efficiency of the assured mail program, which efficiency is over 95 per cent.

I am pleased to announce to the House that, effective next Monday, the Assured Mail Delivery Service will include, in addition to the service already offered at the national and regional levels, a third and last category of service, that is, local delivery.

Therefore, this means that we are trying, through this Assured Mail Delivery Service, to give next-delivery-day service to everyone in about 60 Canadians centers. In order to enforce this Assured Mail, we have a quality control service program. This program provides us with all sorts of extremely interesting data. Yesterday, in reply to a question from an hon. member from Alberta, I spoke in the House about the service provided to the province of Alberta. Since this motion was presented by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), an Alberta constituency—

Some hon. Members: He is not even here.

Mr. Ouellet: Some of my colleagues are saying that the hon. member is not in the House. This morning, while commenting those remarks, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris told us that a multitude of members opposite wanted to contribute to this debate. I would say that if postal service efficiency is proportional to the number of abstentions across the way, I am convinced that we have an excellent postal service.

I wanted to say that our assured postal service in Manitoba, represented by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris who introduced this motion, is as follows: Our domestic service, namely the letters to be delivered within our borders, has reached an efficiency level, for the period ending May 25,—and I would ask the hon. members to listen carefully—of 100 per cent; with regard to the regional service, the level is 99 per cent, and the local service, 98 per cent.

Obviously the department is taking numerous steps to improve this service. Of course, it is not perfect. Several hon. members can, I am sure, mention hundreds of delayed deliveries but I would ask each hon. member to recognize that, even if out of let us say, 100 letters mailed, one, two or three letters are late, that does not mean that our postal service is bad, since 97 pieces reached their destination on time. I wish our hon. friends of the opposition would realize that.

I would add that the department is preparing a set of standards applicable to third and fourth class mail for, admittedly, there is considerable need for improvement with regard to third and fourth class mails. We are now in the process of developing new standards and new techniques to improve this service.

Besides, the marketing branch of the department has developed a wide program of relations with our clients, in order to solve all those postal problems which can create difficulties in the business world. We are striving very eagerly and aggressively, in co-operation with the business concerns using the post office to a large extent, to find solutions designed to improve that service.

● (1440)

Assuredly it is not possible to bring about overnight substantial changes to the whole postal organization, which comprises more than 50,000 employees in Canada and which spreads out in all parts and all villages of the country.

Naturally it is more difficult still to bring about changes while an adequate level of service has to be maintained day in and day out. I have admitted quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that there have been problems; problems still exist, but I must add that I am extremely proud of the way both the administration and the employees of the department have responded to the challenge and are working eagerly to solve those problems.

I would like to mention briefly what is probably the most important part of our program to improve the postal service, namely the mechanization of our operations and the implementation of the postal code.

I think that all Canadians will agree that the introduction of the postal code was probably one of the most important decisions ever taken by the Post Office Department. I am convinced that this code will do much to improve mail service. In fact, the code has already been put into service in many regions of Canada. It is already being used in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and most of Quebec. It will be introduced in metropolitan Montreal in September, in the Atlantic provinces in early October and finally, in British Columbia towards the end of the year so that by the end of the year, all Canada will have been coded. Several persons have asked us why we need a postal code. I think that the code is one of the first steps, probably the most important, towards the implementation of our automation program.

The new code is in a way a new language that will be read by machines, which will help improve and speed up the handling of mail.

The volume of mail has increased so much during the last few years that it is now almost impossible to sort it by hand. Canada being one of the last industrialised countries to resort to the postal code system, we should be in a position to have an excellent code.

We will of course profit by the experience of other countries—such as Germany, the United States, Japan—which already use this code and we will be able to improve it as well as the system that these countries have implemented, so that our code will enable us to meet not only our present demands but our needs until the end of the century.

When we started the implementation of this postal code, we tried to get the opinion of hundreds of Canadian senders, the most important users of the postal service, in order to ensure that the code would not go against the smooth running of business in Canada. Thus, most customers' accounts are logically distributed according to the geographical situation. Therefore, we took care to introduce these data in our code.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

We also tried to keep the position of figures and letters in order to facilitate computer processing and checking of mailing lists. When we developed our code, we felt that it should meet our long term needs.

By a combination of these elements, we can obtain over 10 million codes. This is a hundred times more than the 100,000 possibilities offered by the United States ZIP Code. In this regard, Canadians are ahead of Americans since our system is more flexible than theirs.

And, precisely, our objective in establishing the Canadian code was to facilitate mechanical sorting for the smallest sections of residential streets, large mail boxes, residential buildings, commercial enterprises and government departments.

Therefore, we largely provided for growth in order to be able to keep pace with the unparalleled expansion of cities and the exodus of people from the country to the cities.

Mr. Speaker, I can assert that our mechanization program is now entering its stage of intensive realization. Last year, we installed mechanical sorting equipment in Ottawa; we will now proceed to the installation of an identical system in 14 other important post offices in Canada, in such a way that we will be able to provide all the large cities of this country with modern facilities to accelerate substantially mail sorting, and that with one precise goal in mind, namely to improve the quality of the postal service.

The motion before us states that the postal service has experienced a drastic deterioration, but the author forgets that the Post Office Department is taking extremely important steps to improve the quality of the postal service.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that this program of coding, modifying, up-dating and mechanizing involves even more sizeable investments to build new establishments for handling mail. The new techniques and equipment used for handling, transporting and sorting mail require spacious and modern premises. The new centres we will build will meet these criteria. It is on these premises that the mail will be handled in bulk as well as the parcel posts addressed to metropolitan areas or mailed from these, and that the mail will be sorted out by the latest techniques and that we will insure quick delivery to our clients.

Large postal centres are to post offices what factories are to a retail store. Toronto and Montreal already have what is commonly known as a large postal centre. In Mississauga, we are now building what may be the largest centralized mail processing centre.

Another centre is also under construction on Eastern Avenue in Toronto. These two centres will be in operation by the middle of 1974 and, with the new centre in Scarborough, they will be able to process all the domestic mail from and to Toronto.

We also intend to build similar centres in Montreal. And I may mention that another large centre of this type is under construction in Calgary where we intend to provide western Canada with a service comparable to what is provided in Toronto and Montreal.

Thus, through this extensive program of new postal buildings, we want to be in a position to meet not only present but also future needs.

Mr. Speaker, it must be kept in mind, when we talk about this program, that regardless of the plans and the programs designed for mechanization on a very large scale, no full time postal worker will lose his job.

● (1450)

And so I must say to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris when he suggests that automation and the use of computers cause job insecurity, that there is no job insecurity in the Post Office Department, because in the collective agreement which we have just signed with our employees, we have guaranteed job security and income security to all our permanent employees. In my view, to state that in a motion, the hon. member is probably mistaken or misinformed.

All the decisions that we made at the Post Office Department concerning working conditions, salaries, social benefits, job descriptions and related matters, not only affect the Post Office Department as such, but also the whole public sector. With a work force of 50,000 employees, it is inevitable.

The work environment and the young people joining the labour market today are very different from what they were only a few years ago. Constant and rapid change is particular to our technological era in which the search for greater efficiency and improved production, results, of course, in a more and more sophisticated technology. So it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the young worker thinks that management tends to make jobs as meaningless, as non demanding and as dull as possible.

It is estimated today that roughly 50 per cent of workers are under 30. In other words, the wide gap between the average age of workers today and that of only a few years ago means that more than half the labour force in Canada belongs to a generation whose attitudes and style of living generally are quite different from those of the previous generation, the one which now holds the reins of politics and the economy.

That is a strength that will have to be reckoned with from now on. I think that leaders must be receptive to the needs and aspirations of the new worker and adjust their attitude to meet those new needs. Work must be revalorized and better means of communication between management and labour must be found. Those are great challenges that the administration of the Department of the Postmaster General will have to take up and that the leaders of any modern business in the public or private sector will also have to take up. As an employer and as a government department the Post Office wants to—and I say so without hesitation—and will show leadership in this new context of staff relations.

Even if it is true that we have new duties to fulfil to satisfy the worker's needs, it is none the less true that we must also fulfil our duty towards the people of Canada. Canadians depend on the Post Office Department to get a quick, reliable and especially inexpensive service.

As far as I am concerned, I shall do my utmost to provide a regular postal service and promote just and fair labour relations within the Post Office Department. However, we must not forget that the department faces the same social problems as private enterprises as far as workers are concerned. It has the same problems to solve when it negotiates with the unions. It is thus unrealistic to expect that the Post Office Department will be able to give the unconditional assurance of an uninterrupted service; no other enterprise can give this guarantee either.

I think we can avoid labour conflicts and come to fair settlements if management and unions stick to the four following guidelines in their negotiations, namely: begin early, do not refuse dialogue, know what you want and what you are ready to give up, and finally, negotiate in earnest.

I did not hesitate, Mr. Speaker, immediately after my appointment as Postmaster General, to go across the country and visit thousands of employees on the spot. I always wanted to keep that kind of dialogue and my talks with the Post Office employees last December were extremely beneficial to me. I keep in touch with union representatives and it is always in a spirit of sincere cooperation that I talk with them. All hon. members surely know that we signed a new collective agreement at the beginning of the year with the Council of Postal Unions. It was, Mr. Speaker, the first time an agreement was signed without a national strike. That agreement will provide us with a climate of understanding during the next two years. I already said, and I wish to repeat it, that it is a profitable agreement. Now that this question has been settled, I am convinced that our employees will cooperate with our officials so as to give Canadians the quality service they are entitled to.

I should like to deny categorically the assertion made this morning by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris that the department's policy is intended to promote an increase in the number of casual employees. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, we recognized that the casual employees' status must be changed and that far from increasing their number, we wish to reduce it to a strict minimum. Besides, I am happy to report to the House an agreement that was just signed:

[English]

Following a series of meetings with the Council of Postal Unions, we have now finalized consultation on our corporate policy on the usage of casual help in the postal operations group.

This policy is as follows:

The usage of casual help is to be reduced to a minimum. Accordingly, the usage of regular full-time and part-time staff is to be adjusted to a level which will maintain service standards for predictable volume and absence situations.

Bearing in mind the terms of the relevant collective agreements and consistent with the above, and in order to meet situations which are unforeseen or where there is not a continuing full-time or part-time requirement, casual help may be used, where this best meets service needs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that means not only that we recognize the need to reduce the number of casual employees but that we are going to take the necessary steps to do so.

[English]

In closing, I should like to say that some of those people who consider that our deficit is too high should realize that the reason we have such a deficit is mainly the result of putting a vast amount of money into the building of new facilities, the very substantial amount of money expended in mechanizing our operations and the larger sum required to pay our employees better salaries. We have done all this without—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet), but his allotted 30 minutes in accordance with Standing Order 58(13) has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for allowing me to conclude with a few brief remarks.

We have made these substantial expenditures without increasing the tariff. One should realize that in Canada a letter which travels from one part of the country to another does so at a cost of 8 cents, and that is pretty cheap. If we compare that rate with the rates existing in other countries we must realize that Canadian rates for postal services are low, and much more reasonable than in many other industrialized countries.

I have said, and I repeat again today, that it is not our intention to increase the rates. Quite the contrary; we want to keep these rates and we will try to increase our revenues by performing other services or expanding existing ones.

[Translation]

This is why, Mr. Speaker, we will do our utmost during the next few months to enable our Marketing Branch to be more aggressive and test other services yielding new revenues and profits. In order to balance our budget, we will ask our Marketing Branch to make additional efforts to make new revenues, but I must sincerely admit that I do not expect the Post Office Department to become a profit-making undertaking in the near future. I think that the Canadian postal service will still show for several years an appreciable deficit, especially as a result of the mechanization of our current operations and that deficit could even substantially increase as early as next year and still further the year after.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that some measures that we are now taking should have been implemented 10, 15 or even 20 years ago. Had those alterations been carried out 10 or 15 years ago, the Canadian postal service would surely be in a much better financial state and would surely be in a position to assure to the Canadian people the service which they expect.

In spite of that, we will spare nothing to improve the service and I am convinced that we will succeed in giving Canadians the service which they expect and deserve.

[English]

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) for his contribution to this debate. I wish also to say that I appreciate very much the courteous and co-operative attitude he has shown in respect of the inquiries I have brought to him on behalf of my constituents. I regret that I have had to bring so many to him, but I have always been glad of the reception I have received.

I also would like to join the minister in paying a compliment to the people in his department. He may know them at the top executive level, while the ones I know are the letter carriers and those employed in the local post offices, and so on; but I have always been impressed with the way they have undertaken their work. At a time when there is such a great amount of technology, much of life is rather impersonal and I have always appreciated the personal approach taken by those who are employed by the postal department.

I rise in this debate to speak especially on behalf of those who pay so much to their government and get back so little, the urban dwellers who comprise what has become the largest single community in our society. In terms of the Post Office they have become its number one user. In the three major metropolitan centres of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver alone, 14 million pieces of mail are handled every day. Montreal and Toronto process 80 per cent of the advertising mail of this entire country. What do we find the people of our cities and towns saying about their postal service? Let me quote one of them for the special benefit of the Postmaster General. While this person is not an expert on the Post Office, he has many qualifications that will commend his judgment to the head of our postal services. He is from Montreal, he is a Liberal, he is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and he has told the House, "Everyone knows the mails are slow in this country".

The Prime Minister was never closer to the truth, and on this point he could find such agreement he might think he was back in those halcyon days of 1968. Time after time I have been approached by constituents who wonder why it must be that, while they have to pay more for postal service, they can get only less of it. Pay more, get less, is the policy this department has followed. However much the government may try to divert the public with resolutions on language rights, they will find it is this incredible combination of increased costs and decreased services the people will remember. A typical inquiry from a businessman in my constituency asks why it takes four or five days for mail to travel a distance that should take only two to two and a half hours.

Another constituent wonders why mail between Montreal and Toronto takes a week, and why within Toronto itself it may take three days. A third protests her surface mail between Britain and Canada taking just under two months and her airmail between Britain and Canada taking 17 days. One could speculate that it could have been rowed across the Atlantic faster than it came by mail. All of us appreciate that it has been necessary to increase the price of postal service because we cannot reasonably expect the Post Office to be an island of price stability secure from the turbulent sea of inflation around it. On this point we seem to have the statement of even the Deputy Postmaster General, Mr. J. A. H. Mackay, who was quoted in the press as saying:

> We knew our service wasn't what it should be, but we were perhaps inclined to blame it on weather conditions and inability of airlines to fly from point to point, thereby delaying our mail.

What we found instead was that the weather was a very minimal factor... Failure within our own processing system made up by far the majority of our breakdowns.

Even the Postmaster General will agree with that logic because he himself has written to me that, while Canada once had the best postal service in the world, the Post Office knows it has a long way to go to regain that position. I know the minister is committed to regaining Canada's former excellence, but while I do not question the extent of his achievement, although he may cite surveys which show that 90 per cent of the mail arrives on time, or even 95 per cent. I know he likes statistics; all members of the government do. I remember when the Prime Minister would cite statistics to prove that there was no inflation in this country.

Now we have statistics cited to prove that the mail is not as slow as people from coast to coast are saying it is. I would say to the Postmaster General that he should listen more to the people than to the statisticians. He might begin by listening to the Prime Minister, who said that everybody knows the mails are slow in this country. He has spoken about the complexity of the problem, and I agree that it would be foolish of the opposition to pretend that there is an easy solution, but it would be equally foolish of the Postmaster General to pretend there is no problem.

The solution will not come about by the government trying to substitute a shrug for a solution, or by preferring scorn for the opposition to co-operate with its critics. When the cost of this department is mounting so steadily—its deficit this fiscal year will exceed $100 million—the public has a right to demand that efficiency mount with it. That deficit represents $20 per home and the people have a right to get their money's worth. The minister may ask, "Tell us how?" I would answer that we could begin by examining the recommendations of the Samson, Belair, Riddell, Stead report on postal transportation systems. The minister has refused to table this report. When it comes to dealing with affairs in Viet Nam the government follows an open-mouth policy, but when it comes to looking after Canada it warps itself in secrecy. The report cost $239,473. Surely we should be able to read it. Of course, we have a chance to at least read about it because if one cannot read the report in parliament he can read about it in the press.

Documents seem to leak out from the cabinet and appear in the press. We find from the press that money is being wasted on taxi rides for letter carriers, that airlines are overcharging and underserving in respect of airmail, and that postal distribution services should be contracted out to private firms instead of being carried out by the department at greater cost. Indeed, there are many who wonder if what the report recommends for distribution services should not be done more as a part of the department's program.

This is still enough of a free enterprise country that the government should be searching for ways by which more of its activities could be hired out to competitive businesses which would have to provide service equal to the price they charged. There was a time when the postal service seemed the one enterprise the government should manage, but it may be the time has come for the ultimate revolution—the placing of more of the postal service work into private hands. Certainly the present failure of the government cannot long continue uncriticized; it must either succeed or give place to others who can. We say to the Postmaster General that he should match the higher costs with better service or get out of the postal business and make room for those who can put it on an efficient basis.

In the interests of improved public service I request door-to-door mail delivery for the hundreds of families moving into the Malvern housing area of Scarborough. An official of the Post Office has informed me that July 9 is the target date for this service to begin. I urge the Postmaster General to hit that target. In terms of the quality of service I wish also to speak about another facet of this problem, the need for better regulation of mass distribution mail which has multiplied to an extraordinary degree in the last few years. I ask the question: Cannot steps be taken to prevent the indiscriminate gathering of names for mailing lists? It seems that if a person replies to one advertisement he may find his name on the mailing lists of other companies. This is not only a form of invasion of privacy but can have other consequences.

In my constituency, for example, an 11-year old child was solicited by a sex encyclopedia which clearly labelled itself an adult publication and was certainly unsuitable for the child. Yet into his hands, through no effort of his, through the mails came a lurid, lascivious brochure which was more titillating than educating. While none of us would want to censor what adults may choose to read for reasons good or bad, there should be some safeguard against this kind of indiscriminate mailing to children. Parliament will soon consider the need to control television commercials shown during children's programs, and equally parliament should recognize the need to regulate commercial mail sent to children. Without such regulation an 11-year old can be subjected to sex material which he has not requested and which his parents do not desire.

• (1510)

The present regulations may not authorize the Postmaster General to put this right, but let him seek the authority he needs and he will find the majority of parliament and the people supporting him. We are rightly aware these days of the danger of physical pollution of the environment. We must be increasingly conscious of the danger of the moral pollution of our psychological environment, and the mails should certainly not be a passive instrument of this kind of moral pollution.

Members of this parliament are saying to the government, not on their own behalf but on behalf of a large number of people across this country: You have attempted a reorganization of the postal service. We recognize the sociological changes that have made that kind of alteration necessary. What we are demanding is that the results prove the worth of the effort and the price.

That is the challenge of this debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to speak in this debate on the motion of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) concerning the Post Office service in this country. I, like the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), would like to compliment the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) on his speech and also on the way in which his department has tried to provide service to Members of Parliament. I do not believe that any member of parliament who serves a rural area such as my own can help but have a great deal of contact with regional post offices, and I would like to say how helpful I have found them to be in my constituency, especially the one located at North Bay. The officials there are very conscientious and deserving of praise for the manner in which they handle the problems of northern Ontario.

The motion before the House suggests that there is a drastic deterioration in the postal service. After reading the motion on the order paper this morning I glanced down at the letters which had just been put on my desk and decided to do my own survey of how long it had taken those letters to come from the various locations. I saw that I had a letter from North Bay dated June 7—the date was on the letter, not stamped on the envelope—and it arrived here today. Likewise, a letter from Gore Bay dated June 6 arrived here today, two days later. A letter from Sheguiandah, a small outlying post office in my constituency, dated June 6, arrived today. One from Desbarats, Ontario, dated June 7, arrived here on June 8. Likewise, a letter from Ottawa, dated June 7, arrived in my office today.

I suppose it is rather significant when letters coming a distance of 500 miles arrive within 24 hours. Also, I had a letter from Sault Ste. Marie, dated June 6, which arrived at my office today. Another one from Bruce Mines in my constituency was dated June 5 and arrived in my office yesterday. It travelled a distance of 470 miles. I think it is especially valuable when we see that letters come from small outlying areas to the nation's capital within one to two days. To say that the whole system does not work is an unfair and unreasonable criticism, especially of people in the postal service who work so hard.

The hon. member's motion goes on to cover many other aspects of our postal service. He mentions the reduction of the urban service from six days to five days. In my constituency, which is rural, we have the full six-day delivery rather than the five-day delivery.

I was interested especially in the comments of the hon. member for Scarborough East. He referred to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 4 and suggested that the Prime Minister was making at that time a serious statement that everyone knows the mail in this country is slow. So I looked back at Hansard for that day and noted that the Prime Minister on that occasion was jousting with the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and, as he often does, came out none the worse for wear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Foster: The right hon. gentleman, I believe, was trying to determine at that time if there was any plan for an election in June because election equipment had been sent out in April in time to prepare for a June election. The right hon. member for Prince Albert was obviously trying to get information from the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister in reply made this offhand remark more in jest than seriously.

I think the point is well made in the article from which the hon. member for Scarborough East quoted. The article points out how well the mail service operates. The hon. member mentioned that it contains an excellent pictorial outline of a letter being mailed in Pouch Cove, Newfoundland, and being delivered to Vancouver. The total distance is 3,244.9 miles, and it was covered in 34 hours and 10 minutes at an average speed of 95 miles per hour. This article points out the vast number of people who have to handle a single letter. It mentions the person in the post office where the letter is mailed, the person who has the stage service and who takes the letter from Pouch Cove to St. John's, the sorting that goes on there to other parts of the country, the journey by air to Vancouver and the sorting that takes place in a large post office in Vancouver. It mentions that 31 people have to handle a single letter. I think it is significant that the headline reads: "What 31 people will do for a lousy 8 cents".

I think it is very easy for us to criticize the mail service; it is almost a way of life even though only two or three letters out of 100, or 2 per cent or 3 per cent, are not delivered exactly on time, as my straw poll of the letters that came to my office this morning indicated. The vast majority of the mail arrives on time, but it is always good sport to talk about the letter that does not arrive. Certainly members of parliament can be forgiven for being very critical of the mail service because the only letters they hear about are the ones that do not arrive on time. With a vast complex of at least 100,000 people, with the changeover to a mechanized system and considering the vast distances involved, distances with which those of us who represent large rural ridings are familiar, it is not surprising that the occasional letter does go astray.

The one point of the motion before us today with which many members like myself are sympathetic is that dealing with the closure of post offices in large numbers—I believe 2,000 rural post offices—in 1969 and 1970. As I say, we who represent rural constituencies know the concern this caused people living in small communities. At one time the typical, small community had a church, a school and a store. Within recent years the school and the church were closed down so that on one hand larger central schools could be built and on the other hand so that declining church congregations could be amalgamated. Then often the post office was lost to the small community, resulting in the general store having to close because it depended to a large degree on the general business attracted to it by virtue of the fact that it housed the post office.

I, along with many other hon. members, fought long and hard to preserve many rural post offices, acting as true representatives of our constituencies and trying to assist all groups within them. But on occasion the loss of the rural post office actually meant an improvement in service with the establishment of a rural delivery route reaching from a larger community a few miles down the road. As a result, people had their mail delivered to the door and did not have to drive four or five miles to pick it up.

To a small hamlet the loss of its post office meant it ceased to exist. There was no longer a postal mark for it. Invariably, it was not an organized community and nothing was left of that hamlet which to previous generations had been an important community, a place which they called home. I recall that at the time of the post office closings many delegations from my constituency met the then postmaster general, Mr. Kierans, to seek improvement in rural route deliveries. We were able to get a six-day delivery for the rural routes instead of three or four-day delivery. This is one example where the number of deliveries on some of these routes was improved, whereas in the cities the number of days for delivery was reduced.

As I say, I think we can all sympathize with that part of the hon. member's motion. He seems to be suggesting that we should go back to the good old days, but anybody who looks at matters realistically cannot think of going back to the good old days in face of the volume of mail which is passing through the postal system. In 1840, 133 years ago, mail arriving from England was transported once each month from Halifax to Quebec City. When the mail arrived at the Quebec City post office even the accountants had to become mail sorters. In that era large volumes of mail were the exception rather than the rule. Very simple mail handling methods could be used for such temporary needs.

However, in 1973 and in the years for which we must plan now, enormous volumes of mail arrive every day. There has been a change in the workload, and the Post Office Department is changing too. One part of the attempt to draw the best possible good out of the inevitable change was the postal code which was introduced during the last couple of years. Urbanization and the population increase have resulted in further complications. For example, our 15 largest Canadian cities account for 85 per cent of all the mail. Montreal and Toronto alone account for 44 per cent. Every day Canadians mail about 15 million letters and parcels. In one year this adds up to 5 billion pieces. When this mail is sorted by hand, a letter can be handled up to 21 times between mailing and delivery. It is obvious that the Post Office must change its ways in an attempt to accommodate all this.

Mr. Stanfield: Like the government.

Mr. Foster: Just calm down, I say to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

We have all seen great changes in Canada in the past few decades. Technological advances, especially in the field of communications, are radically altering our way of life at an ever increasing rate; and this trend will continue. No organization, and the Post Office is no different from any other, can afford to ignore the technological, demographic and sociological changes that have occurred. The Post Office has to keep up with technological change or it will become an expensive, archaic anachronism, out of step with the times and irrelevant to the needs of Canadians. While some may think that the updating of postal operations is proceeding too quickly, large numbers of the public have the impression that it is changing too slowly.

In response to this challenge, and in order to provide Canadians with a postal service that will meet current demands, the Post Office Department is introducing a national program of coding and mechanization. This afternoon the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) has indicated that this reorganization will result in an efficient and cost-effective system for sorting the mail, particularly in our larger centres.

A recent survey indicated that Canada's population will reach 26 million by 1985. The existing trend toward urbanization will continue, to the extent that 22 million of those 26 million people will be living in our cities and larger towns in just over 12 years from now. Canada is not the only nation adopting new methods for handling mail. The United States, Great Britain, Japan—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, having listened to this debate I can say that if mothers in the city of Ottawa were having difficulty putting their babies to sleep between eleven o'clock this morning and one o'clock this afternoon, they ought to have brought them to the House of Commons. I was also struck by the fact that we Canadians always have one good whipping boy, and that happens to be the Post Office. Of course, the difficulty is that at times there is considerable justification for whipping the Canadian Post Office.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Let's sell it.

Mr. Knight: One honourable reactionary from the province of Saskatchewan probably wants to sell it back to private enterprise. To the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Horner), private enterprise is God. I have never heard anything so ridiculous. We set up the Post Office as a public service and took over that service from private enterpise; now he wants to go back three or four centuries.

● (1530)

In his speech, the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) showed enthusiasm for his job and for the continued improvement of postal service in Canada. For that I commend him. Like the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), I hope the minister will persist in his attempts to solve the problems that exist, including those affecting my constituency of Assiniboia. What surprised me was the mention of 95 per cent efficiency. I should like that explained. Efficiency, I think, should be discussed under two headings. First, how efficient are the new machines that are being used in post offices such as the one in Ottawa? I know that technical and mechanical difficulties have arisen in the sorting of mail in the Ottawa post office. I have listened to postal workers, and according to what they tell me—this they have learned from other postal workers across the country—only certain types of letters will go through the machine: letters of the wrong size will throw off the whole machine. This is the result of our investment of millions of dollars!

Second, how efficient are the new postal codes that we are using? Judging from the mail that comes to my office, the new postal code is nearly useless. The Postmaster General has not shown evidence that it is any good. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) mentioned a letter which ended up in Tokyo because the postal code resembled the word Tokyo. So apparently difficulties have arisen over the use of the postal code.

Because I represent a rural and urban area I am concerned about rural post offices and the situation of rural postmasters. On a number of occasions I have raised this matter with the Postmaster General; he is aware of it and intends to alleviate the situation, or gives the impression that he intends to alleviate the situation of rural postmasters in areas such as Assiniboia, Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Orlikow) has shown how top heavy is the Post Office Department with management personnel. The salary levels of these people increased considerably between 1968 and 1972. He showed that the guy who works directly with the public, that the postie who walks the beat, that the rural postmaster who deals directly with his neighbours has not done as well as people in management. The salary increases of people at lower levels, in percentage terms, have been smaller than those of management people in the Post Office Department.

I have put over 40 questions on the order paper relating to salaries in different departments and to salary increases. For instance, I have asked the following questions of the Post Office Department: How many full time employees were there as of January 31, 1970, in the Post Office Department? How many of these employees were earning more than $15,000 annually, distributed according to $1,000 intervals? How many full time employees were there as of January 31, 1973, in the Post Office Department? How many of these employees were earning more than $18,000 annually, distributed according to $1,000 intervals?

Similar questions were asked of every other department on March 5. Every other department has answered my questions. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is present today. I believe it is correct to say that the number of employees earning over $18,000 in his department, compared with the number of employees earning $15,000 in 1970, has increased in the neighbourhood of 40 per cent. The Post Office, however, has not yet answered that question. I am interested in seeing the answer and in seeing if Post Office management is top heavy. I suspect it is. On the other hand, I believe that those at the lower level who directly serve the Canadian public have not in many ways been as fairly dealt with by the Post Office and by Treasury Board. My colleague for Winnipeg North adequately dealt with this matter when he cited figures.

In my constituency the local, rural post office is the backbone—or a joint in the backbone, if you like—of local rural communities such as Dahinda, Scout Lake, Bromhead, McCord and Beaubier, which are small with populations of less than 200. The people in those post offices work 40 hours per week at low salaries which seem to be below the minimum wage paid in some provinces. They serve the local community. When they are sick or go on holiday and have to be replaced by someone else, it sometimes costs more to hire the replacement than to pay the absent employee.

[Mr. Knight.]

I hope my meaning is clear. These people have written to me about this situation. They have sent me dozens of letters about it and I am glad they have informed their member of parliament because it is a difficult problem. I hope that in the present round of negotiations the Post Office will improve the salary levels and working conditions of our rural postmen. The Postmaster General has said he is aware of these problems and will look into them. I believe if the department can come to a just settlement with these people it will be a feather in the cap of the Postmaster General. The local post office people will be pleased if their salary level is raised substantially. I am pleased the minister has taken the time to listen to me, and I look forward in the coming months to his attempts to solve these problems.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I want to use my time to impress upon the minister the plight of the rural postmaster, especially the so-called revenue postmaster. For some reason this government is determined to move people into large cities; no doubt that serves its socialistic tendencies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): The people are more easily served in large cities. The government is trying to centralize service in cities such as Saskatoon and Regina. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, has been talking to experts and trying to convince people that they do not need elevators and the removal of elevators will not affect their communities. He tries to say that rail lines can be removed, that the people do not need the railroad. It seems to me that is the kind of attitude we are now getting from the Post Office Department. The government is trying to discourage the rural postmaster; it hopes that revenue postmasters will be phased out. If that postmaster goes, the people will be left without service. The people be damned—that seems to be the policy of this Liberal government.

Let me say a word about rural areas and the people who are served by revenue post offices. Many people living in rural areas travel ten miles for their mail. If the revenue post offices are removed, or if you encourage revenue postmasters to quit simply by not paying them adequate salaries, if you ask people in the rural post office to work ten hours a day six days a week, or 60 hours a week, they will quit and then the people of the area will be forced to drive 20 miles or more for their mail. The fellow in the city works 36 hours a week and has all the time in the world to get his mail, yet he has it delivered to his door. That is the kind of injustice from which our rural people suffer. These are the people who are raising the cattle and growing the wheat upon which much of the employment of the city dweller depends. Instead of providing rural people with the decent mail service to which they are entitled, we seem to be making them scapegoats.

● (1540)

I have here a public service poster advertising for a postmaster in the town of Hoosier. It offers a salary of $1,660 a year. This post office must be open 24 hours a week. According to my calculations, that works out to $1.35 an hour. In addition, the 24 hours must be spread over 5½ days. How many city people would be tied to a job 5½ days a week for the glorious salary of $1,660 a year? In view of that kind of offer I do not think the government is serious about providing postal service in that area.

What is even worse is the fact that the rental allowance is $150 a year, which works out to 40 cents a day. I do not know how many members in this chamber would like to turn their home into a post office and have people going in and out for 24 hours a day, seven days a week, for 40 cents a day. In that area in the winter, whatever you earn would be gone before breakfast because of the door opening and closing. The government expects janitor service, a building, heat, light, and so on, for 40 cents a day.

I wish to cite a typical example of the treatment received by people in small towns. A veteran whose health was affected while serving in the army worked in the post office for 20 years. He erected a building and rented it to the Post Office Department for $1,800 a year. One day a work unit survey was conducted and he was advised that this post office was not providing enough revenue and it was changed from a class 1 to a class II. This man was informed that after a certain date he would have to provide the premises, as this was a fair sized town, but they would pay only $480 a year for the rental.

As a condition of employment these people must provide the premises. I do not know how many businesses or city people would put up with that kind of deal. I understand that there are now discussions under way to provide constituency offices and secretaries for members of parliament. It is estimated that this will cost $200 a month for each member, yet the Post Office Department will allow only $480 a year to rent a post office. In some cases people who have been operating post offices for 20 years have received letters stating that because they were now revenue post offices their salaries would be frozen and they would no longer qualify for sick benefits or any of the other benefits they received for years as employees of the Post Office Department. In many cases this involved large families with dependent children. Their post offices have been reclassified and they have had to provide their own premises even though, with inflation, their costs are rising all the time.

In his speech the minister spoke about job security and better salaries. Job security and better salaries for whom? It is certainly not for people in the rural areas. The object seems to be to completely discourage anyone who dares to live in a rural area and tries to carry the rest of the country on his back. I suggest that the minister give serious consideration to a minimum rental allowance of at least $50 a month, $600 a year, to anyone who assumes the responsibility of operating a post office, handling government money and all the rest of it. If the Post Office is going to rent facilities from its employees, it should be prepared to pay a lot more than $10 or $20 a month. Also, the salary of these people should be the minimum wage of the province. In Saskatchewan this is $1.75 an hour. The present situation is ridiculous. If the postmaster hires someone during a period when he must be away, he must pay the minimum wage of the province; but the federal government will pay him only $1.35 an hour, or less.

Post Office

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us deals with an issue which has been, for a long time and indeed since the very beginning of the Confederation, much important in daily lives of the Canadian people. The postal service is one of the first public services which was established in Canadian communities.

I do not agree at all with the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) who asserts, in his motion, that the Canadian postal service has deteriorated during the past six years. I will not speak as a government member but as a Canadian who knows perfectly well the Post Office Department for having worked there during three years.

Mr. Speaker, the motion covers six different points; it would take too long to deal with all these matters but let me make a few comments about the closure of small rural post offices.

This program was initiated in 1965 in the Gaspé Peninsula which was used as a pilot region, and in the ridings of Gaspé and Bonaventure alone more than 80 small post offices were closed. Thanks to this program, the Department of Public Works built in the riding of Gaspé alone 26 small offices—

Mr. Béchard: In Bonaventure as well.

Mr. Cyr: —and in Bonaventure, as my colleague points out, and this grouping of post offices provided a much improved postal service in the Gaspé Peninsula.

Before this grouping, the postal van had to stop every two or three miles to deliver the mail, but since 1967 it stops only every 10 or 20 miles and the mail coming from Montreal or Quebec City or even Ottawa is now delivered 15 hours earlier than under the old system.

Early this year, I tried to find out what was the real situation within the postal service in Canada and I dispatched two series of letters to 37 postmasters throughout Canada. Mr. Speaker, the results clearly show that Canada has the best postal service in the world.

Mail sent from the Commons' post office to Moncton, Winnipeg, Gaspé, Murdochville, Sept-Îles, Rimouski, Mont-Laurier, Chicoutimi, Rivière-du-Loup, Sudbury, was delivered within 20 hours and in some cases within ten. However, it should be noted that the letter I sent the postmaster in Hull, and mailed at the Commons' post office, took exactly three days to cross the Ottawa River.

Mr. Isabelle: It is still the same thing now.

Mr. Cyr: That well shows the excellent mail delivery service in Canada, even if there is still room for improvement in the service in large centers like Ottawa, Montréal, Toronto and Winnipeg.

The Post Office Department knows that there is a lack of discipline in the larger post offices, and it is not easy to solve that. Outside those large centers, the mail is sorted out more carefully and it seems that the employees of small post offices and rural service centers do a better job than those in the large urban centers.

I know, through a personal experience, that a letter from Gaspé to Sherbrooke is delayed three or four days if it is dispatched to the Montreal Post Office for sorting. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) open distribution offices outside the larger centers, in order to accelerate the sorting of the mail from rural areas. The sampling method I used has established that delays in mail delivery occur only in the larger centers.

As to the sharply increased postal rates, I must say that paying $0.08 to send a letter, let us say, from Gaspé to Vancouver via airmail is not too much. Thanks to the means of transportation available today, a letter can be delivered from Montreal to Vancouver in only eight hours. I am amazed at the idea that a mere $0.08 stamp can send a letter so quickly and over such a distance, which is the result of the establishment of a domestic service called "All-Up". Canada is the first country ever to offer such a service to its citizens.

Today, the Canadian Post Office has everything it needs to operate at the accelerated pace of life in a modern world. While, thanks to modern techniques and science our geographical boundaries are disappearing and we find ourselves at the crossroads in our history. Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) and his department are meeting the challenges of the 1970's. Never in the history of the Post Office Department, have so many innovations been made over such a short time.

I think that, to a very large extent, the challenge which the Post Office will have to meet will be in the field of marketing. Our Post Office Department will have to offer services and products approved by their customers and from which we will benefit. Those customers should be treated with efficiency; they should be told how the Post Office will meet their needs which, in an increasingly competitive climate, are becoming more and more important. I know that the Postmaster General and his department are doing their best to achieve this objective.

All the postal administrations in the world are faced with price increases. The Canadian postal service is trying to overcome this problem through realistic planning while trying to meet the ever increasing requirements from its staff.

It goes without saying that uprating requires heavy investments. The request for new services from the postal service's customers should be met but we should never forget that a one-cent increase for a first class letter creates general protests throughout the country.

In closing, I wish to commend the Postmaster General for his good work and tell him that we encourage him to keep it up.

[English]

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak on this motion moved by my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). It gives me an opportunity to tell the government that my constituents are fed up with excuses, maladministration and mismanagement. They want, and have a right to expect, the kind of postal service they had become accustomed to until the present government took over the operation of the Post Office Department.

There was a time when the Canadian postal service was one of the most efficient in the world. That time is not too far in the past. Now we have a postal service which is so badly administered that it has become the object of jokes, cartoons and outright ridicule. It is easy to make up jokes about how long it takes to have a letter delivered in Canada today, but it is no joke to people who depend on the mail to conduct their business. It is not a joke to those who rely on the mail to keep in touch with friends and loved ones. We all pay dearly for the postal service, and if there is any good reason why we cannot expect to receive dependable mail service in Canada it is time we were told that reason. It is also time we were told what we must do in order to get the kind of mail service we enjoyed in the past.

I am sure in my own mind that these are serious problems in the operation of the Post Office Department. Everyone is sure we have problems—everyone, that is, except the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). He appears to be more concerned about the possibility that the Conservative Party will form the government in the near future than he is about running the Post Office Department. That is not new, however, Mr. Speaker; the last three postmasters general have had more pressing things on their minds than their portfolios.

The present Postmaster General spends his time condemning our ties with royalty and accusing the Conservative Party of being anti-French Canadian. If his remarks were effective in clearing up the problems in the Post Office Department, we would be willing to accept them. However, he only succeeds in bringing to mind a former postmaster general, Eric Kierans, who spent his time trying to run the finance portfolio while the Post Office Department fell into disrepair and disrepute.

Mr. Speaker, the cost of operating the Post Office in the fiscal year 1970-71 was $343,837,000. The projected cost for the fiscal year 1973-74 is $573,263,000. We are getting close to doubling the cost involved in operating the department in just three years, and during that period our postal services have continued to deteriorate. Everyone in this House and, indeed, everyone in Canada is aware that postal rates have almost doubled since the present government has been in power. The Canadian people have accepted this increase as the cost of getting service, just as they have had to accept increased costs in every other area of government operation. But while they accept the reasons for increased postal rates, they certainly do not accept greatly reduced service from the Post Office Department.

In spite of these greatly increased postal rates and the elimination of certain types of cheap, bulk-rate postal services the Post Office operates at a considerable deficit year in and year out. This House has not been unduly harsh with the government or the Postmaster General for not being able to operate the department without a large deficit. However, when at the same time we are afflicted by one of the world's least efficient postal services, when we find a serious morale problem among employees in the department, and when we are obliged to suffer total stoppage of mail service every year because there is a serious breakdown in employee-employer relations, then it is our right as well as our responsibility to press the government for answers. And, Mr. Speaker, I mean answers, not excuses.

Over the past couple of years we have seen mail service in rural Canada discriminated against in favour of providing better service for the large urban centres. The urban mail service has not improved and we still suffer from a greatly downgraded service in rural communities. Rural post offices have been closed in the name of centralization. We were told this would improve rural mail service. It has not improved the service in rural Canada, Mr. Speaker: on the contrary, it is worse today than it has ever been.

● (1600)

Mail service is vital to people living in small towns and on farms, just as vital as it is to Canadians who live in large cities. In fact, Mr. Speaker, all of us who have spent our lives in small communities know that communications play a major role in our lives. At the time the government announced it was planning to close hundreds of post offices in small towns and villages across the country, it was pointed out to the Postmaster General that these post offices were more than just places to send or receive letters. These post offices, often run in conjunction with a general store, were places where people could get together socially. There are hundreds of places in rural Canada where distances between towns and farms are so great that the only time some people can see their neighbours on a regular basis is at the post office.

I know that the Postmaster General can make a good case for not being in business to provide social centres for rural Canadians, but I can make just as good a case for the government being in power at the will of the people, and these rural Canadians are people. They have every right to expect the government to provide mail service that is readily accessible and also mail service that is personal.

We have been told that the main reason, if not the only reason, for closing down rural post offices was to reduce costs so that the Post Office Department could provide better service without incurring a deficit. Well, postal service is worse than it has ever been and the deficit for this fiscal year is higher than ever. Is it any wonder that Canadians, especially rural Canadians, are not inclined to believe the government any more?

The government is now in conflict with the Canadian postmasters' union over the great disparity in the rates of pay for postmasters in different areas of the country. I think it is safe to say that the postmasters will lose this round, as they have lost others. All the government has to do is close down the rest of the rural post offices and put the postmasters out of their jobs. In that way they not only settle this dispute; they would ensure that the rural postmasters would not be around to bother them in the future.

In some areas of the country people are required to travel many miles daily just to see if there is any mail in their boxes or to mail a letter. This is one of the results of the new policies of the Post Office to increase efficiency. There are examples every day of letters being delivered two days after being mailed, over a distance that can be travelled in 30 minutes. This is commonplace today. It often takes two to three days for letters to be delivered in the city in which they are mailed.

The government is presently engaged in a multimillion dollar program to automate mail handling, and I am very much afraid that we are again on the verge of a major confrontation between the Post Office Department and the unions. As in everything else, the government has failed to plan properly for this major innovation. I am already hearing reports that the unions are not happy with the way negotiations are progressing with respect to issues such as job classification and job security. This is an old story, and while we should be used to it by now, we certainly should not have to take the same nonsense year after year.

I think it is time for the government to appoint a postmaster general who will take his job seriously. We have had enough of the government's policy that uses the postmaster general's portfolio to reward frontbenchers for good service, or as a means of demoting ministers without actually throwing them out of the cabinet. It is a department that requires a minister who is capable of running it; it requires a minister who is interested enough to give the job his full attention.

We have already seen how much importance the present minister attaches to the Post Office Department and to his portfolio. He would be well advised to start thinking and talking about the Post Office Department and to stop worrying about who is going to form the next government. The Canadian people will decide who forms the next government, Mr. Speaker. I can appreciate the minister's concern that my party is going to form the next government, because there is every indication that this will happen in the not too distant future. But until then the minister has a responsibility that he should start taking a bit more seriously.

The latest gimmick introduced by the Post Office Department is the postal code. We have been told that this is one of the answers to restoring adequate postal service. This new device has already cost millions of dollars and we are now told that it will be several years before it is in full operation throughout the country. We do not know yet what we will get for those millions of dollars, but we know that the mail service is still poor and that there is no reason for the Canadian people to be optimistic about the future prospects for better mail delivery.

The government appears to be determined to operate departments with the same yardstick in spite of the fact that it has been proven to be ineffective over and over again. In the case of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the government instituted the same policy of centralization as they have in the Post Office Department. The UIC is a shambles, and last year the cost of operating that department was almost a billion dollars more than the forecast deficit.

In the case of the Post Office Department, centralization has increased costs and decreased the quality of postal service. All the post offices that were closed in rural Canada in the interest of efficiency and economy might better have been left operating. The level of service would have been better, many poastmasters would still have jobs and the people would have been far happier.

Reduction in the number of mail service days in the week, cut from six to five, was carried out in the interest of the same things, Mr. Speaker—efficiency and economy. Do we have more efficiency and reduced costs? No, we do not. All we got out of it was reduced mail service. It would appear to a reasonable person that even this government would learn in time that their policies are not working and that it is time to change their whole approach to the operation of vital government services. This would not reflect against the intelligence and the integrity of those who are charged with running government departments and services: it would have the opposite effect. If the government should indicate in even a small way that it is aware that it has been on the wrong track and is willing to heed good advice, then it would begin to look responsible. I doubt very seriously, though, that that will ever come to pass.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, we are well on into a Friday afternoon. I am sure that while all of us in this House share a real interest in, and concern for, our Post Office and the job that it does in keeping communications open amongst our people, the businesses of our country, as well of course as our international business, we are also anxious to get home to our constituents and constituencies and to the work at hand. Therefore, I will be brief. It is important, I think, as a government member to rise and speak in defence of our postal department and of what I think is the outstanding job it has done, especially in recent years.

As I see it, the motion strikes at four or five particular areas. It is suggested that there has been a deterioration in the Post Office Department during the last six years. It expresses concern about the closing down of rural post offices. It is always a concern, I am sure, of any member of this House when services to constituents are cut back. The motion discusses the reduction of six-day service to five-day service, and suggests there is a rush to automation that threatens the morale and job security of employees. It then points out that we have had increased postal rates, that these have been to the detriment of the postal service and have imposed a burden upon the public. I should like to discuss those points one by one.

● (1610)

On the issue of the reduction in rural post offices, I must first admit in all honesty that I do not have extensive personal experience in the matter, but when such criticism is put forward in this motion one or two things come to mind. While it should never be taken that this is a reason to cut back a service if it is vital to our people, no matter what numbers are involved, there has been a reduction in rural population and a massive growth in urban population. To some degree, as long as a basic and good service is provided in rural areas, when you are talking about the economy and government, realizing that any service put forward by government is paid for by the taxpayers, you must realize that some reductions in rural service may well be justified so long as the basic standard is maintained. We have better roads, better transportation and better means of moving around in our rural areas, and the service of the Post Office has improved considerably in that transportation has become much more rapid in recent years.

Taking all these facts into consideration, and realizing the necessity in all areas of government to consider the economy, I have yet to hear any argument which can offset the need for reduction where it is justified. It is very easy to stand in the House, as has happened during the question period from time to time, on this issue of the Post Office and its services and ask the minister to explain why a letter took three and a half weeks to arrive at its destination. Nobody is more of a whipping boy than the Post Office Department, Bell Telephone or the Income Tax Department. These are the easy departments to get at because, in fact, they are vital to our communications and to the function of government with respect to the Income Tax Department. They all interrelated in the ability of one Canadian being able to communicate with another and business sectors being able to function; but they are also easy departments to knock.

During my experience of five or six months as a member of the House of Commons representing the constituency of York West, I have received less than a dozen complaints about the postal service, in spite of the fact that my constituency is one of the largest in Canada with a population of 140,000. The complaints I have received, I have dealt with frankly because I think nothing can operate on a 100 per cent perfect basis.

I have sent correspondence to the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) which must have arrived quickly because I have received expeditious replies. In fact, any inquiry I have made, be it about the need of a senior citizen for a post office box closer to his home, or why it was moved, and complaints about mail being delivered to the wrong address, has been answered quickly. I received a prompt reply from one of my local post offices regarding a sincere investigation, not only from the Postmaster General but from the local level as well. There was co-operation and sensitivity, and the reply was fast. That not only suggests to me sensitivity in the Postmaster General's department but also a properly functioning Post Office.

There are many other areas I might use as an example of the difficulty of achieving 100 per cent efficiency in any service involving people. I am sure if I asked other hon. members in this House whether they had ever ordered goods from a large department store via a mail order catalogue, had they dealt with a credit card company, had they checked the tapes they received with their groceries after they had done their shopping every week and searched for mistakes, they would tell me that there is always evidence of mistakes being made. This is something we must always watch for. We must always be on guard and we must demand a sensitive Post Office Department, even as I realize that in the private sector and in business there is frustration and that in dealing with somebody like Eaton's on a mail order basis there are faults.

There are faults—but the question is, are they answered and are they corrected?

When we consider this resolution and the accusation about the deterioration of Post Office services in the last six years we must face up to the complications and problems of modern technology, our rapid rate of advancement and just where we sit in the twentieth century. Change not only means disruption; it means tremendous disruption. It also means the need for people to be adaptable. The twentieth century is synonymous with change. "Future Shock" describes the terrific complications that exist as advances become more and more rapid.

I gather from this motion a suggestion that we should deny automation; we should deny this kind of progress and we should go back to the good old ways. But the good old ways were not good at all. The postal service was bad, not good as it is today. Can you imagine one saying: "Let us remain the same"? I do not take it as an acceptable argument that we should continue to have folksy spots in the country where people can go to communicate and where we do not have automation. This would be to deny recognition of all the problems we face as a government today.

Can you imagine the situation if that attitude were adopted, as apparently the official opposition suggests? Can you imagine the terrible situation we would be in a decade from now with our post offices? We simply would not be able to keep up with the demands of modern business.

We must realize that today there must be changes no matter how disruptive they may be. If we do not do that we deny the ability to cope with tomorrow because we cannot imagine what technological advances tomorrow may bring in the way of changes that will improve our situation and assist our people, yet will bring confrontation in respect of the number of people employed, and services. Having regard to the problem of reduced postal service from six days to five days, I think everybody on both sides of the House had some regret when that decision was made. When you look for your mail at a particular time, as each householder does, no matter how good the service you are still inclined to complain and blame the Post Office for not providing the service to which you are accustomed.

I know that people were unhappy when they could not go on Saturday and collect their mail. There was a reduction in service. There were problems in developing workloads when you had a build-up of business mail which hit the Post Office heavily on weekends, making a heavier volume of mail for delivery on Monday. I would like the parliamentary restaurant to open at five o'clock every day. I would like my secretarial staff to be available in the evening when I am here and could dash up to my office to do some work. However, we must be realistic about things.

We are talking about economics and we are talking about a modern society. We are talking about changes that must be made even when there is some regret in making a change that might in a way reduce service which we enjoy. When it is better economics to reduce that service, have it highly efficient and work over a shorter period, then surely that is facing up to the responsibility of making decisions in government that are in the best interests of the people and providing the best economy, particularly when government costs soar as they do these days.

When we talk about increased postal rates this goes back several years to the days of a former member of this House, Mr. Kierans, to whom I think the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) referred a few moments ago. It is true that costs have gone up considerably, but one of the greatest problems I face today, as I am sure other members do, is trying to make my constituents understand who is responsible for what, and what money they pay in taxes goes where. I am faced with the whole confusion of pinpointing where the money is being spent so that I can say whether it is being spent well or poorly.

We do not get extra revenue in the Post Office Department by charging so much for stamps so that we can pour off that money into another department. In fact, even though those rates have gone up the fact remains that the full cost is not covered by moneys that come in from the sale of stamps or the delivery of mail. A sizeable part of the funds still comes out of tax revenue. But surely that is how government should operate. It is important to me that as more and more we are able to identify for the taxpayers where their dollars are being spent so they can decide whether it is worth while or not, the better off we are.

It is all very easy to go out, as I said, and attack Bell Telephone because you had trouble with one particular phone call, or to attack the Income Tax Department because it is not a pleasant department, or to attack the Post Office because you have sent mail for years and have had no trouble but finally you wrote a letter to Aunt Mame and it did not arrive on time, but postal rates were increased to help match the increase in cost of providing this service today. No one is so naïve as to imagine for a moment that costs have not risen generally—and so have the costs of providing our postal service.

The postal department is still very much labour-oriented. It has a great many employees who have demanded better wages. The government was responsible for paying their wages and giving them increases, and this has increased the cost. Transportation costs have rapidly increased, and surely that must be faced up to and reflected in the price of the service. I think it is folly to pretend that services are not expensive. Increased postal rates reflect the increase in costs, and it is wrong to suggest to the public that it will not have to pay for these costs in higher postage rates, because it will. If it does not pay in postage, it will pay in some other way. If the public pays partially in the form of postage, then at least the people who are using the service will pay the increased costs.

Over the last six years, during my time in the media when I received a great deal of mail and also sent a great deal of mail, and now, when I am especially involved in receiving and sending information quickly and trying to deal with situations, I have come to the realization that we do have one of the most efficient postal systems in the world.

● (1620)

If we are to keep up, we must be innovative. The Post Office has been very innovative. It has tried to keep up, restructure, regroup and not begin something without following through during the period of months or years which sometimes is involved in some of its plans. Along the way it has said that it must move sensibly and quickly and that it must make adjustments. I think in the last couple of years—I have experienced this as a newsman covering some very serious confrontations such as the strikes we had five, six or seven years ago, especially in Toronto with the postal employees—there has been a very great development in consultation and sensitivity as between labour and management.

The government has kept a very close eye on this department in the realization that there must be sensitivity and that many people who are employed are not skilled workers and have great fears about innovation and new technology. The government realizes that these people must be dealt with, that it must understand the situation, that they must be cared for and paid a decent wage.

I think the minister's initiative since he has taken over this portfolio speaks well for him as a representative of this government. I know he has travelled across this country and has spoken not only to management but also to the postal workers. I do not think I can accept what the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton said a few moments ago about the minister being interested in other things. The hon. member made an attack on the department as being a place where someone could be shoved down in cabinet seniority or as a place which could be used for the purpose of paying someone off. We do not think of it in that way. He may have those suspicions. I am surprised he has that idea in his mind.

One of the most important means of communication in our country is being carried out responsibly. I believe the minister's record is one of real involvement with and sensitivity toward the people. We have seen consultation develop as never before. We have seen real innovation. We have seen a minister involved with both management and labour. We have seen new methods. We have seen new centres developed. We have even seen the introduction of stamps to promote Canada. I do not see that as a threat to the monarchy—and no one could have a more British background than I have. I have great pride in our heritage and in our country. I think it is time we all recognized this.

The real demand upon modern government is to cope quickly. We do not have time to stand back and give total reflection. We do not always have time to try something for a year and then do it: we must move quickly. I do not think anyone who takes on the responsibility of running government today would dare say we can do it perfectly or that we can be sure we are doing it properly. I do think, however, that we can say this is a direction we want to take, that we will try it and when we make mistakes we will correct them.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a prolonged Liberal apology full of paradoxes. The hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) said it is easy to knock something, and I agree. He seemed to spend a good deal of his time knocking the opposition. However, I do not remember him making any suggestions concerning how the postal service could be improved. On the one hand he said that the service had deteriorated, and on the other hand he said it is the best in the world. Then he went on to portray the usual attitude of his government, of complacency and self-satisfaction in telling the Canadian people they should get used to the situation because they cannot have everything they want. The suggestion is that the people must be happy with the difficulties they are experiencing. The government deals with this situation in the same way it dealt with the unemployment situation, by saying that because of the difficulties in this country it is impossible to improve things and people must live with the situation.

I do not think that is what we want members on the government side to tell us. We want them to tell us what they are doing in an effort to improve services for the Canadian people, services which are costing the Canadian people more. With this in mind I shall discuss a particular area of difficulty in respect of postal service. I have in mind the isolated communities of northern Canada, such as the northern part of my province, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory. I believe the vastness of my riding is fairly typical of the northern regions about which I wish to speak.

In his remarks the minister spent a good deal of time bragging about the tremendous new machinery in the Post Office, such as automatic letter sorters, automatic secretaries and automatic everything. However, he did not impress me very much because these automatic things are in Toronto, Montreal and other large centres. Places such as Peerless Lake, Graham Lake, Red Earth, Little Buffalo or similar places in the north still have not reached the pony express stage of postal service. As a matter of fact many of these areas do not have any postal service at all. I find some humour in hearing members from Toronto or Montreal say that they do not like having the postal service reduced from six days to five days a week, when a place like Peerless Lake does not have service on any day of the week. This is an area which I believe really requires attention. However, it has not been receiving attention.

The motion before us deals with the deterioration of postal service. I am sorry I cannot talk about that matter in respect of the areas I have mentioned because there was no postal service to begin with; therefore it cannot deteriorate. I shall try to convince the minister that he should introduce service into these isolated communities so that the people there would at least be in a position to communicate with him through the mail. These isolated settlements are separated by great distances. In some areas there are post offices from place to place, but in most cases part of the problem is that there are no roads or very poor roads. Another problem in these regions is that there are very few motor vehicles. In many cases the people still use horse and wagon or, if you like, ponies.

Places like Peerless Lake, Graham Lake and Red Earth are about 200 miles north of Lesser Slave Lake. About two years ago there was no post office in that area. One was set up at Red Earth. That post office was to serve the whole region, covering a radius of about 100 miles. The minister in a letter to me recently said with great pride that the post office had been set up at Red Earth, that it was tremendous and that it served the people of the whole region. It could be, in Toronto, Montreal or in any of the other areas where people have motor vehicles and paved highways, that having to travel 20, 30 or 40 miles to mail a letter or pick up mail might be acceptable; but in an isolated community with no roads and with horses for transportation the situation is very different when one wishes to pick up mail, mail a letter, send a postal money order or carry on any other postal business.

When the minister tells me that his department is now modernized, I say to him that this does not impress me. He should take a serious look at some of the isolated areas and see the very real problems which exist. I suggest to the minister that he spend a month with me at Peerless Lake this summer. I will set up a nice little teepee and have some moose meat dried and waiting for him. I would like him to try to conduct his business from there for a period of a month by means of the mail service his department provides. If he did so, I do not think he would be so quick to pat himself on the back about the greatness of the service of his department.

I would invite him and any other minister or any other member on the government side who is dedicated to speaking as an apologist for the government to go to these areas for a month or so to experience what the people who live there experience all their lives. I am sure we would have fairly speedy action if ministers took the trouble to go down there and look at the situation.

An hon. Member: Such as what?

Mr. Yewchuk: Such as setting up regular post offices and a postal service. It is a very simple solution. Another service that is provided in some of these places such as, for example, small trading posts—this is the best that the minister can do—is simply to have a mailbag which is filled up with letters to people in an isolated settlement picked up by whoever happens to be going that way at some time during the month, and dropped at the store. Then everybody who happens to wander by, scrambles through the mailbag to see whether or not he can find a letter there. That is supposed to be good postal service.

Just imagine what would happen if the people in Toronto had to harness a team of horses and go 40 miles to pick up their mail every day. I wonder if the minister would permit a postal service in Toronto which would consist of a mailbag being delivered to a grocery store at the corner of the street and people within a ten-block radius having to dig through the bag to get their mail.

What I am trying to impress upon the minister is that just because people live in small numbers in isolated areas is no reason for ignoring them and depriving them of services which in southern Canada are considered a necessity, not a luxury, and are taken for granted. This is not the case in northern portions of our country. I would like the minister to spend a little time on that problem. I agree that he always sends back polite letters, but that is not what I want from him. It is the content of the letters that I would like improved. I would like to read in these letters that the minister will do something about the problem. I do not want to see letters in which the minister says he recognizes there is a problem and thanks me for bringing it to his attention; he will see what can be done. That is not good enough.

The minister may be a polite man—and everybody appreciates politeness—but that is not what the job of running the Post Office Department is all about. The minister should concern himself with providing the best possible service to all the people of Canada—and we in the north have not had it. I think it is time a complete reassessment of the mail service to isolated communities was carried out and speedy action taken to correct the problems which I have described. It is time the minister got out of his comfortable chair and visited some of the more remote areas, talked to the people there and asked them whether they are happy with the services he is providing. The fact that, as he stated, he went across the country to various cities, and the people to whom he spoke all seemed happy and seemed to be working, does not absolve him of the responsibility to people in isolated communities in the north, because the picture there is entirely different.

The solution is to establish a series of small post offices a reasonable distance apart so that people can travel on horseback and get their mail in an hour or two. I realize that this would increase the cost, based on the income which would be derived from these post offices, but it seems to me that the rest of Canada should be willing to pay for increased cost of mail delivery to the northern regions because the rest of Canada is benefiting a great deal from the resources in the north. We have all types of resources—timber, oil, minerals and furs. Thus, the northern parts of Canada are contributing a great deal to the country as a whole. In return for that contribution they are entitled to reasonable postal, telephone and transportation services which those in the south have come to take for granted.

The other subject which I would like to speak about for a few minutes relates to the changes that were made in the postal rate, and the reclassification of certain professional journals and newspapers which has taken place in the past three or four years. I will describe the problem by using a particular journal as an example, namely, the journal of the Canadian Medical Association. I am glad to see a member of the medical profession here. I hope he will listen carefully. Perhaps he will be able to influence the minister, because I doubt I will be able to do so. I should like to quote from that journal a few sentences written by A. D. Kelly. I think he is a doctor; he has a British degree and I am not quite sure what it means. I assume he is a medical man who also happens to be the editor of the Canadian Medical Association journal.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Dr. A. D. Kelly graduated from the University of Toronto with the degree of MB. That was the degree at that time.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me an extra 30 seconds at the end of my 15 minutes to compensate me for lost time. Dr. Kelly wrote:

My equanimity has been disturbed, my sunny disposition has been clouded—

That was back in 1969.

—my faith in the Just Society has been shaken and, to put it briefly, I am up tight.

That means he is rather tense over the whole situation.

I am managing editor of Canadian Medical Association publications and things have become unmanageable.

That is his assessment. He goes on to say:

For fifty-eight years the CMAJ has enjoyed statutory second-class mailing privileges and our postal rates were low. We are not alone in this because I understand that 5,200 other Canadian publications are similarly classified. I have been aware that the Post Office was losing money and I expected that an increase in rates for all classifications would be initiated. I really can't say that I feel it essential that our postal services make money or indeed break even, particularly when I am aware of the very substantial subsidies provided for radio and TV, industry, agriculture, education and social services.

In other words, many areas require assistance from the government, and the Post Office should be no different. Because of the decision that was made in 1969, the Canadian Medical Association journal which was published weekly now can only afford publication twice a month, or 26 times a year.

Mr. Cullen: The doctors can afford it.

Mr. Yewchuk: This is not a remark worthy of the hon. member. I hope he will not try to sidetrack the issue by stating that the doctors can afford it, because that is a ridiculous statement. In any case, the changes which were made by the Post Office Department at that time meant a fourfold increase in the cost of mailing some journals and newspapers. The publishers of other magazines, such as MacLean-Hunter which publishes a paper entitled the Medical Post, and other commercial publications which publish competing magazines or periodicals such as the MD or the Canadian Doctor continue to enjoy second-class mailing privileges. This is not the case so far as the Canadian Medical Association journal is concerned, and the reason given by the Post Office as to why it must pay these high rates—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give a portion of my time to the hon. member who has just sat down. My remarks are very general. The Post Office Department is one of the spheres of government that comes into contact with every Canadian person on a regular basis. Therefore, it is one of those activities of government which should set an example to others in terms of efficiency, courtesy and service. Unfortunately, our Canadian Post Office over the past number of years has arrived at a position where it fails to establish those things in the minds of the Canadian public. Rather, it establishes in their minds a public service which is bureaucratic, inefficient and unresponsive to the needs and wishes of the public.

The Canadian people are no longer willing to accept the exorbitant postal rates which they have to pay for minimal services. This is the crux of the postal crisis in this day and age. Each year, in spite of growing postal rates, the Post Office records a deficit. For the fiscal year 1971-72 revenues increased $71.3 million to a record level of over $500 million, while costs increased $47.9 million, leaving the Post Office again with a deficit of some $77 million. This situation is intolerable, but it does not look as if it will change very radically or very rapidly.

Essentially, the Post Office should be concerned with providing a service to the Canadian public. I submit, Sir, that the stature of the service being provided at this time is not satisfactory. Only a few years ago one of the Liberal cabinet ministers charged with the responsibility of looking after the Post Office determined that he was going to make it a profitable institution. I submit that the Canadian public is not so concerned about whether the Post Office can operate profitably as it is concerned that it should serve the Canadian people in an efficient and proper manner. The Canadian public is prepared to subsidize the Post Office to a reasonable degree. I am not suggesting that the Post Office be given carte-blanche, but the people of Canada would be happy if it provided rapid service, with efficient mail delivery on terms that are convenient to the public, even if it has a deficit.

Here I am thinking of businessmen dealing in large sums of money or in matters which are of extreme urgency and importance. I am thinking, for instance, of doctors sending prescriptions by mail, of drugstores sending drugs by mail, of lawyers sending orders to the courts to be approved by mail and of persons involved in property transactions where large amounts of money may be transmitted by mail. I am thinking about this matter in terms of the cost of sending money and in terms of human suffering where drugs are being sent by mail. These are much more serious matters to the Canadian people than the Post Office suffering a reasonable deficit.

While I am speaking of drugs, I am sorry that I do not have with me a clipping from the Halifax Herald. A few weeks ago it carried a story relating to the drop in efficiency of the Post Office in the area of New Caledonia, which is one of the few inland areas of Nova Scotia some 30 or 40 miles from the sea. Between that area and Barss Corner traditionally over the years there had been same-day delivery service. The result was that a physician in one of the centres could prescribe drugs for a patient and the prescription could be sent by mail and the drugs delivered on the same day. But now, even with modern technology, not to mention all the consultants' reports with respect to the Post Office, delivery is not less than four days and generally takes five days. Mr. Speaker, in this case the distance to be covered is approximately six miles.

Another place where there has been a drop in service, which hopefully will be rectified in the near future with the establishment of a new post office, is an area in the Annapolis Valley. It is not in my riding and perhaps I should not be concerning myself with it, but it did gain some notoriety in the newspapers. Minas is a village, approaching the status of a town, which in fact is five or six miles in length. It now takes four days for a letter to get from one end of that village to the other end. The reason is that the mechanism for mail collection and delivery results in a letter having to travel from one end of the village to a sorting centre, from there to a second sorting center and from that second centre back to the other end of the village. That is a ridiculous situation, something which could not have happened in Canadian postal antiquity, which could not have happened back in my childhood when mail was carried by train and the sorting was done during the course of train travel.

I have here a quotation from the Globe and Mail of November 16, 1972, which I believe reflects the general attitude to the service being provided by the Post Office. In one paragraph it reads:

There can be no doubt that almost every innovation, announced with fanfare as an important measure to increase efficiency, decreased efficiency.

The assured mail program about which we have heard so much is one such scheme which has been very seriously overrated. In order to obtain assured mail service it is necessary to post a letter before eleven o'clock in the morning, then you are assured that it will get to its destination some time the following afternoon, from certain selected centres. Years ago anybody posting a first-class letter considered that there was an assurance of that sort of service. Certainly, in the province of Nova Scotia we considered ourselves assured of that kind of service.

But what in fact does it mean, if it is necessary for a person to post a letter before eleven o'clock in the morning? It is difficult for any business office to arrange to have a letter dictated, typed, signed by the person sending it and deposited in the postal repository by eleven o'clock in the morning. In fact, that situation pretty well eliminates getting a letter dictated and sent within one day. Of course, the next day, if the letter arrives after three o'clock in the afternoon, it is difficult to have it dealt with effectively, particularly if federal government offices close at four o'clock in the afternoon. It is pretty difficult for any government office or business office to deal with a letter meaningfully in an hour or so with such a deadline imposed.

Again, there is the question of five-day service. I recognize that it was not trumpeted by the postal department, but I wonder what will happen now, since there is talk that the unions are putting on a drive for a four-day work week. Will we be faced with a four-day delivery program? As I understand the situation at present, when one posts a letter from central Canada to Winnipeg, if the letter is sent from Ottawa on Wednesday it may not be delivered in Winnipeg until the following Tuesday. If it is handled here on Thursday, by the time it is sorted and reaches Winnipeg it will be the following Monday. But the five-day week in Winnipeg is arranged so that Monday is not worked. This means delivery takes place on Tuesday. Such variations in the five-day work week across the country bring results such as that.

The five-day delivery program is one aspect of the matter, but the five-day work week is another aspect in terms of handling, transmitting and sorting the mail. It compounds the difficulties and increases the restrictions placed upon people in attempting to deliver mail at a particular time. I am sure the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) has heard informed people talking of letters being sent from one place to another and taking an unduly long time to be delivered. I shall not deal with that, although I might mention a couple of interesting examples.

● (1650)

There is another aspect of Post Office activity with which I want to deal. It concerns non-postal activities of the post office. If I understood correctly, the Postmaster general has serious doubts about whether the Post Office is legally authorized to carry on certain non-postal activities. Certainly, the people in my riding have serious doubts about the propriety of these activities. The book stores are concerned about them and the knick-knack shops are concerned, because the Post Office is in competition with them. The Post Office is established with public funds, yet employees, presumably in their spare time—I suppose it is spare time, because when they work they are supposed to work for the Post Office Department—engage in these activities.

Presumably, the spare time of postal clerks is used in selling, say, special spoons, wrappers for packages, labels, commemorative coins and that sort of thing. They do that when they are free from their necessary duties. At the same time, they do not pay overheads but are in direct competition with private individuals who are in business and trying to make a profit from the sale of similar commodities.

The same might be said about the philatelic service. There has been controversy over the postal service being involved in the philatelic service. It is said the department does not compete fairly with others in that service, that post offices need not pay postage while private individuals attempting to cater to their clients must pay postage. There is also a certain amount of disappointment on the part of philatelists with regard to the efficiency of service, which I am informed leaves much to be desired. I am informed of instances of funds having been held back for a considerable length of time and stamps which have been requested not being supplied. There are instances involving wrong stamps being issued and the miscounting of stamps.

Because the Post Office Department has gone into this sort of business it has been subject to a good deal of the criticism that perhaps a private individual might expect in the normal course of business. That is one kind of criticism which the department need not invite, and it is one area of activity in which the department need not be involved.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) talk about places in the country where apparently there is no postal service or mail delivery, I recalled a similar discussion of a few years ago involving one of the minister's predecessors who was later elevated to lieutenant governor of the province from which he came and who was, I was going to say, on the mat. As a matter of fact, he was on the mat, because we were debating item 1 of the estimates of the minister and instead of being able to sit here placidly and appear to listen, the minister had to answer our questions on the spot.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett: It seems to me that that debate concerned the level of postal services in this country. In such debates we tend to concentrate on the postmaster general and consider postal services, as it were, in a vacuum without considering some of the basic facts with which I have become familiar as a result of representing a coastal section of Canada which according to some is one of the most difficult places in the country to serve. I am referring to the means of transporting mail. I suggest we cannot consider postal service and say whether it is good, bad or indifferent without also considering transportation services in this country. Then we were bragging about ours being the first country to go all "up" with regard to first-class mail, whenever such carriage would speed its delivery. This brings me to another question.

I think this House increasingly has become trapped in the philosophy enunciated and proclaimed, as it were, in the preamble to the National Transportation Act. Overwhelming emphasis is put on the idea of user service charges. I make this comment in view of the remarks of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Haliburton) who spoke about subsidizing the postal service. My reaction, having listened to this sort of debate when members of the official opposition were on the other side of the House, as well as on other occasions, is that that remark shows the kind of trap into which Liberal and Conservative members have fallen. When they think of transportation, the Post Office, or mail delivery, they do not think of these things in terms of public utilities and services.

Mr. Yewchuk: I talked about transportation.

Mr. Barnett: They keep harping back to the same theme, that somehow the Post Office or the transport system is essentially competitive in nature and is part and parcel of what they like to call the free enterprise economy and similar in principle, although different in operation, to other aspects of the free enterprise economy, such as a multiple number of retail outlets or a multiple number of plants making lumber. That is why some of the criticism I have heard about the postal service seem to me artificial and shallow.

The Postmaster General, perhaps as a result of circumstances, is playing a rather low-key role. Some of our debates on this topic may have been more exciting a few years ago when one of his predecessors was in office. I would bring to his attention and ask him to look at the preamble to the National Transportation Act which was piloted through this House by the former member for Bonavista-Twillingate who was later elevated to a position from which he could oversee our transportation systems. Then he might examine some of the day to day problems relating to the effective and efficient delivery of mail. Then if he will take a little time to think about it, he may be able to exert pressure on the thinking of his colleagues in the government in a way which may help to resolve some of the problems that many of us mention to him from day to day. In some ways they have become more severe and in other ways, perhaps, there have been improvements.

I think there has been overemphasis on technology in urban centres because many areas of the country are still in the horse-and-buggy days. I think I only need mention, in closing, some of the representations he has been receiving from revenue postmasters to indicate what is in the back of my mind.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock it is my duty to inform this House that, pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on this motion are deemed to have expired and terminated. This House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At 5.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
