As respects the allegation that there was no occasion for interference, he said that if the sweeping away of the separate schools did not provide the occasion, no such occasion could ever arise. He was satisfied the liberal conservative party would do that which was in the interests of the country, even though defeat might be staring them in the face, yet they would adopt a patriotic course and stand by the constitution of the country: posterity would justify their action. No state could afford to deal unjustly with any portion of its people. (Loud cheers.) After referring briefly to the other paragraphs in the speech, Mr. Powell resumed his seat amid great applause.

liberal cheers, said the session was both unprecedented and extraordinary, for the reason that parliament was summon-ed to consider the gravest question per-haps that ever came before it, a question which might permanently effect this Canadian confederation. He congratu-lated the mover and seconder on their speeches. Mr. Powell's reputation as an orator had preceded him, and it was quite evident that he would be an honor to the party to which he belonged. He (Laurier,) however, could not accept him. as a guide in constitutional matters.
(Laughter.) Mr. McGillivray had also done very well. His stretches of imagination had, however, been beyond ordinary. (Laughter.) In previous years good harvests had been attributed to the national policy. (Laughter.) Personally, he showed expressions the speech respecting the efficiency of the Mounted Police and the good work done in the Indian industrial schools. After visiting the Northwest he came to the conclusion that the police force was worth all the morey spent on it, and that the body was re quisite to the good government and peace of that country. (Conservative cheers.) He was curious to know what motive inspired the paragraph relative to strengthening of the Canadian defences. If our young men were eve to meet an enemy, which God forbid England and the United States would be as fratricidal as the war of the Uniten. It was said there was a deep feeling in the United States against England. He denied the proposition altogether, and asserted that among the educated classes of the United States there was nothing but feelings of love towards the old land. (Cheers.) This feeling found expression in Whittier's lines:

Hon. Mr. Fostor rose amid loud ministerial applause, and delivered a slashing reply. First of all, he joined with Mr. Laurier in complimenting the mover and seconder. Mr. Laurier had referred to the recent by elections, but there was small comfort for his party in some of them. Take, for instance. North Ontario, where the liberal became the third party and within eighty votes of losing his deposit. (Cheers.) In Cardwell, moreover, the liberals were completely wiped out and had to contribute $200 to the revenue of the country. (Cheers and laughter.) Continuing, Mr. Foster said: Mr. Laurier also drew attention to a section in the address which refers to the strengthening of the militia and defences of Canada. (Cheers.) But he had to say another thing, that it flavors of a jingo policy. Well, sir, I leave it to all reasonable men if taking up that paragraph in the speech he can see anything in it which savors of defiance or in the least approaches to the jingo policy. It is a modest and straightforward expression, and was never meant to be anything else. ITS DEFINITIONS ARE CLEVER AND EXACT.
